HOLMAN BIBLE DICTIONARY

With summary definitions and explanatory articles on every Bible subject; introductions and teaching outlines for each Bible book; in-depth theological articles; plus internal maps, charts, illustrations, scale reconstruction drawings, archaeological photos, and atlas.

GENERAL EDITOR
TRENT C. BUTLER, PH.D.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS
MARSHA A. ELLIS SMITH, PH.D.
FORREST W. JACKSON, D. MIN.
PHIL LOGAN, PH.D.
CHRIS CHURCH, PH.D.

HOLMAN BIBLE PUBLISHERS NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

© Copyright 1991 Holman Bible Publishers

All rights reserved
International copyright secured

4691-15

ISBN: 1-55819-053-8

Dewey Decimal Classification: 220.3

Art credits are on pages 1445–1446

Bible passages are from the King James Version unless otherwise noted.

Passages marked RSV are from the Revised Standard Version of the Bible copyright 1946, 1952, © 1971, 1973 by the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and used by permission.

Passages marked NAS are from the New American Standard Bible. © The Lockman Foundation, 1960, 1962, 1963, 1968, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1975, 1977. Used by permission.

Passages marked NIV are from the Holy Bible, New International Version, copyright © 1973, 1978, 1984 by International Bible Society. Used by permission.

Passages marked TEV are from the Good News Bible, the Bible in Today's English Version. Old Testament: Copyright © American Bible Society 1976; New Testament: Copyright © American Bible Society 1966, 1971, 1976. Used by permission.

Passages marked REB are from The Revised English Bible. Copyright © Oxford University Press and Cambridge University Press, 1989. Reprinted by permission.

Passages marked NRSV are from the New Revised Standard Version Bible copyright © 1989, by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States of America, and used by permission.

Printed in the United States of America
6 7 8 97 96

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

The Bible is God's authoritative Word for the Christian church. Christian beliefs and practice—doctrine and lifestyle—are based on the Bible and no other book. A Bible dictionary is an essential tool for effective Bible study. It gives background information, definitions, outlines, and theological information. Bible times and characters come to life. This enables you to understand the meaning of God's Word and starts you on the path to applying the Word to your life. Such understanding gives depth and consistency to Bible interpretation, enabling the student of God's Word to believe and follow its teaching with confidence and intelligence.

Six years of work by hundreds of people have produced this Holman Bible Dictionary for a generation of Bible students anticipating the third Christian millennium. The editorial team presents the dictionary to the Christian world hoping that it will indeed provide the guidance and information for which every Bible student searches. You, the reader, will make our work worthwhile as you prepare sermons, draw up teaching plans, search for personal knowledge and inspiration, and wrestle with problems of interpretation and of life with the help of this dictionary. We look forward to hearing your testimonies on how God uses the dictionary to help the Bible become an even greater guide to your life. We pray that the Holy Spirit will use the information and illustrations provided here to renew His people in faith and practice. We also look forward to hearing questions you raise as you study the Bible with the help of this dictionary. We solicit your suggestions for making the next edition an even better tool for Bible study.

The dictionary is designed with you in mind. Every feature is intended to make it easier for you to find what you need to know as quickly as possible. As you begin to use this Bible study tool, turn first to pages vi–viii to see all the features available; then read through pages ix–xi to see how to use these features most effectively.

May God bless you and reveal His word for your life as you read the inspired Word and as you use this dictionary to understand its message and meaning for you.

Trent C. Butler

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. Editorial Foreword v
2. How to Use This Dictionary ix–xi
3. Production Staff xii
4. Contributors xiii–xx
5. Time Line xxi–xxix
6. Bible Information from A to Z 1–1444
7. Art Credits 1445–1446
8. Map Index 1447–1450
9. NASA-generated Holman Maps 1451–1458

SPECIAL INTERNAL FEATURES

CHARTS

1. Time Line xxii–xxix
2. Disciples, Apostles 364
3. The Jewish Calendar 486–487
4. The Hasmonean Dynasty 611
5. The Holy / The Personal 661
6. Parables of Jesus 784–785
7. Miracles of Jesus 786
8. Discourses of Jesus 787
9. Jewish Parties in the New Testament 792–793
10. Messianic Prophecies in the Old Testament 953–955
11. Millennial Perspectives on Revelation 1184–1187
12. Table of Weights and Measures 1404–1405

SCALE RECONSTRUCTIONS

1. Roman Archer's Machine 93
2. Ark of the Covenant 99
3. First-Century Athens 126–127
4. Pool of Bethesda 170
5. Jerusalem During the Time of David 342–343
6. Temple of Artemis at Ephesus 429
7. Eighth-Century Hebrew Home 672
8. First-Century Hebrew Home 673
9. Herod's Winter Palace at Jericho 762–763
10. New Testament Jericho 763
11. Jerusalem in Jesus' Time 766–767
12. Caesarea Maritima 1080
13. Cutaway view of Solomon's Temple 1289
14. Solomon's Temple 1290
15. First-Century Synagogue 1312
16. Tabernacle of Israelites 1317
17. Herod's Temple Floor Plan 1326–1327
18. Herod's Temple 1329
19. Roman Siege Tower 1401
20. Roman Battering Ram 1402
21. First-Century Winepress 1411
22. Ziggurat 1441

INTERNAL MAPS

1. The Journeys of the Apostles 365
2. Culture and Commerce in the Ancient Near East 390–391
3. The Coming of the Israelites 452–453
4. The World of the Greeks 580–581
5. The Ancient Near East in the Second Millennium B.C. 652–653
6. The Near East in the First Millennium B.C. 656–657
7. Palestine in Graeco-Roman Times 708–709
8. The Kingdom of David and Solomon 724–725
9. The Kingdoms of Judah and Israel 728–729
10. Jesus in His Land 778–779
11. Jesus in Galilee 782
12. The Growth of Christianity 978–979
13. Palestine in the Time of the New Testament 1021
14. Palestine in the Time of the Old Testament 1047
15. The Holy Land Today 1065
16. The Land of Canaan 1066–1067
17. The Spread of the Early Church 1082–1083
18. The Roman Empire 1210–1211

MAJOR ARTICLES

BIBLE BACKGROUNDS AND CULTURE

Altar 37–40
Animals 52–58
Apocrypha 69–71
Apocrypha, New Testament 71–74
Apostolic Fathers 76–77
Archaeology and Biblical Study 83–93
Architecture in the Bibical Period 94–96
Ark of the Covenant 98–100
Arms and Armor 101–104
Art and Aesthetics 105–107
Asia Minor, Cities of 114–116
Assyria, History and Religion of 120–124
Babylon, History and Religion of 141–144
Birds 191–193
Calendars 221–222
Canaan, History and Religion of 226–230
Chronology of the Biblical Period 255–259
Cities and Urban Life 264–266
Cloth, Clothing 270–272
Coins 274–275
Commerce 280–281
Containers and Vessels 290–292
Cooking and Heating 295–298
Corinth 298–301
Court Systems 306–308
Crimes and Punishments 316–319
Damascus 330–332
Disciples, Apostles 362–366
Diseases 367–370
Ebla 387–388
Economic Life 389–394
Edom 395–397
Education in Bible Times 397–398
Egypt 399–403
Ephesus 424–428
False Worship 474–475
Festivals 484–490
Food 503–504
Gestures 545–547
Gnosticism 558–559
Gods, Pagan 562–565
Government 570–572
Greece 578–583
Hammurabi 599–601
Hellenism 632–634
High Priest 645–648
Hittites and Hivites 654–659
House 671–673
Insects 699–703
Intertestamental History and Literature 707–713
Israel, History of 722–731
Jericho 759–764
Jerusalem 765–773
Jewels, Jewelry 788–791
Jewish Parties in the New Testament 791–794
King, Kingship 842–843
Land, Ground 860–861
Library 879–881
Macedonia 907–908
Mari 917–918
Minerals and Metals 968–970
Mines and Mining 970–972
Mishnah 975–976
Moab and the Moabite Stone 982–983
Monotheism, Polytheism 985–986
Music, Instruments, Dancing 993–996
Mystery, Mystery Religions 997–998
Number Systems and Number Symbolism 1029–1031
Occupations and Professions in the Bible 1037–1040
Oracles 1051–1054
Palestine 1063–1069
Pentateuch 1088–1091
Persia 1097–1098
Philistines 1108–1109
Plants in the Bible 1116–1120
Pottery in Bible Times 1126–1129
Prophecy, Prophets 1141–1143
Rivers and Waterways in the Bible 1196–1199
Roman Law 1200–1202
Rome and the Roman Empire 1207–1212
Sacrifice and Offering 1218–1220
Samaria, Samaritans 1224–1225
Ships, Sailors, and Navigation 1269–1273
Spices 1297–1298
Synagogue 1311–1313
Syria 1313–1314
Temple of Jerusalem 1325–1332
Tools 1356–1357
Transjordan 1362–1363
Transportation and Travel 1363–1366
Tribes of Israel 1368–1371
Ugarit 1380–1382
Vessels and Utensils 1390–1392
Weights and Measures 1403–1407
Writing 1423–1426

DOCTRINES AND ETHICS

Angel 51–52
Anthropology 60–62
Atonement 128–131
Baptism 149–151
Bible, Formation and Canon of 177–178
Bible, Hermeneutics 178–181
Bible, History of Interpretation 181–183
Bible, Texts and Versions 183–185
Bible, Theology of 185–188
Bible, Translations 188–190
Black People and Biblical Perspective 196–197
Blessing and Cursing 198–199
Blood 200–201
Body 202–203
Capital Punishment 232–233
Christ, Christology 250–252
Church 259–261
Clean, Cleanness 268–270
Compassion 282–283
Confessions and Credos 286–287
Conversion 293–294
Covenant 308–312
Creation 313–315
Cross, Crucifixion 319–321
Deacon, Deaconess 344–345
Death 347–349
Devil, Satan, Evil, Demonic 358–359
Dispensation 370–371
Election 407–409
Eschatology 432–436
Eternal Life 440–441
Ethics 441–444
Expiation, Propitiation 458–460
Faith 469–470
Fall 471–472
Family 475–477
Fear 480–481
Flesh 497–498
Freedom 514–515
Future Hope 519–520
God 560–562
Gospel 567–570
Grace 573–575
Heaven 620–622
Hell 631–632
History 650–654
Holy 660–662
Humanity 675–676
Incarnation 693–694
Jesus Christ 775–777
Justification 829–830
Kingdom of God 843–845
Life 881–883
Lord 889–891
Love 896–898
Mercy, Merciful 947–949
Messiah 952–956
Mission 976–980
Names of God 1004–1006
Offices in the New Testament 1041–1042
Ordinances 1054–1057
Parables 1071–1073
Peace, Spiritual 1086
People of God 1091–1092
Prayer 1130–1132
Predestination 1133–1135
Promise 1140–1141
Providence 1147–1148
Purity, Purification 1154–1155
Reconciliation 1168–1169
Redeem, Redemption, Redeemer 1170–1171
Resurrection of Jesus Christ 1179–1180
Revelation of God 1180–1183
Righteousness 1194–1195
Salvation 1222–1224
Servant of the Lord 1248–1249
Sex, Biblical Teaching on 1251–1252
Sin 1281–1283
Son of Man 1291–1292
Spirit 1299–1300
Time, Meaning of 1347–1349
Trial of Jesus 1367–1368
Trinity 1372–1374
Worship 1421–1422

PEOPLE

Jacob 738–740
Jesus, Life and Ministry 777–788
John 803–805
Patriarchs 1077–1079
Paul 1079–1085

HOW TO USE THIS DICTIONARY

A Bible dictionary should be a friend; it can become a frustration!

It becomes a friend when you learn how to use it. It remains a frustration when you know it has information you want but you do not know how to find or use the information. Holman Bible Publishers wants to introduce a new friend to you—the Holman Bible Dictionary. We intend this to be the most user-friendly Bible study tool available.

• NOTE ITS FRIENDLY FEATURES •

Finding an Entry

You can find any entry easily. The dictionary is organized as one single unit. Every person, place, and topic stands in one section in simple alphabetical order. The different colored side tabs lead you immediately to the letter you seek.

You will find the topic you want. Every person and place in the Bible is included. Every major theological or doctrinal subject is included. Articles about the Bible and its background are included. If a related topic appears, the dictionary tells you to "See" the topic. You do not have to remember that a special kind of type means you should look to another reference.

You can use the Bible translation you favor. Topics and spellings from King James Version, Revised Standard Version, New American Standard Bible, New International Version, Today's English Version, Revised English Bible, and New Revised Standard Version are included. Spellings are generally those of King James, as are Scripture quotations, unless otherwise noted. Spellings of other translations will have a separate entry with a "See" pointing you to the article under an alternate spelling.

Making Bible Study Live

You can see the Bible come alive. Over six hundred color illustrations, internal maps, informative charts, and Bill Latta's tinted scale reconstructions of biblical sites, worship places, tools, and artifacts join the acclaimed Holman maps to help you place yourself in the sandals of your favorite Bible personalities.

You can know the Bible in depth. We have included as much information as possible in a single volume, especially about the nature, background, and teachings of the Bible. The list of major articles in the Table of Contents will direct you to extended reading sessions on the Bible, its background and culture, its doctrine and ethics, and its people.

You can understand every word of the dictionary. The editors have fashioned it for you to read, not for scholars to be impressed. Technical language and mysterious abbreviations of Latin words do not appear. Words you know and use daily explain, affirm, and describe the background of God's inspired Word.

Learning the Dictionary's Features

Now, let us introduce your new friend. You may want to have a pad of paper handy to write down notes reminding you of the new friend's characteristics.

1. Turn to the Table of Contents. Read through the list of major articles. Select the first three you want to read, and note them on your paper.
2. Turn to page xxi. Examine the Time Line. See the information it offers as you seek to relate Bible history to world history.

3. Use the Table of Contents to find the Artistic Scale Reconstructions. Explore two or three that interest you such as the Ark of the Covenant or a First-Century Hebrew Home. Look at the charts, perhaps the ones of Jewish Parties, Messianic Prophecies, and Millennial Perspectives on Revelation. Note how each of these features can help you understand the Bible better.

4. Look next at the maps. You will discover two sets of maps—a feature unique to the Holman Bible Dictionary. The "Internal Maps" are spread throughout the text. They even include a map of the Holy Land as it is today—another unique feature of this dictionary. The special Holman maps and an index to them are at the back of the dictionary. They were drawn using NASA photographs. With them you view physical features as seen from space. They will help you locate Bible places at the point in history you are studying. Use the index to find how many times a favorite place, such as Bethlehem, occurs. Find it on each map.

5. To see just how helpful the Holman Bible Dictionary can be for you, think of a question you want answered, perhaps one that arose recently at a church Bible study. Suppose you want to understand the background and meaning of Luke 15, the well-loved chapter with its three parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son. Begin by reading the article on "Luke, Gospel of." Note the bold subheads which direct you to a place of interest in the article. You will probably choose "Purpose and Readership" and "Special Emphases and Characteristics." Scan through the "Outline" to see how Luke 15 fits into Luke's overall purpose.

What is a parable? Find the article on "Parables." Notice that the beginning sentence provides a brief definition of the subject. Many times this will be all the information you want. Run your finger through the article to find specific references to Luke 15. See how many Bible references are used, assuring you the article is based on Scripture and intended to show the meaning of Scripture.

Now ask questions about Luke 15, such as: Who were the tax collectors? Why were they grouped with sinners? Look up "Tax Collector," where you will find, "See Publican." Turn to "Publican." See how many of your questions are answered in the brief article. Further information is available under "Taxes." Who were the Pharisees and scribes opposing Jesus? Brief articles on "Pharisees" and "Scribes" will refer you to "Jewish Parties" for an overview article accompanied by a chart. What difference did Jesus' mealtime associates make? "Food" and "Banquet" will help you understand. How important were sheep? What images and feelings did the mention of sheep raise? "Sheep" and "Shepherd" will begin your search leading you to "Agriculture," "Cattle," "Economic Life," "Occupations and Professions in the Bible." Read as far as you want.

"Architecture in the Biblical Period" and "House" with the accompanying art work will help you understand the type house the woman had to sweep in search of her coin. "Coins" will help you identify the coin. "Family" will provide background on the lost son as will "Inheritance." Of course, all three parables point to Jesus and the kingdom of God. Articles on "Christ, Christology," "Jesus Christ," and "Kingdom of God" will help you.

Do not stop with our suggestions. Read through Luke 15. Underline or note words that call for deeper study. See how many words you can list for further dictionary study. If you lead a Bible study, each of these words makes a good assignment for class members. That way you can work together to study and learn God's Word. Every member will feel a part of the exciting joy of studying and following God's Word.

6. Relations with your new friend may appear to have become quite complex. Often, the relationship is much simpler. You need to pronounce a name in your Bible study class. After each entry of a proper name and after many other entries where pronunciation may be a question, the Holman Bible Dictionary shows you how to pronounce the name. Just use the following pronunciation guide adapted from W. Murray Severance, Pronouncing Bible Names, Revised Edition (Nashville: Holman Bible Publishers, 1983, 1985).

7. Finally, you may find your new dictionary friend is really a reunion with old friends. Let your eyes wander through the list of contributors. You may find several names you know from other reading. You may have heard them speak in your church. You know you can trust the work they and their colleagues have done. The Holman Bible Dictionary is now your friend. Be faithful to it. Use it daily as you study God's Word. Introduce it to other friends in Sunday School or other Bible study groups. Let them become the dictionary's friend too.

May this be the beginning of a long and fruitful friendship. May it lead you to a closer and deeper relationship with God's Word. Most of all, may it lead you to a closer walk with the best Friend you can ever have: Jesus, the Christ.

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION

MARK	EXAMPLE	SOUND	MARK	EXAMPLE	SOUND
ā	dāy, lāy	ay	ô	ôr, fôr	aw
ă	hăy, căt	a	ph	(unmarked) alpha	f
ä	äre, fär	ah	ş	hiş, muşe	z
â	câre, fâre	e, eh	s	(unmarked) kiss	ss
å	åbout, åbet	u, uh	ū	tūne, mūte	yoo, ew
a	(unmarked) call	aw	ŭ	ŭp, tŭb	uh
å	åfraid	u, uh	û	hûrl, fûrl	u, uh
a͞e	da͞emon, dēmon	ee	ü	trüth	oo, ew
ah	(unmarked) Elijah	uh	th	(unmarked) thin	th
âi	âisle	ī	t͟h	thyme	t
ai	mail, hail	ay	ti, ci, si	attraction	sh am	(unmarked) adam's apple	uhm	y	city	i, ih an	(unmarked) roman	uhn
c, ch	cord, chorus	k		Seldom Used Marks
ç	çity	s, ss	a̤a	Bala̤am	uh
ē	mēte, Crēte	ee	a̤e	archa̤eology	ih
ĕ	mĕt, lĕt	e, eh (uh)	ao	(unmarked) pharaoh (ant)	oh
ē	tērm	u, uh	au	(unmarked) author	aw
e̊	e̊lastic	i, ih	e͞a	se͞a	ee
g̃	g̃et	g	e̊a	ze̊alous	eh
g̊	g̊erm	gh, j	e͞e	g͞e͞e	ee
ī	pīne, fīne	ī	e͞u, e͞w	bre͞w	oo, ew
ĭ	hĭm, pĭn	ih	ia	(unmarked)	ya
î	machîne	ee	i͡o	legi͡on	uh
ī	fīrm	u, uh (uhr)	îo	savîor	yaw
ō	nōte, rōde	o, oh	ôi	bôil	oy
ŏ	nŏt, rŏt	ah	on	(unmarked) onion	uhn
o	(unmarked) amok	uh	ou	(unmarked) out	ow

PRODUCTION STAFF

ADMINISTRATION

President, Holman Bible Publishers,	Johnnie C. Godwin
Director, Bibles and Books	Tom Clark

EDITORIAL

General Editor	Trent C. Butler
Contributing Editors	Marsha A. Ellis Smith, Archaeology
	Forrest W. Jackson, Bible content
	Phil Logan, New Testament
	Chris Church, Biblical theology
Copy Editors	June Swann
	Sharon Wegman
Design Editor	Candace Morris McKibben
Editorial Assistant	Jean Jenkins
Production Support Staff	Diane Stem, Office Supervisor
	Donna Easlick
	Tracie Gregory
	Cindy Kephart

GRAPHICS

Designer	Ernie Couch / Consultx
Jacket Design	Jim Bateman
Graphics Director	W. Don Rogers
Graphics Manager	Jack Jewell
Artists	Emma Jane Vidrine
	Gene Elliott
	Bill Latta
	Wayne Curtis

PRODUCTION

Procurement Director	James Shull
Procurement Manager	James Nash
Procurement Buyers	Karl Huddleston
	Bob Morrison
Procurement Assistants	Janie Ralph
	Daniel Halpin
Typesetters	Huron Valley Graphics, Inc.
Printers	Arcata Graphics Company, Kingsport, TN

CONTRIBUTORS

Albright, Jimmy, Pastor, Wyatt Park Baptist Church, St. Joseph, MO 64507

Allen, Leslie C., Professor of Old Testament, Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasedena, CA 91101-1790

Anderson, Douglas, Director, Family Ministry Department, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Arnold, Steve, Doctoral Candidate, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Baldwin, Gary D., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Rolla, MO 65401

Baskin, Joe R., Professor of Religion, Shorter College, Rome, GA 30161

Batson, Jerry W., Associate Dean, Beeson Divinity School, Samford University, Birmingham, AL 35226

Bean, Albert F., Professor of Old Testament, Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, MO 64118

Beasley-Murray, George R., Senior Professor of New Testament Interpretation, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Beitzel, Barry J., Associate Academic Dean, Professor of Old Testament, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, IL 60025

Bellinger, Jr., W. H., Associate Professor of Religion, Baylor University, Waco, TX 79798

Berry, Donald K., Assistant Professor of Religion, Mobile College, Mobile, AL 36613

Berryman, James C., Professor of Religion and Philosophy, Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, AR 71923

Bishop, Ronald E., Pastor, Plainview Baptist Church, Bogalusa, LA 70427

Blevins, James L., Professor of New Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Bloesch, Donald G., Professor of Theology, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Dubuque, IA 52001

Bond, Steve, Coordinator, Marketing Planning, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Bonner, Gary, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Huntsville, TX 77340

Borchert, Gerald L., J. Rupert and Lucille Coleman Professor of New Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Boyd, Timothy, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Mulvane, KS 67110

Brangenberg, III, John H., Doctoral Candidate, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Bridges, Linda McKinnish, Assistant Professor of New Testament, Baptist Theological Seminary, Richmond, VA

Brisco, Thomas V., Associate Professor of Biblical Backgrounds and Archaeology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Brooks, James A., Professor of New Testament, Bethel Theological Seminary, Saint Paul, MN 55112

Brooks, Oscar S., Professor of New Testament, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Browning, Jr., Daniel C., Assistant Professor of Religion, William Carey College, Hattiesburg, MS 39401

Bruce, Barbara J., Free-lance writer, Ridgecrest, NC 28770

Bruce, Larry, Free-lance writer and professional pilot, Fort Worth, TX 76123

Bugg, Charles B., Carl E. Bates Professor of Christian Preaching, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminar Louisville, KY 40280

Butler, Bradley S., Pastor, Memorial Park Baptist Church, Stone Mountain, GA 30083

Butler, Trent C., Manager, Bibles and Textbooks, Broadman, Holman Press, Nashville, TN 37234

Byrd, Robert O., Professor of Religion, Belmont College, Nashville, TN 37212

Cate, Robert L., Distinguished Professor of Religion, Oklahoma State University, Stillwater, OK 74075

Chance, Bradley, Assistant Professor of Religion, William Jewell College, Liberty, MO 64068

Church, Chris, Copy Editor, Broadman Press, Nashville, TN 37234

Coats, George W., Professor of Old Testament, Lexington Theological Seminary, Lexington, KY 40508

Cole, Dennis, Assistant Professor of Biblical Archaeology, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126

Coleson, Joseph E., Professor of Hebrew Scripture, Western Evangelical Seminary, Portland, OR 97267

Collins, Alvin O., Chairman, Department of Christianity and Philosophy, Houston Baptist University, Houston, TX 77074-3298

Compton, Bob, Professor, International Seminary, San Jose, Costa Rica

Conyers, A. J., Professor of Religion, Charleston Southern University, Charleston, SC 29411

Cook, Donald E., Professor of New Testament, Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, NC 27588-1899

Cooper, C. Kenny, Pastor, Bellevue Baptist Church, Nashville, TN 37221

Cowen, Gerald P., Professor of New Testament Greek, The Criswell College, Dallas, TX 75218

Craig, Jr., Kenneth M., Assistant Professor of Religion, Chowan College, Murfreesboro, NC 27855

Cranford, Jeff, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Lincolton, NC 28092

Cranford, Lorin L., Associate Professor of New Testament, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Creech, R. Robert, Pastor, University Baptist Church, Houston, TX 77059

Creed, Brad, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Nachitoches, LA 71457

Cresson, Bruce C., Professor of Archaeology, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Criswell, W. A., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Dallas, TX 75201

Crook, Roger, Professor of Religion, Meredith College, Raleigh, NC 27607

Cross, Diane, Doctoral student, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Culpepper, R. Alan, James Buchanan Harrison Professor of New Testament Interpretation, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Dalglish, Edward, Professor of Old Testament, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Davies, Phillip R., Senior Lecturer, Department of Biblical Studies, The University of Sheffield, Sheffield, England

Davis, Cos, Manager, Preschool Program Section, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Davis, Earl C., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Memphis, TN 38111

Davis, John J., Professor of Old Testament, Grace Theological Seminary, Winona Lake, IN 46590

Davis, M. Stephen, Director of Christian Life, Houston Baptist University, Houston, TX 77074-3298

Dean, Robert J., Senior Editorial and Curriculum Specialist, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Dehoney, Wayne, Professor of Preaching (Ret.), The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Denison, James C., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Midland, TX 79701

DeVries, LaMoine, Campus Minister/Lecturer, Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, MO 65804-0095

DeVries, Simon J., Professor of Old Testament Methodist Theological School in Ohio, Delaware, OH 43015

Dockery, David S., General Editor, New American Commentary, Broadman Press, Nashville, TN 37234

Dollar, Stephen E., Pastor, Superior Avenue Baptist Church, Bogalusa, LA 70427

Dominy, Bert B., Professor of Theology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Drakeford, John W., Distinguished Professor of Psychology and Counseling, Emeritus, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Draughon, III, Walter D., Pastor, Arapaho Road Baptist Church, Garland, TX 75044

Drayer, John R., Vice-President for Academic Affairs, Gardner-Webb College, Boiling Springs, NC 28017

Drinkard, Jr., Joel F., Associate Professor of Old Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Duke, David Nelson, Chairman, Department of Religion, William Jewell College, Liberty, MO 64068

Dunham, Duane A., Professor of New Testament Language and Literature, Western Conservative Baptist Seminary, Portland, OR 97215

Duvall, J. Scott, Assistant Professor of Religion, Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, AR 71923

Eakin, Jr., Frank E., Chairman, Department of Religion, University of Richmond, Richmond, VA 23173

Eakins, J. Kenneth, Professor of Archaeology and Old Testament Interpretation, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Easley, Kendell, Professor of New Testament and Greek, Mid America Baptist Theological Seminary, Memphis, TN

Echols, Steven, Pastor, Bethel Baptist Church, Moody, AL 35004

Eddins, Jr., John W., Professor of Theology, Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, NC 27588-1889

Edwards, Jr., W. T., Head, Department of Religion and Philosophy, Samford University, Birmingham, AL 35229

Ellis, Bob R., Assistant Professor of Old Testament, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Ellis, Terence B., Pastor, Mulberry Baptist Church, Houma, LA 70360

Ellis, W. Ray, Professor of Greek, Dean of the Graduate School, Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, TX 79698

Elmore, Vernon O., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Corpus Christi, TX 78412

Fallis, W. J., Senior Editor (Ret.), Broadman Press, Nashville, TN 37234

Feinberg, Charles Lee, Dean Emeritus, Talbot Theological Seminary, LaMirada, CA 90639

Field, Taylor, Pastor, East Seventh Baptist Ministry, New York, NY 10009

Finger, Thomas, Associate Professor of Systematic Theology, Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, IL 60148

Fink, Michael, Manager, Adult Curriculum Section, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Fisher, Fred L., Academic Coordinator, Southern California Center, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Fleming, David M., Assistant Professor of Religion, Campbell University, Buies Creek, NC 27506

Fountain, Mark, Free-lance Author, Louisville, KY 40280

Fredericks, Daniel C., Assistant Professor of Bible, Belhaven College, Jackson, MS 39202

Fricke, Robert, Professor, International Seminary, San Jose, Costa Rica.

Fuhrman, Mike, Pastor, First Missionary Baptist Church, Benton, KY 42025

Galeotti, Gary A., Professor of Old Testament, Criswell College, Dallas, TX 75246

Garrett, Jr., James Leo, Distinguished Professor of Theology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Gautsch, Darlene R., Instructor in Old Testament and Hebrew, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

George, Timothy, Dean, Beeson Divinity School, Samford University, Birmingham, AL 35229

Glaze, Joseph E., Director of Christian Social Ministries, The Richmond Baptist Association, Richmond, VA 23222

Glaze, Jr., R. E., Professor Emeritus of New Testament, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Gloer, W. Hulitt, Assistant Professor of New Testament Studies, Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, MO 64118

Godwin, Johnnie C., President, Broadman Press, Nashville, TN 37234

Gower, Ralph, Southport, Lancashire, England

Graham, Charles E., Professor Emeritus of Old Testament, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Gray, Elmer L., Free-lance Author, Fresno, CA 93703

Greenfield, Guy, Professor of Christian Ethics, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Grissom, Fred A., Professor of Church History, Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, NC 27587

Haag, Joe, Christian Life Commission, Baptist General Convention of Texas, Dallas, TX 75246

Halbrook, Gary K., Pastoral Counselor, Samaritan Counseling Center, Lufkin, TX 75901

Hancock, Jr., Omer J., Assistant Professor of Applied Christianity, Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, TX 79698

Hardin, Gary, Design Editor, Growing Churches, Nashville, TN 37234

Harris, R. Laird, Professor Emeritus of Old Testament, Covenant Theological Seminary, St. Louis, MO

Harrison, R. K., Professor Emeritus of Old Testament, Wycliffe College, Toronto, Canada

Harrop, Clayton K., Professor of New Testament Interpretation, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Hatchett, Randy, Assistant Professor of Christianity and Philosophy, Houston Baptist University, Houston, TX 77074-3291

Hatfield, Lawson G., Former Director, Sunday School Department and Pastor (Ret.), Arkansas Baptist State Convention, Little Rock, AR 72203

Hemer, Colin J., Tyndale House, Cambridge, England

Henderson, Gene, Design Editor, Adult Bible Teacher, Nashville, TN 37234

Hendricks, William L., Director of Graduate Studies, Professor of Christian Theology and, Director of the Center for Religion and the Arts, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Henry, Jerry M., Pastor, Elkdale Baptist Church, Selma, AL 36701

Henry, Jim, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Orlando, FL 32805

Hepper, F. Nigel, Royal Botanical Gardens, Richmond, England

Hester, J. Michael, Director of Pastoral Counseling and Growth Center, Asheville, NC 28801

Hill, C. Dale, Pastor, Central Baptist Church, Clovis, NM 88101

Hinson, E. Glenn, David T. Porter Professor of Church History, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Hockenhull, Brenda R., Lay minister, Palomar Community Church, Vista, CA 92083

Hoehner, Harold W., Professor of New Testament and Greek, Dallas Theological Seminary, Dallas, TX 75204

Honeycutt, Roy L., President and Professor of Old Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Horton, Jr., Fred L., Professor of New Testament, Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, NC 27109

Howe, Jr., Claude L., Professor of Church History, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Hubbard, Kenneth, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Smyrna, TN 37167

Huckabay, Gary C., Pastor, Woodman Valley Chapel, Colorado Springs, CO 80921

Huey, Jr., F. B., Professor of Old Testament, Emeritus, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Humphreys, Fisher, Professor of Theology, Beeson Divinity School, Birmingham, AL 35229

Humphries-Brooks, Stephenson, Assistant Professor of Religion, Hamilton College, Clinton, NY 13323

Hunt, Jr., Harry B., Associate Professor of Old Testament, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Ireland, Jr., William J., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Luling, LA 70070

Jackson, Paul, Doctoral Candidate, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Forth, TX 76122

Jackson, Thomas A., Pastor, McLean Baptist Church, McLean, VA 22101

Johnson, Ricky L., Associate Professor of Religion, Wayland Baptist University, Plainview, TX 79072

Johnson, W. Stanley, Professor of Christian Theology, Western Evangelical Seminary, Portland, OR 97267

Joiner, E. Earl, Chairman of Department of Religion, Stetson University, Deland, FL 32720

Joines, Karen R., Professor of Religion and Philosophy, Samford University, Birmingham, AL 35229

Jones, Lynn, Highland Baptist Church, Shreveport, LA 71001

Jones, Peter Rhea, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Decatur, GA 30030

Kaiser, Jr., Walter C., Academic Dean and Vice President of Education, Professor of Semitic Language and Old Testament, Trinity Evangelical School, Deerfield, IL 60015

Keathley, Naymond, Professor of New Testament, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Kelm, George L., Professor of Biblical Backgrounds and Archaeology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Kent, Dan G., Professor of Old Testament, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Knight, George W., Cook-Derrick Professor of New Testament and Greek, Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, TX 79698

Koester, Helmut, John H. Morrison Professor of New Testament Studies and Winn Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Harvard University, Cambridge, MA 02138

Lain, Gil, Pastor, Coggin Avenue Baptist Church, Brownwood, TX 76801

Langston, Scott, Doctoral Candidate, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Laughlin, John C. H., Professor of Religion, Averett College, Danville, VA 24541

Lea, Thomas D., Professor of New Testament, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Lee, H. Page, Bost Professor of Religion, Mars Hill College, Mars Hill, NC 28754

Lee, Phillips, Associate Pastor, St. Bernard Baptist Church, New Orleans, LA 70126

Lemke, Steve W., Assistant Professor of Philosophy of Religion, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Leonard, Bill J., William Walker Brookes Chair of American Christianity, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Lewis, Floyd, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Eldorado, AR 71730

Lewis, Jack P., Walton and Margaret Lipsey Professor of Biblical Studies, Harding Graduate School of Religion, Memphis, TN 38117

Lewis, Joe O., Vice President Academic Affairs, Georgetown College, Georgetown, KY 40324-1696

Livingston, George H., Professor of Old Testament, Asbury Theological Seminary, Wilmore, KY 40390

Logan, Phil, Pastor, Emmanuel Baptist Church, Huntingtown, MD 20649

Lorenzen, Thorwald, Professor of Systematic Theology and Ethics, Baptist Theological Seminary, Ruschlikon, Switzerland

Lunceford, Joe E., Associate Professor of Religion, Georgetown College, Georgetown, KY 40324

MacRae, Allen A., Chancellor and Emeritus Professor of Old Testament, Biblical Seminary, Hatfield, PA 19118

Mallau, Hans-Harold, Professor of Old Testament, Baptist Theological Seminary, Ruschlikon, Switzerland

Maltsberger, David C., Doctoral Candidate, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Mariottini, Claude F., Associate Professor of Old Testament, Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, IL 60148

Marsh, C. Robert, Pastor, Second-Ponce de Leon Baptist Church, Atlanta, GA 30305

Marshall-Green, Molly T., Associate Professor of Christian Theology, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Martin, D. C., Chairman, Department of Christian Studies, Grand Canyon College, Phoenix, AZ 85061

Martin, D. Michael, Assistant Professor of Biblical Studies, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Martin, Ralph P., Professor of Biblical Studies, University of Sheffield, Sheffield, England

Martin, Tony M., Associate Professor of Religion, University of Mary Hardin-Baylor, Belton, TX 76513

Massey, Ken, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Marks, MS 38646

Matheney, Jr., M. Pierce, Professor of Old Testament and Hebrew, Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, MO 64118

Matheson, Mark E., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Windermere, FL 36786

Matthews, E. LeBron, Pastor, Chase Memorial Baptist Church, Columbus, GA 31909

Matthews, Victor H., Associate Professor of Religion, Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, MO 65804

McCall, Emmanuel L., Director of Black Church Extension Division, Home Mission Board of SBC, Atlanta, GA 30367

McCoy, Glenn, Bible Chair, Eastern New Mexico University, Portales, NM 88130

McCready, Wayne, Associate Professor of Religious Studies, University of Calgary, Calgary, Alberta, Canada

McGee, Daniel B., Professor of Christian Ethics, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

McGraw, Larry, Assistant Professor in Bible Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, TX 79698

McKinney, Larry, Instructor in Biblical Studies, Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, MO 64118

McKnight, Edgar V., Professor of Religion, Furman University, Greenville, SC 29613

McNeal, T. R., Pastor, Trinity Baptist Church, Mount Pleasant, TX 75455

McRay, John M., Professor of New Testament and Archaeology, Wheaton College Graduate School, Wheaton, IL 60187

McWilliams, Warren, Auguie Henry Professor of Religion, Oklahoma Baptist University, Shawnee, OK 74801

Meier, Janice K., Th.D. Student, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126

Michaels, J. Ramsey, Professor of Religious Studies, Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, MO 65804

Mickelsen, A. Berkeley,* Professor of New Testament Emeritus, Bethel Theological Seminary, Saint Paul, MN 55112

Miller, J. Maxwell, Director of Graduate Division of Religion, Emory University, Atlanta, GA 30322

Mitchell, Michael J., Editor, Biblical Illustrator, Nashville, TN 37234

Morgan, Barry, Associate Professor of New Testament and Greek, Hannibal-LaGrange College, Hannibal, MO 63401

Morris, Leon, Principal, Ridley College (Ret.), Canon, St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne, Australia

Morris, Wilda W., Assistant Professor of Christian Education, Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, IL 60148-5698

Mott, Stephen C., Professor of Christian Social Ethics, Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary, South Hamilton, MA 01982

Moyer, James C., Head of Department of Religious Studies, Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, MO 65804

Murrell, Rich, Editor, Baptist Young Adult, Nashville, TN 37234

*Deceased

Music, David W., Associate Professor of Church Music, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas 76122

Newell, James, Pastor, Coosada Baptist Church, Coosada, AL 36020

Newman, Carey C., Assistant Professor of Religion and Philosophy, Palm Beach Atlantic College, West Palm Beach, FL 33402-3353

Newport, John P., Vice-President for Academic Affairs and Provost (Ret.), and Distinguished Professor of Philosophy of Religion, Emeritus, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76122

Ngan, Lai Ling Elizabeth, Doctoral Candidate, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Omanson, Roger L., Translator, American Bible Society, New York, NY 10023

Osborne, Grant, Professor of New Testament, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, IL 60015

Owens, J. J., Senior Professor of Old Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

O'Brien, J. Randall, Pastor, Calvary Baptist Church, Little Rock, AR 72207

Parkman, Joel, Doctoral Candidate, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Parsons, Mikeal C., Assistant Professor of New Testament, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Patterson, Paige, President of the Criswell College, Dallas, TX 75246

Pinnock, Clark H., Professor of Systematic Theology, McMaster Divinity College, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada

Polhill, John B., Professor of New Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Popkes, Wiard, Principal and Professor of New Testament, Hamburg Baptist Seminary, Hamburg, Germany

Potts, Donald R., Chairman of Religion Department, East Texas Baptist University, Marshall, TX 75670

Poulton, Gary, President and Professor of History, Virginia Intermont College, Bristol, VA 24201

Powell, Paul W., President and Chief Executive Officer, Annuity Board, Dallas, TX 75221-2190

Price, Nelson, Pastor, Roswell Street Baptist Church, Marietta, GA 30060

Prince, III, Robert W., Pastor, Hot Wells Baptist Church, San Antonio, TX 78223

Queen-Sutherland, Kandy, Professor of Old Testament, Baptist Theological Seminary, Ruschlikon, Switzerland

Reddish, Mitchell, Assistant Professor of Religion, Stetson University, Delando, FL 32720

Redditt, Paul, Chairman, Department of Religion, Georgetown College, Georgetown, KY 40324-1696

Reeves, Rodney, Chairman, Department of Religion and Philosophy, Assistant Professor of Religion, Williams Baptist College, Walnut Ridge, AR 72476

Register, M. Dean, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Gulfport, MS 39502

Reiling, J., Professor of New Testament, University of Utrecht, Utrecht, The Netherlands

Reynolds, J. A., Chairperson, Religion Department, University of Mary Hardin-Baylor, Belton, TX 76513

Ridge, Donna R., Free-lance writer, Kimberly, WI 54136

Robbins, Ray F., Professor Emeritus of New Testament and Greek, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Robertson, Paul E., Associate Professor of Theology, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 71026

Robinson, Darrell W., Vice President of Evangelism Section, Home Mission Board, Atlanta, GA 30367

Rogers, Max, Professor of Old Testament, Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, NC 27587

Ruffles, John, University of Durham, Durham, England

Sandlin, Bryce, Retired Professor of Bible and Hebrew, Howard Payne University, Brownwood, TX 76801

Saul, D. Glenn, Professor of Christian Ethics, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Sawyer, W. Thomas, Professor of Religion, Mars Hill College, Mars Hill, NC 28754

Scalise, Pamela J., Associate Professor of Old Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Schweer, G. William, Professor of Evangelism, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Self, William L., Former Pastor, Wieuca Road Baptist Church, Atlanta, GA 30326

Sexton, James H., Ila Baptist Church, Ila, GA 30647

Sheffield, Bob, Deacon Ministry Consultant, Nashville, TN 37234

Shurden, Kay, Marriage and Family Therapist, Mercer University, Macon, GA 31207

Simeon, James E. M., Pastor, Centreville Baptist Church, Centreville, MS 39631

Simmons, Billy E., Professor of New Testament and Greek, New Orleans, Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Skinner, Craig P., Professor of Preaching, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Sloan, Robert B., George Truett Professor of Religion, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Smalley, Stephen S., Dean of Cathedral, Chester, England

Smith, Billy K., Professor of Old Testament and Hebrew, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

Smith, Gary V., Professor of Old Testament, Bethel Theological Seminary, St. Paul, MN 55112

Smith, Marsha A. Ellis, Editor/Designer, Bibles and Academic Books, Holman Bible Publishers, Nashville, TN 37234

Smith, Ralph L., Professor of Old Testament, Emeritus, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, TX 76115-1153

Smith, T. C., Professor of New Testament, Furman University, Greenville, SC 29613

Smothers, Thomas, Professor of Old Testament, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Snider, P. Joel, Pastor, Crievewood Baptist Church, Nashville, TN 37220

Soards, Marion, United Theological Seminary, Dayton, OH 45406

Songer, Harold S., Vice President for Academic Affairs, Professor of New Testament Interpretation, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Stagg, Robert W., Professor of Religion, Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, AR 71923

Stephens, Shirley, Free-lance Writer/Editor, Nashville, TN

Strange, James F., Professor of Religious Studies, University of South Florida, Tampa, FL 33620

Street, Jr., Robert, Professor of Old Testament, Campbellsville College, Campbellsville, KY 42718

Stricker, Barry A., Assistant Professor of Theology and Christian Philosophy, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Stubblefield, Jerry, Professor of Christian Education, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Sullivan, James L., Retired President, Baptist Sunday School Board, Nashville, TN 37234

Summers, Ray, Retired Chairman of Department of Religion, Baylor University, Waco, TX 76798

Sutherland, Dixon, Professor of Patristics, Baptist Theological Seminary, Ruschlikon, Switzerland

Swanson, Phillip J., Pastor, Beacon Light Baptist Church, Vernon, NY 13476

Talbert, Charles H., Professor of Religion, Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, NC 27109

Tang, Samuel Yau-Chi, Professor of Old Testament Interpretation, Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, CA 94941

Tankersley, Bruce, Professor of Religion, East Texas Baptist University, Marshall, TX 75670

Tate, Marvin E., Professor of Old Testament Interpretation, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Taulman, James, Design Editor, Adult Bible Book Curriculum, Nashville, TN 37234

Thompson, J. William, Senior Design Editor, Youth Curriculum, Nashville, TN 37234

Tobias, Hugh, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Opp, AL 38467

Trammell, Timothy J., Professor of New Testament, Dallas Baptist University, Dallas, TX 75211-9800

Travis, James L., Head of Bible Department, Blue Mountain College, Blue Mountain, MS 38610

Traylor, Jr., John H., Pastor, First Baptist Church, Monroe, LA 71210

Tullock, John H., Professor of Religion, Belmont College, Nashville, TN 37212

Turnham, Tim, Pastor, Seminary Baptist Church, Seminary, MS 39479

Van Leeuwen, Raymond C., Assistant Professor of Theology, Calvin Theological Seminary, Grand Rapids, MI 49506

Vermillion, William H., Professor of Biblical Literature and Counseling, Western Evangelical Seminary, Portland, OR 97267

Vestal, Daniel, Pastor, Dunwoody Baptist Church, Dunwoody, GA 30338

Wade, Charles, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Arlington, TX 76010

Walker, Larry, Professor of Old Testament and Hebrew, Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Memphis, TN 38104

Ward, Wayne E., Joseph Emerson Brown Professor of Christian Theology, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

Warren, Bruce, Pastor, Elliott Baptist Church, Hearne, TX 77859

Watts, John D. W., Donald L. Williams Professor of Old Testament Interpretation, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, KY 40280

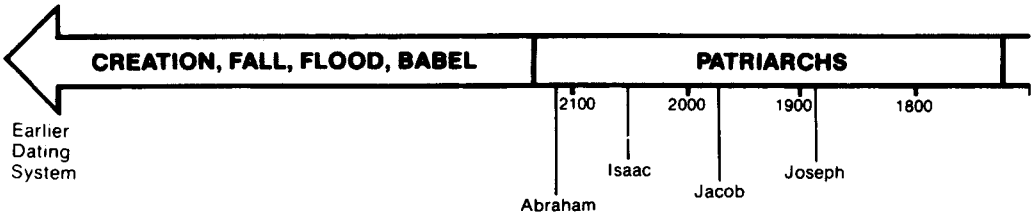
Wilson, Johnny Lee, Pastor, Immanuel Baptist Church, La Puente, CA

Winbery, Carlton L, Professor of Religion and Chairman of the Department of Religion/Philosophy, Louisiana College, Pineville, LA 71359

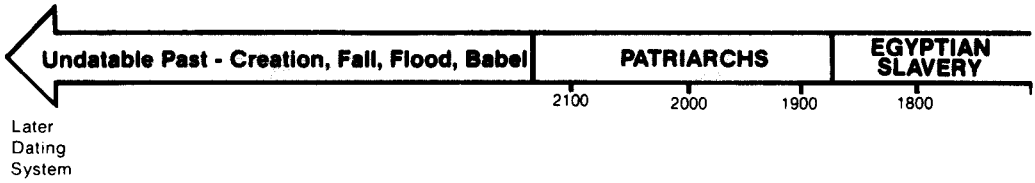
Wooldridge, Judith, Design Editor, Youth Curriculum, Nashville, TN 37234

Wright, Jr., G. Al, Pastor, Mount Tabor Baptist Church, Duluth, GA 30136

Wyrick, Stephen Von, Assistant Professor of Old Testament and Hebrew, California Baptist College, Riverside, CA 92504



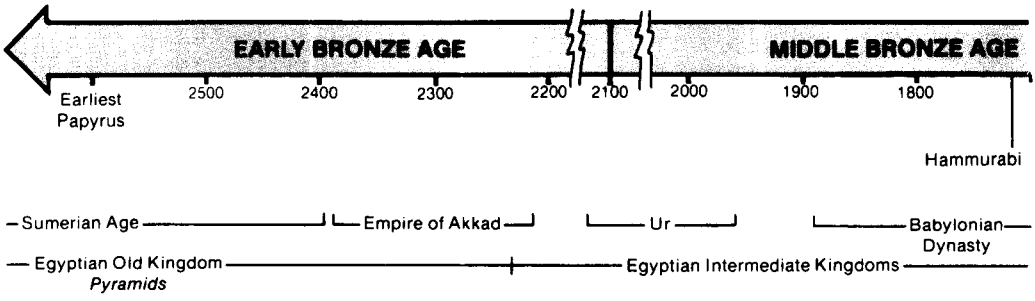
Yamauchi, Edwin, Professor of History, Miami University, Oxford, OH 45056



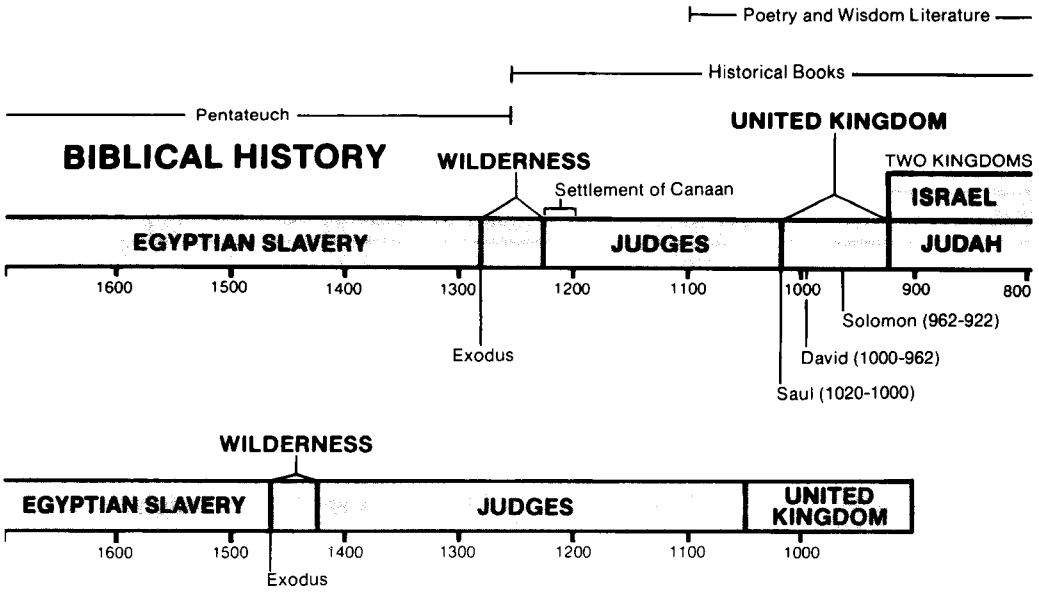
Young, J. Terry, Professor of Theology, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, LA 70126-4858

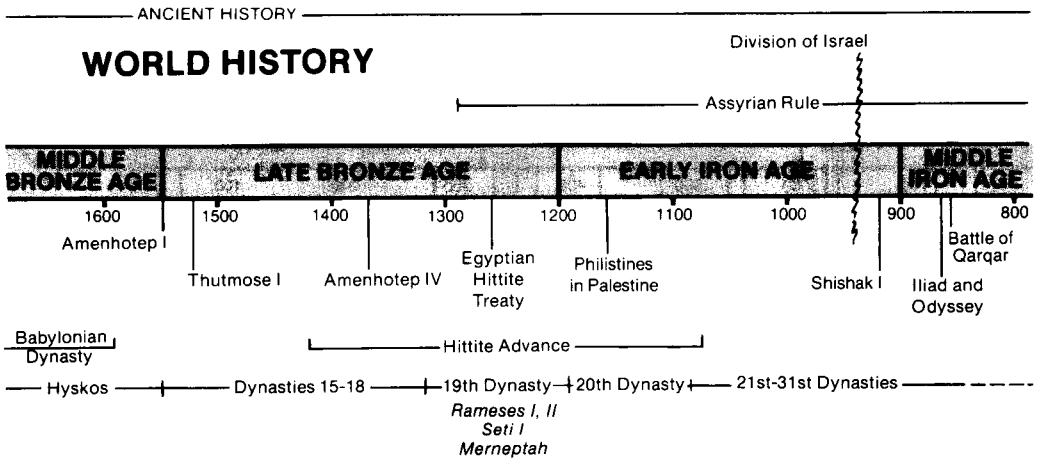
TIME LINE

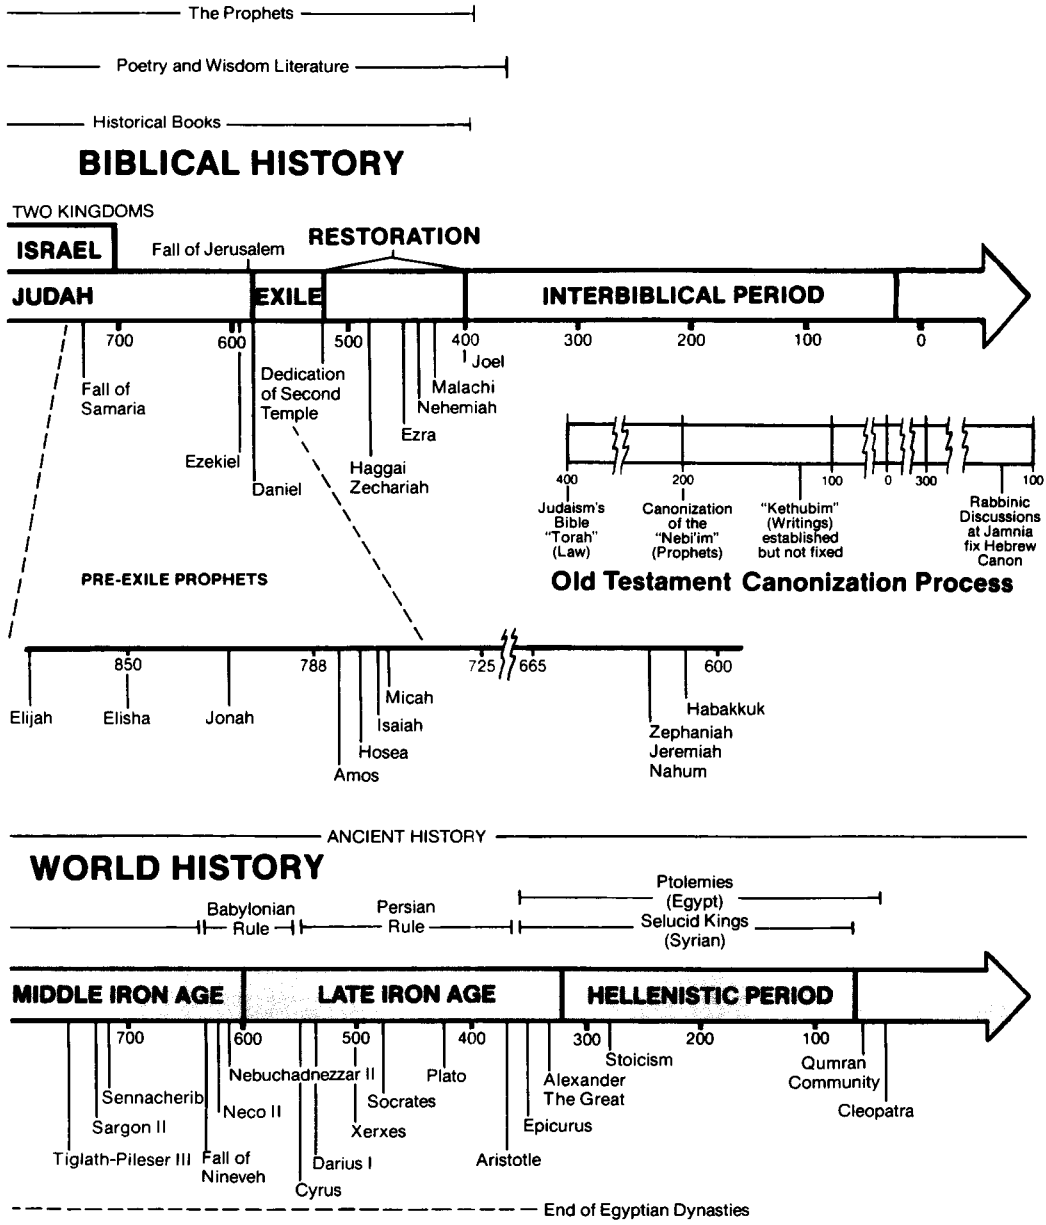
Pentateuch



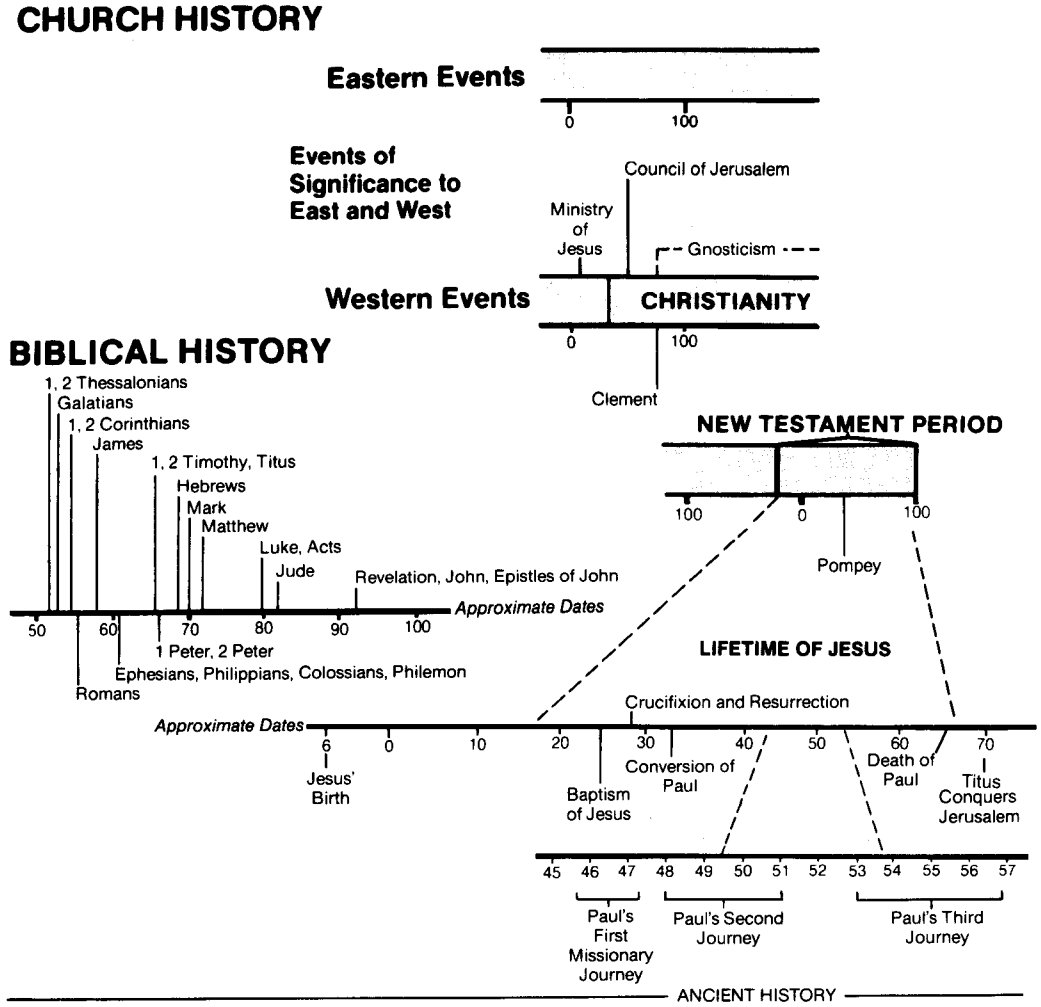
BIBLICAL HISTORY



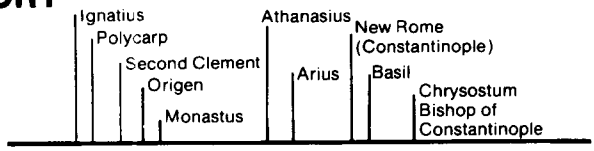




ANCIENT HISTORY



WORLD HISTORY



Poetry and Wisdom Literature
Historical Books
Pentateuch
BIBLICAL HISTORY
WILDERNESS
Settlement of Canaan
UNITED KINGDOM
TWO KINGDOMS
ISRAEL
EGYPTIAN SLAVERY
JUDGES
JUDAH
1600
1500
1400
1300
1200
1100
1000
900
800
Solomon (962-922)
Exodus
David (1000-962)
Saul (1020-1000)
WILDERNESS
EGYPTIAN SLAVERY
JUDGES
UNITED KINGDOM
1600
1500
1400
1300
1200
1100
1000
Exodus

ANCIENT HISTORY
WORLD HISTORY
Division of Israel
Assyrian Rule
MIDDLE BRONZE AGE
LATE BRONZE AGE
EARLY IRON AGE
MIDDLE IRON AGE
1600
1500
1400
1300
1200
1100
1000
900
800
Amenhotep I
Thutmose I
Amenhotep IV
Egyptian Hittite Treaty
Philistines in Palestine
Shishak I
Battle of Qarqar
Iliad and Odyssey
Babylonian Dynasty
Hittite Advance
Hyskos
Dynasties 15-18
19th Dynasty
20th Dynasty
21st-31st Dynasties
Rameses I, II
Seti I
Merneptah

The Prophets
Poetry and Wisdom Literature
Historical Books
BIBLICAL HISTORY
TWO KINGDOMS
ISRAEL
Fall of Jerusalem
RESTORATION
JUDAH
EXILE
INTERBIBLICAL PERIOD
700
600
500
400
300
200
100
0
Joel
Fall of Samaria
Dedication of Second Temple
Malachi
Nehemiah
Ezra
Ezekiel
Daniel
Haggai
Zechariah
400
200
100
0
300
100
Judaism's Bible "Torah" (Law)
Canonization of the "Nebi'im" (Prophets)
"Kethubim" (Writings) established but not fixed Rabbinic Discussions at Jamnia fix Hebrew Canon
Old Testament Canonization Process
PRE-EXILE PROPHETS
850
788
725
665
600
Elijah
Elisha
Jonah
Micah
Isaiah Hosea
Amos Habakkuk
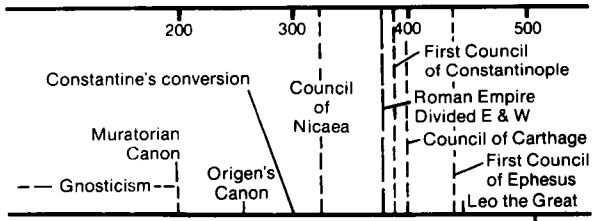
Zephaniah
Jeremiah
Nahum
ANCIENT HISTORY
WORLD HISTORY
Babylonian Rule
Persian Rule
Ptolemies (Egypt)
Selucid Kings (Syrian)
MIDDLE IRON AGE
LATE IRON AGE
HELLENISTIC PERIOD
700
600
500
400
300
200
100
Sennacherib
Sargon II
Tiglath-Pileser III
Nebuchadnezzar II
Neco II
Fall of Nineveh
Darius I
Cyrus
Socrates
Xerxes
Plato
Aristotle
Stoicism
Alexander The Great
Epicurus
Qumran Community
Cleopatra
End of Egyptian Dynasties



CHURCH HISTORY
Eastern Events
0
100
Events of Significance to East and West
Council of Jerusalem
Ministry of Jesus
Gnosticism
Western Events
CHRISTIANITY
0
100
Clement
BIBLICAL HISTORY
1, 2 Thessalonians
Galatians
1, 2 Corinthians
James
1, 2 Timothy, Titus
Hebrews
Mark
Matthew Luke, Acts
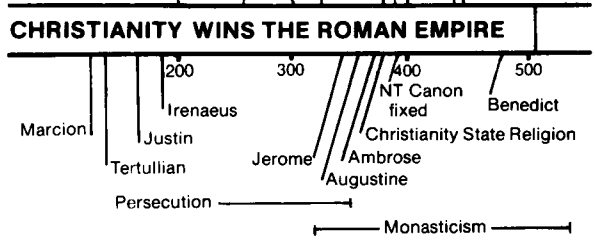
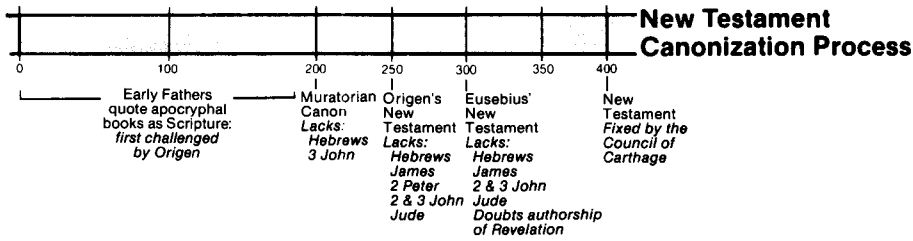
Jude
Revelation, John, Epistles of John
Approximate Dates
50
60
70
80
90
100
1 Peter, 2 Peter
Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon
Romans
NEW TESTAMENT PERIOD
100
0
100
Pompey
LIFETIME OF JESUS
Crucifixion and Resurrection
Approximate Dates
6
0
10
20
30
40
50
60
70
Jesus' Birth
Baptism of Jesus
Conversion of Paul
Death of Paul
Titus Conquers Jerusalem
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
Paul's First Missionary Journey
Paul's Second Journey
Paul's Third Journey
ANCIENT HISTORY
WORLD HISTORY
ROMAN PERIOD
0
100
Pontius Pilate
Jerusalem Destroyed
LIFETIME OF JESUS
Palestinian Rulers
Roman Emperors
Augustus 27-14
Tiberius 14-37
Caligula, Cladius 37-54
Nero 54-68
Hasmoneans (Maccabeans) 152-37
Herod The Great 37-4
Archelaus 4-6
Herod Antipas 4-39
Philip 4-34
Herod Agrippa I 37-44
Agrippa II 44-100

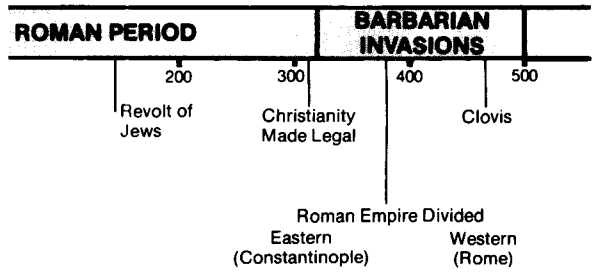
CHURCH HISTORY



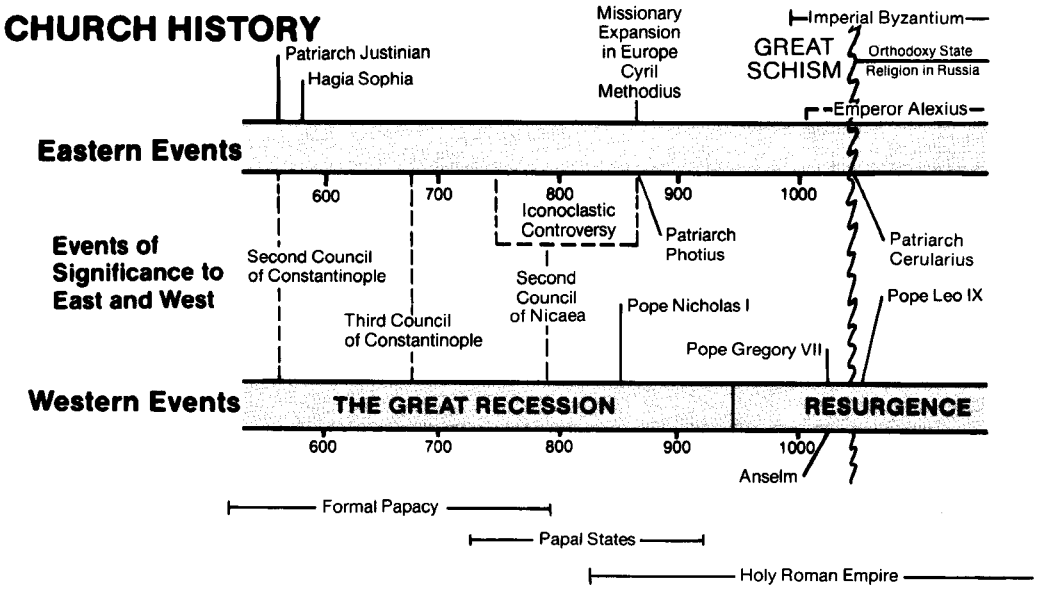


Eastern Events

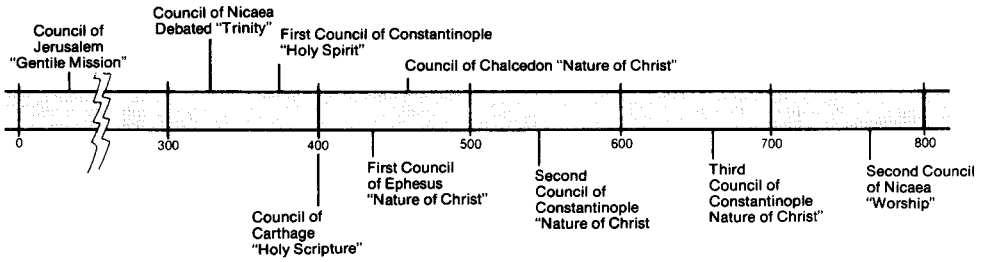
Events of Significance to East and West



Western Events

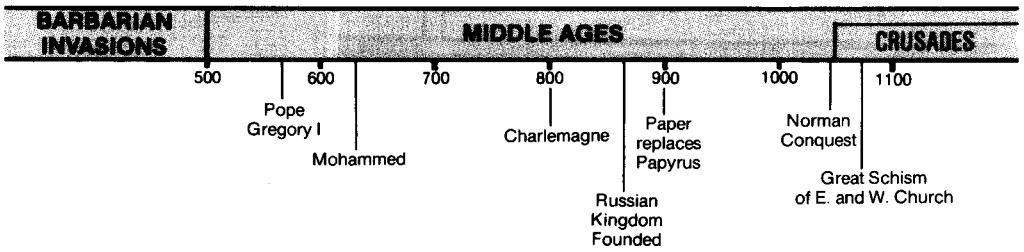


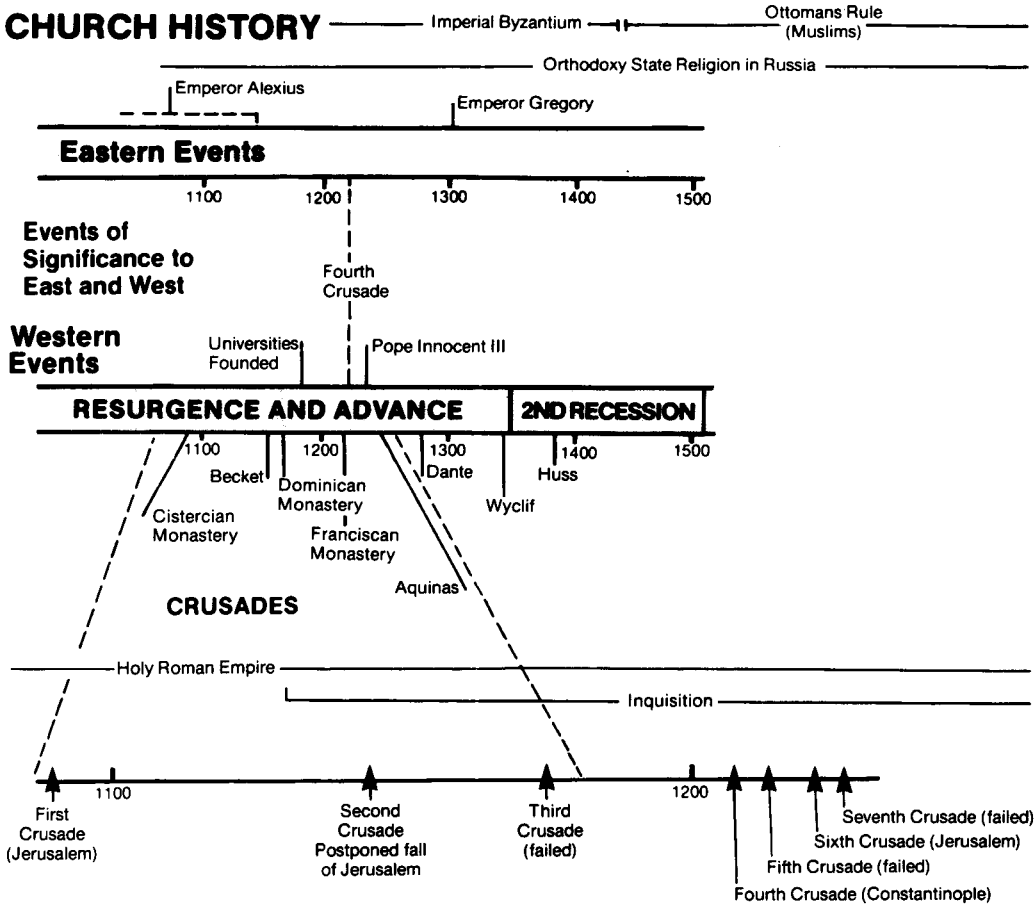
ANCIENT HISTORY | MEDIEVAL HISTORY



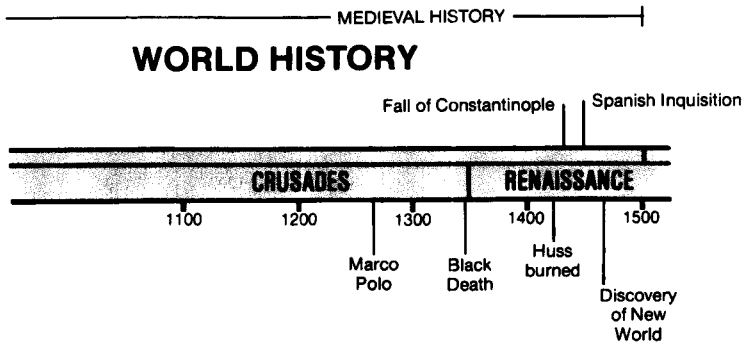
WORLD HISTORY

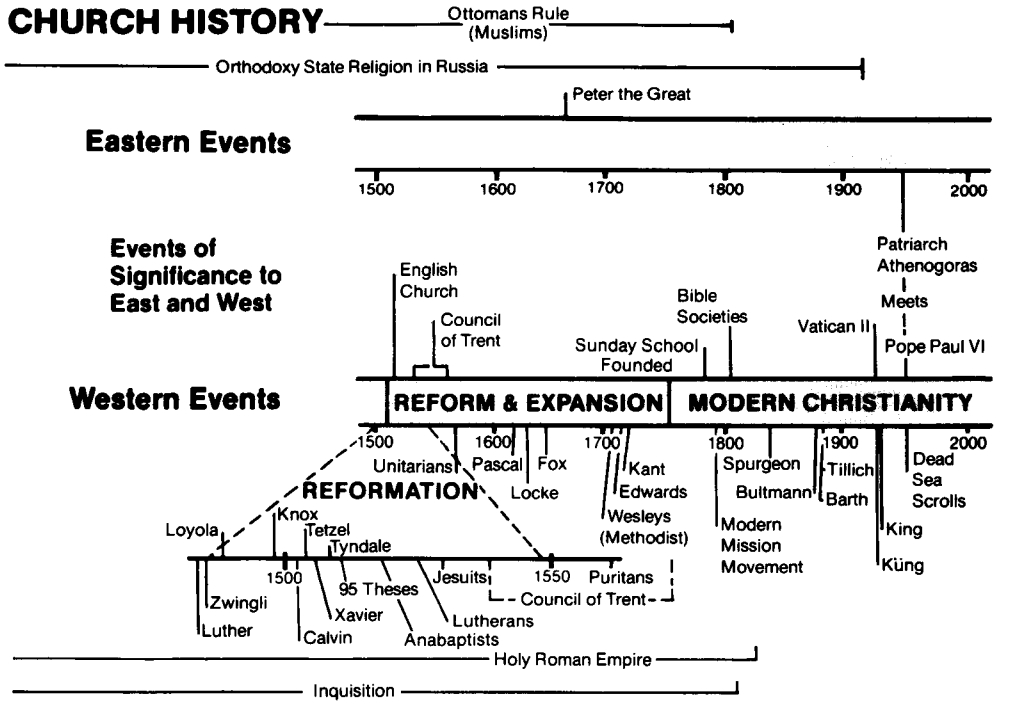
CHURCH HISTORY



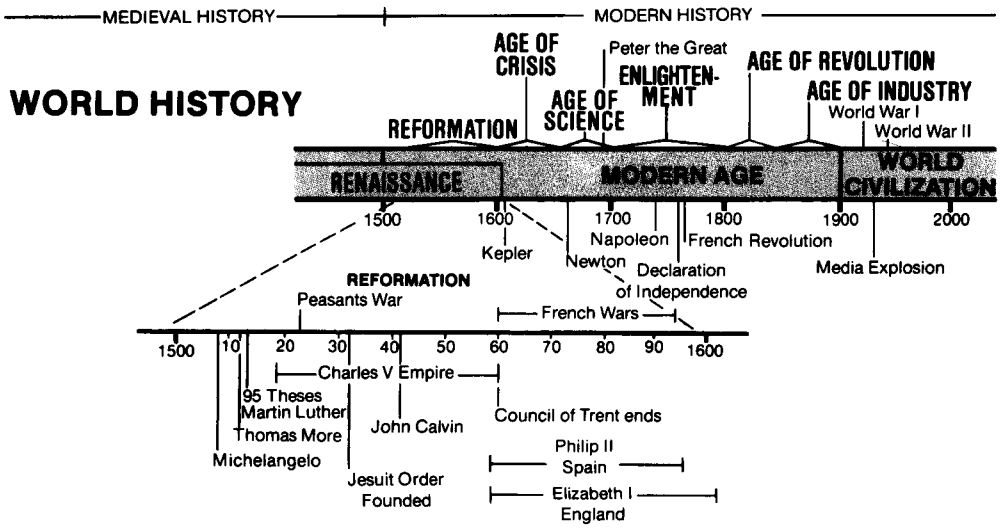


Doctrines Addressed by the Early Church Councils

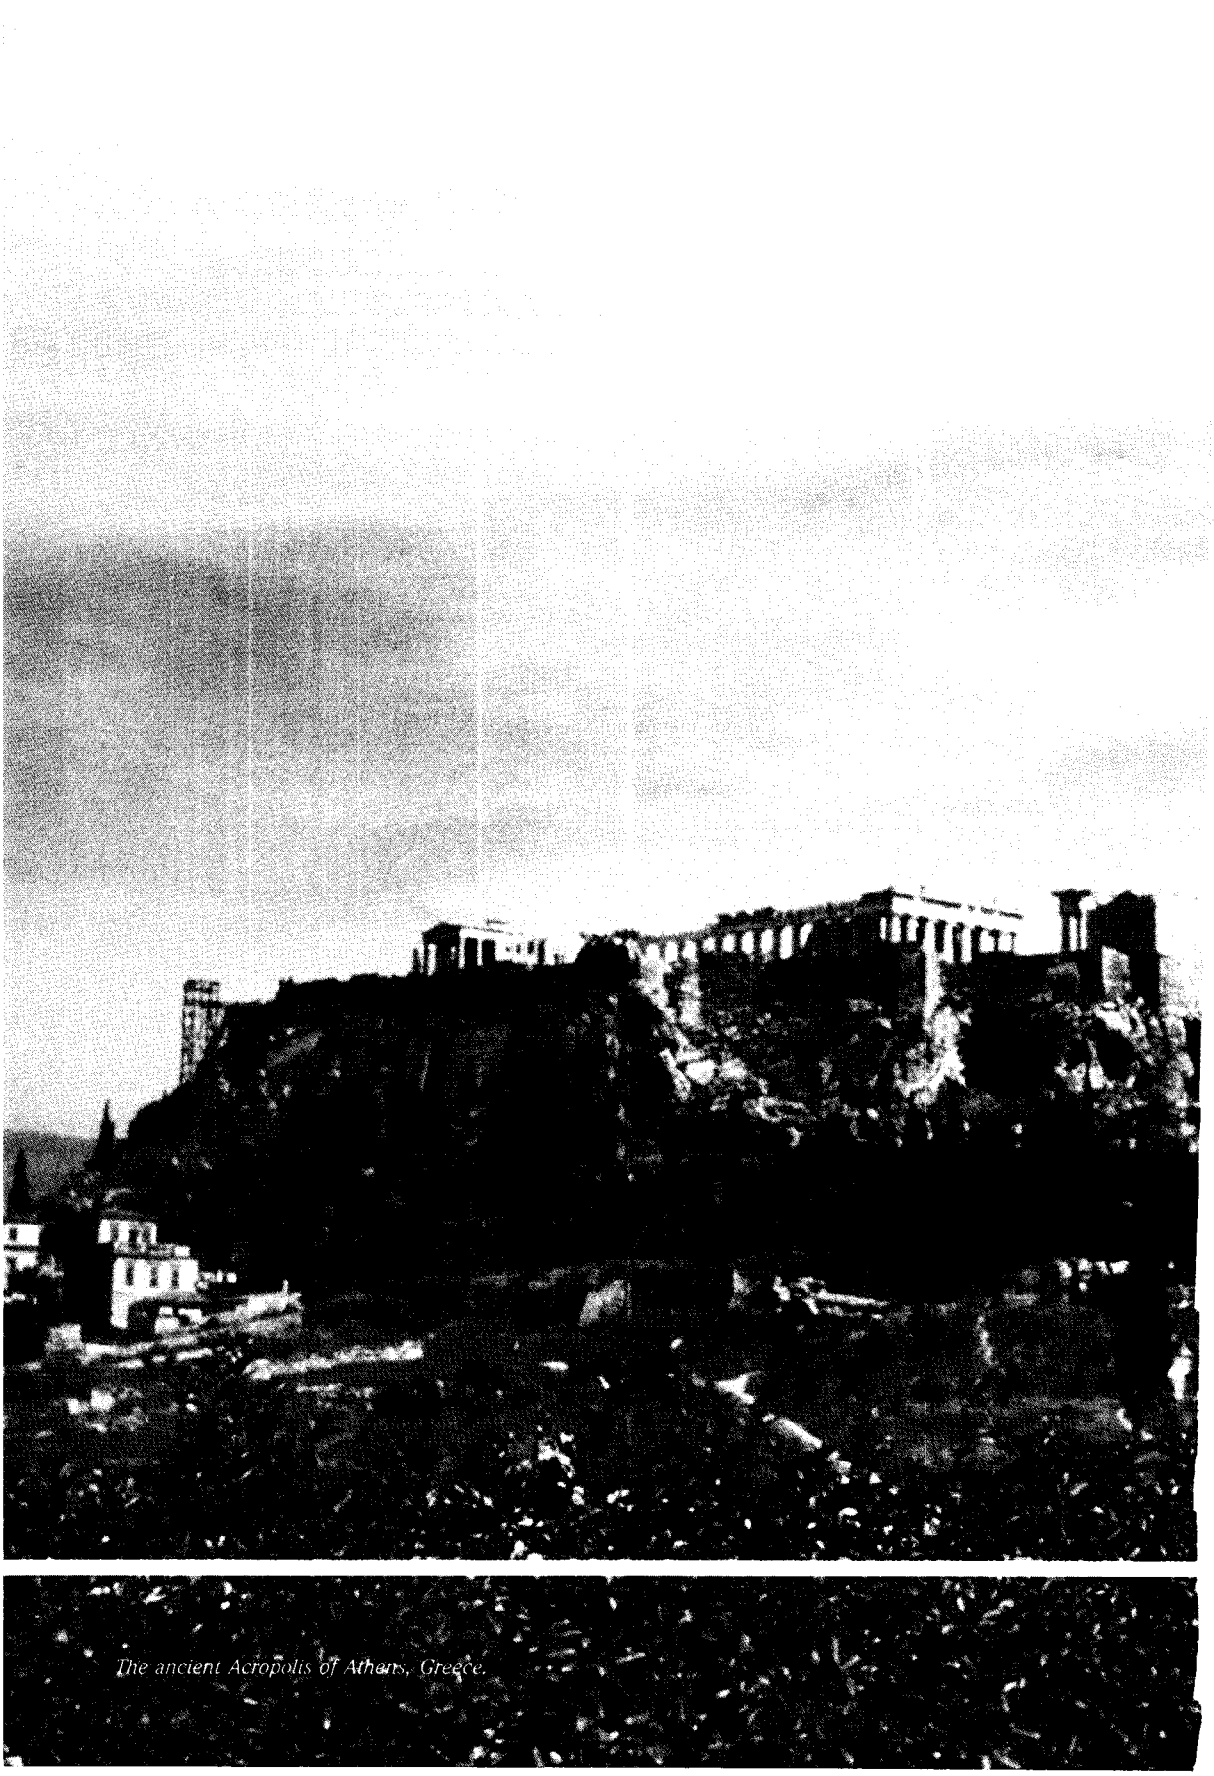




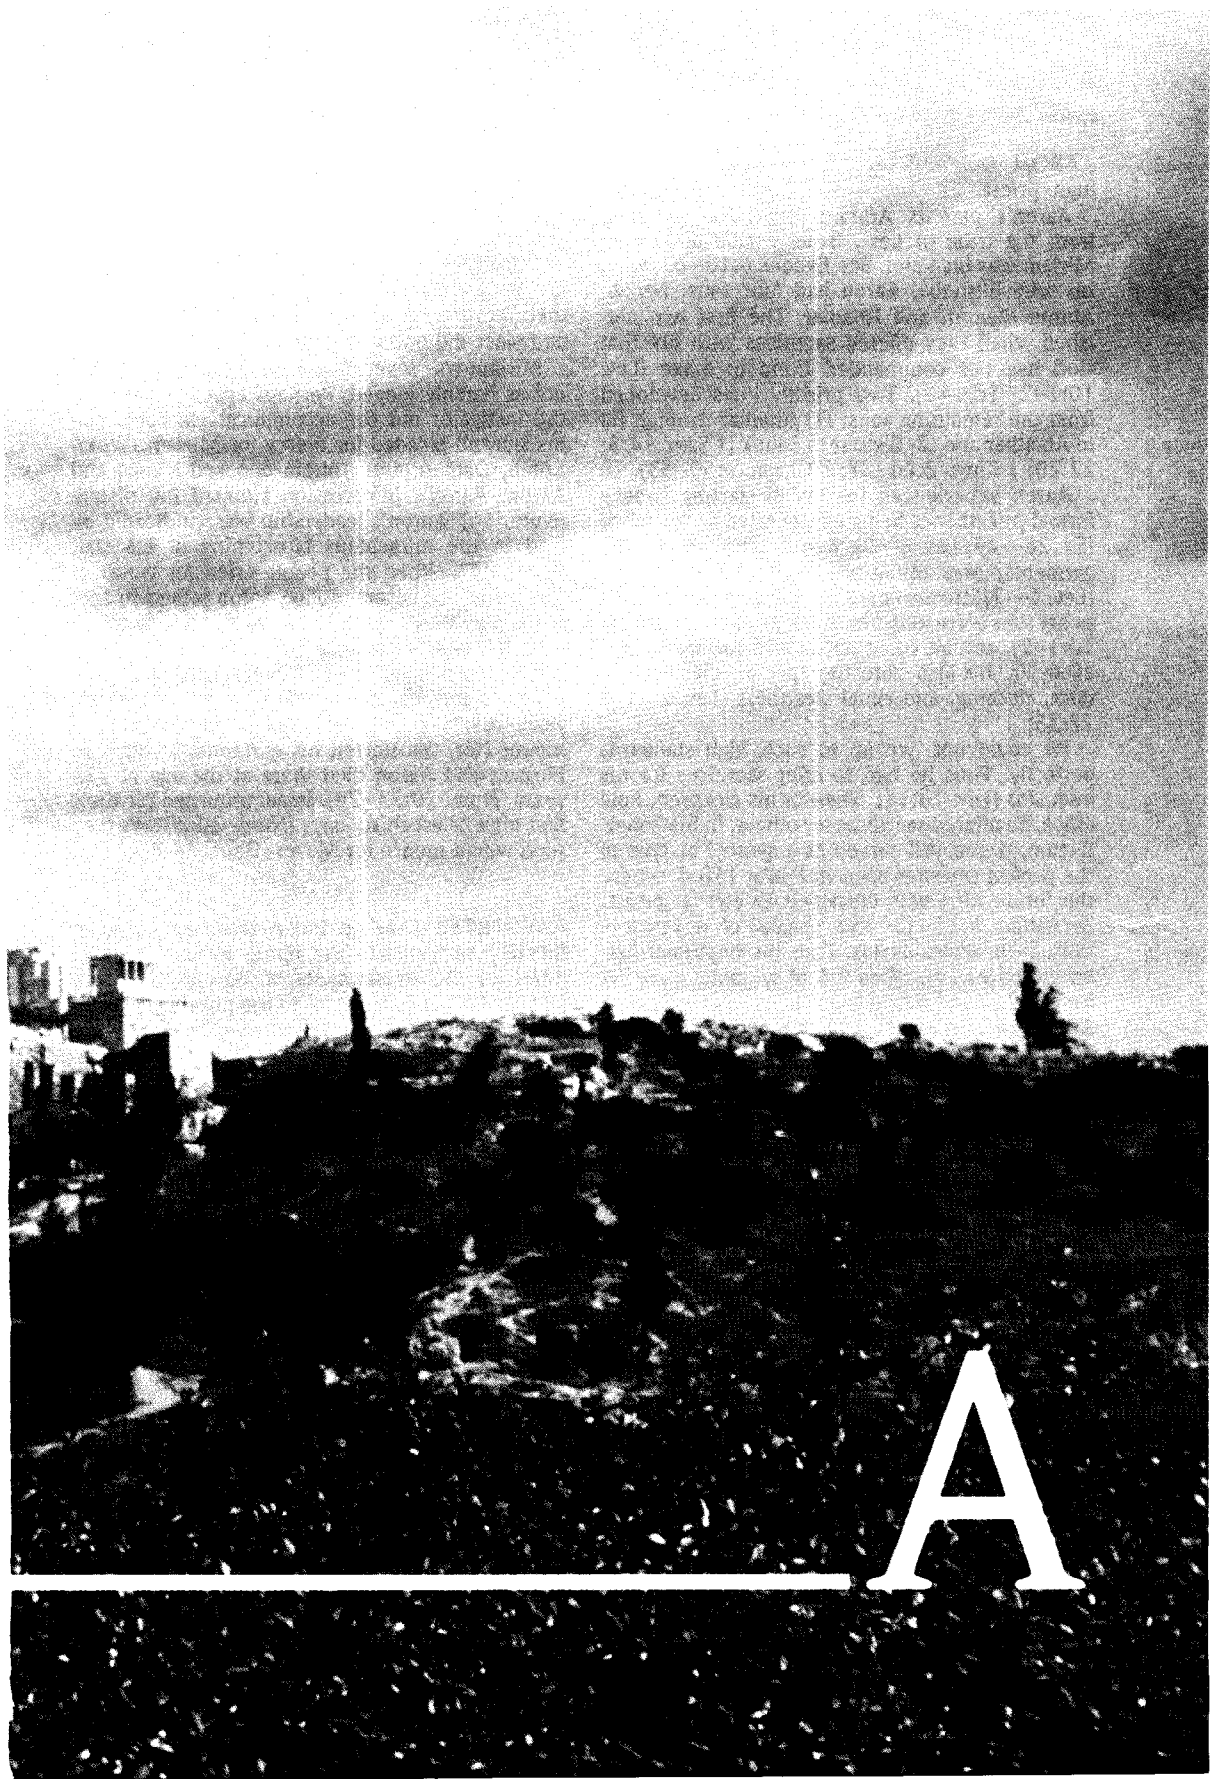
MEDIEVAL HISTORY



WORLD HISTORY



CHURCH HISTORY
Imperial Byzantium
Ottomans Rule (Muslims)
Orthodoxy State Religion in Russia
Emperor Alexius
Emperor Gregory
Eastern Events
1100
1200
1300
1400
1500
Events of Significance to East and West
Fourth Crusade
Western Events
Universities Founded
Pope Innocent III
RESURGENCE AND ADVANCE
2ND RECESSION
1100
1200
1300
1400
1500
Becket
Dominican Monastery
Dante
Huss
Cistercian Monastery
Franciscan Monastery
Wyclif
Aquinas
CRUSADES
Holy Roman Empire
Inquisition
1100
1200
First Crusade (Jerusalem)
Second Crusade Postponed fall of Jerusalem
Third Crusade (failed)
Seventh Crusade (failed)
Sixth Crusade (Jerusalem)
Fifth Crusade (failed)
Fourth Crusade (Constantinople)



MEDIEVAL HISTORY
WORLD HISTORY
Fall of Constantinople
Spanish Inquisition
CRUSADES
RENAISSANCE
1100
1200
1300
1400
1500
Marco Polo
Black Death
Huss burned
Discovery of New World

CHURCH HISTORY
Ottomans Rule (Muslims)
Orthodoxy State Religion in Russia
Peter the Great
Eastern Events
1500
1600
1700
1800
1900
2000
Events of Significance to East and West
Patriarch Athenogoras Meets Pope Paul VI
English Church
Council of Trent
Bible Societies
Sunday School Founded
Vatican II
Western Events
REFORM & EXPANSION
MODERN CHRISTIANITY
1500
1600
1700
1800
1900
2000
Unitarians
Pascal
Fox
Kant
Edwards
Wesleys (Methodist)
Spurgeon
Bultmann
Tillich
Barth
Dead Sea Scrolls
King
Küng
REFORMATION
Locke
Modern Mission Movement
Loyola
Knox
Tetzel
Tyndale
1500
1550
Jesuits Puritans
Council of Trent
Zwingli
Luther Xavier
Calvin
95 Theses
Anabaptists
Lutherans
Holy Roman Empire
Inquisition

MEDIEVAL HISTORY
MODERN HISTORY
WORLD HISTORY
AGE OF CRISIS
Peter the Great
ENLIGHTEN-MENT
AGE OF REVOLUTION
AGE OF INDUSTRY
World War I
World War II
AGE OF SCIENCE
REFORMATION
RENAISSANCE MODERN AGE
WORLD CIVILIZATION
1500
1600
1700
1800
1900
2000
Kepler
Napoleon
French Revolution
Newton
Declaration of Independence
Media Explosion
REFORMATION
Peasants War
French Wars
1500
10
20
30
40
50
60
70
80
90
1600
Charles V Empire
95 Theses
Martin Luther
Thomas More
John Calvin
Council of Trent ends
Michelangelo
Philip II
Spain
Jesuit Order Founded
Elizabeth I
England

The ancient Acropolis of Athens, Greece.

A

A

AARON (Aâr' on) Moses' brother; Israel's first high priest.

Aaron's parents Amram and Jochebed were from the tribe of Levi, Israel's tribe of priests. Miriam was his sister. See Exodus 6:16–26. With his wife Elisheba, Aaron had four sons: Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. The first two perished when they offered sacrifices with fire that God had not commanded them to make (Lev. 10:1–2; 16:1–2). Two priestly lines developed from the remaining sons: (1) Ithamar through Eli to Abiathar and (2) Eleazar to Zadok (1 Sam. 14:3; 22:20; 1 Kings 2:26–27; 1 Chron. 6:50–53).

Aaron experienced the joy of starting Israel's formal priesthood, being consecrated to the office (Ex. 28—29; Lev. 8—9), wearing the first priestly garments, and initiating the sacrificial system (Lev. 1—7). He also bore the burdens of his office as his sons were killed for their disobedience (Lev. 10:1–2), and he could not mourn for them (Lev. 10:6–7). He also bore the special rules of conduct, clothing, and ritual cleanness (Lev. 27:1—22:33).

He could not live up to such high standards perfectly. Thus he had to offer sacrifices for his own sins (Lev. 16:11). Then in his cleansed, holy office, he offered sacrifices for others. In his imperfection, Aaron still served as a symbol or type of the perfect priest as seen in Psalm 110:4, where the future king was described as eternal priest. Zechariah 6:11–15 also speaks of a priest—Joshua—in typical terms. Thus the imperfect Aaron established an office full of symbolic meaning for Israel.

Aaron's life. With all his faults, Aaron was a man chosen by God. We do not know what Aaron did during Moses' forty-year exile from Egypt, but he maintained the faith, kept contact with Israel's leaders, and did not forget his brother (Ex. 4:27–31). Ready of speech, he served nobly as Moses' spokesman before Pharaoh. More than once he stretched out Moses' staff to bring God's plagues on the land (Ex. 7:9,19). In the wilderness Aaron and Hur helped Moses hold up the staff, the symbol of God's power, so that Israel would prevail over Amalek (Ex. 17:12).

At Sinai, Aaron and his two older sons, Nadab and Abihu, were called to go up the mountain with Moses and seventy elders (Ex. 24:9). There they worshiped and ate and drank in heavenly fellowship. As Moses and Joshua went farther up, Moses left Aaron and Hur in charge (Ex. 24:14). But as Moses delayed on the mountain, the people asked Aaron for action. They cried, "Make us gods" (Ex. 32:1). Their sin was polytheism (worship of many gods) as well as idolatry. Aaron all too easily obliged and made a calf and apparently led in its worship.

On another occasion Aaron appeared in a bad light. In Numbers 12 he and Miriam spoke against Moses' marriage to the Cushite (Ethiopian) woman. (Cush was an old name for upper Egypt—approximately modern Sudan.) We are not told if this was a wife in addition to Zipporah, or if Zipporah had died, or even if Zipporah—a Midianite—had Cushite connections. Anyway, Aaron and Miriam were jealous of their younger brother. Really, their murmuring was against God's selection. Second place did not satisfy them.

Miriam was severely judged. Again, Aaron was not as harshly judged. Perhaps again he was not the instigator but the accomplice. He confessed his sin and pleaded for mercy for Miriam. When Korah, Dathan, and Abiram opposed Moses and Aaron, Aaron's intercession stopped the plague (Num. 16). Aaron's leadership was vindicated by God in the miraculous blossoming of his staff (Num. 17). When the people cried for water at Kadesh in the desert of Zin, Aaron joined in Moses' sin as they seized the power of the Lord for themselves (Num. 20:7–13). In consequence, Aaron, like Moses, was not to enter the Promised Land. Nearby on the border of Edom after forty years of his priesthood, Moses took Aaron up mount Hor, transferred his garments to his son, Eleazar, and Aaron died there at the age of 123 years (Num. 20:23–28). Israel mourned for their first high priest thirty days (Num. 20:29), as they soon would mourn for Moses (Deut. 34:8).

R. Laird Harris

AARONITES (Aâr' on īte) A term used only in the KJV to translate the name Aaron where it refers to the descendants of Aaron (1 Chron. 12:27; 27:17). Equivalent to the phrases "sons of Aaron" and "descendants of Aaron" used often in the Old Testament.

AARON'S ROD The rod Aaron used to demonstrate to the Pharaoh that the God of the Hebrews was Lord. It became a snake when cast down (Ex. 7:8–13) and brought about the first three plagues (Ex. 7:19–20; 8:5–7,16–19). This rod was also used to strike the rocks at Horeb and Kadesh to bring forth water (Ex. 17:1–7; Num. 20:7–11).

The rebellion of Korah (Num. 16:1–50) made it necessary to determine who would be eligible to come before God in the tabernacle as priests (see Korah). The head of each tribe was to inscribe his name on an almond rod representing his tribe, and each rod was placed in the tabernacle. The next morning, Aaron's rod had blossomed and borne almonds. This was taken as a sign from God that the house of Aaron had the right to serve Him in the tabernacle. The rod was placed inside the tabernacle (Num. 17:1–11). According to Hebrews 9:4, the rod was kept in the ark of the covenant.

AB The name for the fifth month in Jewish religious calendar corresponding to the eleventh month in the Hebrew civic calendar. It usually covered parts of July and August. The name does not appear in the Bible.

ABADDON (Ȧ·bȧd′ don; to perish) In the KJV Abaddon appears only in Revelation 9:11 as the Hebrew name of the angel of the bottomless pit, whose Greek name was Apollyon. Abaddon occurs six times in the Hebrew Bible (Job 26:6; 28:22; 31:12; Prov. 15:11; 27:20; Ps. 88:11). The KJV and NIV translate Abaddon as "destruction," while the NASB and RSV retain the word "Abaddon." Abaddon appears in parallel with Sheol and death. It represents the dark side of existence beyond death. See Hell.

ABAGTHA (Ȧ bāg′ thȧ) One of seven eunuchs on the staff of Ahasuerus or Xerxes (486–465 BC), King of Persia (Esther 1:10).

ABANA (Ȧb′ ȧ·nȧ) or ABANAH (NASB) River in Damascus in Syria. In his anger Naaman wanted to wash here rather than in the dirty Jordan (2 Kings 5:12). Many Hebrew manuscripts, the Septuagint and Targums call the river the Amana. See Song of Solomon 4:8. Its modern name is Barada, and it travels swiftly from snow-capped Mount Hermon through Damascus to end in a marsh.

The Abana River (modern Barada River) flows through the country of Syria.

ABARIM (Ȧbȧ·rĭm) Mountain range including Mount Nebo from which Moses viewed the Promised Land (Num. 27:12; 33:47–48; Deut. 32:49). The mountain range is in Moab, east of the Dead Sea, west of Heshbon and southeast of Jericho. Jeremiah called Jerusalem to cross to Abarim and lament because her allies had been defeated (Jer. 22:20).

ABBA (Ȧb′ bȧ) is the Aramaic word for "father" used by Jesus to speak of His own intimate relationship with God, a relationship that others can enter through faith.

Old Testament Although abba does not occur in the Old Testament, its Hebrew associate ab occurs frequently. Ab usually refers to a human father. On occasion the Old Testament speaks of God in the role of Father to Israel (Ex. 4:22; Deut. 32:6; Isa. 45:9–11; Mal. 2:10) or to Israel's king (2 Sam. 7:14; Pss. 2:7; 89:26–27).

New Testament The idea of God's intimate relationship to humanity is a distinct feature of Jesus' teaching. God relates to believers as a father relates to his child. Some would translate Abba as "Daddy" to convey the close, personal meaning of the word. Even when "Father" in the New Testament translates the more formal Greek word pater, the idea of abba is certainly in the background. Jesus addressed God as Abba in prayer (Mark 14:36) and taught His disciples to pray in the same terms (Luke 11:1–2). Jesus' claim of intimate relationship with God offended many of His opponents because they considered Abba to be overly familiar in addressing God. But Jesus' usage established the pattern for the church's view of God and each believer's relationship with Him. Paul used Abba to describe God's adoption of believers as His children (Rom. 8:15) and the change in the believer's status with God that results (Gal. 4:6–7). Michael Fink

ABDA (Ȧb′ dȧ) Name meaning, "servant" for two men. 1. The father of Adoniram, whom Solomon entrusted with his labor force (1 Kings 4:6). 2. A Levite living in Jerusalem rather than in one of the levitical cities (Neh. 11:17). He is also called Obadiah (1 Chron. 9:16).

ABDEEL (Ȧb′ dē·ĕl) Name meaning, "servant of God." Abdeel's son Shelemiah was one of three attendants whom Jehoiakim (609–598 B.C.) commanded to arrest Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe, and Jeremiah (Jer. 36:26).

ABDI (Ȧb′ dī) Name meaning, "my servant." 1. A Levite whose grandson Ethan was one of the Temple musicians David appointed (1 Chron. 6:44). 2. A Levite whose son Kish followed King Hezekiah's wishes and helped cleanse the Temple (2 Chron. 29:12). 3. An Israelite with a foreign wife in the time of Ezra (Ezra 10:26).

ABDIEL (Ȧb′ dĭ·ĕl) Name meaning, "servant of God." His son Ahi was a leader in the tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:15).

ABDON (Ȧb′ dŏn) Geographical and personal name meaning "service" or "servile." 1. A city from the tribe of Asher given the Levites (Josh. 21:30; 1 Chron. 6:74). Its modern name is Khirbet Abdeh. It lies about three miles from the Mediterranean coast between Tyre and Acco. 2. A judge of Israel from the town of Pirathon in the tribe of Ephraim. He had a large family and personal wealth (Judg. 12:13–15). 3. Two men of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:23, 30; 9:36). The second of these was an ancestor of King Saul. 4. A member of the team named by King Josiah to seek God's guidance as to the meaning of the book Hilkiah, the priest, found in the Temple (2 Chron. 34:20). Known in 2 Kings 22:12 as Achbor or Acbor (NIV).

A

ABEDNEGO (Å·bĕd′ nė·gō) In Daniel 1:7, the Babylonian name given to one of the three Hebrew youths who were conscripted along with Daniel to serve in the king's court. God delivered them from the fiery furnace (Dan. 2:48—3:30). His Hebrew name was Azariah. The precise meaning of the Babylonian name Abednego is disputed. Abed means "servant." Nego may include the name of a Babylonian god. See Daniel, Book of; Azariah.

ABEL (Ā′ bĕl) Name meaning, "breath, vapor, meadow." Abel's name is associated with the shortness of life. The second son of Adam and Eve may have been a twin because Genesis 4:2 literally reads, "And she continued to bear his brother Abel." His claim to fame is that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain" (Heb. 11:4). Some have thought that it was the better sacrifice because it was the sacrifice of an animal. However, the emphasis on "faith" in Hebrews and the idea of a "proper offering" in the Septuagint translation of Genesis 4:7 suggest that Abel's offering was made with a correct attitude and in the proper manner. Because of jealousy, Cain killed Abel. Hebrews 12:24 compares Abel's blood with Christ's blood. Abel's blood calls for vengeance, but Christ's blood carries with it the idea of forgiveness (Matt. 23:35; Luke 11:51; 1 John 1:7). Nevertheless, Abel is outstanding because he was the first person to worship God correctly, to demonstrate faith accurately, and to please God fully. Abel was the first shepherd and influenced the early Hebrews to place a priority on the pastoral life. Donald R. Potts

ABEL (Ā′ bĕl) A place name used alone and as the first part of other place names as seen below. The Hebrew 'Abel is a distinct word with a different spelling from the personal name Abel (Hebrew, hebel). The precise meaning of the place name is uncertain. It may mean, "brook." Standing alone, Abel appears in 2 Samuel 20:14–18, probably being the same place as Abel-beth-maachah.

ABEL-BETH-MAACHAH or ABEL-BETH-MAACAH (NAS, NIV, RSV). (Ā′ bĕl-bĕth-mā′ å·cah) See Abel. A city with a strong Israelite tradition, known for its wise people. Joab besieged the city when Sheba fled there after seeking to lead a rebellion against David. A wise woman delivered the city by getting the citizens to execute Sheba (2 Sam. 20:1–22). Ben-hadad, king of Syria, answered the call for help of Asa, king of Judah (913–873), and conquered Abel-beth-Maachah from Baasha, king of Israel (1 Kings 15:20). Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, captured the city from Pekah, king of Israel (2 Kings 15:29). Abel-beth-maachah is identified with the modern Abil el-Oamh, twelve miles north of Lake Huleh near Dan. Its name indicates it was once part of the city state of Maachah controlled by Arameans (2 Sam. 10:6).

ABEL-CHERAMIM or ABEL-KERAMIM (NAS, NIV, RSV, TEV) (Ā′ bĕl-chĕr′ å·mĭm) Place name meaning, "brook of the vineyards." Jephthah, the judge, extended his victory over the Ammonites as far as Abel-cheramim (Judg. 11:33), whose location east of the Jordan is not known precisely.

ABEL-MAIM (Ā′ bĕl-mā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "brook of the waters." Used in 2 Chronicles 16:4 for place called Abel-beth-maachah in 1 Kings 15:20. If Abel-maim is a different city, its precise location east of the Jordan is not known.

ABEL-MEHOLAH (Ā′ bĕl-mė·hō′ lăh) Place name meaning, "brook of the round dancing." A border town or towns whose location(s) is uncertain. Gideon fought the Midianites in the territory of Issachar west of the Jordan (Judg. 7:22). Solomon places Abel-meholah in a district including Taanach, Megiddo, and Beth-shean (1 Kings 4:12). This was Elisha's home (1 Kings 19:16).

ABEL-MIZRAIM (Ā′ bĕl-mĭz′ rā′ ĭm) Place name meaning either "brook of Egypt," or if derived from a different Hebrew word with similar spelling, "mourning of the Egyptians." Jacob's children mourned him there east of the Jordan (Gen. 50:11). In giving the name the Canaanites identified Jacob's sons as Egyptians.

ABEL-SHITTIM (Ā′ bĕl-shĭt′ tĭm) Place name meaning, "brook of the acacias." The last stop of Israel before crossing the Jordan (Num. 33:49). See Shittim.

ABEZ or EBEZ (NAS, NIV, RSV, TEV) (Ā′ bĕz) Place name with unknown meaning. Town allotted to Issachar (Josh. 19:20).

ABI or ABIJAH (NIV) (Ā′ bī) Personal name meaning, "my father." Mother of King Hezekiah (2 Kings 18:2).

ABIA (Å·bī′ å) KJV for Abijah in 1 Chronicles 3:10; Matt. 1:7; Luke 1:5. See Abijah.

ABIAH (Å·bī′ åh). KJV for Abijah in 1 Samuel 8:2; 1 Chronicles 2:24; 6:28; 7:8. See Abijah.

ABI-ALBON (Ā′ bī-ăl′ bŏn) Personal name meaning, "my father is overpowering." One of David's 30 heroes (2 Sam. 23:31). Called Abiel in 1 Chronicles 11:32. Original name in 2 Samuel may have been Abi-baal, whose letters were then transposed to a new name to avoid the idolatrous name. See Abiel.

ABIASAPH (Å·bī' å·săph) Personal name meaning, "my father has gathered" or "harvested." A levitical priest in the line of Korah (Ex. 6:24). See Ebiasaph.

ABIATHAR (Å·bī' å·thär) Personal name meaning, "father of abundance." The son of Ahimelech and the eleventh high priest in succession from Aaron through the line of Eli. He survived the slaughter of the priests at Nob and fled to David, hiding in the cave of Adullam from King Saul (1 Sam. 22). Having escaped with the ephod, Abiathar became the high priest and chief counselor for David (1 Sam. 23:6). Repeatedly, he inquired of the Lord for David (1 Sam. 23:9; 30:7; 2 Sam. 2:1; 5:19). Abiathar shared with Zadok the responsibility of taking the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:11,12; 2 Samuel 15:24). While Abiathar remained faithful to David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam. 15), he later supported Adonijah as successor of King David instead of Solomon (1 Kings 1:7). Solomon deposed him from the priesthood and banished him to Anathoth, his home town, fulfilling the prophecy to Eli (1 Sam. 2:31–35). Only because of his faithful service to Solomon's father, King David, was he spared the death penalty (1 Kings 2:26,27).

Mark 2:26 records Jesus' statement that David took the showbread from the place of worship when Abiathar was high priest at Nob. 1 Samuel 21:1 reports that this happened when Ahimelech, the father of Abiathar, was still the high priest. However, a few days after this incident Abiathar did become high priest (1 Sam. 22:19–20). Some New Testament Greek manuscripts omit "when Abiathar was high priest." It may be that Abiathar was co-priest with his father. Or a copyist of the Gospel of Mark may have copied the text wrong. See Priesthood; Levites; Chief Priest.

Donald R. Potts

ABIB (Ā' bib) The month of the Exodus deliverance from Egypt (Ex. 13:4) and thus of the Passover festival (Ex. 23:15; 34:18; Deut. 16:1). A harvest month covering parts of March and April, Abib means, "ears of grain." Later the month was called Nisan (Esther 3:7). See Calendar.

ABIDA or ABIDAH (Å·bī' dà) Personal name meaning, "my father knows." A grandson of Abraham and ancestor of the Midianites (Gen. 25:4; 1 Chron. 1:33).

ABIDAN (Ăb' ĭ·dăn) Personal name meaning, "my father judged." Representative of the tribe of Benjamin in helping Moses and Aaron number the people in the wilderness (Num. 1:11) and captain of the tribe in the wilderness marches (Num. 2:22; 7:60,65; 10:24).

ABIEL (Å·bī' ĕl) Personal name meaning, "my Father is God." See Abi-albon. Grandfather of King Saul (1 Sam. 9:1) or at least closely related to him (1 Chron. 9:36,39; 1 Sam. 14:50–51), the meaning of the texts not being absolutely clear. See Jehiel.

ABIEZER (Ā' bī-ē' zĕr) Personal and place name meaning, "my Father is help." 1. Son of Manasseh and grandson of Joseph (Josh. 17:2; 1 Chron. 7:18). 2. Territory belonging to clan of Abiezer of tribe of Manasseh located in southwest part of Manasseh's territory and including towns of Elmattan, Ophrah, and Tetel. The territory was famous for grape production (Judg. 8:2; Samaritan, Ostraca) and was home of the judge Gideon (Judg. 6:11, 24, 34; 8:32). 3. Member of David's 30 heroes (2 Sam. 23:27; 1 Chron. 11:28) and an administrator of David's forces in the ninth month (1 Chron. 27:12). See Jeezer.

ABIEZRITE (Ā' bī-ĕz' rīte) Descendants of Abiezer (Judg. 6:11,24; 8:32). See Abiezer 1. and 2.

ABIGAIL (Ăb' ĭ gāil) Personal name meaning, "my father rejoiced." 1. Wife of David after being wife of Nabal. She was praised for wisdom in contrast to Nabal, her arrogant and overbearing husband, who was a large landowner and successful shepherd. Nabal held a feast for his sheep shearers while David was hiding from Saul in the wilderness of Paran. David and his six hundred men were camped near the town of Maon. He heard about Nabal's feast and requested some food. Nabal, in a drunken state, refused the request and insulted David's ten messengers. In anger, David determined to kill all of Nabal's household. Abigail anticipated David's reaction and loaded a convoy of donkeys with food to feed all of David's men. As soon as she met David, she impressed him with her beauty, humility, praise, and advice (1 Sam. 25:32–33). After Nabal became sober and heard about David's plans to kill him, he had a heart attack. Following Nabal's death, David married Abigail, the second of his eight wives. They lived first at Gath and then at Hebron, where Abigail gave birth to Chileab, who is also called Daniel. Later, Abigail was taken captive by the Amalekites when they captured Ziklag, but David rescued her (1 Samuel 30:1–18). 2. Sister of David and the mother of Amasa (1 Chron. 2:16–17), married to Jether, an Ishmaelite (also called Ithra). Amasa, her son, was at one time the commander of David's army (2 Sam. 17:25). Abigail was the daughter of Nahash who, because of textual uncertainties has been described as (1) another name for Jesse; (2) the wife of Jesse; and (3) the father of Abigail and Zeruiah, who died and whose widow became a wife of Jesse. See David. Donald R. Potts

A

ABIHAIL (Ăb′ ĭ·hāĭl) Personal name meaning, "my father is a terror." 1. Woman in family list of Judah (1 Chron. 2:29). 2. Wife of King Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:18). Personal name from different Hebrew spelling meaning, "my father is powerful." 3. Father of Zuriel, a leading Levite under Moses (Num. 3:35). 4. Father of Esther and uncle of Mordecai (Esther 2:15). 5. A member of the tribe of God (1 Chron. 5:14).

ABIHU (Ă·bī′ hū) Personal name meaning, "my father is he." The second son of Aaron; one of Israel's first priests (Ex. 6:23; 28:1). He saw God with Moses, Aaron, his brother, and 70 elders (Ex. 24). He and his brother Nadab offered "strange fire" before God (Lev. 10:1–22). The exact nature of their sin is not known. They simply did what God had not commanded. Perhaps they offered sacrifice at the wrong time or with coals or materials not properly sanctified. Compare Lev. 16:12. The result is clear. God's fire consumed them. See Priests.

ABIHUD (Ă·bī′ hŭd) Personal name meaning, "my father is glorious." Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:3).

ABIJAH or ABIJAM (Ă·bī′ jăh) Personal name meaning, "my Father is Yahweh." 1. Second son of Samuel whose crooked acts as judge led Israel to demand a king (1 Sam. 8:2–5).2. Son of Jeroboam, first king of the Northern Kingdom Israel. Abijah died according to prophecy of Ahijah (1 Kings 14:1–18).3. Son of Rehoboam and second king of divided Southern Kingdom of Judah (915–913), called Abijam in 1 Kings 15, a name meaning, "my father is Yam" (or sea), possibly a reference to Canaanite god. Abijah was his father's favorite son (2 Chron. 11:22). Abijah followed the sins of Rehoboam (1 Kings 15:3) but still maintained proper worship in Jerusalem (2 Chron. 13:10), and God gave him victory over Jeroboam of Israel (2 Chron. 13:15–20). Abijah was remembered for his large family (2 Chron. 13:21). He is listed in the ancestors of Jesus (Matt. 1:7). 4. Wife of Hezron connected with genealogy of Caleb in a text whose meaning is not clear (1 Chron. 2:24). 5. A grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 6. A priestly descendant of Aaron (1 Chron. 24:10). 7. A priest under Nehemiah who signed a covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:7). 8. A leading priest in the days of the return from Exile (Neh. 12:4), and then a priestly house (Neh. 12:17) to which Zechariah, father of John the Baptist, belonged (Luke 1:5). 9. Mother of King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:1) and thus a powerful political influence. See Abia, Abiah.

ABIJAM See Abijah.

ABILENE (Ăb·ĭ·lē′ nē) Small mountainous region ruled by the tetrarch Lysanias at the time John the Baptist began his public ministry (Luke 3:7). Abilene was located about eighteen miles northwest of Damascus in the Anti-Lebanon mountain range. Its capital was Abila. In A.D. 37 Abilene came under the administrative control of Herod Agrippa I. Later it was part of the kingdom of his son, Agrippa II.

ABIMAEL (Ă·bĭm′ ā·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "El (god) is my father." Ancestor of the Israelites as a descendant of Shem and Eber (Gen. 10:28).

ABIMELECH (Ă·bĭm′ ĕ·lĕch) Personal name meaning, "My father is king." 1. King of Gerar, who took Sarah for himself, thinking she was Abraham's sister rather than his wife (Gen. 20). He restored her to Abraham after a nighttime dream of God. 2. Probably the same as 1, a king who disputed the ownership of a well at Beersheba with Abraham and then made a covenant of peace with him (Gen. 21:22–34). 3. King of Philistines at Gerar related to or identical with 1. Isaac lived under his protection and fearfully passed Rebekah, his wife, off as his sister. Abimelech scolded Isaac and warned his people not to touch Rebekah. A dispute over water wells led to Isaac's leaving but finally to a treaty of peace (Gen. 26) at Beersheba. 4. Son of Gideon, the judge of Israel (Judg. 8:31). Abimelech seized power after his father's death by murdering his brothers and having himself named king by his relatives at Shechem. This provoked Jotham's famous fable (Judg. 9:7–21). God provoked Shechem against Abimelech, who defeated an army under Gaal and then recaptured Shechem. When he tried to repeat his tactics against Thebez, a woman threw a stone down on his head and killed him (Judg. 9:23–57). Abimelech's fate served as an illustration Joab used to protect himself from David (2 Sam. 11:21). 5. Priest under David with Zadok (1 Chron. 18:16), but correct reading of text here is probably Ahimelech as in 2 Sam. 8:17. 6. Person mentioned in title of Psalm 34, which apparently refers to 1 Sam. 21:10–15, where Achish is David's opponent. Abimelech may have been an official title for Philistine kings.

ABINADAB (Ă·bĭn′ ă·dăb) Personal name meaning, "my father is generous." 1. Resident of Kirjath-jearim whose house was resting place of ark of the covenant for 20 years after the Philistines returned it. His son Eleazar served as priest (1 Sam. 7:1–2; 2 Sam. 6:3–4). 2. Son of Jesse passed over when David was selected as king (1 Sam. 16:8; 17:13). 3. Son of King Saul killed by Philistines in battle of Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. 31:2). 4. Solomon's official and son-in-law over Dor, the Mediterranean seaport below Mount Carmel, was the Son of Abinadab or Ben-abinadab (1 Kings 4:11).

ABINOAM (Å·bĭn′ ō·ăm) Personal name meaning, "my father is gracious." Father of Barak, army commander with Deborah (Judg. 4—5).

ABIRAM (Å·bī′ răm) Personal name meaning, "my father is exalted." 1. Leader of rebellion against Moses and Aaron seeking priestly authority. He died when God caused earth to open and swallow the rebels (Num. 16; 26:9–11). 2. Son of Hiel sacrificed in foundation of rebuilt Jericho, fulfilling Joshua's warning (1 Kings 16:34).

ABISHAG (Ăb′ ĭ·shăg) Personal name meaning, "my father strayed" or "is a wanderer." A young virgin or "maiden" (RSV) brought to David's bed in his last days to keep him warm (1 Kings 1:1–4). They had no sexual relations, but Solomon considered her David's wife when his brother Adonijah asked to marry her after David's death (1 Kings 2:17). Solomon interpreted the request as a step toward becoming king and had Adonijah executed (1 Kings 2:23–25). Abishag was from Shunem, a city guarding the Jezreel Valley.

ABISHAI (Åb′ ĭ·shā·ī) Personal name meaning, "father exists." Son of David's sister Zeruiah and brother of Joab, David's general (1 Chron. 2:15–16). He was with David when he spared Abner (1 Sam. 26:7) and with Joab pursuing Abner (2 Sam. 2:24) and killing Abner (2 Sam. 3:30). He commanded troops against Ammon (2 Sam. 10). He sought to kill Shimei for cursing David, but the king restrained him (2 Sam. 16; 19:21). He led a third of David's troops against David's son Absalom (2 Sam. 18). He commanded forces against Sheba, who led a northern rebellion against David (2 Sam. 20). He killed Isbi-benob, the Philistine giant who threatened David (2 Sam. 21:15–17). A mighty captain, he was still not among David's elite three (2 Sam. 23:8–19). He was famed for killing 18,000 Edomites (1 Chron. 18:12).

ABISHALOM (Åb′ ĭ·shå·lōm) Personal name meaning, "my father is peace." Another spelling for Absalom (1 Kings 15:2,10). See Absalom.

ABISHUA (Å·bĭsh′ ū·å) Personal name meaning, "my father is salvation." 1. A Levite, the great-grandson of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:4). 2. A Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:4). Compare 1 Chronicles 7:7.

ABISHUR (Ā·bī′ shûr) Personal name meaning, "my father is a wall." A descendant of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:28–29).

ABITAL (Å·bī′ tăl) Personal name meaning, "my father is dew." Wife of David (2 Sam. 3:4).

ABITUB (Ā·bī′ tŭb) Personal name meaning, "my father is good." A Benjaminite from Moab (1 Chron. 8:11).

ABIUD (Å·bī′ ŭd) Greek spelling of Abihud for ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:13). See Abihud.

ABLUTIONS are ceremonial washings with water to make oneself pure before worship. The practice of ablutions is one background for New Testament baptism.

The Hebrew term rachatz is the everyday word for washing with water, rinsing, or bathing (Gen. 18:4; Ex. 2:5; Ruth 3:3). The Greek word louein is similar (Acts 9:37; 16:33; 2 Pet. 2:22).

Old Testament Ablutions were performed for cleansing from the impurity of an inferior or undesirable condition to prepare the person for initiation into a higher, more desirable condition. Aaron and his sons were washed before they were clothed with the priestly robes and anointed with oil (Ex. 29:4; 30:19–21; Lev. 8:6). Such washings prepared people to participate in special acts of religious service.

When a person became unclean (Lev. 11—15), becoming clean involved ablution practices. Washing could symbolize a person's claim to be pure, innocent of sin in a particular case (Deut. 21:1–9).

At times ablutions involved a general washing or bathing as when the Hebrews bathed their bodies and washed their clothes (Lev. 14:8; 15:5; Num. 19:7–8). Such washing occurred in various places—running water (Lev. 15:13), a fountain (John 9:7), in a river (2 Kings 5:10), or in a courtyard of a home (2 Sam. 11:2,4).

In some parts of the Hebrew tradition, the ritual importance of washing became a central part of religious practice with minute descriptions of how a person was supposed to wash before various activities. Some of the stricter groups would not enter a house without ablutions. They said one hand had to be washed first so it could be purified and could wash the second hand.

Old Testament teachings do not give such importance and detail to ablutions. Rather, inward, spiritual purity is the goal. Outward washing is only a symbol (Ps. 24:4; 51:7; 73:13; Prov. 30:12; Isa. 1:16; 4:4; Jer. 2:22; 4:14; Ezek. 16:4–9; 36:25–27; Zech. 13:1).

New Testament In Hebrews 6:2 the writer bid Christians to progress beyond discussion of basic matters, among which he lists "instruction about washings" (NAS). He may be describing discussions about the differences between Christian baptism and other ablutions. Hebrews 9:10 refers to "various washings" (NAS) practiced by the Hebrews under the law but no longer necessary because Christ "was once offered to bear the sins of many" (9:28).

Mark 7:4 mentions that among the traditions observed by the Pharisees was the "washing of cups and pots." They "wash their hands oft" (v. 3) before meals. They did this to hold "the tradition of the elders." Jesus called this the "tradition of men" which meant "laying aside the commandment of God" (v. 8). He cited Isaiah to call for purity of heart rather than strictness of rules (v. 6).

Examples of Jewish practice in Jesus' day have been illustrated by archaeologists in their excavations at Qumran, the Dead Sea Scroll community of the Essenes, a strict Jewish sect. Excavations revealed a vast network of ritual basins and baths used in ablutions.

For the New Testament the only washing commanded was that of baptism (Acts 22:16; 1 Cor. 6:11). Ephesians 5:26 shows that the washing of baptism is not effective as a ritual in itself but only as it shows the working of God's Word in the life of the one baptized. Inward cleansing must accompany the outward washing (Heb. 10:22).

Jimmy Albright

ABNER (Ăb′ nĕr) Personal name meaning, "father is a lamp." The chief military officer for King Saul and Saul's uncle (1 Sam. 14:50). At Saul's death, he supported Ish-bosheth, Saul's son (2 Sam. 2:8) until Ish-bosheth accused him of treason for taking one of Saul's concubines (2 Sam. 3:7–8). Abner transferred loyalty to David. Joab, David's general, went into a jealous rage when David welcomed Abner. Joab then killed Abner, who was buried in Hebron (2 Sam. 3). See 1 Sam. 17:55–58; 20:25; 26:5, 14–15.

ABODE OF THE DEAD See Death; Grave; Hades; Hell; Pit; Sheol.

ABOMINATION, ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION refers to that which is detestable to God and is particularly related to idolatry.

Abomination translates four Hebrew and one Greek word. Ba'ash, "stink," refers to that which becomes odious, despised, or hated as water polluted by dead fish (Ex. 7:18). Israel became a stinking abomination to the Philistines (1 Sam. 13:4). Shiqquts, "a detested thing," and shaqats, "to be filthy" refer to that which cannot be accepted in worship or eaten (Lev. 11). It often refers to idols (Deut. 29:17). Piggul, "stinking, rotten" refers to meat unfit for sacrifice (Lev. 7:18). To'ebah, "offensive, detestable," the most common word for abominable, occurring 117 times to refer to worship, cultural and moral practices which offend such as homosexuality (Lev. 18:22), Egyptians' eating with foreigners (Gen. 43:22), and particularly foreign gods (Ezek. 6:11). Bdelugma, "that which stinks, is disgusting," things people value are an abomination to God (Luke 16:15). See Revelation 21:27.

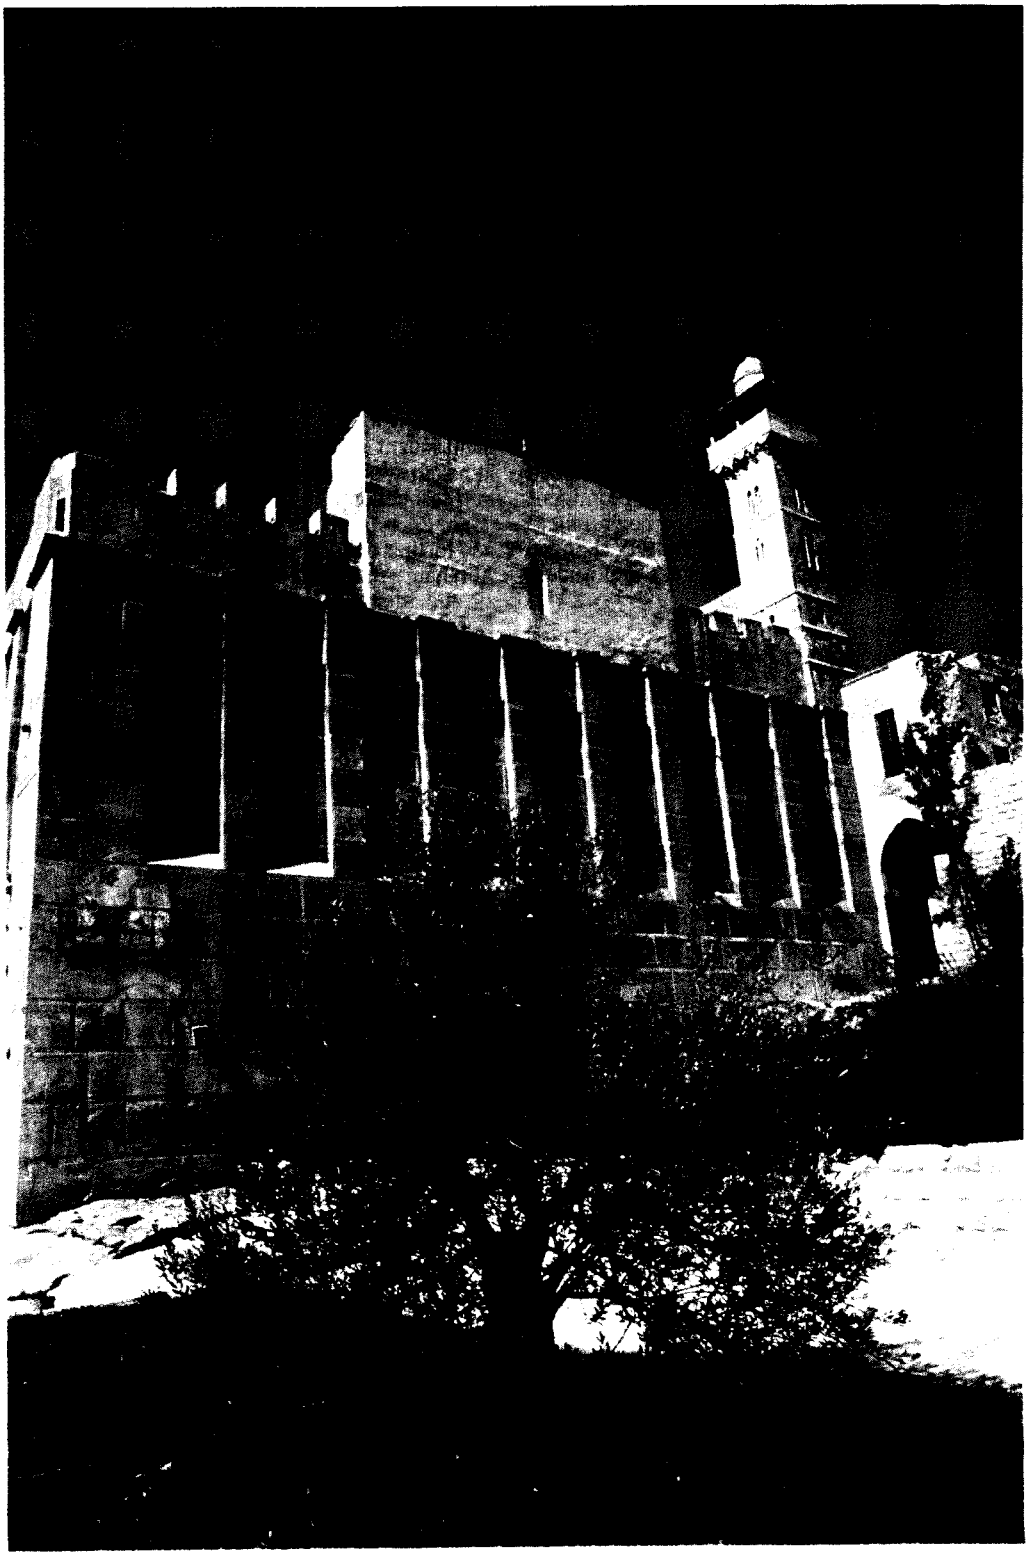
"Abomination of desolation" is a special term in Daniel 9:27; 11:31; 12:11; Matthew 24:15; Mark 13:14; Luke 16:15; Revelation 17:4,5; 21:27.

Daniel 9:27; 11:31; and 12:11 give evidence of a heathen idol or altar. "Abomination" (shiqquts) is used to describe an idol which would desecrate the holy Temple and/or altar in Jerusalem.

The term "desolation" (shomem) permeates the book of Daniel (8:13; 9:2,17–18,26–27; 11:31; and 12:11). The word has two root meanings: "to be desolated, ravaged" or "to be appalled, astounded." In these verses, the meaning of desolation is primary to the context.

The three occasions where the two words "abomination" and "desolation" are used together present interpreters with baffling grammatical and syntactical problems. Translators have had an impossible task in making accurate representations of the texts. Compare various translations.

In Daniel, the historical situation was apparently the building of an altar of Zeus by Antiochus Epiphanes in Jerusalem in his attempt at complete hellenization of Israel in the second century B.C. Antiochus fancied himself to be a god who greatly resembled Zeus Olympios. Zeus was known as "ba'al shamem" (lord of heaven). Hebrews did not want to write or pronounce the pagan term "ba'al" and so substituted "abomination" (shiqquts). "Shamem" in a typical "play on words" was written "desolating one" (shomem). Thus, the Zeus (lord of heaven) is loosely referred to as "abominations . . . one who makes desolate."



Antiochus selected for himself the title "Epiphanes" (God manifest). However, the people who were forced to endure his persecutions dubbed him "Epimanes" (madman). "Shamem" (desolate) could also mean "to be mad" and thus identified a more direct reference to Antiochus.

The idea of "idol worship" being conquered by The Righteous One and righteousness reaches its full and climactic expression when the Kingdom of God was inaugurated by Jesus the Messiah. The passages in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and Revelation clearly show this, pointing ahead at least to the destruction of Jerusalem by Rome in A.D. 70 and possibly beyond to the end of time.

Later literature picks up this same type of violation of proper worship in Jerusalem when Caligula (A.D. 40) sought to erect his own statue in the Jerusalem Temple. Josephus even identified the abomination of the desolator in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman Titus in A.D. 69–70.

Bible students give differing interpretations about the eschatological meaning of the abomination of desolation. Such interpretations often depend on the interpreter's view of the millennium. Some would interpret the "eschaton" or end time in the Book of Daniel to be the end of Antiochus Herodian structure built over the Caves of Machpelah, Abraham's burial place for Sarah.

A

Epiphanes. Others see the end of any and all efforts of heathenism in the spiritual victory by Jesus over Satan. Others point to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. Others put off the final fulfillment to the end of all time. Some see this activity occurring repeatedly in history. Others see the fulfillment only in the final end when evil is put down finally and completely. The original passage in Daniel serves as the textual and historical presaging for later applications. One must be sensitive to the immediate interpretation of a passage as differentiated from successive applications of that same principle. G. Beasley-Murray

ABRAHAM (Āb rā hām) Personal name meaning, "father of a multitude." The first Hebrew patriarch, he became known as the prime example of faith. He was the son of Terah, a descendant of Noah's son, Shem. (Gen. 11:27). His childhood was spent in Ur of the Chaldees, a prominent Sumerian city. He was known at the beginning as Abram ("father is exalted"), but this was changed subsequently to Abraham ("father of a multitude") (Gen. 17:5).

Well at modern Beersheba thought by some to be Abraham's well.

Terah, his father, moved to Haran with the family (Gen. 11:31) and after some years died there. God called Abram to migrate to Canaan, assuring him that he would father a vast nation. At different times he lived in Shechem, Bethel, Hebron, and Beer-sheba. His wife Sarai's beauty attracted the pharaoh when they moved to Egypt during a famine (Gen. 12:10), but God intervened to save her. The trouble arose partly because Abram had claimed her as his sister rather than his wife, and in fact she was his half-sister (Gen. 20:12). After returning to Palestine, Abram received further covenantal assurances from God (Gen. 15). He decided he could produce offspring by taking Sarai's handmaid Hagar as a concubine. Though the union produced a son, Ishmael, he was not destined to become Abram's promised heir. Even after another covenantal assurance (Gen. 17:1–21) in which the rite of circumcision was made a covenantal sign, Abram and Sarai still questioned God's promise of an heir.

Then Sarai, whose name had been changed to Sarah ("princess"), had her long-promised son, Isaac ("laughter"), when Abraham was 100 years old. Ishmael's presence caused trouble in the family, and he was expelled with his mother Hagar to the wilderness of Paran. Abraham's faith and obedience were tested by God in Moriah when he was commanded to sacrifice Isaac. God provided an alternative sacrifice, however, saving the boy's life. As a reward for Abraham's faithfulness, God renewed the covenant promises of great blessing and the growth of a mighty nation to father and son.

Subsequently, Sarah died and was buried in the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:19), after which Abraham sought a bride for Isaac. A woman named Rebekah was obtained from Abraham's relatives in Mesopotamia, and Isaac married her gladly (Gen. 24:67). In old age Abraham remarried and had further children, finally dying aged 175 years. Abraham recognized God as the almighty Lord of all and the Author of a covenant by which the Hebrews would become a mighty nation. God Himself was known subsequently as the God of Abraham (Ex. 3:6). Through him God had revealed His plan for human salvation (Ex. 2:24). The promises to Abraham became assurance for future generations (Ex. 32:13; 33:1). Abraham became known as "God's friend forever" (2 Chron. 20:7).

John showed that descent from Abraham did not guarantee salvation (Matt. 3:9). See Romans 9. Indeed, foreigners would join him in the kingdom (Matt. 8:11). Compare Luke 16:23–30. Lost sons of Abraham, Jesus invited to salvation (Luke 19:9). True children of Abraham do the works of Abraham (John 8:39).

For Paul Abraham was the great example of faith (Rom. 4; Gal. 3). In Hebrews Abraham provided the model for tithing (Heb. 7) and played a prominent role in the roll call of faith (Heb. 11). James used Abraham to show that justification by faith is proved in works (Jas. 3:21–24).

R. K. Harrison

ABRAHAM'S BOSOM was the place to which the poor man Lazarus was carried by the angels when he died. The Roman custom of reclining at meals was common among the Jews. Such positioning placed one in the bosom of the neighboring person. To be next to the host, that is to recline in the bosom of the host, was considered the highest honor. Thus, to be in Abraham's bosom was to be in a position of honor. In Luke 16:22–23, Abraham's bosom is pictured as a place of blessedness and honor. The poor man was comforted after death by being given the place of closest fellowship with the father of the whole Hebrew nation. See Heaven.

ABRAM (Ā′ bram) Personal name meaning, "father is exalted." The name of Abraham ("father of a multitude") in Genesis 11:26–17:4. See Abraham.

ABRONAH (Ă·brō′ nah) Place name meaning, "pass or passage." Wilderness camp (Num. 33:34). Its location is not known, but it is apparently close to Ezion-geber at the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba. KJV spelling is Ebronah.

ABSALOM (Ăb′ sȧ·lom) Personal name meaning, "father of peace." See Abishalom. Third son of King David, who rebelled against his father and was murdered by Joab, David's commander (2 Sam. 3:3; 13—19). Absalom apparently resented being ignored by his father and resented his brother Ammon going unpunished for raping Tamar, Absalom's full sister. Being overindulged and ambitious, Absalom became the spokesman for the people (2 Sam. 15:1–6). They, in turn, gladly proclaimed him king in Hebron (15:10), where David was first crowned (2:4). Battle ensued. David left Jerusalem and sent his army to find Absalom but not to hurt him (15:5), but Joab murdered him (15:14). David's lament over Absalom shows the depth of a father's love over the loss of a son as well as regret for personal failures which led to family and national tragedies.

So-called Tomb of Absalom in the Kidron Valley in Jerusalem.

Robert Fricke

ABSHAI NAS spelling for Abishai. See Abishai.

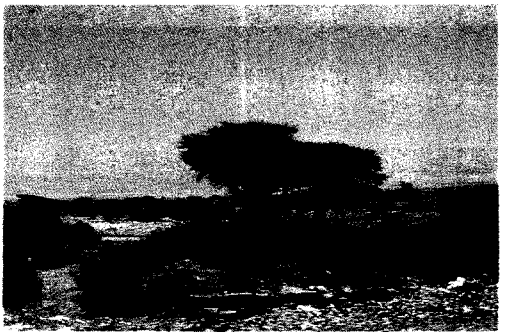
ABSTINENCE is the voluntary refraining from some action, such as eating certain kinds of foods or drinking alcoholic beverages.



Old Testament The most prominent examples of abstinence in the Old Testament relate to the Sabbath (Ex. 20:8–11), food laws (Lev. 11; 19:23–25; Deut. 14), the Nazarite vow (Num. 6), and fasting. While not unique to the Israelites, observance of the Sabbath and food laws became distinguishing characteristics of Israelites in foreign cultures.

The Nazarite vow involved abstinence from fermented products and all produce of the grape vine. On occasion the vow became a lifelong commitment (Judg. 13:5–7). Fasting was practiced as an act of humbling oneself before the Lord. It involved abstinence from food and drink or on occasion only from food or drink. The Day of Atonement was the most prominent fast in Israel.

New Testament Old Testament forms of abstinence continued in the New Testament period, but the forms themselves frequently were points of controversy between Jesus and the religious leaders (Mark 2:18—3:6). Jesus refocused the prohibitive aspects of the practices by emphasizing internal motive over external observance (Matt. 6:16–18). Paul established the principle of abstaining from any activity that might offend or cause another to stumble (Rom. 14; 1 Cor. 8). This principle often guides the contemporary practice. Michael Fink

ABYSS (A·byss′) Transliteration of Greek word abussos literally meaning "without bottom." KJV translates, "the deep," or bottomless pit. NAS, NIV, RSV use abyss to refer to the dark abode of the dead (Rom. 10:7). Abaddon rules the Abyss (Rev. 9:11), from which will come the beast of the end time of Revelation (11:7). The beast of the Abyss faces ultimate destruction (Rev. 17:8). Satan will be bound there during the millennium (Rev. 20:1–3). See Hades; Hell; Sheol.

ACACIA See Shittim.

Acacia tree growing in the Sinai desert.

ACBOR NIV spelling for Achbor.

ACCAD (Ăc′ căd) or AKKAD (NIV). Place name of famous city in Mesopotamia ruled by Sargon I about 2350 B.C. (Gen. 10:10). Its exact location is not known. It gave its name to Akkadian language used by Babylon and Assyria.

ACCENT, GALILEAN The peculiarity of Peter's speech that showed he was from Galilee. The peculiarity of speech made the servant girl suspect that Peter was a follower of Jesus from Nazareth in Galilee (Matt. 26:73; compare Judg. 12:5–6, where a person's speech betrayed his place of origin; see Shibboleth).

A

ACCEPTANCE means being received with approval or pleasure. In the Bible, things or persons are often said to be acceptable to men or to God. Human acceptance (or rejection) of other humans is affected by many things such as race, class, clan, sex, actions of the individual, prejudice, etc. On a human level Jesus shows us that all human beings are to be accepted, to be loved for their own sake, simply because they are persons created in the image of the loving Father (Gen. 1:26–27; 5:43–48).

Above all, sin keeps a person from being acceptable to God (Gen. 4:7; Isa. 59:2). From earliest days sacrifices were offered to God in an attempt to make the worshiper acceptable to Him. Later, the law revealed more clearly what one needed to do to be acceptable to God. This included ethical actions (Ten Commandments) as well as sacrifices (Leviticus). Israel succumbed to the temptation of separating sacrifice from ethical action, so the great prophets again and again hammered home the truth that no sacrifice is acceptable if it is divorced from just treatment of others (Isa. 1:10–17), Amos 5:21–24). Micah summed up the terms of acceptance in 6:6–8, "What doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" The proper attitude of humility is as important as right action (Ps. 51:16–17; 1 Pet. 5:5–6).

Jesus summarized the law and the prophets in the two great commandments (Matt. 22:37–40) and held them up as the requirements for eternal life (Luke 10:25–28). Paul saw that the law serves two purposes. (1) It makes known God's requirements, thus revealing human sinfulness (Rom. 3:20). (2) The moral law as a true expression of God's will remains a goal or guide, even though one no longer thinks God's acceptance is won by the law. The New Testament proclaims that Jesus has done what is necessary to make one acceptable to God. At the beginning of His ministry Jesus announced that His mission included proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord, the time of salvation (Luke 4:19). Jesus revealed the will of God clearer than ever before (Heb. 1:1–2); He destroyed the works of the devil (1 John 3:8); but above all He put away sin "by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. 9:26). Paul wrote of acceptance before God mainly as justification. People are made acceptable to God because the just requirements of the law have been met by the sacrifice of Jesus (Rom. 3:21–26, 8:3–5). The Book of Hebrews presents Jesus as the true High Priest who offers the perfect sacrifice that effectively cleanses or covers sin so that it is no longer a barrier to acceptance by God (Heb. 9:11–14,26). Both Paul and Hebrews taught that for acceptance by God to be effective, one must believe—accept the offer of acceptance from God in Christ and commit oneself to following the way of Jesus, confessing Him as Lord. See Justification; Atonement; Love.

The modern Mediterranean port city of Haifa a few miles south of the ancient port city of Acco in Israel.

Joe Baskin

ACCESS Permission and ability to enter into a secured area or into the presence of an important person or God. In the human realm access usually applied to persons who were permitted to see the king face to face (Esther 1:14). Thus they had a place to stand in the king's presence (Zech. 3:7). Each royal court had its own rules. The Persian court which Esther faced set the death penalty for anyone who sought access to the king without royal permission (Esther 4:11). The New Testament teaches that every person can now have access to God because Jesus' death on the cross has opened the way. Such access is actually experienced by those who express personal trust in Jesus and rely on divine grace. This brings peace and eternal hope (Rom. 5:1–2), but it is always dependent upon the heavenly King's royal favor, not upon entrance requirements established or met by humans. Both Gentiles and Jews have an open door to the Father through Christ's death on the cross and through the work of the Holy Spirit present in the believer's life (Eph. 2:10–18). Access to God through faith in Christ was God's eternal purpose and gives the believer confidence and boldness to approach God (Eph. 3:12). Old Testament religious practices allowed only the high priest to enter the holy of holies and that only once a year (Lev. 16:2,34). Through Christ believers have constant access to the holiest place, where God is (Heb. 10:19–22).

ACCO (Äc′ cō) KJV reads ACCHO. Place name for famous Mediterranean seaport north of Mount Carmel. Territory was assigned to tribe of Asher, but they could not conquer it (Judg. 1:31). The Greeks renamed Acco, Ptolemais. On his third missionary voyage, Paul spent one day in Ptolemais (Acts 21:7). The city has a long history documented by Near Eastern records reaching back to about 2000 B.C., but it plays a small role in the biblical narrative.

ACCOUNTABILITY, AGE OF The age of accountability is a concept not directly mentioned in the Bible. What the Bible teaches about personal responsibility for sin and the nature of salvation compels us to define this concept. Basically, the age of accountability is that time in the development of a person when he or she can and invariably does sin against God and thus stands in the need of personal redemption through Jesus Christ. Even under the Old Testament, the Jews recognized that children could not be held personally accountable to the law of Moses. They set the arbitrary age of twelve as the year when a child assumed adult status in religious matters.

Historically, some groups of Christians have believed that an infant is born with an immediate responsibility for sin. This view suggests that children inherit the guilt of the sins of those who have lived before them. Infant baptism has been the usual prescription for this innate sin. This position, however, misinterprets both the biblical doctrine of sin and the ordinance of baptism.

The Bible teaches clearly that persons are responsible for their own actions, not for those of their ancestors. Sin is a willful act of rebellion against God on the part of an individual (Rom. 3:9–18). Clearly, an infant or young child is not capable of such a willful act. At this point, one must be careful not to confuse bad behavior or early signs of willful actions on the part of children with sin. Such behavior does not necessarily indicate that a child has knowingly sinned.

Similarly, the Bible indicates that salvation is a deliberate act of faith on the part of individuals. To exercise this choice, persons must be able to make certain distinctions. They must be aware they are sinners before God and be able to repent of that rebellious life-style. They must be capable of transferring trust to Jesus as personal Savior and Lord. They must be able to understand that their life-styles should be patterned after the example of Christ (Rom. 10:9–14). Obviously, an infant or young child cannot make these distinctions and cannot be responsible for making such a decision.

There comes a time in the life of each child when that boundary of responsibility to God is crossed. A child invariably sins (Rom. 3:23) and stands in need of Christ. However, it is impossible to set a particular age when this will occur. Indeed, each child will vary in reaching that time.

It would seem wise to recall that Christ commanded the children be brought to Him (Matt. 18:10; 19:13–14). Yet, care must be taken that children "come to Christ" with a responsible understanding.

Timothy Boyd

ACCURSED A translation of Hebrew cherem, a technical term in warfare for items captured from the enemy and devoted to God. See Anathema; Ban; Blessing and Cursing; Devoted Thing. TEV demonstrates the difficulty of translating the Hebrew into English, using at various times: "unconditionally dedicate" (Num. 21:2); "put everyone to death" (Deut. 2:34); "completely destroy" (Deut. 20:17); "killed" (Josh. 6:21; 8:26); "become the Lord's permanent property" (Lev. 27:21); "put a curse on . . . destroyed" (Judg. 1:17). REB uses "dedicated" (Lev. 27:21); "devoted" (Lev. 27:28–29); "utterly destroy" (Num. 21:2); "put to death under solemn ban" (Deut. 2:34); "exterminate" (Deut. 7:2); "destroyed" (Josh. 2:10); "put to death" (Judg. 21:11). NRSV consistently uses "devoted" and "utterly destroyed" to translate cherem, while NAS uses "set apart" and "utterly destroy." NIV uses "devoted,"

"totally destroyed," "completely destroyed." Devoting battle spoils to a god was practiced by Israel's neighbors also, as 2 Kings 19:11 shows. "Accursed" appears in KJV for cherem only in Joshua and in 1 Chronicles 2:7. In Deuteronomy 21:23 and Isaiah 65:20 KJV uses "accursed" to translate another Hebrew root, qalal, "to make light of, curse."

Paul used a technical Greek term, anathema, to call for persons to be put under a holy ban or be accursed (Rom. 9:3; 1 Cor. 12:3; Gal. 1:8–9; compare 1 Cor. 16:22). Paul used the term in the sense of the Hebrew cherem. See Anathema.

ACCUSER A legal term describing a person who claims another is guilty of a crime or a moral offense. The Hebrew word for accuser is "Satan" (compare Ps. 109:6 in various translations). See Satan. False accusation called for serious punishment (Deut. 19:15–21). The psalmist prayed for judgment against his accusers (Ps. 109:4,20,29 NAS, NIV, NRSV). False accusers led to Christ's conviction and death (Matt. 27:12). Jewish accusers (Acts 22:30) finally led Paul to appeal to Rome (Acts 25:11).

ACELDAMA (Å·cĕl′ dȧ·mȧ) KJV spelling for Akeldama. The field Judas Iscariot purchased, where he killed himself (Acts 1:19). The name is Aramaic and means "field of blood." Evidently it was purchased with the money that had been paid to Judas for betraying Jesus. According to Matthew 27:7, the field purchased with this money was used for the burial of strangers. See Judas.

ACHAIA (Å·chā′ iȧ) The Roman province in which Gallio was deputy, or proconsul, in the time of Paul the apostle (Acts 18:12). It consisted roughly of the southern half of ancient Greece, including the Peloponnesus. Major cities in Achaia included Sparta, Athens, and Corinth, which was the administrative center. Paul preached successfully in the province (Acts 18:27–28).

ACHAICUS (Å chā′ ĭ cŭs) Personal name of messenger who came to Paul from Corinth before he wrote 1 Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:17). His presence with Stephanas and Fortunatus encouraged Paul. The three brought news and perhaps a letter (1 Cor. 7:1) to Paul from the church at Corinth. They may have carried 1 Corinthians back to Corinth.

ACHAN (Ā′ chȧn) or ACHAR (1 Chron. 2:7). In Joshua 7:1, a Judahite whose theft of a portion of the spoil from Jericho brought divine displeasure and military defeat on the Israelite army. After the battle of Ai, the Lord told Joshua the reason for Israel's defeat was that the ban concerning the spoil of Jericho had been violated (Josh. 7:11). Achan was discovered to be the guilty party, and he and his family were stoned to death (Josh. 7:25). See Ai; Joshua.

ACHAR See Achan.

ACHAZ KJV spelling of AHAZ (Matt. 1:9). See Ahaz.

ACHBOR (Ăch′ bôr) Personal name meaning, "mouse." 1. Father of king in Edom (Gen. 36:38). 2. Man King Josiah commissioned to ask God the meaning of the Book of the Law found in the Temple. He and others commissioned obtained God's word from Huldah, the prophetess (2 Kings 22:12–14). 3. Father of Elnathan, whom Jehoiakim sent to bring back prophet Uriah from Egypt to execute him (Jer. 26:22). Compare Jeremiah 36:12.

ACHIM (Ā′ chĭm) Personal name. Ancestor of Jesus of whom nothing but his name is known (Matt. 1:14).

ACHISH (Ā′ chish) Philistine personal name. 1. King of Gath, a Philistine city, to whom David fled in fear of Saul (1 Sam. 21:10). David played the madman to escape from Achish (21:13). Later David became a soldier for Achish, but cunningly expanded his own influence around Ziklag (1 Sam. 27). David joined Achish to fight Saul (28:1–2), but the Philistine leaders forced him to leave without fighting (29:1–11). Saul and his sons, including Jonathan, died in the battle (31:1–6). 2. King of Gath to whom Shimei went to retrieve his servants but in so doing violated his agreement with Solomon and lost his life (1 Kings 2:36–46).

ACHMETHA (Ăch′ mē·thȧ); or ECBATANA (NAS, NIV, RSV, TEV) The capital of the ancient Median empire, located in the Zagros Mountains in western Iran, on two major roads that lead from the south and west to the city of Tehran. Only one reference to the city is found in the canonical books of the Bible (Ezra 6:2), but it is known as Ecbatana in the apocryphal books and is referred to frequently, especially in the books of Judith, Tobit, and 2 Maccabees.

No archeological work has been undertaken at Achmetha for the simple reason that it is now occupied by the modern city of Hamadan. Surface finds, two of which are a gold dagger and a gold tablet written in cuneiform, have been made.

Bryce Sandlin

ACHOR (A′ chôr) Place name meaning "trouble, affliction," or "taboo." The valley in which Achan and his household were stoned to death (Josh. 7:24–26). Later, it formed part of the border of Judah. It is the subject of prophetic promises in Isaiah 65:10 and Hosea 2:15. See Joshua.

ACHSA (Ach' sȧ) or ACHSAH (NAS, RSV, TEV) or ACSAH (NIV). Personal name meaning, "bangle, ankle ornament." Daughter of Caleb offered as wife to man who conquered Kirjath-sepher (Josh. 15:16). Othniel took the city and the woman. See Judges 1:12–13.

ACHSHAPH (Äch' shăph) or ACSHAPH (NIV) Place name meaning, "place of sorcery." City state which joined Jabin, King of Hazor, in opposing Joshua as he invaded northern Israel (Josh. 11:1). Achshaph was a border city for Asher (Josh. 19:25). It was probably located near Acco.

ACHZIB (Ăch' zĭb) or ACZIB (NIV) Place name meaning, "deceitful." 1. Town in southern Judah, perhaps modern Tel el-Beida near Lachish (Josh. 15:44). Micah 1:14 makes a wordplay using Achzib, literally the houses of deceitfulness will be deceitful. 2. A border town of Asher (Josh. 19:29) which the Israelite tribe could not conquer (Judg. 1:31). It may be modern Tel Akhziv, near Acco.

ACRE Translation of Hebrew tsemed, literally a "team" of oxen. As a measure of land, it refers to the land a team can plow in one day (1 Sam. 14:14; Isa. 5:10).

ACROSTIC Literary device by which each section of a literary work begins with the succeeding letter of the alphabet. Thus in Psalm 119 the first eight verses begin with aleph, the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet; the next eight with beth, the second letter of the Hebrew alphabet, and the pattern is continued through verses 169–176, which each begin with taw, the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Other examples in the Bible include Psalms 9—10; 25; 34; 37; 111; 112; 145; Proverbs 31:10–31; Lamentations 1; 2; 3; 4. The acrostic style helped people memorize the poem and expressed completeness of subject matter from A to Z.

ACSAH NIV spelling of Achsa. See Achsa.

ACTS Fifth book of the New Testament tracing growth of early church.

The most significant help in discovering the author of Acts is simply recognizing this book's relationship to the Gospel of Luke: 1) Both books begin with a greeting to a man named Theophilus ("friend of God"); 2) Acts' greeting to Theophilus refers to a previous writing; 3) The end of Luke intentionally overlaps with the beginning of Acts to provide continuity between the two volumes; 4) the author's writing style, vocabulary, and attention to specific themes remain constant throughout both books.

Consequently, the reader must assume Acts was written by the same author as the gospel of Luke. In fact, many Bible readers believe Luke-Acts is a single work which was divided into two parts as the books of the New Testament were gathered together. The size of Luke and Acts combined makes the author of these two books the chief contributor to the New Testament, having written twenty-five percent of all Scripture from the Christian era. Taken as a whole, Luke and Acts are a larger work than the combined letters of Paul.

Once readers assume Luke and Acts come from the same pen, they can begin to look for evidence within these books which points toward the author's identity.

The first piece of evidence comes in Luke 1:2. There, the writer states he was not an eyewitness to the ministry of Jesus. This fact eliminates any of the eleven disciples as candidates for authorship. Next, the "we" passages in Acts also offer a major, internal clue to the identity of the book's author. During the account of Paul's missionary journeys, the author occasionally changes his style from that of a third person observer to a first person participant. In Acts 16:10–17; 20:5–16; 21:1–18; and 27:1—28:16, the author speaks of "we" and "us" in relationship to Paul's travels. The language implies the author himself traveled with Paul. These "we" sections include the time when Paul was imprisoned at Rome. Scholars have determined Paul wrote Philemon, Colossians, and the Pastoral Epistles during his house arrest in that city. By searching those letters for references to Paul's fellow workers, they compiled a list of companions who could have written Luke and Acts. In 2 Timothy 4:11, Paul says, "Only Luke is with me," making him the most likely person to have written Luke-Acts.

Students of the first century church confirm the likelihood of Luke's authorship with what they call the "negative" argument. This negative argument recognizes the early church's tendency to attribute the authorship of New Testament works to recognized apostles and eyewitnesses of the ministry of the Master. We have no reason to assume early Christians would have given credit for the authourship of Luke-Acts to such an insignificant figure as Luke unless they possessed firm evidence the doctor, traveling companion of Paul, did indeed write this important document.

The Purpose of Acts Why did Luke write Acts? What purpose was the Spirit leading him to fulfill? The years have produced several different answers to those questions.

The opening verses of Luke and Acts mention Theophilus as the recipient of Luke's writings. As mentioned earlier, the name means "friend of God" and was common among Jews and Greeks in the first century. Many Bible students think Theophilus was a Roman dignitary sympathetic to the Christian cause. Perhaps Luke was writing a defense of Christianity for this official during a time of persecution to show him there was nothing subversive or sinister about the followers of Jesus. The geographical framework of Acts, the spread of the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome, lends credibility to this idea.

A

In addition to Luke's possible purpose as an interpreter of Christianity to the Roman world, Paul's traveling companion seems to have perceived himself specifically as a recorder of God's saving work. In 1:3 of his Gospel, Luke clearly states he is trying to make "an orderly account" of the events surrounding Jesus' ministry.

The only question which remains is Luke's reason for dividing his record of those events into Luke and Acts as he did. The obvious solution to this question would be that Luke focuses on Jesus Himself while Acts focuses on the followers of Jesus who continued their Master's work. This solution misses one important verse, Acts 1:1, where Luke says to Theophilus: "In my former book . . . I wrote about all Jesus began to do and teach . . ." Luke implied that Jesus continued to do and teach more, and that His story was incomplete where the Gospel ended. In fact, a careful reading of Acts makes it clear that Jesus remained the active, living, focus of Luke's story. In 9:4 (NIV), Jesus spoke directly to Saul and asked, "Why do you persecute me?" Later, in the same chapter, Peter could say directly to Aeneas, "Jesus Christ heals you" (9:34 NIV). In chapter ten, Christ made His will known to Peter concerning a ministry to the Gentiles. These are but three examples of Jesus' vital involvement in the spread of the gospel in Acts.

Therefore, despite the fact Acts begins with the ascension of Jesus, there is no evidence anyone in the early church perceived Him as "gone" from their midst. He healed, spoke, and directed the work of His disciples. Even when they preached, the disciples thought of Jesus as literally present in their preaching. They asked the listeners of those first sermons, not merely to believe facts about Jesus, but to encounter through their words the One who died, rose again, and lives forever. The ascension marked not Christ's departure, but a change in the way Christ performs His ministry of salvation and grace. Consequently, Acts is the continuing story of Jesus' work. It simply begins once He is no longer bound by the limitations of time and space. Acts tells what happened following the ascension when Jesus started to work through His new body, which is the church.

Themes of Luke Continued in Acts Because the story begun in Luke (the saving work of God) continues in Acts with the same central character (Jesus), one must expect the central themes of Luke to continue in Acts as well. What are the themes which express Luke's personal understanding of the gospel and give his record of Jesus' story his unique touch?

1. An emphasis on the work of the Holy Spirit. Luke began his Gospel with stories about individuals upon whom the Spirit descended. He described Zechariah, Mary, Simeon, and Anna as full of the Spirit and, consequently, instruments of God's efforts to save His people. Acts begins in a similar way: at Pentecost the Holy Spirit engulfed the entire community of believers who become the vehicles through which the good news of Jesus was proclaimed in "Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (1:8).

2. A concern for outcasts and sinners. Both in the Gospel which bears his name and in Acts, Luke showed special sympathy toward persons who fell outside the traditional Jewish boundaries of acceptability. The shepherds who attended the birth of Christ would not have been admitted to the Temple or synagogue for worship because keeping sheep made them "unclean." Yet, the Spirit led Luke to record the angels' invitation to these men to gather around the manger. In Acts, Luke fully developed this theme which he began in the first volume of his work. The Ethiopian eunuch (8:26–40), Cornelius (ch. 10), and the Philippian jailer (16:22–34) all represent persons rejected by Judaism but accepted and redeemed by Christ.

3. An emphasis on women. Women constituted a special group of persons cut off from the center of Jewish worship. They were not permitted beyond their own court in the Temple, and in the synagogues they were forced to stand behind a partition while men read from the Scriptures. A prescribed morning prayer which was popular during the first century was, "Blessed be God that He did not make me a Gentile, a slave, or a woman." Luke, however, carefully recorded the importance of the role of women in the spread of the gospel. He told about the birth of Jesus from Mary's viewpoint (as opposed to Matthew's version from Joseph's experience). Luke is also the only Gospel which mentions the prophetess Anna (Luke 2:36–38), the widow at Nain (Luke 7:11–17), and the Galilean women who supported Jesus' ministry (Luke 8:2). In Acts, Luke specifically drew attention to the conversions and consequent roles of Lydia (16:11–15,40) and Priscilla (18:18–28). He also mentioned regularly the conversion of nameless women at various stops on the missionary journeys of Paul (see 17:4 as one example). Judaism allowed no room for women leaders, and Jews would not have considered female converts worth mentioning.

4. The piety of Jesus and His followers. All the principal characters of Luke's story demonstrated great personal devotion to God and tremendous personal discipline in their spiritual lives. In the Gospel, Mary and Joseph performed all of Judaism's prescribed rituals associated with childbirth and the dedication of a new infant. Jesus worshiped in the synagogue "as was his custom" (Luke 4:16), and prayed regularly. In Acts, the disciples showed the same qualities. The first few chapters constantly describe the apostles in the Temple praying. Paul's ministry was punctuated by the same type of spirituality.

Outline

I. God Prepared for Jesus' Mission to Continue (1:1—7:69).
  A. Jesus' resurrection and ascension prepared for the Spirit's coming with power (1:1–11).
  B. The waiting church organized for mission (1:12–26).
  C. The Spirit empowered God's people for mission (2:1–4).
  D. The gospel overcomes ridicule to unify the church (2:5–47).
  E. The gospel overcomes imprisonment to add to the church (3:1—3:4).
  F. The gospel overcomes tradition and threats, increasing the church's power, unity, and generosity (4:5–37).
  G. The Spirit overcomes Satan's temptations of greed and pride (5:1–16).
  H. God overcomes human jealousy and fear (5:17–42).
  I. Spirit-filled leaders help the church overcome disputes and continue to grow (6:1–7).
  J. False accusers and persecution cannot halt the church's mission (7:1–60).

II. God Overcomes Human Barriers to Continue Jesus' Mission (8:1—13:52).
  A. God overcomes cultural barriers (8:1–40).
  B. God overcomes organized opposition (9:1–31).
  C. God overcomes physical barriers (9:32–43).
  D. God overcomes racial barriers (10:1—11:30).
  E. God overcomes political persecution (12:1–25).
  F. God overcomes sorcery (13:1–12).
  G. God expands the mission to "pagan peoples" (13:13–52).

III. God Expands Jesus' Mission through Geographical Boundaries (14:1—20:12).
  A. Persecution helps spread missionary work (14:1–7).
  B. Missions honors God, not missionaries, and maintains strong ties with the sending church (14:8–28).
  C. Missions is based on salvation by grace through faith without ritual burdens (15:1–35).
  D. Missionaries can disagree and spread the gospel (15:36–41).
  E. God leads missionaries in new paths (16:1–40).
  F. God can use the jealousy of religious people and the power of intellectual argument to spread His gospel (17:1–34).
  G. Missionaries preach fearlessly and follow God's will (18:1–23)
  H. Missionaries need accurate understanding as well as zeal and fervor (18:24–28).
  I. Missionaries lead people to baptism in Jesus' name and to receive God's Spirit (19:1–8).
  J. God disciplines those who seek personal gain through false use of Jesus' name (19:9–41).
  K. Missionaries visit new churches to strengthen the converts (20:1–12).

IV. Human Limits Cannot Hinder Jesus' Mission (20:13—28:31).
  A. Missionaries testify of Christ, even in the face of danger (20:13–24).
  B. Missionaries train leaders to carry on their work (20:25–38).
  C. Missionaries must be willing to die for their faith (21:1–14).
  D. Missionaries use every opportunity to share their personal testimonies (21:15—22:21).
  E. Missionaries use political rights to gain further opportunities to witness (22:22—23:11).
  F. God protects His missionaries against religious enemies (23:12–35).
  G. Enemies cannot prove their case against God's missionaries (24:1—25:27).
  H. Imprisonment lets missionaries preach forgiveness (26:1–32).
  I. God can protect His missionaries against danger (27:1—28:10).
  J. God uses fellow Christians to encourage enchained missionaries (28:11–16).
  K. Even foreign prisons cannot keep God's missionaries from preaching the gospel (28:17–31).

Joel Snider

ADADAH (Ăd′ ă·dah) Place name of city in southeastern Judah (Josh. 15:22).

ADAH (Ā′ dăh) Personal name meaning "adornment, ornament." 1. Wife of Lamech and mother of Jabal and Jubal (Gen. 4:19–23). 2. Wife of Esau and mother of Edomite officials (Gen. 36:2–16).

ADAIAH (Ă·daī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has adorned." 1. Grandfather of King Josiah (2 Kings 22:1). 2. A Levite, one of the family of Temple singers (1 Chron. 6:41). 3. A Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:21). 4. A priest who returned to Jerusalem from Babylon after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 5. The father of Maaseiah, who helped make young Joash king instead of Athaliah, the queen mother (2 Chron. 23:1). 6. Two men with foreign wives in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:29, 39). 7. A member of the tribe of Judah in Jerusalem after the Exile (Neh. 11:5). 8. A priest in the Temple after the Exile (Neh. 11:12), probably the same as 4.

ADALIA (Ăd·ə·lī′ ə) Personal name of Persian origin. One of ten sons of Haman, villain of Book of Esther, who was slain by Jews (Esther 9:8).

ADAM (Ăd′ əm) Place name of city near Jordan River, where waters of Jordan heaped up so Israel could cross over to conquer the land (Josh. 3:16). Its location is probably Tel ed-Damieh near the Jabbok River.

ADAM AND EVE (Ăd′ əm and Ēve) The first man and woman created by God from whom all other people are descended. They introduced sin into human experience.

Old Testament The Hebrew word for Eve means "life," while the Hebrew word for Adam simply means "man." The Hebrew word 'adam is used in at least three different ways in the Old Testament. In its most common occurence, the word 'adam refers to mankind in general. It has this use in Genesis 1:26–27, where it includes both male and female, those who were created in the image of God. It is also used in referring to a specific man where it occurs with the Hebrew definite article (Gen. 2:24; 4:1). A third use of Adam is in reference to the city beside Zaretan (Josh. 3:16) on the Jordan. The Hebrew word for Eve is used only as reference to Adam's wife.

New Testament In the New Testament, Adam is used as a proper name, clearly referring to our ancestral parents. Jesus' genealogy is traced back to Adam (Luke 3:38). However, the most important New Testament usage treats Jesus as a second Adam (1 Cor. 15:45), where the word is used as a symbol. Furthermore, Paul in a similar manner treats Adam as a type of Christ (Rom. 5:14). As the first Adam brought death into the world, the "second Adam" brought life and righteousness (Rom. 5:15–19).

Eve is referenced two times in the New Testament. In 2 Corinthians 11:3, Eve's gullibility before the serpent is presented as undesirable. In 1 Tim. 2:11–15, women are urged to be silent and subjected to man because Adam was created before Eve and because Eve was deceived into sinning.

Theological Concerns Adam and Eve are the ancestors of humanity. They are described as being the first persons. They also produced the first offspring (Gen. 4:1–2,25). The Genesis narrative shows the development of humanity from these first parents. The interrelatedness of all humanity is stressed in Genesis.

Further the biblical writers use the story of Adam and Eve as symbolic of the universal history of all mankind. All persons reenact in their own lives the tragic story of our ancestral parents. Thus Adam and Eve are real but also symbolic.

Adam and Eve introduced sin into human experience. The first record of sinful rebellion in the Bible is found in the narrative of the first persons (Gen. 3:1–13). They fell victim to the serpent's lie (Gen. 3:4). They made the choice to disbelieve and to disobey. They were not forced to disobey God but freely chose to do so.

The consequences of Adam and Eve's sin fell not merely upon them but upon the earth as well (Gen. 3:14–19). The consequences of sin had lasting influence far beyond the two individuals. Further, following their sin, Adam and Eve hid from God; God did not hide from them (Gen. 3:8–9). Their ultimate punishment was being driven from the garden (Gen. 3:22–24). However, this was also an act of God's mercy, for it kept humanity from living forever in a sinful state. Thus an opportunity was offered for the possibility of future redemption. See Jesus; Sin; Judgment; Wrath; Mercy. Robert Cate

ADAMAH (Ăd′ ə·mah) Place name and common noun meaning, "soil, farmland." 1. The earth or cultivated ground from whose dust God formed mankind, forming the wordplay Adam from dust of 'adamah. (Gen. 2:7). Compare 2:19. Pottery was also made from the soil (Isa. 45:9), as were altars (Ex. 20:24). The dead return to the earth (Ps. 146:4), but the soil also produces harvests (Deut. 7:13; 11:7). 2. A city in Naphtali's territory (Josh. 19:36) near where the Jordan River joins the sea of Tiberias, perhaps modern Hagar ed-Damm.

ADAMANT See Minerals and Metals.

ADAMI (Ăd′ ə·mī) or ADAMI-NEKEB (NAS, NIV, RSV, TEV). Place name meaning, "red earth" or "red earth pass." Town in Naphtali's territory (Josh. 19:33), perhaps Khirbet Damiyeh north of Mount Tabor.

ADAR (Ā′ där) Twelfth month of Jewish calendar after the Exile, including parts of February and March. Time of Festival of Purim established in Esther (9:21).

ADBEEL (Ăd′ bē·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God invites." Son of Ishmael and grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:13).

ADDAN (Ăd′ dän) Personal name of person who returned from Exile but could not prove he was of Israelite parents. Also called Addon (Ezra 2:59; Neh. 7:61).

ADDAR (Ăd′ där) Place name and personal name meaning, "threshing floor." 1. City on southwest border of Judah (Josh. 15:3). Also called Hazar-addar (Num. 34:4). 2. Benjamin's grandson (1 Chron. 8:3). Also called Ard (Gen. 46:21; Num. 26:40).

ADDER (Ăd·der) See Animals

ADDI (Ăd′ dī) Personal name meaning, "adornment." Hebrew equivalent is Iddo. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:28).

ADDON See Addar.

ADER (Ā′ dĕr) KJV spelling of Eder.

ADIEL (Ăd′ ĭ·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "an ornament is god." 1. An important leader of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36), a shepherd people. 2. Father of a priestly family in Jerusalem after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 3. Father of David's treasurer (1 Chron. 27:25).

ADIN (Ā′ dĭn) Personal name meaning, "delightful, blissful, luxuriant." 1. Ancestor of Jews who returned from Exile with Zerubbabel and Joshua (Ezra 2:15; Neh. 7:20). 2. Ancestor of exiles who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:6). 3. Signer of the covenant of Nehemiah to obey God's Law (Neh. 10:16).

ADINA (Ăd′ ĭ·nà) Personal name meaning, "delightful, luxuriant." A captain of thirty men in David's army from tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 11:42).

ADINO (Ă·dī′ nō) Personal name meaning, "loving luxury." Chief of David's captains who slew 800 men at one time (2 Sam. 23:8). Name does not appear in Septuagint, earliest Greek translation of this passage, nor in the Hebrew text of the parallel passage in 1 Chronicles 11:11. Some modern translators omit it from 2 Samuel 23:8 (NIV, RSV, TEV).

ADITHAIM (Ăd·ĭ·thā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "elevated place." City Joshua allotted to Judah (Josh. 15:36). Its location is not known.

ADLAI (Ăd′ la·ī) Personal name of father of one of David's chief shepherds (1 Chron. 27:29).

ADMAH (Ăd′ mäh) Place name meaning, "red soil." City connected with Sodom and Gomorrah as border of Canaanite territory (Gen. 10:19). Its king was defeated along with kings of Sodom and Gomorrah by coalition of four eastern kings (Gen. 14). God destroyed Admah, one of "the cities of the plains" (Gen. 19:29), along with Sodom and Gomorrah (Deut. 29:23). God could not stand to treat Israel, the people He loved, like He had treated Admah, even though Israel's behavior resembled Admah's (Hos. 11:8). Admah may have been located under what is now the southern part of the Dead Sea.

ADMATHA (Ăd·mā′ thà) Personal name in Persian meaning, "unconquered." One of the leading advisors to King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) of Persia (Esther 1:14).

ADMIN (Ăd′ mĭn) Personal name in best Greek texts of Luke 3:33 in the ancestry of Jesus but not in Greek texts available to King James translators. Thus Admin appears in NAS, RSV, TEV but not in KJV or NIV. See NIV text note.

ADMINISTRATION 1. A spiritual gift God gives to some members to build up the church (1 Cor. 12:28 NAS, NIV, RSV), called "governments" in KJV. The the Greek word kubernesis occurs only here in the Greek New Testament. It describes the ability to lead or hold a position of leadership. 2. NAS translates Hebrew idiom "to do justice" as "administer justice" (2 Sam. 8:15; 1 Kings 3:28; 1 Chron. 18:14). Similarly, NAS translates the idiom "to judge justice" as "administer justice" (Jer. 21:12). NIV goes further with other Hebrew and Aramaic idioms translated as "administer." The person called in Hebrew "who is over the house" NIV calls the "palace administrator" (2 Kings 10:5). The Old Testament seeks to lead people in authority to establish a society in which God's law brings fairness and justice to all people without favoritism and prejudice. 3. KJV speaks of differences of administrations (1 Cor. 12:5), translating the Greek, diakoiōn, "services" (NIV, RSV) or "ministries" (NAS). Leading a church involves ministering to or serving the needs of its members.

ADNA (Ăd′ nà) Personal name meaning, "joy of living." Aramaic name of 1. A post-exile Israelite with a foreign wife (Ezra 10:30). 2. A post-exilic priest (Neh. 12:15).

ADNAH (Ăd′ näh) Personal name meaning, "joy of living." 1. A military leader from the tribe of Manasseh who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:20). 2. A military leader of Judah stationed in Jerusalem under Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 17:14).

ADONI-BEZEK (Ăd′ ·ō·nī·bĕ′ zek) Personal name meaning, "lord of Bezek," Bezek being a place name meaning, "lightning" or "fragments." Canaanite king of Bezek. Tribe of Judah defeated him and cut off his thumbs and big toes, a sign of humiliation, before taking him to Jerusalem. There he died (Judg. 1:5–7). See Bezek.

ADONIJAH (Ăd·-nī′ jăh) Personal name meaning, "Yah is Lord." 1. The fourth son of David. His mother's name was Haggith (2 Sam. 3:4). In David's old age, Adonijah maneuvered to succeed his father on the throne of Israel, but his effort failed (1 Kings 1:5–50). After Solomon's accession to the throne, Adonijah gave renewed expression to his regal aspirations by asking for Abishag, David's nurse, as a wife. Solomon's response to this request was to have Adonijah put to death. (1 Kings 2:13–28). See David. Adonijah sought to establish hereditary kingship for Israel in which the eldest son automatically became king. Nathan, the prophet, worked with David and Bathsheba to establish a kingship in which the wishes of the dying monarch and the election by God determined the new king. 2. A Levite Jehoshaphat sent to teach the people of Judah the book of the law (2 Chron. 8). 3. A leader of the Jews after the Exile who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:16).

ADONIKAM (Ăd·ō·nī′ kam) Personal name meaning, "the Lord has arisen." Family head of 666 persons who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:13). Some members of the family returned with Ezra under Xerxes (Ezra 8:13). Compare Ezra 7:18. Some Bible students think Adonikam is the same person as Adonijah in Nehemiah 10:16.

ADONIRAM (Ăd·ō·nī′ ram) Personal name meaning, "the Lord is exalted." Officer in charge of the work gangs Solomon conscripted from Israel (1 Kings 4:6; 5:14). The king forced Israel's citizens to work for the state to secure materials to build the Temple and the other projects of Solomon. Apparently the same person continued administering the work force for Rehoboam, though his name is abbreviated to Adoram in 1 Kings 12:18. At that time, Isreal rebelled against making free citizens work. They stoned Adoniram to death. The name is spelled Hadoram in 2 Chronicles 10:18. Recently archaeologists uncovered a seal which probably dates to the seventh century, long after Adoniram. The seal talks of a person over the labor force.

ADONIS (Ă dō′ nĭs) God of vegetation and fertility with Syrian name meaning, "lord." Worshiped in Greece and Syria. Rites seem to include the planting of seeds which quickly produced plants and that just as quickly wilted in the sun. These were used to symbolize the dying and rising of the god and to bring blessing upon crops. Similar rites were celebrated for Osiris in Egypt and possibly for Tammuz in Babylon. REB translates Isaiah 17:10 as "your gardens in honour of Adonis." The Hebrew term appears only here in the Bible, being related to the personal name Naaman and to the Hebrew word meaning, "lovely, pleasant, agreeable." Other translations read, "finest plants" (NIV), "pleasant plants" (KJV), "delightful plants" (NAS), "sacred gardens" (TEV), "pleasant plants" (NRSV).

ADONI-ZEDEK (Ăd′ ō·nī·zē·dĕk) Personal name meaning, "the Lord is righteous" or "the god Zedek is righteous." King of Jerusalem who gathered coalition of Canaanite kings to fight Gibeon after Joshua made a peace treaty with Gibeon (Josh. 10). Joshua marched to Gibeon's aid and defeated the coalition. Joshua made a public example of the kings before executing them (10:22–26). He exposed their bodies on trees, a further sign of humiliation, since it postponed burial.

ADOPTION 1. The legal process whereby a person assumed parental responsibilities for another person's child as Mordecai did for Esther, his uncle's daughter (Esther 2:15). Near Eastern literature, such as the Code of Hammurabi, illustrates adoption laws, but the Bible contains no law showing the process, rights, or responsibilities involved in adoption.

Old Testament References to adoption are rather rare in the Old Testament. Other practices related to ensuring descendants were more common, and the desire to maintain the family line of the natural parents was strong.

The Old Testament examples of Moses (Ex. 2:10) and Esther (Esther 2:7,15) took place in foreign cultures and may reflect those settings more than the Hebrew practice. Some Old Testament traditions approach the idea that Israel's relationship with God was that of an adopted child (Ex. 4:22; Deut. 14:2; Hos. 11:1), though the idea is never stated explicitly (compare Rom. 9:4).

New Testament The New Testament frequently speaks of believers as God's children (Luke 20:36; Rom. 9:26; Gal. 3:26). Thus, believers are affirmed in a special and intimate relationship with God.

At the same time, the New Testament emphasizes Jesus' unique relationship to God as the "only begotten Son" (John 1:18; 3:16). He called God His "Abba" (Mark 14:36). In light of this truth, the relationship of believers to God is clearly derivative and secondary. Thus, adoption provided a means of describing the believers' relationship with God while maintaining the uniqueness of Jesus as the Son.

Paul is the only New Testament writer to employ the word adoption. He used the term to describe the status persons receive from God when they have been redeemed by Jesus Christ (Gal. 4:3–7). In belonging to Christ believers become Abraham's offspring and heirs with him of God's promise. Believers are chosen in Christ and predestined to this adoption by God's gracious will (Eph. 1:3–6).

Adoption symbolized for Paul God's love and grace in accepting believers as His children, intimate members of His family. Adoption occurs through the work of God's Spirit, giving believers power to overcome fleshly temptations and live the life in the Spirit (Rom. 8:14–15). This drives out the fear sinners experience in the presence of the holy God and provides power to pray trustingly to God as our "Abba," or "Daddy." See Abba. The Spirit living in the believer gives confident assurance that one is accepted fully as a child into God's family (8:15–16). This means the believer has all rights of inheritance and will join Jesus, "the only begotten Son" (John 3:16) in inheriting the glory of eternal life with God, but it does not mean the believer can escape the suffering and persecution the world dishes out to God's people (Rom. 8:17–18). The adoption process will be finalized when God restores all creation, giving His children resurrection bodies (8:23). Adoption has always been God's way of operating with His people (Hos. 11:1), for only spiritual birth, not natural birth, has determined who belonged to the covenant people (Rom. 9). Even Jews under God's law had to be redeemed by God's Son to be adopted sons (Gal. 4:4–6). Michael Fink

ADORAIM (Ăd·ō·rā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "double strength." City located at modern Durah, six miles southwest of Hebron. Rehoboam fortified the city and placed troops and supplies there as part of a massive defense building program (2 Chron. 11:9). See Rehoboam.

ADORAM (Ȧ·dō′ răm). See Adoniram.

ADRAMMELECH (Ȧ·drăm′ mė·lĕch) Divine and personal name meaning, "Adra is king." Probably based on earlier form Hadadmelech, "Hadad is king," using name of Canaanite god. 1. A god of the city of Sepharvaim. The Assyrian king Sargon spread the people of Israel all over his empire and replaced them with settlers from other cities he conquered (2 Kings 17:24). These new settlers tried to worship Yahweh, Israel's God, as the god of the land along with the gods they brought with them. One of these gods was from the city of Sephervaim, possibly in Assyria. His worshipers sacrificed their own children to this Semitic god (17:31–33). 2. Murderer of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, during the king's worship in the temple of Nisroch (2 Kings 19:37). One reading of the Hebrew manuscripts describes this Adrammelech as Sennacherib's son (KJV, NIV, RSV). Other manuscripts do not have "his sons" (NAS).

ADRAMYTTIUM (Ăd·ra̍·myt′ tĭ·ŭm) or ADRAMYTIAN (NAS) Place name of a seaport on the northwest coast of modern Turkey in Roman province of Asia. Paul used a ship whose home port was Adramyttium to sail from Caesarea to Italy to appeal his case to Caesar (Acts 27:2). The ancient site is near modern day Edremit.

ADRIA (Ā′ drĭ·ȧ) or ADRIATIC SEA (NAS, NIV) The sea separating Italy and Greece in which Paul's ship drifted for fourteen days as he sailed toward Rome to appeal his case to Caesar (Acts 27:27). Apparently Paul drifted nearly 500 miles from Clauda (27:16) to Malta (28:1).

ADRIEL (Ā′ drĭ·el) Personal name meaning, "God is my help." Saul's daughter Merab was promised as David's wife but then given to Adriel from Meholah, on the northern River Jordan (1 Sam. 18:19). His five sons David gave to the Gibeonites, who hanged them in revenge for unexplained actions Saul had taken against Gibeon (2 Sam. 21:1–9).

ADULLAM (Ȧ·dŭl′ lam) Place name meaning, "sealed off place." City five miles south of Beth-shemesh in Judah, probably modern Tell esh-Sheikh Madkur. Joshua conquered it (Josh. 12:15), though no story of its conquest appears in the Bible. Hirah, a friend of Judah, son of Jacob, was from Adullam (Gen. 38:1, 12). He took the sheep Judah had pledged to Tamar and discovered Tamar did not live where they first encountered her (38:20–22). David escaped to the cave at Adullam when he feared Achish, king of Gath (1 Sam. 22:1). There David collected an army from the lower class and outcasts of society. There he assembled an army against the Philistines (2 Sam. 23:13). Micah, the prophet, used David's experience almost 300 years later to warn his people that again their glorious king would have to flee to the caves of Adullam to escape an enemy who would take possession of the country because of Judah's sin (Mic. 1:15). In his build up of Judah's defenses King Rehoboam, Solomon's son, rebuilt Adullam's defenses, stationed soldiers, and stored supplies at Adullam (2 Chron. 11:7). After returning from the Exile, some members of the tribe of Judah lived at Adullam (Neh. 11:30).

ADULTERY is the act of unfaithfulness in marriage that occurs when one of the marriage partners voluntarily engages in sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex other than the marriage partner.

Old Testament Israel's covenant law prohibited adultery (Ex. 20:14) and thereby made faithfulness to the marriage relationship central in the divine will for human relationships. Many Old Testament regulations deal with adultery as the adulterous man's offense against the husband of the adulterous wife. Yet both the adulterous man and woman were viewed as guilty, and the punishment of death was prescribed for both (Lev. 20:10). The severity of the punishment indicates the serious consequences adultery has for the divine-human relationship (Ps. 51:4) as well as for marriage, family, and community relationships.

Several Old Testament prophets used adultery as a metaphor to describe unfaithfulness to God. Idolatry (Ezek. 23:27) and other pagan religious practices (Jer. 3:6–10) were viewed as adulterous unfaithfulness to the exclusive covenant that God established with His people. To engage in such was to play the harlot (Hos. 4:11–14).

New Testament Jesus' teachings expanded the Old Testament law to address matters of the heart. Adultery has its origins within (Matt. 15:19), and lust is as much a violation of the law's intent as is illicit sexual intercourse (Matt. 5:27–28). Adultery is one of the "works of the flesh" (Gal. 5:19). It creates enmity with God (Jas. 4:4), and adulterers will not inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9).

Adulterers can be forgiven (John 8:3–11); and once sanctified through repentance, faith, and God's grace, they are included among God's people (1 Cor. 6:9–11). See Divorce, Marriage.

Michael Fink

ADUMMIM (Ă·dum′ mĭm) Place name meaning, "red ones." A rocky pass on the road descending from Jerusalem to Jericho located at modern Tal'at ed-damm. It formed the border of Judah and Benjamin in the tribal allotments Joshua made (Josh. 15:7; 18:17). Today the Inn of the Good Samaritan is there because late traditions locate the Good Samaritan narrative there (Luke 10:30–37).

ADVENT designates the coming or second coming of Christ. See Parousia for related biblical references. The English term advent comes from a Latin word meaning "coming" and is used primarily to designate a period before Christmas during which Christians prepare for the Christmas season and reflect on the meaning of the coming of Christ. Churches in many areas began to observe this period of preparation as early as the fifth century, soon after the origin of the celebration of Christmas. Lasting up to six weeks, the period was one of both penitence and joyous anticipation. By the Middle Ages, four Sundays had become the standard length of the Advent season. Since then, Advent has been considered to be the beginning of the church year. See Church Year.

Advent may also refer to the second coming or second advent of Christ. See Parousia; Second Coming.

Fred A. Grissom

ADVENTURESS RSV translation of nokriya, which is also translated as strange woman (KJV), adulterous woman (Prov. 23:27) (NAS), wayward wife (NIV), adulteress (NRSV), and immoral women (TEV) in Proverbs 2:16; 5:20; 6:24; 7:5; 23:27). Some see an adventuress as a woman who lives in part by her wits, but largely based upon sex. Others describe her as a woman who seeks social advancement or wealth by seduction or other immoral means. Solomon's wives were called nokriyoth—that is, foreign wives (1 Kings 11:1,8), so the term may refer to women cut off or ostracized from Israelite society and normal social relationships. They are feared as ones who break up marriages.

ADVERSARY An enemy either human or satanic. Psalmists often prayed for deliverance from adversaries (Pss. 38:20; 69:19; 71:13; 81:14; 109:29). The devil is the greatest adversary and must be resisted (1 Pet. 5:8–9).

ADVOCATE is one who intercedes in behalf of another.

Old Testament While the word advocate is not found in the Old Testament, the concept of advocacy is found. Abraham intercedes with God in behalf of Sodom (Gen. 18:23–33); Moses intercedes with God in behalf of the Israelites (Ex. 32:11–14); Samuel intercedes with God in behalf of the children of Israel (1 Sam. 7:8–9). Other examples may be found in Jeremiah 14:7–9,13,19–22 and Amos 7:2,5–6. Modern translators often use "advocate" to refer to Job's desire for a heavenly attorney to plead his case even though he die (Job 16:19).

New Testament "Advocate" is the translation often given to the Greek parakletos in 1 John 2:1, a word found elsewhere only in John's Gospel as a title referring to the Holy Spirit, and there translated "Helper," "Comforter," "Counselor," or "Advocate" (John 14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7). Ancient Greeks used the term for one called in to assist or speak for another, frequently in a court setting. Rabbis transliterated the word into Hebrew, using it to denote an advocate before God. 1 John portrayed a courtroom scene in which Jesus Christ, the righteous One, intercedes with the Father on behalf of sinners. Such a portrayal stands in line with Old Testament ideas of advocacy, but supercedes it. In contrast to Old Testament advocates, Jesus is both the one righteous Advocate and the "atoning sacrifice" (NIV) for the world's sins (1 John 2:2). 1 John 2:1 parallels other New Testament descriptions of Jesus' intercessory role (Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25). See Helper; Paraclete; Intercession; Jesus Christ, High Priest.

R. Robert Creech

AENEAS (Āe·nē′ ăs) Personal name of a paralyzed man Peter healed at Lydda (Acts 9:33–34).

AENON (Āe′ nŏn) Place name meaning, "double spring." The location where John the Baptist was baptizing during the time that Jesus was baptizing in Judea (John 3:23). The biblical text indicates that Aenon was a place richly endowed with water near Salim, which precise location is unknown. The most likely location of Aenon was in a broad open valley called Wadi-Farah, west of the Jordan and northeast of Nablus.

AFFLICTION describes the state of being pained or distressed by oppressors. In the Hebrew language as many as eleven words can be translated "affliction."

Old Testament The two primary Hebrew words used for affliction mean "to lower, humble, or deny" ('anah) (Lev. 16:29,31; 23:27,32; Isa. 58:3,5) and "depressed" ('oni) (Gen. 16:11; Deut. 16:3; Job 30:15, 29). Both came from the same Hebrew root word.

In the Old Testament, the source of affliction is (1) God's retribution upon disobedience (Lam. 3:32–33; Isa. 30:20; Jer. 30:15); (2) the natural conditions of life (Gen. 16:11; 29:32; Psa. 25:18); (3) personal sin (Psa. 107:17); (4) forces of opposition (Isa. 51:21–23); and (5) evil spirits and/or Satan (1 Sam. 16:14; Job 1:6–12).

New Testament Three Greek words may be used for "affliction," including words meaning oppression, mistreatment, and misfortune. Suffering is sometimes used interchangably for the word "affliction," particularly in the KJV.

In the New Testament the source of affliction is (1) the natural conditions of humanity (Jas. 1:27); (2) persecution because of faithfulness to Christ (2 Cor. 6:4; 1 Thess. 1:6); (3) discipline for the purpose of maturing the Christian faith; and (4) the result of personal sin (Gal. 6:7).

Practical Concerns Affliction can be an individual matter (Phil. 4:14) or a corporate condition (Ex. 3:7; 2 Cor. 8:1–2). We can experience affliction directly (Deut. 16:3) or indirectly (Jas. 1:27). Affliction is sometimes described as overflowing all of life (Pss. 42:7; 69:1; 88:7; 124:4; Isa. 30:20; Jonah 2:5). Thus, affliction is one of the inevitable facts of our human existence. We find comfort in our affliction by remembering the promises of God and by taking specific personal actions. The promises that God has given to help mankind cope with situations of affliction are: (1) God sees and knows our affliction (Gen. 29:32; 31:42; Ex. 3:7; 2 Kings 14:26; Acts 7:34); (2) Affliction is only temporary (2 Cor. 4:17); and (3) God can deliver from any affliction (Ex. 3:17).

To endure during times of affliction, Christians should: (1) pray to the Lord (Ps. 25:18; Lam. 1:9; Jas. 5:13); (2) comfort others (Jas. 1:27; Phil. 4:14); (3) remain faithful through the patient endurance of suffering (2 Cor. 6:4; 1 Tim. 4:5; Jas. 1:2,12; 1 Pet. 4:13); (4) cultivate an attitude of joy (Jas. 1:2); and (5) follow the example of Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 2:19–23). Bob Sheffield

AFTERBIRTH The placenta and fetal membranes that are expelled after delivery. Disobedience to God will result in defeat in war which in turn will result in such a lack of food that women will seek nourishment from the most disgusting sources (Deut. 28:57; compare 2 Kings 6:24–31; Lam. 2:20; 4:10).

AGABUS (Ăg′ ə·bŭs) Personal name meaning, "locust." Prophet in the Jerusalem church who went to visit the church at Antioch and predicted a universal famine. His prophecy was fulfilled about ten years later in the reign of Claudius Caesar (Acts 11:27–29). His prediction led the church at Antioch to begin a famine relief ministry for the church in Jerusalem. Later, Agabus went to Caesarea and predicted that Paul would be arrested by the Jews in Jerusalem (Acts 21:10–11). Still, his friends could not persuade Paul out of going to Jerusalem.

AGAG (Ā′ găg) Agag, whose name means "fiery one," was king of the Amalekites, a tribal people living in the Negev and in the Sinai peninsula. The Amalekites had attacked the Israelites in the wilderness and were therefore cursed (Ex. 17:14). In 1 Samuel 15:8, Saul destroyed all the Amalekites but King Agag. Since the Lord had ordered the complete destruction of the Amalekites, Samuel, Saul's priest, rebuked Saul for his disobedience and reported God's rejection of Saul as king. Then Samuel himself executed Agag.

In Numbers 24:7, Agag is used to refer to the Amalekite people. Agag was a common name among Amalekite kings much as Pharaoh among Egyptian rulers.

AGAGITE (Ā′ găg·īte) Apparently, the term means a descendant of Agag. Only Haman, the arch villain in the Book of Esther, is called an Agagite (Esther 3:1). Agagite is probably a synonym for Amalekite. See Agag.

AGAPE See Love; Lord's Supper.

AGAR KJV spelling of Hagar in the New Testament. See Hagar.

AGATE (Ăg′ ăte) A translucent quartz with concentric bands, generally white and brown. Agate translates three words in the Bible: a stone in the breastpiece of judgment (Ex. 28:19; 39:12), the material in the pinnacles of Jerusalem (Isa. 54:12; see Ezek. 27:16), and the third jewel in the foundation wall of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:19). See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

AGEE (Ā′ gēē) Personal name perhaps meaning, "camel thorn." Father of one of David's three chief commanders (2 Sam. 23:11).

AGING describes the natural process of human beings growing older and, according to the Bible, gaining respect.

Old Testament References to aging persons in the Old Testament stress the physiological changes of aging (1 Kings 14:4; 2 Sam. 19:35; Eccl. 12:1–5; Zech. 8:4), the wisdom of the aging (Deut. 32:7; Job 12:12), the honor due the aging (Ex. 20:12; Lev. 19:32), and the continuing service of the aging (Gen. 12—50, the patriarchs; Jos. 13:1; 14:10; Ps. 92:14; Joel 2:28). Aging is presented as a normal part of the biblical view of the life cycle (Ps. 90:10; Isa. 46:4). See Elder.

New Testament References to aging persons in the New Testament focus on the responsibility of children or the family of faith to care for dependent or disabled aging persons (Mark 7:1–13; Matt. 15:1–6; 1 Tim. 5:4, 8; Jas. 1:27). The young are urged to honor the aging (1 Tim. 5:1–2), and the aging are encouraged to be worthy examples (Titus 2:2–3). Christians are expected to care for widows (Acts 6:1–7), and the aging are expected to serve God as did Zechariah, Elizabeth, Simeon, and Anna in Luke 1—2. Such service by the aging can bring blessings to their families, as did Timothy's grandmother and mother (2 Tim. 1:5).

A

Practical Concerns The biblical view of aging is unequivocally positive, though allowing for foolish elderly (Eccl. 4:13). Generally older persons have a reservoir of wisdom and understanding based on past experience (Deut. 32:7). They can experience new family joys, even after many previous sad experiences (Ruth 4:13–17). Both youth and age have their unique worth; they are not in competition (Prov. 20:29). While advancing age results in diminishing strength (Eccl. 12:1–8), God's grace and help are ever the same (Isa. 46:4). Douglas Anderson

AGRAPHA, "unwritten things," has been used since about 1700 to denote words of Jesus not written in the four canonical gospels. Some examples within the Bible are Acts 20:35 and 1 Corinthians 11:24–25. More are found in Apocryphal writings, Gnostic gospels, the Talmud, the Islamic sources, Oxyrhynchus Papyri, and the church fathers. Some scholars suggest that the canonical gospels may rely in part on these sayings. Most sayings are regarded by scholars as expansions of the gospel tradition or creations by subsequent followers of Jesus, though a few of them may be authentic. Joe Baskin

AGRICULTURE is the art of cultivating the land to grow food.

The people of biblical times, both of the Old and New Testament periods, were essentially rural. Even those who lived in towns were close to the country and usually owned gardens or farms. With the seasons as a background to their daily life, the religious calendar was partly based on the agricultural year with several festivals coinciding with significant events: e.g. Feast of Weeks or first fruits (of cereals, Ex. 32:11), Feast of Tabernacles or ingathering (of grapes, Lev. 23:34). The primary crops of the Bible include grain, grapes, and olives (Gen. 27:28; Deut. 7:13; Joel 1:10).

How were cereals cultivated? Grain crops were the staple food of rich and poor alike, although the poor may have had to consume barley bread rather than the more palatable wheat. Both were sown by scattering the grains into prepared land usually ploughed by draft animals. The parable of the sower (Matt. 13:3–23; Luke 8:5–15) provides an interesting account of grain sowing and the subsequent fate of the seed. Peasant agriculture, unlike modern farming practices, was unsophisticated with primitive implements often used in harsh conditions where rocky ground and vigorous weeds militated against a good yield. Hence it would be normal for some of the scattered seed to fall on a path of compacted soil where it would not be covered and lie vulnerable to birds. Similarly, some seeds would fall at the margins of the fields where thorny thickets and rapidly growing thistles easily suffocated the germinating wheat. Shallow soil and lack of moisture during the hot dry summer encouraged the withering of the seeds that did sprout into young plants on the field's outer borders. Those seeds that fell on moist, deep soil grew and matured their ears ready for harvest.

Arab farmer plowing a rocky field along the Jerusalem-Jericho road in Israel.

The Book of Ruth provides a vivid picture of the harvesting scene that was carried out by whole families and extra hired men, followed by poor women gleaners picking leftovers. Barley was harvested first during April and May, followed by wheat a month later. A sickle was used to cut off the ears which were held with one hand, and then bundled together in small sheaves to be carted off to the threshing floor (1 Chron. 21:22)—a cleared area of stamped earth or stone. Animals, usually cattle, were driven over the spread-out stalks to trample out the grains. Often a cartwheel or a heavy sledge with small stones inserted in the bottom was drawn round and round the floor to hasten the threshing. The grains were swept together and separated from the useless chaff by winnowing—a process involving the throwing up of the grain in breezy weather so that the light scaly chaff is blown away, leaving a pile of clean grain ready for grinding into flour (Matt. 3:12). A proportion of the crop was always kept aside and carefully stored in dry conditions for sowing the following year (Gen. 47:24).

How did the agriculture of Egypt differ from that of Canaan? The essential difference between Egyptian and Canaanite agriculture was that Canaan depended on rainfall (Deut. 11:11), while Egypt depended on the River Nile and its annual flood (Amos 8:8). In other words, Canaan was a rain-fed agriculture, while Egypt used irrigation agriculture. In July the Nile rose following rainfall in Ethiopia and flooded the land on both sides. (Now the modern Aswan Dam impounds the water and releases it evenly throughout the year). The flood carried silt that enriched the farmland; and the water level fell later in the year, leaving behind pools of water that could be used for irrigation in channels small enough to be opened and closed by a farmer's foot (Deut. 11:10). Egypt was renowned for its rich harvests of wheat and vegetables which were missed by the Israelites fleeing the country via the desert of Sinai. There the Israelites longed for the succulent melons, cucumbers, garlic, leeks, and onions they left behind (Num. 11:5).

Were vineyards for growing grapevines? The Bible presents two accounts of vineyards that describe them in some detail. In Isaiah 5:1–7 and Mark 12:1–9 we read how the hillside was fenced and terraced to provide deep stone-free soil where the rainfall could water the vines' roots in winter. Dung and compost nourished the plants which needed to be trained over rocks or fences. Constant attention had to be given to the trailing branches of carefully chosen varieties in order to yield sweet green or black grapes. As harvest time approached, the owners of the vineyards and their families camped near the vineyards in shelters (booths) or in stone-built towers (Isa. 1:8) to protect the grapes from animals, such as jackals (foxes) and wild pigs (boar) (Ps. 80:13) and human thieves. When ripe, the grapes were picked for eating fresh (Isa. 65:21), drying in the sun as raisins (1 Sam. 30:12), or crushed for wine. Most vineyards had a winepress where the grapes were trodden under human foot (Neh. 13:15; Rev. 19:15), the juice collected in flagons or skins and fermented (Matt. 9:17). Fermentation was caused by naturally occurring yeast (Saccharomyses) breaking down the sugars into alcohol and carbon dioxide gas. During the winter, the long shoots of the previous year's growth had to be pruned away from the vines to leave a few buds for the next season (John 15:2).

How long do olive trees live? The huge trees in the Garden of Gethsemane (Matt. 26:36) on the Mount of Olives in Jerusalem are hundreds of years old and could potentially stretch back to New Testament times. During the siege of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 the Roman forces under Titus felled all the trees, presumably including the olives which could have sprouted again (Ps. 123:3) to yield the aged hollow trees still growing around Jerusalem.

Olive trees are not raised from seeds because the seedlings invariably produce very inferior ones similar to the wild stock. Selected cuttings are rooted or more often grafted on to the wild plant which has a better root system. Olive roots spread widely to gain nourishment on rocky hillsides, hence the trees are often well spaced. Although flowering begins when the trees are less than ten years old, full yield of fruit is not reached until they are 40 or 50 years old, after which branches are pruned to encourage new fruitful growth. Olives require a Mediterranean type of climate of moist cool winters and hot dry summers to be economically productive.

Olive groves usually had an oil press nearby where the heavy stone wheel crushed the fruit and its hard kernel. The pulp was placed in a press which extracted the precious yellow oil. This was used for cooking purposes as an essential part of diet (Deut. 7:13, 2 Kings 4:5, 2 Chron. 2:10). Olive oil was rubbed over skin and hair (Ps. 2:6; 23:5) and used for anointing guests (Luke 7:46 and 1 Kings 1:34). Christ was God's "anointed" one (Ps. 2:2; John 1:41; Acts 4:27), anointing being symbolic of the Holy Spirit (Isa. 61:1; Acts

10:38). Medicinally, olive oil mixed with antiseptic wine healed wounds (Luke 7:34, Jas. 5:14). Taken internally, olive oil soothed gastric disorders and acted as a laxative. Olive oil was used as fuel for lamps with a wick made of flax, producing a bright flame when lit (Ex. 25:6; Matt. 25:34). What animals were used in agriculture? Mainly cows (oxen) were used to pull carts (1 Sam. 6:7) and simple wooden plows (Job 1:14; 1 Sam. 14:14) tipped with iron, if the farmer could afford it (Isa. 2:4). Oxen and donkeys (asses) were driven over the harvested grain to thresh it. The use of horses and camels in agriculture appears to have been limited, presumably because they were more valuable animals, well adapted for carrying heavy loads and for use in time of war. When pairs of animals were used, they were coupled with a wooden yoke across their shoulders (Jer. 28:13; Luke 14:19). F. Nigel Hepper

AGRIPPA See Herod.

AGUE KJV translation of Hebrew word meaning "burning with fever." The Hebrew term appears in Leviticus 26:16 and Deuteronomy 28:22, KJV translating "fever" in the second passage.

AGUR (Ā′ gûr) Personal name meaning, "hired hand." Author of at least part of Proverbs 30.

AHAB (Ā′ hăb) Personal name meaning, "father's brother." 1. The seventh king of Israel's Northern Kingdom, married a foreigner, Jezebel, and incited God's anger more than any of Israel's previous kings. Ahab, was the son and successor of Omri. His 22-year reign (874–853 B.C.), while enjoying some political and military success, was marred by spiritual compromise and failure (1 Kings 16:30).

Ruins of Ahab's palace excavated at the site of the ancient city of Samaria.

Ahab's marriage to a Phoenician princess had both commercial and political benefits. Commercially, it brought desired goods to Samaria and opened the way for expanded sea trade. Politically, it removed any military threat from Phoenicia.

During Ahab's days, Israel enjoyed peace with Judah, largely as a result of a marriage he arranged between princess Athaliah and Joram, the crown prince of Judah. The resulting alliance produced cooperative efforts in sea trade (1 Kings 22:48; 2 Chron. 20:35–37) and a joint military campaign to recapture Ramoth-gilead, which had fallen under Aramean control (1 Kings 22:2–40).

During his reign, effective control was maintained over Moab, producing revenue extracted by tribute, a tax the Moabite king paid to maintain his position (2 Kings 3:4). The oppression of Moab under Ahab and his father Omri finds expression in the famous Moabite Stone.

Ahab was successful in two major campaigns against the Syrian king, Ben-hadad, but was mortally wounded in the third. His participation in the great battle of Qarqar (853 B.C.), though not mentioned in the Bible, is recorded on an inscription of Shalmanezer III of Assyria. According to Shalmanezer, Ahab committed 2,000 chariots and 10,000 men to the battle.

The days of Ahab in Samaria were days of growing wealth and spiritual apostasy. According to 1 Kings 22:39, he built an "ivory house" for Jezebel, the remains of which were discovered in the Harvard excavations at the site. Rooms and furniture were decorated with ivory inlay which in many cases featured Egyptian deities. His surrender to the influences of idolatry is illustrated by the construction of a temple for Baal (1 Kings 16:32), the massacre of the Lord's prophets (1 Kings 18:4,19), and seizure of an Israelite's property (1 Kings 21).

Ahab appears to have been a worshiper of Yahweh, God of Israel, but probably along with other deities. He frequently consulted with Yahweh's prophets (1 Kings 20:13–14,22,28; 22:8,16), used the divine name in naming his children (Ahaziah, Jehoram, and Athaliah) and did not interfere with the execution of the priests of Baal after the contest on Mt. Carmel (1 Kings 18:40). The influence of Jezebel in his life, however, overshadowed any significant influence the prophets of the Lord had in his life. He became a prime example of evil (Mic. 6:16).

2. A false prophet living in Babylon who prophesied lies and faced Jeremiah's condemnation (Jer. 29:20–23). John J. Davis

AHARAH (Å·hâr′ ah) Spelling in 1 Chronicles 8:1 for Ahiram (Num. 26:38). See Ahiram.

AHARHEL (Å·här′ hĕl) Personal name with unknown meaning. Descendant of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8).

AHASAI (Å·hăṣ′ aî) KJV spelling of Ahzai.

AHASBAI (Å·hăs′ baî) Father of a leader in David's army (2 Sam. 23:34). See 1 Chron. 11:35.

He apparently came from Maacah.

AHASUERUS (Å·hăs·ū·ē′ rŭs) Hebrew spelling for Xerxes (NIV, TEV). See Xerxes; Persia.

AHAVA (Å·hā′ vȧ) River in Babylon and town located beside the river where Ezra assembled Jews to return to Jerusalem from Exile (Ezra 8:15,21,31). Ahava was probably located near the city of Babylon, but the exact site is not known.

AHAZ (Ā′ hăz) 1. The evil king of Judah (735–715). Ahaz, whose name means "he has grasped," was the son and successor of Jotham as king of Judah and the father of Hezekiah. The Bible characterizes Ahaz as an evil man who participated in the most monstrous of idolatrous practices (2 Kings 16:3). His sixteen-year reign was contemporary with the prophets Isaiah and Micah. Isaiah gave counsel to Ahaz during the Syro-Ephraimitic crisis, when Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, joined forces to attack Jerusalem. The prophet Oded rescued some captives from Israel (2 Chron. 28). Ahaz refused the prophet's advice and appealed for help to Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria (Isa. 7). That appeal and the resulting entanglement had unfortunate results religiously and politically in that Ahaz surrendered to Assyrian domination. He even placed an altar made from a Syrian model in the Temple (2 Kings 16:11). Ahaz suffered the final humiliation of not being buried in the royal tombs (2 Chron. 28:15). See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period. 2. A Benjaminite descended from Saul (1 Chron. 8:35–36; 9:42).

AHAZIAH (Ā·hȧ·zī′ ah) names two Old Testament kings, the king of Israel (850–840 B.C.) and the king of Judah (ca. 842). The name means, "Yahweh has grasped."

1. The son and successor of Ahab as king of Israel (1 Kings 22:40). He reigned two years and died after suffering a fall in his palace at Samaria (2 Kings 1:2–17). The prophet Elijah announced Ahaziah would die because he sent for help from Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, instead of from Yahweh. 2. The son and successor of Jehoram as king of Judah (2 Kings 8:25). He reigned for one year and died after being wounded as he fled from Jehu while visiting King Joram of Israel (2 Kings 9:27). These two kings were related to one another. Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah of Judah, was the sister of Ahaziah of Israel.

AHBAN (Äh′ băn) Personal name meaning, "the brother is wise" or "the brother is creator." A member of the clan of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:29).

AHER (Ā′ hĕr) Personal name meaning, "another." A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:12); may be another spelling for Ahiram (Num. 26:38).

AHI (Ā′ hī) Personal name meaning, "my brother." 1. Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:15), who lived in Gilead. 2. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:34).

AHIAH (Å·hī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is my brother." Variant spelling of Ahijah but not used consistently by English translations to reflect Hebrew spellings: 1. 'achiyah—1 Sam. 14:3,18; 2 Sam. 23:34; 1 Kings 4:3; 11:29–30; 12:15; 14:2,4; 15:27–33; 1 Chron. 2:25; 8:7; 11:36; 26:20; 2 Chron. 9:29; Neh. 10:27. 2. 'achiyahu—1 Kings 14:4–6,18; 2 Chron. 10:15. 3. 'achyo—2 Sam. 6:3,4; 1 Chron. 8:14, 31; 9:37; 13:7. See Ahijah.

AHIAM (Å·hī′ ăm) Personal name whose meaning is not certain. One of David's thirty heroic soldiers (2 Sam. 23:33).

AHIAN (Å·hī′ ăn) Personal name meaning, "little brother." A member of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:19).

AHIEZER (Ā·hī·ē′ zĕr) Personal name meaning "my brother is help." 1. An aide to Moses in the wilderness from the tribe of Dan (Num. 1:12; 2:25). He brought the tribe's offerings (7:66–71) and led the tribe on the march (10:25). 2. The chief warrior who joined David at Ziklag. He was skilled with both hands and represented Benjamin, the tribe of King Saul, who threatened David (1 Chron. 12:1–3).

AHIHUD (Å·hī′ hŭd) 1. Personal name meaning, "my brother is splendid or majestic" (Hebrew 'achihud). A leader of the tribe of Asher who helped divide the Promised Land among the tribes (Num. 34:27). 2. Meaning "my brother is a riddle" (Hebrew 'achichud). A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:7).

AHIJAH (Å·hī′ jah) See Ahiah. Personal name rendered several ways in Hebrew and English meaning "my brother is Yahweh." 1. A priest of the family of Eli in Shiloh (1 Sam. 14:3–4). He brought the ark of God to Saul (1 Sam. 4:18). 2. A scribe of Solomon (1 Kings 4:3). 3. A prophet from Shiloh who tore his clothes in twelve pieces and gave ten to Jeroboam to signal God's decision to divide the kingdom after Solomon's death (1 Kings 11:29–39). Later when Jeroboam's son fell sick, the blind prophet recognized Jeroboam's wife through God's word. He announced the end of Jeroboam's reign and of his dynasty (1 Kings 14:1–18; 15:29). 2 Chronicles 9:29 refers to a prophecy of Ahijah in written form. 4. Father of King Baasha of Israel from tribe of Issachar

(1 Kings 15:27). 5. Son of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:25). 6. Son of Ehud in tribe of Benjamin, an official in Geba (1 Chron. 8:7). 7. One of David's 30 military heroes whose home was Pelon (1 Chron. 11:36). The corresponding list in 2 Samuel 23:34 has Eliam the son of Ahithophel the Gilonite. 8. Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:26). 9. The Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 26:20 says Ahijah, a Levite, had charge of Temple treasuries under David (KJV, RSV). The Septuagint or oldest Greek translation suggests reading 'achehem, "their brothers or relatives" (NAS, NIV, TEV).

AHIKAM (Å·hī′ kăm) Personal name meaning, "my brother stood up." Son of Josiah's scribe Shaphan. He took the book of the law found in the Temple to Huldah the prophetess to determine God's will (2 Kings 22:8–20). His son Gedaliah headed the Jews left in Judah after Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem (586 B.C.) briefly before rebels killed him (2 Kings 25:22–25). Ahikam protected Jeremiah when King Jehoiakim wanted to kill the prophet (Jer. 26:24). Later, his son also protected Jeremiah (Jer. 39:14).

AHILUD (Å·hī′ lŭd) Personal name meaning, "a brother is born." The father of Jehoshaphat, David's court recorder (2 Sam. 8:16), who retained the position under Solomon (1 Kings 4:3). Probably the same Ahilud was father of Baana, Solomon's official to get court provisions from the province around Taanach, Megiddo, and Bethshean (1 Kings 4:12).

AHIMAAZ (Å·hĭm′ å·ăz) Personal name with uncertain meaning, "brother of anger" and "my brother is counselor," being suggestions. 1. Saul's father-in-law (1 Sam. 14:50). 2. Son of Zadok, one of David's priests (2 Sam. 15:27). He served as one of David's secret messengers from the court when Absalom rebelled and drove his father from Jerusalem (2 Sam. 15:36; 7:17). Once he had to hide in a well to keep from being found out (17:18–21). He was a swift runner, overtaking Cushi to bring tidings to David (18:19–29), but he did not report Absalom's death. He maintained a reputation as a "good man" (18:27). 3. One of 12 officers over Solomon's provinces, he had charge of Naphtali. He married Solomon's daughter Basmath. He may be the same as 2. Zadok's son (1 Kings 4:15).

AHIMAN (Å·hī′ man) Personal name with uncertain meaning. 1. One of the giants of Anak (Num. 13:22). See Anak. Caleb drove him and his two brothers out of Hebron. Compare Judges 1:10, where the tribe of Judah killed the three brothers. 2. A Levite and Temple gatekeeper (1 Chron. 9:17).

AHIMELECH (Å·hĭm′ ē·lĕch) Personal name meaning, "My brother is king." See High Priest.

AHIMOTH (Å·hī′ mŏth) Personal name meaning literally, "My brother is death" or "my brother is Mot (god of death). A Levite (1 Chron. 6:25).

AHINADAB (Å·hĭn′ å·dăb) Personal name meaning, "my brother has devoted himself" or "my brother is noble." One of Solomon's 12 province officials, he provided supplies for the royal court from Mahanaim (1 Kings 4:14).

AHINOAM (Å·hĭn′ ō·ăm) Personal name meaning, "my brother is gracious." 1. King Saul's wife (1 Sam. 14:50). 2. Wife of David from Jezreel (1 Sam. 25:43) who lived with him under the Philistines at Gath (27:3). When she and Abigail, David's other wife, were captured by the Amalekites, the people threatened to stone David. David followed God's word, defeated the Amalekites, and recovered his wives and the other captives (30:1–20). Ahinoam then moved to Hebron with David, where the people crowned him king (2 Sam. 2:2–4). She gave David his first son, Amnon (3:2).

AHIO (Å·hī′ ō) Personal name meaning, "my brother is Yahweh." See Ahiah, Ahijah. 1. Son of Abinadab at whose house the ark of the covenant was stationed (2 Sam. 6:3). He and his brother Uzzah drove an ox and cart carrying the ark. 2. A member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:14), but the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament reads "their brothers" or kinfolk. 3. A member of Benjamin with connections to Gibeon (1 Chron. 8:31; 9:37).

AHIRA (Å·hī′ rå) Personal name meaning, "my brother is a friend." Leader of tribe of Naphtali under Moses (Num. 1:15), who presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (7:78–83) and led them in the wilderness marches.

AHIRAM (Å·hī′ ram) Personal name meaning, "my brother is exalted." Son of Benjamin who gave his name to a clan in that tribe (Num. 26:38).

AHIRAMITE (Å hī′ rām īte) Clan established by Ahiram. See Ahiram.

AHISAMACH (Å·hĭş′ å·măch) Personal name meaning, "my brother has supported." Father of Oholiab, the artisan who helped Bezaleel create the artwork of the wilderness tabernacle (Ex. 31:6; 35:34; 38:23).

AHISHAHAR (Å·hī′ shā·här) Personal name meaning, "brother of the dawn." A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10) but not listed in the genealogy of 1 Chronicles 8.

AHISHAR (Å·hī′ shär) Personal name meaning, "my brother sang." Head of Solomon's palace staff (1 Kings 4:6).

AHITHOPHEL (Å·hĭth′ ō·phĕl) Personal name meaning, "brother of folly" if it is not a scribal attempt to hide an original name including a Canaanite god such as Ahibaal. See Jerubbaal. David's counselor who joined Absalom's revolt against King David (2 Sam. 15:12). David prayed that his counsel might be turned to foolishness (15:31) and commissioned the faithful Hushai to help Zadok and Abiathar, the priests, counteract the counsel of Ahithophel. Ahithophel led Absalom to show his rebellion was for real by taking over his father's concubines (16:15–23). Ahithophel's counsel was famous as being equal to the word of God (16:23). Hushai, however, persuaded Absalom not to follow Ahithophel's military advice (ch. 17), this being God's work (17:14). Disgraced, Ahithophel returned home to Giloh, put his house in order, and hanged himself (17:23). He may have been the grandfather of Bathsheba, David's partner in sin and wife (2 Sam. 11:3; 23:34).

AHITUB (Å·hī′ tŭb) Personal name meaning, "my brother is good." 1. Priest, son of Phinehas and grandson of Eli ministering in Shiloh (1 Sam. 14:3). He was Ahimelech's father (22:9). 2. Father of Zadok, the high priest under David and Solomon (2 Sam. 8:17). The name occurs twice in the Chronicler's list of priests (1 Chron. 6:7–8, 11–12, 52). Compare 9:11. Ezra descended from Ahitub's line (Ezra 7:2).

AHLAB (Âh′ lăb) Place name meaning, "mountain forest" or "fertile." Probably located at Khirbet el-Macḥalib on the Mediterranean coast four miles above Tyre. The tribe of Asher could not conquer it (Judg. 1:31).

AHLAI (Äh′ lā·ī) Personal name meaning, "a brother to me," perhaps an abbreviated form of Ahliya, "the brother is my god." Others interpret as interjection meaning, "O would that." 1. A member of clan of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:31). Ahlai's father was Sheshan. 1 Chronicles 2:34 says Sheshan had no sons, only daughters. This makes Ahlai either a daughter of Sheshan or part of a Hebrew text that is incomplete due to copying errors. Some would identify Ahlai with Sheshan's grandson Attai (1 Chronicles 2:35). Others think Sheshan changed his servant's Jarha's name to Ahlai when he made Jarha his son-in-law (v. 35). No certain answer to Ahlai's identity has been offered. 2. Father of a valiant soldier of David (1 Chron. 11:41).

AHOAH (Å·hō′ ah) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:4), but lists in 7:7; 8:7; and evidence of early translations may point to Ahijah as the original name.

AHOHITE (Å·hō′ hīte) Clan name. In time of David and Solomon military figures of this clan or place became military leaders. See 2 Samuel 23:9, 28; 1 Chronicles 11:12,29; 27:4.

AHOLAH (Å·hō′ lah) KJV spelling for Oholah. See Oholah.

AHOLIAB (Å·hō′ lī·ăb) KJV spelling for Oholiab. See Oholiab.

AHOLIBAH (Å·hō′ lī·bah) KJV for Oholibah. See Oholibah.

AHOLIBAMAH (Å·hō·lī·bā′ mah) KJV spelling of Oholibamah. See Oholibamah.

AHUMAI (Å·hū′ maî) Personal name meaning, "a brother is it" or "brother of water." Member of clan of Zorathites of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:2).

AHUZAM (Å·hū′ zăm) or AHUZZAM (NAS, NIV, RSV, TEV) Personal name meaning, "their grasping" or "their property." A member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:6).

AHUZZATH (Å·hŭz′ zăth) Personal name meaning, "that grasped" or "property." Official who accompanied Abimelech, king of Philistines, to make covenant of peace with Isaac (Gen. 26:26). Called literally "the friend of the king," he probably held an office as the closest advisor of the king. Compare KJV, NAS, NIV.

AHZAI (Äh′ zaî) or AHASAI (KJV) Personal name meaning, "property" or abbreviated form of Ahzaiah, "Yahweh has grasped." A priest after the return from Exile (Neh. 11:13). Sometimes said to be same as Jahzerah (1 Chron. 9:12).

AI (Ā′ ī) a city located two miles from Bethel, was the site where Abram built an altar, and Joshua and Achan suffered ruin. Ai is also spelled Aija, Aiath, and Hai. Ai means "ruin" (or possibly "heap") in the Hebrew language. The city was almost the ruin of Joshua's leadership (Josh. 7:1–9); it was the ruin of Achan and his family (Josh. 7:16–26); and it suffered complete ruin (Josh. 8:1–29). Several hundred years before Joshua, Abram built an altar on a hill just west of Ai which was also near Bethel (Gen. 12:8). He then returned to the location after visiting Egypt (Gen. 13:3). The prophets later referred to Ai as a symbol of the power of God who provided victory for his obedient people. Isaiah noted the Assyrian army marching by Ai on his way to Jerusalem, but promised God would stop their progress (Isa.

A

10:28). Jeremiah used the ruin of Ai as a warning to the Ammonites, who had occupied Israel's teritory (Jer. 49:3). Residents of Bethel and Ai returned from Exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:28).

Although the existence of Ai is well documented, its exact location is debated. The general location of the city is known to be about 10–12 miles north of Jerusalem in the central hills of Palestine. This would be about the same distance from Jericho. William F. Albright identified Beitin as the city of Bethel and then concluded that et-Tell (a site one mile southeast of Beitin) was biblical Ai. Excavations conducted in the 1920s (John Garstang), 1930s (Judith Marquet-Krause and Samuel Yeivin), and 1960s and 1970s (Joseph Callaway), however, produced some disturbing evidence in light of Albright's 1939 proposal. It seems that et-Tell was first occupied as early as the fourth millennium (3200–3000 B.C.) and continued to thrive until the end of the third millennium (2200 B.C.). The problem is that the site has no evidence of being inhabited during the next 1000 years which includes the time of the Israelite invasion. Callaway found a small village without defense walls lasting from 1220 to 1050 B.C. This has resulted in some speculations concerning Albright's theory and the Bible story.

The suggestions for solving this problem are basically three: (1) the Bible contains an inaccurate or legendary story built on the earlier fame of the city; (2) the Israelites actually destroyed Bethel (not Ai), but the twin cities (see Ezra 2:28; and Neh. 7:32) were considered to be the same, or (3) further archaeological evidence will reveal a different site for Ai. Because of the Bible's historical accuracy, many scholars today dismiss the first idea. The second and third proposals, however, will require further archaeological evidence before this dilemma is solved.

Ai's meaning goes far beyond its mysterious location. At Ai, Israel learned they could not take a city known as the ruin if they disobeyed God. Victory did not lie in military strength or wise leadership. It lay in God's presence. Israel also learned they had hope after defeat. Confession of sin and punishment of offenders helped restore God's favor. The victory at Ai (Josh. 8) frightened the other Canaanites (9:3; 10:2) and helped Israel to further victories. Israel learned to live with a punishing as well as a promising God.

Gary C. Huckaby

AIAH (Ā·ī′ ah) Personal name imitating the cry of a hawk, then meaning, "hawk." 1. A son of Zibeon among the clans of Edom descended from Esau (Gen. 36:24). 2. The father of Rizpah, Saul's concubine (2 Sam. 3:7) and grandfather of Miphibosheth (2 Sam. 21:8).

AIATH (Ā·ī′ ath) Alternate spelling of Ai (Isa. 10:28). See Ai.

AIJA (Ā·ī′ jà) Alternate spelling of Ai (Neh. 11:31). See Ai.

AIJALON (Āi′ jà·lŏn) Also spelled Ajalon. Place name meaning, "place of the deer." 1. Town and nearby valley where moon stood still at Joshua's command (Josh. 10:12). Near the Philistine border, south of Beth-horon, Aijalon belonged to Dan, according to tribal allotments (Josh. 19:42); but Dan did not conquer the territory and moved to the north (Judg. 18:1). It was one city in Dan given the Levites (Josh. 21:24). Amorites gained temporary control, but the Joseph tribes subjected them to pay tribute (Judg. 1:34–35). Saul and Jonathan won a battle between Michmash and Aijalon (1 Sam. 14:31). In post-exilic times, the Chronicler knew Aijalon as a city of the tribe of Benjamin which defeated Gath (1 Chron. 8:13). Rehoboam, Solomon's son, had fortified Aijalon (2 Chron. 11:10). King Ahaz (735–715 B.C.) asked for Assyrian help because the Philistines had taken Aijalon and other cities. Thus it was an important military location on Judah's western border. Aijalon is located at modern Yalo about fourteen miles from Jerusalem. 2. Elon, a judge of the tribe of Zebulon was buried in a northern Aijalon (Judg. 12:12), whose location may be at Tell et-Butmeh.

AIJELETH SHAHAR (Āi′ jē·lĕth shā′ här) Musical direction in title of Psalm 22, literally, "doe of the dawn." May be name of musical tune.

AIN (Ā′ ĭn) Place meaning, "eye" or "water spring." Often used as first part of a place name indicating the presence of a water source. English often uses "En" as first part of such names. See Endor, for example. 1. Place on eastern border of Canaan (Num. 34:11). Location is uncertain. 2. City of southern Judah (Josh. 15:32) belonging to Simeon (Josh. 19:7) but assigned as homestead for the Levites, who had no land allotted (Josh. 21:16), if this is not read Ashan as in some manuscripts of Joshua and in 1 Chronicles 6:59.

AIR Space beneath the sky according to the human sense description of the universe Bible writers used. English versions translate Hebrew ruach, "wind, breath, spirit," as "air" in Job 41:16 to describe empty space between objects on earth. Compare Jeremiah 14:6 (NAS, RSV). The birds fly in the air (Matt. 6:26). Mourners throw dust into the air (Acts 23:23). Inept boxers hit the air instead of opponents (1 Cor. 9:26). Speaking in tongues without an interpreter is vainly speaking in the air with no one understanding (1 Cor. 14:9). More theologically and symbolically, Ephesians 2:2 mentions the "prince of the power of the air," showing Satan's power to tempt and rule people here below but his lack of power in heaven. At the second coming those still alive will be caught up with those being resurrected to meet the Lord Jesus in the air (1 Thess. 4:17). The fifth angel of Revelation opens the bottomless pit, which is so dominated by fire that its smoke thus released darkened the sun and the air (Rev. 9:2). The seventh angel poured destruction into the air, thus on earth, from his vial (Rev. 16:17).

AJAH (Ā′ jah) KJV spelling of Aiah (Gen. 36:24). See Aiah.

AJALON Variant spelling of Aijalon. See Aijalon.

AKAN (Ā′ kan) Personal name of uncertain meaning. An official of Edom of Horite ancestors (Gen. 36:27). Spelled Jakan in 1 Chronicles 1:42.

AKELDAMA NIV, RSV, TEV spelling of Aceldama. See Aceldama.

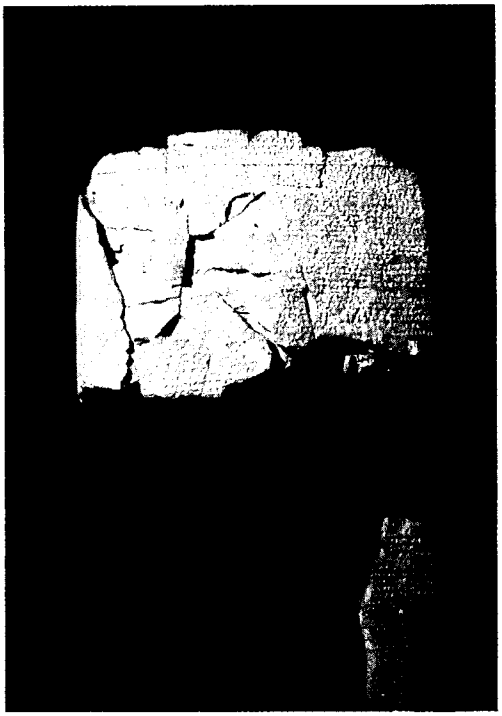
AKHENATON (Äkh′ ĕn·ä′ tŏn) Egyptian Pharaoh (1370–1353 B.C.) Originally named Amenhotep IV, he made a radical religious switch from worshiping Amon to serving Aton, the sun disc. Often referred to as the first monotheist, he probably did not go so far as denying the existence of all other gods. Later Egyptian writers called him blasphemer and criminal. He married the famous Nefertiti, known for her beauty, and was succeeded by his son-in-law Tutankhaten, known today as King Tut. He moved his capital northwards from Thebes to Akhentaton at Tell El-Amarna. During his reign he received the reports and requests from city-state rulers in Palestine that archaeologists call the Amarna letters. These show the lack of unity and harmony in Palestine which Joshua found when he entered to conquer Palestine. Gary C. Huckabay

Statue of Pharaoh Akhenaton.

Painted floor of Pharaoh Akhenaton's summer palace.

AKIM NIV spelling of Achim.

AKKAD NIV spelling of Accad.



AKKADIAN describes the first known Semitic invaders of Mesopotamia and the language they spoke. Also spelled Accadians.

The Akkadians, under Sargon the Great, conquered Mesopotamia and established the first true empire in world history (2360–2180 BC). Their ancient capital Akkad, (Agade), is mentioned in Genesis 10:10 as one of the cities of Shinar (Mesopotamia).

Akkadian is also the ancient name of the Semitic language used in the cuneiform inscriptions and documents modern archaeologists have discovered. The earliest inscriptions in Old Akkadian date from about 2400–2000 B.C. Two main dialects evolved, Babylonian and Assyrian. These dialects are conveniently outlined in three phases: Old Babylonian and Old Assyrian, about 2000–1500 B.C., Middle Babylonian and Middle Assyrian, about 1500–1000 B.C., and Neo-Babylonian, about 1000–100 B.C., and Neo-Assyrian, about 1000–600 B.C. After about 600 B.C. Akkadian was increasingly replaced by Aramaic.

Akkadian is commonly classified as East Semitic to distinguish it from Northwest Semitic (Amorite, Ugaritic, Hebrew, etc.) and Southwest Semitic (Arabic, Ethiopic). Akkadian was the international language of diplomacy and commerce in the Near East before 1000 B.C. Consequently, collections of documents written in Akkadian originated among several non-Akkadian speaking national and ethnic groups. Examples include the Amarna Tablets of Palestinian rulers addressed to Egypt, Akkadian documents from Ugarit in Syria, and the Nuzi Tablets from a Hurrian people.

A

The Treaty of Kadesh, between the Hittites and Egypt, is inscribed on this tablet in Akkadian.

Akkadian studies have had a profound effect on Old Testament studies in at least four areas. First, the meanings of many Hebrew words have been determined or clarified by Akkadian cognates. Second, the literary (poetic) texts and legal texts have provided a rich source for comparative study of Old Testament poetry and law texts. Third, historical annals and international treaties provide the wider framework for understanding biblical events and sometimes mention events and persons known also from the Bible. Fourth, the Akkadian mythico-religious texts have included accounts of creation and flood, as well as prophetic oracles, curses and blessings, and prayers, which provide a basis for understanding both the common Semitic heritage and the uniqueness of Israel's faith. See also Cuneiform.

Thomas Smothers

AKKUB (Ăk' kŭb) Personal name possibly meaning, "protector," or "protected one." 1. Descendant of Solomon in post-exilic Judah about 420 B.C. (1 Chron 3:24). 2. Gatekeeper of the Temple after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 9:17; Ezra 2:42; Neh. 7:45; 11:19). They were Levites (Neh. 12:25). Since "the children of Akkub" are mentioned (Neh. 7:45), the family apparently served for several generations, with more than one person in the family line named Akkub. 3. A Levite who helped Ezra teach the Law to God's returned people (Neh. 8:7). He may have been related to 2. 4. The head of another family of Temple staff personnel (Ezra 2:45).

AKRABBIM (Ăk·rab' bĭm) Place name meaning, "scorpions." The "ascent of Akrabbim" lies southwest of the Dead Sea forming the southern border of Canaan (Num. 34:4; Josh. 15:3; Judg. 1:36). It is a mountain pass on the road southeast of Beersheba, today called Neqb es-Safa. Recent study has found the Scorpion Pass mentioned in other Near Eastern literature.

ALABASTER See Metals and Minerals.

ALAMETH (Ălă·měth) KJV spelling of Alemeth (1 Chron. 7:8). See Alemeth.

ALAMMELECH (Ă·lăm' mĕ·lĕch) KJV spelling of Allammelech. See Allammelech.

ALAMOTH (Ăl' ă·môth) Musical notation meaning literally "upon or according to young woman." This apparently signifies a tune for a high voice, a song for a soprano (1 Chron. 15:20; Ps. 46 title).

ALARM A signal given by shouting or playing an instrument. The Hebrew term (terû'ah) means literally a shout, but musical instruments were used as the trumpets of Numbers 10:1–10. The alarm called the wilderness community to march (Num. 10:5–6). The alarm was a special, unspecified, sound of the trumpets, for they could be blown without sounding the alarm to march (10:7). The alarm called later Israel to battle (10:9) and reminded them of God's presence with their armies. Compare 31:6. The alarm is sounded against the enemy of God's people (2 Chron. 13:12). Joshua 6 describes a different alarm system. The priests march with horns, instruments distinct from trumpets, and the people shout a great shout or alarm (terû'ah) before God's miraculous act. The trumpet could also sound the alarm on a great religious day (Lev. 25:9), and Israel could raise a shout of joy (1 Sam. 4:5). The alarm did not always bring joy. The alarm announcing the enemy coming in war brought shock, sadness, and fear (Jer. 4:19; Hos. 5:8). The greatest fear should come, however, when God sounds the alarm for His day (Joel 2:1).

ALEMETH (Ăl' ă·meth) Place and personal name meaning, "concealed" or "dark." 1. A city set aside for the Levites from Benjamin's allotment (1 Chron. 6:60). Known as Almon in Joshua 21:18. 2. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 3. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:36).

ALEXANDER THE GREAT (Ăl·ĕx·ăn' dĕr) succeeded his father as king of Macedonia and quickly conquered the Persian empire.

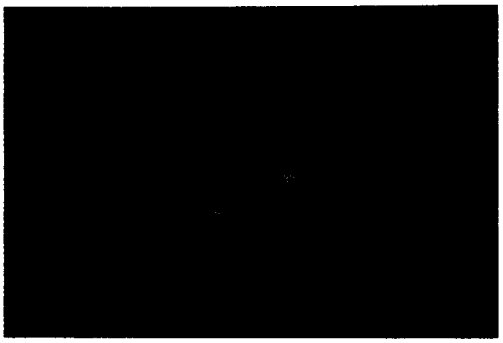
Alexander the Great (356–323 B.C.) was one of the greatest military leaders in history. His father was Phillip of Macedon, king of a region of Greece known as Macedonia.

When Alexander was twenty years old (336 B.C.), his father was killed, and Alexander became king. This ambitious young king immediately began to make plans to conquer Persia. Persia had extended its empire to Asia Minor (modern-day Turkey). In 334 B.C., Alexander led his troops into Asia Minor where they won a series of victories over the Persians.

Alexander the Great continued his victorious military march into Syria and Egypt. From victories there, he led his troops into Persia, Media, and as far east as northern India. He returned to Babylon, where he died in 323 B.C. at the age of thirty-three.

Alexander's most lasting legacy was his spread of Greek culture. Everywhere he went, he tried to instill that culture. While Alexander is never directly named in the Bible, the culture which he brought to Palestine greatly affected the biblical world, especially during the time between the writing of the Old and New Testaments. His empire is one element of the historical background of Daniel. See Greece, Religion and Society of and Alexandria. Lynn Jones

Alexander the Great depicted in the famous "Battle of Issus" mosaic from Roman times.



ALEXANDER (Ăl·ĕx·ăn' dĕr) names five New Testament men including the son of Simon of Cyrene (Mark 15:21), a relative of Annas (Acts 4:6), a Jew of Ephesus (Acts 19:33), a false teacher (1 Tim. 1:19–20), and a coppersmith (2 Tim. 4:14).

ALEXANDRIA (Ăl·ĕx·ăn' drĭ·ȧ) The capital of Egypt from 330 B.C., founded by Alexander the Great as an outstanding Greek cultural and academic center.

Alexandria was designed to act as the principal port of Egypt located on the western edge of the Nile delta. Built on a peninsula, it separated the Mediterranean Sea and Lake Mareotis. A causeway (Heptastadion, or "seven stadia") connected the peninsula with Pharos Island and divided the harbor. The Pharos lighthouse was visible for miles at a height of over 400 feet and is remembered today as one of the seven wonders of the world.

The city was divided into sections with a substantial Jewish quarter, the Royal area, the Neapolis, and a necropolis to the far west. The city was known for its cultural and academic pursuits. The finest library in the ancient world with over 500,000 volumes attracted many scholars. The Mouseion (Museum) complimented the library as the center of worship for the Muses, goddesses of "music," dancing, and letters. It became the most important center of Judaism outside of Jerusalem.

Carved wall inside the catacombs of Alexandria, Egypt.

Jewish rabbis gathered in Alexandria to produce the Septuagint (LXX), the Greek translation of the Old Testament. Greek philosophers and mathematicians such as Euclid, Aristarchus, and Eratosthenes worked here. Octavian incorporated it into the Roman empire about 30 B.C. It quickly became second in importance to Rome. Its importance declined about 100 A.D.

The educated Jews of Alexandria contended with Stephen (Acts 6:9). Apollos, the great Christian orator, came from Alexandria (Acts 18:24), and Paul rode the ships of that port (Acts 27:6; 28:11). Although the Christians suffered persecution there, they produced a school with such notables as Clement and Origen in leadership. The school was noted for its allegorical approach to Scripture. Gary C. Huckabay ALGUM A rare wood Solomon imported from Lebanon for the Temple (2 Chron. 2:8). The exact type of wood is not known. 1 Kings 10:11–12 refers to almug wood imported from Ophir (compare 2 Chron. 9:10–11). The rare wood was used for gateways and for musical instruments.

ALIAH (Ă·lī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "height." A leader of Edom (1 Chron. 1:51), known in Genesis 36:40 as Alvah.

ALIAN (Ā·lī′ an) Personal name meaning, "high one." A descendant of Esau and thus an Edomite (1 Chron. 1:40). Known in Genesis 36:23 as Alvan.

ALIEN A foreigner living in a community without relatives. People fleeing famine became aliens among the people where they settled. Thus Elijah was an alien in the home of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kings 17:20; "to sojourn" is to be an alien). Isaac was an alien with Abimelech, the Philistine king (Gen. 26:3). War leaves refugees who become aliens (Isa. 16:4). Compare 2 Samuel 4:3. Levites, priests not given inheritance, are aliens (Deut. 18:6). Accidents or crime could cause a person to leave home and become an alien. An alien stood between a person born in the community and a foreigner without any ties to the community. The alien could become a soldier, as did the Amalekite who killed Saul (2 Sam. 1:13). David gathered aliens to build God's house (1 Chron. 22:2). As an alien in Sodom, Lot owned a house (Gen. 19:9). The patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob) were aliens in Canaan, but owned large material resources (Gen. 20:1; 26:3; 32:5). The alien could worship God and was supposed to keep the sabbath (Ex. 23:12; Deut. 31:12). Israel had a special place for aliens, because Israel began history in Egypt as aliens (Ex. 23:9). Special laws provided food and clothing for aliens (Deut. 24:19–20; 26:12). Aliens had rights in the courtroom (Deut. 24:17; 27:19). The ritual expectations of the alien are not always clear (Deut. 14:21; Lev. 17:15). God loves aliens (Deut. 10:19). They may observe Passover just as any Israelite (Num. 9:14) and offer sacrifices (Lev. 17:8). They should obey sexual laws (Lev. 18:26). Unexpectedly, the prophets have little to say about aliens. See Jeremiah 7:6; 22:3; Ezekiel 22:7,29. Jeremiah does lament that God appears to be an alien (Jer. 14:8). The psalmist saw all people as aliens on earth (39:13; 119:19). God owns the land (Lev. 25:23). See Stranger.

Alexandria, Egypt. The ruins of the famous ancient library can be seen in the background.

ALLAMMELECH (Ăl·lăm′ mĕ·lĕch) Place name meaning, "king's oak," or "royal holy tree." Border town of Asher (Josh. 19:26) whose specific location is not known.

ALLEGORY is a means of presenting or interpreting a story by focusing on hidden or symbolic meanings rather than the literal meaning.

Background Allegory arose from the Cynic and Stoic philosophies of the Hellenistic period (fourth to second centuries B.C.). As a general phenomenon, allegorical interpretation is adopted when sacred traditions are challenged by advances in knowledge and thought. When no longer able to interpret the traditions historically, and being unwilling to discard the traditions themselves, followers of the traditions probe for deeper, symbolic meanings. In the Greek world allegory was used primarily to interpret the Homeric myths and to preserve some moral and philosophical truths from them.

Old Testament Allegory Scholars generally agree that none of the Old Testament was written allegorically. Portions of it have been interpreted allegorically by later generations. For example, interpreting the Song of Solomon as an allegory of God's love for Israel rather than as a collection of romantic love songs may have played a role in the acceptance of that book into the Old Testament canon.

Allegorical interpretation of the Old Testament arose among Hellenistic Jews in Alexandria during the second century B.C. Philo, who died about A.D. 50, was its most prolific proponent. Philo sought to preserve Old Testament traditions against Greek perspectives in science and philosophy. He applied allegory to many portions of the Old Testament where the biblical views seemed to contradict contemporary secular understandings. Jewish proponents of allegory, however, never abandoned the historical meaning of their traditions to the extent that Greek proponents did.

Jewish interpreters in Palestine were less influenced by allegorical approaches. Their allegories were less complex and remained closer to the literal meaning. The rabbis placed more emphasis on extracting legal prescriptions from the traditions, while other interpreters were more attracted to viewing the Old Testament in terms of prophecies to be fulfilled.

New Testament New Testament writers have more in common with the approaches of Palestinian Jewish interpreters of the Old Testament than with Hellenistic interpreters like Philo. Allegory is not widely used in the New Testament; and when it is employed, it does not depart far from the literal meaning. A strong prophetic-fulfillment interpretation of the Old Testament also is evident.

While Jesus never made allegorical interpretations of the Old Testament, some of His parables were interpreted as allegories. The parable of the soils (Mark 4:1–20) and the parable of the tares (Matt. 13:24–30,36–43) are prime examples. Other parables draw on obvious Old Testament images (such as the vineyard representing Israel). In general, however, parables are to be distinguished from allegories because of their simplicity, sharp focus, and direct imagery. Contemporary scholarship generally prefers the plain and obvious point of the parable over the veiled and obscure meanings that often characterize allegories.

Paul employed allegorical interpretations on four occasions (1 Cor. 5:6–8; 9:8–10; 10:1–11; Gal. 4:21–31), once employing the word allegory itself (Gal. 4:24). Paul's allegories generally are restrained and focus on contemporary application.

First Corinthians 5:6–8 is not so much an interpretation of the Old Testament as it is the use of an Old Testament image that finds fulfillment in the sacrifice of Christ, our Passover. 1 Corinthians 10:1–11 draws heavily on the fulfillment that "followed" the Old Testament people in the person of Christ. These approaches are not far from Matthew's citations of Old Testament testimonies about Christ. They bear more resemblance to prophetic fulfillment than to allegory.

On the other hand, 1 Cor. 9:8–10 departs completely from the literal meaning of the law as it applied to muzzling oxen; and Gal. 4:21–31 is a thorough allegorization of the Old Testament. The writer of Hebrews followed in that same spirit in dealing with Old Testament themes like Melchizedek, the Old Testament priesthood, and the tabernacle. Michael Fink

ALLELUIA KJV spelling of Hallelujah in New Testament. See Hallelujah.

ALLEMETH (Ăl′ lē·mĕth) Variant spelling of Alemeth in some English translations (1 Chron. 6:60). See Alemeth.

ALLIANCE See Covenant.

ALLON (Āl′ lŏn) Personal name meaning, "oak." Leader of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:37).

ALLONBACHUTH (Ăl′ lŏn-băch′ ŭth) or ALLONBACUTH Place name meaning, "oak of weeping." Burial place near Bethel of Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8).

ALLOTMENT describes the Old Testament concept of land allocation either by God or by lot.

The allotment of the land of Canaan to the tribes of Israel is recorded in Numbers 32 and Joshua 13–19. God directed the process through the lot of the priest (Josh. 14:1–2). See Lots. The tribes of Reuben and Gad, along with half the tribe of Manasseh, requested land east of the Jordan (Num. 32:33).

Ezekial 48 also contains a version of the allotment of the land for the Jews after the Exile, revised so that each tribe received an equal share.

Ronald E. Bishop

ALMIGHTY Title of God, translating Hebrew El Shaddai. The early Greek translation introduced Almighty as one of several translations. Recent study has tended to see "The Mountain One" as the most likely original meaning. The name was particularly related to Abraham and the patriarchs (Gen. 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 49:25). God gave Moses the name Yahweh, which to an extent replaced El Shaddai (Ex. 6:3). Job is the only book to use El Shaddai extensively, 31 times in all. Paul used Almighty once at the end of a series of Old Testament quotations to imitate Old Testament style and to underline divine power to bring His word to fulfillment. Revelation refers to God nine times as "Almighty," again giving a feeling of power to the vision of Revelation.

ALMODAD (Ăl·mō′ dăd) Personal name meaning, "God is a friend." Grandson of Eber and ancestor of Arabian tribes (Gen. 10:25–26).

ALMON (Ăl′ mŏn) Place name meaning, "darkness" or "hidden," or "small road sign." City given to Levites from tribe of Benjamin, called Alemeth in 1 Chronicles 6:60. The site is probably modern khirbet Almit.

ALMOND A large, nut-bearing tree and the nuts it bears. Noted as the first tree to bloom (January) and for its pretty white or pink blossoms. Jacob used the almond (KJV, "hazel") as a breeding device to increase his herds (Gen. 30:37). Jacob sent almonds as one of the best fruits of the land to satisfy the Egyptian ruler (Gen. 43:11). The bowls for the tabernacle had almond-shaped decorations (Ex. 25:33–34). Aaron's rod miraculously produced ripe almonds, showing he and his tribe were the only chosen priests (Num. 17:8). The early-appearing white bloom of the almond apparently serves as a picture of the early-graying of a person's hair, pointing the writer of Ecclesiastes to the certainty of death (Eccl. 12:5). The early blossom meant for Jeremiah that the almond watched for spring and gave the prophet a word-play on the almond (Hebrew, shaqed) and his task to watch (Hebrew, shoqed) (Jer. 1:11).

ALMON-DIBLATHAIM (Ăl′ mŏn-dĭb·lă·thā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "road sign of the two figs." A stopping place near the end of the wilderness wandering near Mount Nebo (Num. 33:46–47). It may be the same as Beth-Diblathaim in Jeremiah 48:22. Location may be modern Deleilat el-Gharbiyeh which looks over three roadways.

ALMS Gifts for the poor.

Old Testament Although the Hebrew language apparently had no technical term to refer to "alms" or "almsgiving," the practice of charitable giving, especially to the poor, became a very important belief and practice within Judaism. The Old Testament taught the practice of benevolent concern for those in need. Israel's ideal was a time when no one was poor (Deut. 15:4). Every three years, for example, the tithe of the produce of the year was to be brought to the towns and made available to the Levites, the aliens in the land, the orphans, and the widows (Deut. 14:28–29). Every seventh year all debts were to be cancelled among the Israelites (Deut. 15:1–3), and the fields were to lie fallow so that the needy of the people might eat (Ex.. 23:10–11). In addition, the law instructed Israel to give generously to the needs of their Hebrew neighbors (Deut. 15:7–11). Such charitable giving was not a grudging chore nor a loan for repayment. Failure to comply would be sin (Deut. 15:9–10). Israel showed concern for the needy by not harvesting the corners of fields and by leaving the gleanings so the needy and the stranger might gather what remained (Lev. 19:9–10; 23:22; Deut. 24:19–22).

New Testament The New Testament regards alms as an expression of a righteous life. The technical term for alms (Greek, eleēmosunē) occurs thirteen times in the New Testament. This does not include Matthew 6:1, where the preferred reading is "righteousness" (NAS, NIV) instead of "alms" (KJV). By the first century A.D. righteousness and alms were synonymous in Judaism. Although Jesus criticized acts of charity done for the notice of men (Matt. 6:2–3), He expected

His disciples to perform such deeds (Matt. 6:4) and even commanded them (Luke 11:41; 12:33). Alms could refer to a gift donated to the needy (Acts 3:2–3,10) or to acts of charity in general (Acts 9:36; 10:2,4,31; 24:17).

The principle of deeds of mercy performed in behalf of the needy receives emphatic significance in the New Testament, since such actions are ultimately performed in behalf of the Lord (Matt. 25:34–45). Early Christians voluntarily sold their possessions and shared all things in common to alleviate suffering and need within the church (Acts 2:44–46; 4:32–35). Much of Paul's later ministry involved the supervision and collection of a contribution for the needy Christians in Jerusalem (Rom. 15:25–28; 1 Cor. 16:1–4; 2 Cor. 8—9). According to James 1:27, pure and undefiled religion consists, at least partially, in assisting orphans and widows in their distress. John also presented charitable giving as evidence of one's relationship to God (1 John 3:17–18). See Aliens; Mercy; Hospitality; and Stewardship.

Barry Morgan

ALMUG See Algum.

ALOE A large tree grown in India and China, producing resin and oil used in making perfumes. Balaam used the beauty of the aloe tree to describe the beauty of Israel's camp as he blessed them (Num. 24:6). The aloe perfume gave aroma to the king's garment as he was married (Ps. 45:8). Aloe also perfumed the harlot's bed (Prov. 7:17). The beloved's garden includes aloe (Song of Sol. 4:14). Nicodemus brought aloe with myrrh to perfume Jesus' body for burial (John 19:39).

ALOTH (Ā′ lŏth) Place name meaning, "the height" if not read Bealoth (NAS, RSV), "feminine baals." Center of activity for Baanah, one of Solomon's twelve district supervisors (1 Kings 4:16).

ALPHA AND OMEGA are the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet and are used in Revelation to describe God or Christ (Rev. 1:8,17; 21:6; 22:13.) "Alpha and omega" refers to God's sovereignty and eternal nature. God and Christ are "the beginning and the end, the first and last." (Rev. 22:13). Thus they control all history and all humans of all generations.

ALPHAEUS (Ăl·phāe′ ŭs) or ALPHEUS Personal name. 1. Father of apostle called James the Less to distinguish him from James, the son of Zebedee and brother of John (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13). Mark 15:40 says James' mother, Mary, was with Jesus' mother at the cross. John 19:25 says Mary the wife of Cleophas was at the cross. This would seem to indicate that Cleophas and Alphaeus are two names for the same person. Many Bible students accept this. Others think the language problems between Greek and Hebrew make the equation impossible so that two different Marys are meant. Some want to equate Alphaeus, Cleophas, and the Cleopas of Luke 24:18. 2. The father of the apostle Levi (Mark 2:14). Comparison of Matthew 9:9 and Luke 5:27 would indicate Levi was also called Matthew.

ALTAR is a structure used in worship as the place for presenting sacrifices to God or gods.

Old Testament The Hebrew word for altar that is used most frequently in the Old Testament is formed from the verb for slaughter and means literally, "slaughter place." Altars were used primarily as places of sacrifice, especially animal sacrifice.

While animals were a common sacrifice in the Old Testament, altars were also used to sacrifice grain, fruit, wine, and incense. The grain and fruit sacrifices were offered as a tithe of the harvest or as representative first fruits of the harvest. They were presented in baskets to the priest who set the basket before the altar (Deut. 26:2–4). Wine was offered along with animal and bread sacrifices. Incense was burned on altars to purify after slaughterings and to please God with sweet fragrance.

Canaanite altar at Hazor in the Galilee area of northern Israel.

"Altar" is distinct from "temple." Whereas temple implies a building or roofed structure, altar implies an open structure. Altar and temple were often adjacent, though not all altars had a temple adjacent. The reference to Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22) may indicate that the animal to be sacrificed was placed on the altar alive, but bound, and slaughtered on the altar. Such may have been the earliest practice. By the time of the Levitical laws, the animal was slaughtered in front of the altar, dismembered, and only the fatty portions to be burned were placed on the altar (for example, Lev. 1:2–9).

In the Old Testament, altars are distinguished by the material used in their construction. The simplest altars, and perhaps oldest, were the earthen altars (Ex. 20:24). This type altar was made of either mud-brick or a raised roughly shaped mound of dirt. Mud-brick was a common building material in Mesopotamia, so mud-brick altars would have appeared most likely in Mesopotamia. An earthen altar would not have been very practical for permanently settled people, for the rainy season each year would damage or destroy the altar. This type altar might be more indicative of a nomadic people who move regularly and are less concerned with the need for a permanent altar. It might also reflect the Mesopotamian ancestry of the Hebrews, since the mud-brick was the typical building material there.

A

The stone altar is the most commonly mentioned altar in biblical records and the most frequently found in excavations from Palestine. A single large stone could serve as an altar (Judg. 6:19–23; 13:19–20; 1 Sam. 14:31–35). Similarly, unhewn stones could be carefully stacked to form an altar (Ex. 20:25, 1 Kings 18:30–35). Such stone altars were probably the most common form of altar prior to the building of the Solomonic Temple. A number of examples of stone altars have been excavated in Palestine. The sanctuary at Arad, belonging to the period of the Divided Monarchy (900 B.C. to 600 B.C.) had such a stone altar. The Hebrew stone altars were not to have steps (Ex. 20:25–26), probably in part to distinguish them from Canaanite altars which did have steps. A striking circular Canaanite altar dating from 2500 B.C. to 1800 B.C. was excavated at Megiddo. It was 25 feet in diameter and 4½ feet high. Four steps led up to the top of the altar. Apparently in later times, the requirement forbidding steps on Hebrew altars was not enforced, for in Ezekiel's vision of the restored Temple, the altar has three levels and many steps.

Other stone altars have been escavated in Palestine. One from Beersheba, belonging also to the period of the Divided Monarchy, was of large hewn stones and had, when reassembled, horns on the four corners (Ex. 27:2; 1 Kings 1:50). Apparently the Exodus restrictions concerning unhewn stones, like those concerning steps, were not consistently followed throughout the Old Testament period.

The third type altar mentioned in the Old Testament is the bronze altar. The central altar in the court of Solomon's temple was a bronze altar. Its dimensions are given as 20 cubits by 20 cubits by 10 cubits high (about 30 feet square and 15 feet high) [2 Chron. 4:1]. Yet is is unclear whether the entire altar was made of bronze, or if it had a bronze overlay on a stone altar. It is also possible that the bronze portion was a grate set on top of the otherwise stone altar (Ex. 27:4). This altar is regularly known as the altar of burnt offering. The earlier tabernacle had a similar altar made of acacia (or shittim, KJV) wood overlaid with bronze (Ex. 27:1–2). The tabernacle altar was smaller, only 5 cubits square and 3 cubits high. The location of the altar of burnt offering of the tabernacle and Solomon's Temple is not given specifically. It is located "at" or "before" the door of the Tent of

The summit of Mount Carmel where Elijah's altar to God and the altar of the priests of Baal were built.

The Moslem Dome of the Rock built over the rock said to be the altar of Abraham's near sacrifice of Isaac and also built upon the site of Solomon's Temple.

Meeting, which is also the place sacrificial animals are slaughtered. Generally reconstructions of the tabernacle and Temple locate the altar in the center of the courtyard, but the text seems to favor a location near the entrance of the tabernacle/Temple structure. The rationale was probably to locate the altar as close as possible to the focal point of God's presence, near the ark itself.

Ezekiel's vision of the restored Temple had the altar of burnt offering located in the center of the courtyard. Although the dimensions are not fully given in the text, it seems that this altar was approximately 18 cubits square and 12 cubits high (Ezek. 43:13–17). Ezekiel's altar had three superimposed levels, each slightly smaller than the preceding, and had steps from the east leading up to the top.

Both the altar of the tabernacle and that of Ezekiel are described as having horns. It is likely that the altar of burnt offering in Solomon's Temple also had horns. The stone altar found at Beersheba has such horns preserved. Apparently grasping the horns of the altar was a way of seeking sanctuary or protection when one was charged with a serious offense (1 Kings 1:50–51; 2:28–34; compare Ex. 21:12–14). More importantly, the horns of the altar were the place where blood from a sacrificial animal was applied for atonement from sin (for example, Ex. 29:12; Lev. 4:7). Jeremiah graphically described the people's sin as being so severe that they were engraved on the horns of the altar (Jer. 17:1). During certain festivals a sacred procession led into the Temple and up to the horns of the altar (Ps. 118:27). Probably this procession carried the chosen animal sacrifice to atone for the people's sin and ended at the place of sacrifice.

During the reign of Ahaz, the bronze altar or altar of burnt offering in Solomon's Temple was displaced by an altar that Ahaz had built on a Syrian model (2 Kings 16:10–16). This altar was apparently larger than the bronze altar of Solomon and was placed in the central position in the courtyard to be the main altar of sacrifice.

No biblical description exists for the altar of burnt offering from the Second Temple. However, such an altar was constructed even before the Temple was rebuilt (Ezra 3:2). Josephus described the altar in the rebuilt Temple of Herod. He wrote that the altar was fifty cubits square and fifteen cubits high with a ramp leading to the top. This altar would have been much larger than the earlier ones.

A fourth type of altar mentioned in the Bible is the gold altar or altar of incense. It was located in the inner room of the sanctuary, just outside the holy of holies (1 Kings 7:48–50). The incense altar is described in Exodus as constructed of acacia wood, overlaid with gold, with dimensions one cubit square and two cubits high (Ex. 30:1–6). Like the altar of burnt offering, the altar of incense had horns on the four corners. As its name implies, incense was burned on this altar. The incense served as a means of purification after slaughtering animals, a costly sacrifice, and also as a sweet smelling offering that would be pleasing to God.

Another Hebrew word for altar that is used infrequently in the Old Testament means literally, "high place" (Hebrew, bamah). Such "high places" were probably raised platforms at which sacrifices and other rites took place. The "high place" may have been itself a kind of altar, though this is not certain. The circular Canaanite altar mentioned above may be an example of a "high place," an elevated place of sacrifice and worship.

New Testament The Greek word used for altar literally translates "place of sacrifice." New Testament references to altars concern proper worship (Matt 5:23–24) and hypocrisy in worship (Matt. 23:18–20). The altar of incense described in the Old Testament (Ex. 30:1–6) is mentioned in Luke (Luke 1:11). Several New Testament references to altars refer back to Old Testament altar events (Rom. 11:3; Jas. 2:21). In Revelation, John described a golden altar (Rev. 9:13) that, like the Old Testament bronze altar, had horns.

While direct references to altar and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ are few in the New Testament (Rom. 13:10), the message that Jesus Christ is the ultimate sacrifice who puts us right with God is the theme of the New Testament.

Fragments of what was probably an altar base unearthed at the high place at Lachish in Israel.

Theological Significance Altars in the Bible were places of sacrifice. Beyond that function, altars also were places of God's presence. The patriarchal narratives regularly record the building of an altar at the site of a theophany, a place where God had appeared to an individual (Gen. 12:7; 26:24–25). It was quite natural to build an altar and commemorate the appearance of God with a sacrifice. If God had once appeared at a site, that would be a good location for Him to appear again. Thus sacrifices would be offered there with the feeling that God was present and would accept the offering. With the building of the Solomonic Temple, the presence of God was associated especially with the ark of the covenant. The altar of burnt offering then came to signify more of a sense of reconciliation or mediation. The worshiper brought a sacrifice to the altar where it was burned and thereby given to God. The acceptance of the offerings by the priest symbolized God's acceptance, manifest in blessings (Ex. 20:24) and covenant renewal. Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

ALTASHHETH (Ăl·tăsh′ hĕth) (NAS) or ALTASCHITH (KJV). Word in Psalm title (Pss. 57; 58; 59; 75) transliterated letter for letter from Hebrew to English by NAS and KJV but translated, "Do not destroy" by NIV and RSV. This may indicate the tune to which the people sang the Psalm.

ALUSH (Ā′ lŭsh) Wilderness camping place not far from Red Sea (Num. 33:13–14).

ALVAH (Ăl′ văh) Personal name of leader of Edom. Spelled Aliah in 1 Chronicles 1:51.

ALVAN (Ăl′ văn) Personal name meaning, "high" or "tall." A descendant of Seir (Gen. 36:23), spelled Alian in 1 Chronicles 1:40.

AMAD (Ā′ măd) Place name of unknown meaning. City allotted to tribe of Asher (Josh. 19:26).

AMAL (Ā′ măl) Personal name meaning "worker" or "trouble." Leader of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:35).

AMALEKITE (Ăm′ ā·lĕk·ite) A nomadic tribe of formidable people that first attacked the Israelites after the Exodus at Rephidim. Descendants of Amalek, the grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:12), they inhabited the desolate wasteland of the northeast Sinai peninsula and the Negeb. They were the first to attack Israel after the Exodus (Num. 24:20). Israel won the initial battle (Ex. 17:8–16), but later was driven back into the Sinai wilderness by a coalition of Amalekites and Canaanites (Num. 14:39–45). Thereafter the Amalekites waged a barbaric guerrilla war against Israel (Deut. 25:17–19). Fighting continued after

Israel settled in Canaan. Because of their atrocities, God commanded Saul to exterminate the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:2–3). Saul disobeyed, and the Amalekites were not defeated completely until late in the eighth century B.C. (1 Chron. 4:43). No archaeological data concerning the Amalekites has been discovered to date. See also Exodus and Negeb. LeBron Matthews

AMAM (Ā′ măm) Place name in southern Judah (Josh. 15:26).

AMANA (Å·mā′ nà) Place name meaning, "trusted." Mountain peak in Anti-lebanon mountains where lovers meet and then descend (Song of Sol. 4:8).

AMARIAH (Ăm·à·rī′ ăh) Personal name meaning "Yahweh has spoken." Popular name, especially among priests, after the Exile. Brief biblical comments make it difficult to distinguish the number of separate individuals. The following division is one attempt to separate them. 1. A priest in line of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:7,52; Ezra 7:3. 2. A priest in the high priestly line after Solomon's day (1 Chron. 6:11). 3. A priestly son of Hebron in Moses' line (1 Chron. 23:19; 24:23. 4. The chief priest and highest judge of matters involving religious law under King Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 19:11). 5. Priest under Hezekiah responsible for distributing resources from Jerusalem Temple to priests in priestly cities outside Jerusalem (2 Chron. 31:15). 6. Man with foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:42). 7. Priest who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey the law (Neh. 10:3). 8. Ancestor of a member of tribe of Judah living in Jerusalem during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 11:4). 9. A priest who returned to Jerusalem from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:2). 10. Head of a course of priests in Judah after the Exile (Neh. 12:13). 11. An ancestor of Zephaniah, the prophet (Zeph. 1:1).

AMARNA, TELL EL is a site approximately two hundred miles south of Cairo, Egypt, where, in 1888, clay tablets were found describing the period of history when the Israelites were in bondage in Egypt. Amarna is not mentioned by name in the Bible. Tell el-Amarna lies on the east bank of the Nile River.

Tell el-Amarna is the present location of the ancient Egyptian city Akhenaton. That city was constructed as the new capital of a young Pharaoh, Amenhotep (or Amenophis) IV, who was in power during the mid-fourteenth century B.C.

The letters were primarily diplomatic communications between Egypt and Egyptian-controlled territories, including Syria and Palestine. Rulers of small Palestinian city-states including Shechem, Jerusalem, and Megiddo complain of mistreatment by other rulers and ask for Egyptian aid. These letters evidence the political unrest, disunity, and instability of the period prior to the Hebrew conquest. Hugh Tobias

AMASA (Å·mā′ sà) Personal name meaning, "burden" or "bear a burden." 1. Captain of Judah's army replacing Joab during Absalom's rebellion against his father David (2 Sam. 17:25). He is related to David, but the texts leave some question as to the exact relationship. Abigail was Amasa's mother. His father was either Ithra an Israelite (2 Sam. 17:25) or Jether the Ishmaelite (1 Chron. 2:17). She was sister of Zeruiah, Joab's mother (2 Sam. 17:25) or sister to David and to Zeruiah, Joab's mother (1 Chron. 2:16). When he defeated the rebel forces and Joab murdered Absalom (2 Sam. 18:14), David made peaceful overtones to Judah by inviting Amasa as his relative to assume command of his army (2 Sam. 19:13). When called to battle, Amasa appeared too late (2 Sam. 20:4–5). Joab marched among David's army and cunningly killed Amasa (2 Sam. 20:10). This served as reason for David to advise Solomon to do away with Joab (1 Kings 2:5) and thus reason for Solomon to kill Joab (1 Kings 2:28–34). 2. Leader in tribe of Ephraim who prevented Israel's soldiers from keeping captives of the army of King Ahaz of Judah, knowing this was a sin (2 Chron. 28:12–14).

AMASAI (Å·mā′ saî) Personal name meaning, "burden bearer." 1. A Levite in line of Kohath (1 Chron. 6:25). 2. A Levite in the line of Kohath and of Heman the singer (1 Chron. 6:35), often identified with 1. 3. The chief of David's captains, who received prophetic inspiration from the Spirit (1 Chron. 12:18). Note that he does not appear in 2 Samuel 23. 4. A priest and musician who blew trumpets before the ark of God in David's time (1 Chron. 15:24). 5. Levite, father of Mahath, who helped purify the Temple under Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:12).

AMASHAI (Å·măsh′ aî) or AMASHSAI (NAS, TEV). Personal name of priest after the Exile (Neh. 11:13).

AMASIAH (Ām à sī′ ah) Personal name meaning "Yahweh has borne." One of the captains of Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 17:16).

AMAW (Ăm′ aw) Place name meaning, "his people." Translated "land of children of his people" (KJV) or "his native land" (NIV) or "land of the sons of his people" (NAS) in Numbers 22:5, but translated as place name in RSV, TEV. Place name also appears in Idrim Inscription about 1450 B.C. and in an Egyptian tomb inscription. It was located west of Euphrates River south of Carchemish and included Pethor, the home town of Balaam, the prophet.

AMAZIAH (Ăm·ă·zī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is mighty." 1. A Simeonite (1 Chron. 4:34). 2. A Levite and a descendant of Merari (1 Chron. 6:45). 3. A priest at Bethel who sent Amos the prophet home, saying he did not have the right to prophesy against King Jeroboam II of Israel (789–746 B.C.) in the king's place of worship (Amos 7:10–17).

4. Ninth king of Judah, the son of Joash and father of Uzziah (797–767 B.C.). He was 25 years old when he ascended the throne. He speedily avenged the murder of his father, who had been killed by court servants. Amaziah was uncommonly merciful in his avenging, as he only murdered the guilty servants, not the servants' children (2 Kings 14:5–6).

Among Amaziah's accomplishments, he conscripted an army for Judah, composed of all men age 20 and above. He also hired mercenaries from Israel, but declined to use them at the advice of a "man of God" (1 Chron. 25:7). Amaziah led his army to Seir, where he easily defeated the Edomites, making them again subject to Judah. Yet, he took Edomite idols back to Jerusalem and worshiped them. He then refused to listen to the rebuke and the forecast of doom brought by God's prophet (2 Chron. 25:11–16).

Encouraged by his victory in Edom, Amaziah challenged Joash, king of Israel, to battle. Though Joash tried to avoid a conflict, Amaziah persisted and was defeated at the hands of Israel. The Temple and royal palace were plundered, the wall of Jerusalem was pierced, and Amaziah was taken prisoner. Amaziah survived Joash by fifteen years. Because of a conspiracy against him he fled to Lachish but was murdered there. See: Judah, Kings of; Joash; Uzziah; Jehoaddin (his mother).

Ronald E. Bishop

AMBASSADOR Representative of one royal court to another. According to the KJV, NAS, and NIV reading of Joshua 9:4, the Gibeonites pretended to be official ambassadors from a foreign government as they approached Joshua. Compare NRSV. The king of Babylon sent official ambassadors to learn of Hezekiah's power (2 Chron. 32:31). Pharaoh Necho sent ambassadors to prevent King Josiah of Judah (640–609) from joining in the battle at Megiddo, but Josiah persisted and died (2 Chron. 35:21). Faithful ambassadors bring health to a nation (Prov. 13:17). Isaiah condemned Israel for sending ambassadors to Egypt seeking military aid rather than seeking God's aid (Isa. 30:4). While they suffered before God's announced salvation, the people lamented before God. This included ambassadors who had unsuccessfully worked for peace (Isa. 33:7). Israel consistently relied on ambassadors to foreign lands rather than on Yahweh and His plan (Isa. 57:9). Jeremiah announced that God had prompted an ambassador to call the nations to punish Edom (Jer. 49:14; compare Obad. 1). Ezekiel condemned King Zedekiah (597–586 B.C.) for sending ambassadors to Egypt seeking help in rebelling against Babylon (Ezek. 17:15).

Paul saw himself even in prison as an ambassador sent by the divine King to proclaim salvation through Christ to the world (Eph. 6:20; compare 2 Cor. 5:20).

AMBER (Ăm′ bĕr) A yellowish or brownish translucent resin that takes a good polish. Also translated as gleaming bronze (RSV, but amber in NRSV), glowing metal (NAS, NIV), bronze (TEV, Ezek. 1:4,27; 8:2). Some think that the Greek (Septuagint) and Latin (Vulgate) translations of the Old Testament suggest the substance known as electrum—an amalgam of silver and gold. See Jewelry, Jewels, Precious Stones.

AMBUSH A military tactic of hiding a unit of troops for surprise attack while carrying on normal battle with the remainder of the troops. Joshua used the tactic against Ai (Josh. 8). The people of Shechem waited in hiding to attack and rob people who crossed the mountain (Judg. 9:25; compare Hos. 6:9). Abimelech used ambush to defeat Shechem (Judg. 9:43–45). Israel used ambush to attack Gibeah and the rebellious tribe of Benjamin (Judg. 20:29–43). Saul apparently used similar tactics against the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:5). Jeroboam, king of Israel (926–909 B.C.) tried unsuccessfully to ambush Judah (2 Chron. 13:13). God set ambushes against Moab, Ammon, and Edom to defeat them for King Jehoshaphat (873–848 B.C.). God delivered Ezra from ambush attempts (Ezra 8:31).

The psalmists asked for God's help against wicked persons who sought to ambush them (Ps. 10:8; 59:3; 64:4; compare Prov. 1:11,18). Jeremiah accused his people of spiritual ambush against one another (Jer. 9:8). He also called for ambushes to defeat Babylon (Jer. 51:12). The people of Jerusalem lamented that the enemy had used ambushes to defeat and destroy the city and nation (Lam. 4:19). Paul's nephew saved him from Jewish plans to ambush him as the Roman authorities transferred him from Jerusalem to Caesarea (Acts 23:12–33; compare 25:3).

AMEN is a transliteration of a Hebrew word signifying something as certain, sure and valid, truthful and faithful. It is sometimes translated, "so be it." In the Old Testament it is used to show the acceptance of the validity of a curse or an oath (Num. 5:22; Deut. 27:15–26; Jer. 11:5), to indicate acceptance of a good message (Jer. 28:6), and to join in a doxology in a worship setting to affirm what has been said or prayed (1 Chron. 16:36; Neh. 8:6; Ps. 106:48). "Amen" may confirm what already is, or it may indicate a hope for something desired. In Jewish prayer, "amen" comes at the end as an affirmative response to a statement or wish made by others, and is so used in the New Testament epistles (Rom. 1:25; 11:36; 15:33; 1 Cor. 16:24; Gal. 1:5; Eph. 3:21; Phil. 4:20). Paul ended some of his letters with "amen" (1 Thess. 5:28; 2 Thess. 3:18).

In the gospels, Jesus used "amen" to affirm the truth of His own statements. English translations often use "verily," "truly," "I tell you the truth" to translate Jesus' amen. He never said it at the end of a statement, but always at the beginning: "Amen, I say to you" (Matt. 5:18; 16:28; Mark 8:12; 11:23; Luke 4:24; 21:32; John 1:51; 5:19). In John's Gospel, Jesus said "Amen, amen." That Jesus prefaced His own words with "amen" is especially important, for He affirmed that the kingdom of God is bound up with His own person and emphasized the authority of what He said.

Jesus is called "The Amen" in Revelation 3:14, meaning that He Himself is the reliable and true witness of God. Perhaps the writer had in mind Isaiah 65:16 where the Hebrew says "God of Amen." Roger L. Omanson AMETHYST (Ăm′ ė thyst) A deep purple variety of stone of the aluminum oxide family. Used in the breastplate of the high priest (Ex. 28:19; 39:12) and the twelfth stone in the foundation wall of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20). See Jewelry, Jewels, Precious Stones.

AMI (Ā′ mī) Personal name, meaning uncertain. A servant in the Temple after the Exile belonging to a group called "children of Solomon's servants" (Ezra 2:55–57). Ami is apparently called Amon in Nehemiah 7:59.

AMINADAB (Å·mīn′ å·dăb) KJV spelling in New Testament of Amminadab. See Amminadab.

AMITTAI (Å·mīt′ taî) Personal name meaning, "loyal," "true." Father of the prophet Jonah who lived in Gath-hepher (2 Kings 14:25).

AMIZZABAD. TEV spelling of Ammizabad. See Ammizabad.

AMMAH (Ăm′ mah) Hill near Giah in the territory of Gibeon between Jerusalem and Bethel. There Joab and Abishai pursued Abner after he killed Asahel, their brother (2 Sam. 2:24).

AMMI (Ăm′ mī), meaning "my people," was a name given to Israel by Hosea in contrast to the name Lo-ammi (Hos. 1:9) meaning "not my people." The name Lo-ammi was given to the third child of Gomer, the wife of Hosea the prophet, to pronounce God's rejection of Israel. The name Ammi was the new name to be given the restored Israel in the day of redemption.

AMMIEL (Ăm′ mī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "people of God" or "God is of my people," that is God is my relative. 1. The spy representing the tribe of Dan whom Moses sent to spy out the Promised Land. He was one of ten who brought bad report and led people to refuse to enter the land (Num. 13:12). 2. Father of Machir, in whose house Mephibosheth, son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul, lived after the death of his father and grandfather. The family lived in Lo-debar (2 Sam. 9:4). See 17:27. 3. The father of Bathshua, David's wife (1 Chron. 3:5). 2 Samuel 11:3 speaks of Bathsheba, daughter of Eliam. Many Bible students think these verses are talking about the same person, whose names have been slightly altered in the process of copying the manuscripts. 4. Gatekeeper of Temple whom David appointed (1 Chron. 26:5).

AMMIHUD (Ăm·mī′ hŭd) Personal name meaning, "my people is splendid." 1. Father of Elishama, who represented the tribe of Ephraim to help Moses during the wilderness wandering (Num. 1:10). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (7:48) and led them in marching (10:22). He was Joshua's grandfather (1 Chron. 7:26). 2. Father of Shemuel of the tribe of Simeon, who helped Moses, Eleazar, and Joshua allot the land to the tribes (Num. 34:20). 3. Father of Pedahel of tribe of Naphtali, who helped allot the land (34:28). 4. Father of King of Geshur to whom Absalom fled after he killed his brother Amnon (2 Sam. 13:37). 5. Member of tribe of Judah who returned from Exile (1 Chron. 9:4).

AMMINADAB (Ăm·min′ å·dăb) Personal name meaning, "my people give freely." 1. Aaron's father-in-law (Ex. 6:23). Father of Nahshon, who led tribe of Judah in the wilderness (Num. 1:7). Ancestor of David (Ruth 4:19) and Jesus (Matt. 1:4; Luke 3:33). 2. Son of Kohath in genealogy of Levites (1 Chron. 6:22), but this may be copyist's change for Izhar (Ex. 6:18,21). 3. Head of a family of Levites (1 Chron. 15:10). He helped carry the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:11–29).

AMMI-NADIB (Ăm′ mī·nå′ dĭb) The KJV takes these words as a personal name in Song of Solomon 6:12. Most modern versions express uncertainty about the translation of this verse. Some modern translations translate ammi-nadib as "my noble people" (NAS) or "my people" (NIV), while others translate "my prince" (NRSV) or "chariot driver" (TEV). Some versions (NIV, REB, TEV) take the verse as spoken by the young man. The NRSV takes the words in verse 12 as coming from the maiden who spoke about her fancy (perhaps her imagination) setting her in a chariot beside her prince. Because of the confusion, James Moffatt did not even attempt a translation.

A

AMMISHADDAI (Ăm′ mĭ·shăd′ daĭ) The father of Ahiezer, the leader of the tribe of Dan in the wilderness. (Num. 1:12) The name Ammishaddai means "people of the Almighty."

AMMIZABAD (Ăm′ mĭz′ ə·băd) Personal name meaning, "my people give." Son of Benaiah, one of captains of David's army (1 Chron. 27:6).

AMMONITES Semitic people living northeast of the Dead Sea in the area surrounding Rabbah who often battled with the Israelites for possession of the fertile Gilead. Ammon, the kingdom of the Ammonites, was hardly more than a city-state, consisting of the capital city itself, Rabbah or Rabbath-Ammon ("chief city," or "chief city of the Ammonites") and its immediately surrounding territory. Rabbath was located at the headwaters of the Jabbok river, where the southeastern corner of Gilead gives way to the desert. The agricultural productivity of Gilead, the waters of the Jabbok itself and of associated springs, as well as Rabbah's naturally defendable position, destined Rabbah to be a city of medium importance in ancient times. The proximity of the Ammonites to Gilead likewise destined them to be constant enemies of the Israelites, who made claims to Gilead and actually controlled it during the reigns of certain strong kings such as David, Omri, Ahab, and Jeroboam II.

Most of our information about the Ammonites comes from the Old Testament, although Ammonite kings are mentioned occasionally in the Assyrian records. We know from the latter, for example, that an Ammonite king named Ba'sha, along with Ahab of Israel and other kings of the region, defended Syria-Palestine against Shalmaneser III in 853 B.C. An Ammonite inscription, the so-called Siran Bottle Inscription and several seals/seal impressions have provided additional information about the Ammonites.

Archaeologists have excavated only a small portion of the site of ancient Rabbah (the so-called "Citadel" in the heart of the modern city of Amman). The surrounding area remains largely unexplored. In addition to the inscription and seals mentioned above, the bust of an Ammonite warrior (or god) and the remains of round stone towers thought to be Ammonite are significant archaeological discoveries shedding light on the Ammonites.

Conflict broke out between the Ammonites and Israelites as early as the time of the Judges. The Ammonites made war on the Israelites of Gilead, leading the Israelites to appeal to Jephthah, chief of a local band of renegade raiders, to organize and lead their resistance. Jephthah accepted the challenge, but only after extracting a promise from the elders of Gilead that, if he indeed succeeded in defeating the Ammonites, they would recognize him as ruler of Gilead. At the same time he vowed to Yahweh that "If thou wilt give the Ammonites into my hand, then whoever comes forth from the doors of my house to meet me, when I return victorious from the Ammonites, shall be the LORD's, and I will offer him up for a burnt offering" (Judg. 11:30b–31). Jephthah was victorious, and the Gileadites submitted to his rule; but then his little daughter greeted him upon his return (Judg. 10:6—11:40).

On another occasion when the Ammonites were attacking the city of Jabesh in Gilead and the Jabeshites attempted to negotiate terms for surrender, the Ammonites demanded nothing less than to put out the right eye of each man in the city. In desperation, the Jabeshites sent messengers to Saul at Gibeah for help. Saul organized an army, hurried to Jabesh, and lifted the siege. Consequently, the Jabeshites were strong supporters of Saul in later years (1 Sam. 11; 31:11–13). The Ammonite king Saul defeated at Jabesh was Nahash. Presumably this was the same Nahash with whom David had good dealings but whose son, Hanun, renewed hostilities (2 Sam. 10—12). The ensuing wars between Israel and Ammon involved warfare between David's troops and those of Hadadezer of Zobah (2 Sam. 10:6–19) and provided the occasion of David's affair with Bathsheba. Uriah, Bathsheba's husband, was killed while storming the walls of Rabbah (2 Sam. 11—12).

No war with the Ammonites is reported during Solomon's reign. On the contrary, Solomon took one or more Ammonite wives and allowed the worship of Milcom, the Ammonite god, in Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:1–8). Presumably the worship of Milcom continued in Jerusalem until it was stamped out by Josiah many years later (2 Kings 23:13). We know little of relations between the Ammonites and either Israel or Judah during the first half century of the separate kingdoms, probably because neither of the Hebrew kingdoms attempted to exercise influence in the Transjordan. The coalition of Syro-Palestinian kings, which included Ba'sha of Ammon and Ahab of Israel, halted the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser's march in 853 B.C. But success was only temporary. Later Shalmaneser penetrated the very heart of Syria-Palestine, exacting tribute from the Israelites and, although it is not recorded, probably also from the Ammonites. Eventually, all the petty kingdoms of the region fell to the Assyrians and either were incorporated into the Assyrian province system or controlled as satellites. Ammonite kings paid tribute to Tiglath-pileser III, Sennacherib, and Esarhaddon.

The Israelites recognized the Ammonites as relatives, although somewhat more distant than the Edomites. This relationship was expressed genealogically. Specifically, the Ammonites were said to have descended from an ancestor named Ben Ammi, one of two sons which Lot bore to his two daughters. The Moabites were said to have descended from the other son (Gen. 19:30–38). The Ammonites also are mentioned from time to time in Israel's poetical literature. See for example Amos' oracle agains the Ammonites in Amos 1:13–15.

Rabbah apparently had dwindled to an insignificant settlement by the third century B.C. when Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285–246) rebuilt the city and renamed it "Philadelphia" after himself. Philadelphia came to be regarded as one of the Decapolis cities, a federation of ten Greek cities in Palestine (Matt. 4:25), and was annexed with the whole Decapolis region to the Roman empire in A.D. 90. Maxwell Miller

AMNON (Ăm′ nŏn) Personal name meaning, "trustworthy, faithful." 1. The firstborn son of King David (2 Sam. 3:2). He raped his half-sister Tamar. Tamar's brother Absalom avenged this outrage by killing Amnon (2 Sam. 13:1–20). This incident marked the beginning of the decline of David's family following his adulterous relationship with Bathsheba and the murder of Uriah. See David. 2. A member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

AMOK (Ā′ mŏk) Personal name meaning, "deep." A priestly family after the return from Exile (Neh. 12:7,20).

AMON (Ā′ mŏn) Personal name meaning, "faithful." 1. Governor of Samaria when Jehoshaphat was king of Judah, who followed orders from the king of Israel and put the prophet Micaiah in prison (1 Kings 22:26). 2. King of Judah (642 B.C.) following his father Manasseh. He followed the infamous idolatry of his father and was killed in a palace revolt (2 Kings 21:19–23). The people of Judah, in turn, killed the rebels. Good King Josiah, Amon's son, succeeded to his throne. See Matt. 1:10. 3. An ancestor of Temple staff members after the Exile (Neh. 7:59), called Ami in Ezra 2:57. 4. Egyptian god whose worship center at Thebes Jeremiah threated with divine destruction (Jer. 46:25). KJV translates "the multitude of No."

AMORITES A people who occupied part of the Promised Land and often fought Israel. Their history goes back before 2000 B.C. They took control of the administration of Babylonia for approximately 400 years (2000–1595), their most influential king being Hammurabi (1792–1750). Their descent to Canaan may be traced back to 2100–1800 when their settlement in the hill country helped to set the stage for the revelation of God through Israel.

Abraham assisted Mamre the Amorite in recovering his land from four powerful kings (Gen. 14), but later the Amorites were a formidable obstacle to the Israelites' conquest and settlement of Canaan. They preferred living in the hills and valleys that flank both sides of the Jordan River. Sihon and Og, two Amorite kings, resisted the Israelites' march to Canaan as they approached east of the Jordan (Nu. 21:21–35); but after the Israelite victory here, Gad, Reuben and half of Manasseh settled in the conquered area. These two early victories over the Amorites foreshadowed continued success against other Amorites to the west and were often remembered in both history (e.g., Deut. 3:8; Josh. 12:2; Judg. 11:19) and poetry (Num. 21:27–30; Ps. 135:10–12; 136:17–22). West of the Jordan, the Amorites lived in the hills along with the Hivites, Hittites, and Jebusites (Num. 13:29; Josh. 11:3); but specific identification of Amorite cities cannot be certain since the term "Amorite" is used often as a very general name for all the inhabitants of Canaan, as is "Canaanite" (e.g. Gen. 15:16; Josh. 24:15; Judg. 6:10; 1 Kings 21:26). Five city-states in south Canaan formed an alliance instigated by the king of Jerusalem (Jebus, Jebusites) and intimidated an ally of Joshua, i.e. Gibeon. These "Amorites," as they are called in the general sense, were defeated by Joshua's army and the Lord's "stones from heaven" (Josh. 10:1–27). Amorites also were among those in the north who unsuccessfully united to repel the Israelites (Josh. 11:1–15). Later, two other Amorite cities, Aijalon and Shaalbim, hindered the settlement of Dan near the Philistine border (Judg. 1:34–36).

Amorite culture laid at the root of Jerusalem's decadence, according to Ezekiel (Ezek. 16:3,45); and Amorite idolatry tainted the religion of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms (1 Kings 21:26; 2 Kings 21:11). Despite the Amorite resistance and poor influence, they were subjugated as slaves (Judg. 1:35; 1 Kings 9:20,21; 2 Chron. 8:7,8). Their past hindrance is a subject of derision for the prophet Amos (Amos 2:9,10). See also Canaanites; Jebusites; Babylon; Syria; Sihon.
Daniel C. Fredericks

AMOS (Ā′ mŏs) Personal name meaning, "a load." 1. A prophet from Judah who ministered in Israel about 750 B.C. One might graphically describe the prophet Amos as a "burden bearer." He carried a heavy burden for his people. Or, from another perspective, his people were a burden he carried.

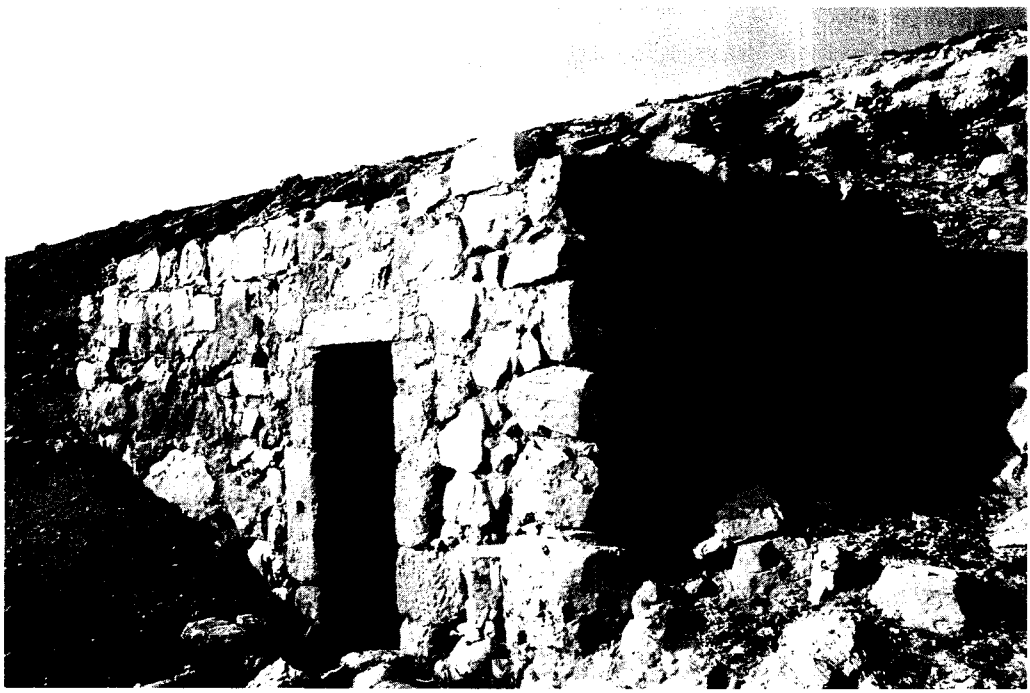
Amos was a layperson who disclaimed professional status as a prophet: "I am no prophet, nor a prophet's son, but I am a herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees, and the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said to me, 'Go, prophesy to my people Israel' " (7:14–15 RSV). Because of God's call, Amos assumed his prophetic responsibilities as a lonely voice prophesying from both the desert and the villages. He indicted both Judah and Israel, challenging the superficial qualities of religious institutions. For

A

Amos, his call and his continuing ministry rested in God's initiative and in His sustaining power: "The lion has roared; who will not fear? The Lord God has spoken; who can but prophesy?' " (3:8 RSV).

Amos lived in a time of relative peace on the international political scene. Both Egypt and Assyria were in a period of decline, although Assyria was beginning to expand its power. Syria had become ineffective, but the reduction of this buffer state between Israel and Assyria was to have serious repercussions in the generation following Amos.

Internally, the political structures of both Israel and Judah were stable. Beginning his prophetic activity during the reign of Jeroboam II in the Northern Kingdom of Israel, Amos lived during an era that rivaled Solomon's generation in its stability and economic prosperity (2 Kings 14:23–27). Yet, it was precisely the social, moral, and religious problems attending that prosperity that became the focus for Amos' voice of judgment. In the Southern Kingdom of Judah, the noble king Uzziah reigned (Amos 1:1). Amos probably began his ministry with God's call in 765 B.C., "two years before the earthquake" (1:1).



Morally, Israel and Judah were suffering under the corruption generated as a by-product of Canaanite and Tyrian Baalism, as well as infidelity to the Lord's covenant. Israelite society had experienced the inevitable decay which characterizes misdirected prosperity. It may appear strange that the corruption of Israelite society could be traced to its contemporary religious structures and to the material prosperity which Israelites so often interpreted as a sign of divine favor. Despite the contradictory nature of those circumstances, the debauched moral condition of the land was the product of both corrupt religion and perverted material prosperity. Rampant luxury and self-indulgence were clearly manifest (1:6ff; 4:1ff; 5:10ff; 6:1ff; 8:4ff).

Chasm at Tekoa, Israel, the hometown of Amos the Prophet.

Exploitation of the poor occurred throughout the land (2:6; 3:10; 4:1; 5:11; 8:4–6). Justice was distorted. The dynamism of personal religious experience gave way to the superficiality of institutional religion as demonstrated in the conflict between Amos and Amaziah, the priest of Bethel (7:10ff). Amos' opposition to those moral and religious evils led him to emphasize the primary theme of the book: "let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an everlasting stream" (5:24 RSV).

Ruins of small building, probably dating from postbiblical times, at Tekoa, Israel, Amos's hometown.

One may divide the book of Amos into three sections. Chapters one and two are a basic section, divided into subsections which begin with a common literary introduction (1:3,6,9,11,13; 2:1,4,6). The second section of the book consists of judgment oracles directed against Israel (3:1—6:14). The third section contains the visions of Amos (7–9), which may have been the earliest revelations through the prophet. The visions were central to his call experience. Aware of the awesome reality of human sin and divine judgment, these visions shaped his prophetic messages (7:1–3,4–6,7–9; 8:1–3; 9:1–4).

The words of Amos address various issues, but the central theme stresses sin and judgment. Whether in addressing other nations, Israel, or Judah, the prophet condemned those who sin against a universal conscience (1:1—2:3), the revealed law (2:4–5), or God's redeeming love (2:6–16). Amos challenged people to live by covenant standards and condemned them for their failure to reflect the covenant in daily life. He was concerned about people who "do not know how to do right" (3:10 RSV). His word of judgment was severe for the "first ladies of Samaria" who encouraged the injustice and violence of their husbands "who oppress the poor, who crush the needy, who say to their husbands, 'Bring, that we may drink!' " (4:1 RSV). Because of such injustice and the failure to bind authentic religious experience with a social conscience, Amos claimed that the nation was already dead. One could sing Israel's funeral lament: "Fallen, no more to rise, is the virgin Israel" (5:1 RSV). For individuals who were superficially and confidently "at ease in Zion, and to those who feel secure on the mountain of Samaria" (6:1 RSV), their only hope rested in the renewal of authentic religious experience leading to a life of justice and righteousness which overflow the land (5:24). For those who rejected that way, only judgment remained: "prepare to meet your God, O Israel!" (4:12).

Outline

I. The Sermons: God Confronts His People's Sin (1:1—6:14).
  A. God's Word is revealed in human words (1:1–2).
  B. God identifies and condemns all human sin (1:3—2:16).
    1. Acts against common human decency are sinful (1:3—2:3).
    2. The rejection of God's law by substituting one's own wisdom is sin (2:4–5).
    3. Rejecting God's love is sin (2:6–16).
  C. God condemns empty religion (3:1–15).
    1. The privilege of being loved by God brings responsibility (3:1–2).
    2. God reveals His purposes to His people (3:3–8).
    3. God uses historical agents in His judgment (3:9–12).
    4. Centers of empty religion and ill-gotten prosperity will all fall (3:13–15).
  D. God's love confronts His disobedient people in judgment (4:1–13).
    1. Insatiable desire leads to sin (4:1–3).
    2. Empty and meaningless worship is sin (4:4–5).
    3. Temporal judgment is intended to lead God's people to repentance (4:6–11).
    4. God's rebellious people face an ultimate confrontation with Him (4:12–13).
  E. God calls His people to practice justice and righteousness (5:1–27).
    1. God sees the end of His sinful people (5:1–3).
    2. God's rebellious people are invited to seek Him (5:4–9,14–15).
    3. God's inescapable judgment is on His people (5:10–13,16–20).
    4. Practical righteousness is God's ultimate demand of His people (5:21–27).
  F. False security in national strength leads to ultimate downfall (6:1–14).
II. The Visions: Seeing God Properly Reveals Both His Judgment and His Mercy (7:1—9:15).
  A. God extends mercy in response to serious intercession (7:1–6).
  B. Ultimate confrontation with God can never be escaped (7:7–9).
  C. A proper view of God brings everything else into perspective (7:10–17).
    1. A false view of the nature of God's message leads to wrong decisions (7:10–13).
    2. A person transformed by a vision of God sees people and things as they really are (7:14–17).
  D. The final consequences of sin offers judgment without hope (8:1—9:4).
    1. An overripe, rotten religion is worthless (8:1–3).
    2. The empty observance of meaningless ritual leaves our morality unaffected (8:4–6).
    3. God's final judgment is a horrible sight (8:7—9:4).
  E. God's mercy can be seen beyond His judgment (9:5–15).

A

1. God is Sovereign over all the universe (9:5–6).
2. God's mercy still offers hope beyond temporal judgment (9:7–10).
3. God's ultimate purpose of good for His people will be fulfilled (9:11–15).

2. An ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:25).

Roy L. Honeycutt

AMOZ (Ā′ măz) whose name means "strong," was the father of the prophet Isaiah (2 Kings 19:2).

AMPHIPOLIS (Ăm·phĭp′ o·lĭs) City near the Aegean Gulf between Thessalonica and Philippi. Paul and Silas passed through it on their way to Thessalonica on Paul's second missionary journey (Acts 17:1) as they travelled the famous Egnatian Way.

AMPLIAS (Ăm′ plĭ·ăs) A Christian convert in Rome to whom Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:8). Amplias was a common name often given to slaves. Paul referred to this individual as "my beloved in the Lord," which may suggest a particularly warm and affectionate relationship between Amplias and the apostle. Modern translations spell the name Ampliatus.

AMPLIATUS (Ăm·plĭ·ā′ tus) See Amplias.

AMRAM (Ăm′ răm) Personal name meaning "exalted people." 1. Father of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam and grandson of Levi (Ex. 6:18–20). Moses' father, Amram, was the father of the Levitical family, the Amramites (Num. 3:27; 1 Chron. 26:23), who served in the wilderness sanctuary and may have served in the Temple treasuries in later years. 2. One of the twelve sons of Bani who was guilty of marrying foreign women (Ezra 10:34). 3. One of four sons of Dishon in 1 Chronicles 1:41. In Genesis 36:26, the four sons of Dishon are also listed, however Amram is listed as Hemdan. Translations other than the KJV list this son of Dishon as Hemdan in Chronicles as well as Genesis.

AMRAPHEL (Ăm′ rə·phĕl) Personal name, probably originally Akkadian, meaning, "the God Amurru paid back" or "the mouth of God has spoken." King of Shinar or Babylon who joined a coalition to defeat Sodom and Gomorrah, then other kings in Canaan and the Dead Sea area. The kings captured Lot. Hearing the news, Abraham assembled an army, defeated the coalition, and rescued Lot (Gen. 14:1–9). Amraphel cannot be equated with any other king of whom records are available from the Ancient Near East.

AMULETS (Ăm′ ū lĕts) NAS, RSV translation of rare Hebrew word for charms, oaths used to describe an ornament women wore (Isa. 3:20). NIV translates charms; KJV, earrings.

AMZI (Ăm′ zī) Personal name meaning, "my strong one," or an abbreviation for Amaziah. 1. Member of Temple singer family (1 Chron. 6:46). 2. Ancestor of Adaiah, who helped build the second Temple (Neh. 11:12).

ANAB (Ā′ năb) Place name meaning, "grape." Joshua eliminated the Anakim from southern Judah including Hebron, Debir, and Anab (Josh. 11:21). Joshua allotted the mountain city to Judah (Josh. 15:50). Located at modern Khirbet Anab about fifteen miles southwest of Hebron.

ANAH (Ā′ năh) Personal name meaning, "answer." 1. Mother of Oholibamah, a wife of Esau (Gen. 36:2), and grandmother of Jeush, Jalam, and Korah (36:14). RSV reads "daughter" as "son." This would allow this Anah to be related to or identified with Anah 2 below. In Genesis 36:24 Anah is noted for having found "mules in the wilderness" (KJV) or "hot springs in the desert" (NIV; compare NAS; RSV). Here Zibeon is still Anah's father as in 36:2, but this Anah is masculine. In 36:29 Anah is a Horite chief living in Seir. 2. A son of Seir and brother of Zibeon (Gen. 36:20).

ANAHARATH (Ă·nā′ hă·răth) Place name meaning, "gorge." City on border of Issachar (Josh. 19:19) located possibly at modern Tell el-Mukharkhash between Mount Tabor and the Jordan.

ANAIAH (Ă·naī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh answered." Ezra's assistant when Ezra read the law to the post-exilic community (Neh. 8:4). He or another man of the same name signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:22).

ANAK, ANAKIM (Ā′ năk, Ăn′ ă·kĭm) Personal and clan name meaning, "long-necked" or "strong-necked." The ancestor named Anak had three children: Ahiman, Sheshai, Talmai (Num. 13:22). They lived in Hebron and the hill country (Josh. 11:21) before being destroyed by Joshua. Their remnants then lived among the Philistines (Josh. 11:22). These tall giants were part of the Nephilim (Gen. 6:4; Num. 13:33). Arba was a hero of the Anakim (Judg. 14:15). The spelling Anakims puts the English plural "s" on to the Hebrew plural "im."

ANAKITES NIV translation of Anakim. See Anakim.

ANAM (Ā′ năm) NAS reading of 1 Chronicles 1:11, interpreting Anam as an individual rather than as a tribe or nation. See Anamim.

ANAM MELECH (Ā·năm′ mē·lĕch) Personal name meaning, "Anu is king." A god of the Sepharvites, who occupied part of Israel after the Northern Kingdom was exiled in 721 B.C. Worshipers sacrificed children to this god (2 Kings 17:31).

ANAMIM (Ăn′ ā·mĭm) A tribe or nation called "son of Egypt" in Genesis 10:13. No further information is known about these people. See Anam.

ANAMITES (Ăn′ ā·mītes) NIV translation of Anamim. See Anamim.

ANAN (Ā′ năn) Personal name meaning, "cloud." Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:26).

ANANI (Ā·nā′ nī) Personal name meaning, "cloudy" or "he heard me." Descendant of David's royal line living after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 3:24).

ANANIAH (Ăn·ā·nī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh heard me." 1. Grandfather of Azariah, who helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem (Neh. 3:23). 2. Village where tribe of Benjamin dwelt in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:32). It may be located at Bethany, east of Jerusalem.

ANANIAS (Ăn ā nī′ ăs) Greek form of the Hebrew name Hananiah, which means "Yahweh has dealt graciously." 1. Husband of Sapphira (Acts 5:1–6). They sold private property, the proceeds of which they were to give to the common fund of the early Jerusalem church (Acts 4:32–34). They did not give all the proceeds from the sale, as they claimed, and both were struck dead for having lied to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:3,10). 2. A disciple who lived in the city of Damascus (Acts 9:10–19). In response to a vision he received from the Lord, this Ananias visited Saul (Paul) three days after Saul had his Damascus road experience. Ananias laid his hands on Saul, after which Saul received both the Holy Spirit and his sight. Acts 9:18 may imply that Ananias was the one who baptized Saul. 3. The Jewish high priest Ananias from A.D. 47 to 58 (Acts 23:2; 24:1). As high priest, he was president of the Jewish court known as the Sanhedrin which tried Paul in Jerusalem (Acts 23). As was typical of high priests who belonged to the aristocratic Jewish group known as the Sadducees, he was quite concerned to appease Roman authorities and representatives. This desire may have prompted Ananias to take such a personal interest in the case of Paul (Acts 24:1–2), since some Roman authorities suspected the apostle of sedition against Rome (Acts 21:38). Because of Ananias' pro-Roman sentiments, he was assassinated by anti-Roman Jewish revolutionaries at the outbreak of the first great Jewish revolt against Rome in the year A.D. 66. See Sadducees; Sanhedrin.

ANATH (Ā′ năth) Personal name either meaning, "answer" or was the name of a Canaanite god. Father of Shamgar, a judge of Israel (Judg. 3:31).

ANATHEMA (Ă·na′ thĕ·mă) Someone or something sacrificed to God for destruction in fulfillment of a vow. Greek translation of Hebrew chrerm, the holy war ban imposing destruction of war booty (Lev. 27:28; Deut. 20:10–18). Paul invoked the curse of the ban on anyone who did not love the Lord (1 Cor. 16:22). This may have been a technical term in the early church meaning to exclude from church membership. Paul echoed similar sentiments in Romans 9:3, saying he would be cut off from Christ if that were the means to save his Jewish people. Spiritual gifts, especially ecstatic prophecy, do not cause people to say "Jesus is anathema" (1 Cor. 12:3; NAS note). A person preaching any gospel except the gospel of grace promising justification through faith alone should be under the curse, that is anathema (Gal. 1:8–9).

ANATHOTH (Ăn′ ā·thôth) Personal and place name. 1. A city assigned to the tribe of Benjamin, located about three miles northeast of Jerusalem (Josh. 21:18). King Solomon sent Abiathar the priest there after removing him as high priest (1 Kings 2:26–27). It was also the home of Jeremiah the prophet, who may have been a priest in the rejected line of Abiathar (Jer. 1:1). Though Jeremiah was opposed and threatened by the citizens of Anathoth (Jer. 11:21–23) he purchased a field there from his cousin Hanameel in obedience to the word of the Lord to symbolize ultimate hope after Exile (Jer. 32:6–15). Anathoth was overrun by the Babylonians, but resettled following the Exile (Neh. 7:27; 11:32). 2. The eighth of nine sons of Becher, the son of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 3. A chief that is a family or clan leader, who along with 84 other priests, Levites, and leaders signed a covenant that the Israelites would obey the law of God given through Moses (Neh. 10:19).

ANCESTORS are those from whom a person is descended and in biblical history were honored.

Old Testament While the word, ancestor, is only found in one Old Testament verse (Lev. 26:45), the number of genealogies tracing family lines in the Old and New Testament indicates that ancestors were significant to the Israelites. Israel honored her ancestors. Leaders and prophets implored the Israelites to remember their heritage and the God of their forefathers.

The Old Testament includes thirteen principal genealogical lists. (See Genealogies.) Scholars believe there are a number of purposes for these genealogies including identification, establishment of rights, and verification of racial purity. One of the more obvious reasons was to establish the legitimacy of an individual in office or to provide an individual with added importance. Such genealogies are generally lists of male ancestors, although women are included when of historical significance (Gen. 11:29; 22:23; Num. 26:33; 27:1–11).

A remarkable feature of the biblical account of Israel's ancestors is the fact that they are not idealized but portrayed as fallible mortals. What made them great was not their moral excellence nor heroic deeds but that God had chosen them for a purpose.

New Testament As in the Old Testament, ancestors are honored in the New Testament. Paul was encouraged by remembering the faith of Timothy's grandmother and mother (2 Tim. 1:5). In Hebrews, the preacher encouraged the Jewish converts to remember the faithful believers who have gone before them (Heb. 11).

The New Testament includes two genealogies both of which trace the lineage of Jesus Christ. Matthew traces Jesus' lineage to Abraham (Matt. 1:1–17) while Luke traces the lineage to Adam, the son of God (Luke 3:23–38).

Ancestor Worship Ancestor worship is the adoration or payment of homage to a deceased parent or ancestor. Such worship was usually reserved for deities. Among ancient Israel's neighbors, there are several instances of deification of ancestors (Mesopotamian mythology and Egyptian kings). There may be one instance of ancestor worship recorded in the Bible. Ezekiel 43:7–9 may suggest that the bodies of Israel's dead kings were being worshiped. This practice of ancestor worship was condemned and forbidden.

Cult of The Dead Much like ancestor worship, the cult of the dead involves adoration of the deceased. The cult of the dead goes a step beyond adoration, however, seeking to maintain or manage a relationship with the dead. The cult of the dead involves the beliefs that certain departed spirits must be fed or honored and that they can be channels of information with the spiritual world.

While ancestor worship was not common among Israel or her neighbors, the cult of the dead was widely practiced. The belief in an afterlife was apparently universal in the Ancient Near East. The provision of food, drink, and artifacts within tombs is an indication of the belief that the departed spirit would have need of such things.

Though Israel was forbidden to practice the cult of the dead, she often departed from God's injunctions and engaged in the worship of pagan deities. Wayward Israelites were also guilty of practicing the cult of the dead (1 Sam. 28). Israel was specifically warned not to offer to the dead (Deut. 26:14). God warned them through the prophets not to consult the dead in an effort to learn the future (Isa. 8:19; 65:4). Such acts were considered by the prophets to be dangerously at odds with God's will (1 Sam. 28:7). See Burial; Divination and Magic; Genealogies; Necromancy.

Larry Bruce

ANCHOR A weight held on the end of a cable that when submerged in water holds a ship in place. Anchors were made of stone, iron, and lead during biblical times. The ship on which Paul sailed to Rome let down four anchors as it approached Malta (Acts 27:29–30,40). "Anchor" is used in a figurative sense in Hebrews 6:19 where the hope of the gospel is compared to "an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast"—that is, a spiritual support in times of trial.

ANCIENT OF DAYS is a phrase used in Daniel 7 to describe the everlasting God. Ancient of days literally means "one advanced in (of) days" and may possibly mean "one who forwards time or rules over it."

Several biblical passages are related in terms and ideas with Daniel 7 (Gen. 24:1; Job 36:26; Ps. 50:1–6; 55:19; 1 Kings 22:19–20; Isa. 26:1—27:1; 44:6; Ezek. 1; Joel 3:2). It is impossible to determine the origin or original meaning of this term. However, in ancient Ugaritic literature, the god El is designated as "the father of years."

Coupled with the figures of speech in the context of Daniel 7, Ancient of days suggests age, antiquity, dignity, endurance, judgment, and wisdom. It clearly describes Yahweh, the God of Israel.

J. J. Owens

ANDREW (Ăn′ drēw) A disciple of John the Baptist who became one of Jesus' first disciples and led his brother Simon to Jesus. Because of John the Baptist's witness concerning Jesus, Andrew followed Jesus to His overnight lodging and became one of His first disciples. Subsequently Andrew brought his brother Simon to Jesus (John 1:40–41). He was a fisherman by trade (Matt. 4:18). He questioned Jesus about His prophesy concerning the Temple (Mark 13:3). Andrew brought the lad with his lunch to Jesus, leading to the feeding of the five thousand (John 6:8). He and Philip brought some Greeks to see Jesus (John 12:22). In the Bible, he is mentioned for the last time in Acts 1:13. He figures prominently in several early extra-biblical church traditions. He is believed to have been killed on an x-shaped cross. See Apostles; Disciples.

ANDRONICUS (Ăn·drŏ·nī′ cŭs) An apostle and thus probably an eyewitness of the risen Christ. Paul greeted this Jewish Christian as one honored by the church, one who had suffered in prison for his faith, and one who had been a Christian longer than Paul (Rom. 16:7). Evidently he lived in Rome when Paul wrote Romans. See Apostle.

ANEM (Ā′ nĕm) Place name meaning, "fountains." A city given the Levites from the territory of Issachar (1 Chron. 6:73). Joshua 21:29 lists the city as En-gannim.

ANER (Ā′ nēr) Personal and place name. 1. An ally of Abraham in the battle against the coalition of kings in Genesis 14. 2. A city from tribe of Manasseh given to Levites (1 Chron. 6:70). In Joshua 21:25 the Levites' city is called Taanach. See Taanach.

ANETHOTHITE KJV reading for Anathothite in 2 Samuel 23:27. See Anathoth.

ANGEL is a heavenly messenger who either delivers a message to humans, carries out God's will, praises God, or guards God's throne.

Bible Terms The term "angel" is derived from the Greek word angelos which means "messenger." Angelos and the Hebrew equivalent, malak (which also means "messenger"), are the two most common terms used to describe this class of beings in the Bible. In general, in texts where an angel appears, his task is to convey the message or do the will of the God who sent him. Since the focus of the text is on the message, the messenger is rarely described in detail.

Another set of terms used to describe angels focuses not on angels as mediators between God and persons, but on God's heavenly entourage. Terms such as "sons of God," "holy ones," and "heavenly host" seem to focus on angels as celestial beings. As such, these variously worship God, attend God's throne, or comprise God's army. These terms are used typically in contexts emphasizing the grandeur, power, and/or acts of God.

A third category of heavenly beings is that of winged angels. Cherubim and seraphim make their most memorable appearances in the visions of Ezekiel (1:4–28; 10:3–22) and Isaiah (6:2–6). Cherubim function primarily as guards or attendants to the divine throne. Seraphim appear only in Isaiah's vision and there attend God's throne and voice praises. All three categories present us with heavenly beings in service to God.

Angelic Hierarchy Some scholars suggest that a heavenly "host" (i.e. "army") must have order and that references to archangels (1 Thess. 4:16; Jude 9) and a special class of angels which has intimate fellowship with God such as the seraphim of Isaiah 6:2–6, indicate that angels are organized in a rigidly fixed rank system. Some authors even attempt to list their ranks and duties.

Angelic Appearance The appearance of angels varies. Only cherubim and seraphim are represented with wings. Often in the Old Testament angels appear as ordinary men. Sometimes, however, their uniqueness is evident as they do things or appear in a fashion clearly non-human (Gen. 16:7–11; Ex. 3:2; Num. 22:23; Judg. 6:21; 13:20; John 20:12). The brilliant white appearance common to the New Testament angel is not a feature of the Old Testament image.

Creation of Angels Angels are created beings. Only God is eternal. But when God created angels the Bible never reveals. If the "us" in Genesis 1:26 is a reference to God's angelic court, then the angels are simply present at the creation; their origin is not explained.

Guardian Angels Jesus' comment in Matthew 18:10 and some passages which assign protective roles to angels (for example, Michael, angelic prince over Israel, Dan. 12:1; angels of specific churches in Daniel 10:13; Acts 12:15; Revelation 1:20; 2—3) imply that a heavenly counterpart represents each person in heaven. This evidence is commonly used to assert that each individual has a "guardian" angel assigned to him or her by God. The term, "guardian angel," however, is not biblical, and the idea is at best only implied in these passages.

Old Testament Each of the various types of literature in the Old Testament has its own concerns, and angels appear in the texts in ways appropriate to each. Those books which narrate the great acts of God (Gen., Ex., Num., Judg., 1 and 2 Sam. and 1 and 2 Kings) contain numerous references to angels. In these books, especially at key points, God reveals Himself and acts on behalf of His people. Sometimes He does this directly, sometimes in the person of an angel. Often the distinction between God's action and the angel's is blurred to the point that they seem synonymous (Gen. 19:13,24; Ex. 3:2,4).

The angel's function as messenger or agent of God is acted out in terms of proclamation: revealing the will of God and/or announcing key events (Gen. 19:1–22; Ex. 3:2–6; Judg. 2:1–5; 13:2–23); protection: ensuring the well-being or survival of God's people (Ex. 14:19,20; 1 Kings 19:1–8); and punishment: enforcing the wrath of God on the wicked among the Jews and the Gentiles (Gen. 19:12–13; 2 Sam. 24:17; 2 Kings 19:35). In addition, some passages reflect popular ideas about angels (2 Sam. 14:17,20) which the text records but does not necessarily affirm.

In the books of the prophets, angels rarely are mentioned. The most prominent exceptions are the heavenly visions of Isaiah and Zechariah.

New Testament Much of the pattern observed in the Old Testament is repeated in the New. The majority of references to angelic activity are in the narrative books (the Gospels and Acts). The epistles include only some brief references to angels; several books do not mention them specifically at all. Hebrews with its lengthy contrast between Jesus and the angels is exceptional (Heb. 1:3—2:16). The Apocalypse of John in its visionary nature, apocalyptic style, and reference to angels is comparable to parts of Daniel, Zechariah, and Isaiah.

A

The basic tasks of proclamation, protection, and punishment are again the focus (Matt. 1:20–24; 4:11; Acts 12:7–11) while references to the nature of angels are very brief.

What is perhaps most remarkable is what the New Testament texts do not say about angels. The interbiblical period, under Persian and Greek influences, had seen an explosion of speculation about angels. Angels (or comparable spiritual beings) in detailed hierarchies came to be understood by many as necessary mediators between God and humanity. Knowing the names, ranks, and how to manipulate these lesser spiritual beings enabled one to gain blessings in this life and attain the level of the divine in the next.

The New Testament texts contain no developed angelic hierarchy and do not present angels as semi-independent lesser gods. Angels are not used to explain the existence of evil, nor are they needed as intermediaries or as agents of revelation. See Cherubim; Demons; Seraphim.

Mike Martin

ANGER See Wrath.

ANGLE, THE, THE ANGLE OF THE WALL See Turning of the Wall.

ANIAM (Å·nī′ ăm) Personal name meaning, "I am a people," "I am an uncle," or "mourning of the people." A member of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:19).

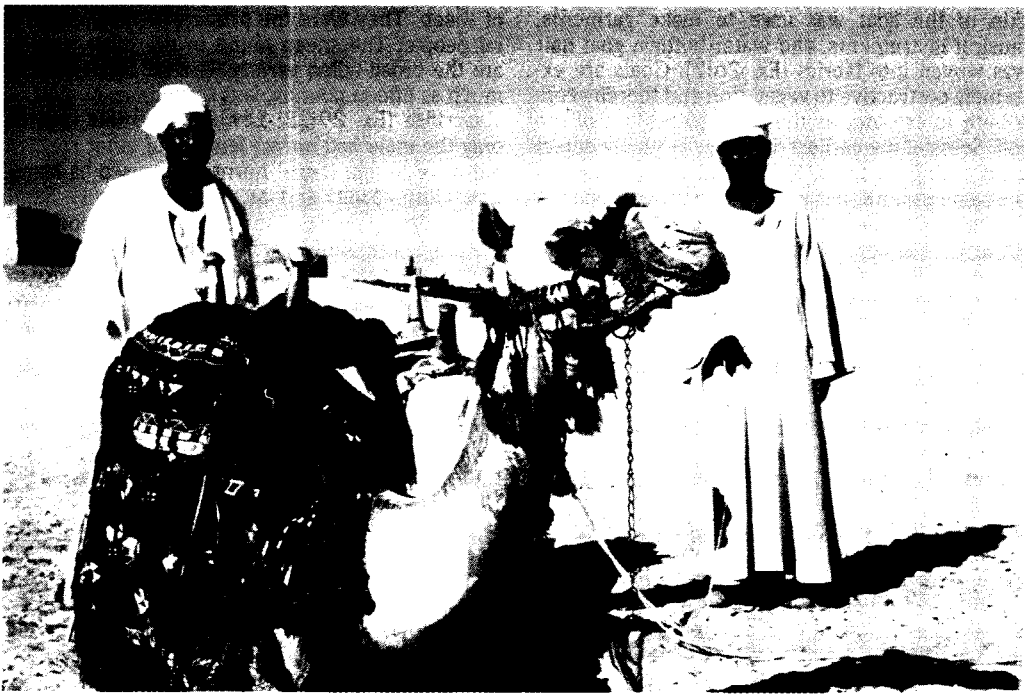
ANIM (Ā′ nĭm) Place name meaning, "springs." City given tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:50). Located at modern Khirbet Ghuwein at-Tahta, eleven miles south of Hebron.

ANIMALS Animals populate the biblical world, giving life and interest to many biblical episodes. We do not always have the specific information we would like about these characters of the Bible.

Mammals A mammal is defined as any class of higher vertebrates including humans and all other animals that nourish their young with milk secreted by mammary glands and have their skin more or less covered with hair." Numerous kinds of animals that fall into this category are mentioned in the Bible. Those mentioned in the New Testament, as a general rule, can be identified with a high degree of certainty. Those in the Old Testament are not as easy to identify.

Domestic The people of Scripture tamed many animals for use in food production, military endeavors, and transportation.

1. ASS The ass or donkey was a common beast of burden in biblical times and was similar to donkeys of today but larger. This animal appears more than 120 times in Bible.



Centuries before the age of the patriarchs, the ass had been domesticated in Western Asia. They appear in Mesopotamia (onager) and Egypt three thousand years before Christ. The Nubian wild ass of Egypt has been identified as the ass of Palestine and the Bible. A larger animal than the European ass of today, this animal was used for riding (Num. 22:21; Judg. 5:10), as a beast of burden (1 Sam. 16:20), and for agricultural work (Deut. 22:10). When the Israelites returned to Palestine from the Babylonian captivity, they brought with them 6,720 asses (Ezra 2:67), about six times the number of horses and camels they possessed. While some people used the ass for food, this animal was considered unclean by the Israelites and thus considered unacceptable to eat. The ass was covered by the sabbath rest regulations, and the firstborn was redeemed (Ex. 13:13). While the horse was the primary mount for the warrior, the ass was used by those who traveled in peace. Jesus' choice of an ass as His riding animal for His triumphal entry into Jerusalem symbolized His role as the Prince of Peace (Zech. 9:9; Matt. 21:1–5). Before the twentieth century, ass caravans crossed the Sahara Desert, traveling between Morocco and the Red Sea.

2. CAMEL A camel is a large, hump-backed ruminant (chews cud) of Asia and Africa. It was used to transport burdens or passengers.

The camel has been called the "ship of the desert," being a primary mode of transportation

The horse, originally brought into Palestine from Persia, is still useful to Israeli shepherds.

The camel, particularly adapted to travel in hot, dry climates, is thus a valuable commodity in Israel.

for taking goods and people across dry, hot terrain. Recent discoveries show it was domesticated before 2000 B.C. When camels were introduced into Palestine is a matter of ongoing debate. Since this animal has the capacity to store several days' supply of water in its stomach, it is ideally suited for such work. In addition, the storage of fat in its hump makes it possible for the camel to subsist on little food when taking a desert journey. They were counted among the riches of Job (Job 1:3). Camel hair was used for tents and for clothes (Mark 1:6).

3. CATTLE Cattle are domesticated quadrupeds used as livestock. In the Bible, the term commonly refers to all domesticated animals.

Ox, bull, calf, and cow are among the names for cattle in the Bible. Sheep, goats, and other domesticated animals are also included under the designation of cattle (Gen. 1:24; John 4:12). The land of Goshen, where the Hebrews settled during the time of Joseph, was rich in cattle. From bones found at Megiddo, one archaeologist has identified cattle in ancient Israel as the present small Beiruti race, while another has identified five types of cattle of Gezer. Cattle were valued for sacrifices, for food and as work animals (Deut. 25:4; Luke 14:19). They were divided into clean and unclean classifications (Lev. 5:2) and were covered by the law of firstlings and sabbath rest (Ex. 13:12; 20:12). Bullocks and calves were used for sacrifices. Possession of considerable livestock was a sign of wealth (Gen. 13:2; 1 Sam. 25:2).

4. COW Cow designates domestic bovine animals, especially the female.

Cows are mentioned in relation to giving birth and nurturing calves (Lev. 22:27–28; 1 Sam. 6:7). They were among the cattle gift that Jacob offered to Esau (Gen. 32:15). Amos called the wealthy, selfish women of Samaria "cows of Bashan" (Amos 4:1), referring to the area that was well known for raising cows (Deut. 32:14). See Cattle above.

5. DOG The dog was a scavenger animal that often ran wild. They were sometimes kept as house pets. In Mark 7:27, Jesus probably was referring to the small dogs that people kept as pets. Some dogs evidently were used to herd sheep (Job 30:1). See below Wild Dogs.

6. DONKEY See Ass above.

7. GOAT A goat was a hollow-horned ruminant with long, floppy ears, usually covered with long, black hair. Sometimes, they were speckled.

One type of goat mentioned in the Bible has been identified as the Syrian or Mamber goat. Domesticated long before the biblical era, the goat in biblical times probably had long ears and backward-curving horns. Both male and female had horns. The most common color was black. It was a prominent source of food; the male also was used for sacrifices (Lev. 22:27). A goat (called a scapegoat) was selected at random once a year on the Day of Atonement to bear symbolically the sins of the nation of Israel (Lev. 16:10–22). The skin of the goat was used to make garments, musical instruments, and water bottles; goat hair was woven into fabrics (Ex. 26:7). Goats are extremely destructive to vegetation and thereby contribute to erosion, as they tear plants out of the soil. Some of the earliest drawings available depict goats eating on trees. Sheep and goats grazed in the same pasture, but it was necessary to separate the herds because the male goat was often hostile toward the sheep (Matt. 25:32). Today, goats are found in colors of black, grey, brown, white, and a variety of patterns and mixtures. See Ibex below.

A

8. HORSE A horse was a solid-hoofed animal that was used for riding, as a war animal, and for transporting goods.

Evidence indicates that the horse was introduced into the Middle East two thousand years before Christ. These animals evidently were brought to the area from Persia by the Hyksos warriors who invaded Egypt. It is believed that the horse originally came from Central Asia. The horse is mentioned more than 150 times in the Bible, with the earliest reference being found in Genesis 47:17. However, there is no indication that the horse was in common use in Israel until the time of David and Solomon. The number of horses owned by Solomon was as many as twelve thousand. They were used to draw chariots (1 Kings 4:26; 10:26). Since the Mosaic law forbad the breeding of horses, Solomon imported horses from Egypt (Deut. 17:16; 2 Chron. 1:16). Likely, because of the superiority of the horse for warfare, this law was later ignored. The ruins of Solomon's well-known horse stables at ancient Megiddo are today marked as an historical and archeological site.

9. MULE A mule was the result of cross-breeding of a female horse and a male ass.

Since the Mosaic law forbade cross-breeding (Lev. 19:19), the Israelites imported mules (Eze. 27:14). They were used as war animals, for riding, and for carrying burdens (2 Kings 5:17). They were especially good for moving heavy burdens in mountainous areas, being better than the horse, ass, or camel. During David's reign, mules, along with horses, were a popular riding animal for royalty (1 Kings 1:33).

10. OX An ox is a large domesticated bovine. In the Old Testament it was extremely valuable as a work animal.

An important animal in the economy of Israel, oxen were essential for farm work. They were often yoked in pairs to do farm work and were used to transport burdens. Permitted as food, they were also offered as sacrifices (Deut. 14:4–6; Lev. 17:3–4). See Cattle above; Wild Ox below.

11. SHEEP A sheep is a stocky animal, larger than a goat, but has no beard.

A prominent animal in the sacrificial system of Israel, sheep are first mentioned in the Bible in Genesis 4:2 where Abel is identified as a keeper of sheep. They were the primary wealth of pastoral people. The sheep found in the Bible usually are the broad-tailed variety. The tail, weighing as much as fifteen pounds, was sometimes offered as a sacrifice (Ex. 29:22; Lev. 3:9). Of this species only the male had horns; females of other species did have horns. Rams' horns were used as trumpets (Josh. 6:44) and as oil containers (1 Sam. 16:1). Sheep were also a source for food and clothing. The Bible contains hundreds of references to sheep. Often, they are referred to as small cattle.

12. SWINE Swine are stout-bodied animals that have a large snout and thick skin.

The swine of the Bible, in most instances, probably were the wild pig, still common in Palestine. While Canaanite pagans kept herds of swine, the Mosaic law classified this animal as "unclean" and thus forbade the eating of its flesh (Lev. 11:7; Deut. 14:8). Isaiah condemned the eating of swine, dogs, and mice (65:4; 66:3,17). One who tended swine was barred from the Temple. A scavenger in ancient times, this animal became a symbol for baseness and paganism (Matt. 7:6). The fact that the prodigal son resorted to tending swine points to the extreme humiliation he experienced. Interestingly, Hezir, a proper Jewish name, is the same word as that translated swine (1 Chron. 24:15; Neh. 10:20).

Wild Wild animals provided food and sport, and were feared by biblical people.

1. ANTELOPE A fleet-footed animal with horns and about the size of a donkey, the antelope has a mane on the underside of its neck that makes it look like a large goat.

The pygarg (KJV), found in a list of animals in Deuteronomy 14:5, has not been identified with certainty but is considered by a number of scholars to be an antelope. Pygarg literally means "white rump" and is the Greek name for a kind of antelope. This animal has been connected with one that is native to North Africa. It has greyish-white hinder parts with a white patch on the forehead and twisted and ringed horns that point upward and backward. It also has been identified with the Arabian Oryx, an antelope of Iraq that has long horns stretching backward.

2. APE An ape is a large, semi-erect primate.

Apes are mentioned only twice in the Old Testament and are not described. The ape was not native to the Holy Land, but the Israelites were familiar with it. Some types were kept as pets. They were among the gifts that the navy of Hiram brought to Solomon (1 Kings 10:22; 2 Chron. 9:21).

3. BADGER The badger is a burrowing mammal, largest of the weasel family.

Disagreement exists about the translation of badger's skin in Exodus 25:5; 26:14 (badger, KJV; goat, RSV; sea cows, NIV; porpoise, NAS; fine leather, TEV, NRSV). This animal has also been identified as the rock hyrax or coney. See Coney below.

An Arab shepherd tends his herd in the Judean hills.

4. BAT A bat is a quadruped with wings that nurses its offspring.

The Hebrew word translated bat is the generic name for many species of this mammal found in Palestine. Although the bat is listed among unclean birds in the Bible (Lev. 11:19), it belongs to the mammals, because it nurses its young. They live in caves. Modern zoologists have cited at least twenty different species in the area of Palestine.

5. BEAR The bear is a large, heavy mammal with long, thick, shaggy hair. It eats insects, fruit, and flesh.

The bear of the Bible has been identified with a high degree of certainty as the Syrian bear. They may grow as high as six feet and weigh as much as five hundred pounds. In biblical times the bear was a threat to vineyards and to herds of sheep and goats (1 Sam. 17:34–35). The two largest and strongest beasts of prey—the bear and the lion—are often listed together in the Bible (1 Sam. 17:37). A narrative about Elisha recorded in the Bible pictures the ferocity of the bear (2 Kings 2:23–24). Within the last century the Syrian bear has disappeared from the Holy Land, with the last bear being killed in Galilee just before World War II. It still survives in Syria, Persia, and Turkey.

6. BEHEMOTH A large beast.

Described in detail in Job 40:15–24, this animal has been variously identified as an elephant, hippopotamus, and the water buffalo, with the hippopotamus the more likely. Identification as a hippopotamus is based on the description in Job 40 of its size and strength, where it lived, and its manner of eating. The modern Hebrew word for the animal means beast or cattle. In Leviticus 11:2 the word translated beasts (KJV) is translated animals in the NIV.

7. BOAR A boar is a male swine (wild pig).

The boar was considered unclean by the Israelites. A menace to crops, it is mentioned only once in the Bible (Ps. 80:13). See Swine above.

8. CONEY The coney resembles a rabbit in size and color. The badger of Exodus 25:5; 26:14 has been identified by some scholars as the Syrian coney. See Badger above. It lives in rocky areas from the Dead Sea Valley to Mt. Hermon. The design of its feet helps the coney keep footing on slippery rocks.

9. DEER The deer is an antlered animal (all male and some female have antlers) with two large and two small hooves. It is believed that three species of deer lived in Palestine in Bible times: red, fallow, and roe. The red deer seems to be the one most easily identified and probably was the specie in the list of daily provisions for Solomon's table (1 Kings 4:23). The hart is the male red deer (Ps. 42:1), and the hind, the female (Job 39:1). The fallow deer, a small specie with especially large horns, is native to the Middle East and still survives in northern parts of that area. The tribe of Naphtali is described as "a doe set free that bears beautiful fawns" (Gen. 49:21). Certain characteristics of deer are noted in the Bible in the form of similes (Prov. 5:19; Isa. 35:6; Hab. 3:19).

10. DOG The dog was a scavenger animal that ran wild and was sometimes kept as a house pet. The dog in Bible times was considered an unclean animal. No specific breed has been identified. Dogs ran wild in village streets, often in packs (Ps. 22:16–21; 59:6). The term "dog" was a designation for the wicked (Isa. 56:10–11). Jews contemptuously called Gentiles, "dogs."

11. DUGONG The dugong is an aquatic mammal; the male has tusk-like teeth. The skin of the dugong is mentioned as a covering for the tabernacle (Ex. 25:5; KJV has badger's skins NAS, porpoise; NIV, sea cows; RSV, goat; NRSV, fine leather).

12. ELEPHANT While elephants are not specifically referred to in the Bible, ivory is mentioned in connection with King Solomon. Ivory was among the riches he imported (1 Kings 10:22).

13. GAZELLE The gazelle is a fleet-footed animal noted for its attractive eyes. See Antelope above. Native to the Middle East, this animal resembles an antelope but is smaller. They were considered clean by the Israelites and thus were permitted as food (Deut. 12:15,22).

14. HARE The hare is a long-eared animal that is a close relative of the rabbit. The hare was classed as unclean (Lev. 11:6; Deut. 14:7) and were forbidden for Israelites to eat.

15. HIPPOPOTAMUS See Behemoth above.

16. HYENA The hyena is a striped scavenger that looks like a fox. The Hebrew word for hyena is found in the Bible as a geographical name (1 Sam. 13:18, Valley of Hyenas) and as the name of a town (Zeboim, Neh. 11:34). Once numerous in Palestine, the hyena appears only at night. Because of its scavenger activity of digging up graves, the hyena was a repulsive animal in the ancient world. They were easily tamed, and the Egyptians kept them as pets.

17. IBEX The ibex resembles a goat. The ibex has been identified as the wild goat of the Bible (1 Sam. 24:2; Ps. 104:18). The Nubian Ibex is found today in the area of Ein Gedi, an oasis near the Dead Sea.

18. JACKAL The jackal is a flesh-eating animal that resembles a fox. The same Hebrew word is translated both "jackal" and "fox." (In Judg. 15:4, NEB has jackals; NIV has foxes.) In Micah 1:8 and Isaiah 34:13 another Hebrew word is translated as "jackals" (KJV, dragon; NEB, wolf). The animals look similar, with the jackal having a broader head and shorter nose and ears than the fox. In temperament they are quite different. A noisy animal, the jackal is characterized by a nightly wailing. The jackal is a scavenger, while the fox is not. In contrast to the solitary character of the fox, the jackal is gregarious, but a place they haunt, humans have deserted (Isa. 13:22; Jer. 10:22). Luke 13:32 refers to the cunning and crafty nature of the fox.

Goats and a ram graze on a mountainside in Turkey. These animals were often chosen as offerings in ceremonies of sacrifice in biblical times.

19. LEOPARD The leopard is a large cat with yellow fur with black spots that form patterns. This animal was one of the most dangerous both to animals and human beings. Known for its gracefulness and speed, it was common in Palestine in Old Testament times, especially in the forests of Lebanon, but is seldom found there now. Five were killed around Jerusalem just before World War II, and one was killed in Southern Palestine near Beersheba soon after the war. The leopard still survives in Israel and is protected by the government. Two locations suggest habitats of leopards—Beth-nimrah ("leopards' house," Num. 32:36) and "waters of Nimrim" ("waters of leopards," Isa. 15:6; Jer. 48:34). In Hosea 13:7, the lurking, noiseless movement of the leopard symbolizes God's wrath. Isaiah illustrated the serene peace of God's kingdom as creating the seemingly impossible occurrence of a leopard lying down with the goat (Isa. 11:6). Some translate Habakkuk 1:8 as cheetah.

20. LION The lion is a large, swift-moving cat. The male has a heavy mane. Mentioned approximately 135 times in the Old Testament, the lion is the proverbial symbol for strength (Judg. 14:18). In Palestine, lions seemed to prefer the vegetation of the Jordan valley (Jer. 49:19). The Bible describes the lion as powerful and daring (Prov. 30:30) and distinguished by a terrifying roar (Isa. 5:29). It was a sign of the tribe of Judah (Gen. 49:9; Rev. 5:5). David defended his father's flock against lions and bears (1 Sam. 17:34–35). One of the most well-known stories in the Bible is about a young man being cast into a den of lions (Dan. 6:16–23). Since untamed lions were put in pits, it is possible that Daniel was cast into such a pit. Lions were kept as pets by pharaohs. The Hebrews seemed to make closer distinctions than does English in the lion family, since five unrelated Hebrew words are translated, "lion." They have disappeared from Palestine, with the last one killed near Megiddo in the thirteenth century.

21. MOLE The mole is a large rodent, grey in color. In Leviticus 11:30 some translate the Hebrew word as chameleon (NIV, NAS, RSV). Others translate, "mole" in Leviticus 11:29 (NAS, NEB), or in Isaiah 2:20 (NAS, RSV, KJV) See Rodent below.

22. MOUSE A mouse is a rodent with a pointed snout. As such it is unclean (Lev. 11:29). Mice were apparently feared as carriers of the plague (1 Sam. 6:4). See Rodent below.

23. OX The wild ox was a large beast that is believed to be the ancestor of domestic cattle. It symbolized ferocious strength. The Hebrew word translated unicorn in Numbers 23:22 (KJV) has been identified as the word for wild ox (NAS, NIV, RSV). Compare Psalm 22:21; 92:10. See Ox above.

24. PORCUPINE The porcupine or hedgehog is a large rodent that has stiff, sharp bristles mixed with its hair. Disagreement exists about the translation of the Hebrew word. Some feel porcupine is the correct translation. Others have various translations (NIV, owl; KJV, bittern; NEB, bustard).

25. PYGARG See Antelope above.

26. RAT A large rodent listed among the unclean animals (Lev. 11:29) but were eaten by a disobedient people (Isa. 66:17). See Rodents below.

27. RODENTS All small rodents are designated by the Hebrew akhbar, a generic word including both mice and rats. The Mosaic prohibition against eating rodents (Lev. 11:29) reveals their presence in the Holy Land. As a guilt offering for stealing the ark of the covenant, the Philistines were advised to send "five golden mice" to the Israelites when they returned the ark to them (1 Sam. 6:4, KJV; "rats," NIV). More than twenty varieties of small rodents have been identified in the Holy Land today.

28. WEASEL The weasel is a small mammal that is related to the mink. The weasel was common in the Holy Land, although mentioned only once in the Bible (Lev. 11:29; compare NAS, mole).

29. WHALE The whale is a large aquatic mammal that resembles a large fish (Ezek. 32:2; Jon. 1:17; Matt. 12:40).

The Greek word translated, "whale" in Matthew 12:40 (KJV) is also called "a great fish" (Jonah 1:17, NIV), "great creature" (Gen. 1:21; Ps. 148:7, NIV), "monster" (Job 7;12; Ezek. 32:2, NIV). The exact identification of the animal is impossible with present knowledge.

30. WOLF The wolf is a large wild canine that is thought to be the primary ancestor of the domestic dog. Common in Palestine in biblical times, the wolf constantly threatened sheep and shepherds and earned a reputation for viciousness (Gen. 49:27; Matt. 7:15; Luke 20:3). The wolf stalked prey at night (Jer. 5:6; Zeph. 3:3). Its method of attack is described in John 10:12. Its name is used symbolically to describe deceitful and greedy people (Ezek. 22:27; Acts 20:29).

Reptiles A reptile has been defined as "an animal that crawls or moves on its belly or on small short legs." This category of animals includes alligators, crocodiles, lizards, snakes, and turtles. It is generally agreed that, in many instances, the reptiles in the Bible cannot be specifically determined. Many times the same Hebrew word is translated in different ways. Leviticus 11:30 is a case in point. The same Hebrew word translated lizard in a number of translations is translated crocodile in the RSV. There does, however, seem to be a grouping of reptiles in this verse, even though the specific names may be difficult to determine.

1. ADDER The adder is a venomous snake. See Serpent below.

2. ASP The asp is a venomous snake. Modern translations often use "cobra." See Isaiah 11:8 in various translations. See Serpent below.

3. CHAMELEON The chameleon is a kind of lizard that changes color according to its surroundings. See Mole above. The unique design of its eyes characterizes the chameleon. Each eyeball moves independently; thus it can look two ways at the same time. Feeding mostly on insects, the chameleon is harmless. In Palestine it lives in trees and bushes and hangs onto branches with its long tail.

4. COBRA The cobra is a deadly poisonous snake with loose skin on its neck that forms a hood when the cobra is excited. See Asp.

5. COCKATRICE Cockatrice designates a venomous snake. Cockatrice is the name for a legendary serpent. As used in the KJV, however, it is a venomous snake. Later versions translate the Hebrew word "adder" (RSV) and "viper" or "venomous snake" (NIV).

6. CROCODILE The crocodile is a large, thick-skined, aquatic reptile. See Lizard below.

7. FROG The frog is a web-footed, amphibious animal. Frogs are mentioned prominently in connection with the ten plagues in Egypt, where frogs were quite common. The psalmist reminded the Israelites of plague devastation in Psalms 78; 105.

8. GECKO The gecko is a wall lizard. The gecko is a common type of lizard in the Holy Land. Sucking-disc toes enable it to run over walls and ceilings. Early versions translated the Hebrew word "ferret," while later scholars believe gecko is the correct translation (NAS, RSV, NIV). It is a harmless but repulsive-looking reptile.

9. LIZARD The lizard is a long-bodied reptile that is distinguished from the snake by two sets of short legs. Several kinds of lizards are mentioned in Leviticus 11:30: gecko, monitor lizard, wall lizard, skink, and chameleon (NIV). One traveler identified as many as forty-four different species in Palestine.

10. SERPENT Serpent seems to be a general name for long-bodied reptiles, specifically snakes such as the adder and viper. The serpent is mentioned numerous times in the Bible. At least thirty-three different species may be found in Palestine. Translators use various terms to translate the eight Hebrew terms. The serpent—usual name for snake—has been a continuing symbol of evil and of the evil one. See Adder; Asp; Cockatrice; Cobra; above and Viper below.

11. SKINK The skink is a small lizard listed among the unclean animals (Lev. 11:30 NIV). Other translations render, "sand reptile" (NAS), "snail" (KJV), "sand lizard" (NRSV).

12. SNAKE See Serpent above.

13. TORTOISE The tortoise is a land turtle listed among the unclean animals (Lev. 11:29 KJV). Other versions have "great lizard" (RSV; NAS; NIV) instead of tortoise.

14. VIPER The viper is a venomous snake. See Serpent above.

See Birds; Insects. Shirley Stephens

ANISE (Ăn′ ĭse) The KJV translation of the Greek term more properly translated as dill in Matthew 23:23. The KJV translates the corresponding Hebrew word as fitches in Isaiah 28:25,27 (but see Fitches). Dill is a leafy plant, resembling parsley. Dill was grown for its seeds, which were aromatic and used in cooking as a seasoning. See Spice, Spices.

ANKLET Ornamental rings worn above the ankles. The KJV has "tinkling ornaments about their feet" (Isa. 3:18; compare 3:16). Anklets were luxury items worn by the women of Jerusalem during the days of Isaiah. Archaeologists have recovered anklets that date to the biblical period. They are made of bronze, from 2½ to 4½ inches in diameter and from about 2/10 to 4/10 of an inch wide.

ANNA (Ăn′ nà) An aged prophetess who recognized the Messiah when He was brought to the Temple for dedication (Luke 2:36). Anna, whose name means "grace," was the daughter of Phanuel of the tribe of Asher. After seven years of marriage, she was widowed and became an attendant of the Temple. She was eighty-four when she recognized the Messiah, thanked God for Him, and proclaimed to all hope for the redemption of Jerusalem.

ANNAS (Ăn′ nàs), son of Seth, was a priest at the time John the Baptist began his public preaching (Luke 3:2). Evidently, Annas, whose name means "merciful," was appointed to the high priesthood about A.D. 6 by Quirinius, governor of Syria. Though he was deposed in A.D. 15 by Gratus, he continued to exercise considerable influence. When Jesus was arrested, He was taken before Annas (John 18:13). After Pentecost, Annas led other priests in questioning Peter and the other church leaders (Acts 4:6).

ANNUNCIATION Act of announcing or of being announced. The name is given the announcement to Mary by the angel Gabriel that she would give birth to a son who was to be named Jesus (Luke 1:26–38). This followed the account of Gabriel's announcement to Zacharias that he and his wife Elizabeth were to become the parents of John the Baptist. While the announcement to Mary about the Incarnation has become associated with the annunciation, the announcements to Samson (Judg. 13:2–5), Joseph (Matt. 1:20–25), and Zechariah (Luke 1:11–20) follow a similar pattern.

The Feast of the Annuniciation is celebrated on March 25 (Lady Day) by Roman Catholics, Anglicans, and Orthodox Christians. The first references to the feast, besides the Gelasian and Gregorian sacramentaries, are in acts of the Council of Toledo (656) and of the Trullan Council (692).

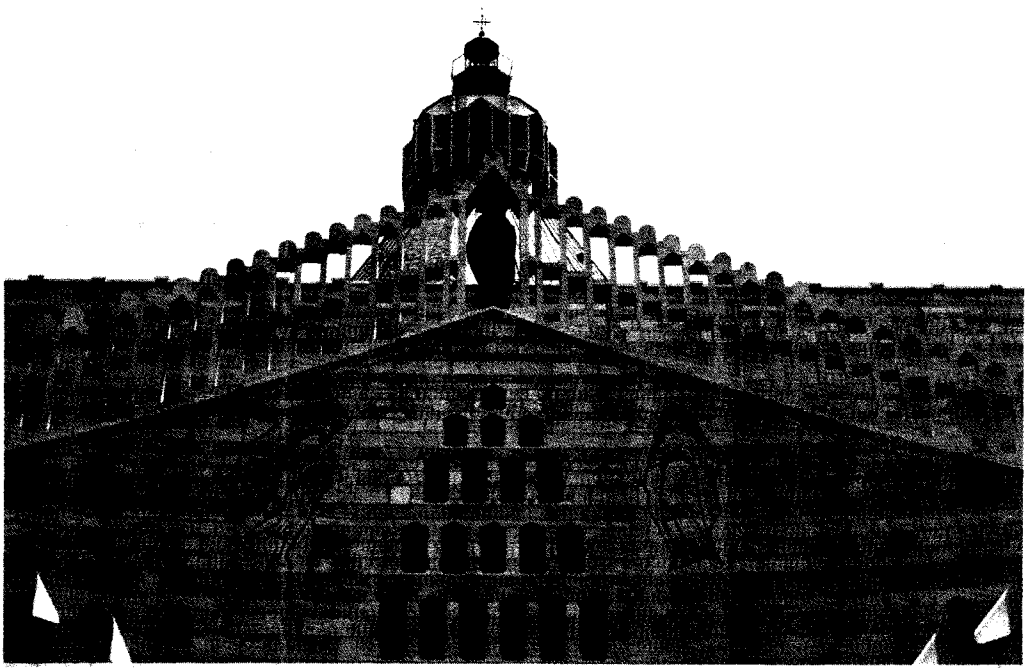
ANOINT describes the procedure of rubbing or smearing a person or thing, usually with oil, for the purpose of healing, setting apart, or embalming. A person can anoint himself, be anointed, or anoint another person or thing. While olive oil is the most common element mentioned in the Bible for use in anointing, oils produced from castor, bay, almond, myrtle, cyprus, cedar, walnut, and fish were also used. In Esther 2:12, for example, the oil of myrrh is used as a cosmetic.

The Hebrew verb mashach (noun, messiah) and the Greek verb chrio (noun, christos) are translated "to anoint." From ancient times the priests and kings were ceremonially anointed as a sign of official appointment to office, and as a symbol of God's power upon them. The act was imbued with an element of awe. David would not harm King Saul because of the anointing the king had received (1 Sam. 24:6). Likewise, Israel (Ps. 89:38), and even Cyrus (Isa. 45:1) are called God's anointed because of God's working through them. Israel came to see each succeeding king as God's anointed one, the messiah who would deliver them from their enemies and establish the nation as God's presence on the earth.

In the New Testament anoint is used to speak of daily grooming for hair (Matt. 6:17), for treating injury or illness (Luke 10:34), and for preparing a body for burial (Mark 16:1).



Christians see Jesus as God's Anointed One, the Savior (Acts 10:38). The same symbolism as in the Old Testament is employed in this usage: God's presence and power are resident in the anointing. Likewise, the Christian is anointed by God (2 Cor. 1:21; 1 John 2:27) for the tasks of ministry. Mike Mitchell

ANON (Å nŏn') Archaic word meaning "immediately."

ANT See Insects.

ANTEDILUVIANS meaning, "before the Deluge," refers to those who lived before the Flood described in Genesis 6–8. The early chapters of Genesis affirm that the God of Israel is the God who created the world and who guides all of human history. Those chapters connect the history of all humankind to that of God's covenant people, and thus to salvation history.

The genealogy in Genesis 4 is framed by two accounts of violence—1) the murder of Abel by Cain and God's promise of seven-fold vengeance on anyone who harmed Cain (Gen. 4:8–16), and 2) the war song of Lamech, threatening seventy-seven fold vengeance for any injury (Gen. 4:23–24). In between we are told of the cultural achievements of the antediluvians. Cain is credited with building the first city. The three sons of Lamech are attributed with the origins of cattle raising (Jabal), music (Jubal), and metallurgy

Church of the Annunciation in Nazareth commemorating Gabriel's unprecedented announcement to Mary.

(Tubal-cain). Since cultural achievements were often attributed to the gods in the Ancient Near East, the Scripture wants to emphasize that they are achievements of human beings created by the one God. The text is aware of parallel developments—beside the achievements of civilization stood the perennial violence which threatened it and used its technology for destructive purposes. This perpetual struggle to maintain order and to insure the proper use of cultural advances is a part of the human condition.

The longevity attributed to the antediluvians in Genesis 5 is the subject of study and debate. The ages of the antediluvians are reported somewhat differently in the Hebrew Bible (Masoretic Text), the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Greek Old Testament (Septuagint). One traditional view is that these people lived longer because they were closer to the state in which God created human beings. Others say that their more simple life and vegetarianism (Gen. 2:16–17; 3:18*b;* and Gen. 9:3) allowed for longer life spans. Some consider the numbers symbolic.

The discovery of lists of Sumerian kings who reigned before the Flood has thrown light on the theological significance of the text. The Sumerian kings, who were considered gods, were said to have lived for tens of thousands of years. In contrast, the biblical antediluvians were clearly human. Genesis emphasizes the oneness of God and the distinction between the Creator and human beings who were created. See Flood.

Wilda W. Morris

ANTELOPE A grass-eating deerlike animal which does not appear in the KJV but does in NAS, NIV, NRSV, TEV, translating Hebrew te'o, a word translated in different ways by the earliest translations. The references may be to a large white antelope or oryx (oryx leucoryx) with striking long horns, black markings, and a tuft of black hair under its neck. It had a divided hoof and chewed the cud and so qualified as a clean animal to be eaten (Deut. 14:5). They were hunted and caught with nets (Isa. 51:20).

The Rhorr gazelle found in the biblical region is one species in the biblical family of antelopes.

ANTHOTHIJAH (Ăn·thō·thī′ jăh) A descendant of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:24). The name may represent connection with city of Anathoth.

ANTHROPOLOGY The study of human beings; in biblical understanding involves who humans are in light of God's revelation in holy Scripture.

Old Testament The Old Testament accounts of history, the poetry of Wisdom Literature, and the pronouncements of the prophets work together to provide the Old Testament picture of humans.

Stated in its most pointed form, the anthropological question asks, "What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou dost care for him?" (Ps. 8:4 RSV). The psalmist's intense wondering has no simple solution. Indeed, the biblical portrait of humans is complex and often paradoxical. On one hand, humans are depicted as the crowning center of God's creative activity, fearfully and wonderfully made (Gen. 1:26–31; 2:4–7; Ps. 8:6–8). On the other hand, humans are "like a breath," physically frail, spiritually weak, and unable to stand before the holiness and righteousness of God (Pss. 90:5–6; 103:13–16; 144:3–4; 146:3–4). In traditional theological studies, the doctrines of humanity and sin have often been examined as one. Indeed, they are different sides of the same coin.

The scriptural picture of persons is constantly confirmed by human experience. The biblical awareness and understanding of humanity is both personal and profound because God knows human beings even better than they know themselves. Psalm 139 is a poignant and frightening expression of this kind of knowledge. The conclusion of the psalmist in praise to God is "Thou knowest me right well" (Ps. 139:14*b* RSV). God's deep knowledge of humanity points out both humanity's significance and insignificance, worth and unworthiness, capabilities and inadequacies. Wherever humanity is found, the condition and situation of humanity is tempered by the intimate and passionate knowledge of God. Because of that knowledge, humans need never be alone. Because of that knowledge, humans are unable to hide from God (Ps. 139:7–12). Indeed, it is only God who knows humanity (Jer. 17:9–10).

God's profound knowledge of humanity is rooted in His initial act of creation. Simply stated, the Creator knows the created. Although the Genesis account of creation intentionally and purposefully tells much about God, the account also speaks volumes about humans. Genesis 1—2, for example, boldly affirms God as Creator and Lord of all. At the same time, though, the passage declares just as boldly that God's creation is good, indeed humanity is very good (Gen. 1:31). The passage explicitly portrays humans as the highest of God's created beings, the center of God's marvelous creation (Gen. 1:26–30). Much more than a proclamation of honor or favored position, this pronouncement should be regarded as a serious statement of responsibility. (See Luke 12:48.)

Two anthropological truths become recurring themes throughout the biblical record. First, a human being is a totality of being, not a combination of various parts and impulses. According to the Old Testament understanding, a person is not a body which happens to possess a soul. Instead, a person is a living soul. Genesis 2:7 relates God forming man "of dust from the ground" and breathing into his nostrils "the breath of life." (See Jer. 18:6.) The man became human when God breathed the breath of life. Because of God's activity, humanity became a special and unique part of creation. Because of God's breath of life, the man became "a living being" (Gen. 2:7). A person, thus, is a complete totality, made up of human flesh, spirit (best understood as "the life-force"), and nephesh (best understood as "the total self" but often translated as "soul"). Human flesh cannot exist alone. Neither can spirit or nephesh exist alone. Together, however, they comprise a complete person.

A second major anthropological truth originally proclaimed in the Genesis account of creation and echoed by later biblical writers affirms that a person is created in the image and likeness of God. The idea is explicitly stated in Genesis 1:26–31; 5:1–3; and 9:1–7. The idea is more implicit, but still present in Psalm 8. Specific New Testament references to the concept include 1 Corinthians 11:7; Colossians 3:1; and James 3:9. The created bears some kind of resemblance to the Creator. "Image" and "likeness" simply intensify the same truth. The two words do not signify different or unique aspects of the human person.

A better understanding of the image of God stresses the truth that all human beings are equally included. The image of God is expressed by two parallel ideas. First, the image of God refers to the human capability to respond to God and to enter into relationship with God. Second, the image of God refers to the human responsibility to respond to God and to enter into relationship with God. Obviously, this understanding of the image of God is unrelated to any kind of physical similarity. At the same time, it claims that the image and likeness include the total self, not only reasoning ability or traits of personality. Seeing the image of God in this light leads to the conclusion that people occupy a high place in God's creation. In fact, people are God's representative on earth, the possessor of God-given power and dominion over creation, and the only part of creation reflecting God in this way.

New Testament The place of people in God's activity of creation is parallelled by their place in God's activity of redemption. The New Testament insists that people have failed to accept the responsibility given in Genesis 1:29–30. It is equally insistent that God's high regard for humans has not diminished. New Testament writers stress human sin throughout (Rom. 3:9–20; 6:23); still, the broader theme of God's love for all humanity is echoed at every turn. John 3:16 speaks of an intense and passionate love of a mighty God for all creation. The New Testament teachings about humanity, God, and salvation are clear: despite humanity's unworthiness, God loves with an everlasting love. In fact, the worth or value claimed by Scripture for humans is because of God's initial act of creation or God's great sacrifice through Jesus Christ. Human worth and dignity, whatever that may entail, is unavoidably tied to God. As a result, a proper theological conclusion would be "God loves people; therefore a person has value and worth." Human worth is based upon relationship with God.

The Old Testament truth that people exist as a totality remained firm in New Testament writings. In the New Testament scheme, four dimensions of life are designated in place of the Hebraic flesh, spirit, and nephesh. The body (Greek, sōma) is simply the shape or form of a person (1 Pet. 2:24; although Rom. 12:1 can best be translated "selves"). The soul (Greek, psuche, related to the Old Testament nephesh) points to the "total self." John 10:11 tells of Jesus "laying down his life for his sheep." The Greek word normally translated "life" in John 10:11 is psuche, the word for "soul." Jesus sacrificed His total self or His whole being for His sheep. Life in the spiritual dimension is called spirit (Greek, pneuma). Like its Old Testament counterpart, the New Testament root meaning of spirit refers to "wind," "breath," or "force." Spirit, therefore, is the energizing life-force, the innermost part of human beings (1 Cor. 2:10–11). While spirit seems to be the dimension whereby humans can cooperate with and respond to God, flesh is that dimension that represents human finitude and weakness. Similar to its Old Testament counterpart, flesh (Greek, sarx) in the New Testament suggests physical failing and the inability to transcend the physical dimension. It would be unwise, however, to conclude that, in itself, flesh is evil. (See John 1:14.) Jesus, the Word made flesh, was certainly not evil.

The New Testament illustrates four specific and distinct dimensions of human existence, but the writers of the New Testament affirm with the Old Testament writers that a human being is a totality, a complete whole. Quoting Deuteronomy 6:4, Jesus taught that "you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength" (Mark 12:30). The message is clear: true love of God is love with the total person—heart, soul, mind, and strength. In the same light, "no one can serve two masters" (Matt. 6:24). Because a human being is a complete whole, a divided allegiance is impossible. This biblical idea of humans carries with it profound ethical and social implications. To understand the truth that a person is a total being is to see that ministry must focus upon every dimension of existence. True ministry is, therefore, concerned with the spiritual, the social, the physical, and the psychological.

A

While the Old Testament seems to affirm the survival of the image of God in people even after the Fall, it is also true that the original relationship between the Creator and the created has been altered. New Testament writers, in general, note the existence of the image even in "natural man" but, more significantly, see the proper restoration of the image of God in people through redemption in Jesus Christ (Rom. 8:29; 1 Cor. 11:7; Jas. 3:9). Proper relationship with God through Jesus Christ allows for the renewal of the true image of God. Unique to the New Testament view is the idea that ultimately the true image of God can be seen in Christ (John 12:45; 14:9; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3). With this in mind, Paul developed the theologically potent distinction between "the first man Adam" and "the last Adam" (1 Cor. 15:45–47).

From the standpoint of the complete biblical record, the doctrine of humanity includes at least two additional ideas. First, the doctrine of humanity is primarily based upon a concept of relationship. At its ultimate level, this relationship is portrayed as the encounter of a loving, seeking, powerful God with a weak, finite, sinful human being. Granting purpose and life to men and women, this relationship necessarily leads to relationships between human beings. The relationship of God and humanity in the Old Testament vision points directly to the relationships of human beings within Christ's church, a community of human beings called out to minister to all of God's creation.

A second idea is closely related to this. For the biblical writers, humans are at once individuals standing alone before God and members of a corporate community standing before God. The individual nature of humanity can be seen in God's call of Abraham, the psalmist's description of God's intimate knowledge, the ministry of Jesus with specific individuals in need, and Paul's understanding of humans as individual sinners. The corporate nature of humanity can be seen in the Old Testament concepts of family, tribe, nation, and kingdom, Jesus' calling out of a redemptive community of followers, and the establishment of the church as the corporate body of God's people on earth.

Theological Affirmations Despite the diversity and complexity of the biblical doctrine of humanity, several significant theological conclusions may be affirmed.

1. Human beings have worth. The biblical record explicitly and implicitly affirms the value and worth of humanity. This positive statement is grounded in God's creative activity, the ultimate plan of redemption that has been revealed in Jesus Christ, and the ongoing care that God provides for all creation. The worth of humanity is not based on anything inherent in people but is the result of God choosing to grant worth and dignity to people. As such, the value of humanity is a God-given value.

2. Human beings are frail and sinful. The Bible affirms both explicity and implicity the weaknesses and shortcomings of human beings. Manifest as both physical weakness and spiritual failing, this frailty is seen properly in contrast to the holiness and righteousness of God. The condition of humanity leads to the conclusion that all individuals are dependent upon God and that salvation truly is a matter of God's grace, not human effort or striving.

3. Human beings exist as individuals before God. God confronts, convicts, and calls out human beings as individuals. God's knowledge of people is intimate, personal, and profound. God's love is offered to human beings individually. The relationship between humanity and God is the most significant and vital part of human existence.

4. Human beings exist in community. God also confronts, convicts, and calls out communities of people. The relationship of an individual with God is necessarily tied to relationships with others. This profound theological truth leads to serious questions of group identity, corporate responsibility, and ethical consciousness. Related to this affirmation is the biblical truth that humans exist primarily for relationship. This seems to be a central focus of creation, salvation, and corporate Christian identity.

5. Human beings exist as complete, total beings. Although the biblical picture of humanity acknowledges several distinct dimensions of existence, the dimensions form one whole. In biblical terms, the physical dimension, the spiritual dimension, and the social dimension are absolutely and inseparably tied together. God created humans to be total persons. As a result, the church is called to minister and to proclaim the message of Jesus Christ to the total person. See Salvation; Sin; Ethics; Death; Eternal Life; Creation.

Barry Stricker

ANTHROPOMORPHISM (Ăn·thrō·pō·mŏr·phĭz·m) is the process of applying human characteristics to a god, an animal, or an inanimate object. The English word is derived from combining two Greek words—anthropos, which means "man" or "mankind," and morphe, which means "form" or "shape." Thus, anthropomorphism is giving human form to something not inherently human. In biblical studies the term focuses on those human characteristics applied to God.

The Biblical Tension Biblical faith emerged in a world where deities often were portrayed in human and/or animal form and were worshiped as physical images. Persons in primitive religions first sought spiritual reality in their daily experiences. Rocks, trees, the sun, the earth, or other natural objects were the focus for their sense of mystery and awe. Later religious thought centered in human experience, and mankind began to personify its gods in graven or molten images.

Despite its prohibitions against idolatry, Israel's faith did not flee from every attempt to personify God. Unlike some philosophical religions, biblical faith does not reduce God to mere abstractions. Instead, God is affirmed as active in daily life. Though eternal and transcendent, He also is personal and present. He reveals Himself through historical actions and relationships with His people.

Actions and Relationships Anthropomorphism grows naturally in a faith that views God as active and relational. Israel received God's revelation and expressed its faith in this personal God who had chosen them. Its religious expressions also were drawn from life (and especially from personal relationships); but the form of God was preserved in mystery, and His character was revealed rather than conceived.

Thus anthropomorphic imagery thrives in the Bible. In the typically concrete fashion of the Hebrew mind, the inspired writers of the Old Testament speak of God's eyes, ears, hands, and feet; but they meticulously avoid letting the descriptions become too tangible and concrete. God's movement among humanity is described as walking; His acceptance of sacrifice is through smell; His awareness of human plight is through sight; His feelings are represented in terms of human emotion. He rules as king, tends as shepherd, loves as father. This picturesque language is metaphor, but it is more. It is faith affirming the reality, uniqueness, and sovereignty of God.

The Image of God Behind the anthropomorphisms of the Old Testament lies another foundational concept. Genesis speaks of mankind—both male and female—being created in God's "image" and "likeness" (Gen. 1:26–27; 5:1–2; 9:6). Here is the reverse of anthropomorphism. Rather than creating an image of God out of personal experience or imagination, mankind is an image of God.

In some ways, then, anthropomorphic presentations of God and theomorphic (in the form or image of theos, "God") presentations of mankind are reciprocal. What we are intended to be is most fully reflected in what He is (see 1 John 3:2). What He is can be understood more fully in the familiar and concrete images of daily life and experience. Jesus' teachings certainly underscore this mutual relationship. His parables especially speak of God in anthropomorphic terms.

The Incarnation While the Old Testament concept of the image of God is reflected in the New Testament (see 1 Cor. 11:7; Jas. 3:9), the idea is transformed in light of the incarnation. In a sense, the ultimate anthropomorphism is seen in the eternal Word of God becoming flesh and dwelling among us (John 1:14). The uniqueness of God's revelation in Christ so overshadows the earlier concept that some New Testament writers present the image of God in terms of the perfect image revealed in Christ (2 Cor. 4:4; Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3; compare John 1:14; 12:45; 14:9). The image of God in mankind is so eclipsed by the revelation in Christ that one must "put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him" (Col. 3:10; see Eph. 4:24).

Michael Fink

ANTICHRIST describes a particular individual or a group of people who oppose God and His purpose.

Old Testament The Old Testament described the antichrist in various ways. Especially in Daniel, there arose the expectation of one who would oppose the Lord and His people Israel. This evil leader was referred to as the king of the north (11:40) who would come with a mighty army to crush the nations, to persecute the righteous (7:25), to bring death (8:10), and to set up his throne in the Temple (8:13). This latter event the Jews term the "abomination of desolation." Many Jews viewed the arrival of Antiochus Epiphanes IV as the embodiment of these verses. Yet in the mind of many Jews, the rule of Antiochus did not meet the full expectations of these Scriptures. There evolved a permanent expectation of an antichrist figure in Judaism. In later Jewish history such Roman figures as Pompey and Caligula were identified with the antichrist.

In Daniel one also finds a collective antichrist. In 7:7–28 the Fourth Empire was viewed as a collective antichrist. In later Judaism, the Fourth Kingdom or the collective antichrist was viewed as the Roman Empire (2 Baruch 26–40; 4 Ezra 5:3–4).

New Testament In the New Testament, the only use of the term "antichrist," is in the Johannine epistles. 1 John 2:18 speaks of the antichrist who is the great enemy of God and, in particular, antichrists who precede that great enemy. These antichrists were human teachers who had left the church. Such antichrists deny the incarnation (1 John 4:3) and Christ's deity (1 John 2:2). In 2 John 7, the antichrists are identified as deceivers who teach that Jesus Christ did not come in the flesh. The concept of the antichrist appears in the term "false Christ" (pseudo christos) (Matt. 24:24; Mark 13:22). Mark and Matthew apparently expected a Roman ruler to once again enter the Temple as did Antiochus and Pompey. In Revelation 13:3, the beast from the sea is often viewed as an antichrist figure. There John may have looked for a return of the emperor Nero.

In 2 Thessalonians 2:1–12, the antichrist figure is armed with satanic power and is fused with Beliar, a satanic being. In this passage the Roman government is viewed as restraining its power. In Revelation, the Roman caesar is the evil force.

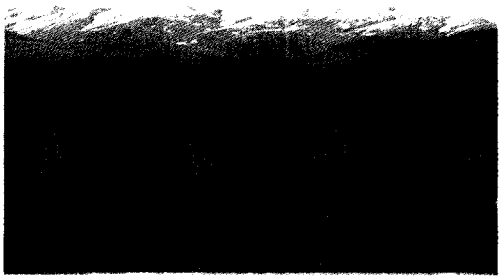
Contemporary Concerns Christians today have differing views of the antichrist figure. Dispensationalists look for a future Roman ruler who will appear during the tribulation and will rule over the earth. Those in the amillennialist school interpret the term symbolically. James L. Blevins

ANTIMONY (An′ tĭ mō ny) A silvery-white, brittle, metalic chemical element of crystalline structure, found only in combination. It is used in alloys with other metals to harden them and increase their resistance to chemical actions. Compounds of antimony are used in medicines, pigments, matches, and fireproofing. In the NRSV and the NAS antimony is used as a translation of the Hebrew terms 'abne-puk to describe the materials used to build the Temple (1 Chron. 29:2; see Isa. 54:11; NIV has turquoise; REB and TEV stones for mosaic work; KJV, glistering stones and stones with fair colors, respectively). It is likely that 'abne-puk refers to some sort of cement or mortar used in the creation of mosaics, which it is suggested, would make precious stones appear larger and more colorful. In two other passages (2 Kings 9:30; Jer. 4:30), puk is consistently translated as eye paint. One of Job's daughters was named Keren-hapuk—that is, "horn of eye paint" (Job 42:14).

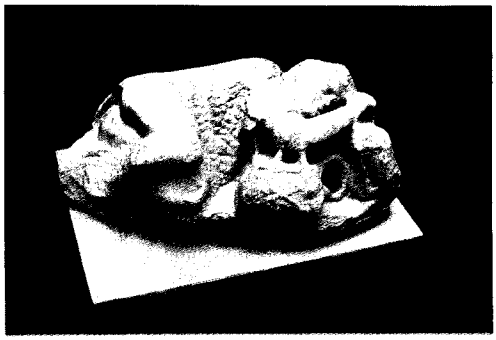
ANTINOMIANISM (Ăn tĭ nō′ mĭ ăn ĭsm) The false teaching that since faith alone is necessary for salvation, one is free from the moral obligations of the law. The word antinomianism is not used in the Bible, but the idea is spoken of. Paul appears to have been accused of being an antinomian (see Rom. 3:8; 6:1,15). While it is true that obedience to the law will never earn salvation for anyone (Eph. 2:8–9), it is equally true that those who are saved are expected to live a life full of good works (see, for example, Matt. 7:16–20; Eph. 2:10; Col. 1:10; Jas. 2:14–26). Since we have been freed from the dominion of sin through faith in Jesus, we have also been freed to practice the righteousness demanded by God (Rom. 6:12–22).

ANTIOCH (Ăn′ tĭ·ŏch) names two New Testament cities one of which was home to many Diaspora Jews (Jews living outside of Palestine and maintaining their religious faith among the Gentiles) and the place where believers, many of whom were Gentiles, were first called Christians.



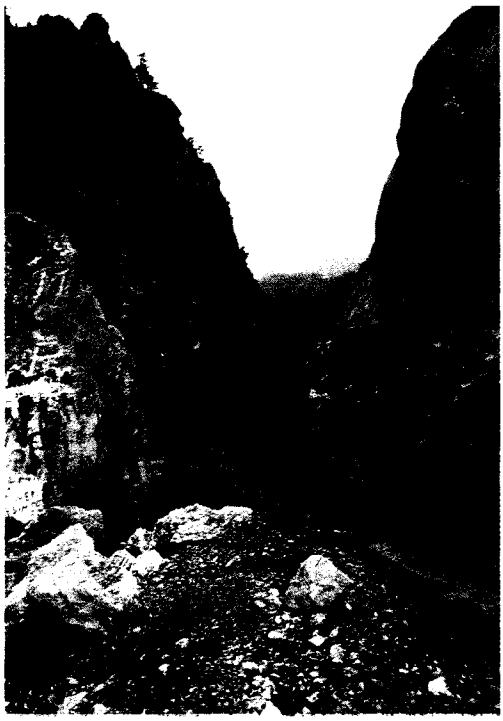
1. The largest city of the Roman empire after Rome in Italy and Alexandria in Egypt. Because so many ancient cities were called by this name, it is often called Antioch on the Orontes (River) or Antioch of Syria. Antioch was founded around 300 B.C. by Seleucus Nicator. From the beginning it was a bustling maritime city with its own seaport. It lay about 20 miles inland from the Mediterranean in ancient Syria on the Orontes River nearly three hundred miles north of Jerusalem.

A great Roman aqueduct at Antioch of Pisidia brought water to the city from the mountains to the north.



Many Jews of the Diaspora lived in Antioch and engaged in commerce, enjoying the rights of citizenship in a free city. Many of Antioch's Gentiles were attracted to Judaism. As was the case with many of the Roman cities of the east, Antioch's patron deity was the pagan goddess Tyche or "Fortune."

In the New Testament only Jerusalem is more closely related to the spread of early Christianity. Luke mentioned Nicholas of Antioch in Acts 6:5 among the Greek-speaking leaders of the church in Jerusalem. The persecution that arose over Stephen resulted in Jewish believers scattering to Cyprus, Cyrene, and Antioch (Acts 11:19). In Antioch the believers were first called Christians (11:26), and it was to Antioch that Barnabas fetched Saul (Paul) from Tarsus so that they could teach this mixed congregation of Jewish and Gentile followers of the Lord. At Antioch the Christian prophet Agabus foretold the famine that would shortly overtake the Roman world (11:28). The disciples responded with the work of famine relief for the church in Jerusalem, directed and carried out from Antioch. The church at Antioch felt the leading of the Holy Spirit to set aside Barnabas and Saul for what was the first organized mission work (13:1–3). Barnabas and Saul left for Seleucia (also known as Pieria, Antioch's Mediterranean seaport) to begin their preaching. The church at Antioch heard the reports of Paul and Barnabas on return from their first missionary journey (14:27) and likely their second missionary journey (18:22). This was a missionary effort to both Jews and Gentiles, about which Paul says in Galatians 2:11 that he had to oppose Peter to his face at Antioch.



Pisidian Antioch in the mountains of Asia Minor (modern Turkey) north of the Mediterranean Sea.

A small first-century marble statue of a sleeping traveler reminiscent of Paul from Antioch of Syria.

Archaeological excavations at Antioch have been very fruitful, revealing a magnificent, walled Roman city of theatres, forums, a circus, and other public buildings. The language of the city was Greek, as inscriptions and public records show, but the language of the peasantry around this mighty city was Syriac, a dialect of Aramaic.

2. A city in Pisidia, Asia Minor, west of Iconium. Like the Syrian Antioch, this Antioch was founded by Seleucus Nicator. Under Roman rule, this city was called Caesarea. Paul preached in a synagogue there on his first missionary journey (Acts 13:14) and was warmly received (13:42–44). Jewish jealously led to a separate ministry to Gentiles (13:46). Finally, Jews drove Paul and Barnabas from the city. These Jews from Antioch followed Paul to Lystra and stirred up trouble there (14:19). Despite this, Paul returned to Antioch to strengthen the church (14:21). Paul used the experience to teach Timothy (2 Tim. 3:11).

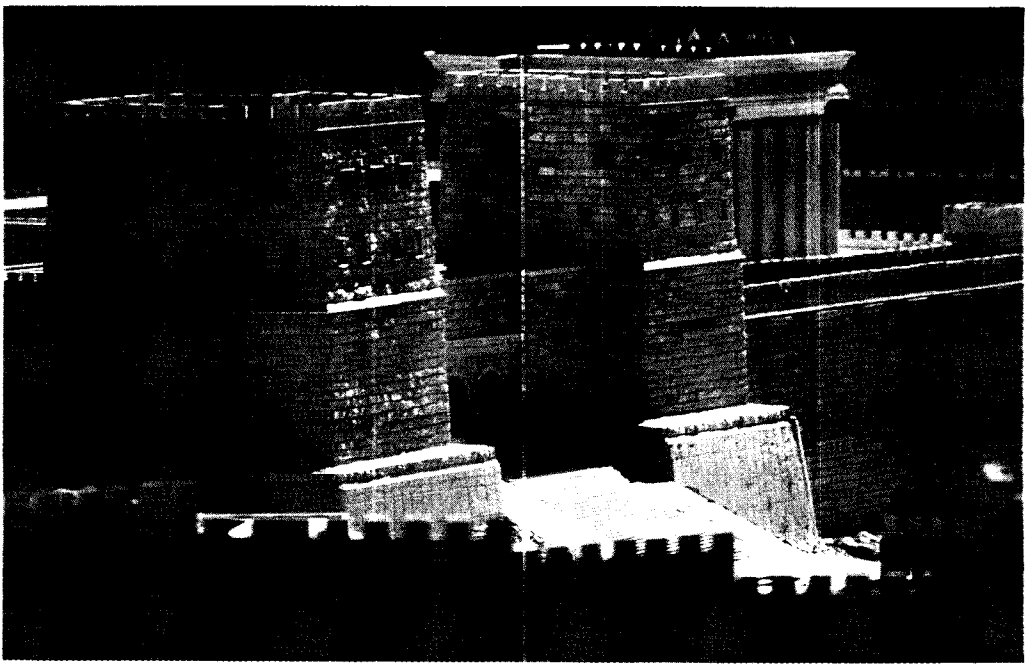
The Cilician Gates through the Taurus Mountains north of Antioch of Syria through which Paul passed.

James F. Strange

ANTIOCHUS (Ăn·tī′ ō·chŭs) Name of thirteen rulers of Syria Palestine headquartered in Antioch. They were part of the Seleucid dynasty which inherited part of Alexander the Great's kingdom. No Antiochus is specifically mentioned in Scripture. Many Bible students think the Book of Daniel originally had its attention focused on the Seleucid kings, particularly Antiochus IV (175 to 164 B.C.). The Maccabean revolt and Jewish intertestamental history occurred during the reigns of the Antiochus kings. See Daniel; Intertestamental History; Maccabees.

ANTIPAS (Ăn′ tĭ·pàs) names a martyr in Revelation and the son of Herod the Great. 1. The tetrarch of Galilee at the time John the Baptist and Jesus began their public ministries (Luke 3:1). Antipas, whose name is an abbreviation of Antipater, ordered John the Baptist beheaded (Matt. 14:3). Pilate sent Jesus to Antipas prior to the crucifixion. On that occasion, he treated Jesus with scornful contempt (Luke 23:11). This won the friendship of Pilate. See Herod.

2. According to tradition, the martyr of the church of Pergamum in Revelation 2:13 was roasted in a brazen bowl at Domitian's request.



ANTIPATRIS (Ăn·tĭ·păt′ rĭs) Place name meaning, "in place of father." City Herod the Great built to honor his father Antipater in 9 B.C. It was 40 miles from Jerusalem and 25 miles from Caesarea on the famous Via Maris, "way of the sea," international highway. Roman soldiers taking Paul from Jerusalem to Caesarea spent the night at Antipatris (Acts 23:31). It is located on the site of Old Testament Aphek. See Aphek.

ANTONIA, TOWER OF names a fortress near the Temple built around A.D. 6 that served as a palace residence for King Herod, barracks for the Roman troops, a safe deposit for the robe of the high priest, and a central courtyard for public speaking. The tower of Antonia is not mentioned directly in the Bible. It served various functions between A.D. 6 and A.D. 66, the time of its destruction by Titus. Herod the Great built the tower at the northwest corner of the Temple court to replace the Maccabean fort. The tower was 75 feet high and was named for Herod's friend, Mark Anthony. Although the name "Antonia" is not used in the Bible, several references from the first century Jewish historian, Josephus, describe the appearance and function of the tower of Antonia.

Josephus describes the splendor of the tower with spacious apartments, elaborate baths, and beautiful courtyards. The tower served as an official residence for the Roman procurators. Capable of accomodating at least a Roman cohort (500–600 men), the tower housed portions of the Roman army used to guard the Jews inside the Temple court. Herod required that the vestments of the high priest be kept in the tower to maintain control over the worship festivals of the Jews.

The pavement beneath the modern convent of Notre Dame de Sion has been thought to be the place of the tower's courtyard, traditionally considered the site of Jesus' trial before Pilate (John 19:13). Recent archeological evidence, however, has shown that the pavement dates from the second century and not the time of Jesus.

Antonia Fortress (Tower of Antonia) in the model of first-century Jerusalem (Holyland Hotel, Jerusalem).

Linda McKinnish Bridges

ANTOTHIJAH (Ăn·tō·thī′ jah) KJV spelling of Anthothijah. See Anthothijah.

ANTOTHITE (Ăn′ tō·thīte) Person from Anathoth in KJV spelling. See Anathoth.

ANXIETY The state of mind wherein one is concerned about something or someone. This state of mind may range from genuine concern (see Phil. 2:20,28; 2 Cor. 11:28) to obsessions that originate from a distorted perspective of life (Matt. 6:25–34; Mark 4:19; Luke 12:22–31). Jesus did not prohibit genuine concern about food or shelter, but He did teach that we should keep things in their proper perspective. We should make God's kingdom our first priority; everything else will fall in line after we do that (Matt. 6:33).

ANUB (Ā′ nŭb) Personal name meaning, "grape," or "with a mustache." A member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8).

APE Solomon imported animals in international shipping (1 Kings 10:22). The Hebrew term qoph may refer to apes (papio hamadrias arabicus), using a loanword from Egyptian, but the exact animal referred to by this term is far from certain, the animal apparently being an imported novelty for the people of Solomon's day.

APELLES (Å·pĕl′ lēs) A Christian in Rome whom Paul saluted as "approved in Christ" (Rom. 16:10), which may mean he had been tested by persecution and proved faithful.

APHARSACHITES (Å·phär′ săch·ītes) or APHARSATHCHITES KJV transliteration of Aramaic terms in Ezra 4:9; 5:6; 6:6. Modern translations translate the term to indicate government officials: governors (RSV); officials (NIV; NAS). The term in 4:9 may represent officials representing the Persian king in the provinces of his kingdom. The term in 5:6 and 6:6 may refer to government investigators or inspectors.

APHARSITES (Å·phär′ sītes) KJV transliteration of Aramaic term in Ezra 4:9 variously translated and interpreted by modern translators and Bible students: men from Persia (NIV); Persians (RSV); secretaries (NAS). The verse is difficult to read in the original language, and no satisfactory interpretation has been offered.

APHEK (Ā′ phĕk) Place name meaning "bed of brook or river" or "fortress." 1. City whose king Joshua defeated (Josh. 12:18), where Philistine armies formed to face Israel in days of Samuel (1 Sam. 4:1) resulting in Philistine victory and capture of Israel's ark of the covenant. Philistine armies including David and his men gathered in Aphek to fight Saul. The Philistine commanders forced Achish to send David back from battle (1 Sam. 29). Eventually the Philistines defeated Israel, bringing death to Saul and Jonathan.

Aphek is located at modern Tell Ras el′ Ain near the source of the Yarkon River in the Sharon plain northeast of Joppa. Egyptian execration texts from about 1900 B.C. apparently refer to Aphek. Aphek became known as Antipatris in the New Testament era. See Antipatris. 2. Northern border city which Joshua did not conquer (Josh. 13:4).

Late Bronze Age palace excavated at Aphek-Antipatris.

This may be modern Afqa, fifteen miles east of ancient Byblos and 23 miles north of Beirut, Lebanon. 3. City assigned to Asher (Josh. 19:30) but not conquered (Judg. 1:31). This may be modern Tell Kerdanah three miles from Haifa and six miles southeast of Acco. 4. City east of Jordan near the Sea of Galilee where Benhadad led Syria against Israel about 860 but met defeat as a prophet predicted for Israel (1 Kings 20:26–30). A wall of Aphek fell on 27,000 Syrians (1 Kings 20:30). Also Elisha promised Joash victory over the Syrians in Aphek (2 Kings 13:17).

APHEKAH (Å·phē′ kăh) City Joshua assigned to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:53). Its location is unknown.

APHIAH (Ā·phī′ ah) Personal name meaning "forehead." An ancestor of King Saul from the tribe of Benjamin (1 Sam. 9:1).

APHIK (Ā·phĭk) Variant Hebrew spelling of Aphek (Judg 1:31). See Aphek, 3.

APHRAH (Ăph′ rah) KJV interpretation of place name in Micah 1:10, also called Beth Ophrah (NIV) or Beth-le-aph′ rah (RSV; NAS); or Beth Leaphrah (TEV). The longer name used in modern translations means "house of dust" and is used to make a wordplay by Micah, the meaning of the name being more important than the actual city. The city has not been located. It may be modern tel et-Taijibe near Hebron.

A

APHSES (Ăph′ sēs) KJV spelling of Happizzez. See Happizzez.

APIS (Ā′ pĭs) Sacred bull worshiped in Memphis, Egypt. RSV and TEV divide the words in Jeremiah 46:15 differently than does printed Hebrew text. They thus translate, "Why has Apis fled?" (RSV) or "Why has your mighty God Apis fallen?" (TEV). Other translations retain the present Hebrew text and read, "Why are thy valiant men swept away?" (KJV)

APOCALYPTIC describes: (1) writings from God that employ symbolic language to tell of a divine intervention soon to take place; (2) the doctrinal system explicit in these writings; and (3) the movement(s) that produced the writings and doctrines.

Old Testament While portions of Joel, Amos, Zechariah, and Isaiah have apocalyptic features, Daniel is the only Old Testament book which is wholly apocalyptic.

New Testament "Apocalyptic" is derived from the Greek verb apokalupto, "to uncover," and so figuratively "to disclose, reveal." Its use, however, is due to the opening word of the Book of Revelation, apokalupsis, which means an "uncovering," "a disclosure, a revelation." This term has passed into English as "apocalypse." When writers refer to "the Apocalypse," they mean the Book of Revelation; when they speak of an apocalypse, or apocalypses, or apocalyptic writings, they mean works written in a similar style to the Book of Revelation. The first sentence of the Book of Revelation is noteworthy in this connection: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave to him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: who bare record. . .of all things that he saw." The italicized expressions illustrate the fundamental features of the genre of apocalyptic: these writings claim to originate from God; they most frequently tell of a divine intervention soon to take place; their authors often use sign language—i.e. they "sign-ify," employing pictorial language which is also parabolic; an angelic intermediary commonly explains to the prophet the meaning of the message conveyed to him; and the prophet makes known to others his visions ("all that he saw"). John's "apocalypse" is specifically stated to be a Christian revelation: it is "the revelation of Jesus Christ," received from God; accordingly it is described as "the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ." It is thereby declared to be an authentic apocalypse. John the prophet would have been aware that there were many other works which possessed similar literary characteristics as his own, the most notable being the Book of Daniel.

Extra-biblical Sources The other apocalyptic writings are outside the Bible and mainly belong to the period 200 B.C.–A.D. 100. The best known of the extra-biblical apocalyptic books are 1 Enoch (often called "Ethiopic Enoch," since it survives in that language), 2 Enoch, 4 Ezra, and 2 Baruch. With these Jubilees, Psalms of Solomon, Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Sibylline Oracles are generally classed, although their form differs from that of "classic apocalyptic." It is not clear, however, that we should postulate a standard structure of apocalyptic writing; the use of symbolism, whether of animals or of mythical monsters, of visions and of messianic woes varies greatly.

Apocalyptic Movement The so-called "apocalyptic movement" which gave birth to the apocalyptic literature had its roots in Israel's history. The creation myths of the Semitic world supplied quarries for the picture language employed by the prophets and apocalyptists. The leading literary features and apocalyptic message were conditioned above all by Israel's history and experience of God. Historical alienation created the conditions wherein apocalypticism flourished. Estrangement resulted from the disintegration of society, caused by oppression or the ravages of war. The isolation of a group within its society also caused alienation. While the Jewish literature that concerns us was the offspring of Old Testament prophecy, the apocalyptic movement had parallels in the contemporary world of the Middle East. Other nations resisted Greek rule and created hopes of a renewal of a native kingship. They divided history into four successive kingdoms and expected a god to intervene to restore order and bring victory. This shows the links between the religious thought of nations of the ancient world, of their response to aggressive oppression, and of their hope in deliverance from God.

Characteristics of Apocalyptic Writing The characteristics of Jewish apocalyptic writings are widely discussed, sometimes without due regard for the diversity in these writings. It is commonly agreed that three major features characterize apocalyptic thinking: dualism, determinism, and pessimism. Dualism is the dominant characteristic and is expressed in two ways: (1) in a dual spacial order—powers of heaven and powers of hell, hence angels and demons in abundance, spirits of good and spirits of evil, a holy Spirit and an evil prince of this world; (2) in a historical dualism—the present age is ruled by the evil powers and is wholly wicked, but it will be succeeded by the age to come, which will be ruled by God and therefore will be good. The ordering of the ages for the accomplishment of God's purpose in the coming age often entails a determinism, which can be applied to the last detail of history. This means God has already planned each historical event regardless of human choices and acts. This in turn can lead to pessimism, such as that in 4 Ezra. Examples of dualism or determinism in some literature does not mean every writer of apocalytic works believed in a world dominated by dualism and determinism. Persian religion had the ultimate dualism. The powers of good and evil were co-equal. This was impossible in Jewish thought, whose main belief was one God without equal. The idea that the devil is lord of the present age was not shared by all apocalyptists; for example, in Daniel 4:25, Nebuchadnezzar was told that he would be humbled until he learned that "the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will," (compare Rev. 13:5–10). Positively, we should view these insights as subsumed under the heading of the sovereignty of God. He is Lord of the universe, and so of all powers; the good are His ministers, the evil have to contribute to His will. The two ages are a clarification of the prophetic view of history leading to the day of the Lord, the coming of God, and the fulfillment of His purpose in the victorious kingdom of God. The determinism of which these writings speak is an attempt to set forth God's will as done on earth as in heaven. Such a faith is not rightly described as pessimism. It certainly postulates the inability of humanity to save itself and thus looks to God to complete history in the kingdom of glory. The end therefore is good!

Most apocalyptic works are ascribed to an ancient saint, as their names imply (for example, the books of Enoch, the Apocalypse of Abraham, of Noah, of Ezra, of Baruch). The reason for this form is still uncertain; it obviously includes the desire for a book to gain a hearing, but it also expresses the conviction that the revelations have come down from ancient times, somewhat as the Pharisees believed that their tradition went back to Moses. Pseudonymity, however, was not a necessary adjunct of apocalyptic work; the literature of Qumran is without it, and the supreme example of apocalyptic writing, the Book of Revelation, was issued in the name of its author.

Significance The chief importance of the apocalyptic literature was its enabling the prophetic faith in God and hope for His kingdom to burn brightly in oppressive times. At its best it was more than maintenance of dogma. It encouraged people to be ready for and participate in God's final victory in history. Thus it encouraged an alienated, estranged, defeated people to live for God and to hope in His promised coming. Apocalyptic writing found its correction and true fulfillment in the message of Jesus, and in His living, dying, rising, and the hope of His appearance.

George Beasley-Murray

APOCRYPHA Jews did not stop writing for centuries between the Old Testament and the New. The Intertestamental Period was a time of much literary production. We designate these writings as Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha. See Pseudepigrapha. They did not attain canonical status, but some of them were cited by early Christians almost on a level with the Old Testament writings, and a few were copied in biblical manuscripts. Some New Testament authors were familiar with various non-canonical works, and the Epistle of Jude made specific reference to at least one of these books. They were ultimately preserved by the Christians rather than by the Jews.

Meaning "things that are hidden," apocrypha is applied to a collection of fifteen books written between about 200 B.C. and A.D. 100. These are not a part of the Old Testament but are valued by some for private study. The word "apocrypha" is not found in the Bible. Although never part of the Hebrew Scriptures, all fifteen apocryphal books except 2 Esdras appear in the Greek translation of the Old Testament, the Septuagint. They were made a part of the official Latin Bible, the Vulgate. All except 1 and 2 Esdras and the Prayer of Manasseh are considered canonical (in the Bible) and authoritative by the Roman Catholic Church. From the time of the Reformation, the apocryphal books have been omitted from the canon of the Protestant churches. The Apocrypha represent various types of literature: historical, historical romance, wisdom, devotional, and apocalyptic.

First Esdras is a historical book from the early first century A.D. Parallelling material in the last chapters of 2 Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, it covers the period from Josiah to the reading of the law by Ezra. In a number of places, it differs from the Old Testament account. It is believed that this writing drew from some of the same sources used by the writers of the canonical Old Testament books. The Three Guardsmen Story, 3:1—5:3, is the one significant passage in 1 Esdras that does not occur in the Old Testament. It tells how Zerubbabel was allowed to lead the exiles back to Palestine.

The most important historical writing in the Apocrypha is 1 Maccabees. It is the primary source for writing the history of the period it covers, 180 to 134 B.C. The emphasis is that God worked through Mattathias and his sons to bring deliverance. He did not intervene in divine, supernatural ways. He worked through people to accomplish His purposes. The writer was a staunch patriot. For him nationalism and religious zeal were one and the same. After introductory verses dealing with Alexander the Great, the book gives the causes for the revolt against the Seleucids. Much detail is given about the careers of Judas and Jonathan. Less attention is given to Simon, although emphasis is placed upon his being acclaimed leader and high priest forever. Brief reference to John Hyrcanus at the close suggests that the book was written either late in his life or after his death, probably shortly after 100 B.C.

A

Second Maccabees also gives the history of the early part of the revolt against the Seleucids, covering the period from 180 to 161 B.C. It is based upon five volumes written by Jason of Cyrene, about which volumes nothing is known. Second Maccabees, written shortly after 100 B.C., is not considered as accurate historically as 1 Maccabees. In places the two books disagree. This book begins with two letters written to Jews in Egypt urging them to celebrate the cleansing of the Temple by Judas. In the remainder of the writing, the author insisted that the Jews' trouble came as the result of their sinfulness. He emphasized God's miraculous intervention to protect the Temple and His people. Great honor was bestowed upon those who were martyred for their faith. The book includes the story of seven brothers and their mother who were put to death. The book clearly teaches a resurrection of the body, at least for the righteous.

Tobit is a historical romance written about 200 B.C. It is more concerned to teach lessons than to record history. The story is of a family carried into exile in Assyria when Israel was destroyed. The couple, Tobit and Anna, had a son named Tobias. Tobit had left a large sum of money with a man in Media. When he became blind, he sent his son to collect the money. A man was found to accompany the son Tobias. In reality he was the angel Raphael. Parallel to this is the account of a relative named Sarah. She had married seven husbands, but a demon had slain each of them on the wedding night. Raphael told Tobias that he was eligible to marry Sarah. They had caught a fish and had preserved the heart, liver, and gall. When burned, the heart and liver would drive away a demon. The gall would cure blindness. Thus Tobias was able to marry Sarah without harm. Raphael collected the money that was left in Media, and the blindness of Tobit was cured by means of the fish's gall. The book stresses Temple attendance, paying of tithes, giving alms, marrying only within the people of Israel, and the importance of prayer. Obedience to the law is central along with separation of Jews from Gentiles. It introduces the concept of a guardian angel.

The book of Judith, from 250 to 150 B.C. shows the importance of obedience to the law. In this book Nebuchadnezzar, the king of the Assyrians, reigned at the time the Jews returned from Exile. This shows it is not historically accurate, for Cyrus of Persia was king when the Jews returned from Exile (538 B.C.). The story may be based upon some event where a woman played an heroic role in the life of her people. In the story Nebuchadnezzar sent one of his generals, Holofernes, to subjugate the nations in the western part of his empire. The Jews resisted. Holofernes laid siege to the city of Bethulia (unknown except for this reference). Because of a shortage of water, the city decided to surrender in five days if God did not intervene. Judith had been a widow for three years and had been careful to obey all the law. She stated that God was going to act through her to save His people. She went with her maid to the camp of Holofernes, claiming that God was going to destroy the people because of their sin. She promised to show the general how he could capture the city without loss of a life. At a banquet a few days later, when Holofernes had drunk himself into a coma, she cut off his head and took it back to the city. The result was a great victory for the Jews over their enemies. This book places emphasis upon prayer and fasting. Idolatry is denounced, and the God of Israel is glorified. The book shows a strong hatred of pagans. Its moral content is low, for it teaches that the end justifies the means.

The Apocrypha contains additions to the book of Esther. The Hebrew text of Esther contains 163 verses, but the Greek contains 270. These additions are in six different places in the Greek text. However, in the Latin Vulgate they are all placed at the end. These sections contain such matters as the dream of Mordecai, the interpretation of that dream, the texts of the letters referred to in the canonical book, (Esther 1:22; 3:13; 8:5,10; 9:20,25–30) and the prayers of Esther and Mordecai. The additions give a more obviously religious basis for the book. In the Old Testament book of Esther, God is never named. This omission is remedied by the additions which were probably made between 125 and 75 B.C.

The Song of the Three Young Men is one of three additions to the book of Daniel. It follows Daniel 3:23 in the Greek text. It satisfies curiosity about what went on in the furnace into which the three men were thrown. The final section is a hymn of praise to God. It emphasizes that God acts to deliver His people in response to prayer. This writing, along with the other two additions to Daniel, probably comes from near 100 B.C.

The story of Susanna is added at the close of the Book of Daniel in the Septuagint. It tells of two judges who were overpowerd by the beauty of Susanna and sought to become intimate with her. When she refused, they claimed they had seen her being intimate with a young man. Authorities believed their charges and condemned the young lady to death. Daniel then stated that the judges were lying, and he would prove it. He asked them, separately, under what tree they saw Susanna and the young man. When they identified different kinds of trees, their perjury became apparent. They were condemned to death, and Susanna was vindicated.

The third addition to Daniel is Bel and the Dragon, placed before Susanna in the Septuagint. Bel was an idol worshiped in Babylon. Large quantities of food were placed in Bel's temple each night and consumed before the next morning. King Cyrus asked Daniel why he did not worship Bel, and Daniel replied that Bel was only a man-made image. He would prove to the king that Bel was not alive. Daniel had ashes sprinkled on the floor of the temple and food placed on Bel's altar before sealing the temple door. The next morning the seals on the doors were intact, but when the doors were opened the food was gone. However, the ashes sprinkled on the floor revealed footprints of the priests and their families. They had a secret entrance and came at night and ate the food brought to the idol. The second part of the story of Bel and the Dragon concerned a dragon worshiped in Babylon. Daniel killed the dragon by feeding it cakes of pitch, fat, and hair. The people were outraged, and Daniel was thrown into the lions' den for seven days. However, the lions did not harm him. These stories ridicule paganism and the worship of idols.

The next four apocryphal books are examples of Wisdom literature. The Wisdom of Solomon which was not written by Solomon, was probably written about 100 B.C. in Egypt. The first section of the book gave comfort to oppressed Jews and condemned those who had turned from their faith in God. It shows the advantages of wisdom over wickedness. The second section is a hymn of praise to wisdom. Wisdom is identified as a person present with God, although it is not given as much prominence as in some other writings. The final section shows wisdom as helpful to Israel throughout its history. This writing presents the Greek concept of immortality rather than the biblical teaching of resurrection.

The Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach is also known as Ecclesiasticus. It emphasizes the importance of the law and obedience to it. Written in Hebrew about 180 B.C., it was translated into Greek by the author's grandson shortly after 132 B.C. The book has two main divisions, 1—23 and 24—51, each beginning with a description of wisdom. The writer was a devout Jew, highly educated, with the opportunity to travel outside Palestine. Thus he included in his writing not only traditional Jewish wisdom but material that he found of value from the Greek world. He pictured the ideal scribe as one who had time to devote himself to the study of the law. Chapters 44—50 are a praise of the great fathers of Israel, somewhat similar to Hebrews 11. Wisdom is highly exalted. She is a person made by God. She goes into the earth to seek a dwelling place. After she is rejected by other people, she is established in Zion. Wisdom is identified with the law.

The Book of Baruch is also in the wisdom category. It is a combination of two or three different writings. The first section is in prose and claims to give a history of the period of Jeremiah and Baruch. However, it differs from the Old Testament account. The second section is poetry and a praise of wisdom. The final section is also poetic and gives a word of hope for the people. As in Sirach, wisdom and law are equated. It was written shortly before 100 B.C.

The Letter of Jeremiah is often added to Baruch as chapter 6. As the basis for his work, the author evidently used Jeremiah 29:1–23, in which Jeremiah did write a letter to the exiles. However, this letter comes from before 100 B.C. It is a strongly worded condemnation of idolatry.

The Prayer of Manasseh is a devotional writing. It claims to be the prayer of the repentant king whom the Old Testament pictured as very wicked (2 Kings 21:10–17). Second Kings makes no suggestion that Manasseh repented. However, 2 Chronicles 33:11–13,18–19 states that he did repent and that God accepted him. This writing from before 100 B.C. is what such a prayer of repentance might have been.

The final book of the Apocrypha is 2 Esdras, written too late to be included in the Septuagint. Chapters 1—2 and 15—16 are Christian writings. Chapters 3—14, the significant part of the work, are from about 20 B.C. This writing is an apocalypse, a type of writing popular among the Jews in the Intertestamental Period and which became popular among Christians. See Apocalyptic. Second Esdras contains seven sections or visions. In the first three, Ezra seeks answers from an angel about human sin and the situation of Israel. The answer he receives is that the situation will change only in the new age that God is about to inaugurate. The third section pictures the Messiah. He will remain four hundred years and then die. The next three visions stress God's coming intervention and salvation of His people through the pre-existent Messiah. The final section states that the end will be soon and reports that Ezra was inspired to write ninety-four books. Twenty-four are a rewrite of the canonical Old Testament while the other seventy are to be given to the wise. The last two chapters of 2 Esdras contain material common to the New Tesament. See Pseudepigrapha.

Clayton Harrop

APOCRYPHA, NEW TESTAMENT is a collective term referring to a large body of religious writings dating back to the early Christian centuries that are similar in form to the New Testament (Gospels, acts, epistles, and apocalypses) but were never included as a part of the canon of Scripture.

Meaning of the Term "Apocrypha" When the term apokryphos occurs in the New Testament, it simply means "hidden things." This original sense does not include the later meanings associated with it. In the formation of the Christian canon of Scripture, "apocrypha" came to mean works that were not divinely inspired and authoritative. The term was also used by certain groups (for example, Gnostics) to describe their writings as secretive.

They believed their writings were written much earlier but kept hidden until the latter days. Such writings were even then only available to the properly initiated. Since the church recognized works that were read openly in services of public worship, the term "apocrypha" came to mean "false" and began to be used to describe heretical material. In contrast to portions of the Old Testament Apocrypha which have been accepted by some branches of the Christian Church, none of the New Testament Apocrypha (with the possible exception of the Apocalypse of Peter and the Acts of Paul) has ever been accepted as Scripture. Though some scholars allow the term to describe writings that are neither a part of the New Testament nor strictly apocryphal (e.g., apostolic fathers), it seems best to restrict the term to material that was not received into the canon of Scripture, yet, by form and content, claimed for itself a status and authority equal to Scripture.

Purpose of the Apocrypha Three general reasons explain the existence of the New Testament Apocrypha. First, some groups accepted apocryphal writings because they built on the universal desire to preserve the memories of the lives and deaths of important New Testament figures. Regardless of whether the transmitted traditions were true or false, the desire of later generations to know more detail made the apocryphal writings attractive. The second purpose is closely related to the first. Apocryphal works were intended to supplement the information given in the New Testament about Jesus or the apostles. This may be the motivation behind the Third Epistle to the Corinthians (to provide some of the missing correspondence between Paul and the Corinthian church) and the Epistle to the Laodiceans (to supply the letter referred to in Col. 4:16). For the same reason, the apocryphal acts made certain to record the events surrounding the death of the apostles, a matter on which the New Testament is usually silent. Third, heretical groups produced apocryphal writings in an attempt to gain authority for their own particular views.

1. The apocryphal gospels. This large group of writings can be further classified into infancy gospels, passion gospels, Jewish-Christian gospels, and gospels originating from heretical groups.

Infancy Gospels is the name given to apocryphal works that in some way deal with the birth or childhood of Jesus or both. Though Matthew and Luke stressed the same basic story line, they emphasized different aspects of the events surrounding the birth of Jesus, primarily because of their audience and their own particular purpose in writing. The writers of these apocryphal infancy gospels attempted to correct what they viewed as deficiencies in the canonical accounts and to fill in the gaps they believed existed. Most of the material is concerned with the silent years of Jesus' childhood. The two earliest infancy gospels, from which most of the later literature developed, are the Protoevangelium of James and the Infancy Gospel of Thomas. The Protoevangelium of James seems to have been written to glorify Mary. It includes the miraculous birth of Mary, her presentation in the Temple, her espousal to Joseph (an old man with children), and the miraculous birth of Jesus. This second-century work was extremely popular and undoubtedly had an influence on later views of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The Infancy Gospel of Thomas depicts Jesus in a crude manner as a wonder boy, using his miraculous powers as a matter of personal convenience. This work attempts to fill in the silent years of Jesus' childhood, but does so in a rather repulsive and exaggerated manner.

As legend continued to expand, many later infancy gospels developed including the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy, the Armenian Gospel of the Infancy, the Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew, the Latin Infancy Gospel, the Life of John According to Serapion, the Gospel of the Birth of Mary, the Assumption of the Virgin, and the History of Joseph the Carpenter.

Passion Gospels, another class of apocryphal gospel, are concerned with supplementing the canonical accounts by describing events surrounding the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus. The two most important works in this category are the Gospel of Peter and the Gospel of Nicodemus (sometimes called the Acts of Pilate). The Gospel of Peter is a second-century work which downplays Jesus' humanity, heightens the miraculous, and reduces Pilate's guilt, among other things. The Gospel of Nicodemus (Acts of Pilate) is another example of an apocryphal passion gospel. The trial and death of Jesus is expanded as Nicodemus, the chief narrator, tells of one witness after another coming forward to testify on Jesus' behalf. Pilate gives in to popular demand and hands Jesus over to be crucified. The Gospel of Nicodemus also includes a vivid account of Jesus' "Descent into Hell," much like that of a Greek hero invading the underworld to defy its authorities or rescue its prisoners. Another apocryphal work that might be classified as a passion gospel is the Book of the Resurrection of Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle.

Jewish-Christian Gospels are works that originated among Jewish-Christian groups. They include the Gospel of the Ebionites, the Gospel of Hebrews, and the Gospel of the Nazarenes. Although some scholars equate the Gospel of Hebrews and the Gospel of the Nazarenes, the evidence is inconclusive. The Gospel of the Hebrews, perhaps the most prominent, appears to have been in some ways a paraphrase of the canonical Gospel of Matthew and places a special emphasis on James, the brother of the Lord.

Heretical Gospels cover a wide variety of apocryphal gospels, most of which are considered Gnostic gospels. Gnosticism developed in the second century as a widespread and diverse religious movement with roots in Greek philosophy and folk religion. The Gospel of Truth contains no references to the words or actions of Jesus. Some heretical gospels are attributed to all or one of the twelve apostles. These include the Gospel of the Twelve Apostles and the gospels of Philip, Thomas, Matthias, Judas, and Bartholomew. Written before A.D. 400, the Gospel of Thomas (of no relation to the Infancy Gospel of Thomas) is a collection of 114 secret sayings "which Jesus the living one spoke and Didymus Judas Thomas wrote down." This document is one of almost fifty discovered in 1945 near Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt as a part of what many scholars believe was the library of a Gnostic community. The heretical emphases of the Gospel of Thomas are countered in advance by the canonical Epistle of 1 John, which emphasizes the gospel of Jesus Christ as the message of life, available for every person to experience. Other gospels in this class include those under the names of Holy Women (for example, the Questions of Mary and the Gospel According to Mary), and those attributed to a chief heretic such as Cerinthus, Basilides, and Marcion.

2. The apocryphal acts. A large number of legendary accounts of the journeys and heroics of New Testament apostles sought to parallel and supplement the Book of Acts. The five major apocryphal acts are second and third-century stories named after a "Leucius Charinus" and therefore known as the Leucian Acts. Even though they show a high regard for the apostles and include some historical fact, much of what they offer is the product of a wild imagination, closely akin to a romantic novel (with talking animals and obedient bugs).

The Acts of John is the earliest of the group (A.D. 150–160). It contains miracles and sermons by John of Asia Minor and has a distinct Gnostic orientation. It tells the story of John's journey from Jerusalem to Rome and his imprisonment on the isle of Patmos. After many other travels, John finally dies in Ephesus.

The Acts of Andrew, written shortly before A.D. 300, is, like the Acts of John, distinctly Gnostic.

The Acts of Paul was written before A.D. 200 by an Asian presbyter "out of love for Paul." He was later defrocked for publishing the writing. It is divided into three sections: (1) the Acts of Paul and Thecla, a girl from Iconian who assisted Paul on his missionary travels, (2) correspondence with the Corinthian church, and (3) the martyrdom of Paul.

The Acts of Peter is a late second-century writing that tells of Peter defending the Church from a heretic named Simon Magus by public preaching. Peter, who is forced to flee, later returns to be crucified upside down. Like the other acts, it is ascetic, that is, it promotes a life-style of self-denial and withdrawal from society as a means of combating vice and developing virtue.

The Acts of Thomas is a third-century work, thought by most scholars to have originated in Syriac Christianity. It tells how Judas Thomas, "Twin of the Messiah," was given India when the apostles divided the world by casting lots. Thomas, though he went as a slave, was responsible for the conversion of many well-known Indians. The ascetic element is again present in Thomas' emphasis on virginity. In the end he was imprisoned and martyred.

Other later apocryphal acts include: the Apostolic History of Abdias, the Fragmentary Story of Andrew, the Ascents of James, the Martyrdom of Matthew; the Preaching of Peter, Slavonic Acts of Peter, the Passion of Paul, Passion of Peter, Passion of Peter and Paul; the Acts of Andrew and Matthias, Andrew and Paul, Paul and Thecla, Barnabas, James the Great, Peter and Andrew, Peter and Paul, Philip, and Thaddaeus.

3. The apocryphal epistles. We know of a small group of apocryphal epistles or letters many of which are ascribed to the Apostle Paul. The Epistle of the Apostles is a second-century collection of visions communicating post-resurrection teachings of Christ. The Third Epistle to the Corinthians was purported to be Paul's reply to a letter from Corinth. Though it circulated independently, it is also a part of the Acts of Paul. The Latin Epistle to the Laodiceans is a gathering of Pauline phrases probably motivated by Col. 4:16.

Other important apocryphal epistles include the Correspondence of Christ and Abgar, the Epistle to the Alexandrians, the Epistle of Titus, of Peter to James, of Peter to Philip, and of Mary to Ignatius.

4. The apocryphal apocalypses. The Book of Revelation is the only apocalyptic book in the New Testament, though there are apocalyptic elements in other books (such as Mark 13 and parallels; 2 Thess. 2:1–12). The term "apocalypse" or "apocalyptic" means "to uncover" and is used to describe a category of writings that seek to unveil the plan of God for the world using symbol and visions. See Apocalyptic. While the New Testament apocalyptic material emphasizes the return of Christ, the later apocryphal apocalypses focus more on heaven and hell. The most popular of these, the Apocalypse of Peter, seems to have enjoyed a degree of canonical status for a time. It presents visions of the resurrected Lord and images of the terror suffered by those in hell. The Apocalypse of Paul is probably motivated by Paul's reference in 2 Corinthians 12:2 of a man in Christ being caught up to the third heaven. The author is thoroughly convinced this was Paul's personal experience and proceeds to give all the details.

Other apocalypses include the Apocalypse of James, of Stephen, of Thomas, of the Virgin Mary, and several works discovered at Nag Hammadi.

5. Other apocryphal works. These include the Agrapha (a collection of sayings attributed to Jesus), the Preachings of Peter, the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions, the Apocryphon of John, the Apocryphon of James, and certain Gnostic writings such as the Pistis Sophia, the Wisdom of Jesus, and the Books of Jeu.

Relevance of the New Testament Apocrypha

The New Testament Apocrypha is significant for those who study church history. Even though these writings were not included in the canon, they are not worthless. They give a sample of the ideas, convictions, and imaginations of a portion of Christian history. The New Testament Apocrypha also serves as a point of comparison with the writings contained in the canon of the New Testament. By way of contrast the apocryphal writings demonstrate how the New Testament places a priority on historical fact rather than human fantasy. While the New Testament Apocrypha is often interesting and informative, it is usually unreliable historically and always unauthoritative for matters of faith and practice.

J. Scott Duvall

APOLLONIA (Ăp·ol·lō′ nĭ·à). Place name meaning, "belonging to Apollo." Paul visited Apollonia on his second missionary journey, though the Bible reports no activity there (Acts 17:1). The city is in northern Greece or Macedonia on the international highway called Via Egnatia, 30 miles from Amphipolis and 38 miles from Thessalonica.

APOLLOS (Ā·pŏl′ lōs), meaning "destroyer," names an Alexandrian Jew who came to Ephesus following Paul's first visit and was taught Christian doctrine by Priscilla and Aquila. An educated man, Apollos handled the Old Testament Scriptures with forcefulness. However, he was lacking in a full understanding of the way of God, so Priscilla and Aquila took him aside and instructed him (Acts 18:26). Apollos became even more successful in his ministry. He went from Ephesus to Greece with the encouragement of the Asian believers and a letter of introduction (Acts 18:27). He greatly strengthened the believers by using the Scriptures to demonstrate that Jesus was the Christ (Acts 18:28).

Apollos is last mentioned in the Book of Acts as being in Corinth (19:1). Paul referred to Apollos frequently, particularly in 1 Corinthians. Here the majority of the references (1 Cor. 1:12; 3:4–6,22) have to do with the schisms in the Corinthian church centering on personalities. Paul noted that some believers championed Paul; some, Apollos; and some, Cephas. What is important is that believers belong to Christ, not to individual leaders. Such references show that Apollos must have been a dynamic figure to be compared with Paul or Peter. In 1 Corinthians 4:6 Paul placed Apollos on the same level as himself. They both sought to defeat the arrogance and superiority which comes from being self-centered rather than Christ-centered.

Paul referred to Apollos in 1 Corinthians 16:12 as "our brother," showing how much Paul considered him as one of the team. This is also demonstrated in Titus 3:13 where Paul asked Titus to help Apollos on his way. A learned and gifted preacher, Apollos was willing to receive more instruction and be part of the team.

Because of Apollos' knowledge of the Old Testament, Luther suggested that Apollos might well be the writer of the Book of Hebrews. See Priscilla and Aquila; Ephesus; Corinth; Corinthians, 1 and 2.

William Vermillion

APOLLYON (Å·pŏll′ yon) Greek name for Abaddon (Rev. 9:11). See Abaddon.

APOSTASY (ă·pŏs′ tå·sȳ) is the act of rebelling against, forsaking, abandoning, or falling away from what one has believed.

Old Testament The Old Testament speaks of "falling away" in terms of a person's deserting to a foreign king (2 Kings 25:11; Jer. 37:13–14; 39:9; 52:15). Associated ideas, however, include the concept of religious unfaithfulness: "rebellion" (Josh. 22:22); "cast away" (2 Chron. 29:19); "trespass" (2 Chron. 33:19); and "backslidings" (Jer. 2:19; 8:5). NAS uses "apostasy" in Jeremiah 8:5 and Hosea 14:4 with the plural in Jeremiah 2:19; 5:6; 14:7.

The prophets picture Israel's history as the history of turning from God to other gods, from His law to injustice and lawlessness, from His anointed king to foreign kings, and from His word to the word of foreign kings. This is defined simply as forsaking God, not fearing Him (Jer. 2:19). Such action was sin, for which the people had to ask forgiveness (Jer. 14:7–9) and repent (Jer. 8:4–7). The basic narrative of Judges, Samuel, Kings is that Israel fell away from God, choosing selfish ways rather than His ways. Exile resulted. Still God's fallen people had hope. In freedom God could choose to turn away His anger and heal their "backsliding" (Hos. 14:4).

New Testament The English word "apostasy" is derived from a Greek word (apostasia) that means, "to stand away from." The Greek noun occurs twice in the New Testament (Acts 21:21; 2 Thess. 2:3), though it is not translated as "apostasy" in the King James Version. A related noun is used for a divorce (Matt. 5:31; 19:7; Mark 10:4). The corresponding Greek verb occurs nine times.

Acts 21:21 states an accusation made against Paul that he was leading Jews outside Palestine to abandon the law of Moses. Such apostasy was defined as failing to circumcise Jewish children and to observe distinctive Jewish customs.

In 2 Thessalonians 2:3 Paul addressed those who had been deceived into believing that the day of the Lord had already come. He taught that an apostasy would precede the day of the Lord. The Spirit had explicitly revealed this falling away from the faith (1 Tim. 4:1). Such apostasy in the latter times will involve doctrinal deception, moral insensitivity, and ethical departures from God's truth.

Associated New Testament concepts include the parable of the soils, in which Jesus spoke of those who believe for a while but "fall away" in time of temptation (Luke 8:13). At the judgment, those who work iniquity will be told to "depart" (Luke 13:27). Paul "withdrew" from the synagogue in Ephesus (Acts 19:9) because of the opposition he found there, and he counseled Timothy to "withdraw" from those who advocate a different doctrine (1 Tim. 6:3–5). Hebrews speaks of falling away from the living God because of "an evil heart of unbelief" (3:12). Those who fall away cannot be renewed again to repentance (Heb. 6:6). Yet God is able to keep the believer from falling (Jude 24).

Implications Apostasy certainly is a biblical concept, but the implications of the teaching have been hotly debated. The debate has centered on the issue of apostasy and salvation. Based on the concept of God's sovereign grace, some hold that, though true believers may stray, they will never totally fall away. Others affirm that any who fall away were never really saved. Though they may have "believed" for a while, they never experienced regeneration. Still others argue that the biblical warnings against apostasy are real and that believers maintain the freedom, at least potentially, to reject God's salvation.

Persons worried about apostasy should recognize that conviction of sin in itself is evidence that one has not fallen away. Desire for salvation shows one does not have "an evil heart of unbelief."

Michael Fink

APOSTLES Persons sent to accomplish a mission, especially the twelve apostles Jesus commissioned to follow Him. An apostle represents the one sending and has authority to represent the sender in business, political, or educational situations. See Disciples, Apostles.

The traditional site, in St. John's Monastery, Patmos, where the apostle John may have laid his head.

APOSTOLIC COUNCIL The meeting in Jerusalem at which the apostles and elders of Jerusalem defended the right of Paul and Barnabas to preach the gospel to the Gentiles without forcing converts to obey the Jewish law (Acts 15). A "decree" from the council did ask Gentile converts not to eat food that had been sacrificed to idols, not to eat meat with blood in it, not to eat animals which had been strangled, and not to commit sexual immorality (Acts 15:28–29). These requirements may all be taken from Leviticus 17–18, which set up requirements not only on the "house of Israel" but also on "the strangers which sojourn among you" (Lev. 17:8).

St. John's Monastery (Patmos)—traditional site where John the Apostle received the Book of Revelation.

In Galatians 2 Paul described the work of the council from his perspective, though some Bible students have long tried to distinguish between the events of Acts 15 and Galatians 2. Paul used the council experience to show that his gospel without circumcision was accepted by the leaders in Jerusalem to the point Titus could be with him in Jerusalem and not be circumcised.

The council showed the working of the early church with strong leadership yet involving the voice of the congregation (Acts 15:12,22), the messengers sent from Jerusalem to Antioch not being part of the twelve apostles.

APOSTOLIC FATHERS Early Christian authors believed to have known the apostles. The Apostolic Fathers are not mentioned in the Bible. Five Apostolic Fathers appear in the original seventeenth century list: Barnabas, Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, and Hermas. Today the list usually includes nine items, adding The Didache, The Epistle to Diognetus, Papias, and Apology of Quadratus. Although scholars dispute whether any of the writers knew the apostles, all but possibly two of the writings, The Epistle to Diognetus and the Apology of Quadratus, originated before A.D. 156.

The Didache or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles was not rediscovered until 1883 despite the fact that it had considerable usage in early centuries. An early church manual, it may be the earliest of the Apostolic Fathers, in its current form no later than A.D. 100 but possibly much earlier. Part one (chs. 1–6) contains the Jewish catechetical material known as "The Two Ways" adapted to Christian usage by insertion of teachings of Jesus. Part two gives directions concerning baptism (7), fasting and prayers (8), the eucharist (9–10), travellers who seek hospitality (11–13), worship on the Lord's day (14), and bishops and deacons (15). An exhortation to watchfulness concludes The Didache. Several allusions indicate Syria (perhaps Antioch) as the place of origin.

The Apostolic Fathers include two writings under the name of Clement, a Roman presbyter-bishop at the end of the first century, but only his letter to the Corinthians, the Epistle of 1 Clement can be considered authentic. What is entitled The Second Letter of Clement to the Corinthians is actually an early sermon which dates from around A.D. 140.

Clement, whom early lists named as the third bishop of Rome (after Linus and Anacletus), composed his letter, reliably dated A.D. 96, in response to a disturbance in the church at Corinth. A group of younger members had revolted against the presbyter-bishops and driven them out. In part one (1–36) Clement appealed on behalf of the Church of Rome for unity, using numerous biblical examples. In part two (37–61) he discussed the divisions at Corinth and called for the restoration of order by submission to persons appointed presbyters by the apostles and their successors. Interestingly he drew his organizational pattern from the military structure used at Qumran. In his conclusion (62–65) he expressed hope that the letter bearer would return with news of reconciliation.

The so-called Second Letter of Clement urges hearers to repent for too great attachment to the "world." The author cited authoritative writings that are now definitely identified as Gnostic in the library discovered at Nag Hammadi in Egypt.

En route to Rome, where he suffered martyrdom during the reign of Trajan (98–117), Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, wrote seven letters called the Epistles of Ignatius. At Smyrna he composed letters thanking the churches of Ephesus, Magnesia, and Tralles for sending messengers to greet him. From there he also sent a letter to the church at Rome begging them not to intercede on his behalf with the Emperor since he desired to be "ground by the teeth of wild beasts" so as to become "pure bread of Christ." (Rom. 4:1). At Troas he learned that persecution had ceased at Antioch and wrote to the churches of Philadelphia and Smyrna as well as to Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, entreating them to send messengers to Antioch to congratulate the faithful on the restoration of peace. In his letters Ignatius mentioned tensions within the communities to which he wrote and urged, as a solution, acceptance of episcopal authority. His special pleading would suggest that the churches of Asia Minor had not yet accepted rule by a single bishop with presbyters and deacons subordinate to him.

Papias was a bishop of Hierapolis in Asia Minor who, according to Irenaeus his pupil, was a hearer of John, the disciple and a friend of Polycarp. He wrote a five-volume work called Interpretation of the Lord's Oracles of which only fragments remain in the writings of others. The date of his writing is disputed either being around 110 or 120.

Polycarp's Epistle of Polycarp is a cover letter sent with "as many as he had" of the letters of Ignatius at the request of the church of Philippi. Because in its present form the letter is a virtual mosaic of quotations from the collected letters of Paul, P. N. Harrison proposed a two-letter hypothesis. According to this proposal, chapter 13 would be the cover letter written at the time of Ignatius's martyrdom, chapters 1–12 a later composition dated around 135. The letter is primarily an exhortation to true faith and virtue.

Included in the Apostolic Fathers is The Martyrdom of Polycarp, the oldest account of a martyr's death recorded soon after it happened in 156. Written to strengthen faith in time of persecution, the account is somewhat embellished by miraculous happenings, for example, so much blood spurting from a wound in Polycarp's side that it extinguished the fire consuming him. The Martyrdom is notable as the first Christian writing to use the word "catholic" in reference to the church.

The so-called Epistle of Barnabas is neither a letter nor the work of Barnabas, Paul's companion and fellow missionary. An allusion to the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70 (16:3–4) as an event of the distant past precludes such an early date. The main part of this sermon or treatise (chs. 1–17) attempts to prove that the Jews misunderstood the Scriptures from the beginning because they interpreted them literally. Had they interpreted properly, they would have recognized Jesus as the fulfillment of the law. The author himself engaged in some rather fanciful allegorical exposition. To the apology is appended a Jewish document known as "The Two Ways" (of life and death).

Identified by the Muratorian Canon as the brother of Pius, Bishop of Rome around 140–150, Hermas indicates that he had been brought to Rome after being taken captive and was purchased by a woman named Rhoda. Using the form of an apocalypse or revelation, the Shepherd of Hermas deals with the heatedly debated question of repentance for serious post-baptismal sins such as apostasy, adultery, or murder. Some in Rome, evidently following Hebrews, took an inflexible stance: those who committed such serious offenses should suffer permanent exclusion. Hermas proposed one repentance following baptism, a view widely accepted in the early churches.

The Epistle to Diognetus, is misnamed and misplaced. An attractive apology or defense of Christianity, it is of uncertain but considerably later date than the Apostolic Fathers, perhaps as late as the third century. The author contrasts the unsatisfying faith of other religions with Christian teachings concerning love and good citizenship.

Like the Epistle to Diognetus, the Apology of Quadratus is believed to be dated considerably later than the Apostolic Fathers. The writing which is a fragment from a defense of Christianity addressed to the Emperor Hadrian, is preserved by Eusebius. Some scholars believe the Epistle to Diognetus and the Apology of Quadratus are the same.

While the writings designated Apostolic Fathers differ in the precision of their dating and authorship, as writings that predate the formation of the New Testament canon, they are invaluable resources for understanding post-apostolic Christianity. E. Glenn Hinson

APOTHECARY (Å pŏth′ ė cär y) KJV translation of a word translated as perfumer in modern versions (Ex. 30:25,35; 37:29; 2 Chron. 16:14; Neh. 3:8; Eccl. 10:1). See Perfume, Perfumer.

APPAIM (Ăp′ pā·ĭm) Personal name meaning, "nostrils." Member of clan of Jerahmeel of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:30–31).

APPEAL TO CAESAR When Paul was brought before Festus for trial on charges made against him by Jews from Jerusalem, Festus asked him if he wanted to return to Jerusalem for trial. Paul, fearing the Jews would kill him, asked that his case be heard by the emperor as he had done nothing deserving of death (Acts 25:1–12). By all appearances, Paul's Roman citizenship gave him the right to have his case heard by the emperor. There are cases, however, where Roman citizens in Africa were refused the right of appeal and were crucified by Galba, the governor of the province. Paul was granted his appeal, though it was later determined that he need not have appealed his case as he had done nothing wrong (Acts 26:32). We do not know the results of Paul's appeal since Acts ends with Paul still in prison awaiting trial. It is probable that Paul's case was dismissed after two years and he was released from prison.

APPENDAGE OF THE LIVER See Caul.

APPHIA (Ăp′ phĭ·ȧ) Christian lady Paul greeted as "beloved" while writing Philemon (v.2). Early Christian tradition identified her as Philemon's wife, a claim that can be neither proved nor disproved.

APPI FORUM (Ăp′ pĭ fō′ rŭm) KJV translation of Acts 28:15 reference to Forum of Appius or Market of Appius. See Forum of Appius.

APPIUS (Ăp′ pĭ·ŭs) See Forum of Appius.

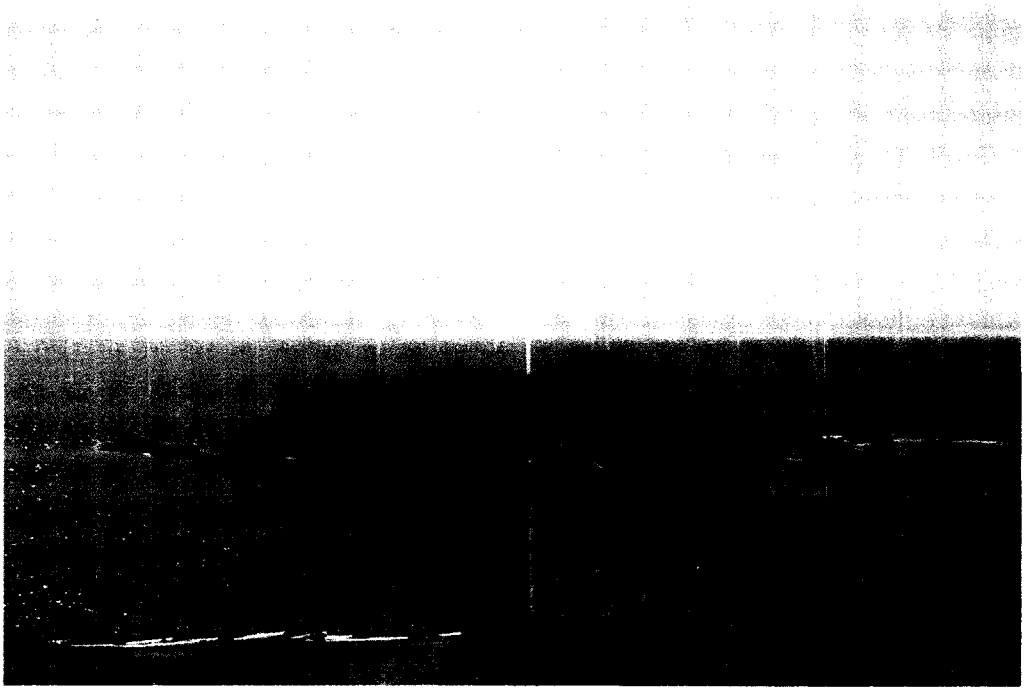
APPLE OF THE EYE An English expression that refers to the pupil of the eye and therefore to something very precious. Three different Hebrew words or phrases are rendered as the apple of the eye: (1) the word in Deuteronomy 32:10 and Proverbs 7:2 literally means "little man" and evidently refers to the reflection of a person in the eye of another; (2) the word in Psalm 17:8 and Lamentations 2:18 (KJV) literally means "the daughter of the eye" with possibly the same significance as (1); and (3) the word in Zechariah 2:8 literally means "gate." The reference in Lamentations 2:18 is to the pupil of the eye as the source of tears; the other references are metaphorical of something that is precious.

A

APPLE TREE A tree known in the Old Testament for its fruit, shade, beauty, and fragrance (Joel 1:12; Prov. 25:11; Song of Sol. 2:3,5; 7:8; 8:5). Some scholars doubt that the Hebrew text is referring to the apple tree. They think the common apple tree was only recently introduced to Palestine, and that the wild variety hardly matches the description given to the tree and its fruit in the Bible. The citron, quince, and apricot have been proposed as the tree spoken of in the Bible. Of the three, the apricot seems to have the best support. Having been introduced from China prior to the time of Abraham, the apricot is widespread in Palestine. When conditions for it are right, the apricot tree can grow to a height of about thirty feet with spreading branches, which make it a good shade tree. Hebrew tappuach "apple" does appear as a place name in the Bible and may indicate apple trees were known as unusual occurrences in some Palestinian sites.

APRON Translation of a Hebrew word in the Old Testament otherwise translated as girdle (1 Sam. 18:4; 2 Sam. 18:11; 20:8; 1 Kings 2:5; Isa. 3:24). In Genesis 3:7, the fig leaves sown together by Adam and Eve are called aprons to hide their nakedness. In the Old Testament the girdle was an inner garment wrapped around the waist. In the New Testament the girdle was wrapped around the waist of the outer garment. In Acts 19:12 the aprons and handkerchiefs of Paul had healing powers.



AQABA, GULF OF TEV translation in 1 Kings 19:26 to show that the part of the Red Sea meant is the eastern arm below the Dead Sea. Its northern port city is Eloth (or Elath, NIV). See Eloth; Ezion-geber.

AQUEDUCTS were troughs cut out of rock or soil or pipes made of stone, leather, or bronze that were used from very early times in the Middle East to transport water from distant places into towns and cities.

Old Testament The simplest aqueducts were troughs cut out of rock or soil and sometimes lined with mortar. These troughs carried water from hillsides to the valleys below. Jerusalem was served by a system of aqueducts which brought mountain spring water first to collecting reservoirs outside the city, and then into the city itself. Hezekiah's tunnel, the Siloam tunnel, was a twisting underground aqueduct that diverted water from the Gihon Spring to the Pool of Siloam (2 Kings 20:20).

Roman Aqueducts The Romans excelled in building aqueducts, and the remains of these systems are impressive. Ancient aqueducts, the nonpressure type, carried water downhill by means of gravity. Although most conduits were beneath the ground, lowlands were crossed on high, arched structures, each containing a built-in slope so that water flow was not impeded. Sometimes these elevated sections, while also carrying several channels of water, served as footbridges. The Romans built many aqueducts, the longest of which covered fifty-seven miles. Pipes were made of various materials such as stone, leather, or bronze.

Island of Pharaoh, in the Gulf of Aqaba.

Diane Cross

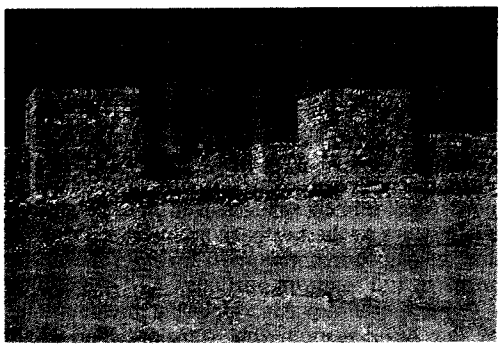
Roman aqueduct at Caesarea Maritima which transported water to the city from the Carmel Mountains.

AQUILA and PRISCILLA were a married couple who came from Italy to Corinth after the emperor Claudius ordered Jews expelled from Rome, became Christians, and assisted Paul in his ministry. They were tentmakers by trade (2 Tim. 4:19). They came into contact with Paul, who was a tentmaker, in Corinth (Acts 18:2). It is not clear whether they became Christians before or after meeting Paul; but, they became workers in the gospel, and accompanied Paul to Ephesus (Acts 18:19). There they instructed Apollos in the Christian faith (18:25). A church met in their home, and they joined Paul in writing to the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 16:19).

Aquila and Priscilla were apparently influential among the "churches of the Gentiles" (Rom. 16:3). This reference in Romans probably indicates that Priscilla and Aquila moved back to Rome. Some scholars think the church at Ephesus received a copy of the last chapter of Romans. The reference to the couple in 2 Timothy 4:19 may indicate the couple was in Ephesus.

Paul thanked Aquila and Priscilla for risking their own lives for him (Rom. 16:4). The circumstances of this incident are unknown, although it may have occurred during Paul's trouble with Demetrius the silversmith (Acts 20:23–41).

Taylor Field



AR (Är) Place name meaning, "city." Town or northern border of Moab on southern bank of Arnon River (Num. 21:15, 28). Israel celebrated its defeat with a proverbial taunt song (Num. 21:28). God refused to let Israel occupy Ar, having designated it for Lot's descendants, the Moabites (Deut. 2:9). Israel could only pass through Ar (Deut. 2:18), evidently the region controlled by the city-state. Ar provided provisions for the Israelites as they passed through on the last legs of the wilderness wandering (Deut. 2:29). Isaiah used a threatening situation in Ar to announce a time when Moab would seek protection from Judah (Isa. 15:1). The exact location of the city is not known.

ARA (Ā′ rà) Leader in tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:38).

ARAB (Ā′ răb) Place name meaning "ambush." A city in the hill country of Judah near Hebron (Josh. 15:52). Usually identified with modern er-Rabiyeh. See Arbite; Paarai.

Reconstruction of the stone altar at Arad.

The Citadel, first temple of the Hebrew kings, was built by King David on the highest point in Arad.

ARABAH (Ăr′ à·bāh) Place name meaning, "dry, infertile area" and common Hebrew noun meaning desert with hot climate and sparse rainfall. 1. Modern usage refers specifically to the rift area below the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Elath or Aqaba, a distance of 110 miles. This was a copper-mining region and was guarded by military fortresses. Control of the Arabah along with control of the Red Sea port on its southern end meant control of valuable trade routes and sea routes connecting to southern Arabia and eastern Africa. See Deut. 2:8; 1 Kings 9:26–27. 2. The wilderness of Judah encompassing the eastern slopes of the mountains of Judah with little rain, deep canyons, and steep cliffs where David hid from Saul (1 Sam. 23:24–25). 3. The entire Jordan Valley running 70 miles from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea, or more precisely the desert areas above the actual Zor or lushly fertile areas on the immediate shore of the Jordan. See Deut. 3:17 (RSV; NIV); Josh. 8:14 (TEV; NIV); 11:2, 16; 12:8 (NAS; NIV); 2 Sam. 2:29 (NAS; NIV); Jer. 39:4 (NAS; NIV); Ezek. 47:8 (NAS; NIV); Zech. 14:10 (NIV).

4. Sea of the Arabah is the Dead Sea. See NAS, NIV, RSV of Deut. 3:17; 4:49; Josh. 3:16; 2 Kings 14:25. 5. The Araboth of Moab or plains of Moab includes the eastern shore of the Dead Sea south of the wadi Nimrim. Notice NEB translation as "lowlands of Moab." See Num. 22:1; 31:12; 36:13; Deut. 34:1; Josh. 13:32. 6. The desert area or the eastern border of the Jordan River from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea. See Joshua 12:1 (NAS, NIV, RSV). 7. The Araboth of Jericho or plains of Jericho represent the area near the Jordan once dominated by the city state of Jericho. (Josh. 4:13; 5:10; 2 Kings 25:5; Jer. 39:5). 8. The brook of the Arabah represents the southern border of Israel (Amos 6:14), possibly the River Zered, the wadi el-Qelt, or the wadi Hefren.

ARABIA (Å·rā′ bī·á) names an Asian penisula lying between the Red Sea on the west and the Persian Gulf on the east incorporating over 1,200,000 square miles of territory.

Old Testament The Arabian peninsula, together with the adjoining lands which were home to the biblical Arabs, includes all of present-day Saudi Arabia, the two Yemens (San'a' and Aden), Oman, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, and Kuwait, as well as parts of Iraq, Syria, Jordan, and the Sinai Peninsula. The vast Arabian peninsula was divided into two distinct economic and social regions. Most biblical references to Arab peoples or territory are to the northern and western parts of this whole, but sometimes includes both the northern and southern portions.

In the northern portion of Arabia the mountains of the Anti-Lebanon, the Transjordanian Highlands, and the mountains of Edom flank the desert on the west. The mountains continue all the way down the western edge of the Arabian Peninsula bordering the Red Sea and are actually much higher and more rugged in the south. The central and northern portions of the peninsula, and extending north into Syria and Iraq, are vast expanses of sandy and rocky desert, including some of the driest climate in the world.

The name Arab comes from a Semitic root which in Hebrew is 'arab, probably meaning "nomad" or bedouin. This refers to the people of the northwestern parts of the Arabian territory, whom the Old Testament writers knew as nomadic herders of sheep and goats, and later, of camels. Sometimes 'arab simply refers to the economic status of nomads without geographical or ethical reference. Proper understanding of Scripture includes determining the specific meaning of Arab in each context.

The Arabs are also called in the Bible "the sons (or childen) of the east." Furthermore, many of the names of the Old Testament refer to people or tribes who were ethnically and linguistically Arab. These include the Midianites, the Ishmaelites, the people of Kedar, the Amalekites, the Dedanites, the Temanites, and others. The Israelites recognized their blood relationship with the Arabs. Most of these groups are linked with Abraham through his son Ishmael or through his second wife Keturah (Gen. 25).

The inhabitants of southern Arabia, in the mountains fringing the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, were town-dwellers with a sophisticated system of irrigation. They possessed considerable wealth from incenses and spices which they grew, from gold, silver, and precious stones, which they mined in their own territory, and from these and other products which they transported and traded to the Mediterranean world and Mesopotamia from as far away as East Africa, India, and China.

New Testament The New Testament references to Arabia are fewer and less complex. The territory of the Nabatean Arabs is probably intended in each instance. The Nabateans controlled what is today southern Jordan and the Negeb of Israel; for a time they controlled as far north as Damascus. Arabs heard the gospel at Pentecost (Acts 2:11). Paul went to Arabia after his conversion (Gal. 1:17).

Joseph Coleson

ARABIM (Ăr′ å·bĭm) NAS transliteration of name of waterway mentioned in Isaiah 15:7. Other translations include: "brook of the willows" (KJV); "Ravine of the Poplars" (NIV); Valley of Willows (TEV); "Wadi of the Willows (NRSV). The water source indicated may be the wadi el-Chesa at the southern end of the Dead Sea in Moab.

ARAD (Ā′ rad) names two towns of significance to the Old Testament and two Old Testament men.

1. One town is referred to in the Bible during the time of Moses, and another was inhabited during the period of the monarchy. Both are located in the dry, semi-desert region known as the Negeb in the southern extreme of Judah's territory.

The Arad of Numbers 21:1–3 (probably Tel Malhata) was a Canaanite city about eleven miles west southwest of Beersheba. Its king attacked the Israelites as they were moving on to Canaan after the wilderness wandering. He was successful temporarily, taking captives; but after vowing to God that they would destroy the city, Israel struck back effectively and renamed the devastated city Hormah. Victory over this king is recorded in Joshua 12:14. Subsequently the Kenites settled in Arad near the tribe of Judah (Judg. 1:16–17).

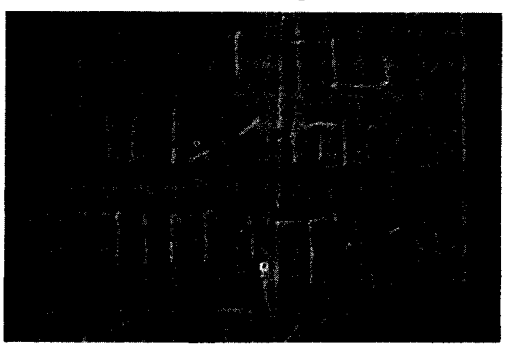
Another Arad location about seventeen miles west northwest of Beersheba is not mentioned in the Bible, but was an important fortress for Judah from Solomon's time to Josiah, over three hundred years. A temple has been found there with architecture much like the biblical tabernacle and Temple, having similar chambers including a holy of holies. Even the names of priestly families of Israel have been found here, Pashhur (Ezra 2:38; 10:22) and Meremoth (Ezra 8:33; Neh. 10:5). The Temple may well have been destroyed during Josiah's reforms which tolerated only the one Temple in Jerusalem.



2. One of six sons of Beriah the Benjamite (1 Chron. 8:15,16) who was one of the major inhabitants of Aijalon. (See Aijalon.) Another Old Testament Arad was a Canaanite king who attacked the Israelites near Mount Hor and was defeated (Num. 21:1). Daniel C. Fredericks

ARAH (Ā′ răh) Personal name meaning, "ox" or "traveller." 1. Clan of 775 people who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:5). Nehemiah 7:10 gives the number as 652. 2. Father of Schechaniah, father-in-law of Tobiah, who led opposition to Nehemiah (Neh. 6:18). May be identical with clan head of 1 above. 3. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:39).

ARAM (Ā′ răm) Personal, ethnic, and geographical name. 1. Arameans. See Aramean. 2. Original ancestor of Arameans, the son of Shem and grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:22–23). 3. Grandson of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen. 22:21). 4. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:34). See various compound names with Aram below and Beth Rehob; Padan-Aram; Geshur; Maacah; Tob; Zobah.

ARAMAIC (Ăr·ȧ·mā′ ĭc) A North Semitic language similar to Phoenician and Hebrew was the language of the Arameans whose presence in northwestern Mesopotamia is known from about 2000 B.C.

A funerary inscription of the second burial of King Uzziah written in Aramaic during Herod's time.

Old Testament Although the Arameans never founded a great national state or empire, by the eleventh century they had established several small states in Syria, and their language came to be known from Egypt to Persia.

The oldest inscriptions in Old Aramaic are from Syria around 800 B.C. In the ninth century official or Royal Aramaic appeared. This was a dialect known from documents from Assyria and known best from documents from the Persian empire, for which Aramaic had become the official court language. Before 700 B.C. Aramaic had begun to supplant Akkadian as the language of commerce and diplomacy (2 Kings 18:26). Important for biblical history are the fifth century papyri from Elephantine, the site of a Jewish colony in Egypt. Official Aramaic continued to be used widely throughout the Hellenistic period.

Parts of the Old Testament were written in Aramaic: Ezra 4:8—6:18; 7:12–26; Daniel 2:4*b*—7:28; Jeremiah 10:11. Two words in Genesis 31:47, Jegar-sahadutha (heap of witness) are in Aramaic. A number of Aramaic words came into common Hebrew usage, and several passages in the Hebrew Bible show Aramaic influence.

New Testament The wide diffusion of Aramaic, along with its flexibility and adaptability, resulted in the emergence of various dialects. In Syria-Palestine the western group includes Jewish Palestinian Aramaic, Samaritan, Palmyrene, and Nabataean. Jewish Palestinian Aramaic words and phrases occur in the New Testament, such as Abba (father) (Mark 14:36), talitha, qumi (maiden, arise) (Mark 5:41), lama sabachthani (why hast thou forsaken me?) (Mark 15:34). The Palestinian Talmud and the Targums (translations of Old Testament books into Aramaic) also were written in Palestinian Jewish Aramaic. The eastern (Mesopotamian) group includes Babylonian Jewish Aramaic, Mandaean, and Syriac.

Tom Smothers

ARAMEAN (Ăr·ȧ·mē′ ăn) consisted of the loose confederation of towns and settlements spread over what is now called Syria as well as in some parts of Babylon from which Jacob and Abraham came (Deut. 26:5). The Arameans were rarely gathered into a cohesive political group; rather they lived as independent towns and tribes settled by nomads prior to 1000 B.C. Although the Arameans were quick to form alliances with each other or with other countries if threatened, once the crisis was ended they disbanded and often fought among themselves and against their former allies.

The Old Testament records interactions between Israel and the Arameans on a number of occasions. Deuteronomy 26:5 contains what has become an important confession for Jews—"A wandering Aramean was my father . . ." (RSV)—which claims Aramean lineage for Jacob and by extension for Abraham. The first mention of Arameans outside of the Bible dates from the reign of Tiglath-pileser I of Assyria (1116–1076 B.C.). Thus roughly at the start of Israel's monarchy, the Arameans became a potent political force. They were able to seize large portions of Assyrian lands, defeating Tiglath-pileser I and II and Ashur-rabi II. At the same time they suffered losses to David on the western front (2 Sam. 8:9–10). He demanded tribute from Hadadezer, king of Zobah, and married Maacah the daughter of Talmui, king of Geshur. It was Maacah who bore Absalom (2 Sam. 3:3). Both Zobah and Geshur were Aramean states.

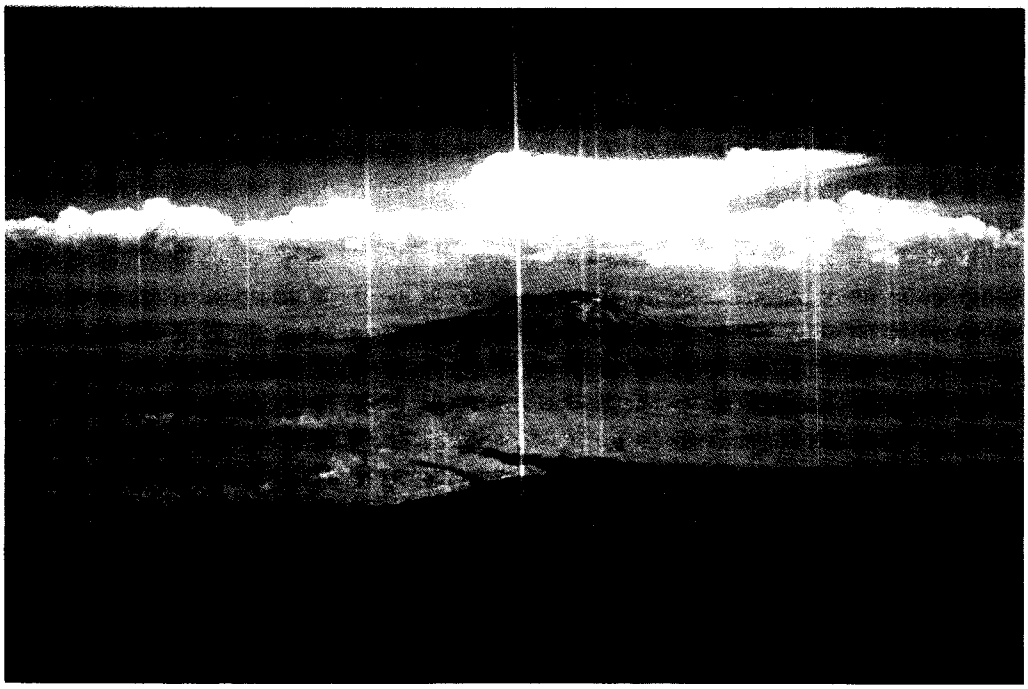
The most important city of the Arameans was Damascus. Although the political influence of the Arameans was relatively unimportant, they made a lasting contribution with their language. See Assyria; Damascus; Aramaic.

Tim Turnham

ARAMITESS (Ăr' ə·mīt·ĕss) KJV translation in 1 Chronicles 7:14 for an unnamed concubine from Aram, thus an Aramean or Syrian. She was mother of Machir, son of Manasseh.



ARAM-MAACAH (Ā' răm-Mā' ə·căh) Territory in Syria (1 Chron. 19:6), also called Syria-Maachah, Maacah, Maachah. See Maacah. In 2 Samuel 10:6 only Aram-Zobah is named.

ARAM-NAHARAIM (Ā' răm-Nā·hə·rā' īm) Country name meaning, "Aram of the two rivers." Appears in title of Psalm 60 in KJV. Transliterated from Hebrew also in Genesis 24:10; Deuteronomy 23:4; Judges 3:8; and 1 Chronicles 19:6 by NIV. It refers to the land between the Tigris and Euphrates River. Nahor, Abraham's brother, lived there; and Rebekah, Isaac's wife, came from there. Balaam, the prophet Balak hired to curse Israel as they entered Moab from the wilderness, came from Aram-Naharaim. So did Cushan-Rishathaim, who oppressed Israel before Othniel delivered them. The Ammonites bought military help from Aram-Naharaim to fight David.

ARAM-ZOBAH (Ā' răm-Zō' bah) Alternate name for the Aramean town and kingdom of Zobah found in the superscription of Psalm 60. See Zobah.

ARAN (Ā' răn) Personal name perhaps meaning, "ibex." A Horite descended from Seir (Gen. 36:28).

ARARAT (Âr' ə·răt) A mountainous region in western Asia mentioned on four occasions in the Bible: (1) the place where the ark came to rest after the flood (Gen. 8:4); (2) the region where Sennacherib's sons, Adrammelech and Sharezer, fled for refuge after murdering their father (2 Kings 19:37); (3) Isaiah's version of 2 Kings 19:37 (Isa. 37:38); (4) Jeremiah's prophetic call for a war league as judgment against Babylon (Jer. 51:27). The references in Kings and Isaiah are rendered

This mountain (in modern Turkey) may be Mt. Ararat where Noah's ark came to rest after the flood.

'Armenia' in KJV, following the Septuagint tradition.

Geography The Ararat of the Old Testament is known as the land of Urartu in sources outside the Bible, especially Assyrian sources. The people of the region identified themselves as "children of Haldi" (the national god) and their land as Biainae. The country was southeast of the Black Sea and southwest of the Caspian, where the head waters of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers were found. Near the center of the land was Lake Van; Lake Sevan lay on its northern border; and Lake Urmia was found in its southeast corner. Modern Turkey, Iran, and Soviet Armenia occupy parts of the ancient land area of Urartu. Mt. Ararat is located to the northeast of Lake Van.

Ararat rises from the lowlands of the Aras River to a height of 17,000 feet. Considering the high elevation, the region is remarkably fertile and pasturable. Archaeologists believe that Ararat received more rainfall in biblical times than it does today, an observation which suggests that the area would have been even more productive as farmland in ancient times.

History of Ararat The height of Urartian political prominence was between 900 and 700 B.C. Culturally the Urartians were akin to the earlier Hurrians and to the Assyrians whose empire stretched to the south. From after 1100 until after 800 B.C., Urartu remained independent of Assyria, and in many ways was a political rival. The rise of Tiglath-pileser III (745–727 B.C.) in Assyria, followed by Sargon II (721–705 B.C.), crushed any political ambitions Urartu might have had in the region.

See Noah; Ark; and Flood. A. J. Conyers

ARARITE (Âr' ā·rīte) NAS spelling of Hararite (2 Sam. 23:23) reflecting distinctive Hebrew spelling of written text, which has already been marked for change by early Hebrew scribes. See Hararite.

ARAUNAH (Å·raū' năh) Personal name of unknown meaning. A Jebusite whose threshing floor David purchased as a site for sacrifice, following the prophetic command of God, holding back a divine plague after David disobeyed by taking a census (2 Sam. 24:15–25). 2 Chronicles 3:1 and 1 Chronicles 21:15–30 refer to Araunah as Ornan.

ARBA (Är' bà) Personal name meaning, "four." Father of Anak for whom Kiriath-arba was named (Josh. 14:15; 15:13). The city became known as Hebron. Arba was the outstanding warrior among the Anakim. See Anakim.

ARBATHITE (Är' băth·īte) Resident of Beth-Arabah (2 Sam. 23:31). See Beth-Arabah.

ARBITE (Är' bīte) Native of Arab, a village in Judah near Hebron (Josh. 15:52), identified as modern er-Rabiyeh. See Paarai.

ARCH KJV rendering of a Hebrew word in Ezekiel 40:16–36. The KJV translates the word as porch elsewhere (for example, 1 Kings 6:3; 7:12,19,21). Other versions translate the word as porch (NAS), portico and galleries (NIV), vestibule and walls (RSV), and entrance room and galleries (TEV). Aside from 1 Kings 7:6 (where the word describes a covered porch whose roof is supported by columns; see Hall of Pillars), the word refers to the entrance room to the main building of the Graeco-Roman arches in the ruins of Gerasa (modern Jerash, Jordan), a city in the Decapolis.

Temple just outside the holy place. The entrance was about thirty by fifteen feet and forty-five feet high (1 Kings 6:2–3; but compare 2 Chron. 3:4). In Ezekiel's vision of the Temple, each gate leading into the court of the Gentiles also had a vestibule (40:7–26) as did the gates to the court of the Israelites (40:29–37).

ARCHAEOLOGY AND BIBLICAL STUDY Archaeology is a study of the past based upon the recovery, examination, and explanation of the material remains of human life, thought, and activity, coordinated with available information concerning the ancient environment.

Biblical archaeology, a discipline largely developing since 1800, searches for what can be learned about biblical events, characters, and teachings from sources outside the Bible. Dealing with what ancient civilizations left behind, its goal is to give a better understanding of the Bible itself.

Students of the Bible are particularly interested in the archaeology of ancient Canaan and its adjacent regions. Today, this is the land forming the countries of Israel, Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan. In addition, the biblical world included other regions such as Egypt, Greece, Italy, Cyprus, the Arabian Peninsula, and the large areas occupied by present-day Turkey, Iraq, and Iran.

Objective The Bible lands have as yet been only partly investigated. Few mounds have been completely excavated. The significance of the objects found is subject to diverse interpretation, and conclusions once held are often abandoned in favor of new hypotheses. In using archaeological data, biblical students need to take precautions to be current. They also need to be conscious of what archaeology can and cannot do. The basic affirmations of the Bible—that God is, that He is active in history, and that Jesus is His Son raised from the dead—are not subject to archaeological verification. One can demonstrate from archaeological materials that Sennacherib invaded Judah in the time of Hezekiah, but that he was a tool in the hand of the Lord can only be known from biblical assertion. That claim is not open to archaeological verification.

A

Step trench cut into the tel of Old Testament Jericho by archaeologists to uncover levels of destruction.

The goal of excavation now is to reconstruct, in as far as possible, the total ancient environment of the site, making materials previously ignored to be important. Epigraphers, anthropologists, botanists, bone, pottery, and architectural specialists are all essential to the effort.

A brief history of archaeology The work of archaeologists in the biblical world in general, and in ancient Canaan in particular, can be divided into three over-lapping periods.

1. Stage One In the earliest period, prior to about A.D. 1900, the practice of archaeology was primarily a "treasure hunt" with no organized, systematic way of going about the work. Individuals set forth to find spectacular items from the past. No clearly determined methodology was followed. Pits and trenches dug into ancient cities often destroyed more than they revealed. Since the area occupied by ancient Israel was relatively poor in "treasure," much of this work was carried out in Egypt and in Mesopotamia, the ancient homeland of the Assyrians and Babylonians (the present site of the country of Iraq).

Before 1800 little was known of the biblical world except from often inaccurate data transmitted by classical writers. The secrets of Egypt opened following the discovery in 1799 of the Rosetta stone and its decipherment by Champollion. The secrets of Mesopotamia began to unfold following the copying and decipherment of the Behistun inscription by Rawlinson begun in 1835, and by the later discovery in 1852 of Ashurbanipal's library by Rassam. Architecture, art, and written sources recovered from numerous ancient sites began to cast rays of light on the Bible, particularly on the Old Testament. About the middle of the ninteenth century, English archaeologists excavated portions of the city of Nineveh, capital of the ancient Assyrian Empire at the height of its power.

Among the discoveries at Nineveh were two great palaces. The huge palace of the Assyrian king, Sennacherib (704–681 B.C.), contained hundreds of feet of wall space lined with sculptured reliefs depicting the exploits of the king. Included is a striking picture of the seige of the important biblical fortress-city of Lachish which was captured by the Assyrians in 701 B.C. Also among the discoveries was the Taylor Prism which contains a written Assyrian version of their invasion of the kingdom of Judah in 701 B.C. The biblical account of the seige of Jerusalem at this time is found in 2 King 18:13—19:37. It is interesting to compare the two records. Although Sennacherib does not claim to have captured Jerusalem, he makes no mention of the calamity suffered by his troops as described in the biblical account.

The palace of King Asshurbanipal (668–633 B.C.) was also uncovered. The most significant find here was a great library of written documents which the king had collected from many portions of the empire. These have provided the student of the Bible with much primary source material from this portion of the ancient world. Of particular interest are mythological stories relating traditions of creation and of a great flood as understood by the people of ancient Mesopotamia.

2. Stage Two Near the beginning of the twentieth century, significant developments in the discipline of archaeology began to occur. In 1890, Sir Flinders Petrie, an English archaeologist who had done important works in Egypt, began excavations at Tell el-Hesi in southwestern Palestine. This work was continued in 1891–92 by an American, F. J. Bliss.

The word "tell" refers to an ancient mound built up over a long period of time by the occupational debris of persons living at the site. People chose to live at a site for certain reasons. The presence of a water supply was crucial. The site might need to be defended from enemies and, therefore, high ground was usually chosen. Fertile soil, the presence of minerals or other natural resources, and accessibility to trade routes were also important factors.

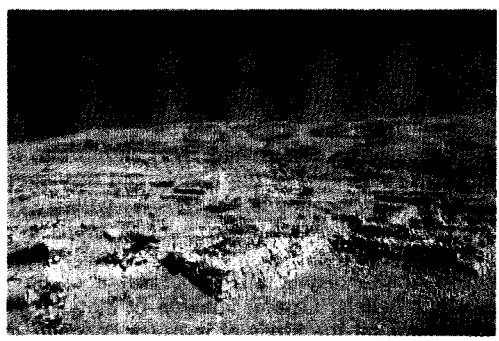
In time, a site was often abandoned, either briefly or for a long duration. The reason might be destruction by an enemy or by a natural catastrophe, such as an earthquake. A town might be deserted because of an epidemic of disease. Another important and probably common reason for people leaving a site was a weather change such as drought. Regardless of why people left, the reasons for settling there in the first place often drew them back. The debris of the earlier occupation was made smooth by leveling off and filling in, and a new village was built on top of the ruins. This process, along with the ordinary accumulation of debris and rebuilding that occurs in any area of human occupation, gradually over the centuries and millennia resulted in the site becoming higher and higher—a "tell" was formed, containing many strata (layers). A large number of these artificially formed mounds dot the biblical landscape.

The work of Petrie and Bliss referred to above was highly significant in two interrelated ways. First, they tried very carefully to excavate Tell el-Hesi layer by layer. Second, they made careful notes of the style of pottery found in each layer. Since the way pottery was made changed through the years, the type found in any one layer permitted the archaeologist to assign an approximate date to that level. Almost a century of study of pottery now enables archaeologists to give almost an absolute date for each strata excavated. Petrie and Bliss's work marks the beginning of a scientific, disciplined approach to archaeology in Palestine. The principles of stratagraphic excavation (isolating each layer) and of pottery analysis are still basic to sound methodology, although many improvements have occurred since the beginning of the twentieth century.



Archaeologists attempt to determine when they are leaving one layer and entering another on the basis of such items as changes in the color, consistency, and content of the soil, or, in some cases, the presence of ashes between strata. A stratum may be very thin or quite thick depending on the nature of the occupation and how long it lasted.

During the first half of the twentieth century, many archaeological expeditions from numerous countries were sent to the biblical world. Stratigraphic excavation and pottery analysis became more precise and exact. Careful records (written reports, drawings, photographs) were kept.

Much was learned. Space permits only one illustration at this point. Samaria was the capital of the Northern Kingdom of ancient Israel. The city was built by the Hebrew Kings Omri and his son Ahab in the first half of the ninth century B.C. During the first third of the twentieth century, excavations sponsored by Harvard University, with the help of several other institutions, partially recovered this old capital city of the Northern Kingdom.

Among the many interesting discoveries at Samaria was a group of over sixty ostraca, probably from the time of King Jeroboam II (782–743 B.C.). An ostracon (plural, ostraca) is a piece of broken pottery that has been written upon. Ancient peoples often employed pieces of pottery as a writing surface and used these for records, lists, and letters. The ostraca from Samaria contain the records of supplies, including grain, oil, and wine, which had been sent in for the support of the royal palace by persons living in various towns. From these, some information can be deduced about the economy and the political organization of the land. In addition, the presence of names of several persons containing Baal as a component (eg. Abibaal, Meribaal) reveal the continued influence of Baalism in the land.

A comparison of these ostraca with Amos 6:1–7 also suggests that the "tax" levied on the common people was being used to support a life-style of luxury and debauchery on the part of the high officials in the government. The passage in Amos also mentions "beds of ivory" (v. 4; see 3:15; 1 Kings 22:39). Several hundred pieces of ivory were found in the excavations of Samaria. Many of these had been used as inlays in furniture.

Overview of the excavations at tel Arad in Israel, showing the Citadel built by David (right background).

In addition to Samaria, excavations began or were continued at a large number of sites in the biblical world during the first six or seven decades of the twentieth century. The list includes such important places as Babylon and Ur in ancient Mesopotamia and Ai, Bethel, Hazor, Jericho, Jerusalem, Lachish, Megiddo, Shechem, and many other sites in ancient Israel.

3. Stage Three Beginning about 1960, a new stage in the history of archaeology in the Ancient Near East began to emerge. It was prompted in part by a new question that people began to ask: "What does it all mean?" Archaeologists and others began to realize that it was not enough to make discoveries and to describe those discoveries. They needed synthesis of information and the explanation of data.

A

During the second stage of archaeology, primary attention had been paid to art, architecture, pottery and written sources, with little or no thought given to the investigation of other possible windows of information to the past. As the third stage began to unfold, it became clear that to determine the meaning of the evidence being recovered and to understand more fully the people and civilizations of the past required additional information.

This stage of archaeology, sometimes called the "New Archaeology," is characterized by a multidisciplinary team approach to the archaeological task. The approach also emphasizes the use of volunteer help and a strong educational program. In the previous stage much of the labor of digging had been done by persons living in the region who were paid for their services. The third stage of archaeology also is characterized by a growing tendency to think in terms of a regional approach rather than concentrating exclusively on one site. Interest is growing in the investigation of small villages as opposed to an almost total concentration in the past on large, "important" cities.

In Israel, the modern approach was pioneered at Tell Gezer in the 1960's and early 1970's and was continued at numerous sites, such as Tell el-Hesi and Tell Halif in the 1970's and 1980's. The professional staff of an archaeology team in the new stage includes not only field archaeologists, but also botanists, geologists, zoologists, and anthropologists with various areas of expertise and interest. The plant and animal life of an ancient site can now be determined. This allows one to reconstruct the diet of the people and may shed significant information about weather patterns in the past. Examination of human skeletons and burial customs provides important clues about the health of the people and about some of their religious beliefs. Careful analysis of stone tools sheds light on the kinds of industry common in the community. Examination of the constituents in the clay used for pottery often permits one to determine where the vessel was made and may provide helpful information about commerce and trade routes.

All of this permits a much more complete picture than is available from buildings, pottery forms, and even from many written sources. Now there seems to be a real possibility that information about the everyday life of ordinary men and women during the biblical period can be gained.

Contributions of Archaeology to Biblical Study

The purpose of archaeology is not to "prove the Bible." This lies outside the scope of archaeology and, in any case, the Bible does not need to be "proved." Archaeology can, however, make considerable contribution to one's understanding of the Bible. It can help clarify and illuminate the Bible in many important ways.

1. Archaeology and the Biblical Text The oldest complete copy of the Old Testament in Hebrew, the Leningrad Manuscript, has a date of A.D. 1008. The major Greek manuscripts from which the New Testament is translated came from the fourth century A.D. The Bible, particulary the Old Testament, was copied by hand many times before reaching the form found in the manuscripts just mentioned. During that process some mistakes were inevitably made by the human scribes. Also, some words in the Bible, particularly in the Old Testament, are obscure—their meaning is not certain. This can be a particularly difficult problem when a word is used only once or twice in the Bible.

Archaeology, through the recovery of ancient Hebrew and Greek copies of the Scripture, plus the discovery of other old literature written in related languages has helped scholars to determine a more exact text of the Bible than was available previously. It has also demonstrated that the scribes were very careful in their work.

At the end of the last century in a rubbish room (now known as the Cairo Geniza) of an old synagogue in Cairo, Egypt, an invaluable find of Hebrew materials was made. In 1947 archaeologists began to see the Dead Sea Scrolls found in eleven caves. This moved knowledge of Hebrew manuscripts back from the Middle Ages to the period 250 B.C. to A.D. 70.

A new Old Testament critical text is being prepared by the Hebrew University in Jerusalem from an old codex from the synagogue at Aleppo, Syria, with comparisons with the new materials.

The Dead Sea Scrolls are from Qumran, an old community located near the northwest shore of the Dead Sea. At least a fragment of every Old Testament book except Esther was found in the Qumran caves. A complete copy of the Book of Isaiah was written about 100 B.C. The text of this manuscript is very close to that found eleven hundred years later in the Leningrad Manuscript. During all those years, the scribes did their job very well. In a handful of cases, however, minor problems which had crept into the text of Isaiah could be corrected by use of the older scroll. Modern translations of the Old Testament usually include these improvements.

Knowledge of writing has greatly increased. The earliest documents now known from Syria-Palestine would be the Ebla texts (the first of which were found in 1975) dating about 2400 B.C., followed by the Ugaritic texts (found 1929–1937) on the coast of Syria and dating about 1400 B.C. Examples of eight different writing scripts in Palestine which antedate the time of Moses have solved the question debated in the last century of whether or not Moses could have known writing. Examples of decipherable Hebrew found by archaeologists begin at about the time of Solomon with the Gezer calendar.

In 1929 French archaeologists began to excavate the ancient city of Ugarit near the coast of Syria. Many clay tablets containing ancient writing were unearthed. Most of these were written in a previously unknown language, soon called Ugaritic. Ugaritic is a Northwest Semitic language. Hebrew belongs to this same family of languages. Ugaritic is the earliest example of a language written in an alphabetical script. A study of Ugaritic has helped Old Testament scholars better understand the nature and development of the Hebrew language, and it has been of particular value in the clarification of some of the ancient Hebrew poetry contained in the Bible.

Earlier scholars defined Old Testament words by comparison with Arabic and by meanings derived from rabbinic tradition. Discovery and decipherment of previously unknown ancient Middle Eastern languages like Sumerian, Akkadian, Hittite, Ugaritic, Aramaic, and Eblite give a wider base for definition of words, making (by the study called Comparative Semitics) for a substantial reorientation of Old Testament vocabulary.

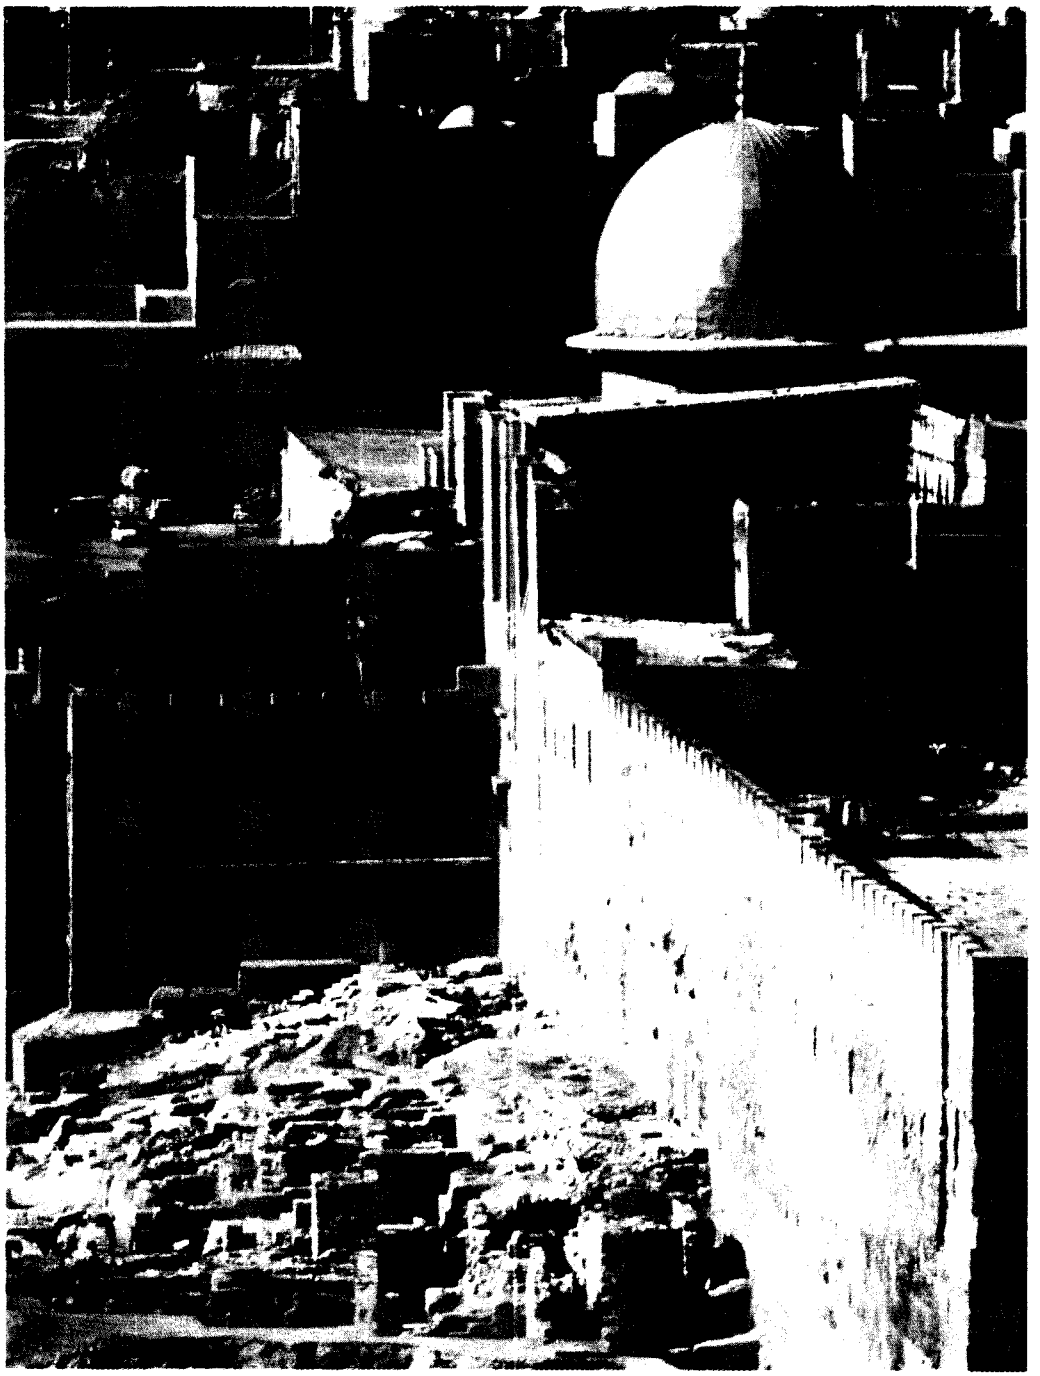
In 1 Samuel 13:21 there is a Hebrew word, pim, which occurs nowhere else in the Bible. The meaning of this word was not known to early readers and translators of the Bible. Although the translators of the King James Version of 1611 chose the word file to translate pim, there was no firm basis for the choice. Since that time archaeologists have found several small weights from ancient Israel bearing the word pim. A pim appears to have weighed a little less than a shekel. Now it is clear that the word pim refers to the charge made by the Philistines for working on the Hebrew's iron tools. Recent translations of the Bible reflect this new understanding.

With reference to the New Testament, during the last one to two centuries, numerous old papyrus manuscripts have been found, mainly in Egypt, which contain portions of the biblical text. At least a small portion of every book in the New Testament, except 1 and 2 Timothy, has been found in these ancient Greek papyri. The oldest of these is known as the Rylands Papyrus dated about A.D. 125. It contains John 18:31–33,37–38. These papyri are useful to scholars involved in the task of determining the best textual base of the New Testament. The number of Greek manuscripts and fragments known has increased from about 1,500 in 1885 to 5,373 in 1986. Included are ninety-three papyrus items which carry knowledge of the text behind the fourth century codices previously depended upon to the second century for the parts of the text covered. New Greek critical texts are being prepared to make all the material available to students, and already English translations are reflecting the new finds.

The non-biblical papyrus find made in Egypt at the end of the last century furnished new insights into everyday Greek usage and vocabulary which have now become the substance of New Testament language study.

Related to the matter of text is the question of canon. Why were some books included in the Bible and others omitted? How and when did this selection take place? The Dead Sea Scrolls from Qumran throw some limited light on these questions. For example, some parts of the canon were still not finalized during the time of this Jewish community (ca. 150 B.C. to A.D. 68). Scrolls containing the Book of Psalms have been found in cave eleven which differ in several ways from the Book of Psalms as it was finalized by the Jews about A.D. 100. The Qumran material contains some psalms that eventually were left out of the Bible and omit some that were finally included.

Also, the Qumran group had two different old Hebrew copies of the Book of Jeremiah. One, a longer version, was eventually accepted as the standard by the Jewish people and is the one now translated in the Christian's Old Testament. The shorter version can be found in the Septuagint, the ancient translation of the Old Testament into Greek.



2. Archaeology and Biblical Geography As late as A.D. 1800, the location of many of the places mentioned in the Bible was unknown. In 1838, an American explorer by the name of Edward Robinson, and his assistant, Eli Smith, made a trip through Palestine on horseback. On the basis of their study of geography and the analysis of place names, they were able to identify over one hundred biblical sites. Robinson returned for further exploration in 1852.

Since the time of Robinson, archaeologists have been able to identify a great many of the sites mentioned in the Bible, including the places visited by the apostle Paul on his travels. Not only have villages and cities been identified, but entire kingdoms have been located. For example, excavations beginning in 1906 by German archaeologists in what is now Turkey recovered the lost empire of the Hittites.

The location of places like Jerusalem and Bethlehem were never forgotten. Other places were destroyed and their location lost. Edward Robinson developed a technique by which literary information and travelers' reports, coupled with local historical memory, could give probable identities. Excavation of the ruins in the areas has helped. Twenty-eight jar handles found in the cistern at El Jib made certain the location of ancient Gibeon; six stone carvings with the name "Gezer" identify that place, and "Arad" seven times scratched on a potsherd confirms its location.

A

3. Archaeology and Biblical History The Bible makes no attempt to give a complete history of the people of God, much less of the entire biblical world. The material included in the Bible was carefully selected under the guidance of God, and the history contained therein is theologically interpreted. Today's reader, far removed from the ancient event, often wishes for a more complete understanding of the historical context. Archaeology has helped a great deal in this regard by recovering many ancient historical records, including documents from Assyria, Babylonian, and Egypt. This information fills in some of the blank spaces, illuminating the biblical narrative and making the sacred accounts more understandable and interesting.

Egyptian reports like "The Tale of Sinuhe" show how Palestine appeared to Egyptians about the time of Abraham. The Tell Amarna tablets found by a peasant woman in Egypt are letters from Palestinian rulers to the reigning pharaohs; but they show the unstable conditions in Palestine prior to the Israelite conquest which enabled Israel to conquer the enemy one by one.

The Egyptian Pharaoh Merneptah (1213–1204 B.C.) invaded Syro-Palestine during his brief reign. A monument found in his mortuary chamber at Thebes contains a record of this venture and includes the oldest reference to Israel outside of the Bible. Israel is called a people, rather than a nation. Merneptah claimed to have utterly destroyed them. Here is clear evidence that Israelites were in the land of Canaan by no later than the thirteenth century B.C., and it supports the biblical picture that the people were not organized as a nation by this date.

The discovery of the law code of Hammurabi in 1901 at Susa with its preamble and 282 laws opened the way for interesting comparisons with Israel's laws. Archaeologists now have five cuneiform law codes which were written before the time of Moses: those of Ur-Nammu, Eshnunna, Lipit-Ishtar, Hammurabi, and the Hittites. Slightly later are the Middle Assyrian laws. Interesting comparisons in the "eye for an eye" law, the case of rape on the mountain as contrasted with in the city, possession of the goring ox, kidnapping, killing a thief in the house, and matters of deposited property can be made between these laws and those of Moses. Contrasts include the number of acts for which the accused is subjected to the ordeal (Num. 5) and the punishments of mutilation (Deut. 25:12). While these codes have both similarities and differences from the laws of Moses, the claim of borrowing cannot be established. The varieties of bodily mutilation prescribed by Hammurabi are absent in Israel's laws as are also the unlimited floggings.

Though searched for in the Jericho area, the location of Gilgal, the Israelites' camping place, remains elusive. Despite what now seems to have been unfounded claims earlier made for Jericho by John Garstang, archaeological evidence for the conquest of Jericho, Ai, and Gibeon, after excavation of the sites, remains debated. K. Kenyon demonstrated that Garstang misdated the walls which he assumed were those Joshua took. Debate continues over whether archaeological evidence shows a cultural change which could be identified with Israel's conquest of the land. Cities on the Palestinian hill country like Shiloh, Bethel, Gibeah, Bethzur, Debir, and Hazor underwent destruction in the late Bronze Age, and poorer cities rose on their mounds; but the destroyer and rebuilder remain unidentified.

Continuing archaeological excavations along the southern border of the Temple Mount in Jerusalem.

The Philistines, a part of the "Sea Peoples" who came into the land following their being blocked in Egypt by Rameses III, and who left their name on the land, offered major opposition to the Israelites. Rameses III depicted his battle with them on sea and land on the walls of the temple at Medinet Habu. Philistine levels have been identified on numerous Palestine sites.

Interesting sidelights on the general period of the Judges and Kings include the Egyptian custom of counting the victims of a campaign from stacks of severed hands (compare Judg. 8:6), the putting out of an eye (1 Sam. 11:1–11), or both eyes (2 Kings 25:7), and depiction of circumcised men on a Megiddo ivory [as well as on an Egyptian papyrus] where the subject described his ordeal.

Tell el-Balatah (ancient Shechem) had foundations of a temple from the late Bronze Age conjectured to be those of Baal-Berith (Judg. 9). The Danites migrated north to Laish (Judg. 18:1–31), the site known as Tel Dan. Later Dan became a shrine city, and excavation has yielded an inscription from about A.D. 200 in Greek and Aramaic, "To the god who is in Dan." Dagon to whose temple the ark was taken while in Philistine territory (1 Sam. 5:2) is now known from occurrences of his name all over the Middle East to have been a grain god rather than a combined man-fish as he was hypothetically depicted in old dictionaries. In Ugaritic texts, Baal is the "son of Dagon."

Remains of similar city gates, conjecturally identified as Solomonic, have been found at Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer. Remains of pagan temples of the Solomonic period, coupled with biblical data, enable scholars to do reconstruction of what Solomon's Temple must have been like. A potsherd from Tel Qasile is inscribed "Gold of Ophir to Bethhoron." Assyrian occurrences of the term "Que" make clear that it is a place in what is now southern Turkey from which Solomon got his horses rather than the "linen yarn" of the KJV (1 Kings 10:28). Claims of having found remains of Solomon's stables, as well as of finding his mines and smelter, have been abandoned.

The law (Ex. 22:26–27) forbids keeping overnight a man's garment in pledge. Amos 2:8 faults those who have used pledged garments at worship shrines. An ostracon found at Mesad Hashaviahu has the seventh century complaint of a man whose garment had been taken but who sought redress from the governor.

Inscriptions with the name of Yahweh, Israel's God, begin with the Mesha stone in the ninth century and stretch to the fifth century Elephantine papyri. They come from a wide geographical area, including Arad, Jerusalem, and Kuntillet ʿAjrud. Numerous ostraca have names that are compounds of Yahweh.

After the death of Solomon (ca. 922 B.C.), the Hebrew kingdom divided into two portions, the Northern Kingdom (Israel) and the Southern Kingdom (Judah). One powerful nation thereby became two weak nations, and the Egyptian ruler Shishak took advantage of the situation by invading the land about 918 B.C. (1 Kings 14:25–28). The biblical account is very brief and only tells of an attack on Jerusalem. Shishak, however, recorded his exploits on a wall in the temple of the god Amun in Karnak, Egypt. He claims to have captured over 150 towns in Palestine, including places in the Northern Kingdom. The probability that this invasion was a greater blow to the Hebrew kingdoms than is obvious from the brief account in 1 Kings is suggested not only by the Egyptian record, which may have been inflated to some degree, but also by the archaeological evidence that several of the cities named were indeed destroyed at about this time. Here is an example of archaeology helping to provide a larger historical context which enriches the study of Scripture.

Mesha, king of Moab, on the Moabite stone gave his account of his servitude to the Israelite kings and his effort to free himself which seems parallel to the record in 2 Kings 3. The name of Omri, of Mesha, of the Lord, of Chemosh, and of numerous Palestinian cities are listed on this stone. The policy of cherem by which a place is totally devoted to the deity as Jericho earlier was (Josh. 6:21) is illustrated. Other records enlarge our knowledge of biblical characters. Such are the records of Ahab's participation in the battle of Qarqar in 853 B.C. on a monument set up by Shalmaneser III, and of Jehu's tribute to Shalmaneser III recorded on the black obelisk now in the British Museum. Neither episode is mentioned in the Bible.

Omri was king of the Northern Kingdom about 876–869 B.C. During his short reign he moved the capital from Tirzah to the newly built city of Samaria. He was an evil king, and the Bible devotes little space to him (1 Kings 16:15–28). The surrounding nations, however, perceived Omri as a very strong and able ruler. He made such an impression on the Assyrians that for over a hundred years their records continue to refer to Israel as "the House of Omri," even after his dynasty no longer ruled. This reminds one that, from a biblical perspective, faithfulness to God is considered to be much more important than ability in warfare and government.

Assyrian records furnish information on Tiglathpileser, Sargon, Sennacherib, and Ashurbanipal who are significant in the Old Testament. They also mention the kings of Israel and Judah, chronicling the exchange of the last kings of Israel and the exiling of Samaria. Until the excavation of Sargon's palace by Emil Botta, Sargon was known only from the Bible. Sargon's invasion of Ashdod (Isa. 20) was recorded by Sargon, and a fragment of a stele set up in Ashdod was found there. Sennacherib depicted his siege of Lachish in his palace and told on a cylinder of his bringing Hezekiah to his knees. A water tunnel in Jerusalem is conjectured to be that which Hezekiah built at this time. Its inscription tells of the excavation required to build the tunnel. A record tells of Sennacherib's murder by his son. The Babylonians told of the downfall of Nineveh, of the battle of Carchemish, and of the capture of Jerusalem in a record which establishes March 15/16, 597 B.C. as its date.

The prophetic movement is one of the most distinctive features of Old Testament life. Search for antecedents has looked at Ebla, where an occurrence of the equivalent of the Hebrew word is reported. More than twenty texts from Mari on the Euphrates report prophetic-like figures with visions and spoken messages given to the heads of state. The eleventh century tale of Wen-Amon's mission to Byblos continues to be the classic example of ecstatic behavior. The eighth century Zakir inscription from Afis, Syria, has the deity Baʿal-sheman speak through his seers (chozim). The excavation of Tell Deir ʿAlla yielded Balaam texts in Aramaic from the sixth century, the first prophetic text of any scope outside the Old Testament (compare Num. 22—24). Even at that date this "seer of the God" was still being revered at some places. None of these areas have a prophetic literature comparable to that of the writing prophets.

Nahum's description of the fall of Nineveh can be better understood by a study of the depiction of ancient warfare on the Assyrian monuments. These picture attacks of cities, war chariot charges, and the exiling of people. Nahum 3:8 compared the date of Nineveh to that of Thebes. The Assyrian records also depict the siege of an Egyptian city plus a description of the capture of Thebes.

The poignant statement in Jeremiah 34:6–7 that the Bablyonian army had captured all the fortified cities in Judah except Jerusalem, Lachish, and Azekah is highlighted by a group of twenty-one ostraca found by archaeologists at Lachish. These ostraca are rough, draft copies of a letter the Hebrew commander at the doomed city of Lachish was preparing to send to a high official in Jerusalem. Among other things, he wrote that signals were no longer being received from Azekah. Apparently he was writing shortly after the time of Jeremiah 34. Now only two major cities were still resisting the Babylonian onslaught—Azekah had fallen.

The fate of Israelite people in Exile is illustrated in a list of rations found in excavations at the Ishtar Gate of Babylon which are for Yaukin (Je-hoiachin) and his sons. Banking records found at Nippur show that people of Jewish names were doing business there while in Exile. Although there is as yet no known text which specifically calls Belshazzar a king, this figure once known only from the Bible is abundantly known in texts.

The return from Exile was accomplished by means of a decree of Cyrus. Cyrus's cylinder, now in the British Museum, though not mentioning the Jews or their Temple, makes clear that such a project was in keeping with Cyrus's general policy. Papyri found at Elephantine Island in Egypt dating about the time of Nehemiah show the condition of Jews in that area, but also permit a dating of Nehemiah's work. Sons of Sanballat are mentioned; and these documents together with Samaritan papyri found in a cave northwest of Jericho make clear that a series of figures bore this name.

Archaeology and Ancient Culture A vast gulf separates the cultures of today, especially those found in the western hemisphere, from those of the biblical period. One of the greatest contributions of archaeology lies in its ability to break down barriers of time and culture and to move the reader of the Bible back into its ancient context, providing fresh insight and increased understanding of the Scripture.

The list of biblical objects which has been found in excavations, allowing us to know exactly what a word means, is large. Examples of weights and measures, plow points, weapons, tools, jewelry, clay jars, seals, and coins are all included. Ancient art depicts clothing styles, weapons, modes of transportation, methods of warfare, and styles of life. Excavated tombs show burial customs which in themselves reflect beliefs about life and death. The Beni Hasan tomb in Egypt from around 1900 B.C. shows how Semites coming to Egypt would have been dressed. It is our nearest approach to what a patriarch might have looked like, and it moves students away from the Bedouin analogy previously made.

Archaeological field worker in background is drawing a scaled sketch of the area just excavated.

Archaeology furnishes much knowledge of the cultures of Israel's neighbors—the Canaanites, Egyptians, Hittites, Philistines, Moabites, Assyrians, Arameans, Babylonians, and Persians. Finds reveal the gods they worshiped, their trade, wars, and treaties.

The tables found at Ugarit provide much primary source information about Canaanite faith and practice. They present a fairly clear picture of what life was like in the land where the Israelites settled down. See Canaan.

The Ugaritic texts reveal the Canaanite pantheon with the worship practices of the Canaanite people against which the Hebrew prophets like Elijah, Elisha, and Hosea struggled. The Samaritan ostraca (broken pottery with ink writing) from after 700 B.C. containing numerous names about half of which are compounds of the name Baal, and the Kuntillet ʿAjrud inscription which speaks of "Yahweh and his Asherah" (female counterpart) reveal the syncretism into which Israel was drawn.

Archaeological studies have aided with chronology. The Hebrews dated from the beginning of years of the reign of the kings but did not develop a consecutive dating system with one beginning point. They simply began anew with each king. By cross comparisons of biblical with Egyptian, Assyrian, and Babylonian data, scholars can assign reasonably accurate dates in modern terms to many Old Testament events.

Claims of discovery of parallels to patriarchal customs once made are now being reevaluated because of a methodological flaw in the arguments made. In some cases scholars were not careful to note specifically what the Bible said; in others they felt free when finding a custom to make a slight modification in Scripture statement and then to claim a parallel to the modification. An example is the claim that Rachel wanted the teraphim to get a special position for her husband. While such a benefit may be in the Nuzi texts, Scripture nowhere suggests this aim was Rachel's motive.

Genesis 15:1–6 indicates that Abraham and Sarah had made Eliezer, a member of their household staff, their official heir. They may have adopted him to do so, apparently in response to the long delay in the birth of a promised child. A bit later, as recorded in Genesis 16:1–16, Sarah took the further step of having a child by proxy. At her urging, Abraham fathered a son, Ishmael, by the Egyptian maid, Hagar. What was the stimulus for these actions? Clay tablets have been found at the ancient northeastern Mesopotamian city of Nuzi which cast some light on this question. The tablets came from a time a few centuries after

A

Abraham, but contain a record of customs practiced over a long period of time. These tablets reveal that both the adoption of a son and the birth of a son by proxy were common practices for a barren couple. Careful laws were enacted to safeguard the rights of all parties. Abraham's roots were in Mesopotamia (Gen. 11:27–32), and he must have known of these customs. Abraham and Sarah appear to have followed the generally accepted cultural norms of their day.

Genesis 15:7–21 greatly puzzles the modern reader. The passage is difficult to understand. What is actually happening? At least partial light has been shed on this passage by the recovery of numerous clay tablets from the northern Mesopotamian city of Mari. The tablets are from the eighteenth century B.C., a time not too distant from the probable date of Abraham. The tablets indicate that the ceremony used at that time for sealing an agreement or covenant included the cutting of a donkey into half. The persons involved in the contract would then walk between the severed pieces of the animal. One sees that God gave Abraham instructions regarding the ceremony that would have been familiar to the patriarch. God met Abraham in his own cultural context. It is of interest that when people in later Old Testament times made a covenant, they are said, in the Hebrew language, to have "cut a covenant."

The value of archaeology to history and to textual study merges in an interesting passage in 2 Kings 23:29–30. The 1611 King James Version indicates that the Egyptian Pharaoh, Neco, went up against the Assyrian king. When the Hebrew king, Josiah, sought to interfere, he was killed by the Egyptians in a battle at Megiddo (622 B.C.). Recovered Babylonian documents indicate, however, that the Pharaoh was going up to the aid of the Assyrians. The problem revolves around the translation of the Hebrew preposition which can mean against, but can also mean to, or unto. There is no reason to doubt the accuracy of the Babylonian record at this point. Therefore, recent translations of the Old Testament indicate that Neco was going to the Assyrians (to their aid) rather than against them.

New Testament The contribution of archaeology to New Testament study is as exciting as that to the study of the Old Testament. The Dead Sea Scroll discoveries show that Judaism was more complicated than previously suspected. The Nag Hammadi documents from Egypt show how the Gnostics misinterpreted Jesus.

Tombs with rolling stones in place, and the bones of a crucified man with the nails in his heel bones have been found. Remains of first century synagogues at Masada, the Herodium, and Ostia have been identified; and the Theodotos inscription from Jerusalem tells of the building of a synagogue. Coins of the Herods and the Procurators have been found. At Caesarea an inscription mentioning a structure by Pontius Pilate in honor of Tiberius Caesar was found in the theater.

The New Testament rightfully presents Herod the Great as a ruthless and wicked king (Matt. 2:1–23). Very few details of his life are given. A more complete picture of this complex man is now available through the writings of the first century A.D. Jewish historian, Josephus, and through the work of archaeologists. Herod was one of the greatest builders of the ancient world. A visitor to the Holy Land can now see numerous remains from Herod's building program. These include the Temple platform in Jerusalem, the harbor city of Caesarea, the strong fortress of Masada, the striking ruins of Samaria, and the Herodium, the fortress palace where Herod was buried. These, and numerous other sites excavated by archaeologists, remind one that the world in which Jesus lived continued to be dominated to a large degree by Herod—not only through the rule of his sons, but also by the monuments of stone that he left behind. In Jerusalem the thirty-five acre platform on which Herod built his Temple still stands, and parts of the tower of David at the Citadel are Herodian. Inscription stones warning the Gentiles not to proceed into the court of Israel have been found.

Alleged relics of New Testament figures can never be demonstrated to be genuine. Claims for having located the house of Peter at Capernaum and for having located his tomb in Rome are based on pious asssumptions. Pilgrims have been going to Palestine since the second century when Melito of Sardis went "to see the places." Many have left records of what they were shown; but sites like the place of Jesus' birth, baptism, and burial have only long veneration to establish their claim.

Most Pauline cities and those of the Book of Revelation have been located, and many excavated. Corinth has supplied its inscription "synagogue of the Hebrews," and that of Erastus who laid the pavement at his own expense (compare Rom. 16:23). Papyrus documents from Egypt contain invitations to pagan dinners which are good illustrations of the Corinthian problem of being invited to a dinner where food has been offered to idols.

These examples are only a beginning of the materials relevant to New Testament study which archaeology has brought to light. See William H. Stephens, The New Testament World in Pictures (Nashville: Broadman Press, 1987).

Archaeology has supplied older manuscripts of Bible texts than those previously depended on, examples of objects spoken of in the Bible, numerous items that illuminate the cultural background, and at times offers information which enlarges knowledge of a specific biblical character or event. The idea that archaeology proves the Bible is very much frowned upon in archaeological circles. Its main task is illumination rather than proving. The gulf in time, language, and culture between our own day and the time depicted in the Bible makes knowledge of the archaeological contribution essential for biblical study.

J. Kenneth Eakins and Jack P. Lewis

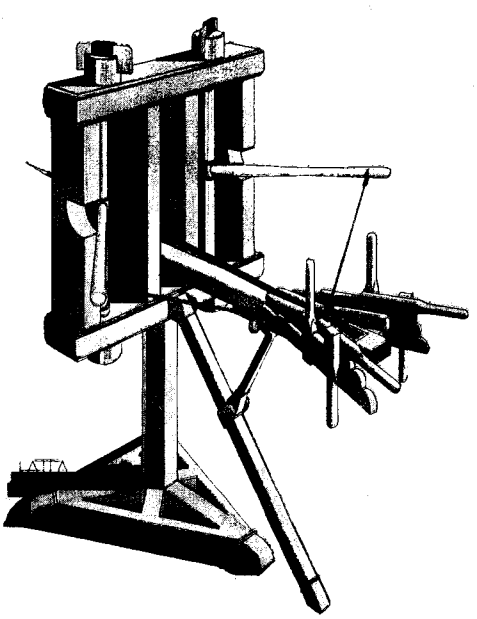
ARCHANGEL The English term archangel is based on a Greek term archangelos which means "chief, or first angel."

In religious texts dating from the post-exilic period, there appears to be substantial change in perception of angels. Hierarchies emerge in the literature that stressed particular groupings headed by archangels [that is, chief angels] who were counted among number designations such as seven (Tobit 12:15; 4 Ezra 5:20), four (Enoch 4; 87:2–3; 88:1), three (Enoch 90:31). The archangels Michael (Dan. 10:13; 12:1; Enoch 9:1; 10:11), Gabriel (Dan. 8:16; Enoch 9:1; 20:7; 40:9), Raphael (Tobit 3:17; 12:15; Enoch 10:4; 40:9) and Uriel (Enoch 9:1; 19:1; 20:2) gain particular hero status. These special archangels function as mediators between God and humans, and frequently there is a perceptible character that stands in contrast (but not necessarily in opposition) to the messenger function. The archangels are interpreters of the message. Although angels generally represented a "guardian role," common to the ancient near eastern world, archangels seem to be of a superior category. In particular, Michael (Dan. 10:13,21; 12:1; Jude 9; Assumption of Moses 12:7–9), Gabriel (gabriel, "hero of God"; Dan. 8:16; 9:21; Lk 1:19,26), and Raphael (rapa,el "God has healed"; a chief figure in the book of Tobit, see 3:16–17) were cast as important interpreters, advocates, and intercessors.

The New Testament continues the idea of angels as messengers of God. Among the numerous references, an angel advises Joseph of Jesus' birth (Matt. 1:20), and warns of the advisability of the flight into Egypt (Matt. 2:13,19). The archangel, Gabriel, is the messenger who speaks of the birth of John in Luke 1:11, 19, and tells Mary of the birth of Jesus (Luke 1:26). The Book of Revelation appears to reflect tradition of archangels found in Enoch (although the term archangelos is found only in 1 Thess. 4:16 and Jude 9) that have holy creatures waiting on the throne of God, presiding over the corners of the earth, and are part of the cosmic reordering at the end of time (Rev. 1:4; 4:5; 7:1; 12:7; Enoch 9:1; 10:1; 40:2; 90:21). See Angel.

Wayne McCready

ARCHELAUS (Är·chė·lā′ ŭs) Son and principal successor of Herod the Great (Matt. 2:22). When Herod died in 4 B.C., his sons Herod Antipas and Philip were named tetrarchs; but his son Archelaus was the principal successor. Aware of the hostility of the Jews toward his family, Archelaus did not attempt to ascend the throne immediately. First, he tried to win the Jews over. His efforts were not successful; as the Jews revolted, and Archelaus ordered his army to retaliate.



Archelaus encountered opposition to his reign from his brothers, in particular Herod Antipas, who felt entitled to the throne. The brothers presented their case to the emperor Augustus, who gave Archelaus one half of his father Herod's land and split the remainder between Antipas and Philip. Archelaus was given the title Tetrarch, but was promised the title of King if he reigned virtuously.

Archelaus interfered in the high priesthood, married against Jewish law, and oppressed the Samaritans and Jews through brutal treatment. In revolt, the people sent deputations to Caesar to have Archelaus denounced. His rule was ended in A.D. 6 when the Roman government banished him to Gaul and added his territory to Syria.

Joseph was warned in a dream to avoid Judea because of Archelaus' rule. He decided to take Mary and the child Jesus to Galilee when they returned from Egypt rather than go to Judea (Matt. 2:22).

ARCHER One who shoots an arrow from a bow. Archery was used in ancient times for the hunting of both small and large game and in warfare. An archer trained from childhood until he could pull a 100-pound bow that would shoot an arrow a distance of 300-400 yards. Several Old Testament passages mention archery in warfare (Gen. 49:23–24; 2 Sam. 11:24). See Arms and Armor.

Reconstruction of an ingenious Roman archer's machine of the first-century A.D.

ARCHEVITES (Är' chē·vītes) Group who joined Rehum the commander in writing a letter to King Artaxerxes of Persia protesting the rebuilding of Jerusalem under Zerubbabel's leadership about 537 B.C. NAS, NIV, NRSV translate Archevites as people or men of Erech. See Erech.

ARCHI (Är' chī), ARCHITE An unknown group of people who gave their name to a border point of the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh. 16:2). They may have been a clan of Benjamin, or more likely remnants of the ancient "Canaanite" inhabitants. Their only representative in the Bible was David's Counselor Hushai. See Hushai.

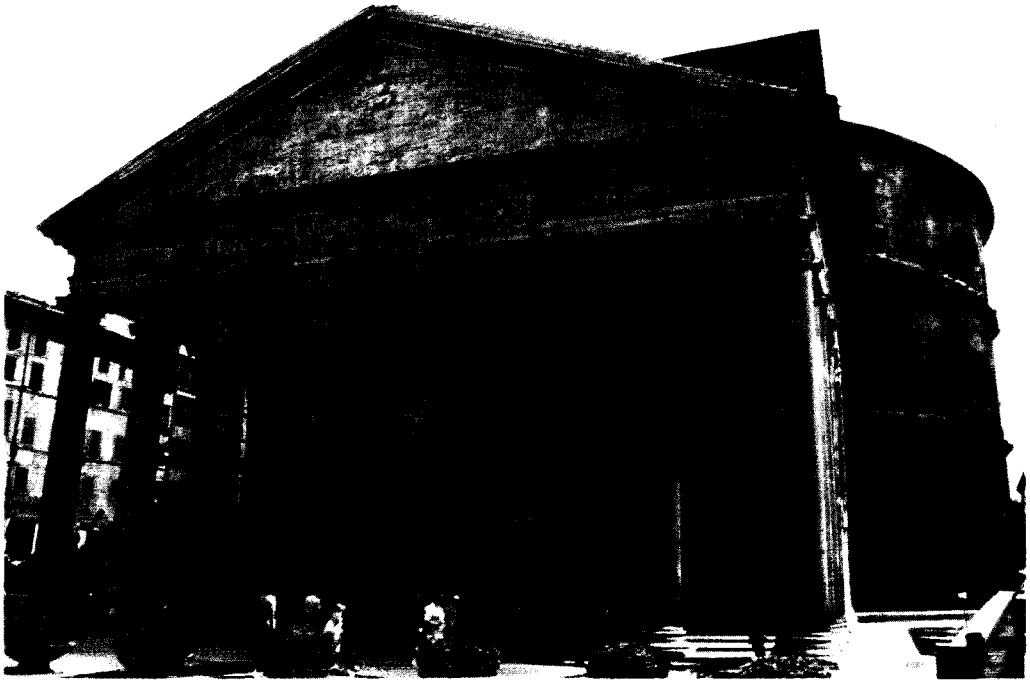
ARCHIPPUS (Är·chĭp pŭs) Personal name meaning, "First among horsemen." A Christian Paul greeted in Colossians 4:17 and Philemon 2, entreating him to fulfill the ministry God gave him. Some have suggested he was the son of Philemon and Appia, but this can be neither proved or disproved. The nature of his ministry has also been widely discussed without firm conclusions. Paul's use of "fellow soldier" to describe him seems to indicate a strong participation in church leadership. Evidently, he preached in the church at Colossae.

ARCHITECTURE IN THE BIBLICAL PERIOD reflects the construction, the techniques, and the materials used in building the structures of the Ancient Near East.

Atrium of the Roman villa of the Poet Menander in Pompeii (destroyed in A.D. 79).

Old Testament The people of the Ancient Near East used many types of building materials. Utilizing natural resources, they most often exploited stone, wood, reeds, and mud. Used naturally, mud served as mortar. It also was formed into bricks and then sun dried. Religious or large public buildings used the more expensive lumber that came from cedar, cypress, sandalwood, and olive trees. The sycamore tree served as a less costly lumber. Limestone and basalt were common stones used in construction.



1. Public Structures. As a basic element of city architecture, walls served three general purposes. Protective walls encircled the city to keep out enemy forces. These city walls usually did not support any load. Retaining walls had the purpose of keeping in place any weight that was behind them. In agricultural terracing, they prevented erosion and created a level place for farming on the sides of hills. This type of wall also was placed below city walls to stop any erosion of the soil which ultimately might weaken the city walls. Lastly, buildings and houses used walls to bear loads or keep out the weather.

Walls were made of several layers or courses of stones placed one on top of the other with mud bricks often set on the stone courses. Composed of large field stones, the first few layers served as the foundation of the wall. The placing of the large stones into trenches gave the wall a more stable foundation. In houses and public buildings, the stone courses above the ground may have been given smooth surfaces so as to produce a uniform look, but this was not always done. Large public building projects commonly made use of a technique called headers and stretchers. The builders alternated laying the stones lengthwise and breadthwise to form the wall.

During the time of Solomon, a common type of city wall was the casemate wall. This was composed of two parallel walls with perpendicular walls placed at intervals in between the parallel ones. The empty spaces formed between the walls, called casemates, commonly were filled with stones, earth, or debris. Sometimes the people used the spaces for living quarters, guardrooms, or storehouses. The outer parallel wall averaged about 5 1/2 feet in width, while the inner parallel wall averaged about 4 feet. This type of wall had an advantage over a solid wall due to its greater strength and its saving of material and labor. Excavations at Gezer, Megiddo, and Hazor uncovered the remains of casemate walls.

The inset-offset wall came into use as a city wall after the time of Solomon. Its name came from the technique used to build it. After erecting one stretch of the wall, the next stretch was slightly recessed by about 1/2 yard. The following section then was built slightly forward with the next section placed slightly behind it. Each stretch of the wall was placed alternately either slightly ahead or slightly behind the previous section. This "insetting" and "offsetting" of the city wall allowed the city's defenders to fire at any attackers from three angles: head on and to the right and left of the attackers. As a solid structure composed of stone or mud bricks placed on a stone foundation, this type of wall contrasts with the casemate wall. The remains of an inset-offset wall, eleven feet in thickness, were excavated at Megiddo.

The city gate was an important part of public architecture because it was the weakest part of the city's defenses. It also served as a meeting place for the various city activities. Remains of Solomonic gates at Megiddo, Gezer, and Hazor show that two square towers flanked the entrance into the gate. The gate complex was composed of three successive chambers or rooms on each side (six chambers in all). A gate separated each pair of chambers, and the six rooms probably served as guardhouses. At Dan, a later gate had the two towers, but only four chambers instead of six. This gate complex measured 58 x 97 feet. The approach to the gate from outside the city usually was placed at an angle. This forced any attackers to expose their flanks to the defenders on the city walls. Should the attackers be able to get inside the gate area, the angle caused the attackers to move at a slower pace.

The Pantheon in Rome, built in the first century A.D., was the first large dome ever built.

As a prominent public structure, the temple acted as the house of the god. Two types of temple structures were common in Palestine during the biblical period. The broadroom temple was a rectangular structure with its entrance in the middle of one of the long sides. The plan of the temple, therefore, was oriented around a room that was broader than it was long. The longroom temple likewise was a rectangular structure, but its entrance was in the middle of one of the short sides. This caused the building to be longer than it was broad.

As a longroom temple, Solomon's sanctuary in Jerusalem consisted of three main sections. A courtyard with an altar preceded the building. The Temple proper actually was one building divided into two parts, the holy place and the holy of holies. The main room, or the holy place, was entered from the courtyard. A partition separated the holy place from the holy of holies.

Another Israelite temple dating from after 1000 B.C. was uncovered at Arad. It was a broadroom temple entered from the east. The holy of holies was a niche protruding out of the western wall opposite the entrance.

2. Private Structures. Houses in the period of the Old Testament usually were built around a central courtyard and entered from the street. They often were two stories high with access to the upper story coming from a staircase or a ladder. The walls of the house consisted of stone foundations with mud bricks placed on the stone layers or courses. They subsequently were plastered. Floors either were paved with small stones or plaster, or they were formed from beaten earth. Large wooden beams laid across the walls composed the supporting structure of the roof. Smaller pieces of wood or reeds were placed in between the beams and then covered with a layer of mud. Rows of columns placed in the house served as supports to the ceiling. Since the roof was flat, people slept on it in the hot seasons and also used it for storage. Sometimes clay or stone pipes that led from the roof to cisterns down below were used to catch rainwater.

The most common type of house was the so-called "four-room" house. This house consisted of a broadroom at the rear of the house with three parallel rooms coming out from one side of the broadroom. The back room ran the width of the building. Rows of pillars separated the middle parallel room from the other two rooms. This middle room actually was a small, unroofed courtyard and served as the entrance to the house. The courtyard usually contained household items such as silos, cisterns, ovens, and grinding stones and was the place where the cooking was done. The animals could have been kept under a covered section in the courtyard. The other rooms were used for living and storage.

Ovens were constructed with mud bricks and then plastered on the outside. One side of the oven had an air hole. A new oven was created whenever the old one filled up with ashes. By breaking off the top of the old oven and then raising the sides, a new oven was made.

Storage structures were common in the biblical period. Private and public grain silos were round and dug several feet into the ground. The builders usually erected circular mud brick or stone walls around the silo, but sometimes they did nothing to the pit or simply plastered it with mud. Rooms with clay vessels also served as storage space.

While the "four room" house was the most common plan in Palestine, other arrangements existed. Some homes had a simple plan of a courtyard with one room placed to the side. Other houses had only two or three rooms; still others may have had more than four. The arrangement of the rooms around the open courtyard also varied. The broadroom at the rear of the house seems to be common to all plans.

New Testament In this time period, architecture in Israel was greatly influenced by Greek and Roman ideas. Some of the primary cities in Israel show this influence in their public buildings.

1. Public Structures. Over twenty Roman theaters were built in Palestine and Jordan. At Caesarea, the theater contained two main parts, the auditorium and stage, and the stage building. These two parts formed one building complex. Six vaulted passageways served as entrances. The auditorium was semicircular with upper and lower sections used for seating. The lower tier had six sections of seats, and the upper tier had seven for a total capacity of 4,500 people. A central box was reserved for dignitaries and important guests. The wall of the stage was as high as the auditorium. Other similar theaters were located at Scythopolis (Beth-Shan), Pella, Gerasa, Petra, Dor, Hippos, and Gadara.

Arenas for chariot racing, called hippodromes, were long, narrow, and straight with curved ends. Gerasa, Caesarea, Scythopolis, Gadara, and Jerusalem had hippodromes. Erected in the second century A.D., the one at Caesarea was 1/4 of a mile long and 330 feet wide with a seating capacity of 30,000.

The Temple in Jerusalem was destroyed in 586 B.C. and rebuilt in 515 B.C. Herod the Great refurbished it during the first century B.C. As a result, the Temple became widely known for its beauty. It retained the same plan as its predecessor, but the area around it was doubled. Retaining walls that marked the boundaries of the Temple complex were built, and marble porticos were added all around the Temple mount. The stones of the Temple mount's retaining walls were about four or five feet high and weighed three to five tons.

2. Private Structures. Houses usually followed a plan that arranged the rooms around a courtyard. A stairway on the outside of the house led to the upper stories. A stone or timber projected out from the wall at intervals and supported the staircase. This architectural technique is known as corbelling. The walls and ceiling were plastered, and arches sometimes supported the roof. Houses at Avdat and Shivta used arches that came out from the walls to form the roof. After placing thin slabs of limestone over the arches, the builders plastered the entire roof. In the lower city of Jerusalem, houses constructed with small stones were crowded closely together. Yet, they still maintained small courtyards.

Houses of the rich often had columns placed around a central court that had rooms radiating out from it. Kitchens, cellars, cisterns, and bathing pools may have been located underneath the ground. In Jerusalem, one house covered about 650 square feet, a large house by first century standards. In the courtyard, four ovens were sunk into the ground, and a cistern stored the house's water supply. Inside the house on one of the walls, three niches raised about five feet off the ground served as cabinets for storing the household vessels. Scott Langston

ARCHIVES See House of the Rolls.

ARCTURUS (Ärc·tū′ rŭs) A constellation of stars God created (Job 9:9; 38:32) of which exact identification was not clear to the earliest Bible translators and continues to be debated. Modern translations generally use "Bear" (NAS, NIV, NRSV). TEV uses "the Dipper." Some scholars prefer, "the lion." Whatever the identification, the star points to the sovereign greatness of God beyond human understanding.

ARD (Ärd), ARDITE Personal name meaning, "hunchbacked." 1. A son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). 2. A grandson and clan father of Benjamin (Num. 26:40). Apparently listed as Addar in 1 Chron. 8:3.

ARDON (Är′ dŏn) Son of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:18).

ARELI (Å·rē′ lī) ARELITES Son of Gad (Gen. 46:16) and original ancestor of clan of Arelites (Num. 26:17).

AREOPAGITE (Âr·ē·ŏp′ ă·gīte) A member of the highly respected Greek council which met on the Areopagus in Athens. See Areopagus; Athens; Dionysius.

AREOPAGUS (Âr·ē·ŏp′ ă·gŭs) The site of Paul's speech to the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers of Athens (Acts 17:19). It was a rocky hill about 370 feet high, not far from the Acropolis and the Agora (marketplace) in Athens, Greece. The word also was used to refer to the council that originally met on this hill. The name probably was derived from Ares, the Greek name for the god of war known to the Romans as Mars.

ARETAS (Âr′ ĕ·tăs) Personal name meaning, "moral excellence, power." The ruler of Damascus in New Testament times. He sought to arrest Paul after his conversion (2 Cor. 11:32). The name Aretas was born by several Arabian kings centered in Petra and Damascus. Aretas IV ruled from Petra (9 B.C.–A.D. 40) as a subject of Rome. Herod Antipas married, then divorced his daughter to marry Herodias (Mark 6:17–18). Aretus joined with a Roman officer to defeat Herod's army in A.D. 36.

ARGOB (Är′ gŏb) Personal and geographical name meaning, "mound of earth." 1. Man who joined Pekah (2 Kings 15:25) in murdering Pekahiah, king of Israel (742–740 B.C.). The Hebrew text is difficult to read at this point. Some scholars omit Argob as a copyists' error duplicating part of verse 29 here (TEV). NIV translation can be interpreted to mean Pekah also killed Argob. 2. A territory in Bashan in the hill country east of the Jordan River. Argob was probably in the center of the fertile tableland and was famous for its strong cities (Deut. 3:4). Moses gave this land of giants to Manasseh (Deut. 3:13). Manasseh's son Jair conquered Argob (Deut. 3:14) and changed the name to Bashan-havoth-jair.

ARIDAI (Ă·rīd′ ā·ī) Persian personal name, perhaps meaning, "delight of Hari" (a god). Son of Haman, Esther, and the Jews' archenemy. He died as the Jews reversed Haman's scheme and gained revenge (Esther 9:9).

ARIDATHA (Ăr·ĭ·dā′ thà) Persian personal name perhaps meaning, "given by Hari" (a god). Brother of Aridai, who shared his fate. See Arida.

ARIEH (Ă·rī′ ĕh) Personal name meaning, "lion." Paired with Argob in 2 Kings 15:25 with same text problems involved. See Argob. Compare KJV, NAS, NIV, NRSV.

ARIEL (Â′ rī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God's lion." 1. Jewish leader in captivity who acted as Ezra's messenger to the Levites to send people with Ezra to Jerusalem about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:16). 2. Code name for Jerusalem in Isaiah 29. Ariel apparently referred to the top of the altar on which the priests burned sacrifices. Jerusalem under Assyrian attack was like the altar. It did not burn but caused everything around it to burn. The sins of Jerusalem had led to the devastation of the rest of Judah in 701 B.C.

ARIMATHEA (Ăr·ĭ·mă·thē′ à) City of Joseph, the disciple who claimed the body of Jesus following the crucifixion, and in whose own new tomb the body was placed (Matt. 27:57). The location of Arimathea is not certainly known. In Luke 23:51, Arimathea is described as a Jewish city. See Joseph of Arimathea.

ARIOCH (Âr′ ĭ·ŏch) Personal, probably Hurrian, name meaning, "servant of the moon god." 1. King of Ellasar, who joined alliance against Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 14) but was eventually defeated by Abraham. See Amraphel, Ellasar. Parallel names have been found in early Akkadian documents and at Mari and Nuzi, but no other reference to the biblical Arioch can be shown. 2. Commander of bodyguard of King Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2:14–25). He confided in Daniel, who was able to interpret the king's forgotten dream and prevent the death of the wise counselors of Babylon.

ARISAI (Ă·rīs′ ā·ī) Persian personal name. Son of Haman (Esther 9:9) who suffered his brothers' fate. See Aridai.

ARISTARCHUS (Âr·ĭs·tär′ chŭs) Personal name perhaps meaning, "best ruler." Paul's companion caught by the followers of Artemis in Ephesus (Acts 19:29). Apparently the same person was the Thessalonian who accompanied Paul from Greece to Jerusalem as he returned from his third missionary journey (Acts 20:4). Aristarchus also accompanied Paul when he sailed for Rome (Acts 27:2). Paul sent greetings from Aristarchus, a fellow prisoner and worker, in his letters to the Colossians (4:10) and Philemon (24). Later church tradition said Nero put Aristarchus to death in Rome.

ARISTOBULUS (Ă·rīs·tŏ·bū′ lŭs) Head of a Christian household in Rome whom Paul greeted (Rom. 16:10).

ARK Boat or water vessel and in particular one built by Noah under God's direction to save Noah, his family, and representatives of all animal life from the flood.

Old Testament God warned Noah of His intentions to destroy the earth because of the wickedness of humanity. Noah was commanded to build an ark to God's specifications to save his family and representatives of all animals from the flood (Gen. 6:18–19). As such, the ark became both a symbol of a faith on the part of Noah and a symbol of grace on the part of God (Gen. 6:8,22).

A

The shape of the ark was unusual. Although the Bible does not give enough detail to enable a full model to be made, the ark was apparently not shaped like a boat, either ancient or modern. The shape more closely approximates a giant block. The length was 300 cubits (about 450 feet), the width was 50 cubits (about 75 feet), and the height was 30 cubits (about 45 feet), overall dimensions that resemble the dimensions of a giant house (Gen. 6:15). The ark had three floors filled with rooms (Gen. 6:14,16) and one window and one door (Gen. 6:16).

The ark was built of gopher wood (Gen. 6:14) which may have been a variety of cypress. It has also been suggested that gopher wood referred to a particular shape or type of plank or beam, rather than a type of wood. Our limited knowledge makes it impossible to make a final conclusion.

The ark was a testimony of Noah's faith because no large body of water stood nearby on which Noah could have floated such a large boat. Hence people could see no obvious or visible need for such a vessel.

The ark was also a symbol of God's grace. Obviously, the ark was intended by God as an instrument of deliverance to preserve both human and animal life upon the earth (Gen. 6:17–18). As such, it came to be understood as a symbol of His grace and mercy (Heb. 11:7*a*).

New Testament The gospel references to the ark are in connection with Jesus' teachings regarding the second coming. The expectancy of some at the second coming is likened to those who were destroyed by the flood. In the Book of Hebrews, the preacher lists Noah as a man of faith who prepared an ark even though the danger was at that point unseen. The last New Testament reference to the ark points to the evil of humanity and God's patient salvation (1 Pet. 3:20).

Extra-biblical Sources The Babylonian flood story, called the Gilgamesh epic, also tells of a large boat by which its hero survived the flood. There, however, the ark was not a symbol of the grace of the gods but of their folly and faulty planning.

Searches for the ark have proven fruitless. Numerous newspaper articles and paperback books record attempts to discover the ruins of Noah's ark. While the ark has not yet been recovered, the discovery of such remains are unnecessary to demonstrate the authenticity of the story. Faith which requires proof is not faith at all. See Flood; Noah.

Robert Cate

ARK OF BULRUSHES KJV translation of a Hebrew word in Exodus 2:3–5 usually translated basket.

ARK OF THE COVENANT names the original container for the Ten Commandments and the central symbol of God's presence with the people of Israel.

Old Testament The ark of ancient Israel is mysterious in its origins, its meanings, and its ultimate fate. Its many names convey the holy sense of God's presence. The Hebrew word for ark means simply "box, chest, coffin," as is indicated by its use for the coffin of Joseph (Gen. 50:26) and for the Temple collection box of King Joash (2 Kings 12:9–10).

The names used for the ark define its meaning by the words which modify it. The word "covenant" in the name defines the ark from its original purpose as a container for the stone tablets upon which the Ten Commandments (sometimes called the "testimony") were inscribed. Sometimes it is identified rather with the name of diety, "the ark of God," or "the ark of the Lord" (Yahweh), or most ornately "the ark of the covenant of the Lord of hosts (Yahweh Sabaoth) who is enthroned on the cherubim" (1 Sam. 4:4).

Stone carving of what is thought to be the ark of the covenant in the synagogue ruins at Capernaum.

The origin of the ark goes back to Moses at Sinai. The mysterious origin of the ark is seen by contrasting the two accounts of how it was made in the Pentateuch. The more elaborate account of the manufacture and ornamentation of the ark by the craftsman Bezalel appears in Exodus 25:10–22; 31:2,7; 35:30–35; 37:1–9. It was planned during Moses' first sojourn on Sinai and built after all the tabernacle specifications had been communicated and completed. The other account is found in Deuteronomy 10:1–5. After the sin of the golden calf and the breaking of the original decalogue tablets, Moses made a plain box of acacia wood as a container to receive the new tables of the law.

A very ancient poem, the "Song of the Ark" in Numbers 10:35–36, sheds some light on the function of the ark in the wanderings in the wilderness. The ark was the symbol of God's presence to guide the pilgrims and lead them in battle (Num. 10:33,35–36). If they acted in faithlessness, failing to follow this guidance, the consequences could be drastic (Num. 14:39–45). Some passages suggest the ark was also regarded as the throne of the invisible deity, or his footstool (Jer. 3:16–17; Ps. 132:7–8). These various meanings of the ark should be interpreted as complementary rather than contradictory.

The ark was designed for mobility. Its size (about four feet long, two and a half feet wide, and two and a half feet deep) and rectangular shape were appropriate to this feature. Permanent poles were used to carry the ark, since no one was allowed to touch it, and only priestly (Levitical) personnel were allowed to carry it. The ark was the most important object within the tabernacle of the desert period, though its relationship to the tabernacle was discontinued sometime after the conquest of Canaan.

The ark played a prominent role in the "holy war" narratives of the crossing of the Jordan and the conquest, of Jericho (Josh. 3—6). After the conquest, it was variously located at Gilgal, Shechem (Josh. 8:30–35; see Deut. 11:26–32; 27:1–26) or Bethel (Judg. 20:26), wherever the tribal confederacy was gathered for worship. Finally, it was permanently located at Shiloh, where a temple was built to house it (1 Sam. 1:9; 3:3).

Because of the faithless superstition of the wicked sons of Eli, the Hebrew tribes were defeated in the battle of Ebenezer, and the ark was captured by the Philistines (1 Sam. 4). The adventures of the ark in the cities of Ashdod, Gath, and Ekron are told to magnify the strength and glory of the Lord of the ark. The Lord vanquished Dagon and spread bubonic plagues among the enemy until they propitiated the God of Israel by symbolic guilt offerings and a ritually correct sending away of the dread object (1 Sam. 5:1—6:12). The men of Bethshemesh welcomed the return of the ark, until they unwisely violated its holiness by looking into it (1 Sam. 6:13–15,19–20). Then it was carried to Kiriath-Jearim, where it remained in comparative neglect until David recovered the symbolism it had for the ancient tribal confederacy and moved it to his new capital and sanctuary in Jerusalem (1 Sam. 6:21—7:2; 2 Sam. 6). Abinadab and his sons (2 Sam. 6:3) seemed to have served the Lord of the ark faithfully until one son, Uzzah, was smitten for his rash touching of the holy object during David's first attempt to transport the ark from its "hill" at Kiriath-Jearim to his own city. In fear, David left the ark with Obed-edom the Gittite, whose household was blessed by its presence. More cautiously and with great religious fervor, David succeeded the second time in taking the ark into his capital city (2 Sam. 6:12–19).

Shiloh in Israel where the ark of the covenant was brought after the conquest and rested for 400 years.

Reconstruction of the Ark of the Covenant drawn in the Egyptian style, reflecting 400 years of captive influence in Egyptian bondage.

A

Recent scholarship has suggested that on coronation occasions or annually at a festival of enthronement this ark ceremony was reenacted. Such an occasion would re-emphasize the promise to the Davidic dynasty, as well as the glory of the Lord of Hosts (Ps. 24:7–10;132). Finally, Solomon built the Temple, planned by David, to house the ark, which he then transported into the holy of holies with elaborate festival cermonies (1 Kings 8; 2 Chron. 5).

The precise time of the theft or destruction of the ark is unknown. Some have suggested Shishak of Egypt plundered the Temple of this most holy object (1 Kings 14:25–28), but it seems more likely, from Jeremiah 3:16–17, that the Babylonians captured or destroyed the ark in 587 B.C. with the fall of Jerusalem and the burning of the Temple. As Jeremiah predicted, the ark was never rebuilt for the second Temple, the holy of holies remaining empty.

Other mysteries of the ark are its relation to the cherubim, its ornate lid called the "mercy seat," and its precise ritual usage during the time of the monarchy. Because the ark of the covenant was the central symbol of God's presence with His people Israel, its mysteries remain appropriately veiled within the inner sanctuary of the living God. See Holy of Holies; Mercy Seat; Tabernacle; Temple.

New Testament Hebrews 9:1–10 shows the ark was a part of the old order with external regulations waiting for the new day of Christ to come with a perfect Sacrifice able to cleanse the human conscience. Revelation 11:19 shows the ark of the covenant will be part of the heavenly temple when it is revealed. M. Pierce Matheney, Jr.

ARKITE (Är' kīte) Canaanite clan listed in the table of nations (Gen. 10:17). They apparently centered around Arqa, modern Tell Arqa in Syria 80 miles north of Sidon. Thutmose III of Egypt conquered it. It appears in the Amarna letters. Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria conquered it in 738 B.C. Romans called it Caesarea Libani and noted its Astarte worship.

ARM The upper limb of the human body used to symbolize power and strength. Such power can oppress people (Job 35:9), but such arms will be broken (Job 38:15). No human arm or power is comparable to God's (Job 40:9). In prayer the faithful can ask God to break the arm of the wicked (Ps. 10:15). Human arms cannot save (Ps. 44:3). God's outstretched arm does (Ex. 6:6; 15:16; Deut. 5:15). People can trust in God's arm (Isa. 51:5). On seeing Mary as she waited for the birth of Jesus, Elizabeth confessed that in bringing Jesus, God showed "strength with his arm" (Luke 1:51).

ARMAGEDDON (Är·mȧ·gĕd' dŏn) A Middle East site of the final battle between the forces of good and evil (Rev. 16:16). The word "Armageddon" appears once in Scripture and is not found in Hebrew literature. Translators transliterate the term from Greek into English in several ways: Armageddon (KJV); Har Magedon (NAS); and Harmageddon (Moffatt). The Greek is a transliteration of the Hebrew har megiddo, literally, "mountain of Megiddo." Revelation promises that in the face of defeat of God's saints by military forces from the east, south, and the north, the Lord Jesus Christ will return to defeat His enemies and deliver His people. See Megiddo. Ken Hubbard ARMENIA (Är·mē' ni·ȧ) KJV translation for land of Ararat (2 Kings 19:37). See Ararat.

ARMLET A band or ring worn around the upper arm that should be distinguished from a bracelet worn around the wrist. The Hebrew word is translated as chain (Num. 31:50) and bracelet (2 Sam. 1:10). A related word is rendered as ornaments of the legs (Isa. 3:20) in the KJV.

Gold Persian armlet from the treasury of the Oxus.

ARMONI (Âr·mō' nī) Personal name meaning, "born in Armon." Son of Rizpah and Saul, whom David gave to the Gibeonites in revenge for Saul's earlier killing of Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:7–9). See Rizpah.

ARMOR BEARER See Arms and Armor.

ARMOR OF GOD See Arms and Armor.

ARMS and ARMOR include instruments and body coverings for defense and or protection.

Old Testament The offensive arms of the Old Testament include long, medium, and close range arms, and the defensive items include shields and armor.

Long Range Arms The bow and arrow were effective arms from long-range (300–400 yards) and were used widely by the nations of the Bible. Israel had expert archers in men from Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:40; 2 Chron. 17:17) and the eastern tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:18). Jonathan and Jehu were individual marksmen. At least four Israelite kings were severely or fatally wounded by enemy arrows: Saul (1 Sam. 31:3), Ahab (1 Kings 22:34), Joram (2 Kings 9:24), and Josiah (2 Chron. 35:23). Bows were constructed with single pieces of wood, or more effectively with glued layers of wood, horn, and sinew, and possibly even with added bronze (2 Sam. 22:35; Job 20:24). The size varied from approximately three to six feet in length. Arrows were made of wood shafts or reeds, tipped with metal heads which were forged differently to meet the diverse defenses of the enemy. The arrow was guided by feathers, especially from the eagle, vulture, or kite. A leather quiver strapped to the back or hung over the shoulder carried between 20 and 30 of these arrows, or if strapped to a chariot, perhaps as many as 50. Frequently a leather arm guard was also used on the bow arm to protect it from the gut string that propelled the arrow.

One might be most familiar with the slingshot through reading about David's encounter with Goliath (1 Sam. 17:40–50), without realizing that it was a conventional artillery weapon for deadly long-range use by armies throughout the Middle East. Because of the long-range capabilities, expert slingers were stationed by the hundreds near the archers. It was especially valuable to have those who could sling from the left hand as well as from the right (Judg. 20:16; 1 Chron. 12:2). A patch of cloth or leather with two braided leather cords on either end would hold a smooth stone. The slinger then twirled the pocketed missile above his head. Release of one of the cords would eject the stone towards its victim. The blow would disarm, destabilize, knock out, or even kill the enemy. King Uzziah of Judah developed large catapults that projected arrows and stones long-range to defend Jerusalem (2 Chron. 26:15).

Medium Range Arms A javelin is a spear thrown obviously a shorter distance than the archers could arch their arrows or slingers could sling their sling stones. However, as a hurled weapon, its medium range is to be differentiated from the close range thrusting spear of the phalanxed footsoldier. David faced the javelin while successfully challenging Goliath (1 Sam. 17:6) and while peacefully attempting to soothe Saul's spirit. Twice the disturbed Saul hurled his javelin at David (1 Sam. 18:10,11; 19:9,10) and even once at his own son Jonathan (1 Sam. 20:33). Usually made of wood or reed, some javelins had one or both of two features that aided its flight: some had a leather cord wrapped around its shaft that caused the released weapon to spin when the cord was retained in the hand, and a counterweight was sometimes fixed on the butt of the shaft. The latter could be even sharp enough to be stuck in the ground to stand the javelin (1 Sam. 26:7) or even used to kill (2 Sam. 2:23). A quiver was used often to aid the soldier in carrying more than one javelin at a time.

Close Range Arms Hand-to-hand combat brought different weapons to the fore: some sharp, some dull, some long, some short. The thrusting spear was longer and heavier than the javelin and could have been thrown if needed. The soldiers from the tribes of Judah and Naphtali carried spears as a tribal weapon (1 Chron. 12:24,34). Guards protected the Temple with these arms (2 Chron. 23:9). Front battle lines often featured foot soldiers equipped with rectangular shields carrying spears jutting out beyond the walls of shields and pressing forward at the expense of the enemy front line.

Two types of swords were used in the biblical times, the single edge and the two-edged sword (Ps. 149:6, Prov. 5:4). The single edge was used most effectively by swinging it and hitting the enemy to lacerate the flesh. The blade could be straight or curved to a great degree. In the latter case the sharp edge of the sword was on the outside of the curve. The double-edged sword was used primarily for piercing rather than lacerating, though it could obviously be used either way if necessary. The sword was carried in a sheath attached to the belt. The varieties of the overall width and length of swords in proportion to the hilts were numerous. The difference between a straight sword and the dagger is simply the length. The earliest blades were more daggers than swords. They were lengthened gradually through the ages. Ehud probably used a long dagger in assassinating King Eglon of Moab, since it measured about 18 inches (one cubit, Judg. 3:16–26).

The mace and battle ax are seldom mentioned in the Bible (Prov. 25:18; Jer. 51:20; Ezek. 9:2); yet they played a significant role in hand-to-hand combat in the biblical lands. The mace was a war club that was used to crush the head of the enemy. The heavy metal or stone head of the weapon would be of various shapes such as round, oval, or pear-shaped. Its wooden handle would fasten by going through the head like a modern hammer or axe. The handle was formed with some flaring at the bottom to keep the weapon from sliding out of the hand. With the pervasive introduction of armor, especially the helmet, the mace gave way in popularity to the piercing edge of the battle ax. These axes with narrow heads could penetrate more easily a helmet or other armor with their elongated shape. Other blades were designed with wider edges to cut and open the flesh where less or no armor was worn.

A

Armor bearers accompanied the military leaders to bring along extra weapons and defensive equipment that would be expended during a battle (arrows, javelins, shields). They sometimes aided the soldier as well by positioning their shields for them, as in the case of Goliath, and at times killing those enemy soldiers who were left helplessly wounded by preceding combatants.

Battering rams, as modelled by Ezekiel in his object lesson for the Israelites (Ezek. 4:2), were actually rolled on wheels and had metal ends attached to wooden shafts to withstand the collision force with city gates or stone walls.

Defensive Arms Defense against all these arms consisted of the shield which was carried or armor which was worn. Shields were made of wicker, or of leather stretched over wooden frames with handles on the inside. These were much more maneuverable than heavier metal, but obviously less protective. A cross between metal and leather was achieved by attaching metal disks or plates to the leather over a portion of the surface. Two different sizes are referred to in the Bible and in many ancient illustrations (2 Chron. 23:9). One was a round shield used with lighter weapons and covered half the body at most. The tribe of Benjamin preferred these along with the bow and arrow (2 Chron. 14:8). So did Nehemiah when he equipped his men for protection while rebuilding the city walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 4:16). The gold and brass shields made by Solomon and Rehoboam respectively were ceremonial and decorative in function (1 Kings 14:25–28) and were of this size. A larger shield was more rectangular and covered nearly, if not all, the body and was so large at times that a special shieldbearer was employed to carry it in front of the weapon bearer. Both Goliath and one of these assistants faced David (1 Sam. 17:41). The tribes of Judah (2 Chron. 14:8), Gad (1 Chron. 12:8), and Naphtali (1 Chron. 12:34) used this type of shield with the long thrusting spear or lance as the offensive weapon in the other hand. Bowmen also stood behind standing shields while they flung their arrows.

Armor is essentially a shield that is worn directly on the body. Since the body is most fatally vulnerable in the head and chest regions, it was especially there where armor was clad. Saul and Goliath wore helmets (1 Sam. 17:5,38), as did the entire army of Judah, at least in the time of Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:14). The helmet was usually made of leather or metal and was designed with various shapes depending on the army and even on the unit within an army so that the commander could distinguish one unit from another from a higher vantage point. The differently decorated and constructed helmets helped the soldier tell whether he was near an enemy or comrade in the confusion of tight hand-to-hand combat.

Roman Emperor Trajan in armor (cuirass, kilt, and boots).

With the rise in popularity of the arrow and with its speed of flight and imperceptible approach on its victim, the mail came to be more and more necessary to cover the torso. Fishscale-like construction of small metal plates sewn to cloth or leather was the breastplate for the ancient soldier. These scales could number as high as 700–1000 per "coat." Each coat obviously could be quite heavy and expensive to produce in volume. The distant enemy units of archers who might find themselves firing on each other would wear mail especially, as well as those archers riding in chariots. While in a chariot, Ahab was hit and killed by an arrow exactly where the mail was least protective—at the seam where the sleeve and breast of the coat met (1 Kings 22:34).

Leg armor, like the bronze leglets of Goliath (1 Sam. 17:6), was not regularly used in the Old Testament times.

New Testament Arms and armor surface on only a few occasions in the New Testament. Of course, the New Testament times found Roman imperial soldiers equipped with metal helmets, protective leather and metal vests, leg armor, shields, swords and spears. Christ accepted a legal, defensive use of the sword (Luke 22:36–38), but he rebuked Peter's illegal and more offensive strike against Malchus at a time of arrest (John 18:10–11). Often the New Testament uses arms and armor symbolically as in the Old Testament poets and prophetic books. The Word of the Lord and its piercing, penetrating effect is referred to as a sword (Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12; Rev. 1:16; 2:16; 19:15,21). Paul used both arms and armor of a soldier to express the virtues necessary to defend the believer against Satan (Eph. 6:10–17; compare Isa. 59:16–17).

Metaphorical Use In the Old Testament, the devastating effect of a vicious tongue is compared with the destructive purpose of the sword and arrow (Ps. 57:4; 64:3; Prov. 12:18). However, when weapons are used metaphorically in the Old Testament, it is usually to help convey the supreme sovereignty of God. For instance, one's primary dependence on military arms is considered foolish, since they are not the ultimate source of deliverance, whether it be by the bow or sword (Josh. 24:12; Ps. 44:6; Hos. 1:7). This is because God overpowers and shatters the bow and arrow, spear, sword, and shield (Ps. 46:9; 76:3). In other places, God's judgment is spoken of as a bow or sword (Ps. 7:12–13; Isa. 66:16; Jer 12:12). He also uses the literal weapons of conquering nations to judge Israel (Isa. 3:25). Finally, that God is the faithful protector of His people is often expressed by referring to Him as "a shield unto them that put their trust in Him" (Prov. 30:5), just as He Himself encouraged Abraham, "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield" (Gen. 15:1).

Dan Fredericks

A

ARMY A nation's military personnel organized for battle. Thus in Egypt, Israel could be referred to as having "armies" even when they did not have a political organization (Ex. 6:26; 7:4; 12:17). Goliath learned that to defy God's people was to defy the "armies of the living God" (1 Sam. 17:26,36), for God was the "God of the armies of Israel" (1 Sam. 17:45). In face of God, humans can only confess, "Is there any number of his armies?" (Job 25:3). Israel recognized God's anger when God did not go out with their armies (Ps. 44:9). To announce salvation, the prophet proclaimed the fury of God upon all armies (Isa. 34:2).

In the New Testament the writer of Hebrews looked back on the heroes of faith and proclaimed that through faith they "turned to flight the armies of the aliens" (Heb. 11:34). John's vision of the end time included the armies of heaven following the King of kings to victory over the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 19:11–21).

A sarcophagus relief depicting a battle scene between Greeks and Galatians.

Armies were organized in different ways during Israel's history. The patriarchs called upon servants and other members of the household (Gen. 14). In the wilderness Joshua led men he had chosen to defend against the Amalekites (Ex. 17:9–10). In the conquest Joshua led the tribes of Israel into battle after being commissioned by the "captain of the host of the Lord" (Josh. 5:14). At times tribes joined together to take territory (Judg. 1:3; 4:6).

Deborah summoned many of the tribes to battle, but some did not answer (Judg. 5). Other judges summoned clans (6:34) and tribes (6:35; 7:29). Saul first established a standing, professional army in Israel (1 Sam. 13:2), at first leading it himself with his son but then appointing a professional commander (1 Sam. 17:55). David apparently hired foreign troops loyal to him personally (2 Sam. 9:18; 15:18). Solomon enhanced the foot soldiers with a chariot corps and calvary (1 Kings 10:26). The army was organized into various units with officers over each, but the precise chain of command cannot be determined (2 Chron. 25:5). Humanitarian laws determined who was excused from military service and how war was conducted (Deut. 20).

ARNAN (Är′ năn) Personal name meaning, "quick." Person in messianic line of King David after the return from Exile (1 Chron. 3:21).

ARNI (Är′ nī) Ancestor of Jesus in difficult text of Luke 3:33. NAS, NIV read Ram, correlating with list in 1 Chronicles 2:10.

ARNON (Är′ nŏn) Place name meaning, "rushing river" or "river flooded with berries." River forming border of Moab and Amorites (Num. 21:13). Sihon, the Amorite king, ruled from the Arnon to the Jabbok (Num. 21:24), land which Israel took under Moses. The Arnon then served as the southern limit of territory Israel took east of the Jordan River (Deut. 3:8). It became the southern border of the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:16). The king of the Ammonites tried to retake the Arnon in Jephthah's day, but God's Spirit led Jephthah to victory (Judg. 11:12–33). Hazael, king of Damascus, retook the territory from Jehu of Israel (841–814 B.C.). Isaiah pictured Moab as scattered baby birds trying to cross the Arnon (16:2). Jeremiah called for a messenger to announce Moab's defeat by the Arnon (48:20). Near the Dead Sea, the Arnon is large and deep, one of Palestine's impressive sights. The wide river valley rises 1700 feet to the top of the cliffs above. The modern name is wadi-el-Mojib.

AROD (Ā′ rŏd) or ARODI Personal name meaning, "humpbacked." Arodi (Gen. 46:16) or Arod (Num. 26:17) was son of Gad and grandson of Jacob. He was the original ancestor of the Arodite clan.

AROER (Å·rō′ er) Place name meaning "juniper." 1. City on north rim of Arnon Gorge east of Dead Sea on southern boundary of territory Israel claimed east of the Jordan River (Josh. 13:9). It figured in territorial claims of Reuben (Josh. 13:16), though the tribe of Gad originally built it (Num. 32:34). Compare Deuteronomy 3:12. Sihon, king of the Amorites, ruled it prior to Israel's conquest (Deut. 4:48; Josh. 12:2). Israel claimed a three hundred year history in the area (Judg. 11:26). Jehu's sins brought God's punishment on Israel, including the loss of Aroer to Hazael of Damascus (about 840 B.C.) (2 Kings 10:33). Compare Isaiah 17:2. Jeremiah asked Aroer to witness God's coming judgment on Moab (Jer. 48:19). The Moabites had gained control of Aroer under King Mesha, as his inscription on the Moabite Stone witnesses (about 850 B.C.). Spanish excavations show Aroer to have been more a border fortress than a major city. It is located at khirbet Arair two and one-half miles east of the highway along the Arnon River.

2. A city of the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:25) near Rabbah, capital of the Ammonites. This may be the Aroer where Jephthah defeated the Ammonites (Judg. 11:33).

3. Town in southern Judah about twelve miles southeast of Beersheba with whose leaders David divided the spoil of battle (1 Sam. 30:28). This is located at modern Khirbet Arara. The text of Joshua 15:22 may have originally read Aroer. Two of David's captains hailed from Aroer (1 Chron. 11:44).

ARPACHSHAD (Är·păch′ shăd) or ARPHAXAD (New Testament spelling) Third son of Shem, son of Noah, and ancestor of the Hebrew people (Gen. 10:22). He was born two years after the flood and was the grandfather of Eber. In the New Testament the name Arphaxad appears in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:36). Luke seems to identify Arphaxad as the great-grandfather, rather than the grandfather, of Eber. This suggests the possibility that the genealogy in Genesis 10 was not intended to be exhaustively complete.

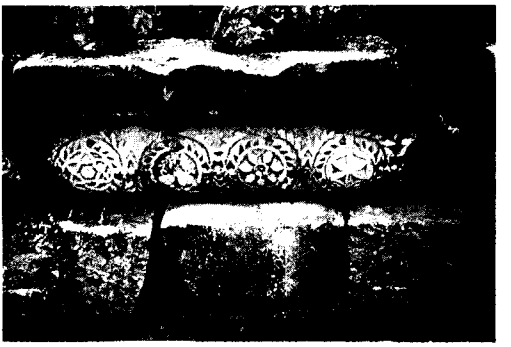
ARPAD (Är′ pad) or ARPHAD A city-state in northern Syria closely identified with Hamath. The Rab-shakeh, representing Sennacherib, Assyria's king, taunted the people of Judah in 701 B.C. (2 Kings 10:34; 19:13). He reminded the people walled up in Jerusalem that the gods of Arpad did not save it from Sennacherib. Isaiah mimicked such statements, saying Assyria was only a rod of Yahweh's anger and would soon face punishment for its pride (Isa. 10:5–19). Jeremiah noted Arpad's confusion as he pronounced doom on Damascus (Jer. 49:23). Arpad is modern tell Erfad about 25 miles north of Aleppo. Assyrian kings Adadnirari (806 B.C.), Ashurninari (754 B.C.), Tiglath-pileser (740 B.C.), and Sargon (720 B.C.) all mention victories over Arpad.

ART AND AESTHETICS are the making and recognition of objects of beauty produced by the use of skill and understanding. Though neither word appears in the Bible as such, the concepts which they represent certainly do.

The Old Testament Era Though no one knows for sure when or where artistic endeavors began, they may go back to the beauty of the creating events themselves (Gen. 1—2). However, human beings sinned and marred the relationship which they had both with the world in which they lived and the God who gave it to them (Gen. 3). Despite this, God still loved them and gave them not only the ability to provide a living, but also to design objects of beauty and grace to make their lives more enjoyable (Gen. 4:21–22). Thus, in time, many groups achieved a very high level of artistic accomplishment.

Unfortunately, the ancient Canaanites were not so lucky, for they were usually subservient to some foreign power. Apparently the Israelites were no better off, for though they did gain their freedom from Egypt, the struggle to claim the Promised Land was a long and difficult one. Moreover, when peace did come, it did not last long. Therefore, since they had little time for aesthetic pursuits, they simply borrowed such artifacts from their neighbors (particularly from the Egyptians and the Mesopotamians).

Mosaic design (which originated in Ur in 2500 B.C.) is seen in this famous mosaic map of Palestine.



A

Not all of the Israelites' lack of artistic ability was the result of their political difficulties, for their religious teachings concerning the making and worshiping of idols (Ex. 20:4–6) also cast a shadow upon artistic endeavors. Yet, the warning was not so much against the art objects themselves as it was against their misuse. After all, God had commanded the Israelites not only to accept the Egyptian artifacts when they left Egypt (Ex. 12:35), but also to use them to build the tabernacle (Ex. 25—27; 35:20–29) with its fancy ark (Ex. 37:7–9, 1 Sam. 4:4), elaborate veils (Ex. 36:35–37), and other furnishings (Ex. 36:9—38:20). In all likelihood, most of it was done either by outsiders or at least by those trained elsewhere.

Apparently, this trend continued until the time of the monarchy when Israel developed an expanding and refining of artistic talents. By the time of David, music and dance had become a popularly accepted media for artistic presentation (1 Sam. 18:6; 2 Sam. 6:14). With the building of the magnificent Temple (1 Kings 5—6; 7:13–51) and the other royal edifices (1 Kings 7:1–12) during Solomon's reign, Israel had come into its own in the field of artistic endeavors. Even then, most of the intricate wood work on the walls and doors (such as the fancy carvings, applique palmettes, and guilloched borders—1 Kings 6:14–36) as well as the fancy metal work (1 Kings 7:23–50) was done by foreigners (1 Kings 5:18; 7:13–14). The Israelites were slowly developing their own craftsmen (1 Kings 5:18).

Intricate stone carving on top of pillar in the ruins of Capernaum.

Before long, they not only built fancy public edifices, but also enhanced the beauty of their own homes (1 Kings 22:39; Jer. 22:14; Ezek. 23:14). Unfortunately, this led to their placing more emphasis upon themselves than upon God and His work. As a result, prophets delivered God's strong condemnation (Ps. 45:8; Isa. 30:20; Hos. 13:2; Amos. 3:15; Hag. 1:4). All was not lost. After the purging of their sin, God promised to restore them unto Him and provide for them a new and better place to live (Ezek. 40—48; Amos 9:9–15). Quite naturally, the main structure in that new place would be a new and more elaborately decorated temple (Ezek. 41).

More carved stone pillars from the excavated synagogue at Capernaum.

The Intertestamental Era The days which followed the Babylonian Exile proved difficult for the Jewish remnant. Before they could get on their feet, Alexander the Great conquered their world. Though he soon died, he left behind a strong Greek influence. Much of this influence is still visible in the remains of the ornate columns, fancy gables, and beautiful paintings and mosaics. Though some of these do depict mythological motifs (such as the zodiac, the chariot of the sun god, etc.), most of them are of more traditional Jewish themes (such as the candlestick, the Star of David, etc.).

The New Testament Era Though the New Testament has little to say directly about art and aesthetics, artistic endeavors such as singing (Matt. 26:30; Luke 15:25) and dancing (Matt. 14:6; Mark 6:22) were apparently quite common. Certainly, Paul was not a bit intimidated by the Aeropagus in Athens, but rather used its theological significance to preach the gospel (Acts 17:22–29). As a result, those who were involved in the making and worshiping of idols became very angry and tried to kill him (Acts 19:23–31). God did not disapprove of their skills, but just the way they used them. When God began to reveal the nature of the new kingdom, He did so not only with the accompaniment of music (Rev. 5:9), but also with great strokes of artistic beauty (Rev. 21:9–21).

Since most of the early Christians came out of a Jewish background which warned against idolatry, they were careful to make a clear distinction between the work of art and the object which it represented. They were aware of the teaching value which art might have. Even though the political situation did not let them openly display their works, they did manage to paint religious symbols and scenes on the walls of the catacombs (or burial chambers). As Christianity gradually became more accepted, the practice of meeting in private homes was replaced by meeting in buildings which were especially designed for worship. Such buildings were usually elaborately decorated with paintings of biblical stories (such as those of Moses, David, Jonah, Daniel, Christ, and the disciples). Harry Hunt

Decorative mosaic floor in Herod the Great's fortress palace atop the large hill in Israel called Masada.

ARTAXERXES (Är·tȧ·xēr′ xēs) Persian royal name meaning, "kingdom of righteousness," belonging to four Persian rulers and forming a major piece of evidence in dating Ezra and Nehemiah. See Ezra; Nehemiah. 1. Son of Xerxes I, Artaxerxes I ruled Persia from 465 to 424 B.C. He was called Longimanus or "long-handed." Most scholars place Ezra's trip to Jerusalem in the seventh year of his reign or 458 B.C. (Ezra 7:7). He had already received complaints from the inhabitants of Palestine who wanted to stop the returned exiles from rebuilding and had stopped the Jewish builders (Ezra 4:7–24). The Temple had been completed under Darius II (522–486) and thus before Artaxerxes (Ezra 6:15). Artaxerxes supported Ezra's work (Ezra 7:6–26). Nehemiah served as cupbearer to Artaxerxes (Neh. 2:1), and the king proved sensitive to Nehemiah's mood (Neh. 2:2). He granted Nehemiah's request to go to Judah (Neh. 2:5–6), making him governor of Judah (Neh. 5:14). 2. Artaxerxes II ruled Persia 404 to 359 B.C. Some Bible students identify him as ruler under whom Ezra worked. 3. Artaxerxes III ruled 358–337 B.C. 4. Ruled Persia 337–336 B.C. See Persia.

ARTEMAS (Är′ tė·mȧs) Personal name probably shortened from Artemidoros, meaning, "gift of Artemis." If this is the case, then the parents worshiped the Greek goddess Artemis. Paul promised to send Artemas or Tychicus to Titus, so Titus could join Paul in Nicopolis (Titus 3:12). Artemas would apparently take over Titus' pastoral duties in Crete. Tradition says Artemas became bishop of Lystra.

ARTEMIS (Är′ tė·mĭs) names the Greek goddess of the moon, the daughter of Zeus and Leto, whose worship was threatened by Paul's preaching of the gospel. Artemis was the goddess who watched over nature for both humans and animals. She was the patron deity of wild animals, protecting them from ruthless treatment and at the same time regulating the rules of hunting activities for humans. She was considered the great mother image and gave fertility to humankind. In the Greek homeland she was usually portrayed by the statues as a young, attractive virgin, wearing a short tunic and having her hair pulled back on her head. In Ephesus and western Asia Minor she was portrayed as a more mature woman. Her robe is draped in such a way as to expose her bosom which is covered with multiple breasts, depicting her gift of fertility and nurture. Often standing beside her is a fawn or stag on each side representing her relation to the animal world. The official local statue was carefully housed in a temple honoring Artemis.

The most famous statue was located in the city of Ephesus, the official "temple keeper" for Artemis. Artemis was the chief deity of Ephesus, and her temple was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. See Ephesus. The temple ceremonies were carried out by priests who were eunuchs and priestesses who were virgins. They conducted the daily ceremonies caring for the deity and for the gifts brought by worshipers, as well as an annual festival on May 25, when numerous statues of the goddess were carried in procession to the amphitheater in Ephesus for a celebration of music, dancing, and drama. This could be the background of the outcry in Acts 19:28: "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians."

The statues of the goddess, often miniature models of the temple with an image of the goddess within, were sold widely. In Acts, a silversmith named Demetrius rallied support against Paul's preaching of the gospel for fear that it might damage his business selling statues.

Diana was a Roman diety somewhat similar to the more popular Artemis. As the Italic and Greek divinities met, she was quickly identified with Artemis.

Artemis (Diana), patron goddess of Ephesus, covered with eggs (or breasts) as symbols of fertility.

ARUBBOTH (Å·rūb′ bŏth) City name meaning, "smoke hole" or "chimney." One of Solomon's provincial officials made headquarters there and administered over Sochoh and the land of Hepher (1 Kings 4:10). This would be territory belonging to the clan of Hepher of the tribe of Mannasseh in the northern part of the Plain of Sharon, southwest of Megiddo and southeast of Dor. Arubboth is modern Arabbah nine miles north of Samaria.

ARUMAH (Å·rū′ măh) Place name meaning, "exalted" or "height." Abimelech, the judge, lived there while he fought to control Shechem (Judg. 9:41). It may be modern khirbet el-Ormah south of Shechem.

ARVAD (Är′ văd) ARVADITE Place name of unknown meaning. It provided sailors and soldiers for Tyre (Ezek. 27:8,11). It was probably the rocky island called Rouad today, off the coast of Syria. It is related to Canaan in the family of nations (Gen. 10:18).

ARZA (Är′ zà) Personal name meaning, "wood worm" or "earthiness." Steward of the house of King Baasha (908–886 B.C.) in Tirzah. The king was drunk in Arza's house when Zimri killed Baasha (1 Kings 16:8–10).

ASA (Ā′ sà) Personal name meaning, "doctor" or "healing." 1. Son and successor of Abijam as king of Judah (1 Kings 15:8). He reigned for forty-one years (913–873 B.C.). A pious man, he instituted several reforms to remove foreign gods and foreign religious practices from the land, even removing his mother from political power (1 Kings 15:13). After his death, apparently from natural causes, he was succeeded by his son Jehoshaphat or Josaphat (KJV). Asa was rebuked by the prophet Hanani (2 Chron. 16:7) for relying on the king of Syria rather than on the Lord (1 Kings 15:17–20). The chronicler further reported that when Asa developed a disease in his feet, he relied on physicians rather than on the Lord (2 Chron. 16:12). Matthew 1:7–8 lists Asa among Jesus' ancestors. See Israel; Chronology of Biblical Period.

2. A Levite who returned from the Exile to Jerusalem. He was the head of a family in the villages of the Netophathites near Jerusalem (1 Chron. 9:16).

ASAHEL (Ās′ à·hĕl) Personal name meaning "God acted" or "God made." 1. Brother of Joab and Abishai, David's nephew (2 Sam. 2:18). He was a commander in David's army (2 Sam. 23:24). He was a fleet-footed individual who pursued Abner as the latter fled following his defeat at Gibeon. Unable to dissuade Asahel from pursuing him, Abner slew him. That act led at last to the murder of Abner by Asahel's brother Joab (2 Sam. 3:27–30).

2. A Levite during the reign of Jehoshaphat, Asa's son. Asahel was sent out along with several princes, other Levites, and priests to teach the people of Judah the book of the law of God (2 Chron. 17:8). 3. A Levite under Hezekiah, the king of Judah following Ahaz. Asahel, along with ten others, assisted the chief officers in charge of contributions, tithes, and dedicated objects. Asahel's title was that of overseer. 4. The father of Jonathan who along with Jahaziah opposed Ezra's direction for the men of Judah to separate themselves from the foreign wives they had married. Ezra indicated they had sinned in marrying foreign women (Ezra 10:15).

ASAHIAH (Ăs·à·hī′ ah) See Asaiah.

ASAIAH (Å·sai′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh made." 1. Servant of King Josiah sent with others to Huldah, the prophet, to determine meaning of book of law found in the Temple about 624 B.C. 2. A leader of tribe of Simeon who helped drive out people of Ham from pastures of Gedor when Hezekiah was king of Judah (715–686 B.C.). See Gedor. 3. A musical Levite in line of Merari (1 Chron. 6:30). He is apparently the same as the chief of the sons of Merari, who led 220 of his clan in helping bring the ark of the covenant from the house of Obed-edom to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15). 4. Leader of clans from Shilo who returned from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:5).

ASAPH (Ā′ săph) Personal name meaning, "he collected." 1. Father of court official under King Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.), who in sadness reported the threats of Assyria to the king (2 Kings 18). 2. Levite musician David appointed to serve in the tabernacle until the Temple was completed (1 Chron. 6:39). Asaph was the father of the clan of Temple musicians who served through the history of the Temple. A member of the clan was among the first to return from Exile in 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:15). Part of the musical responsibility included sounding the cymbal (1 Chron. 15:19). David established the tradition of delivering psalms to Asaph for the Temple singers to sing (1 Chron. 16:7). Asaph and the singers ministered daily (1 Chron. 16:37). Their musical service could be called "prophesying" (1 Chron. 25:1–7). Descendants of Asaph delivered prophetic messages under God's Spirit (2 Chron. 20:14–19). Later generations sang the songs of Asaph "the seer" (2 Chron. 29:30). Psalms 50, 73–83 are titled "Psalms of Asaph" or similar titles. This may refer to authorship, the singers who used the Psalms in worship, or to a special collection of Psalms. See Psalms.

ASAREL (Å·sā′ rĕl) or KJV ASAREEL Personal name meaning, "God has sworn" or "God rejoiced." A member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:16).

ASARELAH (Ăs·à·rē′ lăh) KJV, NIV, NRSV spelling of Asharelah (NAS, RSV, TEV) in 1 Chronicles 25:2. This appears to be a variant of Jesharelah or Jesarelah in 1 Chronicles 25:14. The person is a descendant or son of Asaph among the Temple singers.

ASCENSION Act of going to heaven in bodily form from earthly life. Experienced by Enoch (Gen. 5:24) and Elijah (2 Kings 2:1–2) but supremely by Jesus Christ (Acts 1:9). Jewish literature outside the canon of the Bible developed long stories and explanations of the ascension of many religious heroes. See, for example, the Assumption of Moses. The Bible gives only brief notices. Still, the ascension of Jesus provides important theological foundations. It concluded the earthly ministry of Jesus, allowing eyewitnesses to see both the risen Christ on earth and the victorious, eternal Christ returning to heaven to minister at the right hand of the Father. The ascension expanded Christ's ministry from its geographically limited earthly dimensions to its universal heavenly dimensions. The ascension (1) allowed Jesus to prepare a heavenly place for His followers (John 14:2), (2) return to the Father (John 16:5), (3) send the Holy Spirit to the disciples (John 16:7) to bring conviction of sin, open the way to righteousness through faith, and condemn the devil, (4) comfort those suffering for Him through visions of the Ascended One (Acts 7:54–60), (5) call persons to fulfill His missionary task (Acts 9:1–18), (6) open doors of ministry for His people (2 Cor. 2:12–14), (7) demonstrate God's power and His rule over all who would exercise power and authority on earth or in heaven (Eph. 1:20–23), (8) give gifts for ministry to His people (Eph. 4:7–12), (9) give hope to troubled followers showing they would join Him in glory (Col. 3:1–4), (10) rescue His servants from persecution so they can preach His gospel (2 Tim. 4:16–18), (11) demonstrate that glory, not death, is God's final word for the Son and for disciples (Heb. 2:9), (12) exercise a heavenly priesthood (Heb. 4:14), (13) make revelation of future trials and final victory possible (Rev. 1:1), (14) discipline His church so He may have fellowship with it and provide final full fellowship in ruling with Christ (Rev. 3:19–22).

Most of all the ascension combined with the resurrection exalted Christ (Phil. 2:9). Contrasted to Christ's act of humbling Himself to move from heaven to earth and especially to the cross (Phil. 2:5–8) is God's act of exalting Jesus to the highest position in the universe, in charge of everything that exists and all that happens. Thus in ascension Jesus showed He had defeated death for good and made eternal life possible. The ascension thus calls on all people to bow in worship and obedience to the Ascended One (Phil. 2:10).

A

ASCENTS, SONG OF See Degrees, Song of.

ASENATH (Ăs′ ĕ·năth) Egyptian name meaning, "Belonging to Neith" (a goddess). Wife of Joseph and daughter of a priest in Egyptian temple at On or Heliopolis. Asenath was Pharaoh's present to Joseph (Gen. 41:45). She was mother of Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. 41:50–51).

ASER New Testament spelling of Asher in KJV (Luke 2:36; Rev. 7:6).

ASH KJV translation in Isaiah 44:14. Some manuscripts of the Hebrew text have the word for cedas, which is very similar to the word found in the text translated by the KJV. Modern versions differ. The word is translated fir (NAS), pine (NIV), cedar (NRSV, REB), and laurel tree (TEV).

ASHAN (Ā′ shăn) Place name meaning, "smoke." City in western hills of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:42) given to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:7). The Aaronic priests claimed Ashan as one of their cities (1 Chron. 6:59; called Ain in Josh. 21:16). See Bor-asan. Ashan was located at modern Khirbet Asan just northwest of Beersheba.

ASHARELAH (Ăsh·ȧ·rē′ lăh) See Asarelah.

ASHBEA (Ăsh·bē′ ȧ) KJV, TEV translation. NIV, NAS, NRSV read Beth Ashbea. See Beth Ashbea.

ASHBEL (Ăsh′ bĕl) ASHBELITES Personal name meaning, "having a long upper lip." Son of Benjamin, grandson of Jacob, and original ancestor of Ashbelite clan (Gen. 46:21).

ASHCHENAZ (Ăsh′ chė·năz) ASHKENAZ Personal and national name given two spellings in KJV but spelled Ashkenaz in modern translations. A son of Gomer (Gen. 10:3) and original ancestor of people called kingdom of Ashkenaz (Jer. 51:27). Usually identified with Scythians. See Scythians.

ASHDOD (Ăsh′ dŏd) One of five principal cities of the Philistines, where the Philistines defeated Israel and captured the ark of the covenant.

Asdod was ten miles north of Ashkelon and two and a half miles east of the Mediterranean Sea on the Philistine plain. It was the northernmost city of the Philistine pentapolis recorded in Joshua 13:3. Ashdod occurs in written history first in the Late Bronze period where it is mentioned in the trade documents of the Ras Shamra tablets discovered at Ugarit (ancient trade center near the Mediterranean coast in northern Syria). Ashdod is described as a manufacturer and exporter of textiles, specifically purple wool. The city name also occurs in the Egyptian list of names, Onomasticon of Amanope (263).

Old Testament In the Old Testament Ashdod was a place where some of the Anakim remained during the time of Joshua (Josh. 11:22). See Anakim. As one of the five chief cities of the Philistines it stood yet to be possessed by Joshua (Josh. 13:3), who allocated it to the tribe of Judah (Jos. 15:46–7). David subdued the Philistines, implicitly including Ashdod (2 Sam. 5:25; 8:1), but it was not described as under Israel's control until Uzziah (783–742 B.C.) captured it (2 Chron. 26:8). Perhaps the most infamous contact between Ashdod and Israel is reported in 1 Sam. 4—6 when the Philistines defeated the army of Israel in battle, killed the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, and captured the ark of the covenant.

Although the city was captured by Uzziah, it did not remain long under Judah's control and regained enough strength to revolt from Sargon II in 711 B.C. The Assyrians were able quickly to subdue the Philistines, and they remained under Assyrian control until captured by the Egyptian Pharaoh Psammetichus I (664–610) after a 29-year seige as reported by Herodotus. Under Nebuchadnezzar (604–562 B.C.), Babylon soon captured this territory and took the king of Ashdod prisoner.

The prophets of Israel spoke about the city of Ashdod in various military, political and moral contexts (Neh. 13:23–24; Isa. 20:1–6; Jer. 25:20; Amos 1:8; Zech. 9:6). Throughout the Persian period the city remained a threat to Israel.

Extra-biblical Sources In the Greek period Ashdod was known as Azotus and was a flourishing city until being captured by Israel during the Maccabean period. Judas Maccabeus destroyed altars and images in Ashdod (1 Maccabees 5:68), and Jonathan later burned the temple of Dagon, those who took refuge there, and ultimately the city itself (1 Maccabees 10:84–87).

Josephus reported that Pompey separated Ashdod from Israel after his victory (63 B.C.), Gabinius rebuilt the city, and it was joined to the province of Syria. Augustus granted it to Herod the Great. Herod left it to his sister Salome, who in turn willed it to Julia, the wife of Augustus. Its greatness as a city ended with the Roman destruction of A.D. 67, although it was occupied at least through the sixth century.

Archaeological Evidence The major archaeological work on Ashdod was done from 1962–72 under the direction of D. N. Freedman and others. Some evidence remains from Chalcolithic and Early Bronze times, but the major remains date from Middle Bronze and later including a walled city dating around 1625 B.C. A major destruction of the city was indicated by a three foot layer of ash and debris dating about 1250 B.C. Two extensive Philistine occupation levels date from the twelfth and eleventh centuries B.C. The Iron Age showed a flourishing community, and an Iron II temple yielded many cultic artifacts. George W. Knight

ASHDOTH-PISGAH (Ăsh' dŏth-Pĭs' gah) KJV for "slopes of Pisgah." See Pisgah.

ASHER (Ăsh' ēr) or Aser (New Testament Greek spelling) Personal, tribal, and place name meaning, "fortune," "happiness." 1. Eighth son of Jacob, born of Zilpah, the concubine (Gen. 30:13). His four sons and one daughter began the tribe of Asher (Gen. 46:17). Jacob's blessing said Asher would have rich food that he would give a king (Gen. 49:20), perhaps suggesting a period when the tribe would serve a foreign king. 2. The tribe of Asher numbered 53,400 in the wilderness (Num. 26:46), having grown from 41,500 (Num. 1:41). They formed part of the rear guard in the wilderness marches (Num. 10:25–28). Asher's territorial allotment was in Phoenicia in the far northwest reaching to Tyre and Sidon on the Mediterranean coast (Josh. 19:24–31). They could not drive out the Canaanites and had to live among them (Judg. 1:31–32). When Deborah summoned the tribes to action, Asher did not respond but "continued on the seashore" (Judg. 5:17). Apparently, Asher was working for the Canaanites in the ports of the Mediterranean. Moses' blessing gives another view of Asher, calling the tribe "most blessed," "favored by his brothers," and strong (Deut. 33:24–25). Asher produced no judge in the Book of Judges; nor did it have a tribal leader in the chronicler's list (1 Chron. 27:16–22). Asher did provide troops for Gideon (Judg. 6:35; 7:23) and 40,000 for David at Hebron (1 Chron. 12:36). Some people from Asher made the pilgrimage to Jerusalem to keep Hezekiah's Passover (2 Chron. 30:11). Perhaps Asher's greatest hero was Anna, the prophetess who bore witness to the baby Jesus (Luke 2:36–38). Twelve thousand from Asher are among the 144,000 sealed out of great tribulation to be fed by the Lamb (Rev. 7).

3. Apparently a border town in Manasseh (Josh. 17:7) but possibly a reference to the border joining the tribal territories of Manasseh and Asher. See Tribes of Israel.

ASHERAH (Ă·shē' răh) A fertility goddess, the mother of Baal, whose worship was concentrated in Syria and Canaan and the wooden object that represented her. The King James Version translated Asherah "grove" and the proper noun "Ashtaroth."

The writers of the Old Testament did not provide an actual description of an "asherah" or the origin of the worship of Asherah. Other religious writings from the Ancient Near East indicate that "Asherah" was the Hebrew name for an Amorite or Canaanite goddess who was worshiped in various parts of the Ancient Near East. The biblical writers sometimes did not make a clear distinction between references to Asherah as a goddess and as object of worship. According to ancient mythology, Asherah, the mother goddess, was the wife of El and mother of seventy gods, of whom Baal was the most famous. Asherah was the fertility goddess of the Phoenicians and Canaanites. She was called "Lady Asherah of the Sea." See Canaan.

Scholars who have studied art work from the Ancient Near East have suggested that some figures in drawings could be representations of the fertility goddess Asherah. Drawings of plain and carved poles, staffs, a cross, a double axe, a tree, a tree stump, a headdress for a priest, and several wooden images could be illustrations of an Asherah. Passages such as 2 Kings 13:6; 17:16; 18:4; 21:3; and 23:6,15 have been interpreted as a definition of an asherah as a wooden object constructed or destroyed by man. The object stood upright and was used in the worship of a goddess of the same name.

The Asherah existed in both the Southern and Northern Kingdoms of Israel. Jezebel of Tyre apparently installed Asherah worship in the north when she married King Ahab (1 Kings 18:18–19). The principle cities in which the objects were located were Samaria, Bethel, and Jerusalem. According to 1 Kings 14:23, the people "built for themselves high places, and pillars, and Asherim (plural) on every hill and under every green tree."

See Baal; Idolatry. James Newell

ASHERIM Plural of Asherah. See Asherah.

ASHERITES Members of tribe of Asher. See Asher.

ASHEROTH Plural of Asherah. See Asherah.

ASHES often were associated with sacrifices, mourning, and fasting. Grief, humiliation, and repentance were expressed by placing ashes on the head or by sitting in ashes. Dirt, sackcloth, fasting, the tearing of clothing, and ashes visibly demonstrated the person's emotions. At times the ashes that remained from a sacrifice were kept and used for ritual purification. They also symbolized the results of divine destruction. The use of ashes to express grief and repentance continued into the New Testament period. Their use in purification rites are contrasted with the cleansing brought by Christ's blood. They also represent the devastating effect of God's wrath on Sodom and Gomorrah (2 Pet. 2:6). Scott Langston ASHHUR (Ăsh' hŭr) Modern translation spelling of Ashur (KJV, TEV). Personal name meaning, "to be black," or "belonging to Ishara." Son of Hazron, born after his father's death (1 Chron.

2:24). He had two wives, each of whom bore him children (1 Chron. 4:5–7). His title, "Father of Tekoa," may indicate he founded the city later famous for native son Amos, the prophet. See Tekoa. Some Bible students understand Caleb to be Ashhur's father in 1 Chronicles 2:24 (TEV, RSV, but not NRSV).

ASHIMA (Ă·shī′ mȧ) Syrian god made and worshiped in Hamath (2 Kings 17:30). The Hebrew word 'asham means, "guilt." Hebrew writers may have deliberately written a word associated with guilt instead of the name of the god or goddess. Hamath's goddess may have been Asherah. See Asherah. Amos 8:14 says Israel swore by or made oaths by the "sin" (KJV) "guilt" (NAS) or "shame" of Samaria. NRSV and NIV footnote propose "Ashimah of Samaria." Samaria worshiped falsely. They may have incorporated the god of Hamath into their worship. See Hamath. The exilic Elephantine papyri from a Jewish community in Egypt mention an "Ashim-bethel" who may have been worshiped by Egyptian Jews as a counterpart to Yahweh.

ASHKELON (Ăsh′ kė·lŏn) One of five principal cities of the Philistines (pentapolis), located on the Mediterranean coast on the trade route, Via Maris, and designated for Judah in the conquest. Ashkelon was a Mediterranean coastal city twelve miles north of Gaza and ten miles south of Ashdod. It is the only Philistine city directly on the seacoast. Its history extends into the Neolithic Period. The economic importance came from both its port and its location on the trade route, the Via Maris.

The location in southern Palestine put Ashkelon under considerable Egyptian influence throughout much of its history. The first mention of the city was in the nineteenth century B.C. Execration Texts, where a curse on the ruler and his supporters was written on pottery, then smashed, symbolizing breaking his power. A fifteenth century B.C. papyrus speaks of Ashkelon's loyalty to Egypt, and the fourteenth century Amarna Letters confirm that relationship with the ruler Widia claiming submission to the Pharaoh, although the ruler of Jerusalem claimed that Ashkelon had given supplies to the 'Apiru. In this period the goddess Astarte was worshiped here by the Canaanites. The city revolted from Egypt and was subsequently sacked by Ramses II (1282 B.C.). Later that same century Pharaoh Merneptah captured the city.

The Old Testament record concerns the city after it had come under Philistine control. It was ruled by a ruler or seren supported by a military aristocracy. Joshua had not taken Ashkelon in the conquest of the land (Josh. 13:3), but it was included in the territory designated for Judah. It appears that Judah did take the city (Judg. 1:18), but it belonged to the Philistines in the Samson account (Judg. 14:19) and under Saul and David (1 Sam. 6:17; 2 Sam. 1:20). Ashkelon subsequently was independent or under the control of Assyria, Egypt, Babylon, and Tyre. Amos 1:8 and Jeremiah 47:5, 7 refer to Ashkelon and her evils. With the coming of the Greeks, Ashkelon became a Hellenistic center of culture and learning. During the Maccabean Period the city flourished and apparently did not have hostilities with the Jews (1 Maccabees 10:36; 11:60). In fact, many Jews lived there. Rome granted the status "free allied city" in 104 B.C. A tradition was known in Christian circles that Herod the Great was born in Ashkelon, the son of a temple slave of Apollo. Herod did have family and friends there and gave the city some beautiful buildings, built a palace there, and left the city to his sister, Salome, at his death. The city was attacked by the Jews in the first Roman Revolt (66 A.D.) but survived and was faithful to Rome. George W. Knight

ASHKENAZ See Ashchenaz.

ASHNAH (Ăsh′ năh) Place name. 1. A city in the valley of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:33), possibly modern Aslin. 2. A second city in the valley or shephelah of Judah (Josh. 15:43), possibly modern Idna, about eight miles northwest of Hebron.

ASHPENAZ (Ăsh′ pĕ·năz) Chief eunuch guarding the family of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (605–562 B.C.) (Dan. 1:3). He administered the diet and life-style of Daniel and his three friends, giving them new Babylonian names (Dan. 1:7). Daniel developed a close, loving relationship with him.

ASHRIEL (Ăsh′ rĭ·ĕl) KJV spelling for Asriel. See Asriel.

ASHTAROTH (Ăsh′ tȧrŏth) is the plural form of Ashtoreth, a Canaanite goddess of fertility, love, and war and the daughter of the god El and the goddess Asherah. 1. The Old Testament uses the plural form, Ashtaroth, more than the singular form, Ashtoreth. The only references to Ashtoreth come in 1 Kings 11:5,33; 2 Kings 23:13. The Hebrew scribes replaced the vowels of the name Ashtart or Ashteret with the vowels from the Hebrew word for shame, boshet, to bring dishonor to the memory of the goddess. This exchanging of vowels formed the word Ashtoreth. The Greek form of the name is Astarte.

In Canaanite mythology, she appears to be the sister of the goddess Anath and the spouse of the god Baal. Anath also was the spouse of Baal, as well as the goddess of love and war. Some confusion, therefore, exists with regards to Ashtaroth's relationship to Anath. Anath and Ashtaroth may have referred to the same goddess, or they may have been two separate deities. Among the people of Palestine, Ashtaroth may have taken over Anath's role. The Egyptians gave the title "Lady of Heaven" to Astarte, Anath, and another goddess, Qudshu. In Moab, Astarte was the spouse of the major god, Chemosh. The Babylonians and Assyrians called her Ashtar and worshiped her as goddess of fertility and love. The people of the Ancient Near East during the Hellenistic and Roman periods referred to her as Aphrodite-Venus.

Apparently, the word "ashtaroth" at one time meant "womb" or "that which comes from the womb." This word, "ashtaroth," appears in Deuteronomy 7:13 and 28:4,18,51 to describe the young of the flock. This use may demonstrate the link between the goddess Ashtaroth and fertility.

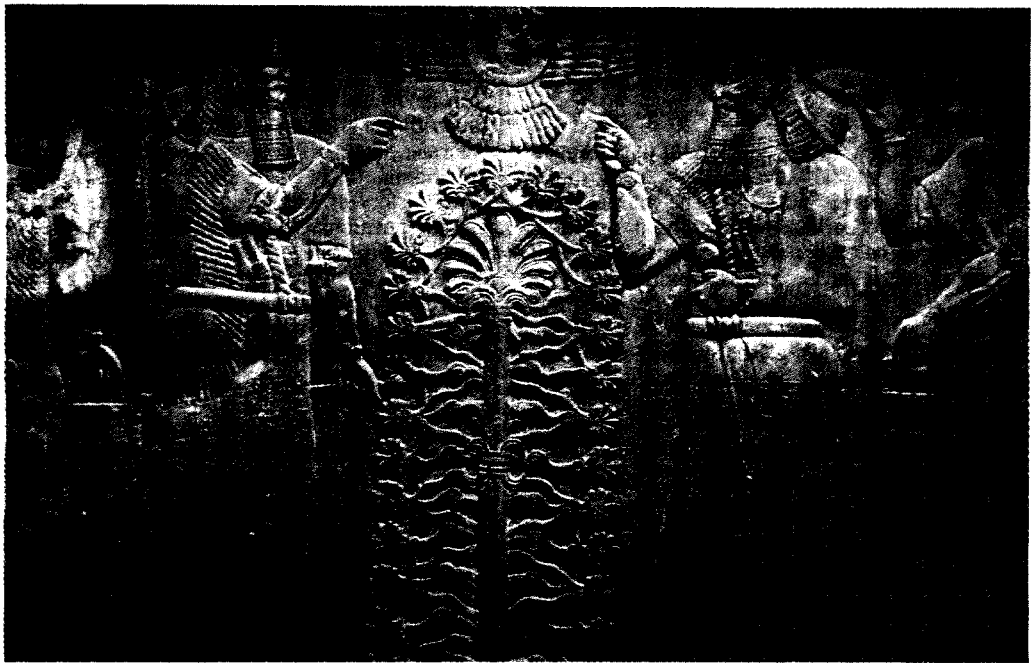
The biblical writers often coupled Baal with Ashtaroth as a designation of pagan worship (Judg. 2:13; 10:6; 1 Sam. 7:3–4; 12:10). In addition to her worship by the Canaanites, the Old Testament mentions the people of Sidon (1 Kings 11:5) and the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:10) as reverencing her. At Beth-Shan, the Philistines erected a temple to Ashtaroth (1 Sam. 31:10). The reference to the Queen of Heaven (Jer. 7:18) may have Ashtaroth in mind, but this is uncertain. The Israelites worshiped her, and the biblical writers specifically refer to Solomon's leadership in promoting the worship of Ashtaroth (1 Kings 11:5). She was only one of many foreign deities revered by the Israelites. Josiah destroyed the shrines built to her (2 Kings 23:13).

2. Egyptian documents dating from the eighteenth century B.C. onward refer to a city called Ashtartu or Ashtarot in the region of Bashan. Joshua 21:27 mentions a city with the name Beeshterah in Bashan, while a man named Uzzia is called an Ashterathite (1 Chron. 11:44). Og, king of Bashan, reigned in the city of Ashtaroth (Deut. 1:4; Josh. 9:10; 12:4, 13:12, 31; 1 Chron. 6:17). The sons of Machir received it as a part of their inheritance in the land (Josh. 13:31).

Once the city is called Ashteroth-karnaim (Gen. 14:5) or "Ashtaroth of the two horns." A seventeenth century B.C. stone mould for making bronze figurines of Astarte was uncovered at Nahariyah. She was represented as a woman with two horns on her head. Many other clay figurines of Astarte have been found at sites throughout Palestine. The city's name, Ashtaroth, may reflect that she was worshiped by the citizens of this settlement.

The city is located at modern Tel Ashtarah about 20 miles east of the Sea of Galilee. It was located on a major branch of the Via Maris, or Way of the Sea and in the King's Highway, the major highway for traffic east of the Jordan.

Scott Langston



ASHTEROTH KARNAIM (Ăsh' tė·rŏth Kär' · na·ĭm) See Ashtaroth.

ASHTORETH (Ăsh' tō·rĕth) See Ashtaroth.

ASHUR KJV spelling for Ashhur. See Ashhur.

ASHURBANIPAL (Ă' shŭr·băn' ĭ·păl) Assyria's

Ashurbanipal (668–629 B.C.) was ruler of Assyria during its last years of decline. This relief from Nimrud depicts an earlier period of great power—the reign of Ashurnasirpal II (883–859 B.C.).

last great king who is identified in Ezra 4:10 as the king of Assyria who captured Susa, Elam, and other nations and settled their citizens in Samaria.

The son of the King Esarhaddon was the heir apparent from about 673 B.C. He actually ruled from 668 to 629 B.C. Ashurbanipal's legacy is his famous library which contained more than 20,000 clay tablets. The library was located in the Assyrian capital of Nineveh and was discovered in 1853. Ashurbanipal's copyists not only transcribed Assyrian books but also preserved Sumerian and Akkadian literature. Most of what we know about the Assyrian Empire is derived from his library.

A wall relief (dating ca. 650 B.C.) in alabaster from Nineveh depicting Asshurbanipal on a lion hunt.

Ashurbanipal was also known by the name Osnappar and appears in the KJV as Asnapper. His name appears only once in the Bible (Ezra 4:10), the only report of such a settlement in Samaria. The Greeks called him Sardanapalus. His reign was contemporary with the reigns of Manasseh, Amon, and Josiah, Kings of Judah. See Assyria.

M. Stephen Davis

ASHURITE (Ăsh′ ŭr-īte) or ASHURI (NIV) Apparently a tribe or clan over which Ish-bosheth, Saul's son, ruled (2 Sam. 2:9). The textual tradition among the earliest translations is not clear here with some evidence that the tribe of Asher or the city-state of Geshur is meant. In KJV of Ezekiel 27:6 Ashurites made "benches of ivory" for Tyre. Most modern translations use a different division of words in the Hebrew text and see a type of wood used: boxwood (NAS), cypress (NIV), pine (TEV, RSV), cedar (Jerusalem). If people from Ashur are meant in either of the original texts, we know nothing else about them.

ASHVATH (Ăsh′ văth) Personal name meaning, "that which has been worked" (as iron). Descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:33).

ASIA (Āsiȧ) in the New Testament refers to a Roman province on the west of Asia Minor whose capital was Ephesus.

The Roman province of Asia comprised generally the southwest portion of Anatolia. Its first capital was Pergamum, but the capital was later changed to Ephesus. Asia residents were in Jerusalem at Pentecost (Acts 2:9). Paul the apostle traveled and preached extensively in Asia (Acts 19:10,22) especially in the neighborhood of Ephesus; but God forbad him to preach there prior to his Macedonian call (Acts 16:6). Men of Asia led to Paul's arrest in Jerusalem (Acts 21:27). 1 Peter was addressed to Christians in Asia. Asia was the location of the seven churches to whom the Book of Revelation was addressed. Asia was known for its worship of Artemis (Acts 19:27). See Rome; Roman Empire.

ASIA MINOR, CITIES OF (Ā′ siȧ Mī′ nŏr) The cities located on the Anatolian peninsula (modern-day Turkey). Cities of Asia Minor important to the New Testament accounts included Alexandria Troas, Assos, Ephesus, Miletus, Patara, Smyrna, Pergamum, Sardis, Thyatira, Philadelphia, Laodicea, Colossae, Attalia, Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, and Tarsus. The cities figured prominently in the apostle Paul's missionary journeys, several of the churches receiving epistles. Among the list are the "Seven Cities" of the Revelation.

Geography and History The geography of Asia Minor greatly influenced the development of settlements in the area. The region can be described as the point where "East meets West," linking the continent of Europe with the Near East. The peninsula is a high plateau surrounded by steep mountain ranges. The mountains isolate Asia Minor from much of the outside world. Narrow passes through the mountains connect the interior with the Near East. Deep ravines cut by numerous and often navigable rivers linked the cities of the plateau with the western coastline. Cities developed in locales vital to trade and commerce, such as near the mouths of rivers and mountain passes.

The history of Asia Minor reflects the region's unstable position between the east and west. The Hittite Empire thrived in the eastern portion of the peninsula during the second millennium B.C. (before 1000). Exposed on the west to the Aegean Sea, the coastal area became the home to numerous Greek colonies beginning after 1200 B.C. Centered in Sardis, the Lydian Empire began to expand about 600 B.C., but the Persians soon conquered the area. Control passed to Alexander the Great during the fourth century, and upon his death Asia Minor fell under the rule of the Seluccids. Beginning about 200 B.C. Roman control of the peninsula increased until all of Anatolia was absorbed into the Roman provincial system. At this time, "Asia" designated the provinces of only western Anatolia. Galatia, Cappadocia, and Cilicia comprised the eastern provinces, while Bithynia and Pontus bordered the Black Sea to the north. The Anatolian peninsula was probably first termed "Asia Minor" during the fifth century A.D.

Coastal Cities The name Troas described both the northwest region of Asia Minor as well as the port city. Located 10 miles south of the site of ancient Troy, Alexandria Troas was founded as a Roman colony during the period of Augustus and served as a primary port for trade passing between Asia Minor and Macedonia. Remains of the ruined city wall and a bath complex of the second century A.D. are still visible. As with many ancient ports, the once busy harbor silted up and became unusable. Paul set sail from Troas to Greece in response to his vision of the "Macedonian man" (Acts 16:8). On his third journey, Paul's companions embarked on a ship sailing toward the port of Assos, 20 miles south (Acts 20:13–14). A bustling port city surrounded by a wall dating to the fourth century B.C., Assos' temple of Athena sat high on the acropolis overlooking the harbor. At Assos, Paul joined the ship carrying Luke and several others after journeying on foot from Troas.

Ephesus served as the primary trading center of all Asia Minor. The large port facility provided ample anchorage for ships carrying goods east from Greece and Italy, as well as for those which took to Rome the wares brought overland from Asia and the Far East. A well-laid road linked the port facilities at Ephesus with Tarsus to the east. The road approached the city from the southeast, entering a monumental gateway near the public baths. Remains of the city's immense theater, capable of seating 24,000 spectators, stand today as a reminder of the great crowd which, in protest to Paul, filled the seats and for several hours shouted, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" (Acts 19:34). The city's temple honoring Diana was one of the Seven Wonders of the world. Known as the Artemision to the Greeks, the temple possessed 127 pillars, each 60 feet high, which held up the roof of the largest all-marble structure in the Hellenistic world. The city's harbor, built around the outlet of the Cayster River, gradually filled with silt; and the site now lies some six miles away from the sea. As the chief port and city of Asia, Paul's choice of Ephesus as a center of ministry provided the perfect base from which the gospel could be spread throughout the Roman world.

During the early period of Greek colonization, Miletus exercised extensive control over southwestern Anatolia. As a major sea power, the city remained independent throughout the time of Lydian rule in the region. The city was able to withstand attempted incursions by the Persians until 494 B.C. Once a wealthy port for the wool industry, Miletus was a city of little significance during the New Testament era (Acts 20:15).

Acts 21 recounts how Paul sailed for Tyre from Patara. The city served as a popular port for ships traveling eastward during the early autumn months when favorable winds made travel to Egypt and the Phoenician coast easier. The harbor sat near the outlet of the Xanthus River and was the main shipping facility of provincial Lydia.

Smyrna surrounded a well protected harbor on the Aegean coast at the outlet of the Hermus River. Extensive trade into and out of Asia passed through the city. During the first century A.D. Smyrna reigned as one of the grandest cities of all Asia. A large temple dedicated to the Emperor Tiberius boasted the close alliance of the city with the Empire. Numerous other temples dedicated to a wide range of Roman deities as well as scores of beautifully adorned public buildings decorated the city.

Cities of the Interior Located 15 miles inland overlooking the Caicus River, Pergamum contained the first temple in Asia dedicated to a Roman Emperor, Augustus, in 29 B.C. The city possessed a commanding position on a hill high above the valley. Located on the Upper Acropolis were a large theater, library, agora, palace, barracks, and altar of Zeus. The larger altar area may be that referred to by John as the "throne of Satan" (Rev. 2:13). The city was well-known as a center of worship for the gods Asklepios, Zeus, Demeter and Persephone, Serapis, Isis, as well as the cult of the emperor.

The greatest city in Lydia, Sardis is remembered as the first municipality to mint coins of silver and gold. Set in the fertile Hermus valley, Sardis served as the capital of the Lydian king Croesus, a name synonymous with wealth. The city fell to the Persian armies of Cyrus in 549 B.C. and to the Romans in 188 B.C. A tremendous earthquake in A.D. 17 struck Sardis, a blow from which it was never fully able to recover.

Following the Hermus River inland from Sardis one reached Philadelphia, the name commemorating the brotherly love between Attalus Philadelphus and Eumenes. Founded during the second century B.C., the city was set amidst vast vineyards and led in the worship of Dionysius. The terrible earthquake of A.D. 17 was followed by dangerous tremors for the next twenty years, each one debilitating the city further. The apostle John's reference to the giving of a "new name" (Rev. 3:12) may be a wordplay on the proposed dedication of the city as "Neocaesarea" in honor of aid Tiberius sent.

Journeying inland from Miletus, a traveller followed the course of the Meander River until it joined the Lycus. In the center of the valley sat Laodicea. Situated along the major east-west trade route, the city prospered greatly. As the chief city of the wealthy province of Phrygia, Laodicea boasted of a large number of banks. In 51 B.C. Cicero recounted how he stopped to cash drafts at one of the city's banks. The great wealth of Laodicea allowed it to finance its own rebuilding after a destructive earthquake in A.D. 60, refusing help from the Senate of Rome. The city was also known for clothes and carpets woven from the rich, glossy black wool raised in the valley. Laodicea served as home to a medical school renowned for production of collyrium, an eye salve. Revelation makes mention of the riches of the city, admonishing believers to seek instead spiritual gold of eternal worth, and to anoint their eyes with a spiritual salve. John's description of "white garments" to cover their nakedness contrasts the Laodicean preference for "home-grown" black wool, a symbol of worldly prosperity (Rev. 3:14–18).

Eleven miles south of Laodicea lay Colossae. The city was well-known as early as the fifth century B.C. as a commercial center, famous for red-dyed wool. The establishment of Laodicea, however, led to the decline of Colossae's prosperity. Several remains are still visible, including a small theater on the city's southeast side. The apostle Paul never personally evangelized the city. Instead, the church was established by Epaphras during Paul's third missionary journey (Col. 1:7,12,13). Paul wrote to the church during his Roman imprisonment, complementing the work of Philemon and his servant Onesimus (Col. 4:9).

Cities of Eastern Asia Minor Much of Paul's Asian ministry centered around the provinces of Galatia and Lycaonia. On his first journey, Paul and Barnabas most likely arrived by sea at Attalia, a relatively small and unimportant harbor. Moving northward from the port and crossing Pamphylia, the group arrived at Antioch in the province of Galatia. Luke's "Antioch of Pisidia" carried the title of Colonia Caesarea Antiocheia, a colony established in 25 B.C. upon a much earlier Hellenistic city. Antioch had been renovated by Rome to provide for the defense of Galatia. A temple to Augustus dominated the central plaza, and the official inscription telling of his victories and of achievements was displayed in the city. Wagons bearing Anatolian marble passed through Antioch on their way to ships at Ephesus to be used in the decoration of the Empire.

Moving southeast from Antioch, Paul and his companions traveled to Iconium. Located in a fertile, well-watered plain, Iconium supplied large amounts of fruit and grain for the surrounding provinces. Several years after Paul's visit, the Emperor Claudius allowed the town to be renamed Claudiconium in his honor, a reminder of the strong ties it shared with Rome.

Lystra lay twenty miles to the south of Iconium along the Via Sebaste. About 6 B.C. Augustus conferred the title of Julia Felix Gemina Lustra upon this Roman colony. Connected by a fine road with Antioch to the west, the city honored Zeus and Hermes as patron gods. A statue dedicated to the two was discovered in the 1800's, reminiscent of the city's identification of Paul and Barnabas with the gods (Acts 14). Timothy was a native of Lystra (Acts 16:1). The ruins of the city are today near the small Turkish town of Katyn Serai.

Derbe was situated sixty miles from Lystra at the present-day site of Kerti Huyuk. Although a large city of Lycaonia, Derbe was relatively unimportant. Paul's decision to visit the city implies a large Jewish population in the region. It is possible that some believers had already advanced the gospel to Derbe, having been earlier expelled from Iconium.

The boyhood home of the apostle Paul, Tarsus of Cilicia lay on the eastern end of the east-west trade route beginning at Ephesus. At Tarsus, merchants had the option of going south into Syria and Palestine, or continuing across the mountains on to Zeugma and the East. The Cydnus River provided Tarsus with an outlet to the Mediterranean Sea, ten miles away. Lumber and linen were the main industries of Tarsus, but the related manufacture of goat's-hair cloth was practiced by many, including Paul. This skill served as his main source of income wherever he traveled. Tarsus also housed a university and school of philosophy, an academic atmosphere which formed the basis of Paul's latter rabbinic career.

David C. Maltsberger

ASIARCHS (Ā′ sī·ärchs) A somewhat general term for public patrons and leaders named by cities in the Roman province of Asia. They used their wealth for the public good, especially for supporting worship of the emperor and of Rome. They underwrote expenses of games sponsored in connection with religious festivals. Having served in the position, a person seemed able to continue to use the title. Paul won friends among this elite class (Acts 19:31), and they helped protect him from a religious riot in Ephesus. Note that some versions transliterate Asiarchs from Greek while others translate it to chiefs or officials.

ASIEL (Ās′ ī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God has made." A descendant of Simeon and clan leader who settled in Gedar in rich pasture lands (1 Chron. 4:35–40).

ASKELON Alternate KJV spelling of Ashkelon. See Ashkelon.

ASNAH (Ās′ năh) Proper name possibly with Egyptian origins relating to the god Nah. One of the Nethanims or Temple servants who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from Exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:50).

ASNAPPER (Ās·năpēr) KJV reading in Ezra 4:10. Modern translations read Osnappar (NAS, RSV) Ashurbanipal (TEV, NIV). See Osnappar.

ASP KJV translation for a dangerous, poisonous snake (Deut. 32:33; Job 20:14,16; Isa. 11:8; Rom. 3:13). Other translations use serpent, viper, or cobra at some or all of these places. The Hebrew term pethen occurs also in Psalm 58:4, where KJV translates, "adder." Recent work points to the cobra naja chaje, but this identification is not certain. Whatever the specific identification, they serve as symbols of dangerous poison (Deut. 32:33). They can be described as deaf (Ps. 58:4) either as a natural characteristic or as an unusual case. The deafness makes them immune to the snake charmer and thus even more dangerous with their poison. Riches that become the center of life turn out to be as poisonous as asps (Job 20:14,16). The prophetic vision is God's restoration of the world order so that small children can play around the holes of poisonous snakes without fear (Isa. 11:8). Until that day sin continues to dominate humanity, turning speech into poisonous lies (Rom. 3:13).

ASPATHA (Ăs·pā′ thȧ) Persian personal name. Son of Haman killed by Jews (Esther 9:10).

ASRIEL (Ăs′ rĭ·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God has made happy." A son of Gilead and clan, Asrielites, in the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:31). They received a land allotment (Josh. 17:2). In 1 Chronicles 7:14 KJV spells Ashriel.

ASS Beast of burden and wild animal to KJV but translated, "donkey" in most modern translations. Six different Hebrew words and two Greek words lie behind the English translations. 1. 'athon is a female animal used for riding (Gen. 49:11; Num. 22:21–33; Judg. 5:10; 2 Kings 4:22) and as a beast of burden (Gen. 45:23). Saul's father lost his female asses (1 Sam. 9:3). This indicated loss of pride and prestige, for asses were apparently the riding animals for leaders and for the nobility (compare Judg. 10:4; 12:14; see below on 'ayir). Warriors rode female asses (Judg. 5:10). Wealthy persons owned numbers of asses (Gen. 12:16; 32:15; 1 Chron. 27:30; Job 1:3). They grazed the grasslands for food (Job 1:14). God used a talking ass to teach a prophet a lesson in obedience (Num. 22). Zechariah pictured the Messiah as riding on "a colt the foal of an ass" ('athon), thus emphasizing the animal was a purebred ass and not a crossbred mule (Zech. 9:9).

2. Chamor is the male ass, probably a reddish color according to the basic meaning of the Hebrew term. The original homeland of the ass (equus asinus) was probably Africa. It was both a riding animal (Gen. 22:3) and a beast of burden (Gen. 42:26), which could be used for plowing (Deut. 22:10, which forbids yoking an ass with an ox). For his hard work Issachar was pictured as a donkey (Gen. 49:14). An ass was valuable enough that the first born ass had to be ritually redeemed through sacrifice of a lamb (Ex. 13:13; 34:20) or by killing the newborn ass. In extreme famine conditions people would go so far as to pay astronomical prices for the head of an ass which they could eat (2 Kings 6:25). The ass was used to illustrate rampant sexual lust (Ezek. 23:20). A donkey's burial was an unceremonious dumping on the garbage heap for the vultures and scavengers to eat up (Jer. 22:19). The rich possessed herds of donkeys (Gen. 24:35; 30:43) though the Egyptian farmers suffering under the famine also had asses to bring to Joseph in exchange for food (Gen. 47:17; compare Ex. 9:3; 20:17). The Messiah would ride on a donkey (Zech. 9:9), the animal of the nobility in days when Israel did not have a king. The animal constrasted to the horse used in the kings' military exploits after Solomon's time (1 Kings 10:26) in violation of Deuteronomy 17:16. The picture in Zechariah 9 thus joins the humble suffering servant and the royal Messiah.

3. 'Ayir refers to the stallion or young, vigorous male ass. These were apparently riding animals reserved for nobility (Judg. 10:4; 12:14; Zech. 9:9). Isaiah described an unusual caravan on the way to Egypt including young donkeys and camels. The older donkeys would have been the more usual caravan members (Isa. 30:6). Nomads in the desert often led caravans of donkeys and camels loaded with wares to sell. The day of God's salvation would include luxurious food for the donkeys who pulled the plows (Isa. 30:24). The young wild ass can also be called 'yir (Job 11:12).

4. 'Arad and 'arod refers to the wild ass (asinus hemippus) that God created for freedom in the wilderness rather than to do slave labor for humans (Job 39:5). Such animals explore mountain pastures for food (Job 39:8).

5. Pere' is a wild donkey or onager which some Bible students identify with the zebra, but no evidence exists for zebras in Palestine. The Hebrew in Genesis 16:12 calls Ishmael "a wild ass of a man" (NRSV; see NIV; TEV; NAS), because he would live in opposition to all other people. The wild donkey was known for its braying and for eating grass (Job 6:5). Such a wild animal can never be human (Job 11:12; compare various translations). It lives in the wilderness searching for food and helpless before the cold and rain (Job 24:5–8; compare 39:5). Without pastures, it breathes its last dying gasp (Jer. 14:6). They ventured into cities only when the cities were forsaken ruins (Isa. 32:14). God had created them to be accustomed to life in the Judean wilderness (Jer. 2:24), where they freely pursued natural instincts and lusts. (Compare Hos. 8:9).

6. Onarion refers to a small donkey and appears only in John 12:14 to show the promise of Zechariah 9:9 was being fulfilled.

7. Onos can refer either to a male or female donkey. John 12:15 sees the ass as the parent of the colt on which Jesus rode, while Matthew 21:2 sees both an ass and a colt involved. These animals were kept in stalls and watered as a natural part of peasant life (Luke 13:15). They could easily get loose and fall into a pit (Luke 14:5). Jesus showed care for the animals which stricter Jews were prone to let lie in pits in order to obey religious rules.

A

The donkey, or ass, is still used as a beast of burden and mode of transportation in the Middle East.

8. Hupozugion literally means, "one under a yoke." This is Matthew's term for the parent of the "foal of an ass" predicted in Zechariah 9:9 (Matt. 21:5). Peter used the term to refer to the animal which spoke to Balaam (2 Pet. 2:16).

The precise difference in meaning of the various words for "ass" is not always evident to modern Bible students, though the differences were surely clear to the original writers and readers.

ASSASSINS Organized Jewish group who attempted to win freedom from the Romans. The word in Greek is derived from the Latin term Sicarii, and literally means "dagger men." Josephus described them as hiding small daggers in their clothing, which they used in crowded situations to kill their victims. "Sicarii" was used by the Romans to refer to those Jews who engaged in the organized killing of political figures. Perhaps this group should be associated with the Zealots of the New Testament (see Zealots). The Sicarii were often called robbers, and it is likely that the thieves crucified with Jesus were suspected of belonging to this group. In Acts 21:38, Paul was mistaken as a leader of four thousand Sicarii. KJV calls them murderers; REB and TEV, terrorists.

ASSAYER One who tests ore for its silver and gold content. According to modern versions of Jeremiah 6:27, the calling of Jeremiah was to be an assayer of the people. He did not find them to be a precious metal. The KJV takes the word from the Hebrew root for tower, which is spelled the same as the root word for assayer. Modern versions, however, seem to make the best sense of the Hebrew text (see the entire context; 6:27–30). See Bellows.

ASSEMBLY The official gathering of the people of Israel and of the church. See Congregation.

ASSHUR (Ăs′ shŭr) ASSHURIM, ASSHURITES (NIV) Personal and national name. 1. Son of Shem and thus a Semite, as were the Hebrew people (Gen. 10:22). 2. An otherwise unknown Arabian tribe (Gen. 25:3). This tribe may also be meant in Balaam's oracle (Num. 24:22–24), but a reference to Assyria is more likely. 3. The nation Assyria and its inhabitants are generally meant by the Hebrew term Asshur. This is the likely meaning in Genesis 10:11; Ezekiel 27:23; 32:22; Hosea 14:3. See Assyria.

ASSIR (Ăs′ sĭr) Personal name meaning, "prisoner." 1. A son of Korah (Ex. 6:24), the leader of the rebellion against Moses (Num. 16:1–35). 2. Great grandson of 1 above (1 Chron. 6:23) or grandson of 1 above with Elkanah and Ebiasaph being brothers. Compare 1 Chronicles 6:37. 3. A son of King Jeconiah (or Jehoiachin) in KJV of 1 Chronicles 3:17, but this should probably be interpreted as a common noun, "captive," referring to Jehoiachin (NIV, NAS, NRSV).

Ruins of the ancient seaport city of Assos on the Gulf of Adramyttium.

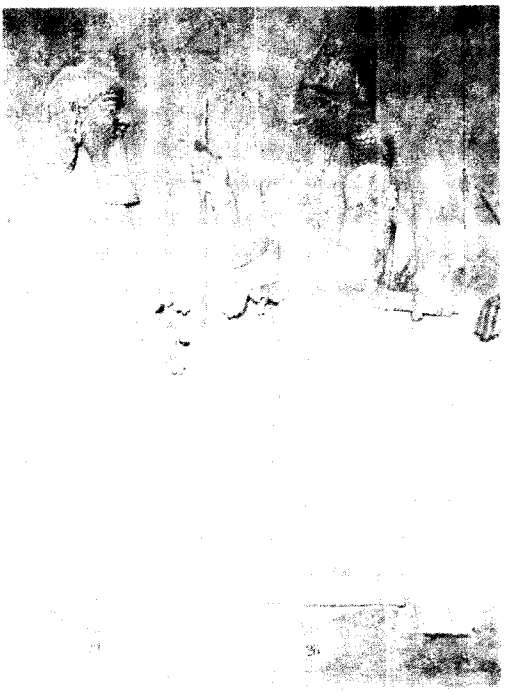
ASSOS (Ăs′ sŏs) Seaport city on the Gulf of Adramyttium, an offshoot of the east coast of the Aegean Sea. Paul visited there briefly and met Luke and others there as he sailed to Jerusalem from his third missionary journey (Acts 20:13–14).



ASSUR (Ăs′ sŭr) KJV spelling in Ezra 4:2; Psalm 83:8 for Assyria. See Assyria.

ASSURANCE See Security of the Believer.

ASSURBANIPAL See Ashurbanipal.

ASSYRIA, HISTORY AND RELIGION OF Assyria (Às·sȳr′ ĭ·à) was a nation in northern Mesopotamia in Old Testament times that became a large empire during the period of the Israelite kings. Assyrian expansion into the region of Palestine (about 855–625 B.C.) had enormous impact on the Hebrew kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

Relief of King Sargon of Assyria and his visier.

History Assyria lay north of the region of Babylonia along the banks of the Tigris River (Gen. 2:14) in northern Mesopotamia. The name Assyria (in Hebrew, Ashshur) is from Asshur, its first capital, founded about 2000 B.C. The foundation of other Assyrian cities, notably Calah and Nineveh, appears in Genesis 10:11–12.

The history of Assyria is well documented in royal Assyrian annals, building inscriptions, king lists, correspondence, and other archaeological evidence. By 1900 B.C. these cities were vigorously trading as far away as Cappadocia in eastern Asia Minor. An expanded Assyria warred with the famous King Hammurabi of Babylon shortly before breaking up into smaller city states about 1700 B.C.

Beginning about 1300 B.C., a reunited Assyria made rapid territorial advances and soon became an international power. Expanding westward, Tiglath-pileser I (1115–1077 B.C.) became the first Assyrian monarch to march his army to the shores of the Mediterranean. With his murder, however, Assyria entered a 166-year period of decline.

Assyria awoke from its dark ages under Adad-nirari II (911–891 B.C.), who reestablished the nation as a power to be reckoned with in Mesopotamia. His grandson, Ashurnasirpal II (883–859 B.C.) moved Assyria toward the status of an empire. Ashurnasirpal II used a well-deserved reputation for cruelty to extort tribute and taxes from states within the reach of his army in predatory campaigns. He also rebuilt the city of Calah as the new military and administrative capital. Carved stone panels in Ashurnasirpal's palace there show violent scenes of the king's vicious campaigns against unsubmissive enemies.

Ashurnasirpal's son Shalmaneser III (858–824 B.C.) continued a policy of Assyrian expansion through his annual campaigns in all directions. These were no longer mere predatory raids. Rather they demonstrated a systematic economic exploitation of subject states. As always, failure to submit to Assyria brought vicious military action. The results, however, were not always a complete victory for Assyria. In such a context Assyria first encountered the Hebrew kingdoms of the Bible. In 853 B.C., at Qarqar in north Syria, Shalmaneser fought a coalition of twelve kings including Hadad-ezer (Ben-Hadad, 1 Kings 20:26,34) of Aram-Damascus and Ahab of Israel. This confrontation is not mentioned in the Bible, but it may have taken place during a three-year period of peace between Israel and Aram-Damascus (1 Kings 22:1). In his official inscriptions Shalmaneser claims victory, but the battle was inconclusive. In 841 B.C., he finally defeated Hazael of Damascus and on Mt. Carmel received tribute from Tyre, Sidon, and King Jehu of Israel. A scene carved in relief on the Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser, unearthed at Calah, shows Jehu groveling before Shalmaneser, the only known depiction of an Israelite king.

With the death of Shalmaneser, Assyria entered another period of decline during which she was occupied with the nearby kingdom of Urartu. For the next century only one Assyrian king seriously affected affairs in Palestine. Adad-nirari III (810–783 B.C.) entered Damascus, taking extensive tribute from Ben-hadad III. He is probably the "savior" of 2 Kings 13:5, who allowed Israel to escape domination by Aram-Damascus. Nevertheless, Adad-nirari also collected tribute from Jehoash of Israel.

Assyrian preoccupation with Urartu ended with the reign of Tiglath-pileser III (744–727 B.C.). The true founder of the Assyrian Empire, he made changes in the administration of conquered territories. Nations close to the Assyrian homeland were incorporated as provinces. Others were left with native rule, but subject to an Assyrian overseer. Tiglath-pileser also instituted a policy of mass deportations to reduce local nationalistic feelings. He took conquered people into exile to live in lands vacated by other conquered exiles. Compare 2 Kings 17:24.

As Tiglath-pileser, also called Pul, arrived on the coast of Phoenicia, Menahem of Israel (2 Kings 15:19) and Rezin of Aram-Damascus brought tribute and became vassals of Assyria. An anti-Assyrian alliance quickly formed. Israel and Aram-Damascus attacked Jerusalem about 735 B.C. in an attempt to replace King Ahaz of Judah with a man loyal to the anti-Assyrian alliance (2 Kings 16:2–6; Isa. 7:1–6) and thus force Judah's participation. Against the protests of Isaiah (Isa. 7:4,16–17; 8:4–8), Ahaz appealed to Tiglath-pileser for assistance (2 Kings 16:7–9). Tiglath-pileser, in response, campaigned against Philistia (734 B.C.), reduced Israel to the area immediately around Samaria (2 Kings 15:29; 733 B.C.), and annexed Aram-Damascus (732 B.C.), deporting the population. Ahaz, for his part, became an Assyrian vassal (2 Kings 16:10; 2 Chron. 28:16,20–22).

Little is known of the reign of Tiglath-pileser's successor, Shalmaneser V (726–722 B.C.), except that he besieged Samaria for three years in response to Hoshea's failure to pay tribute (2 Kings 17:3–5). The city finally fell to Shalmaneser (2 Kings 17:6; 18:9–12), who apparently died in the same year. His successor, Sargon II (722–705 B.C.), took credit in Assyrian royal inscriptions for deporting 27,290 inhabitants of Samaria.

Sargon campaigned in the region to counter rebellions in Gaza in 720 B.C. and Ashdod in 712 (Isa. 20:1). Hezekiah of Judah was tempted to join in the Ashdod rebellion, but Isaiah warned against such action (Isa. 18). Meanwhile, unrest smoldered in other parts of the empire. A rebellious king of Babylon, Merodach-baladan, found support from Elam, Assyria's enemy to the east. Though forced to flee Babylon in 710 B.C., Merodach-baladan returned some years later to reclaim the throne. He sent emissaries to Hezekiah in Jerusalem (2 Kings 20:12–19; Isa. 39), apparently as part of preparations for a concerted anti-Assyrian revolt.

These human-faced monumental bulls from Assyria date from the time of Ashurnasirpal II (ninth century B.C.)

News of Sargon's death in battle served as a signal to anti-Assyrian forces. Sennacherib (704–681 B.C.) ascended the throne in the midst of widespread revolt. Merodach-baladan of Babylon, supported by the Elamites, had inspired the rebellion of all southern Mesopotamia. A number of states in Phoenicia and Palestine were also in rebellion, led by Hezekiah of Judah. After subduing Babylon, Sennacherib turned his attentions westward. In 701 B.C., he reasserted control over the city-states of Phoenicia, sacked Joppa and Ashkelon, and invaded Judah where Hezekiah had made considerable military preparations (2 Kings 20:20; 2 Chron. 32:1–8,30; Isa. 22:8*b*–11). Sennacherib's own account of the invasion provides a remarkable supplement to the biblical version (2 Kings 18:13—19:36). He claims to have destroyed 46 walled cities (see 2 Kings 18:13) and to have taken 200,150 captives. Sennacherib's conquest of Lachish is shown in graphic detail in carved panels from his palace at Nineveh. During the siege of Lachish, an Assyrian army was sent against Jerusalem where Hezekiah was "made a prisoner . . . like a bird in a cage." Three of Sennacherib's dignitaries attempted to negotiate the surrender of Jerusalem (2 Kings 18:17–37), but Hezekiah continued to hold out with the encouragement of Isaiah (2 Kings 19:1–7,20–35). In the end, the Assyrian army withdrew, and Hezekiah paid an enormous tribute (2 Kings 18:14–16). The Assyrian account claims a victory over the Egyptian army and mentions Hezekiah's tribute but is rather vague about the end of the campaign. The Bible mentions the approach of the Egyptian army (2 Kings 19:9) and tells of a miraculous defeat of the Assyrians by the angel of the Lord (2 Kings 19:35–36). The fifth century B.C. Greek historian Herodotus relates that the Assyrians suffered defeat because a plague of field mice destroyed their equipment. It is not certain whether these accounts can be combined to infer an outbreak of the plague. Certainly, Sennacherib suffered a major setback, for Hezekiah was the only ruler of the revolt to keep his throne.

A colossal stylized bull with human face from the time of Sargon II of Assyria.

On a more peaceful front, Sennacherib conducted some major building projects in Assyria. The ancient city of Nineveh was rebuilt as the new royal residence and Assyrian capital. War continued, however, with Elam, which also influenced Babylon to rebel again. An enraged Sennacherib razed the sacred city in 689 B.C. His murder, at the hands of his own sons (2 Kings 19:37) in 681 B.C., was interpreted by Babylonians as divine judgment for destroying their city.

Esarhaddon (681–669 B.C.) emerged as the new king and immediately began the rebuilding of Babylon, an act which won the allegiance of the local populace. He warred with nomadic tribes to the north and quelled a rebellion in Phoenicia, while Manasseh of Judah remained a loyal vassal. His greatest military adventure, however, was an invasion of Egypt conducted in 671 B.C. The Pharaoh Taharqa fled south as Memphis fell to the Assyrians, but returned and fomented rebellion two years later. Esarhaddon died in 669 B.C. on his way back to subjugate Egypt.

After conducting a brief expedition against eastern tribes, Esarhaddon's son, Ashurbanipal (668–627 B.C.), set out to reconquer Egypt. Assisted by 22 subject kings, including Manasseh of Judah, he invaded in 667 B.C. He defeated Pharaoh Taharqa and took the ancient capital of Thebes. Some 1,300 miles from home, Ashurbanipal had no choice but to reinstall the local rulers his father had appointed in Egypt and hope for the best. Plans for revolt began immediately; but Assyrian officers got wind of the plot, captured the rebels, and sent them to Nineveh. Egypt rebelled again in 665 B.C. This time Ashurbanipal destroyed Thebes, also called No-Amon (Nah. 3:8, NAS). Phoenician attempts at revolt were also crushed.

Ashurbanipal ruled at Assyria's zenith but also saw the beginning of her swift collapse. Ten years after the destruction of Thebes, Egypt rebelled yet again. Assyria could do nothing because of a war with Elam. In 651 B.C., Ashurbanipal's brother, the king of Babylon, organized a widespread revolt. After three years of continual battles Babylon was subdued, but remained filled with seeds of hatred for Assyria. Action against Arab tribes followed, and the war with Elam continued until a final Assyrian victory in 639 B.C. That same year the official annals of Ashurbanipal came to an abrupt end. With Ashurbanipal's death in 627 B.C., unrest escalated. By 626, Babylon had fallen into the hands of the Chaldean Nabopolassar. Outlying states, such as Judah under Josiah, were free to rebel without fear. War continued between Assyria and Babylon until, in 614 B.C., the old Assyrian capital Asshur was sacked by the Medes. Then, in 612 B.C., Calah was destroyed. The combined armies of the Babylonians and the Medes laid siege to Nineveh. After two months, the city fell.

An Assyrian general claimed the throne and rallied what was left of the Assyrian army in Haran. An alliance with Egypt brought a few troops to Assyria's aid; but in 610 B.C. the Babylonians approached, and Haran was abandoned. Assyria was no more.

Religion Assyrian religion, like that of most Near Eastern nations, was polytheistic. Essentially the same as Babylonian religion, official Assyrian religion recognized thousands of gods; but only about twenty were important in actual practice.

Younger gods were usually associated with a newer city or none at all. Adad, the Canaanite Hadad, was the god of storms and thus both beneficial and destructive. Ninurta, the god of war and hunting, became a fitting patron for the Assyrian capital Calah. Most important, however, is the unique figure of Asshur. As patron god and namesake of the original Assyrian capital Asshur and the state itself, Asshur rose in importance to be lord of the universe and the supreme god. Since the god Asshur stood above all others, the Assyrian king was duty-bound to show his corresponding dominance on earth. Most Assyrian military campaigns were initiated "at the command of Asshur." See Babylon, History and Religion of.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

ASTAROTH See Ashtaroth.

ASTARTE See Ashtoreth.

ASTROLOGER Person who "divided the heavens" (literal translation of Hebrew phrase of Isa. 47:13) to determine the future. Particularly the Babylonians developed sophisticated methods of reading the stars to determine proper times for action. The prophet mocked Babylon's tireless and tiring efforts in astrology. Daniel shows repeatedly that Babylon's well-educated, professional magicians could not match Daniel and his friends. Daniel apparently has magicians and masters of incantations and spells rather than astrologers. The "Chaldeans" of Daniel 2:2; 4:7; 5:7,11 may be the nearest reference to astrologers in the book. The Bible does not seek to describe the skills, tactics, or methods of foreign personnel engaged in various practices to determine the opportune time. Rather the Bible mocks such practices and shows that God's word to the prophets and the wise of Israel far surpasses any foreign skills.

ASUPPIM (Ă·sŭp′ pĭm) KJV interpretation in 1 Chronicles 26:15,17. Modern translations read, "storehouse."

ASWAN (Ā′ swän) NIV, TEV reading in Ezekiel 29:10; 30:6 for Syene. See Syene.

ASYLUM See Avenger.

ASYNCRITUS (Å·sÿr′ crĭ·tŭs) Personal name meaning, "incomparable." Roman Christian whom Paul greeted (Rom. 16:14).

ATAD (Ā′ tăd) Personal name meaning, "thorn." Owner of threshing floor east of the Jordan River where Joseph stopped to mourn the death of his father before carrying Jacob's embalmed body across the Jordan to Machpelah for burial. The place was named Abel-mizraim (Gen. 50:10–11). See Abel-mizraim.

ATARAH (Ăt′ å·răh) Personal name meaning "crown" or "wreath." Second wife of Jerahmeel and mother of Onam (1 Chron. 2:26).

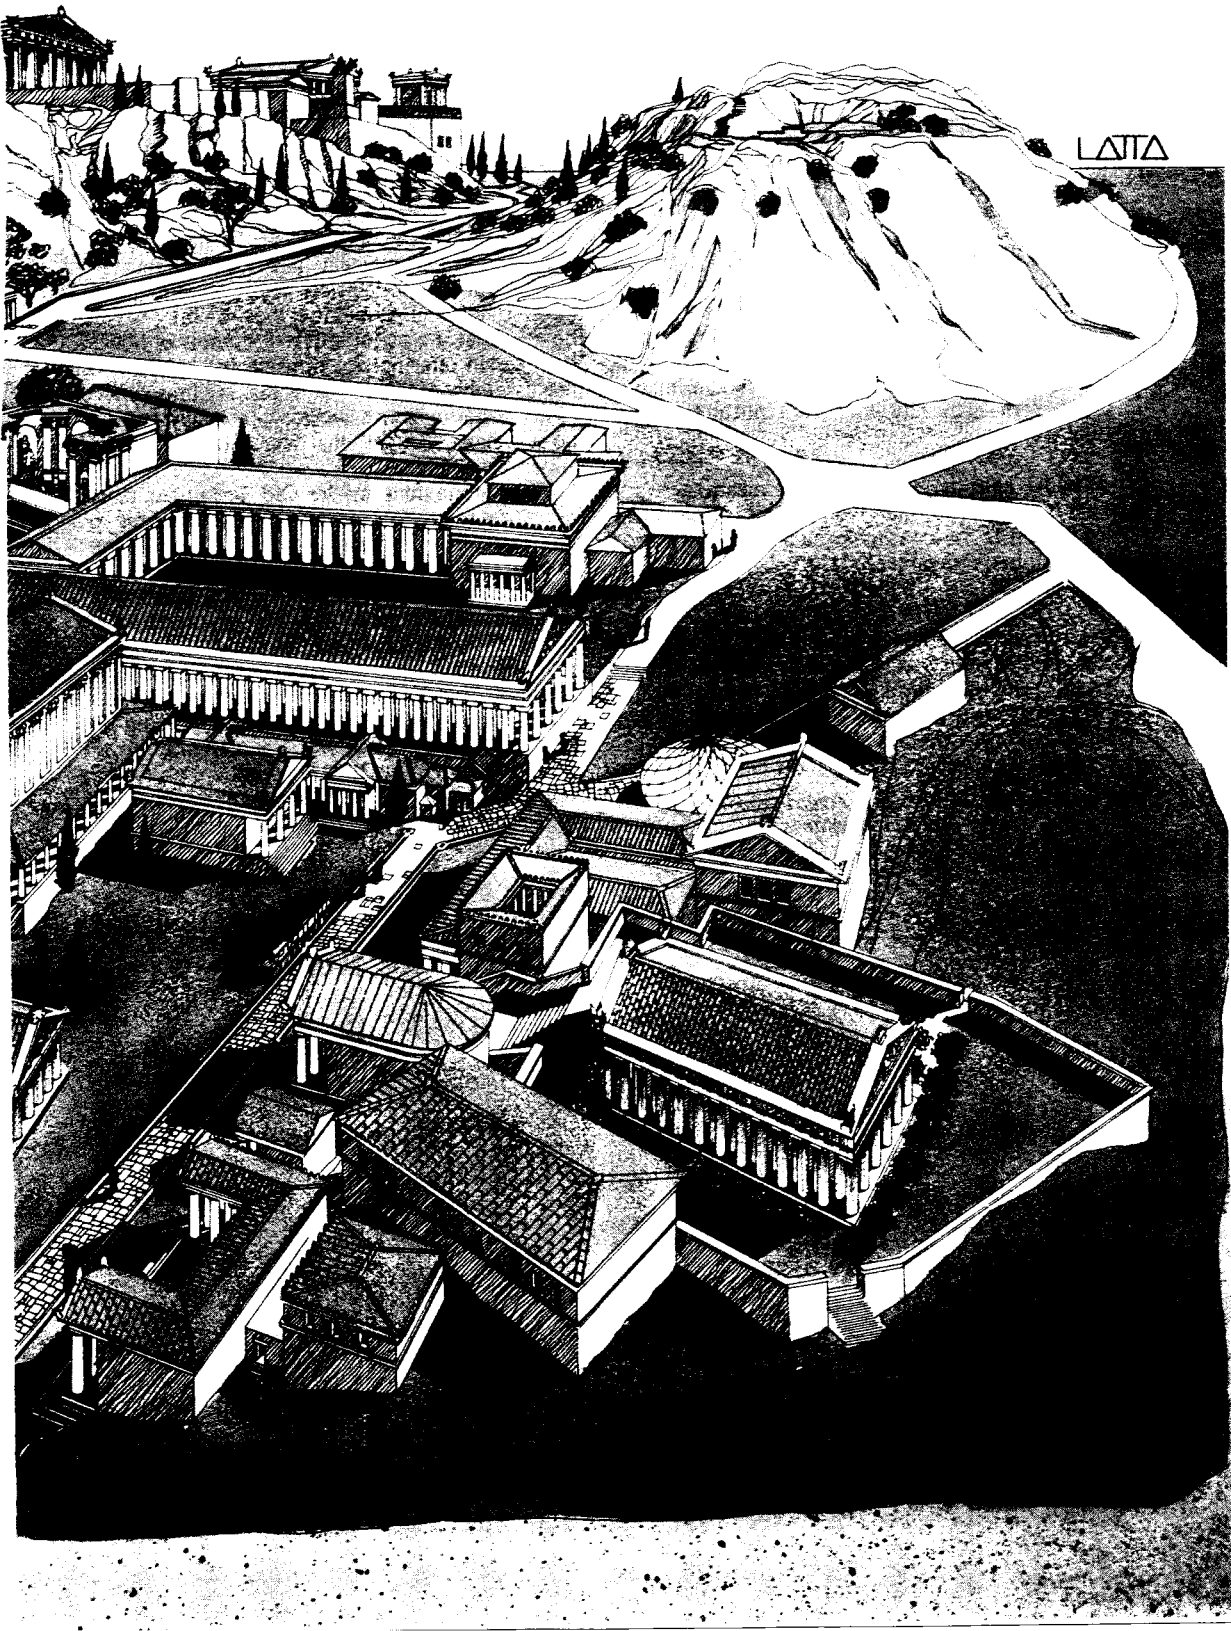
ATAROTH (Ăt′ å·rôth) Place name meaning, "crowns." 1. Town desired and built up by tribe of Gad (Num. 32:3,34). Mesha, king of Moab, about 830 B.C. claims he captured Ataroth but admits it belonged to Gad "from of old" and had been built by an Israelite king. It is located at modern Khirbet Attarus, eight miles northwest of Dibon and eight miles east of the Dead Sea. 2. Village on border of Benjamin and Ephraim (Josh. 16:2,7) It may be modern Khirbet el-Oga in the Jordan Valley.

ATAROTH-ADDAR (Ăt′ å·rŏth·Ăd′ dăr) Place name meaning, "crowns of glory." A border town in Ephraim (Josh. 16:5), bordering Benjamin (Josh. 18:13), probably modern Khirbet Attara at the foot of tell en-Nasbeh or possibly identical with tell en-Nasbeh and thus with biblical Mispah.

ATER (Ā′ tĕr) Personal name meaning either, "crippled" or "left-handed." Clan of which 98 returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:16). They were Temple gatekeepers (Ezra 2:42). The head of the clan signed Nehemiah's covenant to keep God's Law (Neh. 10:17).

ATHACH (Ā′ thăch) Place name meaning, "attack." Town in southern Judah to which David sent spoils of victory while he fled Saul among the Philistines (1 Sam. 30:30). May be the same as Ether (Josh. 15:42), a small copying change causing the difference. See Ether.

ATHAIAH (Å′ ·thaî′ ah) Leader of tribe of Judah who lived in Jerusalem in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:4).



ATHALIAH (Ăth·å·lī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has announced His exalted nature," or "Yahweh is righteous." 1. Wife of Jehoram, king of Judah, and mother of Ahaziah, king of Judah. She was either the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel of Israel (2 Kings 8:18) or of Omri, king of Israel (2 Kings 8:26; according to a literal reading of text as in KJV; an interpretation of text extends Hebrew word for daughter to mean female descendant and thus "granddaughter as in NAS; NIV; RSV). Some have suggested Omri was her father, but her brother Ahab raised her at court and thus functioned as her father. She brought the northern court's devotion to Baal to the court of Judah. She exercised great political influence during her son's reign of one year (1 Kings 8:27–28). At her son's death from battle wounds, she tried to gain power for herself by having all male heirs killed. She managed to rule Judah for six years (2 Kings 11:1–4), being the only woman to do so. Finally, Jehoiada, the priest, led a revolt, crowning the child Josiah as king and bringing about Athaliah's death (2 Kings 11:5–20).

2. Son of Jeroham in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:26). 3. Father of Jeshaiah, who led 70 men back to Jerusalem from Exile with Ezra (Ezra 8:7).

ATHARIM (Ăth′ å·rĭm) Hebrew word of uncertain meaning. It names a roadway the king of Arad took to attack Israel under Moses. After an initial setback, Israel prayed and found victory under God (Num. 1:1–3). KJV translates "spies" following the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation. Modern translations simply transliterate the Hebrew. The site may be Tamar a few miles south of the Dead Sea.

First-century Athens, Greece, as it appeared during the time of Paul. The view is from the northwest of the Agora (market, business, and civic center) of the lower city, which is in the foreground. The Acropolis (upper city) with the famous Parthenon, dedicated to the goddess Athena is in the background. The Aeropagus (Mars Hill) where Paul addressed the citizens of Athens is at right.

LATTA

A

ATHENS (Ăth' ĕns) Capital of Attica, an ancient district of east central Greece, where Paul preached to the Greek philosophers (Acts 17:15–34). Paul saw the Athenians were very religious and even had an altar to an unknown God. He based his sermon on this. Though some converts were won to faith in Christ, no biblical record exists of a viable church being established. The city, which probably was named for the wisdom goddess Athene, was already an ancient place by the time Paul visited it. Indeed, human occupation of the area seems to date before 3000 B.C. In the sixth century B.C. Athens became the scene of the world's first great experiment with democratic government. It was destroyed by the Persians early in the fifth century B.C., but during the administration of Pericles the city was rebuilt into an architectural wonder.

ATHLAI (Ăth' laî) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is exalted." A man who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife and return to faithfulness to Yahweh.

ATONEMENT (Ă·tōne' mĕnt), meaning reconciliation, was associated with sacrifical offerings to remove the effects of sin and in the New Testament, refers specifically to the reconciliation between God and humanity effected by the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ.

Old Testament Primarily in the Old Testament, atonement refers to the process God established whereby humans could make an offering to God to restore fellowship with God. Such offerings, including both live and dead animals, incense, and money, were required to remove the bad effects of human sin.

The only fast day stipulated in the Mosaic law was the annual day of Atonement (Yom Kippur), observed on the tenth day of Tishri (September–October) at the conclusion of ten days of penitence. The day of Atonement was the only day of the year that the priest entered the holy of holies to make sin offerings for himself, his family, and the "assembly of Israel." After making these offerings, the nation's sins were symbolically laid on the scapegoat "Azazel" that was released into the wilderness to die.

While atonement in the Old Testament most frequently refers to humans offering sacrifices to God for their wrongdoing, several references are made to God making atonement. In Psalm 78:38, the Hebrew for "atoned for" is used where the KJV translates "forgave" as is also true in Deuteronomy 21:8. Because God "atones for" or "covers" human sin, atonement is best understood as expiation, that is removing the barrier that sin creates rather than propitiation or appeasing an angry God, though both views of atonement continue to be taught by Bible students.

New Testament The New Testament rarely uses a word for atonement. The basic Greek word is katallassō, usually translated "to reconcile," and the corresponding noun, katallagē, meaning "reconciliation." The basic meaning is to establish friendship. This is used in human relationships in 1 Corinthians 7:11, referring to the restoration of relationship between an estranged husband and wife. Paul used the term in reference to Christ's work of salvation in Romans 5:10–11; 11:15; 2 Corinthians 5:18–20. The Greek term hilaskomai, "to forgive" or "show mercy" along with the nouns hilasmos, "means of forgiveness," and hilastērion, "means or place of forgiveness" are the important words in the discussion of expiation and propitiation. They occur in Luke 18:13; Romans 3:25; Hebrews 2:17; 9:5; 1 John 2:2; 4:10.

The Doric columns of the Parthenon at Athens.

The Parthenon, dedicated to Athena (goddess of wisdom), on the Acropolis at Athens.

A

Atonement and the Cross The focal point of God's atoning work is Christ's death on the cross. Paul wrote that "when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son" (Rom. 5:10). These words not only define the meaning of atonement, they reveal the heart of the gospel as well.

The primacy of the cross is emphasized throughout the New Testament. At the beginning of His ministry, Jesus was identified as "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). The purpose of His coming was "to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45). He explained His death in terms of the "blood of the new testament, which is shed for many" (Mark 14:24).

The relation of the cross to forgiveness of sins was implicit in the earliest Christian preaching (Acts 2:21; 3:6,19; 4:13; 5:31; 8:35; 10:43). Paul proclaimed that "Christ died for our sins"(1 Cor. 15:3), that He was a "propitiation" (Rom. 3:25 KJV; "sacrifice of atonement," NRSV, NIV; "expiation," RSV), that He became "a curse for us" (Gal. 3:13), and that those "who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ" (Eph. 2:13). Furthermore, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many" (Heb. 9:28) and has become "a new and living way" (Heb. 10:20) into God's presence. He is the one who "bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2:24).

Though atonement is focused in the cross, the New Testament makes clear that Christ's death is the climax of His perfect obedience. He "became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Phil. 2:8). "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which He suffered" (Heb. 5:8). Romans 5:12–19 contrasts Christ's obedience with Adam's disobedience. His sinless obedience qualified Him to be the perfect Sacrifice for sin (Heb. 6:8–10).

Furthermore, the New Testament interprets the cross in light of the resurrection. "At-one-ment" is the achievement of Christ crucified and risen. So important is this emphasis that Paul affirms, "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins" (1 Cor. 15:17).

The Necessity of Atonement The necessity for Christ's atoning work is occasioned by the breach in the relationship between the Creator and the creature. This breach is the result of humanity's sinful rebellion. "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear" (Isa. 59:2). Thus, in their unreconciled state people are God's "enemies" (Rom. 5:10), have "enmity against God" (Rom. 8:7), and have "no hope" (Eph. 2:12). There is no difference between Jew and Gentile in this respect, "for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

The Origin of Atonement The atonement for sin provided by Christ's death had its origin in divine love. No other reason can explain why "God reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 5:18). The anthem that continuously peals from the Bible is that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son" (John 3:16; see 1 John 4:9–10). This does not mean that God loves us because Christ died for us. Rather, Christ died for us because God loves us. Thus, "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). Because atonement issues from love, it is always seen as a divine gift, never as human achievement.

Yet, divine love is not sentimental or merely emotional. It is a righteous love which blazes out against all that opposes God's will. The New Testament affirms that "God is love" (1 John 4:8); it also affirms that "our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29). Thus, the cross is simultaneously a manifestation of God's will to save and of His wrath against sin.

Atonement: Representation and Substitution In His atoning work Christ is both representative and substitute. As representative, Christ acted on behalf of His race. An example of representation is Paul's contrast between Adam and Christ (Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:45–49). Adam and Christ represent two heads of two races of people. Adam is the head of the race of fallen persons. Sin and death came into the world through him. Because of our fallenness, all people belong to Adam's race, the old humanity.

Christ, the last Adam, represents a new race of people. These are the people who have been saved from sin. Where Adam failed, Christ succeeded. Those who belong to Christ through faith belong to the new humanity He created (2 Cor. 5:17; Eph. 2:14–22).

As substitute, Christ acted in our place. Whereas representation emphasizes Christ's relation to the race, substitution stresses His relation to the individual. He experienced as substitute the suffering and death each person deserved. Substitution is implied in such references as 2 Corinthians 5:21; Galations 3:13; 1 Peter 2:24.

In thinking of Christ as substitute, however, His oneness with the Father must be emphasized. Christ is not a third party who comes between God and humanity to absorb all the punishment God can inflict. Substitution means that in Christ, God Himself bears the consequences of human sin. God reconciles people at great cost to Himself, not at cost to a third party.

Images of Atonement To describe the meaning of atonement New Testament writers used images drawn from different areas of experience. Each image says something important about the cross. No one image, however, is adequate by itself. Each image needs the others to produce the whole picture.

1. Atonement and ransom. Ransom is an image drawn from ancient economic life. The picture is a slave market or prison. People are in bondage and cannot free themselves. Someone comes and pays the price (provides the ransom) to redeem those in captivity.

The New Testament emphasizes both the fact of deliverance and the ransom price. Jesus said that He came "to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45). Paul wrote, "ye are not your own; For ye are bought with a price" (1 Cor. 6:19–20; compare 7:23). Peter declared that "ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, . . . But with the precious blood of Christ" (1 Peter 1:18–19*a*). The main idea in this imagery is rescue from bondage through the costly self-giving of Jesus.

2. Atonement and victory. In this imagery, Satan, the head of evil forces and archenemy of God, has humanity in his power. Christ is the Warrior of God who enters the battle, defeats the devil, and rescues humanity.

This conflict motif pervades the gospels (Matt. 4:1–11; 12:28; Mark 3:27; John 12:31). The warfare between Jesus and Satan was real. Yet, divine victory was so certain that Jesus could say in anticipation, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke 10:18).

Victory imagery is also prominent in the epistles. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3:8). Christ came so "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. 2:14–15). That Christ triumphed is clear: "And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (Col. 2:15).

3. Atonement and sacrifice. Not surprisingly, the atoning power of Christ's death is often expressed in terms drawn from Old Testament sacrificial practices. Thus, Christ's death is called a "sacrifice for sins" (Heb. 10:12) and a "sacrifice to God" (Eph. 5:2). Christ is variously identified with the Passover lamb (1 Cor. 5:7), the sacrifice which initiates the new covenant (Luke 22:20), and the sin offering (Heb. 9:14,25–28).

Sacrificial imagery is another way of expressing the costliness of Christ's atoning work. It is a continual reminder that divine love has assumed the shape of the cross (Gal. 2:20). Furthermore, sacrifice witnesses to the effectiveness of Christ's death. Through it, sin is forgiven (Eph. 1:7), and the conscience is cleansed (Heb. 9:14).

4. Atonement and glory. In much of the New Testament the glorification of Jesus is associated with His resurrection and ascension. John's Gospel shifts perspective. The whole life and work of Jesus is a revelation of divine glory. This glorification climaxes in Jesus' death on the cross (John 12:23–24; 13:31–32).

Consistent with this theme is the emphasis on the cross as "lifting up." This verb has the double meaning of "to lift up on a cross" and "to exalt." The meanings are combined in John's Gospel. " 'And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.' This he said, signifiying what death he should die." (John 12:32–33; compare 3:14; 8:28). The meaning is not that Jesus was glorified as a reward for His death. Rather it means that divine glory was revealed in the death He died for sins. See Propitiation; Expiation; Redeem.

Bert Dominy

ATROTH (KJV) or ATROTH-BETH-JOAB (Ăt′ rŏth-bĕth-Jō′ ab) Place name meaning "crowns of the house of Joab." A "descendant" of Caleb and Hur (1 Chron. 2:54), the name apparently refers to a village near Bethlehem.

ATROTH-SHOPHAN (Ăt′ rŏth-shō′ phăn) Town built by tribe of Gad of unknown location (Num. 32:35). Earliest translations spelled name various ways: Shophar, Shaphim, Shopham, Etroth Shophan.

ATTAI (Ăt′ tā-ī) Personal name meaning, "timely." 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:35–36). 2. Warrior of tribe of Gad who served David in the wilderness as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:11). 3. Son of Maachah (1 Chron. 11:20), the favorite and beloved wife of King Rehoboam of Judah (931–913 B.C.).

ATTALIA (Ăt·tā·lī′ ă) Seaport city on northern Mediterranean cost in Asia Minor where Paul stopped briefly on first missionary journey (Acts 14:25). Modern Antalya continues as a small seaport with some ancient ruins.

AUGUSTAN COHORT A unit of the Roman army stationed in Syria from about A.D. 6. The cohort's place among the rest of the Roman army is indicated by the fact that it was named after the emperor. This special unit was given charge of Paul on his way to Rome (Acts 27:1). In Luke's eyes, this demonstrated the importance of Paul, and more importantly, the gospel that Paul preached.

A

AUGUSTUS (Aū-gŭs' tŭs) A title meaning, "reverend" the Roman Senate gave to Emperor Octavian (31 B.C.–A.D. 14) in 27 B.C. He ruled the Roman Empire, including Palestine, when Jesus was born and ordered the taxation that brought Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem (Luke 2:1). He was the adopted son of Julius Caesar. Born in 63 B.C. he first gained power with Antony and Lepidus at Julius Caesar's death in 44 B.C. He gained sole control at the Battle of Actium in 31 B.C., where he defeated Antony and Cleopatra, who both committed suicide. This brought Egypt into the system of Roman provinces. He thus founded the Roman Empire and ruled with popular acclaim. At his death the Senate declared him a god. Herod the Great ruled as appointed by Augustus, even though Herod originally supported Antony. Herod built temples to Augustus as a god in Caesaria and Samaria. The title Augustus passed on to Octavian's successors as emperors of Rome. Thus it is applied to Nero in Acts 25:21,25, when Paul appealed to Caesar. Note the various translations: the Emperor (NIV, NAS), his Imperial Majesty (NRSV).

Cameo of Augustus Caesar.

AUTHOR, AUTHOR OF LIFE See Prince of Life.

AUTHORITY in biblical usage, describes the absolute power and freedom of God, and claims that He is the source of all other authorization or power.

The word "authority" is used rarely in the Old Testament. In the English New Testament it translates the Greek exousia, a word for which there is no exact correspondence in Hebrew or Aramaic. The Greek "exousia" expresses both freedom and legal rights, and is used in the Bible in numerous ways.

Old Testament Two Hebrew words are translated "authority," but occurrences are not common. Examples include Proverbs 29:2, describing the rejoicing of the people when the righteous are "in authority;" Esther 9:29, speaking of "full written authority" (RSV) Esther and Mordecai exercised; Daniel 4:17, declaring that "the most High rules the kingdom of men" (RSV); and Daniel 7:13–14, prophesying that eternal authority will be given to the "Son of Man." God gave authority to humans over nature (Gen. 1:28), to husband over wife (Gen. 3:16), and to parents over their children (Lev. 19:3).

New Testament "Exousia" is found in the New Testament in a variety of usages, although always consistent with the belief that "there is no authority except from God" (Rom. 13:1 RSV; see John 19:11). "Exousia" describes first the freedom of God to act (Luke 15:5; Acts 1:7). Second, it signifies the divinely given power and authority of Jesus Christ as deriving from the Father (Matt. 28:18; John 10:18; 17:2), enabling Him to forgive sin (Mark 2:10), and signifying His power to heal and to expel demons, which He gave His disciples (Mark 3:15). Third, it describes the freedom God gives His people for salvation (John 1:12) and from legalism (1 Cor. 6:12). Fourth, it denotes the authority God imparted to the leaders to build up the church (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10). Fifth, "exousia" signifies the power God displayed through agents of destruction in the last days (Rev. 6:8; 9:3,10,19; 14:18; 16:9; 18:1). Sixth, the word denotes the dominion God allows Satan to exercise (Acts 26:18; Eph. 2:2). Seventh, it describes the "authorities" created by God, both heavenly (Col. 1:16) and secular (Rom. 13:1; Titus 3:1).

As "exousia" denotes an authority manifested in power, translators sometimes render the word "power" (KJV, Matt. 9:6,8; 10:1; 28:18). "Exousia" sometimes denotes as well the sphere in which authority is exercised (Luke 23:7).

Historical Survey of Religious Authority The scriptural views of authority have undergone major shifts in interpretation in church history. The early leaders of the church were virtually unanimous in viewing the Bible as the primary source of revelation and authority. The church soon began ascribing authority to its tradition as well as to the Scriptures. By the fourth century church tradition was viewed as of equal authority with the Bible. The medieval church especially emphasized the church as the sole interpreter of Scripture, through its tradition and creeds, councils, and pope.

The Reformation rejected this duality of authority in Bible and church, claiming "sola scriptura" ("only the Bible"). The Reformers argued that all authority, even that of the church, is derived from the Bible itself, and valuable only as it is consistent with Scripture. The Anabaptists and early Baptists made this view of biblical authority the foundation for their theological beliefs, maintaining that all church doctrine and practice must be entirely consistent with the Bible itself.

The Catholic church responded to the Reformation with an increased emphasis on the authority of the church and its tradition, culminating in its assertion of papal infallibility in all areas of faith and practice in 1870. Vatican II, held in 1962–65, modified this position by balancing papal authority with that of the bishops and interpreting both authorities in a ministerial context.

The nineteenth century movement of "Liberal Protestantism" defined religious authority in yet another way, locating authority in man's reason and experience. The Bible was seen as normative only insofar as it is consistent with reason and personal experience, and people are to interpret it subjectively. The movement called "Pietism" alternately located religious authority in man's evangelical experience.

Conclusions It is the uniform witness of the Bible that all authority is located in God. People possess authority only as the Lord gives it (Rom. 13:1). Religious authority derives from the authority of the Father, as that authority is revealed in the Son, manifested by the Holy Spirit, and given in and through the Bible to the church and the world. While each of the approaches to authority described in the above historical survey is still practiced and taught today, Scripture says all legitimate authority comes directly or indirectly from God.

Such a position will have obvious implications for contemporary Christian faith and practice. The church and its ministry possess genuine religious authority only as they serve the mission of Jesus in faithfulness to the Bible and in building up the church (Matt. 28:18–20). The Christian accepts the truth of Scripture as authoritative by faith, and the command of Scripture as authoritative in obedience, and so demonstrates love for the Lord (John 14:15). James C. Denison

AVA (Ā′ vȧ) or AVVA A people the Assyrians conquered and settled in Israel to replace the people they took into Exile (2 Kings 17:24). Their gods did not help them against the Assyrians and could be used as an example to call Jerusalem to surrender (2 Kings 18:34, where Ivvah refers to the same people). Compare 2 Kings 19:13. Avva was apparently in Syria, but their homeland is unknown. Some would suggest tell Kafr Ayah on the Orontes River. The Avites who made the god Nibhaz (2 Kings 17:31) may refer to these people.

AVEN (Ā′ vĕn) Hebrew noun meaning, "wickedness," used in place names to indicate Israel's understanding of the place as site of idol worship. 1. Referred to On or Heliopolis in Egypt (Ezek. 30:17). 2. Referred to major worship centers of Israel such as Bethel and Dan (Hos. 10:8). 3. Referred to a valley, perhaps one in place of popularly-known names such as Beth-aven for Beth-el (Josh. 7:2; 18:12). See Beth-aven.

AVENGER is the person with the legal responsibility to protect the rights of an endangered relative. Avenger translates Hebrew go'el, which in its verbal form means to redeem. Redemption applies to repossessing things consecrated to God (Lev. 27:13–31) or to God's actions for His people (Ex. 6:6; Job 19:25; Ps. 103:4; Isa. 43:1). Ultimately God is the go'el (Isa. 41:14).

The human avenger is tied closely to the institutions of cities of refuge, land ownership, and levirate marriage. Cities of refuge offered people who killed without intention or hatred a place of escape from the avenger of blood (Ex. 21:12–14; Num. 35:6–34; Deut. 4:41–43; 19:1–13; Josh. 20:1–9). The human go'el may be a brother, an uncle, a cousin, or another blood relative from the family (Lev. 25:48–49). An established order among these determined the one legally responsible to act as go'el (Ruth 3:12–13). The avenger or go'el is responsible to take the life of one who killed a family member (Num. 35:12), to receive restitution for crimes against a deceased relative (Num. 5:7–8), buy back property lost to the family (Lev. 25:25), redeem a relative who sold himself into slavery (Lev. 25:48–49), or marry the widow of a relative without sons and perpetuate the family (Deut. 25:5–10). Avenging the death of a relative is placed under strict limits. The murderer must have intentionally waited to kill the relative (Ex. 21:13) or willfully attacked the relative (Ex. 21:14). Vengeance could be exercised only before the murderer reached the city of refuge or after the court either at the victim's hometown or at the murder site judged the case (Num. 35:12). The avenger was free to act if an iron object was used to commit the murder (Num. 35:16), or if a stone or wood object was used (Num. 35:17–18). Pushing a person to death because of hatred made one liable to the avenger (Num. 35:20–21). Unintentional acts could not be punished (Num. 35:22–24).

A killer judged to have committed the crime without hatred or intentional planning was sent to the city of refuge until the death of the high priest. The avenger could not touch the killer in the city of refuge, but if the killer left the city of refuge for any reason, the avenger could reap vengeance even against the unintentional killer (Num. 35:22–28). This shows that even unintentional murder involved sin for which a penalty had to be paid. The law of the avenger thus prevented the shedding of innocent blood while also purging the guilt of murdering the innocent (Deut. 19:11–13). The law maintained the reverence for human life created in the image of God (Gen. 9:5–7).

The New Testament sets up government to avenge evil doing (Rom. 13:4), while noting God's role in avenging wrong against a brother (1 Thess. 4:6).

AVIM (Ā′ vĭm) AVIMS, AVITES, AVVIM, AVVITE 1. A people of whom nothing is known outside biblical sources. They lived on the Philistine coast before the Philistines invaded about 1200 (Deut. 2:23). 2. A city in the tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:23) about which nothing is known.

AVITH (Ā′ vĭth) City name meaning, "ruin." Capital city of Hadad, king of Edom, before Israel had a king. Its location is unknown.

AWE appears in different passages in different English translations as the translation of different Hebrew and Greek words. Of ten occurrences in the NAS, it translates eight distinct Hebrew and Greek words. It appears only three times in KJV translating three different Hebrew words. NIV uses "awe" sixteen times, repeating only six of the NAS usages. The term refers to an emotion combining honor, fear, and respect before someone of superior office or actions. It most appropriately applies to God.

AWL An instrument or tool made of flint, bone, stone, or metal to bore holes. Biblical references refer to using the awl to pierce a servant's ear (Ex. 21:6; Deut. 15:17). Perhaps a ring or identification tag was placed in the hole. This marked the slave as a permanent slave for life. Excavators in Palestine unearth many such boring tools.

AWNING The usage in Ezekiel 27:7 suggests a deck covering to protect the ship's passengers from the sun. It may be similar to the covering of Noah's ark (Gen. 8:13) and the tabernacle (Ex. 26:14).

AX, AX HEAD The English translation of several Hebrew terms indicating cutting instruments used in normal small industry and in war. 1. Barzel is the Hebrew term for iron and is used for the iron portion of an ax (Isa. 10:34; 2 Kings 6:5). The ax was used to fell trees. Elisha was able through miraculous power to make the ax head float. 2. Garzen is a hatchet or a tool for cutting stone (Deut. 19:5; 20:19; 1 Kings 6:7; Isa. 10:15). It was made of iron and could be used to cut trees. The iron head was attached to a wooden handle. It was not to be used to destroy a city's trees in war. 3. Chereb is a weapon or tool used to destroy enemies' towers in battle (Ezek. 26:9). The term also is used for flint knives Joshua used in circumcision (John 5:2), for two-sided daggers (Judg. 3:16), a tool to shape stone (Ex. 20:25), and of battle swords (Judg. 7:20). 4. Magzerah was a tool used in brick work. David apparently forced the Ammonites to tear down their own city walls and then to produce bricks for Israel (2 Sam. 12:31). 5. Ma'atsad is the craftsman's tool (Jer. 10:3; NIV, "chisel") produced by the blacksmith working with iron (Isa. 44:12 NAS; NRSV). It was apparently used to trim or prune trees or lumber. 6. Qardom was an iron tool which has to be sharpened (1 Sam. 13:20) and was used for cutting trees (Judg. 9:48). Skillful use of this tool made a person famous (Ps. 74:5). 7. Keylaph appears only in Psalm 74:6 and is variously translated: hammer (KJV, NAS, NRSV), hatchet (NIV), sledge hammer (TEV), or crowbar (some lexicons). 8. Kashshil appears only in Psalm 74:6 in combination with 7. above. It is variously translated as ax (KJV, NIV, TEV) or hatchet (NAS, NRSV). Whatever the precise nature of these tools, they could be used for destruction as well as construction. 9. Axine was used to chop down trees (Matt. 3:10).

AYYAH (Ăy′ yah) Place name meaning, "ruin." In the unclear Hebrew text of 1 Chronicles 7:20, modern translations read Ayyah as a city on the border of Ephraim. Some identify this with Ai. See Ai. Others follow a Greek text tradition which apparently read Gaza.

AZAL (Ā′ zăl) KJV spelling of Azel. See Azel.

AZALIAH (Ăz·ȧ·lī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has reserved." Father of Shaphan, Josiah's scribe (2 Kings 22:3). See Shaphan.

AZANIAH (Ăz·ȧ·nī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh listened." Father of Levite who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:9).

AZARAEL (Ăz·ȧ·rā′ ĕl) KJV spelling of Azarel (Neh. 13:36). See Azarel.

AZAREEL (Ăz′ ȧ·reêl) KJV spelling for Azarel. See Azarel.

AZAREL (Ăz′ ȧ·rĕl) Personal name meaning, "God helped." 1. David's soldier at Ziklag, skilled with bow and arrow and able to sling stones with either hand (1 Chron. 12:6). 2. Leader of a course of priests selected by lot under David (1 Chron. 25:18). 3. Leader of tribe of Dan under David (1 Chron. 27:22). 4. Priest who had married a foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:41). 5. Father of Amashai, head of a priestly family who lived in Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 11:13). 6. Priest who played a musical instrument in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 12:36), probably the same as 5. above.

AZARIAH (Ăz·ȧ·rī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has helped." 1. Son and successor of Amaziah as king of Judah (792–740 B.C.). Also called Uzziah. See Uzziah. 2. High priest under Solomon (1 Kings 4:2) listed as son of Zadok (1 Kings 4:2) or of Ahimaaz (1 Chron. 6:9), the son of Zadok (2 Sam. 15:27). If the latter is accurate, then son in 1 Kings 4:2 means descendant. 3. Son of Nathan in charge of the system of obtaining provisions for the court from the twelve government provinces (1 Kings 4:5). He would have supervised the persons listed in 1 Kings 4:7–19. 4. Great grandson of Judah (1 Chron. 2:8). 5. A member of the clan of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:38–39). 6. High priest, son of Johanan (1 Chron. 6:10). 7. High priest, son of Hilkiah (1 Chron. 6:13–14) and father of Seraiah, who is listed as Ezra's father (Ezra 7:1). The list in Ezra is not complete. Apparently some generations have been omitted. 8. Member of family of Kohath, the Temple singers (1 Chron. 6:36). Apparently called Uzziah in 6:24. 9. A priest, son of Hilkiah (1 Chron. 9:11) may be same as 7. above. 10. Prophet, son of Oded, whose message gave King Asa (910–869 B.C.) courage to restore proper worship in Judah (2 Chron. 15:1–8). 11. Two sons of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (873–848 B.C.) according to 2 Chron. 21:2. Perhaps the boys had different mothers, each of whom gave the son the common name Azariah. 12. Son of Jehoram, king of Judah (852–841) according to 2 Chronicles 22:6, but the correct name is probably Ahaziah as in 2 Kings 8:29. Azariah represents a copyist's error in Chronicles. 13. Two military commanders of 100 men who helped Jehoiada, the high priest, depose and murder Athaliah as queen of Judah and install Joash as king (835–796). 14. High priest who led 80 priests to oppose King Uzziah of Judah (792–740) when he tried to burn incense in the Temple rather than let the priests. God struck Uzziah with a dreaded skin disease (2 Chron. 26:16–21). 15. A leader of the tribe of Ephraim under Pekah, king of Israel (752–732 B.C.), who rescued captives Pekah had taken from Judah, cared for their physical needs, and returned them to Jericho (2 Chron. 28:5–15). 16. A Levite whose son Joel helped cleanse the Temple under Hezekiah, king of Judah (715–686) (2 Chron. 29:12–19). 17. A Levite who helped cleanse the Temple (2 Chron. 29:12–19). See 16. above. 18. Chief priest under King Hezekiah who rejoiced with the king over the generous tithes and offerings of the people (2 Chron. 31:10–13). 19. Son of Meraioth in the list of high priests and father of Amariah (Ezra 7:3) Since list in Ezra is incomplete, this Azariah may be same as 6. above. 20. Helper of Nehemiah in rebuilding wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:23). 21. Man who returned from Exile with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:7) about 537 B.C. He is called Seraiah in Ezra 2:2. 22. Man who helped Ezra interpret the law to the people in Jerusalem (Neh. 8:7). 23. Man who put his seal on Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:2). 24. A leader of Judah, possibly a priest, who marched with Nehemiah and others on the walls of Jerusalem to celebrate the completion of rebuilding the city defense walls (Neh. 12:33). He may be identical with any one or all of 20.–23. above. 25. Friend of Daniel renamed Abednego by Persian officials. God delivered him from the fiery furnace (Dan. 1:7; 4:1–30). See Abednego; Daniel. 26. Son of Hoshaiah and leader of Jewish people who tried to get Jeremiah to give them a word from God directing them to go to Egypt after the Babylonians destroyed Jerusalem. When Jeremiah said not to go, they accused him of lying (Jer. 42:1—43:7). Hebrew text reads Jezaniah in 42:1.

AZARIAHU (Ăz·ȧ·rī′ ȧ·hü) Long form of Azariah used by NAS, NIV in 2 Chronicles 21:2 to differentiate two men named Azariah. See Azariah.

AZAZ (Ā′ zăz) Personal name meaning, "he is strong." A descendant of tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:8).

AZAZEL (Ȧ·zā·zĕl) See Scapegoat; Atonement.

AZAZIAH (Ăz·ȧ·zī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is strong." 1. Levite David appointed to play the harp for the Temple worship (1 Chron. 5:21). 2. Father of leader of tribe of Ephraim under David (1 Chron. 27:20). 3. Overseer among the priests under Hezekiah (715–686 B.C.) (2 Chron. 31:13).

AZBUK (Ăz′ bŭk) Father of a Nehemiah who repaired Jerusalem under the leadership of Nehemiah, son of Hachaliah (Neh. 3:16).

AZEKAH (Ȧ·zē′ kăh) Place name meaning, "cultivated ground." 1. City where Joshua defeated southern coalition of kings led by Adonizedek of Jerusalem (Josh. 10:10), as God cast hailstones from heaven on the fleeing armies. In the battle Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still (Josh. 10:12). Joshua allotted it to Judah (Josh. 15:35). Near it, the Philistines lined up their forces for battle against Saul (1 Sam. 17:1), resulting in the David and Goliath confrontation. Rehoboam, king of Judah, (931–913 B.C.), built up its fortifications (2 Chron. 11:9). The tribe of Judah occupied it in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:30), after it had been one of the last cities to fall to Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 588 B.C. (Jer. 34:7). One of the letters found at Lachish tells of searching for signal lights from Azekah but not being able to see them. This can be dated to 588 B.C. An earlier Assyrian inscription, perhaps from 712

B.C. speaks of Azekah's location on a mountain ridge, being inaccessible like an eagle's nest, too strong for seige ramps and battering rams.

Later tradition connected Azekah with the tomb of the prophet Zechariah and then with Zechariah the father of John the Baptist, to whom a large church was dedicated. Thus the Madeba map from about 550 A.D. calls Azekah, "Beth Zechariah," or "house of Zechariah" and pictures a large church there.

Azekah is located at tell Zakariya five and one half miles northeast of Beth Govrin above the Valley of Elah. Excavations show the site was occupied before 3000 B.C. and had a strong fortress in the period of the judges.

AZEL (Ā′ zĕl) Personal and place name meaning, "noble." 1. Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin and father of six sons (1 Chron. 8:37–38). 2. Unclear word in Hebrew text of Zechariah 14:5 which may be a place name, perhaps near Jerusalem, or a preposition meaning "near to," "beside," or a noun meaning, "the side." Translations vary: "Azal" (KJV, NRSV), "the other side" (TEV), "Azel" (NAS, NIV), "the side of it" (RSV).

AZEM (Ā′ zĕm) KJV spelling of Ezem. See Ezem.

AZGAD (Ăz′ găd) Personal name meaning, "Gad is strong." 1. Clan of which 1222 (Neh. 7:17 says 2,322) returned from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel to Jerusalem in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:12). One hundred eleven more returned with Ezra about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:12). 2. A Levite who signed the covenant Nehemiah made to keep God's law (Neh. 10:15).

AZIEL (Ā·zī′ ĕl) Short form of Jaaziel in 1 Chronicles 15:20. See Jaaziel.

AZIZA (Ă·zī′ zȧ) Personal name meaning, "strong one." Israelite who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to help Israel remain true to God (Ezra 10:27).

AZMAVETH (Ăz·mā′ veth) Personal and place name meaning, "strong as death" or "death is strong." 1. Member of David's elite 30 military heroes (2 Sam. 23:31). He lived in Barhum or perhaps Baharum (NRSV). See Baharum. 2. Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:36). 3. Father of two of David's military leaders (1 Chron. 12:3), probably identical with 1. above. 4. The treasurer of David's kingdom (1 Chron. 27:25). He, too, may be identical with 1. above. 5. A city probably the same as Beth-azmaveth. See Beth-azmaveth. Forty-two men of the city returned to Jerusalem from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:24). Levites on the Temple staff as singers lived there. It apparently is near Jerusalem, perhaps modern Hizmeh, five miles northeast of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:29).

AZMON (Ăz′ mŏn) Place name meaning, "bones." Place on southern border of Promised Land (Num. 34:4). Joshua assigned it to Judah (Josh. 15:4). It is located near Ain el-Quseimeh, about 60 miles south of Gaza. Some would identify it with Ezem.

AZNOTH-TABOR (Ăz′ nŏth-Tā′ bôr) Place name meaning, "ears of Tabor." A border town of the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:34). It may be modern Umm Jebeil near Mount Tabor.

AZOR (Ā′ zôr) Personal name of an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:13–14).

AZOTUS (Ȧ·zō′ tŭs) See Ashdod; Philistines.

AZRIEL (Ăz′ rī·ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is my help." 1. Head of a family of eastern part of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:24). 2. Head of tribe of Naphtali under David (1 Chron. 27:19). 3. Father of royal officer commanded to arrest Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe (Jer. 36:26).

AZRIKAM (Ăz·rī′ kăm) Personal name meaning, "my help stood up." 1. Descendant of David after the Exile (1 Chron. 3:23). 2. Descendant of Saul of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:38). 3. Father of a Levite who led in resettling Jerusalem after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:14). 4. Officer in charge of palace for Ahaz, king of Judah. Zicri, a soldier in Israel's army, killed him when Israel attacked Judah about 741 B.C. (2 Chron. 28:7).

AZUBAH (Ȧ·zū′ bah) Personal name meaning, "forsaken." 1. Queen mother of Jehoshaphat (1 Kings 22:42), king of Judah (873–848 B.C.). 2. First wife of Caleb, son of Hezron (1 Chron. 2:18–19).

AZUR (Ā′ zûr) KJV spelling (Jer. 28:1; Ezek. 11:1) for Azzur. See Azzur.

AZZAH KJV translation or spelling of Gaza (Deut. 2:23; 1 Kings 4:24; Jer. 25:20). See Gaza.

AZZAN (Ăz′ zăn) Personal name meaning, "he has proved to be strong." Father of representative of tribe of Issachar in assigning territorial lots to the tribes after God gave Israel the Promised Land (Num. 34:26).

AZZUR (Ăz′ zur) Personal name meaning, "one who has been helped." 1. Jewish leader who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:17). 2. Father of Hananiah, the prophet, in Jeremiah's days (Jer. 28:1). 3. Father of Jaazaniah, Jewish leader in Jerusalem who plotted evil in Ezekiel's day (Ezek. 11:1).

An Arab baker in old Jerusalem delivers a fresh batch of bread.

B

BAAL (Bā′ ăl) Lord of Canaanite religion and seen in the thunderstorms, Baal was worshiped as the god who provided fertility. He proved a great temptation for Israel. "Baal" occurs in the Old Testament as a noun meaning, "lord, owner, possessor, or husband," and as a proper noun referring to the supreme god of the Canaanites, and often to the name of a man. According to 1 Chronicles 5:5, Baal was a descendant of Reuben, Jacob's firstborn son, and the father of Beerah. Baal was sent into exile by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria. The genealogical accounts of Saul's family listed in 1 Chronicles 9:35–36 indicates that the fourth son of Jehiel was named Baal.

The noun comes from a verb that means to marry or rule over. The verb form occurs in the Hebrew text 29 times, whereas the noun occurs 166 times. The noun appears in a number of compound forms which are proper names for locations where Canaanite deities were worshiped, such as Baal-peor (Num. 25:5; Deut. 4:3; Ps. 106:28; Hos. 9:10), Baal-hermon (Judg. 3:3; 1 Chron. 5:23), and Baal-gad (Josh. 11:17; 12:7; 13:5). See Canaan. James Newell

BAALAH (Bā′ ă·lăh) Place name meaning, "wife, lady," or "residence of Baal." 1. City on northern border of tribe of Judah equated with Kirjath-jearim (Josh. 15:9–11). David kept the ark there before moving it to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 13:6). It is located at modern Deir el-Azar, eight miles west of Jerusalem. It is called Baale of Judah (2 Sam. 6:2) and may be the same as Kirjath-baal (Josh. 15:60). See Kirjath-jearim. 2. Town on southern border of Judah (Josh. 15:29) that may be same as Balah (Josh. 19:3) and as Bilhah (1 Chron. 4:29). Tribe of Simeon occupied it. Its location is unknown. 3. A mountain on Judah's northern border between Jabneel and Ekron. It may be the same as Mount Jearim.

BAALATH (Bā′ ă·lăth) Place name meaning, "feminine Baal." City in original inheritance of tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:44). Same or different town which Solomon rebuilt (1 Kings 9:18). It may have been near Gezer on the road to Beth-horon and Jerusalem. Some would identify Solomon's town with Simeon's Balah, with Kirjath-jearim, or with Baalath-beer.

BAALATH-BEER (Bā′ ă·lăth-bē′ ēr) Place name meaning, "the baal of the well" or the "lady of the well." A city in the tribal allotment of Simeon (Josh. 19:8), identified with Ramath of the south (KJV) or Ramah of the Negev (NAS, NIV, NRSV). It may be identical with Baal (1 Chron. 4:33) and/or with Bealoth (Josh. 15:24).

Statuette of Baal, the Canaanite weather god, from Minet-el-Beida (15th–14th century B.C.).

BAALBEK See Heliopolis.

BAAL-BERITH (Bā′ ăl-bē′rĭth) In Judges 8:33, a Canaanite deity whom the Israelites began to worship following the death of Gideon. The name means "lord of covenant," and the god's temple was located at Shechem. The precise identity of this deity cannot be determined. The designation, "lord of covenant," may mean that a covenant between the Israelites and the Shechemites was agreed to and annually renewed in his shrine. See Shechem.

BAALE (KJV), BAALE-JUDAH (NAS, NRSV) (Bā′ ă·lē·jū′ dăh) Place name meaning, "Baals of Judah" or "lords of Judah." 2 Samuel 6:2 may be read as "from the lords of Judah" or as went from Baale Judah. If the latter reading is correct, then Baale Judah is a place name where the ark of the covenant was before David took it to Jerusalem. 1 Chronicles 13:6 calls the place Baalah of Judah and identifies it with Kirjath-jearim. See Kirjath-jearim.

BAAL-GAD (Bā′ ăl-găd) Place name meaning, "Baal of Gad" or "lord of Gad." Town representing northern limit of Joshua's conquests (Josh. 11:17) in Valley of Lebanon at foot of Mount Hermon. It has been variously located at modern Hasbeya and at Baalbek, over 50 miles east of Beirut where imposing ruins of Greek and Roman worship remain.

BAAL-HAMON (Bā′ ăl-hā′ mōn) Place name meaning, "lord of abundance." Location of Solomon's vineyard according to Song of Solomon 8:11.

BAAL-HANAN (Bā′ ăl-hā′ năn) Personal name meaning, "Baal was gracious." 1. King of Edom prior to any king ruling in Israel (Gen. 36:38). 2. Official under David in charge of olive and sycamore trees growing in Judean plain or Shephalah (1 Chron. 27:28).

BAAL-HAZOR (Bā′ ăl-hā′ zôr) Place name meaning "Baal of Hazor." Village where David's son Absalom held celebration of sheepshearing (2 Sam. 13:23). During festivities, Absalom had his employees kill his brother Amnon, who had violated his sister Tamar. The village is modern Jebel Asur, five miles northeast of Bethel.

BAAL-HERMON (Bā′ ăl-hĕr·mŏn) Place name meaning, "Baal of Hermon" or "lord of Hermon." A mountain and village Israel could not take from the Hivites, whom God left to test Israel (Judg. 3:3). It marked the Hivites' southern border and Manasseh's northern border (1 Chron. 5:23). Its location is unknown. Some would equate it with Baal-gad. Others, modern Baneas or Caesarea Philippi.

BAALI (Bā′ ăl·ī) Form of address meaning, "my lord," or "my Baal." Hosea used a play on words to look to a day when Israel would no longer worship Baal (Hos. 2:16). He said Israel, the bride, would refer to Yahweh, her God and husband, as "my man" (Hebrew, 'ishi) but not as "my lord" (Hebrew, baali). Even though baal was a common word for lord or husband, Israel could not use it because it reminded them too easily of Baal, the Canaanite god. See Baal; Canaan.

BAALIM (Bā′ ă·līm) Hebrew plural of Baal. See Baal; Canaan.

BAALIS (Bā′ ă·lĭs) Personal name of king of Ammon who sent Ishmael to kill Geduliah, governor of Judah immediately after Babylon captured Jerusalem and sent most of Judah's citizens into the Exile (Jer. 40:14).

BAAL-MEON (Bā′ ăl-mē′ on) Place name meaning, "lord of the residence" or "Baal of the residence." City tribe of Reuben built east of Jordan (Num. 32:36), probably on the tribe's northern border. Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., claims to have rebuilt Baal-meon, meaning he had captured it from Israel at that date. Ezekiel 25:9 pronounces judgment on Baal-meon as a city of Moab about the time of the Exile in 587. Baal-meon is located at modern Main, ten miles southwest of Heshbon and ten miles east of the Dead Sea.

BAAL-PEOR (Bā′ ăl-pē′ ôr) In Numbers 25:3, a Moabite deity that the Israelites worshiped when they had illicit sexual relations with Moabite women. The guilty Israelites were severely punished for this transgression, and the incident became a paradigm of sin and divine judgment for later generations of Israelites (Deut. 4:3; Ps. 106:28; Hos. 9:10). See Moab; Peor.

BAAL-PERAZIM (Bā′ ăl-pĕr′ ă·zīm) Place name meaning, "Lord of the breakthroughs" or "Baal of the breaches." Place of David's initial victory over the Philistines after he became king of all Israel at Hebron, then captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:20). The location is not known. It is probably identical with Mount Perazim (Isa. 28:21).

BAAL-SHALISHAH (Bā′ ăl-shăl′ ĭ′ shăh) Place name meaning, "Baal of Shalishah" or "lord of Shalishah." Home of unnamed man who brought firstfruits to Elisha, who used them to feed a hundred men (2 Kings 4:42–44). The "land of Shalishah" was evidently in the tribal territory of Ephraim (1 Sam. 9:4). Baal-shalishah may be modern Kefr Thilth, twenty miles southwest of Shechem. See Shalishah.

BAAL-TAMAR (Bā′ ăl-tā′ măr) Place name meaning, "Baal of the palm tree" or "lord of the palm tree." Place where Israelites attacked and defeated tribe of Benjamin for killing concubine of traveling Levite (Judg. 20:33). It must have been near Gibeah. It may be ras et-Tawil north of Jerusalem.

BAAL-ZEBUB (Bā' ăl-zē' bŭb) Deity's name meaning, "lord of the flies." In 2 Kings 1:2, a Philistine deity from which the Israelite King Ahaziah sought help after injuring himself in a fall. Though the Philistines themselves may have used this name, it is more probable that it is intentionally used to distort the god's actual name. The problem of identification is further complicated by references in the New Testament. Jesus is reported to have used the name Beel-zebub in reference to the prince of demons (Matt. 10:25). Beelzebub is clearly a variation of Baal-zebub. However, the Greek text of the New Testament has Beelzebul. The meaning of Beelzebul is disputed. One suggestion is "lord of the dwelling." A second, and more likely possibility is "lord of dung." Regardless of the exact meaning of the name, Jesus clearly used it in reference to Satan. See Baal; Philistines; Satan.

BAAL-ZEPHON (Bā' ăl-zē' phŏn) Place name meaning, "lord of the north" or "Baal of the north." Place in Egypt near which Israel camped before miracle of crossing the sea (Ex. 14:2,9). The exact location is not known. Some suggest tell Defenneh known in Egypt as Tahpanhes in the eastern Nile delta. See Exodus.

BAANA (Bā' ă-nà) or BAANAH Personal name of uncertain meaning. Some have suggested, "son of grief" or "son of Anat." English spelling variations reflect similar Hebrew spelling variations. 1. One of Solomon's district supervisors to provide food one month a year for the court. His territory encompassed the great central plain with the famous cities of Beth-shean, Taanach, and Megiddo (1 Kings 4:12). 2. Another district supervisor over Asher, the western slopes of Galilee in the north. His father Hushai may have been "David's friend" (2 Sam. 15:37). 3. Father of Zadok, who repaired walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 3:4). 4. A captain of Ishbosheth's army after Saul died and Abner deserted to David and was killed by Joab. Baanah and his brother killed Ishbosheth and reported it to David, who had them killed (2 Sam. 4). 5. Father of Heleb, one of David's thirty heroes (2 Sam. 23:29). 6. Man who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylonian captivity about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2). 7. One who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:27).

BAARA (Bā' ă-rà) Personal name meaning, "burning" or a name intentionally changed from one honoring Baal. Wife of Shaharaim in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:8).

BAASEIAH (Bā-ă-seî' ah) Personal name of unknown meaning. A Levite ancestor of Asaph (1 Chron. 6:40).

BAASHA (Bā' ăshà) The king of Israel who was at war against Asa, king of Judah (1 Kings 15:16). Baasha gained the throne of Israel by violence. He conspired against and killed his immediate predecessor Nadab, the son of Jeroboam I (1 Kings 15:27). Furthermore, he exterminated the entire line of Jeroboam (15:29). Baasha reigned over Israel for twenty-four years (908–886 B.C.). His capital was at Tirzah. He died, apparently from natural causes, and was succeeded by his son Elah. See Israel; Chronology; Tirzah.

BABBLER A derogatory term the Epicureans and Stoics used against Paul in Athens (Acts 17:18). The Greek word literally means "seed picker" and was used of birds (especially crows) who lived by picking up seeds. It was applied to people who lived parasitically by picking up pieces of food off the merchants' carts. In the field of literature and philosophy the term was applied to those who plagiarize without the ability to understand or properly use what they had taken. The philosophers referred to Paul as a babbler because they considered Paul an ignorant plagiarist.

Another Greek word bebēlos refers to something outside the religious sphere. It appears in 1 Timothy 4:7; 6:20; 2 Timothy 2:16; Hebrews 12:16, usually in reference to chatter or babbling talk about worldly things, an activity Christians should avoid. In Hebrews it refers to a godless person.

BABEL (Bā' bĕl) Babel is a Hebrew word meaning "confusion," derived from a root which means "to mix." It was the name given to the city which the disobedient descendants of Noah built so they would not be scattered over all the earth (Gen. 11:4,9). Babel is also the Hebrew word for Babylon.

The tower and the city which were built were intended to be a monument of human pride, for they sought to "make a name" for themselves (Gen. 11:4). It was also a monument to mankind's continued disobedience. They had been commanded to fill up the earth but were seeking to avoid being scattered abroad (Gen. 9:1; 11:4). Further, it was a monument to human engineering skills, for the techniques of its building described the use of fired clay bricks as a substitute for stone. Bitumen, found in relative abundance in the Mesopotamian Valley, was used to bind the bricks together.

Ruins of numerous temple-towers, called ziggurats, have been found in the region of Babylon. It is possible that ruins of the great temple-tower to Marduk found in the center of ancient Babylon is the focus of this narrative.

To bring the people's monumental task to an end, God confused their language. The inspired writer apparently considered this to be the basis for the origin of the different human languages. When the builders were no longer able to communicate with each other, they then fled from one another in fear. The city of Babylon became to the Old Testament writers the symbol of utter rebellion against God and remained so even into the New Testament (Rev. 17:1–5). See Babylon.

Bob Cate

BABOON The NIV translation of thukkiyim (1 Kings 10:22; 2 Chron. 9:21). The TEV and REB translate the same word as "monkeys." The KJV, NAS, and NRSV give the translation "peacocks" (but see NRSV margin). There is a strong similarity between thukkiyim and the Egyptian word for monkey which leads many to accept baboon or monkey as the correct translation.

BABYLON, HISTORY AND RELIGION OF Babylon was a city-state in southern Mesopotamia during Old Testament times, which eventually became a large empire that absorbed the nation of Judah and destroyed Jerusalem.

History The city of Babylon was founded in unknown antiquity on the river Euphrates, about 50 miles south of modern Baghdad. The English names Babylon and Babel (Gen. 10:10; 11:9) are translated from the same Hebrew word (babel). See Babel. Babylon may have been an important cultural center during the period of the early Sumerian city-states (before 2000 B.C.), but the corresponding archaeological levels of the site are below the present water table and remain unexplored.

Babylon emerged from anonymity shortly after 2000 B.C., a period roughly contemporary with the Hebrew patriarchs. At that time, an independent kingdom was established in the city under a dynasty of Semitic westerners, or Amorites. Hammurabi (1792–1750 B.C.), the sixth king of this First Dynasty of Babylon, built a sizable empire through treaties, vassalage, and conquest. From his time forward, Babylon was considered the political seat of southern Mesopotamia, the region called Babylonia. See Hammurabi.

The Amorite dynasty of Babylon reached its apex under Hammurabi. Subsequent rulers, however, saw their realm diminished, and in 1595 B.C. the Hittites sacked Babylon. After their withdrawal, members of the Kassite tribe seized the throne. The Kassite Dynasty ruled for over four centuries, a period of relative peace but also stagnation. Little is known up to about 1350 B.C., when Babylonian kings corresponded with Egypt and struggled with the growing power of Assyria to the north. After a brief resurgence, the Kassite dynasty was ended by the Elamite invasion in 1160 B.C.

When the Elamites withdrew to their Iranian homeland, princes native to the Babylonian city of Isin founded the Fourth Dynasty of Babylon. After a brief period of glory in which Nebuchadnezzar I (about 1124–1103 B.C.) invaded Elam, Babylon entered a dark age for most of the next two centuries. Floods, famine, widespread settlement of nomadic Aramean tribes, and the arrival of Chaldeans in the south plagued Babylon during this time of confusion.

The site of the ancient city of Babylon in modern Iraq—a general overview of the ruins.

During the period of the Assyrian Empire, Babylon was dominated by this warlike neighbor to the north. A dynastic dispute in Babylon in 851 B.C. brought the intervention of the Assyrian king Shalmaneser III. Babylon kings remained independent, but nominally subject to Assyrian "protection."

A series of coups in Babylon prompted the Assyrian Tiglath-pileser III to enter Babylon in 728 B.C. and proclaim himself king under the throne name Pulu (Pul of 2 Kings 15:19; 1 Chron. 5:26). He died the next year. By 721 B.C., the Chaldean Marduk-apal-iddina, Merodach-baladan of the Old Testament, ruled Babylon. With Elamite support he resisted the advances of the Assyrian Sargon II in 720 B.C. Babylon gained momentary independence, but in 710 B.C. Sargon attacked again. Merodach-baladan was forced to flee to Elam. Sargon, like Tiglath-pileser before him, took the throne of Babylon. As soon as Sargon died in 705 B.C., Babylon and other nations, including Judah under King Hezekiah, rebelled from Assyrian domination. Merodach-baladan had returned from Elam to Babylon. It is probably in this context that he sent emissaries to Hezekiah (2 Kings 20:12–19; Isa. 39). In 703 B.C., the new Assyrian king, Sennacherib, attacked Babylon. He defeated Merodach-baladan, who again fled. He ultimately died in exile. After considerable intrigue in Babylon, another Elamite-sponsored revolt broke out against Assyria. In 689 B.C., Sennacherib destroyed the sacred city of Babylon in retaliation. His murder, by his own sons (2 Kings 19:37) in 681 B.C., was interpreted by Babylonians as divine judgment for this unthinkable act.

Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's son, immediately began the rebuilding of Babylon to win the allegiance of the populace. At his death, the crown prince Ashurbanipal ruled over Assyria, while another son ascended the throne of Babylon. All was well until 651 B.C. when the Babylonian king rebelled against his brother. Ashurbanipal finally prevailed and was crowned king of a resentful Babylon.

Assyrian domination died with Ashurbanipal in 627 B.C. In 626 B.C., Babylon fell into the hands of a Chaldean chief, Nabopolassar, first king of the Neo-Babylonian Empire. In 612, with the help of the Medes, the Babylonians sacked the Assyrian capital Nineveh. The remnants of the Assyrian army rallied at Haran in north Syria, which was abandoned at the approach of the Babylonians in 610 B.C. Egypt, however, challenged Babylon for the right to inherit Assyria's empire. Pharaoh Necho II, with the last of the Assyrians (2 Kings 23:29–30), failed in 609 to retake Haran. In 605 B.C., Babylonian forces under the crown prince Nebuchadnezzar routed the Egyptians at the decisive Battle of Carchemish (Jer. 46:2–12). The Babylonian advance, however, was delayed by Nabopolassar's death which obliged Nebuchadnezzar to return to Babylon and assume power.

In 604 and 603 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar II (605–562 B.C.), king of Babylon, campaigned along the Palestinian coast. At this time Jehoiakim, king of Judah, became an unwilling vassal of Babylon. A Babylonian defeat at the border of Egypt in 601 probably encouraged Jehoiakim to rebel. For two years Judah was harassed by Babylonian vassals (2 Kings 24:1–2). Then, in December of 598 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar marched on Jerusalem. Jehoiakim died that same month, and his son Jehoiachin surrendered the city to the Babylonians on March 16, 597 B.C. Many Judeans, including the royal family, were deported to Babylon (2 Kings 24:6–12). Ultimately released from prison, Jehoiachin was treated as a king in exile (2 Kings 25:27–30; Jer. 52:31–34). Texts excavated in Babylon show that rations were allotted to him and five sons.

Nebuchadnezzar appointed Zedekiah over Judah. Against the protests of Jeremiah, but with promises of Egyptian aid, Zedekiah revolted against Babylon in 589 B.C. In the resultant Babylonian campaign, Judah was ravaged and Jerusalem besieged. An abortive campaign by the Pharaoh Hophra gave Jerusalem a short respite, but the attack was renewed (Jer. 37:4–10). The city fell in August of 587 B.C. Zedekiah was captured, Jerusalem burned, and the Temple destroyed (Jer. 52:12–14). Many more Judeans were taken to their Exile in Babylonia (2 Kings 25:1–21; Jer. 52:1–30).

Apart from his military conquests, Nebuchadnezzar is noteworthy for a massive rebuilding program in Babylon itself. The city spanned the Euphrates and was surrounded by an eleven-mile long outer wall which enclosed suburbs and Nebuchadnezzar's summer palace. The inner wall was wide enough to accommodate two chariots abreast. It could be entered through eight gates, the most famous of which was the northern Ishtar Gate, used in the annual New Year Festival and decorated with reliefs of dragons and bulls in enameled brick. The road to this gate was bordered by high walls decorated by lions in glazed brick behind which were defensive citadels. Inside the gate was the main palace built by Nebuchadnezzar with its huge throne room. A cellar with shafts in part of the palace may have served as the substructure to the famous "Hanging Gardens of Babylon," described by classical authors as one of the wonders of the ancient world. Babylon contained many temples, the most important of which was Esagila, the temple of the city's patron god, Marduk. Rebuilt by Nebuchadnezzar, the temple was lavishly decorated with gold. Just north of Esagila lay the huge stepped tower of Babylon, a ziggurat called Etemenanki and its sacred enclosure. Its seven stories perhaps towered some 300 feet above the city. No doubt Babylon greatly impressed the Jews taken there in captivity and provided them with substantial economic opportunities.

Nebuchadnezzar was the greatest king of the Neo-Babylonian Period and the last truly great ruler of Babylon. His successors were insignificant by comparison. He was followed by his son Awel-marduk (561–560 B.C.), the Evil-Merodach of the Old Testament (2 Kings 25:27–30), Neriglissar (560–558 B.C.), and Labashi-Marduk (557 B.C.), murdered as a mere child. The last king of Babylon, Nabonidus (556–539 B.C.) was an enigmatic figure who seems to have favored the moon god, Sin, over the national god, Marduk. He moved his residence to Tema in the Syro-Arabian Desert for ten years, leaving his son Belshazzar (Dan. 5:1) as regent in Babylon. Nabonidus returned to a divided capital amid a threat from the united Medes and Persians. In 539 B.C., the Persian Cyrus II (the Great) entered Babylon without a fight. Thus ended Babylon's dominant role in Near Eastern politics.

Babylon remained an important economic center and provincial capital during the period of Persian rule. The Greek historian Herodotus, who visited the city in 460 B.C., could still remark that "it surpasses in splendor any city of the known world." Alexander the Great, conqueror of the Persian Empire, embarked on a program of rebuilding in Babylon which was interrupted by his death in 323 B.C. After Alexander the city declined economically, but remained an important religious center until New Testament times. The site was deserted by A.D. 200.

The ruins of the Hanging Gardens of Babylon (modern Iraq), one of the seven wonders of the ancient world.

In Judeo-Christian thought, Babylon the metropolis, like the Tower of Babel, became symbolic of man's decadence and God's judgment. "Babylon" in Revelation 14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2 and probably in 1 Peter 5:13 refers to Rome, the city which personified this idea for early Christians.

Religion. Babylonian religion is the best known variant of a complex and highly polytheistic system of belief common throughout Mesopotamia. Of the thousands of recognized gods, only about twenty were important in actual practice. The most important are reviewed here.

Painted relief of a bull from the famous Ishtar Gate of Babylon.

Anu, Enlil, and Ea, were patron deities of the oldest Sumerian cities and were each given a share of the Universe as their dominion. Anu, god of the heavens and patron god of Uruk (biblical Erech; Gen. 10:10) did not play a very active role. Enlil of Nippur was god of the earth. The god of Eridu, Ea, was lord of the subterranean waters and the god of craftsmen.

After the political rise of Babylon, Marduk was also considered one of the rulers of the cosmos. The son of Ea and patron god of Babylon, Marduk began to attain the position of prominence in Babylonian religion in the time of Hammurabi. In subsequent periods, Marduk (Merodach in Jer. 50:2) was considered the leading god and was given the epithet Bel (equivalent to the Canaanite term Baal), meaning "lord" (Isa. 46:1; Jer. 50:2; 51:44). Marduk's son Nabu (the Nebo in Isa. 46:1), god of the nearby city of Borsippa, was considered the god of writing and scribes and became especially exalted in the Neo-Babylonian Period.

Astral deities—gods associated with heavenly bodies—included the sun-god Shamash, the moon-god Sin, and Ishtar, goddess of the morning and evening star (the Greek Aphrodite and Roman Venus). Sin was the patron god of Ur and Haran, both associated with Abraham's origins (Gen. 11:31). Ishtar, the Canaanite Astarte/Ashtaroth (Judg. 10:6; 1 Sam. 7:3–4; 1 Kings 11:5), had a major temple in Babylon and was very popular as the "Queen of Heaven" (Jer. 7:18; 44:17–19).

Relief of King Nabonidus standing before emblems of the moon-god, sun-god, and war/love goddess.

Other gods were associated with a newer city or none at all. Adad, the Canaanite Hadad, was the god of storms and thus both beneficial and destructive. Ninurta, god of war and hunting, was patron for the Assyrian capital Calah.

A number of myths concerning Babylonian gods are known, the most important of which is the Enuma elish, or Creation Epic. This myth originated in Babylon, where one of its goals was to show how Marduk became the leading god. It tells of a cosmic struggle in which, while other gods were powerless, Marduk slew Tiamat (the sea goddess, representative of chaos). From the blood of another slain god, Ea created mankind. Finally, Marduk was exalted and installed in his temple, Esagila, in Babylon.

The Enuma elish was recited and reenacted as part of the twelve-day New Year Festival in Babylon. During the festival, statues of other gods arrived from their cities to "visit" Marduk in Esagila. Also, the king did penance before Marduk, and "took the hand of Bel" in a ceremonial processing out of the city through the Ishtar Gate.

The gods were thought of as residing in cosmic localities, but also as present in their image, or idol, and living in the temple as a king in his palace. The gilded wooden images were in human form, clothed in a variety of ritual garments, and given three meals a day. On occasion the images were carried in ceremonial processions or to visit one another in different sanctuaries. It is very difficult to know what meaning the images and temples of the various gods had for the average person, and even more difficult to ascertain what comfort or help he might expect through worship of them. It seems clear, however, that beyond the expectations of health and success in his earthly life, he was without eternal hope. Dan Browning

BACA (Bā′ cə) Place name meaning, "Balsam tree" or "weeping." A valley in Psalm 84:6 which reflects a poetic play on words describing a person forced to go through a time of weeping who found God turned tears into a well, providing water.

BACHRITE (Băch′ rīte) KJV spelling of Becherites (NAS, NRSV) or Bekerite (NIV). See Becher.

BACKSLIDING Term used by the prophets to describe Israel's faithlessness to God (Isa. 57:17 RSV; Jer. 3:14,22; 8:5; 31:22; 49:4; Hos. 11:7; 14:4). In these passages it is clear that Israel had broken faith with God by serving other gods and by living immoral lives. See Apostasy.

BADGER See Animals.

BADGER SKINS KJV translation of the skin used to cover the tabernacle (Ex. 26:14; 36:19; 39:34), the ark, and other sacred objects (Num. 4:6–14). The leather was also used for shoes (Ezek. 16:10). Bible students do not agree on the kind of skin intended. The KJV translation of "badger skin" seems doubtful as the word used is not the normal word for badger. In addition, the badger was considered an unclean animal making it very doubtful that the skin of the badger would have been used as a covering for sacred objects. In addition, it is doubtful that the badger was plentious enough to provide the necessary hides. The translation of "goatskin" (RSV) also fails on the grounds that the word used is not a normal word for goat. Thus NRSV reads "fine leather" with a note that the meaning of the Hebrew is uncertain. Some have proposed the simple translation, "leather," noting the similarity of the Hebrew and Egyptian words for leather (TEV). Others have proposed dolphin or "porpoise skins," noting the similarities between the Hebrew and Arabic words for dolphin or porpoise (NAS). Still others have proposed "hides of sea cows" (that is, dugongs, REB)—sea creatures that have been found in the Red Sea (NIV). Would either the dolphin or dugong have been considered "clean" for the purpose of covering sacred objects; and, further, would the hides of these animals have been readily available to the small inland Israelite community? It is doubtful. There seems to be no clear answer to the question: What kind of hides were used as a covering for the tabernacle, ark, and other sacred objects? Phil Logan

BAG Flexible container that may be closed for holding, storing, or carrying something. Several kinds are mentioned in the Bible: 1. Large bags in which large amounts of money could be carried (2 Kings 5:23; Isa. 3:22, KJV has "crisping pins"). 2. A small bag (purse) used to carry a merchant's weights (Deut. 25:13; Prov. 16:11; Mic. 6:11) or smaller sums of money (Prov. 1:14; Isa. 46:6). This may be the same as the purse mentioned in the New Testament (Luke 10:4; 12:33; 22:35–36).

3. A cloth tied up in a bundle is translated as bag (Job 14:17; Prov. 7:20; Hag. 1:6) or bundle (Gen. 42:35; 1 Sam. 25:29; Song of Sol. 1:13). The size of the bundle would depend on its use. This type of bag was used to hold money (Gen. 42:35; Prov. 7:20; Hag. 1:6; see 2 Kings 12:10 where the verb form, "to tie up in bags," is used) or something loose such as myrrh (Song of Sol. 1:13). This term for bag is used figuratively to speak of one's sins being bundled up (and perhaps sealed; "bag of transgressions," Job 14:17) and one's life being bundled up and protected by God ("bundle of the living," 1 Sam. 25:29).

4. The shepherd's bag (KJV "scrip" or "vessel"). Used by shepherds and travelers to carry one or more days' supplies, it was made of animal skins and slung across the shoulder. Joseph's brothers carried grain in such a bag (Gen. 42:25). Saul's bag was empty of bread when he went to meet Samuel (1 Sam. 9:7), and David collected stones in his shepherd's bag when confronting Goliath (1 Sam. 17:40,49). An Israelite traveler whose bag of provisions was empty could eat from a fellow Israelite's vineyard, but was not permitted to fill his bag for the rest of the journey (Deut. 23:24). Jesus commanded His disciples not to carry a bag when He sent them out to preach (Matt. 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3; 10:4). They were to be totally dependent on God and the hospitality and support of God's people (compare Num. 18:31; 1 Cor. 9:3–14). The disciples learned from this experience that they would be cared for; but because of the critical nature of what they were about to face, Jesus later instructed His disciples to begin carrying a purse, bag, and—very curiously—a sword (Luke 22:35–36). The Hebrew word for shepherd's bag is also translated as "carriage." See Carriage.

5. A large sack used to carry grain (Gen. 42:25,27,35; Josh. 9:4; see Lev. 11:32). The same Hebrew word is translated as sackcloth worn during times of mourning or humiliation. See Sackcloth.

6. KJV translates glossokomon as bag in John 12:6; 13:29. The glossokomon was actually a money box. See Money Box. Phil Logan

BAGGAGE See Carriage.

BAGPIPE Modern translation of a musical instrument translated as "dulcimer" by the KJV (Dan. 3:5,10,15). See Musical Instruments.

BAHARUM (Bȧ·hā′ rŭm) NRSV reading of Baharumite (KJV, NAS, NIV). A person from Bahurim. See Bahurim.

BAHURIM (Bȧ·hū′ rĭm) Place name meaning, "young men." Village on road from Jerusalem to Jericho in tribal territory of Benjamin. David demanded Ishbosheth, Saul's son, send back Michal, Saul's daughter and David's wife. Ishbosheth took her from her husband Phaltiel, who followed her weeping to Bahurim until Abner, the general, forced him to return home (2 Sam. 3:16). When David fled from his son Absalom, a kinsman of Saul named Shimei met him at Bahurim, cursed him, and threw stones at his party. David prevented immediate punishment (2 Sam. 16:5; 19:16). Two messengers taking secret messages about Absalom from the priests hid from Absalom's servants at Bahurim (2 Sam. 17:18). Solomon followed David's orders and had Shimei of Bahurim killed (1 Kings 2:8–9,36–46). Azmaveth, one of David's valiant soldiers, was from Bahurim (1 Chron. 11:33). 2 Samuel 23:31 lists the city as Barhum, due to a copyist's mistake. Bahurim was probably located at modern Ras et-Tmim, east of Mount Scopus near Jerusalem.

BAJITH (Bā' jĭth) KJV reading in Isaiah 15:2. Modern translations read, "temple." KJV interprets as name of Moabite worship place.

BAKBAKKAR (Băk·băk' kär) A Levite living in Judah after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:15).

BAKBUK (Băk' bŭk) Personal name meaning, "bottle." Levite who was a Temple servant after returning from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:51; Neh. 7:53).

BAKBUKIAH (Băk·bū·kī' ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh's bottle." Leader among the Levites in Jerusalem after the Exile (Neh. 11:17; 12:9,25).

BAKEMEATS Old English term for any food prepared by a baker.

BAKER'S STREET Street in Jerusalem known as "baker's street" where most, if not all, the bakeries of the city were located. It was common in ancient cities for trades and crafts to locate near others of the same kind. In all likelihood, the baker's residence was part of the bakery. Zedekiah promised Jeremiah, whom he had imprisoned, that he would have food for as long as bread was available on baker's street (Jer. 37:21).

BAKING The Old Testament speaks most often of the baking of bread and cakes, which were the main part of the meal for Hebrews and Canaanites alike (Gen. 19:3; Ex. 12:39; Lev. 26:26; 1 Kings 17:12–13; Isa. 44:15). The bread of the presence (Lev. 24:5) and other offerings (Lev. 2:4–6) were also baked. See Bread; Bread of the Presence; Cooking and Heating; Food and Meals in the Bible; Kneading, Kneading Bowl.

BALAAM (Bā' lăăm) A non-Israelite prophet whom Balak, king of Moab, urged to curse the invading Israelites for a fee.

Old Testament Balaam was one of many prophets of eastern religions who worshiped all the gods of the land. Many of these false teachers had great power and influence. When they pronounced a blessing or a curse, it was considered as true prophecy. When Moses led his people across the wilderness, God commanded him not to attack Edom or Moab (Deut. 2:4–9). He did not. When Edom attacked, "Israel turned away from him" (Num. 20:21). As the great nation journeyed north on the east side of Jordan, King Balak of Moab faced the invasion of Israel. Balak sought a strategy other than battle to stop Moses. He decided to use a prophet to curse Israel. Balaam was chosen. Balak sent his messengers with fees to secure Balaam's services. Balaam asked God's permission to curse Israel. Permission was refused, but Balaam journeyed to confer further with Balak. On this journey, Balaam's donkey talked with him as he traveled a narrow trail (Num. 22:21–30; 2 Pet. 2:16). Here Balaam clearly understood that an angel's drawn sword enforced his obedience to speak only God's message to Balak. Later in four vivid messages Balaam insisted that God would bless Israel (Num. 23—24). God used Balaam to preach truth. He even spoke of a future star and scepter (Num. 24:17) a prophecy ultimately fulfilled in the coming of Jesus as the Messiah. Balak's actions brought God's anger upon Moab (Deut. 23:3–6). In a battle against the Midianites, Balaam died (Num. 31:8; Josh. 13:22). Balaam could not curse Israel, but he taught the Moabites to bring the men of Israel into Baal worship with its immorality. For this God would punish Israel. What Balaam could not accomplish with a curse he did so through seductive means.

The village baker prepares dough for baking in his stone oven (on the left).

New Testament Peter warned against false teachers and described their destruction. He referred to the fallen angels, the watery destruction of the unbelievers in Noah's time, and the fiery judgment on lawless Sodom and Gomorrah in Lot's day. Peter described his generation of false leaders as those with eyes full of adultery, who never stop sinning by seducing the unstable. He further said that they bore a curse as experts in greed. Peter wrote that they left the straight way and followed the way of Balaam (2 Pet. 2:15). In Revelation 2:14, the church at Pergamos was complimented for faithfulness under persecution, but also warned that some followed after Balaam in offering meat to idols and in immorality.

Lawson Hatfield

BALAC (Bā′ lăc) KJV spelling of Balak. See Balak.

BALADAN (Băl′ ə·dăn) Akkadian personal name meaning, "God gave a son." Father of Merodach Baladan, king of Babylon (722–711; 705–703 B.C.). See Merodach-Baladan.

BALAH (Bā′ lăh) Place name meaning, "used, worn out." City in tribal territory of Simeon (Josh. 19:3), apparently the same as Baalah (Josh. 15:29) and Bilhah (1 Chron. 4:29). Location in southwest Judah is unknown.

BALAK (Bā′ lăk) In Numbers 22:2, the king of Moab who sent for Balaam the prophet to pronounce a curse on the Israelites. Balaam, however, spoke no curse; and Balak was denied a military victory over Israel. See Moab; Balaam.

BALANCES were used to measure weights early in the development of civilization. Balances were well known to the Hebrews and in common use in the Old Testament (Lev. 19:36; Job 6:2; Hos. 12:7). They consisted of two pans hung on cords attached to a balancing beam. The beam was suspended by a cord in its center. Sometimes the beam was suspended by a ring or hook. Sometimes balances were held in the hand. The Hebrews probably used the common balances of Egypt, which are shown in Egyptian tomb reliefs and papyri writings.

Balances were the basis of economic life. Money came in weighted units of gold and silver. These had to be weighed in the balance for every business transaction or purchase (Jer. 32:9–10). Balances could be easily manipulated, especially by having weights which did not measure up to the proper amount or by having two sets of weights, one for buying and one for selling. God called on Israel for economic justice that began with proper weights and balances. (See Proverbs 11:1; 16:11; 20:23; Ezek. 45:9–12; Hos. 12:7; Amos 8:5; Mic. 6:10–11.) In a figurative sense the balance was employed in the Bible to ask for a fair trial or judgment for the persecuted (Job 31:6; Ps. 62:9).

Balances help teach about God. Only He can weigh the mountains in a balance (Isa. 40:12–13). Just balances show a person belongs to Him (Prov. 16:11), while foolish people weigh out lavish amounts of gold to make idols to worship (Isa. 46:6). Jimmy Albright

BALD LOCUST See Insects; Locust.

BALDNESS Natural baldness was apparently rare in Israel. It is mentioned only in the Levitical laws on leprosy (Lev. 13:40–43), where the bald man is declared "clean" unless the bald area has evidence of redness or swelling. Archaeology has uncovered no depictions of bald men from Israel. Elisha was ridiculed for being bald, but he may have shaved his head to mourn Elijah's departure (2 Kings 2:23). Shaving the head for appearance or in grieving for the dead was prohibited by law (Lev. 21:5; Deut. 14:1), and especially for priests (Ezek. 44:20). However, Isaiah told of God calling the people to acknowledge their sin with baldness and the wearing of sackcloth (Isa. 22:12). A shorn head is frequently mentioned in conjunction with shaving the beard and wearing sackcloth to signify loss of loved ones or loss of hope (Isa. 3:24; 15:2–3; Jer. 48:37). Deuteronomy 21:11 may refer to a practice of making captives bald, to baldness in mourning, or to a symbol of a change in life-style. Ezekiel described men made to work so hard "every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled" (Ezek. 29:18), but there is no evidence that slaves were forced to shave their heads.

See Mourning; Leprosy; Hair. Tim Turnham

BALLAD SINGERS Refers to the makers and repeaters of proverbs (Num. 21:27). KJV "they that speak in proverbs" gives the sense.

BALM Aromatic resin or gum widely used in the ancient Near East for cosmetic and medical purposes. Egyptians used them for embalming. Despite the widespread usage, balm is difficult to identify. Ancient writers refer to balm by a variety of names, which adds to the difficulty of identification. Most ancient references seem to be to the resin from Balsamodendron opobalsamum or balm of Gilead. At times the reference seems to be to Balanites aegyptiaca Delile—a small shrub that still grows in North Africa and exudes a sticky resin used for medicinal purposes (Gen. 37:25; Jer. 8:22; 46:11; 51:8). In another place the mastic tree (Pistacia lentiscus) seems to be referred to (Gen. 43:11). A yellow aromatic resin was extracted from the mastic tree by cutting the branches.

BALM OF GILEAD A substance known in the ancient world for its medical properties. Exported from Gilead to Egypt and Phoenicia (Gen. 37:25; Ezek. 27:17). For the identification of this substance, see Balm.

BALSAM Translation of two Hebrew words. Baka' is translated as balsam trees in the modern versions (2 Sam. 5:23–24; 1 Chron. 14:14–15; NAS, NIV, NRSV, and TEV). The KJV reads "mulberry trees," while REB has "aspens." Neither the balsam nor mulberry tree has been known to grow around Jerusalem, making the identification of the tree uncertain. Poplar and mastic tree have also been suggested as translations. Balsam is also a translation of basam in the NAS, where other versions have "spice" and "spices" (Song of Sol. 5:1,13; 6:2).

BAMAH (Bā' măh) Hebrew noun meaning, "back, high place." Word is used frequently to describe places of worship, usually false worship of Yahweh containing Canaanite elements. See High Place. In Ezekiel 20:29 a particular place is named Bamah in a wordplay ridiculing high places. If a location was intended for Bamah, it can no longer be found.

BAMOTH (Bā' mŏth) Place name and common noun meaning, "high places." A place in Moab where Israel stayed during the wilderness wanderings (Num. 21:19–20). Some would equate it with Bamoth-baal.

BAMOTH-BAAL (Bā' mŏth-bā' ăl) Place name meaning, "high places of Baal." Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., mentioned it in the Moabite stone. Numbers 22:41 speaks of Bamoth or high places of Baal near the Arnon River. There Balak and Balaam could see all Israel. Joshua 13:17 lists it as a city Moses gave the tribe of Reuben. It may be modern gebel Atarus.

BAND KJV translation in Matthew 27:27; Mark 15:16. Modern translations have battalion. See Battalion.

BAND, MAGIC See Magic Bands.

BANI (Bā' nī) Personal name meaning, "built." 1. Man from tribe of Gad in David's special thirty warriors (2 Sam. 23:6). 2. Levite descended from Merari (1 Chron. 6:46). 3. Ancestor of Uthai of tribe of Judah who was among first Israelites to return to Palestine from Babylonian Exile about 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:4). 4. Original ancestor of clan of whom 642 returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:10). Nehemiah 7:15 spells the name Binnui and says 648 returned. Same clan apparently had members who had married foreign wives and agreed to divorce them to avoid bringing religious temptation to the covenant community (Ezra 10:29,34,38). 5. Father of Rehum, a Levite who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:17). May be same man who helped Ezra interpret the law to the people (Neh. 8:7), led the worship service of repentance leading to Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 9:4–5; a second Bani was also involved here), sealed Nehemiah's covenant along with the second Bani (Neh. 10:13–14). His son Uzzi was overseer of the Levites (Neh. 12:22).

BANKING Ancient Israel had no lending institutions or banks in the modern sense. Commercial transactions and the lending of credit were entirely in the hands of private individuals, landowners, and merchants. Contemporary cultures in Mesopotamia lent money or produced at interest (in some cases as much as 33⅓ percent per annum). The temptation among the Israelites to do this was suppressed by laws forbidding the charging of interest on loans (Ex. 22:25; Lev. 25:36–37; Ezek. 18:8). According to these statutes, only foreigners could be charged interest on a debt (Deut. 23:20).

Pledges were sometimes required to guarantee a loan (Gen. 38:17), but essential items, like a cloak, could not be kept past nightfall (Deut. 24:12; Amos 2:8). A strict protocol of debt collection was also to be followed with the lender forbidden to enter the home of the debtor to "fetch his pledge" (Deut. 24:10–11). In periods of famine or high taxation a man might mortgage his home and fields, pledging his labor as a debt-slave or the labor of his family to satisfy the loan (Neh. 5:1–5; Ps. 119:11). Abuse of this system occurred often enough that the prophets condemned it (Neh. 5:6–13; Ezek. 22:12), Proverbs called it folly (17:18; 22:26).

The widespread introduction of coined money after 500 B.C. and the expansion of travel and commerce in the Roman empire aided the establishment of banking institutions in the New Testament period. Money lending (Gk. trapezítēs, from the table trápeza where business was conducted) was a common and acceptable activity in the cities. Jesus' parables of the talents (Matt. 25:14–30) and the pounds (Luke 19:11–27) lend credence to the practice of giving sums to the bankers to invest or to draw interest. The older custom of burying one's money for safe keeping (Josh. 7:21) Jesus condemned as "wicked and slothful" (Matt. 25:25–27).

Some who were involved in finance, however, took advantage of the large number of currencies in circulation in Palestine. Farmers and merchants came to them to weigh coinage and exchange it for the Tyrian drachma favored in the city. The regulations regarding the Temple tax in Jerusalem also worked in the financiers' favor. The "moneychangers," known as kollybistēs, charged a fee of 12 grains of silver (a kóllybos) and set up their tables in the Court of the Gentiles. They exchanged foreign currency for the silver didrachma required by the law (Matt. 17:24). Jesus' cleansing of the Temple may have been in part a response to the unfair practices of these money-changers (Matt. 21:12–13; Mark 11:15–17; John 2:14–16).

With sums coming into the Temple from Jews throughout the empire, the Temple itself became a bank, lending money to finance business, construction, and other programs. Pilate raised a storm of protest when he tapped one of the Temple funds (Qorban), which was to be used exclusively for religious purposes, to build an aqueduct. After the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70, the Roman emperor Vespasian ordered the continued payment of the tax and its deposit in the Temple of Jupiter.

Victor H. Matthews

BANNER was a sign carried to give a group a rallying point. Hebrew terms translated with the English word banner are "degel" and "nes." A third term, "oth ("sign")," seems related to these, as "degel" and "oth" appear in the same verse (Num. 2:2), "Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard ("degel"), with the ensign ("oth") of their father's house . . .". The terms may describe two different banners, or the terms may be in parallel, expressing the same thing in different words.

A banner was usually a flag or a carved figure of an animal, bird, or reptile. It may have been molded from bronze, as was the serpent in Numbers 21:8–9. Each tribe of Israel may have had some such animal figures as their standard, or banner. The banner was used as a rallying point for groups with a common interest, such as a call for an army to assemble, or as a signal that a battle was to begin. When the Israelites left Sinai for the land of Canaan, they marched under the banner of four major tribes: Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan (Num. 10). The prophet Isaiah used the term in reference to a signal God would raise against Babylon as a warning of impending destruction (Isa. 13:2). In Isaiah 49:22 God's upraised hand is a signal ("nes") for the nations to bring the sons of the exiles home to the land of Canaan. The practice of using banners, or standards, was widespread in ancient times in many cultures and lands. Israel probably borrowed the custom from her neighbors. Bryce Sandlin

BANQUET An elaborate meal, sometimes called a feast. In the Old Testament and New Testament, banquets and feasts are prominent in sealing friendships, celebrating victories, and for other joyous occasions (Dan. 5:1; Luke 15:22–24). The idea of hospitality ran deep in the thought of those in the Near East (Gen. 18:1–8; Luke 11:5–8).

Most banquets were held in the evening after the day's work. Usually only men were invited. The women served the food when no servant was present. Hosts sent invitations (Matt. 22:3–4) and sometimes made elaborate preparations for the guests. Those who dined reclined on bed-like seats and lay at right angles to the table. Even though our English translations usually speak of "sitting down" at a meal, the Greek actually means "recline" (Mark 6:39; Luke 12:37).

Typical foods served at banquets were fish, bread, olives, various kinds of vegetables, cheeses, honey, dates, and figs. Beef or lamb was used only by the rich or on special occasions (Mark 14:12; Luke 15:23). Wine was also an important part of the feasts, so that they were sometimes called "a house of drinking" in the Hebrew (KJV, "banqueting house," Song of Sol. 2:4) or "drinkings" in the Greek (KJV, "banquetings," 1 Pet. 4:3).

Some "seats" at the banquet table were preferred over others (Mark 10:37; Luke 14:7–11; John 13:23). In Luke 14:8–10, Jesus referred to these "lowest" and "highest" places. He often used banquets and feasts to present His message to various people (Matt. 9:9–10; Mark 14:1–9; Luke 7:36–50; 19:1–6; John 2:1–11; 12:1–8).

The image of the feast as an occasion of celebrating victory is seen in Jesus' reference to the messianic banquet (Matt. 8:11; Luke 13:29). Also in the Book of Revelation, the final victory day is described in terms of a "marriage supper of the Lamb" of God (Rev. 19:9). W. Thomas Sawyer

BAPTISM The immersion or dipping of a believer in water symbolizing the complete renewal and change in the believer's life and testifying to the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ as the way of salvation.

Jewish Background As with most Christian practices and beliefs, the background of baptism lies in practices of the Jewish community. The Greek word baptízo, "immerse, dip, submerge" is used metaphorically in Isaiah 21:4 to mean, "go down, perish" and in 2 Kings 5:14 for Naaman's dipping in the Jordan River seven times for cleansing from his skin disease. The radical Qumran sect which produced the Dead Sea Scrolls attempted to cleanse Judaism. The sect laid great emphasis on purity and purifying rites. These rites normally involved immersion, though the term baptízo does not seem to appear in their writings. It is quite possible that such a rite was used to initiate members into the community. Along with the rite, the Essenes at Qumran emphasized repentance and submission to God's will.

B

At some point close to the time of Jesus, Judaism began a heavy emphasis on ritual washings to cleanse from impurity. This goes back to priestly baths prior to offering sacrifices (Lev. 16:4,24). Probably shortly prior to the time of Jesus or contemporary with Him, Jews began baptizing Gentile converts, though circumcision still remained the primary entrance rite into Judaism.

John's Baptism John the Baptist immersed repentant sinners: those who had a change of mind and heart (John 1:6,11). John's baptism—for Jews and Gentiles—involved the same elements later interpreted in Christian baptism: repentance, confession, evidence of changed lives, coming judgment, and the coming of the kingdom of God through the Messiah, who would baptize with the Spirit and with fire (Matt. 3:11). John thus formed a purified community waiting for God's great salvation.

Jesus' Baptism John also baptized Jesus, who never sinned (Matt. 3:13–17; John 1:13–16). Jesus said that His own baptism was to fulfill all righteousness (Matt. 3:15). Thus Jesus acknowledged that the standard of life John demanded was correct for Himself and for His followers. In this way He was able to identify with sinful mankind and to be a model for others to follow. In this way Jesus affirmed John and his message. The coming of the Spirit and the voice from heaven showed that Jesus represented another point in God's revelation of Himself and formed the connection between baptism and Christ's act of redemption.

Christian Baptism John's baptism prepared repentant sinners to receive Jesus' baptism of the Holy Spirit and of fire. (Note that Jesus did not do the water baptizing; His disciples did—John 4:1–2.) Jesus' baptism and the baptizing by His disciples thus connected baptism closely with the Holy Spirit. When Jesus comes into a life, the Holy Spirit comes with His saturating presence and purifies. He empowers and cleanses the believer in a spiritual baptism. The main differences between John's baptism and Jesus' baptism lie in the personal commitment to Christ and the coming of the Holy Spirit in Jesus' baptism (John 1:33).

Ancient Byzantine baptistry at Avdat, Israel, showing the importance given baptism by the early church.

A thorough study of the Holy Spirit is helpful to understand what "baptism with the Holy Spirit" means (John 1:33). The sequence of baptism and the coming of the Spirit into individual lives will show some differences (Acts 8:12–17). The usual sequence of events is: the Spirit comes into a person's life at conversion, and then the believer is baptized. The Holy Spirit is the gift who comes with salvation (Acts 2:38) and is its seal (Eph. 4:30). The Holy Spirit saturates the new Christian's life. Or we might say that Jesus baptizes the new Christian by plunging the person into the Holy Spirit's presence and power (John 14:16–17; Acts 11:15–16).

To be baptized is to clothe oneself with Christ (Gal. 3:27 NRSV, NIV). Baptism refers to the suffering and death of Christ (Mark 10:38–39; Luke 12:50). Christian baptism is in a sense a sharing of this death and resurrection and all that brought Christ to those events (Rom. 6:1–7; Col. 2:12). Baptism shows that a person has died to the old way of life and has been raised to a new kind of life—eternal life in Christ (Matt. 28:19–20; Col. 3:1; 2 Tim. 2:11). The resurrection from the water points to the Christian's resurrection also (Rom. 6:1–6).

Believers' Baptism In the New Testament baptism is for believers (Acts 2:38; 8:12–13,36–38; Eph. 4:5). Water apart from personal commitment to Christ makes no difference in the life of anyone. In the New Testament baptism occurs when a person trusts Christ as Lord and Savior and obeys the command to be submerged in water and raised from it as a picture of the salvation experience that has occurred. Baptism comes after conviction of sin, repentance of sin, confession of Christ as Lord and Savior. To be baptized is to preach a personal testimony through the symbol of baptism. Baptism testifies that "ye are washed . . . ye are sanctified . . . ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. 6:11).

Church Practice The church has attempted to build its practice upon that of the New Testament but has not found agreement always as to what the practice was. Several church groups practice the baptism of infants. This necessarily moves away from immersion to sprinkling as the mode. See Infant Baptism.

The setting of baptism is often restricted to a church setting with an ordained person. In the New Testament baptism takes place in varied settings wherever there is another person to do the baptizing (Acts 8:36–39; 9:18; 10:47–48). Both Jesus and Paul let others do the baptizing, so that the restriction of baptism to a leading professional minister does not seem to be the New Testament practice.

Rebaptism Scriptural baptism (baptism because of belief in Christ) occurs once. Sometimes people are baptized again because they feel they were not saved when they were first baptized. If that was the case, the first baptism simply wasn't scriptural baptism. Others are baptized because something changes in their beliefs—other than their salvation experience—and they either want to be or are urged by someone else to be rebaptized. The purpose of baptism was never to affirm each change in beliefs. For example, Apollos got his understanding corrected, but no mention is made of his rebaptism (Acts 18:24–28). The disciples grew spiritually and changed in understandings, but no mention is made of their rebaptism. Christians are to become learners along with their baptism, but no mention is made of any need to rebaptize them if they were scripturally baptized the first time. Rebaptism in the New Testament seemingly occurred only when a group of people never had received the Holy Spirit, who is the seal of salvation (Eph. 4:30; see also Acts 1:4–5; 2:38,41; 8:12–13,36–39). Although the dozen people focused on in Acts 19:1–7 had John's baptism, they were then properly scripturally baptized as they trusted in Jesus and received the promised Holy Spirit.

Baptism and Salvation Baptism is not a requirement of salvation, but it is a requirement of obedience. Baptism is a first step of discipleship. Although all meanings of baptism are significant, the one that most often comes to mind is water baptism as a picture of having come to know Christ as Lord and Savior. Baptism is never the event but, rather, the picture of the event. So the pattern of obedience is to come to Christ in trust and then to picture that through the symbol of baptism.

Johnnie Godwin

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD Some Christians at Corinth denied the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor. 15:12). Paul saw that as a serious error. If there is no resurrection from the dead, then Christ was not raised, there can be no salvation, and Paul's preaching and the Corinthians' faith would all be in vain. Thus Paul argued in 1 Corinthians 15 for the reality of the resurrection of the dead. As part of his argument he mentioned a practice of some of the people at Corinth—that is, the practice of baptizing "for the dead" (1 Cor. 15:29). Two things are important to note here. First, we are not sure exactly what is entailed in the practice of baptizing for the dead. Chrysostom (an early church father) explained the practice of an early Christian group of hiding a living person under the bier of a dead person. The corpse would be approached and asked if he would like to be baptized. The person hiding underneath would answer in behalf of the corpse that he desired baptism. The living person would then be baptized for the dead one. It is possible that something along this line was being practiced in Cornith.

Second, Paul was not advocating the practice of baptizing for the dead. Paul was pointing to the inconsistency in the thought of the Corinthians in trying to convince them of the reality of the resurrection of the dead. The argument seems to be: "If, as some of you Corinthians claim, there is no resurrection from the dead, then why do you go to the trouble of baptizing for the dead? Only those who hope for life after death would attempt to influence the eternal fate of those who have died. Your thinking on the subject is contradictory. You claim there is no resurrection, but your actions betray that you really believe there is something beyond this life."

Other Bible students think the Corinthians believed life in the Spirit made the body unnecessary. Baptism for the dead in this view ensured the dead would enjoy the same spiritual life as would the living but without a body.

Phil Logan

BAPTISM OF FIRE The phrase, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire," occurs twice in the New Testament (Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16). To be baptized with fire is certainly not to be taken literally (as some in the history of the church have taken it).

Fire is one of the physical manifestations of God's presence. This is illustrated several times in the Bible: the making of the covenant with Abraham (Gen. 15:17), the appearance in the burning bush (Ex. 3:2), God leading the Israelites by a pillar of fire by night (Ex. 13:21–22; 14:24; Num. 9:15–16; 14:14; etc.), His appearance on Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:18; 24:17; Deut. 4:11–36; 5:4–26; etc.), and others (1 Kings 18:24,38; 1 Chron. 21:26; 2 Chron. 7:1,3).

Fire was used symbolically in Israel's worship to represent God's constant presence with Israel (Lev. 6:12–13). God's presence as fire represented both judgment and purification (the words purify and purge come from the Greek word for fire). To be in God's presence is to be in the presence of absolute holiness where no sin or unrighteousness can stand. To be in the presence of God is to have the overwhelming sense of one's uncleanness and the overwhelming desire to be clean (see Isa. 6:1–6). God is able to judge and destroy the sin and purify the repentant sinner.

The Holy Spirit is the gift Jesus gave His disciples (John 20:22) and is the presence of God at work in the life of the believer and in the world. Because the Holy Spirit is God's presence in the life of the believer and in the world, the believer and "the world" are made aware of sin and God's judgment on sin and of the necessity of being righteous in God's presence (John 16:8). The presence of God's Spirit brings the overwhelming sense of one's uncleanness and the overwhelming desire to be clean.

The statement "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire," means that Jesus had and has the ability to immerse (baptize) people in the presence of God so that they are aware of their sin and the need they have to be cleansed of that sin. To be baptized with the Holy Spirit and fire is to be convicted concerning sin and righteousness and judgment (John 16:8).

To be baptized with the Holy Spirit has a wider application than this; but when the Holy Spirit is coupled with fire (as in the phrase in Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16), the particular aspect of the Holy Spirit's work as described here is in view. See Baptism of the Holy Spirit; Holy Spirit for a more complete view of the work of the Holy Spirit.

Phil Logan

BAPTISM OF THE HOLY SPIRIT Ever since the days of Joel, God's people have looked for the pouring out of God's Spirit (Joel 2:28–32). The Gospels and Acts speak of a baptism of the Holy Spirit (Mark 1:8; John 1:33; 7:37–39; Acts 1:5; see Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16. See Baptism of Fire for one specific aspect of being baptized with the Spirit). The Book of Acts shows the fulfillment of this promise (Acts 2:3–4,16–21; compare 10:44 with 11:16). But what does it mean to be "baptized with the Holy Spirit"?

Being baptized in the Holy Spirit means being immersed (baptized) in the presence and being of God. One immersed in the presence of God is made aware of his or her sinfulness and desires cleansing and purification (John 16:8; see Baptism of Fire). The result of this cleansing is life in the true sense of the word (see Eternal Life; Life).

One baptized with the Holy Spirit is also empowered to do works of ministry (Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8). The ministry for which empowerment comes included witnessing (Acts 1:8; see John 15:26–27) and working miracles (John 14:12; Acts 3:4–10; 5:12). As part of the empowerment for ministry, believers are given the necessary spiritual gifts (Rom. 12:4–8; 1 Cor. 12:1—14:40; Eph. 4:1–16; 1 Tim. 4:16; 1 Pet. 4:10–11) and knowledge and guidance (John 14:26; 16:13).

Phil Logan

BAPTIST See John the Baptist.

BAR Aramaic translation of the Hebrew word, "ben." Both words mean "son of." Bar is often used in the New Testament as a prefix for names of men telling whose son they were: Barabbas (Matt. 27:16–26), Bar-Jesus (Acts 13:6), Bar-Jona (Matt. 16:17), Barnabas (Acts 4:36; 9:27; etc.), Barsabas (Acts 1:23; 15:22), Bartholomew (Matt. 10:3; Acts 1:13), and Bartimaeus (Mark 10:46). See Ben.

BARABBAS (Bâ·răb′ bâs) A murderer and insurrectionist held in custody at the time of the trial of Jesus (Mark 15:17). All four Gospels record that when Pilate offered to release Jesus, the assembled crowd demanded the release of Barabbas instead. Pilate gave in to the demand, ordered Jesus crucified, and set Barabbas free. Nothing is known of his subsequent history.

According to Origen, supported by a relatively small number of late manuscripts at Matthew 27:16, Barabbas was named "Jesus Barabbas." Though not well attested, the reading is possible. If it is correct, Pilate's question to the crowd in Matthew 27:17 would have added poignancy. See Christ; Cross; Crucifixion.

BARACHEL (Bär′ â·chĕl) Personal name meaning, "God blessed." Father of Job's friend Elihu (Job 32:2).

BARACHIAH (Bär′ â·chī′ ăh) NRSV spelling of Berechiah in New Testament. See Berechiah.

BARACHIAS (Bĕr·â·chi′ ăs) KJV spelling of Berechiah in New Testament. See Berechiah.

BARAK (Bā′ răk) The son of Abinoam whom the prophetess Deborah summoned to assume military leadership of the Israelites in a campaign against Canaanite forces under the command of Sisera (Judges 4:6). Barak mustered Zebulunite and Naphtalite troops and set out to engage the Canaanites in battle near Mt. Tabor. Though the Canaanites were routed, Sisera escaped. He was subsequently killed by Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite. In 1 Samuel 12:11, where he is called Bedan, Barak is mentioned as one who delivered the Israelites from their enemies. See Judges.

BARAKEL (Bär′ â·kĕl) NIV, TEV spelling of Barachel. See Barachel.

BARBARIAN The term originally referred to stammering, stuttering, or any form of unintelligible sounds. Even the repeated syllable "bar-bar" mimics this. The term "barbarian" came to be synonymous with "foreigner," one who did not speak Greek, or one who was not a Greek. The Septuagint or earliest Greek translation translated Psalm 114:1 using barbarian for "a people of strange language." In the New Testament, barbarian occurs six times. Paul uses the term twice in 1 Corinthians 14:11 where he deals with the problem of unintelligible speech in the church. The more common use of "barbarian" seems related to those who spoke a foreign language, especially other than Greek. Paul's description of the islanders of Melita (Acts 28:2,4) as barbarians meant only that they did not speak Greek. With the rise of the Greek empire there was the tendency to include all who were not privy to this language and culture as barbarians. Thus, Paul makes the distinction between Greek and non-Greek in Romans 1:14. Also in Colossians 3:11, "Barbarians" are distinguished from the Greeks. As the Romans came to power and absorbed the Greek culture, they removed themselves from barbarian classification. The term came to be a reproach during the Persian wars and in time was associated with those who were crude and contemptible. See Gentile; Greeks; Hellenist. C. Kenny Cooper

BARHUMITE (Bär·hū′ mīte) Variant Hebrew spelling for Baharumite. See Bahurim.

BAR-JESUS (Bär·jē′ sŭs) A Jewish magician and false prophet at Paphos (Acts 13:6). Paul the apostle denounced him, and he was struck blind. In Acts 13:8, he is called Elymas.

BAR-JONA (Bär·jō′ nà) The surname of Simon Peter (Matt. 16:17). The meaning is "son of John."

BAR-KOCHBA (Bär-Kōchbà) Bar-Kochba means "son of the star" and was the title given by Jewish rebels to Simeon bar Kosevah, the leader of their revolt in A.D. 132–135. The title designated him as the Messiah (Num. 24:17). The revolt erupted because the Roman Emperor Hadrian had begun to rebuild Jerusalem as a pagan city with plans to replace the ruined Jewish Temple with one dedicated to Jupiter. Circumcision was also forbidden. At first, the Jews prepared for war secretly. When Hadrian left Syria, they openly revolted. By using guerrilla tactics, they were able to overpower the Roman forces and liberate Jerusalem in A.D. 132. Bar-Kochba was the civil leader of the people, and Eleazar was the high priest. Their initial success led to such widespread rebellion that even some Gentiles and Samaritans joined them. Hadrian had to recall Severus from Britain to suppress them. It was a long and costly war for the Romans. Severus avoided direct confrontation, weakening the rebels instead by capturing them in small groups, cutting supply lines, besieging fortresses, and starving them. Bar-Kochba made his last stand at Betar, where most of the remaining insurgents died in 135. Some retreated to caves in the Judean desert and had to be starved to death.

Ricky L. Johnson

BARKOS (Bär′ kŏs) Aramaic name possibly meaning, "son of Kos (a god)." The original ancestor of a clan of Nethinim or Temple employees who returned to Jerusalem from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:53).

BARLEY A grain for which Palestine was known (Deut. 8:8). The failure of the barley crop was a disaster (Joel 1:11). Barley was the food of the poor (Lev. 23:22; Ruth 3:15,17; 2 Sam. 17:28; 2 Kings 4:42; 7:1,6,18; 2 Chron. 2:10,15; 27:5; Jer. 41:8). Barley flour was used to make bread (Judg. 7:13; Ezek. 4:12) and was the kind of bread Jesus used to feed the multitude (John 6:9,13). Barley was also used as feed for horses, mules, and donkeys (1 Kings 4:28). There was a spring variety (Hordeum vulgare) and a winter variety (Hordeum hexastichon).

BARLEY HARVEST The barley harvest (Ruth 2:23) began in late April or early May and preceded the wheat harvest by about two weeks (Ex. 9:31–32). At the beginning of the barley harvest, the first fruits were offered as a consecration of the harvest (Lev. 23:10).

BARN In the Bible, a barn is a storage place for seed (Hag. 2:19) or grain (Matt. 13:30). A full barn is a sign of prosperity (Deut. 28:8; Prov. 3:10; Luke 12:18) while empty barns are signs of calamity of some kind (either drought, war, etc; Joel 1:17). Equivalent to modern granaries or silos.

BARNABAS (Bär' nȧ·bȧs) The name Barnabas appears 23 times in Acts and 5 times in Paul's letters and probably means "son of prophecy" or one who prophesies or preaches ("son of exhortation," Acts 4:36).

Barnabas in Acts Barnabas was a Levite and native of the island of Cyprus, named Joseph (Joses), before the disciples called him Barnabas. He sold his property and gave the proceeds to the Jerusalem church (Acts 4:36–37). He introduced Saul of Tarsus to the Jerusalem church (9:26–27). The church chose Barnabas to go to Syrian Antioch to investigate the unrestricted preaching to the Gentiles there. He became the leader to the work and secured Saul as his assistant. They took famine relief to the Jerusalem church (11:19–30). On Paul's "first missionary journey," Barnabas at first seems to have been the leader (chs. 13—14). Paul and Barnabas were sent to Jerusalem to try to settle the questions of how Gentiles could be saved and how Jewish Christians could have fellowship with them (15:1–21). They agreed to go on another missionary journey but separated over whether to take John Mark with them again (15:36–41).

Barnabas in Paul's Letters In Galatians 2:1–10, Paul recalled how he went with Barnabas to Jerusalem and how the apostles approved of their Gentile mission (probably the same event as Acts 15). In Galatians 2:13, however, Paul indicated that on one occasion Barnabas wavered on the issue of full acceptance of Gentile Christians. In 1 Corinthians 9:6, Paul commended Barnabas for following his (Paul's) practice of supporting himself rather than depending upon the churches. Colossians 4:10 simply states that Mark was Barnabas' cousin.

Barnabas in Later Legend In the third century Clement of Alexandria identified Barnabas as one of the seventy of Luke 10:1; Tertullian referred to him as the author of Hebrews; and the Clementine Recognitions stated he was the Matthias of Acts 1:23,26. All of these are most unlikely. In the second century an epistle bearing Barnabas' name appeared, became quite popular, and even received some consideration for a place in the New Testament. Later an apocryphal Acts of Barnabas and perhaps even a Gospel of Barnabas were circulated. Barnabas had nothing to do with the writing of any of these. James A. Brooks BARREL KJV translation found in 1 Kings 17:12–16; 18:33. Modern versions translate the same word as "jar." Jars were used for carrying water and storing flour. See Pottery.

BARREN, BARRENNESS Term used to describe a woman who is unable to give birth to children: Sarai (Gen. 11:30), Rebekah (Gen. 25:21), Rachel (Gen. 29:31), Manoah's wife (Judg. 13:2), Hannah (1 Sam. 1:5), and Elizabeth (Luke 1:7,36). Also described as "solitary" (Job 3:7), "desolate" (2 Sam. 13:20; Isa. 49:21; 54:1), or "dead, deadness" (Rom. 4:19). Barrenness was considered a curse from God (Gen. 16:2; 20:18; 1 Sam. 1:5), which explains Elizabeth's statement that God had taken away her "reproach among men"—that she was a sinner and cursed by God as evidenced by her barrenness (Luke 1:25). The barrenness of Sarai, Rebekah, and Rachel (the mothers of the Israelite nation) is significant in that their ability to finally bare children is a sign of the grace and favor of God toward His elect people.

BARSABAS (Bär' sȧ·bȧs) (KJV) or BARSABBAS Personal name meaning, "son of the Sabbath." 1. Name given Joseph Justus, candidate not elected when church chose replacement for Judas, the traitor (Acts 1:23). 2. Last name of Judas, who Jerusalem church chose to go with Paul and Silas to Antioch after the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:22). See Apostle; Judas; Joseph; Justus.

BARTHOLOMEW (Bär·thŏl' ō·mēw) One of the twelve apostles (Mark 3:18). The name Bartholomew means "son of Talmai," and may have been a patronymic, a name derived from that of the father or a paternal ancestor. It occurs in all four lists of the apostles in the New Testament (Matt. 10:2–4; Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:14–16; Acts 1:13); in each of the Gospels it immediately follows the name of Philip. The name does not occur at all in John's Gospel. In the first chapter of John, however, the account of Philip's call to discipleship is closely related to the call of a person named Nathanael (vv. 43–51). This circumstance has led to the traditional identification of Bartholomew with Nathanael. See Nathaniel; Apostles; Disciples.

BARTIMAEUS (Bär·tĭ·maē′ ŭs) or BARTIMEUS (KJV) Blind beggar on highway near Jericho who asked Jesus for mercy despite crowd's efforts to silence him. Jesus said his faith had made him whole. Able to see, Bartimaeus followed Jesus (Mark 10:46–52).

BARUCH (Bā′ rūch) The son of Neriah who served as Jeremiah's scribe and friend. He helped Jeremiah purchase a field from the prophet's cousin Hanameel and used the purchase as a symbol of hope (Jer. 32:12). Baruch, whose name means "blessed," served Jeremiah as an amanuensis or scribe. He appears, moreover, to have had a close personal association with the prophet and to have exercised a significant influence in the ministry of Jeremiah. He wrote down Jeremiah's preaching and read it to the king's counselors who took it to the king. Jehoiakim burned it, but Jeremiah dictated it again (Jer. 36). Jeremiah was even accused of being a mere instrument of Baruch's enmity (Jer. 43:3). The prophet counseled Baruch to place his confidence wholly in the Lord and not to seek great things for himself (Jer. 45). A wide range of later literature was attributed to Baruch in Jewish tradition. See Jeremiah.

BARZILLAI (Bär·zĭl′ lā·ī) Personal name meaning, "made of iron." 1. Man from Gilead east of the Jordan who met David at Mahanaim as he fled from Absalom. Barzillai and others gave needed supplies for David's company (1 Sam. 17:27–29). When David returned to Jerusalem, the eighty-year-old Barzillai accompanied him across the Jordan but refused to go to Jerusalem (1 Sam. 19:31–39). Barzillai may have served as David's host while he stayed east of the Jordan. His sons went to Jerusalem, and the dying David ensured their welfare (1 Kings 2:7). 2. Father of Adriel whose sons David delivered to the Gibeonites for execution in payment for Saul's inhumane slaying of Gibeonites (1 Sam. 21:8). This Barzillai could be the same as 1. above. 3. A priestly clan whose ancestor had married the daughter of 1. above and taken his name. Some of these priests returned from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:61).

BASEMATH (Bās′ ĕ·măth) Personal name meaning, "balsam." 1. A Hittite woman whom Esau married, grieving his parents, Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 26: 34–35; 27:46). Some differences in her name and ancestors appear. In Genesis 28:9, Esau married Mahalath, daughter of Ishmael and sister of Nebajoth. In Genesis 36:3, Basemath is Ishmael's daughter and Nebajoth's sister. Apparently, all three passages refer to the same woman. How one explains the complexity of names, relationships, and backgrounds is not certain. Some talk of literary sources; others of new names given women at marriage; others of copyists' changes of the text. Reuel, Basemath's son, became father of four clans in Edom (Gen. 36:10,13,17). 2. Daughter of Solomon who married Ahimaaz, district supervisor providing supplies for the royal court from Naphtali (1 Kings 4:15).

BASHAN (Bā′ shăn) The northernmost region of Palestine east of the Jordan River. Though its precise extent cannot be determined with certainty, it was generally east of the Sea of Galilee. In the time of Moses it was ruled over by a king named Og, whom the Israelite army defeated (Num. 21:33–35). It was assigned to the tribal area of Manasseh (Deut. 3:13; Josh. 13:29–31). Probably on account of its frontier location, it changed hands several times during the course of Israelite history. It was known as a particularly fertile area (Deut. 32:14; Ezek. 39:18). See Geography of Palestine.

BASHAN-HAVOTH-JAIR (Bā′ shăn-hā′ vŏth-jā′ĭr) KJV translation of Havoth-jair. See Havoth-jair.

BASHEMATH (Băsh′ ĕ·măth) KJV spelling of Basemath. See Basemath.

BASIN (KJV: Bason)—"Basin" and "bowl" are used interchangeably in the Bible to refer to various sizes of wide hollow bowls, cups, and dishes used for domestic or more formal purposes (John 13:5). In Bible times the most common material used to make such instruments was pottery. However, basins were also made of brass (Ex. 27:3), silver (Num. 7:13), and gold (2 Chron. 4:8). The largest basins were usually banquet bowls or mixing bowls for wine, although one of the largest was used in the sacrificial ritual at the great altar of the Temple (Zech. 9:15). Generally, the largest basins were also used as lids for other vessels. The basin used by Jesus to wash the disciples' feet (John 13:5) was of a special sort. The Greek word is found nowhere else in Scripture, but from the context is understood to mean a vessel specifically suited for washing a particular part of the body, such as the hands or the feet, and is therefore used with a definite article, "the basin." See Sacrifice; Offerings; Laver. C. Dale Hill BASKET Five kinds of baskets are mentioned in the Old Testament. The precise distinctions of size and shape are not clear. Some had handles, others lids, some both, others neither. The most common term always refers to a container for carrying food (Gen. 40:16–18). Another term is used to signify a cage or "bird net" (Amos 8:1–2). A third type basket is the common household utensil used in harvesting grain (Deut. 26:2; 28:5). A fourth term refers to a larger basket used for heavy burdens such as clay for bricks or even the heads of the seventy sons of Ahab delivered to Jehu (2 Kings 10:7). The final term was used to describe both the basket (ark) in which Moses was placed as an infant (Ex. 2:3,5) and the ark which Noah built (Gen. 6:14–16). The New Testament uses two words for basket. The smaller basket is referred to in the story of the feeding of the 5000 (Matt. 14:20). The larger basket is mentioned in the feeding of the 4000 (Matt. 15:37). The apostle Paul also used the larger basket as a means of escape over the wall of Damascas (Acts 9:25). It might logically be considered a hamper. See Ark. C. Dale Hill

BASMATH (Bās' măth) KJV spelling for Basemath in 1 Kings 4:15. See Basemath.

BASON KJV form of basin. See Basin.

BASTARD An illegitimate child, but not necessarily a child born out of wedlock. The term could refer to offspring of an incestuous union or of a marriage that was prohibited (Lev. 18:6–20; 20:11–20). Illegitimate children were not permitted to enter the assembly of the Lord (Deut. 23:2). According to Hebrews, those who do not have the discipline of the Lord are illegitimate children (12:8). Also translated as "a mongrel people" (Zech. 9:6 NRSV).

BATH A liquid measure roughly equivalent to five and one half gallons (U.S.). It was used to measure the molten sea in the Temple (1 Kings 7:26,38) as well as oil and wine (2 Chron. 2:10; Ezra 7:22; Isa. 5:10; Ezek. 45:14). The bath was one-tenth of a homer (Ezek. 45:11,14). See Weights and Measures.

BATHING The biblical languages make no distinction between washing and bathing primarily because the dry climate of the Middle East prohibited bathing except on special occasions or where there was an available source of water (John 9:7). Therefore, where "bathe" occurs in the biblical Bathing room in the baths at Roman Herculaneum (modern Italy), showing mosaics and shelves.

The second century Roman baths in the upper Agora at Ephesus.

text, partial bathing is usually intended. However, two notable exceptions are: (1) that of Pharaoh's daughter in the Nile River, (Ex. 2:5), (2) that of Bathsheba on her rooftop, (2 Sam. 11:2). The public baths of the Greek culture were unknown in Palestine before the second century. The chief use of the word has to do with ritual acts of purification (Ex. 30:19–21). It is probably safe to say that the masses of people in both the Old Testament and New Testament had neither the privacy nor the desire for bathing as we know it today. Priests washed clothes, hands, feet, or bodies before approaching the altar for sacrifice. Ceremonial defilement was removed by bathing the body and washing the clothes (Lev. 14:8). During a time of mourning or fasting, the face and clothes were left unwashed (2 Sam. 12:20), a practice forbidden by Jesus (Matt. 6:17). Lambs were washed at shearing time (Song of Sol. 4:2), babies after birth (Ezek. 16:4), and bodies in preparation for burial (Acts 9:37). Sometimes other elements such as wine and milk were used to symbolize washing in a metaphorical sense. According to Josephus, the Essene community practiced daily bathing for ceremonial reasons, a practice which excavations at Qumran appear to confirm. See Clean; Unclean. C. Dale Hill

BATH-RABBIM (Băth-răb' bĭm) Place name meaning, "daughter of many." A gate of Heshbon near which were pools of fish. Song of Solomon 7:4 uses its beauty as comparison for the beauty of the beloved lady's eyes. See Heshbon.

BATHSHEBA (Băth-shē' bà) The daughter of Eliam and the wife of Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam. 11:3). She was a beautiful woman with whom David the king had an adulterous relationship (2 Sam. 11:4). When David learned that she had become pregnant as a result of the intrigue, he embarked on a course of duplicity that led finally to the violent death of Uriah. David then took Bathsheba as his wife. She became the mother of Solomon and played an important role in ensuring he became king (1 Kings 1:11—2:19). See David.

BATHSHUA (Băth′ shū·à) Personal name meaning, "daughter of nobility." 1. Canaanite wife of Judah and mother of Er, Onan, and Shelah (1 Chron. 2:3 NAS, TEV, NRSV). KJV, NIV read, "daughter of Shua." Genesis 38:2 says her name was Shuah, while Genesis 38:12 calls her daughter of Shuah or Bath-shua. See Shuah. 2. Name for Bathsheba in 1 Chronicles 3:5. See Bathsheba.

BATS Any of an order (Chrioptera) of nocturnal placental flying mammals with forelimbs modified to form wings. Listed among the unclean birds (Lev. 11:19; Deut. 14:18). According to Isaiah 2:20, they are creatures found in dark caves where idols were to be thrown.

BATTALION RSV translation of one-tenth of a Roman legion—about six hundred men. KJV translates "band." When Pilate handed Jesus over to be crucified, the whole battalion assembled together before Jesus (Matt. 27:27; Mark 15:16). This battalion would have been the Second Italian Cohort. See Cohort.

BATTERING RAM See Arms and Armor.

BATTLE See Peace and War.

BATTLE-AX See Arms and Armor.

BAVAI (Bā′ vā·ī) (KJV), BAVVAI (NAS, TEV, RSV) Government official in Keilah who helped Nehemiah rebuild wall of Jerusalem (1 Chron. 3:18). See Keilah. NRSV, NIV read Binnui on basis of 1 Chron. 3:24 and other textual evidence. See Binnui.

BAY KJV translation of a term referring to horses in Zechariah 6:3,7. The KJV took the term as referring to the color of the horses. The earliest translators had trouble with the word as do modern versions. Recent interpreters take the Hebrew word as referring to the strength of the horses (NIV, NAS), though NRSV reads "gray" in verse 3 and "steeds" in verse 7, while REB omits the word in verse 3 and emends the text in verse 7.

BAY TREE KJV translation in Psalm 37:35. The Hebrew word ('ezrah) means "native" or "indigenous." While the bay tree is native to Palestine, Psalm 37:35 gives no indication of referring to that tree. The NRSV and TEV hardly come closer to a correct translation with cedar tree. NAS, NIV, and REB come closer to the meaning of the Hebrew text when they speak of a tree in its native soil.

BAZAAR A section of a street given over to merchants. Benhadad of Damascus gave Ahab permission to set up bazaars in Damascus as Benhadad's father had done in Samaria (1 Kings 20:34).

BAZLITH (Băz′ lĭth) Personal name meaning, "in the shadow" or "onions." Original ancestor of clan of Temple employees who returned from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:54). Name is spelled Bazluth in Ezra 2:52, which NIV reads in Nehemiah 7:54.

Modern Middle Eastern market on the island of Crete reminiscent of an ancient bazaar.

BAZLUTH (Băz′ lŭth) See Bazlith.

BDELLIUM Translation of bedolah, a word of uncertain meaning. It has been identified as a gum or resin, pearl, or stone. Genesis 2:12 mentions bdellium, gold, and onyx as products of Havilah. Numbers 11:7 likens manna to bdellium in appearance. Terms in other languages using words very similar to bedolah favor the identification with a resinous gum. In droplet form, the gum may have the appearance of a pearl or stone.

BEADS RSV translation of a term for articles of gold jewelry (Num. 31:50). The exact identification of these objects is uncertain. They are variously identified as tablets (KJV), armlets, pendants (REB, NRSV), necklaces (TEV, NIV, NAS), and breastplates.

BEALIAH (Bē·ā·lī′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh is Lord." Literally, "Yahweh is baal." Soldier who joined David at Ziklag while he fled from Saul and served the Philistines (1 Chron. 12:5).

BEALOTH (Bē′ ā·lŏth) Place name meaning, "female Baals" or "ladies." 1. Town on southern border of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:24). This may be the same as Baalath-beer (19:8). 2. Region with Asher making up a district to supply food for Solomon's court (1 Kings 4:16). KJV, NIV read, "in Aloth." This could be a common noun meaning, "in the heights." If a town is meant, its location is unknown.

BEANS A leguminous plant (Faba vulgaris,) grown in the ancient world as food. The beans mentioned in the Bible (2 Sam. 17:28; Ezek. 4:9) were the horse or broad bean. These beans were sown in the autumn and harvested sometime in mid-April just before the barley and wheat. They were cooked green in the pods or were cooked after being dried. Dried beans were threshed and winnowed like other grains.

BEAR See Animals. For the constellation, see Arcturus.

BEARD Hair growing on a man's face often excluding the mustache. Ancient Hebrews are often depicted in ancient Near Eastern art with full rounded beards. This is in contrast to Romans and Egyptians who preferred clean shaven faces and to otner desert nomads and others living in Palestine who often clipped or cut their beards (on the latter see Jer. 9:26; 25:23; 49:32). Israelites were forbidden to mar the edges of their beards by cutting them (Lev. 19:27), and priests were forbidden to cut the corners of their beards (Lev. 21:5). To have one's beard shaved was an insult (2 Sam. 10:4–5; Isa. 50:6) or used as a sign by the prophets of coming destruction (Isa. 7:20; 15:2; Jer. 41:5; 48:37; Ezek. 5:1). The regular Hebrew word for "beard" (zaqan) also means "old" and was applied to men (Judg. 19:16), slaves (Gen. 24:2), women (Zech. 8:4), and elders (Ex. 19:7). The word translated as "beard" in 2 Sam. 19:24 (sapam) probably means "mustache." The same word is also translated "lip" (Lev. 13:45; Ezek. 24:17,22; Mic. 3:7, KJV, NRSV), "[lower part of the] face" (NIV, TEV), "mouth" (Mic. 3:7, NAS, REB), "mustache" (Lev. 13:45; Ezek. 24:17,22, NAS), "upper lip" (Lev. 13:45, REB), and "beard" (Ezek. 24:17,22, REB).

BEAST Several Hebrew and Greek words and phrases are translated as "beast." "Beast" may refer to any animal in distinction from people (Eccl. 3:18–21), reptiles (Gen. 1:24), and sometimes cattle (Gen. 1:30). Beasts were divided into categories of clean and unclean (Lev. 11:1–8), and wild and domesticated (Gen. 1:24; 2:20; Ex. 19:13; 22:10; Num. 3:13; etc.). See Animals.

Apocalyptic literature such as Daniel and Revelation utilize beasts of various sorts in their symbolism (see Apocalyptic). The Old Testament used "beast" as a symbol for an enemy, and the writers of Daniel and Revelation may have built on that (Ps. 74:19; Jer. 12:9). Daniel saw four great beasts who represented four great kings arise out of the sea (Dan. 7:2–14). These four beasts would threaten God's kingdom, but God's people would prevail over them (Dan. 7:18).

The Book of Revelation speaks of two beasts. The first beast arises out of the sea (Rev. 13:1), is seven headed, and derives its authority from the dragon (Rev. 12:3; 13:4). This beast has several of the characteristics of the four beasts of Daniel 7. The second beast arises out of the earth (Rev. 13:11). It serves the first beast by seeking devotees for it and is referred to as the "false prophet" (Rev. 16:13; 19:20; 20:10). Both the beast and the false prophet persecute the church but are finally judged by Christ (Rev. 19:20; see 2 Thess. 2:6–12). See Behemoth; Leviathan.

BEATEN GOLD Thin sheets of gold produced by hammering and used to overlay objects of lesser value. Several objects were overlayed with gold in this manner: the golden shields of Solomon (1 Kings 10:16–17), the lampstands of the tabernacle (Ex. 25:18,31,36; 37:7,22; Num. 8:4), and idols (Isa. 40:19).

BEATEN OIL The highest grade of olive oil produced by crushing ripe olives in a mortar. The second grade of oil was produced by pressing the olives. The third grade of oil was produced by further crushing and pressing the pulp. Beaten oil was used in the lamps of the sanctuary (Ex. 27:20; Lev. 24:2) and with the daily sacrifices (Ex. 29:40; Num. 28:5). Solomon also used beaten oil in his trade with Hiram (1 Kings 5:11).

BEATEN SILVER Thin sheets of silver produced by hammering and used to overlay objects of lesser value such as the wooden core of an idol (Jer. 10:6–10).

BEATING See Scourging.

BEATITUDES are the opening sentences of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount which describe the quality of life of a citizen of the kingdom of God.

The word "Beatitude" comes from a Latin word meaning "happy" or "blessed." Various forms of the word "bless" are used many times in both the Old and New Testaments, but this passage alone is known as the Beatitudes. The Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5—7) sets forth the spiritual principles of the kingdom of God. They define the character of a child of the King. The Beatitudes are not to be seen as separate blessings for different believers. All the Beatitudes are to be applied and developed in all disciples both now and in the future. The eight Beatitudes have continuity. 1. "The poor in spirit" denotes the fact of sin (5:3). 2. "They that mourn" means to repent of sin (5:4). 3. "The meek" describes not the weak, but rather strength that is surrendered to God in a new birth experience (5:5). 4. To "hunger and thirst after righteousness" signifies the strong desire to become more Christ-like (5:6). 5. "The merciful" show an attitude of forgiveness (5:7). 6. "The pure in heart" strive daily for clean living (5:8). 7. "The peacemakers" exert a calming influence in the storms of life (5:9). 8. "They which are persecuted" denotes faithfulness under stress (5:10–12). Each Beatitude carries with it a strong promise of ultimate good for those who develop the blessed life. Lawson Hatfield

Church of the Beatitudes on the traditional site of the Sermon on the Mount by the Sea of Galilee.

BEAUTIFUL GATE The scene of the healing of a lame man by Peter and John (Acts 3:2,10). Neither the Old Testament nor other Jewish sources mention a "Beautiful Gate." Christian tradition has identified the gate with the Susa (or Shushan) or Golden Gate on the east side of the Temple leading from outside into the Court of the Gentiles. Modern scholars, however, identify the gate as the one on the east side of the Court of Women leading from the Court of the Gentiles. Others place it east of the Court of the Men. Josephus, a Jewish historian in the first century, described a gate of "Corinthian bronze" outside the sanctuary. Jewish sources refer to this gate as Nicanor's Gate. See Jerusalem; Temple.

Mount of Beatitudes as viewed from the Sea of Galilee. Church of the Beatitudes is in center of photo.

BEBAI (Bē′ bā-ī) Babylonian personal name meaning, "child." 1. Original ancestor of clan of whom 623 (Neh. 7:16, 628) returned with Zerubbabel from Exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:11). His son, or at least a member of the clan, led 28 men from Babylon to Jerusalem with Ezra (Ezra 8:11). Members of the clan had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:28). 2. Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:15).

BECHER (Bē′ chēr) or BEKER (NIV) 1. Personal name meaning, "firstborn" or "young male camel." Son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). He had nine sons (1 Chron. 7:8). 2. Original ancestor of clan in tribe of Ephraim (Num. 26:35). 1 Chronicles 7:20 spells the name Bered.

BECHERITE (Bē′ chēr-īte) Member of clan of Becher. See Becher.

BECHORATH (Bē-chō′ răth) KJV spelling of Becorath. See Becorath.

BECORATH (Bē-cō′ răth) Personal name meaning, "firstborn." An ancestor of King Saul (1 Sam. 9:1).

BED, BEDROOM A bed is a place to sleep or rest and may be a simple straw mat or an elaborate frame of wood, metal, stone, or ivory. A bedroom is a designated room designed for sleep or rest.

A bed for the very poor was a mere thin straw mat or cloth pad rolled out on the ground with no more than a stone for a pillow (Gen. 28:10–11; John 5:9) and an outer garment for cover. For the more fortunate poor, a multi-purpose, one room, mud house served as protection from the elements, and as a kitchen, work space, and sleeping quarters. For the very few affluent, households and palaces contained many rooms including kitchens, living rooms, libraries, and bedrooms with elaborately decorated beds (Esther 1:6; Prov. 7:16–17; Amos 6:4). A bed of iron attracted attention (Deut. 3:11). Sometimes the bed was a symbol of both the highest and the lowest moral codes of mankind. The bed is a symbol that there is no secret place secure from deception (2 Kings 6:12). In Isaiah 28:20, the bed that is too short and the cover too narrow is a symbol that there is no escape from judgment. The Scripture teaches that marriage is honorable among all people, that the marriage bed should be kept undefiled, and that God will judge the adulterer and the sexually immoral (Heb. 13:4; Rev. 2:22).

Bedroom in Herculaneum showing the Roman-style bed and walls originally decorated with frescoes.

Lawson Hatfield

BEDAD (Bē′ dăd) Personal name meaning, "scatter," or "be alone." Father of Hadad, king of Edom (Gen. 36:35).

BEDAN (Bē′ dăn) Personal name of uncertain meaning. 1. Listed as a judge in 1 Samuel 12:11. This is usually seen as work of copyist, but the original reading is uncertain. The closest name of the judges would be Barak (Judg. 4—5). Bedan is a son of Gilead in 1 Chron. 7:17 and could be another name for Jephthah, a son of Gilead (Judg. 11:1). Early Jewish rabbis read ben-Dan, "son of Dan" and thought Samson was intended (Judg. 13:2, 24). Others read Abdon (Judg. 12:13–15). NIV, TEV, NRSV read Barak for Bedan. 2. A descendant of Machir and Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:17).

BEDEIAH (Bē·dē′ iăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh alone" or "branch of Yahweh." Man with foreign wife who divorced her under Ezra's leadership to prevent tempting Israel with foreign gods (Ezra 10:35).

BEE See Insects.

BEELIADA (Beē·lī′ ȧ·dȧ) Personal name meaning, "Baal knows" or "the Lord knows." Son of David born in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 14:7). In 2 Samuel 5:16 the Baal part of the name is replaced with "El," a Hebrew word for God, becoming, "Eliada."

BEELZEBUB (Bē·ēl′ zē·bŭb) (KJV, NIV) or BEELZEBUL (NAS, TEV, NRSV) Name for Satan in New Testament spelled differently in Greek manuscripts. The term is based on Hebrew Baal-zebub, "lord of the flies." See Baal-zebub.

BEER (Bē′ ĕr) Place name meaning, "well." It frequently occurs in compound constructions of place names. For example, Beer-sheba means "well of seven." The generally arid climate of much of Palestine made wells particularly significant locations. 1. One of the camps of the Israelites during the wilderness wandering (Num. 21:16). 2. Jotham fled to Beer when he feared his brother Abimelech would kill him (Judg. 9:21). This may be modern Bireh.

BEERA (Bē·ē′ rȧ) Personal name meaning, "a well." A descendant of the tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:37).

BEERAH (Bē·ē′ răh) Personal name meaning, "a well." A leader of the tribe of Reuben taken captive by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, about 732 B.C. (1 Chron. 5:6).

BEER-ELIM (Bē′ ēr·ē′ līm) Place name meaning, "well of the rams, the heroes, the terebinths, or the mighty trees." Place involved in mourning according to Isaiah's lament over Moab (Isa. 15:8). It is probably the same as Beer (Num. 21:16), where Israel sang the song of the well. The location may be in the wadi et-Temed, northeast of Dibon.

BEERI (Bē·ē′ rī) Personal name meaning, "well." 1. Hittite father of girl Esau married, grieving his parents Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 26:34–35; 27:46). 2. Father of Hosea, the prophet (Hos. 1:1).

BEER-LAHAIROI (Bē′ ĕr·lȧ·haī′ roî) Place name meaning, "well of the Living One who sees me." Interpretation of the name and location of the place are difficult. After Sarai had Abraham put Hagar out of the house, an angel appeared to her announcing the birth of a son. Hagar interpreted this as a vision of the living God and named the well where she was, Beer-lahairoi (Gen. 16:14). Isaac passed there as he went to meet and wed Rebekah (Gen. 24:62). Isaac lived there after his father Abraham died (Gen. 25:11).

BEEROTH (Bē·ē′ rŏth) Place name meaning, "wells." 1. The wells of the sons of Jaakan, where Israel camped in the wilderness (Num. 33:31; Deut. 10:6). 2. A city of the Gibeonites to which Joshua and his army came to defend the Gibeonites after making a covenant with them (Josh. 9:17). The city was allotted the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:25). Ishbosheth's army captains came from Beeroth (2 Sam. 4:2), whose citizens had fled to Gittaim when Israel, possibly under Saul, conquered Beeroth (2 Sam. 4:3). Compare 2 Samuel 21:1–9 for Saul's dealing with the Gibeonites. Joab's armorbearer, one of David's 30 heroes, came from Beeroth (2 Sam. 23:37). Citizens of Beeroth returned with Zerubbabel from Exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:25).

The city had to be close to Gibeon, but its exact location is debated. Among suggestions are: el-Bireh, tell en-Nasbeh, Nebi Samwil, Khirbet el-Burj, Biddu, Khirbet Raddana, ras et-Tahune.

BEEROTH-BENE-JAAKAN (Bē·ē′ rŏth-bē′ nē·jā′ ȧ·kăn) NAS, NRSV translation in Deuteronomy 10:6. See Beeroth.

BEER-SHEBA (Bē′ ĕr-shē′ ba) Beer-sheba and its surrounding area factors significantly in the Old Testament from the earliest sojourns of the patriarchs (Gen. 21; 22; 26) to the return of the Hebrew exiles with Nehemiah (Neh. 11:27,30). Since it was an important crossroad to Egypt in the geographic center of the dry, semi-desert region known as the Negeb, Beersheba also served as the administrative center of the region. Settlement of the Beersheba area began before 3000 B.C.

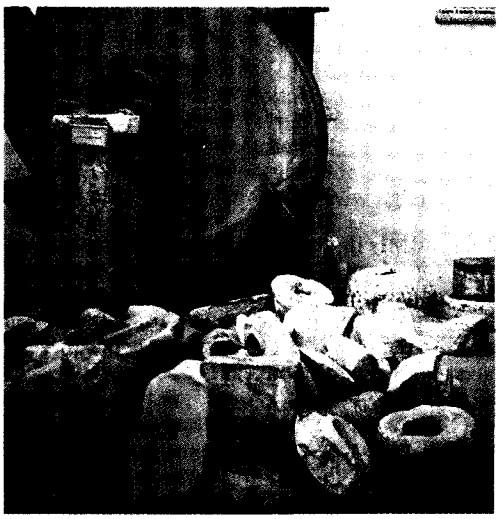
Abraham and a nearby king, Abimelech, swore to protect Abraham's right to the water of this region (Gen. 21:22–33). Abraham then named the place "Beer-sheba," meaning "well of the oath" or preferably "well of the seven," referring to seven lambs involved in the agreement. Here he called on the Lord (Gen. 21:33) and lived for some time (Gen. 22:19). The Lord confirmed His promises with Isaac at Beer-sheba (Gen. 26:23–25), where Isaac renamed his father's well "Shibah." A well is found today outside the ruins of biblical Beer-sheba (Tell es-Saba'), however, it cannot be the patriarchal well since it is dated much later, around the twelfth century. Isaac also lived in the area of Beer-sheba, and his son Jacob left there for Haran to seek a wife (Gen. 28:10). A crossroad to Egypt, Beer-sheba was a stopping place for Jacob many years later when he was encouraged by the Lord to continue on to Egypt where Joseph was awaiting him (Gen. 46:1–5). Because of these patriarchal events at Beer-sheba, it is thought that the city eventually and unfortunately became a pilgrimage destination for idolatry later during the monarchy (Amos 5:5; 8:14).

Joshua gave Beer-sheba to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:28), and then to the tribe of Simeon whose territory lay within Judah's boundaries (Josh. 19:1,2,9). Samuel's sons Joel and Abiah were unfair judges in Beer-sheba right before the monarchy began with Saul (1 Sam. 8:1–3).

Beer-sheba is mentioned idiomatically twelve times to indicate the northern and southern extremes of Israel, "Dan to Beersheba" (2 Sam. 24:2, 1 Kings 4:25). This type of phrase served to speak of Israel in its entirety and its unity; for instance, in its resolve to punish the tribe of Benjamin (Judg. 20:1) and its recognition of Samuel as a true prophet (1 Sam. 3:20). This idiom also served to show the extent of the reforms of three southern kings: Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 19:4, "Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim"), Hezekiah (2 Chron. 30:5, "Beer-sheba even to Dan"), and Josiah (2 Kings 23:8, "from Geba to Beer-sheba").



A well found at Beersheba which may date as early as 13th–14th centuries B.C.

Excavated storerooms at the site of ancient Beersheba in the Negeb.

Archaeology has shown Beer-sheba to be the administrative center of the Negeb by uncovering its large commercial storerooms and fortifications which were superior to the lesser cities in the area. The fortifications were inadequate, however, against the Assyrians who sacked the city and left in ruins until the Persian period. After the punitive Exile of Judah, the people returned to Beer-sheba and its surrounding satellite towns with Nehemiah in the fifth century (Neh. 11:27,30).

Various millstones and stone mortars from the area around Beersheba.

As the "gateway to the desert," Beer-sheba was in a precarious place climatically, which is the backdrop of two person's prayers concerning death. Hagar pleads at a distance not to see her son die (Gen. 21:14–16), and Elijah prays for death in the desert rather than at the order of Queen Jezebel (1 Kings 19:3,4).

Daniel C. Fredericks

BEESHTERAH (Bē·ĕsh′ tė·răh) Place name meaning, "in Ashtaroth" or representing a contraction of "Beth Ashtaroth," which means, "house of Ashtaroth." Place east of the Jordan from territory of tribe of Manasseh set aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:27). 1 Chronicles 6:71 spells name "Ashtaroth." See Ashtaroth.

BEGINNING AND END See Alpha and Omega.

BEHEADING See Crimes and Punishments.

BEHEMOTH (Bē′ hė·mŏth) Animal God created known for enormous strength and toughness. See Animals; Leviathan.

BEKA One-half a shekel. The amount contributed by each Israelite male for the use of the Temple (Ex. 38:26). See Weights and Measures.

BEKAH See Beka.

BEKER NIV spelling of Becher. See Becher.

BEL (Bĕl) Name of Babylonian god, originally as city patron of Nippur, but then as a second name for the high god Marduk of Babylon. Isaiah mocked Babylon by describing their gods burdening down donkeys in procession out of the city into captivity. People did not bow before them. The idols bowed down to get out of the city gates (Isa. 46:1). Similarly, Jeremiah prophesied shame coming on Bel (Jer. 50:2). Bel would have to spit out the nations he had swallowed up (Jer. 51:44). An apocryphal book is called Bel and the Dragon.

BELA (Bē′ là) or BELAH Personal and place name meaning, "he swallowed." 1. Name for Zoar. See Zoar. Its king joined coalition to fight off attacks from eastern kings (Gen. 14:2). 2. King of Edom who ruled in city of Dinhabah before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:32). 3. A son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). He became original ancestor of clan of Belaites (Num. 26:38; 1 Chron. 7:7). 4. A descendant of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:8).

BELAITES Descendants of Bela (Num. 26:38). See Bela.

BELIAL (Bē′ lĭ·ăl) The transliteration of a Hebrew common noun meaning, "useless" or "worthless." KJV interprets it as a proper name sixteen times, but modern translations translate it as a common noun, "worthless" or "wicked." It is a term of derision (Deut. 13:13). In Nahum 1:15, where the King James Version translates it as "the wicked," Belial appears to be the name of some specific malevolent power.

In the New Testament the word occurs one time (2 Cor. 6:15). There Paul the apostle declared the mutual irreconcilability of Christ and Belial, who thus appears to be equated with Satan. See Satan; Antichrist.

BELIEVE, BELIEF See Faith.

BELL A golden object fastened to the garments of the high priest which served as a signal or warning of the high priest's movements (Ex. 28:33–35; 39:25–26).

BELLOWS Instrument that blows air on a fire making it burn hotter. The term is used only in Jeremiah 6:29. God appointed Jeremiah as the assayer of His people to test their purity. God's people remained like impure metal despite the fact that the bellows had blown fiercely on the fire making it hot enough to consume lead. The refining process was in vain; the wicked remained; the people were like refuse silver. The idea of a bellows is alluded to elsewhere in the Bible (See Job 20:26; 41:21; Isa. 54:16; Ezek. 22:20–21). See Assayer.

BELOVED DISCIPLE Term used only in John's Gospel to refer to a disciple for whom Jesus had deep feelings. He has been variously identified as Lazarus, an anonymous source or author of the Gospel, an idealized disciple, or John's reference to himself without using his own name. Church tradition and interpretation of biblical evidence appear to point to John. Modestly he declined to put his name on his literary works. For this reason the one-time "son of thunder" referred to himself as the other disciple whom Jesus loved. See John.

Lawson Hatfield

BELSHAZZAR (Bĕl·shăz′ zar; Bel's prince) The Babylonian king whose drunken feast was interrupted by the mysterious appearance of the fingers of a human hand that wrote a cryptic message on the palace wall (Dan. 5:1). When the Babylonian seers were unable to interpret the writing, Daniel the Hebrew was called. He interpreted the message for the king, explaining that it meant the kingdom would be taken from Belshazzar and given to the Medes and Persians (Dan. 5:28). According to Daniel 5:30, Belshazzar was slain on the very night of this incident. See Babylon.

BELTESHAZZAR (Bĕl·tĕ·shăz′ zar) Babylonian name meaning, "protect the king's life." Name prince of eunuchs under Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, gave to Daniel (Dan. 1:7). See Daniel.

BEN (Bĕn) Hebrew noun meaning, "son of." A Levite who became head of a clan of Temple porters under David (1 Chron. 15:18 NAS, KJV). Other translations follow the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation and some Hebrew manuscripts that omit Ben.

BEN-ABINADAB (Bĕn-ȧ·bīn′ ȧ·dăb) Personal name meaning, "son of Abinadab." The district supervisor over Dor in charge of provisions for Solomon's court one month a year. He married Solomon's daughter, Taphath (1 Kings 4:11). KJV reads, "son of Abinadab."

BENAIAH (Bē·naî′ ah) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has built." 1. Captain of David's professional soldiers (2 Sam. 8:18; 20:23), known for heroic feats such as disarming an Egyptian and killing him with his own sword as well as killing a lion in the snow (2 Sam. 23:20–23). Still he was not among the top three military advisors of David (2 Sam. 20:23). His unquestioned loyalty to David led Adonijah not to include him as he attempted to replace David as king instead of Solomon (1 Kings 1:8–26). He followed David's orders and helped annoint Solomon as king (1 Kings 1:32–47). He became Solomon's executioner (1 Kings 2:25–46) and army commander (1 Kings 4:4). 2. A. Pirathonite who is listed among the elite warriors of David known as the "thirty" (2 Sam. 23:30). 3. In 1 Chronicles 4:36, a Simeonite prince who was involved in a defeat of the Amalekites. 4. In 1 Chronicles 15:18, a Levitical musician involved in the processional when the ark of the covenant was brought to Jerusalem. 5. In 1 Chronicles 15:24, a priest who sounded a trumpet when the ark was brought to Jerusalem. 6. In 2 Chronicles 20:14, an Asaphite, the grandfather of Jahaziel. 7. In 2 Chronicles 31:13, one of the overseers who assisted in the collection of contributions in the house of the Lord during the reign of Hezekiah. 8. In Ezekiel 11:1, the father of Pelatiah. 9. In Ezra 10, the name of four Israelite men who put away their foreign wives.

BEN-AMMI (Bĕn-ăm′ mī) Personal name meaning, "son of my people." Son of Lot and his younger daughter after his two daughters despaired of marriage and tricked their father after getting him drunk (Gen. 19:38). Ben-ammi was the original ancestor of the Ammonites. See Ammon.

BENCHES KJV translation for the planks of a ship's deck (Ezek. 27:6). Modern translations give the wood of the deck variously: boxwood (NAS); pine (NRSV, TEV), or cypress (NIV, REB). These translations understand the deck to be inlaid with ivory rather than made of ivory as the KJV suggests.

BEN-DEKER (Bĕn-dē′ kĕr) Personal name meaning, "son of Deker" or "son of bored through." Solomon's district supervisor in charge of supplying the royal court one month a year. His district bordered the Philistine territory on the west, reached to Aphek in the north, and to Beth-shemesh in the south (1 Kings 4:9).

BENE-BERAK (Bĕn′ ē-bē′ răk) Place name meaning, "sons of Barak" or "sons of lightning." City of tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:45). It is located at modern Ibn Ibraq, four miles southeast of Joppa. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, in 701 B.C. claims he conquered Bene-berak.

BENEDICTION A prayer for God's blessing or an affirmation that God's blessing is at hand. The most famous is the priestly benediction (or Aaronic blessing) in Numbers 6:24–25. Most New Testament epistles close with benedictions as well (Rom. 15:13; 16:25–27; 1 Cor. 16:23; 2 Cor. 13:14; Gal. 6:18; Eph. 3:20–21; 6:23–24; Phil. 4:23; 1 Thess. 5:28; 2 Thess. 3:18; 1 Tim. 4:20*b;* 2 Tim. 4:22; Titus 3:15*b;* Philemon 25; Hebrews 13:20–21,25; 1 Pet. 5:14*b;* 2 Pet. 3:18; 3 John 15*a;* Jude 24–25). See Blessing and Cursing.

BENEDICTUS Latin word meaning "blessed." The first word in Latin of Zacharias' psalm of praise in Luke 1:68–79 and thus the title of the psalm. See Magnificat; Nunc Dimittis.

BENEFACTORS An honorary title bestowed on kings or other prominent people for some meritorious achievement or public service. The title in Greek is Euergetes and was held by some of the Hellenistic kings of Egypt. One would not earn the title "benefactor" from service rendered in the kingdom of God. In contrast to the conspicuous work needed to earn the title "benefactor," the members of the kingdom are to devote themselves to humble, obscure, and perhaps menial service (Luke 22:24–27).

BENEJAAKAN (Bēn' ė·jā' ȧ·kan) Place name meaning, "sons of Jaakan." Same as Beeroth-benejaakan. See Beeroth-bene-jaakan.

BEN-GEBER (Bĕn-gē' bĕr) Personal name meaning, "son of Geber" or "son of a hero." Solomon's district supervisor in the towns northeast of the Jordan River around Ramoth-gilead (1 Kings 4:13). He provided supplies for the royal court one month a year. KJV reads, "son of Geber."

BEN-HADAD (Bĕn-hā' dăd) Personal name or royal title meaning, "son of (the god) Hadad." Biblical references to Israel's interaction with Damascus and other city-states in Syria show the power of the kings of Damascus. The kings either bore a title, "ben-hadad," son of the god, much like Israel's kings seem to have been called "son of God" at their coronation (Ps. 2:7) and as emperors of Rome were called caesars, or Ben-hadad was the personal name of several kings.
See Damascus; Syria.

BEN-HAIL (Bĕn-hā' ĭl) Personal name meaning, "son of strength." Official under King Jehoshaphat of Judah (873–848), who sent him to help teach God's law in the cities of Judah (2 Chron. 17:7).

BEN-HANAN (Bĕn-hā' năn) Personal name meaning, "son of the gracious one." Son of Shimon in lineage of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

BEN-HESED (Bĕn-hē' sĕd) Personal name meaning, "son of mercy." Solomon's district supervisor over the Mediterranean coastal region between Aphek on the south and Hepher. He supplied the royal court one month a year (1 Kings 4:10).

BEN-HINNOM (Bĕn-hĭn' nŏm) Place name meaning, "son of Hinnom." A valley south of Jerusalem serving as northern border of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:8) and southern boundary of tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:16). Pagan child sacrifices occurred here, some kings of Judah included (Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28:3; Manasseh, 2 Chron. 33:6). Jeremiah announced God's judgment on the valley because of such practices (Jer. 19:1–15). The valley would be renamed, "valley of slaughter" (Jer. 19:6). The sin of the valley gave God reason to bring the Babylonians to destroy Jerusalem (Jer. 32:35). King Josiah defiled and did away with the altars there (2 Kings 23:10). The valley served as the northern boundary of the Judean villages where the returning exiles settled (Neh. 11:30).

BEN-HUR (Bĕn-hûr') Personal name meaning, "son of a camel" or "son of Horus." Solomon's district supervisor over Mount Ephraim in charge of supplying the royal court one month a year (1 Kings 4:8).

BENINU (Bē·nī' nū) Personal name meaning, "our son." A Levite who sealed the covenant Nehemiah made to obey God's law (Neh. 10:13).

BENJAMIN (Bĕn' jȧ mĭn) Personal name meaning, "son of the right hand" or "son of the south." The second son Rachel bore to Jacob. He became the forefather of the tribe of Benjamin. His birth was difficult, and his mother named him Benoni, which means "son of my sorrow." She died giving him birth. His father Jacob, however, did not let that name stand. He gave the child the name Benjamin.

The tribe of Benjamin occupied the smallest territory of all the tribes. Yet, it played a significant role in Israelite history. Saul, Israel's first king, was a Benjamite. Furthermore, the city of Jerusalem was near the border between the territories of Benjamin and Judah and may have been in Benjamin originally (Josh. 18:16; Judg. 1:21). Benjamin's appetite for territory may be seen in Jacob's blessing (Gen. 49:27). Moses' blessing highlights Benjamin's special place in God's care (Deut. 33:12). Late in the period of the judges, Benjamin almost disappeared from history when they mistreated a Levite and his concubine (Judg. 19—21).

In the New Testament, the apostle Paul proudly proclaimed his heritage in the tribe of Benjamin (Rom. 11:1; Phil. 3:5). See Tribes of Israel; Patriarchs.

BENJAMIN GATE A gate of Jerusalem (Jer. 37:13; 38:7). Identified by some with Nehemiah's Sheep Gate or with the Muster Gate, it could indicate gate which led to tribal territory of Benjamin. See Jerusalem.

BENO (Bē' nō) Proper name meaning, "his son." A Levite under David (1 Chron. 24:26–27).

BENONI (Bĕn ō' nī) Personal name meaning, "son of my sorrow." See Benjamin.

BEN-ZOHETH (Běn-zō′ hĕth) Personal name meaning, "son of Zoheth." Son of Ishi in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

BEON (Bē′ ŏn) Place name of uncertain meaning. Probably a copyist's change from original Meon (Num. 32:3), a short form of Beth-meon or Beth-baal-meon. See Beth-baal-meon.

BEOR (Bē′ ôr) Proper name meaning, "burning." 1. Father of Bela, king of Edom centered in Dinhabah, before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:32). 2. Father of prophet Balaam (Num. 22:5). See Balaam.

BERA (Bē′ rȧ) Personal name perhaps meaning, "with evil" or "victory." King of Sodom in days of Abraham and Lot (Gen. 14:2). He joined coalition of local kings against group of invading eastern kings.

BERACAH (Bĕr′ ȧ-căh) Personal name meaning, "blessing." 1. Skilled soldier able to use right or left hand with slingshot and with bow and arrows. He joined David's band in Ziklag, when David fled from Saul and joined the Philistines (1 Chron. 12:3). 2. Valley where King Jehoshaphat of Judah (873–848 B.C.) and his people blessed God after He provided miraculous victory over Ammon, Moab, and Edom (2 Chron. 20:26). A valley near Tekoa and a modern village retain the name: wadi Berekut and khirbet Berekut.

BERACHAH (Bĕr′ ȧ-chäh) KJV spelling of Beracah. See Beracah.

BERACHIAH (Bĕr·ȧ-chī′ ăh) KJV spelling for Berechiah in 1 Chronicles 6:39. See Berechiah.

BERAIAH (Bė·raî′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh created." A descendant of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:21).

BERAKIAH (Bĕr·ȧ-kī′ ah) NIV New Testament spelling of Berechiah in Matthew 23:35. See Berechiah.

BEREA (Bė·rē′ ȧ) Place name meaning, "place of many waters." City in Macedonia to which Paul escaped after the Jews of Thessalonica rioted (Acts 17:10). See Macedonia.

BERECHIAH (Bĕr·ē·chī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh blessed." 1. A descendant of David in period after Jews returned from Exile in Babylon (1 Chron. 3:20). 2. Father of Asaph (1 Chron. 6:39). See Asaph. 3. A leader of the Levites after the return from Exile who lived around the city of Netophah (1 Chron. 9:16). 4. A Levite in charge of the ark when David moved it to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:23). He could be identical with 2. above. 5. A leader of the tribe of Ephraim who rescued prisoners of war Pekah, king of Israel (752–732), had taken from Ahaz, king of Judah (735–715) (2 Chron. 28:12). 6. Father of Meshullam, who repaired the wall with Nehemiah (Neh. 3:4). His family was tied in marriage to Tobiah, Nehemiah's enemy (Neh. 6:17–19). 7. Father of the prophet Zechariah (Zech. 1:1; Matt. 23:35).

BERED (Bē′ rĕd) Personal name meaning, "cool." 1. Place used by Bible to locate Beer-lahai-roi (Gen. 16:14), but a place that cannot be located today. 2. A son of Ephraim (1 Chron. 7:20). Numbers 26:35 spells the name Becher.

BERI (Bē′ rī) Personal name of unknown meaning. A descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:36). Many Bible students think a copyist has changed original text which may have read, bene (sons of).

BERIAH (Bė·rī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh created." 1. Son of Asher and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:17). He thus became original ancestor of clan of Beriites (Num. 26:44). 2. Son of Ephraim born after his sons Ezer and Elead died in battle against Gath. Beraiah's name is explained here not as a compound of bara' + Yah (Yahweh created) but as a compound of b + ra'ah (with evil). His daughters built the two cities named Beth-horon (1 Chron. 7:20–25). 3. A clan leader of the tribe of Benjamin in the area of Ajalon. He helped drive out the inhabitants of Gath (1 Chron. 8:13). 4. A Levite under King David (1 Chron. 23:10).

BERIITE (Bė·rī′ īte) Member of clan descended from Beriah. See Beriah.

BERITE (Bē′ rīte) Word of unknown meaning (2 Sam. 20:14). Some Bible students think original text read Bichrites, referring to clan to which Sheba, son of Bichri belonged (2 Sam. 20:13). See TEV, NRSV. Some would identify the Berites as residents of a town called Biria in northern Palestine.

BERITH (Bē′ rĭth) Hebrew word meaning, "covenant." See Baal-berith; Covenant.

BERNICE (Bĕr nī′ cė; gift) The companion of Herod Agrippa II (Acts 25:13). She was the daughter of Herod Agrippa I, born probably about A.D. 28. Prior to her appearance in Acts, she had been married first to a person named Marcus, then to her own uncle Herod. Two sons were born as a result of the latter union before Bernice was widowed in A.D. 48. In the following years, an incestuous relationship is suggested between Agrippa II and her. Later she was married again, to Polemo, the king of Cilicia. According to the Roman historian Tacitus, she was also the mistress of the Roman emperor Titus. See Herod.

BERODACH BALADAN (Bĕ·rō′ dăch Băl′ ā·dăn) King of Babylon who wrote Hezekiah, king of Judah (2 Kings 20:12). Parallel passage in Isaiah 39:1 reads Merodoch Baladan, so most Bible students think Berodach resulted from a copyist's change in the text. Compare NIV, TEV, NRSV. See Merodach Baladan.

BEROEA (Bĕ·rōe′ ā) NRSV spelling of Berea. See Berea.

BEROTHAH (Bĕ·rō′ thăh) Place name meaning, "wells." Northern border town in Ezekiel's vision of restored Promised Land (Ezek. 47:16). It may be located east of the Jordan River about seven miles south of Baalbeck at Bereiten. See Berothai.

BEROTHAI (Bē·rō′ thaî) Place name meaning, "wells." City in Syria from which David took brass as tribute after he defeated King Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8:8). The parallel passage (1 Chron. 18:8) reads Chun or Cun and says Solomon used the brass for Temple vessels. The exact relationship of Berothah, Berothai, and Cun cannot be determined. The three are usually identified as the same place, but some Bible students dispute this. At the date when Chronicles was written, Cun may have been better known than nearby Berothai. See Cun.

BEROTHITE (Bē′ rŏth·īte) Person from Beeroth (1 Chron. 11:39). See Beeroth.

BERYL (Bĕ′ rŷl) A light green precious stone closely related to emeralds and aquamarines. See Minerals and Metals.

BESAI (Bē′ saî) Personal name of unknown meaning. A clan of Temple employees who returned from Exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:49).

BESODEIAH (Bĕs·ō·deî′ ah) Personal name meaning, "in Yahweh's counsel." Father of Meshullam, who helped Nehemiah repair the gate of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:6).

BESOM Broom made of twigs (Isa. 14:23 KJV).

BESOR (Bē′ sôr) Place name perhaps meaning, "wadi of the good news." Brook where David left 200 weary soldiers while he and the remaining 400 pursued the Amalekites after they had burned Ziklag and captured David's wives (1 Sam. 30:9–10). David rewarded those who stayed as well as those who fought (1 Sam. 30:21–24). The Besor is probably wadi Ghazzeh about fifteen miles south of Ziklag.

BESTIALITY Sexual intercourse between a human and an animal, punishable by death in Old Testament legal codes. (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 20:15–16; see Lev. 18:23; Deut. 27:21). Israel's neighbors practiced bestiality in fertility worship and worship of animal gods.

BETAH (Bē′ tăh) Place name meaning, "security." City from which King David took brass after defeating King Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8:8). See Berothai. 1 Chronicles 18:8 lists Betah as Tibhath. See Tibhath. Thus NIV reads Tebah in 2 Samuel 8:8.

BETEN (Bē′ tĕn) Place name meaning, "womb." Border town of tribe of Asher (Josh 19:25). It may be located at khirbet Abtun eleven miles south of Acco.

BETH-ABARA (Bĕth·ăb′ ā·rā) Place name meaning, "house of crossing." KJV reading for Bethany in John 1:28 following some Greek manuscripts. See Bethany.

BETH-ANATH (Bĕth·ā′ năth) Place name meaning, "house of Anath." A fortified city in the territory of the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38). The tribe could not drive out the Canaanites from the city (Judg. 1:33). Beth-anath was apparently a worship center for the Canaanite goddess Anath. It may have been located at modern Safed el-Battik, fifteen miles east of Tyre.

BETH-ANOTH (Bĕth·ā′ nŏth) Place name meaning, "house of Anath" or "house of being heard." A city of Judah (Josh. 15:59). A temple to the Canaanite goddess Anath may have been here. The modern location may be khirbet beit Ainur, one and a half miles southeast of Halhul.

BETHANY (Bĕth′ ā nŷ) Known primarily in the Gospels as the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus, ancient Bethany occupied an important place in the life of Jesus. Jesus often found Himself staying in Bethany at the home of his closest friends as He ministered in Jerusalem.

Background of the City Located on the Mt. of View of the ancient city of Bethany, the hometown of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus.

Olives' eastern slope, Bethany sat "about two miles" (John 11:18, NIV) southeast of Jerusalem. Bethany became the final stop before Jerusalem just off the main east-west road coming from Jericho. Being at the foot of the mountain, the people could not see Jerusalem, thus giving Bethany a sense of seclusion and quietness. The road between Bethany and Jerusalem provided a ready avenue for travel across Olivet with the journey taking about fifty-five minutes to walk.

Role of the City in the Bible The primary event in the New Testament taking place in Bethany involved the raising of Lazarus from the dead (John 11–12). This magnificent miracle by Jesus demonstrated His authority, prepared for His resurrection, and was even magnified through the name of His friend, Lazarus (an abbreviation of Eleazar, "God has helped").

Another significant event in Jesus' life occurred in Bethany at the home of Simon the Leper (Matt. 26:6; Mark 14:3). Late on the Tuesday night of Jesus' last week, a woman (recognized as Mary in John 12:3) gave Jesus His "burial anointment." Coming to Jesus in the sight of all, she brought a costly alabaster vial of perfume and emptied its contents upon Jesus' head ("feet" in John 12:3).

Besides a number of smaller references to Bethany, one final event took place there. Bethany provided the location for Jesus' final blessing to His disciples and His subsequent parting. This encounter made up the final scene of ascension in Luke's Gospel (24:50–53). Larry McGraw BETH-ARABAH (Bĕth-ăr' ȧ·băh) Place name meaning, "house of the desert." A border town of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:6, 61) also claimed as a city of Benjamin (Josh. 18:22). It may be modern Ain el-Gharbah southeast of Jericho.

BETH-ARAM KJV spelling of Beth-haram. See Beth-haram.

BETH-ARBEL (Bĕth-är' bĕl) Place name meaning, "house of Arbel." Sight of infamous battle Hosea could use as example of what would happen to Israel (Hos. 10:14). The battle is unknown to us. The site may be Irbid in Gilead, four miles northwest of Tiberius. See Shalman.

BETH-ASHBEA (Bĕth-ăsh' bė·ȧ) Place of unknown location in Judah known for clans of linen workers, thus giving evidence of craft guilds in Israel (1 Chron. 4:21).

BETH-AVEN (Bĕth-ā' vēn) Place name meaning, "house of deception" or "of idolatry." 1. A city near Ai east of Bethel (Josh. 7:2). It formed a border of Benjamin (Josh. 18:12) and was west of Michmash (1 Sam. 13:5). Saul defeated the Philistines here after God used his son Jonathan to start the victory (1 Sam. 14:23). The exact location is not known. Suggestions include Burqa, south of Bethel; tell Maryam; and Ai. 2. Hosea used the term as a description of Beth-el. Instead of a house of God, Beth-el had become a house of deception and idolatry. Thus he commanded worshipers to refuse to go there (Hos. 4:15), to prepare for battle against an army marching from the south against Benjamin (5:8), and to be afraid of the golden calves in the worship place of Beth-el, not because they represented the fearful presence of God but because they brought disaster on the nation (10:5). All the worship places were Aven, deception and idolatry (10:8).

BETH-AZMAVETH (Bĕth-ăz·mā' vĕth) Place name meaning, "house of the strength of death." Home town of 42 people who returned to Palestine with Zerubbabel from Exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:28). Ezra 2:24 calls the town Azmaveth. It may be modern Hizmeh about two miles north of Anathoth.

BETH-BAAL-MEON (Bĕth-bā' ȧl-mē' ŏn) Place name meaning, "house of Baal's residence." City allotted tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:17). Same as Baal-meon. See Baal-meon.

BETH-BARAH (Bĕth-bâr·ah) Place name meaning, "house of God." A ford over the Jordan River and/or the village there if text of Judges 7:24 is correct. Many Bible scholars think copyists have changed the original text, introducing a place name not in the text.

BETH-BIREI (Bĕth-bir' ė·ī) KJV spelling of Beth-biri. See Beth-biri.

BETH-BIRI (Bĕth-bir' ī) Place name meaning, "house of my creation." Town allotted tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:31). It is apparently the same as Lebaoth (Josh. 15:22) and Beth-lebaoth (Josh. 19:6). The location is uncertain.

BETHCAR (Bĕth' cär) Place name meaning, "house of sheep." Final site of battle where God thundered from heaven to defeat the Philistines for Samuel (1 Sam. 7:11). The location is not known unless copyists changed an original Beth Horon as some Bible students think.

BETH-DAGON (Beth-da' gŏn) Place name meaning, "house of Dagon." Apparently the name indicates a worship place of Philistine god Dagon. 1. Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:41). It is probably modern khirbet Dajun on the road connecting Ramalleh and Joppa. 2. Town in Asher (Josh. 19:27) without certain present location.

BETH-DIBLATHAIM (Bĕth-dĭb·lȧ·thā' ĭm) Place name meaning, "house of the two fig cakes."

Town in Moab on which Jeremiah prophesied judgment (Jer. 48:22). About 830 B.C., Mesha, king of Moab, bragged that he built the city, as recorded on the Moabite Stone. It may be present-day khirbet et-Tem. See Almon-diblathaim.

BETH-EDEN (Bĕth-ē' dĕn) Place name meaning, "house of bliss." Amos announced God's threat to take the royal house out of Beth-eden or the "house of Eden" (KJV) (Amos 1:5). He was obviously referring to a place in Syria. Assyrian records refer to Bit-adini, a city-state between the Euphrates and Balik rivers, somewhat north of Syria proper. Ashurbanipal II conquered it in 856 B.C. An Assyrian representative bragged about conquering Beth-Eden, urging Hezekiah to surrender about 701 B.C. (2 Kings 19:12). Ezekiel included Eden as one of the states who had traded with Tyre (Ezek. 27:23).

BETH-EKED (Bĕth-ē' kĕd) Place name meaning, "house of shearing" (KJV, "shearing house"). Place where Jehu, after slaughtering all members of King Ahab's house in Jezreel, met representatives from King Ahaziah of Judah and killed them (2 Kings 10:12–14). It is traditionally located at beit Qad, four miles northeast of Jenin, but recent studies question this location. Whatever its location, it must have been a meeting place and perhaps a marketplace for shepherds.

BETHEL (Bĕth' ēl; house of God) 1. Bethel was important in the Old Testament for both geographic and religious reasons. Because of its abundant springs, the area was fertile and attractive to settlements as early as 3200 B.C., and first supported a city around the time of Abraham. Today the village of Beitin rests on much of the ruins of Bethel. Located at the intersection of the main north-south road through the hill country and the main road from Jericho to the coastal plain, Bethel saw much domestic and international travel. Bethel became a prominent border town between tribes and the two kingdoms later. Religiously, Bethel served as a sanctuary during the times of the patriarchs, judges, and the divided kingdom, hence was second only to Jerusalem as a religious center.

Entering Canaan, Abraham built an altar at Bethel, calling "upon the name of the LORD" (Gen. 12:8), and returned here after his time in Egypt (Gen. 13:3). His grandson, Jacob, spent the night here on his way to Syria to find a wife. In a dream the Lord confirmed the Abrahamic covenant, and Jacob responded by renaming this locale which was previously called Luz, "Bethel" ("house of God"; Gen. 28:10–22). Probably the name "Bethel" is referred to but out of chronological sequence in the earlier Abraham passages. When he returned with his large family, Jacob came to Bethel again to hear the Lord's confirmation of the covenant and his name was changed to "Israel." Here again Jacob set up a stone monument (Gen. 35:1–16; Hos. 12:4,5). Extensive fortification of Bethel came after this patriarchal period.

At the time of the conquest, Bethel and Ai were taken together (Josh. 7:2; 8:3–17; 12:9,16), but the definitive defeat of Bethel is recounted later in Judges 1:22–26. It was a Benjamite border town initially (Josh. 16:1,2; 18:13,22). Later it was a part of the Northern Kingdom (1 Chron. 7:28), only briefly annexed to Judah by Abijah (2 Chron. 13:19).

The ark of the covenant was kept in Bethel during a period of the judges (Judg. 20:27), so the tribes converged there upon Benjamin to avenge the moral atrocity at Gibeah (Judg. 20:18–28), offering sacrifices and seeking the Lord's direction (Judg. 21:1–4). Bethel also was a place where both Deborah (Judg. 4:5) and Samuel (1 Sam. 7:16) judged the civil and religious affairs of the Israelites in the area. Bethel was evidently vulnerable at the time of the judges, since archaeology shows it to have been destroyed several times in this period.

David considered the city significant enough to send it gifts during his flight as a fugitive from Saul, hoping to establish a friendship of diplomatic value in the future (1 Sam. 30:27). When he eventually named Jerusalem his capital, Bethel grew and prospered.

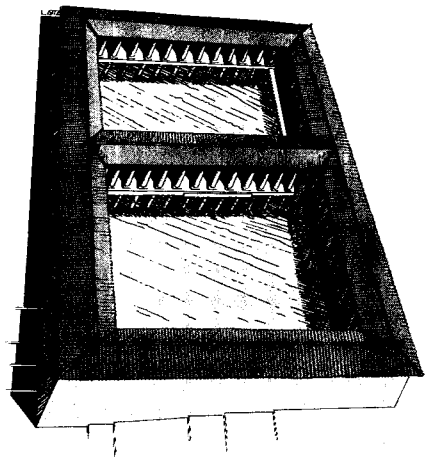
Whereas Bethel had been a place of orthodox worship from Abraham to the judges, Jeroboam I made it a religious center of his innovative, apostate religion of the Northern Kingdom. He erected a golden calf both here and in Dan with non-Levitic priests and an illegitimate feast to compete with the celebrations and religion of Jerusalem, ten and a half miles to the south in Judah (1 Kings 12:29–33). Bethel was the prominent site over Dan. There an anonymous prophet from Judah found and rebuked Jeroboam I and brought destruction to the king's altar (1 Kings 13:1–10). Another anonymous prophet from Bethel entrapped the first prophet into disobedience. Because of his disobedience, the Lord caused a lion to kill the first prophet (1 Kings 13:11–25).

Other true prophets seem to have been attached to Bethel even during the time of northern apostasy, since Elijah encountered a group of them there as he traveled (2 Kings 2:2–3). Amos was sent to Bethel to rebuke the kingdom of Jeroboam II in the eighth century (Amos 7:10–13) since it was the center of northern idolatry and a royal residence. He met the resistance of Amaziah, the priest, who vainly ordered him to leave the city. In addition to Amos' prophetic charges against those who sacrificed there (Amos 4:4), he predicted the destruction of Bethel and its false altars (Amos 3:14, 5:5,6), as did Hosea (Hos. 10:14,15). Hosea seems to have played with the name of Bethel ("city of God"), by referring to it as "Beth-aven"

("city of a false [god]," Hos. 5:8,9; 10:5).

The religious significance of Bethel is confirmed also by Assyria's appointment of a priest to this city to teach the new residents of the north who displaced the Israelites (2 Kings 17:28). Later, Josiah desecrated another false altar of Bethel during his reforms (2 Kings 23:4–19) and perhaps annexed the city to his Southern Kingdom.

Bethel was destroyed in the sixth century during the Exile; however, some returned there when released by the Persians (Ezra 2:28; Neh. 7:32; 11:31).



Since it was a late first century Roman garrison town, it was probably a city of importance at the time of Christ. 2. Another city variously spelled Bethul (Josh. 19:4), Bethuel (1 Chron. 4:30), and Bethel (1 Sam. 30:27). This may be modern khirbet el Qaryatein north of Arad.

2. Bethel was apparently the name of a West Semitic god. Many scholars find reference to this deity in Jeremiah 48:13. Others would find the mention of the deity in other passages (especially Gen. 31:13; Amos 5:5). Daniel C. Fredericks

BETHELITE (Bĕth' el-īte) Resident of Bethel (1 Kings 16:34). See Bethel.

BETH-EMEK (Bĕth-ē' mĕk) Place name meaning, "house of the valley." A border town in the tribal territory of Asher (Josh. 19:27). Located at modern tel Mimas, six and a half miles northeast of Acco.

The Pool of Bethesda at Jerusalem. A spring-fed pool near the Sheep Gate at Jerusalem, used by the sick for healing. Jesus healed a man there who had been stricken with an unidentified infirmity for thirty-eight years.

BETHER (Bē' thĕr) Place name meaning, "division." A mountain range used as an emotional image in Song of Solomon 2:17. NIV reads, "rugged hills."

BETHESDA (Bē thĕs' dà) The name of a pool in Jerusalem where Jesus healed a man who had been sick for thirty-eight years (John 5:2). The name, appropriately, means "house of mercy." Most ancient manuscripts identify Bethesda as the place of the pool. Some ancient manuscripts name it Bethzatha or Bethsaida. The third edition of the United Bible Societies Greek New Testament places Bethzatha in the text and the other readings in footnotes. The waters of the pool were popularly believed to possess curative powers. Truly, the man who was healed after thirty-eight years experienced the outpouring of God's mercy on the sabbath. The references to the pool being stirred by angels (John 5:3*b*–4) are not found in either the oldest or the majority of manuscripts. However, regardless of the disagreement among manuscripts on the name of the pool or the angel passage, the pool did exist. Today this pool is identified with the series of pools found near the church of St. Anne. See Healing.

BETH-EZEL (Bĕth-ē' zĕl) Proper name meaning, "house of the leader" or "house at the side." City Micah used in a wordplay to announce judgment on Judah about 701 B.C. All support would be taken away from the house of the leader or the house beside (Mic. 1:11). The location may be deir el-Asal two miles east of tell beit Mirsim.

BETH-GADER (Bĕth-gā' der) City founded by or controlled by descendants of Hareph, a descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:51). It is probably the same as Geder (Josh. 12:13), if that is the proper reading. Some students of Joshua suggest the original text read Gezer or Gerar.

BETH-GAMUL (Bĕth-gā' mŭl) Place name meaning, "house of retaliation." City in Moab on which Jeremiah announced judgment (Jer. 48:23). Its location was modern khirbet el-Jemeil about seven miles east of Dibon.

BETH-GILGAL (Bĕth-gĭl' găl) Place name meaning, "house of the wheel or circle." A village of Levitical singers near Jerusalem whose occupants participated in the dedication of the newly built city wall under Nehemiah (Neh. 12:29). It is probably the same as Gilgal. See Gilgal.

BETH-HACCEREM (Bĕth-hăc' če-rĕm) or BETH-HACCHEREM Place name meaning, "house of the vineyard." City used to signal that enemies approached from the north (Jer. 6:1). Its leading official helped Nehemiah repair the dung gate (Neh. 3:14). It is probably modern Ramat Rahel halfway between Jerusalem and Bethlehem. Archaeological excavations show it was founded about 800 B.C. It sits high on a hill surveying the surrounding countryside. One of the later kings of Judah built a grand palace there. Apparently Jehoiakim (609–597) built the palace, which fits the description of Jeremiah 22:13–19. After the return from Exile, it served as an administrative center.

BETH-HAGGAN (Bĕth-hăg′ găn) Place name (NIV, TEV, NRSV) or common noun (KJV, NAS) meaning, "house of the garden." King Ahaziah of Judah (841 B.C.) fled there from Jehu, but Jehu finally caught up and killed him (2 Kings 9:27). It is probably modern Jenin, southeast of Tanaach.

BETH-HANAN (Bĕth-hā′ năn) Place name meaning, "house of grace." A city in Solomon's second district (1 Kings 4:9 TEV). See Elon-beth-hanan.

BETH-HARAM (Bĕth-hā′ răm) Place name meaning, "house of the exalted one," or "house of height." (KJV, Beth-aram). A city Moses allotted the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:27). It is probably tell er-Rameh though others suggest tell Iktanu. It is probably the same as Beth-haran. See Beth-haran.

BETH-HARAN (Bĕth-hā′ răn) Place name meaning, "house of height." Town east of the Jordan the tribe of Gad strengthened after Moses gave it to them (Num. 32:36). It is probably the same as Beth-haram. See Beth-haram.

BETH-HOGLAH (Beth-hŏg′ lăh) Place name meaning, "house of the partridge." Border city between tribes of Judah and Benjamin (Josh. 15:6; 18:19,21). It is probably modern Ain Hajlah four miles southeast of Jericho.

BETH-HORON (Bĕth-hō′ rŏn) Place name of uncertain meaning. Suggestions include, "house of caves," "house of anger," "house of the hollow," "house of (the god) Hauron." Twin cities, one higher than the other, and so called Upper and Lower Beth Horon. An important road here dominates the path to the Shephelah, the plain between the Judean hills and the Mediterranean coast. Joshua used the road to chase the coalition of southern kings led by the king of Jerusalem (Josh. 10:10). Here God cast hail stones on the enemies. The border between the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin was at Beth-horon (Josh. 16:3,5; 18:13–14). The city belonged to Ephraim but was set aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:22). The Philistines sent one unit of their army the way of Beth-horon to attack Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam. 13:18). Solomon rebuilt the lower city as a stone city and as a defense outpost (1 Kings 9:17). The chronicler preserved an even earlier tradition of a descendant of Ephraim, a woman named Sherah, building the two cities (1 Chron. 7:22–24). When King Amaziah of Judah (796–767 B.C.) followed a prophet's advice and sent home mercenary soldiers he had hired from Israel, those soldiers fought the cities of Judah, including Beth-horon (2 Chron. 25:13). Upper Beth Horon is modern beit Ur el-Foqa, five miles northwest of Gibeon and ten miles northwest of Jerusalem. It is 1750 feet above sea level. Lower Beth Horon is two miles to the east and only 1050 feet above sea level. It is modern beit Ur et-Tahta.

BETH-JESHIMOTH (Bĕth-jĕsh′ ĭ-mŏth) or BETH-JESIMOTH (KJV spelling at Num. 33:49). Place name meaning, "house of deserts." A town in Moab where Israel camped just before Moses died and Joshua led them across the Jordan (Num. 33:49). Joshua 12:3 lists it as land Israel took from Sihon, king of the Amorites. Moses gave it to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:20). Ezekiel described it as one of three frontier cities of Moab, these being "the glory of the country" (Ezek. 25:9), but one facing God's judgment. It is usually located at modern tell el-Azeme, twelve miles southeast of Jericho.

BETH-LE-APHRAH (Bĕth-lĕ-aph′ răh) Place name meaning, "place of dust." Town Micah used in a wordplay to announce judgment on Judah. The house of dust would roll in dust, a ritual expressing grief and mourning (Mic. 1:10). The location is uncertain, perhaps et-Taijibe between beit Gibrin and Hebron. KJV reads, "house of Aphrah"; NIV, "Beth Ophrah."

BETH-LEBAOTH (Bĕth-lĕb′ ā-ŏth) Place name meaning, "house of lionesses." City in territorial allotment of tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:6). It is apparently the same as Lebaoth in Judah's inheritance (Josh. 15:32). This is called Beth-birei in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 4:31). Its location is not certain.

BETHLEHEM (Bĕth′ lĕ hĕm) Place name meaning, "house of bread," "fighting," or "Lahamu" [god]. 1. Approximately five miles southwest of Overview of the city of Bethlehem in Israel.

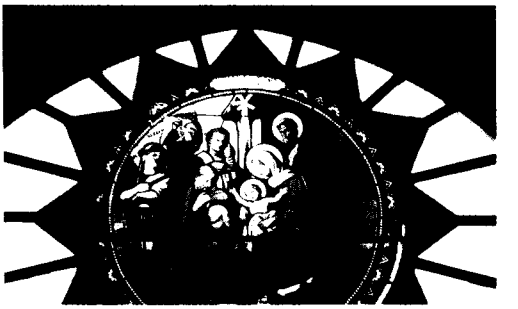
Jerusalem just off the major road from Jerusalem to the Negeb lies the modern Arabic village Bethlehem. The popular understanding is that the name, beth lehem, means "house of bread." Perhaps the first mention of the village occurred before 1300 B.C. in the Amarna letters (No. 290) where the ruler of Jerusalem complained to the Egyptian pharaoh that the people of Bit–Lahmi had gone over to the side of the "Apiru," apparently a people without local citizenship who caused disturbances in Canaanite society.

Small entrance to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. Archway was filled to keep out horsemen.



In the Old Testament the parenthetical reference to Bethlehem in Genesis 35:19 is perhaps derived from a traditional burial site for Rachel near the village. Bethlehem appears in Judges 17:7–13 as the home of the Levite who became priest to Micah. The concubine of the Levite of Ephraim was from the village of Bethlehem (Judg. 19). The Book of Ruth takes place in the region of Bethlehem (Ruth 1:1–2,19,22; 2:4; 4:11). This story leads to the events that gave major importance to the village as the home and place of anointing of David (1 Sam. 16:1–13; 17:12,15).

Other Old Testament references to the village include the mention of a Philistine garrison being there during David's early kingship (2 Sam.

Traditional site of the manger of the infant Jesus, inside the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

23:14), Elhanan's home (2 Sam. 23:24), the burial place of Asahel (2 Sam. 2:32), and a fort of Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:6). Bethlehem is also mentioned with reference to the Babylonian Exile (Jer. 41:17; Ezra 2:21).

Stained glass window depicting the nativity scene at the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

It is the relationship of Bethlehem to Christ that has insured its place in Christian history. Micah 5:2 was understood to indicate that the Messiah, like David, would be born in Bethlehem not Jerusalem. Matthew (2:1–12), Luke (2:4–20), and John (7:42) report that Jesus was born in that humble village. It appears that early Christians believed that some caves east of the village were the holy site of the birth.

A field southeast of town has been identified as the place where the shepherds had the vision of the angels. 2. A town in the territory of Zebulun, about seven miles northwest of Nazareth (Josh. 19:15), which was the burial site of Ibzan (Judg. 12:10), in modern beit Lahm. 3. A personal name as in 1 Chronicles 2:51, 54. George W. Knight

BETHLEHEM-EPHRATAH (KJV) or BETHLEHEM-EPHRATHAH (NAS, NIV, NRSV) Place name used by Micah 5:2 to designate birthplace of new David who would come from Bethlehem, David's birthplace, and of the clan of Ephratah, that of Jesse, David's father (1 Sam. 17:12). See Bethlehem.

BETHLEHEMITE Citizen of Bethlehem. See Bethlehem.

BETH-MAACAH (Bĕth-mā′ ȧ·căh) (NAS, NRSV) or BETH-MAACHAH (KJV) Place name meaning, "house of Maacah" or "house of pressure." Usually appears as Abel Beth-Maacah (always so in NIV). See Abel-Beth-Maacah. Form Beth-Maacah apparently appears as final stop on Sheba's trip through Israel to gain support against David (2 Sam. 20:14).

BETH-MARCABOTH (Bĕth-mär′ cȧ·bŏth) Place name meaning, "house of chariots." City allotted to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:5). Its location is uncertain.

BETH-MEON (Bĕth-mē′ ŏn) Place name meaning, "house of residence." City in Moab on which Jeremiah pronounced judgment (Jer. 48:23). Apparently the same as Beth-baal-meon and Baal-meon. See Beth-baal-meon; Baal-meon.

BETH-MILLO (Bĕth-mĭl′ lō) Place name meaning, "house of fulness." 1. A part of Shechem or a fortress guarding Shechem, where the citizens of Shechem proclaimed Abimelech king. Jotham, Jerubaal's (or Gideon's) son asked citizens to overthrow Abimelech at Beth Millo (Judg. 9:6,20). See Millo, Shechem. 2. A fortification in Jerusalem where two of his servants killed King Joash (835-796 B.C.—1 Kings 12:19). It is also called, "Millo." See Jerusalem; Millo.

BETH-NIMRAH (Beth-nĭm′ răh) Place name meaning, "house of the panther." City east of the Jordan that tribe of Gad rebuilt after Moses allotted it to them (Num. 32:36). It provided good grazing land (Num. 32:3). It is located at either tell Nimrin or nearby at tell el-Bleibil, about ten miles northeast of the mouth of the Jordan.

BETH-OPHRAH (Bĕth-ōph′ răh) NIV spelling of Beth-le-Aphrah. See Beth-le-Aphrah.

BETH-PALET (Bĕth-pā′ lĕt) KJV spelling in Joshua 15:27 of Beth-pelet. See Beth-pelet.

BETH-PAZZEZ (Bĕth-păz′ zĕz) Place name meaning, "house of scattering." Town in tribal allotment of Issachar (Josh. 19:22). It may be modern kerm el-Hadetheh.

BETH-PELET (Bĕth-pē′ lĕt) Place name meaning, "house of deliverance." Southern town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:27). After the return from Exile in Babylon, the Jews lived there (Neh. 11:26). KJV spellings are Beth-palet, Beth-phelet. The location is not known.

BETH-PEOR (Bĕth-pē′ ôr) Place name meaning, "house of Peor." A temple for the god Peor or Baal Peor probably stood there. See Baal Peor. Town in whose valley Israel camped as Moses delivered the sermons of the Book of Deuteronomy (Deut. 3:29). It had belonged to Sihon, king of the Amorites (Deut. 4:46). Moses died and was buried near there (Deut. 34:6). It belonged to tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:20). It was located at modern khirbet Uyun Musa, twenty miles east of the north end of the Dead Sea. Numbers does not use the place name, but evidently at least part of the shameful worship of Baal Peor (Num. 25:1–5) occurred at Beth-peor. Hosea described the actions of Peor as a turning point in Israel's blissful honeymoon with God (Hos. 9:10). See Peor.

BETHPHAGE (Bĕth′ phăġē) Place name meaning, "house of unripe figs." A small village located on the Mount of Olives near Bethany on or near the road between Jerusalem and Jericho. Reference is made to the village in each of the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. 21:1; Mark 11:1; Luke 19:29). In each account Bethphage was where Jesus gave instruction to two disciples to find the colt on which he would ride into Jerusalem for His triumphal entry. This may also be the place where the fig tree was cursed (Matt. 21:18–22; Mark 11:12–14, 20–26). Today one may still find rolling stone tombs in Bethphage, such as our Lord was buried in. See Mt. of Olives; Triumphal Entry. William Vermillion BETH-RAPHA ((Bĕth-rā′ phà) Place name meaning, "house of a giant." 1 Chronicles 4:12 says the otherwise unknown Eshton "became the father of Beth-rapha" (NAS). This apparently describes the beginning of a clan who lived at the town whose name is not known. The name could have distant relationships to the Rephaim (Deut. 3:11), though the Bible nowhere makes such relationships.

BETH-PHELET (Bĕth-phē′ lĕt) See Beth-pelet.

BETH-REHOB (Bĕth-rē′ hŏb) Place name meaning, "house of the market." Town near where tribe of Dan rebuilt Laish and renamed it Dan (Judg. 18:28). Rehob was the father of Hadadezer, the Syrian king of Zobah (2 Sam. 8:3). Beth-rehob may have been their hometown. When the Ammonites made David angry by humiliating his officials, Ammon sent to Beth-rehob for Syrian soldiers, evidently indicating that Syria controlled the city. The town lay at the southern foot of Mount Hermon. See Rehob.

BETHSAIDA (Bĕth sā′ ĭ dà) Place name meaning, "house of fish." The home of Andrew, Peter, and Philip (John 1:44; 12:21), located on the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee. This town was rebuilt under Philip the tetrarch, one of Herod the Great's sons, who named it Julius in honor of the Emperor Augustus' daughter. Near here Jesus fed the 5,000 (Luke 9:10) and healed a blind man (Mark 8:22). Jesus pronounced judgment upon Bethsaida for its lack of response to His message and miracles (Matt. 11:21; Luke 10:13). The site of Bethsaida has yet to be identified archaeologically. Some scholars do propose two sites named Bethsaida: The one northeast of the Sea of Galilee, as already discussed; and another, west of the Sea of Galilee, close to Capernaum. This postulation is based on Mark 6:45, where following the feeding of the 5,000 outside Bethsaida, Jesus tells His disciples to sail to Bethsaida. However, there is no contemporary mention of two Bethsaidas, and the Mark 6 text can just as easily refer to a short trip to the known city of Bethsaida-Julias as to an unknown town. William Vermillion

BETH-SHAN or BETHSHAN (Bĕth-Shän) See Beth-Shean.

The Graeco-Roman theater at Beth-shean (tel el-Husn) in Israel.

BETH-SHEAN (Bĕth-shē′ an) Place name meaning, "house of quiet." Beth-shean stood at the crossroad of the Jezreel and Jordan Valleys, commanding the routes north-south along the Jordan and east-west from Gilead to the Mediterranean Sea. Tell el-Husn, site of ancient Beth-shean, stands above the perennial stream of Harod, the city's primary water supply, giving the city a commanding view of the two valleys.

Excavation of tell el-Husn and its surroundings were carried on by the University of Pennsylvania in several campaigns from 1921 to 1933. Settlements at Beth-shean were found to date back to the Neolithic and Chalcolithic periods. The city became an important Canaanite site in the Early and Middle Bronze Ages (3300–1500 B.C.), but came under the domination of Egypt's 18th dynasty in the Late Bronze Age. The name Beth-shean (or -shan) is mentioned in the Egyptian texts of Thutmose III (1468 B.C.), the Amarna letters (1350 B.C.), Seti I (1300 B.C.), Ramses II (1280 B.C.) and Shishak (925 B.C.). Excavations have confirmed the Egyptian role in the life of Beth-shean in these periods (for example, through the discovery of scarabs and a cartouche bearing the name Thutmose III).

Biblical references to Beth-shean relate to the period from Joshua until the United Monarchy. The city is listed among the allocations of the tribe of Manasseh, though the city was within the territory of Issachar (Josh. 17:6). Yet Manasseh was unable to control Beth-shean until the Canaanites were subdued in the reign of David (Josh. 17:16; Judg. 1:27). After the defeat of Saul and the Israelite army by the Philistines (ca. 1006 B.C.), the bodies of Saul and his sons were hung on the walls of Beth-shean, where a temple to the Ashtaroth was located. Some valiant men from Jabesh-gilead rescued the bodies from this sacrilege and disposed of them in Jabesh (1 Sam. 31). Later the bodies were brought by David's men in Benjamin (2 Sam. 21:12–14). The city is listed among those under the administration of Baana (fifth district) during Solomon's reign (1 Kings 4:12). Though the city is not specifically mentioned in the 1 Kings 14:25–28 account of the invasion of Shishak from Egypt, Beth-shean is listed among the cities plundered. Afterward, the city played little role in Israelite history, though the city was occupied by Israelites of the Northern Kingdom from 815–721 B.C.

Excavations showing entrances to the Graeco-Roman theater at Beth-shean (tel el-Husn) in Israel.

Excavations at Beth-shemesh showing what appears to be a portion of the massive city walls.

The city remained abandoned for the most part until the Hellenistic period (third century B.C.), when it was rebuilt and renamed Scythopolis ("city of Scythians"). This city formed the foundation of a significant Hellenistic and Roman occupation that included temples, theater, amphitheater, colonnaded street, hippodrome, tombs, and many public buildings, which had spread to the northern, eastern, and southern quadrants around the earlier "tell." Scythopolis was the largest city of the Decapolis (Matt. 4:25; Mark 5:20), and the only city of the league west of the Jordan River. The city continued to flourish in the Byzantine period until it was destroyed by Arabs in A.D. 636. The modern village of Beisan preserves the ancient name of the city. Dennis Cole

BETH-SHEMESH (Bĕth-shē' mĕsh) Place name meaning, "house of the sun." Beth-shemesh is a name applied to four different cities in the Old Testament. The name probably derives from a place where the Semitic god Shemesh (Shamash) was worshiped. 1. Beth-shemesh of Issachar was situated on the tribal border with Naphtali between Mt. Tabor and the Jordan River (Josh. 19:22). Present scholarship identifies the city with either el-ʿAbeidiyeh, two miles south of Galilee, or khirbet Shemsin, east of Tabor. 2. Beth-shemesh of Naphtali was probably located in central upper Galilee because of its association with Beth-anath (Josh. 19:38; Judg. 1:33). This Canaanite town remained independent and unconquered until the time of David. The site khirbet er-Ruweisi has been suggested as a possible location. 3. Beth-shemesh of Egypt is to be identified with Heliopolis (five miles northeast of Cairo) according to the Septuagint or early Greek translation (Jer. 43:13). Jeremiah told of the Lord's judgment upon the gods of Egypt by depicting the destruction of the worship centers. 4. Beth-shemesh of Dan is located on the south tribal border with Judah (Josh. 15:10; 19:41) overlooking the Sorek Valley about 24 miles west of Jerusalem. The ancient name was preserved in the Arab village of Ain Shems, and the "tell" is identified with tell er-Rumeilah. Beth-shemesh guarded the lush farmlands of the Sorek Valley at the point at which the Shephelah (foothills) borders the Judean hill country. It was also situated in the strategic "buffer zone" between the Philistines and the Israelites during the judges period.

The Danite tribe was unable to control the lands of its inheritance because of the Amorites (Judg. 1:34–35) and/or the Philistines. Some were forced into the hills near Zorah and Eshtaol (as was Samson's family, Judg. 13:1–2). Bethshemesh was apparently controlled by Israel (ca. 1050 B.C.) when the ark of the covenant passed through the city upon returning from the Philistines (1 Sam. 6:13). Around 795 B.C., the city was the scene of a battle in which Jehoash of Israel was victorious over Amaziah of Judah, resulting in the pillaging of the Temple (2 Kings 14:11–14; 2 Chron. 25:21–24). Beth-shemesh is last mentioned in Scripture during the decadent reign of Ahaz. The Philistines captured Beth-shemesh from Judah (ca. 734), seen as judgment from God (2 Chron. 28:18–19).

Beth-shemesh was excavated by D. Mackenzie in 1911–1912 and Haverford College in 1928–31,1933. The city was first settled about 2200 B.C. by a relatively small group. The city achieved importance after being conquered and rebuilt by the Hyksos about 1720 B.C. A huge city wall, three defensive towers, and several tombs were uncovered. The Hyksos city was captured by the Egyptians of the Eighteenth Dynasty about 1550 B.C. Beth-shemesh flourished in the Late Bronze Age under Egyptian and Canaanite rule, evidenced by imported wares from Mycenae and Egypt, as well as quality Canaanite finds, including inscriptions. Iron Age I (Judges) finds show that Beth-shemesh was heavily influenced by the Philistines, but the city was in general decline. After David defeated the Philistines, the city was rebuilt. Excavations indicate the Israelite city had olive oil, wine, copper, fabric dyeing, and wheat production industries. After Beth-shemesh was destroyed by the Babylonians (588–587 B.C.) under Nebuchadrezzar, the city was largely unoccupied, except for remnants of the Roman/Byzantine city at Ain Shems (monastery on the corner of the tell). Dennis Cole

BETH-SHEMITE (Bĕth-shē′ mite) A resident of Beth-shemesh. See Beth-shemesh.

BETH-SHITTAH (Bĕth-shĭt′ tăh) Place name meaning, "house of Accacia." Battle scene when Gideon and his 300 men defeated the Midianites (Judg. 7:22). It may be modern tell es-Saidiya or tell umm Hamad. It may be east of the Jordan River.

BETH-TAPPUAH (Bĕth-tăp′ pū·ăh) Place name meaning, "house of apples." Town assigned tribe of Judah in Judean hills (Josh. 15:53). It is modern Taffah, about four miles west of Hebron.

BETH-TOGARMAH (Beth-tō·gär′ măh) Place name meaning, "house of Togarmah." Listed in table of nations (Gen. 10:3) as son of Gomer and great grandson of Noah, Togarmah is a city mentioned in Assyrian and Hittite texts. It was north of Carchemish on an Assyrian trade route. It may be related to modern Gurun between the Halys and Euphrates Rivers. Ezekiel notes Togarmah's trading relations in horses and mules with Tyre (Ezek. 27:14) and warned it of judgment along with Gog (Ezek. 38:6).

BETHUEL (Bĕ·thū′ ĕl) Place name and personal name meaning, "house of God." 1. Nephew of Abraham and son of Nahor (Gen. 22:22). His daughter Rebekah married Isaac (Gen. 24:15,67). He was an Aramean or Syrian from Padan-aram (Gen. 25:20). His relationship to Rebekah's brother Laban (Gen. 24:29) is not clear, since Laban takes the chief role protecting Rebekah (Gen. 24:55; 27:43), and Nahor is Laban's father (Gen. 29:5). Genesis 28:5 says Laban was the son of Bethuel. Nahor was actually Bethuel's father (Gen. 22:22–23). 2. A town where the children of Shimei lived (1 Chron. 4:30). Joshua 19:4 apparently reads the same town as Bethul. It may be modern khirbet el-Qarjeten, three miles north of tell Arad.

BETHUL (Bē′ thul). See Bethuel.

BETHZATHA (Bĕth·zā′ tha) TEV, NSRV reading of place name in John 5:2 based on different Greek manuscripts than those followed by other translators. See Bethesda.

BETH-ZUR (Bĕth′ zûr) Place name meaning, "house of the rock." 1. A city allotted to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:58). Rehoboam, Solomon's son and successor as king of Judah (931–913 B.C.), built it up as a defense city (2 Chron. 11:7) in view of the threat of Shishak of Egypt (2 Chron. 12:2). A city official of Beth-zur helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem and its wall (Neh. 3:16). It played a significant role in the wars of the Maccabeans in the period between the Testaments. It is located at khirbet et-Tubeiqeh, eighteen miles southwest of Jerusalem and four miles north of Hebron on a major highway intersection. This is one of the highest sites above sea level in Palestine.

2. Son of Maon in line of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:45), apparently indicating the clan that settled the city.

BETONIM (Bĕt′ ō·nĭm) Place name meaning, "pistachios." A border town in tribal allotment of Gad (Josh. 13:26). It is located at khirbet el-Batne, two and a half miles southeast of es Salt on Mount Gilead.

BETROTHAL was the act of engagement for marriage in Bible times and was as binding as marriage.

Old Testament The biblical terms, betrothal and espousal, are almost synonymous with marriage, and as binding. Betrothal and marriage comprised a moral and spiritual principle for the home and society. The penalty under the law of Moses for disrupting this principle by adultery, rape, fornication, or incest was death by stoning (Deut. 22:23–30). Later under some circumstances the Jewish legal system allowed divorce. The forgiving love and grace of God for his adulterous people is demonstrated by Hosea buying back his adulterous wife and restoring her to his home and protection (Hos. 2:19–20). This means that forgiveness takes precedence over stoning or divorce.

New Testament Mary and Joseph were betrothed but did not live together until their wedding. When Mary came to be with child during betrothal, Joseph decided to quietly divorce her. In a dream from God, the apparent unfaithfulness of Mary was explained to Joseph as a miracle of the Holy Spirit. This miracle gave emphasis to the unique human and divine nature of Jesus Christ. Paul used the betrothal concept to explain the ideal relationship that exists between the church as a chaste virgin being presented to Christ (2 Cor. 11:2). Lawson Hatfield

BEULAH (Beû' lah) A symbolic name meaning, "married," used in reference to Jerusalem (Isa. 62:4). The other name, Hephzibah, means "my delight in her." Both names connote good fortune. The name symbolizes the closeness of Zion and her sons, and that Zion is restored to her God. The name suggests fertilty in the Messianic Age based on righteousness, with the Lord as husband (Isa. 62:1–2).

BEVELED WORK NRSV translation describing scrollwork on the bronze stands of the laver in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 7:29; KJV "thin work"; NAS, "hanging work"; REB, NIV, "hammered work"). It was wreathlike in appearance and may have been gold plating.

BEWITCH KJV translation of two Greek words. In Galatians 3:1, Paul criticized the Galatians for being "captivated by the falsehood" (baskaino) of the Judaizers to the point of straying from the Gospel. The Greek word used here has a history in magical evil and the casting of spells. "Bewitch" is also used as a translation of another word (existemi) that modern versions translate as "amazed," "astonish," or "astound" (Acts 8:9,11).

BEYOND THE JORDAN Often used to describe the territory on the east side of the Jordan river (also referred to as the Transjordan). Five times the phrase describes the territory on the west side of the Jordan (Gen. 50:10–11; Deut. 3:20,25; 11:30).

BEYOND THE RIVER A phrase that refers to the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia. From the perspective of those living in Palestine, "beyond the river" meant on the east side of the Euphrates River. The expression is often used when speaking of the ancestral home of the patriarchs (Josh. 24:3,14–15; KJV has "on the other side of the flood"). From the perspective of those living in Persia, "beyond the river" meant on the west side of the Euphrates River. Darius I, the great organizer of the Persian empire, named his fifth satraphy "Beyond the River" (Ebir-nari). This satrapy included Syria and Palestine. The official Persian usage is reflected in the Books of Ezra (4:10–20; 5:3,6; 6:6,8,13; 7:21,25; 8:36) and Nehemiah (2:7,9; 3:7).

BEZAI (Bē' zā-ī) A contraction of Bezalel. See Bezalel. 1. A clan of 323 (Ezra 2:17) who returned from Babylonian Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. 2. A man who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:18).

BEZALEEL (Bĕz' a leêl) Personal name meaning, "in the shadow of God." 1. The son of Uri, a member of the tribe of Judah (Ex. 31:2) and great grandson of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:20). He and another man, the Danite Aholiab, were skilled craftsmen who were responsible for making the tabernacle, its furnishings, and trappings. His skill derived from his being filled with the Spirit of God. Most modern translations of the Bible render the names of these men Bezalel and Oholiab. 2. Man who followed Ezra's leadership and divorced his foreign wife (Ezra 10:30).

BEZALEL (Bĕz' a-lel) See Bezaleel.

BEZEK (Bē' zĕk) Place name meaning, "lightning." Place where Judah and Simeon defeated Canaanites who were led by Adoni-bezek (literally, "lord of Bezek") (Judg. 1:4). In Bezek Saul numbered the Israelites to rally an army against Nahash the Ammonite and deliver Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam. 11:8). Bezek was located at khirbet Ibziq, twelve miles northeast of Shechem and thirteen miles from Jabesh-Gilead, six miles north of Tirzah, though the Judges' site may be a distinctive city. If so, it would be at tell Bezqah near Gezer.

BEZER (Bē' zĕr) Place name meaning, "inaccessible." 1. A city of refuge in tribal territory of Reuben (Deut. 4:43; Josh. 20:8), set aside as a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:36). It may be Umm el-Amad, eight miles northeast of Medeba. Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., claimed to have rebuilt Bezer as a Moabite city.

BIBLE, FORMATION AND CANON OF The word "Bible" was formed from a Greek term meaning books in the plural. Our Bible is, in fact, the collection of books written by various authors that possesses final authority in Christian communities. It has no rival in its pervasive influence upon Western culture, and increasingly over world culture.

Why does the Bible exist? The answer has to do with the transmission of the gospel down through the generations. Once God had revealed Himself and His plan of salvation to Israel and to the believers surrounding Jesus, the question arose how this truth would be passed along to posterity without its suffering distortion from later interpreters. The only obvious answer to this question was written documentation. It would be necessary to secure the revelation in a fixed, written, and authentic form so that the truth would not be lost in the transmission.

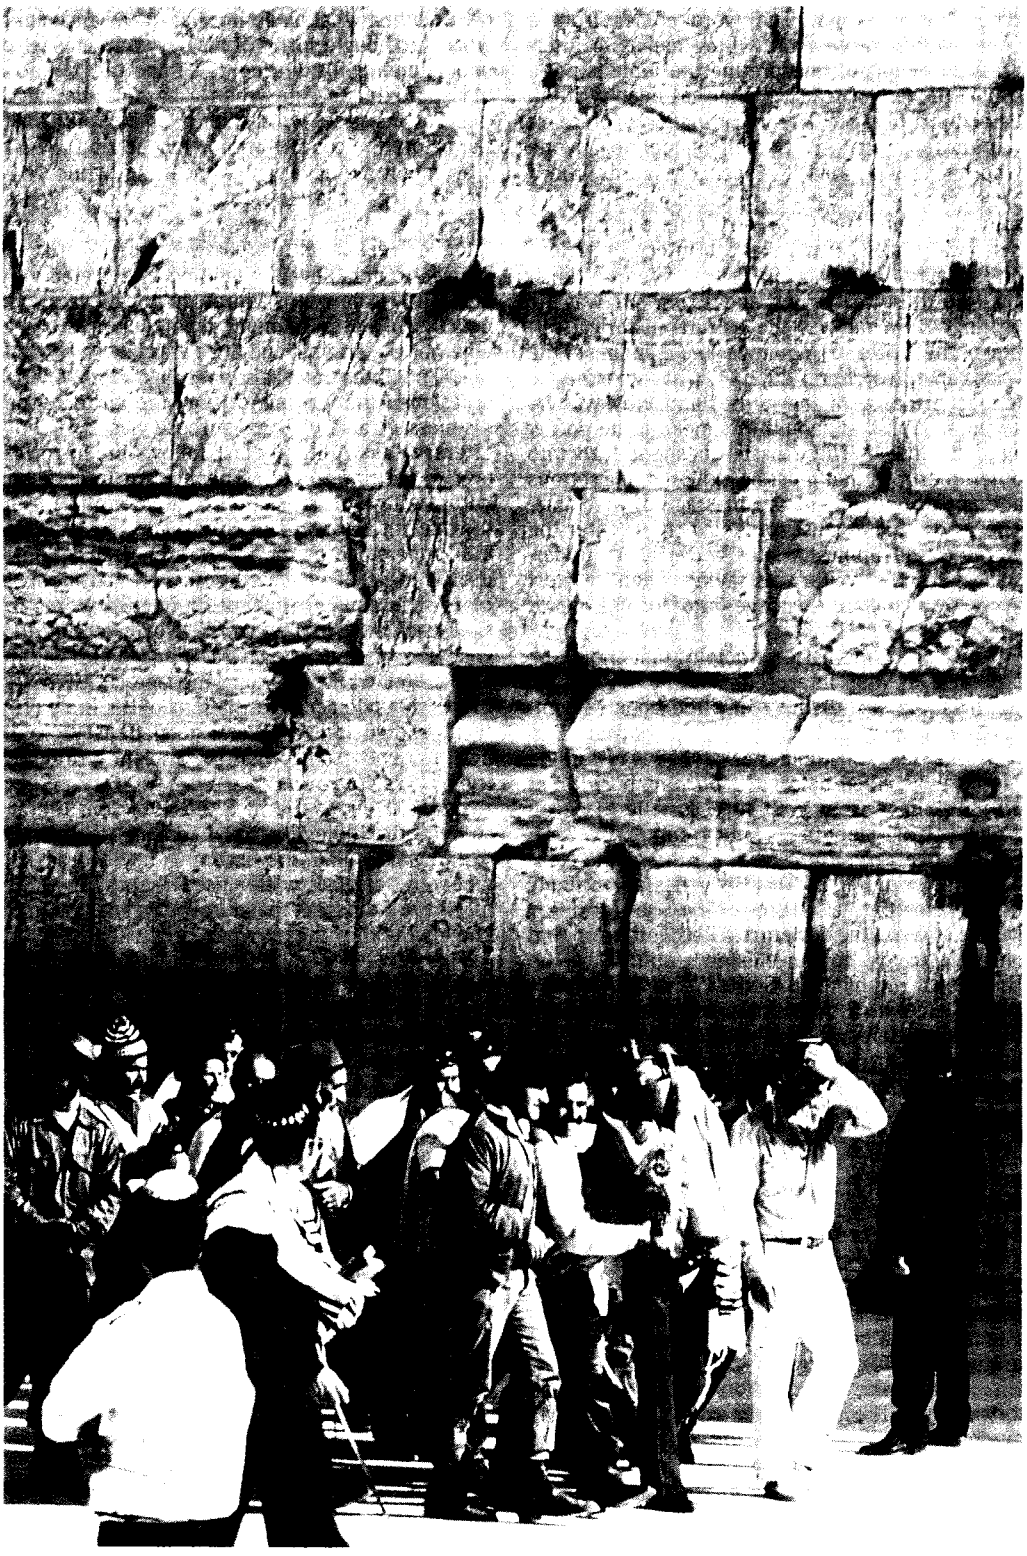
Does the Bible itself give this answer? You can see that it does when you consider, first, the fact that leading figures in the Bible, such as Moses, Jeremiah, Luke, and Paul, are described as writing things down precisely for people who are unable to talk with them directly. Second, you find that Jesus and the apostles in the New Testament had a very high view of the divine authority of the Hebrew Scriptures which they believed God gave by inspiration (2 Tim. 3:16). The idea of the Bible was not a late afterthought in the history of salvation but was in the process of being formed almost from the first.

How did the Bible take shape? A general acquaintance with the book goes a long way toward answering this question. In the case of the Old Testament, people must have told and retold the stories of God's interaction with Israel before they were collected into the books we now possess. They carefully preserved the law of God given through Moses and accepted it as binding on them. The inspired prophecies could not be allowed to be forgotten even when they were painful. Of course, the wisdom of the sages and the hymns of the people had to be preserved. The process of formation can thus be viewed both from the point of view of God's purpose and with an eye on the natural historical dynamics. In the case of the New Testament, it is clear that four writers undertook the task of presenting the life of Jesus, each of them with some special emphases and with a particular audience in view. The apostle Paul, as well as some others, had the practice of writing letters to groups of people to communicate with them when visiting was difficult. Writing was a way of instructing them in the things of God from a distance. One can see how the Bible must have been formed just by looking at it. Each of its parts was created and preserved because it met a need in the covenant community and qualified to be treasured for transmission to posterity.



How was the canon of Scripture decided on? The word canon comes from a Sumerian term meaning "reed," and it came to designate the list of books which were normative and sacred. The simplest answer to this question is a practical one: the books which ended up on the canonical lists in the end were those which proved themselves in a variety of ways to be God's Word to His people as they used them over the years. The historical answer is a little less clear. We just do not know as much about the process of canonization as we would like. The best clues are in the Bible itself. The law of Moses was written down and became the core of the later Old Testament. This is the assumption of all the later documents. There is much less said about the composition and preservation of the other writings. Certainly the divine authority claimed by the great prophets of Israel attached to the books which preserved their preaching. It is possible that the Old Testament canon as we know it took shape under the influence of the scribe Ezra who rounded off the task long in process. This would explain the tenacity of the Jews ever since to preserve their Hebrew canon. As for the New Testament, the books involved are many fewer and were composed over a mere half century. The respect for the words and deeds of Jesus is obvious and would explain both the preparation and the respect accorded the four Gospels. Paul's apostolic authority guaranteed respect for his epistles from the beginning. Respect grew later when the original witnesses began to die off and the epistles circulated among the churches. The authority of a prophecy like the Revelation of John, if deemed authentic, would be automatic. An extraneous factor which speeded the process toward developing a canon was the work of second century reformer Marcion, who proposed dropping the Old Testament and much of the New Testament as well, forcing orthodox Christians to make up their minds on the question of the canonical list. The die was already cast in the Muratorian Canon of 170 A.D. where one finds the essential New Testament as we know it today.

Is there an interplay then of subjective and objective factors in the determination of the canon of Scripture? Yes, we need to view it in terms of God's providence guiding and directing His people in this matter. God sent His messengers and the Scriptures in their wake. God's Word to the people had to make its own impact upon human minds. There is the historical solidity of God's revelation in history, but there is also the need for God's sheep to hear the voice of their Shepherd. God has given us His written Word and allowed it quietly and unhurriedly to make its impact upon us. It did not require a big council when the decision would come down from the leaders of the churches. All that was needed was that God's people be satisfied in the matter of the historical authenticity and then of the practical efficacy of the books in question. The fact that substantially the whole church came to recognize the same books as canonical is remarkable when we remember the agreement was not at all contrived.

Clark Pinnock

BIBLE, HERMENEUTICS The science of interpreting the Bible (or any piece of literature) is called hermeneutics. The word comes from a Greek word, hermeneuo, which means to interpret or to explain. Interpreting the Bible is not a simple process of reading what has been written.

Contemporary Jews show respect for the Scripture as they carry the Torah to the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

Questions to Ask The meaning of a piece of writing is seldom clearly self-evident to anyone who happens to read it. Especially is this true if the writing is a very old document, written for someone who lived in a very different cultural-historical setting. If we want to interpret a piece of literature, we must ask at least five questions: 1) Who was the writer and to whom was he writing? 2) What was the cultural-historical setting of the writer? 3) What was the meaning of the words in the writer's day? 4) What was the intended meaning of the author and why was he saying it? 5) What should this mean to me in my situation today? These basic questions lead into other questions that must be explored in a serious attempt to understand the message of the Bible. The reader today must somehow try to enter the world of the biblical writer and seek to understand what the writer was saying. Then he must bring that ancient message into today's world where the reader lives.

There are some basic principles that should be observed by the interpreter of the Scriptures. 1) The Bible is a divinely inspired book (2 Tim. 3:16) and should be reverently approached. Perhaps the reader should hear what was said to Moses as he stood before the burning bush: "Put off your shoes from your feet, for the place on which you are standing is holy ground" (Ex. 3:5). We must be careful to reverence the divine character of Scripture. 2) The Bible has a genuinely human element, also, since God used ordinary people to write the Scriptures. Recognition should be given to the human elements utilized by the Holy Spirit in giving us God's Word. To miss the human element is as much a mistake as to miss the divine element. 3) The primary aim of the interpreter is to discover the original meaning of the author who wrote the passage under consideration. 4) Preference should be given to the interpretation which is clearest and simplest, the most obvious. 5) Only one meaning should be given to any passage of Scripture, unless a later passage of Scripture assigns it a second meaning. Only an inspired writer of Scripture can be allowed to give a passage more than one meaning. 6) Careful attention must be given to the literary form of a passage in determining its meaning. 7) Careful attention must be given to the historical situation of a portion of Scripture.

Historical Task Interpretation begins with a historical task. The interpreter needs to know as much as possible about the writer and his cultural-historical setting. If we know nothing concerning who wrote a passage, when it was written, or under what conditions it was written, we are almost left to guess what its meaning might be. Knowing what an author has experienced and what the thought forms of his day were aids us in understanding his writing. It is important to know the approximate date when a passage was written. For instance, words about God's Spirit written before the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost might be given one meaning while they would be given a different meaning after Pentecost. The reader also needs to know who the intended recipients of a passage were. Words addressed to unbelievers would be interpreted very differently from words addressed to believers. The meaning of a passage might depend upon knowing whether the original audience was Jewish or Gentile. The interpreter also needs to know what occasioned the writing, or why the writer wrote his message and what his purpose was.

Literary Task A literary task follows the historical task of the interpreter. The literary task begins with the task of translation of the Scripture from the ancient Hebrew and Greek into the language best understood by the interpreter. Translation is itself a stage of interpretation. For translation is more than simply substituting English words for the Greek and Hebrew words. If you cannot do a good job of translating Greek and Hebrew into English (or whatever your language is), then you must rely upon good translations of the Bible. You really should utilize several good translations to help you understand what the ancient writer was trying to say to you.

Lexical study is the next phase of your literary study of the Bible. You must consult a lexicon or dictionary to find the meaning key words had when the original writer used them. His words may have a different meaning today, and you must know what they meant when originally used.

The next stage of the literary task of the interpreter is the grammatical or syntactical phase. Here, you must examine the form of the writer's grammar: what is signified by the grammatical constructions, the verb forms used, what is given emphasis in a sentence, the relationships of the words to each other, etc. The tense, voice, mode, case, etc. of the words used is very important in understanding what the writer was trying to say to you, the reader. These matters are acutely important in the work of translation, but they also must not be overlooked in the process of interpretation. You should consult good critical commentaries that analyze these grammatical matters for you, even if you do your own translation.

Rhetorical analysis is another important phase of the literary task of interpretation. Here, the interpreter seeks to determine what kind of rhetoric, or language, the ancient writer was using. It is extremely important to recognize the various literary forms that are used by the different writers of the Bible. Major portions of the Bible are written in ordinary prose, plain descriptive narrative. Other portions are pure poetry. Sometimes vivid figures of speech are incorporated in narrative portions. Such figures of speech must be interpreted in their symbolic sense rather than as literal, descriptive language. Portions of the Bible are written in apocalyptic language, a well-known literary style often used in the ancient world, but hardly known to us today. Apocalyptic literature employs vivid symbols and fanciful images to convey some message or mystery or prophecy in a veiled, highly imaginative way. The Book of Revelation and certain portions of Daniel and Ezekiel are examples of apocalyptic literature in the Bible.

Consideration must be given to the context of a passage of Scripture. No portion of Scripture ought to be interpreted without regard to its content. The context is the setting in which the particular passage is located. Generally, the paragraph in which a statement appears is the minimum context. However, the context of a passage may be the whole chapter in which a verse occurs; it could even be the entirety of a book, in the case of the shorter books of the Bible. Meaning that is given to a verse, without regard to its context, is very likely to be the wrong meaning.

The literary task of the interpreter must include comparing the meaning given to a passage to what is taught elsewhere in the Scriptures. This does not mean that we should arbitrarily force one viewpoint upon all of the Scriptures. But it does mean that we should be careful not to interpret Scriptures in such a way that we introduce contradictions into our interpretation of the Bible. There is an overall unity to the Bible; it teaches one theme, one message. But within that unity, there is also diversity. There is diversity due to the vast amount of time spanned in the writing of the Bible. There is diversity due to the many different authors employed by the Holy Spirit. There is diversity due to the progressive nature of revelation. God gradually revealed more and more of Himself and of His will for humans as the message of the Bible proceeded from Genesis to Revelation. While there is progression, there is not contradiction in the Scriptures. The careful interpreter will always want to compare an interpretation of a passage with what the Bible teaches elsewhere to see if the interpretation "fits" with what the Bible says in other places.

Spiritual Task There is a personal, spiritual task of the interpreter. One who would be a good interpreter must be devoted to diligent, careful study of the Scriptures (2 Tim. 2:15), prayerfully seeking the leadership of the Holy Spirit continually while interpreting the Scriptures (John 16:12–15; 2 Pet. 1:19–21). Only illumination or divine guidance can lead to correct interpretation. On the one hand, the Bible is a piece of literature that is to be interpreted just like any other piece of literature. On the other hand, the Bible is unique in that it is inspired by God through the Holy Spirit; one who reads the Bible should therefore seek the guidance of God in understanding what is written there.

One additional task remains for the interpreter. Seek to apply the teaching of the Bible to your present situation. It is important to know what the Bible said to its original readers, the people to whom it was originally addressed. But it is equally important to apply the ancient message to us today in our life situation which may be very different from that of the ancient world of Moses or Jesus or Paul. If the Bible is a living revelation of God to us, as we say it is, then we must do more than decipher its ancient history. We must apply the principles discerned in that ancient history to our life situation today. J. Terry Young

BIBLE, HISTORY OF INTERPRETATION

Biblical interpretation, or hermeneutics, has had a long and checkered history. The way in which almost all Christians today read and interpret the Bible only gradually developed. It was not until the era of the Renaissance and Reformation that the science of biblical interpretation was clarified. Today we follow what is generally known as the literary historical method of interpretation.

Origen (who died in 254 A.D.) was the first major biblical interpreter and Christian theologian. In addition to the obvious, simple, literal meaning of a passage, which Origen believed was only for the simple believer, Origen found a hidden or deeper meaning embedded in the words of Scripture. This hidden meaning was the pure word of God to the mature Christian, and much to be preferred over the simple, literal meaning. Origen made extensive use of allegorical interpretation to derive this deeper, preferred meaning of Scripture. This allowed Origen to import his underlying philosophical position into the Scriptures, as though this was the message of God to us.

The School of Antioch was the bright spot in the ancient world, so far as biblical interpretation was concerned. The biblical interpreters associated with this school insisted that the Bible be interpreted in the light of the literary form and historical situation of a particular passage. They carefully avoided reading philosophical and speculative preconceptions into the text in the fashion of Origen and his followers. Today, this would seem to be the obvious way that Scripture should be interpreted, but that was not the general opinion in the ancient world. Not until the time of the Reformation (1517) did this kind of biblical interpretation become the dominant approach to the Scripture.

In the Middle Ages (500–1500), Origen's allegorical approach to the interpretation of Scripture was the accepted pattern. Indeed, Middle Ages interpreters expanded on Origen's two meanings and found anywhere from four to seven different levels or types of meanings. A fourfold meaning was usually sought in Scripture: the literal-historical, for the simple believer; the allegorical, which supplies a deeper meaning for faith; the moral, which guides conduct; and the anagogical, a mystical interpretation which points towards the ultimate goal of the Christian in his pilgrimage. Various terms were used to denote these four different levels of meaning.

With biblical interpretation so complicated, it is no wonder that the Roman Catholic Church took the Bible out of the hands of the lay people and left biblical interpretation to the clergy. The ordinary person could not possibly know how to derive from four to seven different levels of meaning out of a given passage.

Biblical interpretation as we know it today began in the period of the Renaissance and Reformation. In the age of the Renaissance, people began to realize the true literary character of the Bible. Luther learned anew the important place of the Bible and made a determined effort to put the Bible back in the hands of the people. One of Luther's cardinal principles was "sola scriptura," only by Scripture, or Scripture alone. Luther and other Reformers insisted on the perspicuity of Scripture—Scripture is clear enough that the ordinary believer can read and understand it by observing the grammatical and historical elements of the text. Calvin insisted (in the preface to his commentary on Romans) "It is the first business of an interpreter say what he [the Scripture writer] does, instead of attributing to him what we think he ought to say."

Following the time of the Reformation, great emphasis was placed on letting the Bible speak for itself. The science of textual criticism was developed. This was the analysis of all of the available biblical manuscripts, comparing the variant readings, and making an informed judgment as to what the original text of the Scriptures really was.

In the earnest search for accurate, faithful interpretation of the Bible, the historical-critical method of interpretation was developed. The word "critical" comes from a Greek word which means to judge or to make a decision in the light of evidence. With this type of interpretation, more attention is given to historical considerations than merely clarifying the historical context in which a passage of Scripture is set. Some developers of this method saw history as a closed system. They thought everything must be explained on the basis of forces and causes that are resident within the normal historical experience of humans. Thus, by definition, miracles could not be explained on the basis of an act of God who reaches into history; some natural explanation had to be found for what appears in the Scripture record as a miracle.

What is at fault here is not the method of interpretation as such, but the presupposition that miracles are impossible. This hermeneutical approach is often confused with the literary-historical interpretation practiced by more conservative interpreters. The two are very similar, differing primarily in the presupposition of the interpreter rather than in method as such.

Many varieties of so-called "scientific exegesis" have been developed as refinements of the historical-critical method. They employ very sophisticated and technical methods to analyze the factors that lie behind the text as we have it: who the author was, what the motive was in writing, identification of various sources of material used by the writer, the writer's position among God's people, the relationship to other biblical writers, how and why each idea was developed, the meaning the writer was trying to convey.

Another approach to biblical interpretation is in the form of the history of religions hermeneutic. In this type of biblical interpretation, parallels are sought between what is found in Scripture and what is found in the development of other systems of religion. This shows what biblical writers shared with their culture, what they adopted and adapted from the culture, and what they had in unique distinction from their culture. An extreme position here can expect biblical teaching to be little different from what is found in other religions. A more conservative position recognizes that God used the culture to teach His people but also that He pointed the way to be a holy people distinct from the culture.

As a reaction to the radical insistence on history being closed to outside influences, another approach to biblical interpretation has developed. It is called the new hermeneutic and is often based upon the philosophy of existentialism. According to this approach, the message of the Bible is not to tell me what happened hundreds or thousands of years ago. It is to create in me new spiritual experiences, or encounters with God; or, at least, it is to show me the possibilities that are open to me when I place my faith in Christ.

The dominant type of biblical interpretation used by conservative Christians today is the literary-historical method. See Bible, Hermeneutics. J. Terry Young BIBLE, METHODS OF STUDY Conscious, organized approaches that help one arrive at the meaning of God's Word without pre-determined conclusions.

Certainly we cannot and must not try to limit or master God's sovereign self-revelation by human methods. The living activity of the Holy Spirit is above and beyond all systems of communication. Methodology is appropriate and necessary, however, insofar as the Bible was written and is read by human beings. Methods serve to clarify and prepare the understanding of the Bible; their character is auxiliary. They help to remove obstacles hindering or falsifying the process of listening to the message. Adequate methodology reflects the manifold dimensions of life. The Biblical message originated in life and aims at being experienced anew in life. This process comprises various cultures, ages, circumstances, societies, people, languages, traditions, emotions. Methods follow certain presuppositions, concerning what people can know and communicate. Methodology, therefore, touches our understanding of reality, experience, and reason. Methods must be open to general testing, not self-contradictory, and evident. Not everyone has the same experiences which others have; and we must be aware of so far unknown aspects of reality. This requires from methodology that it does not narrow down experiences to be communicated, but rather leaves room for all the dimensions of life.

The methods need not be mutually exclusive but should assist each other. In addition, every method must be aware of the wide range of reality. Every event and document can and must be considered from the various perspectives of human knowledge, such as social and political sciences, humanities, economy, psychology of religion, value systems, etc.

Practical Suggestions No set of methods can claim to be the most perfect one. We should avoid any schematism, too. There are, however, certain steps in the interpretation of Biblical texts, following a rather natural sequence, gained from experience.

1. After the first reading of the text the interpreter's own relation to it needs some clarification. Is the text new or familiar—perhaps too familiar? Does it remind you of previous events (sermons, situations)? What are your feelings about the text: do you like it, or is it alien or rather abstract? The interpreter thus reflects on a personal attitude to the text. Furthermore, you try to formulate a preliminary description of what the text speaks about.

2. The interpreter continues considering the text as a whole to define its character more clearly. Is the passage a more or less independent unit? Where does it begin and end? What are its relations to the context? After that, the structure of the text may be analysed. Are there indications of subsections with logical or other links? Does it lead to a climax? What is of central importance? In the same way the key persons and/or terms should be located. Does the text contain essential points of activity, qualification, description, judgment, etc.? In the course of these observations the nature of the text receives further clarification. Is it a narrative, a hymn, a psalm, an admonition, an argumentation, etc.? What can be normally expected in such portions? What is surprising?

3. It is advisable to ask at this point the so-called journalist's questions: Who wrote, when, where, to whom, why, what for? These questions cannot be answered with the same accuracy for all parts of the Bible, since we lack information sometimes. The available information is collected in handbooks, introductions, and commentaries to the Bible. It helps to reconstruct the original situation of the text, to understand the needs and expectations of the people involved, to see the manifold aspects of reality touched, and to avoid wrong applications if important aspects have changed today. The interpreter should ask the question, what is really helpful to understand the message, in order not to do too little or too much.

4. The background of the text is further analysed along the lines of "this reminds of . . ." or "this seems to be taken from . . .". Every author uses traditions, often in smaller, sometimes even in larger units. Are there any quotations or allusions? Bible concordances and dictionaries are the best help at this point, not to forget a sound Bible knowledge. It is important to locate the specific message of a text in the longer course of God's history with His people.

5. A detailed analysis of the passage can now be made. It is helpful to compare different translations; occasionally they may even reflect variant readings of the original. Helpful, too, is the method of translators to cut a text into its smallest components of meaning, i.e. into short and simple sentences. (Even a single adjective e.g. might be transformed into a small sentence). The translation and analysis thus becomes a paraphrase, i.e. a reformulation in our own words, usually somewhat longer than the original.

6. What is the contribution of the text, first in the original situation, then also in the history of the early church, the entire history of salvation? Contribution comprises both effect and message, activity and doctrine. What could have happened if these words had not been given to Jeremiah's or James' generation? What would be lacking if that message had not been preserved by Luke? Which details would cause us to suffer clarity or completeness in our knowledge about Jesus Christ, the church, or ethics? In so asking the interpreter will get a better glance of the specific value of the text.

7. As an interpreter, you must not think you are the first and only recipient of the text. Others in the history of the church have read it before; their experiences and reactions are worth a comparison (so-called "history of reception," found in good commentaries). This may also help avoiding a one-sided interpretation by pointing to a more balanced picture of the Biblical revelation. Equally, the Biblical message was and is not given just to individuals but rather to the people of God. The essential life-setting, therefore, is the church and its service. The final test to an adequate interpretation of the Bible is whether it leads to gratitude and praise, to service and mission.

Wiard Popkes

BIBLE, TEXTS AND VERSIONS The preservation and transmission of the Bible from the time that it was written until the present involves two areas of study. The study of the process by which the documents (66 in all) were written, used, collected into groups, and elevated to the authoritative place that they occupy today is called the study of the canon. The other is the process of preserving in writing and translations the text of the documents. This is the study of text and versions.

B

There are two periods in the history of the text of the Bible. The first is from the time the documents were written until the time of printing (A.D. 1453). The second is from that date until the present. The invention of printing was very important for the transmission of the text of the Bible. Before that date, the only way that a person could have a copy of any written work was to make a copy (or have it made) by hand, letter by letter. This was slow and often expensive. Some have calculated that the cost of one complete Bible made by a professional scribe in the fourth century would equal the salary of a member of the Roman legion for forty years. Certainly not every church, let alone every Christian, could afford to have a copy of the Scriptures.

The Period of the Handwritten Text The story of the Bible is really the story of two Testaments, the Old and the New. The story came together for Christians in the second century A.D., when the Christian writings began to be equated with the Hebrew Scriptures and thus published side by side as the Christian Scriptures. Even then, however, the history of the text used by Christians differed some from the text used and preserved by Jews.

1. Old Testament Text and Versions. The difficulty of tracing the history of the Old Testament text is the scarcity of manuscripts that go back beyond the ninth and tenth century. One reason for this scarcity is the practice by Jewish scribes of burying old manuscripts in a storehouse called a genizah and then destroying these manuscripts. The text from that period is called the Masoretic Text because it derives from the work of a group of Hebrew scribes known as Masoretes, whose work spans the time from A.D. 500 to 1000. The manuscripts used most frequently in editing the Old Testament today are of this variety.

Textual scholars use several tools to trace the text behind the Masoretic Text. One is the Samaritan Pentateuch. This refers to the text of the first five books of the Old Testament as it was preserved among the Samaritans after their separation from Judah about 400 B.C. until the present. This text is preserved in Israel today by a few hundred Samaritans who still live at Nablus (near Mt. Gerazim where their ancient temple stood, John 4:20) and just south of Tel Aviv. The importance of this text is that it was preserved independently of the Masoretic text even though the oldest copies in existence were not made until the eleventh century. Only in a few instances do scholars think that the Samaritan Pentateuch preserves readings superior to the Masoretic text.

Another tool to trace the history behind the Masoretic text is the Aramaic paraphrases of the Old Testament known as the Targums. They originated because the Jews in the synagogues in the Middle East could not understand the Hebrew Scripture. Someone stood alongside the reader of the text (read in Hebrew) and recited Aramaic paraphrases, which in time became stereotyped. The earliest of these to be written down came before the time of Christ (a fragment of a Targum on Job was discovered among the Dead Sea Scrolls in the eleventh cave from Qumran). Most of the manuscripts of the Targums originated 500 to 1000 A.D. Because they are paraphrases and not strict translations, the Targums are more of interest for determining Jewish doctrine in the time of their origin than for determining the early stages of the text of the Old Testament.

A much more important source for textual history is the Septuagint. This is a Greek translation of the Old Testament made from about 250 to 100 B.C. or shortly thereafter. It was made in Alexandria, Egypt, to meet the needs of Jews and others who wanted to read the Old Testament but lacked the facility to read Hebrew. The Septuagint represents an official translation which likely replaced a variety of earlier unofficial translations. Basic problems in using a translation to seek to study the earlier wording of the Hebrew text are: the difficulty of determining the exact readings of the Hebrew text(s) used by the original translators because of the innate differences in all languages, the difficulties in establishing the original readings of the Greek translation by studying the many manuscripts of it, and uncertainty concerning the quality of the translation itself. Nevertheless, the Septuagint does preserve some readings (especially in Exodus, Samuel, and Jeremiah) that appear to be superior to the Masoretic text. Some of them are supported by copies of the Hebrew texts found at Qumran. There are other Greek translations of the Old Testament made by Jews to replace the Septuagint. The two most famous were made in the second century A.D. by Aquila and Theodotion.

The most important source for textual information beyond the Masoretic Text is the Dead Sea Scrolls. Most of these were discovered in the caves by the wadi Qumran on the shores of the Dead Sea beginning in 1947. Others were found further south in the wilderness of Judea and at Masada. The oldest copies of Old Testament Scriptures found in these discoveries are manuscripts written in the second century before Christ. They are over a thousand years older than the basic manuscripts of the Masoretic texts. They represent the remains of a library of a group of separatist Jews who lived in the caves in the area and worked in a type of monastery. Along with Old Testament manuscripts, the caves preserved documents written by the participants in the community and their founders. Biblical manuscripts have been found containing fragments or complete copies from every book of the Old Testament except Esther. The scrolls from Qumran do differ from the Masoretic text in some places (1375 places in Isaiah), but most are insignificant.

Other versions of the Old Testament such as the Syriac, Old Latin, the Latin Vulgate, etc. can be used, but none of these yield many significant variants from the Masoretic texts. The copies of the Hebrew Bible available today are the work of very careful Hebrew scribes. Though there are variations, the text of the Hebrew Bible is essentially as it existed in the time before Christ. The early Christians had access to either the Hebrew text or to the Septuagint. When the Septuagint was no longer used by the Jews (about A.D. 90), it was preserved by the Christians and used by them. About half of the Old Testament quotes in Paul are from the Septuagint as are almost all of the quotes in 1 Peter, James, and Hebrews. The famous Latin Vulgate of Jerome contained the books in the Septuagint not found in the Hebrew Bible plus 2 Esdras. These are called the Apocrypha.

2. New Testament Text and Versions. From near the middle of the second century on most Christians equated many Christian writings with the Scriptures of the Jews. The term "Old Testament," implying a "New Testament," was first used by Christians in A.D. 187. These writings were preserved at first mostly on papyrus, a form of paper made from the papyrus plant which grew in the Nile Delta. It was perishable, and very few copies survived. In 1976, only 88 separate fragments of papyrus New Testament manuscripts were known. Few of them contain in their present state more than a part of a single page of text. The original papyrus manuscripts contained only portions of the New Testament, such as the Gospels and Acts or Paul's letters or the Revelation or some or all of the General Epistles. The earliest of these date from the second and third centuries. During that period the New Testament did not circulate as a single volume. Apparently all New Testament manuscripts so far discovered were made in the leaf form of books, not on rolls.

The New Testament circulated as a single volume in the time of the great parchment manuscripts. Parchment was made from the skins of animals. The earliest of these to contain the New Testament also contain the Old Testament (in the form of the Septuagint with the outside books) and other Christian writings such as 1 and 2 Clement or The Shepherd of Hermas and the Letter of Barnabas. The earliest of these were written in the middle of the fourth century.

Not only manuscripts written in Greek, the language of the New Testament, but also Christian writings which quote from the Greek New Testament furnish evidence for the text of the New Testament. However, some of the Christian "fathers" were very loose in their quotes or quoted from faulty memories. Another factor is that not all the writings were preserved carefully.

Another major source of information about the text of the New Testament is the versions. From the very beginning of the Christian story, translation has been an essential part of the process. We have less than a dozen words of Jesus preserved in Aramaic, the language which He spoke. Hence, almost all that he said was translated into Greek before it was written down. The accusation written over the cross was written in the three languages used in Palestine: Latin, Hebrew (probably Aramaic), and Greek. When the Christians, fleeing from the persecution in which Stephen died, arrived in Antioch, they needed to use Syriac to evangelize the surrounding areas. By the middle of the second century, extensive efforts had been made to translate all the Scriptures into the Old Latin and Syriac. From the third century on followed translations into the various dialects of the Egyptian languages, the languages of Armenia, Georgia, Ethiopia, Arabia, Nubia, and the areas of Europe.

In the West, Latin became the major language of the church. The Latin Vulgate, produced about 400 A.D. by Jerome, became the Bible of the Latin Church. Among the Eastern Orthodox, Greek remained the official language of the Scriptures. Thus during the long period from 400 to 1500, most New Testament Greek manuscripts used the official text of the Orthodox Church. Hence, today most Greek New Testament manuscripts are of the type designated as Byzantine, Ecclesiastical, Koine, Standard, or Eastern. The earlier and (for most scholars) the most reliable ones are of the Alexandrian (also called Neutral, Egyptian, and African) type. When the printers in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries looked for manuscripts from which to edit the earliest printed Greek New Testaments, all that they could find were those of the Byzantine type. Since then, the process of discovery and editing of manuscripts has brought to light over 5,300 handwritten copies of all or part of the New Testament. The process of editing and utilizing all of this material in producing the earliest possible text for readers today is the task of textual criticism. It is a painstaking job done mostly by scholars in the universities, colleges, seminaries, and Bible societies. As always, a major impetus for this work is missionary. Without textual criticism no modern Bibles in any language would be possible. Carlton L. Winbery

BIBLE, THEOLOGY OF Biblical theology is one of four primary types of theology and needs to be carefully distinguished from the other three. 1. In common usage, the single word "theology" usually denotes the study of doctrine in a systematic or orderly, organized form. It draws insight both from the Bible and from history and numerous other fields of study to give the widest possible application of the biblical principles. Systematic theology may be done in a denominational context. For instance, Baptist theology or Methodist theology is the Christian doctrines presented as Baptists or Methodists understand them. Such a doctrinal statement of belief may be strongly influenced by biblical teaching, but insight is also drawn from the history of Baptists (or Methodists, etc.). No denomination's theology is a presentation of "pure" biblical thought; its theology draws insight from its own history, and seeks to apply biblical principles to its current life setting. Systematic theology seeks to give a comprehensive statement of belief, describing all of the major points of belief in their contemporary significance.

2. Historical theology is a study of the doctrinal teachings in various ages, usually tracing the development from ancient times to the present, bringing out the distinctive and changing emphases from age to age. This discipline is closely related to church history, but it is historical study narrowly focused on theology or doctrine.

3. Philosophical theology is a statement of Christian belief which seeks to take the basic elements of the teachings of the Bible and translate them into philosophical concepts. It may also seek to use the creative powers of human reason to create a system of belief. Such a statement may be fairly closely related to biblical thought. On the other hand, such a system of belief may be entirely speculative, going far afield from biblical teachings.

4. Biblical theology is a narrowly focused field of study, as compared to these other types of theology. Usually, biblical theology does not even seek to give the doctrinal or theological teachings of the Bible as a whole. It seeks to isolate and express the theological teachings of a specific portion of Scripture, such as the theology of the Pentateuch (first five books of the Old Testament), or the theology of the prophets, or the theology of the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke), or the theology of John, or the theology of the Pauline writings, etc. Such study seeks to show the development of thought from early times to the close of the New Testament. As some people do biblical theology, such a study only emphasizes the diversity found in the Bible. Others find an overall unity of theological thought, but trace considerable diversity within that unity. Some will interpret the theology of the Bible in such a way that there is only unity, allowing for no development of thought, or diversity, from Genesis to Revelation. Some who seek to develop biblical theology will finally synthesize the teachings of the Bible as a whole as the end product of their study of the theology of the Bible. They choose not to leave biblical theology as a series of statements of differing beliefs found in various periods of the Bible. Such a statement should not be taken to mean that the Bible teaches exactly that point of view at every point in the Scriptures. Rather, this is a statement of the biblical teaching in its completed form, allowing for development of the various themes from the beginning to the end of the Bible.

Many credit J. P. Gabler, German biblical scholar, with beginning the field of biblical theology. In his inaugural address in a professorship in 1787, Gabler called for a sharp distinction between dogmatic (systematic or doctrinal) theology and biblical theology. For Gabler, biblical theology must be strictly a historical study of what was believed in the various periods of biblical history, independent of any modern denominational, doctrinal, philosophical, or cultural considerations.

In general, the principles that Gabler called for were right, and he influenced the development of biblical theology for many years to come. However, it should be noted, that there is no such thing as "a study of the Bible alone with complete objectivity." Every interpreter brings certain presuppositions to the task. These have considerable influence upon the process of interpreting the Scriptures. As a result, the field of biblical theology is a checkered field with every imaginable variation in what is held to be the theology taught by the Bible.

Biblical theology is utterly dependent upon the hermeneutics of the theologian (See Bible, Hermeneutics; Bible, History of Interpretation). The methods employed in interpreting Scriptures are crucially important to doing biblical theology. One's biblical theology can be no better than his methods used to interpret Scriptures.

Content. What, then, is the theology of the Bible as a traditional conservative theologian views it? Biblical theology today needs to give due consideration to the real history recorded in the Bible and seek to interpret the Scriptures in the light of historical considerations, with due regard for their literary form and construction. Such theology recognizes an overall unity of the Bible. The Bible is much more than a book of miscellaneous, disconnected religious ideas that emerged over a period of nearly two thousand years. These theologians recognize a development of teaching, a progressive revelation, as God has worked with His people leading them from a point of beginning to the climax of New Testament Christianity. Many New Testament teachings are not found, or even hinted at, in the Old Testament. These New Testament advances are the completion or fulfillment of what was started in the Old Testament, not a contradiction. Later revelation does not contradict earlier revelation; the later expands, fulfills, or interprets the earlier. With the development, historical diversity, and progression, God has led to a unity of teaching. A distinct difference separates the Old Testament and the New Testament, but a fundamental unity joins the two Testaments. The Old Testament is the preparation for the New. The New Testament is the fulfillment of the Old. Theological themes begun in the Old Testament are often carried to completion in the New Testament. For instance, the practice of sacrifice which began as early as Genesis 4:4 (apparently without any divine command) and became an officially commanded practice of the Old Testament under the law given through Moses, was carried through to the climactic once-for-all sacrifice of Jesus Christ as the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world.

Central Theme. One central theme runs through the Bible from first to last. God is the central character in the Bible. His work to bring redemption to humans is the central theme. The Bible is a religious book, focused narrowly upon redemption and its implications for our lives.

The Bible begins with the religious teaching that God created humans and the world in which they live. Human responsibility to God is grounded in the religious truth that humans come from God's creative hand. The first man and woman sinned in deliberate rebellion against God, breaking their fellowship with God. Their sin spread from them to all of their descendants, making sinful alienation from God the number one problem of all of us as human beings. The spread of this sin is not an automatic process but one which involves the personal, willful act of each of us so that we are all accountable for our sins. The Bible then proceeds to develop the theme of God's redemptive grace, tracing various stages of God's revelation of Himself: the call of Abraham; the establishment of the covenant with the Israelite community as His chosen people; the institution of the sacrificial system, teaching the people the proper way to approach God for forgiveness; the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus as the provision of forgiveness and regeneration for those dead in sin; the church as the new covenant community, the redeemed people of God on mission for Him in the world; finally, the life to come, in heaven for the redeemed, and in hell for the unregenerate.

The theme of the two covenants is crucially important to the unity of the Bible. God's plan of redemption, bringing people into a right relationship to Himself, begins with the call of Abraham and the establishment of a covenant with him. Subsequently, this covenant was reaffirmed with his son Isaac; with Isaac's son Jacob, whose name was changed to Israel; and finally the covenant was reaffirmed with the whole nation of Israel. It was an unconditional covenant on God's part but a conditional covenant from the human side: God's people must live up to the covenant responsibilities. The major portion of the Old Testament is the story of repeated failure to live up to the covenant responsibilities. The prophet Jeremiah looked forward to a new day when God would write His covenant on the hearts of the people so that it could not be broken (Jer. 31:31–34), a prophecy of the new birth referred to by Jesus in John 3:1–8. Jesus termed His death on the cross as the sacrifice instituting the new covenant referred to by Jeremiah (Luke 22:20). This shows the remarkable unity of the Old and New Testaments as anticipation and fulfillment.

God. The doctrine of God begins in the Old Testament with the work of God in creation. The Old Testament has four major emphases concerning God. 1. First, and most basic, is the unity of God: one and only one God exists and rules this world. The theme was hard to establish in the minds of the people who repeatedly fell into worship of idols and pagan deities. 2. The holiness of God teaches the wholly otherness of God. God's holiness is the qualitative difference between God and all else. It is supremely important for humans to learn that God is holy and must be treated with reverence. 3. God's sovereignty is often expressed as His lordship. Since God is sovereign, He must be obeyed at all costs; all persons must give account to Him. 4. God's faithfulness. God is not fickle and changeable like the gods of the pagans. He is faithful and unchanging. The New Testament completes the doctrine of God by sharpening the focus on God as Father and the primacy of God's love.

A person is a creature of God but a very special creature. A person is made in the image of God. This means that God has created a spiritual being, made primarily to live in fellowship with God and act responsibly in maintaining God's creation. In an act of selfish rebellion the first people sinned against God. Sin corrupted human nature, leaving all people highly susceptible to sin. Except for Jesus Christ, each person who has lived since Adam and Eve has followed in their footsteps, sinning against God.

A person's need for redemption has at least five aspects: 1. guilt must be forgiven and removed; 2. people must learn responsible obedience; 3. they must learn reverence and respect for God; 4. they must learn to live by faith; 5. they must learn to live for God's purposes, not selfish whims. The whole Bible is the unfolding story of how God has met each of these needs through the salvation that unfolded finally in its completed form through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is the eternal Son of God who took on human life, living as one Person who was both God and human in a single human life on this earth. His coming was prophesied in the Old Testament as the coming of a Messiah, a Suffering Servant who would redeem His people. In the New Testament, His life unfolded as a revelation from God of what God Himself is like. He spoke the ultimate message from God, in clearer, more forceful ways than God had ever spoken by prophet or priest in other times. He died on the cross and was raised the third day as the ultimate fulfillment of the ancient sacrificial system. New Testament writers saw His death variously, not only as the ultimate sacrifice, but also the ultimate expression of God's forgiving love. They saw Jesus' death and resurrection as the way in which God conquered sin and death, and opened regeneration to mankind as God shares the power of Jesus' resurrection with those who come to Him by faith.

Following Jesus' personal ministry on the earth, He ascended to the Father in heaven to resume His rightful place at the right hand of God. In His place, the Holy Spirit of God came as the very presence of Jesus with the disciples of Jesus, dwelling in each believer. The Holy Spirit is the agent of regeneration and supplies both nurture and guidance to the Christian, equipping each believer for an effective life of service to God in the church and in the world.

Salvation. Salvation comes to the individual person upon a response of faith in receiving the free gift of God's grace. Salvation includes both the forgiveness of sin and the regeneration of the sinful human nature. Salvation issues in a new style of living under the leadership of God, with the Christian living for the purposes of God in this world. Salvation, properly understood, should include a life of spiritual growth, ever moving towards the goal of Christlike living.

The church is seen as the new covenant community, the fulfillment of the old covenant community in the Old Testament. It is not a radical break with the old covenant community but is the logical outgrowth of the people of God in the Old Testament era. It is described as the body of Christ, with Christ as the head of the body, His life flowing out into all parts of the body, as He gives direction to it and works through it in the world just as once He worked through His own physical body in the world.

The Bible points to a time of ultimate fulfillment when God shall complete what He has been doing in this world from the beginning of creation. Jesus will return to this earth, the kingdom of God will be consummated, the dead will be resurrected, and all persons will have continued existence, with the unregenerate spending eternity in hell and believers in Christ spending eternity with God in heaven.

J. Terry Young

BIBLE, TRANSLATIONS The Old Testament was written in Hebrew and Aramaic and the New Testament in Greek, the languages both of the writers and of those who were expected to read the books in the first instance. The complete Bible has been translated into 293 languages and dialects, the New Testament into 618 additional ones, and individual books into 918 more languages. The process of translation is ongoing in the effort to make God's Word available to all in languages which everyone can understand.

Early Translations The Samaritan Pentateuch used by the Samaritan community is a form of Hebrew written in a different script (Samaritan characters) from that which the Jewish community later came to use. The Aramaic translations called Targums have their beginning in the pre-Christian period and are represented in the Qumran finds; but the major Targums came later.

The Old Testament was translated into Greek about 250 B.C. for the royal library of Alexandria. Named from the seventy translators who are said to have made it, the Septuagint, though made by Jews, has come down to us through Christian channels. Later Greek translations were made in the early period by Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion.

The evangelistic thrust of the early church gave impetus for many translations to impart the gospel to peoples in diverse language areas of the Roman empire. Before the 400 A.D., the Bible had been made available in Latin, Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, and Georgian. The succeeding centuries brought still other translations.

In the West, the church primarily used Latin after the end of the second century, and unofficial translations were made. In the fourth century Pope Damascus invited Jerome to revise current Latin translations based on Hebrew and Greek manuscripts. Jerome completed the new translation after eighteen years of work at Bethlehem. Jerome's translation came to be the accepted Bible, and by 1200 A.D. was called the Vulgate, the official version for the Roman Catholic Church.

Reformation Translations The invention of printing in 1443 and the onset of the Protestant Reformation in 1517 stimulated great interest in Bible translation. Most of the modern languages of Europe had printed translations made at that time: German, 1466; Italian, 1471; Spanish, 1478; and French, 1487. Each of these areas has a long history of manuscript translation prior to printing.

English Translations Efforts to render Scripture into English began with Caedmon's paraphrases into Anglo-Saxon (A.D. 670). Bede (A.D. 735) is said to have translated the Gospel of John, completing it on the last day of his life. It was, however, John Wyclif and his associates (A.D. 1382) who are given credit for having first given the English the complete Bible in their own language.

Erasmus printed the Greek New Testament for the first time in 1516. Luther made his German translation in 1522–1524; and William Tyndale in 1525 brought out his English New Testament—the first printed one to circulate in England. Making use of Tyndale's material where available, Miles Coverdale brought out his complete Bible in 1535.

From this point the history of the English Reformation and the history of the English Bible go hand in glove with each other. Coverdale's Bible was followed by Matthew's Bible in 1537. Then in 1539, Coverdale with the king's approval brought out the Great Bible, named for its large size.

With the coming of Mary Tudor to the throne in 1553, the printing of Bibles was temporarily interrupted; but the exiles in Geneva, led by William Whittingham, produced the Geneva Bible in 1560. This proved to be particularly popular, especially with the later Puritans. Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, then had the Bishops' Bible prepared, primarily by bishops of the Church of England, which went through twenty editions. Roman Catholics brought out their Rheims New Testament in 1582 and then the Old Testament in 1610. The period of Elizabeth was the time of England's greatest literary figures.

With Elizabeth's death and the coming of King James I to the throne at the Hampton Court Conference in January 1604, the king accepted the proposal that a new translation be made. The outcome was the King James Version of 1611. It is number nine in the sequence of printed English Bibles and is a revision of the Bishops' Bible. The KJV was heavily criticized in its early days; but in time, with official pressure, it won the field and became "the Bible" for English-reading people—a position it has held for almost four hundred years. The KJV has undergone numerous modifications so that the currently circulating book differs from that of 1611 in many ways, though the basic text is essentially the same.

By 1850, large numbers of people felt the time had come for a revision. A motion made by Bishop Wilberforce in the Convocation of Canterbury carried, setting in operation the making of the Revised Version whose New Testament appeared in 1881 and its complete Bible in 1885. The best British scholars of the day participated in the revision, and American scholars were also invited for a limited role. Though launched with great publicity, the revision eventually provoked harsh criticism. In time it became obvious that people still preferred the KJV. The revised edition was more accurate; however, the style was awkward.

The Americans waited out the fifteen years which they had promised before they would bring out a rival revision. The American Standard Revised Version was issued in 1901 with the American preferences in the text and the British in an appendix. It was more accurate than the KJV; but the revisers made the mistake of using an English style not native to English at any time. Wishing a literal translation, they produced one which is really English in Greek and Hebrew grammar and word order.

English Bible Translations in the Twentieth Century At the turn of the century Adolf Deissmann, using study of the papyri from Egypt, persuaded scholars that the New Testament was in the common language (the Koine) of the first century, giving impetus to an effort to present the Bible in the language of the twentieth century. Accompanying this development was the rise of archaeological discovery which gave new manuscripts of both the Old and New Testaments. The Cairo Genizah collection of Hebrew manuscripts was found at the end of the last century, and the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1947. Perhaps twenty-five Greek manuscripts of the New Testament could have been used in 1611. Now 5357 are known. The papyri which now total ninety-three items and are older than the great codices were found. Wider knowledge of the nature of the biblical and related languages has been gained, making for more accurate definitions. New scholarly grammars, dictionaries, and anthologies of texts grew out of these developments. Besides these matters is the simple fact that the English language continually changes so that what is understandable at one period becomes less so at a later one.

The first half of the twentieth century saw a spate of translations which abandoned the effort to revise the KJV and attempted to reflect new trends, each from its own viewpoint. They had a limited vogue in some circles while being criticized in others. Some were works of groups; others were prepared by one person; none seriously threatened the dominance of the KJV.

The Revised Standard Version, with its New Testament ready in 1946 and the complete Bible in 1952 bore the brunt of criticism of modern translations because it was the first serious challenge after 1901 to the long dominance of the KJV. It retained the Old English forms in liturgical and poetic passages, as well as using Old English pronouns when deity is addressed. Eventually an edition was issued with modifications to make it acceptable for use by Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholics which is called the "Common Bible." After forty years the RSV is rapidly becoming archaic. The New Revised Standard Version appeared in 1990.

The British have prepared the New English Bible (1970) which represents certain trends in British biblical scholarship. The American reader will see differences between British English and American English.

Roman Catholics issued the Jerusalem Bible, which with its notes is used both in and out of Catholic circles. Of more widespread influence is the New American Bible (1970) which was used in preparing the English version of the liturgy of the Roman church. While making some concessions, its notes support Catholic doctrine.

The Jewish community has produced the New Jewish Publication Society translation (1962–1982).

The paraphrase found a champion in Kenneth Taylor with his Living Bible Paraphrased (1971), which has more recently been issued under the name The Book. Taylor attempts to restate the biblical message in different words from those used by the writers, hoping to make it more understandable. Taylor, not a Hebrew or Greek scholar, paraphrased the American Standard Version. The accuracy of his work has been heavily criticized by Greek and Hebrew scholars. A revision was being prepared as this article was written.

Those who prefer literal translation found their representatives in the New American Standard Bible (NAS) prepared by the Lockman Foundation (1963). An attempt to give the ASV new life, this effort removes many archaisms from the ASV; it reflects different judgments on textual questions from the ASV, and its generous use of items which have been supplied by the translators in italics invites reinterpretation of passages.

An effort to preserve as much of the old as possible is the New King James Bible (1982). This is a "halfway house" for those who know that something needs to replace the KJV but who are not willing to have a translation which represents the current state of knowledge and which uses current language.

An effort to meet the needs of those who have English as a second language or those who have a limited knowledge of English is Today's English Version (TEV), also known as the Good News Bible (1976). Recasting of language, consolidation of statements, and paraphrasing have all been employed in the effort to make the message simple enough to be grasped by the reader.

The New International Version was issued in 1978 by the International Bible Society from a cooperative project in which more than 110 scholars representing thirty-four religious groups participated. Abandoning any effort to revise the KJV line of Bibles, the NIV is a new translation aiming at accuracy, clarity, and dignity. It attempts to steer a middle course between literalness and paraphrase while attaining a contemporary style for the English reader.

The translation effort in all its forms is a sincere effort on the part of many people of many different religious persuasions to make the Bible accessible and understandable to people to whom it might otherwise be a closed book. A diligent study of any of the efforts will increase one's understanding of the Bible. The ultimate translation is one that influences the behaviors in readers' lives and brings them hope. The task of translation is not finished. New discoveries and new students of God's Word will bring still more translations of the Bible to serve the church and its mission in generations to come. Jack P. Lewis BICHRI (Bīch′ rī) Personal name meaning, "firstborn" or clan name, "of the clan of Becher." Father of Sheba, who led revolt against David after Absalom's revolt (2 Sam. 20:1).

BICHRITE (Bīch′ rīte) RSV reading of Berites. See Berites.

BICRI (Bīc′ rī) NIV spelling of Bichri. See Bichri.

BIDKAR (Bīd′ kär) Officer of Jehu who took body of Joram, king of Israel (852–841 B.C.), and threw it on Naboth's land after Jehu murdered the king (2 Kings 9:25). Bidkar and Jehu had originally served as chariot officers for Ahab, Joram's father.

BIER Litter or bed upon which a body was placed before burial. They were portable (2 Sam. 3:31; Luke 7:14). Biers in biblical times have been compared to the wooden boards used in Muslim funerals to carry bodies today. Asa's bier was of a more elaborate type of burial couch that was probably placed in the tomb. The Hebrew word for bier (mitta) is the normal word for bed and is translated bier only when referring to burials.

BIGTHA (Bīg′ thà) Persian personal name possibly meaning, "gift of God." A eunuch who served King Ahasuerus of Persia and took command to Queen Vashti to come to party (Esther 1:10). Bigthan (Esther 2:21) may be same person. See Bigthan.

BIGTHAN (Bīg′ thăn) May be identical with Bigtha. See Bigtha. He plotted with Teresh, another of the king's eunuchs, to assassinate King Ahasuerus of Persia (Esther 2:21). Mordecai foiled the plot, thus setting up the king's need to honor Mordecai at Haman's expense (Esther 6:1–12).

BIGTHANA (Bīg·thā′ nà) Alternate spelling in Hebrew of Bigthan (Esther 6:2). See Bigthan.

BIGVAI (Bīg′ và·ī) Persian name meaning, "god" or "fortune." 1. Leader with Zerubbabel of exiles who returned from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2). Either he or another person of same name was original clan ancestor of 2,056 people who returned (Ezra 2:14). When Ezra returned about 458 B.C., 72 members of the clan returned (Ezra 8:14). 2. One who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:16).

BIKRI (Bīk′ rī) TEV spelling of Bichri. See Bichri.

BILDAD (Bīl′ dăd) Proper name meaning, "the Lord loved." One of the three friends of Job (Job 2:11). He is identified as a Shuhite, perhaps a member of a group of nomadic Arameans. His speeches reveal him as a defender of traditionalist theological views. He argues that a just God does not punish the innocent (ch. 8). Job should admit he was suffering the just fate of the wicked (ch. 18), and no person can be righteous before the awesome God (ch. 25). See Job.

BILEAM (Bil' ē·ăm) City given to Levites from tribal territory of western Manasseh. It is often identified with Ibleam. See Ibleam. Joshua 21:25, a parallel passage reads, "Gath-rimmon."

BILGAH (Bĭl' găh) Personal name meaning "brightness." 1. Original ancestor of one of divisions of priesthood (1 Chron. 24:14). 2. Priest who returned from Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Neh. 12:5).

BILGAI (Bĭl' ga·ī) Priest who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:8).

BILHAH (Bĭl' hăh) Personal name meaning, "unworried." The handmaid of Rachel (Gen. 29:29). When Rachel failed to bear children to her husband Jacob, Bilhah became his concubine at Rachel's instigation. Bilhah became the mother of Dan and Naphtali (Gen. 29:29; 30:4–7). See Patriarchs; Tribes of Israel.

BILHAN (Bĭl' hăn) Personal name perhaps meaning, "afraid" or "foolish." 1. Descendant of Seir or Edom (Gen. 36:27). 2. A descendant of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10).

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT See Divorce.

BILSHAN (Bĭl' shăn) Akkadian personal name meaning, "their lord." Leader of returning exiles with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2).

BIMHAL (Bĭm' hăl) Descendant of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:33).

BINDING AND LOOSING describe the concept that the church has the power and means to announce that sin was condemned or forgiven.

The keys to the kingdom given to Peter was a symbol in locking or unlocking sins and illustrate his authority in binding or loosing (Matt. 16:19). Later (Matt. 18:18) the same power was given to the apostles and the church as a whole. It is not an exclusive gift to any one person or church. The question of how sins are forgiven is raised in the meaning of binding and loosing. Whatever the church declared to be wrong or right would have been anticipated and ratified in heaven by divine sanction. This means that whatsoever shall have been forgiven on earth shall have been forgiven in heaven. Heaven sets the standard, earth follows heaven's lead. It is the responsibility of believers to have a forgiving spirit and to teach the conditions of forgiveness (Matt. 6:12). In John 20:23 Jesus said "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained." This means that the church is to proclaim the way of salvation and those who accept Him are forgiven, but those who reject Him are condemned. Binding and loosing is determined by the hearer's response. Sins have been washed (loosed) by the blood of Jesus (Rev. 1:5)

Lawson Hatfield

BINEA (Bĭn' ē·à) A descendant of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37) and of King Saul (1 Chron. 10:43).

BINNUI (Bĭn' nū·ī) Personal name meaning, "built." 1. A Levite who assured the Temple treasures Ezra brought back from Exile were correctly inventoried (Ezra 8:33). 2. Two men who divorced foreign wives when Ezra sought to remove temptation to idolatry and purify the community (Ezra 10:30,38). 3. Man who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:24). 4. Clan leader of 648 members who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:15; Ezra 2:10—spells it "Bani" with 642 people). 5. Levite who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:9). Could be same as any of the above. He came up with Zerubbabel from Babylonian Exile (Neh. 12:8).

BIRDS The Bible contains approximately three hundred references to birds, scattered from Genesis to Revelation. The Hebrew people's keen awareness of bird life is reflected in the numerous different Hebrew and Greek names used for birds in general or for specific birds. Although bird names are difficult to translate, many birds of the Bible can be identified from the descriptions of them given in the Scriptures.

General Terminology Several general terms for birds occur in the Bible. In the Old Testament the Hebrew term 'oph, the most general term for birds, is used collectively to refer to flying creatures or fowl, as well as to winged insects. The term 'oph occurs repeatedly in the creation narrative of Genesis 1 and 2 (Gen. 1:20, 21, 22, 26, 28, 30; 2:19, 20). Genesis 6:20 notes the division of birds into species. Leviticus 20:25 categorizes them as clean or unclean. Leviticus 11:13–19 and Deuteronomy 14:12–18 list the specific birds which the Hebrews regarded as unclean and therefore not to be eaten. All birds of prey, including eagles, vultures, hawks, and falcons, were classified as unclean.

A second general term used for birds in the Old Testament is tsippor. Like 'oph, tsippor may refer to birds of every kind (Gen. 7:14; Deut. 4:17), but it usually denotes game birds (Ps. 124:7; Prov. 6:5) or the perching birds (passerines, Ps. 102:7; Dan. 4:12). From the term tsippor the name of Moses' wife (Zipporah) is derived.

In the New Testament the Greek term peteinon is used for birds in general (Matt. 6:26; 8:20; 13:4; Luke 9:58; 12:24; Acts 10:12; 11:6; Rom. 1:23). The term oneon is used in Revelation to describe the completeness of Babylon's destruction (18:2) and to refer to flesh-eating fowl (19:17, 21).

Specific Birds Named in the Bible Apart from the general terminology, the Bible mentions a great number of birds by name. Translators use different English equivalents to refer to the various birds. Among the birds specifically named in the RSV translation of the Bible are:

Cock The crowing of the cock is probably the most well-known bird sound in the Bible. All of the New Testament references to the cock (except the mention of "cockcrow" in Mark 13:35) relate to Peter's denial of Christ. Jesus warned Peter that before the cock crowed twice, Peter would deny Him three times (Mark 14:30). Roosters first crowed about midnight and a second time around three o'clock in the morning. Their crowing occurred so punctually that the Romans relied on this bird sound to signal the time to change the guard.

Dove/Turtledove The term "dove" is applied rather loosely to many of the smaller species of pigeon. The first mention of the dove in the Bible occurs in Genesis 8:8–12. Noah released a dove from the ark to determine if the flood waters had subsided from the earth.

The moaning of the dove sometimes functions metaphorically (Isa. 38:14; 59:11; Ezek. 7:16). Psalm 55:6 notes the dove's powers of flight; Jeremiah 48:28 describes its nesting habits; Psalm 68:13 indicates its rich colors. Because of the gentleness of the dove and because of its faithfulness to its mate, this bird is used as a descriptive title of one's beloved in the Song of Solomon (2:14; 5:2; 6:9). In Matthew 10:16 the dove symbolizes innocence.

All four Gospels describe the Spirit of God descending like a dove upon Jesus after His baptism (Matt. 3;16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32).

The term "turtledove" also is applied to any of the smaller varieties of pigeon. The turtledove played a significant sacrificial role in the Bible (Gen. 15:9; Lev. 1:14; 5:7,11; 12:6; 14:22, 30; 15:14; Luke 2:24). For those who could not afford a lamb, the law prescribed that two turtledoves or pigeons be offered for the sacrifice of purification after childbearing. Mary brought such an offering after the birth of Christ (Lev. 12:8; Luke 2:24). The turtledove also signified the arrival of spring (Song of Sol. 2:12; Jer. 8:7).

Eagle The term "eagle" refers to several large birds of prey active in the daytime rather than at night. The Hebrew term translated "eagle" (nesher) also sometimes is translated "vulture." The eagle, the largest flying bird of Palestine, may reach a wingspread of eight feet or more. The Palestinian eagle builds great nests of sticks on rocky crags in the mountains (Job 39:27–28; Jer. 49:16). As one of the most majestic birds, it occupies a prominent role in the Bible. The eagle appears in the lists of unclean birds (Lev. 11:13; Deut. 14:12). Old Testament writers noted the eagle's swift movement (Deut. 28:49; 2 Sam. 1:23; Jer. 4:13), the sweep and power of its flight (Prov. 23:5; Isa. 40:31), and the eagle's concern for its young (Ex. 19:4; Deut. 32:11).

In the ancient world the eagle or vulture often was associated with deity. The prophets and apocalyptists chose this bird to play a figurative or symbolic role in their writings (Ezek. 1:10; 10:14; Dan. 7:4; Rev. 4:7; 8:13).

In Exodus 19:4 and Deuteronomy 32:11 the eagle is used figuratively of God's protection and care. In these passages God is pictured as a loving parent who redeems and protects His people even as the parent eagle cares for its young.

Hen The Greek word translated "hen" can refer to the female of any bird, not just the domesticated fowl. Only two references to the hen occur in the Scriptures (Matt. 23:37; Luke 13:34). In both instances the term is used figuratively of God's care for His people. The hen stands as a figure of the self-sacrifice and tender motherliness of God revealed in Christ.

Ostrich The ostrich, the largest of birds, is a swift, flightless fowl. One passage in Job (39:13–18) describes some of the characteristic habits of the ostrich. The female lays her eggs in the sand. The male does most of the incubating, mainly at night. Unhatched eggs serve as food for the young. Although the parent bird leaves the nest when it senses danger, this diversionary tactic actually is a protective measure. However, such habits may have created the impression that the ostrich was indifferent to its young (Lam. 4:3). The ostrich is listed as unclean (Lev. 11:16; Deut. 14:15), probably because of its eating habits.

Pigeon "Pigeon" is a general term referring to any of a widely distributed subfamily of fowl (Columbinae). The term "pigeon" basically is employed when referring to the use of these birds for sacrificial offerings. In Leviticus pigeons serve as burnt offerings and as sin offerings (Lev. 1:14; 5:7,11). They also play a role in the rituals for purification following childbirth (Lev. 12:6,8) and for the cleansing of a healed leper (Lev. 14:22,30). Along with turtledoves, pigeons are the least expensive animal offerings. Mary offered a pigeon and two turtledoves after Jesus' birth (Luke 2:24).

Quail The Hebrew term translated "quail" in the Old Testament is found only in connection with God's provision of food for Israel in the wilderness (Ex. 16:13; Num. 11:31–32; Ps. 105:40). Probably the quails which visited the Hebrew camp were a migrating flock. Enormous numbers of quails migrate north during the spring after wintering in Africa. When the fatigued birds stop to rest, they can be caught easily. In God's timing the birds came to provide for the needs of His people.

The quails mentioned in the Old Testament differ from the North American bobwhite quails. Besides being migratory, the quails of the Bible are mottled brown in color and are smaller than the bobwhite quails. The quails mentioned in the Old Testament have short wings and weak powers of flight.

Raven The raven, conspicuous because of its black color (Song of Sol. 5:11), is a member of the crow family. The raven acts as a scavenger and is listed among the unclean birds (Lev. 11;15; Deut. 14:14). Biblical writers cite the raven as an example of God's care for His creation (Job 38:41; Ps. 147:9; Luke 12:24).

The raven was the first bird Noah sent forth from the ark following the flood (Gen. 8:7). He may have selected the raven for several reasons. It can fly without rest for long spans of time. Also the raven makes its home in the rocky crags, and thus it would scout out mountain peaks emerging from the flooded earth. Finally, the raven is a resourceful bird with a remarkable memory.

God sent ravens to sustain Elijah by the brook Cherith (1 Kings 17:4–6). Ravens often store surplus food beneath leaves or in rocky crevices. Although ravens often have been viewed as birds of evil omen, in the Elijah story they serve as symbols of God's love for His servant and of His mighty sovereignty over nature.

Sparrow The sparrow belongs to the finch family. In the Old Testament the Hebrew term translated "sparrow" (tsippor) also carries the general meaning "bird." The translation "sparrow" occurs in the Revised Standard Version text in Psalm 84:3 and in Proverbs 26:2. The King James Version also translates tsippor "sparrow" in Psalm 102:7.

In Psalm 102:7, the translation "sparrow" may be inappropriate because the verse refers to a bird "alone upon the house top," and the most common sparrows always appeared in flocks. On the other hand, the psalmist may have intended this contradiction to emphasize the depth of loneliness and utter desolation which he was experiencing.

Two passages in the New Testament refer to the sparrow (Matt. 10:29–31; Luke 12:6–7). In these parallel passages Jesus taught His disciples to have confidence in God's love. The God who cares for all of His creation, even the insignificant sparrow, certainly cares for people.

Vulture Both carrion vulture and vulture are listed separately in the unclean bird lists (Lev. 11:13–19; Deut. 14:12–18 RSV). The term "vulture" refers to several different birds of prey. The English word "vulture" is used to translate several different Hebrew terms.

The Bible does not permit a positive identification of the types of vultures known during the biblical period. In contrast to eagles and hawks, which usually kill living prey, vultures feed on dead animals.

The Hebrew term nesher, sometimes translated "eagle," is translated "vulture" in Hosea's threat to Israel (8:1). Lack of a proper burial was viewed as a great horror in biblical times. The common belief was that as long as a body remained unburied, the person could not be gathered to the fathers and experience rest in Sheol. Goliath and David threatened one another with this fate (1 Sam. 17:44,46). The curses in Deuteronomy warned the disobedient of this horrible consequence (Deut. 28:26). Ultimately the author of Revelation used the image of the birds of prey to picture the defeat of evil before the reign of Christ (Rev. 19:17–21; compare Ezek. 29:5; 32:4; 39:4, 17–20). Janice Meier

BIRDS OF ABOMINATION List of twenty birds not to be consumed by Israelites (Lev. 11:13–19). The reason for the exclusion of these birds is unclear. Some have suggested that the birds were prohibited because they were associated with the worship of idols. Others have suggested that they were excluded because they ate flesh which contained blood or because they had contact with corpses—both of which would make one ritually unclean (see Lev. 7:26; 17:13–14; 21:1–4,11; 22:4; Num. 5:2–3; 6:6–11). See Birds.

BIRSHA (Bĭr' shà) Personal name with uncertain meaning, traditionally, "ugly." King of Gomorrah who joined coalition of Dead Sea area kings against eastern group of invading kings (Gen. 14:2).

BIRTH The act or process of bringing forth young from the womb. The biblical writers, like other ancient people, did not fully understand the process of conception. Having no knowledge of the woman's ovum, they thought that only the male's semen (his "seed") produced the child. The woman provided her womb as a receptacle for the protection and growth of the child.

Midwives were often used in the birthing process (Gen. 35:17; 38:28; Ex. 1:15). Birthstools were also used (Ex. 1:16; see Birthstool). The infant's navel cord was cut immediately after birth; the child was cleaned, rubbed with salt, and wrapped in cloths (Ezek. 16:4). Often the child was named at birth (Gen. 21:3; 29:32,35; 30:6–8). The woman was considered ritually unclean for a period of from 40 to 80 days following birth (Lev. 12:1–8; see Luke 2:22).

When a son was born, he was placed immediately on his father's knees (Gen. 50:23; Job 3:12). The psalmist's words, "Upon thee was I cast from my birth," reflects the father's receiving of his new son and signifies God's care from the moment of birth (Ps. 22:10; 71:6). Rachel, by receiving Bilhah's child upon her knees at birth, was adopting him as her own (Gen. 30:3–8).

Birth could be premature because of the shock of bad news (1 Sam. 4:19). The untimely birth—here, stillborn (see Untimely Birth)—enters the dark, finds rest, and does not know the agony of life (Eccl. 6:4–5; Job 3:11–13). A miscarriage was caused by accident or violence (Ex. 21:22–25), or may have been considered as divine judgment (Ps. 58:8; Hos. 9:14).

The birth of a child was a time of rejoicing, especially the birth of a son (Ruth 4:13–14; Jer. 20:15; Luke 1:14,57–58; 2:13–14; John 16:21). One's birthday was an occasion for celebration (Gen. 40:20; Matt. 14:6). If life became unbearable, one might be moved to curse the day of birth (Job 3:3; Jer. 20:14).

The birthing process was used in a figurative way in describing the relationship of God to His people. In Deuteronomy 32:18, God gave birth to Israel as a mother would give birth to a child. Therefore, when the Israelites said to the tree, "You are my father," and to the stone, "You gave me birth," they turned away from their true parent (the tree and stone pillar were symbols in the worship of idols). According to Jesus, it is just as necessary to be born of the Spirit as it is to be born of a woman (John 3:1–7). The birthing process is also used as an image to describe God's creative activity (Job 38:29). God is even pictured as a midwife (Isa. 66:7–9).

Many biblical writers used the pain of childbirth in a metaphorical way. Kings before God tremble like a woman giving birth (Ps. 48:6). The coming of the day of the Lord will cause anguish similar to childbirth. There will be pangs, agony, cries, gasping, and panting (Isa. 13:8; 42:14; Jer. 6:24; 13:21; 22:23; 30:6; 48:41; 49:24; 50:43; John 16:21; Rev. 12:2). Phil Logan

BIRTHRIGHT Esau forfeited his birthright to his brother Jacob for the sake of a meal of lentil stew and bread (Gen. 25:29–34). The birthright consisted of the special privileges that belonged to the firstborn male child in a family. Prominent among those privileges was a double portion of the estate as an inheritance. If a man had two sons, his estate would be divided into three portions, and the older son would receive two. If there were three sons, the estate would be divided into four portions, and the oldest son would receive two. The oldest son also normally received the father's major blessing. Indeed, the Hebrew word for blessing (berakah) is virtually an anagram of the word that means both birthright and firstborn (bekorah). Legal continuation of the family line may also have been included among the privileges of the firstborn son. Deuteronomy 21:15–17 prohibited a father from playing favorites among his sons by trying to give the birthright to other than the firstborn.

BIRTHSTOOL An object upon which a woman sat during labor (Ex. 1:16). The birthstool may have been of Egyptian origin. The same Hebrew word (obnayim) is also translated as "potter's wheel" (Jer. 18:3).

BIRZAITH (Bĭr·zā′ ĭth) Descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:31).

BIRZAVITH (Bĭr·zā′ vĭth) KJV spelling of Birzaith. See Birzaith.

BISHLAM (Bĭsh′ lăm) Personal name or common name meaning, "in peace." Apparently representative of Persian government in Palestine who complained about building activities of the returned Jews to Artaxerxes, king of Persia (464–423 B.C.).

BISHOP The English word "bishop" is the normal translation of the Green noun episkopos, which occurs five times in the New Testament (Acts 20:28; Philem. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:2; Titus 1:7; 1 Pet. 2:25).

Prior to the advent of Christianity episkopos meant "inspector," "watchman," or "overseer." It was used of the finance officers of Greek guilds and of the officers Athens sent to its subject-states. Finance officers administered revenues for Greek temples.

One of the five usages of episkopos in the New Testament was as a title applied to Jesus: "the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls" (1 Pet. 2:25). The other four uniformly referred to one who had a role or office in an early Gentile Christian congregation. In addressing the elders of the church of Ephesus the Apostle Paul stated, "the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers (episcopous), to feed the church of God" (Acts 20:28). In the salutation to his Epistle to the Philippians he greeted "the bishops and deacons" of the church at Philippi (1:1). In 1 Timothy 3:1–7 qualifications were given for a "bishop": reputation, marital status, character traits, hospitality, teaching ability, non-drunkenness, attitude toward money, responsible parenthood, and length of time as a Christian. A similar list of qualifications for a "bishop" appears in Titus 1:6–9.

The noun episkopē, meaning "overseership," "bishopric," or "office," appears in Acts 1:20 (a quotation from Ps. 109:8*b*) and in 1 Timothy 3:1. The verb episkopeō, meaning "to exercise oversight," appears in some Greek New Testament manuscripts and hence some English translations (KJV, ASV) in 1 Peter 5:2.

Paul, addressing the Ephesian "elders," reminded them that the Holy Spirit made them "overseers" (episkopous) "to feed (verb which is cognate to the noun "pastor") the church of the Lord." From this many conclude that in Paul's time "elder," "bishop," and "pastor" were terms used to describe three different functions of the same Christian leader, not three distinct ministerial offices. Moreover, according to Philippians 1:1 the church at Philippi had more than one bishop.

During the second century A.D. churches came to have a single bishop, and then that bishop came to exercise oversight over nearby rural churches as well as the city church so that his ecclesiastical territory became known as a "diocese" or "see" ("eparchy" in the East). Bishops of churches that had been founded by apostles were said to be in succession to the apostles, and hence their teaching was held to be authentic and their authority collegial. By 400 A.D. in the West, the bishop of Rome began to assume extraordinary authority above other bishops.

Today the Roman Catholic Church, the Eastern Orthodox churches, the Old Catholic Church, the Anglican communion, and the (Lutheran) Church of Sweden teach the doctrine of apostolic (or episcopal) succession. Other Lutheran bodies, the United Methodist Church (USA), and the Moravian Church have bishops who serve as superintendents. James Leo Garrett, Jr.

BIT The metal bar fastened to the muzzle end of the horse's bridle. The bit is inserted in the horse's mouth between the teeth and is used to control the horse. The bit had loops on either end for attaching the reins. Some bits from the biblical period have spikes which would have stuck in the side of the horse's mouth when the reins were applied; the pain made the horse more responsive to the rider's commands. The bit and bridle were used figuratively in the Bible to refer to different forms of control (James 1:26; 3:2; see 2 Kings 19:28; Isa. 37:29).

BITHIA (Bĭ' thĭ' ȧ) NAS spelling of Bithiah. See Bithiah.

BITHIAH (Bĭth' ĭ·ăh) Personal name meaning, "daughter of Yahweh" or Egyptian common noun meaning, "queen." Daughter of an Egyptian pharaoh whom Mered, a descendant of tribe of Judah, married (1 Chron. 4:17 NAS, RSV; 4:18 KJV; NIV). The verse stands in verse 18 in Hebrew but relates to the content of verse 17. Bithiah was the mother of Miriam, Shammai, and Ishbah. Throughout its history, Israel incorporated foreigners into its tribes.

BITHRON (Bĭth' rŏn) Place name meaning, "ravine" or common noun meaning, "morning." As David ruled Judah in Hebron and Ishbosheth ruled Israel in Mahanaim, their armies clashed under generals Joab and Abner. Abner retreated. Joab and his brothers pursued. Abner killed Asahel. Finally Joab quit pursuing. Abner crossed the Jordan and marched through "Bithron," either a ravine or mountain pass (KJV, NIV, TEV) or the forenoon (RSV, NAS).

BITHYNIA (Bĭthȳn' ĭă) A district in northern Asia Minor that Paul's missionary company desired to enter with the gospel (Acts 16:7). The Holy Spirit prevented them from doing so and directed them instead to Macedonia. Though no record exists of how the Christian faith took root in Bithynia, believers lived there during the first century. Those to whom 1 Peter was addressed included persons in Bithynia (1 Pet. 1:1).

BITTER HERBS Herbs eaten with the Passover meal (Ex. 12:8; Num. 9:11). They were interpreted as symbolizing the bitter experiences of the Israelites' slavery in Egypt. Some have suggested that the bitter herbs comprised a salad including lettuce, endive, chicory, and dandelion. The word translated "bitterness" in Lamentations 3:15 is the same word translated "bitter herbs."

BITTER WATER The water drunk by a woman suspected of adultery (Num. 5:11–31). If a man suspected his wife had been unfaithful to him but was not a witness to the act and could not produce witnesses to the act, the woman was taken to the priest who arranged an ordeal to determine the woman's innocence or guilt. When the man brought the woman to the priest, he brought an offering of jealousy or remembrance (a cereal offering of barley). The priest seated the woman before the sanctuary facing the altar. The woman's hair was unbound as a sign of her shame. The woman held the offering, and the priest held the vessel containing the bitter water. The bitter water was a combination of holy water and dust from the sanctuary floor. At this point the woman took an oath: if she was innocent, the water would not harm her; if she was guilty, then her "thigh would rot" and her "body swell." The woman affirmed the oath with a double, "amen." The priest wrote the curse (Num. 5:21–22) on a parchment and washed the ink off the page into the water. The priest then took the offering and burned it upon the altar, after which the woman drank the bitter water. If she was innocent, she would not be harmed and would conceive children as a blessing. If she was guilty, the curse would take effect. The man bore no guilt if his suspicions proved false—that is, he had not willingly broken the ninth commandment against bearing false witness. The woman, on the other hand, bore the consequences of her guilt (Num. 5:31).

BITTERN KJV translation for an animal of desolation mentioned three times in the Bible (Isa. 14:23; 34:11; Zeph. 2:14). The name "bittern" is applied to any number of small or medium sized herons (Botaurus and related genera) with a characteristic booming cry. Bittern and heron are marsh and water birds and do not seem to be the animal referred to by the biblical writers. A number of alternatives have been suggested: bustard (REB), (screech) owl (NIV, TEV), porcupine, hedgehog (NAS, NRSV), and lizard. Of these suggestions, hedgehog and porcupine have the widest support. The animal represents the wild and mysterious world humans do not control. See Animals.

B

BITUMEN A mineral pitch or asphalt (KJV has "slime';' NAS, NIV, "tar pits") found in solid black lumps in the cretaceous limestone on the west bank of the Dead Sea (see Gen. 14:10). Other forms are found in Asia Minor. Bitumen was used as a mortar in setting bricks in the buildings and ziggurats in Mesopotamia (see Gen. 11:3) and as a caulking for rafts and basket boats on the Euphrates (see Ex. 2:3; compare Gen. 6:14). See Pitch.

BIZIOTHIAH (Bĭz' ĭ·ō·thī' ăh) Place name meaning, "scorns of Yahweh." Southern town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:28). The parallel list in Nehemiah 11:27 reads, benotheyha ("her villages"), which the Joshua text of the Septuagint or early Greek translation also read. If that is not the correct reading in Joshua 15:27, then the location of Biziothiah is not known.

BIZJOTHJAH (Bĭz·jŏth' jah) KJV spelling of Biziothiah. See Biziothiah.

BIZTHA (Biz' thà) Persian personal name of uncertain meaning. One of seven eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus in matters relating to his wives (Esther 1:10).

BLACK Often used to denote the color of physical objects: hair (Lev. 13:31,37; Song of Sol. 5:11), skin (Job 30:30; Song of Sol. 1:5–6; Lam. 4:8), the sky as a sign of rain (1 Kings 18:45), and animals (Gen. 30:32–43; Zech. 6:2,6; Rev. 6:5). "Black" is also used figuratively to describe mourning (Job 30:28; Jer. 4:28; 8:21; 14:2), a visionless day (Micah 3:6), the abode of the dead (Job 3:5; Jude 13), and the treachery of Job's friends (Job 6:16). See Colors.

BLACK PEOPLE AND BIBLICAL PERSPECTIVES Black people in America have a deep affinity for the Bible. This affinity has evolved despite the negative ways in which the Bible was used from 1620 to 1865. Then, the Bible was used to reinforce attitudes of subservience and servility. It became a weapon for enforcing certain moralisms designed to keep the slaves under control.

Black people found positive reasons for turning to the Bible. During the protracted revival meetings called the "Great Awakenings" (1740's and 1798—1820) they heard the Bible used to proclaim the good news of salvation. The new life in Christ surpassed anything they had ever known, and it was proclaimed under the authority of the Bible.

Some slaves felt the divine call to preach. For those given permission to preach, the Bible became the textbook from which they learned to read. Some were forbidden the opportunity of learning to read, but legends tell of secret instructions by beneficent persons. Often the Bible was the textbook.

Black people also developed love for the Bible because of the stories of deliverance and hope that it contains. These were memorized, embellished, and became their daily spiritual substance. Black people identified with the Israelites moving from Egyptian servitude to the Promised Land. They took courage in God's provisions during the wilderness wanderings. The miraculous battles of Joshua, Gideon, Samson, and David were inspiring to them. Black sermonic themes from those days until the 1950's emphasized God's deliverance as illustrated in Daniel and "the Hebrew Boys"; Ezekiel and the Valley of Dry Bones; the messianic passages of the prophets; the miracles of Jesus; His death, burial, and power over death. Some sermon themes became attention-getters sure to draw crowds (The Valley of Dry Bones, The Eagle Stirreth Her Nest, The Lions Den, The Firey Furnace).

These stories were told over again by God-called men who were denied formal training; but who, having heard others read from the Bible, committed those verses to memory and could retell Bible stories in ways that made them come to life. Black preachers became masters at "telling the story." They practiced narrative theology long before it was suddenly "discovered" by some seminaries in the 1970's. Even though the congregations had heard these Bible stories, they were anxious to hear them again. Not only did the repetition reinforce the story, but each man gave the stories new vitality through his interpretation.

Black people also "sang the story." Bible stories became the substance of spirituals and jubilee songs: "Didn't My Lord Deliver Daniel, Then Why Not Every Man," "Go Down Moses," "Joshua Fit the Battle of Jericho," "Little David, Play On Your Harp," "O Mary, Don't You Weep." Music not only reinforced the telling of the story but put it in a medium to be easily remembered. Memorization through music is an experience common to humanity. Black people have maximized music as a communicative medium.

The 1960's and '70's birthed another interest of Black people in relation to the Bible. The quest for Black history and Black pride led to in-depth studies of Bible personalities believed to be Black or with African identification. This has resulted in some deeper affinities for the Bible since Black people now know they are positively represented. Pride is expressed in the rescue of the prophet Jeremiah by Ebedmelech, an Ethiopian (Jer. 38:7–13; 39:15–18). Simon of Cyrene, identified as an African, was considered heroic for helping Jesus carry the cross (Mark 15:21). Black people felt included in the embryonic spread of Christianity when seeing that representatives from African countries were among those upon whom the Holy Spirit fell at Pentecost (Acts 2:5–11,39). Historical notions were rethought when it was discovered that Christianity did not originally come to Africa through Western missionaries, but more likely from the dispersion after Pentecost, the influence of the powerful government official whom Philip baptized (Acts 8:26–37), and from the early church fathers. Recent research has determined that nine of the eighteen church fathers were African (Clement, Origen, Tertullian, Cyprian, Dionysius, Athanasius, Didymus, Augustine, and Cyril). These were men who guided the formation, crystallization, and propagation of Christian thought during the first to the third centuries A.D.

The only Bible passages some Black people have difficulty with are the Pauline passages which seem to ignore the problem of slavery as an evil. These are 1 Corinthians 7:20–24; Ephesians 6:5–9; Colossians 3:22–25; Titus 2:9–10; Philemon. One other passage, though not Pauline, is in this category, 1 Peter 2:18–25.

These passages have become less objectionable when viewed with the "interim ethic" idea. Paul expected the return of Christ to be so immediate that he gave little place for social change. Some Black theologians now think that had Paul known Jesus would have been this long in returning he would have tackled this social evil straight forwardly.

The Bible continues to be loved and reverenced by Black people. Some non-Christians regard it as sacred even though refusing to commit their lives to the Christ of the Bible. Most people, however, regard the Bible as God's Word. They believe it literally, may apply some passages allegorically, and will contemporize it for practical application.

In more recent years the Bible is used less for its story content as for a practical guide in dealing with issues from a Black perspective. These issues include salvation, moral guidance, ethical behavior, and spiritual nurture. The preacher who only "tells the story" is in less demand. The person who applies the truths of the stories to contemporary situations is taken more seriously. As more Black people move into decision-making roles, they will become more dependent upon biblical and spiritual resources to guide that mobility. Many Black people are definite about the place of the Bible in their pilgrimage. It remains in the forefront. Emmanuel McCall

BLAINS KJV word for sores in Exodus 9:9–10. See Boils.

BLASPHEMY is a transliteration of a Greek word meaning literally "to speak harm." In the biblical context, blasphemy is an attitude of disrespect that finds expression in an act directed against the character of God.

Old Testament Blasphemy draws its Christian definition through the background of the Old Testament. It is significant that blasphemy reflects improper action with regard to the use of God's name. God revealed His character and invited personal relationship through the revelation of His name. Therefore, the use of God's name gave the Israelites the opportunity of personal participation with the very nature of God.

Leviticus 24:14–16 guides the Hebrew definition of blasphemy. The offense is designated as a capital crime, and the offender is to be stoned by the community. Blasphemy involves the actual pronunciation of the name of God along with an attitude of disrespect. Under the influence of this interpretation, the personal name of God (Yahweh) was withdrawn from ordinary speech and the title of Adonai (Lord) was used in its place.

Israel, at various times, was guilty of blasphemy. Specifically mentioned were the instances of the golden calf (Neh. 9:18) and the harsh treatment of the prophets (Neh. 9:26). David was accused by Nathan of making a mockery of God's commands and giving an occasion for the enemies of Israel to blaspheme—to misunderstand the true nature of God (2 Sam. 12:14).

The enemies of Israel blasphemed God through acts against the people of God. The Assyrians claimed that God was powerless when compared to their mighty army (2 Kings 19:6,22; Isa. 37:6,23). A contempt of God was shown by the Babylonians during the Exile, as they continually ridiculed God (Isa. 52:5). Edom was guilty of blasphemy when it rejoiced over the fall of Jerusalem (Ezek. 35:12). God responded with judgment (2 Kings 19:35–37) or promised judgment (Isa. 52:6; Ezek. 35:12–15) to defend the dignity of His name.

New Testament The New Testament broadens the concept of blasphemy to include actions against Christ and the church as the body of Christ. Jesus was regarded by the Jewish leaders as a blasphemer Himself (Mark 2:7). When tried by the Sanhedrin, Jesus not only claimed messianic dignity, but further claimed the supreme exalted status (Luke 22:69). Such a claim, according to the Sanhedrin, fit the charge of blasphemy and, therefore, deserved death (Matt. 26:65; Mark 14:64). However, according to the New Testament perspective, the real blasphemers were those who denied the messianic claims of Jesus and rejected His unity with the Father (Mark 15:29; Luke 22:65; 23:39).

The unity of Christ and the church is recognized in the fact that persecutions against Christians are labeled as blasphemous acts (1 Tim.

1:13; 1 Pet. 4:4; Rev. 2:9). It is also important that Christians avoid conduct that might give an occasion for blasphemy, especially in the area of attitude and speech (Eph. 4:31; Col. 3:8; 1 Tim. 6:4; Titus 3:2).

The sin of blasphemy is a sin that can be forgiven. However, there is a sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit that cannot be forgiven (Matt. 12:32; Mark 3:29; Luke 12:10). This is a state of hardness in which one consciously and willfully resists God's saving power and grace. It is a desperate condition that is beyond the situation of forgiveness because one is not able to recognize and repent of sin. Thus one wanting to repent of blasphemy against the Spirit cannot have committed the sin. Jerry M. Henry BLASTING Reference to the hot east winds which blow across Palestine for days at a time (Deut. 28:22 KJV and RSV; other versions read "blight"). This blasting wind dries up vegetation and ruins crops (Isa. 37:27; see Ps. 90:5–6; 102:3–4; Isa. 40:6–8). This wind represents one of the great natural calamities (1 Kings 8:37; 2 Chron. 6:28) and one of the judgments of God upon the disobedient (Deut. 28:22; Amos 4:9; Hag. 2:17).

BLASTUS (Blăs' tŭs) Personal name meaning, "sprout." Official under Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 37–44). Won over by citizens of Tyre and Sidon, he tried to help them make peace with Herod. Herod's ensuing speech let him assume the role of God over the people, resulting in God striking him dead (Acts 12:20–23).

BLEACH See Fuller.

BLEMISH A condition that disqualifies an animal as a sacrifice (Lev. 22:17–25) or a man from priestly service (Lev. 21:17–24). In the New Testament, Christ is the perfect sacrifice (without blemish, Heb. 9:14; 1 Pet. 1:19) intended to sanctify the church and remove all its blemishes (Eph. 5:27). The children of God are commanded to live lives without blemishes (Phil. 2:15; 2 Pet. 3:14).

BLESSEDNESS See Blessing and Cursing.

BLESSING AND CURSING are primary biblical emphases, as reflected in the 516 uses of words such as bless (132), blessed (285), blesses (10), blessing (70), and blessings (19); and the 199 occurrences of such words as curse (97), cursed (74), curses (19), and cursing (9).

The English word "bless" is often used to translate barak. The word means "to kneel" (2 Chron. 6:13; Ps. 95:6) and thus "to bless" (Gen. 27:33; Ex. 18:10; Deut. 28:4). Old Testament individuals might bless God (Gen. 9:26; Ez. 18:10; Ruth 4:14; Ps. 68:19). God also blesses men and women (Gen. 12:23; Num. 23:20; Ps. 109:28; Isa. 61:9). Persons might also bless one another (Gen. 27:33; Deut. 7:14; 1 Sam. 25:33), or they might bless things (Deut. 28:4; 1 Sam. 25:33; Prov. 5:18). Normally, however, when used as a verb, the word is in the passive voice ("be blessed"), as though to suggest that persons do not have in themselves the power to bless.

Words of blessing also are used as a salutation or greeting, with an invocation of blessing as a stronger greeting than "peace" (shalom, Gen. 48:20). As such it may be used in meeting (Gen. 47:7), departing (Gen. 24:60), by messengers (1 Sam. 25:14), in gratitude (Job 31:20), as a morning salutation (Prov. 27:14), congratulations for prosperity (Gen. 12:3), in homage (2 Sam. 14:22), and in friendliness (2 Sam. 21:3).

In the New Testament, the word "bless" often translates makarios, meaning "blessed, fortunate, happy." The special characteristic of New Testament uses of "bless" and related words is close relationship to the religious joy people experience from being certain of salvation and thus of membership in the kingdom of God. "Bless" occurs in the New Testament only ten times, in contrast to 122 Old Testament occurrences. The New Testament never uses "blesses" and uses "blessing" only 17 times. It is reasonable to conclude that the primary use of the blessing concept in the New Testament is that of "blessed" as opposed to the verbal emphasis on "bless."

"Blessed" appears frequently in the New Testament (88). Especially is "blessed" well known for Jesus' references to the word in the Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:3–11) and His congratulations to those who respond positively to the kingdom of God (Matt. 23:39; 24:46; Mark 11:9; Luke 10:23; 14:15). In contrast to frequent usage in the first three Gospels (52 occurrences) the Gospel of John uses the word "blessed" in only three places (John 12:13; 13:17; 20:29).

Elsewhere, Pauline literature uses the word: "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered" (Rom. 4:7); "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort" (2 Cor. 1:3). John often used the word in Revelation: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein for the time is at hand" (Rev. 1:3); "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord" (Rev. 14:13; cf. 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7,14).

"Cursing" is less frequently used in the Bible (199) than is "blessing" (516). The concept is almost exclusively Old Testament, which speaks of "curse" (89), "cursed" (65), "curses" (18), and "cursing" (8). The New Testament uses "curse" only 8 times, "cursed" in 9 places, "curses" in a single verse, and "cursing" in one reference. Of the 199 biblical uses of the words, 180 are in the Old Testament and only 19 in the New Testament.

An early word for "curse" in the Old Testament is 'arar and is used primarily in poetic and legal sections of the Old Testament. The word appears in the call of Abraham, "and curse him that curseth thee" (Gen. 12:3). An extended curse formula appears in Deuteronomy, where blessing and cursing are contrasted (Deut. 27:15–26; cf. 28:16–19). Later the same word refers to cursing the priests: "If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart" (Mal. 2:2).

Another word used for "curse" in the Old Testament (qalal) has less severe implications, although it probably came to be used as a synonym for the harsher term ('arar). The basic meaning of the word is light, insignificant, or trifling. It described persons lightly esteemed (2 Sam. 6:22) and also meant "to make contemptible"; hence, to curse persons (Gen. 12:3; Ex. 21:17). The word also means to treat with contempt (2 Sam. 19:44; Isa. 23:9) or to dishonor (Isa. 8:21).

The unique concept of the spoken word, especially in the context of worship or other formal settings, is important for understanding the significance of both cursing and blessing. According to Old Testament thought patterns, the formally spoken word had both an independent existence and the power of its own fulfillment. The word once spoken assumed a history of its own, almost a personality of itself. The word also had the power of its own fulfillment. Both of these concepts are fundamental to understanding Isaiah's emphasis on God's Word: "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it" (Isa. 55:10–11; cf. Jer. 1:12). The Word of God exists as a reality and has within itself the power of its own fulfillment. Formal words of blessing or cursing also had the same power of self-fulfillment. When Isaac mistakenly blessed Jacob rather than Esau, he could not recall the blessing, for it existed in history (Gen. 27:18–41); it had acquired an identity of its own. Blessing and cursing released suprahuman powers which could bring to pass the content of the curse or the blessing.

Both blessing and cursing assumed unique power in Israel's life as they were taken into the context of worship. The Lord was the source of all blessing, and people sought to express gratitude for that blessing; indeed, to pray for the continuation of such blessing: "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits" (Ps. 103:1–2). Central to the covenant renewal ceremony was the blessing (Deut. 28:3–6). Aaron's benediction both proclaims and petitions the Lord's blessing: "The Lord bless thee, and keep thee: The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace" (Num. 6:24–26). Roy L. Honeycutt

BLIGHT See Blasting.

BLINDNESS Physical blindness in the biblical period was very common. The suffering of the blind person was made worse by the common belief that the affliction was due to sin (John 9:1–3).

Because of their severe handicap, blind persons had little opportunity to earn a living. A blind man was even ineligible to become a priest (Lev. 21:18). Frequently, the blind became beggars (Mark 10:46).

The possibility of a blind person being mistreated was recognized and forbidden by God. The law prohibited the giving of misleading directions (Deut. 27:18) or doing anything to cause the blind to stumble (Lev. 19:14).

Physical Cause Many things caused blindness in ancient times. One could be born blind (John 9:1) due to some developmental defect or as a result of infection prior to birth. Usually, however, blindness began later. The most common cause was infection. Trachoma, a painful infection of the eye, is a common cause of blindness today and was probably prevalent in ancient times. Leprosy can also cause blindness. In old age, vision may be severely impaired in some persons (Gen. 27:1). Some develop cataracts. Some have a gradual atrophy of portions of the eye.

Ancient people used salves of various types to treat disorders of the eye. Simple surgical procedures such as the lancing of boils near the eye and the extraction of inverted eyelashes were also employed.

In reality, almost no effective treatment was available to those who suffered from diseases of the eye and blindness. There were no antibiotics, no effective surgical procedures for most problems, and no eyeglasses. Miraculous healing was often sought (John 5:2–3).

Jesus frequently healed blind persons (Matt. 9:27–31; 12:22; 20:30–34; Mark 10:46–52; John 9:1–7). Perhaps there is no greater evidence of His compassion and power than that seen in His willingness and ability to heal those who lived in darkness and hopelessness.

Spiritual blindness The Bible addresses spiritual blindness as the great human problem. Israel was supposed to be God's servant (Isa. 42:19) but was blind to the role God wanted them to fill. Called to be watchmen protecting the nation, they instead blindly preyed on the people (Isa. 56:10). As the Pharisees gained leadership, they became blind leaders of the blind (Matt. 15:14; 23:16–26). Jesus came to reverse the situation, making it clear who had spiritual sight and who was spiritually blind (John 9:39–41). Peter listed the qualities a person must have to have spiritual sight. Without these, a person is blind (2 Pet. 1:5–9). The problem is that the spiritually blind do not know they are blind (Rev. 3:17). They are blinded by the "god of this world" (2 Cor. 4:4). They walk in darkness, eventually being blinded by the moral darkness of hatred (1 John 2:11).

BLOOD has great significance in the Bible. Its meanings involve profound aspects of human life and God's desire to transform human existence. Blood is intimately associated with physical life. Blood and "life" or "living being" are closely associated. The Hebrews of Old Testament times were prohibited from eating blood. "Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh. Thou shalt not eat it; thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water" (Deut. 12:23–24). For agricultural people, this command stressed the value of life. Though death was ever-present, life was sacred. Life was not to be regarded cheaply.

Even when the Old Testament speaks of animal sacrifice and atonement, the sacredness of life is emphasized. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. 17:11). Perhaps because an animal life was given up (and animals were a vital part of a person's property), this action taken before God indicated how each person is estranged from God. In giving what was of great value, the person offering the sacrifice showed that reconciliation with God involved life—the basic element of human existence. How giving up an animal life brought about redemption and reconciliation is not clear. What is clear is that atonement was costly. Only the New Testament could show how costly it was.

Flesh and Blood This phrase designates a human being. When Peter confessed that Jesus was the Messiah, Jesus told Peter, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 16;17). No human agent informed Peter; the Father Himself disclosed this truth. When "flesh and blood" is used of Jesus, it designates His whole person: "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me and I in him" (John 6:56). The next verse shows that eating "blood and flesh" is powerful metaphorical language for sharing in the life that Jesus bestows—"so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me" (John 6:57).

When Paul used the phrase "flesh and blood" in 1 Cornithians 15:50, he referred to sinful human existence: "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." The sinfulness of human beings disqualifies them as inheritors of God's kingdom. In Galatians 1:16, Paul used "flesh and blood" as a synonym for human beings with whom he did not consult after his conversion. Paul said his gospel came directly from God.

In Ephesians 6:12, Paul portrayed Christians in conflict—their wrestling is "not against flesh and blood" but with higher, demonic powers, "against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Of course, Christians do meet opposition to Christ and the gospel from other human beings, but behind all human opposition is a demonic-Satanic opposition. Human beings choose to identify with moral evil. We wrestle with the demonic leaders of moral revolt.

Finally, the phrase "flesh and blood" sometimes designates human nature apart from moral evil. Jesus, like other children of His people, was a partaker "of flesh and blood" (Heb. 2:14). Because He did so, He could die a unique, atoning death. He was fully human, yet more than human; He was both God and man.

After the flood, God renewed the original command that Noah and his sons be fruitful and multiply (Gen. 9:1). They were not to eat the flesh with its life, that means the blood (Gen. 9:4). Then murder is forbidden (Gen. 9:5,6). The reason is explained thus: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man." (Gen. 9:6). Since a murderer destroys one made in God's image, murder is an attack upon God.

In Deuteronomy 21:1–9, we read of an elaborate ceremony by elders concerning a person murdered in the fields near their city. They were to pray for the Lord's forgiveness by atonement: "Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them" (Deut. 21:8; see v. 9). The victim is assumed to be innocent, and the community is held responsible. A person who killed another accidentially had six cities to which he could flee and there establish his innocence (Josh. 20:1–9). He had to flee because the avenger of blood (the nearest of kin to the person murdered) was obligated to kill the individual who had murdered his relative (Num. 35).

When Pilate saw that justice was being distorted at the trial of Jesus, he washed his hands symbolically and declared his own innocence: "I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it [i.e., that's your affair]" (Matt. 27:24). The people replied naively, "His blood be on us, and on our children" (Matt. 27:25).

Blood of sacrifices, blood of the covenant The great historic event of the Old Testament was the Exodus from Egypt. Central to that event was the offering of a lamb from the sheep or from the goats (Ex. 12:5). The blood of that lamb was put on the top and the two sides of the door frame (Ex. 12:7,22–23). When the angel passed through, destroying the firstborn in Egypt, he would pass by the houses in Israel's part of Egypt that were marked in this fashion. In terms of its redemptive effects, none of the daily sacrifices made throughout the Old Testament (see Leviticus) were as dramatic as the Passover sacrifice.

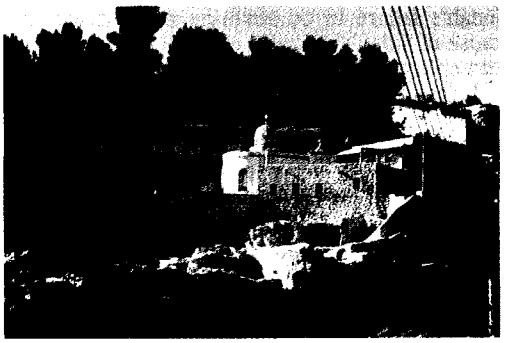
Almost as dramatic as the Passover was the ceremony at the dedication of the covenant treaty at Sinai between Yahweh and His covenant people, the Israelites (Ex. 24:1–8). Moses took the blood of oxen and placed it in two bowls. Half of it he dashed upon the altar and half he dashed upon the people (Ex. 24:6–8). Moses declared "Behold the blood of the covenant which the LORD hath made (literally, cut) with you concerning [or in agreement with] all these words." The people solemnly promised to act in agreement with this covenant (Ex. 24:3,7).



When Jesus inaugurated the New Covenant after His last Passover with the disciples, He declared: "This is my blood of the new testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins" (Matt. 26:28). Luke reads: "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you" (Luke 22:20). Testament means covenant here. Jesus, the God-man, gave up His life and experienced the reality of death so that those who identify themselves with Jesus might experience His life and never taste death as He did. He died as a sin-bearer that we might live for righteousness and become healed (1 Pet. 2:24).

Blood of Christ—meaning and effects The term "blood of Christ" designates in the New Testament the atoning death of Christ. Atonement refers to the basis and process by which estranged people become at one with God (atonement = at-one-ment). When we identify with Jesus, we are no longer at odds with God. The meaning of Christ's death is a great mystery. The New Testament seeks to express this meaning in two ways: (1) in the language of sacrifice, and (2) in language pertaining to the sphere of law. This sacrificial language and legal language provide helpful analogies. However, the meaning of Christ's death is far more than an enlargement of animal sacrifices or a spiritualization of legal transactions. Sometimes, both legal and sacrificial language are found together.

In the language of sacrifice we have "expiation" (removal of sins, Romans 3:25); "sprinkling of the blood of Jesus" (1 Pet. 1:1–2); "redeemed by precious blood as of a lamb without spot and without blemish" (1 Pet. 1:19); "blood of His Son cleanses us from all sin" (1 John 1:7); "blood that cleanses the conscience" (Heb. 9:14); and "blood of an eternal covenant" (Heb. 13:20). In legal language we have "justification" (Rom. 5:9); "redemption" (Eph. 1:7); been redeemed to God by His blood (Rev. 5:9). Such metaphors show that only God could provide atonement; Jesus, the God-man was both Priest and Offering, both Redeemer and the One intimately involved with the redeemed. A. Berkeley Mickelsen

BLOOD, AVENGER OF See Avenger; Bloodguilt; Cities of Refuge.

BLOOD, FIELD OF See Akeldama.

A monastery on Mount Zion marks the traditional site of Judas's suicide overlooking the Field of Blood.

BLOODGUILT Guilt usually incurred through bloodshed. Bloodguilt made a person ritually unclean (Num. 35:33–34) and was incurred by killing a person who did not deserve to die (Deut. 19:10; Jer. 26:15; Jonah 1:14). Killing in self-defense and execution of criminals are exempted from bloodguilt (Ex. 22:2; Lev. 20:9). Bloodguilt was incurred (1) by intentional killing (Judg. 9:24; 1 Sam. 25:26,33; 2 Kings 9:26; Jer. 26:15); (2) by unintentional killing (See Num. 35:22–28 where one who accidentally kills another may be killed by the avenger of blood implying that the accidental murderer had bloodguilt. See Avenger.); (3) by being an indirect cause of death (Gen. 42:22; Deut. 19:10*b;* 22:8; Josh. 2:19); (4) a person was under bloodguilt if those for whom he was responsible committed murder (1 Kings 2:5,31–33); and (5) the killing of a sacrifice at an unauthorized altar imputed bloodguilt (Lev. 17:4). The avenger of blood could take action in the first two instances but not in the latter three.

When the murderer was known in instance (1) above, the community shared the guilt of the murderer until the guilty party had paid the penalty of death. No other penalty or sacrifice could substitute for the death of the guilty party, nor was there any need for sacrifice once the murderer had been killed (Num. 35:33; Deut. 21:8–9). The one who unintentionally killed another [(2) above] might flee to a city of refuge and be safe. If, however, the accidental killer left the boundaries of the city of refuge, the avenger of blood could kill in revenge without incurring bloodguilt (Num. 35:31–32; Deut. 19:13). The community was held to be bloodguilty if it failed to provide asylum for the accidental killer (Deut. 19:10).

In cases where the blood of an innocent victim was unavenged, the blood of the innocent cried out to God (Gen. 4:10; Isa. 26:21; Ezek. 24:7–9; compare Job 16:18), and God became the avenger for that person (Gen. 9:5; 2 Sam. 4:11; 2 Kings 9:7; Ps. 9:12; Hos. 1:4). Even the descendants of the bloodguilty person might suffer the consequences of God's judgment (2 Sam. 3:28–29; 21:1; 1 Kings 21:29). Manasseh's bloodguilt and Judah's failure to do anything about it was the cause of Judah's downfall over 50 years after Manasseh's reign (2 Kings 24:4).

Judas incurred bloodguilt by betraying Jesus ("innocent blood," Matt. 27:4). Those who called for the crucifixion accepted the burden of bloodguilt for themselves and their children (Matt. 27:25). Pilate accepted no responsibility for the shedding of innocent blood (Matt. 27:24).

Phil Logan

BLUE The Hebrew word translated "blue" (tekeleth) is also translated as "purple" (Ezek. 23:6) and "violet" (Jer. 10:9). The color was obtained from Mediterranean mollusks (class of Gastropoda) and used for dyeing. Blue was considered inferior to royal purple but was still a very popular color. Blue was used in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:4; 26:1,4; Num. 4:6–7,9; 15:38), in the Temple (2 Chron. 2:7,14; 3:14), and in the clothing of the priests (Ex. 28:5–6,8,15; 39:1). See Purple; Violet; Colors.

BOANERGES (Bōănēr′ ġēs; sons of thunder) A name given by Jesus to James and John, the sons of Zebedee (Mark 3:17). The Gospel writer gave the meaning of the name as "sons of thunder," but did not explain why it was appropriate. The name may be indicative of the thunderous temperament these brothers apparently possessed. See Apostles; Disciples.

BOAR See Animals.

BOAT See Ships, Sailors, and Navigation.

BOAZ (Bō′ ăz) Personal name perhaps meaning, "lively." 1. Hero of Book of Ruth, a wealthy relative of Naomi's husband. See Ruth. Ruth gleaned grain in his field; and he graciously invited her to remain there and enjoy the hospitality of his servants, pronouncing a blessing on her for her goodness to Naomi. As he spent the night on the threshing floor to protect his harvest from thieves, Ruth lay down at his feet. Boaz agreed to marry her, according to the custom of levirate marriage by which the nearest male relative married a man's widow. Boaz bargained with the nearest relative, who gave up his right to marry Ruth. Boaz married her and became Obed's father, David's grandfather, and an ancester of Christ (Matt. 1:5; Luke 3:32).

2. The left or north pillar Solomon set up in the Temple (1 Kings 7:21). The function of the pillars is not known. See Jachin.

BOCHERU (Bŏch′ ē·rū) Personal name meaning, "firstborn." Descendant of King Saul in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:38).

BOCHIM (Bō′ chĭm) Place name meaning, "weepers." Place where angel of God announced judgment on Israel at beginning of the period of Judges because they had not destroyed pagan altars but had made covenant treaties with the native inhabitants. Thus the people cried and named the place Bochim (Judg. 2:1–5). It may have been between Bethel and Gilgal. An oak of weeping near Bethel was the burial place of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8). See Allonbachuth.

BODY The Greek-Hellenistic culture often downplayed the value of the body. Humans were seen as having two or three parts—body and soul or body, soul, and spirit. Greek culture placed small value on the body, the mortal house of the immortal soul. Modern research, on the other hand, shows that body and soul cannot be observed separate from one another. Body and soul do not form two separate substances. Instead, they comprise the one individual human in an inseparable union. The body is one aspect of the whole individual existence. The Bible says the same thing.

Old Testament The Old Testament differs from the New in that Old Testament Hebrew does not express the idea of body. Of the thirteen words which refer to the animal or human body, the most frequent is basar, "flesh." It can designate the body as a whole, but the form or shape of the body or of its parts is not what is important. The focus is on the function or dynamics. See Flesh.

Also in the New Testament body and soul are two inseparable aspects of the one human being (Matt. 6:25).

Bible Teachings The Bible then makes basic claims about physical human existence. 1. The body is our realm of personal evaluation. The body is created by God—mortal, with physical needs, weak and subject to temptation. The body is not, however, without significance. In the body the person lives out the "I" of human existence, relating to God and to fellow humans. The body is the place of proper worship (Rom. 12:1), the Temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6:19–20), and thus is to be disciplined (1 Cor. 9:27). In Corinth the people emphasized spiritual life. Paul followed Jesus in opposing them by showing that the inner and outer life belong together. The inner spiritual life is not to be played off against the outer, physical life (Matt. 6:22; 1 Cor. 6:12–20; 2 Cor. 4:7,10). That means the war in the name of the spirit is not against the body but against sin. The goal is not liberation of a "divine" soul from the body but the placing of the body in service for God. Every action must be accounted for before God one day (2 Cor. 5:10).

2. The body and sexuality. Physical love is a gift of the Creator (Gen. 2:23–24). An entire book of the Bible rejoices over this reality—the Song of Solomon. Humans express love with their entire person not only with their sexual organs. This means that sexuality differs from eating and drinking, which satisfy only the requirements of the stomach. Sexual sin rules the body, that is, the entire person. Because the body of the Christian belongs to the Creator, Redeemer, and Holy Spirit, sexual sin is forbidden for the Christian (1 Cor. 6:12–20).

3. The redemption and resurrection of the body. The earthly human stands under the power of sin and of death. No persons can distance themselves from this power, but all long for redemption (Rom. 7:24; 8:23). Redemption is not guaranteed by a bodiless soul which continues to live after death. Such redemption is guaranteed only by God, who continues to care for the body and soul of humans even after death (Matt. 10:28). Death is not the redeemer; God is. He makes the gift of eternal life (Rom. 6:23) in that Jesus Christ became an earthly Human and offered Himself for us (John 1:14; Rom. 7:4). Those who follow Him in faith and baptism experience the reality that the body does not have to remain a slave of sin (Rom. 6:6,12). A person will not be redeemed from the body; rather the body will be redeemed through the resurrection of the dead (Rom. 6:5; 8:11). The existence of the resurrected is a bodily existence. The earthly body of lowliness will be renewed like the glorious body of the resurrected Jesus, becoming an unearthly body or building or house (1 Cor. 15:35–49; 2 Cor. 5:1–10; Phil. 3:21).

Resurrection of the body does not mean that the personality dissolves into an idea, into posterity, or into the society. It means, instead, the total transformation of "flesh and blood" into a "spiritual body," that is a personality created and formed anew by God's Spirit. The resurrection body is that communion with the Lord and with people that begins before death and finds an unimaginable completion through the resurrection.

4. The body of Christ. Jesus Christ had a physical, earthly body which was crucified in front of the gates of Jerusalem (Mark 15:20–47; Col. 1:22; Heb. 13:11–12). The body of Christ also designates the body of the Crucified One "given for you," with which the church is united together in the celebration of the Lord's Supper (Mark 14:24; 1 Cor. 10:16; 11:24). The continuing power of the sacrifice of Golgotha leads humans to join together in a church community, which in a real sense is joined together with the exalted Lord. Bodily is not, however, physical. The joining with the body of Christ does not occur magically through bread, but historically through the realization of the presence of the suffering and death of Jesus.

5. The church as the body of Christ. The image of the body calls the differing individual members into a unity (1 Cor. 12:12–27); however, the church is not just similar; it is one body, and, indeed, one body in Christ (Rom. 12:5; 1 Cor. 10:17). In Christ the body of the church community is incorporated. The community of Christians does not produce the body; the body is a previously given fact (1 Cor. 12:13). In the body of Christ the body of the church community lives, because Christ is greater than the church. He is the Head of the entire creation (Eph. 1:22–23; Col. 2:10) and as Head does not only belong to the church community but rather also stands over against the church. While the world stands in a relationship of subjection to Christ (Eph. 1:20–23; Phil. 2:9–11), only the church is His body (Col. 1:18,24; Eph. 4:4,12; 5:23,30), which He loves (Eph. 5:25). The church is joined to Him in organic growth (Col. 2:19; Eph. 4:15–16). The church grows by serving a future which through Christ has already begun to be incarnate (Col. 2:9,16). The growth of the body occurs as the church marches out in service to the world (Eph. 4:12), even to the demonic world (Eph. 3:10). The individual Christian is joined to Christ only as a member of the body. The Bible knows nothing of a direct, mythical union of the individual with the Lord. The Bible knows of a union with Christ only as faith embodied in the realm of the church community and with the church in the realm of the world. Christian Wolf

BODYGUARD A person or group of persons whose duty it is to protect another from physical harm. In the Old Testament, soldiers were included among the king's bodyguard because of acts of bravery. Members of a king's bodyguard mentioned in the Bible include: David (1 Sam. 22:14; 28:2), Benaiah ben Jehoiada (2 Sam. 23:23), Potiphar (Gen. 37:36), Nebuzaradan (2 Kings 25:8; Jer. 39:9–13; 52:12–16), and Arioch (Dan. 2:14).

BOHAN (Bō′ hăn) Place name and personal name meaning, "thumb" or "big toe." A place on the northern border of the tribal allotment of Judah called the "stone of Bohan," "the son of Reuben" (Josh. 15:6). This was the southern border of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:17). Some Bible students see this as evidence that some part of the tribe of Reuben once lived west of the Jordan. Others see an otherwise unknown heroic deed of Bohan honored with a memorial boundary stone.

BOIL A general term used in the Bible to describe inflamed swellings of the skin. Boils are mentioned in connection with blains (KJV; an inflamatory swelling or sore) in the sixth plague on Egypt (Ex. 9:9–10). Since this plague affected both animals and men, many have suggested the malignant pustule of cutaneous anthrax as the sore or boil mentioned. Hezekiah's boil (2 Kings 20:7; Isa. 38:21) is identified as a furuncle—a localized swelling and inflamation of the skin caused by the infection of a hair follicle that discharges pus and has a central core of dead tissue. The boils suffered by Job (Job 2:7) have been identified with smallpox or with treponematosis (a parasitic infection).

BOKERU (Bō′ kĕ·rü) NIV spelling of Bocheru. See Bocheru.

BOKIM (Bō′ kĭm) NIV spelling of Bochim. See Bochim.

BOLDNESS Translation of four Greek words in the New Testament. Boldness denotes two things in the New Testament. First, boldness describes the courageous manner of those who preach the Gospel (Acts 2:29; 4:13,31; 9:27–29; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 19:8; 26:26; 28:31; see 1 Thess. 2:2; Phil. 1:20). The word translated as "boldness" in these texts (parresia) was used of the free citizen of a city-state who could say anything in the public assembly. In the New Testament it denotes the moral freedom to speak the truth publicly. Second, boldness describes the confidence with which Christians can now approach God because of the redeeming work of Christ (2 Cor. 3:4–6,12; Heb. 10:19; 1 John 2:28; 4:17).

BOLLED KJV translation (Ex. 9:31) of a term that means "having bolls"—that is, having seed pods. Some see the flax in this verse as being either in bud or in blossom.

BOLSTER KJV translation that means "the place where the head is while sleeping" (1 Sam. 19:13,16; 26:7,11,12,16). REB, NRSV translate "at his head" (compare NIV, NAS).

BOND Translation of several Hebrew and Greek words with the meanings of "obligation," "dependence," or "restraint." Used literally to speak of the bonds of prisoners or slaves (Judg. 15:14; 1 Kings 14:10; Ps. 107:14; 116:16; Luke 8:29; Philem. 13). Used figuratively to speak of the bonds of wickedness or sin (Isa. 58:6; Luke 13:16; Acts 8:23), of affliction and judgment (Isa. 28:22; 52:2; Jer. 30:8; Nah. 1:13), the authority of kings (Job 12:18; Ps. 2:3), the obligation to keep the covenant (Jer. 2:20; 5:5; see Col. 2:14), the bonds of peace and love (Eph. 4:3; Col. 3:14), and the bonds of an evil woman (Eccl. 7:26).

BONDAGE, BONDMAN, BONDMAID, BOND-SERVANT See Slavery.

BONES While often referring to the skeletal remains of humans (Gen. 50:25; Ex. 13:19; 1 Sam. 31:13), "bones" were also referred to metaphorically. "Rottenness of bones" signified one whose wife caused shame and confusion (Prov. 12:4; 14:30) or could refer to dejectedness and anticipation of approaching evil (Hab. 3:16). The "shaking of bones" denoted fear (Job 4:14) or sadness (Jer. 23:9). The "burning of the bones" indicated grief and depression (Ps. 102:3; Lam. 1:13) and the feeling of Jeremiah when he tried to refrain from proclaiming God's message (Jer. 20:9). "Dryness of bones" meant poor health (Prov. 17:22). Various other expressions using "bones" referred to mental distress (Job 30:17; Pss. 6:2; 22:14; 31:10; 38:3; 51:8; Lam. 3:4). "Bone of my bones" may mean having the same nature or being the nearest relation (Gen. 2:23; 2 Sam. 5:1).

BONNET KJV translation of two words. A conical-shaped cap placed on the head of the priest at the time of investiture. Made of fine white linen (Ex. 28:40; 29:9; 39:28; Lev. 8:13). See Cloth, Clothing.

BOOK OF LIFE The book of life is the heavenly record (Luke 10:20; Heb. 12:23) written by God before the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8; 17:8) containing the names of those who are destined because of God's grace and their faithfulness to participate in God's heavenly kingdom. Those whose names are in the book have been born into God's family through Jesus Christ (Heb. 12:23; Rev. 13:8); remain faithful in worship of God (Rev. 13:8; 17:8); are untouched by the practice of abomination and falsehood (Rev. 21:27); are faithful through tribulation (Rev. 3:5); and are fellow workers in the work of Jesus Christ (Phil. 4:3). The book of life will be used along with the books of judgment at the final judgment to separate the righteous and the wicked for their respective eternal destinies (Rev. 20:12,15; 21:27).

Christ Himself determines whether the names that are recorded in the book of life remain in that record and are supported by His confession that they belong to Him at the day of judgment or are blotted out (Rev. 3:5).

The Old Testament refers to a record kept by God of those who are a part of His people (Ex. 32:32; Isa. 4:3; Dan. 12:1; Mal. 3:16). As in Revelation, God can blot out the names of those in the book (Ex. 32:32; Ps. 69:28). In the Old Testament this may simply mean people not in the book die, leaving the list of the living. Those whose names are written in the book are destined for life in a restored Jerusalem (Isa. 4:3) and deliverance through future judgment (Dan. 12:1). See Apocalyptic; Book; Eschatology; Judgment, Books of. Jeff Cranford

BOOK(S) Term which often refers to a scroll. A document written on parchment or papyrus and then rolled up. The "book" may be a letter (1 Kings 21:8) or a longer literary effort (Dan. 9:2). See Writing; Letter; Library. Several books are mentioned in the Bible:

The Book of the Covenant Moses read from this book during the making of the covenant between God and Israel on Mount Sinai (Ex. 24:7). The "Book of the Covenant" included at least the material now found in Exodus 20:23—23:33. The "Book of the Covenant" is referred to at a later time (2 Kings 23:2,21; 2 Chron. 34:30). It probably included the Exodus passage in addition to other material.

The Book of the Law During the reign of Josiah, Hilkiah, the high priest, found a copy of the "Book of the Law" in the Temple (2 Kings 22:8). Josiah based his reforms of the religion of Israel on the laws found in this book (2 Kings 23). The book is not explicitly identified in 2 Kings, but by comparing the measures undertaken by Josiah and the laws of Deuteronomy it is very likely that the "Book of the Law" was a copy of Deuteronomy.

The Book of the Wars of the Lord This book is quoted in Numbers 21:14–15 (Num. 21:17–18,27–30 may also represent quotations from this book). The part of the book quoted describes the territory conquered by God in behalf of the Israelites. The book was probably a collection of poems which relate the conquest of the land during the time of Moses and Joshua. As the title of the book suggests, the Lord (acting as commander-in-chief) was responsible for the success of the conquest.

The Books of Joshua Joshua wrote one book detailing the allotment of Canaan to the Israelite tribes (Josh. 18:9) and a book similar to the "Book of the Covenant" listed above (Josh. 24:25–26).

The Book of Jashar (or Upright) A book quoted twice in the Old Testament: Joshua's poetic address to the sun and the moon (Josh. 10:12–13) and David's lament for Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17–27). Others would include Solomon's words of dedication of the Temple (1 Kings 8:12–13), which the earliest Greek translation attributes to the book of song (Hebrew shir), a transposition of letters of Hebrew jshr or ishr for Jashar. Deborah's song (Judg. 5), and Miriam's song (Ex. 15:20–21) are sometimes seen as part of Jashar. The "Book of Jashar" probably consisted of poems on important events in Israel's history collected during the time of David or Solomon. The "Book of Jashar" is often compared to or identified with the "Book of the Wars of the Lord" discussed above.

The Book of the Acts of Solomon Probably a biographical document that included such stories as Solomon's judgment between the two harlots (1 Kings 3:16–28), Solomon's administrative arrangements (1 Kings 4:1–19), and the visit of the Queen of Sheba (1 Kings 10:1–13).

Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel Perhaps a continuous journal compiled by scribes from various sources but not to be confused with 1 and 2 Chronicles in the Bible. The writer of 1 and 2 Kings mentions this book eighteen times as containing more complete information on the reigns of the kings of Israel (1 Kings 14:19; 15:31; 16:5,14,20,27; 22:39; 2 Kings 1:18; 10:34; 13:8,12; 14:15,28; 15:11,15,21,26,31).

Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah Source similar to the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel, not to be confused with 1 and 2 Chronicles in the Bible. The writer of 1 and 2 Kings mentions this book 15 times as containing more complete information on the reigns of the kings of Judah (1 Kings 14:29; 15:7,23; 22:45; 2 Kings 8:23; 12:19; 14:18; 15:6,36; 16:19; 20:20; 21:17,25; 23:28; 24:5).

Books Mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles The "Book of the Kings of Israel" (1 Chron. 9:1; 2 Chron. 20:34), the "Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah" (2 Chron. 27:7; 35:27; 36:8), the "Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel" (2 Chron. 16:11; 25:26; 28:26; 32:32), the "Acts of the Kings of Israel" (2 Chron. 33:18), and the "Commentary on the Book of the Kings" (2 Chron. 24:27). Many think these titles are references to the same work and refer to it as the "Midrash of the Kings." This work may contain the books of the chronicles of the kings of Israel and Judah listed above or at least be very similar in content to them.

Also mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles are books of various prophets: the "Book of Samuel the Seer" (1 Chron. 29:29), the "Book of Nathan the Prophet" (1 Chron. 29:29; 2 Chron. 9:29), the "Book of Gad the Seer" (1 Chron. 29:29), the "Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite" (2 Chron. 9:29), the "Visions of Iddo the Seer against Jeroboam the Son of Nebat" (2 Chron. 9:29), the "Book of Shemaiah the Prophet and Iddo the Seer" (2 Chron. 12:15), the "Story of the Prophet Iddo" (2 Chron. 13:22), the "Book of Jehu the Son of Hanani" (2 Chron. 20:34), the "Acts of Uzziah" (2 Chron. 26:22; written by Isaiah), the "Vision of Isaiah the Prophet" (2 Chron. 32:32), and the "Saying of the Seers" (2 Chron. 33:19). All of these, except for the last, may have been part of the "Midrash of the Kings."

Various other works are also mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles: genealogies of the tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:17), the "Chronicles of King David" (1 Chron. 27:24), an untitled work containing the plan for the Temple (1 Chron. 28:19), works on the organization of the Levites written by David and Solomon (2 Chron. 35:4), and lamentations for the death of Josiah by Jeremiah and others (2 Chron. 35:25).

Book of the Chronicles A work which contained genealogies and possibly other historical material (Neh. 7:5; 12:23) but was distinct from 1 and 2 Chronicles.

Books by the Prophets Isaiah (Isa. 30:8 compare 8:16) and Jeremiah (Jer. 25:13; 30:2; 36; 45:1; 51:60,63) are said to have written books. These may have represented the first stages of the collections of their prophecies we now have.

Book (of Records) of the Chronicles or Book of Memorable Deeds The royal archives of Persia which contained, among other things, the way in which Mordecai saved the life of King Ahasuerus (Esther 2:20–23; 6:1; 10:2; compare Ezra 4:15).

Book of Remembrance Book mentioned in Malachi 3:16. Probably the same as the Book of Life (see Book of Life).

Scripture (Book) of Truth Book mentioned in Daniel 10:21. Probably the same as the Book of Life (see Book of Life). Phil Logan BOOT The figure mentioned in Isaiah 9:5 of the booted Assyrian warrior (KJV translates the rare Hebrew word for boot as "battle"). Assyrian reliefs from the period of Sennacherib depict soldiers wearing leather boots laced up to the knee which is in contrast to the sandals worn by the Israelite soldier of the period. God's Messiah promised full victory even over the more-impressively dressed army.

BOOTH A temporary shelter constructed for cattle (Gen. 33:17) and people (Jonah 4:5), especially for soldiers on the battlefield (2 Sam. 11:11; 1 Kings 20:12,16). Israel after an invasion is compared to a deserted booth in a vineyard (Isa. 1:8). The booth is also used as a symbol of that which is flimsy and impermanent (Job 27:18). The booths used at the Feast of Booths were made of twigs woven together (Lev. 23:40–43; Neh. 8:15).

BOOTHS, FEAST OF See Festivals.

BOOTY Spoils taken by individuals in battle. Includes anything that might be of value or use to the captor including persons (Num. 31:53; Jer. 15:13; Ezek. 25:7). Booty is distinguished from spoil in the sense that booty was that taken by individual soldiers whereas spoil was plunder taken by the victor nation as a right of conquest.

BOOZ (Bō′ ŏz) KJV New Testament spelling of Boaz. See Boaz.

BOR-ASHAN (Bôr-ā′ shăn) Place name meaning, "well of smoke" or "pit of smoke." Place in most manuscripts of 1 Samuel 30:30; others read Chor-ashan (KJV). A town of the tribe of Judah to whom David gave part of his spoils of victory. It is usually equated with Asham, the town of Judah in which Simeon lived (Josh. 15:42; 19:7).

BORROW In Hebrew culture borrowing indicated economic hardship, not a strategy for expanding business or household. (See Lev. 25:35–37, which assumes that borrowers are poor.) In Deuteronomy God's blessings of prosperity was understood to exclude the need to borrow (15:6; 26:12). Thus poverty was not considered to be a desirable situation for anyone in the covenant community. The dire straits requiring borrowing are illustrated in Nehemiah 5:1–5. With typical shifts in fortune borrowing was common practice in Hebrew society, and rules were needed so that the poor were not victimized by creditors. Laws for restitution were also established for borrowed property that was damaged (Ex. 22:14–15).

In Matthew 5:42, Jesus cites generosity "from him that would borrow of thee" as one example of an unexpected, loving response (instead of the typical self-protective response) to others' demands and abuses. In each example (5:38–42) the disciple's primary concern is the other person, not protecting one's own vested interests. The second person singular in verse 42 makes clear the personal nature of this response to the would-be borrower. This passage is part of Jesus' consistent emphasis on absolute loyalty to the way of God's kingdom, which necessitates a carefree regard for one's possessions (Matt. 6:24–34) and personal security (Matt. 5:43–48) as one unselfishly loves the neighbor. David Nelson Duke

BOSCATH (Bŏs′ căth) KJV spelling of Bozkath (2 Kings 22:1). See Bozkath.

BOSOR (Bō′ sôr) KJV New Testament spelling of Beor (2 Pet. 2:15). See Beor.

BOSSED, BOSSES Bosses were knobs on the flat surfaces of shields. When shields were made of leather and wood, the bosses served to strengthen the shield. When shields were made of metal, the bosses were ornamental. Job 15:26 says that the wicked oppose God with thick-bossed shield—that is, a reinforced shield. Thus some modern translations express the meaning rather than using literal translation: "strong shield" (NIV); "massive shield" (NAS).

BOTCH An old English term used in the KJV that means boil (Deut. 28:27,35).

BOTTLE Word used often in the KJV to translate several Hebrew and Greek words. Modern versions often translate these words as "skin" or "wineskin." Although glass and glass bottles were known in ancient times, ancient "bottles" were almost always made of animal skins since they were easier to carry than earthenware vessels. In Psalm 33:7 many modern scholars and translators emend the Hebrew text by adding an unpronounced Hebrew letter (aleph) to read "bottle" or "jars" (NIV, NRSV), but the traditional reading "heap" following the Hebrew text finds support in the parallel statement of Exodus 15:8.

Tiny Roman glass bottle.

BOTTOMLESS PIT Literal translation of the Greek in Revelation 9:1–2,11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1,3. It represented the home of evil, death, and destruction stored up until the sovereign God allowed them temporary power on earth. See Abyss; Hades; Hell; Sheol.

BOW AND ARROW See Arms and Armor.

BOWELS Translation used in modern versions to refer to intestines and other entrails (Acts 1:18). In the KJV, "bowels" is also used to refer to the sexual reproductive system (2 Sam. 16:11; Ps. 71:6) and, figuratively, to strong emotions (Job 30:27), especially love (Song of Sol. 5:4) and compassion (Col. 3:12). Both Hebrew and Greek picture the entrails as the center of human emotions and excitement.

Painted relief of Persian soldier with lance, bow, and quiver of arrows on left shoulder.

B

Phrygian cut-glass bowl.

BOWL See Basin.

BOX KJV translation for jar or flask, a container of oil used for anointing (2 Kings 9:1; Mark 14:3).

BOX TREE KJV, REB and NAS translation in Isaiah 41:19; 60:13. The box tree grows in Asia Minor and Persia but does not occur in Palestine. The tree has been identified as the pine (NRSV) or cypress (TEV, NIV). "Box tree"is based on early Greek and Latin translations. The Hebrew word means, "to be straight" and apparently refers to the tall, majestic cypress trees. Such wonders of nature reflect the greatness of the Creator (Isa. 41:20).

BOZEZ (Bō′ zĕz) Place name perhaps meaning, "white." A sharp rock marking a passage in the wadi Suwenit near Michmash through which Jonathan and his armor-bearer went to fight the Philistines (1 Sam. 14:4).

BOZKATH (Bŏz′ kăth) Place name meaning, "swelling." Town near Lachish and Eglon in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:39). It was the home town of Adaiah, King Josiah's maternal grandmother (1 Kings 22:1). Its precise location is not known.

BOZRAH (Bŏz′ răh) Place name meaning, "inaccessible." 1. Ancestral home of Jobab, a king in Edom before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:33). Isaiah announced a great judgment on Bozrah in which God would sacrifice His enemies (Isa. 34:6). A center of shepherds, it was known for woolen garments. God is pictured as returning from Bozrah with dyed garments as His spoil of victory (Isa. 63:1). Thus He demonstrated His righteousness and power to save from enemies. Jeremiah proclaimed doom on Bozrah (Jer. 49:13,22), as did Amos (1:12). A major city which at times served as capital of Edom, Bozrah lay about 25 miles southeast of the southern end of the Dead Sea at modern Buseirah. See Edom. 2. City of Moab Jeremiah condemned (Jer. 48:24). It may be equated with Bezer. See Bezer.

BRACELET An ornamental band of metal or glass worn around the wrist (as distinct from an armlet worn around the upper arm). Bracelets were common in the Ancient Near East and were worn by both women and men. They were made mostly of bronze, though examples of iron, silver, glass, and, rarely, gold bracelets have been found. The bracelets mentioned in the Bible were usually of gold (Gen. 24:22,30,47; Num. 31:50; Isa. 3:19; Ezek. 16:11; 23:42). KJV, TEV and NAS translation for armlet in 2 Samuel 1:10. See Armlet.

BRAIDED, BRAIDING Fixing the hair in knots or weaving a wreath into the hair. Christian women were instructed that good works and spiritual grace were more important than outward appearances (1 Tim. 2:9; 1 Pet. 3:3).

BRAMBLE Shrub (Lycium Europaeum) with sharb spines and runners usually forming a tangled mass of vegetation (see Judg. 9:8–15; Luke 6:44). It had beautiful, attractive flowers, but its thorns gave flocks trouble. Today, we know that it prevents erosion on mountain slopes.

BRANCH Translation of many Hebrew and Greek words in the Bible. Often refers to the branches of trees or vines or to the branches of the lampstands of the tabernacle and Temple. There are, however, many metaphorical usages of "branch." The palm branch may stand for nobility, while the reed is symbolic for the common people (Isa. 9:14; 19:15). One's "being a branch" denotes membership in the people of God (John 15:1–8; Rom. 11:16–21). Spreading branches can symbolize fruitfulness and prosperity (Gen. 49:22; Job 8:16; Ps. 80:11), while withered, burnt, or cut branches symbolize destruction (Job 8:16; Isa. 9:14; Jer. 11:16; Ezek. 15:2). "Branch" or "shoot" is often used as a symbol for a present or coming king of Israel (Isa. 11:1; Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12). See Messiah.

BRASEN SEA See Molten Sea.

BRASEN SERPENT See Bronze Serpent.

BRASS Any copper alloy was called brass by the KJV translators. Brass is the alloy of copper and zinc, a combination unknown in the ancient Near East. A common alloy was copper and tin—that is, bronze—and this is what is indicated by the Hebrew of the biblical text. Some modern translations retain brass where hardness or persistence in sin is in view (Lev. 26:19; Deut. 28:23; Isa. 48:4), but they use "bronze" as a translation elsewhere. See Bronze.

BRAZEN SEA See Molten Sea.

BRAZEN SERPENT See Bronze Serpent.

BRAZIER A portable fire-pot (NIV) or firepan used for heating a room during cold weather (Jer. 36:22–23; KJV has "hearth").

BREAD The word bread appears 239 times in the NAS Old Testament and 79 times in the NAS New Testament; but the seven Hebrew words which refer to bread, but are not always so translated, appear 384 times in the Old Testament and three Greek words 108 times in the New. Frequency of mention is just one indication that bread (not vegetables and certainly not meat) was the basic food of most people (except nomads and the wealthy) in Bible times. Indeed, several of the words alluded to above are often translated food.

Ingredients A course meal was ground from wheat (Gen. 30:14) or barley (John 6:9,13). American corn was unknown. (The use of the word in the KJV is a "Britishism" meaning grain in general.) Barley bread was less appetizing but also less expensive and therefore common among the poor. Grinding was done by a mortar and pestle or with millstones turned by an animal or human being (Num. 11:8; Matt. 24:41). For special occasions and for offerings a fine flour was ground (Gen. 18:6; Lev. 2:7). The meal or flour was mixed with water, salt, sometimes leaven or yeast, sometimes olive oil, and rarely with other cereals and vegetables (Ezek. 4:9) and then was kneaded (Ex. 12:34).

Baking Baking was usually the work of wives (Gen. 18:6) or daughters (2 Sam. 13:8), although in wealthy households it was done by slaves. Large cities or the royal court had professional bakers (Gen. 40:2; Jer. 37:21). There were three means of baking: on heated rocks with the dough being covered with ashes (1 Kings 19:6); on a clay or iron griddle or pan (Lev. 2:5); and in a clay or iron oven (Lev. 2:4). Most bread that was so baked had the appearance of a disk (Judg. 7:13) about one-half inch thick and twelve inches in diameter. Some was perforated. Some had a hole in the middle for storing or carrying on a pole. Some was heart-shaped (the word for cakes in 2 Sam. 13:6,8,10 literally means heart-shaped). Some took the shape of a small modern loaf (suggested by the arrangement of the Bread of Presence). Bread was broken or torn, not cut.

Use In addition to being used as a staple food, bread was used as an offering to God (Lev. 2:4–10). It was used in the tabernacle and Temple to symbolize the presence of God (Ex. 25:23–30; Lev. 24:5–9). Bread was also used in the Old Testament to symbolize such things as an enemy to be consumed (Num. 14:9, KJV, RSV), the unity of a group (1 Kings 18:19), hospitality (Gen. 19:3), and wisdom (Prov. 9:5). It is prefixed to such things as idleness (Prov. 31:27), wickedness (Prov. 4:17), and adversity (Isa. 30:20). In the New Testament it symbolizes Jesus Christ Himself (John 6:35), His body (1 Cor. 11:23–24), His kingdom (Luke 14:15), and the unity of His church (1 Cor. 10:17).

Bread for sale in old Jerusalem.

BREAD OF THE PRESENCE (bread of the faces) In Exodus 25:30, the Lord's instructions concerning the paraphernalia of worship include a provision that bread be kept always on a table set before the Holy of Holies. This bread was called the bread of presence, or shewbread. The literal meaning of the Hebrew expression is "bread of the face." It consisted of twelve loaves of presumably unleavened bread, and it was replaced each sabbath. See Temple; Tabernacle. Jesus took the staple diet of festival worship—unleavened Bread—and gave it to His followers to symbolize the presence of His body broken to bring salvation and the hope of His return (1 Cor. 11:17–32).

James A. Brooks

BREAKFAST See Food and Meals in the Bible.

BREASTPIECE OF THE HIGH PRIEST See Breastplate 1.

BREASTPLATE 1. A piece of elaborate embroidery about nine inches square worn by the high priest upon his breast. It was set with twelve stones with the name of one of the 12 tribes of Israel engraved on each stone; The breastplate was a special item worn by the high priest as he ministered in the tabernacle or Temple. Made like a purse, the breastplate was constructed of gold metal, blue, purple, and scarlet yarn, and of fine linen. It was securely tied to the ephod. See Ephod. Inside the breastplate were placed two unknown stones, the Urim and Thummim, worn over the heart (Lev. 8:8). The breastplate was called breastplate of judgment (Ex. 28:15) because these stones were the means of making decisions (Ex. 28:28–29). See Urim and Thummim. The purpose of the breastplate was: (1) to show the glory and beauty of the Lord (Ex. 28:2); (2) to be a means of making decisions (Ex. 28:30); and (3) to be a continuing memorial before the Lord (Ex. 28:29). 2. A piece of defensive armor. See Arms and Armor.

Paul used the military breastplate as an illustration of Christian virtues. Ephesians 6:14 reflects Isaiah 59:17 symbolizing the breastplate as righteousness. Faith and love are symbolized in 1 Thessalonians 5:8. Breastplates were also strong symbols of evil (Rev. 9:9,17). Lawson Hatfield BREATH Air coming out of or into the body of a living being. Two Hebrew terms are translated, "breath." Generally neshamah is used in a milder manner to refer to the fact of breath in all forms of life. It is concerned with the physiological concept of breath with a primary emphasis on breath as a principle of life. By contrast, ruach refers more to the force of breath in the extreme experiences of life, judgment, and death. At times it is intensified by the idea of a blast of breath. It thus contains the expanded meanings, wind and spirit. Ruach refers more to the psychological idea of breath by relating it to one's own will or purpose.

The term neshamah is often used with reference to God's breath. It identifies God as the source of life (Gen. 2:7; Job 27:3; 33:4; Dan. 5:23).

God is also the sovereign of life. He gave breath to humans initially in creation (Gen. 2:7), but He also takes breath away eventually at death (Gen. 7:22; Job 34:14). God has the power to restore life to the dead if He wishes to do so (Ezek. 37:9). He controls nature and the weather by His breath (Job 37:9,10). More important is the impact of God's breath on national life, for He can breathe anger and judgment on threatening enemies bringing festive joy to God's people (Isa. 30:33; compare Job 41:21).

Neshamah is used several times to refer to human breath. It identifies breath as fragile during the times of God's wrath and in natural calamities (Isa. 2:21,22). Breath can become weak (Dan. 10:17); it is limited (Gen. 7:22; 1 Kings 17:17). Breath may be taken from a person, thus the experience of death (Josh. 11:11).

Breath (neshamah) refers to all living creatures. Those who breathe are expected to be responsive to God by offering Him praise (Psalm 150:6). Ultimately, they are responsible to God because He has the right to demand that they be put to death (Deut. 20:16; Josh. 10:40).

The New Testament contains a few references to breath as the life principle which God gives (Acts 17:25) and as the mighty wind at Pentecost (Acts 2:2). Acts 9:1 uses breath to express Saul's anger as a breathing of threats against the early Christians. In John 20:22 Jesus breathed the Holy Spirit upon His disciples. While the word pneuma parallels ruach in the Old Testament in its multiple meanings, it is translated primarily as spirit or Holy Spirit. In Revelation 13:15 it refers to the power to breathe life into the image of the beast. See Spirit; Life. Donald R. Potts

BREATH OF LIFE The translation of several Hebrew words and phrases. The phrase denotes the capacity for life. In the Bible, God is the source of the breath of life (Gen. 1:30; 2:7; 7:15; Isa. 57:16). Just as God gave the breath of life, so can He take it away (Gen. 6:17; 7:22; Isa. 57:16). See Life; Immortality.

BREECHES Priestly garments made of linen covering the thighs for reasons of modesty. They were worn by the high priest on the Day of Atonement and by other priests on other ceremonial occasions (Ex. 28:42; 39:28; Lev. 6:10; 16:4; Ezek. 44:18). The garment ensured that priests fulfilled the commandment in Exodus 20:26.

BRIBERY Giving anything of value with intention of influencing one in the discharge of his or her duties. The danger of bribery is the opportunity it presents for the perversion of justice (see 1 Sam. 8:3; Prov. 17:23; Isa. 1:23; Micah 3:11; 7:3). The poor, because they had no bribe to offer, were either discriminated against when the judgment was handed down or had difficulty getting a trial at all (see Job 6:22 where a bribe is necessary to get justice done). Bribery, because it perverted justice, is prohibited in the Bible (Ex. 23:8; Deut. 16:19).

BRICK is a building material of clay, molded into rectangular shaped blocks while moist and hardened by the sun or fire, used to construct walls or pavement.

The task of brick making was hard labor. It involved digging and moving heavy clay. Clay required softening with water which was done by treading clay pits. After molding the bricks of approximately 2 by 4 by 8 inches, they were dried in the sun or in kilns, (ovens) for fire-hardened bricks. The tower of Babel (Gen. 11:3), made of bricks, had mortar of slime, a tar-like substance. Later, because of famine, Joseph moved his family to Egypt (Gen. 46:6). The twelve families multiplied greatly in 430 years. A new Pharaoh who "knew not Joseph" (Ex. 1:6–8) enslaved the Jews. They built storehouse cities of brick in Pithom and Ramses. Egyptian bricks were sometimes mixed with straw. When Moses confronted Pharaoh for Israel's freedom, the angered Pharaoh increased his demands of the slaves. They must produce their same brick quotas and gather their own straw. Both straw-made bricks and bricks of pure clay have been found at Pithom and Ramses. When David conquered the Ammorites, he required they make bricks (2 Sam. 12:31). Isaiah (65:3) condemned Israel for their pagan-like practice of offering incense on altars of brick.

Mud-clay bricks in the ruins of the city of Ur.

Lawson Hatfield

BRICKKILN An oven, furnace, or heated enclosure used for processing bricks by burning, firing, or drying. Some Bible students believe that sun-dried bricks were used in Palestine; they would translate the word as "brick-mold" (see Nah. 3:14 NRSV, NAS, TEV). Others give the neutral translation "brickwork" (NIV, REB). Just as the Egyptians used the Israelites to make bricks, so David put the Ammonites to making bricks (2 Sam. 12:31).

BRIDE Biblical writers have little to say about weddings or brides. They occasionally mention means by which brides were obtained (Gen. 24:4; 29:15–19). Ezekiel 16:8–14 describes bride, her attire, and the wedding ceremony. The Song of Solomon is a collection of love poems in which the bride describes her love for her bridegroom.

The imagery of the bride is used widely in the Bible as a description of the people of God. In the Old Testament, the prophets presented Israel as a bride who had committed repeated adulteries (Jer. 3; Ezek, 16; Hos. 3). The prophets also proclaimed that God was faithful to His unfaithful bride and would restore her (Jer. 33:10–11; Isa. 61:10,62:5). In the New Testament, the bride imagery is used often of the church and her relationship to Christ. The bride belongs to Christ, who is the Bridegroom (John 3:29). In Revelation, the church, as the bride of the Lamb, has prepared herself for marriage by performing righteous deeds (19:7–8). In Revelation 21, the great wedding is portrayed with the church prepared for her bridegroom (21:2,9). Finally, the bride and the Spirit issue an invitation "to come" (22:17). Paul used the metaphor of the bride to indicate his feelings toward the churches he had founded. In 2 Corinthians 11:2, Paul wrote that he had betrothed the Corinthian church to Christ. He wanted to present the church as a pure bride to Christ. The Corinthians were in danger of committing "adultery." The imagery of the bride is used by various biblcal writers, but they appear to have a single purpose. The bridal imagery is used to indicate the great love which God has for His people. For these writers, no image could express better this love than the ideal love between a bridegroom and bride. Terence B. Ellis

BRIDE OF CHRIST See Bride.

BRIDLE See Bit.

BRIER Translation of various Hebrew words referring to thorny plants. Used metaphorically of the enemies of Israel (Ezek. 28:24) and of land which is worthless (Isa. 5:6; 7:23–25; 55:13; compare Micah 7:4).

BRIGANDINE KJV translation at Jeremiah 46:4; 51:3. Rendered elsewhere as "coat of mail" or "armor." See Arms and Armor.

BRIMSTONE Combustible form of sulphur. Used as a means of divine retribution (Gen. 19:24; Deut. 29:23; Job 18:15; Ps. 11:6; Isa. 30:33; 34:9; Ezek. 38:22; Luke 17:29; Rev. 14:10; 19:20; 20:10; 21:8). It lies on the shore of the Dead Sea and can burst into flame when earthquakes release hot gases from the earth's interior.

BROAD PLACE To be set in a broad place (Job 36:16) is to be delivered from danger, anxiety, want, or distress. The phrase is also translated as "large place" (2 Sam. 22:20; Pss. 18:19; 118:5; Hos. 4:16) and "large room" (Ps. 31:8). Related is the phrase applied to Canaan, "large land" which would appear to denote Canaan—the Promised Land—as a place of deliverance (Judg. 18:10; but see Isa. 22:18).

BROAD WALL A stretch of the wall of Jerusalem on the northwest corner near the Gate of Ephraim. This section of the wall was restored by Nehemiah (Neh. 3:8; 12:38).

BROIDERED See Embroider, Embroiderer.

BRONZE See Minerals and Metals.

BRONZE SEA See Molten Sea.

BRONZE SERPENT Moses made a bronze serpent and set it on a pole in the middle of the Israelite camp (Num. 21). God had told Moses to do this so the Israelites bitten by serpents could express their faith by looking at it and be healed. The need for the serpent came in one of the times Israel murmured against God and Moses. The people were in the wilderness after their refusal to obey God by entering the land of Canaan.

Although God had provided food and water for them after their disobedience, they complained because of the monotony of the good provided. God sent serpents among them, therefore, to punish the people. The serpents' bites were deadly, but God relented and chose to provide a way for rescue if those bitten would accept it. The bronze serpent was God's way. It was a call to faith in God and to the way of healing He established.

Nothing more is known of the bronze serpent until it is mentioned again in 2 Kings 18:4. There, in the account of King Hezekiah's purging of the Temple, the Bible tells of the destruction of this symbol. Hezekiah wanted to purify Temple worship. Apparently, the bronze serpent had become an object of worship as the Israelites burned incense to it.

Archaeological evidence from Mesopotamian and, more importantly, Canaanite sites reveals that the crawling serpent was a symbol of the fertility of the soil. The serpent was often represented associated with the fertility goddesses, the bull, the dove (life of the heavens), and water.

Jesus made the final mention of this symbol in John 3:14. There, in His conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus compared His own purpose with that of the bronze serpent. The serpent, lifted up in the wilderness, had been God's chosen way to provide physical healing. Jesus, lifted up on the cross, is God's chosen way to provide spiritual healing for all afflicted by sin. As the serpent gave life in the wilderness, Jesus gives spiritual life. Faith was necessary to look at the serpent and be healed; faith is necessary to receive the healing (salvation) Jesus gives.

See Moses; Wilderness; Atonement; Hezekiah.

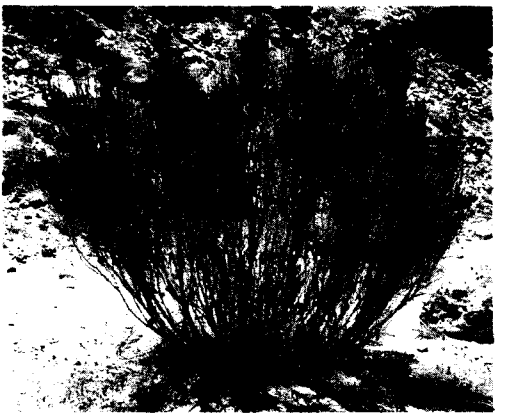
Albert F. Bean and Karen Joines

BROOCH Class of jewelry brought by both men and women as offerings (Ex. 35:22). The Hebrew term denotes a golden pin (the KJV has bracelets here; REB, "clasp"; TEV, "decorative pins"). At a later time brooches were bow shaped and made of bronze or iron. Some recent interpreters think "nose rings" were meant.



BROOK OF EGYPT The southwestern limit of Canaanite territory given to Israel as a possession (Num. 34:5 NAS). It is usually identified with the Wadi el-'Arish, which flows from the middle of the Sinai Peninsula to the Mediterranean Sea. It empties into the Mediterranean about midway between the sites of Gaza and Pelusium. See Rivers and Waterways in the Bible.

BROOK OF THE ARABAH Literally, "brook of the wilderness." A stream bed that is dry most of the year and marked the southern border of Israel, the northern kingdom (2 Kings 14:25; Amos 6:14). It has sometimes been located at the Brook of Zered which joins the Dead Sea at its southeastern corner from the east. More likely, it is either the wadi el-Qelt, flowing from Jericho to the west, or the wadi el-Kefren from the northern end of the Dead Sea flowing to the east.

BROOKS OF THE WILLOWS A name appearing only in Isaiah 15:7 as one of the borders of Moab. The Hebrew name can be read as a plural form of the Brook of the Arabah, but two separate waterways are meant. Probably the same as the Brook of Zered, modern wadi el-Hesa. See Brook of Zered.

BROOK OF ZERED Also called "valley of Zered." The Israelites crossed this book marking an end to their wilderness wandering and entrance into the Promised Land (Num. 21:12; Deut. 2:13–14). It is usually identified with modern wadi el-Hesa which flows into the southeast end of the Dead Sea. The wadi is about 35 miles long and forms the boundary between Moab and Edom. The Brook of Zered is the same as the Brook of the Willows (Isa. 15:7), the dry stream bed of 2 Kings 3:16 (see 3:22), and perhaps the same as the Brook of the Arabah (Amos 6:14), though see Brook of the Arabah.

BROOM TREE A bush that often grows large enough to provide shade (1 Kings 19:4–5). Its foliage and roots were often used as fuel (Job 30:4; Ps. 120:4). Its white flowers with maroon center beautify the Dead Sea area. Bees buzz among its blooms. The name Rithmah—a place along the route of the Exodus (Num. 33:18–19)—was named for this shrub (rothem). Although KJV, NAS identify the bush as the juniper, modern scholars agree that the bush intended by the Hebrew writer was the broom tree—Retama raetam (NIV, REB, NRSV).

Broom tree in southern Israel.

BROTHERLY LOVE A concept which appears throughout the Bible, but the specific word for this type love appears only in the New Testament.

The word which is usually rendered "brotherly love" in the New Testament is the Greek philadelphia and is used only five times (Rom. 12:10; 1 Thess. 4:9; Heb. 13:1; 1 Pet. 1:22; 2 Pet. 1:7). A similar word, philadelphos, appears in 1 Peter 3:8, and means "loving one's brother." However, the idea of brotherly love is much more extensive than these few occurrences.

Old Testament Two words in the Old Testament cover the full range of ideas associated with "love," the Hebrew 'ahab and hesed, though the latter is often associated with covenant love. Israelites were called upon to love other people in many relationships: as friend to friend (Ps. 38:11; Prov. 10:12); between slave and master (Ex. 21:5; Deut. 15:16); with the neighbor (Lev. 19:18); with the poor and unfortunate (Prov. 14:21,31); and especially significant is the command to love the stranger and foreigner (Lev. 19:34; Deut. 10:19). Often the love relationship between people is in the context of covenant, as with David and Jonathan (1 Sam. 18:1–3).

New Testament Brotherly love in the ancient Christian literature means to treat others as if they were a part of one's family. This kind of love means "to like" another person and to want what is best for that individual. The basic word used for the brotherly type of love, phileo, sometimes means "to kiss," which was to show close friendship (Mark 14:44). This kind of love is never used for the love of God nor for erotic love.

Jesus constantly taught His followers the principle of "brotherly love," even though the New Testament never records Him using this very word. He declared that the second great commandment is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Mark 12:31), and in the parable of the Good Samaritan He explained who that neighbor is (Luke 10:25–37). He also encouraged forgiveness of a brother (Matt. 18:23–35) and offered the Golden Rule as a guide in relating to one's brother (Matt. 7:12; Luke 6:31).

Paul spoke of "brotherly love" in the context of the community of believers, the church. Twice he used the term philadelphia: first in 1 Thessalonians 4:9, then in Romans 12:10. In both cases he encouraged Christians to live peaceably with one another in the church. He underlined the idea of love for the brethren in Galatians 5:14, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word,. . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Also in Romans 13:8–10, he declared, "Owe no man any thing, but to love one another," and in 1 Corinthians 8:13, on causing a weaker brother to stumble, he wrote, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh. . . . "

In the Johannine writings, brotherly love is a dominant theme. Jesus gave a new commandment "that ye love one another" (John 13:34). The idea is repeated in John 17:26, "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them." A series of emphatic statements on brotherly love in 1 and 2 John are designed to show that this is truly the central command of Jesus (1 John 2:9; 3:10,18,23; 4:8,20; 2 John 6).

In the Epistles the specific word, philadelphia (brotherly love) appears in Hebrews and in 1 and 2 Peter. Hebrews 13:1–2 connects it with "hospitality to strangers," 1 Peter 1:22 with being pure, and 2 Peter 1:7 has it in a checklist of virtues which Christians should possess. See Love; Hospitality; Ethics. W. Thomas Sawyer BROTHERS In the Old Testament, the word brother usually refers to the blood relationship of siblings (Ex. 4:14; Judg. 9:5). In fact, the book of Genesis addresses the difficulties of sibling rivalry, or the "brother problem": Cain and Abel (Gen. 4); Jacob and Esau (Gen. 25—28); Joseph and his brothers (Gen. 37—50). In each instance, the younger brother is the one favored by God. (See also David among Jesse's sons, 2 Sam. 1:26.)

The New Testament also reflects the use of the word brother to designate a physical relationship. Luke mentions that Herod and Philip are brothers (Luke 3:1). Among the disciples, Simon and Andrew are siblings (Mark 1:16); so also are James and John (Mark 1:19). The four brothers of Jesus are mentioned in Mark 3:31 and named in Mark 6:3. Other examples of physical brothers are found in the Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus (Luke 16:28), the story of the disputed inheritance (Luke 12:13), and the Parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15).

The term brother is also used in the Old Testament to signify kinsmen, allies, fellow countrymen. The word is used in Genesis 13:8 to describe the relationship of Abram and his nephew, Lot ("we be brethren"). Solomon and Hiram of Tyre are called brothers after they entered into political alliance with one another (1 Kings 9:13). Often, the term brothers is found in apposition to the phrase "the children of Israel" (Lev. 25:46; Deut. 3:18; 24:7; Judg. 20:13; cf. Num. 25:6). Basic to this idea is the notion that the tribes and nation of Israel descended from a common father.

This shift of focus from blood to spiritual kinship is found in the teachings of Jesus when He designated as brothers those "which hear the word of God, and do it" (Luke 8:20). The fledgling Christian community continued this emphasis on brother as expressing a spiritual relationship. Paul regularly addressed the Christian community as brothers (1 Cor. 1:10; 1 Thess. 1:4). In fact, in most of the New Testament passages where brethren is used to designate the entire Christian community (male and female), the word may be better translated as "fellow Christians" (Phil. 4:1–9). The dual function of the term brother as describing both a physical and spiritual relationship bears eloquent testimony to the importance in the Christian community of both the family of flesh and the family of faith. See Sister; Early Church; Paul.

Mikeal C. Parsons

BROTHERS, JESUS Jesus grew up in a normal family with parents, sisters, and brothers. Jesus' Nazareth critics listed them in Mark 6:3 as James, Joses, Juda, and Simon. Their names appear again in the parallel passage of Matthew 13:55, except Joseph is used as the alternate spelling of Joses (see NAS). His brothers may have been among the friends in Mark 3:21 who thought Jesus was "beside himself"; ten verses later 3:31 "his brethren and his mother" tried to get His attention while He was teaching in a house. Furthermore, John 7:5 reports that "neither did his brethren believe in him." After the resurrection, however, they changed their minds and joined the disciples in times of prayer (Acts 1:14). The risen Christ appeared to one of them, James, and he became the leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 12:17; 1 Cor. 15:7). Nevertheless, some writings in the early centuries raised questions about the brothers to protect their developing doctrine of Mary's perpetual virginity. One of them, often called the Gospel of James, tells the life story of Mary, using much fanciful material. It claims that Jesus' brothers were the sons of Joseph by an earlier marriage. This is the view of the Greek Orthodox Church. Later a famous scholar, Jerome, argued that Jesus' brothers were really his cousins because their mother was Mary of Cleophas and the sister of Mary the mother of Jesus (see John 19:25). This is the view of the Roman Catholic Church, but Protestant scholars prefer the traditional view of the Gospels. Jesus was born of the virgin Mary. Mary and Joseph then had four sons in the way all humans normally do.

W.J. Fallis

BROWN KJV translation of a Hebrew word rendered as "black" (NAS, NRSV, TEV, REB) or "dark-colored" (NIV) by modern translations (Gen. 30:32,33,35,40). See Colors; Black.

BUBASTIS (Bū' băs·tĭs) TEV, NIV translation of Pi-beseth. See Pi-beseth.

BUCKET The reference is to waterskin held open at the top by a stick in the shape of a cross (Num. 24:7; Isa. 40:15). The main purpose was for drawing water from a well and is still used in Palestine today.

BUCKLER A small rounded shield which was carried in the hand or worn on the arm. Larger shields were also used which covered the entire body. See Arms and Armor.

BUGLE NRSV, NAS, TEV translation of a Greek word in 1 Corinthians 14:8 which is elsewhere translated as "trumpet." See Music; Instruments; Dancing.

BUKKI (Bŭk' kī) Personal name shortened from Bukkiah, meaning, "Yahweh proved" or "Yahweh has emptied." 1. Representative of tribe of Dan on commission to distribute the Promised Land among the tribes (Num. 34:22). 2. High priestly descendant of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:5,51) and ancestor of Ezra (Ezra 7:4).

BUKKIAH (Bŭk·kī' ăh) See Bukki. Son of Herman among Temple musicians David appointed (1 Chron. 25:4). He or a person of same name headed the sixth course of musicians (1 Chron. 25:13).

BUL (Bŭl) Name of eighth month or parts of October and November meaning, "harvest month." Solomon finished building the Temple in this month (1 Kings 6:38).

BULL The term is a translation of several Hebrew words: "abbir," "par," and "shor." The difference between "abbir" and "par" is not obvious but may be of some consequence. "Abbir" is used as an adjective most frequently to mean might or valiant one, either man, angels, or animals. "Par" seems to be used in reference to the male of the bovine species.

The bull was the symbol of great productivity in the ancient world and was a sign of great strength. Moses portrayed the future strength of Joseph with the term "shor" (Deut. 33:17). The king of Assyria boasted of his great strength with the term "abbir" (Isa. 10:13). The most frequent use of the bull in the Old Testament was as a sacrificial animal. Leviticus specifies that no castrated animal could be so used and that the animal must be at least eight days old (22:17–28). The bull is specified as the sacrificial animal for a peace offering (Ex. 24:5), a burnt offering (Judg. 6:26), and as a sin offering (Ezek. 43:19). On the other hand, the sacrificial animal is not so restricted in other passages (Lev. 22:23; Num. 23:14). The bull was used most frequently in connection with the inauguration of the sacrificial system or with sacrifices on special days. It was used in connection with the consecration of the priests (Ex. 29:1–37); at the dedication of the altar of the tabernacle (Num. 7); for the purification of the Levites (Num. 8:5–22); at the beginning of the month (New Moon [Num. 28:11–15]); the Feast of Weeks (Num. 28:26–31). The Feast of Booths had the distinction of requiring the largest numbers of bulls (seventy-one [Num. 29:12–40]).

Relief of festooned bull's head from Roman Ephesus.

A colossal Persian column capital from Susa decorated with the neck and head of two stylized bulls.

The bull may have been introduced into the cultic system of Israel from the practice of her neighbors. It was a widespread practice in the region in which Israel resided. In the Canaanite religion, the chief of the assembly was called "father bull El." The bull was closely associated with Baal and may have influenced Jeroboam to set up the golden bulls at Bethel and Dan (1 Kings 12:28). The bronze sea in the courtyard of the temple in Jerusalem was resting on the back of twelve bronze bulls. Bryce Sandlin BULRUSH In Exodus 2:3, the material that was used to make the ark in which the infant Moses was placed to protect him from the edict of Pharaoh requiring that every male Hebrew child be drowned. It was a kind of reed plant. See Plants of the Bible.

BULWARK A solid wall-like structure raised for defense, possibly a system of two walls with space between. God's salvation is a bulwark for His people (Isa. 26:1; see Ps. 8:2; 1 Tim. 3:15).

BUNAH (Bū′ năh) Personal name meaning, "understanding." Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:25).

BUNDLE See Bag 3.

BUNNI (Bŭn′ nī) Personal name meaning, "built." Levite leader of worship service confessing Israel's sin in days of Ezra (Neh. 9:4). A man of same name, probably same man, signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's Law (Neh. 10:15). His son Hasabiah was one of the Levites living in Jerusalem in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:15).

BURGLARY See Crimes and Punishments.

BURIAL Partly because of the warm climate of Palestine and partly because the corpse was considered ritually impure, the Hebrews buried their dead as soon as possible and usually within twenty-four hours of death (Deut. 21:23). To allow a body to decay or be desecrated above the ground was highly dishonorable (1 Kings 14:10–14; 2 Kings 9:34–37), and any corpse found by the wayside was required to be buried (2 Sam. 21:10–14).

Though the Bible nowhere systematically describes Hebrew mortuary practice, several features can be gleaned from individual passages. Joseph closed his father's eyelids soon after Jacob's death (Gen. 46:4). Jesus' body was prepared for burial by anointing with aromatic oils and spices and wrapping in a linen cloth (Mark 16:1; Luke 24:1; John 19:39). The arms and legs of Lazarus' body were bound with cloth, and the face covered by a napkin (John 11:44). The body of Tabitha was washed in preparation for burial (Acts 9:37).

The dead were buried in caves, rock-cut tombs, or in the ground. It was desirable to be buried in the family tomb, so Sarah (Gen. 23:19), Abraham (Gen. 25:9), Isaac, Rebekah, Leah (Gen. 49:31) and Jacob (Gen. 50:13) were all buried in the cave of Machpelah, east of Hebron. Burial sites were marked by trees (Gen. 35:8), pillars (Gen. 35:19–20), and piles of stones (Josh. 7:26). The burials of the wealthy or politically powerful were sometimes accompanied by lavish accessories, including robes, jewelry, furniture, weapons, and pottery (1 Sam. 28:14; Isa. 14:11; Ezek. 32:27).

Bulrushes at the so-called "Moses' Well" in the Sinai desert.

In contrast to its wide usage among the Greeks and Romans, cremation is not described as normal practice in the Bible. Bodies were cremated only in exceptional cases such as decay following mutilation (1 Sam. 31:12) or the threat of plague. Even in these instances, cremation was partial so that the bones remained. Embalming is mentioned only in the burial accounts of Jacob and Joseph (Gen. 50:2–3, 26) and there only because of the Egyptian setting and plans to move the bodies. Apparently, embalming was an Egyptian practice.

When preparations for burial were completed, the body was usually placed on a bier and carried to the burial site in a procession of relatives, friends, and servants (Amos 6:10). The procession carried out the mourning ritual, which could include (1) baldness and cutting of beard, (2) rending garments and wearing sackcloth, (3) loud and agonized weeping, and (4) putting dust on the head and sitting in ashes (2 Sam. 1:11–12; 13:31; 14:2; Isa. 3:24, 22:12; Jer. 7:29; Ezek. 7:18; Joel 1:8). The Canaanite practices of laceration and mutilation are forbidden in the Torah (Lev. 19:27–28; 21:5; Deut. 14:1).

Burial caves carved out of bedrock along the south slope of the Hinnom Valley in Jerusalem.

The period of mourning varied in response to circumstances. Mourning for Jacob lasted seventy days (Gen. 50:3), while for Aaron and Moses it lasted thirty days (Num. 20:29; Deut. 34:5–8). Women captured in war were allowed to mourn the deaths of their parents one month before having to marry their captors (Deut. 21:11–13).

The deaths of the famous prompted poetic laments. David mourned for the deaths of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17–27), and Jeremiah lamented the death of Josiah (2 Chron. 35:25).

Professional mourners are referred to in Jeremiah 9:17–18 and Amos 5:16 as "such as are skilled in lamentation," and in Matthew 9:23 as "minstrels." In the latter account Jesus seemed to dismiss them as He healed the ruler's daughter. It is interesting to note that Jesus' own response to Lazarus' death was comparatively simple; He wept quietly at the tomb (John 11:35–36).

Israel's mourning rites reflect in part the belief that death is something evil. All contact with death—whether it happened by touching a corpse, the bones of a corpse, a grave, or a house which contained a dead body—made the Israelite unclean and in need of purification. In addition to personal sorrow, the mourning rites reflected at least to a degree the mourner's humiliation because of his necessarily close contact with the body of the deceased. Joe Haag

BURNING BUSH In Exodus 3:2, Moses' attention was arrested by the sight of a bush that burned without being consumed by the fire. When he turned aside to investigate, the Lord spoke to him from the bush, instructing him to return to Egypt to deliver the Hebrew people from slavery. Some attempts have been made to explain the phenomenon by claiming that the bush had foliage of a brilliant fiery color, or that its leaves reflected the sunlight in an unusual manner. It is best, however, to regard the burning of the bush as a unique act of God. It appears to have had significance primarily, perhaps solely, as a means of attracting Moses' interest and so enabling him to hear the divine word. See Moses; Exodus.

BURNT OFFERINGS See Sacrifice and Offering.

BUSHEL See Weights and Measures.

BUTLER Translation of a Hebrew word that literally means "one who gives drink." The butler was an officer of the royal court who had charge of wines and other beverages. The butler was a trusted member of the royal court as this person helped prevent the poisoning of the king. The term that is translated "butler" (Gen. 40:1–23; 41:9) is also translated "cupbearer" (1 Kings 10:5; 2 Chron. 9:4; Neh. 1:11).

BUZ (Bŭz) Place and personal name meaning, "scorn." 1. Son of Nahor, brother of Abraham (Gen. 22:21). 2. A member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14). 3. A land in eastern Arabia (Jer. 25:23) which Jeremiah condemned.

BUZI (Bū′ zī) Personal noun meaning, "scorn." Priest and father of Ezekiel, the prophet and priest (Ezek. 1:3).

BUZITE (Būz′ īte) Citizen of Buz. See Buz.

BYWORD An object of derision among other peoples. Used in the Bible to speak of the fate of faithless Israel (Deut. 28:37; 1 Kings 9:7; 2 Chron. 7:20; Job 17:6; 30:9; Ps 44:14).

The ruins of Corinth with the Acrocorinth in the distance.

CAB See Kab; Weights and Measures.

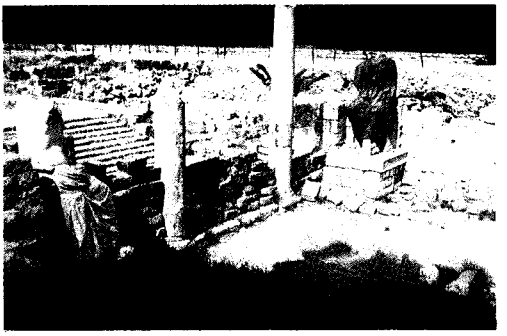
CABBON (Căb′ bŏn) Place name of uncertain meaning. Town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:40). Its location is uncertain.

CABIN KJV translation of Hebrew word appearing only in Jeremiah 37:16 and meaning vault, cellar, or prison cell.

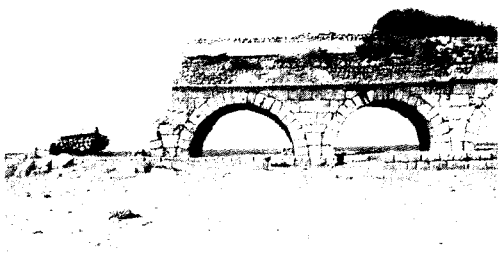


CABUL (Cā′ bûl) Place name meaning, "fettered" or "braided." 1. Town on northeast border of Asher (Josh. 19:27). May be located at modern Kabul nine miles southeast of Acco. 2. Region of cities in Galilee Solomon gave Hiram, king of Tyre, as payment for materials and services in building the Temple and the palace. Hiram did not like them and called them Cabul, a Hebrew word play meaning, "as nothing." Apparently, the "gift" expected a gift in return, according to Near Eastern etiquette, for Hiram gave Solomon 120 talents of gold (1 Kings 9:10–14).

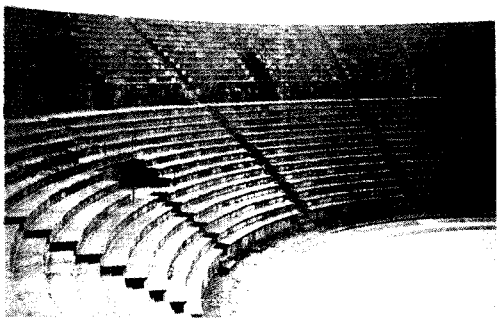
CAESAR (Cāe′ sàr) Family name of Julius Caesar assumed by following emperors as a title. Some Pharisees and Herodians asked Jesus about the propriety of paying taxes to Caesar. In reply, the Lord said that those things pertaining to Caesar should be rendered to Caesar and those things pertaining to God should be rendered to Him (Matt. 22:15–21). In this passage, the name Caesar is virtually a symbol for civil authority. Originally, Caesar was the family name of the founder of the Roman Empire. Julius Caesar was assassinated on March 15, 44 B.C. His successors kept Caesar's memory alive, and eventually his name came to be used as a title. Caesars mentioned or referred to in the New Testament include Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius, and probably Nero. See Rome; Roman Empire.

Bust of Caligula, the Roman Caesar from A.D. 37–41.

CAESAREA (Caĕs à rē′ à) Located on the Mediterranean Sea 23 miles south of Mt. Carmel is the city of Caesarea, known also as Caesarea-on-the-Sea (Maritima), Caesarea Sebaste, Caesarea of Palestine, and Caesarea of Judea.



Byzantine street at Caesarea Maritima with two colossal statues, one possibly of the Emperor Hadrian.



The turbulent waters of the Mediterranean Sea as seen from Caesarea Maritima.

Because of the lack of natural harbor between Sidon and Egypt, a Sidonian king, Abdashtart established an anchorage in the 4th century B.C. It became known as Strato's Tower, using the king's Greek name. A fortified town developed on this site. The first literary record is from the archive of the Egyptian Zenon who put in there for supplies in 259 B.C. The Hasmonean ruler Alexander Jannaeus brought it under Jewish control in 96 B.C., but Pompey returned it to Gentile rule in 63 B.C. The Jewish community apparently continued to thrive. Mark Anthony gave it to Cleopatra, but Octavian or Augustus defeated Antony at Actuim and placed Caesarea under Herod in 30 B.C.

Herod determined to build a fine port facility and support it by a new city. The harbor, which he named Sebastos (Latin, Augustus), was a magnificently engineered project. The southern breakwater was built of huge mortared stones placed in a semicircle about 2000 feet long, and the northern one is of similar construction almost 900 feet long. Great statues of Augustus and Roma were erected at the entrance. An inner harbor appears to have been dug into the land where mooring berths and vaulted warehouses were constructed. Josephus described the construction of the harbor and accompanying city in grandiose detail. The city was Hellenistic in design and style and named Caesarea for Caesar. In addition to the many buildings a platform was raised near the harbor upon which a temple was built for Caesar with a Colossus of Caesar.

The Mediterranean Sea as seen through the arches of the Herodian aqueduct at Caesarea Maritima.

Performances are once again held at the restored Herodian theater at Caesarea Maritima.

Water was provided for Caesarea Maritima by an extensive system based upon this Herodian aqueduct.

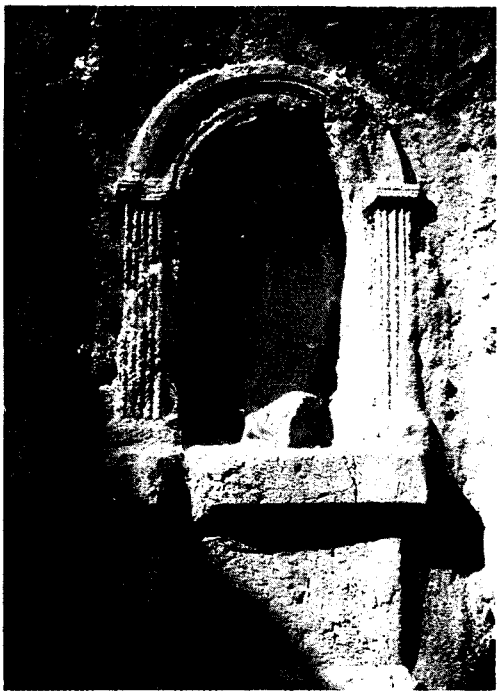
After Archelaus was removed in 6 A.D., Caesarea became the capital of the province of Judea and served as the official home of the procurators. Hostilities between the Jewish and Gentile population apparently had been a way of life in this city. One of the public outbreaks resulted in the desecration of the synagogue Knestha d'Meredtha in 66 A.D. which precipitated the Jewish-Roman War. Vespasian gave it the status of Colony.

The city appears in the book of Acts as a place of witness, travel, and the seat of government. Philip, having witnessed to the Ethiopian eunuch, is mentioned as arriving at Caesarea after a preaching mission. Peter led a centurion, Cornelius, who was stationed there to become a Christian (Acts 10). Paul had several reported contacts with the city as a port (Acts 9:30; 18:22; and perhaps 21:8) and a place of imprisonment and trial (Acts 23:23, 25:1–7). Herod Agrippa I had a residence there and died there (Acts 12:19–23).

George W. Knight

CAESAREA PHILIPPI (Caĕs ā rē' ā Phĭl' ĭp pī) About 1,150 feet above sea level, Caesarea Philippi is located on a triangular plain in the upper Jordan Valley along the southwestern slopes of Mt. Hermon. Behind it rise bluffs and rugged mountain peaks. The area is one of the most lush and beautiful in Palestine, with groves of trees and grassy fields abounding. Water is in abundance, for the city is near the spot where the spring Nahr Baniyas, one of the sources of the Jordan, gushes from a cave in the bluffs. The city is also in a strategic location, guarding the plains in the area. The extent of its ruins indicate that it was a city of considerable size. The modern town, which has dwindled drastically, is known as Banyas.



History Caesarea Philippi seems to have been a religious center from its earliest days. The Canaanite god Baal-gad, the god of good fortune, was worshiped here in Old Testament times. Later, in the Greek period, a shrine in the cave was dedicated to the god Pan. In addition, many niches in the cave held statues of the Nymphs. When Herod the Great was king of the Jews, he built a temple out of white marble near the same spot and dedicated it to Emperor Augustus.

The city also has an important place in the history of the area. Paneas, as it was called before its name was changed, was the site of a famous battle (198 B.C.) in which Antiochus the Great defeated the Egyptians and thereby took control of Palestine for the Seleucids. In 20 B.C., the Romans under Augustus, who then controlled the area, gave the territory to Herod the Great. After Herod's death, it passed to his son Philip who ruled there from 4 B.C. until his death in A.D. 34. Philip rebuilt the city into a beautiful place and renamed it Caesarea Philippi in honor of Tiberias Caesar and himself.

Ruins of a Christian chapel on Mount Hermon near Caesarea Philippi, the site of Peter's confession.

Stone niche at Caesarea Philippi (Banias), in which the statue of a pagan god was placed.

When Herod Agrippa II (grandson of Herod the Great) inherited the city, he renamed it Neronias in honor of the emperor Nero. But, after Nero's death the name was dropped. During the Jewish-Roman War of A.D. 66–70, the Roman general Vespasian rested his army here. After the war, Titus, who succeeded his father as general of the Roman armies, held gladiatorial shows here during which a number of Jewish prisoners were put to death. After subduing the Jews, the Romans changed its name back to Paneas.

New Testament Near here Jesus asked His disciples the famous question about His identity. When He asked them who men said He was, they answered that people were identifying Him with Elijah, John the Baptist, or one of the prophets (Mark 8:27–33; Matt. 16:13–23). Jesus then asked them, "But whom say ye that I am?" (Matt. 16:15). Peter, acting as the group's spokesman, replied with his famous statement that Jesus is the Christ.

The transfiguration, which occurred about a week after the confession at Caesarea Philippi, was probably also in the area. Caesarea Philippi, which had been the center for pagan worship, thus became an important site for Christians because of Jesus' association with it.

See Agrippa II; Augustus; Baal; Herod the Great; Herod Philip; Nero. W.T. Edwards

CAESAR'S HOUSEHOLD In Philippians 4:22, Paul the apostle sent greetings to the Philippian Christians from certain believers who were of Caesar's household. The phrase was used to refer to all persons, both slave and free, who were in the service of the emperor. In Philippians 1:13 Paul had indicated that the fact he was imprisoned for the cause of Christ had become well known throughout the praetorian guard. Quite possibly, some members of the praetorian guard were included among the believers of Caesar's household. See Caesar; Rome.

CAIAPHAS (Cai â phàs) Personal name meaning "rock" or "depression." The high priest at the time of Jesus' crucifixion (Matt. 26:3). He was the son-in-law of Annas and a leader in the plot to have Jesus arrested and executed. Little is known about Caiaphas beyond what can be learned from the New Testament. Evidently he was appointed high priest about A.D. 18 and removed from office about A.D. 36 or 37. See Priests and Levites; Cross; Crucifixion.

CAIN (Cāin) Personal name meaning, "acquisition." The firstborn son of Adam and Eve (Gen. 4:1). Although the meaning of the name is disputed, Eve's rationale for giving it suggests a relationship with a Hebrew root that means "to acquire." Cain was a farmer, and his brother Abel was a shepherd. When the two men each brought an offering to the Lord, Abel's was accepted; but Cain's was not. Subsequently, Cain murdered Abel his brother. In punishment, God took from him the ability to till the ground productively and made him to be a wandering vagabond. God marked him off to protect him from anyone seeking to avenge Abel's murder.

CAINAN (Cā·ī' nan) Personal name of unknown meaning. 1. Ancestor of Noah (Gen. 5:10–14), sometimes seen as a variant spelling of Cain (Gen. 4:17). He is included in Christ's ancestry (Luke 3:37). In 1 Chronicles 1:2 the name is spelled Kenan, a spelling used in other places by many modern translators. 2. Descendant of Noah listed in the Septuagint of Genesis 11:12 but not of Hebrew. Luke used this early Greek translation of the Old Testament and included Cainan in Christ's ancestors (Luke 3:36).

CAKE A term referring more to the shape of a loaf of bread (flat and round) than to the type of batter or dough used to make the loaf. See Bread.

CALAH (Cā′ lăh) Assyrian place name. City Nimrod built along with Nineveh and Rehoboth (Gen. 10:8–12). It is modern tell Nimrud on the east bank of Tigris River where it joins Upper Zab River twenty miles south of Nineveh. Ashurnasirpal II (883–859 B.C.) made it the capital of Assyria. Major Assyrian archaeological discoveries including the six-acre palace of Ashurnasirpal have been dug up. See Assyria.

CALAMUS (Căl′ ă·mŭs) An ingredient of holy anointing oil (Ezek. 30:23). It was a good-smelling spice made from an imported reed. It is also translated "fragrant cane" (NIV, NAS) or aromatic cane (NRSV).

CALCOL (Căl′ cŏl) Personal name of uncertain meaning. Wise man who served as comparison for Solomon's unsurpassed wisdom (1 Kings 4:30). 1 Chronicles 2:6 makes him a grandson of Judah, the son of Jacob.

CALDRON A cooking pot made of various materials used by different English translations for various Hebrew words. Use both in the home and in the Temple (1 Sam. 2:14; 2 Chron. 35:13; Job 41:20; Ezek. 11:3,7,11; Jer. 52:18,19; Micah 3:3). See Pottery.

CALEB (Cā′ lēb) CALEBITE Personal and clan name meaning, "dog." Caleb the son of Jephunneh, was one of the twelve spies sent by Moses to reconnoiter the territory of Canaan (Num. 13:6). He was one of only two who brought back a positive report (Num. 13:30). Because of his steadfast loyalty to the Lord, God rewarded him by letting him survive the years of wilderness wandering and giving him the region of Hebron as his portion in the Promised Land. At the age of eighty-five Caleb conquered Hebron (Josh. 14).

The ethnological identity of the Calebites is uncertain. In Numbers 13:6, Caleb is identified with the tribe of Judah. However, according to Numbers 32:12, his father Jephunneh was a Kenezite. The Kenezites apparently were of Edomite origin (Gen. 36:9–11). Perhaps Caleb represented a Kenezite clan that had joined the Israelites and become incorporated into the tribe of Judah.

CALEB EPHRATAH (KJV) or CALEB-EPHRATHAH (modern translations) (Cā′ leb Eph·′ rȧ·tăh) Place where Hezron, Caleb's father died (1 Chron. 2:24). The RSV (not NRSV) follows a slight change of Hebrew text to make Ephrathah the wife of Hezron whom Caleb took after his father's death. Ephrathah was another name for Bethlehem. See Bethlehem; Ephrathah. Otherwise, Caleb-ephrathah is unknown.

CALENDARS The Old Testament mentions days, months, and years, the basic elements of a calendar; but it has no prescription for regulating one. It was in the rabbinical period that the written treatise on Jewish traditions, Rosh Hashanah, a part of the Mishna, organized the biblical data into the detailed calendrical system that the Jews observe today. We can assume that what the rabbis codified was in general practice among the Jews of the first century, the time of Christ and the apostles, but the New Testament offers little direct calendrical data. Periods into which certain important events are dated mention not the day and month, but the name of one or another of the ancient Jewish festivals: the Passover (usually in the passion pericopes, Matthew 26, Mark 14, Luke 22, John 18–19; otherwise at Luke 2:41 and at seven passages in John preceding the passion); the day of Pentecost (the Jewish feast of Weeks), Acts 2:1, 20:16, 1 Corinthians 16:8; and the feast of dedication (Jewish Hanakkah), John 10:22–23. The New Testament offers no evidence that the Jews inside or outside Palestine observed the Roman calendar commencing on January 1, but the apocryphal book 1 Maccabees and the Jewish historian Josephus do substitute Greek (Macedonian) month names for Jewish month names. We may assume that in business dealings Greek-speaking Jews made free use of them. This was little more than a linguistic convention, however, since the Greek months corresponded with the Jewish months, making little difference in the basis of calendrical reckoning.

The year Anthropological evidence from many regions show that it was possible in the most ancient times to chart the course of the sun in its annual orbit, which occurs in approximately 365¼ days. The vernal and autumnal equinoxes (the day in the spring and fall, respectively, when days and nights are of equal lengths) were commonly designated as the beginning of a new year. From biblical data and from Near Eastern writings we know that all the peoples from the Mesopotamian area, as well as the Arabians, the Greeks, and the Romans, chose the first, unquestionably because spring is when new life sprouts forth. In Phoenicia, Canaan, and Israel, however, the fall date was chosen, probably for the reason that harvesting marked the end of one agricultural cycle and prepared for the next. In the exilic and postexilic periods, the Jews shifted to the spring new year, but since rabbinic times the fall new year has been observed.

From biblical and archaeological evidence we are able to describe three different ways for reckoning the years and dividing up the months from one new year to the next. Each of them reflects a different social system and religious ideology.

First, a basically agricultural society is reflected in the "Gezer Calendar" discovered by R.A.S. Macalister. This is actually a schoolboy exercise in which primitive Hebrew letters are scratched on a clay tablet. It reads:

His two months are (olive) harvest,
His two months are planting (grain),
His two months are late planting;
His month is hoeing up of flax,
His month is harvest of barley,
His month is harvest and feasting;
His two months are vine-tending,
His month is summer fruit.
(trans. by W.F. Albright, Ancient Near Eastern Texts)

Two things are important to observe: (1) the list commences in the fall and ends with the following summer; (2) because it alternates between two-month and one-month periods and does not name or number the months, we can see that the succession of agricultural activities determines the order of items, and that the year is conceived on the succession of agricultural events rather than on astronomical observation.

Second, the entire Old Testament moves on to a lunar-solar calendar that is based on observation of the heavenly bodies and regulates a more sophisticated order of economic and religious activity. This type of calendar had wide currency among the more advanced societies. It is called "lunar-solar" because it allowed the sun's orbit to mark the years' beginning, but based the beginning of months on observation of the phases of the moon. The first appearance of the new moon would mark the new month. According to the Talmud, the priests would watch for this and proclaim it by sending messengers and blowing trumpets. The problem is, first, that the moon's circuit is about 29½ days, forcing a vacillation between a 30-day and a 29-day month; and second, that twelve of these moon/months equal 354¼ days, about eleven days short of the solar year. From the Babylonians the Hebrews learned to add an extra month every two or three years. In rabbinical times this "intercalary" month was inserted seven times in nineteen years.

Third, a sect known as the Essenes created a purely solar calendar that combined mathematical calculation with a special ideology. Discarding observation of the new moon, the Essenes gave each month thirty days but added a special day at the end of each three-month period, giving a year of 364 days. We have reason to believe that when this party tried to put this calendar into practice, the Temple authorities drove them into exile. It would have disrupted the official religious festival cycle based on the lunar-solar year. We know about this erratic calendar only from sectarian books like the scrolls of Qumran.

The month In addition to knowing that the length of months varied and that a new-year date in the spring or fall determined which of them was first, we are able to observe through Israel's history an interesting development in the naming of the months. These names reflected the presence of one or another dominating cultural influence, first that of the Canaanites, then that of Mesopotamia.

The earliest practice was to use the Canaanite month-names, of which four survive in the Bible: Abib (March–April); Ziv (April–May); Ethanim (September–October); and Bul (October–November) (Ex. 13:4; 23:15; 34:18; 1 Kings 6:1,37–38; 8:3). The other Canaanite months are known from Phoenician inscriptions. These are all agricultural names and reflect a seasonal pattern of reckoning, as in the Gezer calendar.

The usual practice in the Old Testament is to simply number the months from first to twelfth. Some of these numbered months are found in the passages mentioned above, hence the practice must be at least as early as the time of the Israelite monarchy. Because the first month is always in the spring, we must trace this practice back to the patriarchs, who would have learned it in Mesopotamia (Gen. 11:31).

When the Jews returned from Babylonian Exile, they brought with them the names of the Babylonian calendar, at the same time counting the new year from the spring. Although the rabbis returned to an autumnal new year, Judaism retains these Babylonian names as its own: Nisan (March–April); Iyyar (April–May); Sivan (May–June); Tammuz (June–July); Ab (July–August); Elul (August–September); Tishri (September–October); Marcheshvan (October–November); Chislev (November–December); Tebeth (December–January); Shebat (January–February); Adar (February–March). The intercalated year is called WeAdar, "and-Adar." Simon J. De Vries

CALF The young of the cow or other closely related animals. Calves were fattened in stalls to provide veal on special occasions (Gen. 18:7–8; 1 Sam. 28:24; Luke 15:23,27,30). Calves were also used in sacrificial settings (Lev. 9:2–3; Jer. 34:18; compare Gen. 15:9–10). A calf symbolized the bullish Gentile armies (Ps. 68:30) and Egyptian mercenary soldiers (Jer. 46:21). The feet of one of the cherubim described by Ezekiel looked like those of a calf (Ezek. 1:7). One of the four creatures around the throne resembled a calf (Rev. 4:7 KJV; modern translations read, "ox"). For other religious uses of the calf, see Golden Calf.

CALIGULA Roman emperor, A.D. 37–41. See Rome, Roman Empire.

CALKERS, CALKING Those who place some substance like bitumen into the seams of a ship's planking to make it watertight (Ezek. 27:9,27). See Bitumen.

CALL, CALLING Invitation, summons, commission, or naming.

Old Testament Five main uses of call appear in the Old Testament. First, "to call" means "to invite or summon." For example, God called to Adam (Gen. 3:9); Moses called the elders together (Ex. 19:7); and Joel gave a command to call a solemn assembly (Joel 1:14).

Second, the verb can have the sense of "calling on God," hence, to pray. We first meet this expression in Genesis 4:26: "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord." (See also Ps. 79:6; 105:1; Isa. 64:7; Jer. 10:25; Zeph. 3:9).

Third, "to call" is used very often in the sense of naming, whether of things (Gen. 1:5–30; day, night, heaven, earth; Gen. 2:19, the animals), or of persons (Gen. 25:26, Jacob; 30:6–24, Jacob's sons), of a city (2 Sam. 5:9, the city of David), or of qualities (in Isa. 35:8 a way and in Ex. 12:16 a day are called holy).

Fourth, God calls by name with a view to service. The call of Moses (Ex. 3:4–22) and the call of Samuel (1 Sam. 3) are good examples.

Fifth, "to call" may be used in the sense of "to call one's own," to claim for one's own possession and to appoint for a particular destiny. Especially noticeable is Isaiah 43:1, when the Lord addressed Israel: "I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine." This calling of Israel stands closely related to its election (Isa. 45:4). It thus points to the covenant relation in which Israel is called to salvation, is given its name, and has the function of God's witness.

New Testament All the senses found in the Old Testament appear again in the New Testament. The meaning "invite/summon" is encountered principally in the parables of the great banquet (Luke 14:16–25) and the marriage feast (Matt. 22:2–10). Calling in the sense of naming has special importance in the infancy narratives (Matt. 1:21; Luke 1:60; 2:21). Calling on the name of the Lord is found in a quotation from Joel in both Acts 2:21 and Romans 10:13. The choosing of the apostles can be expressed in terms of calling (Mark 1:20). Finally, Christ's people are those whom He has called and who are rightly called by His name (Rom. 8:28; Gal. 1:6; 1 Thess. 2:12; 1 Pet. 1:15).

The New Testament refers to the Christian life as a calling (Eph. 1:18; 4:1; 2 Tim. 1:9; Heb. 3:1; 2 Pet. 1:10). The basic call is to Christ as Lord and Savior; thus, all Christians are "called ones." It is employed in a comprehensive way to depict what has happened to those who through the Father's love are now called children of God (1 John 3:1). However, there are further callings to special ministries (Acts 13:2).

The noun "calling" takes on great significance in the New Testament, especially in the writings of Paul. First, there is the goal of calling. We are called to salvation, holiness, and faith (2 Thess. 2:13–15), to the kingdom and glory of God (1 Thess. 2:12), to an eternal inheritance (Heb. 9:15), to fellowship (1 Cor. 1:9), and to service (Gal. 1).

The means of calling is clearly stated as being through grace (Gal. 1:6) and through the hearing of the gospel (2 Thess. 2:14).

The ground of calling is specifically established in 2 Timothy 1:9. The starting point for the divine calling is not works but the purpose and grace of God in Christ Jesus.

The nature of God's calling is described as an upward (Phil. 3:14), heavenly (Heb. 3:1), holy (2 Tim. 1:9) calling. It is filled with hope (Eph. 1:18, 4:4). Christians are urged to lead lives that are worthy of their calling (Eph. 4:1; 2 Thess. 1:11). Also, they are urged to make their calling and election sure (2 Pet. 1:10). Finally, the "called, and chosen, and faithful" are with the Lamb (Rev. 17:14) indicating that those whom God called (saved) He glorified (Rom. 8:30). The stress is on the initiative of God. The one who experiences God's calling can only break forth in praise with Paul: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" (Rom. 11:33). See Election; Predestination.

J.A. Reynolds

CALNEH (Căl′ nĕh) Place name of uncertain meaning. 1. A part of kingdom of Nimrod in Babylonia (Gen. 10:10). The location or identity with any other recorded city is not known. 2. City in Syria under Israel's control in the days of Amos and Isaiah (around 740 B.C.). Amos invited Israel to view Calneh's fate as a conquered city and see if Israel was really better in any way (Amos 6:2). Similarly, Isaiah warned Jerusalem that Calno (another spelling of Calneh) was as good as Jerusalem and yet had suffered conquest by Tiglath-Pileser of Assyria in 738. This Calneh may be modern Kullan Koy in northern Syria, six miles from Arpad.

CALNO (Căl′ nō) Variant spelling in Hebrew of Calneh in Isaiah 10:9. See Calneh.

CALVARY (Căl′ vå rỹ) Place name meaning, "a bare skull." The place where Jesus was crucified. Our English word "Calvary" comes from the Latin calvaria. This word is a translation of the Greek kranion, meaning "skull." The Greek is a translation of the Aramaic golgotha, also meaning "skull." The word is used twice in the Greek translation of the Old Testament (Judg. 9:53; 2 Kings 9:35) to designate the skulls of Abimelech and Jezebel.

"Calvary" appears in the New Testament, only in the story of the crucifixion (Matt. 27:33; Mark 15:22; John 19:17). The gospel writers name it as the place where Christ was led to be executed.

Exactly why the place was called this is not known. The logical explanation would be because the skull symbolized death. A place of execution would see its share of skulls.

Archeologists are uncertain where Calvary was located. John 19:20 and Hebrews 13:12 say that Jesus was taken outside the city to be crucified. Mark 15:29 suggests that a road may have been nearby.

Two sites are held today as Calvary. The older, more traditional Church of the Holy Sepulchre is a complex of religious shrines venerated as the place of Christ's cross and tomb.

In the 4th century A.D., Queen Helena, mother of Constantine, had the site revealed to her in a vision. A pagan temple on the site was razed and a shrine built in its place. Several destructions and rebuildings have taken place over the centuries.

Since 1842, a rocky hill outside the Damascus Gate has vied for veneration as Calvary. Discovered by Otto Thenius, the site gained fame when Charles Gordon wrote in 1885 that this was indeed Calvary. A garden tomb nearby, discovered in 1849, had drawn little attention until Gordon made his assertion.

Executions during the first century were conducted outside the city walls. This might tend to make Gordon's Calvary the logical site. However, at the time of Jesus' crucifixion the outer wall of Jerusalem was much closer to the center of the city. This would make the traditional site more plausible.

Perhaps the most telling fact between these places is the type of tombs they represent. Jewish tombs appear to have had small niches carved out of the walls in which bodies were placed. Later Byzantine tombs used trough-like slabs. This places the weight of authenticity with the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Mike Mitchell

Gordon's Calvary is one of two sites considered to be the possible location of Jesus' crucifixion.

CALVES, GOLDEN Representation, of young bulls used to symbolize the god's presence in the worship place. The bull was used to represent many gods in the Ancient Near East, particularly Amon-Re in Egypt and El and Baal in Canaan. As Moses was on Mount Sinai, Aaron formed a golden calf to use in a "feast to Yahweh" (Ex. 32:4–5). Similarly, Jeroboam placed calves in Dan and Bethel for the Northern Kingdom to use in its worship of Yahweh (1 Kings 12:28) so the people would not have to go to Jerusalem, the southern capital, to worship. In both instances the calves represent the gods who brought Israel up from Egypt. Thus the sin of the calves is not worshiping the wrong god but worshiping the true God in the wrong way, through images. See Psalm 106:19–20. Israel tried to make pedestals on which the invisible God could ride. The only such pedestal Old Testament teaching allows was the ark of the covenant. (See 1 Samuel 4:4.) See Bull.

CALVES OF THE LIPS KJV translation of a very difficult Hebrew phrase in Hosea 14:2. If this is the correct translation, the meaning is very obscure, possibly referring to vows to sacrifice cattle (REB). Modern translations supply different vowels to the consonants of the Hebrew text and read "fruit of the lips," which means giving praise to God.

CAMEL Large hump-backed mammal of Asia and Africa used for desert travel to bear burdens or passengers.

Old Testament The camel is adapted for desert travel with padded feet, a muscular body, and a hump of fat to sustain life on long journeys. A young camel can walk one hundred miles in a day. Wealth was measured by many things including camels (Gen. 24:35). The Jews were forbidden to eat the ceremonially unclean camel, which chews the cud, but does not have a split hoof (Lev. 11:4).

Camels are still used by Bedouins and others as a mode of travel in the Middle East.

An ill-tempered camel in an unhampered rampage could quickly trample down the tents of a family or clan. Jeremiah thus described the sins of Israel saying they were as a swift she-camel, running wild (Jer. 2:23). The wise men who worshiped Jesus are traditionally pictured as riding camels (Matt. 1:1). This may be a prophecy of Isaiah 60:6 which describes camel riders from Sheba coming to bring gold, incense, and praises of the Lord.

New Testament John the Baptist, a desert preacher, wore the rough and plain clothes of camel's hair. His clothing and diet were revolutionary and consistent with his role as a forerunner of Jesus. A proverb picturing things impossible to accomplish was quoted by Jesus when he said it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter heaven. A traditional but non-biblical illustration describes an unburdened camel kneeling to creep under a low gate in a Jerusalem wall. This means that if a rich man will rid himself of pride and humble himself (kneel) he can get into heaven. Jesus describes hypocrites as persons who are very careful to strain out a gnat from a cup of drink, but swallow a camel without notice. They tithe the leaves of a small household herb, but omit judgment, mercy, and faith. Lawson Hatfield

CAMEL'S HAIR A very coarse material was woven from the hair of a camel's back and hump. A finer material was woven from the hair taken from underneath the animal. John the Baptist wore coarse camel's hair (Mark 1:6). Jesus contrasted John's cloak to the "soft raiment" of the members of the court (Matt. 11:8). Wearing a hairy mantle was the mark of a prophet (Zech. 13:4; compare 2 Kings 1:8).

CAMON (Cā′ mŏn) KJV spelling of Kamon. See Kamon.

CAMP, ENCAMPMENT A temporary settlement for nomadic and military people. In the Old Testament English translators usually use "camp" or "encampment" to translate Hebrew machaneh. A machaneh is a temporary settlement of travelers or warriors. Before the settlement in the Promised Land, Israel was a group of tribes on the move. Hence the frequent reference to "the camp" or "the camp of Israel" (Ex. 14:19; 16:13). Leviticus and Deuteronomy contain laws regulating life "in the camp."

Each tribe also had its own camp: Numbers 2:3 speaks of "the camp of Judah"; Numbers 2:25 of "the camp of Dan." After each tribe had secured a permanent place of residence in the Promised Land, the term "camp" designated a military settlement, whether of Israel (1 Sam. 4:3; 14:21) or of an enemy (2 Kings 7:10). The Hebrew word machaneh is often rendered "company" (Gen. 32:8,21), "host" (Ex. 14:24), and "army" (1 Sam. 17:1). The context in these instances calls for a word which designates the people of the camp rather than the settlement as such.

In the Greek translation of the Old Testament machaneh is rendered parembolē, literally "a putting alongside." See Castle. Thomas A. Jackson

CAMPHIRE Variant spelling of camphor. KJV translation in Song of Solomon 1:14; 4:13. Most modern versions read "henna." See Henna.

CANA (Cā′ nà) Place name meaning, "the nest." In John 2:1, the town that was the scene of a wedding during which Jesus changed water into wine. Its exact location is uncertain, though it was in Galilee. In Cana an unnamed nobleman sought out Jesus to ask Him to heal his son in Capernaum (John 4:46). Cana was also the home of Nathanael, one of the apostles (John 21:2).

CANAAN, HISTORY AND RELIGION OF The territory between the Mediterranean Sea and the Jordan River reaching from the brook of Egypt to the area around Ugarit in Syria or to the Euphrates. This represents descriptions in Near Eastern documents and in the Old Testament. Apparently, Canaan meant different things at different times. Numbers 13:29 limits Canaanites to those who "dwell by the sea and by the coast of Jordan." Compare Joshua 11:3. Israel was aware of the larger "Promised Land" of Canaan (Gen. 15:18; Ex. 23:21; Num. 13:21; Deut. 1:7; 1 Kings 4:21; etc.) Israel's basic land reached only from "Dan to Beersheba" (2 Sam. 24:2–8,15; 2 Kings 4:25). At times Israel included land east of Jordan (2 Sam. 24:5–6). At times the land of Gilead was contrasted to the land of Canaan (Josh. 22:9). After the conquest, Israel knew "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed" (Josh. 13:1). Canaan thus extended beyond the normal borders of Israel, yet did not include land east of the Jordan. At times land of Canaanites and land of Amorites are identical. Whatever the land was called, it exercised extraordinary influence as the land bridge between Mesopotamia and Egypt and between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea.

History The word Canaan is not a Semitic name, although its appearance about 2300 B.C. in the Ebla texts attests to its antiquity. Because of the final "n," it has been conjectured to be a Hurrian form. Quite probably the name was derived from a merchant designation; certainly Canaanite was ultimately equated in the biblical text with "trader" or "merchant" (Zech. 14:21). Isaiah 23:8 uses Canaanites as a common noun meaning "merchants" or traders as the aristocracy to Tyre in the prophet's day. Similar association may be found in passages such as Hosea 12:7–8; Ezekiel 17:4; Zephaniah 1:11. Canaan's identity as merchants probably goes back to a time when Canaan was limited to the area of Phoenicia, the rather small and narrow country along the seacoast of Canaan. Phoenicia was particularly known for a special purple dye produced from crushed mollusks. This product was shipped throughout the Mediterranean world. The word Canaan may be related to the special colored dye.

A Canaanite altar located at Megiddo in Israel.

The biblical genealogical references are not particularly helpful in clarifying our understanding of Canaan. According to Genesis 9:18 and 10:6, Canaan was a son of Ham, one of the three sons of Noah. Genesis 10:15–20 clarifies the implications of this Hamitic descent in the sons of Canaan: Sidon, Heth, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Girgasites, the Hivites, the Arkites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, and Zemarites, and the Hamathites. All of these peoples are charactizerized by being generally within the Egyptian sphere of influence.

Settlement within the land of Canaan is attested from Paleolithic times. Further, a Semitic presence in the area is evidenced at least by 3000 B.C. Some of the best examples of cities indicating Semitic influences are Jericho, Megiddo, Byblos, and Ugarit.

The best attested period in Canaanite history is the Bronze Age (ca. 3200–1200 B.C.). During the Old Kingdom (ca. 2600–2200 B.C.), Egypt's power extended as far northward as Ugarit. From recoveries at several sites including Byblos and Ugarit, it is clear that Egypt controlled the area during the period of the Twelfth Dynasty (1990–1790 B.C.). From this general time period come the Egyptian Execration Texts which list peoples and princes of the area who owe their allegiance to Egypt. Egyptian control over Canaan waned, being withdrawn about 1800.

Canaan had to contend with other aggressors besides Egypt. Approximately 2000 B.C., the Amorites invaded the area, having migrated via the Fertile Crescent from the southern Mesopotamian Valley. In addition, the Canaanites were beset by the Hyksos, who controlled Egypt from 1720 until 1570. Hurrians and Hittites also sought control of Canaan. The mingling of so many cultural influences still resulted in a rather unified culture.

When the Egyptians were able to expel the Hyksos in the sixteenth century, the Egyptians were able to extend their power over Canaan. Again, however, Egyptian power weakened. By 1400, a number of small, established nations in the area struggled with each other. From the fourteenth century the Amarna Letters are derived. These are approximately 350 letters written in cuneiform Akkadian. They represent correspondence between the Egyptian court at Tell el-Amarna and numerous Canaanite cities, including Jerusalem, Megiddo, and Shechem. These letters indicate the unrest characteristic of these Canaanite principalities socially and politically.

Prior to Israel's entrance into Canaan, the country seems to have been organized around major cities creating rather small principalities. There was apparently no attempt to organize centrally for defense, thus making possible the success the Israelites enjoyed in the thirteenth century and the parallel success of the Philistines in the twelfth century. The biblical evidence is scant for any type of concerted Canaanite aggression against the Israelites. Stories in the book of Joshua (9:1–2; 10:1–5) indicate that in emergency situations the independent city-state kings formed defense coalitions, but no one had power to unite all Canaan against Israel. In the Book of Judges only one Judge, namely Deborah (Judges 4—5), is depicted as having fought against the Canaanites. Rather than struggling with each other after the conquest, the Canaanites and Israelites gradually melded together, a phenomenon essentially completed by the end of David's rule.

These twin basalt column bases are a part of one of four Canaanite altars excavated at Beth-shean.

The most significant finds have been the cuneiform tablets discovered in the royal library and/or temple in Ugarit. These tablets date from ca. 1400 B.C., near the final fall of Ugarit in ca. 1200 B.C. Their portrayal of the deities and religious perspectives represent Canaanite thought between 2000 and 1500 B.C.

The Pantheon A pantheon of deities was worshiped at Ugarit. On the one hand, each deity had a clear duty assignment, while on the other hand considerable fluidity flowed in deity perception. The role(s) of any given deity might be assumed by another.

El was acknowledged as the titular head of the pantheon. As king of the gods, he was both the creator god and a fertility god. He had earlier been more strongly associated with fertility than was true in the fourteenth century, although he was still depicted in the form of a bull. El lived at some distance from Ugarit upon a mountain (Mt. Saphon) located to the north.

El was joined by Athirat, apparently his wife, who is represented in the Old Testament as Asherah, with both feminine (Asheroth) and masculine (Asherim) plurals. Athirat was acknowledged as the mother of the deities, having given birth to some seventy gods and goddesses. Thus, she was predominately a fertility goddess and designated "creatress of the gods."

Baal was the chief god in the popular worship of the people. Baal means "master" or "lord" and could refer to any one of the numerous Baalim (Baals) who had authority in various locations. The Ugaritic Baal, however, referred to the ultimate Baal!

Whereas El was located at some distance from the people, Baal was easily accessible. Baal statues have been recovered. These depict Baal wearing a conical hat with horns that conveys the strength and fertility associated with bull imagery. In his right hand Baal holds a club that represents his military strength as well as thunder. In his left hand he grasps a stylized lightening bolt which symbolizes his role as a storm god. He is sometimes portrayed as seated on a throne, indicating his authority as king of gods.

Baal was joined in his task by Anat, represented in the Bible as Anath. She was portrayed as both sister and consort of Baal. In her role she was both goddess of love, the perpetual virgin, and the goddess of warfare, whose exploits in Baal's behalf were sometimes remarkably cruel.

As Baal gradually supplanted El, many of the prerogatives earlier associated with El were naturally transferred to Baal. The biblical text derives from the period when this symbolic struggle between the deities had in essence been accomplished. Thus in the Bible Baal is often depicted with Asherah (i.e., Athirat) rather than Anath (i.e., Anat), as in Judges 3:7 (NIV).

Two additional gods fulfilled important roles in the popular mythology. Mot was the god of death and sterility. (In the Hebrew language the word for death is also mot.) Mot was associated with death, whether that refers to the seasonal cycle of vegetation, the sabbatical understanding of a seventh year of agricultural rest, or in some fashion to the individual's death. Mot was clearly understood as a power capable of rendering impotent Baal's regenerative powers.

Yam was called both "Prince River" and "Judge River." (Again, the Hebrew word for sea is Yam.) In the Ugaritic texts Yam was the chaotic god of the sea, capable of turning cosmos into chaos. The people of Ugarit, like their Mesopotamian counterparts (and unlike the Egyptians), apparently recognized both their dependency upon as well as the dangers associated with water. Cultically, the fear of chaos overcoming cosmos was represented in Baal's struggle with Yam.

This sampling of some of the more important members of the pantheon indicates that the Ugaritic schema, and thus that of the Canaanites in general, offered abundant options for worship. The mode of worship was tied especially to procreative sympathetic magic. The sexual union of god and goddess assured the fertility of mankind, the animals, and the larger world of nature. Crucial for this mode of worship was the worshiper's possibility to assist the process via sympathetic magic. In the temple a male priest or devotee fulfilled the god role, and the female priestess or devotee fulfilled the goddess role. These two individuals became for the moment as god and goddess. In sympathetic magic, humans ordain when and how the god and goddess act. This mode of human arrogance undergirded the tower of Babel story in Genesis 11. Practically all ancient worship structures operated from such a fertility-sympathetic magic orientation. The Israelites encountered this thought pattern when they entered Canaan. It took many centuries (note King Josiah's removal from the Jerusalem Temple about 621 B.C. of the vessels made for Baal and Asherah as well as the houses of the male cult prostitutes—2 Kings 23) for Israel in daily practice of popular religion to resist Canaanite practices. The teachings of inspired leaders and the actual practice of religion often stood in stark contrast.

Canaanite Mythology The seven tablets upon which the Ugaritic mythological material was found is often mutilated, frequently making difficult an assured rendering of the material.

The mythology apparently centered around three primary exploits of Baal. Through these events he established himself as the god of supreme power within the pantheon, built the palace or temple which he merited by virtue of his victory over Yam, and in the third scenario struggled with, succumbed to, and ultimately escaped from the clutches of Mot.

El is portrayed as having been unashamedly afraid of Yam, this chaotic god of the sea. In fact, El was so frightened that he hid beneath his throne, fearful himself to encounter Yam but encouraging anyone to come forward who would confront this agent of chaos. Eventually, following some negotiations having to do with his role if successful against Yam, Baal stepped forward and proceeded to engage Yam. Baal was successful, bringing Yam under control by dividing him and thus making helpful an otherwise destructive, chaotic force. By this act Baal demonstrated himself worthy of exaltation.

The second mythological sequence emphasized that Baal was now worthy of his own palace or temple. Given the cyclic view of reality and the recurring danger posed by Yam, it is understandable that Baal did not want any windows in his palace. After all, the threat of chaotic flooding would surely occur again, for such recurrence is characteristic of mythological thought. Eventually Baal was convinced otherwise. Anat secured El's permission to build the palace, and the master craftsmen erected the structure. Baal opened the completed palace to all the pantheon for a type of sacred meal. During the meal, Baal opened one of the windows and bellowed out the window, surely understood as an indication of thunder's origin, given Baal's association as god of the storm.

All should be well, but Baal had one more enemy to confront, Mot. According to the mythology, the two met in battle. Baal was defeated, being consigned thereby to the nether world. When Baal was separated from Anat, sterility reigned on earth. The wadis dried up, and Anat anxiously searched for Baal. While she could not find Baal, one day she chanced upon Mot. She had with her a blade with which she cut Mot into many pieces, which pieces she then sifted, with the remains being scattered across the ground, probably an allusion to some type of grain festival. Regardless, this action by Anat enabled Baal to escape from his confinement. Rapidly thereafter, fertility returned! Thus the full cycle has been traversed, whether the intent be the annual cycle experienced in the world of nature, the seven-year sabbatical cycle, or perhaps the human birth-to-death cycle. What is transparent is the cyclic nature of the highly sensual, sympathetic magic worship. The Israelites were forced to contend with this mythology upon their entrance to Canaan. They faced a worship structure which had proved itself successful in the view of the Canaanites. Apparently, the Israelites had to offer in exchange a non-agrarian wilderness God who had no record of success in agriculture!

Old Testament Relationships The Israelites settling into Canaan were not impervious to their surroundings. In the Ancient Near East people assumed that as a people migrated from one area to another they would take over the gods and religion of the new area in which they settled. At the least, they would incorporate the new religion into their own old religious structure. After all, these gods and goddesses had demonstrated their capability in meeting the inhabitants' needs. For the Israelites the most natural thing would have been to embrace Baalism, although perhaps not to the exclusion of Yahwism.

Strong argument can be made that a type of Yahwism—Baalism synthesis gradually established itself, particularly in the Northern Kingdom. During the period of Joshua and the Judges, a cultural struggle was waged which had to do more with the conflict between wilderness (Israelite) and agrarian (Canaanite) cultural motifs than between Yahweh and Baal. As earlier indicated, in the Book of Judges only one Judge, Deborah, is depicted as fighting directly against the Canaanites. Another judge could be called Jerabaal (Judg. 6:32), having a father with an altar to Baal (Judg. 6:25). Without leadership Israel worshipped Baal-berith ("Baal of the covenant") mixing Baalism with the covenant of Yahweh (Judg. 8:33).

The early monarchical period demonstrates the same type of syncretistic behavior. Saul assuredly did not struggle to eliminate Baalism, and he even named a son Eshbaal ("man of Baal," 1 Chron. 8:33). Jonathan had a son, Merib-baal (1 Chron. 8:34). In like manner David named a son Beeliada ("Baal knows," 1 Chron. 14:7). Solomon was even more of a syncretist. Solomon's crowning glory, the Temple, was designed and built by Canaanite architects. In such an atmosphere lines of demarcation were loosely drawn. Solomon's politically-motivated marriages brought many other gods and their worship into Jerusalem (2 Kings 11:1–8).

Following Solomon's death and the disruption of the United Monarchy, the identity crisis continued in both north and south, but not as much in the south as in the north. Judah was the base for worship of Yahweh and the site of the Jerusalem Temple. In addition, Judah was geographically isolated from the northern Canaanite area where Baalism was more regularly practiced.

In Israel, however, the initial king, Jeroboam I (922–901 B.C.), erected rival shrines to the Jerusalem Temple at Dan and Bethel. These shrines, in the shape of bulls, are viewed by most scholars as being associated in some fashion with Baalism (recall that both El and Baal could be represented in the form of a bull). Regardless, the adherence to Jeroboam's shrines was for the biblical writers the mark of apostasy for Israel's kings.

During the Omrid Dynasty, Ahab (869–850 B.C.) married Jezebel, a princess from Tyre, as a sign of the diplomatic relationship between Israel and Tyre. Jezebel brought the clearest infusion of Baalism into Israel. Amidst the building of a Baal temple in the capital city of Samaria and the persecution of Yahweh's prophets, the prophet Elijah emerged on the scene. In a classical story of cultural confrontation, Elijah encouraged a contest atop Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18–19). On the one hand, the contest was an attempt to determine which deity could give the life-giving rain. On the other hand, it had a much greater significance. It clarified that a person must worship either Yahweh or Baal. It was not possible to worship both, for Yahweh demanded exclusive allegiance.

The struggle Elijah initiated with this either-Yahweh-or-Baal imperative, King Jehu (842–815) carried forward politically. Religiously, in the Northern Kingdom, Hosea gave voice to the anti-Baalistic message.

In the South, two kings led the anti-Baalistic struggle. Hezekiah (715–687 B.C.) is remembered as a reforming king (2 Chron. 29—31), Josiah (640–609 B.C.) was the reformer par excellence.

Judah also had its vocal prophetic spokesmen against Baalism. Isaiah about 740–700 addressed the issue. Jeremiah from 615 B.C. onwards issued the strongest denunciation of Baalism.

The Baalistic Canaanites influenced Israel in many ways: Temple construction, sacrificial rituals, the high places, a rejection of any sexual motif as a worship instrument (Deut. 23:17–18), and a lessening of the purely mythical with a concomitant emphasis upon the historical happening as with Yahweh's splitting of the sea (Yam Suph) rather than a struggle with a mythological Yam—(Ex. 14–15).

It is too easy for the biblical interpreter to focus on the numerous ways that Israel found the Canaanite religion to be offensive. In some cases, such as the use of sex in worship, the level of antipathy witnessed in the Old Testament may not always have characterized Israel's actual practice, as prophetic denouncements like Hosea's show. The marked hostility (Deut. 20:16–18) which clamored for the wholesale destruction of the Canaanites came from inspired religious leaders who did not represent the majority of Israel's population. A priest could call a prophet to leave the king's place of worship (Amos 7:12–13). The prophet could command people not to go to traditional worship places (Amos 5:5).

In summary the Israelites did not settle into a cultural vacuum upon entering Canaan. They encountered a people with a proud history and a thriving religion. Historically speaking, that encounter could potentially have led to the elimination of Yahwism. It did not. Rather, a long historical process led to the eventual elimination of baalism and other elements of Canaanite religion. Israel's battle with Canaanite religion gave new dimensions and depth to Israel's faith. The biblical record affirms that Yahweh, the Lord of history, has used the reality of historical encounter as a means to bring biblical religion to its mature development as revealed in the full canon of Scripture. See Amorites; Anath; Asherah; Baal; El; Elijah; Israel; Phoenicia; Ugarit. Frank E. Eakin, Jr.

CANALS Translation of a Hebrew word that refers to the branches of the Nile river (Ex. 7:19; 8:5; Isa. 19:6). The KJV uses "rivers."

CANANAEAN (Cā nān' an) One of the twelve apostles is identified (Mark 3:18 RSV) as Simon the Cananaean (KJV renders "Simon the Canaanite"). In some other New Testament references this individual is called Simon the Zealot. Cananaean is probably the Aramaic equivalent of Greek zealot. See Apostles; Disciples; Zealot.

CANDACE (Căn' dă cē) In Acts 8:27, the queen of Ethiopia whose servant became a believer in Christ and was baptized by Philip. It is generally agreed that Candace was a title rather than a proper name, though its meaning is uncertain. The title was used by several queens of Ethiopia.

CANDLE, CANDLESTICK KJV translation. Candles as we know them were not in use in biblical times. The reference is to "lamp" or "lampstand." See Lamps, Lighting, Lampstand.

CANE See Calamus.

CANKER KJV translation in 2 Timothy 2:17 and James 5:3. In general, canker may refer to any source of corruption or debasement. In 2 Timothy 2:17 the reference is to gangrene which is the local death of soft tissues due to loss of blood supply—a condition that can spread from infected to uninfected tissue. In James 5:3 the reference is to rust. See Rust.

CANKERWORM KJV translation in Joel 1:4; 2:25; Nahum 3;15–16. The Hebrew refers to a type of locust. See Insects; Locust.

CANNEH (Căn' nĕh) Northern Syrian city which traded with Tyre and gained Ezekiel's mention in condemning Tyre (Ezek. 27:23). It may be variant spelling of Calneh or a city called Kannu in Assyrian documents.

CANTICLES See Song of Solomon.

CAP See Bonnet.

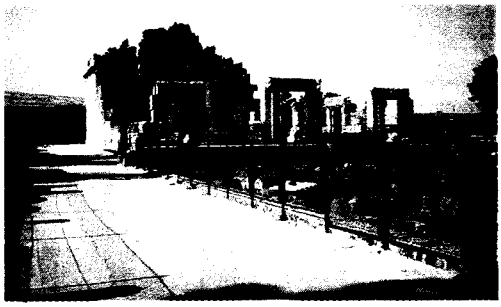
CAPERBERRY A fruit—capparis spinosa—thought to increase sexual powers and used by Ecclesiastes to symbolize the dying physical desire of the aging (Eccl. 12:5 NAS). Most modern translations omit the symbolism of the Hebrew and translate, "desire."

CAPERNAUM (Că pēr' nā um; village of Nahum) On the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee

A house at Capernaum venerated by early local Christians as the home of the apostle Simon Peter.



Some of the intricately carved column pieces discovered in the excavations at Capernaum.

about 2½ miles west of the entrance of the Jordan is located the New Testament town of Capernaum.

Capernaum appears in the biblical record only in the Gospels where it is mentioned 16 times. As an economic center in Galilee it was more significant than tradition has often allowed. The designation "city" distinguishes it from the "fishing village" category. Perhaps the proximity to a major east-west trade route explains the need for a customs station there. The importance of the city is further demonstrated by the location of a military installation there under the command of a centurion. Fishing and farming were important to the economy and archaeological evidence suggests that there were other light industries contributing to the local prosperity.

In the New Testament Capernaum was chosen as the base of operations by Jesus when He began His ministry. Teaching in the synagogue (Mark 1:21) and private homes (Mark 2:1) was basic to His work there, but the miracles performed there appear to have precipitated the controversy and opposition. The religious leadership challenged the direction of Jesus' ministry (Mark 2:24, 7:5) and the popular following attempted to take over and force Him into a political position (John 6:15). Mark (2:1) referred to Capernaum as Jesus' home and Matthew (9:1) described it as "his own city." It appears that several of the disciples also lived in that town including Peter, Andrew, Matthew, and perhaps John and James. The populace apparently did not accept His messianic role because they fell under the same condemnation as Chorazin and Bethsaida for failing to repent (Matt. 11:20–24). George W. Knight

An overview of the third-century synagogue at Capernaum.

The foundational material of this third-century synagogue may possibly date from the first century.

CAPHTOR (Căph' tôr) The original home of the Philistines (Amos 9:7). In Jeremiah 47:4 and in Deuteronomy 2:23, its inhabitants are called Caphtorim (compare Gen. 10:14). Though several places have at times been proposed for its location, current scholarship is generally agreed that Caphtor is the island of Crete. See Philistines; Crete.

CAPHTORIM or CAPHTORITES (NIV) (Căph' tō·rĭm) Citizens of Caphtor or Crete. See Caphtor.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT The death penalty legally sanctioned by a society or government for extremely serious offenses. Capital punishment was legislated in ancient Israel and appears to be divinely ordered. Whether this divine sanction was for all time and places is a matter of biblical interpretation for today.

Offenses Calling for Capital Punishment: 1. Intentional homicide (Ex. 21:12; Lev. 24:17; Num. 35:16–21,29–34); 2. False witnessing in capital cases (Deut. 19:16–21); 3. Idolatry (Lev. 20:1–5; Deut. 13:2–19; 17:2–7); 4. Abducting persons for slavery (Ex. 21:16; Deut. 24:7); 5. Sexual acts of incest, homosexuality, and bestiality (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 20:11–17); 6. Rape (Deut. 22:23–27) including the girl if she did not cry for help; 7. Adultery (Lev. 20:10–12; Deut. 22:22); 8. Sex relations outside of marriage: (a) before marriage, but discovered afterward (Deut. 22:20–21), the woman alone to be executed; (b) relations with another's betrothed (Deut. 22:23–24), both to be executed; (c) the harlotry of a priest's daughter (Lev. 21:9); 9. Witchcraft and false claim to prophecy (Ex. 22:18; Lev. 20:27; Deut. 13:1–5; 18:20; 1 Sam. 28:3,9); 10. Profaning the Sabbath (Ex. 31:14–17; 35:2; Num. 15:32–36); 11. Blasphemy (Lev. 24:14–16,23; 1 Kings 21:13; Matt. 26:65–66); 12. Cursing or striking one's parents (Ex. 21:15,17).

Forms of Capital Punishment Stipulated or Mentioned: 1. Stoning was the usual method in Israel (Ex. 19:13; Lev. 20:27; Deut. 22:24; Josh. 7:25; compare Luke 20:3–6; Acts 7:58). At least two witnesses were needed to verify a charge, and they had to throw the first stones (Deut. 17:6–17; compare John 8:7). 2. Burning was the penalty for incest (Lev. 20:14); harlotry (Gen. 38:24), particularly by a priest's daughter (Lev. 21:9). 3. Sword (Ex. 32:27; Deut. 13:15), spear (Num. 25:7ff.), and shooting by arrow (Ex. 19:13). 4. Beheading was reserved especially for those who cursed or insulted royalty (2 Sam. 16:9; 2 Kings 6:31–32). 5. Crucifixion was carried out in New Testament times only by Roman decree and by Roman soldiers (Matt. 27:22–26,33–50; Luke 23:13–33; John 18:28—19:30) for those convicted of political insurrection against Rome. Jewish authorities under Roman rule were not normally permitted to execute anyone (John 18:31), although rare exceptions are recorded (Acts 5:27–33; 7:57–60; 26:10); whether these were approved by Rome is difficult to say.

Does Scripture Require Capital Punishment? How do we reconcile Exodus 20:13 ("Thou shalt not kill") with Genesis 9:6 ("Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed")? If an individual kills another, it is murder; if the state kills, it is not murder, some would say. Is Genesis 9:6 the mandate for capital punishment? Its rationale appears to be the unique value of persons, "for in the image of God made he man" (9:6). Yet what about other commands in Genesis 9? What about the prohibition against eating meat with blood in it (9:4), or the execution of animals who kill humans (9:5; compare Ex. 21:28–36). Has the Lord spoken forever against eating rare meat and for executing killer animals? Is it sound biblical interpretation if we interpret "by man shall his blood be shed" as a divine command for capital punishment yet consistently ignore the other commands in the context in which it is found?

How do we explain the Lord's protection of Cain in Genesis 4:15 where a "mark" was placed on him to fend off self-appointed executioners? God's grace spared the original first-degree murderer.

Maybe Genesis 9:6 is more descriptive than prescriptive much like Jesus' words, "for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52). Genesis 9:6 seems too broad to be a divine order requiring all societies in all ages to kill their killers.

What about Paul's instruction regarding the role of the state in preserving order? The political ruler is a "minister of God to thee for good"; the ruler "beareth not the sword in vain: for he is . . . a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil" (Rom. 13:4). It seems that the authority of the state is divinely established to protect the good and punish the evil. Is authority to punish a mandate to kill? If the sword is to be taken literally and the state's hold on the sword is a mandate to kill, then capital punishment should be the primary punishment the state has available to use, and it should always be by a literal sword. Literalism presents serious problems. However, if the sword is symbolic, then various forms of punishment and deterrence are available to the state.

Scripture does not present capital punishment as always mandatory. The early Christians apparently did not believe so. All Scripture should be filtered through the perspective of the apostolic tradition and especially through the mind of Jesus Christ who himself was a victim of capital punishment on the cross.

Does Scripture Permit Capital Punishment? If Scripture does not require the state to execute killers, does it allow such action by way of exception? A generally accepted principle of killing not subject to punishment is self-defense, whereby killing is forced on us as the only way to prevent someone from killing us. In this sense capital punishment may be a form of self-defense on the part of the state. Killing in a just war is a similar response. Does the state have a right to defend its people by executing killers? The Scripture certainly does not prohibit the state from exercising this right.

Arguments For and Against Capital Punishment 1. Deterrence: capital punishment will discourage murdering. Yet the only one who is knowingly deterred from killing again is the executed offender. No scientific evidence is available to prove that the death penalty lowers homicide rates. Since most murders are among friends and relatives, these "crimes of passion" are the least likely to be repeated of all offenses by the same people. 2. Protection: Capital punishment protects other prisoners and guards from killers sentenced to life in prison. If released these may kill again. Capital punishment protects the other citizens. Yet the available statistics do not support this argument. 3. Economics: It is cheaper to execute than to imprison. Again, statistics do not support this. 4. The Complexities and Inequalities of the Criminal Justice System: The system favors the rich over the poor. It is so often inefficient, inept, and sometimes wrong in its judgments. Some innocent people have been executed. The guilty are often set free over legal technicalities. 5. Punishment: This is the only argument that has any Scriptural support. Yet, are there more humane ways of punishment than execution? Many see that life in prison without possibility of parole is a greater punishment than death. A sense of justice requires that a murderer be punished, yet nonlethal punishment preserves the life-valuing role of the state. Is this more in line with a biblical sense of justice which also values life? To be effective, punishment should be certain, swift, and impartial. Yet with capital cases in many courts, this is rare.

In summary, the Bible prescribed capital punishment for certain cases in its society. It also set up love for human beings in being like Christ as the highest ethical norm. The modern student of Scripture must ask if cases in our society really find parallels in biblical society. Which methods of biblical interpretation allow us to determine where capital punishment should apply? How do biblical forms of capital punishment relate to modern society? Does Scripture absolutely require capital punishment? In what situation(s) does a government have the right and/or responsibility to carry out capital punishment? Are there scriptural answers to the arguments for and against capital punishment? Guy Greenfield

CAPPADOCIA (Căp-pà-dō′ cī-à) A Roman province in Asia Minor mentioned twice in the New Testament: Acts 2:9; 1 Peter 1:1.

Although the extent of Cappadocia varied through the centuries depending on the currently dominant empire, it lay south of Pontus and stretched about 300 miles from Galatia eastward toward Armenia, with Cilicia and the Taurus Mountains to the south. Although mountainous country, its mostly rural population raised good crops, cattle, and horses. While in New Testament times its mines were still producing some minerals, a large number of tablets written in cuneiform script discovered in 1907 at Tanish, now known as Kultepe, revealed that Assyrians were mining and exporting silver ore from Cappadocia about 1900 B.C.

From Acts 2:9 we know that Jews from Cappadocia were in Jerusalem when Peter preached at Pentecost. Those converted to Christianity that day must have given a good witness when they returned home because in 1 Peter 1:1 believers there are mentioned along with others in Pontus.

Today the region of Cappadocia is in central Turkey, which is ninety-eight percent Muslim.

A region of Cappadocia where Christians hid from invading Moslems in cities carved in the mountains.

CAPTAIN English translation of several Hebrew words usually referring to an officer or leader of some kind. As the term is applied to Christ, see Prince of Life.

CAPTAIN OF THE TEMPLE The officer second in authority only to the high priest. Pashhur ("chief governor in the house of the Lord," Jer. 20:1) and Seraiah ("ruler of the house of God," Neh. 11:11) held this office in the Old Testament times. In Acts it appears that one of the main functions of this officer was to keep order in the Temple (Acts 4:1; 5:24,26). The plural (Luke 22:4,52) may refer to officers under the command of the captain of the Temple.

CAPTIVITY Term used for Israel's Exile in Babylon between 597 B.C. and 538 B.C. See Exile.

CARAVAN A company of travelers (usually merchants) on a journey through desert or hostile regions with a train of pack animals (see Gen. 37:25; Judg. 5:6; 1 Kings 10:2; Job 6:18–19; Isa. 21:13). Palestine lay along the main travel route between Egypt, Arabia, and Mesopotamia and had many caravans passing through it.

CARBUNCLE (Cär' bŭn cle) A precious stone used in the priest's breastpiece (Ex. 28:17) and part of the king of Tyre's apparel in the Garden of Eden according to Ezekiel's ironic description (Ezek. 28:13). Equation with a stone used today is difficult if not impossible. NAS and NRSV read, "emerald"; NIV, "beryl." KJV translates a different Hebrew term, "carbuncle," in Isaiah 54:12. There NAS reads, "crystal"; NRSV, "jewels"; and NIV, "sparkling jewels." In English, carbuncle is an obsolete term referring to various red jewels. See Jewelry, Jewels.

CARCAS (Cär' cas) Persian name meaning, "hawk." Eunuch under King Ahasuerus of Persia commanded to bring Queen Vashti to the king's party. (Esther 1:10). See Abagtha; Esther.

CARCHEMISH (Cär' chĕm ĭsh; fort of Chemosh) (modern Jerablus) was an important city on the great bend of the Euphrates River. It was on the west bank of the river, at an important river crossing point on the international trade route. Carchemish lies mostly on the Turkish side of the modern Turkish-Syrian border.

Carchemish is mentioned about 1800 B.C. as the capital of a kingdom in alliance with the Assyrian king Shamshi-adad I against Yahdun-lim, king of Mari.

After the Mari period, there is a short break in the known history of the city. When sources again become available, Carchemish was first under Hurrian influence, then was included within the Hittite sphere. Carchemish was a vassal and ally of the Hittite King Muwatallis against the Egyptian Pharaoh Ramses II at the important battle of Kadesh in 1286 B.C.

Following the destruction of the New Hittite Kingdom at the hands of the Sea Peoples shortly after 1200 B.C., Carchemish became the most important heir of the Hittite culture. The land of Hatti and the Hittites mentioned in the Bible are probably these successors to the Anatolian Hittites centered on Carchemish. Carchemish again became the head of an independent kingdom and successfully resisted capture by the Assyrian Empire during the whole of its first period of expansion. Only under Sargon II were the Assyrians able to capture and destroy Carchemish in 717 B.C. Sargon helped to rebuild the city, and it became the capital of a western Assyrian province. Assyria's ultimate capture of the city was noteworthy enough that Isaiah used it as a rhetorical example in one of his oracles (Isa. 10:9).

The most important battle at Carchemish, however, was not fought over possession of the city. At the very end of the Assyrian period, when Nebuchadrezzar was incorporating all former Assyrian territory within the new Babylonian Empire, Pharaoh Neco II of Egypt came to Carchemish to try to save the remnants of the Assyrian army. He hoped to preserve a weak Assyria as a buffer between him and a strong and aggressive Babylon. He arrived too late to save the Assyrians, perhaps held up by Josiah's unsuccessful challenge at Megiddo (2 Chron. 35:20–24). Nebuchadrezzar defeated Neco at Carchemish. This victory gave Babylon authority over all of western Asia within the next few years; for this reason it ranks as one of the most decisive battles of all time. Jeremiah and the Chronicler both took note of it; Jeremiah composed a poetic dirge commemorating the Egyptian defeat (Jer. 46:2–12). The city of Carchemish appears to have declined after the Babylonian period of power, for references to it cease.

Carchemish and its ruins were visited by western travelers repeatedly during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Excavations were carried out on the site from 1878–1881, and again from 1911–1914 and in 1920. A cuneiform inscription found during the excavations confirms the site as Carchemish. Joseph Coleson

CAREAH (Cā·rē' ăh) KJV spelling for Kareah (2 Kings 25:23). See Kareah.

CARITES (Cär' ī·tēs) A term of uncertain meaning in 2 Kings 11:4,19 and in Hebrew text of 2 Sam. 20:23, where Cherethites is usually read. The Carites were either mercenary soldiers recruited from Cilicia by Judah and other countries such as Egypt, or the meaning of the term can no longer be determined. They were military personnel who helped Jehoiada, the priest, install Joash as king and assassinate the queen mother Athaliah.

CARKAS (Cär' kàs) NAS, NRSV, TEV spelling of Carcas. See Carcas.

CARMEL (Car' mel) Place name meaning, "park, fruitful field." 1. A village in the tribal territory assigned Judah (Josh. 15:55). King Saul set up a monument after he defeated the Amalekites there (1 Sam. 15:12). There Nabal treated David and his men with disrespect and disregard, an action eventually resulting in Nabal's death and David's marriage to his widow Abigail (1 Sam. 25:2–40). The village is modern khirbet el-Kirmil, seven miles south of Hebron. 2. The towering mountain (1 Kings 18:19) where Elijah confronted the prophets of Baal. The mountain is near the Mediterranean coast of Palestine between the Plain of Acco to the north and the Plain of Sharon to the south. It reaches a maximum elevation of about 1,750 feet. The Bible frequently mentions Carmel as a place of great beauty and fertility.

CARMEL, MOUNT (Cär' mĕl) In 1 Kings 18:19, the scene of the confrontation between the prophet Elijah and the prophets of Baal. The mountain is near the Mediterranean coast of Palestine between the Plain of Acco to the north and the Plain of Sharon to the south. It is frequently mentioned in the Bible as a place of great beauty and fertility.

The western summit of Mount Carmel overlooking the modern Israeli port city of Haifa.

CARMELITE (Cär' mĕl īte) A citizen of Carmel. See Carmel.

CARMELITESS (Cär' mĕl ī tĕss) A woman who resided in or was a citizen of the town of Carmel. See Carmel.

CARMI (Cär' mī) Personal name meaning, "my vineyard." 1. A son of Reuben (Gen. 46:9) and thus original ancestor of a clan in the tribe of Reuben (Num. 26:6). 2. Father of Achan (Josh. 7:1). 3. A son of Judah (1 Chron. 4:1).

CARMITE (Cär' mīte) Member of clan of Carmi (Num. 26:6). See Carmi.

CARNAL Anything related to the fleshly or worldly appetites and desires rather than to the godly and spiritual desires. Basic human nature is carnal, sold out to sin and thus living in the realm of death, unable to observe God's spiritual law (Rom. 7:14). People walk either in the flesh or in the Spirit, leading to death or to life. The carnal person is hostile to God, unable to please God (Rom. 8:1–11). Jesus Christ in human flesh overcame the condemnation of the fleshly way to offer the free life of the Spirit's way. Paul said that Gentiles had received the spiritual gospel through the Jews and should thus minister to the fleshly or material needs of the Jews (Rom. 15:27). Compare 1 Corinthians 9:11.

Even church members can be carnal, being only babes in Christ, as Paul indicated in writing the Corinthians (1 Cor. 3:1–4). Such Christians are jealous of one another and quarrel with one another. Christians should solve their problems with different "weapons" (2 Cor. 10:4). Such weapons serve God's purposes, destroy human arguments and human divisions, and bring glory to Christ.

Hebrews teaches that Christ had a distinct kind of priesthood from that of Jewish priests. Priests had always served on the basis of commandments written to meet fleshly needs. Christ served on the basis of His indestructible, eternal life (Heb. 7:16). In 9:10 the writer of Hebrews made clear the fleshly nature of the law. It consisted of commandments for the old order dealing with external matters until Christ came to deal with the spiritual matters of eternal redemption, sanctification, cleansing, and eternal life.

Using the same Greek word (sarkikos), Peter issued a battle cry against "fleshly lusts" so that glory would go to God and people would be attracted to His way of life (1 Pet. 2:11).

CARNELIAN (Car ne' li an) Hard, red precious stone, a variety of chalcedony. It was used to decorate the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13 NRSV) and could be used to describe the one sitting on the heavenly throne (Rev. 4:3 NIV, NRSV) and formed part of the wall of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20 NIV, NRSV).

CARPENTER The trade lifted to a high position of honor by Jesus (Mark 6:3). See Occupations.

CARPUS (Cär' pŭs) Personal name meaning, "fruit." A Christian friend with whom Paul left his cloak in Troas. He asked Timothy to retrieve it for him (2 Tim. 4:13).

CARRIAGE KJV translation of several general Hebrew and Greek terms referring to utensils, baggage, supplies, or anything which can be carried. The term has nothing to do with transportation vehicles, as a more modern use of carriage would imply. Compare various translations of Judges 18:21; 1 Samuel 17:22; Isaiah 10:28; 46:1; Acts 21:15.

CARRION VULTURE NAS, NRSV translation of bird of prey (Lev. 11:18; Deut. 14:17). See Birds.

CARSHENA (Cär shē' nà) Wise counselor of King Ahasuerus of Persia to whom the king turned for advice on how to deal with his disobedient wife Vashti (Esther 1:14).

CASEMENT A window with lattice work. The wisdom teacher looked through a latticed window to observe a foreign woman dealing with a naive youth (Prov. 7:6). Sisera's mother looked through a similar window as she impatiently waited for her son to return from the battle which he had lost to Deborah and Barak and after which he was killed by Jael (Judg. 5:28). Archaeologists have found such lattice windows in royal palaces. The queen or a goddess looking out the royal window seems to have been a popular motif in the Ancient Near East.

CASIPHIA (Cà sĭph' ĭ à) Place name meaning, "silversmith." Place in Babylon where Levites settled in Exile (Ezra 8:17) and from which Ezra summoned Levites to return with him to Jerusalem. The place is unknown outside this passage.

CASLUH (Cās' lŭh), CASLUHIM (Cās' lū hĭm), CASLUHITES (Cās' lū hītes) Clan name of "sons of Mizraim (or Egypt)" and "father" of the Philistines in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:14). Their origin is not known.

CASSIA Bark of an oriental tree (Cinnamomum cassia Blume) related to cinnamon. One of the ingredients used to make anointing oil (Ex. 30:24), it was acquired through trade with Tyre (Ezek. 27:19) and was desired for its aromatic qualities (Ps. 45:8). One of Job's daughters was named Kezia(h) (Job 42:14), a name that means "cassia."

CASTANETS See Musical Instruments.

CASTAWAY KJV translation of Greek adokimos, referring to battle-testing of soldiers, qualifications for office, or testing of metals to make sure they are genuine. Paul used his own example of personal discipline to ensure that his preaching proved true in life as a call to others to do the same (1 Cor. 9:27). He did not want to be cast away as impure metal or disqualified as an unworthy soldier or candidate. Paul played on the words dokimos, "qualified," and adokimos, "disqualified," in 2 Corinthians 13:5–7. The Corinthians demanded a test or proof that Christ spoke through him (v. 3). Paul turned the argument on them, saying they needed to prove themselves that they had not failed the test of Christ and become reprobates. He hoped the Corinthians would recognize in Paul's life that he had not failed the test and was thus not a reprobate. He prayed the Corinthians would not do wrong, not to prove himself qualified but so that the Corinthians would do what was right even if Paul proved to be unqualified.

Paul warned Timothy of evil persons in evil times with people resisting the truth, having corrupt minds, and being unqualified in the faith (2 Tim. 3:8). Similarly, he wrote Titus of persons professing to know God but unqualified in good works (Titus 1:16). With similar purpose, Hebrews compares people to ground which bears thorns and briers and is thus unqualified and fails to pass the test (Heb. 6:8).

CASTLE KJV translation for six Hebrew and one Greek word. NAS uses "castle" only for one Hebrew term in 2 Kings 15:25 and Proverbs 18:19. RSV uses castle in Proverbs 18:19 and for a different Hebrew term in Nehemiah 7:2. NIV does not use "castle." See Fortified Cities.

'Armon refers to the large, fortified home of the king, often translated palace or citadel (1 Kings 16:18). The term apparently referred to the massive masonry structures connected with the defense of the palace and possibly of the homes of other leading citizens (Amos 6:8; compare 1:4). Apparently they served as storehouses for royal treasures and goods taken in battle (Amos 3:10). Israel prayed for peace in her fortress, but no fortress gave security from God's anger (Isa. 25:2; 34:13; Hos. 8:14). God promised to rebuild the fortified palaces of His people (Jer. 30:18). The palaces should witness to God's strength (Ps. 48:3,13–14). The wisdom teacher knew a more stubborn defense system than castles—that of humans (Prov. 18:19).

Birah is a late loan word from Accadian and refers to the fortified acropolis, usually built at the highest and most easily defensible part of a city (Neh. 1:1; Esther 1:2). It referred to the fortress near the Temple in the rebuilt Jerusalem (Neh. 2:8). A military commander ruled the fortress (Neh. 7:2). The Chronicler used the term for Solomon's Temple (1 Chron. 29:1,19) and used the term in the plural to describe Jehoshaphat's and Jotham's building (2 Chron. 17:12; 27:4).

Tirah refers to a stone wall used for protection around a camp of tents (Gen. 25:16; Num. 31:10; Ps. 69:25; Ezek. 25:4). Compare 1 Chronicles 6:54; Ezekiel 46:23*b*.

Migdal is a defense tower which may stand alone in the countryside as a watchtower (1 Chron. 27:25). They were also used to protect vineyards and other crops (Isa. 5:2). A famous migdal crowned one area of Shechem or served as a military outpost for Shechem (Judg. 9:46–49). See Shechem. Uzziah fortified the Jerusalem gates with such towers on top of which he placed modern weaponry (2 Chron. 26:9–10,15). Battle axes were used to break down such towers (Ezek. 26:9).

Matsad and metsudah are closely connected to the Canaanite or Jebusite city of Jerusalem that David conquered (2 Sam. 5:7,9; 1 Chron. 11:5,7). The metsudah of Zion was probably a military citadel protecting the southeastern hill of Jerusalem, that part Israel called, "city of David." See David, City of. In general, the word described any place of hiding or refuge (Judg. 6:2; 1 Sam. 23:14).

The basic biblical lesson is that Yahweh is our stronghold, refuge, and fortress (Ps. 18:2; 31:3).

Parembole is the Greek term for a fortified camp and designated the Roman army barracks or headquarters in Jerusalem (Acts 21:34; 22:24; 23:10). Hebrews refers to Old Testament offerings burned outside the camp, comparing this to the place of Jesus' suffering and inviting Christians to be willing to suffer outside the camp, accepting disgrace as did Jesus (Heb. 13:11–13). Compare Revelation 20:9.

Trent C. Butler

CASTOR (Căs' tôr); POLLUX (Pŏl' lŭx sons of Jupiter) In Acts 28:11, the sign or figurehead of the ship which carried Paul from Malta toward Rome. Castor and Pollux were Greek deities, the twin sons of Zeus, who were supposed particularly to watch over sailors.

CATERPILLAR The wormlike larvae of butterflies and moths. The term appears in different English versions to translate various Hebrew words, NIV not referring to caterpillars at all.

Chasil refers to a particular stage of the grasshopper or locust. Apparently in this stage wings have begun to develop but are not folded together. They could cause famine in a land, eating all the crops (1 Kings 8:37; Joel 1:14). They symbolized gathering booty or spoil of battle (Isa. 33:4). They made their mark on Israelite history in the plagues in Egypt (Ps. 46).

Yeleq is the first stage after emerging from the egg. The flying apparatus has begun to develop but is invisible. The word could be used to describe the plague on Egypt (Ps. 105:34). They were noted for covering or filling up an area (Jer. 51:14). They swarmed over a land as an army in formation marched into a country (Jer 51:27; Joel 2:25). They multiplied quickly and ate up all in front of them before flying away to attack another land (Nah. 3:15–16). Obviously such language is not fully appropriate for the first stage of the animal, showing that the various terms became synonyms and could be used interchangeably to describe typical activities of the grasshopper or locust.

Gazam is traditionally defined as the just matured grasshopper ready for flight. Other scholars would identify it as the true caterpillar. Its name comes from a Hebrew root word meaning, "to cut off," thus describing the animal's destructive ability to bite through weeds, grain, fig leaves, grapes, olive trees, fruit, and even small twigs and branches. Compare Amos 4:9; Joel 1:4; 2:25. This stage is variously translated as "palmerworm" (KJV), "gnawing locust" or "caterpillar" (NAS), "locust" (NIV), "cutting locust" (NRSV).

'Arbeh is the mature, swarming locust—schistocera gregaria—which grows to six centimeters in length. The Exodus plague narrative features them (Ex. 10:14–19). They were classified as hopping animals (Job 39:20) with jointed legs and so were clean for Israel to eat (Lev. 11:20–23). Their devouring habits made them a part of God's threatened curses on a disobedient people (Deut. 28:38). Their wandering and swarming resembled that of an army (Judg. 6:5; 7:12; Prov. 30:27; Jer. 46:23; Nah. 3:17). They were harmless to the human body, since people could easily shake them off (Ps. 109:23).

CATHOLIC EPISTLES The New Testament letters not attributed to Paul and written to a more general or unidentifiable audience: James; 1 and 2 Peters; 1, 2, and 3 John; Jude. The title is from tradition and cannot be defined by modern standards.

CATTLE See Animals. English translations use "cattle" for at least thirteen different Hebrew words and six Greek words.

'Eleph or 'aluph refers to tame animals living in a herd. It is variously translated as "herd," "cattle," "oxen," "kine." It includes animals used in plowing (Isa. 30:24).

Behemah is a general term for animals (Ex. 9:9; Isa. 30:6), for four-footed animals (1 Kings 4:33), wild animals (Deut. 28:26; 1 Sam. 17:44), as well as for domestic cattle including both herds of cattle and flocks of sheep and goats (Lev. 1:2) and oxen and donkeys (Deut. 5:14). Compare Genesis 47:17–18 . It includes all animals belonging to a household (Gen. 34:23). They were used as riding animals (Neh. 2:12–14).

Be'ir is a general term including beasts of burden (Gen. 45:17) who graze in a field (Ex. 22:5). They are the property of an individual or community (Num. 20:4,8).

Baqar were important members of an Israelite household (Gen. 47:1), even being included in prayer and fasting by people of Nineveh (Jonah 3:7). They are the most important work animals, pulling the plow (1 Sam. 11:5; 1 Kings 19:19; Job 1:14) and the wagon (1 Chron. 13:9). These oxen, especially the young, provided meat for special occasions (Gen. 18:7; 1 Kings 1:9). The royal palace ate such food daily (1 Kings 4:22). The cattle produced milk from which yogurt was made (Deut. 32:14) and also cheese (2 Sam. 17:29 NAS). Such cattle could be fattened in the pasture (1 Kings 4:23) or in stalls (Hab. 3:17). The high value placed on oxen can be seen in the penalty for stealing one (Ex. 22:1).

Mala'kah is a basic Hebrew word for business or work which came to designate the wares or things connected with work and thus is used to refer to cattle in Genesis 33:14.

Meri' is based on the root meaning, "fat." It refers to calves fattened for people to eat. David sacrificed these before the ark (2 Sam. 6:13; compare 1 Kings 1:9). Isaiah reminded Israel that such sacrifices were not God's first priority for His people (Isa. 1:11; compare Amos 5:22). Some have suggested the animal meant here is a buffalo—bubalus buffalus.

Miqneh is the Hebrew word for "possessions" and most frequently refers to herds and flocks (Gen. 26:14) and possibly to a longer list of animals (Gen. 47:17–18; Ex. 9:3; Job 1:3).

'Egel and 'eglah are young steers and cows. The golden calves of the wilderness were formed like an 'egel (Ex. 32:4) as were the calves King Jeroboam placed in Bethel and Dan (1 Kings 12:28). An 'egel was the son of a baqar (Lev. 9:2).

Par or parah represents a bull or cow which has matured enough to be capable of reproduction (Job 21:10). They are older than an 'egel or 'eglah and belong to the collective term baqar.

Shor is a collective term for either bull or cow and most often refers to a single animal.
See Bull.

Threma refers to a domesticated animal, usually a sheep or a goat (John 4:12).

Ktēnos refers to domesticated animals, often ones used for riding or for pack animals. Revelation 18:13 apparently refers to cattle. The same word may refer to a donkey in Luke 10:34. Compare Acts 23:24.

KJV refers to cattle in Luke 17:7, but the Greek term poimaino refers to the activity of a herdsman leading sheep or goats to pasture. Compare 1 Corinthians 9:7.

Tauros is a bull or ox used in sacrifices and for banquets. It is the Greek translation of Hebrew shor. See Matthew 22:4; Acts 14:13; Hebrews 9:13; 10:4.

Bous is an ox or cow. Kept in stalls, they had to be led to water even on the sabbath (Luke 13:15). Compare Luke 14:5. They were yoked for plowing (Luke 14:19). Jesus found people selling them in the Temple for sacrifices (John 2:14). It can also translate Hebrew shor (1 Cor. 9:9).

Moschos is a young bull or heifer, basically equivalent to Hebrew par or parah. See Luke 15:23; Hebrews 9:12,19; Revelation 4:7.

Damalis is the Greek equivalent for Hebrew 'eglah and is used in the New Testament to refer to the red heifer of Numbers 9:2–9. See Hebrews 9:13. Trent C. Butler

CAUDA (Cāū' dȧ) or CLAUDA A small island whose name is variously spelled in the Greek manuscripts. Paul sailed by the island on his way to Malta and ultimately to Rome (Acts 27:16). The island is modern Gavdos, southwest of Crete.

CAUL The part of the liver which appears to be left over or form an appendage to the liver, according to KJV. Other translations refer to the "lobe" (NAS), "covering" (NIV), or "appendage" (NRSV) of the liver. See Exodus 29:13. In Hosea 13:8 KJV speaks of the "caul of their hearts," which modern translations render more freely. The Hebrew apparently refers to the chest cavity in which the heart is located. KJV also uses "caul" to translate a rare Hebrew word in Isaiah 3:18 taken by modern linguists to mean, "headbands."

CAULKERS, CAULKING See Calkers, Calking.

CAVALRY The mounted soldiers of an army. Israel faced cavalry and chariots in the Exodus (Ex. 14:9,18,28) and during the period of the judges (Judg. 4). God would not allow Israel to rely on the wealth and security represented by military horses (Deut. 17:16). David captured horses and chariots from Syria (2 Sam. 8:4). Solomon then developed a military force featuring horses (1 Kings 4:26; 9:17; 10:26). These references to horsemen may all refer to personnel connected with chariots rather than to individual riders or cavalry units. The Hebrew term parash refers to both with the context the only guide to interpretation. Evidence outside Israel points to Assyria using cavalry troops shortly after 900 B.C. The cavalry provided a line of defense, served as scouts, and chased a defeated army. God warned Israel not to depend upon horses for security (Isa. 31:1).

CAVES Numerous caves pit the cliffs and mountains of Palestine. Such caves provided housing and burial sites for prehistoric people. Although occupation was not continuous, evidence for human habitation in some of the caves exists up until the Roman period. At this time, they became places of refuge for Jews fleeing Roman persecution.

The east face of the mount of transfiguration showing caves used for shelter by the people of the area.

In the Bible, caves were often used as burial places. Abraham brought the cave of Machpelah as a tomb for Sarah (Gen. 23:11–16,19). Lazarus was buried in a cave (John 11:38). David used the cave of Adullam for refuge (1 Sam. 22:1), as did five Canaanite kings at Makkedah (Josh. 10:16).

Diane Cross

CEDAR A tree grown especially in Lebanon and valued as building material (probably Cedrus libani). Cedar played a still-unknown role in the purification rites of Israel (Lev. 14:4; Num. 19:6). Kings used cedar for royal buildings (2 Sam. 5:11; 1 Kings 5:6; 6:9—7:12). Cedar signified royal power and wealth (1 Kings 10:27). Thus the cedar symbolized growth and strength (Ps. 92:12; compare Ezek. 17). Still, the majestic cedars could not stand before God's powerful presence (Ps. 29:5). The cedars owed their existence to God, who had planted them (Ps. 104:16). See Plants in the Bible.

CEDRON (Cē′ drŏn) KJV spelling for Kidron in John 18:1. See Kidron.

CELESTIAL BODIES Paul contrasted celestial bodies (sun, moon, and stars) with terrestrial bodies in explaining the difference between the present human body (physical) and the resurrection body (spiritual body, 1 Cor. 15:35–50). The two types of bodies are of an entirely different nature; one weak and perishing, the other glorious and eternal.

CELIBACY Abstention by vow from marriage. The practice of abstaining from marriage may be alluded to twice in the New Testament. Jesus said that some have made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom and that those who were able to do likewise should do so (Matt. 19:12). This statement has traditionally been understood as a reference to celibacy (See Eunuch). Paul counseled the single to remain so (1 Cor. 7:8). Both Jesus (Mark 10:2–12) and Paul (1 Cor. 7:9, 28, 36–39; 9:5), however, affirmed the goodness of the married state. One New Testament passage goes so far as to characterize the prohibition of marriage as demonic (1 Tim. 4:1–3).

CENCHREA (Cĕn′ chrē à) or CENCHREAE The eastern port city of Corinth. Phoebe served in the church there (Rom. 16:1), and Paul had his head shaved there when he took a vow (Acts 18:18).

CENSER In Leviticus 10:1, a vessel used for offering incense before the Lord. Nadab and Abihu used it improperly to bring God's destruction. It probably was also used for carrying live coals employed in connection with worship in the tabernacle or the Temple, each priest having one (compare Num. 16:17–18). Use of the censer in Temple worship was restricted to members of the Aaronic priesthood, as King Uzziah discovered in shocking fashion (2 Chron. 26:16–21). The heavenly worship also involved censers and incense, according to John's vision (Rev. 8:3–5). See Containers and Vessels; Tabernacle; Temple.

One of the "cedars of Lebanon."

The ruins of Cenchrea with the waters of its bay seen in the background of the photo.

CENSUS The enumeration of a population for the purpose of taxation or for the determination of manpower of war.

Moses took a census of Israel at Mount Sinai and assessed a half-shekel tax to each male over twenty to support the tabernacle (Ex. 30:13–16). Another census counted Israel's manpower available for war. This census excluded the Levites, separating them for service in the tabernacle (Num. 1). Another census was taken in Moab at the end of the wilderness wanderings, again excluding the Levites. The Hebrew may indicate the units used in the count reflect tribal units and not thousands, thus accounting for the large totals. David also counted Israel's warriors. Second Samuel 24 says that the Lord incited David to carry out the census, and 1 Chronicles 21 says that Satan moved David to do so. In both accounts a pestilence was sent upon Israel because of the census. Ezekiel 2 accounts for those who came out of Exile with Zerubbabel and Nehemiah.

The first census referred to in the New Testament concerns the decree by Caesar Augustus "that all the world should be taxed." This "first census" was taken by Cyrenius, the governor of Syria (Luke 2:1–5). Luke used this benchmark both as a general time reference and, more importantly, to set the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem, the ancestral city of David. This passage has presented problems in that: one, there is no specific record of such a census outside the Lukan account and two, the date of Cyrenius's governorship (A.D. 6–9) appears to be inconsistent with the previous statement that Jesus' birth was in the reign of Herod the Great (Luke 1:5), who died in A.D. 4. However, Luke's account is consistent with Roman practices, and such a census could well have been ordered by Cyrenius functioning as a military governor alongside the political governor Sentius Saturnius around 6 B.C., when most scholars date the birth of Jesus. The other reference is that of Gamaliel's remark about Judas of Galilee, who rose up "in the days of the census" only to later perish (Acts 5:37 NIV). Joel Parkman

CENTURION An officer in the Roman army, nominally in command of one hundred soldiers. In Matthew 8:5, a centurion who lived at Capernaum approached Jesus on behalf of his ailing servant. In Mark 15:39, a centurion who witnessed the crucifixion identified Jesus as the Son of God. In Acts 10, the conversion of the centurion Cornelius marked the beginning of the church's outreach to the Gentile world. In Acts 27:3, the centurion Julius treated the apostle Paul with courtesy. These passages illustrate the generally favorable impression made by the centurions who appear in the New Testament. They were usually career soldiers, and they formed the real backbone of the Roman military force.

CEPHAS (Cē′ phàs) See Peter.

CEREAL OFFERINGS See Sacrifices and Offerings.

CEREMONIAL LAW Laws which pertained to the festivals and cultic activities of the Israelites. See Festivals; Laws; Priests and Levites; Sacrifices and Offerings; Worship.

CERTIFICATE OF DIVORCE See Family; Divorce.

CHAFF The husk and other materials separated from the kernel of grain during the threshing or winnowing process. It blew away in the wind (Hos. 13:3) or was burned up as worthless (Isa. 5:24; Luke 3:17).

CHAINS The English translation of at least eight different Hebrew terms for materials interlaced together into ornamental or restraining objects. 1. An ornament worn around the neck either signifying investiture in office with political award (Gen. 41:42; Dan. 5:7) or for personal jewelry (Num. 31:50). Animals such as camels might also wear ornamental chains (Judg. 8:26). 2. Decorations of gold worn on the high priest's breastplate (Ex. 28:14). 3. A series of chains formed a partition in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 6:21). 4. Architectural ornaments on the Temple walls (2 Chron. 3:5,16). 5. Restraining chains preventing prisoners from escaping (Jer. 39:7; Acts. 28:20). God could loose His minister from chains (Acts 12:7).

CHALCEDONY Transliteration of Greek name of precious stone in Revelation 21:19. See Jewels.

CHALCOL (Chăl′ cŏl) KJV spelling for Calcol in 1 Kings 4:31. See Calcol.

CHALDEA (Chăl·dē′ ·à) refers either to a geographical locality (Chaldea) or to the people who lived there (Chaldeans). Chaldea was situated in central and southeastern Mesopotamia, i.e., the land between the lower stretches of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. Today Chaldea lies in the country of Iraq, very close to its border with Iran, and touching upon the head of the Persian Gulf.

The Chaldeans In Old Testament times different peoples occupied southeastern Mesopotamia at various times. One such group was the Chaldeans, whose name derives from the ancient term Kaldai, which refers to several Aramean tribes who moved into lower Mesopotamia between 1000 and 900 B.C. Their new homeland was a flat, alluvial plain of few natural resources, many marshes, spring flooding, and very hot summers.

Relation to Babylonia At first the Chaldeans lived in tribal settlements, rejecting the urban society of the Babylonians to the northwest

As time passed, the Chaldeans gradually acquired domination in Babylonia. In the process they also took on the title "Babylonians," or more exactly, "Neo-Babylonians." As a result, the terms Chaldea(ns) and (Neo-)Babylonia(ns) may be used interchangeably (Ezek. 1:3, RSV, NIV; 12:13, NIV). See Babylon, History and Religion of.

In the eighth century B.C., the Chaldeans emerged as the champions of resistance against Assyria, a dangerous, aggressive imperial force in upper Mesopotamia. At this time the Chaldeans begin to appear in the Old Testament, first, as possible allies with Judah against Assyria, but later, as a direct threat to Judah and Jerusalem.

Tony M. Martin

CHALDEES (Chăl′ dēēs) Another expression for Chaldeans. See Chaldea.

CHALKSTONE Soft stone easily crushed used for comparison to destruction of altar (Isa. 27:9).

CHAMBER English translation of at least seven Hebrew words referring to a portion of a house or building. Included are sleeping quarters (2 Kings 6:12); bathroom (Judg. 3:24); private inner room reserved for a bride (Judg. 15:1; Joel 2:16); private, personal cubicle in the Temple furnished with benches (1 Sam. 9:22; 2 Kings 23:11); storage rooms (Neh. 12:44); a cool upper room built on the roof (Judg. 3:20) or over the city gate (2 Sam. 18:33); and the ribs or beams forming side rooms in the Temple (1 Kings 7:3). The New Testament speaks of inner rooms of a house (Matt. 6:6; 24:26; Luke 12:3) or of a storeroom (Luke 12:24). See Architecture.

CHAMBERING KJV translation of a Greek word in Romans 13:13 rendered as "debauchery" or "sexual promiscuity" in modern versions.

CHAMBERLAIN High military or political official whose title is related to Hebrew term meaning, "castrated" or "eunuch" but may be actually derived from Accadian term for royal official. That all officials bearing the Hebrew title, saris, were actually eunuchs is doubtful. The Rab-saris of 2 Kings 18:17 is literally, "chief of eunuchs" but more likely signifies the office held by a high military and administrative official. Compare Jeremiah 39:3; Daniel 1:3. Potiphar is described as Pharaoh's saris but had a wife (Gen. 37:36; 40:7). The Persian officials in Esther 1:10 may have been eunuchs, since they apparently protected the king's wives and harem. Compare 2 Kings 9:32. Hebrew officials also carried the title: 1 Samuel 8:15; 1 Kings 22:9; 2 Kings 8:6; 23:11; 24:12,15; 25:19. See Eunuch.

CHAMBERS OF IMAGERY Phrase of uncertain meaning (Ezek. 8:12). It could refer to secret rooms containing idols or pictures on the walls (see Ezek. 8:10; 23:14) probably related to pagan religions. Whatever "chambers of imagery" refers to, that which was taking place in the Temple during the days of Ezekiel was displeasing to God.

CHAMBERS OF THE SOUTH Reference to some unknown phenomenon in the skies. Since "chambers of the south" is mentioned along with other stellar constellations (Job 9:9), the phenomenon is usually taken to mean some sort of constellation or group of constellations. Some have taken "chambers of the south" to be a reference to the bright portion of the sky from Argus to Centauri. Others have taken the term as a reference to the zodiac or perhaps to the southern portion of the zodiac. Compare Job 37:9; 38:22. See Astrology; Astronomy; Heavens.

CHAMELEON An unclean animal that moves on the ground (Lev. 11:30), usually identified as the Chamaeleo chamaeleo. A Hebrew word with the same spelling but perhaps with different historical derivation occurs in Leviticus 11:18 and Deuteronomy 14:16, where it is apparently the barn owl, Tyto alba.

CHAMOIS A small antelope (rupicapra) that stands about two feet high and is found in mountainous regions. Translated as "mountain-sheep" in modern versions (Deut. 14:5). See Animals.

CHAMPAIGN Open, unenclosed land or plain (Deut. 11:30 KJV). Hebrew has preposition meaning in front of or opposite Gilgal and Arabah. See Arabah.

CHAMPION The Hebrew phrase in 1 Samuel 17:4,23 is literally "the man of the space between"—that is the man (like Goliath) who fights a single opponent in the space between two armies. The Hebrew word translated "champion" in 1 Samuel 17:51 is a different word meaning "mighty one, warrior."

CHANAAN (Chā' nâan) KJV form of Canaan in Acts 7:11; 13:19.

CHANCELLOR Title of a royal official of the Persian government living in Samaria and helping administer the Persian province after Persia gained control of Palestine. English translations vary in the way they render the title, but it apparently refers to political administration rather than to military command and represents a high official but not the highest provincial office, that of governor. See Ezra 4:8–9,17.

CHANT See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CHAOS The transliteration of the Greek word "chaos." In the Old Testament, several Hebrew words convey the idea meaning emptiness, waste, desolation, and void. Hebrew verbs denote sinking into obscurity, becoming nothingness, or falling prey to weakness. In Isaiah 24:10, God announced judgment on the whole earth. This included breaking down the city of chaos so that no one could enter. Through God's power, the line of desolation and the plumbline of emptiness are stretched over Edom (Isa. 34:11). In Jeremiah 4:23–26, the land is described as desolate, formless, void, and without light, a wilderness unfit for habitation. En route to Canaan, God cared for Israel in a howling wilderness waste (Deut. 32:10). God's power caused mighty leaders and princes to wander in the pathless wastes (Job 12:24, Ps. 107:40). Job compared his friends to waterless riverbeds that had lost themselves in nothingness (Job 6:18). Later Job longed for a place of deep shadow, of utter gloom without order (Job 10:21–22).

In Hebrew thought, however, the most prominent concept of chaos is that of the primeval disorder that preceded God's creative activity. When "darkness was upon the face of the deep," God through His word destroyed the forces of confusion (Gen. 1:2).

Throughout the Scriptures, chaos is personified as the principal opponent of God. In ancient Semitic legends, a terrible chaos-monster was called Rahab (the proud one), or Leviathan (the twisting dragon-creature), or Yam (the roaring sea). While vehemently denouncing idolatry and unmistakably proclaiming the matchless power of the One Almighty God, biblical writers did not hesitate to draw upon these prevalent pagan images to add vividness and color to their messages, trusting that their Israelite hearers would understand the truths presented.

God demonstrated His power in creation graphically in the crushing defeat of chaos. He quieted the sea, shattering Rahab, making the heavens fair, and piercing the fleeing serpent (Job 26:12–13). His victory over Leviathan is well-known (Job 41:1–8; Isa. 27:1); Leviathan and the sea are at His command (Ps. 104:26). In creation He curbed the unruly sea and locked it into its boundaries (Job 38:1–11). He stretched out the heavens and trampled the back of Yam, the sea (Job 9:8).

A second use of the chaos-monster figure involved God's victories at the time of the Exodus, using the term Rahab as a nickname for Egypt. Through His power God divided the sea and crushed Leviathan (Ps. 74:13–14). He calmed the swelling sea and smashed Rahab like a carcass (Ps. 89:9–10). By slaying the monster Rahab, God allowed the people to pass through the barrier-sea (Isa. 51:9–10). Mockingly, Isaiah called Egypt a helpless, vain Rahab whom God exterminated (Isa. 30:7). The psalmist anticipated the day when Rahab and Babylon would be forced to recognize God's rule (Ps. 87:4). In Ezekiel 29:3; 32:2, the Pharaoh of Egypt is called the river-monster that will be defeated at God's will.

Thirdly, the chaos theme is implied, if not used, in the New Testament depicting God's victory in Christ. In the Gospels Christ confidently demonstrated mastery over the sea (Mark 4:35–41, 6:45–52; John 6:16–21). In Revelation, when the ancient serpent, personified as the satanic dragon, rises out of the sea challenging His kingdom, Christ utterly defeats the adversary forever.

So, beginning with Genesis 1:2, when God conquered the formless waste, and continuing through all the Scriptures, God's mighty power over chaos is shown repeatedly. Finally, the triumphal note is sounded in Revelation 21:1, "there was no more sea." A new heaven and new earth are proof once again that chaos is conquered!

Alvin O. Collins

CHAPITER KJV translation of Hebrew architectural term meaning a capital made to stand on top of a pillar (1 Kings 7:16) or the base on which the actual capital is placed. In Exodus 36:38; 38:17,19,28 KJV translates the Hebrew word for "head" as chapiter, while a different Hebrew term is so translated in 2 Chronicles 3:15. See Architecture.

CHAPMAN Old English word for trader (2 Chron. 9:14 KJV).

CHARASHIM (Chär' â shĭm) KJV spelling of Geharashim. See Ge-harashim.

CHARCHEMISH Variant spelling of Carchemish. See Carchemish.

CHARGER(S) 1. A large flat serving dish (Num. 7:13–85; Matt. 14:8,11 KJV). 2. Horses used in battle to charge or attack (Nah. 2:3 NRSV; compare TEV, REB based on early Greek translations; compare Isa. 31:1,3; Jer. 8:6; Rev. 6:2).

CHARIOTS Two-wheeled land vehicles, made of wood and strips of leather, and usually drawn by horses. They were used widely in Mesopotamia before 3000 B.C. and were introduced into Canaan and Egypt by the Hyksos about 1800–1600 B.C. Their primary function was as mobile firing platforms in battles. They were also used for hunting, for transportation of dignitaries, and in state and religious ceremonies.

Old Testament Egyptian chariots were the first to be mentioned in the Bible (Gen. 41:43; 46:29; 50:9). The iron chariots of the Philistines were fortified with plates of metal which made them militarily stronger than those of the Israelites (Judg. 1:19; 4:3, 13–17; 1 Sam. 13:5–7).

Chariots became an important part of Solomon's army and his commercial affairs (1 Kings 4:26; 9:15–19; 10:28–29). The military strength of Israel under Ahab was noteworthy because of the number of chariots available for use. According to Assyrian records, Ahab brought 2,000 chariots into the Battle of Qarqar in 853 B.C. Chariots were also seen in prophetic visions (Zech. 6:1–8) and applied figuratively to Elijah's and Elisha's power (2 Kings 2:12; 13:14).

New Testament Chariots were used in prophetic imagery (Rev. 9:9; 18:13) and for transportation of the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:26–38).

See Arms and Armor.

Lai Ling Elizabeth Ngan

CHARIOTS OF THE SUN RSV translation in 2 Kings 23:11 for a sculpture that Josiah removed from the Jerusalem Temple. Other translations speak of horses the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun. The Assyrians called the sun god, "chariot rider," so this could represent statuary introduced when Judah began to pay tribute to the Assyrian kings. Deuteronomy 17:3 records God's injunction to Israel not to worship the sun, but Ezekiel attested to persons in the Temple worshiping the sun (Ezek. 8:16).

CHARITY KJV translation of Greek agape. See Love. NAS uses "charity" to translate Greek ekdidomai, "to give out" in relation to helping the poor (Luke 11:41; 12:33; Acts 9:36).

CHARM Human grace and attractiveness; magic objects intended to ward off evil; and a method used to prevent poisonous snakes from biting. 1. Human charm can be deceitful (Prov. 31:30), yet the Hebrew term used—chen—is a characteristic of God's gift of the Spirit (Zech. 12:10). God gave Joseph the ability to be charming or gain favor with the Egyptian jailer (Gen. 39:21). God also gives such grace to the afflicted (Prov. 3:34). Generally the term means to find favor or acceptance from another person (Gen. 6:8; 32:8), but English translations use grace or favor rather than charm as the translation at these points. Charm is used in cases like the harlot of Nahum 3:4. 2. Magic charms sewn as wristbands (Ezek. 13:18 NIV) to ward off evil spirits and diseases receive prophetic condemnation. Compare Isaiah 3:20. 3. Snake charmers exercised power in the community because they knew "magic words" or "magic acts" to prevent poisonous snakes from harming people. The psalmist compared the wicked to deaf snakes who were immune to such charmers (Ps. 58:4–5). The "enchanters" (NAS, NIV, NRSV) are listed among community leaders the prophet condemned (Isa. 3:3). Jeremiah warned God would send snakes whom no one could charm to punish His disobedient people (Jer. 8:17). The writer of Ecclesiastes reminded his audience that the price of unsuccessful charmers was great (Eccl. 10:11).

CHARRAN Greek and KJV spelling of Haran (Acts 7:2,4) See Haran.

CHASTE Holy purity demanded of God's people with special reference to the sexual purity of women. The Greek word hagnos originally referred to the holy purity of deities. Paul used the term to urge the Corinthians to remain pure so he could present them to Christ in the last days as a pure, virginal bride (2 Cor. 11:2–3). Titus was to teach young women to be pure in sincere worship, in general moral behavior, and in sexual matters (Titus 2:5; compare 1 Pet. 3:2). Similarly, church leaders must be pure (1 Tim. 5:22). Purity is an essential element of Christian ethics (Phil. 4:8; Jas. 3:17). Even preaching the gospel can be done from impure motives (Phil. 1:17). To be pure can also appear in a legal context, meaning to be declared innocent of a charge as Paul did in reference to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 7:11). Ultimately, Jesus is the pure One (1 John 3:3).

CHASTEN, CHASTISEMENT refers to an act of punishment intended to instruct and change behavior. Two basic Hebrew words express the idea—yakach, "to settle a dispute, reprove"; yasar—"to instruct, a discipline." People fear the experience of God's angry chastisement (Ps. 6:1; 38:1). Still, the Father must correct His children (2 Sam. 7:14; compare Deut. 8:5; 21:18; Prov. 13:24; 19:18). God's people should not despise God's chastening, for it leads to healing (Job 5:17–18; compare Prov. 3:11; Heb. 12:5). Such chastisement is God's choice, not that of humans (Hos. 10:10; compare 7:12). The purpose of chastising is to lead to repentance (Jer. 31:18–19) and bring blessing (Ps. 94:12), not to kill (Ps. 118:18). It shows God's greatness and power (Deut. 11:2). The climactic Old Testament word on chastisement is that the Suffering Servant has borne our chastisement, so that we do not have to suffer it (Isa. 53:5). Ultimately, chastisement shows God's love for the one chastised (Rev. 3:19). He seeks to lead us away from eternal chastisement (1 Cor. 11:32; compare Heb. 12:10).

CHEBAR (Chē′ bär) River in Babylon where Ezekiel had visions (Ezek. 1:1; 3:15; 10:15; 43:3). This is probably to be identified with the nar Kabari, a channel of the Euphrates River southeast of Babylon. It may be the modern Satt-en-nil.

CHECKER WORK Part of the decoration of the pillars of the Temple (1 Kings 7:17). The Hebrew word also denotes a lattice (2 Kings 1:2) or net (Job 18:8). With reference to the pillars of the Temple, it thus denotes a criss-crossed design.

CHEDOR-LAOMER (Chĕd ôr-lā′ ō mēr) King of Elam who joined coalition of kings against kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, leading to Abraham's involvement and victory (Gen. 14:1). His Elamite name means, "son of La'gamal," (a god). He apparently led the eastern coalition. He does not appear in the fragmentary Elamite records known today, so nothing else is known except what Genesis 14 records. See Elam.

CHEESE A dairy product forming a basic part of the diet. The three occurrences of cheese in English translations reflect three different Hebrew expressions. Job 10:10 refers to cheese; 1 Samuel 17:18 speaks literally of a "slice of milk," and 2 Samuel 17:29 uses a word usually interpreted as meaning, "curds of the herd."

CHELAL (Chē′ lăl) Personal name of a man with foreign wife in the post-exilic community (Ezra 10:30).

CHELLUH (Chĕl′ lūl) Personal name of a man with a foreign wife in post-exilic community (Ezra 10:35).

CHELUB (Chē′ lŭb) 1. A descendant of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:10), probably to be identified with Caleb, the hero of the spy narrative of Numbers 13—14. See Caleb. 2. Father of Ezri, overseer of workers on David's farms (1 Chron. 27:26).

CHELUBAI (Chē lū′ baî) Hebrew variant of Caleb, the hero of the spy narratives (Num. 13—14). See Caleb.

CHELUHI (Chĕl′ ūh ī) TEV, NRSV, NAS spelling of Chelluh. See Chelluh.

CHEMARIM (Chĕm′ ā rīm) KJV transliteration of Hebrew word meaning, "priests of foreign or false gods" in Zephaniah 1:4. The Hebrew term also appears in 2 Kings 23:5; Hosea 10:5.

CHEMOSH (Chē′ mŏsh) Divine name meaning, "subdue." The deity the Moabites worshiped (Num. 21:29). He was expected to provide land for Moab (Judg. 11:24). Solomon erected a sanctuary for Chemosh on a mountain east of Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:7). Josiah subsequently defiled the sanctuary (2 Kings 23:13). Jeremiah pronounced doom on Chemosh and his people (Jer. 48:7, 13,46).

CHENAANAH (Chē nā′ ȧ năh) 1. Personal name meaning, "tradeswoman." Father of the false prophet Zedekiah (1 Kings 22:11). See Zedekiah. 2. A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10).

CHENANI (Chē nā′ nī) Personal name meaning, "one born in month of Kanunu." A Levite who led Israel in a prayer of renewal and praise (Neh. 9:4).

CHENANIAH (Chĕn ȧ nī′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh empowers." 1. Chief of the Levites under David who instructed people in singing and played a leading role in bringing the ark back to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:22, 27). 2. A Levite whose family had charge of business outside the Temple, including work as officials and judges (1 Chron. 26:29).

CHEPHAR-AMMONI (Chē′ phär-ăm′ mō nī) Place name meaning, "open village of the Ammonites." A village in the tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:24). Its location is not known.

CHEPHAR HA-AMMONAI KJV spelling, including the Hebrew definite article, "ha," for Chephar-ammoni. See Chephar-ammoni.

CHEPHIRAH (Chē phī′ răh) Place name meaning, "queen of the lions." It is located at khirbet Kefire about four miles west of Gibeon. One of the four cities of the Gibeonites which Joshua delivered from the coalition led by the king of Jerusalem (Josh. 9:17). Joshua assigned it to the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:26). Some of its exiled inhabitants returned to the post-exilic village with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:25).

CHEPHIRIM (Chĕph′ ĭ rĭm) Hebrew term for villages that NAS transliterates as place name in Nehemiah 6:2.

CHERAN (Chē′ răn) Descendant of Seir (or Edom) listed in Genesis 36:26.

CHERETHITES, CHERETHIM A people who lived south of or with the Philistines (1 Sam. 30:14). They were probably related to or paid soldiers for the Philistines. Crete may have been their original home. David used some of these soldiers as a personal bodyguard (2 Sam. 8:18). Ezekiel pronounced judgment on them (Ezek. 25:16), as did Zephaniah (Zeph. 2:5).

CHERITH (Chē′ rĭth) Place name meaning, "cutting" or "ditch." A wadi or brook east of the Jordan River, the modern wadi Qilt south of Jericho. Elijah pronounced God's judgment in the form of a two-year drought and then found God's protection at the Cherith, where he had water to drink (1 Kings 17:3). When Cherith finally went dry, he found refuge with the widow of Zarephath.

CHERUB (Chĕr′ rŭb) Man who left Tel-melah in Babylonian Exile to go to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. He could not provide a family list to prove he was an Israelite (Ezra 2:59).

CHERUB, CHERUBIM (Chĕr′ ŭ·bĭm) Class of winged angels. The Hebrew cherub (plural, cherubim), is of uncertain derivation. In the Old Testament it is the name of a class of winged angels who functioned primarily as guards (Gen. 3:24) or attendants (Ezek. 10:3–22). The only New Testament reference to cherubim is in a description of the furnishings of the holy of holies (Heb. 9:5).

Texts descriptive of the appearance and activities of cherubim reflect two contexts. One is in the visions of the presence of God attended by living creatures (cherubim and seraphim, Isa. 6:2–6; Ezek. 1:4–28; 10:3–22). The other is Temple worship and the representations of cherubim which were a part of its furnishings (Ex. 25:18–22; 1 Kings 6:23–35; 2 Chron. 3:7–14).

The most impressive of the Temple cherubim were the large sculptures (probably winged quadrapeds) in the holy of holies. If these were arranged as was common in the ancient Near East, the two cherubim would together form a throne. Their legs would be the legs of the throne, their backs the arm rests, and their wings the back of the throne. Consistent with the idea of a cherub throne are the texts which envision God dwelling between, enthroned upon, or riding upon the cherubim (1 Sam. 4:4; 2 Sam. 6:2; 22:11; 2 Kings 19:15; 1 Chron. 13:6; 28:18; Ps. 18:10; 80:1; 99:1; Isa. 37:16). Even Ezekiel's vision depicts the glory of God resting upon or between the cherubim as something of a living throne. See Angels. Michael Martin

CHESALON (Chĕs′ ȧ lŏn) Place name meaning, "on the hip." Village on eastern border of territory of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:10). It is equated with Mount Jearim and is modern Kesla, about ten miles west of Jerusalem. See Jearim.

CHESED (Chē′ sĕd) Personal name meaning, "one of the Chaldeans." Son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham (Gen. 22:22). His name may indicate he was the original ancestor of the Chaldeans. See Chaldea.

CHESIL (Chē′ sĭl) Place name meaning, "foolish." A city of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:30). A similar list giving the boundary of Simeon in Joshua 19:4 spells the name Bethul, a reading supported for Joshua 15:30 by the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation. First Chronicles 4:30 also reads Bethuel. Chesil is thus identical with Bethuel.

CHESTNUT KJV translation for plane tree in Genesis 30:37. It apparently refers to the smooth-barked Platanus orientalis.

CHESULLOTH (Chĕ sŭl′ lŏth) Place name meaning, "on the hips." A border town of the tribe of Issachar (Josh. 19:18), probably the same as the border town of Zebulon called Chisloth-tabor in Joshua 19:12. It is the modern Iksal, four miles south of Nazareth.

CHEZIB (Chē′ zĭb) Place name meaning, "deceiving." Birthplace of Shelah, son of Judah and Shuah, a Canaanite (Gen. 38:5). Chezib is probably the same as Achzib. See Achzib.

CHICKEN A nesting, brooding bird. Both tame and wild chickens were known in Bible times, but they play an insignificant role in the Bible, appearing only in Jesus' comparison of His care for Jerusalem to the care of a mother hen for her nestlings. The Greek terms are general terms for birds and nestlings (Matt. 23:37; Luke 13:34).

CHIDON (Chī′ dŏn) Personal name meaning, "crescent sword." 1 Chronicles 13:9 reads Chidon for Nacon in 2 Samuel 6:6. See Nacon. Chidon could be a place name in the text.

CHIEF The English translation of at least thirteen different Hebrew words designating a leader in political, military, religious, or economic affairs. 'Abir means the powerful one and is used of the chief of Saul's shepherds (1 Sam. 21:7). 'Ayil is one who holds official power (Ex. 15:15; 2 Kings 24:15; Ezek. 17:13; 32:21). 'Aluph is the leader of a clan or tribe (Gen. 36:15–43; Zech. 12:5–6). Gibbor is the manly one or hero (1 Chron. 9:26). Gadol is the great one or the big one (Lev. 21:10). Ba'al is the lord or master (Lev. 21:4). Kohen is literally a priest and then a leader (2 Sam. 8:18). Nagid is a leader (1 Chron. 23:22; 2 Chron. 11:11; Isa. 55:4; Jer. 20:1; Ezek. 28:2). Nitstsab is the one in charge, the overseer or foreman (1 Kings 9:23). Menatstseach is the eminent one or supervisor and is used in the titles of many Psalms (Ps. 4:1), apparently referring to the choir director. Nasi' is a sheikh or tribal chief (Num. 25:18; Josh. 22:14). Pinnah is the corner or cornerstone (Judg. 20:2; 1 Sam. 14:38; Zech. 10:4). 'Attud is a ram or he-goat and is used metaphorically for a chief or leader (Isa. 14:9; Zech. 10:3). Qatsin is the last one, the one who has to decide and thus the leader (Josh. 10:24; Judg. 11:6; Prov. 6:7; Isa. 1:10; Mic. 3:1). Ro'sh is the head (Num. 25:4; 2 Sam. 23:8; 2 Sam. 25:18; Job 29:25 and often in Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah). Ri'shon is number one, the first (Dan. 10:13). Re'shith is the first or beginning one (Dan. 11:41). Sar is one with dominion or rule, thus an official or ruler (Gen. 40:2; 1 Sam. 17:18; 1 Kings 4:2; 5:16; 1 Chron. 24:5; Dan 10:20). Rab means numerous or great and is used in several compound words to represent the chief or greatest one (2 Kings 18:17; Jer. 39:13; Dan. 5:11).

In the New Testament the Greek word arche means beginning or chief and is used in several compound words to represent the chief priest or ruler (Matt. 2:4; 16:21; Luke 11:15; 19:2; John 12:42; Acts 18:8; 19:31; 1 Pet. 5:4). Hegeomai means to lead to command with official authority (Luke 22:26; Acts 14:12). Protos means first or foremost (Matt. 20:27; Luke 19:47; Acts 13:50; 16:12; 25:2; 28:7). Chiliarchos is the commander of a military unit supposed to have 1,000 members (Acts 21:31; 25:23; Rev. 6:15).

CHIEF PRIEST See Aaron; Priests; Levites.

CHILD See Family.

CHILDREN (SONS) OF GOD Although the phrase refers at times to heavenly beings (Gen. 6:1–4; Job 1:6; 2:1; 38:7; Ps. 29:1; 89:6), it usually denotes those people who acknowledge God as the source and goal of their life and who enter into a relationship of trust and love with God. All people are the creation of God, and as such all people bear the image of God and should therefore be treated with the greatest respect and dignity; but not all people can be called the children of God in the sense in which the phrase is used in the Bible. All people are, however, potential children of God.

Jesus was, is, and always shall be the preeminent Child of God. The parent/child relationship with God was completely realized only by Jesus (Matt. 11:27; John 3:35; 13:3). Jesus had an unbroken knowledge of and communion with God (John 17:20–26; see Matt. 3:17; 17:5). For Jesus, being God's Son meant knowing what God willed and doing what God willed (John 5:19,30; 8:29; 15:10; 17:4; Phil. 2:8; Heb. 5:8). The parent/child relationship (with the obedience implied in that relationship) so dominated the life and thought of Jesus that being God's Son was the defining characteristic of Jesus' being. Jesus was God's only begotten or unique Son (John 1:14,18; 3:16,18; 1 John 4:9).

Of course, God intended for all people to be His children. God wanted all people to have an unbroken knowledge of and communion with Him. God wanted all people to know and do His will. God wanted the parent/child relationship to be the dominating characteristic of every life. But people in every place and in every time have rejected God as the source and goal of their lives and have refused to enter into a relationship of complete trust and love with God (Rom. 3:23). People who continue to live in this state of rebellion against God or sin have lost the actuality of being God's children.

All people ("whosoever," John 3:15) retain the potentiality of becoming children of God. This is so because God, out of His great love, gave His only Son for the salvation of the world (John 3:16). Jesus, in turn, gave to all who would receive Him the power to become children of God (John 1:12). Phil Logan

CHILDREN OF THE EAST See Kadmonites.

CHILEAB (Chĭl′ ē ăb) Personal name meaning, "everything of the Father." David's second son (2 Sam. 3:3) born to Abigail. The name appears as Daniel in 1 Chronicles 3:1. Whatever his exact name, David's second son disappeared from history here and did not figure in the later disputes over who would succeed David as king. His name could be associated with the clan of Caleb.

CHILION (Chĭl′ ĭ·ŏn) Personal name meaning, "sickly." One of the two sons of Elimelech and Naomi (Ruth 1:2). With his parents, he emigrated to Moab, where he married a Moabite woman named Orpah. Afterwards, he died in Moab. See Ruth.

CHILMAD (Chĭl′ măd) Place name meaning, "marketplace." A trading partner of Tyre according to Hebrew text of Ezekiel 27:23, but many Bible students think copyists inadvertently changed the text from "all of media" or a similar reading. Otherwise, Chilmad is identical with Kulmadara, a city in the Syrian Kingdom of Unqi. Its location may be modern tell Jindaris.

CHIMHAM (Chĭm′ hăm) Personal name meaning, "paleface." 1. Apparently the son of Barzillai, the patron of David when he fled to Mahanaim east of the Jordan before Absalom (2 Sam. 19:37). Chimham returned with David to Jerusalem when Barzillai refused to leave his home. 2. A village near Bethlehem. Johanan gathered his people there after the assassination of Gedaliah. From there they escaped to Egypt (Jer. 41:17).

CHINNERETH (Chĭn′ nĕ rĕth) Place name meaning, "harp-shaped." 1. The sea or lake otherwise called the Sea of Galilee, Lake of Gennesaret, or Sea of Tiberias. It formed the eastern border of Canaan, the Promised Land (Num. 34:11), marking the western boundary of the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:27). 2. A city on the western edge of the Sea of Chinnereth, also called Chinneroth (Josh. 11:2), though this could be a reference to the Sea. The city belonged to the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:35). The city apparently gave its name to the Sea and to the surrounding region with its several bays, thus explaining the plural form in 1 Kings 15:20, which tells of Ben-hadad of Syria defeating the area in answer to the request of King Asa of Judah. Thothmes III of Egypt also claimed to have conquered the city about 1475 B.C. The city is the modern tell al-Oreimeh.

CHINNEROTH (Chĭn′ nĕ rōth) Hebrew plural form of Chinnereth. See Chinnereth.

CHIOS (Chī′ ŏs) Island with city of same name. Paul stopped here while returning from third missionary journey (Acts 20:15). The Greek poet Homer supposedly came from Chios. It lies in the Aegean Sea five miles off the coast of Asia Minor. It is now called Scio.

CHISEL The English term NIV uses to translate several Hebrew expressions for working with wood and stone. The verb pasal means to hew out or dress stone (Ex. 34:1; Deut. 10:1; 1 Kings 5:18; Hab. 2:18). Garzen is an ax used in the stone quarries or forests (Deut. 19:5; 1 Kings 6:7). Hoqqi is a verbal noun meaning cutting out or engraving (Isa. 22:16; 30:8). Isaiah employs a word used nowhere else and meaning a carpenter's tool for forming an idol. KJV, NAS, NRSV read "planes." Ma'atsad is apparently a small, curved cutting tool, perhaps an adze (Isa. 44:12; Jer. 10:3). KJV reads "tongs" in Isaiah 44:12.

CHISLEU (Chĭs′ lēū) or CHISLEV The name of the ninth month of the Jewish calendar after the Exile, apparently borrowed from the Babylonian name Kisliwu. See Nehemiah 1:1; Zechariah 7:1.

CHISLON (Chĭs′ lŏn) Personal name meaning, "clumsy." Father of Elidad, who represented the tribe of Benjamin on the commission that divided the land for Israel (Num. 34:21).

CHISLOTH-TABOR (Chĭs′ lōth-tā′ bôr) See Chesulloth.

CHITLISH (Chĭt′ lĭsh) Place name of foreign origin. It was a city of the tribe of Judah near Lachish (Josh. 15:40). KJV reads Kithlish; NIV, Kitlish.

CHITTIM See Kittim.

CHIUN (Chī′ ŭn) KJV spelling of divine name meaning, "the constant, unchanging one" (Amos 5:26). NRSV reads "Kaiwan;" NAS, "Kiyyun;" NIV, "pedestal." The Hebrew word kiyun appears to represent an intentional change by the Hebrew scribes, inserting the vowels of siqquts, "abomination," for an original reading, Kaiwan, the name of a Babylonian God of the stars equivalent to the Greek god Saturn. Amos condemned the people of Israel for priding in their sophisticated worship of foreign gods. He called them back to the simple worship of the wilderness. See Sikkuth.

CHLOE (Chlō′ ē) Personal name meaning, "verdant." A woman whose household members informed Paul of dissension within the church at Corinth (1 Cor. 1:11). Where she lived and how her people learned of the situation in Corinth are not known.

CHOINIX is a dry measure used to measure grain and was equivalent to about a quart, or a daily ration for one person (Rev. 6:6). See Weights and Measures.

CHORASHAN (Chôr ăsh′ ăn) See Bor-ashan.

CHORAZIN (Chō·rā′ zĭn) One of the cities Jesus censured because of the unbelief of its inhabitants (Matt. 11:21). It was located in Galilee. It has been identified with modern khirbet Kerazeh, ruins located about two miles north of the site of Capernaum. Chorazin is mentioned in the Talmud as a place famous for its wheat. In the time of Jesus it must have been an important place, but by the second half of the third century A.D. it had ceased to be inhabited.

Excavations at the site of Chorazin showing the synagogue area.

CHOSEN PEOPLE Israel as the elect of God. See Election.

CHOZEBA (Chō zē′ bă) KJV spelling of Cozeba. See Cozeba.

CHRIST, CHRISTOLOGY "Christ" is the English rendering of the Greek Christos, meaning "anointed." See Messiah which translates the corresponding Hebrew term mashiach, the anointed one.

Old Testament and Jewish Background See Messiah.

Jesus as the Christ in the Gospels The first three Gospels give less prominence to the title "Christ" (the Messiah) than we might have expected. Jesus never openly paraded His Messiahship, nor did He overtly claim to be the Messiah in the sense of announcing an aspiration to be Israel's warrior king. Yet He did claim to be the One in whom the kingdom of God was present (Mark 1:14,15; Luke 11:20). His parables enunciated both the arrival of the kingdom and its character, setting a pattern for living for those who would enter God's realm as His children (Matt. 13; Mark 4). His mighty acts in healing the sick and casting out demons were demonstrations of the power and presence of God at work in His ministry (Luke 5:17). His teaching on prayer was based on the awareness He had of God as His Father in an intimate sense, calling him "Abba," my dear Father, which is a nursery word used of an earthly parent by Jewish children (Mark 14:36; Luke 10:21–22; 11:2). See Abba. His entire mission was seen as heralding the coming of the divine kingdom which, He believed, was closely tied in with His final journey to Jerusalem (Luke 9:51; 13:32–35) and His sacrifice there on the cross (Mark 8:31–32; 9:31; 10:32–34). Only in this way, Jesus knew, could God's kingdom come and God's will be done by His anointed Servant and Son (Luke 4:16–19).

For this reason—that God's redemption of Israel would take place only by the suffering of the Messiah—Jesus took a reserved and critical attitude to the title "Christ." When Peter confessed "Thou art the Christ" (Mark 8:29), Jesus' response was guarded: not denying it, but distancing Himself from the political and social connotations which a nationalist Judaism had accepted as commonplace in the expected Deliverer. (See Mark 10:35–45; Luke 24:19–21; Acts 1:6 for the evidence that even the disciples entertained such a hope.) At the trial Jesus was interrogated on this point. The balance of the evidence points in the direction that He still maintained a reserve (Matt. 26:63,64; Luke 22:67,68), with the same reluctance to be identified with a worldly messiah-king evident, too, in the interview with Pilate (Mark 15:2: "Art thou the King of the Jews?" asked Pilate. "Thou sayest it," Jesus replied; but the answer is probably noncommittal meaning, "It is your word, not mine"). At all events, Jesus was sentenced to death on the trumped-up charge of being a messianic claimant and a rival to the emperor in Rome (Mark 15:26,32). The Gospels make it clear that there was no direct and supportable evidence that Jesus so claimed to be such a figure. Instead, He consistently viewed His life and mission as fulfilling the role of the "Son of man" (a title drawn from Dan. 7:13,14 where it stands for God's Representative on earth who suffers out of loyalty to the truth and is at length rewarded by being promoted to share the throne of God) and God's chosen Servant, a pattern for ministry which Jesus evidently found in Isaiah's servant songs (Isa. 42:1–4; 49:5–7; 52:13—53:12). If this is the correct background to Jesus' self-awareness, both of His relationship to God and to His mission, it helps to explain how He looked confidently beyond defeat and death to His vindication by God in the resurrection. Whatever destiny of suffering and rejection by His people awaited Him, He saw, like Isaiah's servant, that God would bring Him out of death to newness of life. Also, the significance Jesus attached to His death as an atoning sacrifice in such sayings as Mark 10:45; 14:24 requires some such background as the vicarious sacrifice of the Suffering Servant in Isaiah 53:5,10 to give it coherent meaning.

In the apostolic church this understanding of Jesus' life and ministry was given clearer definition (Acts 2:22–36; 8:26–40), and in the hands of the New Testament theologians such as Paul (Rom. 3:24–26) and the author of Hebrews (ch. 8—10) the conviction regarding the person, work, and glory of Jesus Christ is clearly articulated. At this point we have entered the realm of Christology, the teaching about the person of Jesus Christ.

Christology: Methods Any approach to Christology (that is, the teaching on Christ's person as both a figure of history and the object of the church's worship) must face the issue of methodology. Specifically, this means that a choice has to be considered whether the interpreter will begin with creedal formulations that confess that Jesus Christ is "true God" and "true man," and then work backward to the way this teaching arose in the early church and the New Testament. This method is called seeking Christology "from above." The alternative approach, called by modern scholars a Christology "from below," begins with the factual data of the historical and theological records of the New Testament Scriptures, and from there it proceeds to trace the way the church's understanding of the Lord developed until the creeds were framed. Another way of putting this choice—which we shall stress is not so momentous as it appears, since both methods add up to the same conclusion—is to ask whether New Testament Christology is ontological (that is, concerned with Christ's transcendent role in relation to God, the world, and the church) or primarily functional. The latter term means that the New Testament writers were concerned mainly to relate the person of Jesus Christ to His achievement as Savior and Lord and to set this in the context of His earthly ministry.

The two methods do seem to proceed from different starting points. The first one asks, "Who is Christ and how is He related to God?" The second raises the questions, "What did Jesus do in His human life, and how did it come about that the church accorded Him titles of divinity?" At a practical level we can see that the choice is one which can be put in personal terms. Is Jesus rightly called the Son of God because He saves me? This is the standpoint of functional Christology. Or is it true that He saves me because He is the Son of God? That is the language of ontological Christology. Yet the two approaches reach the same goal in the end, we believe. As methods, they are different. In what follows we adopt the approach of "Christology from below" on the ground that this method more adequately respects the way the New Testament teaching has come to us and so can be seen in the pages of the New Testament. We do not deny that there are ontological overtones, in such places as John 1:1–18; Philippians 2:6–11; and Hebrews 1:1–4. They are implicit rather than explicit. One of the exciting discoveries in recent scholarship has been to see how even the indirect evidence of the Gospels and Epistles witnesses to the truth enshrined in the creeds, and provides the "raw materials" out of which the later church built its confession, "Thou art the King of glory, O Christ. Thou art the everlasting Son of the Father" (The Te Deum of the fifth century liturgy).

The Course of New Testament Christology

The early believers in Jerusalem were Jews who had come to faith in Jesus as Messiah and risen Lord (Acts 2:32–36). Their appreciation of who Jesus was took its point of departure from the conviction that, with His resurrection and exaltation, the new age of God's triumph, described in the Old Testament and the intertestamental writings, had indeed dawned, and the Old Testament Scriptures (notably Ps. 110:1) had been fulfilled. The cross had also to be explained, since Jesus' death at the hands of the of the Roman political powers stood in direct and obvious contradiction to all that pious Jews believed about the Messiah, God's expected Deliverer of His people and a glorious Figure. The crux is seen in Deuteronomy 21:23 which prescribed that anyone hanging on a tree died under God's curse (the verse is quoted in Gal. 3:13) A rationale was found in two ways: it came by asserting (1) that Jesus' rejection was already foreseen in the Old Testament, notably Psalm 118:22; Isaiah 53, and that His implicit claims to be the Messenger and embodiment of God's kingdom revealed only human unbelief; and (2) that at the resurrection God had reversed this verdict, vindicated His Son, and installed Him in the place of honor and power. The first Christological statement therefore was based on the fact of two stages in Jesus' existence: He was the Son of David in His human descent, and since the resurrection He is known as the Son of God with power and alive in the Spirit (Rom. 1:3,4). The implicit messianic claims of His earthly life were made overt since His exaltation, and the hiddenness of His true being was revealed in glory. The proof of the new age He inaugurated was seen in the coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:16–21, quoting Joel 2:28).

At a practical level this way of seeing Jesus' life and resurrection gave these believers a personal relationship with Jesus as a present reality. He did not appear as a simple figure of the past, however recent. Hence the first Christian prayer of which we have any record is "Maranatha" (meaning "our Lord, come") addressed to the risen Lord and placing Him on a par with Yahweh, Israel's covenant God (1 Cor. 16:22; Rom. 10:9–13; compare Acts 7:55, 56,59) as worthy of worship.

Further meditation on Old Testament Scripture gave a clue to Jesus' secret identity and explained His use of the mysterious title "Son of man." Drawn from Daniel 7:13–18, the Son of man title is one of authority and dignity, two ideas that the resurrection of Jesus confirmed (Acts 7:56). The church preserved this teaching on the Son of man from Jesus' lips and set it in the framework of His earthly life to accomplish several objectives: (1) to show how Jesus was misunderstood and rejected as a messianic pretender, since "Son of man" spoke of God's kingdom and made Him a sharer of the divine throne; (2) to indicate how Jesus brought in a new age in which God's revelation was not tied to the law of Moses but was universalized for all people. The "Son of man" in Daniel 7:22, 27 is the head of a worldwide kingdom, far outstripping the narrow confines of Jewish hopes; and (3) to find a missionary impulse which led these believers, notably under the leadership of Stephen and his followers, to reach out to non-Jews (Acts 7:59—8:1; 11:19–21; 13:1–3).

Such a mission brought the church into the world of Greek religion in the setting of Greco-Roman society. The most relevant title in this religious milieu was "Lord," a title used of gods and goddesses in the mystery religions which were partly oriental, partly Greco-Roman. More significantly, "Lord" was an appellation of honor and divinity that came to be associated with emperor worship and applied to the Roman Caesar. Both areas proved fertile ground for the application to Jesus of the commonest New Testament Christological title, Lord. It was already in use as the name of Yahweh in the Greek Bible of the Old Testament, and it now was applied to the exalted Christ. It became useful as establishing a meeting point between Christians and pagans who were familiar with the deities of their religious world (1 Cor. 8:5,6). Later, the term "Lord" became the touchstone for marking off Christian allegiance to Jesus when the Roman authorities required that homage should be paid to the emperor as divine as in the setting of the Book of Revelation in the 90's A.D., when the Emperor Domitian proclaimed himself "lord and god." (See Rev. 17:14.)

The final step in New Testament Christology was taken in the churches whose life we see reflected in the Letter to the Hebrews and the Johannine writings. The author of Hebrews sets out to prove the finality of Christ's revelation as Son of God (1:1–4) and great "high priest" (5:5; 7:1—9:28). John's writings are clearest in their ascription to Jesus of the names Logos (Word) and (only) God. (See John 1:1,14,18; 20:28, along with the claims of Jesus registered in the affirmations of "I AM," recalling Exodus 3:14; Isaiah 45:5; 46:9; compare John 8:24; 10:30,33.) John's indebtedness is evidently to the Old Testament and intertestamental or early Jewish wisdom teaching where "wisdom" and "word" (often linked with the Mosaic law) are treated as mediators in God's act of creating the world (Prov. 8) and as a preexistent revelation of God (in the early Jewish book The Wisdom of Solomon, written in the second century B.C.). John boldly claimed both roles for Jesus of Nazareth (John 1:3,18; 14:6,9). He set the earthly life of Jesus against the backdrop of His eternal Being as one with the Father and the visible glory of the unseen God, thus superseding the law of Moses (John 1:17; compare 5:46,47) and the claims of the Roman emperor (John 20:28: "My Lord and my God").

Yet even these most explicit statements, along with other teachings in Paul (Phil. 2:6; Col. 1:15; Titus 2:13; possibly Rom. 9:5) and Hebrews (Heb. 1:1–4) never compromised the belief in the unity of God, an inheritance the Christians took from their Jewish ancestry as a cardinal element of Old Testament monotheism (belief in one God in a world of many gods). Nor did they lend countenance to the view that Jesus was a rival deity in competition with His Father (John 14:28; 1 Cor. 11:3; Phil. 2:9–11). God the Father is always regarded as the Fount of deity; Jesus is His Son in a unique way, but He is never confounded with Him. The worship of the church is properly directed to God who has revealed Himself once-for-all and uniquely in the Son whom He loves (Col. 1:13), and who mirrors the perfect expression of the divine nature (2 Cor. 4:4–6). How to relate the two sides to Jesus' person—the human and the divine—is not explained in the New Testament; and the writers there bequeath a rich legacy to the later church which formed the substance of the Christological debates leading to the Council of Chalcedon in A.D. 451. There it was decreed and expressed that Christ's two natures are united in one Person, and this belief has remained the centralist position of the church ever since. See Messiah; Son of God; Lord.

Ralph P. Martin

CHRISTIAN (Chrĭs' tian) The Greek Christianos originally applied to the slaves belonging to a great household. It came to denote the adherents of an individual or party. A Christian is an adherent of Christ; one committed to Christ; a follower of Christ. The word is used three times in the New Testament. 1. Believers "were called Christians first in Antioch" because their behavior, activity, and speech were like Christ (Acts 11:26). 2. Agrippa responded to Paul's witness, "Almost thou persuade me to be a Christian" (Acts 26:28). He spoke of becoming an adherent of Christ. 3. Peter stated that believers who "suffer as a Christian" are to do so for the glory of God (1 Pet. 4:16). A Christian is one who becomes an adherent of Christ, whose daily life and behavior facing adversity is like Christ. Darrell W. Robinson

CHRISTIAN FESTIVALS See Church Year.

CHRISTMAS Of the major Christian festivals, Christmas is the most recent in origin. The name, a contraction of the term "Christ's mass," did not come into use until the Middle Ages. In the early centuries, Christians were much more likely to celebrate the day of a person's death than the person's birthday. Very early in its history the church had an annual observance of the death of Christ and also honored many of the early martyrs on the day of their death. Before the fourth century, churches in the East—Egypt, Asia Minor, and Antioch—observed Epiphany, the manifestation of God to the world, celebrating Christ's baptism, His birth, and the visit of the Magi.

In the early part of the fourth century, Christians in Rome began to celebrate the birth of Christ. The practice spread widely and rapidly, so that most parts of the Christian world observed the new festival by the end of the century. In the fourth century, the controversy over the nature of Christ, whether He was truly God or a created being, led to an increased emphasis on the doctrine of the incarnation, the affirmation that "the Word was made flesh" (John 1:14). It is likely that the urgency to proclaim the incarnation was an important factor in the spread of the celebration of Christmas.

No evidence remains about the exact date of the birth of Christ. The December 25 date was chosen as much for practical reasons as for theological ones. Throughout the Roman Empire, various festivals were held in conjunction with the winter solstice. In Rome, the Feast of the Unconquerable Sun celebrated the beginning of the return of the sun. When Christianity became the religion of the Empire, the church either had to suppress the festivals or transform them. The winter solstice seemed an appropriate time to celebrate Christ's birth. Thus, the festival of the sun became a festival of the Son, the Light of the world. See Church Year. Fred A. Grissom

CHRONICLES, BOOKS OF (Chrŏ′ nĭ clēs)

Nature and Focus of Chronicles 1 and 2 Chronicles are the first and second books of a four-book series that includes Ezra and Nehemiah. These four books provide a scribal (priestly) history of Israel from the time of Adam (1 Chron. 1:1) to the rebuilding of the house of God and the walls of Jerusalem and the restoration of the people in the worship of God according to the law of Moses (Neh. 13:31).

The special focus of these books is on the fortunes of God's house in Jerusalem upon which God has set His name forever (2 Chron. 7:16). David found Israel to be like scattered sheep. As God's chosen shepherd and line through whom God would build His house, David sought to order the life of Israel around the worship of God. Under God he made the city of Jerusalem his capital (1 Chron. 11:4–9), transferred the ark of God to the city (1 Chron. 16:1), and began to prepare for the building of the Temple (1 Chron. 22:1–2). Solomon, his son, built the Temple (2 Chron. 2:1), and Zerubbabel, his son of succeeding generations, rebuilt the Temple (Ezra 3:8). The intervening sons of David, who served as kings of Judah, were judged by whether or not they were faithful to God and to His house. Compare, for example, the reign of wicked King Ahaz with that of good King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 28:1–4, 29:1–11).

Significance of the Title The two books now called 1 and 2 Chronicles were originally one book. The division into two books was first made after 300 B.C. by the Jewish elders who translated the Hebrew Old Testament into Greek, producing the Septuagint. The reason for their making Chronicles into two books is quite simple. The Hebrew manuscript, which usually contained no vowels, could be written on one large roll. The Greek translation with its vowels, however, required nearly twice as much space. The division seems quite appropriate with 1 Chronicles concluding the reign of David, and 2 Chronicles beginning the reign of Solomon.

The English title "Chronicles" is derived from the Latin Chronicon, which was applied to these writings by Jerome. He described these materials as "a chronicle of the whole of sacred history." The Septuagint (Greek) title is Paraleipomena, meaning "omitted things." That title reflects their understanding of Chronicles to be a supplement to the materials found in Samuel and Kings.

Closest to the heart is the Hebrew title. It means "the acts or deeds of the day or times." However, the books do more than recount the various acts of the people of that day. Chronicles focuses on the most important deeds of that time or indeed of any time—building the house of God. God's house was, of course, the Temple in Jerusalem. But God's house transcends that building. David's dwelling "in the house of the Lord for ever" (Ps. 23:6) means dwelling forever with God and His people in the abode of God. In the ultimate sense we would equate God's house with His kingdom. Accordingly, the writer(s) of Chronicles reminds us that the most important of all deeds are those by which God's kingdom is built in the hearts of people.

Significance of Chronicles' Place in the Canon Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah stand among the Hagiographa, meaning "holy writings," which is the third division of the Old Testament. The order of English versions with Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah after Samuels and Kings goes back to the Septuagint.

The Hebrew Bible places Chronicles as the last book in the Old Testament after even Ezra and Nehemiah. Chronicles doubtless occupied this position in the time of Christ, since he cited Zechariah as the last named prophet who suffered a violent death (2 Chron. 24:20–22; Matt. 23:35; Luke 11:51).

Three explanations are given as to why the Hebrews concluded the Old Testament with Chronicles. One is the view that Chronicles was the last book to be accepted in the Old Testament canon. The second is that the author(s) first wrote Ezra-Nehemiah and then Chronicles. The third and most likely is to have the Old Testament conclude with God's providential control of history to build (rebuild) His house in Jerusalem. The final admonition of the Hebrew Old Testament then is for God's people to go up to Jerusalem to build God's house (2 Chron. 36:23). Moreover, God's final promise is to bless with His presence those who indeed go up to build (2 Chron. 36:23).

Authorship, Date, and Sources We do not know for sure who wrote Chronicles. As has been noted, tradition names Ezra the "ready scribe," a priest descended from Zadok and Phinehas (Ezra 7:1–6), as author of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. This tradition cannot be proved, but there is no valid objection to it. If he did not, we do not know who did. The position of these books in the Hagiographa indicates that the author was not a prophet. Moreover, the emphasis upon the priests and Levites suggests the author to be someone like Ezra who was one of them. Also, in the seventh year of his reign, Artaxerxes Longimanus, the Persian king from 465 to 425 B.C., sent Ezra to Jerusalem to order the civil and religious life of the Jews according to the law of Moses (Ezra 7:8,14). Accordingly, Ezra was the leader of the spiritual restoration effort these books were written to accomplish. An editor(s) could account for any material extending beyond the time of Ezra.

The use of sources by the author(s) is obvious. Much of the material came from the biblical Books of Samuel and Kings. However, other sources are evident such as official chronicles (1 Chron. 27:24), the writings of the prophets (1 Chron. 29:29), and commentaries on the events of that day (2 Chron. 24:27). The genealogies reflect the carefully kept records of the Levites. Sources for the Temple materials include "the works of Asaph and David" (2 Chron. 29:30) and the God-given "pattern" (1 Chron. 28:19).

Purposes and Enduring Value The principal purpose of 1 and 2 Chronicles is to show God's control of history to fulfill His desire to dwell among His people in a perfect relationship of holiness in which God is God and the redeemed are His people. God first shared His desire with Moses (Ex. 25:8). The tabernacle and the Temple symbolize that desire. God is fulfilling His desire through the Lord Jesus Christ—the Son of David. When Christ shall have completed His redemptive work, "the tabernacle of God" will be "with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God" (Rev. 21:3). Chronicles shows how God worked from the time of Adam but particularly in the times of David through Ezra and Nehemiah to accomplish His desire to dwell in holiness with His people.

A second purpose is to show God's choice of a person and a people to build His house. The person is the Son of David—the Messiah. Solomon built the temple in Jerusalem, but the Son who is building and shall build to completion God's true house and the Son whose reign God will establish forever is the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Chron. 17:12; Luke 1:31–33; Acts 15:14–16). The people are those of faith whose lineage goes back to Adam through Seth to Shem to Abraham (1 Chron. 1:1,17,28) to whom God made the promise of the seed (the Christ) through whom He would bless all nations (Gen. 12:1–4; 15:4–6; 17:7; 22:16–18; Gal. 3:16). His people are those of Israel and indeed of all nations who will put their trust in Him.

A third purpose is to show that God who dwells in holiness must be approached according to the law that God gave to Moses. David, in seeking to unite his people around the presence of God, learned that God must be sought in the proper way (1 Chron. 15:13). Basic is the necessity to come to God by way of the altar of sacrifice as ministered by the Levitical priesthood. God in His merciful forgiveness of David revealed the place of the altar of sacrifice to be in Jerusalem at the threshingfloor of Ornan (1 Chron. 21:18—22:1. There David erected the altar and built the Temple according to God's directions. But most importantly, there the Son of God, our great High Priest, sacrificed Himself on the cross in our stead to bring His people into the glorious presence of God (Heb. 2:17; 5:1–10).

A fourth purpose of Chronicles is to encourage God's people to work together with God and one another to build God's house. That is the reason the author(s) shared with his people the challenge of God through King Cyrus to go up to Jerusalem to build God's house. That is the reason he shared with them God's promise to be with them to bless as they obediently went up to build. (See 2 Chron. 36:23.) That is the reason he shared with them the history of the fortunes of God's house and God's people. He demonstrated thereby God's blessing upon those who built and otherwise honored God's house, but God's judgment upon those who neglected, thwarted the building of, or desecrated the house of God. As such, 1 and 2 Chronicles stands as a challenge to God's people of every generation to devote themselves with all their heart to building God's house. Accordingly, "who is there among you of all his [God's] people? The Lord his God, be with him, and let him go up" (2 Chron. 36:23).

1 and 2 Chronicles: Blessings for Building

God's House
- I. Israel's People of Faith (1:1—9:44)
  - A. Godly line of Adam (1:1–4)
  - B. Sons of Noah focusing on Shem (1:5–27)
  - C. Sons of Abraham focusing on Isaac (1:28–34*a*)
  - D. Sons of Isaac focusing on Israel (1:34*b*–54)
  - E. Sons of Israel focusing on Judah and Levi (2:1—9:44)
- II. David's Learning Obedience (10:1—22:1)
  - A. God's replacing rebellious Saul with David (10:1–14)
  - B. God's bringing David to power (11:1—12:40)
  - C. David's seeking to build around God's presence: David's son to build God's house (13:1—17:27)
  - D. David's marring his victories by his sin (18:1—21:17)
  - E. God's revelation in mercy of the site of the Temple and the place of the altar of sacrifice (21:18—22:1)
- III. David's Preparing to Build God's House (22:2—29:30)
  - A. Preparing workmen and materials (22:2–5)
  - B. Preparing Solomon to build (22:6–16)
  - C. Charging the princes to help Solomon (22:17–19)
  - D. Making Solomon king (23:1)
  - E. Ordering the priests and Levites and princes for service (23:2—27:34)
  - F. Charging Solomon and the people (28:1–21)
  - G. Inspiring gifts to build (29:1–9)
  - H. Worshiping God and enthroning Solomon (29:10–25)
  - I. Summarizing David's reign (29:26–30)
- IV. Solomon's Building God's House (2 Chron. 1:1—9:31)
  - A. God's blessing of Solomon to build (1:1—17)
  - B. Construction and consecration (2:1—7:22)
  - C. Solomon's other achievements (8:1–18)
  - D. Solomon's wisdom and wealth and fame (9:1–28)
  - E. Concluding Solomon's reign (9:29–31)
- V. God's Judging Judah's Kings by Their Faithfulness to His House (10:1—36:21)
  - A. The wicked reign of Rehoboam (10:1—12:16)
  - B. The wicked reign of Abijah (13:1–22)
  - C. The sin-marred reign of good King Asa (14:1—16:14)
  - D. The godly reign of Jehoshaphat (17:1—21:1)
  - E. The wicked reign of Jehoram (21:2–20)
  - F. The wicked reign of Ahaziah (22:1–9)
  - G. The wicked reign of Athaliah (22:10—23:21)
  - H. The good reign of Joash (24:1–27)
  - I. Imperfect devotion of Amaziah (25:1–28)
  - J. Uzziah's violation of the priestly office (26:1–23)
  - K. Good but imperfect reign of Jotham (27:1–9)
  - L. Wicked reign of Ahaz (28:1–27)
  - M. Unqualified good reign of Hezekiah (29:1—32:33)
  - N. Conversion of wicked King Manasseh (33:1–20)
  - O. Wicked reign of Amon (33:21–25)
  - P. Unqualified good reign of Josiah (34:1—35:27)
  - Q. Wicked reigns of Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim: beginning of Exile (36:1–8)
  - R. Wicked reigns of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah: final stage of Exile (36:9–21)
- VI. Providential Decree to Rebuild God's House (36:22–23)
  - A. Date and origin of decree (v. 22*a*)
  - B. Purpose of decree (v. 22*b*)
  - C. Motivating force of decree (v. 23)
  - D. Substance of decree (v. 23)

John H. Traylor Jr.

CHRONICLES OF KINGS OF ISRAEL AND OF JUDAH Sources of information to which the writer of 1 and 2 Kings referred readers for more data concerning the various kings about whom he wrote. (See 1 Kings 14:19.) These are not the biblical books 1 and 2 Chronicles. They probably were official court records compiled for the use of each of the kings. Such records apparently were available to the author of Kings writing after the destruction of Jerusalem, but they are not available today. See Kings.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE BIBLICAL PERIOD When speaking of chronology, one must differentiate between relative and absolute chronology. Absolute chronology is tied to fixed dates—events which are known to have occurred on a specific date (i.e. John F. Kennedy was assassinated on November 22, 1963). Relative chronology places events in their chronological order but without a fixed date (i.e., Jesus was baptized, then tempted, then began His public ministry). Most of the biblical events are dated relatively rather than absolutely. For this reason many chronological charts have differences in specific dates B.C. or A.D., but generally agree on the relative order of most events.

The Old Testament Period The Patriarchal period is usually dated in the Middle Bronze Age between about 1800 and 1600 B.C. Recent finds at Ebla have indicated a high degree of civilization in Syria-Palestine at least 500 years earlier. It is generally assumed that the Hebrews migrated to Egypt during the Hyksos period about (1700 to 1500 B.C.) when Semitic people ruled Egypt. The Exodus is usually associated with the reign of Ramsees II shortly after 1290 B.C. Following the wilderness-wandering period of forty years, the conquest of Canaan began about 1250 B.C. Pharaoh Merneptah (1224–1214 B.C.) mounted a campaign against Canaan in the fifth year of his reign (about 1220). In his record of that campaign, he records that, among others, Israel was utterly destroyed. Thus by that date, the people Israel were a recognized group in Canaan.

The period of the Judges lasted from shortly after the conquest until ca. 1025 B.C., when Saul was made king. The length of his reign is uncertain, 1 Samuel 13:1 reads, "Son of a year was Saul in his ruling, and two years he ruled over Israel." Acts 13:21 says he ruled 40 years. Compare several translations. It is often put at about 20 years. The forty-year reigns of David and Solomon would then have lasted to about 924 B.C. One major event during the reign of Solomon was the building of the Temple in Jerusalem, beginning in the fourth year in his reign (1 Kings 6:1) and completed in the eleventh year of his reign (1 Kings 6:38). The divided monarchy of Israel and Judah began with the ascension of Rehoboam following Solomon's death, and lasted until the fall of Samaria in 722 B.C. The destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. ended Judah's existence as a monarchy. This period of the monarchy is also the period of the pre-exilic prophets (such as Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah). 1 and 2 Kings gives many synchronisms between the kings of Judah and Israel, following this pattern; "In the ——— year of ——, son of ———, king of Judah, ——— began to reign over Israel in Samaria." (See 1 Kings 22:51; 2 Kings 3:1.) Even with these synchronisms, some difficulty remains in establishing dates and precise parallels because the kings of Judah and Israel figured their reigns differently during a portion of this time. The kings of Judah figured their reign from their first full year as king. A part of a year would be designated as the former king's last year of rule. In Israel, a part year was designated as the previous king's last year and the new king's first year. Therefore, the length of reign for a king of Israel was counted as one year longer than a similar reign for a king of Judah.

The last days of the kingdom of Judah involve the kings of Babylon, thus giving an outside source to date Judah's history. These external synchronisms can be used to fix the date of the fall of Jerusalem at ca. 586 B.C.

The period of Exile began with the capture of Jerusalem, the destruction of the Temple, and the second deportation of leading citizens in 586 B.C. (An earlier deportation in 597 B.C. had taken King Jehoiachin and his family and many top officials to Babylon.) Ezekiel is a leading prophet among the exiles during this time. Exile ended in 538 B.C. after the capture of Babylon by the Persians under Cyrus in 539 B.C. and Cyrus' edict permitting displaced persons to return to their homelands. The rebuilding of the Temple is dated between 520 and 515 B.C. according to dates from Haggai 1:1; Zechariah 1:1; and Ezra 4:24, 6:15.

Much more difficult is the date of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ezra returned from Exile in the seventh year of Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:1,6–7). Nehemiah returned to Judah in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes (Neh. 1:1). What is difficult is whether these two came during the reign of Artaxerxes I (464–423 B.C.) or Artaxerxes II (404–358 B.C.), or even if both returned during the reign of the same king.

The Intertestamental Period During the In-SIGNIFICANT DATES IN OLD TESTAMENT BIBLE HISTORY

	Critical	Traditional
Periods of History
Patriarchs (Abraham, Issac, Jacob)	1700–1500	2000
Exodus	1290	1450
Conquest	1250	1400
Judges	1200–1025	1360–1025
Kings
Kings of United Israel
Saul	1025–1005	1020–1004
David	1005–965	1004–965
Solomon	965–925	965–931
Kings of the Divided Kingdom Judah / Israel
Rehoboam	924–907	931–913
Jeroboam	924–903	926–909
Abijam (Abijah)	907–906	913–910
Asa	905–874	910–869
Nadab	903–902	909–908

	Baasha	902–886		908–886
	Elah	886–885		886–885
	Zimri		885		885
	(Tibni, 1 Kings 116:21)	885–881		885–880
	Omri	885–873		885–874
Jehoshaphat			874–850		873–848
	Ahab	873–851		874–853
	Ahaziah	851–849		853–852
Jehoram (Joram)			850–843		853–841
	Jehoram	849–843		852–841
Ahaziah			843		841
Athaliah			843–837		841–835
	Jehu	843–816		841–814
Joash (Jehoash)			837–796		835–796
	Jehoahaz	816–800		814–798
Amaziah			798–767		796–767
	Joash (Jehoash)	800–785		798–782
Uzziah (Azariah)			791–740		792–740
	Jeroboam II	785–745		793–753
Jotham			750–742		750–732
	Zechariah	745		753–752
	Shallum	745		752
	Menahem	745–736		752–742
Jehoahaz I (Ahaz)			742–727		735–715
	Pekahiah	736–735		742–740
	Pekah	735–732		752–732
	Hoshea	732–723		732–723
Hezekiah			727–698		715–686
	Fall of Samaria	722		723/722
Manasseh			697–642		696–642
Amon			642–640		642–640
Josiah			639–606		640–609
Jehoahaz II			609		609
Jehoiakim			608–598		609–597
Jehoiachin			598–597		597
Zedekiah			597–586		597–586
Fall of Jerusalem			586		586

BABYLONIAN EXILE AND RESTORATION UNDER PERSIAN RULE

Jehoiachin and leaders exiled to Babylon including Ezekiel	597
Jerusalem destroyed, remaining leaders exiled to Babylon	586
Gedaliah set over Judea	586
Gedaliah assassinated	581 (?)
Jeremiah taken with other Judeans to Egypt	581 (?)
Judeans deported to Babylon	581
Cyrus, king of Persia	559–530
Babylon captured	539
Edict allowing Jews to return to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel	538
Temple restoration begun but quickly halted	538
Cambysses, king of Persia	530–522
Darius, king of Persia	522–486
Haggai and Zechariah lead rebuilding of Temple	520–515
Temple completed and rededicated	515
Xerxes, king of Persia	486–465
Artaxerxes I, king of Persia	465–424
Ezra returns to Jerusalem and teaches the law	458
Nehemiah returns to Jerusalem and rebuilds the walls	445

NOTE: Overlapping dates of kings such as between Uzziah and Jotham result from coregencies, that is, a father installing his son as king during the father's lifetime and allowing the son to exercise royal power. Critical dates are adapted from a system proposed by J. Maxwell Miller and John H. Hayes. Traditional dates are adapted from a system proposed by E. R. Thiele.

tertestamental Period, Palestine was first under the control of the Persians. Persian rule ended with the conquest of Palestine by Alexander the Great in 333–332 B.C. After the death of Alexander, Palestine fell first under Ptolemaic rule (323–198 B.C.) and then under Seleucid rule (198–164 B.C.). During the period of Ptolemaic rule the Septuagint (Greek translation of the Old Testament) was made in Egypt. Seleucid rule brought a strong move to bring Hellenistic culture to Palestine, ending with the desecration of the Temple in Jerusalem and the persecution of Jews by Antiochus IV (Epiphanes) in 167 B.C. The following Jewish revolt led by Judas Maccabeus resulted in the defeat of the Seleucids and the Second Jewish Commonwealth (164 B.C.-63 B.C.). The Temple was reconsecrated in 164 B.C. These events are recorded in the Apocrypha in 1 Maccabees 1—4. The successors to the Maccabees are usually called the Hasmonean rulers. Hasmonean rule ended in 63 B.C. when Pompey occupied Jerusalem and Judea was again under foreign domination.

The New Testament Period One might expect that the chronology of the New Testament would be much more certain than that of the Old Testament. In some respects that is the case, but not entirely so. Granted we have Greek and Roman histories and annals, but most of the biblical events still cannot be placed precisely in an absolute chronology. The complicating factors are at least twofold. In the first place, the events of the New Testament were not reported by the Greek and Roman historians, nor were many precise events from Greek and Roman history included in the New Testament. Secondly, the Romans and Jews used different calendars. The Romans had a solar calendar with the year beginning in January, but reckoned most events from the accession date of the emperor. Thus they had internal differences in their own calendar. The Jewish calendar only confused the matter more. Basically, the Jews used a lunar calendar of 354 days. Periodically, they added an additional month to keep their calendar in line with the seasons. Because of several calendar changes, the Jews in their history had two New Year's days, one in the fall and the other in the spring. The spring New Year marked the beginning of the cultic calendar and the beginning of the next year's reign of the Jewish king. The fall New Year marked the beginning of the civil year. The reign of foreign rulers was noted from this fall New Year. With such differences, it is no wonder that absolute chronology for New Testament events is very difficult.

The Life and Ministry of Jesus The births of both Jesus (Matt. 2:1) and John the Baptist (Luke 1:5) are set in the reign of Herod the Great. From Josephus we learn that Herod died in the thirty-seventh year after the Roman Senate decree naming him king (40 B.C). This would place his death in 4 B.C. The further evidence Luke gives of a census while Cyrenius was governor of Syria presents some difficulty (Luke 2:2). Cyrenius conducted a census while serving as governor in 6–7 A.D., but there is no corroborating historical reference to a census during Herod's reign, nor to Cyrenius serving as governor at that time. This simply means that we cannot verify Luke's statement from presently available evidence. Luke may have referred to the census of 6–7 A.D. in Acts 5:37. With Herod's death placed in 4 B.C., Jesus' birth should probably be dated about 7 or 6 B.C.

The beginning of John the Baptist's ministry is set in the fifteenth year of Tiberius (Luke 3:1–2). This would be A.D. 28 or 29, if Tiberius' reign is set following the death of Augustus. If, however, the years of Tiberius' co-rule with Augustus are included, his fifteenth year would be A.D. 26 or 27. This latter date would fit better with Luke's statement that Jesus was about thirty when He began His ministry (Luke 3:23). Jesus' ministry would thus have began about A.D. 27 or 28. The length of Jesus' ministry is also much debated. None of the four Gospels gives enough details to determine the precise length of the ministry. Lengths of one, two, and three years are most often proposed. John's Gospel mentions three Passover feasts (2:13; 6:4; 11:55). If these are distinct Passovers, then they would seem to indicate at least a ministry extending slightly more than two years.

Even the information concerning the date of Jesus' crucifixion is uncertain. All the Gospel accounts agree that Jesus died on Friday of Passover week. The Synoptics indicate that the Last Supper was a Passover meal (Matt. 26:17–20; Mark 14:12; Luke 22:7–8). Passover was eaten on the evening of Nisan 15. John, on the other hand, indicates that Passover was eaten after Jesus was crucified (18:28; 19:14). Then by John's account, Jesus was crucified on Nisan 14. Nisan 14 and 15 fell on a Friday four times within this time frame: A.D. 27, 29, 30, and 33. The most likely date for the crucifixion is Nisan 14 or 15, A.D. 30.

The Apostles Dating the events and activities of the apostles is as vexing as dating the events of Jesus' life. There are very few fixed dates. The death of Herod Agrippa I, mentioned in Acts 12:23, occurred in A.D. 44 according to Josephus. Likewise, the edict of Claudius expelling Jews from Rome (Acts 18:2), is usually dated to A.D. 49, and Gallio's term as deputy (Acts 18:12) belongs to A.D. 51–52.

Other events in Acts must be dated relatively, and problems remain. In particular, there is great difficulty in matching the chronology of Acts with the information in the Pauline epistles. However, in general, we can sketch with approximate dates the ministry of Paul as follows:

Conversion A.D. 33
First visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 36

Second visit to Jerusalem, during famine, A.D. 46
First missionary journey, A.D. 47–48
Conference in Jerusalem, A.D. 49
Second and third missionary journeys, A.D. 50–56
Final visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 57
Reaches Rome, A.D. 60

The datable events in the New Testament all occurred before the fall of Jerusalem and destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CHRYSOLITE See Minerals and Metals.

CHRYSOPRASE See Minerals and Metals.

CHUB (Chŭb) KJV transliteration of Hebrew name of a people in Ezekiel 30:5. Other translations follow an interpretation of the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation, to find meaning in the text, reading "Lud" for "Chub," and translating "Libya." If "Libya" is not the original reading, "Chub" remains a people about whom nothing is known except that Ezekiel announced judgment on them as a partner of Egypt. See Libya.

CHUN (Chŭn) KJV spelling of Cun. See Cun.

CHURCH Church is the term used in the New Testament most frequently to describe a group of persons professing trust in Jesus Christ, meeting together to worship Him, and seeking to enlist others to become His followers.

The meaning of the term "church" Church is the English translation of the Greek word ekklesia. The use of the Greek term prior to the emergence of the Christian church is important as two streams of meaning flow from the history of its usage into the New Testament understanding of church. First, the Greek term which basically means "called out" was commonly used to indicate an assembly of citizens of a Greek city and is so used in Acts 19:32, 39. The citizens who were quite conscious of their privileged status over against slaves and noncitizens were called to the assembly by a herald and dealt in their meetings democratically with matters of common concern. When the early Christians understood themselves as constituting a church, no doubt exists that they perceived themselves as called out by God in Jesus Christ for a special purpose and that their status was a privileged one in Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:19).

Second, the Greek term was used more than one hundred times in the Greek translation of the Old Testament in common use in the time of Jesus. The Hebrew term (qahal) meant simply "assembly" and could be used in a variety of ways, referring for example to an assembling of prophets (1 Sam. 19:20), soldiers (Num. 22:4), or the people of God (Deut. 9:10). The use of the term in the Old Testament in referring to the people of God is important for understanding the term "church" in the New Testament. The first Christians were Jews who used the Greek translation of the Old Testament. For them to use a self-designation that was common in the Old Testament for the people of God reveals their understanding of the continuity that links the Old and New Testaments. The early Christians understood themselves as the people of the God who had revealed Himself in the Old Testament (Heb. 1:1–2), as the true children of Israel (Rom. 2:28–29) with Abraham as their father (Rom. 4:1–25), and as the people of the New Covenant prophesied in the Old Testament (Heb. 8:1–13). As a consequence of this broad background of meaning in the Greek and Old Testament worlds, the term "church" is used in the New Testament of a local congregation of called-out Christians, such as the "church of God which is at Corinth"(1 Cor. 1:2), and also of the entire people of God, such as in the affirmation that Christ is "the head over all things to the church, Which is his body" (Eph. 1:22–23).

What church means in the New Testament is further defined by a host of over one hundred other descriptive expressions occurring in relationship to passages where the church is being addressed. Three basic perspectives embrace most of these other descriptions. First, the church is seen as the body of Christ; and a cluster of images exists in this context as emphasis falls on the head (Eph. 4:15–16), the members (1 Cor. 6:12–20), the body (1 Cor. 12:12–27), or the bride (Eph. 5:22–31). The church is also seen as God's new creation (2 Cor. 5:17), the new persons (Eph. 2:14–15), fighters against Satan (Eph. 6:10–20), or bearers of light (Eph. 5:7–9). Thirdly, the church is quite often described as a fellowship of faith with its members described as the saints (1 Cor. 1:2), the faithful (Col. 1:2), the witnesses (John 15:26–27), or the household of God (1 Pet. 4:17).

Major characteristics of the life of the church The preeminent characteristic of the church in the New Testament is devotion to Jesus Christ as Lord. He established the church under His authority (Matt. 16:13–20) and created the foundation for its existence in His redeeming death and demonstration of God's power in His resurrection. Christ's position as the Lord evoked, sustained, and governed the major characteristics of the life of the church in the way members were admitted, treated one another, witnessed to His power, worshiped, and lived in hope of His return.

Persons were admitted to the local congregation only upon their placing their trust in Christ as Savior (Acts 3:37–42), openly confessing this (Rom. 10:9–13), and being baptized (Acts 10:44–48). Baptism or immersion in water was performed because Christ had commanded it (Matt. 28:18–20) and was itself a dramatic symbolic picturing of the burial and resurrection of Christ (Rom. 6:3–4). Joining the church made one a fully participating member in it, unlike many of the religious groups in the first century in which there was a substantial period of probation before full acceptance. When Christ accepted the person, the congregation did also, even though the members might be aware of weaknesses (Rom. 14:1–4).

The way in which members of the church were called on to treat one another was modeled by what God had done in Christ for the church. They were to forgive one another (Col. 3:12–14) and to love one another (Eph. 5:1–2; 1 John 3:16) because God had done this for all of them in Christ.

Members of the church were called on to demonstrate the power of Christ's redemption in their own lives by exemplary conduct, embracing every area of life (Rom. 12:1—13:7; Col. 3:12—4:1). The overcoming of sins in the lives of Christians was a witness to the redeeming power of Christ in action in the community (Gal. 5:22–26), and the sins to which the communities were prone were clearly identified and challenged (Gal. 5:19–21).

The worship of the early church demonstrated the lordship of Christ, not only in the fact that He was extolled and praised but also in the fact that worship demonstrated the obligation of Christians to love and to nurture one another (1 Cor. 11:17–22; 14:1–5). In distinction from worship as it was practiced in the pagan cults of Greece and Rome, Christian worship not only stressed the relation of a person to the Diety but went beyond this to stress that worship should edify and strengthen the Christians present (1 Cor. 14:26) and should challenge pagans to accept Christ (1 Cor. 14:20–25). Christian worship was often enthusiastic and usually involved all Christians present as participants (1 Cor. 14:26). This openness both inspired creativity and opened the way for excesses which were curbed by specific suggestions (1 Cor. 14:26–33*a;* 1 Tim. 2:1–10) and by the rule that what was done should be appropriate to those committed to a God of peace (1 Cor. 14:33*a).*

All of these characteristics of the life of the church existed in the context of an urgency created by the awareness that Christ was going to return (1 Thess. 1:9–10). Christ's return would bring judgment to the unbelievers (1 Thess. 5:1–10) and thus made witnessing to them an urgent concern. How central this belief was to the early church is illustrated by the fact that the Lord's Supper, which they observed at His command was seen as proclaiming "the Lord's death till he come (1 Cor. 11:26). The return of Christ was to result in glorious joy and the transformation of the Christians—a hope that sustained them in difficult times (2 Thess. 1:5–12).

Organization of the New Testament churches A striking feature of the organization of the early churches is that every member of the church was seen as having a gift for service which was to be used cooperatively for the benefit of all (Rom. 12:1–8; 1 Pet. 4:10). Paul used the imagery of the human body to illustrate this unique feature of the church's life, stressing that every Christian has a necessary function and a responsibility to function with an awareness of his or her share in the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:12–31).

In the context of this strong belief that every member has a ministry, certain persons were designated to fulfill specific tasks in relation to the functioning of the church such as apostles, bishops, elders, and deacons. As these offices are examined, it is important to remember that the organization of the early churches was not necessarily the same in every locality. A large church would need more organizational structure than a small one, and the presence of an apostle or his designated representative would cause the other leaders in a given church to be seen in a different light. In addition to these variables, the church was in a period of rapid growth; and as it responded to the needs of ministry, roles or offices, such as the appointment of the seven in Acts 6:1–7, were created to enable the church to fulfill its ministry in Christ. See Offices.

The organization of the early churches was not governed by a rigid plan that each church had to follow. The guiding principle was that the church was the body of Christ with a mission to accomplish, and the church felt free to respond to the leading of the Holy Spirit in developing a structure that would contribute to its fulfilling its responsibilities (Rom. 12:1–8; 1 Cor. 12:4–11; Eph. 4:11–16).

The growth and expansion of the early church Jesus taught His disciples that by following Him they were to be involved in a movement that would continue (Matt. 16:13–20; John 14:12–14), but it was after the resurrection of Jesus that the mission of the church really began (Matt. 28:16–20; John 20:19–23; Acts 1:6–11). The earliest Christians were Palestinian Jewish followers of Jesus and found it difficult to witness to non-Jews (Acts 10:1–48). The bridge to the Gentiles was the Hellenistic Jewish Christianity, which sprang into existence with the conversion of Jews from the dispersion who were visiting in Jerusalem and converted at Pentecost (Acts 2:5–47). These Jews whose residence had been in the cities of the Roman Empire were called Hellenistic because they were generally more open to the Greco-Roman culture than their Palestinian colleagues. They spoke and wrote Greek as their primary language, gave their children Greek names (such as Stephen which means "crown"in Greek), and were more willing to relate to Gentiles. It was this group of the early Christians that was the major channel in spreading the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 19:11–26).

Paul was a Hellenistic Jew (Acts 21:39); and when he became a Christian, he was called to and accepted a ministry to the Gentiles (Acts 22:21; Eph. 3:1–13). Significantly, he inaugurated his ministry of founding new churches from the base of a church composed of both Gentiles and Hellenistic Jewish Christians (Acts 11:19–26; 13:1–3). Paul's strategy was to visit synagogues in the cities of the Roman Empire and to proclaim Jesus as the Christ (Acts 18:5). The usual result was that some Jews and some Gentiles who were interested in Judaism (called God-fearers, Acts 18:7) believed in Christ, were expelled from the synagogue, and formed the nucleus for a growing church (Acts 18:5–11; 19:8–10).

The Acts of the Apostles gives only a glimpse of the early Christian heroes and heroines with a focus on Peter, Paul, and a few others (Acts 18:1–4, 24–28). There were, however, many heroic Christian witnesses unknown to us who first carried the gospel to Rome (Acts 28:14–15) and to the limits of the Empire in India, Egypt, and the outlying areas of Europe. See Apostle; Bishop; Deacon; Elders; Missions. Harold S. Songer

CHURCH YEAR Although the dates of observance and specific practices of the Christian festivals developed over the centuries, the major festivals all center on the life of Christ. As the church grew and the need for ordered worship increased, the need for focusing on the central affirmations at the heart of the Christian message also increased. By the fifth century, the basic elements of the church calendar were firmly established, although modifications continued to be made throughout the Middle Ages and the Reformation. Even today, the symbols and rituals of the festivals vary according to denomination, culture, and personal preference.

The original Christian festival and the basic building block for all the church year is the Lord's day, Sunday. The earliest Christians set aside Sunday, the day of the resurrection, as a time of special remembrance of Christ. By the second century, most Christians were observing a special celebration of the resurrection at Easter. In most areas, the season before Easter, later called Lent, was a time of penitence and the training of new Christians. Similarly, the fifty-day period after Easter was one of triumph during which fasting and kneeling to pray were forbidden. This period culminated in Pentecost, which means "fiftieth day," the celebration of the descent of the Holy Spirit. By the next century, at least in the East, many churches held a special observance of Christ's birth and baptism at Epiphany. In the fourth century, most Christians began to celebrate Christ's birth at Christmas and to observe Advent as a period of preparation.

As the dates and practices for these celebrations became more standard throughout the Christian world, the dimensions of the church year were established. Advent came to be regarded as the beginning of the church year and the half-year between Advent and Pentecost, the period during which all the major festivals occurred, came to be regarded as a time for Christians to concentrate on the life and work of Christ. The rest of the year, from Pentecost to Advent, became a time for concentrating on the teachings of Jesus and the application of those teachings in the lives of Christians. The development of the church calendar helped to assure that Christian worship would deal with the entire breadth and depth of the Christian gospel.

See Advent; Christmas; Easter; Epiphany; Holy Week; Lent; Lord's Day. Fred A. Grissom

CHUSHAN-RISHATHAIM (Chū′ shăn-rĭsh·ā·thā·ĭm) KJV spelling of Cushan-rishathaim. Mesopotamian king who oppressed Israel until he was defeated by Othniel the son of Kenaz (Judg. 3:8). The name of this Mesopotamian ruler means Chushan of double iniquity. It probably was a derogatory epithet rather than his actual name. See Judges.

CHUZA (Chū′ zà) Personal name meaning, "seer." The steward of Herod Antipas (Luke 8:3). He was the husband of Joanna, one of the women who provided material support for Jesus. See Joanna.

CILICIA (Cĭ lĭc′ ĭ à) A geographical area and/or Roman province in southeastern Asia Minor. The region was home to some of the people who opposed Stephen (Acts 6:9). It was located on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea in the southeast part of Asia Minor. One of its important cities was Tarsus, the birthplace of Paul the apostle (Acts 21:39; 22:3). By the time of the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15), Christianity had already penetrated Cilicia. Paul passed through the region during the course of his missionary travels (Acts 15:41; 27:5; Gal. 1:21).

The western portion of the geographical area was about 130 miles long east to west and 50 to 60 miles wide, consisted almost entirely of the westernmost extension of the Taurus Mountains, was called "mountainous" Cilicia, and was sparsely populated and important primarily for timber. The eastern portion was about 100 miles long east to west and 30 to 50 miles wide, consisted of a fertile coastal plain, and was called "level" Cilicia. Through the Cilician Gates (pass) in the Taurus Mountains to the north, through "level" Cilicia itself, and through the Syrian Gates in the Ammanus Mountains to the east ran the great international highway between central Asia Minor and Syria, Mesopotamia, and Egypt.

The famous Cilician Gates, a mountain pass thirty miles north of Tarsus, through the Taurus mountains.

The area was conquered by the Romans between 102 and 67 B.C. Until A.D. 72 the western portion had the status of a client kingdom or was part of another such kingdom. In 38 B.C. the eastern portion was joined to the Province of Syria, the name of which then became Syria and Cilicia. In A.D. 72 the parts were united in a separate province.

In the Old Testament the same region is called Kue (1 Kings 10:28; 2 Chron. 1:16, RSV, NAS, NIV). See Kue; Paul; Tarsus. James A. Brooks

CINNAMON A spice used in making fragrant oils. Such oil was used to anoint the wilderness tent of meeting (Ex. 30:23). It was part of the lucrative international spice trade (Rev. 18:13). Compare Prov. 7:17; Song of Solomon 4:14. Cinnamon comes from the bark of a large tree belonging to the laurel family. Both the English and Greek words are derived from the Hebrew qinnamon. See Spices.

CINNEROTH (Cĭn′ nē rŏth) KJV spelling of Chinneroth in 1 Kings 15:20. See Chinnereth; Chinneroth.

CIRCUIT A circular route that a person, a geographical feature, or a natural object follows. Underlying the English word are at least four Hebrew words indicating round, surround, around, or turning. Samuel went around a circuit of cities to judge Israel (1 Sam. 7:16). The human eye views heaven as a circular vault or dome, where God takes His daily walk (Job 22:14). Similarly, the sun passes along the circuit of the heavens (Ps. 19:6). The wind appears to run a meaningless circular course going nowhere (Eccl. 1:6). Jerusalem within its walls represented a circle or circuit, which David repaired (1 Chron. 11:8 NRSV). The villages around Jerusalem formed a circuit (Neh. 12:28 NRSV). Compare 2 Kings 3:9 NAS.

CIRCUMCISION Circumcision is the act of removing the foreskin of the male genital. In ancient Israel this act was ritually performed on the eighth day after birth upon children of natives, servants, and aliens (Lev. 9:3). Circumcision was carried out by the father initially, utilizing a flint knife (compare Josh. 5:3). Later specialists were employed among the Jewish people.

Origin Several theories seek to explain and describe the nature and origin of circumcision: (1) initiatory rite—before marriage (as the Shechemites in Gen. 34:14–24) or at puberty; (2) physical hygiene—to prevent the attraction or transmission of diseases; (3) tribal mark of distinction; (4) rite of entry into the community of faith. In the Old Testament the origin of Israelite practice was founded upon the circumcision of Abraham as a sign of the covenant between God and the patriarch (Gen. 17:10).

Ancient Near Eastern background Several Semitic and non-Semitic peoples practiced circumcision according to biblical and other sources. Jeremiah depicts Egyptians, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and the desert-dwelling Arabians as circumcised peoples (Jer. 9:25–26; compare Ezek. 32:17–32). On the other hand Philistines, Assyrians, and Babylonians are counted among the uncircumcised. That the Canaanites are not mentioned in either regard is noteworthy. Evidence of their perspective of circumcision is lacking.

Ethical implications of circumcision can be observed in the metaphorical usage of the term. The uncircumcised are those who are insensitive to God's leadership. Circumcision of the heart implies total devotion to God (Deut. 10:16; Jer. 4:4); however, the uncircumcised ear cannot hear so as to respond to the Lord (Jer. 6:10); and the uncircumcised of lips cannot speak (Ex. 6:12). Circumcision was therefore an external sign of an internal singularity of devotion of Yahweh.

Circumcision and Christianity Controversy arose in the early church (Acts 10—15) as to whether Gentile converts need be circumcised. First century A.D. Jews disdained the uncircumcised. The leadership of the apostle Paul in the Jerusalem Council was crucial in the settlement of the dispute: circumcision was not essential to Christian faith and fellowship. Circumcision of the heart via repentance and faith were the only requirements (Rom. 4:9–12; Gal. 2:15–21). R. Dennis Cole

CIS (Cĭs) KJV transliteration of Greek for Kish in Acts 13:21. See Kish.

CISTERN The translation of a Hebrew term that means "hole," "pit," or more often "well." The difference between cistern and well often is not apparent. The innumerable cisterns, wells, and pools that exist in Palestine are evidence of the efforts of ancient people to supplement the natural water supply. The cistern of Palestine was usually a bottle or pear-shaped reservoir into which water could drain from a roof, tunnel, or courtyard. The porous limestone out of which the cisterns were dug allowed much of the water put into the cistern to escape. After 1300 B.C. cisterns began to be plastered, which resulted in a more efficient system of water storage. The mouth of a cistern was sometimes finished and covered with a stone. Some cisterns have been found with a crude filter to trap debris.

A cistern with a stone mortar in the foreground probably used for grinding grain at Beersheba.

The water system at Gibeon was based on this large rock-cut pool connected by tunnel to another cistern.

The biblical writers revealed that cisterns were used for purposes other than holding water. Joseph was placed in a "broken" cistern by his brothers (Gen. 37:20–29). The prophet Jeremiah was imprisoned in the cistern of Malchijah, King Zedekiah's son, (Jer. 38:6 NAS). In Jeremiah 14,

Large, extensive water cistern at Masada, Herod's mountain fortress.

The circular opening to a cistern at the site of Lachish in Israel.

the pagan gods were symbolized as broken cisterns that could not hold water. Cisterns also served as convenient dumping places for corpses (Jer. 41:7,9).

See Waterworks; Wells. James Newell

CITADEL NRSV, NAS, NIV translation of Hebrew 'armon. See Castle.

CITIES AND URBAN LIFE Cities form a major indicator of civilization. Indeed, the emergence of cities often marks the move to civilization. The oldest city excavated to date is found in Palestine; it is tell es-Sultan, Old Testament Jericho. This site was already a bustling city between 8000 and 7000 B.C. Even before its citizens used pottery, the city had a massive defense wall and a high circular watch tower inside the wall.

The terms "city" and "urban life" had quite a different meaning in the biblical period, especially in the earlier times. Modern usage has given us at least five terms to describe a range of population. In increasing size of population we speak of open country, village, town, city, metropolis. The Old Testament uses two words for "city" ('eer and kiriah) and one for "village" (chatsair). The Old Testament differentiation seems to be based not on size primarily, but on the presence or absence of a defense wall. Cities had walls, while villages were unwalled.

Size of cities Ancient cities tended to be much smaller in both size and population than our typical understanding of a city. The oldest walled city at Jericho mentioned above covered less than ten acres. Even during the Old Testament period, Jericho was no more than ten acres in area. Some of the great cities of Mesopotamia were much more like the size we consider for a city. At the height of the Assyrian empire in the eighth century B.C., Nineveh covered approximately 1720 acres or over two and a half square miles. The mound of Calah (ancient Nimrud) covered over 875 acres or one and a quarter square miles. None of the cities in Palestine from the Old Testament period come close to the size of the great cities of Mesopotamia. Jerusalem at the time of Solomon covered only 33 acres; even at the time of Jesus it covered less than 200 acres. This is not to say that Palestine had no larger cities. Hazor, in northern Israel, was over 175 acres in area. However, most of the well-known biblical sites were smaller rather than larger.

Closely related to the area of a town is its population. Recent population projections based on the density of cities from cultures similar to those of biblical times along with a count of the number of house units found in excavations suggest that most cities could support 160–200 persons per acre. Thus Shechem might have had a population of 2,000 to 2,500 during the Old Testament period; Jerusalem in Solomon's time could have supported 5,000 to 6,500. Even when Jerusalem expanded in Josiah's time, it would have had no more than 25,000 inhabitants. An inscription found at Ebla in northern Syria and dated to about 2400–2250 B.C. states that Ebla had a population of 250,000. However, it is unclear whether this figure referred to the city, or the entire kingdom controlled by Ebla, or was an exaggeration to impress others of the size of Ebla. By A.D. 300, the city of Rome may have had nearly a million inhabitants.

Cities and the Surrounding Region At least two types of phrases are used to describe the region surrounding a city. One phrase described the chief city of a region in relation to the smaller villages around it. Thus in a literal translation the Old Testament speaks of a city "with its villages" (Josh. 19:16; Neh. 11:30) or "with its daughters" (Num. 21:25; 2 Chron. 13:19). These two phrases indicate that the city was the most important center of activity for the region. Outlying villages were closely related to the central city for their existence. Most of the commercial activity for the region was carried out in the city. Usually, the city was located on the main highway or intersection of highways and trade route through the area. The major sanctuary or worship place would be most frequently located in the city, making it a center of religious pilgrimages and celebrations. Whenever war or invasion threatened, the people of the surrounding villages would flee to the walled city for protection.

Why was a city built at a particular location? Among the chief concerns would be the presence of food and water nearby, along with the raw materials for shelter, tools, and industry. Furthermore, a site that was easy to defend would be most likely to be chosen.

A number of common features may be found in the typical city of the Ancient Near East. Each of these features will be discussed briefly.

1. Walls City walls in the Ancient Near East were formed of courses of stone or mudbrick, at times quite thick. The rampart at Hazor in northern Israel about 1700 B.C. is almost 50 feet high at places and up to 290 feet thick! Furthermore, the perimeter of this enclosed area was over two miles. See Architecture.

2. Gate The most important and most vulnerable part of the wall structure was the gate. Massive guard towers usually flanked the gate. The entrance itself was narrow, usually twelve to fifteen feet wide. Two heavy wooden doors could be shut and braced with metal bars at night or in case of attack. The gate complex itself had two or three separate sets of doors through which one had to pass to gain entry to the city. See Architecture.

3. Water supply Adequate water supply was another necessity for a city. During peaceful times, the water supply could be outside the wall and within a reasonable distance from the city. A protected water supply accessible from within the city was necessary to endure a siege during wartime. Most cities were located near springs, streams, or wells. Many homes had cisterns, especially in the more arid regions. The springs were usually at the foot of the tell outside the city wall. Hazor, Megiddo, and Gibeon provide examples of water systems the Israelites constructed during the monarchy. Extensive water tunnel and pool systems were built by cutting through the bedrock of the tell to reach the level of the springs. At Hazor, the tunnel system had to cut through 70 feet of soil and rock to reach the water level. Hezekiah's tunnel in Jerusalem is another example of the water tunnel system. Second Kings 20:20 mentions the construction of this system about 700 B.C. The Romans often constructed great aqueducts to bring water from long distances to a city. Portions of two such aqueducts still remain at Caesarea-by-the-Sea which brought the water from over five miles away. One of the Hellenistic-Roman aqueducts at Jerusalem covers nearly 25 miles.

4. Agricultural land Earliest towns were surely self-sufficient and must have had fertile farming land nearby. The Old Testament speaks of the fields of a city or village (Lev. 25:34; Josh. 21:12; Neh. 11:25,30), and indicates that some of the land was held in common and some was owned by a family or clan. Large cities would not have had enough land surounding to meet its food needs, so they would depend on the trade of the surplus produce from the smaller villages. The villages in turn would depend on the cities for the manufactured goods and items of trade from distant areas. Agricultural land was not supposed to be sold out of the family or clan (Lev. 25:25–28). Isaiah strongly denounced those wealthy who would add "field to field, until there be no place" (Isa. 5:8).

5. Acropolis The highest elevation of many cities often formed an acropolis or inner citadel. In addition to serving as a stronghold, the acropolis also served as residence for the aristocracy or royalty. As one might expect, the houses located here would be the largest and best constructed of the city. Not only would the security be strongest in the acropolis, but the higher elevation would catch any breeze and cool the house in the summer. In addition, the major shrines or temples were often located on the acropolis.

6. Street plan Ancient Near Eastern cities usually had a regular street plan. In Babylon, major streets led from the gates into the city center. In the period of the monarchy, Israelite cities regularly had an open court just inside the gate. A circular street led from the court around the perimeter of the city. This circular street gave easy access to all sections of the city, as well as providing the military with quick access to any part of the city wall. Other streets branched off this circular street and led into the center of the city. In the Roman cities, the major road was usually the cardo, a wide, flagstone paved highway which ran north-south. The major east-west road was the decumanus. A section of the cardo of Jerusalem has been excavated recently in the Jewish Quarter. Although the portion excavated belongs to the Byzantine period, it may well reflect what the Roman cardo there was like. The street was colonnaded, and was 39 feet wide. It had covered sidewalks, each an additional 17 feet wide. The street even had a covered drainage system.

7. House plans Along with street plan, one can note something of a development in house plans in Israel. The earliest houses had one main room and courtyard. By the period of the monarchy, the typical Israelite house was a four room house.

Dramatic changes took place in the Hellenistic and Roman periods. The successors to Alexander the Great built many Greek cities in Palestine. Greek culture was the pattern in the Decapolis and other Hellenistic cities. See Architecture.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CITIES OF REFUGE A safe place to flee for a person who had accidentally killed another. The city provided asylum to the fugitive by sheltering and protecting him until a trial could be held to determine his guilt or innocence. If, in the judgment of the city elders, the death had occurred accidentally and without intent, the man was allowed to stay there without fear of harm or revenge by the dead man's relatives (Josh. 20:2–6).

Four major passages in the Old Testament describe the right of asylum and the sanctuary provided by a city of refuge (Ex. 21:12–14; Num. 35:1–34; Deut. 19:1–13; Josh. 20:1–9). A literal translation of the Hebrew phrase means "a city of intaking." This right of asylum was offered before the settlement of the Promised Land, but was available only to one charged with accidental manslaughter. Exodus 21:12 records that "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death." The passage continues, however, to promise that "if a man did lie not in wait," a place would be designated to which he could flee (v. 13). Prior to the establishment of these cities, temporary safety could be gained by fleeing to a sanctuary and grasping the horns of the altar there. 1 Kings 1:50 and 2:28 record two examples of men seeking safety by clinging to the altar in Jerusalem. Neither Adonijah nor Joab were innocent, though, and later were executed.

Moses was commanded to establish six cities of refuge from the total of 48 given to the Levites (Num. 35:6–7). Three were located on each side of the Jordan. In the east were Bezer in the territory of the Reubenites, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan in the area of Bashan (Deut. 4:43). On the west side of the Jordan were Kedesh in Galilee, Shechem in Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba or Hebron in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 20:7–8). Sanctuary was not limited to the people of Israel but was extended to the stranger and sojourner among them (Num. 35:15).

The Old Testament reveals the importance and sacredness of human life by its laws regarding the taking of life. See Blood Guilt; Avenger.

The reason for distributing the cities of refuge throughout Israel on both sides of the Jordan was so that a city was easily accessible to a person responsible for an accidental homicide. He needed to find asylum immediately because he would be pursued by a member of the dead man's family. The avenger of blood sought to kill the slayer of his kin for the harm done to the family or clan. In the early period of Israel's history before the development of the cities of refuge, this action could result in a blood feud that terminated only with the extinction of one family. The establishment of the cities of refuge served a humanitarian purpose by transforming a case of homicide from a private feud between two families to a judicial matter settled by a group of elders.

Numbers 35 lists several requirements to be met prior to seeking sanctuary in a city of refuge. The primary requisite was that the death must have occurred by accident, without premeditation or intent. Case studies are presented in Numbers 35:16–18, 20–21, 22–23 to provide examples of those incidents which prevented or allowed a slayer to seek refuge in such a place.

A second major requirement for asylum in a city of refuge was that the slayer, once being admitted to the city, could not leave until the death of the high priest (Num. 35:25; Josh. 20:6). If he chose to the leave the city before that time, he could be killed by the avenger of blood (Num. 35:26–28). In contrast to the temporary sanctuary offered by grasping the horns of an altar, the city of refuge provided a permanent place of asylum for the manslayer. In a punitive way, the city also served as a place of detention. The manslayer was not guiltless. He could not leave under penalty of death by the avenger of blood, nor could he buy his way out by offering a ransom to the relatives of the deceased. A similar example of this punishment may be found in Solomon's confinement of Shimei to Jerusalem under a death threat if he left the city (1 Kings 2:36–46).

The taking of a life imposed a guilt that could not be paid for by any means short of death. The death of the high priest, even as a result of natural causes, served to pay the price of the required penalty. One man died in place of another. During his life, one of the functions of a high priest was to bear the sins of the people (Ex. 28:38). In accordance with this regulation, all the cities of refuge were Levitical cities, given to that tribe during the division of the Promised Land among the Israelites. These locations probably contained local sanctuaries in which a priest served. After the death of the high priest, the one guilty of manslaughter was free to leave the city and return to his home without fear of the avenger of blood.

Brenda R. Hockenhull

CITIES OF THE PLAIN The cities of the plain (RSV, "cities of the valley") are the five cities—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboiim, and Zoar—thought to be located near the southern end of the Dead Sea. The narrative of Genesis 14 associates these five cities and locates them in the Valley of Siddim, the Dead Sea. All these cities except Zoar were destroyed for the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:24–29).

Most recent scholarship has located the five cities in the shallow water of the southern end of the Dead Sea, south of the Lisan, the tongue of land along the southeastern shore that protrudes into the sea. However, no conclusive evidence has been found to support this proposal. Excavations along the eastern shore of the Dead Sea in recent years have convinced some scholars that the cities of the plain might be located in that region, especially at Bab-ed-Dhra and Numeira near the Lisan.

The particular phrase, "cities of the plain," occurs only in Genesis 13:12 as the place Lot chose to dwell, and in Genesis 19:29 concerning the destruction. The Hebrew word translated "plain" more nearly means "round." Thus it seems better to think of these cities as being ones "around" the Dead Sea or "around" the Jordan Valley. This interpretation may indicate simply that these cities were allies that lay in the Jordan Valley near the Dead Sea. As such, these cities may have been on a trade route and themselves involved in the trade of bitumin, salt, and sulphur.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CITIZEN, CITIZENSHIP Officially recognized status in a political state bringing certain rights and responsibilities as defined by the state. Paul raised the issue of citizenship in the Bible by appealing to his right as a Roman citizen (Acts 16:37; 22:26–28). Roman citizenship rights were first formulated in the Valerian Law at the founding of the Roman Republic in 509 B.C., but citizenship rights changed as Roman governments changed. In New Testament times the definition came in the Julian Law passed near 23 B.C.

Becoming a Citizen Roman citizenship could be gained in several ways: birth to Roman parents, including birth to a Roman woman without regards to identity of the father; retirement from the army; being freed from slavery by a Roman master; buying freedom from slavery; being given citizenship by a Roman general or emperor as an individual or as part of a political unit; purchase of citizenship. Paul was born a citizen, but how his family gained citizenship we do not know.

Citizenship Rights and Responsibilities A citizen became liable for Roman property taxes and municipal taxes. A citizen had the right to vote in Rome, though different social classes had different rights at this point. A citizen became a member of a Roman tribe. A citizen was promised a fair trial without certain forms of harsh punishment. A citizen could not be executed without a trial and would not be crucified except by order of the emperor. A citizen could appeal to Caesar and had to be taken to Rome for trial.

Paul made use of these rights as he faced opposition and persecution (Acts 16:37; 25:11).

CITRON NAS, NIV translation of Greek thuinos, a scented wood that formed part of the rich international trade (Rev. 18:12). KJV translates, "thyine," while NRSV has "scented."

CITY OF CONFUSION (CHAOS) A name applied to Jerusalem in Isaiah 24:10.

CITY OF DAVID In the Old Testament, the phrase "the city of David" refers to Jerusalem. The name was given to the fortified city of the Jebusites after it was captured by David (2 Sam. 5:6–10). Its original reference may have been only to the southeastern hill and the Jebusites' military fortress there. In Luke 2:4,11 the reference is to Bethlehem, the birth place of David (see John 7:42). See Jerusalem; Zion.

CITY OF DESTRUCTION See Heliopolis.

CITY OF MOAB City where Balak went to meet Balaam (Num. 22:36). Some identify the city as Ar. See Ar.

CITY OF PALM TREES Probably to be identified with a site near Jericho where the Kenites lived (Judg. 1:16; see Deut. 34:3; Judg. 3:13; 2 Chron. 28:15). Jericho itself lay in ruins from the time of the conquest until the time of Ahab. See Jericho. Some identify the region with Zoar on the south side of the Dead Sea or with Tamar about twenty miles south of the Dead Sea.

CITY OF SALT A city allotted to the tribe of Judah "in the desert" (Josh. 15:62). Its precise location is not known. Archaeological finds do not support an identification with Qumran that some have tried to make.

CITY OF THE SUN Usually taken as a reference to Heliopolis (Isa. 19:18). See Heliopolis.

CITY OF WATERS A city in Ammon, probably to be identified with a part of or all of Rabbah, the capital. Joab captured it for David (2 Sam. 12:27).

CLAN Term used to distinguish a kin group more extensive than a family. The boundaries of such a group are not always clearly delineated. Each clan was governed by the heads of the families (elders). Several clans formed a tribe, and twelve tribes formed Israel. The clan is sometimes referred to as "division," "kindred," "family," "thousand," or even "tribe."

CLAUDA (Clāū′ dȧ) KJV, NAS spelling of Cauda in Acts 27:16 for island where Paul landed on his way to Rome. See Cauda.

CLAUDIA (Clāū′ dĭ ȧ) Woman who sent greetings to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:21).

CLAUDIUS (Clāū′ dĭ ŭs) 1. Roman emperor from A.D. 41 to 54. He made Judea a Roman province in A.D. 44. He expelled Jews from Rome in about A.D. 49 (Acts 18:2), probably due to conflict between Jews and Christians in Rome. Apparently his fourth wife Agrippina poisoned him in A.D. 54 and took charge of the empire for her son Nero. The prophet Agabus announced a coming famine during Claudius' reign (Acts 11:28). See Caesar.

2. Roman army captain who protected Paul from Jews who wanted to assassinate him (Acts 23:26).

Marble bust of Claudius from the island of Malta, dating from the first century.

CLAY A basic building and artistic material for people in biblical times. Clay consisted of various types of dirt or sand combined with water to form a material which could be molded into bricks for building, sculptures, pottery, toys, or writing tablets. A piece of clay marked by a signet ring gave proof of ownership or approval. The type of dirt—sand, quartz, flint, limestone—along with coloring patterns gives archaeologists a key for dating deposits uncovered from ancient sites.

CLEAN, CLEANNESS The idea of cleanness includes a surprisingly wide range of human behavior. On the purely physical side a person is considered clean when obvious indications of dirt or similar defilement have been removed. A clean person is also one who habitually maintains a pattern of personal cleanliness and hygiene, while at the same time taking care to ensure that his or her environment is in a clean condition so as to forestall possible accidents, infection, and disease.

Because the mind is an integral aspect of the human personality, cleanness must also be applied to attitudes and motives that govern particular forms of behavior. Impure thoughts as the expression of the mind can result in shameful activities (Mark 7:15) unless they are checked firmly, and bring disgrace to the individual concerned as well as harm to others.

Cleanness, however, is a relative term when the human condition is being considered. Mankind's fall from divine grace as a result of defying God's commands and yielding to temptation has made sin a genetic issue (Gen. 3:1–19). This means that the tendency to sin is inborn, with the inevitable result that, as the ancient psalmist said, there is none righteous (Ps. 14:3; Rom. 3:10). Paul stated the situation with equal emphasis by proclaiming that all have sinned and come short of God's glory (Rom. 3:23). Human sin places a barrier between sinners and a just, holy God. Sinners are unclean in God's eyes.

The religious rituals of Leviticus had much to say about the way in which the sinner could be cleansed from iniquity and be reconciled to God. This was a matter of great importance to the Israelites, because God required them to be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation (Ex. 19:6). In the Ancient Near Eastern religions the idea of holiness was applied to a person in a state of consecration to the service of a deity, whose cultic worship could, and frequently did, involve acts of a gross sexual nature. For the Hebrews, holiness demanded that they should reflect in their living and thinking the exalted moral and spiritual qualities of God as revealed in His laws.

Cleanness was thus fundamental to the establishing and preservation of holiness in the Israelite community. As distinct from all other nations, the Hebrews were provided with specific instructions concerning cleanness and how to recover it when it had been lost through carelessness or disobedience. The principles of cleanness touched upon all aspects of individual and community life. They were ultimately capable of a moral interpretation, since in the holy nation secular and spiritual matters were closely connected.

God established for the Israelites a special group of laws dealing with clean and unclean animals (Lev. 11:1–47; Deut. 14:1–21) to provide guidance for dietary and other circumstances. While the nations of the Ancient Near East maintained a general distinction between clean and unclean species, the principles of differentiation were in no sense as explicit as those provided for the Hebrews. Clean animals were allowed to be eaten, but unclean ones were prohibited strictly. The terms "clean" and "unclean" were defined by illustration, and clear principles were enunciated to enable anyone to make the distinction correctly.

Very simply, whatever animal had a cleft hoof and chewed the cud was clean, and therefore suitable for food. Any animal that did not meet these specifications was unclean, and consequently was not to be eaten. If an animal such as a camel possessed only one of the two stated requirements, it was still regarded as unclean. Because birds formed part of the Israelites' diet, a list of those species suitable for food excluded the ones that might carry communicable diseases.

There has been much discussion about the purpose of these regulations. Some writers claimed that they were designed so as to avoid pagan idolatrous practices. Others have focused upon preserving the separated nature of the Israelites in matters of food as well as in ethical and religious considerations. Yet another view emphasized the hygienic aspects of the laws as a means of preventing the spread of infectious ailments. Most probably, all three concerns underlay the legislation, and therefore each should be given due weight. Animals associated with pagan cults were prohibited, as were unfamiliar or repulsive creatures, and those species that fed upon carrion. If the rules for food were followed, the Hebrews could expect to enjoy good physical health. Clearly the overall objective of the dietary laws was the prevention of uncleanness and the promoting of holiness in the community (Lev. 11:43–44).

Uncleanness also applied to certain objects and situations in life which conveyed impurity to those involved. Thus contact with a dead person (Lev. 5:2; 21:1), a creeping insect or animal (Lev. 22:4–5), the carcass of an animal (Lev. 11:28; Deut. 14:8), or a woman in labor (Lev. 12:4–5) brought about uncleanness, which required ritual purification to remove it. Leprosy was particularly dangerous as a source of uncleanness, and required special cleansing rituals (Lev. 14:13) when the sufferer was pronounced cured. Unclean persons transmitted their condition to whatever they touched, so that others who handled such things became unclean also. Even God's sanctuary needed to be cleansed periodically (Lev. 4:6; 16:15–20).

As noted previously, cleanness had a specific moral dimension. Because God's priests were to be clothed with righteousness (Ps. 132:9), the entire nation was involved in manifesting the priesthood of all who believed sincerely in the covenant relationship with God that had been forged on Mount Sinai. Thus to be clean meant not merely the negative aspects of being free from disease or defilement, but the positive demonstration in daily life of God's high moral and ethical qualities of absolute purity, mercy, justice, and grace.

Cleanness was a part of the moral stipulations of the Law. Thus murder was both a pollution of the land and a violation of the Decalogue's express commands. The killing of the innocent called for a response in justice from the entire Israelite community, based upon a principle of blood retribution (Num. 35:33; Deut. 19:10). Grave moral offenses that violated God's law and polluted the nation included adultery (Lev. 18:20)—a capital offense (Lev. 20:10)—and perverted sexual activity which included bestiality, with death as the prescribed punishment (Lev. 20:13).

Ceremonial holiness thus involved distinguishing between clean and unclean. Moral holiness required the Israelites to behave as a nation separated from the pollutions of contemporary society, and to live upright and righteous lives in obedience to God's laws (Lev. 21:25–26). For the penitent transgressor a complex system of purificatory rites cleansed from both physical and moral defilement. These involved various kinds of washing by water, as a natural cleansing process (Lev 6:28; 8:6; 14:8–9; Num. 8:7; 19:9); the use of ashes (Num. 19:17) and hyssop (Num. 19:18) for ritual and accidental contamination; and sacrificial blood, which made atonement for sin and reconciled the worshiper to God. The Law established the principle that blood made atonement for human life (Lev. 17:11), and thus a blood sacrifice involved the highest form of purification (Lev. 14:6, 19–20) or dedication to God (Lev. 8:23–24). Yet even this form of sacrifice was powerless against sins deliberately committed against the spirituality of the covenant (Num. 15:30).

In the New Testament, cleansing was associated only with the ritual customs of contemporary Judaism. Thus the infant Jesus was presented in the Temple for the traditional purification ritual (Lev. 12:2–8; Luke 2:22). Cleansing (katharismos) was a matter of contention between the Pharisees and the disciples of John the Baptist (John 3:25), but Christ obeyed the Law in sending healed lepers to the priest for cleansing (Lev. 14:2–32; Matt. 8:4). On other occasions He asserted His superiority to the ordinances that He would subsequently enrich and fulfill (Matt. 12:8; Mark 2:28; Luke 6:5).

In His teaching Christ made the Old Testament cultic regulations concerning cleanness even more rigorous by stressing a person's motivation rather than the external or mechanical observance of rules and regulations. He taught that adultery had been committed just as fully by a man's lusting after a woman (Matt. 5:27–28) as if the physical act had occurred. In John 15:2, the word that Christ had proclaimed made them clean by regenerating their characters and inculcating holiness of life.

Jesus was not only a moral Teacher. He came to earth to give His life as a ransom for humanity's sin (Mark 10:45). In this way He became the Lamb of God, taking away the sin of the world (John 1:29). His atoning death as our great High Priest transcended all the Law's cleansing rituals could ever be expected to do in the single offering of Himself for us on Calvary (Heb. 7:27). There He instituted a New Covenant of divine grace in His blood (Heb. 8:6), achieving human redemption and making possible eternal life for the penitent individual who has faith in His atoning work.

One of the most gracious assurances of His New Covenant is that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin (1 John 1:7). Sacrifices and offerings are now unnecessary, for what Jesus demands is a penitent spirit that confesses the merits of His atonement. For the Christian the cultic provisions of the Old Testament are nullified. All meats have been declared clean (Mark 7:19; Acts 10:9–16), and the only sacrifices that God requires are those that emerge from a humble and contrite heart (Ps. 51:17). R. K. Harrison CLEMENT (Clĕm′ ēnt) A fellow worker in the gospel with Paul (Phil. 4:3). He was apparently a member of the church at Philippi. Otherwise, no more information about him is available.

CLEOPAS (Clē′ ō·pàs) A follower of Jesus, who with a companion was traveling toward the village of Emmaus on the day of Christ's resurrection (Luke 24:13–25). They were joined by a person whom they did not recognize. Later, they discovered that the stranger was Jesus Himself.

CLEOPHAS (Clē′ ō·phàs) KJV spelling of Clopas (John 19:25).

CLOAK An outer garment. See Clothing.

CLOPAS (Clō′ pàs) Relative of one of the Marys who were near the cross during the crucifixion (John 19:25). The Greek text describes him literally as "the of the Clopas." The most natural interpretation is that Clopas was husband of Mary. For the identification of this Mary and wider implications of Clopas' relationships, see Mary.

CLOSET A private room in a dwelling where Jesus encouraged people to pray (Matt. 6:6). He also noted that not even words said in the inner room privacy could be kept secret (Luke 12:3), indicating the Pharisees' hypocrisy could not be hidden. A biblical closet is an actual room, not a storage place. See Architecture; Chamber.

CLOTH, CLOTHING Biblical and archaeological sources concur that the earliest clothing resources were the hides of wild animals (Gen. 3:21). The Bible contains little information, however, about the process of manufacturing clothes from vegetable fibers. Technological developments predate biblical history.

Natural resources Cloth production in the ancient Near East dates to the Neolithic period when natural flax fibers were spun and woven into linen fabric. Nomadic cultures continued to prefer the hides of animals, some of which were left with small amounts of fur. The growing sedentary urban cultures preferred fabrics made from vegetable fibers such as flax and cotton and from animal fibers such as wool, goats' hair, silk, and the limited use of other wild animals.

Wild flax originated in the regions of Palestine and the Caucasus. Domesticated plants were brought to Egypt early where it grew abundantly and was used to produce fine linen (Gen. 41:42) for soft garments and sails (Ezek. 27:7). Linen from Syrian flax was deemed finer than Egyptian. The importance of flax production in Palestine is reflected in the Gezer calendar. Quality fabrics were made from plants grown in Galilee and the Jordan valley. Flax stalks were also used in making sturdy baskets.

Modern Arab man wearing typical head cloth (called kaffiyeh) worn by Middle Easterners for millennia.

Cotton, which seems to have originated in the Indus Valley region, was grown on small trees. In the Iron Age the cotton tree was introduced into Assyria, but the climate of southern Mesopotamia was more suitable to crop cultivation. Cotton needs a warm humid climate for quality growth and processing and thus was produced less widely in Palestine. Still, it was highly prized by leaders from Egypt to Babylon for its bright color and its soft, yet durable, qualities. During the Hellenistic period, production and usage increased dramatically.

Wool was the most commonly-used raw material among the Semitic peoples for felt and other fabrics. By patriarchal times wool spinning was advanced sufficiently to warrant no description in the Bible. Natural wool tones ranged from white to yellow to gray. These gave rise to a multitude of color possibilities in conjunction with natural dyes. The development of metallic shears in the Iron Age greatly facilitated removal of wool and hair. Wool was at first plucked by hand and later by a toothed-comb. Wool fabrics were quite fashionable among the Sumerians, who spoke extensively of all aspects of wool production.

Other resources included silk, hemp, camel hair, and goat hair. Silk was imported from China and spread to Mesopotamia and eventually to the Mediterranean islands, where the moths were cultivated. Silk was generally reserved for royalty and the wealthy. Hemp and hair produced coarse garments when used alone, but when used with wool produced rugged quality garments.

The fuller would take the newly shorn wool or flax, and sometimes woven linen, and prepare the products for use in garments. Oil, dirt, or other residues were removed by first washing the material in an alkaline-based liquid made from ashes, lime, etc., and then repeatedly rinsed with clean water. Sometimes it would be tread upon and beaten against rocks in the rinse stage. Finally, the material would be left in the sun to dry, bleach, and shrink before final usage (Isa. 7:3). God's justice is compared to the fuller's wash soap (Mal. 3:2). In Jesus' transfiguration (Mark 9:3), His garments are said to have been whiter that the best fuller's work.

Weaving Biblical sources indicate that the raw materials were spun and woven into fabric sections about six feet in width and as long as necessary (Ex. 26:1–2,7–8). Egyptian murals indicate that their looms were large and technologically advanced. Three kinds of looms were employed during Bible times: the Egyptian vertical, the Greek vertical, and the horizontal. Models of the horizontal loom have been found in Egyptian tombs. The Greek vertical primarily was used in wool production. Primitive warp-weighted vertical looms, using hand-molded clay weights, were prominent even in the Iron II period in Israel. Examples of the baseball-sized loom weights have been excavated in numerous Old Testament sites. These looms consisted of two uprights, a horizontal beam, and a warp stretched between the beam and a series of loom weights. Greek vase-paintings also show many excellent examples of this type.

In the construction of the tabernacle, skilled women spun wool with their hands, and even interwove gold threads into the fabric (Ex. 35:25; 39:3). Spinning wheels were better developed in Egypt and Mesopotamia. The Book of Proverbs depicts a woman who spends much time spinning and weaving fabric (Prov. 31:13–24).

Dyes and colors Predynastic Egyptians (about 3000 B.C.) had begun to master the art of dyeing fabrics. Reds, purples, and blues (indigo) were the known natural dyes of the Mediterranean and African regions, having been derived from marine life, plants, and insects. Natural tones from different breeds of animals gave some variety to fabric colors (brown and black goats' hair; white, gray, and yellow wool). Available natural dyes and variable natural tones offered a wide spectrum of color possibilities. Mixing of dyes and fabrics could result in colors such as green, orange, brown, yellow, black, and pink, each with varied shades. Natural Tyrian purple was considered the most beautiful color of all throughout ancient history.

Those who could afford them preferred more colorful garments. Biblical descriptions indicate that dyed textiles were generally reserved for special garments and occasions. In Exodus 26:1, indigo, purple, and scarlet are listed as hues of tabernacle raiments. Jealousy over favoritism in the gift of a brightly colored coat is reflected in the Joseph conflict with his brothers (Gen. 37:3–4).

Clothing styles The Bible gives only general descriptions of the types of garments worn in biblical times. Egyptian, Assyrian, Roman, and Hittite monuments provide extensive pictorial evidence of dress in the ancient world. The need for clothing derives its origin from the shame of nakedness experienced by Adam and Eve in the garden (Gen. 3:7–8). God's provision for His people is reflected in the animal skin garments given in response to human need.

Men and women wore tunics made of linen or wool hanging from the neck to the knees or ankles. The Beni Hasan Tableau from the tomb of Khnum-hotep in Egypt depicts tunics worn by Semitic peoples as having diverse patterns and colors.

Loin cloths or waistcloths of linen (Jer. 13:1) or leather (2 Kings 1:8) were worn by men and used to gird up the tunic for travel. For comfort it could be loosened at night or when resting. Priests were to have their hips and thighs covered (Ex. 28:42) so as not to be exposed when in service in Yahweh.

The cloak was an outer garment used for a night covering, and thus was not to be loaned (Deut. 24:13). This article is often referred to as a mantle, which was worn by sojourners (Deut. 10:18; Ruth 3:3). In John 19:2, Jesus' outer cloak was draped over him during the beatings inflicted by the Roman soldiers. Jesus' tunic was probably the garment for which the Roman soldiers cast lots at His death (John 19:23). Long sleeveless external robes of blue or purple fabric were worn by royalty, prophets, and the wealthy (1 Sam. 18:4; Ezra 9:3; Luke 15:22). Mantles of various types were worn by kings, prophets, and other distinctive persons. In times of sorrow or distress, this garment might be torn (Job 1:20). Another kind of outer garment was the ephod, usually a special white robe (1 Sam. 2:19).

Women likewise wore inner and outer garments, but the differences in appearance must have been noticeable since wearing of clothes of the opposite sex was strictly forbidden (Deut. 22:5). The undergarments were loose fitting or baggy apparel (Prov. 31:24), and the outer robes were more flowing. The woman also wore a headcloth of brightly colored or patterned material which could be used as a wrapped support for carrying loads (Isa. 3:22), a veil (Gen. 24:65; Song of Sol. 5:7) or a hanging protective garment against the hot sun. A long train or veil adorned women of high social stature (Isa. 47:2).

Festive clothing for both men and women was generally made of costly white material, adorned with colorful outer wrappings and headclothes. Gold, silver, or jewels further decorated one's festive attire (2 Sam. 1:24). Priestly dress (Ex. 39:1–31) likewise consisted of only the best of fine linen, which was dyed scarlet, indigo, and purple, and of gold ornamentation. See Weaving; Dress; Wool; Garments.

R. Dennis Cole

CLOUD, PILLAR OF The means by which God led Israel through the wilderness with His presence and still hid Himself so they could not see His face. By day Israel saw a pillar of cloud, while by night they saw a pillar of fire (Ex. 13:21–22). The night before the Exodus, the cloud gave light to Israel but darkness to the Egyptians so they could not come near one another (Ex. 14:19–20). God came down to speak to Israel in the cloud during crisis times (Num. 11:25; 12:5). Coming to the tabernacle in the cloud, God spoke to Moses face to face (Ex. 33:11; Num. 14:14). Paul used the protection of the cloud theme to warn Christians that living under God's presence calls for holy living (1 Cor. 10:1–14).

CLOUDS The Old Testament uses eight different Hebrew words in 167 passages to refer to clouds of rain, dust, smoke, storm, and fog. Both meteorological (1 Kings 18:44–45) and metaphorical meanings appear. The latter can be both positive (beneficial to life, Prov. 16:15; Isa. 25:5) and negative (hindrance to life, Eccl. 12:1–2). Clouds symbolize fluidity and transitoriness (Job 30:15; Isa. 44:22; Hos. 6:4), massive expansion and height (Ps. 36:5; Ezek. 38:9,16). More important are the statements in contexts speaking of God.

Old Testament 1. Clouds demonstrate the power of God as Creator. Particularly Job 36—38 witness to the sovereignty of the Creator, who directs and controls the clouds.

2. The clouds accompany God's revelation. God dwells in the dark clouds (1 Kings 8:12; Ps. 18:12). When He comes forth from His unapproachable holy being for judgment or for salvation, rain, lightning, and thunder break out from the clouds (Judg. 5:4; Ps. 68:33–35; 77:14–18; 97:2). When Yahweh appears as a Warrior, the clouds are His battle chariots in which He travels (Ps. 68:34; 104:3; Isa. 19:1) and from which He shoots down the lightning as arrows (Ps. 18:14; 77:17; Zech. 9:14). Dark clouds overshadow the judgment day of Yahweh, which the prophets announced (Ezek. 30:3,18; Joel 2:2; Zeph. 1:15).

3. Clouds conceal and reveal the secrets of God at the same time. In the tent of revelation during the wilderness period (Ex. 40:34–38), in the Jerusalem Temple (1 Kings 8:10–11), on Mount Sinai (Ex. 34:5), and in His direction and protection by means of the clouds and the pillar of fire, Israel experienced that God came to them (Ex. 33:7–11) but still remained wholly other (Lev. 16:2,13) even when he came as the Son of Man (Dan. 7:13).

New Testament 1. The strictly meterological meaning appears only in Luke 12:54. A metaphorical meaning occurs in Jude 12; 2 Peter 2:17, Hebrew 12:1 (using a distinct Greek word). Clouds are not used in the New Testament to point to the power of God as Creator except for indirect references (Matt. 5:45; Acts 14:17). All other references to clouds in the New Testament have a relationship to God.

2. The clouds accompany the revelation of God in Jesus Christ. As God on Sinai was glorified and concealed in the clouds, so was Jesus on the mountain of transfiguration and in His ascension to heaven (Mark 9:7; Acts 1:9). The clouds into which Jesus entered with Moses and Elijah as Moses had once entered on Mount Sinai (Ex. 24:18), are "light" but at the same time concealing. The voice out of the clouds no longer referred to the Torah of Moses but to the teaching of the Son. No longer must a tent be set up to experience the presence of God, for the clouds have set God's presence free to appear in Jesus alone. As the resurrected One was exalted to the Father, the clouds veiled Him.

3. The clouds mark the conclusive and final revelation of the lordship of Christ. Mark 13:26; 14:62; and Revelation 1:7 combined the motif of the Son of Man from Daniel 7 with the word of judgment from Zechariah 12:10 and referred them to the parousia or coming of Christ. Clouds thus became only signs of the revealing of the lordship amd majesty of the Lord; they no longer concealed anything. In Revelation 14:14–16 the returning Christ sits on "white" (light, shining, majestic) clouds. In this transparent purity both the living and the deceased believers are joined with their Lord (1 Thess. 4:17).

In 1 Corinthians 10:1–2 the clouds and the sea of the Exodus of Israel form a type of the baptism of Christians which had been falsely understood by the Corinthians. Christian Wolf

CLOUT KJV translation in Jeremiah 38:11–12 for Hebrew word meaning, "tattered clothes, rags."

CLUB A weapon of war used in close combat to strike an enemy. See Arms and Armor.

CNIDUS (Cnī′ dŭs) Place name of city in southwest Turkey. Paul's ship passed by here on the way to Rome (Acts 27:7).

COAL Charred wood used for fuel. See Cooking. The altar of sacrifice burned coals (Lev. 16:12), as did the blacksmith's fire (Isa. 44:12) and the baker's (Isa. 44:19). Coals provided heat for refining metal (Ezek. 24:11). Burning coals became a symbol of divine judgment, apparently representing God coming to earth and causing volcanos to erupt and throw burning coals on His enemies (Ps. 18:13).

COAST The land bordering a major body of water and used by KJV in obsolete sense of territories, borders, frontiers.

COAT See Clothing.

COAT OF MAIL See Arms and Armor.

COBRA A poisonous snake. See Animals; Adder.

COCK See Birds; Chicken. The strutting, crowing bird, Zarzir motnayim (Prov. 30:31).

COCKATRICE See Animals. KJV translation of legendary serpent and poisonous snakes (Isa. 11:8; 14:29; 59:5; Jer. 8:17). It is probably the Vipera xanthina.

A cobra pictured in the famous Nile Mosaic.

COCKCROWING The third watch of the night in the Roman system (Mark 13:35), thus midnight until 3 a.m. The Jewish system had only three watches. The Roman had four.

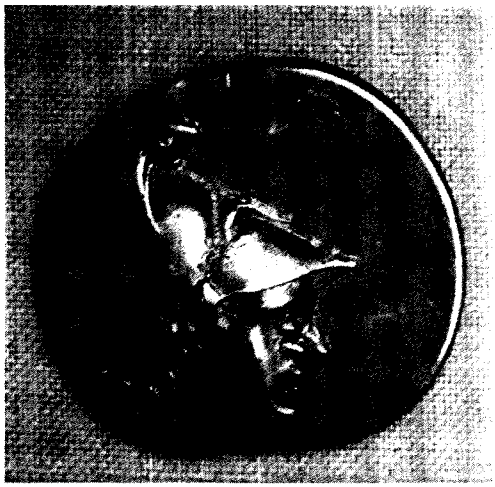
COCKLE Plant whose name derives from Hebrew word for "stink." It appears in Scripture only at Job 31:40, and is identified as Lolium temulentum. Modern translations refer to brier or thorns.

CODEX (Cō′ dĕx)describes a collection of manuscript pages, especially of the Bible or sections of it, bound together in book form.

The word comes directly from the Latin meaning "tree trunk," possibly describing a stack of wooden tablets, each coated with wax on one side for writing and held together by leather thongs inserted in holes bored along one side. For centuries papyrus and parchment made from animal skins were popular writing materials because they could be shaped into long strips and rolled into a scroll. Using the scroll required both hands, however, and someone decided to cut a scroll into equal-sized sheets, stack them in order, and stitch them together along one edge. So, the scroll became a codex.

Biblical manuscripts produced in the codex form were all handcopied in Greek capital letters on parchment from older manuscripts. Nearly 250 of these manuscripts in codex form are now preserved in various libraries and museums. They have been dated from the fourth to the eleventh centuries. The oldest and most complete is Codex Sinaiticus now in the British Museum. It contains about 350 sheets that measure 15 by 13 1/2 inches with four columns of lettering per page. It was discovered accidentally in 1844 by a Russian scholar in a monastery at the foot of Mount Sinai. It contains all the New Testament and most of the Old. Another important codex from the fourth century is in the Vatican Library in Rome. A fifth-century manuscript of the four Gospels is known as Codex Washingtonianus and is housed in the Freer Gallery of Art in Washington, D. C.

William J. Fallis



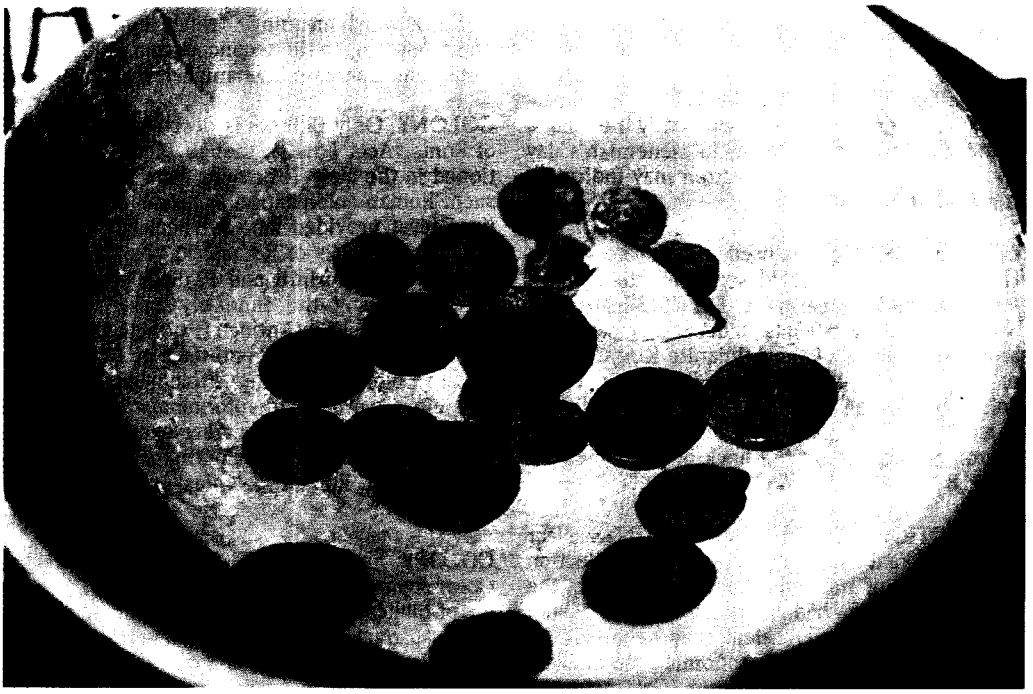
COFFER Old English word for box in 1 Samuel 6:8,11,15 (KJV).

COHORT A Roman military unit with capacity of 1000 men; ten cohorts formed a legion. Cornelius (Acts 10:1) apparently belonged to a cohort of archers named the Cohors II Miliaria Italica Civium Romanorum Voluntariorum that had 1,000 members, Cornelius commanding 100 of them. Originally, the unit had been formed in Rome of freed slaves who received citizenship. It was transferred to Syria at least by 69 A.D. The Bible narrative places the cohort in Caesarea before 41 A.D. An infantry cohort was stationed in Jerusalem and protected Paul from zealous Jews (Acts 21:31). They were stationed in the citadel Antonia on the northwest corner of the Temple. A centurion attached to the cohort Augusta had command of Paul and other prisoners, transporting them from Caesarea to Rome (Acts 27:1). KJV translates "cohort" as "band."

COINS are stamped metal disks issued by a government for trade and valuation.

Before money was invented, a man might trade or swap with a neighbor something he owned for something he wanted. Because of their intrinsic value and mobility, cattle were very popular in the barter system. Such trading took place also on a grand scale. When Hiram of Tyre agreed to furnish building materials for the Temple, Solomon pledged large annual payments in wheat and olive oil (1 Kings 5:11). Eventually the discovery and use of metals for ornaments, implements, and weapons led to their dominating the primitive exchanges. Silver, gold, and copper in various forms, such as bars, bracelets, and the like represented wealth in addition to land, cattle, and slaves. The silver shekel, weighing about four tenths of an ounce, became the standard measure. When Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah, he "weighed out . . . four hundred shekels of silver" (Gen. 23:16). At that time the shekel was a weight rather than a coin.

A coin from Pamphylia (190–36 B.C.).



The talent was another weight frequently associated in the Old Testament with gold and silver. The crown that David took from the king of the Ammonites weighed one talent (2 Sam. 12:30). After Judah's defeat at Megiddo, the victorious pharaoh appointed a puppet king and required the Jews to pay Egypt a heavy tribute in silver and gold (2 Kings 23:33). Although its weight varied slightly from one country to another, the talent was approximately 75 pounds.

Determining the weight and purity of any metal was a tedious business and sometimes subject to dishonesty. To establish some standards, the first coins were minted about the same time around 650 B.C. both in Greece and in Lydia of Asia Minor. Excavations in Shechem have uncovered a Greek silver coin dating after 600 B.C., about the time the Jews were returning from Babylon to Judah. The first mention of money in the Bible appears in Ezra 2:69, describing funds collected for rebuilding the Temple. The King James Version lists among other resources 61,000 "drams of gold," but the RSV has "darics of gold," (NAS, NIV, "drachmas") referring to a Persian gold coin. Years later, about 326 B.C., after Alexander overran the Persian Empire, Greek coinage was circulated widely in Palestine, according to archaeological research.

The Maccabean Revolt began in 167 B.C. Twenty-four years later (123 B.C.), Judea became an independent state, and about 110 B.C. the reigning high priest minted in bronze the first real Jewish coins. Only dominant political entities could produce silver coins. In accord with the Second Commandment, Jewish coins did not bear the image of any ruler, but they used symbols such as a wreath, a cornucopia, or the seven-branched lampstand of the Temple. Such symbols continued to be used by Herod and other appointed Jewish rulers after Palestine submitted to Roman domination. Many small copper coins from this early New Testament period have been discovered.

The coin most often mentioned in the Greek New Testament is the denarion, translated "penny" in the KJV and "denarius" in the RSV, NAS, NIV. It was a silver coin usually minted in Rome. It carried on one side the image of the emperor (Matt. 22:21), and on the reverse might be some propaganda symbol. Of course, the "penny" translation was an attempt to equate the value of an ancient coin with a familiar one of the King James era. Its value in New Testament times can be more accurately assessed by knowing the labor that the ancient coin could buy. The denarius was the daily pay for Roman soldiers and the wage of a day laborer in Palestine (Matt. 20:21).

Roman coins in a bowl of the same period at Caesarea Maritima on the coast of Israel.

Another reference to silver money occurs in Matthew 26:15 in the agreement between the high priest and Judas for betraying Jesus. Although the original text mentions only "silver" with no specific coin, scholars feel that the figure "thirty" recalls the compensation required by law for killing a slave by accident (Ex. 21:32). So, Judas' pay could have been thirty silver shekels. By this time the shekel had developed from only a measure of weight to a specific coin weighing a little less than half an ounce. It is possible also that the "large money" (KJV) paid to the soldiers guarding Jesus' tomb (Matt. 28:12) referred to large silver coins or shekels.

A third coin mentioned in the New Testament was the one the poor widow put into the Temple treasury as Jesus watched (Mark 12:42). The KJV translates the original words as "two mites, which make a farthing" while the RSV reads "two copper coins, which made a penny" (NIV: "two very small copper coins, worth only a fraction of a penny." The first noun describes the smallest Greek copper coin, (lepta), and the second noun translates the Greek (quadrans) for the smallest Roman copper coin. In either case, they were the smallest coins available, but Jesus said they were greater in proportion than the other donations.

From two parables told by Jesus we get the impression that the word "talent" had come in New Testament times to represent a large sum of money, instead of just a measure of weight. In Matthew 18:24, He told of a man who owed a certain king "ten thousand talents." A few chapters later He described a wealthy man assigning different responsibilities to three servants. At the reckoning time he rebuked the one who had merely hidden his talent by saying that at least he could have deposited the money to let it earn interest (Matt. 25:27). Such a talent had been estimated to have a current value of about one thousand dollars. William J. Fallis

A gold coin of Lysimachos from Thrace (323–281 B.C.).

C

COLHOZEH (Cŏl hō′ zĕh) Personal name meaning, "he sees everything" or "everyone a seer." Father whose son Shallun was ruler of part of Mizpah and who helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem's gates (Neh. 3:15). Apparently he had a grandson living in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:5). The name Colhozeh may indicate a family of prophets.

COLLAR This word is used to translate various Hebrew words and may describe (1) the opening for the head in a garment (Ex. 28:32 NIV; Job 30:18; Ps. 133:2 NIV), (2) a decorative ornament around the necks of the Midianite Kings (NRSV) or their camels (Judg. 8:26; see Prov. 1:9; Song of Sol. 4:9), (3) stocks or a pillory used to restrain a person (Jer. 29:26 NRSV, NAS), and (4) a shackle of iron placed around the neck of a prisoner (Ps. 105:18 NRSV, REB, TEV).

COLLECTION FOR THE POOR SAINTS Near the end of Paul's ministry he took up a collection for the poor of the Jerusalem church. Why the Jerusalem church had so much poverty is not clear. The Jews in Jerusalem may have isolated Christian Jews from the economic system. Paul and Barnabas promised to help (Gal. 2:1–10). This money was collected by Paul from the Gentile churches which he administered. These included churches in Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth, and Galatia. He mentioned this offering on three occasions in his letters. In 1 Corinthians 16:1–4, Paul indicated that he wanted the church to put something aside on the first day of each week. In 2 Corinthians 8—9, Paul wrote that the churches of Macedonia had given liberally and Titus would oversee the completion of the offering in Corinth. Finally, in Romans 15:25, Paul stated that at the present time he was going to Jerusalem to deliver the gift. A sense of spiritual indebtedness to the founding church in Jerusalem prompted the offering. Luke never mentioned the offering specifically in Acts. There is a list of men in Acts 20:4 who accompanied Paul to Jerusalem. (This trip corresponds to the plans of Rom. 15:25.) The importance of this offering for Paul was twofold. First, the offering met an economic need in Jerusalem. Political instability and general economic depression were problems in Palestine. There were dependent widows (Acts 6:1), and the sharing of property offered only temporary relief (Acts 4:32–37). For this reason Paul was anxious to "remember the poor" (Gal. 2:10). Second, the offering had a theological importance for Paul. The fact that the Gentiles were willing to aid the Jews in this manner validated Paul's Gentile mission. The offering was evidence that in the Christian family there was neither "Jew nor Greek" (Gal. 3:28). Terence B. Ellis; Lynn Jones

COLLEGE KJV translation (2 Kings 22:14) of Hebrew word meaning, "repetition, copy, second," referring to the second district or division of Jerusalem. Compare Zephaniah 1:10.

COLONY Only Philippi is described as a colony of Rome (Acts 16:12), though many cities mentioned in the New Testament were considered as such. Roman colonization as practiced under Julius Caesar provided land for healthy individuals on the relief rolls of Rome and veteran soldiers. The cities of Corinth and Philippi were Roman colonies during the time of Caesar. Augustus founded colonies in Antioch (Psidian), Lystra, Troas, and Syracuse (all mentioned in Acts). Other Roman colonies included Ptolemais (Acco) and Iconium. Colonies had autonomous local governments and in some cases were exempt from poll and land taxes. The functioning of the local governments of Roman colonies is seen in Acts 16:12–40.

COLORS

Color Awareness in Biblical Literature The writers of biblical literature reflected little or nothing of an abstract sense of color. Nevertheless, they made frequent references to a select group of colors when their purposes in writing so demanded it.

References to Colors in the Bible Moving beyond color in the abstract sense, one does find in the Bible frequent references to certain objects which have color designations. When reference is made to a particular color or colors, it is likely made for one of two basic reasons. First, a writer may wish to use color in a descriptive sense to help identify an object or clarify some aspect about that object.

A second reason for color designations in the Bible involves a more specialized usage. At times a writer may use color in a symbolic sense to convey theological truth about the subject of his writing. Color designations have general symbolic significance. For instance, white may be symbolic of purity or joy; black may symbolize judgment or decay; red may symbolize sin or life-blood; and purple may be symbolic of luxury and elegance. Color symbolism became for the writers of apocalyptic literature (Daniel, Revelation) an appropriate tool for expressing various truths in hidden language. In their writings one may find white representative of conquest or victory, black representative of famine or pestilence, red representative of wartime bloodshed, paleness (literally "greenish-gray") representative of death, and purple representative of royalty.

Color Designations of Frequent Use The color designations which appear in the Bible offer relatively little in the way of variety. The matter is further complicated by the fact that of those colors which appear a precise translation of the underlying Hebrew and Greek terms is difficult.

The colors mentioned most frequently in the Bible are those which refer to the dyed products manufactured by the peoples of Israel and her neighbors. Particularly common are the varying shades in the red-purple range. Purple was the most valued of the ancient dyes and was used in the coloring of woven materials. The peoples of Crete, Phoenicia, and Canaan produced the dye from mollusks taken from the Mediterranean Sea. Purple is noted to be the color of some of the tabernacle furnishings and priests' garments in the Old Testament (Ex. 26:1; 28:4–6). In the New Testament the robe put on Christ and Lydia's occupation are associated with the color purple as well (Mark 15:17; Acts 16:14). By varying the dye-making process, other shades of blue became possible and are noted in Scripture (Ex. 28:5–6; Ezek. 23:6; Rev. 9:17).

Shades of red dye were produced from the bodies of insects, vegetables, and reddish-colored minerals. These were, likewise, used to color garments. In addition, natural objects are sometimes designated red, scarlet, or crimson, including such items as pottage, wine, the sky, and horses (Gen. 25:30; Prov. 23:31; Matt. 16:2–3; Rev. 6:4). Isaiah used the color red as a symbol of the nature of sin (Isa. 1:18).

The neutrals, white and black, are mentioned on occasion in the Bible. Natural objects such as milk, leprous skin, and snow are designated white (Gen. 49:12; Lev. 13:3–4; Isa. 1:18). White is used in the New Testament of the garments of Jesus and angels to indicate the glory of the wearer (Matt. 17:2; 28:3; Acts 1:10). Natural objects designated black in the Bible include such items as hair, skin, the sky, and even the sun itself (Lev. 13:31; Job 30:30; 1 Kings 18:45; Rev. 6:12).

Other color designations used less frequently but not any less significantly in the Bible are green, yellow, vermillion, and gray. James Sexton

COLOSSIANS (Cō·lŏs' shans) A letter from Paul to the Church at Colosse. It is one of the Prison Epistles (along with Ephesians, Philemon, and Philippians). The traditional date and place of writing is A.D. 61 or 62 from Rome. The letter itself does not name the place where Paul was imprisoned, and Caesarea and Ephesus have been suggested as alternatives to Rome. If written from Ephesus, the time of writing would be in the mid-50's; if from Caesarea the late 50's. The primary purpose of Colossians was to correct false teachings which were troubling the church.

Authorship of Colossians The authenticity of Colossians has been debated, as has also the exact nature of the relationship between Ephesians and Colossians. In favor of Pauline authorship it may be noted that the letter was accepted as genuinely Pauline by the early church. While it is true that the style and vocabulary differ somewhat from Paul's other letters, this occurs primarily in the section which attacks the Colossian heresy (1:3—2:23). The unusual terminology in this section is at least partly the result of addressing an unusual problem.

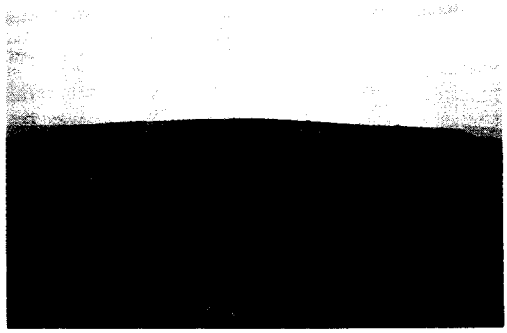
Some would rule out Pauline authorship by identifying the heresy attacked in Colossians as second century gnosticism. Such arguments are not convincing, however, because (1) the heresy cannot be identified with certainty, and (2) gnostic thought was already encroaching on the church by the middle of the first century.

One should note also the relationship between Philemon and Colossians. They mention many of the same people and were apparently carried by the same messenger (Col. 4:7–18; Philem. 1,2,10,23,24). The undoubted authenticity of Philemon argues in favor of the Pauline authorship of Colossians as well.

The City of Colosse Colosse was located in the southwest corner of Asia Minor in what was then the Roman province of Asia. Hierapolis and Laodicea were situated only a few miles away. All three were in the Lycus River valley. A main road from Ephesus to the east ran through the region. See Asia Minor.

Colosse was prominent during the Greek period. By Paul's day it had lost much of its importance, perhaps due to the growth of the neighboring cities. Extremely detrimental to all of the cities of the region were the earthquakes which occasionally did severe damage. Shortly after Paul wrote Colossians, the entire Lycus Valley was devastated by an earthquake (about A.D. 61) which probably ended occupation of the city.

The region included a mixture of people native to the area, Greeks, Romans, and transplanted Jews. The church probably reflected the same diversity. As far as we know, Paul never visited Colosse. His influence was felt, however, during his ministry in Ephesus. (Acts 19:10 records that all Asia heard the gospel.) The letters to Philemon and to the Colossians indicate that many of Paul's fellow workers (if not Paul himself) had worked among the churches of the Lycus Valley. As a result, the relationship between the apostle to the Gentiles and the Colossian church was close enough that when trouble arose some of the church turned to Paul for instruction.



Content Colossians may be divided into two main parts. The first (1:3—2:23) is a polemic against false teachings. The second (3:1—4:17) is made up of exhortations to proper Christian living. The introduction (1:1–2) is in the form of a Hellenistic, personal letter. The senders (Paul and Timothy) and the recipients (the Colossian church) are identified, and a greeting is expressed (the usual Pauline "grace and peace" replaced the usual secular "greeting").

Typical of Paul, a lengthy thanksgiving (1:3–8) and prayer (1:9–14) lead into the body of the letter. Paul thanked God for the faith, hope, and love (1:4–5) which the Colossians had by virtue of their positive response to the gospel. He prayed that they might have a full knowledge and understanding of God's will and lead a life worthy of redeemed saints, citizens of the kingdom of Christ (1:9–14).

The doctrinal section which follows begins with a description of the grandeur of the preeminent Christ (1:15–20). Though the precise meaning of some words and phrases is uncertain, there is no doubt as to Paul's intent. He meant to present Jesus as fully God incarnate (1:15,19), as supreme Lord over all creation (1:15–17), as supreme Lord of the church (1:18), and as the only Source of reconciliation (1:20).

The origin of this grand statement on the nature and work of Christ is debated. The structure, tone, and vocabulary of the passage have led many to speculate that 1:15–20 is a doctrinal statement (hymn) that was in use in the church of Paul's day. This passage and Philippians 2:6–11 are thought by the majority of scholars to be the most obvious examples of pre-Pauline tradition in the letters of Paul. However, difficulty in recreating a balanced hymnic structure has convinced most that Paul rewrote portions of the hymn, if indeed he was not the author of the entire confession. Author or not, the apostolic stamp of approval is on these words which Paul used to state unambiguously that Christ is Lord and Savior of all.

A view of the tell of Colosse.

The purpose of the first two chapters was to correct the false teaching which had infiltrated the church. The heresy is not identified, but several characteristics of the heresy are discernible: (1) An inferior view of Christ is combated in 1:15–20. This Christological passage implies that the heretics did not consider Jesus to be fully divine or perhaps did not accept Him as the sole Source of redemption. (2) The Colossians were warned to beware of plausible sounding "philosophies" which were antichrist (2:8). (3) The heresy apparently involved the legalistic observance of "traditions," circumcision, and various dietary and festival laws (2:8,11,16,21; 3:11). (4) The worship of angels and lesser spirits was encouraged by the false teachers (2:8,18). (5)Asceticism, the deprivation or harsh treatment of one's "evil" fleshly body, was promoted (2:20–23). Finally, (6) the false teachers claimed to possess special insight (perhaps special revelations) which made them (rather than the apostles or the Scriptures) the ultimate source of truth (2:18,19).

The Lycus River Valley (which was devastated ca. A.D. 61 by an earthquake) as seen from Colosse.

Scholars cannot agree on who these false teachers were. Some of the characteristics cited above seem to be Jewish; others sound like gnostic teachings. Some see the teachings of a mystery religion here. Dozens of alternatives have been proposed by very capable authors. It is even argued that Paul was not attacking one specific heresy (or if he was, he did not have a clear understanding of it himself), but rather was warning the Colossians about a variety of false teachings which had troubled the church, or which might trouble it in the future. While the passage does not clearly identify the heretics, it does clearly state that Christ (not angels, philosophies, rituals, traditions, asceticism, nor anything else) is the Source of redemption.

Colossians 3:1–4 provides the link connecting the theology of chapters 1 and 2 with the exhortations to live a Christian life in chapters 3 and 4. The command to "put to death" (3:5 NIV) and to "rid yourselves of all such things" which will reap the wrath of God (3:5–11) is balanced by the command to "clothe yourselves with" (3:12 NIV) those things characteristic of God's chosen people (3:12–17). The changes are far from superficial, however. They stem from the Christian's new nature and submission to the rule of Christ in every area of one's life (3:9,10,15–17).

Rules for the household appear in 3:18—4:1. The typical first century household is assumed, thus the passage addresses wives and husbands, fathers and children, masters and slaves. Paul made no comment about the rightness or wrongness of the social structures; he accepted them as givens. Paul's concern was that the structures as they existed be governed by Christian principles. Submission to the Lord (3:18,20,22; 4:1), Christian love (3:19), and the prospect of divine judgment (3:24—4:1) must determine the way people treat one another regardless of their social station. It is this Christian motivation which distinguishes these house rules from those that can be found in Jewish and pagan sources.

A final group of exhortations (4:2–6) and an exchange of greetings (4:7–17) bring the letter to a close. Notable in this final section are (1) the mention of Onesimus (4:9), which links this letter with Philemon, (2) the mention of a letter at Laodicea (4:16), which may have been Ephesians, and (3) Paul's concluding signature which indicates that the letter was prepared by an amanuensis (secretary) (4:18).

Outline

I. Warnings Against Heresy (1:1–2:23)
  A. Greeting, thanksgiving, and prayer (1:1–14)
  B. Christ and no other is supreme in the universe (1:15–17).
  C. Christ, having reconciled all creation to God and embodying the fullness of God, is supreme in the church (1:18–20).
  D. Believers experience Christ's supremacy in the saving power of the gospel (1:21–23).
  E. The supreme Christ fulfills God's eternal saving purpose (1:24–29).
  F. Christians should have full confidence in Christ's supremacy and forget heretical teachings (2:1–5).
  G. Elemental human traditions must not lead away from faith in Christ (2:6–10).
  H. Legal practices cannot supplement Christ's work of salvation on the cross (2:11–23).
II. The Supreme Rule of Christ Leads to Rules for Life with Christ (3:1–4:18).
  A. Believers seek the fullness of the new life in Christ (3:1–4).
  B. Life in Christ cleanses believers of old practices (3:5–11).
  C. The life in Christ gives power for unity, mutual love, and forgiveness (3:12–14).
  D. Church life includes mutual encouragement and worship (3:15–17).
  E. Life in Christ brings faithfulness and compassion in family relationships (3:18–4:1).
  F. Closing greetings and blessings for those in Christ (4:2–18)

Michael Martin

COLT The young of various riding animals. 1. Young camels (Gen. 32:15), noted by the Hebrew term for "sons." 2. Young donkeys (Gen. 49:11), also "son" in Hebrew. Compare Judges 10:4; 12:14, where Hebrew is "donkeys." The New Testament uses the reference in Zechariah 9:9 as a prediction of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21; Mark 11; Luke 19; John 12:15). Zechariah apparently used parallelism, the basic structure of Hebrew poetry, to describe a rider on one young donkey. Mark, Luke, and John told the story of Jesus' entry with reference to one animal. Matthew mentioned two animals, including both the ass and the colt from Zechariah as separate animals.

COMFORTER KJV translation of the special word for the Holy Spirit in John 14—16 (in Greek parakletos. NAS translates, "Helper"; NIV, "Counselor"; NRSV, "Advocate." The background of the Greek term lies in the law court where the Paraklete helped someone. The Holy Spirit is another "Helper" alongside Jesus for the believer. As Jesus helped disciples during His earthly ministry, so the Spirit helps them after the ascension as they face a hostile world. Meanwhile, Jesus is the Paraklete in the heavenly court (1 John 2:1). See Advocate; Holy Spirit.

COMMANDMENTS, TEN See Ten Commandments.

COMMERCE Commercial activity in the ancient Near East took many forms. The economy centered around agriculture, but some manufactured goods were produced and natural resources mined. Farm goods, products, and resources had to be transported to market centers and other countries. Barter and the buying and selling of goods and services held a prominent place in the life of villages and towns. This is demonstrated by the large number of economic texts uncovered in excavations and the importance placed on transactional dialogue and the use of commercial scenes to highlight major events in the biblical text.

Products The irrigated fields of Mesopotamia and Egypt and the terraced hillsides of Palestine produced a variety of agricultural products. Barley and wheat were crushed, winnowed, sieved, and distributed on the threshingfloor (gōren) for local consumption (Deut. 15:14; Ruth 3:15). Surpluses were transported to regional marketplaces and major cities. Whole grain, meal, flax, nuts, dates, olive oil, fish in the Galilee area, and a variety of animal by-products found their way into every home and paid the taxes imposed by the government. The kings like Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:10) also had large holdings of land and vast herds that contributed to the overall economy.

Village craftsmen produced pottery, metal and wooden implements, weapons, and cloth. Evidence of their commercial self-sufficiency is seen in the recovery of loom weights in excavations of private homes throughout Israel. These balls of clay provide evidence of how widespread the local weaving and cloth-making industries were in ancient times. Manufactured products were distributed among the inhabitants of the village. The finer items were traded to traveling merchants or transported overland to Jerusalem or some other commercial center.

Manufactured goods most commonly introduced into national or international commerce included fine pottery, weapons, glassware, jewelry, cosmetics, and dyed cloth. Distinctive styles or fine workmanship created markets for these products and thus made it worth the costs and hazards of sea and overland transport. Evidence of how widespread trade was in the ancient world can be traced by the different styles and decoration of pottery. Seal markings showing place of origin are also found on many jugs and storage jars used to transport wine, oil, grain, and spices.

Another indication of the diversity of trading products that circulated throughout the ancient Near East is found in Ezekiel's "lamentation over Tyre," one of the principal Phoenician seaports (Ezek. 27:12–24). Their ships and those of Tarshish carried iron, tin, and lead, exchanging them for slaves, horses, mules, ivory, and ebony at various ports of call. Aram or Edom (NIV with footnote) traded "emeralds, purple, embroidered work, fine linen, coral, and rubies" (27:16 NAS), and Judah sent honey, oil, and balm along with wheat as trade goods to Tyre (Ezek. 27:17). The Phoenicians also supplied their trading partners with wool and cloth dyed purple with a glandular secretion from the murex mollusk.

Merchant quarters were established in many trading centers like that at Ugarit, a seaport in northern Syria (1600–1200 B.C.). The Phoenician seaports of Tyre and Sidon also had their resident alien communities, adding to the cosmopolitan nature of these cities and facilitating the transmission of culture and ideas. The economic and political importance of these trading communities is seen in Solomon's construction of storehouse cities in Hamath (2 Chron. 8:4 and in Ahab's negotiations with Ben-Hadad of Syria for the establishment of "market areas in Damascus" (1 Kings 20:34 NIV).

Places of Business Metropolitan centers, like Babylon and Thebes, had open areas or market squares where commerce took place. This was also the case in the Hellenistic cities of the Near East which had one or more agoras. The narrow confines of the villages and towns in Palestine, however, restricted commercial activity to shops or booths built into the side of private homes or to the open area around the city gate.

For most Palestinian villages and towns, the gate was a vital place where commercial, judicial, and social activities of all sorts took place. Lot sat in the gate, demonstrating his status as a privileged resident alien (Gen. 19:1). The gate of Samaria served as a market center where the people purchased measures of barley and fine meal (2 Kings 7:18). In Proverbs 31:23, one sign of a prosperous man with a well-ordered house was his ability to sit with the elders in the gate.

Large urban centers, like Jerusalem, had several gates and commercial districts, thus allowing for diversification of commercial activity throughout the city. Jeremiah 18:2 speaks of the Potsherd Gate (author's translation; known as the Dung Gate in Neh. 2:13) where Jeremiah enacted a prophecy of doom by smashing a pot. He also mentions the bakers' street as the principal area of production and supply of bread in Jerusalem (Jer. 37:21). In the Roman period, Josephus lists several commercial activities in the city: wool shops, smithies, and the clothes market.

Weights and Measures Inscribed stone, clay, or metal weights were used throughout the Near East and have been found in large quantities by archaeologists. They range from the talent (2 Sam. 12:30; 2 Kings 18:14) to the mina (Ezra 2:69 NAS), the shekel (2 Sam. 14:26; Ezek. 4:10), and various smaller weights. Until the establishment of the monarchy, commercial transactions were governed in each Israelite town by a local standard of exchange. Evidence has been found (markings on the weights) of the use of both the Egyptian standard of weights as well as Babylonian measures. Even these standards were apparently negotiable, however, and sometimes subject to abuse. Thus, Abraham was forced before witnesses in the gate of Hebron to pay an exorbitant rate (400 shekels of silver) for the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:16), and Amos condemned those merchants who were "making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit" (8:5).

Until coinage was introduced after 600 B.C., foodstuffs and other goods were obtained through barter in the marketplace or purchased with weights of previous metals (Gen. 33:19; Job 42:11). When minted coinage came into general use during the Hellenistic period (after 200 B.C.), it created a revolution in commerce. See Coins. Transactions in accepted coinage, known to bear a definite weight, added to the confidence of the public and eliminated some of the abuses of the marketplace. Coins also facilitated the payment of taxes (Mark 12:15–17) and wages (Matt. 20:2).

Business Law Hammurabi's law code (about 1750 B.C.) contains a model of business law in the Ancient Near East. Many facets or trade are governed by this code. They are sometimes echoed in the biblical codes as well. For instance, Hammurabi's law protected a man who consigned a portion of his grain to storage from losses due to natural events and the corrupt practices of the owner of the storage room. (Compare Ex. 22:7–9). Lending at interest to fellow Israelites was forbidden in Exodus 22:25 and Deuteronomy 23:19. This injunction, however, does not seem to apply to the practice of investment of surplus capital found in Matthew 25:14–30 and Luke 19:12–25.

The parables of the pounds and the talents suggest the existence of a sophisticated banking and investment community, which lent out sums for commercial enterprises and garnered profits for those who left their money with them. A portion of the vast sums that came into the Temple treasury in Jerusalem as taxes each year (Matt. 17:24) were probably lent out as investment capital. Several of Hammurabi's laws speak of similar practices requiring that those who engage in commercial transactions obtain receipts to show proof of their investments and sales.

Trade and Trade Routes From earliest times caravans of traders carried goods throughout the Near East. Obsidian, brought by Neolithic traders from Anatolia, has been discovered at sites hundreds of miles from its place of origin. Palestine, situated on a land bridge between Mesopotamia and Africa, naturally became a center of commercial travel. Groups of Semitic traders, like the Ishmaelites and Midianites (Gen. 37:27–28), are recorded in Egyptian texts and on the walls of tombs, such as the Beni-hasen tomb paintings (about 1900 B.C.), which depict whole families with their donkeys transporting "ox-hide" ingots of metal. They used hilltop pathways as well as the Via Maris coastal highway and the King's Highway in Transjordan to move between Mesopotamia and Egypt. Eventually, the introduction of the camel and the establishment of caravansaries (inns where caravans can rest at night) as storage and rest centers, made it possible for merchants to take a more direct route across the deserts of northern Syria and Arabia. These lucrative trade routes were controlled in the Roman period by the city of Tadmor, the capital of the Palmyran kingdom, and by the Nabateans.

During the monarchy period, Israel's trade horizon expanded. Solomon imported vast quantities of luxury and exotic goods (ivory, apes, peacocks—1 Kings 10:22*b)* from all over the Near East. He also purchased horses and chariots for his fortress garrisons like those at Gezer, Hazor, and Megiddo (1 Kings 10:26). The nation had no deep water ports on its coastline, so the Gulf of Aqaba became the prime point of entry for goods coming from Africa (spices, precious stones, gold from Ophir, algum wood). The Aqaba port of Elath (Ezion-geber) served the needs of the court of Solomon and subsequent kings as well. The shipping trade of Israel, as well as many other nations, joined with or was carried by Phoenician merchantmen (1 Kings 10:22). These more experienced sailors could avoid the storms and other hazards that sank many ships in the Mediterranean (2 Chron. 20:37 NIV).

Even in New Testament times, shipping was restricted to particular routes and seasons (Acts 27:12). Travel seems to have been more common in this period as seen by the movements of Paul, the other apostles, and those associated with the establishment of the early church, such as Aquila and Priscilla (Rom. 16:3). Passengers and cargo might be transported on one leg of a journey on one ship and then transferred to a number of others to complete their journey (Acts 27:1–8). Underwater excavations off Cyprus and the Herodian port of Caesarea Maritima demonstrate, however, that many of these ships never made it to port (Acts 27:39–44).

For those who chose to take the overland routes, instead, the Romans constructed paved roads that facilitated the movement of their armies, as well as people and wagons loaded with goods for sale. Mile markers set up along these roads show how often they were repaired and which emperors took a special interest in the outlying districts of his domain. See Agriculture; Banking; Economic Life; Marketplace; Transportation and Travel; Weights and Measures.

Victor H. Matthews

COMMON In the Old Testament, that which was common (alternately profane) was contrasted with that which was holy. Thus common bread was contrasted with the bread of the Presence (1 Sam. 21:4); the common journey was contrasted with the military campaign for which David and his men would need to be consecrated (1 Sam. 21:5). The common people (am ha arets, "people of the land") were contrasted with rulers or people of standing in the community (Lev. 4:22,27) and were buried in cemeteries for the common people (2 Kings 23:6; Jer. 26:23). By New Testament times, the concept of "common" also carried with it the connotation of "unclean." Thus Peter declares that he has never eaten anything "common or unclean." The response to Peter was: "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common" (Acts 10:14–15).

COMMON LIFE See Community of Goods.

COMMONWEALTH A group of people united by common interests. Before the coming of Christ the Gentiles were separated from the commonwealth of Israel (Eph. 2:12). Paul reminded the Philippians that more important than their citizenship in a Roman colony was their citizenship in heaven (Phil. 3:20). See Citizen, Citizenship.

COMMUNION Paul's term describing the nature of the Lord's Supper and thus the term used by many church groups to refer to their celebration of Jesus' final, memorial supper with His disciples. Paul used the Greek term koinonia to express the basic meaning of the Christian faith, a sharing in the life and death of Christ which radically creates a relationship of Christ and the believer and of the believers with one another in a partnership or unity. See Fellowship; Lord's Supper.

COMMUNITY OF GOODS The Jerusalem church's practice of holding "all things in common" (Acts 2:41–47; 4:32–37) had contemporary parallels: the Greek utopian ideal of common property among friends; the compulsory communalism of the Jewish sect at Qumran; and even the precedent of Jesus and the twelve (Luke 8:3; John 13:29). The immediate context of both references in Acts (2:1–40; 4:31) indicates that the community of goods was not an ideal to which the church aspired, but was itself evidence of the community's nature: that the entire range of their life together was shaped and directed by the Holy Spirit.

"Common" (koina) in 2:44 and 4:32 has the same root as koinonia ("fellowship" in 2:42); thus the issue was not economic theory but the common life together ("daily" in 2:46) with no separation between physical and spiritual needs. (See 6:1ff. which depicts the investment in care for the needy.) The parallel between Acts 4:34 and Deuteronomy 15:4 indicates that the early church fulfilled God's intention for Israel to be generous.

The Jerusalem church chose to practice the selfless generosity in a form which closely resembled the life-style of Jesus and the twelve. Other early churches practiced sacrificial generosity in different forms (Acts 11:27–30; 1 Cor. 16:1–4; Rom. 12:13; 1 John 3:17), for Jesus' call to set aside possessions took more than one form. Compare Matthew 19:16–22 with Luke 19:1–10. What these incidents have in common is an emphasis on sacrificial giving (Luke 21:1–4), requiring a complete change of heart so that God, not possessions, is served (Matt. 6:24) with a clear recognition of riches' dangers (Mark 10:23–31; Luke 6:24; 12:13–31).

This danger of riches manifested itself in the context of the community of goods (Acts 4:36—5:11). In contrast to Barnabas who sold some land and gave the proceeds to the apostles, Ananias and Sapphira held back some of the proceeds from their sale. Their subsequent deaths testified to the severity of abandoning the common life for selfish interest. Possessiveness led to lying to the Spirit (5:3,9) and therefore rejecting the bond ("one heart and of one soul" in 4:32) created by the Spirit. The voluntary nature of this community of goods was therefore not a matter of individuals independently choosing when and if to give, but the ongoing spontaneous generosity of a community unified and directed by the Spirit. (See TEV translation of Acts 2:45 and 4:34*b* ("would sell") which identifies the ongoing nature of the generosity. See Holy Spirit; Jerusalem Church; Koinonia; Fellowship; Qumran; Essenes; Riches; Gifts; Possessions; Borrow; Generosity; Mammon; Ananias and Sapphira; Teachings of Jesus.

David Nelson Duke

COMPASSION To feel passion with someone, to enter sympathetically into their sorrow and pain. Compassion in English translations represents at least five Hebrew and eight Greek terms. Chamal means "to regret," "be sorry for," "grieve over," or "spare someone." Thus the rich man "refrained" (NIV) from taking his own sheep and took the poor man's (2 Sam. 12:4). Pharaoh's daughter "had pity" on the baby Moses (Ex. 2:6). David spared Mephibosheth for Jonathan's sake (2 Sam. 21:7). Often it expresses God's anger and decision no longer to show mercy and pity (Zech. 11:6). Beyond this the Bible points to God's plans to again have compassion for His people (Joel 2:18; compare Mal. 3:17; Gen. 19:16; 2 Chron. 36:15; Isa. 63:9).

Chen represents what is aesthetically beautiful. It means then to possess grace and charm and to be gracious. God looked to pour out a spirit of grace or "compassion" (Zech. 12:10 NRSV) on His people so they would mourn for the one they pierced. Bildad told Job to "implore the compassion of the Almighty" (Job 8:5 NAS).

Chus is an emotional expression of crying and feeling with someone who is hurting. With the emotion goes the intent to help. God could forbid Israel to have such pity (Deut. 7:16). God refuses to have pity on a disobedient people (Ezek. 5:11). God's history had been a history of compassion in which He did not destroy His people (Ezek. 20:17). God's people should pray for Him to "spare" them (Joel 2:17). Jonah had "compassion" (Jonah 4:10 NAS) on a plant but did not want God to have compassion on a city (Jonah 4:11). Nehemiah asked for "compassion" (Neh. 13:22). Chus most often appears in Hebrew in a formula which may be translated, "Do not let your eye cry over, or have regrets over" something.

Nichum or nocham means to "be sorry for," "regret," "comfort," "console." It is more than emotion. It includes a will to change the situation. Thus God "was sorry" He made people (Gen. 6:6 NAS). Still God acted to preserve human life (Gen. 8:21), for He identifies with human weakness. In His basic nature He does not "change His mind" (1 Sam. 15:29 NAS), translating Hebrew nicham. Still Scripture describes times when Yahweh "repented" (Ex. 32:14; 2 Sam. 24:16; Jonah 3:10 as examples). In His freedom God can announce one set of plans, see the response and weakness of the people affected, and decide not to carry out the plans. Thus Hosea 11:8 concludes, "my repentings are kindled together" (KJV) or "all my compassion is aroused" (NAS). At another time God can say, "I will have no compassion" (Hos. 13:14 NAS).

Racham is related to the Hebrew word for "womb" and expresses a mother's (Isa. 49:15) or father's (Ps. 103:13) love and compassion, a feeling of pity and devotion to a helpless child. It is a deep emotional feeling seeking a concrete expression of love (Gen. 43:14; Deut. 13:17). This word always expresses the feeling of the superior or more powerful for the inferior or less powerful and thus never expresses human feeling for God. The word seeks to bring security to the life of the one for whom compassion is felt. The majority of Bible uses of racham have God as subject. Compare Hosea 2:4,23; Zechariah 1:16; 10:6. God "has compassion on all he had made" (Ps. 145:9).

The New Testament builds on the Old Testament understanding of God's compassion. The central New Testament words are eleeo and splagxnizomai. The first—eleeo—is used in the Greek Old Testament to translate most of the Hebrew words listed above. It represents the emotion aroused by another person's undeserved suffering or pain. It is something an orator tries to kindle in an audience or a lawyer seeks to elicit from a judge. Jesus commanded the Pharisees to learn God's desire for compassion (Matt. 9:13; 12:7). Jesus said even slaves should practice compassion as He taught Peter about forgiveness (Matt. 18:33). God showed compassion in healing the demoniac (Mark 5:19). Christians need to show compassion to those who waver or doubt (Jude 22). God's commands for compassion from disciples finds its roots in the nature of God, who is full of compassion (Eph. 2:4; 1 Pet. 1:3). See Mercy.

Splagxnizomai is related to the Greek noun for inward parts much as Hebrew rachemim. Here is located the center of personal feelings and emotions. Before Christ's appearance the Greeks apparently did not use this word to speak of compassion and mercy, it being more closely related to courage. It is not clear when the shift in meaning to compassion occurred. Some of the apocryphal Jewish writings before Christ do use the term to mean mercy. In the parable of the unforgiving servant, the master had compassion and forgave the servant's debt (Matt. 18:27). The prodigal son's father had compassion on him (Luke 15:20). The Good Samaritan had compassion for the injured traveler (Luke 10:33). Jesus had compassion on the crowds (Mark 6:34). People needing help asked Jesus for compassion (Mark 9:22; compare Matt. 9:36; 20:34). Paul saw compassion as a quality expected of believers (Phil. 2:1; Col. 3:12). Paul said he related to his readers in the compassion of Christ (Phil. 1:8), that is, the quality is not an achievement by the believer but a result of being in Christ. The love of God dwells only in those who are compassionate to a person in need (1 John 3:17; compare Eph. 4:32; 1 Pet. 3:8). Compassion finds its source in God's compassion (Jas. 5:11). In compassion He has provided salvation and forgiveness (Luke 1:78).

Oiktiro is related to lamentation and grief for the dead and came to mean sympathetic participation in grief. Such sympathy or compassion stands ready to help the one who has suffered loss. In the Greek Old Testament translation oiktiro translates words related to chen and racham. Paul taught that God is the Father and source of compassion (2 Cor. 1:3; compare Jas. 5:11). He has total freedom in exercising compassion (Rom. 9:15). Humans can sacrifice themselves for God's causes only because God has sacrificed Himself in mercy (Rom. 12:1; compare Luke 6:36; Phil. 2:1; Col. 3:12).

Sumpatheo means to suffer what someone else suffers. It came to mean to suffer with, alongside, to sympathize. Peter listed it among the basic Christian virtues (1 Pet. 3:8). Having come to earth and endured all kinds of human temptations, Jesus exercises sympathy for our weaknesses (Heb. 4:15). The writer of Hebrews could recall his readers' experience of having sympathy for and thus helping others imprisoned for their faith (Heb. 10:33–34).

Metriopatheo refers to the ability to be moderate in emotions or passions. An Old Testament or human minister realizes personal weaknesses and thus moderates personal anger at another's weaknesses (Heb. 5:2).

CONANIAH (Cŏn ā nī' ăh) Personal name meaning, "Yahweh has established." 1. Levite in charge of collecting Temple offerings under King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:12). 2. He and other Levites contributed 5,000 sheep and goats and 500 bulls for Josiah's Passover offering (2 Chron. 35:9). He may have been a grandson of 1. above.

CONCISION Archaic English noun meaning, "a cutting off." KJV uses "concision" in Philippians 3:2 to describe Paul's opponents who insisted on circumcision as necessary for right relationship with God (Phil. 3:2). See Circumcision; Paul.

CONCOURSE KJV translation of Hebrew "noisy places" in Proverbs 1:21 referring to a place of community gathering and meeting.

CONCUBINE A secondary wife. The taking of concubines dates back at least to the patriarchal period. Both Abraham and Nahor had concubines (Gen. 22:24; 25:6; 1 Chron. 1:32). Concubines were generally taken by tribal chiefs, kings, and other wealthy men. Gideon had a concubine (Judg. 8:31). Saul had at least one concubine, named Rizpah (2 Sam. 3:7; 21:11). David had many (2 Sam. 5:13), but Solomon took the practice to its extreme, having 300 concubines, in addition to his 700 royal wives (1 Kings 11:3). Deuteronomy 17:17 forbid kings to take so many wives.

The concubines (and wives) of chiefs and kings were symbols of their virility and power. Having intercourse with the concubine of the ruler was an act of rebellion. When Absalom revolted against his father, David, he "went in unto his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel" (2 Sam. 16:22) on the palace roof. When David returned to the palace, the ten concubines involved were sent away to live the rest of their lives in isolation (2 Sam. 20:3).

A concubine, whether purchased (Ex. 21:7–11; Lev. 25:44–46) or won in battle (Num. 31:18), was entitled to some legal protection (Ex. 21:7–12; Deut. 21:10–14), but was her husband's property. A barren woman might offer her maid to her husband hoping she would conceive (Gen. 16:1ff.; 30:1ff.).

Although the taking of concubines was not totally prohibited, monogamous marriage was more common and seems to be the biblical ideal (Gen. 2:24; Mark 10:6–9).

See Marriage; Polygamy; Slavery.

Wilda W. Morris

CONCUPISCENCE KJV translation of Greek epithumia, "desire, lust." The Greeks used the term to mean excitement about something in a neutral sense and then in an evil sense of wrongly valuing earthly things. The New Testament knows desire can be good (Matt. 13:17; Luke 22:15; Phil. 1:23; 1 Thess. 2:17). In fact, the New Testament uses the verb form more often in a good sense than in a bad.

The bad sense of epithumia is desire controlled by sin and worldly instincts rather than by the Spirit (Gal. 5:16). Everyone has been controlled by such desires before their commitment to Christ (Eph. 2:3; Titus 3:3). Such desire is part of the old life without Christ and is deceitful (Eph. 4:22). Such desire can be for sex (Matt. 5:28), material goods (Mark 4:19), riches (1 Tim. 6:9), and drunkenness (1 Pet. 4:3). The Christian life then is a war between desires of the old life and desire to follow the Spirit (Gal. 5:15–24; 1 Pet. 2:11), the Spirit-led life crucifying worldly desires (Gal. 5:24). (Note the list of fleshly desires in (Gal. 5:19–21.) As the new life comes through the Spirit, so old desires come through Satan (John 8:44) and the world of which he is prince (1 John 2:16). Such desires can make slaves of people (2 Pet. 2:18–20). Desire brings temptation, leading to sin, resulting in death (Jas. 1:14–15). People cannot blame God, for He allows them freedom to choose and gives them over to what they choose (Rom. 1:24). God did give the law which defined wrong desires as concupiscence or sin. The power of sin then changed the good commandment into an instrument to arouse human desires to experience new arenas of life. Thus they sin and die rather than trust God's guidance through the law that such arenas are outside God's plan for life and thus should not be experienced (Rom. 7:7–8). Either sin brings death, or believers in Christ murder evil lusts (Col. 3:5).

In a very limited sphere of life, Paul called on believers to rise above the normal activities caused by lust in society. He called on faithfulness in marriage rather than on the immoral practices of the Greek and Roman world of his day (1 Thess. 4:4–5).

CONDEMN is the act of pronouncing someone guilty after weighing the evidence.

Old Testament The word appears first in the context of a court of law (Ex. 22:9) where a judge hears a charge against a thief and condemns the culprit. Another juridical instance appears in Deuteronomy 25:1 where judges are instructed to hear cases, decide on the issue, and "condemn the wicked." In Psalm 94:20–21 the writer accuses corrupt judges who "condemn the innocent," and in Psalm 109:31 he thanks God for saving the poor man "from those who condemn him to death" (TEV).

"Condemn" is also used in making everyday personal judgments as in the Book of Job. Feeling helpless before God's power and righteousness,

Job knew that no matter how he tried to defend himself, his own mouth would condemn him (9:20). He begged God not to condemn him but to explain why He was making him suffer (10:2). After Job's advisors had had their say, Elihu saw that all three "had condemned Job" (32:3). Other instances of the word being used in everyday judgments appear in Isaiah 50:9; 54:17.

The more significant use of "condemn" is in connection with God's judgment. In dedicating the new Temple, Solomon prayed that God would judge His people, "condemning the wicked . . . and justifying the righteous" (1 Kings 8:32). The writer of Proverbs expected the Lord to condemn "those who plan evil" (12:2 TEV). The psalmist was sure God would not forsake a good man or allow him "to be condemned when he is on trial" (37:33 TEV). On the other hand, the Lord asked Job whether he wanted to condemn Him just to prove his own righteousness (40:8).

New Testament Several Greek words are translated "condemn" and "condemnation" with a progression of meaning from just making a distinction to making an unfavorable judgment. The three-way usage of the word in the Old Testament continued into the New. The law court context is seen in Jesus' prediction of His coming trial in Jerusalem (Matt. 20:18), in a remark of one of the men crucified with Jesus (Luke 23:40), and in the final vote of the Sanhedrin (Mark 14:64).

"Condemn" was also used in Jesus' day in making personal judgments of others. For instance, Jesus said the men of Nineveh would condemn His own unrepentant generation (Matt. 12:41); James warned the brethren that teachers were subject to greater criticism (Jas. 3:1); and Paul urged Titus to use healthful speech in his teaching to avoid criticism (Titus 2:8). As in the Old Testament, God is also the source of condemnation in the New. He was responsible for the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (2 Pet. 2:6), and He condemned sin in human nature by sending His own Son (Rom. 8:3).

New Testament usage of "condemn" is unique in its reference to the final judgment, expecially in John 3:17–19. A similar teaching appears in John 5:24. Paul felt that avoiding that final condemnation was a reason for accepting the Lord's chastening in this life (1 Cor. 11:32). William J. Fallis CONDUIT A water channel or aqueduct in or near Jerusalem channeling water into the city (2 Kings 18:17; 20:20; Isa. 7:3). The same Hebrew word refers to a trench built up to conduct water flow (1 Kings 18:32–38; Job 38:25; Ezek. 31:4). The location of the Jerusalem conduit is a matter of debate with different scholars favoring the Pool of Siloam, the Gihon Spring, or outside the wall to the northwest of the city beside the major north-south highway leading to Samaria. The latter location may be the most likely. Aqueducts had been built for Jerusalem before David conquered it with a tunnel providing water for the city (2 Sam. 5:8). Israel's kings evidently supplemented this. In a marvelous engineering feat, Hezekiah had workmen start at both ends and meet in the middle to construct a water tunnel connecting Gihon Spring and the Pool of Siloam (2 Kings 20:20; 2 Chron. 32:2–4,30). The tunnel was discovered in 1880.

CONEY A wild hare—Procavia syriaca also called Hyrax syriacus. See Animals. It was unclean because it did not have a divided hoof (Lev. 11:5; Deut. 14:7). They established their home in the rocky cliffs (Ps. 104:18; Prov. 30:26).

CONFECTIONER One who mixes ointments or perfumes. KJV translation. Modern translations read, "perfumer" (Ex. 30:25,35; 1 Sam. 8:13; Neh. 3:8). See Perfumers.

CONFESSION Confession, an admission, declaration, or acknowledgment, is a significant element in the worship of God in both Old and New Testaments. The majority of the occurrences of the term can be divided into two primary responses to God: the confession of sin and the confession of faith.

Confession of Sin Numerous Old Testament passages stress the importance of the confession of sin within the experience of worship. Leviticus speaks of ritual acts involving such admission of sin: the sin (or guilt) offering (5:5—6:7) and the scapegoat that represents the removal of sin (16:20–22). Furthermore, confession can be the act of an individual in behalf of the people as a whole (Neh. 1:6; Dan. 9:20) or the collective response of the worshiping congregation (Ezra 10:1; Neh. 9:2–3). Frequently, it is presented as the individual acknowledgment of sin by the penitent sinner (Ps. 32:5; Prov. 28:13; see also Pss. 40 and 51 which are individual confessions although the word "confession" is not used).

Likewise, in the New Testament confession of sin is an aspect of both individual and corporate worship. At the Jordan, John's followers were baptized, confessing their sins (Matt. 3:6; Mark 1:6). Similar confessions were made by Paul's converts in Ephesus (Acts 19:18). Christians are reminded that God faithfully forgives the sins of those who confess them (1 John 1:9). James admonished his readers not only to pray for one another but also to confess their sins to one another (5:16), probably within the context of congregational worship. By the end of the first century, routine worship included confession as the prelude to the observance of the Lord's Supper as seen in Didache 14:1. See Apostolic Fathers.

Confession of Faith Closely related to the confession of sin in the Old Testament is the confession of faith, that is, the acknowledgment of and commitment to God. In 1 Kings 8:33,35 (as well as 2 Chron. 6:24,26) acknowledgment of the name of God results in forgiveness of sins. Such acknowledgment came to be standardized in the confessional formula known as the Shema (Deut. 6:4–5).

Such declaration of commitment to God, or particularly to Christ, is also found in the New Testament. One's public acknowledgment of Jesus is the basis for Jesus' own acknowledgment of that believer to God (Matt. 10:32; Luke 12:8; compare Rev. 3:5). Furthermore, as Paul described the process by which one is saved, he explicitly drew a parallel between what one believes in the heart and what one confesses with the lips (Rom. 10:9–10). Belief and confession are two sides of the same coin! Probably the earliest confession of faith was the simple acknowledgment of the lordship of Christ (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 12:3; Phil. 2:11), but the rise of heresy seems to have caused the addition of specific data about Christ to the confession—for example, that He is Son of God (1 John 4:3,15) or that He has come in the flesh (1 John 4:2). A firmly set outline of Christian beliefs then appears to be what is meant by confession in later New Testament writings (Heb. 5:14).

See Faith; Scapegoat; Sin; Repentance.

Naymond Keathley

CONFESSIONS AND CREDOS Confessions and credos are the articulate and corporate expressions of the faith in response to the revelatory and saving acts of God. They are articulate because they do not express human emotions but recite the acts of God; they are corporate because they do not belong to individuals but to the people of God (Old Testament) or to the church (New Testament). The difference in meaning between the two terms as far as the Bible is concerned is hard to describe. For the sake of clarity we understand confession to have its primary place in worship and preaching, and credo to belong to the teaching ministry and to refer in the first place to doctrine. Confession implies a note of allegiance and commitment, credo, a note of authority.

Old Testament A fine example of a confession in action is found in Joshua 24. The setting was the meeting of Joshua with the elders, the heads, the judges, and the officers. Joshua spoke to them as a prophet: "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel (vv. 2). God spoke through the mouth of Joshua and recapitulated His mighty acts for Israel (vv. 2–13). Then follows an injunction by Joshua in his own name to serve the Lord and to put away the strange gods of their fathers (vv. 14–15). The people responded by confessing the Lord as their God (vv. 16–17); this confession was followed immediately by a recitation of the acts of God to Israel and a renewed confession (vv. 17–18). Here we find side by side the two types of confessions of the Bible, the nominal type (the Lord is our God) and the verbal type which relates the acts of God.

Two examples of the verbal type appear in Deuteronomy 6: 21–25 and 26: 5–9. Both recite the redeeming acts of God to Israel in Egypt and in the Promised Land in similar though not identical words, but each has a very different setting. The first serves as an explanation and justification of the commandments of the Lord; the second is said at the offering of the firstfruit to God and relates the offering to the saving acts of God.

The nominal confession "The Lord is our God" has its origin in the revelatory introduction to the Ten Commandments: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" (Ex. 20: 3; see also Deuteronomy 5:6). Confessions of this type are found throughout the Old Testament, often embedded in hymns and psalms of praise or invocation (Pss. 3:8; 7:2,4; 10:12; 100:3). Elaborate recitals of the acts of God are found in Psalm 105:8–45 (preceded by an appeal to give thanks and praise to God, vv. 1–6, and the nominal confession of His lordship, v. 7), in Psalm 135, and in Psalm 136. These examples confirm the place of the confession of the acts of God in the framework of worship.

New Testament Jesus and the early church shared the faith in God of their fellow Jews. The Old Testament confessions of that faith were also theirs. The new element was the revelatory acts of God in Jesus, the Christ. His person and ministry called forth new confessions and credos giving expression to the believers' relationship with Him. In the development of these confessions three stages can be distinguished:

(a) The first stage is the life and ministry of Jesus on earth. Our Lord referred to Himself as the Son of Man, thereby presenting Himself as the fulfilment of the prophecy of Daniel 7:13. This, however, did not lead to a confession of Jesus as the Son of Man in the church. Jesus did not rebuke Peter for confessing Him to be the Messiah but ordered His disciples not to divulge this secret (Mark 8:29–30). During His presence on earth, confessing Jesus meant to express personal allegiance and commitment to Him and to His cause (Matt. 10:32; Luke 12:8).

(b) The second stage began after Jesus' resurrection and exaltation. Already on the day of Pentecost Peter proclaimed that God had made Jesus both Lord and Christ (Acts 2:36). The first title expressed His authority, having been exalted to the right hand of God; the second identified the crucified Jesus as the fulfilment of the messianic prophecies of the Old Testament. Here and throughout this stage, confessing was the corollary of preaching the gospel. At this stage confession began to be formulated to express in one sentence the church's faith in Christ. The same distinction between nominal and verbal confessions applies here as well. Nominal confessions consist of a subject (Jesus or Christ or Jesus Christ) and a predicate. The most common confession of this type is: Jesus is Lord (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 12:3; Phil. 2:11; each time in a different context). Here also belongs the confession Jesus is the Son of God (Acts 8:37, not in all manuscripts and hence in most modern translations only in a footnote). Conceivably these confessions were baptismal confessions. Confessions of Jesus as the Messiah or Christ are found only rarely (John 20:31), since this title did not carry a religious or a theological meaning with the non-Jews. It gradually developed into a part of the name of our Lord. Verbal confessions tell the story of Christ in a pointed and condensed form. Impressive confessions of this type are Philippians 2:5–11 reaching its climax in the proclamation of Jesus Christ as Lord (see above); Colossians 1:15–20; 1 Timothy 3:16; 1 Peter 3:18–22. Hebrews 1:1–3 belongs here, too. Paul's wording of the Gospel, preached by him and the other apostles, has also a clear note of confession (1 Cor. 15:3–5) and shows how closely associated witness to the gospel and confessing Jesus are to one another.

(c) The third stage began when the gospel had to be safeguarded from false interpretation. Here the function of confessions is primarily doctrinal and credal and no longer a part of proclamation as in the second stage. This stage presupposes the presence of false teachers and false doctrine. This is the case in the Pastoral letters, 2 Peter and Jude though the confessions or credos which give the right expression to the gospel are usually not quoted specifically but referred to or woven into the text of the letters. In the letters of John, however, the specific wording of the doctrinal credo is quoted explicitly: Jesus Christ has come in the flesh (1 John 4:2; 2 John 7); Jesus is the Christ (1 John 5:1) or the Son of God (1 John 5:5). The former credo emphasized the full humanity of the divine Son of God; the latter, the divinity of the earthly Jesus. Understood together they form the doctrine of Christ (2 John 9).

See Faith; Gospel; Preaching; Doctrine.

J. Reiling

CONFIRM To establish an agreement and to show that a word is true and reliable. English translations use confirm for general Hebrew terms meaning, "to prove reliable, trustworthy," "to be strong," "to fill, fulfill," "to stand," "to rise." The Greek terms mean, "to be reliable" and "to set up." The terms are regularly used to speak of humans establishing God's words, covenant, or law by practicing them (Deut. 27:26) and more often of God confirming His message or His covenant by setting it up with His people and bringing to pass the promises He made (Lev. 26:9; 2 Sam. 7:25; 1 Chron. 16:17; Isa. 44:26; Rom. 15:8). At times human agreements or promises are confirmed (Ruth 4:7; 1 Kings 1:14; Esther 9:29; Jer. 44:25; Heb. 6:16). One could also establish themselves in a position or institution (2 Kings 15:19; 1 Chron. 17:14). Believers seek to confirm the gospel message through a Christian life (1 Cor. 1:6; Phil. 1:7). In so doing one also confirms the individual's calling and election (2 Pet. 1:10).

CONFISCATION Appropriation of private property for public or governmental use. Confiscation was not practiced in Israel until the rise of the monarchy and was not permitted by God. This practice was foretold by Samuel before Israel elected its first king (1 Sam. 8:14) as an inherent danger of Kings following Near Eastern patterns. Ahab exercised this royal right when he confiscated the property of a person (Naboth) executed by the state (1 Kings 21:15–16), but he had to bear God's punishment for his act (1 Kings 21:18–19). Ezekiel reacted strongly against the abuses of this royal prerogative (Ezek. 45:7–8; 46:16–18).

CONGREGATION The assembled people of God. Congregation translates the Hebrew words 'edah and qahal primarily. These terms may apply to any individual or class collectively such as "the wicked," "the hypocrites," etc. While 'edah is once used to refer to a herd of bulls (Ps. 68:30) and once to a hive of bees (Judg. 14:8), both words primarily describe the Israelite people as a holy people, bound together by religious devotion to Yahweh rather than by political bonds. There is no apparent distinction in meaning between the two. Every circumcised Israelite was a member of the congregation. The congregation was subdivided into the tribe and then the most basic unit, the family. The congregation of Israel functioned in military, legal, and punishment matters.

In the Greek Old Testament 'edah was usually translated by sunagōgē, qahal by ekklēsia. In late Judaism sunagōgē depicted the actual Israelite people and ekklēsia the ideal elect of God called to salvation. Hence ekklēsia became the term for the Christian congregation, the church. Sunagōgē in the New Testament is almost entirely restricted to the Jewish place of worship. (An exception is Jas. 2:2, which may refer to a Christian assembly.) The English word "synagogue" is merely a transliteration of sunagōgē. Ekklēsia means "called out," and in classical Greek referred to the body of free citizens called out by a herald. In the New Testament the "called out ones" are the church, the assembly of God's people. There is a direct spiritual continuity between the congregation of the Old Testament and the New Testament church. Significantly the Christian community chose the Old Testament term for the ideal people of God called to salvation (ekklēsia), rather than the term which described all Israelites collectively (sunagōgē). Joe E. Lunceford

CONGREGATION, MOUNT OF The mountain considered by Israel's neighbors to stand in the far north and serve as a meeting place of the gods. Babylon's king was so proud he thought he could storm the meeting (Isa. 14:13).

CONIAH (Cō·nī′ ăh) See Jehoiachin.

CONQUEST OF CANAAN The Book of Joshua and the first chapter of the book of Judges describe the conquest of Canaan, which resulted in Israel's settlement in the land of promise.

Historical Setting The Israelite conquest came at a time when Egyptian control of Canaan was weakened. Historians have not been able to pinpoint the time when the conquest of Canaan occurred. The difficulty lies in the fact that the date of the Exodus is uncertain. Scholars have proposed quite a number of dates for this important event. The most commonly accepted period for the Exodus is around 1280 B.C. Such a date would place the conquest at about 1240–1190 B.C. Other scholars prefer to date the Exodus around 1445 B.C., which would suggest that the conquest occurred about 1400–1350 B.C.

While it is not possible to be definitive about the date of the conquest, it is possible to draw some general conclusions regarding the situation of Canaan in the approximate time frame of the conquest. Shortly after 1500 B.C., Egypt subdued Canaan. Canaanite society operated according to a feudal system whereby the kings of city states paid tribute to their Egyptian overlords. The city states were numerous in the heavily-populated Palestinian coastal plain; the mountainous regions were lightly populated. From about 1400 B.C. onward, Egyptian control of Canaan weakened, opening the land up for possible invasion by an outside force.

Joshua's Strategy Joshua led a three-campaign invasion of Canaan. At the close of the wilderness wanderings the Israelites arrived on the plains of Moab in the Transjordan ("beyond the Jordan"). There they subdued two local kings, Sihon and Og (Num. 21:21–35). Some of the Israelite tribes—Reuben, Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasseh—chose to settle in this newly conquered territory (Num. 32).

After Moses died, Joshua became the new leader of the Israelites. As God instructed him, Joshua led the people across the Jordan River into Canaan. The crossing was made possible by a supernatural separation of the water of the Jordan (Josh. 3—4). After crossing the river the Israelites camped at Gilgal. From there Joshua led the first military campaign against the Canaanites in the sparsely-populated central highlands, northwest of the Dead Sea. The initial object of the attack was the ancient stronghold of Jericho. The Israelite force marched around the city once a day for six days. On the seventh day they marched around it seven times, then blasted trumpets and shouted. In response the walls of Jericho collapsed, allowing the invaders to destroy the city (Josh. 6).

The Israelites then attempted to conquer the nearby city of Ai, where they met with their first defeat. The reason for the failure was that Achan, one of the Israelite soldiers, had kept some booty from the invasion of Jericho—an action which violated God's orders to destroy everything in the city. After Achan was executed, the Israelites were able to destroy Ai (Josh. 7—8).

Not all of the Canaanites tried to resist Israel's invasion. One group, the Gibeonites, avoided destruction by deceiving the Israelites into making a covenant of peace with them (Josh. 9). Alarmed by the defection of the Gibeonites to Israel, a group of southern Canaanite kings, led by Adonizedek of Jerusalem, formed a coalition against the invading force. The kings threatened to attack the Gibeonites, causing Joshua to come to the defense of his new allies. Because of supernatural intervention, the Israelites were able to defeat the coalition. Joshua then launched a southern campaign which resulted in the capture of numerous Canaanite cities (Josh. 10).

Joshua's third and last military campaign was in northern Canaan. In that region King Jabin of Hazor formed a coalition of neighboring kings to battle with the Israelites. Joshua made a surprise attack upon them at the waters of Merom, utterly defeating his foe (Josh. 11:1–15).

The invasion of Canaan met with phenomenal success; large portions of the land fell to the Israelites (Josh. 11:16—12:24). However, some areas still remained outside their control, such as the heavily-populated land along the coast and several major Canaanite cities like Jerusalem (Josh. 13:1–5; 15:63; Judg. 1). The Israelites struggled for centuries to control these areas.

Israelite Settlement The Israelite tribes slowly settled Canaan without completely removing the native population. Even though some sections of the land remained to be conquered, God instructed Joshua to apportion Canaan to the tribes which had not yet received territory (Josh. 13:7). Following the land allotments, Israel began to occupy its territory. Judges 1 describes the settlement as a slow process whereby individual tribes struggled to remove the Canaanites. In the final analysis the tribes had limited success in driving out the native population (Judg. 1). As a result, Israel was plagued for centuries by the infiltration of Canaanite elements into its religion (Judg. 2:1–5).

Ruins of a temple at Hazor destroyed by Joshua in the conquest of Canaan.

Conquest Reconstructions Scholars have proposed varying models for understanding the conquest of Canaan. The previous description of the nature of the conquest and settlement presents a traditional, harmonizing approach to the interpretation of the biblical material. Some scholars have proposed other interpretive models. One is the immigration model, which assumes that there was no real conquest of Canaan but that peoples of diverse origins gradually immigrated into the area after 1300 B.C. They eventually took control of the city states and became the nation of Israel. The difficulty with this model is that it ignores the general biblical picture of God constituting the nation of Israel in the desert and leading them to invade the Promised Land.

Other scholars have put forth a revolt model for understanding the nature of the conquest. This approach suggests that there was no major invasion of Canaan from an outside force but simply the immigration of a small group of people who inspired a revolt of the Canaanite peasants. The result was the overthrow of the feudal city-state kings and the emergence of what became the Israelite nation. This interpretation of the conquest diverges from the biblical record in its claim that the bulk of the population of Israel was made up of former Canaanite peasants. It also reveals a tendency to read back into Israelite history modern Marxist theory about the struggle between classes. The best approach to understanding the conquest of Canaan is one which is rooted in the biblical materials.

See Achan; Ai; Exodus; Gilgal; Jericho; Joshua.

Bob R. Ellis

CONSCIENCE refers in general to that human moral awareness that judges an action right or wrong.

Although the word "conscience" does appear in the Old Testament, the Hebrew word usually translated "heart" does refer to conscience in a number of passages, for example, "Afterward... David's heart smote him" (1 Sam. 24:5). Compare 2 Samuel 24:10; Job 27:6. The New Testament also uses this Hebraic reference to conscience: "if our heart condemn us" (1 John 3:20–21.) The word for "reins" or "kidneys" sometimes refers to conscience. In Psalm 16:7 the psalmist thanked God for giving him counsel and because his reins or kidneys admonished him, meaning his conscience reproved him. (See Ps. 73:21 for "heart" and "reins" in the same verse.)

"Conscience" in the New Testament is the translation of a Greek word derived from a verb that means "to know with." This suggests a moral consciousness which compares an action with a standard. Paul, it seems, took a word from popular Greek usage in Corinth and used it to reply to some of the Corinthian Christians. For Paul, God is the Creator and Sustainer of all things. God judges persons by His standards as revealed in Jesus Christ. These standards are reflected in His creation and especially in persons who are morally responsible because of their capacity of choice. To Paul the "conscience" is a person's painful reaction to a past act which does not meet the standard. A person can react wrongly because of wrong information, wrong environment, and wrong habit. Yet Paul would have said that, in spite of these liabilities, a person's conscience must be obeyed. Paul, however, would not have said that a person has no other guide. If past actions have not been such as to produce painful reactions, the person is said to have a "pure conscience" (1 Tim. 3:9; 2 Tim. 1:3). When sensitive and active in judging past acts, the conscience is said to be "good" (Acts 23:1; 1 Tim. 1:5,19; 1 Pet. 3:16,21; Heb. 13:18) or "void of offence toward God" (Acts 24:16). If the conscience is not active in judging past acts, it is said to be "weak" (1 Cor. 8:7,10,12) and may be wounded (1 Cor. 8:12). When the conscience is insensitive, it is "seared" (1 Tim. 4:2). The sinful conscience is "defiled" (Titus 1:15) or "evil" (Heb. 10:22).

In 1 Corinthians 4:4, Paul used the verb from which the word for "conscience" is derived. He wrote: "For I know nothing by myself." This phrase means "my conscience does not accuse me." Paul completed the sentence by saying: "yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord." Paul, in short, taught that a pure conscience is valuable, but that Christ is the final standard by which a person is judged.

H. Page Lee

CONSECRATION refers to persons or things being separated to or belonging to God. They are holy or sacred. They are set apart for the service of God. The Hebrew kadosh and Greek hagiazo are translated by several different English words: holy, consecrate, hallow, sanctify, dedicate.

Old Testament God is said to be kadosh or "holy." When persons or things were "consecrated," they were separated to or belonged to God. "Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2). "Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Ex. 19:6). When persons were "consecrated," they were set apart to live according to God's demands and in His service.

In the Old Testament the ordination of persons to the service of God is indicated by the phrase "to fill the hand." This phrase is usually translated "consecrate" or "ordain."

Numbers 6:1–21 sets forth the vow of the Nazirite. Nazar from which Nazirite is derived, means "to separate" and is translated "consecrate" in Numbers 6:7, 9, 12.

New Testament This ethical understanding of God's holiness is found throughout the New Testament. In Matthew 23:16–24 Jesus criticized the scribes and Pharisees on the basis of their neglect of justice, mercy, and faith. He said it is "the altar that sanctifieth the gift" (Matt. 23:19). The cause to which persons give themselves determines the nature of the sacrifice. When the cause is God's, the gift is consecrated. Jesus' mission was to sanctify persons. Paul said that Christians are called to be "saints," and their sanctification comes through Christ. H. Page Lee CONSOLATION Comfort which eases grief and pain. The Hebrew terms are closely related to the words for compassion—nichum, nocham. See Compassion. Job's integrity with God's instructions gave him consolation despite his grief and pain (Job 6:10). David sent servants to console Hanun, king of Ammon, after his father died (2 Sam. 10:1–2). People brought food and drink to console the grieving (Jer. 16:7; compare John 11:19). God's response to prayer brings consolation to the worried soul (Ps. 94:19). Even as God destroyed Jerusalem, He provided consolation in the person of faithful survivors (Ezek. 14:22–23).

Israel's ultimate hope was the consolation only the Messiah could bring. The faithful waited expectantly for this (Luke 2:25; compare Isa. 40:1–2). Those who trust in riches rather than in the coming of the Son of Man have all the consolation they will receive (Luke 6:24). Believers receive consolation through the ministry of proclamation (1 Cor. 14:3).

CONSTELLATIONS See Astrology, Astronomy, Heavens.

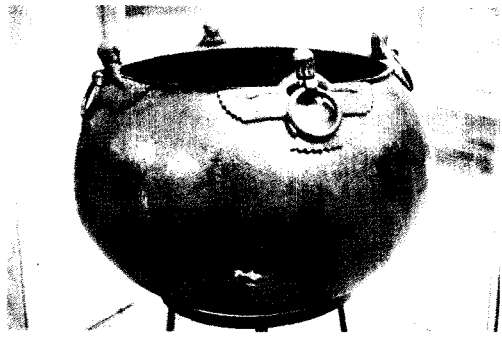
CONSUMMATION The end of history and the fulfillment of God's kingdom promises. The term comes from Daniel 9:27 speaking of the complete destruction God had decreed on the prince who threatened His sanctuary. See Eschatology.

CONSUMPTION A wasting or emaciating disease that would be inflicted upon those who disobeyed the law (Lev. 26:16; Deut. 28:22). The disease has been identified as pulmonary tuberculosis (phthisis) or as the side effects of wasting and emaciation from prolonged bouts of malarial fever. Some have even suggested cancer. The KJV uses consumption in Isaiah 10:22; 28:22 where modern versions translate "destruction."

CONTAINERS AND VESSELS were hollow receptacles used to hold dry or liquid substances. The Bible mentions numerous containers and vessels. They range from pottery dishes, bowls, urns, and jugs to baskets, metalware, cloth and leather bags and on to wooden boxes and bowls and glassware of all shapes and sizes. By far the most common vessel was made of clay.

Stoneware was the first to be produced. Archaeologists have found crude stone vessels from the oldest periods of mankind's history, dating them from the Paleolithic (Old Stone) and Epipaleolithic (Middle Stone) Ages (700,000 to 8300 B.C.). The Neolithic (New Stone) and Chalcolithic Ages (8300 to 3100 B.C.) saw advances in the production of stoneware as humans became producers of food rather than merely gatherers and hunters. Larger and deeper vessels were needed. In the Ancient Near East the Egyptians excelled at the craft of making stoneware.



As mankind progressed through the Neolithic Age, the most marked change in containers was the ability to form them by mixing clay, water, and fire. The first pottery vessels were simple, unglazed bowls and jars.

Early clay vessels were "fired" simply by letting them stay out in the sun. Unfortunately, they could not be used to hold liquids; for they returned to their muddy stage if they came in contact with a fluid. Firing progressed to the next stage probably by accident when a house burned and the mud-clay pottery inside hardened beyond anything yet produced. This led to a more advanced firing by simply holding the molded vessels over an open flame.

The Chalcolithic era brought about another monumental change in pottery making. A slow potter's wheel was introduced. This made production faster and more uniform. The Egyptians claim responsibility for this development.

Incense bowls and jars are other large categories of vessels produced during the Chalcolithic period. The bowls usually were broad and half-rounded. The jars ranged from small hole-mouthed and high-necked containers decorated with red bands to the large storage vessels decorated with bands that resemble ropes set in relief.

A large copper (or bronze) caldron of the Phrygian period from Gordion in Asia Minor.

This imported Mycenean pottery and local ware (14th century B.C.) from Hazor indicates trade with Greeks.

Bronze Age (3100–1200 B.C.) pottery containers marked a distinct individuality based on different regions. Typical of the vessels from northern Palestine are jars of the grain-wash or band-slip techniques. Potters painted the containers with criss-crossing bands in vivid colors (dark and light brown, red, and yellow). Also indicative of this region are burnished vessels, those polished to a luster.

In southern Palestine a different type of pottery emerged during the Bronze Age. Red painted wares have been found in abundance in the south. Vessels of all shapes and sizes, including jugs, juglets, jars, and even "teapots" with long spouts and loop handles exhibit the same decorative characteristics.

During the Middle Bronze Age (2200–1550 B.C.) several new features were introduced to the vessels and containers of Palestine. Carinated (ridged rims) bowls and goblets, deep kraters, and storage jars with rounded shoulders marked a further advance in the potter's skill. Primary to all these advances was the ability to produce the entire vessel on the wheel. This enabled a potter to make the more intricate shapes.

The Late Bronze Age (1550–1200 B.C.) saw the introduction of bowls with tapering or rounded sides. Black and red bands painted on the inside were the normal form of decoration. Imports from Cyprus and Mycenae abounded, especially large, rounded bowls with wishbone handles. These came to be known as "milk bowls." Highly distinctive decorations were used by the Mycenaeans. They painted their ware with bands, spirals, scales, and even leaves.

Major changes marked the transition from the Bronze Age to the Iron Age (1200–586 B.C.). Instead of the rounded shapes, containers became more angular. Burnishing replaced painted decorations. Many potters began putting multiple handles on their ware, often as many as four. Chalices were very popular. With the rise of the monarchy came jar handles stamped with the royal seals.

Philistine ware made its debut during this period. Some of the liquid containers had strainers in the spouts to prevent the dregs (pulp and debris that usually settled to the bottom) from coming out with the liquid. Philistine ware is an amalgamation of Mycenaean types with clear influences from Egypt and Canaan. Red and black decorations, especially people and animals, are typical of this type pottery.

Chalice and bowl in situ at the excavations at biblical Timnah.

Alexander the Great brought to the Middle East the Hellenistic culture and its large variety of ceramic ware. Large, heavy vessels mark this period. They show a uniformity of style owing to the Greek dominance of all major production centers.

By the time Rome conquered Palestine in 63 B.C., a new type of cylindrical jar with angular to rounded shoulders appeared. It had a ring base and a rim made to receive a lid. This type vessel made an excellent storage jar for solids, especially scrolls. The famous Dead Sea Scrolls were kept in these finely-crafted containers for almost two thousand years.

Metalware has been found in abundance in the lands of the Bible. Although palaces and temples often had vessels made of gold or silver, by far the most common material for metalware was an alloy of copper and tin called bronze. Pure copper rarely was used.

Storage jars (dating from the Minoan Age) at the palace of Minos at Knossos on the island of Crete.

Wood was used to produce storage boxes and bowls. Boxes were made by nailing together planks, whereas bowls usually were hollowed from single pieces of wood. More wooden containers have been found in Egypt partly because the climate is more conducive to their preservation than other parts of the Middle East.

Glass has a long history in the Middle East. Obsidian (volcanic glass) was brought into Palestine from Anatolia as early as 5000 B.C. Manufactured glass began to appear after 2500 B.C., but vessels made of glass did not appear until about 1500 B.C.

Glass containers were made by molding the molten material around a solid core of the desired shape. Highly-skilled artisans created pieces that imitated precious stones such as lapis lazuli and turquoise.

Again, only royalty and temples owned glassware. Practically all found so far in Palestine was imported from Egypt. The glass industry reached its zenith there between 1400 and 1300 B.C. One of the few artifacts not from Egypt is a conical beaker from Mesopotamia, found at Megiddo.

Glass drinking bowls became popular in Palestine by 200 B.C. Most of that found in Palestine originated in Phoenicia. The method used still was molding the glass over an object. About 50 B.C. came the revolutionary invention of glass blowing. This method was quicker and less expensive than creating molds for each desired type of vessel. Discovered probably in Phoenicia, blown glass became the vessels of choice in Palestine during the Roman period. Palestinian artists became famous for their brown glass. Many even began signing their creations—the first known designer products in history. Mike Mitchell

CONTENTMENT An internal satisfaction which does not demand changes in external circumstances. The New Testament expresses this with the Greek word arkew and its derivatives. Hebrews 13:15 summarizes the teaching in advising believers to be free of the love of money and to depend on God's promise not to forsake His people. Food and lodging should be enough for the godly (1 Tim. 6:6–10; compare Matt. 6:34; contrast Luke 12:19). The believer can be content no matter what the outward circumstances (Phil. 4:11–13). Believers are content to know the Father (John 14:8–9) and depend on His grace (2 Cor. 12:9–10; compare 2 Cor. 9:8–11).

CONTRIBUTION FOR THE SAINTS An offering for the church at Jerusalem that Paul raised among the churches outside of Jerusalem. When Paul and Barnabas visited the church in Jerusalem, they made a commitment to the leaders there to remember the poor in Jerusalem (Gal. 2:1–10).

Exactly why the church in Jerusalem had so many poor people is not clear. These Christians may have been economically isolated by the other Jews in Jerusalem.

Paul was true to his promise to help the poor in Jerusalem. He organized an offering among the churches he visited and established on his second and third missionary journeys.

Paul urged the church at Corinth to give to this offering (1 Cor. 16:1–4). He evidently promoted the offering in the churches of Galatia (1 Cor. 16:1) and in the churches of Macedonia (2 Cor. 8:1). When the offering lagged in Corinth, he encouraged the church to give generously (2 Cor. 8—9).

He mentioned the offering to the Romans (Rom. 15:25–28). He pointed out that the offering was prompted by the sense of spiritual indebtedness that all of the other churches had toward the church in Jerusalem. Paul probably also promoted the offering as a way of building unity between Jewish and Gentile Christians.

When the offering was completed among the churches, the money was sent to Jerusalem. Paul accompanied some members of those churches to Jerusalem to deliver the offering (1 Cor. 16:3, Acts 24:17). See Jerusalem; Stewardship; Paul; Corinth. Lynn Jones

CONTRITE To be humble and repentant before God, crushed by the sense of guilt and sinfulness. This Old Testament concept is expressed by the Hebrew word daka' and its derivatives. The basic meaning is to be crushed or beaten to pieces. This meaning appears in the crushing of the golden calf (Ex. 32:20) or the crushing of grain during threshing (Isa. 28:28). Crushing enemies is a frequent theme (Ps. 89:11). God taught Israel not to crush the poor (Prov. 22:22). Indeed, the king is to crush the oppressor who harms the poor (Ps. 72:4). In Psalm 9:9, the poor are referred to as the crushed (literal translation) and assured God is their "refuge." Compare Ps. 143:3. They can thus come to God in prayer, knowing what God wants is a broken spirit and a contrite heart (Ps. 51:17). God will revive the spirit of such a one (Isa. 57:15; compare 66:2; Ps. 34:18).

God's plan of salvation rests on God being pleased to crush His Suffering Servant (Isa. 53:10 NAS). This One will finally be exalted (Isa. 52:13).

CONVERSATION Communication between two or more people (Jer. 38:27 in modern translations) or personal conduct or behavior in KJV's now obsolete use of the term (Ps. 37:14; Gal. 1:13; Jas. 3:3).

CONVERSION A person's turning to God. Conversion is the experience of an individual who encounters God's reality or purpose and responds to that encounter in personal faith and commitment.

The Old Testament frequently uses the term both in a noun and verb form. The psalmist said that, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul" (19:7). He affirmed that "sinners shall be converted unto thee" (51:13). God declared to Isaiah that "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness" (Isa. 1:27). Isaiah was told that Israel's heart would be hardened lest the people would "understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed" (6:10).

The New Testament uses the noun form only once in referring to "the conversion of the Gentiles" (Acts 15:3) but uses the term repeatedly in other forms. Three of the Gospels make reference to Isaiah 6:10 (Matt. 13:15; Mark 4:12, John 12:40). Jesus admonished His disciples, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:3). He told Simon Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke 22:32). The Book of Acts refers repeatedly to the importance of conversion, beginning with Peter's words, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted" (3:19). Acts uses the term most frequently in describing a person turning to God (Acts 15:19, 26:20) or turning "from darkness to light" (26:18), or from "these vanities unto the living God" (14:15). Other New Testament references speak of turning from idols to serve the living God (1 Thess. 1:9) and turning so that "the veil shall be taken away" (2 Cor. 3:16). James encourages us with the words "that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death" (Jas. 5:20).

Biblical Examples of Conversion The Old Testament records experiences of several men who in the most basic sense turned to God (they were converted). Of course, they did not have the benefit of later revelation or the understanding that comes from the gospel; but they were confronted by God in a way that made them conscious of sin. As a result, they turned to God in self-surrender. Jacob's experience with God at Bethel was a kind of conversion (Gen. 32). Moses, at the burning bush, was surely given a call to mission, and some would call it a conversion (Ex. 3). Isaiah had an experience with God that undoubtedly changed his life (Isa. 6). One of the most notable conversions in the Old Testament would have to be that of the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar, who through a series of unusual circumstances turned to "the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase" (Dan. 4:37).

In the New Testament the list of conversions is much more lengthy. In a very real sense all of the apostles were converted to the messiahship of Jesus and forsook everything to follow Him. The Gospels recount numerous encounters that Jesus had with individuals that resulted in their acknowledging Him as the Christ. They then experienced a radical change in their lives: Zacchaeus (Luke 19), the woman at the well at Sychar (John 4), the sinful woman in the house of Simon (Luke 7), and Nicodemus (John 3). The Book of Acts records a number of individual conversions, the most notable of which are the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8), Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9), and Cornelius (Acts 10). In addition, several references to large numbers of conversions appear (Acts 2:41; 9:35; 11:21).

The biblical evidence, both within the Old and New Testaments, emphasizes the importance of conversion. Persons need to be converted. They are commanded to be converted and can be converted. Conversion is necessary because of sin. Conversion is made possible by the goodness and grace of God.

The Character of Conversion Christian conversion is the experience of an individual in which one turns from sin and trusts in Jesus Christ for salvation. It is personal and inward in nature, but is results in a public and outward change. Each individual's conversion is unique; yet the requirements of conversion are the same for everyone. An individual's conversion will be influenced by temperament, knowledge, and people; but each conversion is the result of the same gospel and the same Spirit.

The characteristics of conversion are summarized in 2 Corinthians 5:17, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." A change of the mind, emotions, and will is the result of conversion. The mind is changed in that it seeks to know the truth and accept the truth, whereas before conversion the mind resisted the truth. The emotions are changed in that evil is hated and righteousness is loved, whereas before conversion evil was loved and righteousness was hated. In conversion the will is changed so that it turns away from sin in humble submission to the will of God.

Conversion does not result in Christian maturity, but it does begin the process that leads to maturity. Conversion does not cause perfection, but it radically redirects the personality.

The Causes of Conversion The cause of conversion is the sovereign grace and mercy of God. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8). The finished work of Christ on the cross is the basis and foundation of individual conversion. That finished work is the result of God's grace. Whatever means and methods God uses to influence individuals—the preaching and teaching of truth, the prayers of the church, the circumstances of life—are the result of God's grace. In conversion God takes the initiative; God causes understanding; God creates desire; God enables response.

The cause of conversion is a confrontation and encounter with God. In genuine conversion one is confronted with the living Christ and faced with decision. It is a personal event, concentrated and focused. Surely every person's conversion will not be as dramatic as someone else's may be, but every person must personally come face to face with Jesus Christ to claim a conversion. Confrontation is not just acceptance of ideas or intellectual assent to plan of salvation. It is not just agreeing to some facts. It involves acceptance of a Person and acknowledging that acceptance to Him. Confrontation is saying to Jesus Christ, "I accept You as my Lord. I trust You for my salvation."

The cause of conversion is conviction that is the result of the Holy Spirit's witness to the Word of God (John 16:7–11). Christian conversion must be preceded by a basic understanding of the gospel story, some cognitive grasp of truth, a minimal acquaintance with God's redemptive work in Christ. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). The truth of the gospel causes concern and leads people to ask the question asked of Simon Peter after his Pentecost sermon, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 2:37). The clear presentation of God's requirements, man's failures, and God's provision for sinful man in Jesus Christ creates the opportunity for conversion as well as the opportunity for rejection.

The Conditions of Conversion If conversion is the result of grace on God's part, it is the result of repentance and faith on a person's part. Repentance is turning from sin and self-centeredness to God and His will. It is a redirection of life, a change of mind, a radical break with the past.

Faith is essentially trust. Faith is trust in Christ and His redemptive sacrifice. It is believing in Him alone for salvation. Faith is receiving the grace God revealed through the Person and work of His Son. The numerous admonitions of Scripture are to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation (John 3:16; Acts 16:31; 1 John 5:13). Belief is more than acceptance of the historical Jesus. It is a personal trust in the living Christ who lived, died, and rose again. It is trust to the point of commitment and surrender to the will of Christ.

See Regeneration; Repentance. Daniel Vestal

CONVICTION A sense of guilt and shame leading to repentance. The words "convict" and "conviction" do not appear in the King James Version. The word "convince" (KJV) comes closest to expressing the meaning of "conviction."

The Hebrew word yakah expresses the idea of conviction. It means "to argue with," "to prove," "to correct." God may be the subject and persons the object (Job 22:4) or a person may be the subject who convicts another person (Ezek. 3:26).

The Greek term meaning "convict" is elegxo. It means "to convict" "to refute," "to confute," usually with the suggestion of shame of the person convicted. Young ministers like Timothy and Titus had the responsibility of "convicting" (rebuking, refuting) those under their charge (1 Tim. 5:20; 2 Tim. 4:2; Titus 1:13; 2:15). John the Baptist "convicted" Herod Antipas because of his illicit marriage to Herodias, his brother's wife (Luke 3:19). No one could convict Jesus of sin (John 8:46).

John 16:8–11 is a classic passage on conviction. The Holy Spirit is the One who convicts, and the (inhabited) world is the object of conviction. A study of this passage yields the following results. First, conviction for sin is the result of the Holy Spirit awakening humanity to a sense of guilt and condemnation because of sin and unbelief. Second, more than mental conviction is intended. The total person is involved. This can lead to action based on a sense of conviction. Third, the conviction results in hope, not despair. Once individuals are made aware of their estranged relationship with God, they are challenged and encouraged to mend that relationship. The conviction not only implies the exposure of sin (despair) but also a call to repentance (hope).

See Sin; Forgiveness; Repentance.

Glenn McCoy

CONVOCATION, HOLY See Festivals.

COOKING AND HEATING Only in recent times have cooking and heating become separated, so that central heating, for example, works independently of the microwave. In Bible times, the means of heating was the means of cooking. Heating was by open fire, and cooking was done at the same time.

The basic focus for cooking and heating was the open fire. The bedouin encampment could be recognized by the fires at night outside and in front of the tents. The fire was laid in a hollow scooped out of the ground or on flat stones. The fire was ignited by friction or by firing tinder with sparks (Isa. 50:7,11). Many of the stories of the Bible were preserved, originally as folk memories, remembered word for word around the camp fires lit for warmth on cool evenings in the arid climate or in the high terrain. The people of the Bible were fortunate because the white broom plant was useful in making fires. Its embers stayed hot for a long time and could be fanned into a blaze even when they looked dead. Less useful, but equally combustible materials were thorns (Isa. 10:17), dried grass (Matt. 6:30), charcoal (John 18:18), sticks, and dried animal dung (Ezek. 4:15).

When people of the Bible moved from tents and settled in houses, fires for cooking were still generally lit out-of-doors. If the house had a courtyard, the fire was made somewhere in the corner as the farthest place away from the smoke. Very few houses had a chimney; and even though the fire was put into an earthenware box or was contained in a metal brazier, there was no exit for the smoke. Life must have been quite miserable during the damp and cold winters of the Holy Land. A fire was necessary to keep warm, but the only window needed rough curtaining with a blanket. The smoke had little space to exit, so it blackened the rough ceiling and made the householders choke and splutter. Later better homes were provided with a chimney, and the houses of royalty actually had a form of central heating in which the heat of underfloor fires was ducted underneath paved rooms.

Middle Eastern woman sifting grain with a type of sifting frame.

Arab woman using an ancient hand mill to grind grain.

In patriarchal times food consisted basically of bread, milk products, meat, and honey. Wine was the most common drink. Cooking, therefore, consisted of the preparation of such foods. Grain (spelt, barley, or wheat—preferred in that order) had first to be cleaned and selected. It was necessary to remove any poisonous seeds such as darnel (tares Matt. 13:25). Then it was ground either in a pestle and mortar or in a hand mill. The hand mill was made of two disks of stone about twelve inches in diameter. The lower stone had an upright wooden peg at its center, and the upper stone had a hole through the center which fitted over the peg. A handle fixed to the upper stone allowed it to be rotated about the peg. Grain was fed through the central hole. As the upper stone was rotated the grain was crushed, coming out as flour between the two stones and falling onto a cloth placed below. Any woman could manage a hand mill, but it was much easier if two women shared in the task, sitting with the mill between them and alternately turning the handle (Matt. 24:41). It was a chore and was therefore given to the slaves when this was possible (Lam. 5:13), but it was a chore which made a sound always associated with home. (See Jer. 25:10.) The flour was mixed with water and formed into dough cakes in a trough called a kneading trough. Salt was added, and most days of the year, leaven was added too. Leaven was fermented dough from the previous day's baking. It took longer to penetrate the dough than if fresh yeast was used, but that was reserved for the time following the festival of Unleavened Bread, and the normal method was just as certain. Some of the grain was finely ground and was given a special name. It was the finely ground flour which was used in sacrificial offerings (Ex. 29:40).

Cooking consisted of the application of (relatively) clean heat. In some cases large flat stones were put in the hot fire. When the flames had died down, the dough was placed on the hot stones. In other cases, where the fire was placed in a hole in the ground, the dough was actually placed on the hot sides of the depression. Another common method was to invert a shallow pottery bowl over the fire, and place the dough cakes on the bowl's convex surface. It was many years before the pottery "oven" was invented. It consisted of a truncated cone which was placed over the fire. The cakes of bread were then placed on the inside of the cone at the top, away from the flames. Not until Roman times were pottery ovens in use where the firebox was separated from the cooking area by a clay dividing piece. This method was maintained for centuries. The cooking resulted in different shapes of bread. Some loaves were paper-thin and were most suitable for scooping food from a common pot (Matt. 26:23). Other loaves (John 6:9) were heavier, like biscuits, and a still heavier loaf is described in Judges 7:13 where it knocked down a tent.

As communities grew larger, the baker developed his trade and provided facilities for the whole village. His oven was tunnel-shaped. Shelves lined the sides for the dough, and fires were lit on the floor. It was possible for the housewife to take her own dough to be cooked in the communal oven, and possible for the children to collect hot embers at the end of the day for kindling fires in their own homes. (See Hos. 7:4–7.) Jeremiah received a bread ration from the local bakery while he was in prison (Jer. 37:21).

Not all of the grain was ground. A metal baking sheet was sometimes placed over the hot fire and grain put on the metal surface. The grain "popped" and provided what the Bible calls parched corn (1 Sam. 25:18), which was used as an occasional snack.

The basic food to go with the bread was vegetable soup prepared from beans, green vegetables, and herbs. A large cooking pot was put directly on the fire and was used for this purpose. The pottage which Jacob gave to Esau was a lentil soup (Gen. 25:30). It was eaten by forming a scoop with a piece of bread, and dipping it in the central pot. When soups were made, the cook had to remember that ritual law forbad the mixing of seeds for this purpose (based on Lev. 19:19). When a special occasion was called for, as at the arrival of a guest, meat would be added to the stock. Most meat was boiled or stewed in this way and was taken either from the herd or in the hunt. Boiling was the easiest way to deal with meat because ritual law required that the blood should be drained from the animal (Lev. 17:10–11). It was therefore easiest to cut up the carcass before putting it in a stew. Meat was normally roasted only at festivals and very special days such as Passover (Ex. 12:8–9). It was sometimes roasted on a spit which was speared through the animal and supported over the fire. Since the main altar at Temple and tabernacle was a kind of barbecue in which the carcass was laid on a grill above a fire, it would be unusual if similar arrangements were not sometimes used domestically. Meat was always available from the sheep and goats of the flock, but the hunting of wild animals which came up from the jungle in the Jordan Valley was popular. Veal was served to Abraham's guests in Genesis 18:7, while Gideon's guests ate goat meat (Judg. 6:19). Milk, too, was used as a basic cookery material; but it was forbidden to stew a kid in its mother's milk (Ex. 23:19). The reason for this is not clear. Guesses have been made that the commandment was given for "humanitarian" reasons, or that the practice was somehow associated with magic in contemporary religious life.

Bread is being cooked here in an outdoor truncated cone-shaped "pottery oven."

Bread being cooked on an inverted shallow skillet over an open flame.

By the time the Jewish people had settled in the Promised Land, additions had been made to their diet. While they were in Egypt, they had gotten used to some of the food which was popular in that country—cucumber, garlic, leeks, onions, and melons (Num. 11:5). Some of these plants were uncooked and were used to eat with bread or as a salad. Others were cooked to give additional flavor to the cooking pot. The leek was a salad leek, and the cucumber the "snake cucumber" which was common in Egypt. With the growth of trade under the Israelite monarchy, these items became fairly common in the diet. In addition to onions and garlic, herbs were used in cooking to add to the flavor. Salt was collected during the hot season from the shores of the Dead Sea after evaporation had left it behind. Salt was used for preservation as well as for seasoning. Liberal use was made of dill, cummin (Isa. 28:25–27) and coriander and sugar. Spicy chutneys were also prepared to give added flavor to the food. The charoseth used at the Passover was a chutney made of dates, figs, raisins, and vinegar.

The big difference when the settlement took place was that the Jews began to use fruit from the trees. They built plantations and orchards. Most significant in this respect was the olive. After the olives had been beaten from the trees and crushed in the olive press, the olive oil was used both for binding the flour instead of water, and for frying. A whole new era of cookery was opened. The woman from Zarephath who cared for Elijah needed only some flour (meal) and some olive oil to be able to survive through the time of famine (1 Kings 17:12). Other trees provided basic food which was eaten either raw or stewed—figs, sycamore figs, pomegranates, and nuts.

Milk has already been mentioned as a liquid for stewing meat and vegetables. It was also drunk for itself and used in the preparation of other foods. Some milk was fermented to produce yogurt. It is in fact still called "milk" in some versions of the Bible (Judg. 4:19). Milk was used to make cheese (1 Sam. 17:18) and when placed in a skin bag to be shaken and squeezed by turn, butter was produced. Buttermilk was presumably used as well, but there is no mention of this in the Bible.

By New Testament times, fish was a common addition to the diet. Much of the fish was imported from the Phoenicians, who caught fish in the Mediterranean. Fishing industry also thrived on the Sea of Galilee. Fish was most commonly grilled over a fire (John 21:9) or was salted and eaten later. Magdala, the home of Mary Magdalene, was a well-known center for the salting of fish.

Wine was always available, even among the nomadic people. When entry to the Promised Land took place, it was possible for the people of the Bible to go into viticulture in a big way, and the preparation of the grapes was an important aspect of cooking. Some grapes were dried in the hot sun to become raisins—a substantial snack when they were needed. Most of the grapes however were crushed to obtain their juice. This was a long "cooking" operation. Picked between July and September, the grapes were placed in a winepress—a stone "tank" cut out of the ground with an exit hole in the bottom where the juice ran out and could be collected outside. The juice stood in the collecting vessels for about six weeks to allow natural fermentation to take place. It was then carefully poured off to leave any sludge undisturbed in the bottom and was placed in another jar, sealed except for a small hole to allow gases to escape until the fermentation process was complete. The wine was the natural and safest drink because water supplies were often suspect. Not all of the wine was used for drinking. The housewife sometimes boiled up the juice to make a simple grape jelly or jam, which was spread on the bread. This was so plentiful that it may well be the "honey" which is referred to in the phrase referring to the "land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3:8, 17). Ralph Gower

COOS (Cō′ ŏs) KJV spelling for Cos. See Cos.

COPING Traditional translation of a Hebrew architectural term in 1 King 7:9. The meaning of the Hebrew word is unknown. NIV, TEV reads "eaves." Recent scholars see it as the "framework" meaning a row of stone or wood headers and stretchers above the various levels of the foundation on which bricks were laid. The Hebrew word also occurs in Exodus 25:25; 37:12; Isaiah 48:13.

COPPER See Minerals and Metals.

COPPERSMITH A term applied in ancient times to metal-workers or blacksmiths in general. The name Kenite means "smith" (see Kenite). A certain Alexander was a coppersmith who caused trouble in the early church (2 Tim. 4:14).

Miniature copper tools for shawabtis (small god symbols) from Egypt, New Kingdom.

COR A large liquid and dry measure of unknown quantity. See Weights and Measures.

CORAL Calcareous or horny skeletal deposit produced by anthozoan polyps. The red or precious coral found exclusively in the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas (Corallium rubrum) is the type known to the biblical writers. The value of wisdom surpasses the value of gold, silver, a variety of precious stones, crystal, or coral (Job 28:12–18). Coral was among the goods of trade between Israel and Edom (Ezek. 27:16).

CORBAN (Côr′ băn) A gift particularly designated for the Lord, and so forbidden for any other use (Mark 7:11). Jesus referred to some persons who mistakenly and deliberately avoided giving needed care to their parents by declaring as "corban" any money or goods that could otherwise be used to provide such care. Thus what began as a religious act of offering eventually functioned as a curse, denying benefit to one's own parents. See Sacrifice; Offering. Gene Henderson

CORE (Cō′ rē) KJV transliteration of Greek spelling of Korah in Jude 11. See Korah.

CORIANDER SEED A herb (Coriandrum sativum) of the carrot family with aromatic fruits used much as poppy, caraway, or sesame seeds are today. The manna of the wilderness period was like coriander seed either in appearance (Ex. 16:31) or taste (Num. 11:7).

CORINTH One of four prominent centers in the New Testament account of the early church, the other three being Jerusalem, Antioch of Syria, and Ephesus. Paul's first extended ministry in one city was at Corinth. On his first visit to Corinth, he remained for at least eighteen months (Acts

The columns of the temple of Apollo at Corinth.

18:1–18). Paul's three longest letters are associated with Corinth. First and Second Corinthians were written to Corinth, and Romans, from Corinth. Prominent Christian leaders associated with Corinth include Aquila, Priscilla, Silas, Timothy, Apollos, and Titus.

History of Corinth Corinth was located on the southwest end of the isthmus that joined the southern part of the Greek peninsula with the mainland to the north. The city was located on an elevated plain at the foot of Acrocorinth, a rugged hill reaching 1,886 feet above sea level. Corinth was a maritime city located between two important seaports: the port of Lechaion on the Gulf of Corinth about two miles to the north and the port of Cenchreae on the Saronic Gulf about six miles east of Corinth.

Corinth was an important city long before becoming a Roman colony in 44 B.C. In addition to the extant works of early writers, modern archaeology has contributed to knowledge of ancient Corinth.

The discovery of stone implements and pottery indicates that the area was populated in the Late Stone Age. Metal tools have been found that reveal occupation during the Early Bronze Age (between 3000 B.C. and 2000 B.C.). The rising importance of Corinth during the classical period began with the Dorian invasion about 1000 B.C.

Located at the foot of Acrocorinth and at the southwest end of the isthmus, Corinth was relatively easy to defend. The Corinthians controlled the east-west trade across the isthmus as well as trade between Peloponnesus and the area of Greece to the north. The city experienced rapid growth and prosperity, even colonizing Siracuse on Sicily and the Island of Corcyra on the eastern shore of the Adriatic. Pottery and bronze were exported throughout the Mediterranean world.

For a century (about 350 to 250 B.C.) Corinth was the largest and most prosperous city of mainland Greece. Later, as a member of the Achaean League, Corinth clashed with Rome. Finally, the city was destroyed in 146 B.C. L. Mummius, the Roman consul, burned the city, killed the men, and sold the women and children into slavery. For a hundred years the city was desolate.

Julius Caesar rebuilt the city in 44 B.C., and it quickly became an important city in the Roman Empire. An overland shiproad across the isthmus connected the ports of Lechaion and Cenchreae. Cargo from large ships was unloaded, transported across the isthmus, and reloaded on other ships. Small ships were moved across on a system of rollers. Ships were able, therefore, to avoid 200 miles of stormy travel around the southern part of the Greek peninsula.

Description of Corinth in Paul's Day When Paul visited Corinth, the rebuilt city was little more than a century old. It had become, however, an important metropolitan center. Except where the city was protected by Acrocorinth, a wall about six miles in circumference surrounded it. The Lechaion road entered the city from the north, connecting it with the port on the Gulf of Corinth. As the road entered the city, it widened to more than twenty feet with walks on either side. From the southern part of the city a road ran southeast to Cenchreae.

A first century A.D. street at Corinth. The Acrocorinth (mountain) is in the background.

Approaching the city from the north, the Lechaion road passed through the Propylaea, the beautiful gate marking the entrance into the agora (market). The agora was rectangular and contained many shops. A line of shops divided the agora into a northern and a southern section. Near the center of this dividing line the Bema was located. The Bema consisted of a large elevated speaker's platform and benches on the back and sides. Here is probably the place Paul was brought before Gallio (Acts 18:12–17).

The "bema," or judgment seat, at Corinth.

Religions of Corinth Although the restored city of Paul's day was a Roman city, the inhabitants continued to worship Greek gods. West of the Lechaion road and north of the agora stood the old temple of Apollo. Probably partially destroyed by Mummius in 146 B.C., seven of the original thirty-eight columns still stand. On the east side of the road was the shrine to Apollo. In the city were shrines also to Hermes, Heracles, Athena, and Poseidon.

Corinth had a famous temple dedicated to Asclepius, the god of healing, and his daughter Hygieia. Several buildings were constructed around the temple for the sick who came for healing. The patients left at the temple terra cotta replicas of the parts of their bodies that had been healed. Some of these replicas have been found in the ruins.

The most significant pagan cult in Corinth was the cult of Aphrodite. The worship of Aphrodite had flourished in old Corinth before its destruction in 146 B.C. and was revived in Roman Corinth. A temple for the worship of Aphrodite was located on the top of the Acropolis.

Summary The city of Corinth as Paul found it was a cosmopolitan city composed of people from varying cultural backgrounds. Being near the site of the Isthmian games held every two years, the Corinthians enjoyed both the pleasures of these games and the wealth that the visitors brought to the city. While their ships were being carried across the isthmus, sailors came to the city to spend their money on the pleasures of Corinth. Even in an age of sexual immorality, Corinth was known for its licentious life-style. R.E. Glaze

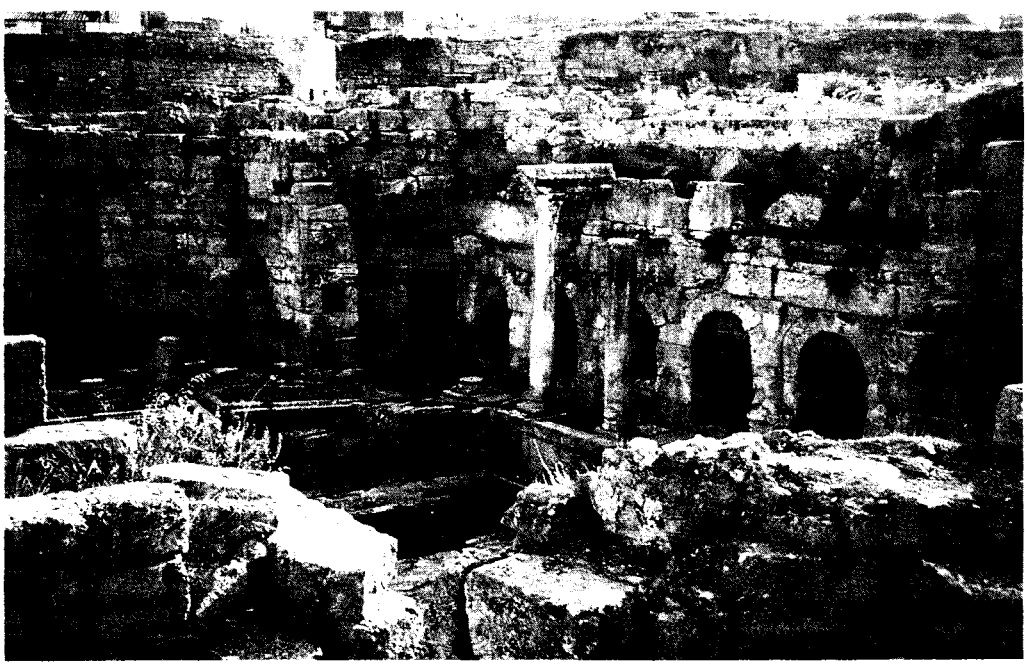
1 CORINTHIANS First Corinthians is a practical letter. Paul dealt with problems concerning the church as a whole and also with personal problems.

Paul's First Ministry in Corinth A brief survey of Paul's contacts with Corinth will aid in understanding his correspondence with Corinth. In a vision at Troas on his second missionary journey, Paul heard the call, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us" (Acts 16:9). Paul and his party went to Philippi and established work there. Following their release from prison, Paul and Silas went to Thessalonica. Although a work was established there, persecution arose due to the jealousy of the Jews. Paul and Silas moved on Berea, where they were well received. However, Jews from Thessalonica came and stirred up the crowds.



The decision was made for Paul to minister alone in Athens. A comparison of Acts 17:13–15 with 1 Thessalonians 3:6 indicates that Timothy returned to Thessalonica. Silas probably remained at Berea. Paul's ministry was brief in Athens. Some converts were made, but a church was not established. Paul left Athens alone and probably discouraged.

Paul went from Athens to Corinth, where later Silas and Timothy joined him (Acts 18:5). Paul ministered in Corinth at least eighteen months (Acts 18:1–18). He began working with Aquila and Priscilla in tentmaking. Probably, they already were Christians.

Paul left Corinth accompanied by Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:18). He left them at Ephesus and promised the Ephesians that he would return. In the meantime, Aquila and Priscilla instructed Apollos; and he left for Corinth, where he preached for some time (Acts 18:24–28). After visiting Jerusalem and Antioch of Syria, Paul returned to Ephesus for a ministry of more than two years (Acts 19:8–10).

Paul's Contacts with Corinth During His Ephesian Ministry During Paul's Ephesian ministry a series of disturbing events took place relative to Corinth: (1) A party spirit arose in Corinth (1 Cor. 1:12–13; 3:3–4). (2) A series of reports came to Paul, some by those of Chloe (1 Cor. 1:11). These reports included attacks upon Paul (1 Cor. 2:1–10) and problems of immorality (1 Cor. 5:1). (3) Paul wrote a letter warning against fellowship with sexually immoral people (1 Cor. 5:9). This letter is lost unless a portion of it remains in 2 Cor. 6:14—7:1. (4) The Corinthians wrote to Paul (1 Cor. 7:1), asking about certain problems concerning marriage, fornication, and disorders in public worship. (5) A delegation came from Corinth (Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus) with news from Corinth (1 Cor. 16:17). (6) Apollos quit his work in Corinth and returned to Ephesus. Even under Paul's urging, he refused to go back to Corinth (1 Cor. 16:12). (7) Paul sent Timothy to Corinth (1 Cor. 4:17) in an effort to heal the problems. Timothy probably went by way of Macedonia (Acts 19:22; 1 Cor. 16). (8) Paul wrote 1 Corinthians from Ephesus (1 Cor. 16:8), expecting them to receive the letter before the arrival of Timothy (1 Cor. 16:10).

The excavations at Corinth showing the shops in the Agora.

Purpose for Writing First Corinthians Paul wrote 1 Corinthians to give instruction and admonition that would lead to the solving of the many problems in the congregation. Some of these problems may have arisen out of a "super spiritualist" group that had been influenced by incipient gnostic teachings. All of the problems in chapters 1—14 were grounded in egocentric or self-centered attitudes in contrast to self-denying, Christ-centered attitudes. Chapter 15 concerning the resurrection may reflect sincere misconceptions on the part of the Corinthians.

Theme of 1 Corinthians The egocentric life is contrasted with the Christocentric life, or, the mature Christian is characterized by giving, not getting.

Outline

Introduction (1:1–9)

I. Divisions Revealing Carnality and Immaturity Rather than Growth under the Lordship of Christ (1:10—4:21).
   A. Fragmentized by a party spirit (1:10–17)
   B. Christ crucified: a stumbling block to the world in its wisdom, yet the power and wisdom of God (1:18–31)
   C. Paul's preaching by the power of God, not by the wisdom of the world (2:1–5)
   D. God's wisdom revealed to those having the mind of Christ (2:6–16)
   E. The inability of the Corinthians to receive the full message of the gospel (3:1–9)
   F. Responsibility and judgment (3:10–23)
   G. The role of the apostles—"ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God" (4:1–13)
   H. The intent of Paul's rebuke—not to shame but to admonish (4:14–21)

II. Problems of Sexual Immorality (5:1—6:20)
   A. A case of incest (5:1–8)
   B. The right attitude and relationship of the church to fornicators (5:9–13 and 6:9–11)
   C. The error of antinomianism in relation to sex (6:12–20)
   D. Litigation in pagan courts (6:1–8)

III. Marriage and Celibacy (7:1–40)
   A. The sexual relation in marriage (7:1–7)
   B. Advice to the unmarried in view of the sex drive (7:8–9)
   C. Admonition to Christian partners to remain married (7:10–11)
   D. The Christian's responsibility when the marriage partner is not a Christian (7:12–24)
   E. Circumstances under which Paul advised the unmarried to remain as they were (7:25–35)
   F. The responsibility of a father for his virgin daughter (7:36–38)
   G. Advice to widows (7:39–40)

IV. Meat Offered to Idols and Christian Liberty (8:1—11:1)
   A. Liberty and responsibility in relation to meat offered to idols (8:1–13)
   B. Paul's own surrender of apostolic privileges (9:1–23)
   C. The necessity for self-discipline (9:24–27)
   D. Admonition from Israel's wilderness history (10:1–13)
   E. The impossibility of partaking both of the table of the Lord and the table of demons (10:14–22)
   F. A summary of guiding principles (10:23—11:1)

V. Problems in Public Worship (11:2—14:40)
   A. The veiling of women (11:2–16)
   B. Disorders connected with the Lord's Supper (11:17–34)
   C. Spiritual gifts and the supremacy of love (12:1—14:40)

VI. The Resurrection (15:1–58)
   A. The resurrection of Jesus (15:1–29)
   B. The relevance of the hope of the resurrection for the struggles of this life (15:30–34)
   C. The resurrection of the body (15:35–58)

VII. Practical and Personal Matters (16:1–24)

R.E. Glaze

2 CORINTHIANS After writing 1 Corinthians, Paul continued his ministry at Ephesus. This ministry was so successful that "they which dwell in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks" (Acts 19:10). Not so successful, however, was his attempt to solve the problems at Corinth. Even after the writing of 1 Corinthians, trouble continued to grow worse, especially the Corinthians' harsh attacks upon Paul. Divisions within the church and their attacks upon Paul denied the very essence of the gospel that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself . . . and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation" (2 Cor. 5:19).

Contacts between Paul and the Corinthians continued. Reports from Corinth indicated increasing hostility toward Paul. Timothy, whom Paul had sent with the hope that he could resolve the problems, returned to Ephesus and was with Paul when he wrote 2 Corinthians (2 Cor. 1:1).

Paul made a painful visit to Corinth that is not recorded in Acts. Second Corinthians contains three references to this visit. After making this visit, Paul wrote, "But I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in heaviness" (2 Cor. 2:1). The first visit of Acts 18:1–18 was not a painful visit; therefore, the painful visit was a second visit. Also, 2 Corinthians 12:14 and 13:1 indicate that Paul's forthcoming visit would be his third visit.

Paul also wrote a letter of strong rebuke that he regretted after sending it (2 Cor. 7:8). Later, he rejoiced because the letter provoked them to repentance. Titus probably was the bearer of this letter (2 Cor. 8:7, 16–17). This letter was not preserved unless it is chapters 10—13 of 2 Corinthians.

After Titus departed for Corinth, Paul left Ephesus. His heart was heavy because of Corinth. He expected Titus to meet him at Troas with news of reconciliation. Titus did not meet him. Even though Paul found an open door at Troas, his heart was so heavy that he could not minister (2 Cor. 2:12–13). He went on to Macedonia, where Titus finally met him (2 Cor. 7:6–7) and reported improved conditions at Corinth. In response, Paul wrote 2 Corinthians, promising an early visit to them.

Questions have been raised concerning the unity of 2 Corinthians. These questions concern 6:14—7:1 and chapters 10—13. Some see 6:14—7:1 as a part of the previous letter mentioned in 1 Corinthians 5:9. Two arguments favor this view: (1) The verses interrupt the thematic connection between 6:13 and 7:2. (2) Their content fits the description of the letter in 1 Corinthians 5:9. Two arguments oppose this view: (1) There is no manuscript evidence for these verses ever existing outside of 2 Corinthians. (2) It was characteristic of Paul to insert other matters into his main argument.

The suggestion has been made that chapters 10—13 refer to the letter written "out of much affliction and anguish of heart" (2 Cor. 2:4). Two arguments favor this: (1) The tone changes between chapters 9 and 10. Chapters 1—9 reflect restored relations and the absence of hostility. Chapters 10—13 are filled with rebuke and Paul's defense of his apostleship and conduct. (2) Chapters 1—9 reflect Paul's joy and optimism. This is hard to account for if even a minority remained stubborn. Two arguments are given against chapters 10—13 being the harsh letter: (1) There is no manuscript evidence for such a division. (2) Chapters 1—9 could be addressed to the repenting majority and chapters 10—13 to an unrepenting minority.

We can be sure that all was written by Paul and is God's message given to Paul through divine inspiration. Paul wrote 2 Corinthians to deal with problems within the church and to defend apostolic ministry in general and his apostleship in particular. In so doing, Paul revealed much about himself, his apostleship, and his apostolic ministry. This epistle is essential for anyone who would know as much as possible about Paul.

Second Corinthians is relevant for today in its teachings concerning ministers and their ministries. Among these teachings are the following: (1) God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself and has given to us a ministry of reconciliation. (2) True ministry in Christ's name involves both suffering and victory. (3) Serving Christ means ministering in His name to the total needs of persons. (4) Leaders in ministry need support and trust from those to whom they minister.

Outline

Salutation (1:1–3)

I. The Nature of Apostolic Ministry (1:3—7:16)
   A. Defined in terms of Paul's relations with the Corinthians (1:3—2:17)
   B. Defined in light of its glory and shame (3:1—7:16)

II. The Expression of Apostolic Ministry Through the Collection for Jerusalem (8:1—9:15)
   A. Examples of sacrificial giving (8:1–15)
   B. Care in handling the collection (8:16–24)
   C. An appeal for a generous response (9:1–15)

III. Paul's Defense of His Apostolic Ministry (10:1—12:13)
   A. Defended by answering allegations (10:1–18)
   B. Defended by resorting to the foolishness of boasting (11:1—12:13)

IV. Paul's Future Plans (12:14—13:10)
   A. Anticipation of a third visit to Corinth (12:14–21)
   B. Paul's warning that he will deal forthrightly when he comes (13:1–10)

Farewell (13:11–14)

R.E. Glaze

CORMORANT Large seafowl (Phalacrocorax carbo carbo) listed among the unclean birds (Lev. 11:17; Deut. 14:17). Other translators call it a Fisher-owl (REB). See Birds.

CORN A general term used by the translators of the KJV for any grain.

CORNELIUS (Côr nē′ lĭ ŭs) A centurion in the Roman army who lived at Caesarea (Acts 10:1). Although he was a Gentile, he was a worshiper of the one true God. He also treated the Jewish people with kindness and generosity. After an angel appeared to this pious soldier, he sent to Joppa for Simon Peter, who came to him with the message of forgiveness of sins through faith in the crucified and risen Christ. Cornelius became a Christian as a result of this incident. His conversion marked the beginning of the church's missionary activity among Gentiles. It also helped to set the stage for an important early controversy in the church, for it raised the question of the possibility of salvation for those who were not Jews. See Peter; Acts.

CORNER BUTTRESS, THE NAS translation in 2 Chronicles 26:9. See Turning of the Wall.

CORNER GATE A gate of Jerusalem in the northwest corner of the city not far from the Ephraim Gate (2 Kings 14:13; 2 Chron. 25:23). It is not mentioned in Nehemiah's restoration of Jerusalem.

CORNERSTONE The stone laid at the corner to bind two walls together and to strengthen them. Used symbolically as a symbol of strength and prominence in the Bible. The figure is often applied to rulers or leaders (Ps. 118:22; 144:12; Isa. 19:13 NIV, REB, NAS; Zech. 10:4). God promised through Isaiah that Zion would be restored, resting on the cornerstone of the renewed faith of Israel (Isa. 28:16). Jeremiah declared that Babylon would be so utterly devastated that nothing useful would remain, not even a stone for use in a foundation (Jer. 51:26).

In the New Testament Psalm 118:22 and Isaiah 28:16 are quoted (or alluded to) and applied to Christ. The symbolism is clear: Jesus Christ is the only sure foundation of faith. The Synoptic gospels quote Psalm 118:22 after the parable of the wicked tenants to show the rejection and ultimate triumph of Christ (Matt. 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; compare Acts 4:11; Eph. 2:20–22).

In 1 Peter 2:4–8, the two cornerstone passages are quoted in addition to Isaiah 8:14. Here the appeal to the reader is to come to the living stone (Jesus) the people rejected but precious in God's sight. This is substantiated by a quote from Isaiah 28:16. There then comes a warning: those who believe consider the stone to be something precious; but those who do not believe are warned that the stone which they have rejected has become the head of the corner (Ps. 118:22) and, further, this stone will make them stumble and fall (Isa. 8:14; compare Rom. 9:33). Believers are encouraged to become themselves living stones like the Living Stone and be built into a spiritual house (1 Pet. 2:5). See Rocks and Stones.

Phil Logan

CORNET KJV translation for several different kinds of musical instruments. See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CORNFLOOR KJV translation for threshing floor in Hosea 9:1.

CORRUPTION Used especially in the KJV to denote the transient nature of the material world—that is, the world's bent toward change and decay (see especially Rom. 8:21; 1 Cor. 15:42–57; 1 Pet. 1:4). The world's corruption stands in contrast to the permanent, eternal nature of the resurrection hope.

CORRUPTION, MOUNT OF Hill east of Jerusalem near the Mount of Olives where Solomon built altars to the gods of his foreign wives (1 Kings 11:7). These places of worship were destroyed by Josiah (2 Kings 23:13). The name is probably a word play by the biblical writer on Mount of Oil, an early name of the Mount of Olives and a word spelled much like Mount of Corruption or Destruction.

COS (Cŏs) Island and its chief city between Miletus and Rhodes where Paul landed briefly on his return voyage after his third missionary journey (Acts 21:1). It was a center for education, trade, wine, purple dye, and ointment. Hippocrates founded a school of medicine there. It is modern Kos.

COSAM (Cō′ săm) Personal name meaning, "diviner." Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:28).

COSMETICS Materials used for personal care and beautification. In the Ancient Near East, cosmetics were used by both men and women. Men primarily made use of oil, rubbing it into the hair of the head and the beard (Ps. 133:2; Eccl. 9:8). Women used cosmetic preparations which included eye paint, powders, rouge, ointments for the body, and perfumes. There are only limited references made to cosmetics in the Bible.

Utensils, Colors, and Manufacture of Cosmetics Cosmetic utensils of glass, wood, and bone have been found in archeological excavations in Palestine, Egypt, and Mesopotamia. In Ur, utensils have been discovered dated as early as 2500 B.C. In Egypt, a scene on a sarcophagus dated about 2000 B.C. depicts a woman holding a mirror. In Palestine, most frequently uncovered are limestone bowls or palettes. These are ordinarily in the form of small bowls, about four inches in diameter, with flat bases and a small shallow hole in the center. The wide rim was usually decorated with incised geometric designs. They were used to prepare colors for making up the face. Mixing was done by means of bone spatulas or small pestles. Possibly imported from Syria, the palettes were common in the northern part of Palestine from about 1000 B.C. on.

Other paraphernalia uncovered include small glass vials and small pottery juglets used as perfume containers, alabaster jars used for ointments, ivory flasks, cosmetic burners, and perfume boxes such as that mentioned in Isaiah 3:20. Ivory combs, bronze mirrors, hairpins, kohl sticks, unguent spoons, and tweezers also were used by women in biblical times. In the excavations at Lachish, an object was discovered which appears to be a curling iron and is dated about 1400 B.C. In the Cave of Letters, one of the hiding places of some rebels of the Bar Kochba War (A.D. 132–135), a woman's possessions found included a mirror and cosmetic utensils of glass, wood, and bone.

The colors for cosmetic preparations came from various minerals. Red ocher was used for lip color. White was obtained from lead carbonate. Green eyelid coloring was derived from turquoise or malachite, and black was often made from lead sulphate. Kohl or manganese was used for outlining of the eyes. Colors were also produced from ivories, bitumen, and burned woods.

Expert craftsmen made the cosmetics. They imported many of the raw ingredients, especially from India and Arabia. Oils for the skin creams were extracted from olives, almonds, gourds, other trees and plants, and animal and fish fats. Fragrances came from seeds, plant leaves, fruits, and flowers, especially roses, jasmines, mints, balsams, and cinnamon.

Eye Paint Women used paint to enhance their eyes and make the eyes appear larger (Jer. 4:30 NAS). There may also have been some medicinal value by preventing dryness of the skin of the eyelid or discouraging disease-carrying flies. However, biblical references often seem to associate the practice of painting the eyes with women of questionable reputation (2 Kings 9:30; Ezek. 23:40).

Dry powders for eye-coloring were stored in pouches, reeds, reed-like tubes of stone, or small jars. The reference to Job's daughter, "Kerenhappuch" (horn of antimony or eye-paint, Job 42:14), indicates the powders were also carried in horns. The powders were mixed with water or gum and applied to the eyelids with small rods made of ivory, wood, or metal. Egyptian women favored the colors of black and green, painting the upper eyelid black and the lower one green. Mesopotamian women preferred yellows and reds. Heavy black lines were traced around the eyes to make them appear more almond-shaped.

Ointments and Perfumes Creams, ointments, and perfumes were especially important in the hot Near Eastern climate. Creams protected the skin against the heat of the sun and counteracted body odors. Ointments were applied to the head (Matt. 6:17) or to the whole body (Ruth 3:3) as part of hygienic cleansing. They were considered part of the beautification process (Esther 2:12). Anointing one's head with oil was a sign of gladness (Ps. 45:7). In worship services, anointing was a special part of consecration (Ex. 30:30–32). The formula was given by God and was a priestly secret (Ex. 30:22–38). Ointments were used by prophets in anointing new kings. Elijah anointed Jehu (2 Kings 9:3), and Jehoiada anointed Joash (2 Kings 11:12). In New Testament times a good host displayed hospitality by anointing guests with ointments (Luke 7:37–50). Ointment was sometimes used to anoint the sick (Jas. 5:14). Perfumed ointments were part of the preparation for burial (Mark 14:8; Luke 23:56).

The use of perfume is an ancient practice. The first recorded mention is on the fifteenth century B.C. tomb of Queen Hatshepsut who had sent an expedition to the land of Punt to fetch frankincense. Herodotus (450 B.C.) mentioned Arabia's aromatics. To the Magi who bore gifts to the Christ child, the offering of frankincense symbolized divinity.

Perfumes mentioned in the Bible include aloes (Num. 24:6); balm (Ezek. 27:17); cinnamon (Prov. 7:17); frankincense (Isa. 43:23; Matt. 2:11); myrrh (Song of Sol. 5:5; Matt. 2:11); and spikenard (John 12:3). The perfumes were derived from the sap or gum of the tree (frankincense, myrrh), the root (spikenard), or the bark (cinnamon). They were often quite expensive and imported from Arabia (frankincense, myrrh), India (aloes, spikenard, and Ceylon (cinnamon).

The perfumes could be produced as a dry powder and kept in perfume boxes (Isa. 3:20), or as an ointment and kept in alabaster jars, such as the spikenard with which Mary anointed Jesus (John 12:3). They could also be obtained in the natural form as gum or pellets of resin. In this form, they were placed in cosmetic burners and the resin burned. In close or confined quarters, the resulting incense-smoke would act as a fumigation for both the body and the clothes, such as that which seems to be described in the beautification process noted in Esther 2:12.

See Perfumes; Anointing; Eye-paint; Trade Routes.

Darlene R. Gautsch

COULTER KJV word for both mattock and plowshare.

COUNCIL, HEAVENLY A meeting of God and His heavenly hosts. The concept of a heavenly council arose as a corollary to Israel's thoughts about the transcendence of God. They conceived of God as exalted above the world. God's dwelling place was in the heavens, not on the earth (Eccl. 5:2). One prophet asserted that God sits "upon the circle of the earth" (Isa. 40:22). There Yahweh presided over His heavenly council like some earthly king presiding over an assembly of his subjects.

God's heavenly council was made up of angelic servants often called "sons of God" (Job 1:6; 2:1). Micaiah saw the Lord sitting on His throne with "all the host of heaven" standing by to serve Him (1 Kings 22:19). God sent these servants from the council from time to time to do His bidding (Job 1—2). Satan, the adversary, was among these "sons of God" in the prologue to Job. In his vision Isaiah entered the council and received a commission to preach to his people (Isa. 6). The psalmist gave this insight into God's exalted being: "For who in the skies is comparable to the Lord? Who among the sons of the mighty is like the Lord, a God greatly feared in the council of the holy ones . . . ?" (Ps. 89:6–7 NAS). Eliphaz questioned Job's status with God: "Have you listened in the council of God?" (Job 15:8*a*). For Jeremiah the sign of false prophets was that they had not "stood in the counsel of the Lord" (Jer. 23:18). Had they done so they would have proclaimed God's word to God's people (Jer. 23:22). The servants of the Lord in good standing are those who obey their Sovereign's will (Pss. 103:21; 148:1–6).

Billy K. Smith

COUNCIL OF JERUSALEM The name given to the meeting described in Acts 15:6–22. The purpose of the council was to determine the terms on which Gentile converts to Christianity would be received into the church. The occasion of the meeting was a significant turning of Gentiles to Christ as a result of missionary activity by Barnabas and Paul. Some maintained that all Gentile converts must submit to circumcision and observe the whole of the Mosaic law. Paul and Barnabas, however, contended that imposing such requirements on Gentiles was unreasonable. The solution proposed by the Jerusalem council was that Gentile believers would not be required first to become Jewish proselytes, but that they would be asked to refrain from idolatry, from sexual misconduct, and from eating blood. See Acts; Paul.

COUNSELOR One who analyzes a situation and gives advice to one who has responsibility for making a decision. Israelite kings seem to have employed counselors on a regular basis (see 2 Sam. 16:23; 1 Kings 12:6–14; 1 Chron. 26:14; 27:32,34; 2 Chron. 25:16; Isa. 1:26; 3:3; Mic. 4:9). God is often regarded as a counselor (Ps. 16:7; 32:8; 33:11; 73:24) as is His Messiah (Isa. 9:6; 11:2) and the Holy Spirit (John 14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7). See Advocate.

COUNTENANCE The face as an indication of mood, emotion, or character (see Gen. 4:5–6; Deut. 28:50; Job 9:27; Ps. 10:4; Prov. 15:13; Eccl. 7:3; Mark 10:22). To speak of God lifting up His countenance upon one is a way of speaking about being in God's presence (Ps. 21:6). Being in God's presence—having God's countenance lifted toward one—may bring peace (Num. 6:25–26), blessing (Pss. 4:6; 90:15), or victory (Ps. 44:3). It may also bring destruction (Ps. 80:16) or judgment for sin (Ps. 90:8).

COUNTERVAIL Old English word meaning to equal, be commensurate with, compensate for in Esther 7:4.

COURIERS Members of the royal guard who carried messages throughout the kingdom (2 Chron. 30:6,10; Esther 3:13,15; 8:10,14). Roman couriers were empowered to confiscate transportation or the help of citizens of the empire in the fulfillment of their duties (Matt. 5:41; Mark 15:21).

COURT OF THE GUARD See Court of the Prison.

COURT OF THE PRISON An open court in the Jerusalem palace reserved for the detention of prisoners during the day of Jeremiah (Jer. 32:8,12; 33:1; 37:21; 38:6,13,28; 39:14–15). Translated in the modern versions as "court of the guard."

COURTS OF THE GENTILES, WOMEN, ISRAELITES, PRIESTS See Temple.

COURT SYSTEMS The court systems of ancient Israel are not fully described in the Old Testament or in any extra-biblical source. Laws governing the conduct of judges and witnesses, reports about leaders who were consulted for legal decisions, and narratives of judicial proceedings supplement the accounts of Moses' appointment of assistant judges (Ex. 18) and Jehoshaphat's judicial reform (2 Chron. 19). Archaeological investigation has not yet discovered court documents from ancient Israel.

Legal disputes could be settled at the level of society in which they arose. The head of a family had authority to decide cases within his household without bringing the matter before a professional judge (Gen. 31; 38). The law codes limit his authority in some cases (Num. 5:11–31; Deut. 21:18–21; 22:13–21). When persons from more than one family were involved, the case was taken before the elders of the town, who were the heads of the extended familes living together in that place and represented the community as a whole. The elders would serve as witnesses to a transaction (Deut. 25:5–10; Ruth 4:1–12), decide guilt or innocence (Deut. 19; 22:13–21; Josh. 20:1–6), or execute the punishment due the guilty party (Deut. 22:13–21; 25:1–3). The elders helped to preserve the community by seeing that disputes were settled in a manner that everyone would recognize as just.

Disputes between tribes were more difficult to resolve. When a Judahite woman who was the concubine of a Levite living in the territory of Ephraim was raped and murdered in Gibeah of Benjamin, several tribes were involved (Judg. 19—21). The Levite, therefore, appealed to all the tribes of Israel for justice. The initial attempts at negotiation were rebuffed when the men of Benjamin refused to hand over the guilty persons for punishment. Israel then went to war against the whole tribe of Benjamin, defeated them, and vowed not to let them intermarry with the rest of the tribes. The biblical historian comments regretfully that this sort of thing happened when there was no king to execute the law (Judg. 21:25).

During the period of Israelite history covered by the book of Judges, special judicial authority was possessed by several individuals appointed by God. The so-called "minor judges" (Judg. 10:1–5; 12:8–15) are not credited with delivering Israel from oppression by military means, so their function may have been purely judicial or political. Some scholars have identified their office as "judge of all Israel" in the tribal league, but others have argued that their jurisdiction was over a smaller area. Deborah, and later Samuel, also decided cases. Their judicial activities took place in a limited area (Judg. 4:4–5; 1 Sam. 7:15–17). We do not know whether they only heard cases on appeal. The Bible does not say how any of these individuals came to possess their authority as judges. Both Deborah and Samuel were prophets. The other deliverer judges were called by God and possessed by God's Spirit, so judicial authority was probably also a divine gift.

A hierarchical system of courts and judges could exist when political authority was centralized. In Exodus 18:13–26 Moses appointed assistant judges to decide the smaller cases so that his own energy could be preserved for the difficult ones. A system in which local courts referred complex cases to the supreme judges is described in Deuteronomy 17:2–13; 19:16–19. This was not an appeals court to which dissatisfied parties could bring their cases for reconsideration; it was a court of experts who could pass judgment in cases too complicated for the local judges to decide themselves. The court system instituted by Jehoshaphat also followed this pattern (2 Chron. 19:4–11). Although appointed by the king, the judges were responsible directly to God (2 Chron. 19:6). It is not clear whether the residents of Jerusalem went directly to the central court. We only know that Jeremiah was tried in Jerusalem by "the princes of Judah" after being charged by the priests and prophets with a crime worthy of death. The system described in Deuteronomy 17; 19; 2 Chronicles 19 has both priests and secular officials as judges in the central court in Jerusalem.

The king possessed limited judicial authority. Despite his supreme political power, he was not personally above the law. Saul's death sentences on Jonathan (1 Sam. 14:39) and the priests at Nob (1 Sam. 22:6–23) were not accepted by the people. Jonathan was not punished, and the priests were finally killed by a non-Israelite. David was led to convict himself of his crimes against Uriah and his mistreatment of Absalom (2 Sam. 12:1–6; 14:1–24). Unlike Saul, David and Solomon were able to exercise authority to execute or spare persons who represented a threat to their reigns (2 Sam. 1:1–16; 4:1–12; 19:16–23; 21:1–14; 1 Kings 2:19–46). Jezebel used the existing town court to dispose of Naboth and confiscate his vineyard. She and Ahab, however, were punished by God for having Naboth executed on trumped-up charges even though Ahab was king (1 Kings 21—22). Deuteronomy 17:18–20 places the king at the same level as his subjects with respect to the requirements of God's law. In Israel the king did not have the authority to enact new laws or to make arbitrary legal rulings contrary to the prevailing understanding of justice.

The ideal of the just king who oversees the dispensing of justice for all his subjects was known in Israel. In this role the king himself was the leading example of a just and honest judge and was personally involved in hearing cases as well as appointing other judges. Absalom was able to take advantage of David's failure to live up to this ideal (2 Sam. 15:1–6). Solomon is the supreme example of the just king, having been granted discernment and wisdom by God (1 Kings 3).

The relationship of the king's court to the rest of the judicial system is uncertain. The wise woman from Tekoah appealed to David, a decision which had been made within her extended family (2 Sam. 14). The Shunammite widow successfully appealed to the king of Israel for the restoration of her house and land, which she had abandoned during a time of famine (2 Kings 8:1–6). The famous case of the two prostitutes and their infant sons was brought directly to Solomon without any previous judgment (1 Kings 3:16–28). All of these cases seem to be exceptional. Powerful third parties were involved in the first two cases; Joab set up the audience with David, and the Shunammite had an advocate present in the person of Gehazi, Elisha's servant. The two prostitutes had no families to settle their dispute. We are not certain, therefore, what these accounts can tell us about how cases usually came to be heard by the king. There are no Old Testament laws which define the process of judicial appeal to the king.

Priests also possessed judicial authority. The passages about the high court in Jerusalem mention priests alongside the secular judge (Deut. 17:9; 19:17; 2 Chron. 19:8,11). Some scholars believe that this division between religious and civil courts reflects the post-exilic period, in which the secular authority was that of the Persian king and Jewish priests administered the law of God (Ezra 7:25–26). Israelite priests, however, possessed a body of knowledge from which they ruled on matters pertaining to the worship of God and the purity of the community. The cult and the judicial system were both concerned with removing blood-guilt from the community (Deut. 21:1–9). We cannot determine how the priestly judges were related to the other court systems or how cases were assigned to the various judges.

Actual court procedures may be partially reconstructed as follows. There were no prosecutors or defense attorneys; accuser and accused argued their own cases. The burden of proof lay with the defendant. Physical evidence was presented when necessary (Deut. 22:13–21), but proving one's case depended primarily on testimony and persuasive argument. The word of at least two witnesses was required to convict (Deut. 19:15). The system depended on the honesty of witnesses and the integrity of judges (Ex. 18:21; 20:16; 23:1–3,6–9; Lev. 19:15–19; Deut. 16:19–20; 19:16–21; 2 Chron. 19:6–7). The prophets condemned corrupt judges (Isa. 1:21–26; Amos 5:12,15; Mic. 7:3) and those who supported them (Amos 5:10). Cases brought by a malicious witness giving false testimony were referred to the central court (Deut. 19:16–21). In some circumstances the accused could submit to an ordeal or an oath to prove his or her innocence (Ex. 22:6–10; Num. 5:11–31; Deut. 21:1–8). If guilty, he or she would be punished directly by God. Casting lots to discover the guilty party was another extraordinary procedure. In both cases reported in the Bible the person identified also confessed his guilt (Josh. 7; 1 Sam. 14:24–46). The judges were responsible to administer punishment, often with the whole community participating (Deut. 21:21). The court systems could only function well when the community agreed with their decisions and cooperated to enforce them. By judging justly, the courts taught God's law and the principles of divine justice. The courts worked together with the people to restore the community to peace and wholeness under God whenever they recognized the one in the right and imposed an appropriate penalty on the guilty one.

Pamela J. Scalise

COUSIN At times the KJV uses cousin when a distant relative is referred to (Luke 1:36; see also Mark 6:4; Luke 1:58; 2:44; 14:12). The same Greek word in all these passages means relatives, kin, or countryman.

COVENANT A pact, treaty, alliance, or agreement between two parties of equal or of unequal authority. The convenant or testament is a central, unifying theme in Scripture, God's covenants with individuals and the nation Israel finding final fulfillment in the new covenant in Christ Jesus. God's covenants can be understood by humans because they are modelled on human covenants or treaties.

Near Eastern Covenants Biblical covenants do not represent something brand new in their world. They are built on normal patterns used in economics and politics of the day. Studies of political and economic agreements in the Ancient Near East have revealed the basic structure of a treaty, agreement, or covenant. Two types of treaties are available for study: those from the Hittite empire about 1400–1200 B.C. and those from the Assyrian Empire about 850–650 B.C. We have several Hittite examples but few Assyrian ones for study. Neither fits a rigid, unchangeable pattern, but the Hittite treaties between a king and vassal kings or between two kings of equal authority can be described with the following structure:

1. Royal Titles naming and identifying the Hittite king making the treaty:

2. Historical prologue reviewing in personal terms the past relationships between the two parties to the treaties, emphasizing the gracious acts of the Hittite king;

3. Treaty stipulations or agreements, often stating first the primary agreement or obligation agreed to by the two parties and then detailing the specific demands or agreements in a longer list;

4. A clause describing the way the treaty is to be stored and to be read regularly to the citizens affected by it; this does not always appear;

5. List of witnesses to the treaty including the gods and natural phenomena such as mountains, heaven, seas, the earth, etc;

6. List of curses and blessings brought on by violating or observing the treaty demands.

The Assyrian treaties often do not have the historical prologue or the blessings.

The Book of Deuteronomy, Joshua 24, and other Old Testament texts show that Israel was familiar with these treaty forms and used them in their literature. They may also show that Israel used these forms in their worship, renewing regularly the covenant relationship with God. No Old Testament text precisely follows the treaty forms without change, and no text states explicitly that covenant renewal ceremonies formed the center of Israel's worship.

Covenants among Humans In biblical language, people "cut" a covenant with another person or group of people. Abraham and Abimelech cut such a covenant as equal partners, agreeing that the well at Beersheba belonged to Abraham (Gen. 21:22–34). Sacrifices acompanied the covenant making. Apparently, Abraham gained the right to live among Abimelech's people, the Philistines (v. 34). Jonathan and David cut a covenant of friendship in which Jonathan acknowledged David's right to the throne (1 Sam. 18:3; 23:18). Such an agreement was a "covenant of the Lord" (1 Sam 20 8), that is the Lord was its witness and guarantee. At the time Jonathan possessed greater authority than David, but in the covenant he acknowledged David's coming authority over him. Abner led the tribes of northern Israel to cut a covenant with David, making David king over the north as well as over southern Judah (2 Sam.3; Compare 5:3; 1 Chron. 11:3). David, who occupied the position of power and authority in the agreement, demanded that Abner also produce Saul's daughter who David had married earlier. Solomon and Hiram made a covenant of peace which apparently included certain trade agreements (1 Kings 5:12).

King Zedekiah made a covenant with the people of Jerusalem, releasing the Hebrews from slavery (Jer. 34:8).

Ezra reformed the restored Jewish community by leading them to make a covenant together in God's presence. They would agree to divorce foreign wives and separate themselves from the children so strongly influenced by the foreign mothers (Ezra 10:3).

Hosea denounced the northern kingdom's covenant or vassal treaty with Assyria (Hos. 12:1; compare 7:8–14; 8:9; 10:4; 2 Kings 17:3–4). Such treaties sought to gain military protection from foreign countries rather than relying upon Yahweh, the covenant God. (See Ex. 23:32; 34:12,15; Deut. 7:2).

When Athaliah tried to usurp the throne and kill off the royal family, the priest Jehoiada made a covenant agreement with the army (2 Chron. 23:1) and with all the people (v. 3) to support the king Joash against Athaliah (compare 2 Kings 11).

Israel had a long history of making covenant agreements with foreigners, despite God's warnings not to do so. The Gibeonites deceived Israel under Joshua into making a vassal treaty. Israel easily occupied the position of authority in the treaty and subjected the Gibeonites to temple service, but still this violated God's commandments (Josh. 9; compare Judg. 2:2). The Israelites in Jabesh Gilead begged for a treaty from Nahash, the Ammonite, but he demanded severe conditions. Saul delivered them, leading to affirmation of Saul's kingship (1 Sam. 11).

Ben-Hadad, king of Damascus in Syria, promised to return captured cities to Israel and to provide Israel with markets for its products in Damascus if the king of Israel would make a peace treaty or political alliance with him (1 Kings 20:31–35). Earlier, Asa, king of Judah, had used the Temple treasury to pay tribute to Ben-Hadad of Damascus to entice Ben-Hadad to break his vassal treaty with Baasha, king of Israel, and enter into a similar treaty with Judah (1 Kings 15:19; 2 Chron. 16:3). This is the typical example of a political covenant. One party desires privileges from the other party and pays for the privileges. Such payment may be enforced by a victorious king or may be offered by a weak king needing help against enemies. Members of such a covenant alliance were called "baals of the covenant" or lords, owners of the covenant (Gen. 14:13), a technical term for allies. They could also be called "men of the covenant" (Obad. 7). Covenant treaties carried exprectations of humane and moral treatment of other members of the covenant, the covenant being literally a covenant of brothers (Amos 1:9; compare 1 Kings 20:32–33).

Each covenant had special conditions effecting the power in authority and the one becoming a vassal or imposing demands on each partner of a covenant between equals. Breaking covenant conditions meant treason and extreme punishment (Ezek. 17:12–18; compare Amos 1:9).

Marriage involved covenant obligations with God as the witness (Mal. 2:14). This could be used to describe the covenant relationship between God and His people (Ezek. 16:8; Hos. 2:19–20).

Isaiah spoke menacingly of a covenant of death political leaders had made (Isa. 28:15). They thought they had bought protection from their enemies. The prophet reminded them nothing made them secure against God's judgment. The action behind the covenant of death can be variously interpreted: a ritual with a foreign god of the underworld or of death, a mutual alliance to fight to the death, a treaty with a foreign power that brought God's judgment and thus death.

God's Covenants with His People God's grace in relating to His people by initiating covenants with them is a major theme of the Bible.

Noah received God's first covenant (Gen. 9:9–17). This was a divine oath or promise not to repeat the flood. This covenant extended beyond Noah to all the animals who had experienced the massive destruction and death associated with the flood. The rainbow stands eternally as a sign of God's promise. This covenant called for no human response. It was solely a promise and oath from God. God's covenant with Noah was not a divine afterthought to the flood, a way of making up to His creation for all the destruction. God established the covenant relationship prior to the flood (Gen. 6:18). The Hebrew verb here means literally, "to cause to stand." Some interpreters take this to mean that even in Genesis 6 God was confirming a covenant already established, though most see this as a formula for the establishment of the covenant. All agree that the formula underlines the lasting guarantee behind the covenant. The covenant is established and will stand. God's first covenant protected life—both human and animal—in the face of massive destruction. That priority on and protection of life remains the foundation of God's relationship with His creation. Neither "natural" catastrophe nor human sin (compare 6:5; 8:21) can prevent God from maintaining His priority on life.

God made His second covenant with Abraham (Gen. 15:18; 17:2). As the covenant with Noah involved a righteous man (Gen. 6:8–9), so the covenant with Abraham involved a man of faith (Gen. 15:6). God initiated His covenant with this type of person, but this does not mean that the person earned God's covenant with good works. Rather, this type of person was open to God's actions and could be directed by God for His purposes. The covenant with Abraham, like that with Noah, involved divine promises, not human obedience. God promised to give the land of Canaan to Abraham's descendants after a long sojourn to a foreign land. He symbolized this promise through an ancient covenant ceremony (compare Jer. 34), known from other cultures also, in which animals are cut and covenant participants pass through. Normally, the human covenant partners swear that they will abide by covenant conditions or will face the fate of the animals. For Abraham, the rite became a sacrifice to God and a sign of his devotion to the rite even when attacking birds threatened to spoil it. Abraham did not walk through the divided animals. Symbols of God's presence did. God made the oath to keep His promise. Genesis 17 shows the initiation of circumcision as the sign of the covenant. God's covenant promise was extended to include international-relations, many descendants, and to be God of the people descended from Abraham forever.

Redemption from Egyptian slavery found its climax in God's covenant with Israel. This covenant differed from those with Noah and Abraham. The situation was not an affirmation of human faithfulness or righteousness, but the confession of God's salvation (Ex. 19:4). The oath or promise came not from God but from the people. They were to "obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant." Then they would be "a peculiar treasure unto me above all people . . . a kingdom of priests . . . an holy nation" (Ex. 6:5–6). Covenant law was then revealed to God's people. They had responsibilities within the covenant relationship. The people accepted this responsibility in a solemn ceremony in which covenant law was read from the "book of the covenant" and "the blood of the covenant" was sprinkled on the altar and on the people (Ex. 24:3–8). The covenant with Yahweh meant Israel could make covenants with no other gods (Ex. 23:32). Within the covenant agreement, God included the sabbath covenant, Israel's perpetual promise to observe the seventh day as a day of rest, reflecting God's practice in creation (Ex. 31:16).

Israel refused to take covenant commitment seriously almost from the start. While Moses climbed the mountain and stayed in God's presence to receive the Ten Commandments, the people worshiped golden calves (Ex. 32). God renewed the covenant with His people, making explicit His covenant promise to conquer miraculously the land of Canaan promised to Abraham (Ex. 34; note verse 10). Again, covenant with Israel involved Israel's pledge to make no other covenants (34:12,15; Deut. 7:2) and God's commandments as His expectations of a covenant people (Ex. 34:27–28; Deut. 4:13). See Ten Commandments.

Israel's sacrificial worship included reminders of the covenant relationship. Salt added to offerings was the "salt of the covenant" (Lev. 2:13). Salt symbolized covenant relationships among Arabs and Greeks and probably other peoples of Israel's day. The symbolic meaning is not precisely known. It may have reflected on understanding of salt as something eternal and thus as a sign of the everlasting effect of the agreements reached in a covenant relationship (compare Num. 18:19; 2 Chron. 13:5). The bread of the altar also symbolized Israel's everlasting covenant (Lev. 24:8).

Israel apparently celebrated its covenant with ceremonies helping the people identify themselves as the covenant people as they heard, "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day" (Deut. 5:2–3; compare 29:1,12,14–15; Josh 8:30–35; 24:1–28). Israel's ceremonies had some of the same components that Near Eastern covenants or treaties had, particularly blessings for covenant obedience and cursings for disobedience (Ex. 23:25–30; Lev. 26:1–46; Deut. 27:11–26; 28:1–68). A major element of blessing is that God will make His covenant stand for His people (Lev. 26:9). Curses come when God's people break the covenant (Lev. 26:15; Deut. 29:25; 31:16; Josh. 7:11,15,23:16; Judg. 2:20). Curse is not the final word for covenant breaking, however. After covenant curse or punishment takes effect, God expects the people to confess sin and return to Him (Lev. 26:40; Deut. 4:30–31; 30:1–3). God, on the other side, does not "break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God" (Lev. 26:44; compare Deut. 7:9, 12: Judg. 2:1; Zech. 11:10). For the sake of His promises to the ancestors and because of His nature as Yahweh, the God of Israel, God "will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors" (Lev. 26:45). God's eternal devotion to His covenant does not nullify the effect of the curses. They are real and enforced, for "the Lord thy God is a consuming fire, even a jealous God" (Deut. 4:24).

God's covenant is not simply the selfish demands of a victorious, powerful overlord placing unreasonable demands on His subjects. God works for His covenant people. He protected them in the wilderness, gave them the land, and gave "power to get wealth" (Deut. 8:18; 29:9). The blessings of the covenant are more than part of a ceremony. They become reality in the life of His people. Why? Not so the people can become conceited and self-confident (Deut. 8:17) but that God can have a powerful people with whom to establish His covenant and thus to accomplish His purposes for His creation (Deut. 8:18). This did not mean that all God's people would be rich or that only the rich could enter the covenant. God invited persons from every economic level of Israelite society to join His covenant (Deut. 29:10–12). Even those not physically present at the covenant ceremony were covenant members (Deut. 29:15).

God's covenant with Abraham and with Israel found its special climax in God's covenant with David (2 Sam. 23:5; compare 7:12–16; 2 Chron. 13:5; Ps. 89:3–34; 132:12). God would establish the house of David to rule His people forever.

Perennial disobedience led to Judah's exile and complaint, "thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant" (Ps. 89:39).

Making covenants with His people characterized God and distinguished Him from the other gods of the nations. Israel's God was the one "who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart" (1 Kings 8:23; 2 Chron. 6:14; Neh. 1:5; 9:32; Ps. 105:8, 10; compare Isa. 54:10).

Sadly, God's people did not mirror Him in faithfulness to covenant. David's son King Solomon blazed the trail of covenant-breaking, worshiping other gods and setting a model Israel consistently followed through their history (1 Kings 11:11). Israel chose to listen to Dame Folly's strange woo-ings and forget the covenant with God (Prov. 2:17). God had to punish. Even in punishment, He remained faithful, preserving two tribes for the family of David (1 Kings 11:12–13) and protecting the people from enemies (2 Kings 13:23; 2 Chron. 21:7). Israel's covenant breaking, on the other hand, became so extreme that a lonely, persecuted prophet could claim, "I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life" (1 Kings 19:10). Occasionally, faithful people gained control and led the people to renew the covenant with God (2 Kings 17:35; 23:3; 2 Chron. 15:12; 29:10; 34:31–32). Eventually, covenant-breaking led God to send the northern kingdom into eternal exile (2 Kings 17:15–18; 18:11–12). Punishment was not God's final word. He heard His people's cry and "remembered for them his covenant" (Ps. 106:45).

The covenant relationship became so characteristic for Israel and their God that the Psalmists in worship and in wisdom teaching called Israel to remember God and His covenants. Covenant keeping led to mercy and truth (Ps. 25:10; 103:18) and to participation in the intimate covenant relationship (25:14). In times of trouble the worshiper could call on God, claiming "neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant" (44:17). In worship the covenant people gathered to hear God's judgment (50:5; compare 78:10, 37: Jer. 11:2–3). A strong word of judgment rebuked those who entered God's covenant with false intentions and results (50:16). In worship they also claimed God's covenant promises, asking deliverance from trouble by calling on God to "have respect unto the covenant" (74:20). They praised God for covenant faithfulness (111:5,9).

God also made a covenant with the priests, acknowledging their obedient and even heroic acts by promising them the office of the priest forever (Num. 25:12–13; Ex. 40:15; compare Deut. 33:8–11). Even the priests proved unfaithful and drew God's anger (Neh. 13:29; Mal. 2:1–9).

God's covenant has a future. It was not limited to a brief period of human history. God's covenant with Israel was a covenant pointed to all the earth, to the Gentiles (Isa. 42:6; compare 49:8). If Israel would not be God's servant to fulfill the Gentile mission, God would raise up a servant who would be a "light to the Gentiles." This passage has led to several interpretations, making Cyrus of Persia the servant and seeing the command to impose God's obligations on the nations rather than to bring salvation to people. Such interpretations appear to miss the larger biblical context and message as well as imposing an unnecessary limitation on Israel's theological horizons.

God extended His covenant with David for the sake of the nations. The entire nation of Israel would fulfill David's role and would bring the nations streaming to Jerusalem to find God's glory (Isa. 55:1–5). God extended His covenant to the outsiders among His own people—eunuchs otherwise forbidden to worship (Isa. 56:3–5; compare Deut. 23:1) and foreigners (Isa. 56:6; compare Deut. 23:2–9).

The emphasis on a covenant with the nations did not diminish God's covenant care for His people. He continued His promise to come and redeem them from the power of the capturing nations (Isa. 59:21; 61:8).

Hosea condemned Israel for transgressing the covenant (Hos. 6:7; 8:1). This involved making an international alliance or covenant with Assyria, seeking protection from enemies and freedom from Assyrian attack (Hos. 12:1). Egypt was also involved in such international treaty making with Israel. Still, Hosea pointed forward to a day of hope when God would renew the covenant with Israel (2:18).

Jeremiah based his preaching on the covenant (11:6,8), claiming Israel of his day had broken the covenant just like those in Moses' day (11:10). He could also use God's covenant faithfulness as the theological basis of his prayer for deliverance and restoration (14:21). He could explain Israel's disaster as resulting from breaking the covenant (22:9). Jeremiah's strongest contribution to covenant theology was his portrait of God's promise of a new covenant, a covenant whose stipulations would not stand on tables of stone as did the old one but whose obligations would be deeply nested in the hearts of the people so they would have will and power to obey (33:31–34; compare 32:40–44; 50:5). Forgiveness would characterize God's relationship to the new covenant people. Jeremiah's new covenant preaching extended to the covenant with David (33:19–26).

Ezekiel related the history of Israel as God's covenant of mercy, broken by a people who despised it but renewed in an eternal covenant (16:8,59–63; compare 20:37). The new covenant would bring a new David and a new era of peace not only with human enemies but with the beasts of the natural world (34:22–31; compare 37:24–28). Ezekiel judged Israel for having broken the law of Numbers 18:4 by bringing "unclean" foreigners into the Temple (Ezek. 44:7). He also interpreted King Zedekiah's breaking of his vassal covenant with Babylon as a breaking of Israel's covenant with God (17:19).

Zechariah promised that exiles would return to Jerusalem because God would be true to the covenant of blood He made with Moses (Zech. 9:11; compare Ex. 24). The prophetic vision of Zechariah 11 has produced many interpretations: "And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people." The prophet denounced the wicked leaders of God's people and claimed the leadership role for himself in the vision. He could not get cooperation and turned against the people, breaking his covenant and breaking the union of Israel and Judah (v. 14). The broken covenant could be between king and people, between king and allied nations, between God and His people, or between God and the nations. Whichever interpretation is correct, it shows that a covenant agreement could be brought to an end.

Malachi joined the chorus condemning Israel for ignoring God's covenant expectations by treating each other "treacherously" (2:10).

Old Testament covenant language ends in Malachi 3:1 with God's announcement that the "messenger of the covenant" will come representing God, proving the covenant relationship is not a thing of the past. He will show God continues to punish those who ignore or reject His covenant.

Covenant in the New Testament The New Testament by use of the Greek diatheke transformed covenant into testament, diatheke referring to a binding will a person made to ensure proper disposal of goods upon the death of the person making the will (see Gal. 3:15; Heb. 9:17). Still, the New Testament followed the Septaugint, the earliest Greek translation, in using diatheke to translate the Hebrew berith or covenant. New Testament language is thus Greek with a strong Hebrew flavoring.

Jesus used the last supper as opportunity to interpret His ministry, and particularly His death, as fulfillment of Jeremiah's new covenant prophecy. His death represented the shedding of the blood of the new covenant. People who repeated the rites of the last supper drank the blood of the new covenant, remembering His death as the sacrifice for sins (Matt. 26:28; Mark 14:24; Luke 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25).

Zechariah, father of John the Baptist, interpreted the announcement of John's birth as evidence that God had remembered His holy covenant (Luke 1:72). Peter told skeptical Jews that they were children of the covenant with Abraham and that Christ had come first to them to fulfill the promise of blessing to Abraham by turning them away from their sinful ways (Acts 3:25). Stephen reminded those who would murder him that the covenant of circumcision with Abraham continued as part of God's history of salvation leading to Jesus (Acts 7:8). Paul confirmed that just as a human last will and testament could not be changed by another person, so God's covenant with Abraham could not be changed or annulled (Gal. 3:15–17). Paul asserted that with the coming of Christ and Israel's rejection of Him, God still had a covenant to save Israel (Rom. 11:27). Paul interpreted Christ as the one who had made the meaning of the Old Testament plain, removing the veil that caused the Jews to continue looking only to Moses rather than to look to Christ as God's final revelation (2 Cor. 3:14). Paul was a minister of the new covenant, not of the old (2 Cor. 3:6), a ministry of the Spirit and of life, not of dead literalism.

In the New Testament only Hebrews makes covenant a central theological theme. The emphasis is on Jesus, the perfect High Priest, providing a new, better, superior covenant (Heb. 7:22; 8:6). Jesus represented the fulfillment of Jeremiah's new covenant promise (Heb. 8:8,10; 10:16). Jesus was the perfect covenant Mediator (Heb. 9;15), providing an eternal inheritance in a way the old covenant could not (compare 12:24). Jesus' death on the cross satisfied the requirement that all covenants be established by blood (Heb. 9:18,20) just as was the first covenant (Ex. 24:8). Christ's blood established an everlasting covenant (Heb. 13:20). If Israel suffered for breaking the Sinai covenant (Heb. 8:9–10), how much more should people expect to suffer if they have "counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing" (Heb. 10:29).

The Greek word testament eventually gave its name to the two parts of our Bible—the Old and the New Testaments. In many ways the name is appropriate to show that the two parts of Scripture rest on God's gracious action in redeeming His people and making a covenant with them.

Trent C. Butler

COVENANT BOX TEV name for the ark of the covenant. See Ark of the Covenant.

COVENANT OF SALT Salt was often utilized in covenant making probably as symbolic of that which preserves and prevents decay. The hope was that the covenant thus enacted would endure (Num. 18:19; 2 Chron. 13:5). Salt was an essential element of the cereal offerings made to God (Lev. 2:13).

COVERING OF THE LIVER See Caul.

COVERING THE HEAD In 1 Corinthians 11:1–16, Paul dealt with the matter of covering the head in worship services. This extended treatment shows that this must have been a subject of considerable interest in Corinth.

The Jewish custom was for all women to cover their heads with a veil when they went outside their homes. To appear in public without a veil was a sign of immodesty and lack of virtue. To appear in a worship service without a veil was unthinkable.

Some of the Corinthian Christian women had evidently appeared in worship without a veil on their heads. Perhaps they had understood Paul's emphasis on Christian freedom to mean that they no longer had to observe any of the old Jewish customs—including that of wearing a veil.

The effects of such a change in dress style had been disruptive to the worship services and Christian witness in Corinth. This led Paul to state that a woman should cover her head during the worship service. At the same time, he encouraged the men to follow the Jewish custom of worshiping with uncovered heads.

Paul cited various reasons in 1 Corinthians 11:1–16 for his position. He referred to: (1) the order in creation (v. 3), (2) social customs of the time (vv. 4–6), (3) the presence of angels (v. 10), (4) nature itself (vv. 13–15), and (5) the common practice in the churches (v. 16).

The principle here is that Christians must be sensitive to the cultures in which they live. They should not needlessly flout local customs unless there is some moral reason to do so. To be insensitive to the culture in which one lives causes one to offend many of the people whom the church is trying to win to Jesus Christ. It diverts attention away from the most important thing and focuses it on peripheral matters.

See Corinth; Worship; Women. Lynn Jones

COVET, COVETOUS The inordinate desire to possess what belongs to another, usually tangible things.

While the Hebrew word for "covet" can also be translated "to desire," in the Tenth Commandment it means an ungoverned and selfish desire that threatens the basic rights of others. Coveting was sinful because it focused greedily on the property of a neighbor that was his share in the land God had promised His people. After Israel's defeat at Ai, Achan confessed that his selfish desire for treasure was so great that he disobeyed God's specific commandment (Josh. 7:21). In defense of Judah's poor, Micah declared the Lord's judgment against the land-grabbers for coveting small farms and actually seizing them from their powerless owners (Mic. 2:2). Although the commandment against coveting seems concerned only with motivation, some passages indicate that coveting in the heart was expected to end with taking what was desired.

In the New Testament the same Greek word is translated "covet" in the King James Version and "earnestly desire" in the Revised Standard Version (1 Cor. 12:39). So, covet could be used in good sense. Another Greek word describes the ruthless self-assertion that the Tenth Commandment forbids (Luke 12:15; Eph. 5:5). In the Luke passage Jesus said that the covetous man will not be "rich toward God." In the Ephesian passage Paul classed the covetous man with the idolater. So, the greedy person—one who covets—denies his faith in God and scorns His values.

William J. Fallis

COZ (Cŏz) KJV, TEV spelling of Koz. See Koz.

COZBI (Cŏz′ bī) Personal name meaning, "my falsehood." A Midianite woman who was slain by Phinehas after being brought into the tent of an Israelite man named Zimri (Num. 25:15). When both she and Zimri were executed, a plague that was sweeping through the Israelite camp was stopped.

COZEBA (Cō zē′ bà) Place name meaning, "deceptive." Home of descendants of Judah (1 Chron. 4:22). Its location is uncertain.

CRACKNEL Old English word for a hard brittle biscuit (1 Kings 14:3 KJV).

CRAFT Occupation or trade requiring manual dexterity or artistic skill. Several crafts were practiced in biblical times: carpentry, boatbuilding, carving (wood, ivory, ebony, and alabaster), metalworking (gold, silver, bronze, and iron), weaving and spinning, tanning, tentmaking, basket weavers, potter's trade, fuller's trade, dyeing, sculpting, jeweler's trade, glassworking, perfumery, embroidering, masonry, plastering, etc. See Occupations, Professions in the Bible.

CRANE KJV translation of the Hebrew word in Isaiah 38:14; Jeremiah 8:7. Modern translations read, "swift" (NIV, NAS, REB) or dove (Isa. 38:14 REB). See Birds.

CRAWLING THINGS NRSV translation of Hebrew term in Micah 7:17. The Hebrew word also appears in Deuteronomy 32:34, where it refers to poisonous snakes. See Creeping Things, Snakes.

CREATION From ancient times persons have had a keen interest in the origin of the universe. Stories or fragments of stories about creation have survived in the literature of several ancient nations. Biblical writers may reflect an awareness of these extra-biblical accounts, but their consistent testimony is that Israel's God was the Creator. His creative activities proceeded in orderly and methodical fashion toward the fulfillment of His purpose to create "good heavens" and "a good earth."

Biblical References to Creation Probably the best known reference to creation in the Bible is Genesis 1:1—2:4*a*. That certainly is not the only place in Scripture where the subject is treated. Psalmists mentioned creation or the Creator frequently (Pss. 8:3, 4; 74:17; 95:5; 100:3; 104:24,30; 118:24; 40:5; 51:10; 64:9; 24:1–2; 102:25; 145:10). The second half of Isaiah (chs. 40—66) has four direct references to creation (Isa. 40:28; 43:7, 15; 45:7; 65:17). Job alluded to creation in two speeches (Job 10:8; 26:7), and God's answer to Job contains one reference to the subject (Job 38:4).

The New Testament reveals that Jesus "made" all things (John 1:3) and that "all things were created by him, and for him" (Col. 1:16). Paul's assertion recorded in Ephesians 3:9 is that God "created all things." The writer of Hebrews notes that Jesus was the agent God used to create the world (Heb. 1:2). Because God created all things, He is worthy of "glory and honor and power" (Rev. 4:11). Luke testified that the living God "made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein" (Acts 14:15). The consistent report of the Bible is that God is the Source of the whole created order.

The Function of Biblical Creation References Genesis is a book about beginnings. The centerpiece of the book is God's redemptive activity following the fall of man. God began by calling Abram out of Ur, by entering into a covenant with him, and by making promises to bless him and to bless all the families of the earth through him.

Genesis 1—11 is prologue to the patriarchal stories (Gen. 12—50). It sets a world stage on which God acted in choosing one man in order to bless all men. Genesis 1—2 contain two accounts of creation, the order of man's creation coming at the end in the first and at the beginning in the second. God's creation, "good" as it was (Gen. 1:4,10,12,21,25,31), soon became bad through human rebellion against God. The accounts of creation in Genesis 1—2 prepare the reader for the record of the first people being placed in the Garden of Eden, temptation by the serpent, rebellion against God, expulsion from the garden, and the degenerating effect of sin in society.

God's judgment on sin in the form of a flood did not put an end to sin (Gen. 6—9). Noah himself carried sin into the society that survived the flood. Even destroying the tower of Babel, confusing the people's language, and scattering them over the face of the earth did not stop the spread of sin (Gen. 11). Genesis 11 ends by introducing Terah, the father of Abram, through whom God would bless the world in spite of its rebellion against Him. The link between creation and redemption is clear.

Isaiah reminded weary exiles that the God he proclaimed as their Redeemer and Sustainer was "the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth" (Isa. 40:28). The prophet linked God's redemptive activity with His creative activity (Isa. 43:7,15). He went on to declare God's plan to "create new heavens and a new earth" as well as a new people (Isa. 65:17–18).

Job lamented that God's hands "made and fashioned" him but for some unexplained reason turned about to "destroy" him (Job 10:8). In a later speech Job expressed the effortless manner in which God created the universe (Job 26:7–11) and defeated Rahab and the serpent (26:12–13). The Lord's speech in response to Job (Job 38—39) makes clear that God is the Creator and that man had no part in creation.

The psalmists' concerns with God as Creator were related to people's place in creation (Ps. 8:3,4), to God's redemptive activity (Pss. 74:17; 95:5), and to praise for the Creator (Pss. 100:3; 104; 24:1,2). One psalmist referred to the creation to contrast its perishable nature with the imperishable nature of the Creator (Ps. 102:25–27).

The three doxologies in Amos (4:13; 5:8–9; 9:5–6) magnify God the Creator and Controller of creation. Malachi's reference to God as Creator stresses the fact that one God created all people (Mal. 2:10). This fact forms the basis of the prophet's appeal for faithfulness among covenant members.

John based God's worthiness to receive "glory and honor and power" on His creative activity (Rev. 4:11). By God's will "all things" existed and were created. John's testimony is that "the Word" made all things (John 1:3) and that Jesus is the Word (John 1:14).

Paul's perspective was that Christians represent God's workmanship "created in Christ Jesus for good works" (Eph. 2:10). The gospel that God called Paul to preach had been hidden in God who "created all things" (Eph. 3:9). He agreed with John that Jesus the Savior, the firstborn of all creation, was Himself the Source of all creation (Col. 1:16–17).

The author of Hebrews wrote of God's revelation through prophets of old, but "in these last days" God spoke through a Son (Heb. 1:1–2). The Son created the world. Like many Old Testament passages, this passage in Hebrews links God's creative activity with His redemptive activity.

The people of Lystra took Barnabas and Paul to be gods (Acts 14:11). Paul and Barnabas set the record straight as they pointed to "the living God which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein" (Acts 14:15).

Relationship of Biblical and Extra-biblical References to Creation The Enuma Elish ("When on High") is probably the best known extra-biblical reference to creation. This Mesopotamian account reflects a striking correspondence in various details and in order of events when it is compared with the biblical references to creation. What is the explanation for these similarities?

Based on the dating of Babylonian and biblical materials, apparently biblical writers were aware of Babylonian prototypes. Though the two accounts are similar in some ways, they are poles apart in other ways. Conflict between rival deities dominates the Babylonian story of creation. The biblical accounts feature one God creating a good, orderly, and harmonious universe. Their cosmogony (theory of the origin of the universe) is similar; their religion is radically different. Biblical writers seem to be conscious of Babylonian sources, but they take a critical position toward them.

Human Place in Creation Both detailed stories of creation in the Bible feature people at center stage, even though the creation of persons is last in the order of creative acts in Genesis 1:1—2:4*a* but first in Genesis 2:4*b*–24. The author of Psalm 8 seems surprised at the attention the Creator gives to mortal humans formed from the dust (Ps. 8:4). Yet God gave humans a place of prominence and set them over the rest of creation (Ps. 8:5–8). "For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels" (Ps. 8:5*a)* may be a commentary on the Genesis statement that God "created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27).

New Creation and Physical Creation The Old Testament is consistent in its use of the verb "create" (bara'). Only God serves as subject of the verb. Creation is the work of God. People may "make" ('asah) and "form" (yatsar). God alone creates (bara').

Psalm 51:10 may reflect a transition in usage of "create" (bara') to designate a purely physical work. A clean heart is the object of the verb "create" in this Psalm. Isaiah employed "create" in reference to "new heavens and a new earth" as well as "Jerusalem" and "her people" (Isa. 65:17–18). Paul wrote to the Corinthians about being "in Christ" and thereby being "a new creation" (2 Cor. 5:17). "Created in Christ Jesus" is Paul's terminology for spiritual salvation in Ephesians 2:10. The point in all of these references is that God alone is the Author of spiritual redemption.

God is the Creator of all things. All things belong to God. God gave humans dominion over creation, a stewardship assignment. Therefore, people are accountable directly to God for their use or abuse of creation. God created "good" heavens and a "good" earth. The entrance of human sin has had an adverse effect on creation (Hos. 4:1–3). Paul pictured that the whole of creation "groaneth and travaileth" under the burden of human sin (Rom. 8:22). He also wrote of a time when "the creation itself also will be set free from its slavery to corruption into the freedom of the glory of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21 NAS). Paul anticipated a day when God would restore the whole of creation to its original goodness. Billy K. Smith

CREATURE A being with life. The phrase used in the Hebrew Bible nephesh chayah is translated by "creature," "living [thing, soul]," and "beast." In Genesis 2:7 it is used of mankind and translated "living soul." In all of the other references the phrase applies solely to animals. Because the same term is used of mankind and the other creatures, interpreters believe that it applies to the similar physical makeup (same matter) rather than the higher relationship with God that is special to humans. Mike Mitchell

CREDIT, CREDITOR See Loans.

CREEPING THINGS English translation sometimes used for a general Hebrew term designating small animials that appear to creep or crawl along the ground. English translators sometimes use "moving things" or other equivalents for the Hebrew word. The term was applied to all land animals in general (Gen. 1:24–26,28; 7:23; 9:3), fish (Pss. 69:34; 104:25; Hab. 1:14), forest animals (Ps. 104:20), and swarming creatures (that is, weasels, mice, lizards, snails, moles, and perhaps even crocodiles, NRSV, NAS; Lev. 11:29–30,44,46).

CRESCENS (Crĕs' cĕns) Personal name meaning, "growing." Christian worker with Paul who had gone to Galatia when 2 Timothy was written (2 Tim. 4:10).

CRESCENTS Translation used in some modern versions for the ornamental jewelry in the shape of the crescent moon worn on necklaces. It probably had magical connotations. Midianites (Judg. 8:21,26) and unfaithful Israelites (Isa. 3:18) wore them.

CRETANS (Crē' tăns), CRETES, CRETIANS Citizens of Crete. See Crete.

CRETE (Crēte) A long, narrow, mountainous island south of mainland Greece, running 170 miles east-west but never more than about 35 miles wide. Crete was the center of the Minoan maritime empire named after the legendary King Minos, and associated especially with the famous palaces of Cnossos and Phaestos, which flourished from 2000 to 1500 B.C. This artistically brilliant civilization fell suddenly, perhaps by earthquake followed by conquest, about 1400 B.C., leaving written tablets in the oldest known scripts of Europe, including the undeciphered "Linear A" and the apparently later proto-Greek "Linear B," found also on the mainland. The Minoans of Crete were known to the Egyptians as "Keftiu," which may be the same as biblical "Caphtor," though the biblical term may include a wider reference to coastlands and islands of the Aegean area. The Philistines came to Palestine from Caphtor (Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7) and may have been part of the widespread migrant "Sea Peoples" rather than Cretans proper.

In classical Greek times Crete had many city-states, but they played relatively little part in mainstream Greek history. It had become a center of piracy before the Roman occupation in 67 B.C. Under the Romans it became part of a double province Crete with Cyrene, under a governor with the title "proconsul," who ruled the island and the opposite coast of North Africa from the Roman capital Gortyna. This had already been among the cities to whom the Romans had appealed a century before for fair treatment of their Jewish minorities (1 Macc. 15:23). Cretans were among those listed as present in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:11), and the gospel may first have reached the island through them.

Paul made his voyage to Rome as a prisoner on a Roman grain ship. The voyage followed the route south of Crete, which gave partial shelter from the northwest winds and avoided the peril of the lee shore on the north coast, while still involving the need to beat up against largely adverse winds. The journey had already been very slow, and it was getting dangerously late in the summer sailing season. The ship doubled Salmone, the eastern cape of Crete, and with difficulty reached Fair Havens, a small anchorage near the city of Lasea (Acts 27:8). There the emergency council called by the centurion and shipmaster overruled Paul's advice, and a risky attempt was made to reach Phoenix, a regular port for servicing the grain ships, some 40 miles further west along the coast. The gentle south wind gave way to a violent northeaster (Euroclydon, Acts 27:14) when they came out of the shelter of Cape Matala (Loukinos) into an open bay, and the ship was driven helplessly, managing only some emergency action in the lee of the offshore island of Cauda, and thence to shipwreck on Malta.

The only other references to Crete in the New Testament are in the epistle to Titus. Paul had left Titus in Crete to exercise pastoral supervision over the churches there (Titus 1:5). The character of the people is described in a quotation from a prophet of their own: "Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies" (Titus 1:12), words attributed to the Cretan seer Epimenides, who was also credited with having advised the Athenians to set up altars to unknown gods (compare Acts 17:23).

It is a problem to know when Paul (or Titus) visited Crete, apart from Paul's voyage as a prisoner. It is difficult to fit the occasions of the Pastoral Epistles (to Timothy and Titus) into Paul's life as recorded in Acts. The most satisfactory answer to this difficulty still seems to be that which argues that Paul was released from his two years' imprisonment in Rome (Acts 28:30), and undertook further travels in the East which can only be traced in these epistles. At this last period of his life he may have focused his work on establishing and strengthening the churches throughout the Greek East. Colin J. Hemer

CRIB Feeding trough for the ox (Prov. 14;4 KJV) or the ass (Isa. 1:3; compare Job 39:9) and probably for any number of other domesticated animals.

CRICKET The Hebrew term translated "cricket" (Lev. 11:22 NIV, NAS, NRSV, TEV) is difficult to identify, probably a locust or grasshopper. See Insects.

CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS Israel, like most peoples in the Ancient Near East, considered their law to be the direct revelation from God. Since the law came from God, any transgression of the law was a transgression of God's revealed will.

The responsibility for the fulfillment and enforcement of the law lay with the entire community. The transgression of the law by one person or group within Israel involved the whole community in the guilt of the act. This is especially true in cases of homicide, idolatry, and sexual offenses (see, for example, Deut. 19:10; 21:1–9; 2 King 24:1–7). When Israel failed to purge the offender and rebellion against God's Law from their midst, God punished Israel (Lev. 18:26–28; 26:3–45; Deut. 28).

Israelite Law with respect to crime and punishment was distinct from the laws of other cultures in several ways. First, Israel, in contrast to many of its neighbors, did not consider crimes against property to be capital crimes. Israel observed a system of corporal punishment and/or fines for lesser crimes. Second, Israel restricted the law of retaliation (eye for an eye; lex talionis) to the person of the offender. Other cultures permitted the family to be punished to the crimes of the offender. Third, Israel did not observe class differences in the enforcement of the Law to the extent that their neighbors did. Nobility and commoner, priest and lay people were treated equally in theory. However, slaves and sojourners (foreigners) did not have an equal standing with free Israelites—though their treatment in Israel was often better than in surrounding nations; and women did not have equal standing with the men in Israelite culture—especially in regard to marriage and divorce laws and laws pertaining to sexual offenses. Finally, Israelites (in contrast to the people of surrounding nations) could not substitute sacrifices for intentional breaches of the law; sin and guilt offerings were allowed only in the cases of unwitting sins (Lev. 4—5).

Crimes and Capital Punishment in the Old Testament Israelite law considered some crimes serious enough to warrant capital punishment. See Capital Punishment.

Being "Cut Off" from Israel Often in the Old Testament the punishment for a particular crime is termed being "cut off" from Israel. The meaning of the phrase is somewhat ambiguous. Some interpret the phrase to mean excommunication or exile from Israel or the community of faith while others interpret it as the pronouncement of the death penalty. The latter position is accepted in this article. Often the phrase "cut off" is used in parallel with words or phrases or in contexts which clearly indicate death (Ex. 31:14; Deut. 12:29; 19:1; 2 Sam. 7:9; 1 Kings 11:16; Jer. 7:28; 11:19; Ezek. 14:13,17,19,21; 17:17; 25:7; 29:8; Amos 1:5,8; 2:3; Obad. 9–10; Nah. 3:15; Zech. 13:8). See Excommunication.

The palace of Minos at Knossos on the island of Crete dates from the end of the Minoan Age.

The offenses that make one liable to being "cut off" are: the men of Israel who are uncircumcised (Gen. 17:14; compare Ex. 4:24; Josh. 5:2–9), eating leavened bread during the feast of unleavened bread (Es. 12:15,19), trying to copy or using the holy anointing oil on outsiders (30:33), profaning the sabbath (Ex. 31:14), partaking of sacrifices in an unclean state (Lev. 7:20–21,25; 19:8; compare 1 Sam. 2:33), eating blood (Lev. 7:27; 17:10,14), offering sacrifices in a place other than the tabernacle (Lev. 17:3–4,8–9), certain sexual offenses (18:29; 20:17–18), child sacrifices to Molech (Lev. 20,3,5), consulting wizards or mediums (Lev. 20:6; Mic. 5:12), approaching holy things in an unclean state (Lev. 22:3; Num. 19:13,20), improperly observing the Day of Atonement (Lev. 23:29), not observing the Passover (Num. 9:13), committing a high handed sin (sinning intentionally or defiantly; Num. 15:30–31), idolatry (1 Kings 9:6–7; 14:9–10,14; 21:21; Ezek. 14:7–8; Mic. 5:13; Zeph. 1:4; Zech. 13:2), and those God curses (Ps. 37:22). The idea of being "cut off" is also mentioned in the New Testament (Rom. 9:3; 11:22; compare 1 Cor. 16:22; Gal. 1:6: 5:12).

Crimes and Corporal Punishment in the Old Testament Crimes of a lesser nature (usually those involving premeditated bodily injury) were punished with some sort of corporal punishment. The law of retaliation (eye for an eye; lex talionis) was the operative principle in most cases involving corporal punishment (Ex. 21:23–25; Lev. 24:19–22; Deut. 19:21).

The law of retaliation may seem to some to be rather harsh and even crude. In our own modern world, we would sue a person responsible for putting out an eye before we would put that person's eye out. In the ancient world, however, the law of retaliation served to restrict the vengeance taken on one who inflicted bodily injury. For example, it prevented the killing of a person who had put out the eye of another. The law of retaliation helped make the punishment fit the crime.

Besides the law of retaliation, corporal punishments also included scourging (Deut. 25:1–3), blinding (Gen. 19:11; 2 Kings 6:18; compare Judg. 16:21; 2 Kings 25:7), plucking out hair (Neh. 13:25; Is. 50:6), and the sale of a thief into slavery who could not pay the monetary penalties (Ex. 22:1–3; compare Lev. 25:39; 2 Kings 4:1; Neh. 5:5). In one instance, mutilation is prescribed (Deut. 25:11–12).

Crimes and Fines in the Old Testament Fines were always paid to the injured party. Fines were prescibed for causing a miscarriage (Ex. 21:22), deflowering a virgin (Ex. 22:16–17; compare Deut. 22:29), sexually violating a slave woman promised to another man in marriage (Lev. 19:20), and in some cases where an ox gored a person causing death (Ex. 21:28–32). A thief (one who steals by stealth) may be fined double, four-fold, or five-fold the value of the stolen goods, depending on what was stolen (Ex. 22:1–4,9). A robber (one who steals by force or intimidation) must return the stolen property plus one-fifth of its value plus make a guilt offering (Lev. 6:1–7). The difference between the penalties for thievery and robbery is difficult to explain. Should a man falsely accuse his bride of being unchaste, the man is fined double the marriage present (100 shekels of silver; Deut. 22:19). One who inflicted unpremeditated bodily injury must compensate the victim for the loss of income plus pay the costs of recovery (Ex. 21:18–19). If a person should cause the loss of eye or tooth of his slave, the slave was freed (Ex. 21:26–27).

Crimes and Punishments in the New Testament There is no body of legal material in the New Testament comparable to that found in the Old Testament. Jesus did comment in the Sermon on the Mount on some of the matters discussed above. He expanded the prohibition of killing to include anger (Matt. 5:21–26) and the prohibition against adultery to include lust (Matt. 5:27–30). In contrast to the Old Testament, Jesus forbade divorce except on the grounds of unchastity (Matt. 5:31–32). With regard to the law of retaliation, Jesus desired that his disciples waive their rights to reparations (Matt. 5:38–42).

During the period of the New Testament, the Jews seem to have had relative autonomy in the matters of their religious law and customs. Even Jewish communities outside Palestine were under the authority of the high priest (Acts 9:1–2) and were allowed some measure of autonomy in religious matters (Acts. 18:12–17).

Whether or not the Jews had the authority under the Roman government to impose the death penalty is a debated question. When Jesus was brought to trial, the Jews' reason for bringing him to Pilate was that they did not have the power to execute criminals (John 18:31). One ancient rabbinic tradition in the Babylonian Talmud (Abodah Zarah 8b) holds that the Jews lost the power to execute criminals for about 40 years. However, incidents in the New Testament seem to indicate otherwise: statements made at Peter's trial (Acts 5:27–42), the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:57–60), attempted lynchings (Acts 9:23–24; 14:19; 23:12–15), the authority to kill foreigners caught trespassing in certain areas of the temple (Acts 21:28–31, a practice reported by Josephus, an ancient Jewish historian), and a statement made by Paul (Acts 26:10). Other ancient Jewish records of stonings and burnings indicates that the Jews may have had the authority to impose the death penalty.

The Jews during the period of the New Testament had the power to impose corporal punishment. This consisted primarily of scourgings (Matt. 10:17; Acts 5:40; 22:19; 2 Cor. 11:24) and excommunication (Luke 6:22; John 9:22; 12:42; 16:2).

The procurator was Rome's legal representative in the provinces of the Roman empire. He intervened in local affairs when the public peace and order were threatened—especially by sedition, riot, or brigandage (compare Acts 5:36–37). The charge against Jesus was a claim to be "King of the Jews" (Matt 27:37). Roman punishments included crucifixion (usually reserved only for slaves and the lower classes), beheading (see Matt. 14:10; Rev. 20:4), lifetime sentences to work in the mines (that is, kept in bonds; Acts 23:29; 26:31), scourging (Acts 16:22; 22:24), and imprisonment (Acts 16:23–24). See Appeal to Caesar.

Phil Logan

CRIMSON A red color taken from the bodies of dead kermes (Coccus ilicis, wich attached itself to the kermes oak—Quercus coccifera) or cochineal insects (Coccus cacti). The same Hebrew words translated as crimson are also translated "scarlet" ("red" comes from a root word from which the Hebrew word "blood" comes and designates a different color.) Crimson or scarlet thread (Gen. 38:28,30), cord (Josh. 2:18,21), and cloth (Lev. 14:4; Num. 4:8; 2 Sam. 1:24; 2 Chron. 2:7,14; 3:14; Prov. 31:21; Jer. 4:30; Nah. 2:3) are mentioned in the Bible. Crimson or scarlet along with purple were considered royal colors (Matt. 27:28; Rev. 17:3–4; 18:11–12,16). Isaiah used scarlet as the imagery to describe sins (Isa. 1:18). See Colors.

CRISPING PIN KJV translation in Isaiah 3:22. A crisping pin was used for curling the hair. Modern versions translate the word "handbag," or "flounced skirt" (REB). See Bag 1.

CRISPUS (Crĭs′ pŭs) Personal name meaning, "curly." Leader of synagogue in Corinth (Acts 18:8) and one of few whom Paul personally baptized (1 Cor. 1:14). Church tradition says he became bishop of Aegina.

CROCUS See Flowers.

CROSS, CRUCIFIXION The method the Romans used to execute Jesus Christ. The most painful and degrading form of capital punishment in the ancient world, the cross became also the means by which Jesus became the atoning sacrifice for the sins of all mankind. It also became a symbol for the sacrifice of self in discipleship (Rom. 12:1) and for the death of self to the world (Mark 8:34).

Historical Development Originally a cross was a wooden pointed stake used to build a wall or to erect fortifications around a town. Beginning with the Assyrians and Persians, it began to be used to display the heads of captured foes or of particularly heinous criminals on the palisades above the gateway into a city. Later crucifixion developed into a form of capital punishment, as enemies of the state were impaled on the stake itself. The Greeks and Romans at first reserved the punishment only for slaves, saying it was too barbaric for freeborn or citizens. By the first century, however, it was used for any enemy of the state, though citizens could only be crucified by direct edict of Caesar. As time went on, the Romans began to use crucifixion more and more as a deterrent to criminal activity, so that by Jesus' time it was a common sight.

The eastern form of crucifixion was practiced in the Old Testament. Saul was decapitated and his body displayed on a wall by the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:9–10), and the "hanging" of Esther 2:23; 5:14 may mean impalement (compare Ezra 6:11). According to Jewish law (Deut. 21:22–23) the offenders were "hung on a tree," which meant they were "accursed of God" and outside the covenant people. Such criminals were to be removed from the cross before nightfall lest they "defile the land." During the intertestamental period the western form was borrowed when Alexander Janneus crucified 800 Pharisees (76 B.C.), but on the whole the Jews condemned and seldom used the method. Even Herod the Great refused to crucify his enemies. The practice was abolished after the "conversion" of the emperor of Constantine to Christianity.

A person crucified in Jesus' day was first of all scourged (beaten with a whip consisting of thongs with pieces of metal or bone attached to the end) or at least flogged until the blood flowed. This was not just done out of cruelty but was designed to hasten death and lessen the terrible ordeal. After the beating, the victim was forced to bear the crossbeam to the execution site in order to signify that life was already over and to break the will to live. A tablet detailing the crime(s) was often placed around the criminal's neck and then fastened to the cross. At the site the prisoner was often tied (the normal method) or nailed (if a quicker death was desired) to the crossbeam. The nail would be driven through the wrist rather than the palm, since the smaller bones of the hand could not support the weight of the body. The beam with the body was then lifted and tied to the already affixed upright pole. Pins or a small wooden block were placed halfway up to provide a seat for the body lest the nails tear open the wounds or the ropes force the arms from their sockets. Finally the feet were tied or nailed to the post. Death was caused by the loss of blood circulation and coronary failure. Especially if the victims were tied, it could take days of hideous pain as the extremities turned slowly gangrenous; so often the soldiers would break the victims legs with a club, causing massive shock and a quick death. Such deaths were usually done in public places, and the body was left to rot for days, with carrion birds allowed to degrade the corpse further.

Four types of crosses were used: 1) The Latin cross has the crossbeam about two-thirds of the way up the upright pole; 2) St. Anthony's cross (probably due to its similarity to his famous crutch) had the beam at the top of the upright pole like a T. 3) St. Andrew's cross (supposedly the form used to crucify Andrew) had the shape of the letter X; 4) the Greek cross has both beams equal in the shape of a plus sign.

The Crucifixion of Jesus Jesus predicted His coming crucifixion many times. The Synoptic Gospels list at least three (Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:33–34 and parallels), while John records three others (3:14; 8:28; 12:32–33). Several aspects of Jesus' passion are predicted; 1) it occurred by divine necessity ("must" in Mark 8:31); 2) both Jews ("delivered") and Romans ("killed") were guilty (Mark 9:31); 3) Jesus would be vindicated by being raised from the dead; 4) the death itself entailed glory (seen in the "lifted up" sayings which imply exaltation in John 3:14; 8:28; 12:32–33).

The narration of Jesus' crucifixion in the Gospels emphasized Jewish guilt, but all four carefully separated the leaders from the common people, who supported Jesus all along and were led astray by the leaders at the last. Yet Roman guilt is also obvious. The Sanhedrin was no longer allowed to initiate capital punishment; only the Romans could do so. Furthermore, only Roman soldiers could carry it out. Roman customs were followed in the scourging, mock enthronement, bearing the crossbeam, and the crucifixion itself. The site on a hill and the size of the cross (the use of the hyssop reed shows it was seven to nine feet high) showed their desire for a public display of a "criminal." The Jewish elements in the crucifixion of Jesus were the wine mixed with myrrh (Mark 15:23), the hyssop reed with vinegar (Mark 15:36), and the removal of Jesus' body from the cross before sunset (John 19:31).

The four Gospels look at Jesus' crucifixion from four different vantage points and highlight diverse aspects of the significance of His death. Mark and Matthew centered upon the horror of putting the Son of God Himself to death. Mark emphasized the messianic meaning, using the taunts of the crowds to "save yourself" (15:30–31) as an unconscious prophecy pointing to the resurrection. Matthew took Mark even further, pointing to Jesus as the royal Messiah who faced His destiny in complete control of the situation. Jesus' vindication was found not only in the rending of the veil and the centurion's testimony (Matt. 27:51,54 paralleling Mark) but in the remarkable raising of the Old Testament saints (vv. 52–53) which links the cross and the open tomb. For Matthew the cross inaugurated the last days when the power of death is broken, and salvation is poured out upon all people.

Luke has perhaps the most unique portrayal, with two emphases: Jesus as the archetypal righteous Martyr who forgave His enemies and the crucifixion as an awesome scene of reverence and worship. Luke omitted the negative aspects of the crucifixion (earthquakes, wine with myrrh, cry of dereliction) and overturned the taunts when the crowd "returned home beating their breasts" (23:48 RSV). Luke included three sayings of Jesus which relate to prayer (found only in Luke): "Father, forgive them" (v. 34, contrasted with the mockery); "today you will be with me in paradise" (v. 43, in response to the criminal's prayer); and "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit" (v. 46). A wondrous sense of stillness and worship color Luke's portrayal.

John's narration is perhaps the most dramatic. Even moreso than Luke, all the negative elements disappear (the darkness and taunts as well as those missing also in Luke), and an atmosphere of calm characterizes the scene. At the core is Jesus' sovereign control of the whole scene. The cross becomes His throne. John noted that the inscription on the cross ("JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS") was written in Aramaic, Latin, and Greek (19:19–20), thereby changing it into a universal proclamation of Jesus' royal status. Throughout the account to the final cry, "It is finished" (v. 30), Jesus was in complete control.

One cannot understand Jesus' crucifixion until all four Gospels are taken into account. All the emphases—the messianic thrust, Jesus as Son of God and as the righteous Martyr, the sacrificial nature of His death, the cross as His throne—are necessary emphases of the total picture of the significance of His crucifixion.

Theological Meaning While a theology of the cross is found primarily in Paul, it clearly predates him, as can be demonstrated in the "creeds" (statements of belief/teaching) Paul quoted. For instance, 1 Corinthians 15:3–5 says Paul had "received" and then "delivered" to the Corinthians the truth that Jesus "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." Three major themes are interwoven in this and other creeds (Rom 4:25; 6:1–8; 8:32; Col. 2:11–12; 1 Tim. 3:16; Heb. 1:3–4; 1 Pet. 1:21; 3:18–22): Jesus death as our substitute (from Isa. 53:5; compare Mark 10:45; 14:24); Jesus' death and resurrection as fulfilling Scripture; and Jesus' vindication and exaltation by God.

For Paul the "word of the cross" (1 Cor. 1:18 NAS) is the heart of the gospel, and the preaching of the cross is the soul of the church's mission. "Christ crucified" (1 Cor. 1:23; compare 2:2; Gal. 3:1) is more than the basis of our salvation; the cross was the central event in history, the one moment which demonstrated God's control of and involvement in human history. In 1 Corinthians 1:17—2:16 Paul contrasted the "foolishness" of the "preaching of the cross" with human "wisdom" (1:17–18), for only in the cross can salvation be found and only in the foolish "preaching of the cross" and "weakness" can the "power of God" be seen (1:21,25). Jesus as the lowly One achieved His glory by virtue of His suffering—only the crucified One could become the risen One (1:26–30). Such a message certainly was viewed as foolish in the first century; Roman historians like Tacitus and Suetonius looked upon the idea of a "crucified God" with contempt.

The cross is the basis of our salvation in Paul's epistles (Rom. 3:24–25; Eph. 2:16; Col. 1:20; 2:14), while the resurrection is stressed as the core in the Book of Acts (2:33–36; 3:19–21; 5:31). Romans 4:25 makes both emphases. The reason for the distinct emphases is most likely seen in the fact that Acts chronicles the preaching of the early church (with the resurrection as the apologetic basis of our salvation) and the epistles the teaching of the early church (with the crucifixion the theological basis of our salvation). The three major terms are: "redemption," stressing the "ransom payment" made by Jesus' blood in delivering us from sin (Titus 2:14; 1 Pet. 1:18); "propitiation," which refers to Jesus' death as "satisfying" God's righteous wrath (Rom. 3:25; Heb. 2:17); and "justification," picturing the results of the cross, the "acquittal" ("declaring righteous") of our guilt (Rom. 3:24; 4:25; Gal. 2:16–21; 3:24).

The cross did even more than procure salvation. It forged a new unity between Jew and Gentile by breaking down "the dividing wall of hostility" and "made the two one" (Eph. 2:14–15 NIV), thereby producing "peace" by creating a new access to the Father (v. 18). In addition the cross "disarmed" the demonic "powers" and forged the final triumph over Satan and his hordes, forcing those spiritual forces to follow his train in a victory procession (Col. 2:15 NIV). The cross was Satan's great error. When Satan entered Judas in betraying Jesus, he undoubtedly did not realize that the cross would prove his greatest defeat. He could only respond with frustrated rage, knowing that "his time is short" (Rev. 12:12 NIV). Satan participated in his own undoing!

The Symbolic Meaning Jesus Himself established the primary figurative interpretation of the cross as a call to complete surrender to God. He used it five times as a symbol of true discipleship in terms of self-denial, taking up one's cross, and following Jesus (Mark 8:34; 10:38; Matt. 16:24; Luke 9:23; 14:27). Building upon the Roman practice of bearing the crossbeam to the place of execution, Jesus intended this in two directions: the death of self, involving the sacrifice of one's individuality for the purpose of following Jesus completely; and a willingness to imitate Jesus completely, even to the extent of martyrdom.

Closely connected to this is Paul's symbol of the crucified life. Conversion means the ego "no longer live(s)" but is replaced by Christ and faith in Him (Gal. 2:20). Self-centered desires are nailed to the cross (Gal. 5:24), and worldly interests are dead (Gal. 6:14). In Romans 6:1–8 we are "buried with him" (using the imagery of baptism) with the result that we are raised to "newness of life" (v. 4). This is taken further in 2 Corinthians 5:14–17. The believer relives the death and resurrection by putting to death the old self and putting on the new. In one sense this is a past act, experienced at conversion. Yet according to Ephesians 4:22,24 this is also a present act, experienced in the corporate life of the church. In other words, both at conversion and in spiritual growth, the believer must relive the cross before experiencing the resurrection life. The Christian paradox is that death is the path to life! See Atonement; Christology; Justification; Passion; Propitiation; Redemption. Grant Osborne

CROWN A special headdress worn by royalty and other persons of high merit and honor.

The crown probably evolved from the cloth headband or turban worn by a tribal leader; the headband eventually became a metal diadem, with or without ornamentation. Some years ago archaeologists discovered in a Jericho tomb a copper headband or crown dating from about 2000 B.C.

Both the king and the high priest of Israel wore crowns, but we have been told more about the latter than the former (Ex. 28:36–37; 29:6, Lev. 8:9). David's golden crown was a prize of battle (2 Sam. 12:30). As a symbol of his authority, the crown was worn when the king was on his throne and when leading his forces in combat (2 Sam. 1:10). The word "crown" was also used figuratively referring to the old man's gray head (Prov. 16:31), a man's virtuous wife (Prov. 12:4), and God's blessings on mankind (Ps. 8:5). Occasionally the word referred to a festive wreath of leaves or flowers (Song of Sol. 3:11).

While most references to "crown" in the Old Testament point to the actual headdress, in the New Testament it usually has a figurative significance. Paul envisioned "a crown of righteousness" for himself and others (2 Tim. 4:8), and James anticipated "the crown of life" (Jas. 1:12). While the winning runner of that day received a garland of myrtle leaves, Paul looked forward to a crown that would not decay (1 Cor. 9:25). Not even the victorious athlete would receive his reward unless he obeyed the rules (2 Tim. 2:5). Conversely, the word evokes revulsion when we read of Roman soldiers weaving briers into a crown of Jesus' head (Matt. 27:29).

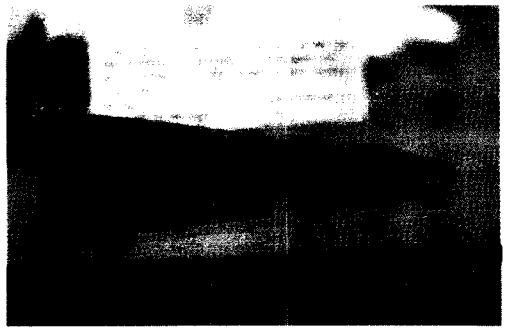
In the Book of Revelation crowns are both realistic and figurative. The twenty-four elders seated around God's throne were wearing "crowns of gold" (4:4), and as they worshiped, they "cast their crowns before the throne" (4:10). Later, a seven-headed dragon appeared wearing a crown on each head (12:3), but opposing all the evil forces was the "Son of man" wearing "a golden crown" (14:14). In each case the crown symbolized power, either good or evil. William J. Fallis

CROWN OF THORNS The crown made by the Roman soldiers to mock Jesus, the "King of the Jews" (Matt. 27:29; Mark 15:18; John 19:3; not mentioned in Luke). The identification of the plant used to plait this crown is unknown. Jesus used the imagery of "thorns" in his teaching in a negative sense (Matt. 7:16; Mark 4:7,18; see Heb. 6:8). See Plants of the Bible.

CRUCIBLE A melting pot or "fining pot" (KJV), probably made of pottery, used in the refining of silver. The crucible is used in the Bible as a figure for testing of people (Prov. 17:3; 27:21).

CRUSE An elongated pottery vessel about six inches tall used for holding liquids such as oil (1 Kings 17:12,14,16) or water (1 Kings 19:6). Modern readers would understand the vessels to serve the purpose of a modern canteen (1 Sam. 26:11–16). The bowl (2 Kings 2:20 NIV) reflects a different Hebrew term but a similar type vessel.



CRYSTAL A nearly transparent quartz which may be colorless or slightly tinged. "Crystal" is the modern translation of several Hebrew and Greek words used to describe something valuable (Job 28:18), a clear sky (Ezek. 1:22), a calm sea or river (Rev. 4:6; 22:1), or the radiance of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:11). Translators differ in their usage in the various passages.

CUB See Chub.

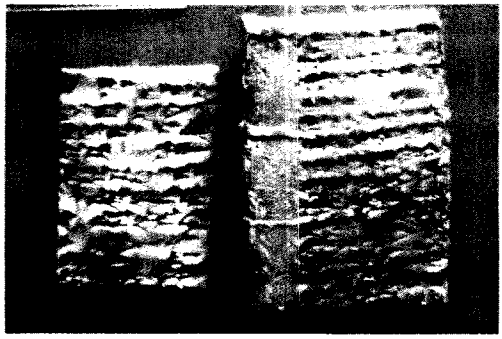
CUBIT A unit of measure. It was reckoned as the distance from a person's elbow to the tip of the middle finger, approximately eighteen inches. See Weights and Measures.

CUCKOW KJV translation for an unclean bird (Lev. 11:16; Deut. 14:15); also spelled cuckoo. Since the bird in question is grouped with carrion-eating or predatory birds, the cuckoo would seem to be eliminated since it only eats insects. Modern versions read "sea gull."

CUMMIN An herb of the carrot family (Cuminum cyminum L.) mentioned with dill. Used in Bible times to season foods. Isaiah portrayed the planting and threshing of cummin (Isa. 28:25,27). Jesus faulted the Pharisees for giving attention to small things like tithing mint, dill, and cummin while ignoring the weightier matters of the law (Matt. 23:23; see Luke 11:42).



Fragment of a slate measuring rod divided into fractions of the cubit, from Egypt, Akhenaton's reign.

CUN (Cūn) Place name of city in Syria belonging to Hadadezer, king of Zobah. David took bronze from the city as tribute, and Solomon used the materials in furnishing the Temple (1 Chron. 18:8). The parallel passage in 2 Samuel 8:8 reads, "Berothai." The two are apparently separate cities, Cun being northeast of Byblos and Berothai southeast of Byblos. Apparently, Cun was more familiar to the Chronicler's readers than Berothai. See Berothai.

CUNEIFORM (Cū·nē′ ĭ·fôrm) The most widely-used system of writing in the Ancient Near East until it was supplanted by alphabetic scripts like Aramaic. The word cuneiform is derived from the Latin cuneus, wedge, and is used to refer to characters composed of wedges. The system of writing was originated apparently by the Sumerians before 3000 B.C. The earliest documents are commercial tablets consisting of pictographs (of sheep, grain, etc.) and numbers. Because the documents were written on tablets of moist clay, the scribes soon found it more convenient to indicate objects with stylized pictures composed of wedges made by a stylus. The earliest cuneiform signs were ideographs (a sign standing for a word); but as literary needs increased, the signs were given phonetic values.

Cuneiform tablet and its envelope dealing with the sale of some land.

The cuneiform system of writing was adapted and developed to suit the requirements of several other languages, including Akkadian, Hurrian, Hittite, Elamite, and Eblaite. The people at Ugarit and the Persians used wedges to form their alphabetic scripts.

The decipherment of the cuneiform scripts of Mesopotamia was aided by the existence of trilingual inscriptions, such as the Behistun Rock inscriptions written in Persian, Babylonian, and Elamite cuneiform. The decipherment of the Persian written in an alphabetic cuneiform opened the way for the decipherment of the more difficult syllabic Babylonian and Elamite scripts. Due to the pioneering efforts of H. Rawlinson, E. Hincks, and J. Oppert and others, by the end of the nineteenth century it was possible to read with confidence the cuneiform inscriptions known up to that time.

The decipherment of the Ugaritic alphabetic cuneiform script was accomplished simultaneously but independently by H. Bauer, E. Dhorme, and Ch. Virolleaud in 1930–31. Unlike any other cuneiform writing, Ugaritic consists of thirty-one signs or characters used to record documents in a language similar to Phoenician and Hebrew. The Ugaritic inscriptions and documents date from the fourteenth century and are of crucial importance for the study of the Bible.

See Akkadian; Assyrian; Babylonian; Sumerian; Writing. Thomas Smothers

CUP The cup was a drinking vessel made of pottery or various metals such as gold, silver, or bronze. During biblical times cups came in two different forms. Some resembled their modern counterparts. However most ancient cups were shallow bowls which were produced in a multitude of sizes. They also could be used in divination (Gen. 44:5). In addition, the term cup was used to designate the receptacles for holding lamps on the lampstand of the tabernacle (Ex. 25:31–35 NAS).

Gold cup decorated with gazelles, late second millennium B.C., from southwest Caspian area.

In the Bible the word "cup" frequently is used in a figurative sense. The contents of the cup are accentuated, since symbolically God serves the drink. Thus the cup might represent blessings or prosperity for a righteous person (Ps. 16:5; 23:5; 116:13). Likewise, it portrayed the totality of divine judgment on the wicked (Ps. 11:6; 75:8; Isa. 51:17,22; Jer. 25:15; 49:12; 51:7; Ezek. 23:31–34; Rev. 14:10; 16:19; 17:4; 18:6). Jesus voluntarily drank the cup of suffering (Matt. 20:22; 26:39,42; Mark 10:38; 14:36; Luke 22:42; John 18:11). For Jesus that cup was His death and everything that it involved.

The cup had a prominent place in the liturgy of the Jewish Passover meal, and so, subsequently, in the Lord's Supper. In the Christian ordinance the cup is a symbolic reminder of the atoning death of Jesus (Matt. 26:27–28; Mark 14:23–24; Luke 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25–26).

See Divination; Lampstand; Lord's Supper; Passover; Pottery. LeBron Matthews

CUPBEARER A high ranking official in the courts of Ancient Near Eastern kings. The cupbearer was responsible for serving wine at the king's table and protecting the king from poisoning. The cupbearer was often taken into the king's confidence and had no small amount of influence on the king's decisions. The "chief butler" of the Joseph story (Gen. 40:2) was a cupbearer who was overseer of a staff of his own. Nehemiah was the highly esteemed cupbearer for Artaxerxes (Neh. 1:11; see also 1 Kings 10:5; 2 Chron. 9:4). The Rabshakeh may have been the title given to cupbearers in the Assyrian court (2 Kings 18:17–37; Isa. 36:2).

CURDS Fermented milk product equivalent to the modern leban (translated as "butter" in the KJV). Curds are prepared by churning fresh milk with a small amount of curds from a previous batch in a goatskin. They are frequently served with honey and wine and are considered a delicacy among the nomads in the ancient Near East (see Gen. 18:8; Deut. 32:14; Judg. 5:25; 2 Sam. 17:29; Job 20:17; Isa. 7:15,22).

CURSE See Blessing and Cursing.

CURTAIN A piece of cloth or other material, sometimes arranged so that it can be drawn up or sideways, hung either for decoration or to cover, conceal, or shut off something. "Curtain" is often used synonymously with "tent" (Song of Sol. 1:5; Isa. 54:2; Jer. 4:20; 10:20; 49:29; Hab. 3:7). The tabernacle which was constructed to carry the ark of the covenant was made of ten curtains (Ex. 26:2). At a later time in Israelite history, two curtain were used to close off the holy place and the holy of holies in the Temple. The curtain separating the holy of holies and the holy place was torn from top to bottom at the time of Jesus' death signifying the access that all people had to God from that time forward (Matt. 27:51). The writer of Hebrews speaks of the curtain in the heavenly sanctuary (Heb. 6:19; 9:3). Jesus also opened this curtain to his followers by his death (Heb. 10:20).

CUSH (Cŭsh) 1. A member of the tribe of Benjamin about whom the psalmist sang (Ps. 7:1). Nothing else is known of him. 2. Son of Ham and grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:8). Thus in this Table of Nations he is seen as the original ancestor of inhabitants of Cush, the land.

3. A nation situated south of Egypt with differing boundaries and perhaps including differing dark-skinned tribes (Jer. 13:23) at different periods of history. The Hebrew word Cush has been traditionally translated Ethiopia, following the Septuagint, or earliest Greek translation, but Cush was not identical with Ethiopia as presently known. Moses' wife came from Cush (Num. 12:1), probably a woman distinct from Zipporah (Ex. 2:21). Cush was an enemy of Egypt for centuries, being controlled by strong pharaohs but gaining independence under weak pharaohs. Zerah, a general from Cush, fought against Asa, king of Judah (910–869) (2 Chron. 14:9). Finally, Piankhi of Cush conquered Egypt and established the twenty-fifth dynasty of Egyptian rulers (716–656) with their capital at Napata above the fourth cataract. Isaiah 18 may describe some of the political activity involved in Cush's establishing their power in Egypt. Tirhakah (2 Kings 19:9) was one of the last of the pharaohs from Cush. Isaiah promised that people who fled from Judah and were exiled in Cush would see God's deliverance (Isa. 11:11; compare Zeph. 3:10). Isaiah acted out judgment against Cush, probably as the rulers of Egypt (Isa. 20:3–5; compare 43:3; 45:14; Ps. 68:31; Jer. 46:9; Ezek. 30:4–5,9). In Ezekiel's day Cush represented the southern limit of Egyptian territory (Ezek. 29:10). Cush's strength could not help Thebes escape from Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria, in 663 B.C. Nahum used this historical example to pronounce doom on Nineveh, the capital of Assyria (Nah. 3:9). Ezekiel listed Cush as one of the allies of Gog and Magog in the great climatic battle (Ezek. 38:5). The psalmist proclaimed that God's reputation had reached even unto Cush (Ps. 87:4). Job saw Cush as a rich source of minerals, especially topaz (Job 28:19).

By the time of Esther, Cush represented the southwestern limits of Persian power (Esther 1:1). Cambyses (530–522) conquered Cush for Persia.

Cush is mentioned in Genesis 2:13 as surrounded by the Gihon River. The Gihon is usually associated with Jerusalem as a spring (1 Kings 1:33). Some Bible students identify Cush here with the Kassites, the successors to the old Babylonian empire, who controlled Babylon between about 1530 and 1151 B.C. Such students connect this with Genesis 10:8, where Cush is associated with Nimrod, whose kingdom centered in Babylon (Gen. 10:10). Other Bible students would see Gihon here as another name for the Nile River and Cush as referring to the land south of Egypt. A clear solution to this problem has not been found.

CUSHAN (Cū′ shăn) A tent-dwelling people Habakkuk saw as experiencing God's wrath (Hab. 3:7). The parallel with Midian makes people think of an Arabian tribe, possibly nomads. Some identify Cushan with Cush, either as a territory controlled by Cush or as an otherwise unknown kingdom of Cush on the northeast shore of the Gulf of Aqabah near Midian. This would account for Cushites near Arabs (2 Chron. 21:16).

CUSHAN-RISHATHAIM (Cū′ shăn- rĭsh ȧ thā′ ĭm) Personal name meaning, "dark one of double evil." King of Aram Naharaim to whom Yahweh gave Israel in the early period of the Judges (Judg. 3:8). Othniel finally defeated him. We have no other information about him. Some have tried to see Aram as an unintentional copying error for an original Edom, but no evidence exists for this conjecture. See Aram Naharaim.

CUSHI (Cū′ shī) Personal name meaning, "Cushite." 1. Father of the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph. 1:1). 2. Ancestor of a royal official under King Jehoiakim (Jer. 36:14).

CUSHITE (Cū′ shīte) Citizen or inhabitant of Cush. See Cush. The Hebrew word is the same as the proper name, "Cushi." God has concern for and control over them just as He does for His own people (Amos 9:7). An unnamed Cushite served as Joab's messenger to bring the news of Absalom's death to David (2 Sam. 18:21–32). A eunuch under King Zedekiah who helped Jeremiah escape from a cistern into which the king had had him thrown (Jer. 38:6–12; 39:16). See Ebed-melech.

CUSTODIAN Wealthy Greek and Roman families often had a slave who attended boys under the age of about 16. The major responsibilities of the custodian was to escort the boys to and from school and to attend to their behavior. The pedagogue or custodian had responsibility to discipline or punish the boy. Once the boys reached manhood, they no longer needed the services of the custodian. Often the young man rewarded the custodian by granting him freedom. Paul spoke of the law as the custodian of God's people until Christ came (Gal. 3:23–26). The law could not save; but it could bring us to the point where we could have faith in Christ by showing us our unrighteousness (Gal. 3:19; compare Rom. 7:7–12). Of course, the law was not nullified by Christ's death nor by becoming Christians. We are still expected to live according to the moral principles found in the law (Rom. 7:12,16; compare Matt. 5:17–20,21–48).

CUTH (Cŭth), CUTHAH Place names with two spellings in Hebrew and English. Cuthah was the center of worship of Nergal, god of death in Mesopotamia. See Nergal. Residents of the city were exiled by the Assyrians to live in Israel (2 Kings 17:24). Once settled, they made an idol to worship Nergal (2 Kings 17:30), thus aggravating the tendency to worship Yahweh of Israel along with other gods. Cuth was located at tell Ibrahim, about 18 miles northeast of Babylon.

CUZA (Cü' zà) NIV spelling of Chuza. See Chuza.

CYMBAL See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CYPRIAN (Cỹ' prĭ an) Citizen or resident of Cyprus. See Cyprus.

Limassol, a modern city on the southern coast of Cyprus.

CYPRUS (Cỹ' prŭs) A large island in the eastern Mediterranean Sea mentioned most prominently in Acts. In the Old Testament scattered references refer to the island as Kittim (Chittim, Isa. 23:1; Jer. 2:10), although in some passages the term has a wider scope and includes lands other than Cyprus lying west of Palestine (Dan. 11:30). The island is 138 miles long east to west and 60 miles wide from north to south; it is eclipsed in size only by Sicily and Sardinia. Much of Cyprus is mountainous; the Troodos Mountains (5900 feet) dominate the western and central sections, while the Kyrenia Mountains (3100 feet) extend along the northern coast.

Historically Cyprus was important as a source for timber used in shipbuilding and copper, both vital commodities in the ancient world. The strategic position of Cyprus just off the coasts of Asia Minor and Syria coupled with the presence of favorable currents and reliable summer winds encouraged wide-ranging trade contacts. Evidence of trade with Cyprus between 2000 and 1000 B.C. has been found in Asia Minor, Egypt, Palestine, and Syria; contacts also were maintained with Crete, the Aegean Islands, and Greece. After 1500 B.C., Cyprus was influenced heavily by the Mycenean culture of mainland Greece which left an indelible stamp.

After 1000 B.C., several city-states, each ruled by a king, were the basis of the political structure on Cyprus. Among the most important cities were Salamis and Kition. The Phoenicians, a Semitic people who established a trading empire throughout the Mediterranean, colonized Kition about 850 B.C. Tyre and Sidon were the center of Phoenician trade, and the Old Testament underscores the connection between these cities and Cyprus in several passages (Isa. 23:1–2, 12; Ezek. 27:4–9).

A portion of the agora area at the site of ancient Salamis on the island of Cyprus.

From the time the kings of Cyprus submitted to Sargon II of Assyria in 707 B.C., the political fortunes of the island were determined by successive empires which dominated the Near East. Egyptian and Persian kings controlled Cyprus prior to the coming of Alexander the Great in 333 B.C. After his death, Cyprus became a part of the Ptolemaic Empire (294–258 B.C.). During this period many Jews settled on the island, forming an important part of the population. In 58 B.C., Rome annexed Cyprus; with the establishment of the Roman Empire under Augustus, the island became a Senatorial Province in 22 B.C. governed by a proconsul from Paphos.

Cyprus is first mentioned in the New Testament as the birthplace of Joseph surnamed Barnabas, a Hellenistic Jewish convert who later accompanied Paul (Acts 4:36–37). As a result of the persecution associated with the martyrdom of Stephen in Jerusalem, Jewish Christians journeyed to Cyprus and preached the gospel to the Jewish community on the island (Acts 11:19–20). In A.D. 46 or 47, Paul undertook his first missionary journey accompanied by Barnabas and John Mark (Acts 13). Arriving at Salamis on the eastern side of Cyprus, the group crossed the island to Paphos preaching the new faith. The reference to Paphos is to Neapaphos, "New Paphos," founded in the fourth century B.C., and the center of Roman government on Cyprus. The conversion of the deputy, Sergius Paulus, was brought about in part by the blinding of the magician Bar-jesus. Whether Paul visited Paleapahos, "Old Paphos," is unclear; Paleapaphos was an ancient city associated with the worship of the Greek goddess Aphrodite, who reputedly emerged from the foam of the sea nearby.

John Mark and Barnabas returned to Cyprus a second time after parting company with Paul (Acts 15:39). Later, Paul twice passed by the island on voyages, once on a return to Jerusalem (Acts 21:3) and finally while traveling to Rome (Acts 27:4). See Kittim; Phoenicians. Tommy Brisco

The excavations at Paphos on Cyprus showing the traditional site of Paul's whipping.

CYRENE (Cȳ rē′ nē) The home of a certain Simon who was compelled to carry Jesus' cross to the place of crucifixion (Matt. 27:32). Located in northern Africa, it was the capital city of the Roman district of Cyrenaica during the New Testament era. Cyrenaica and Crete formed one province. Simon of Cyrene may have belonged to the rather large population of Greek-speaking Jews who resided in the city during the first part of the first century A.D. See Simon of Cyrene.

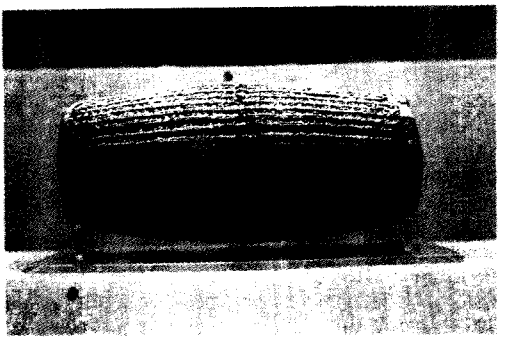
CYRENIAN (Cȳ rē′ nī ăn) Citizen and/or resident of Cyrene. See Cyrene.

CYRENIUS (Cȳ rē′ nī ŭs) The Roman official mentioned in Luke 2:2 as the governor of Syria when the birth of Jesus took place. Some translations of the New Testament use the name Cyrenius, an Anglicized form of his Greek name, while others use the Latin form Quirinius. His full name is Publius Sulpicius Quirinius. Throughout his varied career, Quirinius served as consul of Rome, military leader, tutor to Gaius Caesar, and legate (governor). He died in A.D. 21.

Luke's reference to Quirinius as governor during the nativity has caused some scholars to question Lucan historical accuracy. It is established that Quirinius was legate in Syria from A.D. 6–9, but this date is far too late for Jesus' birth, which occurred prior to the death of Herod the Great who died in 4 B.C. Luke's historical reference seems in direct conflict with non-biblical sources establishing that either Saturninus (9–7 B.C.) or Varus (6–4 B.C.) was legate of Syria during Christ's birth.

The discovery of an ancient inscription has shown that a legate fitting the description of Quirinius served two different times in Syria. Apparently the nativity occurred during Quirinius' first tenure in Syria as legate with primary responsibilities for military affairs, while Varus was the legate handling civil matters. Quirinius served a second term in A.D. 6–9.

This solution affirms Lukan accuracy without overlooking other known historical sources.



Stephen Dollar

CYRUS (Cȳ′ rŭs) The third king of Anshan, Cyrus (the Great) assumed the throne about 550 B.C. According to the best histories Cyrus was reared by a shepherd after his grandfather, Astyages, king of Media, ordered that he be killed. Apparently, Astyages had dreamed that Cyrus would one day succeed him as king before the reigning monarch's death. The officer charged with the execution instead carried the boy into the hills to the shepherds.

As an adult, Cyrus organized the Persians into an army and revolted against his grandfather and father (Cambyses I). He defeated them and claimed their throne.

One of his first acts as king of Medio-Persia was to launch an attack against Lydia, capital of Sardis and storehouse for the riches of its king, Croesus. Turning eastward, Cyrus continued his campaign until he had carved out a vast empire, stretching from the Aegean Sea to India.

The Babylonian Empire next stood in his path, an obstacle which appeared to be insurmountable. Engaging the Babylonian army at Opis, Cyrus' troops routed them and moved on Babylon. The people in the capital welcomed Cyrus with open arms, seeing him as a liberator rather than a conqueror. All that remained was Egypt, which he left for his son, Cambyses II. Cyrus truly was the ruler of the world.

The Cyrus Cylinder, inscribed with the famous Edict of Cyrus the Great (538? B.C.).

Cyrus' military exploits have become legendary. However, he is best remembered for his policies of peace. His famous decree in 538? B.C. (2 Chron. 36:22–23; Ezra 1: 1–4) set free the captives Babylon had taken during its harsh rule. Among these prisoners were the Jews taken from Jerusalem in 586 B.C. They were allowed to return to rebuild the Temple and city. Along with this freedom Cyrus restored the valuable treasures of the Temple taken during the Exile. Since the Jews had done well in Babylon financially, many of them did not want to return to the wastes of Judah. From these people Cyrus exacted a tax to help pay for the trip for those who did wish to rebuild Jerusalem.

An astute politician, Cyrus made it a practice to publicly worship the gods of each kingdom he conquered. In so doing, he won the hearts of his subjects and kept down revolt. He is referred to as Yahweh's shepherd and anointed (Isa. 44:28–45:6) because of his kindness to the Jews and worship of Yahweh.

His last years are obscure. Cyrus was killed while fighting a frontier war with the nomadic Massagetae people. His tomb is in Pasargadae (modern Murghab). Mike Mitchell

D

Storehouses along the southeastern rim of Masada with a beautiful view of the Dead Sea in the distance.

DABAREH (Dăb′ ȧ rĕh) KJV spelling of Daberath (Josh. 21:28). See Daberath.

DABBASHETH (Dăb′ bȧ shĕth), DABBESHETH Place name meaning, "hump." A border town of the tribe of Zebulun (Josh. 19:11). It is modern tell esh-Shammam northwest of Jokneam.

DABERATH (Dăb′ ĕ răth) Place name meaning, "pasture." Border city of Zebulun near Mount Tabor (Josh. 19:12). In Joshua 21:28 it is a city given the Levites from the territory of Issachar. It is modern Daburiyeh at the northwest foot of Mount Tabor.

DAGGER KJV translation for the short, double-edged weapon of Ehud, the judge (Jdg. 3:16–22). Other translations use sword. Ehud's weapon was one cubit in length (18-22 inches), enabling him to conceal it under his cloak.

DAGON (Dā′ gŏn) Name of god meaning, "little fish," or "dear." Dagon is a god associated with the Philistines. However, his origins were in Mesopotamia during the third millennium B.C. By 2000 B.C. a major temple was erected for him in the maritime city of Ugarit. Ugaritic commerce carried his cult into Canaan when Canaan was still a part of the Egyptian empire. When the Philistines conquered the coastal region of Canaan, they adopted Dagon as their chief deity.

According to a popular etymology of Dagon, the name came from the Hebrew word for fish, and so it was postulated that he was a sea god. However, archaelogical evidence does not support this view. The name probably was derived originally from the word for grain, or possibly from a word for clouds. Thus Dagon was a grain god or a storm god, much like Baal. According to Ugaritic documents from the fourteenth century B.C., Dagon was the father of Baal. Little else is known about his mythology or cult.

After the Philistines subdued Samson, they credited the victory to Dagon (Judg. 16:23). However, when Samson collapsed Dagon's temple upon himself and the Philistines, he proved the superiority of Israel's God. Likewise the overthrow of the idol of Dagon before the ark of the covenant demonstrated God's predominance (1 Sam. 5:1–7). Nevertheless the Philistines, later, displayed the head of Saul as a trophy in the temple of Dagon (1 Chron. 10:10).

See Philistines. LeBron Matthews

DALAIAH (Dȧ laī′ ăh) KJV spelling of Delaiah. See Delaiah.

DALMANUTHA (Dăl mȧ nū′ thȧ) Place to which Jesus and His disciples came following the feeding of the four thousand (Mark 8:10). Its location is not known. The parallel reference in Matthew 15:39 suggests it was in the area of Magdala. See Magdala.

DALMATIA (Dăl mā′ tī ȧ) Place name referring to the southern part of Illyricum north of Greece and across the Adriatic Sea from Italy. At the writing of 2 Timothy, Titus had left Paul to go to Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4:10). Paul had preached in Illyricum (Rom. 15:19). Illyricum included most of modern Yugoslavia and Albania.

DALPHON (Dăl′ phŏn) Personal name apparently derived from Persian word perhaps meaning, "sleepless." One of ten sons of Haman, chief enemy of Mordecai and Esther. The sons were killed when the Jews protected themselves against the Persian attack (Esther 9:7).

DAMARIS (Dăm′ ȧ rĭs) Personal name meaning, "heifer." An Athenian woman who became a Christian following Paul's sermon at Mars' Hill, the highest court in Athens (Acts 17:34).

DAMASCENE (Dăm′ ȧ scēne) Resident and/or citizen of Damascus. See Damascus.

DAMASCUS (Dȧ măs′ cŭs) Capital of important city-state in Syria with close historical ties to Israel. Apparently Damascus has been occupied continuously for a longer period of time than any other city in the world and can claim to be the world's oldest city.

Setting Its geographical location enabled Damascus to become a dominant trading and transportation center. Standing 2300 feet above sea level, it lay northeast of Mount Hermon and about 60 miles east of Sidon, the Mediterranean port city. Both major international highways ran through Damascus—the Via Maris from Mesopotamia in the east through Damascus and the Jezreel Valley to the Plain of Sharon and the Mediterranean coast, then south to Egypt; and the King's Highway from Damascus south through Ashtaroth, Rabbath-ammon, and Bozrah to Elath on the Red Wall of the New Testament period in Damascus from which Paul escaped to begin his ministry.

Sea and to Arabia. By the same token, Damascus saw armies march along the highways, often using Damascus as the staging area.

History Archaeology cannot contribute much to the study of Damascus, since the continued existence of the city makes excavation difficult, if not impossible. Explorations do indicate settlement from before 3000 B.C. Tablets from the Syrian center of Ebla mention Damascus about 2300 B.C. Thutmose III of Egypt claimed to have conquered Damascus about 1475 B.C. The Hittites battled Egypt for control of Damascus until the Hittites were defeated by the Sea Peoples about 1200 B.C. At this time Arameans from the nearby desert came in and took control of an independent Damascus, gradually establishing a political power base.

In the Bible Abraham chased invading kings north of Damascus to recover Lot, whom they had taken captive (Gen. 14:15). Abraham's servant Eliezer apparently came from Damascus (Gen. 15:2).

Soldiers of Damascus attempted to help Hadadezer, king of Zobah—another Syrian city-state—against David. David won and occupied Damascus (2 Sam. 8:5–6). The weakness of Zobah encouraged Rezon to organize a renegade band, much as David had in opposing Saul (1 Sam. 22:2). Rezon became the leader of Syria headquartered in Damascus (1 Kings 11:23–25). God used him to harass Solomon.

The new Syrian city-state faced a strong opponent from the east as Assyria rose to power. Ben-hadad strengthened Damascus to the point that Asa, king of Judah (910–869), paid him tribute to attack Baasha, king of Israel, and relieve pressure on Judah (1 Kings 15:16–23). This gave Damascus reason to interfere repeatedly in politics in Palestine.

1 Kings 20 also features Ben-hadad of Damascus, giving reason to believe that Ben-hadad (literally, "son of Hadad) was a royal title in Syria, identifying the king of Damascus as a worshiper of the god Hadad, another name for Baal. See Baal; Ben-hadad. The Syrian king attacked Samaria under King Ahab (874–853). A prophet revealed the way to victory for Ahab over a drunken Ben-hadad. The Syrian king decided Israel's God controlled the hills but not the plains, so he attacked at Aphek (1 Kings 20:26). Again a prophet pointed the way to Israel's victory. Ahab agreed to a covenant treaty with the defeated Syrian king, for which he met a prophet's strong judgment (1 Kings 20:35–43).

Naaman, a Syrian officer, sought Elisha's help in curing his skin disease but decided Abana and Pharphar, the great rivers of Damascus, offered greater help than did the Jordan (2 Kings 5:12). These rivers made Damascus an oasis in the midst of the desert. Elisha helped deliver Samaria when Ben-hadad besieged it (2 Kings 6–7). Elisha also prophesied a change of dynasty in Damascus, naming Hazael its king (2 Kings 8:7–15). Shalmaneser III of Assyria (858–824) claimed to have defeated both Ben-hadad and Hazael. The first important battle came at Qarqar in 853 B.C. Ahaziah, king of Judah (841), joined Joram, king of Israel (852–841), in battle against Hazael with Joram being wounded. Jehu took advantage of the wounded king and killed him (2 Kings 8:25—9:26).

The city wall of biblical Damascus.

Having fought against Damascus in campaigns in 853, 849, 848, and 845, Shalmaneser III of Assyria severely weakened Damascus, besieging it in 841 and then receiving tribute again in 838. After this, Hazael of Damascus exercised strong influence, gaining influence in Israel, Judah, and Philistia (2 Kings 10:32–33). His son Ben-hadad maintained Damascus' strength (2 Kings 13:3–25). Finally, Jehoash, king of Israel (798–782), regained some cities from Damascus (2 Kings 13:25). Jeroboam II, king of Israel (793–753), expanded Israelite influence and gained control of Damascus (2 Kings 14:28). This was possible because Assyria threatened Syria again, as Adad-nirari III, king of Assyria (810–783), invaded Syria from 805 to 802 and again in 796. About 760 B.C. Amos the prophet condemned Damascus and its kings Hazael and Ben-hadad (Amos 1:3–5).

Tiglath-pileser III, king of Assyria (744–727), threatened Damascus anew. King Rezin of Damascus joined with Pekah, king of Israel, about 734 B.C. in an effort to stop the Assyrians. They marched on Jerusalem, trying to force Ahaz of Judah to join them in fighting Assyria (2 Kings 16:5). The prophet Isaiah warned Ahaz not to participate with Syria and Israel (Isa. 7). He also said that Assyria would destroy Damascus (Isa. 8:4; compare ch. 17). Rezin of Damascus had some military success (2 Kings 16:6), but he could not get Ahaz of Judah to cooperate. Neither could Isaiah. Instead, Ahaz sent money to Tiglath-pileser, asking him to rescue Judah from Israel and Damascus. The Assyrians responded readily and captured Damascus in 732 B.C., exiling its leading people (2 Kings 16:7–9). Damascus had one last influence on Judah; for when Ahaz went to Damascus to pay tribute to Tiglath-pileser, he liked the altar he saw there and had a copy made for the Jerusalem Temple (2 Kings 16:10–16). Damascus sought to gain independence from Assyria in 727 and 720 but without success. Thus Damascus became a captive state of first the Assyrians, then the Babylonians, Persians, Greeks, Ptolemies, and Seleuccids. Finally, Rome gained control under Pompey in 64 B.C. Jews began to migrate to Damascus and establish synagogues there. Thus Saul went to Damascus to determine if any Christian believers were attached to the synagogues there so that he might persecute them (Acts 9). Thus the Damascus Road became the sight of Saul's conversion experience and Damascus the sight of his introduction to the church. He had to escape from Damascus in a basket to begin his ministry (2 Cor. 11:32). Damascus gained importance, eventually becoming a Roman colony. See Hadad; Syria. Trent C. Butler

The window of the city wall of Damascus which may be the site of Paul's escape in a basket from the city.

The traditional "Street called Straight" in Damascus, Syria.

DAN (Dăn) Personal name meaning, "judge." 1. First son born to Jacob by Rachel's maid Bilhah (Gen. 30:6). He was the original ancestor of the tribe of Dan. When the Israelites entered Canaan, the tribe of Dan received land on the western coast. They could not fully gain control of the territory, especially after the Philistines settled in the area. The last chapters of Judges show Samson of the tribe of Dan fighting the Philistines. Eventually, Dan migrated to the north and was able to take a city called Laish. They renamed the city Dan and settled in the area around it. Dan was always a small tribe, and it never exercised significant influence in Israel. The most prominent Danites mentioned in the Bible are Oholiab and Samson. See Tribes of Israel; Patriarchs.

2. The biblical city of Dan is often mentioned in the description of the land of Israel, namely "from Dan even to Beersheba" (Judg. 20:1). It has been identified with modern tell el-Qadi (or tell Dan). The tel, which covers about 50 acres, is situated at the northern end of the richly fertile Huleh Plain at the base of Mt. Hermon. The abundant springs of the site provide one of the three main sources of the Jordan River.

Base for a canopy at Dan, probably from the time of Ahab.

The city was formerly named Laish (Judg. 18:7 or Leshem in Josh. 19:47) when occupied by the Canaanites. This city is mentioned in the Egyptian execration texts and Mari tablets from the eighteenth century B.C. Later Thutmose III listed Laish among the cities conquered in his 1468 B.C. campaign.

Excavation of tell Dan has been led by A. Biran of Hebrew University in Jerusalem since 1966. Laish was founded at the end of the Early Bronze II Age (about 2700 B.C.) near the springs and flourished until about 2300 B.C. Significant pottery remains of this era were uncovered along with remains of floors and walls. The city probably remained unoccupied until the Middle Bronze II period (about 2000 B.C.), when a large, well-fortified city was constructed. A massive earthen rampart similar to that of Hazor was built for defensive purposes, and set into the rampart (about 1750 B.C.) was a well-preserved, mudbrick "triple-arched gate." The fifteen meter square gate system stood twelve meters above the surrounding plain and contained the earliest arched entryways known in the world.

The Late Bronze Age is represented by a richly-supplied tomb containing Mycenaean and Cypriote imported wares; ivory inlaid cosmetic boxes; gold, silver, and bronze objects; and forty-five skeletons of men, women, and children.

Excavations at Dan showing the stone steps leading to the mud brick gate in the background.

Iron Age Laish was rebuilt by local inhabitants in the late thirteenth century B.C. but destroyed about 1100 B.C. by the migrating tribe of Dan. Scripture describes the conquest of the city as if the local people were unsuspecting of the coming invasion. Danites utilized the earlier rampart for defense and built their homes on the ruins of the previous city. The first Danite city, which contained some Philistine pottery remnants, was destroyed a century after its founding. The city was soon rebuilt and became a prominent Israelite city of the Iron Age.

Following the establishment of the Israelite

View of the mud brick arched gateway just after its discovery and before it was completely uncovered.

kingdom under David and Solomon, Jeroboam led the Northern tribes in revolt against Rehoboam (about 925 B.C.). As an alternative to worship in Jerusalem, Dan and Bethel were fortified as border fortress/sanctuaries (1 Kings 12:29) with temples containing golden calf representations of Yahweh. This may have represented a combination of Baal worship with worship of Yahweh. The extent to which the Baal cult influenced Northern Israel is seen in the reign of Jehu, who did not destroy the altars at Dan and Bethel, despite eradicating the Baal priests from the land (2 Kings 10:32). Excavations at Dan have uncovered the "high place" of Jeroboam along with a small horned altar, the city gate (with royal throne) and walls (12 feet thick), hundreds of pottery vessels, buildings, and inscribed objects. This city was soon taken by Ben-hadad of Aram and then recaptured by Jeroboam II in the eighth century B.C. (2 Kings

Canopied structure at Dan, possibly a throne from Ahab's reign.

14:25). The Israelite city of Dan fell to the Assyrians under Tiglath-pileser III (Pul of Old Testament) about 743 B.C. (2 Kings 15:29). He annexed the city into an Assyrian district. Many Danites were deported to Assyria, Babylon, and Media following the fall of Samaria in 722 or 721 B.C. (2 Kings 17:6) to Sargon II. Foreigners were brought in from Babylon, Aram, and other lands to settle Israel's territory. The writer of Kings ascribed the fall of the kingdom to the worship of gods other than Yahweh (2 Kings 17:7–20), and Dan was one of the key centers of this idolatry.

As Josiah came to the throne of Judah in 639 B.C., Assyria was on the decline. Josiah incorporated the former Northern Kingdom territories into a united country, restoring the classical borders of Israel to "from Dan to Beersheba." An upper gate to the city was built during this period, and the inscription found at this level, "belonging to Ba'alpelet," demonstrates that Baal worship continued to influence this area after the Assyrian destruction. The partially rebuilt city survived until the onslaught of the Babylonian army of Nebuchadnezzar (about 589 B.C.; compare Jer. 4:14–18).

Dan again was occupied in the Hellenistic, Roman, and Byzantine periods. In the area of the high place, statues and figurines of Greco-Roman and Egyptian gods such as Osiris, Bes, and Aphrodite have been excavated. The Greek and Aramaic inscription, "To the god who is in Dan, Zoilos made a vow," further evidences the religious significance of the city. Dennis Cole DANCING Dancing was an essential part of Jewish life in Bible times. According to Ecclesiastes 3:4, there is "a time to mourn, and a time to dance." Dances were performed on both sacred and secular occasions, though the Hebrew mind would not likely have thought in these terms.

The Old Testament employs eleven terms to describe the act of dance. This suggests something about the Hebrew interest in the subject. The basic Hebrew term translated "dance" means to twist or to whirl about in circular motions. Other terms for dance mean "to spring about," "to jump," "to leap," "to skip." One term seems to have been used of processional marches or dances at feasts and holidays.

The Greek terms for dance mean "row" or "ring." The two terms are used five times in the New Testament (Matt. 11:17; 14:6; Mark 6:22; Luke 7:32; 15:25). Dances were performed for different purposes. The mood behind the dance was one of celebration and praise.

Jewish men dancing during a private ceremony in the Court of the Men at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

Dances celebrated military victories. Women sang and danced, accompanied by musical instruments. Miriam and other Israelite women sang and danced in celebration of the victory at the Red Sea (Ex. 15:20–21). Jephthah's daughter danced before her victorious father (Judg. 11:34) as did the Israelite women when David returned from having defeated the Philistines (1 Sam. 18:6). Men also danced to celebrate military victory (1 Sam. 30:16).

Dances were customary at weddings. On some occasions young ladies, dressed in their best clothing, danced in a bride-choosing ceremony (Judg. 21). Marriage processions involved dancing with timbrels and other musical instruments (Ps. 45:14–15). Dances were performed in honor of the bride (Song of Sol. 6:13).

Some dances were performed for the sheer entertainment of guests. Salome danced before the princes and politicans gathered to celebrate her father's birthday (Matt. 14:6; Mark 6:22). Children played games of "dance" (Job 21:11), often with the accompaniment of a musical instrument (Matt. 11:17; Luke 7:32). The return of a long lost son was cause for celebration and dancing (Luke 15:25).

Religious celebration was most often the occasion for dancing. David danced before the ark as it was brought into Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:14,16; 1 Chron. 15:29). The psalmist exhorted others to praise God with music and dancing (Ps. 149:3; 150:4). Also pagans used the dance as a means of honoring their gods (1 Kings 18:26).

In summary, the dance of the Jewish people was similar to what we today call the folk dance. It was performed by both males and females, though apparently not in mixed groups. Both group and individual dances were performed. Glenn McCoy

DANIEL (Dăn' iĕl) Personal name meaning, "God is judge" or "God's judge." 1. A son of David and Abigail, the Carmelitess (1 Chron. 3:1), who is also called Chileab in 2 Samuel 3:3. 2. A priest of the Ithamar lineage (Ezra 8:2; Neh 10:6) who returned with Ezra from the Babylonian captivity.

3. Daniel of Ezekiel 14:14,20; 28:3 is spelled differently in Hebrew from all the other forms in the Old Testament. This Daniel was a storied figure of antiquity mentioned with Noah and Job. He was famous for wisdom and righteousness. Due to the similarity in the spelling of the name and the common attributes of wisdom and righteousness, some interpreters identify this Daniel with the Daniel of the canonical book of Daniel.

Most interpreters, however, take note of the differences in the spelling and also the fact of antiquity. Some identify the "Daniel" of Ezekiel with "Danel" of ancient Ugaritic literature.

4. The most common usage of "Daniel" refers to the hero of the Book of Daniel. This young man of nobility was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and elevated to high rank in the Babylonian and Persian kingdoms.

The Babylonians sought to remove all vestiges of Daniel's nationality and religion. For this reason, they sought to change the name of Daniel to Belteshazzar (Dan. 1:7; 2:26; 4:8,9,18,19; 5:12; 10:1).

Daniel was transported from Judah to Babylon in his early youth at the battle of Carchemish, 605 B.C. The text does not indicate his precise age. He was trained in the arts, letters, and wisdom in the Babylonian capital. Eventually, he rose to high rank among the Babylonian men of wisdom.

He was active throughout the long reign of Nebuchadnezzar (604–562 B.C.). No mention is made in Daniel of the times of Evil-Merodach (561–560 B.C.), Neriglissar (559–555 B.C.), or Labashi-Marduk (555 B.C.). However, much information is provided concerning Daniel's involvement during the reign of Nabonidus (555–539 B.C.). While Nabonidus was absent from his country for extended periods of time, he put his son Belshazzar in charge of the affairs of government.

Daniel was in Babylon when the forces of Cyrus, the Persian, captured Babylon. Successively, Daniel was a high governmental official during the reigns of Cyrus (539–529 B.C.) and Cambyses (529–522 B.C.). He served also during his old age into the reign of Darius I, the son of Hystaspes (522–486 B.C.). Daniel would probably have celebrated his one hundredth birthday during the reign of Darius.

He had outstanding physical attraction. He demonstrated at an early age propensities of knowledge, wisdom, and leadership. In addition to his wisdom, he was skilled in dream interpretation.

Throughout his entire life he demonstrated an unshakable faith in his God. It took courage to resist the temptations and threats which confronted him repeatedly. He recognized that God was continuously judging him. He remained faithful. J. J. Owens

DANIEL, BOOK OF High hopes and great expectations highlight the Book of Daniel. It provides the highest example of Old Testament ethics and the climax of Old Testament teaching about the future of God's people. It also provides Bible students some of the most perplexing questions they ever seek to answer.

Literary Features Daniel combines characteristics of prophecy, wisdom, and apocalyptic writing into a unique type of literature. Matthew identified Daniel as a prophet (Matt. 24:15). The book addresses a current situation with a call for moral uprightness, as did the prophets. It also points to hope for the future rising out of God's words and promises. It focuses on the nations as well as Israel, as did the other prophets. It does not, however, use the literary forms of the prophets, particularly the standard formulas such as, "Thus says the Lord"; nor does it represent a collection of prophetic sermons.

As did the wisdom writers, Daniel served in a royal court counseling a ruler. He was highly-educated. The book seeks to instill moral wisdom in young persons. Yet it does not string proverbs or wisdom poetry together nor delve into the problems Job or Ecclesiastes tackled. It is wisdom literature and more.

Apocalyptic literature best describes Daniel for most Bible students. Apocalyptic writings originate from times of national, communal, or personal tribulations. See Apocalyptic.

The visions and angelic figures of Daniel along with its strongly figurative, symbolic language tie it closely to the apocalyptic. Its opening stories serve as the tie to times of persecution and call for moral living. The letters to the churches serve a similar function in Revelation.

Daniel uses two languages—Aramaic (2:4*b*—7:28) and Hebrew (1:2–2:4*a;* 8:1—12:13)—plus loan words from Persian and Greek to write the complex work of prophecy, wisdom, and apocalyptic writing. This is apparently a combination of the language of worship (Hebrew) and the language of daily life (Aramaic). The two languages combine to form two distinctly separate sections of the book (1—6; 7—12), the first told in narrative form about Daniel and his friends with a historical conclusion (6:28) and the second told in form of Daniel's visions.

Canon and Authority The basic twelve chapters of Daniel appear in the Hebrew Bible between Esther and Ezra in the last section called the Writings rather than in the Law or the Prophets. The Greek translation called the Septuagint introduced Daniel into the prophets and also introduced additional materials: the prayer of Azariah, the song of the three children, story of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon. See Apocrypha. The Christian church has followed the Septuagint in placing Daniel among the prophets, but Protestant Christianity has not accepted the additions, whereas the Catholic tradition has. All agree the basic Book of Daniel is God's authoritative Word for His people. Questions rise in interpretation not in the book's authority.

Unity Many things appear to separate Daniel into unrelated parts. The position of the person Daniel differs in various portions of the book. He is more central in chapters 1—2 and 4—7 than in the rest of the book. In chapters 1—6 Daniel is spoken of in the third person in the form of a biography. In chapters 7—12, however, Daniel speaks in the first person in the form of autobiography (except 10:1).

In chapters 1—6 the dreams or phenomena come to heathen kings, but in chapters 7—12 Daniel has the visions. In chapters 1—6 Daniel is the one who interprets the dreams, but in 7—12 "someone" else interprets the dreams and visions to Daniel. Chapters 1—6 have simplicity, whereas chapters 7—12 are complex.

The Book of Daniel acts as a unit despite these differences in languages used and types of literature employed. Each of the twelve chapters contributes to this unity. The unifying theme is that God expects His followers to maintain fidelity in face of threats, wars, legal pronouncements, or changing customs.

Outline

I. The Faithful Young Men in a Foreign Court (1:1—6:28)
   A. Loyalty to God leads Daniel and his friends to high political positions (1:1–21).
   B. Interpretation of the king's dream leads to the king's confession of God and to important positions for the friends (2:1–49).
   C. Loyalty to God brings deliverance from the fiery furnace, royal decree protecting the right to worship God, and further promotion for the friends (3:1–30).
   D. Interpretation and fulfillment of the king's dream leads the king to praise God (4:1–37).
   E. Loyalty to God and His rewards allows interpretation of the handwriting on the wall, brings promotion in the kingdom, and spells doom for Babylon (5:1–31).
   F. Faithfulness in prayer despite secular laws overcomes conspiracy, brings deliverance from the lions' den, leads the king to command fear of the true God, and brings political prosperity (6:1–28).

II. Daniel's Visions Point the Way Through Persecution to Hope (7:1—12:13).
   A. Vision of four beasts shows four kingdoms to be overcome by Son of man and saints of the Most High, who will reign forever (7:1–28).
   B. Vision of ram, he goat, and four horns points to passing of Persians, Medes, and of proud Greeks, one of whom will interrupt daily sacrifices of Temple for a while (8:1–27).
   C. Daniel confesses the nation's sins, seeks forgiveness, and learns meaning of Jeremiah's 70 weeks as pointing to Messiah and to desolation of Jerusalem (9:1–27).
   D. A heaven-sent vision shows that Scripture points to battles between north and south until the northern king proudly triumphs and persecutes the people of God's covenant, taking away their sacrificial system and desecrating the Temple, but facing disaster in the end (10:1—11:45).
   E. Heavenly intervention will bring the time of the end and the resurrection of God's faithful people (12:1–13).

Meaning Daniel encouraged the reader to remain faithful to God, God's law, and to the scriptural traditions of God's people. War, danger, threat, heathen kings, temptation, greedy desire for luxury, prosperity, and position lead away from God's way. Daniel encouraged the faithful to stand firm in faithfulness to the heritage of Israel.

Daniel 1:8—6:28 shows how in history Israelite heroes stood firm in their resolve to stay true to God and their heritage. In six different situations an Israelite hero faced extreme pressure to forsake God and tradition for personal safety and gain. In each case the hero resisted threats or danger of loss of life with no assurance of victory other than his faith.

Daniel 7:1—12:13 brought these truths to bear upon an extremely tense situation. Throughout the book the author focused upon the "fourth kingdom," that of a tyrannical despot. As the ancient heroes remained faithful, so people facing the despot could double their resolve and experience victorious faith. They faced the choice: believe a ruthless foreign conqueror, or stay true to the faith of the fathers and the God of their history.

Interpretation The literary features, authority, outline, and meaning of the book are rather clear. The historical setting and details of interpretation bring varying opinions. The basic issue is the nature of inspired prophecy and Daniel's relationship to prophecy. All agree that prophecy is both exhortation of a present generation to faithfulness and painting of a future hope. The point at issue among interpreters is the fidelity to detail that prophecy must contain and whether Daniel with its wisdom and apocalyptic overtones must have the same type of historical setting and perspective as do the classic prophets of Israel.

To simplify the picture, two major stances on Daniel can be summarized. The first sees Daniel standing in the precise line of previous prophets, so that every detail of his visions points to the future and not the past. This assumes that Daniel in the sixth century B.C. wrote the book and described the history of contemporary Babylonian, Median, and Persian history and future Greek, Ptolemaic, Seleuccid, Maccabean, and Roman history, as well as the events of end time. Those interpreters who use a dispensational system (see Dispensations) to interpret Daniel see antichrist, tribulation, and the final kingdom pictured in Daniel.

A second stance emphasizes Daniel's relationship to other apocalyptic literature in which writers often use the names of ancient heroes to describe history long past to bring a message to a present generation facing extreme persecution. Writing in the name of the ancient hero gives authority to the writing and protection in the situation of extreme danger. This stance views Daniel as the hero but not the author of the book. The author is an unknown inspired writer who lived in the time of Antiochus Ephiphanes shortly before 164 B.C. The author used contemporary methods of interpreting the prophecies of Ezekiel, Jeremiah, and others to give hope to his generation when many Jews were seeking favor with the Syrian government of Antiochus by adopting a Hellenistic life-style and ignoring Jewish traditions. He used biblical traditions and other knowledge of his day to review the history of Babylon, the Medes, Persia, Greece, the Ptolemies of Egypt, and the Seleuccids of Syria. He then pointed to an immediate future when God would judge Antiochus and his followers who enforced the present persecution of God's people. This interpretation may then take another step and say that the book lends itself to valid new interpretations in light of Jesus Christ and the Christian hope, but that these were not necessarily the main points of the original author.

Whichever stance one takes in interpreting the details of Daniel, the inspired book continues to give hope, strength, and courage to God's people, especially in times of persecution, and to call for ultimate faithfulness no matter the temptations faced. J. J. Owens and Trent C. Butler

DANITE (Dăn′ īte) Resident and/or citizen of city of Dan or member of tribe of Dan. See Dan.

DAN-JAAN (Dăn-jā′ ăn) Place name of uncertain meaning in 2 Samuel 24:6. Many Bible students think the scribes have not preserved the correct Hebrew text at this point and read only "Dan" (NRSV) or "Dan and Ijon" (NEB). If the present Hebrew text is correct, the location of the town is not known except that it is apparently in the territory of the tribe of Dan.

DANNAH (Dăn′ năh) Place name meaning, "fortress." Town assigned tribe of Judah in the hill country (Josh. 15:49). Its location is uncertain.

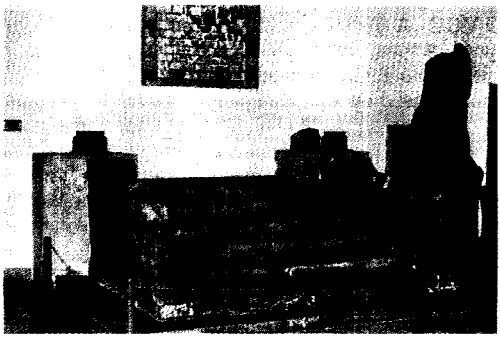
DAPPLED The variegated grey color of the horses in the vision in Zech. 6:3,6. KJV translates the rare Hebrew term as "bay." Modern translators follow the earliest Greek translation in reading "dappled." The Hebrew term also appears in Genesis 31:10,12 and in a few manuscripts of Nehemiah 5:18. KJV reads "grisled," while modern translations have, "spotted," "speckled," or "mottled."

DARA (Dâr′ ȧ) Hebrew reading in 1 Chronicles 2:6 for Darda of 1 Kings 4:31. See Darda.

DARDA (Där′ dȧ) Personal name possibly meaning, "pearl of knowledge." Famous wise man whose father is listed as Mahol in 1 Kings 4:31 but as Zerah in what appears to be a parallel list in 1 Chronicles 2:6. Mahol may mean, "dancer," "musician," or "chorister," representing an occupation or guild rather than the father's name.

DARIC A Persian gold coin equivalent to four days' wages, probably introduced by Darius I (522–486 B.C.), and possibly the earliest coined money used by the Jews who became acquainted with it during the Exile. Offerings for the reconstruction of the Temple were made in darics (Ezra 2:69; Neh. 7:70,72). Some interpreters understand the 20 gold basins in Ezra 8:27 to be worth 1,000 darics each. Others take this as a weight of about 19 pounds or 8.5 kilograms.

DARIUS (Dȧ rī′ ŭs) King of Persia (522–486 B.C.) Successor to Cambyses II in the Persian Empire, Darius spent his early years as king putting down revolts in Media, Persia, and Egypt. After solidifying his power in the Middle East, he set out to reconquer the Scythians and Greeks who had rebelled under his predecessor. He was successful in this venture until the Battle of Marathon in 490 B.C. From that time the kingdom began a gradual regression until finally conquered by Alexander the Great in 331 B.C.



Relief of Darius I giving an audience.

Darius brought a new sense of unity to his empire. He enlarged on the policies of Cyrus the Great in making restoration to those disenfranchised by the Assyrian and Babylonian dominations. The Jews received additional financial aid for finishing the Temple in Jerusalem (Ezra 6:8–9).

Unlike Cyrus, Darius organized a tightly-knit centralized state and vested himself with absolute power. Twenty satrapies (provinces) were established. Each had a system of checks and balances, with each official watching the actions of his colleagues.

A common code of laws was established in the empire, administered by royal judges. A system of weights and measures were standardized throughout the kingdom to help stimulate the economy and make transactions easier. Several major roads were built, making travel quicker and safer. What may have been the first gold currency was issued by Darius. Aramaic was decreed as the official language of the empire. The people were infused with a new sense of pride as the king made these many improvements. Unfortunately, Darius' successors were unable to maintain his policies after his death. Mike Mitchell DARKNESS The absence of light is used in both physical and figurative senses in both the Old and New Testaments. The darkness which covered the deep before God's creation of light symbolizes chaos in opposition to God's orderly creation (Gen. 1:2,3). Elsewhere darkness, as well as light, is recognized as the creation of God (Isa. 45:7). Darkness is a place for evil doers to hide (Job. 34:22); however, darkness does not hide one from God (Ps. 139:11–12; Dan. 2:22).

Remains of the throne of Darius the Great.

Darkness was thought of as a curse. Thus the Old Testament speaks of death as a land of darkness (Job 10:21–22; 17:13; Ps. 88:6). Darkness is frequently associated with supernatural events involving the judgment of God, such as the plagues of Egypt (Ex. 10:21), the coming of the Lord (Isa. 13:9–10; Joel 2:31; Matt. 24:29), and Christ's crucifixion (Matt. 27:45). The day of God's judgment is often described as a day of darkness (Joel 2:2; Amos 5:18–20). Elsewhere darkness forms part of God's punishment on the disobedient (Deut. 28:29; 1 Sam. 2:9; Job 5:14; 15:30; 20:26; Ps. 107:10; Isa. 47:5; Jer. 13:16; Ezek. 32:8).

In the New Testament, the place of punishment for humans and sinful angels is designated "the outer darkness" (Matt. 8:12; 22:13; 25:30; compare 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6,13). Darkness often has an ethical sense. Scripture speaks of ways of darkness (Prov. 2:13; 4:19), walking in darkness (John 8:12; 1 John 1:6; compare 2 Cor. 6:14; Eph. 5:8), and works of darkness (Rom. 13:12; Eph. 5:11). In this ethical sense God has no darkness in Himself (1 John 1:5). Powers hostile to God can be termed darkness. People thus face a choice of whether to yield allegiance to God or to darkness (Luke 22:53; John 1:5; 3:19; Col. 1:13; 1 Thess. 5:5). Darkness also symbolizes ignorance, especially of God and of God's ways (Isa. 8:22; 9:2; John 12:46; Acts 26:18; 1 Thess. 5:4; 1 John 2:9). God's deliverance (either from ignorance or hostile powers) is described as lighting the darkness (Isa. 9:2; 29:18; 42:7–16; Mic. 7:8; 1 Pet. 2:9). See Light. Chris Church

DARKON (Dăr′ kŏn) Personal name perhaps meaning, "hard." A servant of Solomon whose descendants returned from Exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:56).

DART A thrusting or throwing weapon used for medium range combat either similar to a spear or javelin (2 Sam. 18:14) or else an arrow (Prov. 7:23; Eph. 6:16). The use of flaming arrows (Ps. 7:13; 120:4) becomes in Eph. 6:16 a picture of the assault of the evil one on believers. KJV uses darts to translate two different Hebrew words, the first meaning "stick" or "staff" and the second, "arrows."

DATES The fruit of the date palm (Phoenix dactylifera), highly valued by desert travelers who consume dates fresh, dry them, or form them into cakes for a portable and easily-storable food. As part of the celebration of bringing the ark to Jerusalem, David gave gifts of food to each Israelite gathered in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:19; 1 Chron. 16:3). The meaning of the Hebrew term is uncertain. NAS and NIV use "cake of dates" at 2 Samuel 6:19 (also TEV margin). Other modern translations follow the KJV, understanding the food as a piece of meat. The NIV, but not the NAS, uses "cake of dates" in the parallel account in 1 Chronicles.

Dates growing on a date palm tree.

The NAS of Song of Solomon 5:11 describes the hair of the king as "like a cluster of dates," perhaps a reference to a full head of hair. The REB translates the same term as "like palm-fronds". Other translations speak of bushy hair (KJV), curly hair (KJV margin), or wavey hair (NIV, NRSV, TEV). See Palms.

DATHAN (Dā′ thăn) Personal name meaning, "fountain" or "warring." The son of Eliab and brother from the tribe of a Reuben, Dathan and his brother Abiram were leaders of a revolt challenging Moses' authority over the Israelites. The attempted coup failed, and Dathan and Abiram, along with their families, were swallowed up by the earth (Num. 16). See Numbers; Abiram.

An Arab date vendor.

DAUGHTER-IN-LAW The wife of one's son. Famous daughters-in-law include Sarah, daughter-in-law of Terah (Gen. 11:31); Tamar, daughter-in-law of Judah (Gen. 38:11,16; 1 Chron. 2:4); and Ruth, daughter-in-law of Naomi (Ruth 2:20,22; 4:15). Daughters-in-law might be addressed simply as daughter (Ruth 2:2,8,22). Marriage made them an integral member of the family. Ruth was hailed as more to Naomi than seven sons (Ruth 4:15). The breakdown of the relationship between mother-in-laws and daughters-in-law illustrated the collapse of moral society (Mic. 7:6). In the New Testament, differing responses to the gospel created the same breakdown of relationship (Matt. 10:35; Luke 12:53). Jewish law prohibited incest between a man and his daughter-in-law (Lev. 18:15). This crime was punishable by death (Lev. 20:12). In Ezekiel 22:11 this crime illustrates the moral decline of the nation. See Family.

DAVID (Dā′ vĭd) Personal name probably meaning, "favorite" or "beloved." The first king to unite Israel and Judah and the first to receive the promise of a royal messiah in his line. David was pictured as the ideal king of God's people. He ruled from about 1005 to 965 B.C.

Selection as King When Saul failed to meet God's standards for kingship (1 Sam. 15:23,35; 16:1), God sent Samuel to annoint a replacement from among the sons of Jesse, who lived in Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16:1). God showed Samuel He had chosen the youngest who still tended sheep for his father (16:11–12). David's good looks were noteworthy.

In Saul's Court David's musical talent, combined with his reputation as a fighter, led one of Saul's servants to recommend David as the person to play the harp for Saul when the evil spirit from God troubled him (16:18). Saul grew to love David and made him armorbearer for the king (16:21–22).

At a later date the Philistines with the giant Goliath threatened Israel (1 Sam. 17). David returned home to tend his father's sheep (17:15). Jesse sent David to the battlefield with food for his warrior brothers. At least one brother did not think too highly of him (17:28). Saul tried to persuade David, the youth, from challenging Goliath; but David insisted God would bring victory, which He did.

Saul's son Jonathan became David's closest friend (1 Sam. 18:1). David became a permanent part of Saul's court, not returning home (18:2). Saul gave David a military commission, which he fulfilled beyond expectations, defeating the Philistines and winning the hearts of the people. This stirred Saul's jealousy (18:8). Moved by the evil spirit from God, Saul tried to kill David with his spear; but God's presence protected David (18:10–12). David eventually earned the right to marry Michal, Saul's daughter, without being killed by the Philistines as Saul had hoped (18:17–27). With the help of Michal and Jonathan, David escaped from Saul and made contact with Samuel, the prophet (19:18). Jonathan and David made a vow of eternal friendship, and Jonathan risked his own life to protect David (1 Sam. 20).

Independent Warrior David gathered a band of impoverished and discontented people around him. He established relationships with Moab and other groups and gained favor with the people by defeating the Philistines (1 Sam. 22—23), but all Saul's efforts to capture him failed. God protected David, and David refused to injure Saul, instead promising not to cut off Saul's family (24:21–22).

Abigail of Maon intervened with David to prevent him from punishing her foolish husband Nabal. God brought Nabal's death, and David married Abigail. He also married Ahinoam of Jezreel, but Saul gave Michal, David's first wife, to another man (1 Sam. 25).

After again refusing to kill Saul, the Lord's anointed, David attached himself to Achish, the Philistine king of Gath. Saul finally quit chasing him. Achish gave Ziklag to David, who established a headquarters there and began destroying Israel's southern neighbors (1 Sam. 27). Despite the wishes of Achish, the other Philistine leaders would not let David join them in battle against Saul (1 Sam. 29). Returning home, David found the Amalekites had destroyed Ziklag and captured his wives. David followed God's leading and defeated the celebrating Amalekites, recovering all the spoils of war. These he distributed among his followers and among the peoples of Judah (1 Sam. 30).

King of Judah Hearing of the deaths of Saul and Jonathan, David avenged the murderer of Saul and sang a lament over the fallen (2 Sam. 1). He moved to Hebron, where the citizens of Judah crowned him king (2 Sam. 2). This led to war with Israel under Saul's son Ishbosheth. After much intrigue, Ishbosheth's commanders assassinated him. David did the same to them (2 Sam. 4).

King of Israel The northern tribes then crowned David king at Hebron, uniting all Israel under him. He led the capture of Jerusalem and made it his capital. After defeating the Philistines, David sought to move the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem, succeeding on his second attempt (2 Sam. 6). He then began plans to build a temple but learned from Nathan, the prophet, that he would instead build a dynasty with eternal dimensions (2 Sam. 7). His son would build the Temple.

David then organized his administration and subdued other nations who opposed him, finally gaining control of the land God had originally promised the forefathers. He also remembered his promise to Jonathan and cared for his lame son Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 9).

A Sinner David was a giant among godly leaders, but he remained human as his sin with Bathsheba and Uriah showed. He spied Bathsheba bathing, desired her, and engineered the death of her faithful warrior husband, after committing adultery with her (2 Sam. 11). Nathan, the prophet, confronted David with his sin, and David confessed his wrongdoing. The newborn child of David and Bathsheba died. David acknowledged his helplessness in the situation, confessing faith that he would go to be with the child one day. Bathsheba conceived again, bearing Solomon (2 Sam. 12:1–25).

Family Intrigue Able to rule the people but not his family, David saw intrigue, sexual sins, and murder rock his own household, resulting in his isolation from and eventual retreat before Absalom. Still, David grieved long and deep when his army killed Absalom (2 Sam. 18:19–33). David's kingdom was restored, but the hints of division between Judah and Israel remained (2 Sam. 19:40–43). David had to put down a northern revolt (2 Sam. 20). The last act the Books of Samuel report about David is his census of the people, bringing God's anger but also preparing a place for the Temple to be built (2 Sam. 24). The last chapters of 1 Chronicles describe extensive preparations David made for the building and the worship services of the Temple. David's final days involved renewed intrigue among his family, as Adonijah sought to inherit his father's throne, but Nathan and Bathsheba worked to insure Solomon became the next king (1 Kings 1:1—2:12).

Prophetic Hope David thus passed from the historical scene but left a legacy never to be forgotten. He was the role model for Israelite kings (1 Kings 3:14; 9:14; 11:4,6,33,38; 14:8; 15:3,11; 2 Kings 14:3; 16:2; 22:2). David was the "man of God" (2 Chron. 8:14), and God was "the God of David thy father" (2 Kings 20:5). God's covenant with David was the deciding factor as God wrestled with David's disobedient successors on the throne (2 Chron. 21:7). Even as Israel rebuilt the Temple, they followed "the ordinance of David king of Israel (Ezra 3:10).

God's prophets pointed to a future David who would restore Israel's fortunes. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever" (Isa. 9:7). Jeremiah summed up the surety of the hope in David: "If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne. . . . As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant" (Jer. 33:20–22). For further references, compare Jeremiah 33:15, 17, 25–26; Ezekiel 34:23–24; 37:24–25; Hosea 3:5; Amos 9:11; Zechariah 12:6–10.

In the New Testament The New Testament tells the story of Jesus as the story of the Son of God but also as the story of the Son of David from His birth (Matt. 1:1) until His final coming (Rev. 22:16). At least twelve times the Gospels refer to Him as "Son of David." David was cited as an example of similar behavior by Jesus (Matt. 12:3); and David called Him, "Lord" (Luke 20:42–44). David thus took his place in the roll call of faith (Heb. 11:32). This was "David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfill all my will" (Acts 13:22).

DAVID, CITY OF 1. The most ancient part of Jerusalem on its southeast corner representing the city occupied by the Jebusites and conquered by David (2 Sam. 5:7). The Kidron Valley bordered it on the east, and the Tyropoeon Valley on the west. The entire area occupied no more than ten acres. It is also called Zion. See Jerusalem; Zion.

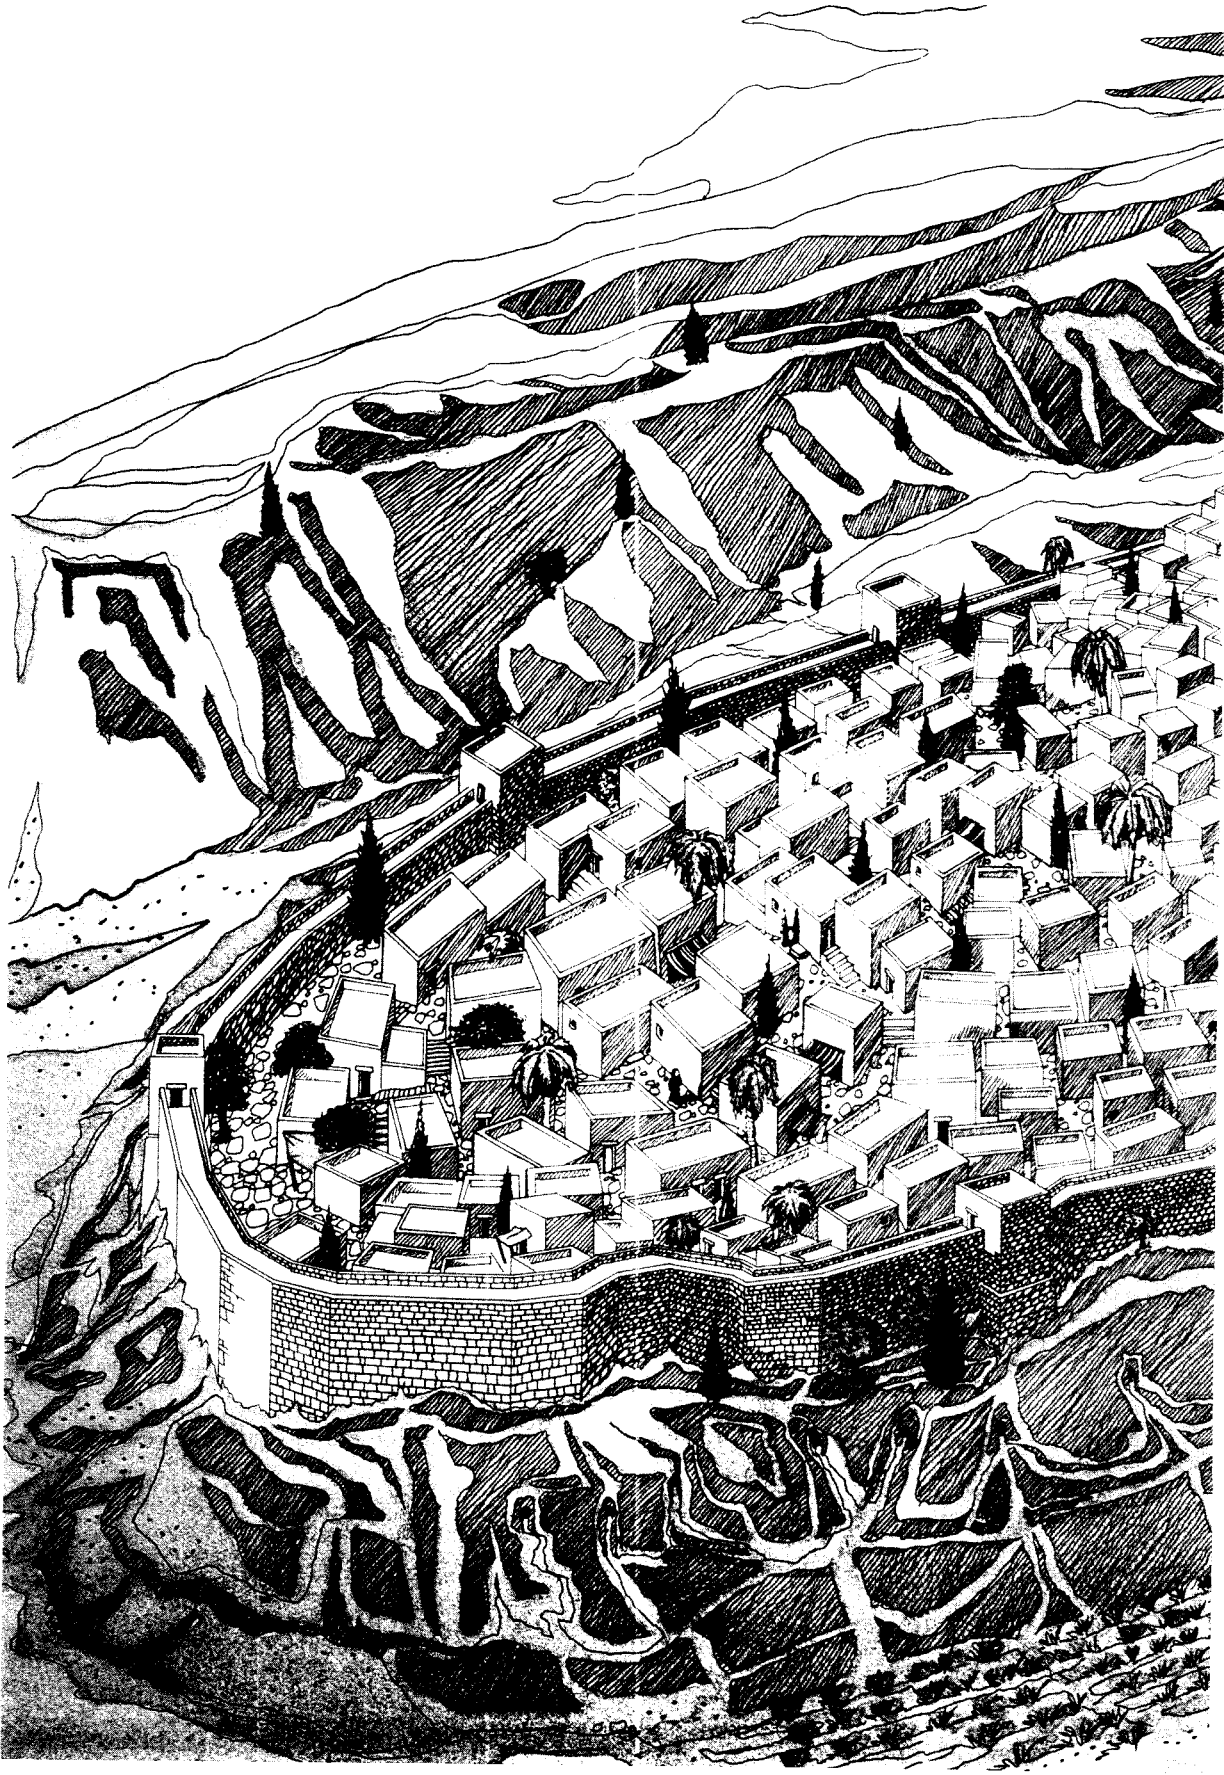
A view of the excavations led by Kathleen Kenyon of the City of David.

This part of Jerusalem dates back at least to about 2500 B.C., when it is mentioned in the Ebla documents. See Ebla. Its strong defense walls on which the Jebusites prided themselves originated about 1750 B.C.

DAWN The first appearance of light in the morning as the sun rises. Job 3:9 indicates that the stars are still visible at dawn. Dawn is used in the literal sense of the beginning of the day (Josh. 6:15; Judg. 19:26; Matt. 28:1; Acts 27:33). Matthew 4:16 uses the picture of the dawn in Isa. 9:2–3 as a figure for the new age of hope and promise which Jesus brought.

DAY OF ATONEMENT The tenth day of the seventh month of the Jewish calender (Sept.—Oct.) on which the high priest entered the inner sanctuary of the Temple to make reconciling sacrifices for the sins of the entire nation (Lev. 16:16–28). The high priest was prohibited from entering this most holy place at any other time on pain of death (Lev. 16:2). Nor was any other priest permitted to perform duties within the Temple proper during the ritual for the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:17). The days' ritual required the high priest to bathe and be dressed in pure linen garments as a symbol of purity (Lev. 16:4). The ceremony began with the sacrifice of a young bull as a sin offering for the priest and his family (Lev. 16:3,6). After burning incense before the mercy seat in the inner santuary, the high priest sprinkled the blood from the bull on and in front of the mercy seat (16:14). The priest cast lots over two goats. One was offered as a sin offering. The other was presented alive as a scapegoat (16:5,7–10,20–22). The blood of the goat used as the sin offering was sprinkled like that of the bull to make atonement for the sanctuary (16:15). The mixed blood of the bull and goat were applied to the horns of the altar to make atonement for it (16:18). The high priest confessed all of the people's sins over the head of the live goat which was lead away and then released in the wilderness (16:21–22). Following the ceremony, the priest again bathed and put on his usual garments (16:23–24). The priest then offered a burnt offering for the priest and the people (16:24). The bodies of the bull and goat used in the days' ritual were burnt outside the camp (16:27–28). The Day of Atonement was a solemn day, requiring the only fast designated by the Mosaic law. All work was also prohibited (16:29; 23:27–28).



The writer of Hebrews developed images from the Day of Atonement to stress the superiority of Christ's priesthood (8:6; 9:7,11–26). Hebrews 13:11–12 uses the picture of the bull and goat burned outside the camp as an illustration of Christ's suffering outside Jerusalem's city walls. According to one interpretation Paul alluded to the day's ritual by speaking of Christ as a sin offering (2 Cor. 5:21). See Atonement.

Chris Church

DAY OF CHRIST See Day of the Lord, Judgment Day.

DAY OF THE LORD The time when God reveals His sovereignty over human powers and human existence. The day of the Lord rests on the Hebrew term, yom, "day," the fifth most frequent noun used in the Old Testament and one used with a variety of meanings: time of daylight from sunrise to sunset (Gen. 1:14; 3:8; 8:22; Amos 5:8); 24-hour period (Gen. 1:5; Num. 7:12,18; Hag. 1:15); a general expression for "time" without specific limits (Gen. 2:4; Ps. 102:3; Isa. 7:17); the period of a specific event (Isa. 9:3; Jer. 32:31; Ezek. 1:28). The "day of the Lord" then does not give a precise time period. It may mean either the daylight hours, the 24-hour day, or a general time period, perhaps characterized by a special event. Zechariah 14:7 even points to a time when all time is daylight, night with its darkness having vanished.

View of Jerusalem from the southwest during the time of David (1000–962 B.C.), showing the Tabernacle pitched atop the threshing floor of Araunah (or Ornan) the Jebusite (upper right). David's palace (center, right) overlooked the Tabernacle. The Citadel fortress (center), and City of David (left, center) can also be seen. The Tyropoeon Valley (top, center) and the Kidron Valley (lower right) flanked each side of the city perched high on the escarpment of Zion.

"Day of the Lord" does not in itself designate the time perspective of the event, whether it is past, present, or future. Lamentations 2:2 can speak of the "day of the Lord's anger" in past tense, describing the fall of Jerusalem. Joel 1:15 could describe a present disaster as the "day of the Lord."

The Old Testament prophets used a term familiar to their audience, a term by which the audience expected light and salvation (Amos 5:18), but the prophets painted it as a day of darkness and judgment (Isa. 2:10–22; 13:6,9; Joel 1:15; 2:1–11,31; 3:14–15; Amos 5:20; Zeph. 1:7–8,14–18; Mal. 4:5). The Old Testament language of the day of the Lord is thus aimed at warning sinners among God's people of the danger of trust in traditional religion without commitment to God and to His way of life. It is language that could be aimed at judging Israel or that could be used to promise deliverance from evil enemies (Isa. 13:6,9; Ezek. 30:3; Obad. 15). The day of the Lord is thus a point in time in which God displays His sovereign initiative to reveal His control of history, of time, of His people, and of all people.

New Testament writers took up the Old Testament expression to point to Christ's final victory and the final judgment of sinners. In so doing, they used several different expressions: "day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1:6,10), "day of our Lord Jesus" (1 Cor. 1:8; 5:5); "day of the Lord" (1 Thess. 5:2); "day of Christ" (Phil. 2:16); "day of judgment" (1 John 4:17); "the day" (1 Thess. 5:4); "that day" (2 Tim. 1:12); "day of wrath" (Rom. 2:5).

People who take a dispensational perspective on Scripture often seek to interpret each of the terms differently, so that the "day of Christ" is a day of blessing equated with the rapture, whereas the day of God is an inclusive term for all the events of end time (2 Pet. 3:12). See Dispensations. In this view the day of the Lord includes the great tribulation, the following judgment on the nations, and the time of worldwide blessing under the rule of the Messiah.

Many Bible students who do not take a dispensational viewpoint interpret the several expressions in the New Testament to refer to one major event: the end time when Christ returns for the final judgment and establishes His eternal kingdom.

Whichever interpretation one makes of specific details, the day of the Lord points to the promise that God's eternal sovereignty over all creation and all nations will one day become crystal clear to all creatures.

DAY'S JOURNEY The customary though inexact measure of distance traveled in a day. The distance varied with the terrain and with the circumstances of the traveler. The typical day's journey of the Jews was between 20 and 30 miles, though groups generally travelled only 10 miles per day. (See Gen. 30:36; 31:23; Ex. 3:18; 8:27; Deut. 1:2; Luke 2:44).

DAYSMAN The KJV term for a mediator, arbitrator, or umpire (Job. 9:33). In the Near East such mediators placed their hands on the heads of the parties in a dispute. The mediator may have attempted to bring both parties together in reconciliation or may have had authority to impose a settlement on both parties. Job's point is that no human is capable of standing in judgment of God. The New Testament points to "the man Christ Jesus" as the "one mediator between God and men" (1 Tim. 2:5).

DAY STAR NRSV translation of Hebrew term called "Lucifer" by KJV and morning star or star of the morning by other translations. The planet Venus appears as a morning "star" at dawn. Isaiah 14:12 compares the splendor of the Babylonian king to the Day Star. Second Peter 1:19 describes Christ as the morning star which outshines the light of the earlier prophetic witness. The Hebrew term appears only in Isaiah 14:12. The translation "Lucifer" comes from the Latin translation called the Vulgate. See Lucifer.

DEACON, DEACONESS The term "deacon" is derived from the Greek word diakonos, which is usually translated "servant" or "minister." Only a few times in the New Testament (Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:8,12, and, in some translations, Rom. 16:1) is it translated "deacon" and used to denote one holding a church office. The noun form comes from a verb which means "to serve," probably originally in the sense of waiting on tables. It came to be used to signify a broad range of types of service. In the New Testament, the noun is used to refer to ministers of the gospel (Col. 1:23), ministers of Christ (1 Tim. 4:6), servants of God (2 Cor. 6:4), those who follow Jesus (John 12:26), and in many other similar ways.

Although Philippians 1:1 and 1 Timothy 3 clearly indicate that the office of deacon existed in New Testament times, no explicit Bible reference describes the duties of deacons or refers to the origin of the office. In Philippians 1:1 and in numerous references in early Christian literature outside the New Testament, bishops and/or elders and deacons are mentioned together, with deacons mentioned last. Because of this order, and because of the natural connotations of the word diakonos, most interpreters believe that deacons, from the beginning, served as assistants of the church leaders. Certainly, that was clearly the role of deacons by the second century. Deacons continued to fill an important role in the ministry of the early church, serving the needs of the poor, assisting in baptism and the Lord's Supper, and performing other practical ministerial tasks.

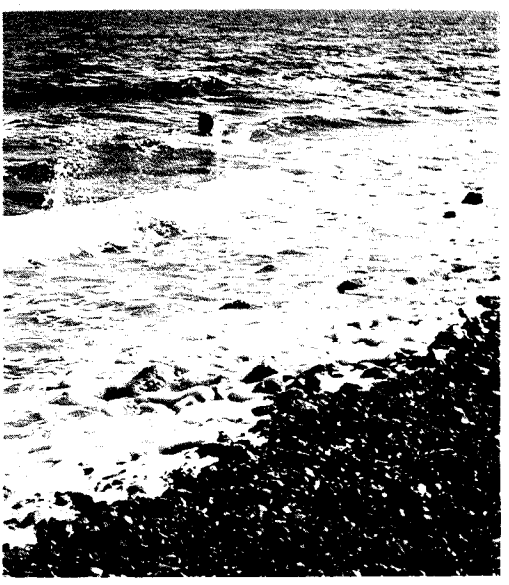
The nature of the qualifications of deacons outlined in 1 Timothy 3: 8–13 perhaps indicates the function of deacons in the New Testament period. In most respects, the qualifications of deacons mirror those of the "bishops," the leaders of the churches. The high standards of morality and character expected of both demonstrates the church's serious regard for the offices and the importance of their functions. The requirements that deacons must have a clear understanding of the faith (1 Tim. 3:9) and that their faithfulness already be proven (1 Tim. 3:10) indicate that their duties consisted of more than menial chores. The exclusion of those who are "doubletongued" (v. 8) may be evidence that the work of the deacons brought them into close contact with the everyday lives of the church members, as would occur in visiting the sick and ministering to the other physical needs of fellow Christians. Such service would both give them greater knowledge of items for gossip and allow them greater opportunity to spread such gossip, thus making it crucial that they should not be prone to talebearing. The requirement that deacons not be greedy may indicate that they were responsible for collecting and distributing church funds.



Whether the deacons' functions extended to leading in worship is not clear. Gifts for teaching, a requirement for "bishops," are not mentioned in the qualifications for deacons. The connotations of table service in the word diakonos and the centrality of the Lord's Supper in the worship of the early church strongly imply that distributing the elements and, in the early years, serving the agape meal were important functions of deacons.

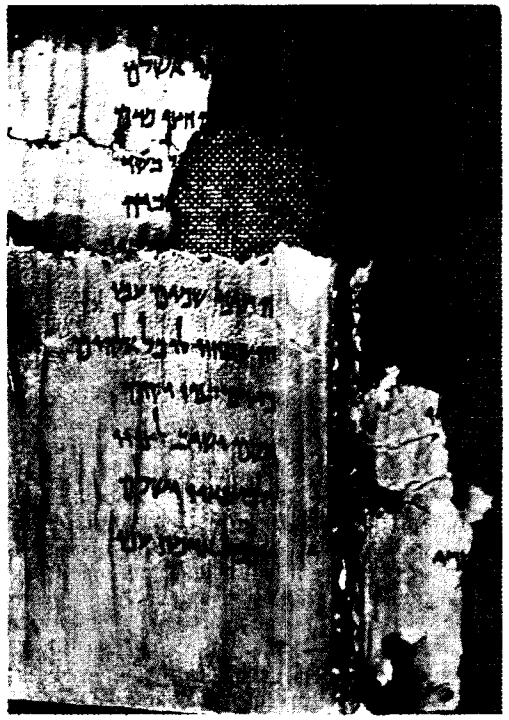
Many interpreters believe that the account of the choosing of the seven in Acts 6 describes the selection of the first deacons, although the term diakonos is not used in the passage and the term diakonia ("service" or "ministry") is used only for the work of the twelve. The tasks that the seven performed, however, later seem to be principal functions of deacons. On the other hand, two of the seven, Stephen and Philip, are known to us as prominent preachers and evangelists, roles which may not have been common for deacons. The seven were set apart for their task in a ceremony in which the apostles "laid their hands on them" (Acts 6:6). This ceremony may reflect the origin of later ordination practice. Other than this passage, which may or may not represent usual practice, the New Testament does not mention ordination of deacons.

The list of qualifications in 1 Timothy 3:11 requires that "women" must "likewise" (NAS) be similar in character to the men. Although this remark may refer to the wives of male deacons (KJV, NIV) it probably should be interpreted as a parenthetical reference to female deacons, or deaconesses (NIV footnote; NAS footnote; NRSV footnote). Romans 16:1 refers to Phebe as a diakonos of the church at Cenchrea. Williams New Testament translates this as deaconess. The NRSV uses "deacon." Other translations use "servant." In this verse, Phebe's role as "helper" and Paul's obvious regard for her work seem to support the conclusion that she functioned as a deacon in her church. Deaconesses are mentioned prominently in Christian writings of the first several centuries. They cared for needy fellow believers, visited the sick, and were especially charged with assisting in the baptism of women converts. Fred A. Grissom

DEAD SEA Inland lake at the end of the Jordan Valley on the southeastern border of Canaan with no outlets for water it receives; known in the

The Dead Sea's high salt content makes it virtually impossible for a person to sink in its waters.

Bible as Salt Sea, Sea of the Plain, and Eastern Sea. Its current English name was applied to it through writings after A.D. 100. It is about fifty miles long and ten miles wide at its widest point. The surface of the sea is 1292 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea. At its deepest point the lake is 1300 deep. At its most shallow it is only ten to fifteen feet deep.

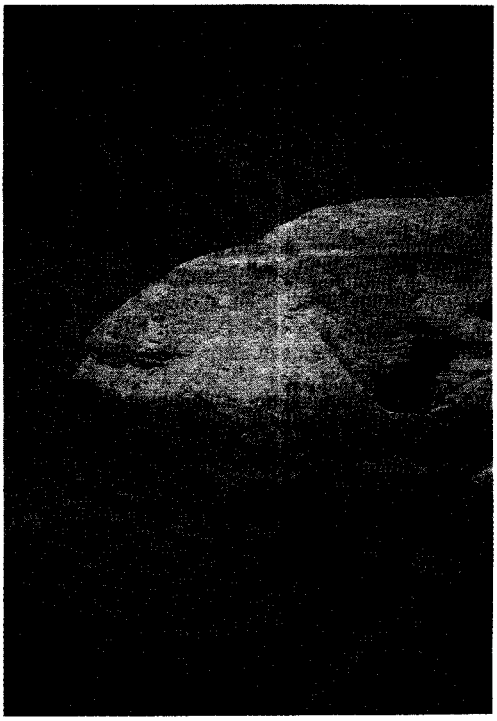


The main source of water for the sea is the Jordan River, but other smaller rivers empty into the sea also. The Jordan River empties an average of six million tons of water every twenty-four hours into the sea. Despite this and the fact that the sea has no outlet, the surface does not rise more than ten to fifteen feet. The reason for this lies in the rapid evaporation of the water because of the heat and acidness of its location below sea level.

This plus other geographical factors gives it a salt content which is approximately five times the concentration of the ocean. This makes it one of the world's saltiest. It also causes a condition where no form of marine life can live even though some fish have reportedly been found in adjacent less salty pools. The surrounding land area can support vegetation and life, however. These features of the Dead Sea plus its location in an hot and arid area inspired the biblical writers to use it as an example of a life apart from the law of God.

Bob Sheffield

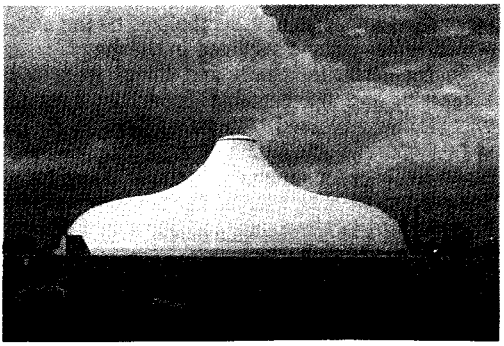
Aerial photo of central Israel showing the topography of the Dead Sea area. Courtesy of NASA.



Dead Sea Scroll fragment.

DEAD SEA SCROLLS The Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered between 1947 and 1960 in a cave on the western Dead Sea shore near a ruin called khirbet Qumran. Eleven caves from the Qumran area have since yielded manuscripts, mostly in small fragments. About sixty percent of the scrolls have so far been published. These were composed or copied between 200 B.C. and A.D. 70, mostly around the lifetime of Jesus, by a small community living at Qumran.

Contents They comprise three main kinds of literature: (1) copies of Old Testament books, the oldest we now possess; (2) some non-biblical Jewish books known from elsewhere (such as 1 Enoch and Jubilees), probably written by the Essenes; (3) the community's own compositions, including: biblical commentaries (for example, on Habakkuk and Nahum), which interpret biblical prophecies as applying to the community and its times; rules of community conduct; and liturgical writings such as prayers and hymns.



The Essenes The Qumran community belonged to the Essenes, one of four major Jewish religious movements described by the first century A.D. historian Josephus, but, strangely, unmentioned in the New Testament. The origins of the Essenes are uncertain: one major view is that they descended from the "Pious," who had fought for religious independence with the Maccabees; on another view they originated in Exile in Babylonia, returning to Palestine sometime in the third or second century B.C. They opposed the cultic laws operating at the Temple, rejecting its priesthood, and following a different calendar. They lived apart from other Jews in strictly-disciplined groups. One such rather special group lived at Qumran. Unlike many Essene groups, they were celibates, and they traced their origin to a "Teacher of Righteousness," a messianic figure of whom little is known except that he was a priest, possibly a high priest. The Qumran biblical commentaries speak of his confrontation with a "Wicked Priest," possibly a Maccabean high priest of about 150 B.C.

Caves of the Qumran area in which the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered.

Beliefs and Practices The Scrolls show a surprising variety of beliefs, accounted for by two hundred years of community history, beginning with a belief in an eminent "end of days" which faded as the fulfilment did not materialize. Like other Essenes, they believed that by observing their own interpretation of the Jewish law and by frequent ritual bathing they preserved a faithful remnant. Thus they were ready for the restoration of the land by God, who would punish the wicked through two messiahs—one priestly, one lay. They had an interest in angels, astrology, and prophetic prediction. Peculiar to Qumran was a dualistic view of the world in which God had appointed an angel of light (one of his names being Melchizedek; see Gen. 14; Heb. 7) and an angel of darkness to govern the world, all persons being assigned to the realm of one or the other. They also avoided the Temple and developed distinctive liturgical beliefs and practices based on a communion between earthly and angelic worship.

The Shrine of the Book (Museum for the Dead Sea Scrolls) in Jerusalem, Israel.

Philip R. Davies

DEAFNESS The inability to hear. According to the Old Testament God makes persons deaf or hearing (Ex. 4:11). The deaf were protected by the Mosaic law (Lev. 19:14). The inability to hear is used as an image for waiting on God rather than resisting attackers (Ps. 38:13–14). Deafness is also symbolic of inattentiveness to and rebellion against God (Isa. 42:18–20; 43:8). Part of the future hope of the prophets is that the deaf will hear (Isa. 42:18–20; 43:8). The enemies of Israel would experience deafness in response to God's restoration of Israel (Mic. 7:16).

The New Testament interprets Jesus' healing of the deaf as evidence of Jesus's Messiahship (Matt. 11:5; Luke 7:22). Strangely, only Mark narrated the healing of a deaf person (Mark 7:33–35; compare 9:14–29). Mark 9:25 attributes deafness to an evil spirit. The parallel narratives (Matt. 17:14–19; Luke 9:37–42) emphasize epilectic-like fits rather than deafness.

DEATH Unlike the Greeks, who largely understood a person as a soul entrapped in a body, the ancient Hebrews depicted the person as a psychosomatic (body-soul) unity. When this body-soul union failed in death, the Hebrews did not visualize the escape of the soul from the body, but the actual death of the self.

The Old Testament does not, however, teach that persons were annihilated at death. Rather, the dead in some sense remained in Sheol, the place of the dead located deep beneath the earth. This belief is expressed in the Genesis 25:8 report of Abraham's death. Abraham survived after a fashion with and in the vicinity of his ancestors because he was buried in the family grave (Gen. 15:15; 35:29; Judg. 8:32). Existence in Sheol was a "shade" existence, symbolized by the bones which remained and survived in the grave.

To the Israelite, death and Sheol were both acceptable and unacceptable. Especially when life was long and blessed (Abraham, Gen. 25:8; David, 1 Chron. 29:28), the Israelites accepted death with some degree of grace. They found consolation in long life, many children, remembrance of the family name, and burial in the family grave (Gen. 15:15).

When death occurred in the prime of life or without children or without proper burial, it was strictly understood as a curse. In fact, because of the Hebrews' love of life and conviction that Yahweh was the Author of life, death and Sheol always represented either a potential or actual threat. The Old Testament calls Sheol "the pit" (Isa. 38:17–18; Ezek. 26:19–21; Jonah 2:1–6), personifies it as "the king of terrors" (Job 18:13–14), and describes it as a house or city with bars (Job 17:16) where gloomy darkness prevails (Ps. 88:12).

Furthermore, because of the Hebrews' emphasis on group identity, death could be accepted in that the group survived. Injustice could be accepted in individual lives (for example, prosperity among the wicked, misfortune among the righteous) because it was assumed that justice eventually prevailed in the group. By the time of the Babylonian Exile, this pattern of passive acceptance began to change. Job and Ecclesiastes questioned the idea that justice is always served in this life. Ezekiel and Jeremiah affirmed that God's justice could not be satisfied simply by reference to the group, but had to apply to the individual (Jer. 31:29–30,33–34; Ezek. 18:19–20). Finally, the Book of Daniel teaches that to serve justice in individual lives, the dead had to be raised by God, "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2). Some Bible students see resurrection hope suggested or even clearly taught in other Old Testament passages. See Resurrection.

The Old Testament recognized the theological meaning of death as well as its physical meaning. The account of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2—3) clearly points to sin as the reason humans must experience death (2:17; 3:3). Other passages echo the same teaching (Num. 18:22; Prov. 6:12–19; Jer. 31:29–30; Ezek. 18:1–32).

Death in the Synoptic Gospels and Acts Several passages in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, and Luke) and Acts imply a positive, or at least neutral, attitude toward death. In Luke's birth narrative, for example, Simeon asked God to let him "depart in peace" because he had seen God's salvation (2:29). Similar to the Old Testament accounts of some of the partriarchs, Simeon's death would be the peaceful resignation of a life dedicated to God. In a Sermon on the Mount saying (Matt. 6:27; Luke 12:25), Jesus counseled His hearers with a rhetorical question, "and which of you by being anxious can add a single cubit to his life's span?" (NAS). If this translation is correct (some interpreters prefer "stature" to "span of life"), the teaching implies that mortality is a fact which must be accepted by Jesus' followers and entrusted to God.

In other passages death is seen as ominous and threatening. In the account of the stilling of the storm (Matt. 8:23–27; Mark 4:35–41; Luke 8:22–25), the disciples cried out desperately against the raging water. In Acts 5:1–11 Ananias and Sapphira died because they committed perjury against the Holy Spirit. Luke 1:79 and Matthew 4:16 use the phrase "shadow of death" as a negative image. In Luke 7:22–23, Jesus vindicated His ministry in the face of John the Baptist's question by revealing His power against the realm of death: the dead are raised, the demons are cast out, the lame walk, the deaf hear, the blind see.

The most striking feature of the Synoptic Gospels' understanding of death is the central place given to Jesus' death. In His death the positive and negative aspects just discussed come together: Jesus overturned death in the community and ran toward His own death; He agonized over His fate in Jerusalem and wished it were already accomplished; He announced with word and deed the Resurrection Age, but He could not completely welcome His own accursed death which resurrection would vindicate. Above all else, death in the Synoptic Gospels is interpreted by the paradoxical death of the Servant who found life through the means of death.

Death in the Letters of Paul Paul's understanding of Jesus' death and resurrection determined his depiction of death as a quality of human existence. The most fundamental facet of this understanding is that death has been defeated (1 Cor. 15:26; 2 Tim. 1:8–10). Paul's conviction was confirmed: (1) through his assurances to the Thessalonians that their dead were not disadvantaged (1 Thess. 4:13–18); (2) through his concept of the firstfruits (Rom. 8:23; 1 Cor. 5:20); (3) through his doctrine of the eventual transformation of the resurrection body (1 Cor. 15:35–58), and (4) through his conviction that the proper Christian response to death and all of its signs is an indomitable hope (Rom. 8:31–38; 1 Cor. 15:58; 1 Thess. 4:18). Simply put, Paul pictures the Christian's death as nonfinal and nonthreatening.

Death is nonetheless an enemy. It is intimately connected with sin (Rom. 3:23; 5:12–21). Paul used death imagery to characterize sinful existence (Rom. 6:13, 7:7–25, 8:6–8; Eph. 2:1, 5; Col. 2:13). If the "old" existence should be thought of as death, conversion to Christ is nothing less than rebirth (Rom. 6:5–11; Gal. 2:20). Paul's image of rebirth is realistic to the extent that he acknowledged the incompleteness of our death and resurrection with Christ. In the same paragraph that he announced our union with Christ, he felt compelled to remind Christians that they should consider themselves dead to sin but alive to God in Christ (Rom. 6:11).

Death in the Writings of John As much or more than Paul, John redefined death (and life) in relationship to Jesus. In the fourth Gospel especially, how the hearers respond to Jesus is a matter of life and death: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life" (John 5:24). The account of Lazarus' resuscitation in John 11 makes this point more dramatically. Jesus waited until Lazarus had been dead four days and declared to Martha, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die" (John 11:25–26). Jesus went on to call Lazarus from the tomb; but in doing so, he ironically sealed His own death in the plans of the Jewish authorities (John 11:45–53).

Conclusions The New Testament assumed the Old Testament concept of body-soul unity and the late Old Testament and intertestamental concept of resurrection. Unlike Greek philosophers who downplayed the significance of death by emphasizing the immortality of the soul, the biblical writers affirmed that death is real. Because the Bible also affirms the value of life as a gift from God, death is sometimes depicted as threatening and never entirely desirable. The doctrine of resurrection is an affirmation that even the realm of the dead belongs to God and that death is overcome only at His gracious command.

The distinctive contribution of the New Testament is that it relentlessly defines human life, death, and resurrection in light of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection. Thus death is removed from its normal context at the end of life and placed in the very middle of life; in Christ we die and are raised as we commit our lives to Him.

Joe Haag

DEATH OF CHRIST See Cross, Crucifixion; Christ; Jesus.

DEATH, SECOND Final separation from God; spiritual death following physical death. Revelation describes the second death with the images of the lake of fire (20:14) and a lake burning with fire and sulphur (21:8). The second death has no power over those who remain faithful in persecution (2:11), who are martyred (20:6), or for those whose names are written in the book of life (20:15). Some stress everlasting punishment in literal fire. Others stress the spiritual state of separation from God. Still others interpret the second death in terms of anihilation on the basis of comparison with Matthew 10:28. The alternative is eternal life with God.

DEBIR (Dē′ bĭr) Personal and place name meaning, "back, behind." As a common noun, the Hebrew term refers to the back room of the Temple, the holy of holies. 1. King of Eglon who joined in Jerusalem-led coalition against Joshua and lost (Josh. 10:3). Nothing else about him is known. See Eglon.

2. Important city in hill country of tribe of Judah whose exact location is debated by archaeologists and geographers. Joshua annihilated its residents (Josh. 10:38; compare 11:21; 12:13). Joshua 15:15 describes Caleb's challenge to Othniel to capture Debir, formerly called Kiriath Sepher. Compare Judges 1:11. Joshua 15:49 gives yet another name, Kiriath Sannah, to Debir. It became a levitical city for the priests (Josh. 21:15). Different scholars locate Debir at tell beit Mirsim, thirteen miles southwest of Hebron; khirbet Tarrameh, five miles southwest of Hebron; and khirbet Rabud, seven and a half miles west of Hebron. It may have been the most important town south of Hebron.

3. A town on the northern border of Judah (Josh. 15:7). This may be located at thoghret ed Debr, the "pass of Debir," ten miles east of Jerusalem.

4. A town in Gad east of the Jordan given various spellings in the Hebrew Bible: Lidebor (Josh. 13:26); Lwo Debar (2 Sam. 9:4–5); Lo' Debar (2 Sam. 17:27); Lo' Dabar (Amos 6:13). The city may be modern Umm el-Dabar, twelve miles north of Pella. It apparently was near Mahanaim, where first Ish-bosheth and then David while fleeing Absalom, made their headquarters. Some Bible students have suggested a location at tell el-Chamme or khirbet Chamid.

DEBORAH (Dĕb′ ô răh) Personal name meaning, "bee." Deborah is the name of two women in the Bible, Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8; 24:59) and a leader of pre-monarchic Israel (Judg. 4—5).

1. Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died and was buried near Bethel. She had been part of the household of Jacob, Rebekah's son.

2. Deborah, the leader of Israel, is identified as a prophetess, a judge, and the wife of Lapidoth (Judg. 4:4). She probably lived about 1200 B.C. or slightly later during a period of Canaanite oppression. Deborah is described in Judg. 5:7 as "a mother in Israel" because of her role in delivering God's people. After Moses, only Samuel filled the same combination of offices: prophet, judge, and military leader.

Deborah served regularly as a judge, hearing and deciding cases brought to her by the people of Israel. She held court at "the palm tree of Deborah," in the southern part of the territory of Ephraim, between Ramah and Bethel (Judg. 4:4–5).

Nothing is said about the procedures at her court or about the extent of her jurisdiction.

As a prophet, Deborah summoned Barak and delivered an oracle giving him God's instructions for a battle in the Jezreel Valley against the Canaanite army commanded by Sisera (Judg. 4:6–9; compare Samuel in 1 Sam. 15:2–3 and the unnamed prophet in 1 Kings 20:13–15). Barak obeyed, and the Israelites won the battle. Some scholars believe that Deborah as prophet also composed the victory poem she and Barak sang in Judges 5. Deborah's authority under God was evidenced by Barak's desire to have her present with him in the army camp (Judg. 4:8,14) and by the testimony to her leadership in the song (Judg. 5:7,12,15). Pamela J. Scalise

DEBT, DEBTOR See loan.

DECALOGUE See Ten Commandments.

DECAPOLIS (Dē căp' ō lĭs) Place name meaning, "ten cities." A group of Greek cities referred to in Matthew 4:25; Mark 5:20; 7:31, originally ten in number but including more cities at a later time. The second century A.D. writer Pliny named the ten cities as Damascus, Philadelphia (modern Amman), Canatha, Scythopolis, Pella, Hippos, Gadara, Dion, Raphana, and Gerasa (modern Jerash). Ptolemy, another second century writer, names eighteen cities in the Decapolis, omitting Raphana but adding nine others. A later source mentioned fourteen cities in the group. Thus the number varied from time to time. They were established after the time of Alexander the Great and were predominantly Greek in culture and influence. These cities were scattered south and east of the Sea of Galilee. Only Scythopolis was west of the Jordan River. Josephus named it as the greatest of the group.

The "Decapolis" is mentioned only in Matthew and Mark in the Bible. In Mark 5:20, Jesus healed a demoniac after which the man "began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him." Mark 7:31 states that after Jesus went to the region of Tyre and Sidon he went "through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis." Matthew 4:25 adds no more to our knowledge of these cities.

Colonnade along the main road through the ruins of the ancient Decapolis city of Gerasa (modern Jerash).

Traditionally the Decapolis is assumed to be a league of cities which preserved the stronghold of Graeco-Roman theater in Amman, Jordan (the ancient Decapolis city of Philadelphia).

Greek thought and life in Palestine and resisted the Semitic influences of the Jews. According to Pliny, however, it was not a very solid political alliance. A recent view is that it was not even a league, but a geographical region. These cities do seem to have much in common; they were centers for the spread of Greco-Roman culture and had no great love for the Jews. They were associated with one another closely enough that in some ways they were considered as a group, if not as a league. See Palestine. W. Thomas Sawyer

DECISION, VALLEY OF See Jehoshapat, Valley of.

DECREE A royal order. Decrees were proclaimed publically by criers (Jonah 3:5–7) designated "heralds" (Dan. 3:4) often throughout the territory of the monarch (1 Sam. 11:7; Ezra 1:1). Decrees were written and stored in archives for later reference (Ezra 6:1–2). Scripture attributes just decrees to divine wisdom (Prov. 8:15). Scripture also recognizes unjust decrees (Isa. 10:1). Some important decrees include: Cyrus' decree on rebuilding the Temple (Ezra 6:3–5); Esther's decree on the celebration of Purim (Esther 9:32); and the decree of Caesar Augustus which set the scene for the birth of Christ (Luke 2:1).

As King of the earth, God issues decrees regulating the world of nature (the sea, Prov. 8:29; rain, Job 28:26) and of humanity (Dan. 4:24). God also decrees the reign of the Messianic King (Ps. 2:7).

The KJV uses "decree" to describe the decision of the Apostolic Council (Acts 16:4) and of a human inward decision not to marry (1 Cor. 7:37). NIV refers to God's righteous decree of death for sinners (Rom. 1:32). NAS uses "decree" for God's law which led to disobedience and death

(Col. 2:14,20). NRSV uses "decree" to speak of God's eternal wisdom and plan for creation. Any translator using "decree" is interpreting the meaning of a more general Hebrew or Greek term, resulting in each translation using "decree" for several different words of the original language.

DEDAN (Dē′ dăn) Personal and place name of unknown meaning. 1. The original ancestor of an Arabian tribe listed in the table of nations as a son of Cush (Gen. 10:27). See Cush. 2. A grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:3). Here as in 10:27, Dedan's brother is Sheba. Three otherwise unknown Arabian tribes descended from Dedan, according to Genesis 25:3. 3. The Arabian tribe centered at al-Alula, 70 miles southwest of Tema and 400 miles from Jerusalem. It was a station on the caravan road between Tema and Medina. Jeremiah pronounced judgment against the Arabian tribes (Jer. 25:23), perhaps looking to Nebuchadnezzar's raid in Arabia in 599–598 B.C. Nabonidus, king of Babylon (556–539), left control of his kingdom to his son Belshazzar and worked in Arabia for a period, controlling Dedan among other cities. Dedan was a caravan center for incense trade (Isa. 21:13). Isaiah warned the traders from Dedan to avoid the regular caravan stations and spend the night in the wilderness. Neighbors from Tema would have to meet their food needs. Jeremiah warned merchants from Dedan working or staying in Edom to flee the country because God was bringing judgment on it (Jer. 49:8). Ezekiel warned Edom that their soldiers fleeing even to Dedan would be struck down (Ezek. 25:13). In judging Tyre, Ezekiel noted they, too, traded with Dedan (Ezek. 27:15,20). Compare Ezekiel 38:13.

DEDANIM (Dĕd′ ā nĭm) or DEDANITE (Dĕd′ ăn īte) A resident or citizen of the tribe of Dedan. See Dedan.

DEDICATE, DEDICATION A general term used in the Bible to describe an act of setting apart or consecrating persons or things to God (or gods), persons, sacred work, or ends. The act is usually accompanied by an announcement of what is being done or intended and by prayer asking for divine approval and blessing. In the Old Testament the people who were set apart included all Israel (Ex. 19:5,6; Deut. 7:6; 14:2) and the priests (Ex. 29:1–37). The things that were set apart included the altar in the tabernacle (Num. 7:10–88), images of pagan deities (Dan. 3:2,3), silver and gold (2 Sam. 8:11), Temple (1 Kings 8:63; Ezra 6:16–18), walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:27), and private dwellings (Deut. 20:5). The idea of dedication is embodied in the New Testament word "saints." The whole church is set apart to God (Eph. 5:26). The individual believer is one of a dedicated, sanctified, consecrated, priestly people; set apart "to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 2:5). Ray Robbins

DEDICATION, FEAST OF The term for Hanukkah in John 10:22. See Festivals; Hanukkah.

DEEP, THE English translation of the Hebrew term tehom. The deep constitutes the primeval waters of creation in Genesis 1:2. This concept is echoed dramatically in Psalm 104:5–7, where God is pictured as rebuking the waters of the deep, separating the waters from the mountains and valleys, and setting the boundaries for each. Creation includes the concept of bringing order by separating or dividing what is made, and keeping each in its proper place (Prov. 8:22–31). This thought is expressed in an interesting metaphor in Psalm 33:7, where God is said to have gathered the waters into a bottle (NRSV) and put the deeps into a storehouse.

In the account of the Exodus from Egypt, God's action in parting the waters for the Israelites to pass is expressed poetically as a dividing of the waters of the deep (Ex. 15:8). God held the waters in place as the Israelites crossed the sea, and released the waters when they reached the other side, shielding them from the Egyptians (Ps. 77:16–20). This was, theologically speaking, an act of creation—creating a people for the Lord, by freeing them from slavery in Egypt.

The waters of the deep can be destructive or constructive, curse or blessing. When the waters of the deep burst their bounds, the result is a flood (Gen. 7:11). At the extreme described in Genesis 7, it is a reversal of creation which can only be checked when God again sends the wind or spirit (ruah) which began creation (Gen. 1:2) and closes the fountains of the deep (Gen. 8:1–3). Storms at sea are also associated with the deep (Ps. 107:23–26; compare Jonah 2:6). In the poetry of the Psalms, the deep is a metaphor for the trials of life which seem overwhelming (Ps. 69:14–15). It could even represent the abode of the dead (Ps. 71:20).

On the other hand, the waters of the deep are a blessing, without which life could not continue. Deuteronomy 8:7 describes the Promised Land as a land of brooks, fountains, and deeps, which irrigate the land so that grain and fruit can be grown (Ezek. 31:4). When Jacob blessed his son Joseph with "blessings of the deep that lieth under," he was attempting to bestow fertility on Joseph and his offspring and on their land (Gen. 49:25; compare Deut. 33:13–17). As blessing and as curse, the deep reflects as power which only the creator God can control (Ps. 95:4).

The Greek Bible or Septuagint translated tehom as "abyss," bringing it into relationship with the pit, the abode of the dead (Rom. 10:7) and place of evil spirits (Luke 8:31), including the beast of the apocalypse (Rev. 17:8). Wilda W. Morris

DEER See Animals in the Bible.

DEFILE To make ritually unclean. See Clean, Cleanness.

DEGREES, SONG OF The KJV phrase used in the titles of 15 Psalms (Pss. 120—134). Modern speech translations render the phrase, "Song of Ascents". Though the origin of the phrase is obscure, the generally accepted view is that the Hebrew term ma'aloth (goings up) is a reference to pilgrims' going up to Jerusalem for the 3 required festivals. (Pss. 42:4; 122:4). Jerusalem was surrounded by mountains (Pss. 121:1; 125:2; 133:3), thus such trips involved a literal going up. It is conjectured that these psalms were sung on such occassions (Isa. 30:29; Ps. 132:7). Others have suggested that "ascents" is a reference to the rising melody of the psalms, the step-like poetic form of some of the psalms, or to the steps upon which the Levites performed music in the Temple. Jewish tradition relates the title to the fifteen steps leading from the court of the women to the court of Israel in the Temple.

DEHAVITE (Dė hā' vīte) KJV transliteration of Aramaic text in Ezra 4:9. Modern translators read the text as two Aramaic words—di-hu'—meaning, "that is."

DEKAR (Dē' kär) KJV reads "son of Dekar" in 1 Kings 4:9, where modern translations transliterate the Hebrew text to read, "Ben-deker." See Ben-deker.

DELILAH (Dė lī' lăh) Personal name meaning, "with long hair hanging down." A woman from the valley of Sorek who was loved by Samson (Judg. 16:4). She was probably a Philistine. She enticed Samson into revealing to her that the secret of his great strength lay in his hair, which had never been cut. Then, she betrayed him to the Philistines. While he slept, she had his head shaved, and he was captured, blinded, and bound by the Philistines. See Samson; Judges.

DELIVERANCE, DELIVERER Rescue from danger. In Scripture God gives deliverance (Pss. 18:50; 32:7; 44:4), often through a human agent. In the Old Testament deliverance most often refers to victory in battle (Judg. 15:18; 2 Kings 5:1; 13:17; 1 Chron. 11:14; 2 Chron. 12:7). Joseph was God's agent to deliver His people from famine (Gen. 45:7). The Old Testament consistently stresses God as the giver of deliverance rather than the human agent. Thus Mordecai warned Esther that is she failed to act out her role as deliverer God would provide another way (Esther 4:14). KJV also uses "deliverance" to describe the remanant that survives a battle or exile (Ezra 9:13). In KJV both New Testament uses of deliverance refers to release of prisoners (Luke 4:18; Heb. 11:35). Modern translations use "deliverance" to refer to rescue from danger in Acts 7:25; Philippians 1:19.

A deliverer is one who rescues from danger. Two of the judges, Othniel and Ehud (Judg. 3:9,15), are called deliverers in the sense of military heroes. More often God is spoken of as the Deliverer of His people (2 Sam. 22:2; Ps. 18:2; 40:17; 144:2). The picture of God as deliverer is paralled with the images of a rock, fortress, helper, and strong tower. Acts 7:35 refers to Moses as a deliverer. Romans 11:26–27 refers to the Messianic King as the Deliverer who will take away Israel's sins.

The verb "deliver" is used in a wide range of contexts. According to Job 5:19–26 God delivers in 7 ways; from famine, war, the scourge of the tongue, the wild animals, to safety, abundant offspring, and long life. Scripture also speaks to deliverance from sin (Ps. 39:8; 79:9); the way of evil (Prov. 2:12); the power of evil (Matt. 6:13; Gal. 1:4; Col. 1:13); the body of death (Rom. 7:24); the law (Rom. 7:6); and the coming wrath of God (1 Thess. 1:10). God is the agent of deliverance in Colossians 1:13 and Romans 7:24–25. Christ is the agent in 1 Thessalonians 1:10 and Galatians 1:4, where Christ brings deliverance by giving Himself for sins.

DELUGE See Flood.

DEMAS (Dē' măs) A companion and co-worker of Paul the apostle (Col. 4:14). Though in Philemon 24 Paul identified Demas as a "fellowlabourer," 2 Timothy 4:10 indicates that this man later deserted Paul, "having loved this present world."

DEMETRIUS (Dė mē' trī ŭs) Personal name meaning, "belonging to Demeter, the Greek goddess of crops." 1. A silversmith in Ephesus. He incited a riot directed against Paul because he feared that the apostle's preaching would threaten the sale of silver shrines of Diana, the patron goddess of Ephesus (Acts 19:24–41). Demetrius may have been a guild master in charge of producing small silver copies of Diana's temple with a figure of the goddess inside. 2. Apparently a convert from the worship of Demeter, the god worshiped in the mystery religion at Eleusis near Athens. John commended him, saying, he "hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself" (3 John 12). He may have carried 3 John from John to its original readers.

DEMON POSSESSION The control of an individual's personality so that actions are influenced by an evil demonic spirit. Most of those described as demon-possessed in the New Testament are adult men, but certain women were also delivered from the influence of evil spirits (Luke 8:2; 13:11,16). The signs of demon possession in the New Testament include: speechlessness (Matt. 9:33); deafness (Mark 9:25); blindness (Matt. 12:22); fierceness (Matt. 8:28); unusual strength (Mark 5:4); convulsions (Mark 1:26); and foaming at the mouth (Luke 9:39). Most of the New Testament references to demon possession appear in the Gospels and represent the outburst of satanic opposition to God's work in Christ.

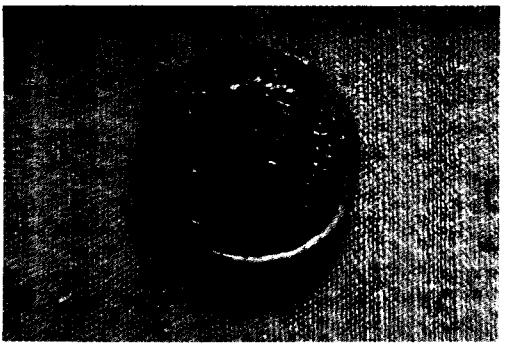
The Scripture writers are careful to distinguish between demon possession and disease. In Matthew 4:24 demon possession is listed with a variety of symptoms of other diseases including pain, epilepsy, and paralysis. The Gospel writers could distinguish between demon possession and these other diseases.

The features demonstrated by those who are demon possessed are incompatible with a theory of mere bodily or mental illness. The healing of the Gadarene demoniac in Mark 5 had fatal effects upon a nearby herd of swine (Mark 5:11–13). The same demoniac made an assertion of Christ's deity when the disciples of Jesus had not as yet shown any recognition of this fact (Mark 4:41; 5:7). Epilepsy and insanity would not cause such effects as these.

Descriptions of the experience of demon possession do not separate the actions of the possessed person from the actions of the demon (Mark 1:23; Luke 8:28). The power of the demon dominates the personality of the possessed person. Such bizarre behavior as masochism (Mark 5:5) and an unnatural voice (Mark 5:7) stems from the demon's control of the individual's self-expression.



Jesus treated the cases of demon possession as realities. He was neither putting on a performance nor pretending to agree with superstitious attitudes of the Jews. In His discussions with the Jews He assumed the reality of demon possession when He affirmed that His casting out of devils showed that the kingdom of God had come to His hearers (Matt. 12:23–27). The Jews of Jesus' time superstitiously believed that demons were lurking at every corner. They thought they could find them in rivers, seas, and on mountaintops. Demons were blamed for toothaches, headaches, broken bones, and outbursts of jealousy and anger. By way of contrast to this practice, the response of Jesus and the New Testament writers is very restrained.

The cure for demon possession in the New Testament is always faith in the power of Christ. The New Testament never shows Jesus or the apostles using magical rites to deliver the afflicted from demon possession. Whenever Christ spoke the word, the demons were forced to obey Him (Mark 1:27; Luke 4:41). Jesus entrusted this same power of exorcism to His disciples as they went out on mission for Him (Matt. 10:8).

Missionaries and Christian workers in foreign countries have encountered the biblical type of demon possession in some of their work. Those individuals who have experienced a release from demon possession by spiritual means have been able to lead normal healthy lives. Psychiatrists would describe demon possession in terms quite different from the Bible. The most useful solution to the problem will assume that the evil of human nature renders the mind especially susceptible to the influence of personal agents of evil.

Thomas D. Lea

DENARIUS (De năr' ĭ ŭs) A coin representing a typical day's wage for an ordinary laborer (Matt. 20:2). The King James Version translates it "penny." This unit of Roman currency is the most frequently mentioned coin in the New Testament. See Coins; Economic Life.

A Roman denarius.

DEN OF LIONS A place where lions live, at times a thicket (Jer. 50:44) or cave (Nah. 2:12). See Animals.

DENY To disown or disassociate oneself from someone or to dispute that an assertion (Mark 14:70) or event (Acts 4:16) is true. The Old Testament speaks of disassociating oneself from God (Josh. 24:27; Prov. 30:9). Peter's denial of Jesus (Matt. 26:34,69–75; Mark 14:30,66–72; Luke 22:34,56–62) should be understood in this sense, since Peter three times disassociated himself from Jesus, claiming not to be one of His group. Fear of death or persecution leads some to deny, that is, disassociate themselves from Jesus (Matt. 10:33; Mark 8:38; Luke 12:9; 2 Tim. 2:12), resulting in Jesus' disassociation from them at the judgment. It is possible that 2 Peter. 2:1 and Jude 4 should be understood in this sense as well. To deny oneself is a special case in which a person disassociates oneself from self interest to serve a higher cause. Here the idea of denial is paralleled by the picture of taking up Jesus' cross and following Him (Matt. 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23).

John the Baptist denied or disputed the assertion that he was the Christ (John 1:19–20). The "antichrists" of 1 John 2:22 disputed the teaching that Jesus is the Christ. Possibly 2 Peter 2:1 and Jude 4 are to be understood in this sense.

DEPOSIT Something given as a downpayment (See Pledge); money invested with a banker for the purpose of drawing interest (Matt. 25:27); something given to another for safekeeping (Ex. 22:7). Ex. 22:7–13 gives guidelines for cases in which property left for safekeeping is stolen or a deposited animal is injured or dies. Lev. 6:2–7 gives guidelines for one wishing to confess mishandling a deposit.

DEPTHS The deep places of the sea (Ex. 15:5,8; Pss. 68:22; 77:16; 78:15), an underground spring (Deut. 8:7; Prov. 8:24), the earth's interior (Ps. 95:4; Isa. 44:23), and by extension Sheol, the subterranean abode of the dead (Pss. 63:9; 71:20). "The depths" is used figuratively for the unsearchable (Prov. 25:3), for the womb (Ps. 139:15), and perhaps for tragedy (Ps. 130:1). See Deep.

DEPUTY An official of secondary rank (1 Kings 22:47); KJV term for a Roman proconsul (Acts 13:7; 18:12; 19:38). See Proconsul.

DERBE (Dêr' bê) Important city in region of Lycaonia in province of Galatia in Asia minor. It is apparently near modern Kerti Huyuk. The residents of Derbe and Lystra spoke a different language from the people to the north in Iconium. Paul visited Derbe on his first missionary journey (Acts 14:6), fleeing from Iconium. Persecution in Lystra led to a successful preaching mission in Derbe (14:20–21). On the second journey, Paul returned to Derbe (Acts 16:1). He apparently visited again on the third journey (18:23). Paul's fellow minister Gaius was from Derbe (20:4).

DESCENT The path down a mountain (Luke 19:37); a geneology, line of ancestors (Heb. 7:3,6).

DESCENT TO HADES A phrase taken from the Apostles' Creed describing the work of the resurrected Christ. The idea of descent to Hades was a theme of many ancient religions to describe the work of a religious hero. First Peter 3:19 says Christ "went and preached unto the spirits in prison." Many interpretations have been given for this. The time may be seen as the days of Noah (v. 20) and thus describe the work of the preexistent Christ or the work of Christ's spirit through Noah. It may be seen as immediately following Christ's resurrection. The content of His preaching may have been judgment; it may have been affirmation of His victory over "angels, authorities, and powers" (v. 22); it may have been release from Sheol or Hades for saints who preceded Him. The spirits may have been the "sons of God" of Genesis 6:2, the people of Noah's day, the Old Testament sinners, Old Testament people who were true to God, fallen angels, the evil spirits or demonic powers whom Jesus contested in His earthly ministry. The prison may have been Sheol or Hades according to Old Testament thinking, a special place of captivity for sinners, a place of punishment for fallen angels, a place of security for such angels where they thought they could escape Christ's power, or a place on the way to heaven where the faithful of old waited to hear the message of Christ's final atoning victory. Whatever the detailed explanation of each of the phrases, the ultimate purpose is to glorify Christ for His completed work of salvation through His death, resurrection, and ascension, showing He has control of all places and powers.

DESERT Areas with little rainfall to the east and south of Palestine and inhabited by nomads with flocks and herds. Three major deserts figure in biblical events: the plateau east of the mountains to the east of Jordan River; the area south of Edom, and the triangle bordered by Gaza, the Dead Sea, and the Red Sea. The Bible pictures raiders from the desert—Amalekites, Midianites, Ishmaelites—threatening Palestine farmers. Saul relieved some of this pressure (1 Sam. 14:48).

Palestine's desert areas received brief if hard rains in March and April. At times they blossomed briefly, but long dry spells returned its normal desert characteristics. The Hebrew language distinguishes with several words what English describes as desert or wilderness.

Midbar is the most prominent and inclusive term but is used in several different contexts with differing meaning. It can describe the southern boundary of the Promised Land (Ex. 23:31; Deut. 11:24). This southern wilderness can be divided into various parts: Shur (Ex. 15:22); Sin (Ex. 16:1); Paran (Num. 12:16); Zin (Num. 13:21). This entire southern desert region can be called the wilderness of Sinai (Ex. 19:1) above which rises Mount Sinai. North of this is the wilderness of Judah (Judg. 1:16), lying east of the road connecting Jerusalem and Hebron. Here deep, narrow gorges lead down from the Judean hills to the Dead Sea. Midbar also describes the area surrounding a settlement where herds are pastured (1 Sam. 23:24; 24:1; 2 Chron. 20:20; compare Josh. 8:24). Settlements in the desert arose particularly during times of political stability and served as military stations against bedouin invasions and as protection for commerce on the desert trade routes.

'Arabah often appears as a synonym for midbar. This is the basic term for the long rift reaching from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea and on down to the Red Sea. It describes ground dominated by salt with little water or plants. 'Arabah is never used to describe pasturelands. It serves as the eastern boundary of the Promised Land and is often translated, "plain," if it is not transliterated as "Arabah" (Deut. 3:17; Josh. 12:1).

Yeshimon designates the wasteland which is unproductive. The word appears either in parallel with midbar or as part of a territorial designation such as in 1 Samuel 23:24. See Jeshimon. God holds out hope for restoration of the wild lands (Isa. 43:19–20).

Chorbah describes hot, dry land or land with destroyed settlements. It can designate dry land opposed to water-covered land (Gen. 7:22; Ex. 14:21). It describes the desert in Psalms 102:7; 106:9; Isaiah 25:5; 50:2; 51:3; 64:10; Jeremiah 25:9.

Tsiyyah points to a dry region (Job 30:3; Ps. 78:17; 105:41; Isa. 35:1; Jer. 50:12; Zeph. 2:13).

Shamamah is a desolate and terrifying land and often indicates God's destruction of a place (Ex. 23:29; Lev. 26:33, Jer. 4:27; Ezek. 6:14; 23:33).

Negeb refers to the dry land and is a technical name for the southern desert whose northern border lies north of Beersheba. Annual rainfall ranges from 100 to 300 millimeters a year. Rainfall varies drastically year to year. Negeb came to mean "south" in Hebrew and could be translated the "south country" (Gen. 24:62).

Wasteland of the northern Negeb (Negev) in southern Israel.

The dry, mostly uninhabited desert held fear and awe for Israel. It could be described like the original chaos prior to creation (Deut. 32:10; Jer. 4:23–26). Israel was able to go through the desert because God led them (Deut. 1:19). Its animal inhabitants caused even more fear—snakes and scorpions (Deut. 8:15); wild donkeys (Jer. 2:24). The desert lay waste without humans or rain (Job 38:26; Jer. 2:6). The desert was a "terrifying land" (Isa. 21:1 NAS). The only expectation for a person in the wilderness was death by starvation (Ex. 16:3).

God's judgment could turn a city into desert (Jer. 4:26), but His grace could turn the wilderness into a garden (Isa. 41:17–20).

In the New Testament the desert was the place of John the Baptist's ministry (Luke 1:80; 3:4) and where demon-possession drove a man (Luke 8:29). The crowds forced Jesus into the unpopulated desert to preach (Mark 1:45). Jesus took His disciples there to rest (Mark 6:31). See Wilderness.

Trent C. Butler

DESIGN Modern translations' reading for an artistic pattern (Ex. 31:4; 39:3; 2 Chr. 2:14; KJV, "cunning works"); RSV translation for plans, generally in the negative sense of schemes or wiles (Job 10:3; 2 Cor. 2:11). KJV has "Counsel" and "devices."

DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS Phrase Haggai used in his prophecy of a renewed Temple (Hag. 2:7). Some translations (KJV, NIV) interpret the underlying Hebrew as a prophecy of the coming Messiah. Other translations render the phrase "treasure" (TEV, NRSV, REB) or "wealth" (NAS) of all nations in parallel to the gold and silver of 2:8. The messianic interpretation first appears in the Latin Vulgate translation, while the treasures would show Yahweh's power to restore the glory of His house despite the people's poverty.

DESOLATION, ABOMINATION OF See Abomination of Desolation.

DESTINY Word used in modern translations for God's act in electing or predestinating people and nations. See Election; Fate; Predestination.

DESTROYER An invading army (Isa. 49:17; Jer. 22:7) or a supernatural agent of God's judgment (Ex. 12:23; Heb. 11:28), often termed an angel (2 Sam. 24:15–16; 2 Kings 19:35; Ps. 78:49). All stand under God's sovereign control as he directs human affairs.

DESTROYING LOCUSTS See Insects.

DETAINED BEFORE THE LORD To remain in the presence of the Lord at the Tabernacle or Temple (1 Sam. 21:7). The reason for Doeg's remaining at the Tabernacle is not given. Perhaps he was there to fulfill a vow, receive an oracle, perform an act of penance, or to celebrate a holiday. 1 Sam. 21:6 suggests that it was the Sabbath. (See Mark 2:25–26).

DEUEL (Dēū′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "God knows." In Numbers 1:14, the father of Eliasaph, the leader in the wilderness of the tribe of Gad. Numbers 2:14 identifies Eliasaph's father as Reuel. Deuel and Reuel may be alternative forms of the same name, probably representing a copyist's misreading of Hebrew "d" and "r," which are quite similar.

DEUTERONOMY, THE BOOK OF English name of fifth book of Old Testament taken from Greek translation meaning, "second law." Deuteronomy is the last of five books of Law and should not be read in isolation from the other four books (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers). Pentateuch (five books) is the familiar title associated with these five books of Law, the first and most important division of the Hebrew Bible. By longstanding tradition these books have been associated with Moses, the human instrument of God's deliverance of Israel from bondage in Egypt and the negotiator of the covenant between God and Israel.

Title The probable origin of the title "Deuteronomy" is the translation in the Septuagint (Greek translation of the Hebrew Old Testament) of Deuteronomy 17:18–19. These two verses contain instructions to the king about making "a copy of this law" to be read regularly and obeyed faithfully. The Septuagint translators rendered the above phrase "this second law" instead of "a copy of this law." The Septuagint translation implies a body of legislation different from that contained in the previous books of Law. That does not seem to be the point of the instruction in Deuteronomy 17:18–19. This apparent Greek mistranslation is the likely source of the title "Deuteronomy."

The title used in the Hebrew Bible, "these (are) the words" (two words in Hebrew), follows an ancient custom of using words from the first line of the text to designate a book. Sometimes the title in the Hebrew Bible was shortened to "words." This title more accurately defines the contents of the book than our familiar English title, Deuteronomy. In the main the book consists of the words by which Moses addressed Israel prior to their entry into the Promised Land. The style is sermonic, that of a preacher addressing his congregation with words designed to move them to obedience and commitment.

The hands of a Jewish man with the long strips of his phylactery intertwined with his fingers as he prays.

Jewish man in prayer at the Wailing Wall wearing his phylactery (containing Scripture from Deuteronomy).

Background Deuteronomy is not primarily a law book or a book of history. It claims to be the words of Moses addressed to Israel on the eve of their entry into Canaan. Their wanderings in the wilderness were at an end. Their early efforts at conquest of the Promised Land east of the Jordan had met with success.

Israel's Exodus from Egypt and the covenant at Sinai were the stages of Israel's birth as a nation. As yet they were a nation without a homeland. God's covenant with Israel at Sinai was in part a renewal of earlier covenants made with the patriarchs. Included in those covenants were the following promises: (1) that Israel would be God's special nation, (2) that Yahweh God would be their God, (3) that they would be obedient to God, and (4) that God would give them a homeland and innumerable descendants.

Now Israel was poised on the borders of Canaan ready to enter and to possess the Land of Promise. Moses, knowing that Israel's future hung on their obedience and commitment to God, led the people in a covenant renewal ceremony. Moses' approaching death and resulting transfer of human leadership to Joshua, plus Israel's approaching battles in conquest of the land, formed the basis for renewal of the covenant.

Contents Deuteronomy contains not one, but three (or more) addresses from Moses to Israel. Most interpreters agree that the structure of the book is patterned after Near Eastern vassal treaties.

Deuteronomy 1:1–5 is an introduction, giving the time and place of the addresses. The time is "the fortieth year" (Deut. 1:3) of wilderness wandering, "in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month." The place is "on this side Jordan in the wilderness" (Deut. 1:1) and, more particularly, "in the land of Moab" (Deut. 1:5).

Deuteronomy 1:6—4:40 is Moses' first address in which he recounted Israel's journey from Horeb to Moab and urged Israel to be faithful to Yahweh. Moses used Israel's immediate past history to teach the present generation of Israelites the importance of trusting God. Israel's obedience was imperative if they were to expect to possess the land of Canaan. Moses set up cities of refuge on the east bank of the Jordan (Deut. 4:41–43).

A Jewish rabbi opening a Torah (Genesis through Deuteronomy) case for a ceremony at the Western, or Wailing, Wall in Jerusalem. Jewish people consider the wall sacred but were forbidden to worship at it during Turkish, British, and Jordanian rule.

Deuteronomy 4:44—28:68 contains Moses' second address to Israel. The address is introduced in Deuteronomy 4:44–49. Then Moses proceeded to teach Israel lessons from the law. These are not laws to be used in the courts to decide legal cases, but instructions for life in the land of Canaan.

Moses' third address is found in Deuteronomy 29:1—30:20. The focus is upon covenant renewal. Repentance and commitment would assure life and the blessings of God. Rebellion would result in their death as a nation. The choice was theirs.

Deuteronomy 31:1–29 is Moses' farewell address. The song of Moses is given in Deuteronomy 31:30—32:52. Moses' blessing is reported in chapter 33, and his death is recounted in chapter 34.

Date and Authorship The date when Deuteronomy was put in its final form was relatively late. Internal evidence seems to favor a time after the Mosaic era. The author makes third person references to Moses instead of first person statements about himself as one would expect Moses to do. "Beyond the Jordan," a common phrase used for the territory east of that river, gives the perspective of a writer within the land of Canaan.

The Near Eastern vassal treaty form of Deuteronomy has been used by scholars to argue for a date for the book in the Mosaic period or shortly thereafter. Other scholars use the same information to argue for a date closer to 600 B.C. Differences in form between early Hittite treaties and later Assyrian treaties when compared to Deuteronomy are the bases for deciding in favor of an early or a later date for Deuteronomy. Such comparisons of the structure of Deuteronomy with the structure of Near Eastern vassal treaties do not provide firm evidence for dating Deuteronomy either early or late.

The "book of the law" found during the repair of the Temple in the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign (621 B.C.) has been identified as Deuteronomy since the early church fathers shortly after 300 A.D. That identity cannot be proved, but the nature of the reforms of Josiah and the contents of Deuteronomy show an interesting similarity. For example, the call for centralization of worship (Deut. 12) is matched by Josiah's destruction of all altars except the one in the Temple in Jerusalem (2 Kings 23:4–20).

All the basic material in Deuteronomy seems to be quite ancient, but the book seems to have been edited after the death of Moses. No doubt Moses gave such addresses to Israel as the book reflects when it became known to him that God would not permit him to lead Israel into the Promised Land.

Purpose The sermonic style of Deuteronomy suits

it well to serve just as most interpreters agree that it served originally. Deuteronomy is a call to repentance, a plea for God's disobedient people to mend their ways and renew the covenant God made with them at Sinai. Moses had led Israel to the borders of Canaan nearly forty years before, but in rebellion and unbelief the people turned back into the wilderness. Now the new generation of Israelites stood on the borders of the Promised Land. Would they turn back in rebellion and unbelief?

The approaching death of Moses put urgency into his appeal for covenant renewal. He called for obedience through love to Yahweh, the loving God, who had established the covenant with Israel. Moses was convinced that only through a renewed relationship with God could the new generation of Israelites hope to succeed under Joshua's leadership in possessing the land. No doubt Joshua used the materials of Deuteronomy when he led Israel in a covenant renewal ceremony at Shechem (Josh. 8:30–35). Later, covenant renewal became a regular feature of Israel's cult. Deuteronomy must have been used in these ceremonies.

Teaching Deuteronomy continues to exercise strong influence on God's people. In many ways it remains a guide to life under God. It reminds of the great things God has done and wants to do for His people. It calls to faith and action in response to God's acts. It holds high the belief in the uniqueness of God as the only God without rivals. Thus it points to worship of any other god as vain, without meaning or hope. It shows the Ten Commandments as the center of the covenant relationship for believers. It holds up love of God as the basic relationship God wants with His people. It calls for total separation from pagan practices and godless life-styles. It seeks to establish a community at rest, free from internal strife and external war. It focuses on the needs of the least privileged members of society, calling on God's people to meet their needs. It teaches that the commitment of people finds reflection in action. It pronounces curses on evildoers who forsake God's covenant and blessings on those faithful to the covenant. From first to last, it calls for repentance and renewal of faith.

Outline

I. Introduction: Historical Setting (1:1–5)
II. Moses' First Sermon: Learn from God's Saving Acts (1:6—4:40)
  A. Historical memories call for present faith action (1:6—3:29)
  B. God's Word is the foundation for His people's life (4:1–43)
III. Second Sermon: God's Law Guides and Gives Unique Identity to God's People (4:44—28:68)
  A. Covenant faith demands total allegiance and unchanging love for God (4:44—11:32)
  B. God expresses His demands in worship, leadership, daily life, business life, legal practices, family life, and care for others (12:1—28:68).
IV. Third Sermon: God Seeks to Renew Covenant Relationships (29:1—30:20).
V. Conclusion: God Seeks Continuity in Leadership for His People (31:1—34:12).

Billy K. Smith

DEVIL, SATAN, EVIL, DEMONIC The personal dimension of that which opposes God's purposes in His world. For some people, belief in a personal Satan is part of mankind's nursery furniture. The concept of a personal Satan, however, has remained a part of evangelical thought. The present-day Christian who accepts the biblical teaching concerning Satan is not committed to all of the crude imagery that has sprung up around belief in Satan. In the light of medieval and modern distortions, a careful consideration of the biblical teaching concerning Satan is especially needed.

Old Testament teaching A fully defined doctrine of Satan is not found in the Bible until New Testament times. A number of reasons have been suggested for the relatively limited material on Satan in the Old Testament.

God began His self-revelation in the ancient world of polytheism (belief in many gods). God wanted to lead His people to a dynamic practical monotheism (the belief in and worship of one God). In the Old Testament a primary emphasis is placed on the supremacy of and the power of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who delivered the Hebrews from the slavery of Egypt.

Satan, the chief of the fallen angels, is mentioned in a number of places in the Old Testament. It is clear that from the very moment of the creation of this world that Satan and fallen angels were on the scene, rebels against God. Satan was evidently perfect in his original state. Pride seems to have been the cause of his fall. Disguised as a serpent, he was the agent of temptation for the first man and woman (Gen. 3:10; Rev. 12:9; 20:2). When Satan does appear in the Old Testament he is always the adversary of God's people. He seeks to lead God's people into presumption (1 Chron. 21:1) or slanders them to God's face (Zech. 3:1).

The most extensive Old Testament discussion of Satan is in Job. Here he is seen as God's agent and minister, who tested human fidelity. He makes a wager with God using Job as the stake. He acts, however, with the express permission of God and keeps within the limits which God has fixed for him (Job 1:12; 2:6).

New Testament teaching By the time the New Testament books were written, God had led their authors to a clear-cut doctrine of Satan. This doctrine located an origin of evil in Satan. This recognizes the reality of evil outside and beyond the scope of human will. The New Testament avoids identifying evil with the direct will of God and keeps it always and finally subordinate to God.

Matthew, Mark, and Luke clearly accept and teach a doctrine of a personal Satan and his agents called fallen angels or demons (Mark 3:22). Matthew 4:1 tells of Jesus being tempted by the devil in the wilderness. In Matthew 25:41 even hell is described as being prepared for the devil and his angels. Satan and demons are seen as able to inflict disease (Matt. 17:5–18; Luke 13:16). Satan possessed Judas (Luke 22:3). John saw Satan as the prince of this world (John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11) with the whole world in his power (1 John 5:19).

The apostle Paul's world view teaches that Satan is the god of this age. The cosmos or unredeemed world is at present under Satan's power. Satan is now the "commander of the spiritual powers of the air" (Eph. 2:2 REB) and leads "the superhuman forces of evil in the heavenly realms" (Eph. 6:12 REB).

The general New Testament Epistles describe Satan's activities graphically. Second Peter 2:4 speaks of the "angels that sinned" and Jude 6 of the "angels which kept not their first estate." The constant use of violence and deceit by Satan requires that believers manifest courage and extreme vigilance (Jas. 4:7; 1 Pet. 5:8–9).

The book of Revelation sees Satan's activities as involving not only individuals but communities. Political forces can become servants of the devil (Rev. 12; 13). Revelation 2:13 even speaks of a throne of Satan.

It should be remembered that the New Testament teaches that Satan and his demonic allies are not coequal with God. He is a created being who has rebelled and can tempt—but not force. The main concern of the Bible is not with the devil but with God and the gospel of His grace. Satan and the demonic forces have been overcome by the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The New Testament never allows complete pessimism. In the end Satan and his angels will be completely overcome. In fact, Jesus came into the world to "destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3:8). The cross was a decisive victory over Satan and Satan's host (Col. 2:15). This victory insured that countless numbers would be delivered from the dominion of darkness and transferred to the kingdom of Christ (Col. 1:13).

Limitations of Satan Today, people continue to concretize their fears. They want a scapegoat to deliver them from responsibility. Satan is a created, rebellious and tempting evil power active in the universe, but his powerful existence does not exclude a person from responsibility. Satan and the demonic forces cannot dominate or possess us except by our own consent. Believers will not be tempted beyond our power of resistance (1 Cor. 10:13). The power of Satan is limited. He acts within the limits set by divine sovereignty. The believer has God's armor—the biblical gospel, integrity, peace through Christ, faith in Christ, prayer—as spiritual security (Eph. 6:11–18).

The recent fascination with Satan and demons is in reaction to an earlier disbelief. Christians should beware of excessive gullibility as well as extreme oversimplification. Knowledge about Satan and evil angels alerts Christians to the danger and subtlety of satanic temptation. We should not become too absorbed in satanic forces. Satan and demonic forces are active, but they are limited. We must remember that the main thrust of Christianity is on the availability of God's power and love in Jesus Christ and the Spirit.

John P. Newport

DEVOTED, DEVOTED TO DESTRUCTION See Anathema: Ban.

DEVOUT Careful in fulfilling religious duties, pious; used only in Luke and Acts. Simeon is described as righteous and devout person who welcomed the coming of the Messiah and on whom the Holy Spirit rested (Luke 2:25). Cornelius is described as a devout person who reverenced God, gave alms, and prayed continuously (Acts. 10:2). Ananias is described as a devout person according to the standard of the Jewish law. He was well-spoken of by all (Acts 22:12).

DEW Dew is the moisture which forms into drops of water upon the earth during a cool night. Moist air drawing from the sea is largely responsible for the dewfall in western Palestine. Downward dew occurs in the summer when the soil is loose, thus providing good cooling conditions. Upward dew results from the condensation of water vapor from damp soil and is, therefore, more frequent in the winter season.

Dew is used in the Bible as a symbol of refreshment (Deut. 32:2; Ps. 133:3); a symbol of the loving power of God which revives and invigorates (Prov. 19:12); a symbol of the sudden onset of an enemy (2 Sam. 17:12); a symbol of brotherly love and harmony (Ps. 133:3); a symbol of God's revelation (Judg. 6:36–40); and a symbol of God's blessing (Gen. 27:28). Gary Bonner

DIADEM English translation of three Hebrew terms designating a head covering symbolizing authority and honor. Mitsnepheth is the turban of the high priest (Ex. 28:4,39) or king (Ezek. 21:26). The priest's was made of fine linen (Ex. 28:39) with a golden plate (KJV, NAS, NIV) or a flower rosette of pure gold (NRSV) on its front. The plate or rosette is apparently called a nezer (literally, "sign of dedication") in Exodus 29:6 ("crown" NAS, KJV; "diadem" NIV, NRSV). Compare Exodus 39:30.

The turban was worn by both religious and royal persons. Aaron the High Priest wore one (Ex. 28:37; 29:6; Lev. 16:4; Zech. 3:5) as did Queens Vashti (Esther 1:11) and Esther (Esther 2:17).

Tsaniph or tseniphah is the turban worn by a man (Job 29:14) or woman (Isa. 3:23) or by the king (Isa. 62:3) or high priest (Zech. 3:5). Tsephirah is a braided crown, garland, or wreath signifying God's glorious power and authority to come (Isa. 28:5).

The word "diadem" was used in a metaphorical sense of the prudent person (Prov. 14:18), of justice (Job 29:14), of God (Isa. 28:5), of God's presence (Ezek. 21:26), and of Jerusalem (Isa. 62:3).

Just before the New Testament era, diadem was applied by Greeks to the symbol of royalty worn by the Persians. Since all levels of people wore the turban, the king's diadem was distinguished by its color and perhaps by jewels worn on it. To the Greeks and Romans the diadem was the distinctive badge of royalty and was usually white. Later, a wreath was used as a crown for Greek kings.

The diadem should be distinguished from the wreath given for victory in athletic games (1 Cor. 9:25), for civil accomplishments, for military bravery, and for weddings.

In Revelation 12:3; 13:1; 19:12 the diadem conveys the idea of power and authority.

Glenn McCoy

DIAL See Sundial.

DIAMOND Precious stone used in jewelry and engraving. It is the hardest mineral known, formed of pure carbon crystals. Two Hebrew words stand behind English, "diamond." Yahelom is a stone on the high priest's breastplate (Ex. 28:18; NIV, "emerald"; NRSV, "moonstone") and among the jewels of the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13). Shamir is the stone used on the point of an engraving tool to cut into stone surfaces (Jer. 17:1; NIV, "flint"; others suggest "emery"). The term also appears in Ezekiel 3:9; Zechariah 7:12 as the hardest stone known.

Apparently Alexander the Great around 330 B.C. first discovered diamonds for the western world in India. This would indicate "diamonds" are not meant in the Old Testament references. Emery stones or adamant stones were widely used for engraving. Emery was a variety of corundum and was composed of aluminum oxide.

DIANA (Dī ăn′ ə) Roman goddess with similar characteristics to the Greek Artemis. KJV reads "Diana" in Acts, where Greek and most modern translations read "Artemis." See Artemis.

DIASPORA The scattering of the Jews from the land of Palestine into other parts of the world and the Jews thus scattered. The term "dispersion" is also often used to describe this process.

The diaspora took place over several centuries. While its exact beginnings are difficult to date, two major events greatly contributed to it. In 722 B. C. the Assyrians captured the Northern Kingdom (Israel). Following this victory, the Assyrians resettled large numbers of the Israelites in Assyria (2 Kings 17:6). In 586 B. C. the Babylonians captured the Southern Kingdom (Judah) and followed the same policy of resettlement. Many of the residents of Judah were transported to Babylon (2 Kings 25:8–12). While some of these persons later returned to Judah, many of them remained permanently in Babylon. Later, other wars fought by the Greeks and Romans in Palestine helped scatter more of the Jewish people.

The result of the diaspora was that by New Testament times as many Jews lived outside of Palestine as lived within the land. In almost every city which Paul visited on his missionary journeys, he found a Jewish synagogue (Acts 14:1; 17:1,10; 18:4). The diaspora thus helped pave the way for the spread of the gospel. See Assyria; Babylonia; Exile; Synagogue. Lynn Jones

DIBLAH (Dĭb′ lăh) or DIBLATH (Dĭb′ lăth) Place name with variant manuscript spellings and English transliterations in Ezekiel 6:14. The Hebrew term many mean, "cake of figs." Ezekiel used the term to describe the northern border of Israel as joined with the southern wilderness to describe all the territory of Israel which faced judgment—"from the desert to Diblah" (NIV). With slight manuscript support from the Latin Vulgate, many Bible students read "Riblah" supposing that in the earliest history of the text tradition a copyist made the simple mistake of changing a Hebrew "r" to a Hebrew "d," the two letters being easily confused. See Riblah.

DIBLAIM (Dĭb lā′ ĭm) Personal or place name meaning, "two fig cakes." Hosea 1:3 lists Diblaim as a parent of Gomer, Hosea's harlot wife. Some Bible students see Hosea's father-in-law so named; others, his mother-in-law. The latter case is combined with an understanding that she was also a harlot whose price was two fig cakes. Others would equate Diblaim with the place name Beth-diblathaim. See Beth-diblathaim. The most direct explanation seems to be that Diblaim is Gomer's father, of whom nothing more is known.

DIBON (Dī′ bŏn) or DIBON-GAD (Dī′ bŏn-găd) Place name possibly meaning, "pining away" or "fence of tubes." 1. Capital city of Moab captured by Moses (Num. 21:21–31). Gad and Reuben asked for it as their tribal territory (Num. 32:3). Gad took control and fortified Dibon (Num. 32:34). It thus became known as Dibon-gad and was one of Israel's camping spots east of the Jordan (Num. 33:45–46). Joshua reported that Moses gave Dibon to the tribe of Reuben (Josh.

13:9,17). In pronouncing judgment on Moab, Isaiah described the religious mourning at the worship place in Dibon (Isa. 15:2), showing that Moab had gained control of Dibon by about 730 B.C. The Moabite stone of King Mesha, discovered in Dibon, shows that Moab controlled Dibon about 850 B.C. About 700 B.C. Jeremiah again announced destruction for Moab and Dibon (Jer. 48:18–22).

Dibon stood on the northern hill across the valley from modern Dhiban. It is about 40 miles south of Amman, Jordan, and three miles north of the Arnon River. Occupation of the site apparently goes back to about 2500 B.C., but the main occupation period began after 1200 B.C., climaxing about 850 with Mesha. Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the city in 582 B.C.

Nabateans built a temple there during Jesus' childhood. It was apparently abandoned about A.D. 100.

2. In Nehemiah's day (about 445 B.C.) Jews lived in a Dibon in Judah. This may be the same as Dimonah. See Dimonah.

DIBRI (Dĭb′ rī) Personal name meaning, "talkative" or "gossip." Israelite woman who had a son with an Egyptian father. The son cursed God's name and was stoned to death (Lev. 24:10–23).

DIDACHE See Apostolic Fathers.

DIDRACHMA A Greek coin worth two drachmas or a Jewish half shekel, the amount of the Temple tax paid by every male Jew above age 19 (Matt. 17:24). After the Temple's destruction in A.D. 70, the Roman government apparently continued to collect the Temple tax, possibly to support a Roman temple. The first readers of Matthew's Gospel would have understood the Temple tax in the Roman context.

DIDYMUS (Dĭd′ ŷ mŭs) Personal name meaning, "twin." An alternative name for the apostle Thomas (John 11:16). It appears only in John's Gospel. See Thomas.

DIGNITIES KJV translation of Greek doxas (literally, "glorious ones") in 2 Peter 2:10. The people 2 Peter condemned willingly blasphemed the dignities, who are evil good angels or evil angels. Compare Jude 8.

DIKLAH (Dĭk′ läh) Personal name apparently meaning, "date palm." Grandson of Eber (Gen. 10:27). He was apparently the original ancestor of a tribe in Arabia which settled in an oasis where dates were grown, but nothing more is known of him.

DILEAN (Dĭ′ lė ăn) Place name meaning, "protrusion" or "ledge." Village in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:38). Tell en-Najileh southwest of tell el-Hesi has been suggested as a possible modern site.

DILL Spice cultivated in Israel (Isa. 28:25–27). KJV translates, "fitches"; NIV, "caraway." It was probably black cummin, Nigella satina. Jesus accused the scribes and Pharisees of tithing their dill but neglecting justice, mercy, and faith (Matt. 23:23). See Plants.

DIMNAH (Dĭm′ năh) Place name meaning, "manure." Town in tribal territory of Zebulun given to Levites (Josh. 21:35). First Chronicles 6:77 appears to refer to the same city as Rimmon. Compare Joshua 19:13. A scribe copying the text could easily confuse the two names. See Rimmon.

DIMON (Dī′ môn) Place name perhaps meaning, "blood." City in Moab on which Isaiah announced judgment (Isa. 15:9). Dead Sea Scrolls text and Latin Vulgate read "Dibon" here. This may be the original reading, but that would go against the normal type of copying mistakes scribes make in that it would substitute an unknown place for a famous place. It may be that transcription of a Moabite name into the Hebrew language or the development of the language resulted in a change of pronunciation, so that the two names represent one place. If Dimon is a separate town, it was probably located at modern khirbet Dimme, about seven miles north of Kerak. Jeremiah 48:2 calls a Moabite town, "Madmen." The Hebrew word, madmen, may involve a play on words referring to Dimon. See Dibon.

DIMONAH (Dī mō′ năh) Place name related to Hebrew word for blood. A town on southeast border of tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:22). Some have suggested its location at tell ed-Dheib near Aroer. It may be the same as Dibon mentioned in Nehemiah 11:25.

DINAH (Dī′ năh) Personal name meaning, "justice" or "artistically formed." The daughter of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 30:21). According to Genesis 34, she was sexually assaulted by a man named Shechem, who wished to marry her. Simeon and Levi, her brothers, took revenge by killing the male residents of the city of Shechem. See Jacob; Leah; Shechem; Patriarchs.

DINAITE (Dī′ nå īte) KJV transliterations of Aramaic word in Ezra 4:9. Modern translations translate the word as "judges."

DINHABAH (Dĭn′ hå băh) City name of unknown meaning. Residence of one of earliest kings of Edom in period prior to Saul in Israel (Gen. 36:32). Nothing else is known of the city.

DIONYSIUS (Dī ō nỹs′ ĭ ŭs) An Athenian aristocrat who was converted to Christianity through the preaching of Paul the apostle (Acts 17:34). He was a member of the Areopagus, an elite and influential group of officials. See Areopagus.

DIOTREPHES (Dī ŏt′ rē phēs) Personal name meaning, "nurtured by Jove." An individual whose self-serving ambition is cited unfavorably (3 John 9). The writer of the letter declared that Diotrephes rejected his (the writer's) authority. See 3 John.

DIPHATH (Dī′ phăth) NRSV, NAS reading of great grandson of Noah in 1 Chronicles 1:6. KJV, NIV follow other Hebrew manuscripts and versions and Genesis 10:3 in reading Riphath. See Riphath.

DIRECTIONS (GEOGRAPHICAL) How did the people of the Bible orient themselves within the "four corners of the earth" (Isa. 11:12)? The word "orient" gives the key, pointing us eastward. To orient oneself, the biblical person faced eastward toward the sunrise. Thus in front is east and behind is west, where the sun sets. On the left hand is north and to the right hand is south. In this Israel differed from the Egyptians, who oriented themselves to the south, the source of the Nile River.

Israel combined its sunrise-based system with a geographical viewpoint. Thus west could be referred to as the Sea with reference to the Mediterranean Sea. East could be referred to as the wilderness, and south could be called the Negeb, the dry south country (Gen 24:62). The north was designated as the mountains.

Israel lay in the central position between the nations, at the connecting point of three continents via land and water. Israel saw Jerusalem with its Mount Zion as the center of the world (Isa. 2:2; Ezek. 5:5). As expressed later in the Jewish midrash, "just as the navel is in the center of a person, so is the land of Israel in the middle of the world." Christians in the first centuries after Christ took over this type of geographical description and made Golgotha, considered the grave of Adam and of Christ, the middle point of the world.

East and West The most important words for east and west are rising and setting, with reference to the sun. Joined together, the two expressions signified the expanse of the world between its most widely-separated points (Ps. 50:1; Isa. 45:6). At times a Babylonian/Assyrian viewpoint describes Palestine as the land of the Amorites, that is the wild west, or the land beyond the river with reference to the Euphrates. From an Israelite perspective, however, the land beyond the river refers to the east, across the Jordan (Josh. 24:2–3). The great sea of the sun's setting (Josh. 1:4) or more simply the sea is the west. West can also be called the back side in contrast to the front side (Isa. 9:12), where inhabitants of Transjordan, that is the sons of the front side, the east people originated (Gen. 29:1; Judg. 6:3,33).

North and South "From Dan to Beersheba" (2 Sam. 3:10) describes the stretch of land the tribes of Israel claimed after their entrance into the land. The description ranges from north to south. For the Hebrew language north is the left and south is the right. Benjamin means literally, "son of the right" or "son of the south." Genesis 35:18 calls them the sons of good fortune since the right was seen as the lucky side.

Teman or the south is a place in Edom. The Negeb, a designation for the southern dry country south of the Judean hills, also stands for the south. Zaphon, the mountain on the northern Syrian Mediterranean Coast, stands for the north. For the Canaanites, Zaphon represented the dwelling place of Baal, while in the Old Testament it is an attribute of the throne of Yahweh (Isa. 14:13; Ps. 48:2–3).

Some prophets spoke of the enemy from the north, which was called the punishing tool of God on Israel. This was recognized in the appearance of the Babylonians from the north. Compare especially Jeremiah 4—6. Christian Wolf

DIRGE Modern translation term for lamentation. See Music; Psalms.

DISCERNING OF SPIRITS One of the gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12:10). It apparently refers to the God-given ability to tell whether a prophetic speech came from God's Spirit or from another source opposed to God.

DISCHARGE Modern translation term for bodily excretion which rendered one ceremonially unclean (Lev. 15:2–25: Num. 5:2; KJV, issue.) The nature of the discharge of males (Lev. 15:2–25) is unclear. Suggestions include hemorrhoids, spermatorrhea, that is, the involuntary release of sperm due to a weakening of the sexual organs, or a discharge related to an inflamation of the urinary tract. In the case of women, the discharge is the monthly period (15:19) or bleeding outside this period (15:25). A discharge rendered unclean the person and anything or anyone coming into contact with the source of uncleanness.

DISCIPLES; APOSTLES Followers of Jesus Christ, especially the commissioned twelve who followed Jesus during His earthly ministry.

Background of Apostle The English word "apostle" comes from the Greek term apostolos, which means a messenger, envoy, or ambassador. Related to the verb, "to send," it refers to one who is "sent" on behalf of another. The conceptual background of the New Testament term apostolos has been variously represented. Many scholars believe that the rabbinic office of the shaliach—attested by 150 A.D.—constitutes the proper background for understanding the New Testament term "apostle." The shaliach was established as a legal institution in rabbinic Judaism to insure that an appointed "messenger" was given due regard as the legal representative of his sender. The shaliach functioned with the full authority of the one who commissioned him. According to Jewish tradition, "A man's agent (shaliach) is like to himself" (Mishnah Berakoth 5:5; Rosh ha-Shanah 4:9; compare 1 Sam. 25:40–41; 2 Sam. 10:1–19). It is not certain that the legal rabbinic notion of a shaliach was established before the time of Christ. Moreover, even if it were in use by that time, the differences between the rabbinic of shaliach and that of the New Testament term apostolos are significant enough to urge caution in relating the two terms too closely. The shaliach, for example, had a function that was more legal than religious (to serve documents, collect money, carry information), was applied generally to human representation (whether individuals or groups), and lasted for only a limited period. The New Testament apostle, on the other hand, emerges as a divinely appointed, lifetime witness to the saving acts of God, specifically, the death and resurrection of Jesus.

The Old Testament notion of a shaliach also differs from the rabbinic conceptions of that term and appears to be of more significance for understanding the New Testament term "apostle." The "sending" and commissioning of the great prophetic figures Moses and Isaiah (Ex. 3:10; Isa. 6:8 where the Hebrew verb for sending, shalach, is translated by apostello in the Septuagint, the Greek Old Testament, as divine spokesmen surely influenced the New Testament word, "apostle." We may also note that the same "sending" terminology is applied to other noteworthy characters such as Elijah (2 Kings 2:2,4,6), Jeremiah (Jer. 1:7), and Ezekiel (Ezek. 2:3,4). As a reference to a divine spokesman, Old Testament ideas of a "sent one" are certainly in line with the New Testament term "apostle." Compare Jeremiah 7:25.

Apostle in the New Testament The term "apostle" in the New Testament is used primarily to designate that group of leaders within the early church(es) who were historical witnesses of the resurrected Lord and proclaimers of God's saving mercies enacted through the death and resurrection of Jesus. Jesus originally gave the title to His closest circle of friends, the twelve (Luke 6:13). He especially indicated their status as emissaries He had set apart to announce (as He had done) the good news of the kingdom (Matt. 10:1–23; Luke 8:1; 9:1–6). After the first Easter, the term was expanded by the early church to refer not only to the twelve, but to a wider circle of authoritative preachers and witnesses of the resurrected Lord (Acts 14:4,14; Rom. 16:7; 1 Cor. 4:9; 15:5–9; 2 Cor. 11:13; Gal. 1:19; 2:7–9).

The early church's expansion of the term was certainly justified given both the self-understanding of Jesus as One sent from God (Matt. 5:17; 10:34; Mark 2:17; 10:45; Luke 4:18; 9:48; John 5:19–47; 6:29–57; 8:14–42; compare Heb. 3:1) and His designation of His followers as those who, as His representatives, carried on His work (Matt. 28:16–20; Luke 24:44–49; John 20:21; Acts 1:6). Those facts coupled with the early church's actual sense of continuity with the person and mission of the historical Jesus made rather natural their extended application of the term "apostle" to more than the original twelve, though not, as we shall see, to all Christian witnesses. Thus, the choice, meaning, and ongoing use by the early church of the term "apostle" as a reference to a unique class of witnesses is in large measure derived from its actual use by Jesus.

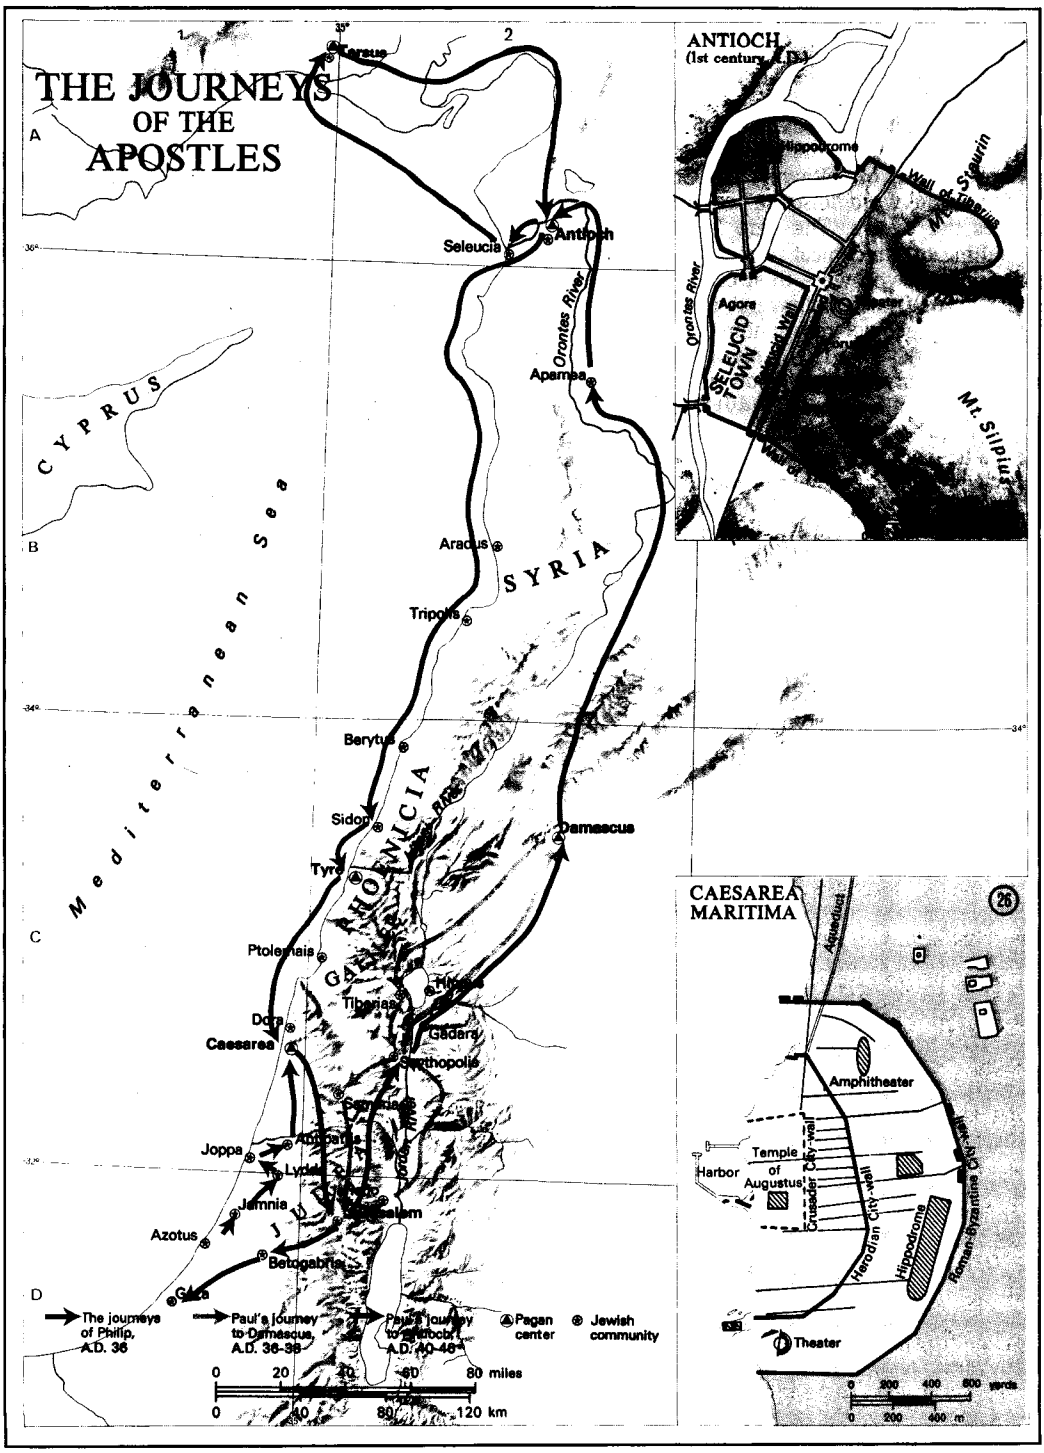
The term "apostle" did not, however, have limitless application in the New Testament period. It extended to gospel witnesses other than the twelve but not to all proclaimers of the gospel. It was never so broad in New Testament use as to be an ancient equivalent to the modern term "missionary." The term "apostle," most immediately brought to mind its central function: to preach the gospel; but all those who preached the gospel were not designated "apostles." There is, for example, a striking absence of the term with reference to Timothy (2 Cor. 1:1; Phil. 1:1; Col. 1:1; 1 Thess. 1:1; 2 Thess. 1:1), Sosthenes (1 Cor. 1:1), and Silas (1 Thess. 1:1, 2 Thess. 1:1), who were certainly not only Paul's fellow workers but also preachers of the gospel (compare 2 Cor. 1:19). Thus, others in the Pauline missionary party were called, for example, "brother," "fellow worker," or "bond servant" (Rom. 16:3; Phil. 2:25; Col. 4:7–14; 1 Thess. 3:1); but the term "apostle" had a more exclusive, and thus more restricted, meaning.

The decisive criterion for the term's application seems to have been the eyewitness status of some with respect to the resurrected Lord. Though the criteria employed for replacing Judas among the twelve (Acts 1:12–22) included being an eyewitness not only of the resurrected Jesus but also of the ministry of Jesus from the days of His baptism by John, there developed in the early church a slightly broader application of the term "apostle" which did not demand an eyewitness knowledge of Jesus' ministry. James the brother of Jesus (Matt. 13:55) was certainly no follower of his Brother during His ministry (Mark 3:21,31–35; John 7:3–5). He still became an "apostle" and leader of the Jerusalem church (Acts 15:1–21; Gal. 1:18,19) following his encounter with the resurrected Lord (1 Cor. 15:7). In a similar way, Paul's vision of, and calling by, the resurrected

Lord won for him the designation "apostle" (1 Cor. 9:1; 15:8–11; Gal. 1:11—2:10); though this distinction was apparently not conceded by all (2 Cor. 3:1; 12:11–13). We may presume that Barnabas (Acts 14:4,14), Apollos (1 Cor. 4:6–13), and also Andronicus and Junias (Rom. 16:7) were likewise witnesses of the resurrected Lord.

To be sure, Paul did speak of certain others as "apostles" who likely were not eyewitnesses of the risen Lord (2 Cor. 8:23 NAS and RSV notes; Phil. 2:25); but such passages are only apparent exceptions, for the helpers in question are called "apostles" (normally translated "representatives" or "messengers") of the churches, clearly suggesting a status different from that of the "apostle of Jesus Christ." Therefore, because it referred to a specific set of historical witnesses, the New Testament office of apostle, by definition, died with its first representatives. The New Testament certainly speaks of a succession of witnesses to the apostolic tradition (1 Tim. 6:20; 2 Tim. 1:14), so that the gospel they preached—the apostolic theology—has been handed on (the New Testament itself being the inspired, literary remains of that theology). No true personal or ecclesiastical succession of apostles continues in any New Testament sense of that term.

Background of Disciple The term "disciple" comes to us in English from a Latin root. Its basic meaning is "learner" or "pupil." The term is virtually absent from the Old Testament, though there are two related references (1 Chron. 25:8; Isa. 8:16).



In the Greek world the word "disciple" normally referred to an adherent of a particular teacher or religious/philosophical school. It was the task of the disciple to learn, study, and pass along the sayings and teachings of the master. In rabbinic Judaism the term "disciple" referred to one who was committed to the interpretations of Scripture and religious tradition given him by the master or rabbi. Through a process of learning which would include a set meeting time and such pedagogical methods as question and answer, instruction, repetition, and memorization, the disciple would become increasingly devoted to the master and the master's teachings. In time, the disciple would, likewise, pass on the traditions to others.

Jesus' Disciples In the New Testament 233 of the 261 instances of the word "disciple" occur in the Gospels, the other 28 being in Acts. Usually the word refers to disciples of Jesus, but there are also references to disciples of the Pharisees (Matt. 22:16; Mark 2:18), disciples of John the Baptist (Mark 2:18; Luke 11:1; John 1:35), and even disciples of Moses (John 9:28).

The Gospels often refer to Jesus as "Rabbi" (Matt. 26:25,49; Mark 9:5; 10:51; 11:21; John 1:38,49; 3:2,26; 6:25; 20:16 NIV). One can assume that Jesus used traditional rabbinic teaching techniques (question and answer, discussion, memorization) to instruct His disciples. In many respects Jesus differed from the rabbis. He called His disciples to "Follow me" (Luke 5:27). Disciples of the rabbis could select their teachers. Jesus oftentimes demanded extreme levels of personal renunciation (loss of family, property, etc.; Matt. 4:18–22; 10:24–42; Luke 5:27–28; 14:25–27; 18:28–30). He asked for lifelong allegiance (Luke 9:57–62) as the essential means of doing the will of God (Matt. 12:49–50; John 7:16–18). He taught more as a bearer of divine revelation than a link in the chain of Jewish tradition (Matt. 5:21–48; 7:28–29; Mark 4:10–11. In so doing Jesus announced the end of the age and the long-awaited reign of God (Matt. 4:17; Luke 4:14–21,42–44).

The Twelve As the messianic Proclaimer of the reign of God, Jesus gathered about Himself a special circle of twelve disciples, clearly a symbolic representation of the twelve tribes (Matt. 19:28). He was reestablishing Jewish social identity based upon discipleship to Jesus. The twelve represented a unique band, making the word "disciple" (as a reference to the twelve) an exact equivalent

Matthew 10:2–4	Mark 3:16–19	Luke 6:13–16	Acts 1:13–14
Simon Peter	Simon Peter	Simon Peter	Peter
Andrew	James, son of Zebedee	Andrew	James
James, son of Zebedee	John	James	John
John	Andrew	John	Andrew
Philip	Philip	Philip	Philip
Bartholomew	Bartholomew	Bartholomew	Thomas
Thomas	Matthew	Matthew	Bartholomew
Matthew the publican	Thomas	Thomas	Matthew
James, son of Alphaeus	James the son of Alphaeus	James, son of Alphaeus	James, son of Alphaeus
(Lebbeus) Thaddeus	Thaddaeus	Simon Zelotes	Simon Zealotes
Simon the Canaanite	Simon the Zealot	Judas, brother of James (compare John 14:22)	Judas brother of James
Judas Iscariot	Judas Iscariot	Judas Iscariot	(Judas Iscariot) Matthias (v. 26)

THE JOURNEYS OF THE APOSTLES
ANTIOCH
(1st century A.D.)
Hippodrome
Wall of Tiberius
Mt. Staurin
Orontes River
Agora
SELEUCID TOWN
Mt. Silpius
CAESAREA MARITIMA
Aqueduct
Amphitheater
Temple of Augustus
Harbor
Crusader City wall
Herodian City wall
Hippodrome
Roman-Byzantine theater
Theater
CYPRUS
Mediterranean Sea
SYRIA
PHOENICIA
GALILEE
SAMARIA JUDEA
Tarsus
Seleucia
Antioch
Apamea
Aradus
Tripolis
Berytus
Sidon
Tyre
Damascus
Ptolemais
Dora
Caesarea
Joppa
Lydda
Jamnia
Azotus
Gaza
Jerusalem
Tiberias
Gadara
Scythopolis
Samaria
Antipatris
Betogabris
The journeys of Philip, A.D. 36
Paul's journey to Damascus, A.D. 36-38
Paul's journey to Jerusalem, A.D. 40-44
Pagan center
Jewish community
0 20 40 60 80 miles
0 40 80 120 km
0 200 400 600 yards
0 200 400 m

© carta

to "apostle" in those contexts where the latter word was also restricted to the twelve. The four lists of the twelve in the New Testament (Matt. 10:1–4; Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:12–16; Acts 1:13,26) also imply from their contexts the synonymous use of the terms "disciples"/"apostles" when used to refer to the twelve.

A Larger Group of Followers The Gospels clearly show that the word "disciple" can refer to others besides the twelve. The verb "follow" became something of a technical term Jesus used to call His disciples, who were then called "followers " (Mark 4:10). These "followers" included a larger company of people from whom He selected the twelve (Mark 3:7–19; Luke 6:13–17). This larger group of disciples/followers included men and women (Luke 8:1–3; 23:49) from all walks of life. (Even the twelve included a variety: fishermen, a tax collector, a Zealot.) Jesus was no doubt especially popular among the socially outcast and religiously despised, but people of wealth and of theological training also followed (Luke 8:1–3; 19:1–10; John 3:1–3; 12:42; 19:38–39).

The twelve were sent out as representatives of Jesus, commissioned to preach the coming of the kingdom, to cast out demons, and to heal diseases (Matt. 10:1,5–15; Mark 6:7–13; Luke 9:1–6). Such tasks were not limited to the twelve (Luke 10:1–24). Apparently Jesus' disciples first included "a great multitude of disciples" (Luke 6:17). He formed certain smaller and more specifically defined groups within that "great multitude." These smaller groups would include a group of "seventy" (Luke 10:1,17), the "twelve" (Matt. 11:1; Mark 6:7; Luke 9:1), and perhaps an even smaller, inner group within the twelve, consisting especially of Peter, James, and John—whose names (with Andrew) always figure first in the lists of the twelve (Matt. 10:2; Mark 3:16–17; Luke 6:14; Acts 1:13), whose stories of calling are especially highlighted (Matt. 4:18–22; John 1:35–42 and the tradition that John is the "Other"/"Beloved Disciple" of the Gospel of John—13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:20), and who alone accompanied Jesus on certain significant occasions of healing and revelation (Matt. 17:1; Mark 13:3; Luke 8:51).

All Followers of Jesus The Book of Acts frequently uses the term "disciple" to refer generally to all those who believe in the risen Lord (6:1–2,7; 9:1,10,19,26,38; 11:26,29). In addition, the verb form "to disciple" as it appears in the final commissioning scene of Matthew's Gospel (28:19–20) also suggests a use in the early church of the term "disciple" as a more generalized name for all those who come to Jesus in faith, having heard and believed the gospel.

Conclusion We have seen that, as references to the twelve, the words "apostle" and "disciple" could be synonymous. However, just as the term "disciple" could mean other followers of Jesus than the twelve in the time of His ministry, so also after His resurrection the term "disciple" had a wider meaning as well, being clearly applied to all His followers. Whereas the term "apostle" retained a more specific meaning, being tied to certain historical eyewitnesses of the resurrected Lord, the word "disciple" tended to lose its narrower associations with the twelve, and/or those who followed the historical Jesus, or who saw the risen Lord, and became a virtual equivalent to "Christian" (Acts 11:26). In every case, however, the common bond of meaning for the various applications of the word "disciple" was allegiance to Jesus. Robert Sloan

DISCIPLINE In the Bible, discipline has a positive and essential place in the lives of God's people. God had prescribed a way of life for His people. They had to learn how to be obedient. The process by which God's people learned obedience was the "discipline of the Lord" (Deut. 11:2 NIV).

Discipline comes from a Latin word "disco" which means to learn or get to know, a direct kind of acquaintance with something or someone. Discipline refers to the process by which one learns a way of life. A disciple was like an apprentice who was learning a trade or craft from a master. Such learning required a relationship between the master who knew the way of life (discipline) and a learner (a disciple). Within this relationship, the master led a learner through a process (the discipline) until the learner could imitate or live like the master.

In the Old Testament, the covenant relationship between God and His people made Yahweh the Master. Through praise and correction, God led His people. The goal was to bring His people to a kind of maturity where obedience was the rule rather than the exception. Parents, judges, kings, prophets, and wisemen worked with God in teaching His people. Successful discipline resulted in a life pleasing to God. The earliest setting for discipline was the family (Deut. 6:20–25).

The prophets established "schools of the prophet." Elijah became a master to Elisha (1 Kings 19:19–21). Isaiah chose some Judeans who would learn his message through living with him (Isa. 8:16). This pattern was followed by Jewish rabbis. The rabbi would discipline his disciples (talmidim) through a procedure of praise and correction. This process enabled the disciples to learn the law. Correction was seldom physical in nature. Reproof or rebuke was the usual form of correction. The goal was an obedient servant of God, who knew and did what God wanted.

Jesus called twelve men to be His disciples. Through His call, He established a master-learner relation with them. As they lived and worked with Him, Jesus disciplined them in His understanding of what God wanted.

The Great Commission places the responsibility for discipling disciples in the hands of the church. The believers are to teach them "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. 28:20). "To observe" is much more than simple knowledge. Observance is to live in obedience to the commands of Jesus. Learning and doing what Jesus wants requires a process, a discipline. Becoming like Christ is the result of the discipline of the Lord Jesus Christ, exercised in and through His church. Hence, churches throughout their history have sought to teach their members the way of the Lord through "church discipline."

Apart from the Gospels, the concept of discipline appears most prominently in the ethical teachings of Paul and the Letter to the Hebrews. Paul admonished the Ephesians to bring their children up "in the discipline and instruction of the Lord" (Eph. 6:4*b* NAS). Such an education was to avoid the heavy-handed, physical brutality practiced by their pagan neighbors. Discipline was not to evoke anger from the children (Eph. 6:4*a*). The writer of Hebrews pictures God treating the faithful as sons (Heb. 12:7). As a loving Father, God disciplines the believing community. Such discipline is evidence of His love because the end result of such action is blessing (Heb. 12:10).

Discipline, biblically understood, results in blessing. God's people learn how to serve Him. Through praise and correction, their lives are shaped into a pattern of consistent obedience and love. Within "the discipline of the Lord," expressed in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, one can live the kind of life which is pleasing to God and of benefit to others. James Berryman DISEASES Physical and/or mental malfunctions that limit human functions and lessen the quality of life. Successful treatment of disease depends primarily on prompt, correct diagnosis and the use of effective therapeutic agents. Unfortunately, people living in biblical times had limited means to diagnose and treat illness. The best-educated people in biblical times had a meager understanding of human anatomy and physiology and even less knowledge about the nature of disease and its effect on the body. No one knew about bacteria and viruses. This fact hampered diagnosis. Illness was often attributed to sin or to a curse by an enemy. The main diagnostic tools were observation and superficial physical examination. The physician had few aids to use in his work.

Providers of Medical Care Ancient Near Eastern literature contains numerous references to physicians and medical practice. A Sumerian physician, Lulu, lived in Mesopotamia about 2700 B.C. A few decades later, a famous Egyptian named Imhotep established a reputation as a physician and priest. He also became noted as a great architect. He designed the Step Pyramid at Saqqara.

The Code of Hammurabi, from about 1750 B.C., contains several laws regulating the practice of medicine and surgery by physicians in the Old Babylonian Kingdom. Although the profession of medicine was in its infancy, the many practitioners slowly improved their skills.

The Egyptians made more rapid progress in medical knowledge and its application to patients than did the Babylonians. Their physicians tended to specialize. Each would limit his practice to one part of the body, such as the eye, the teeth, or the stomach. Egyptian doctors, like others, often used herbs in their medications. These were collected from many areas of the world and were often grown in gardens connected with the temples of Egypt. Egyptian physicians became respected throughout the ancient world. Their skill was even admired in a later period by the Greeks, who eventually became the foremost physicians.

The Old Testament has only a few references to physicians. These persons most likely had been trained in Egypt. Physicians were called upon to embalm the body of Jacob (Gen. 50:2). King Asa sought medical care from physicians for his diseased feet (2 Chron. 16:12). Some non-medical references are made to physicians (Jer. 8:22; Job 13:4). It is unlikely that many trained physicians lived among the ancient Hebrews.

The great Greek physician, Hippocrates, born about 460 B.C., is often referred to as the Father of Medicine. Hippocrates believed that disease had natural causes. He relied mainly on diet and various herbs to treat his patients. Around 300 B.C. the Greeks established an important medical school in Alexandria, Egypt, which flourished for several centuries and trained many physicians. The school was noted for its large library and laboratory facilities. Dissection of the human body was permitted, and some limited advances were made in the knowledge of anatomy.

By the time of Jesus, the city of Rome had become an important medical center. Many physicians practiced there. Originally they were in the slave class, but their profession gradually became esteemed. Julius Caesar granted Roman citizenship to Greek physicians practicing in Rome. The Romans made significant contributions in the area of public health, including the provision of a relatively pure water supply, an effective sewage disposal system, and the establishment of a food inspection program. The Romans also established a network of hospitals, initially founded to care for the needs of the army.

Outlying regions of the empire, such as Palestine, apparently had few well-trained doctors, although little information is available concerning professional medical care outside the large cities. The majority of people probably were born and died without ever being treated by a trained physician.

The New Testament mentions physicians only a few times. Jesus noted the purpose of a physician is to treat the ill (Matt. 9:12; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:31), and he referred to a common proverb, "Physician, heal thyself" (Luke 4:23). Mark and Luke related the story of a woman who had sought the help of physicians but had not been healed (Mark 5:25–34; Luke 8:43–48). Paul, in Colossians 4:14, remarks that his colleague, Luke, was a physician. Luke was a Gentile, but his hometown is unknown. The source of his medical training is also unknown, but it is possible that he went to medical school in Tarsus, Paul's hometown.

In many lands, priests were assigned medical duties. This was true among the ancient Hebrews, where priests were major providers of medical services. They were especially responsible for the diagnosis of diseases which might pose a threat to the community (Lev. 13). Priests in Israel apparently played little role in the actual treatment of ill persons.

During the time of the New Testament, the Roman god of healing, Aesculapius (known by the Greeks at an earlier time by the name of Asklepios), was popular. Many of his temples, staffed by his priests, were scattered throughout the Mediterranean world. Persons seeking healing thronged these temples. They often brought small replicas of the portion of the body that was afflicted by disease to these temples and left them with the priests. Other sites, for one reason or another, became renowned as places of healing. A good biblical example of this is the Pool of Bethesda (John 5:1–15). The pool of Siloam also is connected with Jesus' ministry of healing (John 9:7).

Most of the medicine practiced in ancient Palestine and in other outlying parts of the Roman Empire was probably unprofessional. This was certainly true in Old Testament times. Women, trained by apprenticeship and experience served as midwives. Some persons became adept at setting broken bones. Families were left to apply their own folk remedies in most cases of illness, perhaps in consultation with someone in the community who had become known for his or her success in the treatment of various ailments. Fortunately, the human body has considerable ability to heal itself. Despite obvious medical limitations, many of the patients recovered; and many of the remedies used were "successful."

Methods of Treating Disease The Bible contains little information about the treatment of disease, except through miraculous means. Much of the data concerning this subject has to be obtained from other ancient literature. Most of these records come from the ancient Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. Some are even older. For example, a clay tablet containing fifteen prescriptions from a Sumerian source has been found. This dates to about 2200 B.C.

An examination of these old records, often fragmentary and obscure, reveals that most medicines were derived from three sources. The majority came from various parts of many different plants. Early physicians also used substances obtained from animals, such as blood, urine, milk, hair, and ground-up shell and bone. In addition, certain mineral products were commonly used, including salt and bitumen. The use of these medicines was often accompanied by magical rites, incantations, and prayers. In the earliest periods, in particular, lines were not clearly drawn between religion, superstition, and science.

Modern doctors and Bible students have an almost impossible task as they try to diagnose accurately ailments mentioned in the Bible. Various infectious diseases undoubtedly accounted for a large number of the cases of serious illness and death. Nutritional deficiencies, birth defects, and injuries were common. The symptoms produced by these and other types of physical afflictions were treated by a variety of means.

Prevention is always the best form of treatment. Since the cause of most illness was unknown in the biblical period, relatively little could be done, however, to prevent disease. Ancient people did realize a contagious nature to some illnesses. In these cases, attempts were made to quarantine the afflicted person and prevent close contact with healthy individuals (Lev. 13).

The Hebrew word translated, "leprosy," in Leviticus 13 is a general term used to describe a number of different skin eruptions. Although true leprosy occurred in ancient times and often caused changes in the skin, many of the persons brought to the priests undoubtedly suffered from more common bacterial and fungal infections of the skin. The priests had the duty of determining, on the basis of repeated examination, which of these eruptions posed a threat to others. They had the authority to isolate persons with suspected dangerous diseases from the community.

Isaiah 38 relates the story of the very serious illness of King Hezekiah. The cause of his illness was a "boil" (v. 21). The Hebrew word translated, "boil," is translated, "sore boils," in Job 2:7. It is also the word used to describe the eruption occurring on men and beasts mentioned in Exodus 9:8–11 (compare Lev. 13:18–20; Deut. 28:27).

The illness of Hezekiah was treated by applying a poultice of figs (Isa. 38:21). Hezekiah almost certainly had some type of acute bacterial infection of the skin. Prior to the discovery of antibiotics, these dangerous infections could cause death. Although it is unlikely that the figs had any medicinal value, they were probably applied in the form of a hot compress. Heat is an effective treatment for infections of the skin.

The use of hot and cold compresses and baths was widely employed in the ancient world to treat illness, although the Bible itself has little to say about this.

Medical care in biblical times frequently employed the use of different kinds of salves and ointments. Olive oil was used widely, either alone or as an ingredient in ointments. The use of oil for the treatment of wounds is mentioned in Isaiah 1:6 and Luke 10:34. Oil also became a symbol of medicine, and its use was coupled with prayer for the ill (Mark 6:13; James 5:14).

Herbs and various products obtained from many different plants were among the most popular of ancient medicines. These were applied to the body as a poultice, or, in many cases, taken by mouth. Frankincense and myrrh—gum resins obtained from trees—were commonly used to treat a variety of diseases, although their main use was in perfumes and incense.

Wine was commonly thought to have medicinal value. One of its uses was to alleviate pain and discomfort. Wine, mixed with gall and myrrh, was offered to Jesus prior to His crucifixion, but He refused to drink it (Matt. 27:34; Mark 15:23). Wine also was used to sooth stomach and intestinal disorders (1 Tim. 5:23) and to treat a variety of other physical problems. Beer was also widely used as an ingredient in several medicines, especially by the Babylonians.

Mental illness and epilepsy were not uncommon in the ancient world, and the victims suffered greatly. Their sickness was usually associated with demonic powers. The afflicted person was often isolated, and even abused in some cases. King Saul became mentally unstable, and it is of interest that he gained some help from music (1 Sam. 16:23), a form of therapy that has proved to be beneficial in some cases of mental illness. Perhaps the most dramatic example of mental illness related in the Bible concerns the Babylonian king, Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4). No treatment is described, but the king's sanity was restored when he acknowledged the true God.

Sterility was a great burden in biblical times. A childless couple was pitied by all. When Leah suffered a temporary period of sterility, she sent her son, Reuben, to the field to obtain mandrakes. Her barren sister, Rachel, also asked for some of the mandrakes (Gen. 30: 9–24). The root of the mandrake was widely used in the ancient world to promote conception, although there is no reason to believe it was truly effective. It was also used as a narcotic.

Most babies were born without the benefit of a physician. Midwives were frequently sought to give help, especially in the case of difficult deliveries (Gen. 35:16–21; 1 Sam. 4:19–22). Babies were often born with mothers seated on a special stool (Ex. 1:16). Many mothers and babies died during childbirth, or in the first few days and weeks after delivery. The high death rate was due to infection, blood loss, poor nutrition, and the absence of good medical care before, during, and after childbirth. The custom of breast-feeding fortunately did help prevent some illness.

Several examples of sickness are mentioned in the Bible where no description of the treatment given is described. King Asa had a disease of the feet (2 Chron. 16:12). The nature of the treatment provided by his physicians is not given, but it was unsuccessful, and he died after two years. He may have been afflicted with gout, but this is uncertain.

King Jehoram died with a painful intestinal disorder (2 Chron. 21:18–20). King Uzziah died of leprosy (2 Chron. 26:19–23). King Herod Agrippa I died of some kind of parasitic disease (Acts 12:21–23). Several kings died of injuries received in battle. Ahaziah died following a fall from the upper portion of his home in Samaria (2 Kings 1:2–17). When illness or accident occurred in the ancient world, it mattered little whether one was a royal person or a commoner—in either case, only limited medical help was available.

Several illnesses accompanied by fever are mentioned in the Bible (Matt. 8:14–15; John 4:46–52; Acts 28:8). In the last cited reference, the ill man also had dysentery. Dysentery has several causes, but a very common and serious type in the biblical world was caused by amoeba, an intestinal parasite. Most fevers were due to infectious diseases, including malaria. There was no effective treatment for any of these infections, and death was all too often the outcome. Infections of the eye often resulted in blindness.

Small children were particularly vulnerable to illness, and the death rate could be high. The Bible tells of many children who suffered illness and sometimes death (2 Sam. 12:15–18; 1 Kings 17:17–24; 2 Kings 4:18–37; Luke 7:11–15; 8:40–56; John 4:46–52).

Since there was relatively little good medical care available and since illness so often led to disastrous results, it is not unexpected that sick persons in biblical times frequently asked for divine help. The Hebrew people were no exception to this practice. They often sought the help of God directly through prayer or through some person who was believed to possess special God-granted power to heal. A large number of the miracles described in the Bible are miracles of healing.

Surgery The only surgical procedure mentioned in the Bible is circumcision. This was done for religious rather than medical reasons and was not ordinarily performed by a doctor. In many ways, however, advances in surgery occurred more rapidly than progress in other branches of medicine in many countries. Descriptions of operations have been found in ancient literature, and some old surgical tools have been found in the ruins of ancient cities. Skeletons and mummies sometimes bear the traces of ancient surgical procedures.

Boils were lanced; broken bones were set; arms and legs were amputated. Holes were drilled into skulls to relieve pressure, and stones were removed from the urinary bladder. Teeth were also extracted. Ancient mummies have been found with gold fillings in their teeth. In addition, false teeth, using human or animal teeth, were being prepared by at least 500 B.C. Other kinds of daring operations were performed. Surgery called for boldness both on the part of the doctor and the patient.

Jesus and the Treatment of Disease One of the major ministries of Jesus was the healing of ill persons. They flocked to Him in large numbers, often after having tried all the remedies available in their day. They were desperate for help.

Jesus did not believe that all illness was the direct result of sin (John 9:1–3). He had the power, however, both to forgive sin and to heal (Matt. 9:1–8; compare Mark 2:1–12; Luke 5:17–26). Ordinarily, He did not use any kind of secondary means to treat the afflicted, although on several occasions He used spittle (Mark 7:32–35; 8:22–25; John 9:6–7). Some of the illnesses treated by Jesus probably had a psychosomatic basis; but many others undoubtedly had organic causes, including birth defects, accidental injuries, and infections.

Regardless of the cause of their distress, people found that Jesus could truly help. There can be no doubt that the ability of Jesus to perform miracles is seen most vividly in His healing ministry. The blind, the deaf, the lame, and sufferers of all varieties found in Him the help that was often not available through regular medical channels.

Kenneth Eakins

DISH A utensil for holding or serving food. The Old Testament uses three terms for dish: a large, shallow metal dish (Judg. 5:25; 6:38), a platter (2 Kgs 21:13), and a deep dish or bowl (Ex. 25:29; 37:16; Nm. 4:7; 7:13). Dishes were generally made of earthenware. Those made of wood were more highly prized (Lev. 15:12). Dishes made of precious metal were used by the rich and in the Temple. In the Ancient Near East those gathered at a meal usually ate out of one central dish (Matt. 26:23; Mark 14:20). To offer a person a choice piece of food from the common dish was a special sign of hospitality.

DISHAN (Dī′ shăn) Personal name meaning, "bison" or "antelope." This may be a variant spelling/pronunciation of Dishon. See Dishon.

A Horite chief and son of Seir (Gen. 36:21,28,30). Apparently, these Horites controlled the land of Edom before the Edomites entered the land. See Edom; Horites; Seir.

DISHON (Dī′ shŏn) See Dishan. Name of Horite chief of Edom (Gen. 36:21,25,26,30). The name may be the same as Dishan with the variant spelling used to identify the separate individuals.

DISHONOR See Shame and Honor.

DISPENSATION An administration, ministry, or stewardship for which a person has responsibility in God's administration of salvation. In certain interpretations of Scripture, a period of time during which people are tested in respect to their obedience to a specific revelation of God's will. "Dispensation" appears four times in the King James Version (1 Cor. 9:17; Eph. 1:10; 3:2; Col. 1:25). Each time it translates the Greek oikonomia, which normally refers to an office and the management functions related to the office. See Luke 16:2–4. In Ephesians 3:9 KJV translates the term, "fellowship," and in 1 Timothy 1:4, "edifying." Modern translations differ in translating oikonomia in the four basic passages.

The New American Standard translates oikonomia as "stewardship" in all but the Ephesians 1:10 passage which translates it "administration." New Revised Standard Version translates it "commission" except for Ephesians 1:10 for which the translation is "plan." The New International Version translates oikonomia differently in each passage: 1 Corinthians 9:17, "trust"; Ephesians 1:10, "put in effect"; Ephesians 3:2, "administration"; Colossians 1:25, "commission."

The New Testament thus uses oikonomia to refer either to Paul's ministry in his apostolic office or God's administration of the world and of His plan of salvation for it. Paul thus had a part in working out God's eternal plan of salvation.

Modern Technical Usage The word "dispensation" became prominent in biblical studies in a recent eschatological movement which dates back to 1830 in Scotland. This movement called "dispensationalism" can be traced back to the visions of Margaret McDonald, a member of the Plymouth Brethren Church. She believed that the return of Christ would be in two distinct stages. The believer would be caught up to the Lord in the air before the days of the antichrist. Then there would be a final revelation of Christ at the end of the age.

The Role of J.N. Darby This two-stage return of the Lord, unheard of before 1830, became the platform for a movement called "dispensationalism." Miss McDonald's pastor J. N. Darby (1800–1882) picked up on her idea and began to make use of it in his sermons. Darby was responsible for developing the two-stage coming of Christ into a fully developed eschatology or theology. He had been an Anglican clergyman until 1827 when he left the church to join the Plymouth Brethren.

Darby set forth the idea that God has set up seven time periods called dispensations for His work among human beings. The seventh or last dispensation will be the millennial reign of Christ (Rev. 20). In each dispensation, people are tested in reference to the obedience of God's will according to a specific revelation of that will.

The Role of C. I. Scofield Darby visited the United States on several occasions and won many advocates to his theology. However, C. I. Scofield popularized the dispensational system in his study Bible of 1909. He set forth seven dispensations in God's dealing with human beings.

1. Innocency (Gen. 1:28) This is the period of time in the Garden of Eden.

2. Conscience (Gen. 3:23) This is the awakening of human conscience and the expulsion from the garden.

3. Human Government (Gen. 8:20) This is the new covenant made with Noah, bringing about human government.

4. Promise (Gen. 12:1) This is the new covenant made with Abraham.

5. Law (Ex. 19:8) This is the period of acceptance of the Jewish law.

6. Grace (John 1:17) This dispensation begins with the death and resurrection of Jesus.

7. Kingdom (Eph. 1:10) This constitutes the final rule of Christ.

Program of Eschatology Beyond the seven dispensations, the Darby movement had a definite program of eschatology in five steps.

1. A two-stage coming of Christ—rapture and parousia.

2. Seven years of tribulation on earth for those not raptured. The last three and a half years will be the time of the antichrist. One hundred forty-four thousand Jews will accept Christ and become evangelists.

3. Christ will return with the church, conclude the battle of Armageddon, and rule for a thousand years.

4. Belief in an unconditional covenant with Israel. Thus God is working through Israel and the church. In the millennium, national Israel will be restored.

5. All Old Testament prophecy will be fulfilled literally.

Some of the more popular advocates of dispensationalism have been C. H. MacKintosh, W. E. Blackstone, H. A. Ironside, A. C. Gaebelein. More recently Hal Lindsey has made the system a best seller in The Late Great Planet Earth. The Book of Revelation has become a key book in the dispensational approach. Dispensationalists see the rapture taking place in Revelation 4:1 and the rest of the book (chs. 4—18) dealing with the seven years of tribulation. Thus the book has very little significance for Christians who will not be on earth during that time. See Millennium; Revelation.

James L. Blevins

DISPERSION See Diaspora.

DISSIPATION Deceptive desires leading to a lifestyle without discipline resulting in the dizzy hangovers of drunkenness. The Greek word apatē means, "deception" caused by riches (Matt. 13:22) and sin (Heb. 3:13). This is founded in the deceptive lusts of the unredeemed human heart (Eph. 4:22). People following such a way of life will suffer "the penalty for doing wrong" as they continue "reveling in their dissipation" (2 Pet. 2:13 NRSV). Asotia means to be hopelessly sick and refers to a life-style by which one destroys oneself. It is the prodigal son's "wild living" (Luke 15:13 NIV). It is the life of "dissipation" resulting from drinking wine (Eph. 5:18 NAS). Compare Titus 1:6; 1 Peter 4:3–4. The Bible speaks against a disorderly life, whereas the Greeks used the term to mean a wasteful or luxurious life. The Bible teaches believers to avoid both life-styles.

DISTAFF A part of the spindle used in spinning wool (Prov. 31:19). The obscure Hebrew word may refer to a small disk at the bottom of the spindle used to make the wheel spin faster.

DISTRICT Translates several different Hebrew and Greek words referring to a region, territory, or land. In the Old Testament district often connotes a part of a larger whole, either the provinces of an empire (1 Kings 20:14–19), regions within a country (2 Chron. 11:23), or sections of a city (Neh. 3:9–18). In the New Testament district often refers to the area around a city (Matt. 15:21; 16:13; Mark 8:10). At Acts 16:21 the reference is to an administrative area (perhaps Matt. 2:22 also). At times district means no more than the general area (Matt. 9:26,31).

DIVES (Dī′ vēs) The name sometimes given to the rich man of whom Jesus spoke in Luke 16:19–31. Dives actually is the Latin word for "rich" used in Luke 16:19 in the Vulgate translation. The idea that this was the name of the man emerged in medieval times. See Lazarus.

DIVIDED KINGDOM The two political states of Judah and Israel that came into existence shortly after the death of Solomon and survived together until the fall of Israel in 722 B.C. The Northern Kingdom, known as Israel, and the Southern Kingdom, known as Judah, were operated as separate countries from approximately 924 B.C. until 722 B.C. At times, the two countries were at war with one another. At other times, they cooperated in a friendly alliance. The Northern Kingdom came to an end in 722 B.C., when the Assyrians destroyed the capital city, Samaria. The Southern Kingdom fell to the Babylonians in 587 B.C.

James Newell

DIVINATION AND MAGIC An attempt to contact supernatural powers to determine answers to questions hidden to humans and usually involving the future. The practice was widely known in the ancient Middle East, especially among the Babylonians who developed it into a highly respected discipline. Ezekiel 21:21 records, "For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination: he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver."

The ancient Babylonians and Assyrians employed several methods. The Babylonians commonly used hepatoscopy, divination by the liver. The liver of a sacrifical animal by virtue of being considered the seat of life could be observed carefully by specially trained priests to determine the future activities of the gods.

Other methods included augury (foretelling the future by natural signs, especially the flight of birds), hydromancy (divination by mixing liquids; see Gen. 44:5), casting lots (Jonah 1:7–8), astrology (2 Kings 21:5), necromancy (1 Sam. 28:7–25), observing the Urim and Thummim (1 Sam. 28:6), and by consulting the liver (Ezek. 21:21).

The use of magic is seen often in the literature of the ancient Middle East, employed both by the gods and by human beings. As superhumans, the gods themselves were subject to the higher power of magic. In Enuma Elish, the Babylonian Creation Story, the god of wisdom, Ea, killed his father Apsu, god of the fresh river waters, after reciting a spell. In the same epic, Marduk, the leader of the pantheon, went into battle against Tiamat, goddess of the chaotic sea, with a talisman of red paste in his mouth. Likewise, Tiamat relied on the recitation of a charm to cast a spell. To demonstrate his supreme position in the godhead, Marduk through the magical power of his word caused a piece of cloth to vanish and to reappear. To assure her reappearance on the earth, Ishtar, the goddess of love and fertility, donned charms before descending to the underworld.

Similar beliefs in magic are evident from ancient Canaanite myths. The supreme Canaanite deity El acted to heal the ill king Keret by working magic. The goddess Anath through magical means restored the dead Baal to the earth. Paghat, the daughter of the legendary king Daniel, observed the movements of water and of the stars.

The Old Testament often attests to the practice of magic by the Hebrews themselves, reflecting how entrenched it was. Saul, the first Hebrew king, is said to have "put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land" (1 Sam. 28:3), but even he later sought out a necromancer (1 Sam. 28:7). Jehu responded to the question of Joram, king of Israel, as to whether he came in peace, "What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?" (2 Kings 9:22). Isaiah 2:6 accuses the house of Jacob of being "full of diviners from the east and of soothsayers like the Philistines" (NRSV). Isaiah 3:2–3 reflects that the society attaches the same importance to "the diviner," "the skillful magician," and "the expert in charms" as to "the mighty man, and the soldier, the judge, and the prophet" (RSV). Consequently, King Manasseh could make public use of such services (2 Chron. 33:6). The people acted in a similar fashion. Jeremiah 27:9 admonishes the people not to heed "your [false] prophets, . . . your diviners, . . . your dreamers, . . . your enchanters, or your sorcerers." (Compare 29:8).

Although varying kinds of divination and magic are reported to have been practiced widely in ancient Israel and among her neighbors (Deut. 18:9–14; 1 Sam. 6:2; Isa. 19:3; Ezek. 21:21; Dan. 2:2), Israel herself was clearly and firmly admonished to have no part in such activities. "You shall not practice augury or witchcraft" (Lev. 19:26 RSV). "Do not turn to mediums or wizards; do not seek them out to be defiled by them" (Lev. 19:3 RSV). Karen Joines

DIVINER'S OAK A place visable from the gate of Shechem (Judg. 9:35,37). Some translations understand the underlying Hebrew to refer to a plain (KJV, plain of Meonenim; NRSV, Elon-meonenim). Others translate as the diviner's oak (NAS), Soothsayers' terebinth (REB), soothsayers' tree (NIV) or "oak tree of the fortune tellers" (TEV). In this case the tree formed part of a sanctuary. The terebinth was designated the diviner's or soothsayer's tree since persons would go to the sanctuary seeking an oracle. The tree is perhaps that associated with Abraham (Gen. 12:6), Jacob (Gen. 35:4), and Joshua (Josh. 24:26). Compare Deuteronomy 11:30, Judges 9:6. It may well have played an important role in Canaanite worship at Shechem before Israel took over the ancient worship place. It was apparently located near the east gate of the city.

DIVINE FREEDOM Absolute freedom is one of the chief attributes of God. God is self determining. He acts according to His own choosing to accomplish His plans and purposes. In so doing He pleases the requirements of His nature (Ps. 115:3; Ps. 135:6; Isa. 42:21; Eph. 1:11). No person or entity puts God under necessity. He is in all ways and at all times free to choose and act as He pleases. The only necessity that God has upon Him derives from His nature (Job 34:13; Ps. 135:5; Isa. 45:7; Jer. 18:6; Lam. 3:37–38; Matt. 20:15; Rom. 11:33–36). God does not at any time act contrary to His nature (Heb. 1:12). God's freedom does not mean, therefore, that He authors those things which are imperfect or calculated to bring harm to the person or purposes of His creation (Jas. 1:17).

God's nature is the source of His freedom. Several aspects of His nature clarify God being able to act freely at all times. One of these is God's supremacy. God is a unique Being. He is not one of many gods but reigns as supreme over all (1 Chron. 29:11; Neh. 9:6; Ps. 24:1; Isa. 44:6).

He is self-existent and independent within Himself (Ex. 3:14; Deut. 32:40; Jer. 10:10; John 5:26). As absolutely supreme, He is free to act as He wishes.

God's power gives Him absolute freedom (1 Chron. 29:12). This enables Him to accomplish anything consistent with His nature (Luke 1:37). God is also Spirit (John 4:24). He is thus totally free of the space or time limitations of this universe (Ps. 139:7–12). God is free to be anyplace at anytime with anybody.

Since God is free, He always wills and acts voluntarily and without compulsory outside influence. This does not mean that there is no influence to which God responds. The influence exerted upon God comes from God's nature. Some of the characteristics of God's nature that influence His actions toward His creation are grace (2 Cor. 8:9), justice (Zeph. 3:5), love (John 3:16), and mercy (Mic. 7:18; Titus 3:5).

The implications of divine freedom for mankind are vast. God's creation was established with the qualities of God inherent in it. History involves free interaction between people and God. A fatalistic view of creation or of mankind in particular is not in keeping with the way God exercises His freedom. God's freedom gives humans confidence that God cares for His creatures and works for their good (Rom. 8:28). God is interested in people and takes an active, positive role in the affairs of His creation. Bob Sheffield

DIVINE RETRIBUTION Process of God's meting out merited requital—punishment for evil or reward for good. Retribution involves the act of paying someone back according to their behavior. Thus, many (incorrectly) think that "divine retribution" means only an expression of God's wrath. "Divine retribution," however, involves both reward and punishment, blessing and curse. The notion of divine retribution involves questions concerning time (when will one be judged?) and method (on what basis will judgment occur?). These questions, in turn, call to mind other issues such as suffering, evil, and God's justness.

Though the exact phrase "divine retribution" does not occur in the Old Testament, the idea is quite prevalent: people will be repaid in this life for what they do—blessing for good, punishment for evil. Both sides of divine retribution can be detected in the history of ancient Israel. Abraham's obedient response to God's call resulted in his being blessed and becoming the mediator of blessing to all the world (Gen. 12:1–3). Israel, if they heard and obeyed God's word, would be blessed (Deut. 6:1–9). However, banishment from Eden, the flood, and multiplication of languages followed on the heels of sin. Pharaoh and all Egypt incurred God's judgment for not yielding to God's will. Even Israel, because of her failure to place her trust in God, experienced the judgment of Exile. The Psalms affirm that the same process occurs on an individual level that occurs on the corporate. The book of Job, however, issues a proviso to such a mechanical view of God and suffering in this life. It is dangerous to interpret all suffering as punishment. Humans cannot determine the causes of suffering and should never overlook God's patience, forgiveness, and mercy.

The New Testament also affirms that humans are rewarded and punished by God in this life (Gal. 6:7–8). In fact, the wage earner is a profound image for the life of Jesus' disciple. Blessing and reward come to those who live life in accordance with the reality of the Kingdom of God (Matt. 5—7; Mark 10:41; Luke 10:7; John 9:36). The remarkable development in the New Testament is that reward/punishment in this life is a foretaste of that which will be experienced at the end of time. As in the Old Testament, the standard for reward and punishment is still God's character, His faithfulness. The standard has been revealed to all creation in the events surrounding the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Gospel is the standard by which God will reward and punish (Rom. 2:16). Furthermore, since it is a revelation both of God's faithfulness and of His wrath, Gospel preaching enacts the process of end-time judgment. Divine retribution, both as reward and punishment, is found in the gospel preaching and is a foretaste of the final reckoning that is to occur on that great and glorious day. See Eschatology; Eternal Life; Everlasting Punishment; Future Hope. Carey C. Newman DIVINITY OF CHRIST See Christ, Christology; Incarnation; Jesus; Pleroma.

DIVORCE The legal ending of a marriage. From early time provision was made for divorce among the Israelites (Deut. 24:1–4). Persumably prior to this decree, a wife could be put out of the home at the pleasure of the husband. Now he was required to write out "a bill of divorce" and give it to his wife as proof that he was divorcing her. This gave some dignity and protection to the divorced woman.

Divorce was common enough among the Jews in New Testament times to cause division among the rabbis as to the valid basis for divorce. The passage in Deuteronomy did not give clear guidelines. "Because he hath found some uncleanness in her" (Deut. 24:1) left room for interpretation. One group of rabbis insisted that divorce could be granted only if the wife was immoral. Another group argued that divorce could be secured by the husband if the wife displeased him in any way. Among the Jews, only the husband had the right to secure a divorce. The wife might leave her husband, but she could not divorce him. The situation was different in the Roman world. There the wife had equal rights with the husband in the matter of divorce.

The teachings of Jesus are the clearest to be found in the Bible concerning divorce. He refused to be drawn into the rabbinical controversy over the possible valid basis for divorce. When such an attempt was made (Matt. 19:3–9; Mark 10:2–12), Jesus referred His questioners to the Old Testament law. They cited the permission granted in Deuteronomy 24. Jesus pointed out that this was not God's original intent. Divorce was permitted only because of "the hardness of your heart" (Mark 10:5). Then Jesus went back to God's original intent which was permanent monogamy, one man and one woman together for life. He supported this by referring back to Genesis 1:27 and 2:24. God intended marriage to be permanent.

On another occasion as Jesus taught about divorce (Matt. 5:31–32), He referred to the passage in Deuteronomy 24 as common knowledge among His hearers. He did not give His approval to the practice of divorce. Rather, He showed the consequences of divorce in the lives of people. If a man divorced his wife, he made her an adulteress unless the basis of the divorce was her own immorality. This statement has been understood in various ways. One idea is that Jesus was giving here a justifiable ground for divorce. If the wife violated her marriage vows, the husband had the right to divorce her. However, another suggestion is that Jesus was not making a law. Instead, he was saying that the husband would make the wife become an adulteress unless she had already become one by her own action. A divorced woman in Palestine of that day had few choices. To survive she could remarry or become a prostitute. In either case she was guilty of adultery. In a few instances, the divorced wife might have been able to return to live with her parents. Whichever interpretation of Jesus' statement is considered best, He indicated that God's intention was permanent marriage.

On only one occasion did Paul deal with the matter of divorce in his writings. The church at Corinth asked him questions concerning marriage. In his response to their questions, he had to give advice in matters relating to the marriage of a Christian with another Christian and that of a Christian with a nonbeliever (1 Cor. 7:10–13). With regard to the marriage of two Christians, he cited the teaching of Jesus. The Christian man should not divorce his wife, and the Christian woman should not separate from her husband. In the matter of a Christian married to a nonbeliever, Paul did not have a specific teaching from Jesus. But he gave his advice under the guidance of God's Spirit (1 Cor. 7:40). He stated that a Christian was not to take the initiative to divorce the nonbeliever. So long as the nonbeliever was willing to live in a proper marriage relationship, the Christian was to maintain that relationship.

Clayton Harrop

DIZAHAB (Dĭz' ə hăb) Place name meaning, "place of gold." Place east of Jordan River used in Deuteronomy 1:1 to locate where Moses spoke to Israel. Nothing else is known of it. It may be located in Moab in modern ed-Dhebe.

DOCTOR See Physician.

DOCTRINE The basic body of Christian teaching or understanding (2 Tim. 3:16). Christian doctrine is composed of teachings which are to be handed on through instruction and proclamation. The teacher attempts to offer a clear and connected interpretation, for doctrine must be a coherent explication of what the Christian believes.

The Heart of Doctrine The basic question for human beings is: "can we know the transcendent," that is, God? Religious doctrine deals with the ultimate and most comprehensive questions.

We speak as persons addressed; God has spoken to us (Heb. 1:1). With all the limitations of human language, we still attempt to reflect upon what we have heard through God's Word of revelation in history, Scripture, and the Christ.

The Flexibility of Doctrine God and His Word remain consistent and unchanging. Human teaching about God has to be stated anew for each generation in the language that generation speaks. Without abandoning crucial affirmations, the church must address itself to the issues of each new day. It goes without saying that most Christian doctrines reflect something of the culture in which they were brought to speech and Scripture.

The Shaping of Christian Doctrine Three factors guide a believer in the formulation of Christian doctrines: Scripture, experience, and intellect.

1. Scripture The Bible witnesses to the revelatory activity of God. The Bible functions both as witness to and bearer of revelation. Its authority lies in the events to which it points and the One to whom it testifies.

Scripture may, however, become bound to tradition. The church may become a servant to and rely only on inherited interpretations of Scripture. The church may adopt definitions having no other basis than earlier church statements and teachings. The result is traditionalism. This leads a church to become deaf to the Word of God and to fail to penetrate to the core of scriptural teaching. Doctrine may be perceived, then, as static and unchanging, or worse, irrelevant and meaningless.

Priority of apostolic tradition collected as Scripture over church tradition was the decision of the church. This was also the basic thrust and tenet of the Reformation. It is still a basic presupposition of Protestant Christianity: Scripture over tradition. Each generation must listen to the Word rather than simply depending on the church.

2. Experience A person has doctrine before being able to read and interpret Scripture. This comes through experience as an individual and as a part of a church community. Experience is not the most important factor in shaping or guaranteeing the truth of doctrine. Several aspects of one's experience do contribute to the shaping of Christian doctrine. These include personal, church, and cultural experience.

Personal experience includes one's moral struggle, intellectual quest, and mystical awareness of God, whether dramatic/emotional or quiet/contemplative. These are all integral to doctrinal understanding, providing evidence and understanding. Personal experience ensures doctrine is related to life and valid. It can also make doctrine idiosyncratic, untested by and unrelated to the experiences of history, of others, and to the truths of Scripture.

A church with its own tradition introduces us to faith. Christian nurture shapes our attitudes toward the Bible, our social consciousness, and our attitudes toward the goodness of life. The doctrine of our denomination takes root in us. Such shaping gives our doctrine roots and strength. It may also make us provincial, out of touch with the rest of God's people and ignorant of the world and its questions.

Culture shapes the way we think, the values we hold, the choices we make, and the way we relate to others. Peer pressure from our culture and our socioeconomic status affect our doctrine. Culture enriches and gives depth to life. It may so shape our expectations that it blinds us to truth.

There must be scope for the free activity of Christian feeling rooted in experience. When feeling, however, comes to be considered an immediate fountain of knowledge, the intellect is deprived of its rights, and the Bible sinks below its proper level. We must always guard against absolutizing our experience (or that of anyone else) as normative.

3. Intellect The church has framed the canon, creeds, and confessions as a means of giving coherent interpretation to the witness of the earliest church. Of course, the key question is: did these distort or accurately develop the tradition of the New Testament?

There must be as much scope for the free activity of the intellect in framing Christian doctrine as for Christian feeling. The exaggeration of the intellectual factor can also pervert doctrine. Mystery is difficult to explain logically. We must learn from the church's history and thus use confessions, creeds, and abstracts, to formulate Christian teaching for the present generation. At the same time we should retain a suspicion of any claim to have arrived at a comprehensive, exhaustive, definitive, or infallible statement of doctrine. The human intellect tests experience of personal life, church, and culture by the truth of Scripture to describe the church's beliefs in current language. Such descriptions remain open to correction and revising.

In the final analysis, every heresy is the inappropriate use of any one of the factors used to form doctrine. Scripture must be interpreted in language appropriate to present experience and in categories shaped by human intellect. Thus, the church must continue to clarify the focus of its teaching. Molly Marshall-Green DODAI (Dō′ daî) Personal name related to Hebrew word meaning, "favorite" or "beloved." 1 Chronicles 27:1–15 describes David's army as being divided into twelve monthly divisions with an officer over each. Dodai was in charge for the second month. See Ahohite. Second Samuel 23:9 and 1 Chronicles 11:12 refer to Dodo the Ahohite, which is probably a variant spelling referring to the same person as Dodai. See Dodo.

DODANIM (Dō′ dă nĭm) Great grandson of Noah and son of Javan in the table of nations (Gen. 10:4). In 1 Chronicles 1:7 the name is Rodanim. Early copyists made the easy confusion between Hebrew "r" and "d." If Rodanim is correct, the reference may be to inhabitants of Rhodes. If Dodanim is original, the identification of the people is not simple. It could refer to a land of Danuna known from the Amarna letters. This was apparently north of Tyre. A people with a similar name were among the Sea People who fought with Rameses III. Homer says Danaeans besieged Troy. Sargon II describes Yadanana who lived on Cyprus. Despite specific information, they were apparently from the Greek area and may have been Greek-speaking.

DODAVAH (Dŏd′ ȧ văh) or DODAVAHU (Dō dă vȧ′ hū) Personal name meaning, "beloved of Yahweh." Father of Eliezer the prophet (2 Chron. 20:37).

DODO (Dō′ dō) Personal name meaning, "his beloved." 1. Grandfather of Tola, the judge (Judg. 10:1). 2. Father of Eleazar, one of David's three mighty men (2 Sam. 23:9). In 1 Chronicles 27:4 he is called Dodai. 3. Citizen of Bethlehem and father of Elhanan, one of David's warriors (2 Sam. 23:24).

DOE Modern translation where KJV has "hind" or "roe." The Hebrew has two words. Ya'aalah refers to the female ibex or mountain goat (Prov. 5:19), the mate of the ibex, Capra nubiana or Capra sinaitica (Ps. 104:18). 'Ayalah is the female fallow deer (Gen. 49:21; 2 Sam. 22:34; Job 39:1; Pss. 18:33; 29:9; Jer. 14:5; Hab. 3:19; Song of Sol. 2:7; 3:5). The male, Cervus captrolus, is the hart or deer of Deuteronomy 12:15,22; 14:5; 15:22; 1 Kings 4:23; Isaiah 35:6; Psalm 42:2; Song of Solomon 2:9,17; Lamentations 1:6. See Animals.

DOEG (Dō′ ĕg) Personal name meaning, "full of fear." An Edomite in the service of King Saul (1 Sam. 21:7). He was present at Nob at the time David arrived there during the course of his flight from Saul. Doeg subsequently reported to Saul that the priest Ahimelech had given assistance to David. After confronting Ahimelech, Saul ordered his guards to slay the priests of Nob. When the guards refused to obey, Saul told Doeg to kill the priests. In a grisly show of obedience, Doeg took the lives of eighty-five people. The title of Psalm 52 refers to this incident. See Saul.

DOG See Animals. Dogs served as watchdogs for herds (Isa. 56:10; Job 30:1) and for the dwelling (Ex. 11:7). Some were trained for hunting (Ps. 22:17, 21), but some ran stray in the streets (Ex. 22:30; 1 Kings 14:11). Metaphorically, "dog" was a term of contempt (1 Sam. 17:43) and self-abasement (1 Sam. 24:15). "Dog" may refer to a male cult prostitute (Deut. 23:19), though the exact meaning of "dog's wages" is disputed. The prophet insulted the priests by saying their sacrifices were no better than breaking a dog's neck and sacrificing the dog (Isa. 66:3). This means sacrifices is not needed in the new age and that the priests had neglected their first task, that of determining God's will.

Jesus used dogs to teach people to be discriminating in whom they chose to teach (Matt. 7:6). Paul insulted his Judaizing opponents, calling them dogs (Phil. 3:2; compare 2 Pet. 2:22; Rev. 22:15).

DOMINION Either political authority (Num. 24:19; Dan. 7:6,12,14) or the realm in which such authority is exercised (1 Kings 4:24; 9:19). Dominion may have a positive connotation as when humankind is given dominion over creation (Gen. 1:26,28; Ps. 8:6) or a negative connotation that approximates the idea of domination (Gen. 37:8; Judg. 14:4; Neh. 9:28). Though humans exercise dominion in the political sphere and over creation, ultimate dominion belongs to God (Ps. 72:8; Dan. 4:3,34). Dominion is used figuratively for the authority of the law (Rom. 7:1) and for the domination of sin (Ps. 119:113; Rom. 6:14) and death (Rom. 6:9). The dominion of Col. 1:16 are angelic powers which are subordinated to Christ.

DOMITIAN See Rome, Roman Empire.

DONKEY See Ass.

DOOR An opening for entering or leaving a house, tent, or room. At least five Hebrew words and one Greek term are translated "door" in the English Bible. The two most common Hebrew words have distinct usages, though they may be interchanged. Petha refers to the doorway, to the actual opening itself. Deleth alludes to the door proper, usually made of wood sheeted with metal, though a slab of stone could be used. The Greek term thura is used for both of these Hebrew words.

"Door" is often used in a figurative sense in the Bible. In the Old Testament, "sin lieth at the door" (Gen. 4:7) means that sin is very near. The valley of Achor, a place of trouble (Josh. 7:26), is later promised as "a door of hope" (Hos. 2:15). It will become a reason for God's people to trust Him again.

In the New Testament Jesus calls Himself "the door" (John 10:7,9). Faith in Him is the only way to enter the kingdom of God. God gave to the Gentiles "the door of faith," or an opportunity to know Him as Lord (Acts 14:27). Paul constantly sought a "door of service," an occasion for ministry in the name of Christ (1 Cor. 16:9). Jesus stands at the door and knocks (Rev. 3:20). He calls all people to Himself, but will not enter without permission. Bradley S. Butler DOORKEEPER A person guarding access to an important or restricted place. Temple doorkeeper was an important office in biblical times. The doorkeepers collected money from the people (2 Kings 22:4). Some Levites were designated doorkeepers (or "gatekeepers") for the ark (1 Chron. 15:23–24). The Persian kings used eunuchs for doorkeepers (Esther 2:21). Women also served this function (John 18:16–17; Acts 12:13).

The Hebrew word underlying the translation "doorkeeper" in Ps. 84:10 (KJV, RSV, NIV) appears only once in the Old Testament. The root idea is threshold. Thus some translations (NASV, REB, TEV) render the word by "at the threshold" or some similar expression. The reference is those waiting outside the Temple either to beg alms or to seek admission. The thought of the verse is that it is better to be standing outside the Temple than to be inside the tents of the wicked.

DOPHKAH (Dŏph′ kăh) Place name perhaps meaning, "(animal) drive." Station in the wilderness between wilderness of Sin and Rephidim where Israel camped (Num. 33:12). It has been located at modern Serabit el-Chadim, but this is uncertain.

DOR (Dôr) Place name meaning, "dwelling." Canaanite city located at modern khirbet el-Burj, twelve miles south of Mount Carmel. Its early history shows connections with Egypt under Rameses II and with the Sea Peoples, who are closely related to the Philistines. Apparently the Tjeker, one of the Sea Peoples, destroyed the city shortly after 1300 B.C. Its king joined the northern coalition against Joshua (Josh. 11:2; 12:23) but met defeat. The Hebrew expression here, "Naphoth Dor," or heights of Dor is unexpected, since Dor lies on the seacoast. The reference must be to Mount Carmel. Dor lay in the territory assigned Asher, but the tribe of Manasseh claimed it (Josh. 17:11). The Canaanites maintained political control (Josh. 17:12; Judg. 1:27). Dor served as a district headquarters under Solomon, governed by Solomon's son-in-law Ben-abinadab (1 Kings 4:11).

View of the ancient harbor at Dor in Israel.

DORCAS (Dôr' cȧs) Personal name meaning, "gazelle." A Christian woman of Joppa who was known for her charitable works (Acts 9:36). She was also called Tabitha, an Aramaic name. When she became sick and died, friends sent for the apostle Peter. He came to Joppa. Through him Dorcas was restored to life. This was the first such miracle performed through any of the apostles, and it resulted in many new believers.

DOT REB translation of Greek term "little horn" (Matt. 5:18; compare Luke 16:17), rendered in various ways in English translations (e.g. tittle, KJV; stroke of a letter or pen, NASV, NRSV, NIV). The dot is generally held to be a mark distinguishing similarly shaped letters, either the raised dot distinguishing sin from shin or else the hooks used to distinguish others (e.g., beth and kaph). Others suggest the letter waw is intended. Iota, translated "jot" or "smallest letter" is the smallest Greek vowel and is generally taken to represent the smallest Hebrew letter, yodh. Jesus thus contended that is was easier for heaven and earth to pass away than for the smallest detail of the law to be set aside. Matthew's qualification "until all is accomplished" is perhaps a reference to the saving work of Christ as the fulfillment of all Scripture.

DOTHAN (Dō' thăn) Place name of uncertain meaning, also known as Dothaim. A city of the tribe of Manasseh, west of the Jordan, northeast of Samaria, southeast of Megiddo, and now identified as Tell Dotha. It was located in an area less productive for agriculture and was traversed by roads used for commerce. Dothan is the area to which Joseph traveled to find his brothers (Gen. 37:17). From there, Joseph was sold to a caravan of Ishmaelites and carried to Egypt, following an ancient trade route over the Plain of Dothan to Egypt. Dothan was the place Elisha stayed (2 Kings 6:13). The king of Syria sought to capture Elisha by laying siege to the city. Elisha then led the Syrian army away from Dothan to Samaria and defeat. Dothan is 5 miles southwest of Genin, 11 miles northeast of Samaria, and 13 miles north of Shechem. David M. Fleming Excavations of the ruins at Dothan in Israel.

DOUBLE-MINDED An expression James used (1:7–8; 4:8) to express the opposite of purity of heart. Ps. 12:1–2 forms the Old Testament background of the term. There the faithful are contrasted with liars who speak from a double heart, that is, from divided loyalties. Jesus' teaching on the impossibility of serving two masters (Matt. 6:24; Luke 16:13) forms the New Testament background. This teaching is expressed in James 4:4 as the impossibility of maintaining friendship with the world and friendship with God.

James urged those who pray to do so without doubting. This doubting is not so much intellectual doubt (Does God exist?), but doubt about commitment (Am I committed to this God to whom I pray? Will I make use of this wisdom for which I pray?). Such doubt is described as double-mindedness. The double-minded are unstable in all their ways, that is, they vacillate between following God's way and their own way (1:7–8). The solution to double-mindedness is to draw near to God who can purify the heart (4:8).

DOUBLE-TONGUED One of the qualifications of deacons is that they not be double-tongued, that is, inconsistent in speech (1 Tim. 3:8). James 3:9–10 warns of the inconsistency of those who bless God while cursing those made in the image of God. 1 John 3:18 encourages consistency of loving words with loving actions. Inconsistency of speech might be taken as thinking one thing and saying another or as saying one thing to one, another thing to another.

DOUGH Flour or meal mixed with liquid, usually water but sometimes olive oil as well, which is baked as bread. Dough was normally leavened, given time to rise, and then kneaded before baking (Jer. 7:18; Hos. 7:4). The necessity for haste at the Hebrews' departure from Egypt caused them to carry their dough before it was leavened (Ex. 12:34). See Bread.

DOVE See Birds.

DOVE ON FAR OFF TEREBINTHS Part of the superscription of Psalm 56 (NRSV; compare REB, NIV) probably a reference to the secular tune to which the psalm was to be sung. "Hind of the Dawn" (Ps. 22 REB) and "Lilies" (Ps. 45 NIV) are possibly other hymn tunes. An alternative explanation relates to the association of doves with the ritual of atonement. In this case the title indicates an atonement psalm. See Terebinths. KJV transliterates the Hebrew, Jonath-elem-rechokim.

DOVE'S DUNG An item sold as food for an incredible price (2 Kings 6:25) during the seige of Samaria. Some interpret dove's dung as bird droppings. 2 Kings 18:27 indicates that in time of seige persons could be reduced to eating their own excrement and drinking their own urine. Others have suggested that the dung was to be used as fuel or as a salt substitute. Others have suggested that Dove's Dung refers to a bulbous plant similar to a wild onion which was edible after boiling or roasting. Still others emend the text to read some type of bean pods (REB, NIV).

DOWRY A marriage present that ensured the new wife's financial security against the possibility her husband might forsake her or might die. The husband-to-be or his father paid the dowry or bride price to the bride's father to be kept for the bride. The bride could protest if her father used the dowry for other purposes (Gen. 31:15). In addition the bride received wedding gifts from her father and husband (Gen. 24:53; 34:12; Judg. 1:15). The amount of the dowry depended on customs of the specific tribes or clans and upon the economic and social class of the parties involved (1 Sam. 18:23–27, a passage also showing that service could be substituted for money; compare Gen. 29:15–30; Josh. 15:16–17). Besides guaranteeing future financial security, the dowry also compensated the bride and her family for the economic loss represented to her family by her leaving to join her husband's family. Deuteronomy 22:29 apparently puts the price at fifty shekels of silver, a much larger price than paid for a slave—thirty shekels (Ex. 21:32; compare Lev. 27:1–8). Payment of the dowry made the marriage a legal fact even before the official wedding ceremonies or consumation of the marriage. Ancient Near Eastern texts from different cultures show similar practices. Often the bride receives the dowry directly or indirectly through her father. See Marriage; Family.

DOXOLOGY A brief formula for expressing praise or glory to God. Doxologies generally contain two elements, an ascription of praise to God (usually referred to in third person) and an expression of His infinite nature. The term "doxology" ("word of glory") itself is not found in the Bible, but both the Old and New Testaments contain many doxological passages using this formula.

Biblical doxologies are found in many contexts, but one of their chief functions seems to have been as a conclusion to songs (Ex. 15:18), psalms (Ps. 146:10), and prayers (Matt. 6:13), where they possibly served as group responses to solo singing or recitation. Doxologies conclude four of the five divisions of the Psalter (Ps. 41:13; 72:19; 89:52; 106:48), with Psalm 150 serving as a sort of doxology to the entire collection. Doxologies also occur at or near the end of several New Testament books (Rom. 16:27; Phil. 4:20; 1 Tim. 6:16; 2 Tim. 4:18; Heb. 13:21; 1 Pet. 5:11; 2 Pet. 3:18; Jude 25) and figure prominently in the Revelation (1:6; 4:8; 5:13; 7:12).

David W. Music

DRACHMA (Drăch' mă) See Coins.

DRAGNET A large fishing net equipped with a weighted bottom edge for touching ("dragging") the river or lake bottom and a top with wooden floats allowing the net to be spread across the water (Isa. 19:8). Such nets were normally let down from a boat and then drawn to shore by a crew positioned on the beach. In the case of a large catch the net was hauled to shore by boat (John 21:6–8).

Habakkuk 1:14–17 pictures the residents of Judah as helpless fish before the Babylonian army, pictured as the fishermen. Here the fishing nets and hooks symbolize the Babylonian military machinery. The text is not evidence that ancient fishermen sacrificed to their nets or that the Babylonian sacrificed to their weapons of war. Rather the text points to the worship of military might.

Jesus compared the kingdom of God to a dragnet, containing both good and bad fish until the time of separation and judgment (Matt. 13:47).

DRAGON The term used by the KJV to translate two closely related Hebrew words (tannim and tannin). At times the terms appear to be interchangeable. Context indicates that the first term refers to a mammal inhabiting the desert (Isa. 13:22; 35:7; 43:20; Lam. 4:3). Most modern speech translations equate the animal with the jackal, though perhaps the wolf (REB) is intended. The second term has four possible uses: (1) "great sea monster" (KJV, "great whales") in the sense of a large sea creature (Gen. 1:21; Ps. 148:7), possibly a whale; this sense of tannin as created being may serve as a correction of sense 4; (2) a snake (Ex. 7:9–10,12; Deut. 32:33; Ps. 91:13); (3) a crocodile (Jer. 51:34; Ezek. 29:3; 32:3); here the beast is used as a symbol of Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon or the Egyptian Pharaoh; (4) a mythological sea monster symbolic of the forces of chaos and evil in opposition to God's creative and redemptive work (Ps. 74:12–14; Job 7:12; 26:12–13; Isa. 27:1; 51:9–10). Leviathan and Rehab are used as parallel terms.

In the New Testament Revelation develops sense 4, describing the dragon as a great, red monster with seven heads and ten horns. This dragon is clearly identified with Satan (the Devil) and is termed the deceiver and the accuser of the saints. As in the Old Testament texts, the dragon is put under guard (Rev. 20:1–3; see (Job 7:12) and later released for final destruction (Rev. 20:7–10; see Isa. 27:1).

DRAGON WELL A Jerusalem landmark in the time of Nehemiah which can no longer be identified with certainty (Neh. 2:13). The water source is described as a well (KJV, NAS, NIV), a spring (REB, NRSV), or a fountain (TEV). The NIV takes the underlying Hebrew word as Jackal rather than dragon. The Dragon Well has been identified with the Gihon spring, the main water source during the time of Hezekiah, the Siloam pool which was fed by the Gihon, the En-rogel spring located 210 meters south of the confluence of the Hinnom and Kidron valleys, or with a spring along the east side of the Tyropoeon Valley which has since dried up.

DRAWERS OF WATER Water carriers. See Occupations, Professions in the Bible.

DREAMS In the Ancient Near Eastern world dreams were real. They were not an extension of one's conscious or unconscious mind. Dreams were the world of the divine and the demonic. Dreams had meaning, too. They often revealed the future. They could show the dreamer the right decision to make. People even went to temples or holy places to sleep in order to have a dream which would show them the decision to make.

The dreams of common people were important to them, but the dreams of kings and of holy men or women were important on a national or international scale. One of the results was that many of the nations surrounding Israel had religious figures skilled in the interpretation of dreams. These figures could be consulted at the highest level of government for important decisions. In such nations as Egypt and Assyria, these interpreters even developed "dream books" by which they could give interpretations according to the symbols of a dream.

Dreams were important in the Old Testament, too. Israel was forbidden to use many of the divining practices of her neighbors, but over a dozen times God revealed something through a dream. When we recognize that night visions and dreams were not strictly distinguished, we can find many more times in the Old and New Testaments that God used this method to communicate. In fact, prophecy and the dreaming of dreams were to be tested in the same way according to Deuteronomy 13.

What Dreams Were Interpreted? Not every dream was thought to be from God. Not every dream was a significant. Some could be wishful thinking (Ps. 126:1; Isa. 29:7,8). In times of need and especially when a person sought a word from God, dreams could be significant.

Not every dream needed to be interpreted. To note this we can distinguish three types of dreams. A simple "message dream" apparently did not need interpretation. For instance, Joseph, in Matthew 1 and 2, understood the dreams concerning Mary and Herod even though no mention is made of interpretation. A second type, the "simple symbolic dream," used symbols, but the symbolism was clear enough that the dreamer and others could understand it. The Old Testament Joseph had this kind of dream in Genesis 37. Complex symbolic dreams, though, needed the interpretive skill of someone with experience or an unusual ability in interpretation. The dreams of Nebuchadnezzar described in Daniel 2 and 4 are good examples of this kind of dream. Even Daniel himself had dreams in which the symbolism was so complex that he had to seek divine interpretation (Dan. 8).

Were Dreams Ever Wrong or Wrongly Interpreted? Dreams were neither foolproof nor infallible. Both Jeremiah and Zechariah spoke against relying on dreams to express the revelation of God. Dreams could come without being God's word (Jer. 23:28). Jeremiah lumped dreamers together with soothsayers, sorcerers, and false prophets (Jer. 27:9). He cautioned exiles in Babylon not to listen to dreamers and false prophets who told them that the Exile would not be long (Jer. 29:8). Zechariah pointed people toward the Lord, apparently because they were relying on dreamers and others to give them the truth (Zech. 10:1–2). Thus, while dreams were often used by God to reveal His will, there is a warning, too, not to rely on this method to know the will of God.

See Inspiration; Oracles; Prophets; Revelation.

Albert Bean

DRESS See Clothing.

DRESSER OF SYCAMORE TREES One of the occupations of the prophet Amos (Amos 7:14). The tending involved slitting the top of each piece of fruit to hasten its ripening and to produce a sweeter, more edible fruit. Fruit infested with insects might be discarded at this time as well. The significance of Amos' trade is twofold: (1) He was a prophet solely because of the call of God, not because of training in a prophetic school; and (2) contrary to the accusation of the priest Amaziah (7:12), Amos did not earn his living by prophesying.

DRIED GRAPES Raisins. Grapes were dried in clusters for a food that was easily stored and transported (1 Sam. 25:18; 30:12; 2 Sam. 16:1; 1 Chron. 12:40). Nazarites were prohibited from eating dried grapes (Num. 6:3).

DRINK Beverages. Water was the primary drink. It was drawn from cisterns (2 Sam. 17:18; Jer. 38:6) or from wells (Gen. 29:2; John 4:11). In times of draught it was necessary to buy water (Deut. 2:28; Lam. 5:4). Milk was also a common beverage though it was considered a food rather than a drink. Several types of wine were consumed. "New" or "sweet" wine was likely wine from the first drippings of juice before the grapes had been trodden. Some interpreters argue that new wine was unfermented. Some texts in which it is mentioned, however, allude to its intoxicating effects (Hos. 4:11; Acts 2:13). In a hot climate before the invention of refrigeration, it was not possible to keep wine many months past the harvest before fermentation began. Sour wine, perhaps vinegar mixed with oil, was a common drink of day laborers (Ruth 2:14; Luke 23:36). Wine was considered a luxury item which could both gladden the heart (Ps. 104:15) or cloud the mind (Isa. 28:7; Hos. 4:11). See Milk; Water; Wine.

DRINK OFFERING See Sacrifice and Offering.

DROMEDARY A species of camel. See Animals.

DROPSY Edema, a disease with fluid retention and swelling. Dropsy is a symptom of disease of the heart, liver, kidneys, or brain. The condition involves the accumulation of water fluid in the body cavities or in the limbs. Thus the TEV speaks of a man whose arms and legs were swollen (Luke 14:2).

DROSS Either the refuse from impure metal which is separated by a process of smelting (Prov. 25:4; 26:23) or else the base (impure) metal before the smelting process. Litharge (lead monoxide) from which silver was to be extracted is perhaps meant at Isaiah 1:22,25. The same sense is required if the reading dross is preferred over the emendation glaze (REB, NRSV, NIV) at Proverbs 26:23. Dross is a symbol of impurity. The wicked are pictured as dross (Prov. 25:4; Ps. 119:119) that renders the whole of society impure. Both Isaiah 1:22,25 and Ezekiel 22:18–19 speak of silver turned to dross as a picture of Israel's lost righteousness.

DRUNKENNESS A state of dizziness, headaches, and vomiting resulting from drinking alcoholic beverages. From Genesis 9:21 on, the Bible describes the shameful state of the drunken person and the shameful actions resulting from the state. Too much partying led to drunkenness and failure of communication between husband and wife (1 Sam. 25:36). It left a person defenseless against enemies (1 Kings 16:9–10; 20:16). They sang loud songs ridiculing other people (Ps. 69:12) and could not walk straight (Job 12:25; Ps. 107:27). They vomited (Jer. 25:27) and were in a daze, unaware of events around them (Joel 1:5). They ruined their future (Prov. 23:20–21). They could not protect themselves against unnecessary injuries such as avoiding a thornbush (Prov. 26:9). Drunken leaders ruin a nation (Isa. 28:1–9). Being drunk became a figure of speech for having to drink the disaster God was sending (Isa. 49:26; 51:21–22; Jer. 25:27–29; Ezek. 39:17–20.

The Jewish leaders tried to discredit Jesus, saying He was a drunkard (Matt. 11:19). Jesus warned that the cares of life may lead to anxiety and drunkenness (Luke 21:34). Paul repeatedly warned against the dangers of drunkenness (Rom. 13:13; 1 Cor. 5:11; Gal. 5:21; 1 Thess. 5:7). 1 Timothy 3:3 and Titus 1:7 warn church leaders they must not be drunkards. Drunkenness is a pagan custom, not a Christian one (1 Pet. 4:3). Drunkards are among these who will not "inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 6:10).

DRUSILLA (Drū sĭl' lă) Wife of Felix, the Roman governor of Judea who heard Paul's case. Drusilla was a Jew and listened to Paul's arguments with her husband (Acts 24:24). She was the youngest daughter of Herod Agrippa I. She had been engaged to Antiochus Ephiphanes of Commagene, but he refused to become a Jew. King Aziz of Emesa did agree to be circumcized, and they were married. Atomos, a magician from Cyprus, helped Felix win Drusilla away from her husband. Apparently, her son Agrippa died when Mount Vesuvius erupted in A.D. 79. She may have also died in this disaster. See Herod.

DUKE KJV translation of Hebrew word for "chief." See Chief.

DULCIMER Apparently a Greek word used to name a musical instrument in Daniel 3:10. Many think the bagpipes are meant here (NAS). NRSV translates, "drum."

DUMAH (Dū' măh) Place name meaning, "silence" or "permanent settlement." 1. A son of Ishmael and the original ancestor of the Arabian tribe (Gen. 25:14) centered in the oases of Du-mah, probably modern el-Gof, also called Dumat el-Gandel, meaning Dumah of the Rocks. Rulers in Dumah apparently led coalitions supported by Damascus and later by Babylon against Assyria between 740 and 700 B.C. Thus Assyria punished Dumah in 689 when they also defeated Babylon. Sennacherib conquered Dumah. The remainder of Assyrian history is filled with troubled relationships with Arabian vassals, particularly those around Dumah. Isaiah proclaimed an oracle against Dumah (Isa. 21:11). 2. A city of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:52). It is probably modern khirbet ed-Dome about nine miles southwest of Hebron. It may be mentioned in the Amarna letters.

DUMBNESS See Muteness.

DUNG The excrement of man or beast. "Dung" translates several different Hebrew and Greek words. An ash heap or rubbish heap was used to convey the haunt of the destitute (1 Sam. 2:8; Luke 14:35).

The first mention of dung in the Bible was in connection with the sacrificial rites. The sacred law required that the dung, along with other parts of the animal, should not be burned on the altar but should be burned outside the camp (Ex. 29:14; Lev. 4:11–12).

A major disgrace for a Jew was to have one's carcass treated as dung (2 Kings 9:37). Dung has been used as fertilizer for centuries. It is recorded in Luke 13:8 and Isaiah 25:10 that the people of Palestine used it for that purpose. Dry dung was and is often used as fuel (Ezek. 4:12–15). Animal dung was used as fuel when it was mixed with straw and dried to a suitable state for heating the simple bread ovens.

The dung gate, one of the eleven gates of Jerusalem during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 3:14), was located in the southwest corner of the wall and was used for the disposal of rubbish, garbage, and dung. It led out to the Valley of Hinnom.

Paul used a powerful metaphor with the word dung when he made a comparison between his personal knowledge of Christ and those who did not know Christ (Phil. 3:8). The word is used also in Scripture to indicate symbolically the degradation to which a person or a nation might fall (2 Kings 9:37; Jeremiah 8:2). Gary Bonner

DUNG GATE A Jerusalem landmark in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 2:13; 3:13–14; 12:31). Located at the southwest corner of the wall, the gate was used for the disposal of garbage which was dumped into the Hinnom Valley below. Referred to as the Refuse Gate by KJV, NAS and Rubbish Gate by TEV.

DUNGEON See Prison, Prisoners.

DURA (Dū′ rà) Accadian place name meaning, "circuit wall." Plain in Babylonia where King Nebuchadnezzar set up a mammoth golden image of a god or of himself (Dan. 3:1). The common place name does not lend itself to an exact location.

DUST Loose earth, used both literally and figuratively. Dust is used in figures of speech for a multitude (Gen. 13:16; Num. 23:10; Isa. 29:5) or for an abundance (of flesh, Ps. 78:27; of silver, Job 27:16; of blood, Zeph. 1:17). Dust is used as a metaphor for death, the grave, or Sheol (Job 10:9; Eccl. 12:7; Dan. 12:2). Dust on a balance is a picture of something insignificant (Isa. 40:15). Human lowliness in relationship with God as well as humanity's close relationship with the rest of creation is expressed in the making of persons from dust (Gen. 2:7; Job 4:19; Ps. 104:29). To return to dust is to die (Gen. 3:19; Job 10:9; 17:16). To place dust on one's head was a sign of mourning (Lam. 2:10; Ezek. 27:30; Rev. 18:19). This act was sometimes accomplished by rolling in dust (Mic. 1:10). Dust on the head may have been a sign of defeat and shame as well as mourning in Joshua 7:6. To throw dust was a sign of contempt (2 Sam. 16:13), though to throw it in the air may have been a demand for justice (Acts 22:23).

The Dung Gate in old Jerusalem.

To defile a crown in dust (Ps. 89:39) was to dishonor the office of king. To eat or lick dust (Gen. 3:14; Ps. 72:9; Isa. 65:25; Lam. 3:29; Mic. 7:17) was to suffer humiliation and powerlessness before an enemy. To lay one's horn (glory) in the dust was to experience humiliation and loss of standing (Job 16:15). To lay a soul in the dust (Ps. 7:5; 22:15) is to kill. To make something dust (Deut. 9:21; 2 Kings 13:7) is to completely destroy it. To raise from the dust (1 Sam. 2:8) is to rescue or exalt. To sit in the dust (Isa. 47:1) is to suffer humiliation.

For Jews to shake dust off their feet was a sign that Gentile territory was unclean. In the New Testament this action indicates that those who have rejected the gospel have made themselves as Gentiles and must face the judgment of God (Matt. 10:14–15; Acts 13:51). Chris Church

DWARF A person of abnormally small size, especially one with abnormal body proportions. The Hebrew word translated as dwarf by most English translations of Lev. 21:20 is used in Gen. 41:3,23 to describe the emaciated cows and shrivelled heads of grain. Some thus understand the word to mean lean or emaciated. The early Greek and Latin versions understood the word to mean a type of eye disorder (compare REB). Though denied the privilege of making the offering to God, priests with such a blemish were permitted to eat the holy food with other priests and Levites.

DWELLING A place where someone lives, in biblical times either a tent (Gen. 25:27), house (2 Sam. 7:2), or the territory in which one lives (Gen. 36:40,43). The Old Testament repeatedly promises that those who keep the covenant will dwell in safety (Lev. 25:18–19; Zech. 2:10–11).

References to the dwelling place of God highlight both the imminence and transcendence of God. References which focus on God's drawing near to speak, listen, and fellowship include the following references to God's dwelling place: in the bush at Sinai (Deut. 33:16); in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:8; 29:45–46; 2 Sam. 7:2); at Shiloh (Ps. 78:60); in the land of Israel (Num. 35:34); in the Temple (Pss. 26:8; 43:3; 135:2; Matt. 23:21); on Mount Zion (Pss. 9:11; 20:3; 132:14) ; and in Jerusalem (Pss. 76:2; 135:21; Ezra 7:15). The Old Testament idea of God's dwelling with His people (Ezek. 37:27) is developed in a variety of ways in the New Testament.

The Word become flesh dwelt among humankind (John 1:14). The church is the dwelling place of God (Eph. 2:22). Christ dwells in believers' hearts (Eph. 3:17). Believers are the temple of God (1 Cor. 3:16) and their bodies the temple of His Holy Spirit (6:19). The New Testament closes with an echo of Ezekiel's hope of God's dwelling with His people in Revelation 21:3.

References focusing on the transcendency of God include those in which God is said to dwell in clouds and thick darkness (1 Kings 8:12), in a high and holy place (Isa. 57:15), or in light (1 Tim, 6:16). Though heaven is spoken of as God's dwelling (1 Kgs 8:30,39,43,49) even heaven cannot contain God (1 Kings 8:27).

Dwelling is used figuratively for the body. To dwell in a house of clay (Job 4:19) is to possess a mortal body. The heavenly dwelling of 2 Corinthians 5:2 is the resurrection body. Chris Church DYEING The process of coloring materials. The dying process is not mentioned in Scripture, though dyed material is. Blue, purple, and scarlet thread was used in the making of the tabernacle curtains (Ex. 25:4; 36:8,35,37). Dyed material was an important part of the spoils of war (Judg. 5:30). The work of the guild of linen workers (1 Chron. 4:21) may have included dyeing thread. Solomon requested the King Hiram of Tyre send him someone skilled in dyeing purple, blue, and crimson for the Temple curtains (2 Chron. 2:7; 3:14). Job 38:14 as emended by some modern translators (NRSV) speaks of the dawn's "dyeing" the sky. In the New Testament, Lydia was a seller of purple dyed goods (Acts 16:14).

The dyeing process involved soaking the material to be dyed in vats of dye then drying it. This process was repeated until the dyed stuff was the desired color. The process was concluded by soaking in a fixing agent which rendered the cloth colorfast. Blue dye was made from the rind of pomegranates, crimson from grubs or worms that fed on oaks, and purple from the shell of the murex shellfish. Since this shellfish was found only in the vicinity of Acre on the Phoenician coast and since only a small amount of a dye material could be extracted from each shell, this dye was especially valued. Archeological evidence suggests that in Palestine of Biblical times thread was dyed rather than whole cloth.

DYSENTERY A disease characterized by diarrhea, painful bowel spasms, and ulceration and infection of the bowels resulting in blood and pus in the excreta. Modern speech translations of Acts 28:8 render the "bloody flux" of the KJV as dysentery. Many interpreters also understand the chronic bowel disease which afflicted King Jehoram (2 Chron. 21:15,18–19) as dysentery. The non-technical language of the account does not permit a precise diagnosis excluding other diseases of the bowels such as chronic diarrhea or colitis. There is some disagreement on the nature of the symptoms given in 2 Chronicles 21:15. The REB together with many commentators understand the phrase usually rendered his bowels came out as a reference to a prolapsed bowel, that is, his bowel slipped from its normal position. Others understand the text to refer to excretion of the bowel itself.

View of the Eastern or Golden Gate of the temple area

EAGLE See Birds.

EAR The physical organ of hearing. In the Old Testament the ears are involved in several rites. The right ear of priests were consecrated with blood (Ex. 29:20; Lev. 8:24). The right ears of lepers were also sprinkled with blood and oil as part of their cleansing (Lev. 14:14,17). If a slave volunteered to serve a master for life, the slave's ear was pierced with an awl into the master's doorpost (Ex. 21:6; Deut. 15:17).

The ears appear in a variety of expressions in both Testaments. To speak to someone's ears was to speak to them or speak in their hearing (Gen. 44:18; 50:4). To incline the ear was to listen (2 Kings 19:16) or even to obey (Jer. 11:8). To give ear was to pay careful attention (Job 32:11). To turn the ears toward wisdom (Prov. 2:2) was to desire understanding. Dull, heavy, closed, or uncircumcised ears expressed inattentiveness and disobedience (Isa. 6:10; Jer. 6:10; Acts 7:51). To stop the ears was to refuse to listen (Acts 7:57). Open ears were obedient, hearing ears. Open ears are a gift of God (Ps. 40:6) who sometimes uses adversity to open deaf ears (Job 36:15). To awake the ears was to make someone teachable (Isa. 50:4). To uncover or open the ear was to reveal something (Isa. 50:5). To let words sink into ones ears was to thoroughly understand (Luke 9:44). Sometimes the functions of the mind were attributed to the ear. Thus the ear exercised judgment (Job 12:11) and understanding (13:1).

EARLY RAIN See Rain.

EARNEST Sincerity and intensity of purpose or a deposit paid to secure a purchase. 1. Earnest does not relate directly to any Hebrew or Greek word, but represents the attempts of translators to relay the sense of several grammatical constructions and words. For instance, KJV uses "earnest" or "earnestly" 24 different times as the translation of 13 different words, phrases, or constructions in the original languages. Some expressions have important theological significance. The fallen creation waits earnestly for redemption (Rom. 8:19). The Corinthians' earnest desire for Paul's welfare comforted him (2 Cor. 7:7). Believers should give earnest heed to Christian teachings (Heb. 2:1). In the agony of the cross Christ prayed earnestly (Luke 22:44). Paul urged the Corinthians to "covet earnestly the best (spiritual) gifts" (1 Cor. 12:31). Christians earnestly wait the new resurrection body (2 Cor. 5:2). Meanwhile, they earnestly contend for the faith (Jude 3).

2. The Greek arrabon is a first payment on a purchase which obligates the purchaser to make further payments. A payment made in advance, it secures legal claim to an article or validates a sales contract before the full price is paid. The concept is a Semitic one with the word being adopted into Greek. The related Hebrew term appears in Genesis 38:17, where Judah promised to send Tamar a young goat and she asked for a pledge to hold until she received the promised animal. God has given believers the Holy Spirit in their hearts as an earnest or pledge of the salvation to come (2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5; Eph. 1:14). Daily relationship with the Spirit brings total confidence that God will complete His plan and the believer will share His gift of eternal life.

EARRING See Jewelry, Jewels; Precious stones.

EARS OF GRAIN The fruit-bearing spike of a cereal such as maize which included both seed and protective structures. American corn was unknown in the Ancient Near East. It is more proper to speak of the common grains of that area, namely, wheat and barley, as having heads. The law permitted passersby to handpick heads of grain from a neighbor's field (Deut. 23:25).

EARTH, LAND Earth and land are the principle meanings of the Hebrew word 'erets. Earth and land differ in the degree of space involved: "earth" encompasses the whole planet; "land" designates a limited area.

'Erets* as Entire Created Sphere or Material Realm In Genesis 1:1,2 the earth ('erets) is created with the heavens. However, the sentence structure stresses the earth more than the heavens. Creation brought to the earth both form and content. Light made the earth's form and content visible. The waters were separated and put in appropriate places. An earth that was exceedingly good came from God's creation (Gen. 1:31).

Other parts of the Bible also speak of God creating the earth (Isa. 40:28; 45:12). The Bible stresses God's personal involvement: "Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth" (Isa. 48:13*a*). Compare Job 26:7; Isa. 42:5; 45:18.

'Erets* as Specific Territory or Land Interpreters and translators must decide whether 'erets means the whole earth or a specific land. The literary context (that which comes before and after the word) helps determine the precise meaning.

Naaman, the commander of the army of Syria, came to Elisha to be healed of leprosy. The maid of Naaman's wife told her mistress that Elisha could cure Naaman of leprosy. She was called "the maid that is of the land ('erets) of Israel" (2 Kings 5:4). Naaman, however, said of Elisha's God, "I know that there is no God in all the earth ('erets), but in Israel" (2 Kings 5:15). The context indicates that the same word in one verse means "land" and in another verse means the more comprehensive "earth."

'Erets* as Ground that Produces The prophet Haggai condemned his people for being concerned with their own houses while the house of the Lord lay in ruins. The Lord had judged them.

A literal translation would be, "There has been no dew from the heavens, and the land [or ground] has withheld its produce" (Hag. 1:10).

'Erets* as What Is Beneath the Earth or Land—the Underworld The prophet Ezekiel wrote literally of "the land of lowest places" (Ezek. 26:20). People of Tyre were going there (Ezek. 26:15,20). The people of Egypt were going there (Ezek. 31:2,14,16,18; 32:18,24). The RSV translates 'erets in this case as "the nether world." The NIV uses "the earth below." Sheol was another name for the place of the departed dead (Ezek. 31:15–17 NAS).

In the Old Testament, the heavenly realm, the earthly realm, and the sub-earthly realm all described the place of God and angels, the place of people now alive, and the place of those who have died. The New Testament reveals more. Believers go to be with Christ (Phil. 1:21–24). In both the Old and New Testaments, earthly decisions and actions influenced future destiny.

Theological Questions Regarding 'Erets To whom did the land of Canaan belong? Who was to own and use the land?

According to Joel 2:18,19, the land of Canaan belonged to Yahweh. God was jealous "for his land." He would judge the nations because they had "parted my land" (Joel 3:2). God promised Abraham that He would establish His covenant with Abraham and with his descendants as an everlasting covenant; all the "land of Canaan" was to be for an everlasting possession (Gen. 17:8–9).

Do these verses tell us who is to own and use the land? No, because Israel broke that covenant. Paul spoke of an old covenant and a new covenant (2 Cor. 3:6, 14). Jeremiah spoke about both covenants. The new covenant was not like the old "which my covenant brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord" (Jer. 31:32). The Holy Spirit testifies to Christians about the new covenant (Heb. 10:15–18). The land belongs to the Lord, and He may apportion it to whomever He pleases.

Use and Ownership of Land ('erets) Those who joined land to land, house to house, field to field (in land monopolies) were condemned (Isa. 5:8–10). Woe was pronounced on selfish wealthy people—those at ease in Zion, those who lay on beds of ivory (Amos 6:1,4). Micah pronounced woes upon those who "covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away" (Mic. 2:2). To prevent consolidation of land in the hands of a few, Leviticus proposed a fifty-year jubilee to return property to families (Lev. 25). "The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me" (Lev. 25:23). People were to permit redemption of the land to prevent its being controlled by only a few. The Lord of heaven and earth is also the Lord of individual lands. All of the earth as well as specific parts should be used to promote a good life for the inhabitants. People are to give thanks to the One who provided them with the means to achieve such a life.

A. Berkeley Mickelsen

EARTHQUAKE A shaking or trembling of the earth due to volcanic activity or, more often, the shifting of the earth's crust. Severe earthquakes produce such side effects as loud rumblings (Ezek. 3:12–13), openings in the earth's crust (Num. 16:32) and fires (Rev. 8:5). Palestine has two to three major quakes a century and two to six minor shocks a year. The major quake centers in Palestine are Upper Galilee,—near the biblical town of Shechem (Nablus)—and near Lydda on the western edge of the Judean mountains. Secondary quake centers are located in the Jordan Valley at Jericho and Tiberias.

The Bible mentions an earthquake during the reign of Uzziah (Amos 1:1; Zech. 14:5). The oracles of Amos are dated two years before this earthquake. The precise year of this quake has not been settled to everyone's satisfaction. Most would view the period between 767 and 742 B.C. as the likely dates for the earthquake.

Earthquakes are used symbolically in the Bible. Many times God's judgment or visitation is described using the imagery of an earthquake (Ps. 18:7; Isa. 29:6; Nah. 1:5; Rev. 6:12; 8:5; 11:13; 16:18) and is often seen as a sign of the end of time (Matt.24:7,29). Many times an earthquake is a sign of God's presence or of God's revelation of Himself (1 Kings 19:11–12; Ps. 29:8; Ezek. 38:19–20; Joel 2:10; 3:16; Acts 4:31; Rev. 11:19). At times the whole universe is described as being shaken by God (Isa. 13:13; 24:17–20; Joel 3:16; Hag. 2:6–7; Matt. 24:29; Heb. 12:26–27; Rev. 6:12; 8:5).

Even though earthquakes were usually seen in the Bible as things to escape (Isa. 2:19,21; possibly Amos 2:13–16; 9:1–4), they could be used by God for good purposes (Acts 16:26). The earth quaked in revulsion at the death of Jesus (Matt. 27:51–54) and the earth quaked to move the stone from Jesus' tomb (Matt. 28:2). Those who love God and are faithful to Him have no need to fear the trembling of the earth (Ps. 46:2–3).

Phil Logan

EAST See Directions, Geographic.

EAST COUNTRY A designation for territories lying in the direction of the rising sun. At Genesis 25:6 the reference signifies desert lands more than direction. At 1 Kings 4:30 the wisdom of the East, either of Mesopotamia or of the desert dwelling Arabs, together with the wisdom of Egypt signifies all wisdom. The East Country of Ezekiel 47:8 lies in the direction of the Dead Sea. The East Country and West Country of Zechariah 8:7 refer to the whole world.

EAST GATE This designation refers to three different gates. (1) KJV refers to the East Gate of Jerusalem as leading to the Hinnom Valley (Jer. 19:2). This valley lies to the south of the city rather than the east. Modern speech translations render this phrase Potsherd Gate. This gate may be identified with the Valley Gate (2 Chron. 26:9; Neh. 2:13,15; 3:13) or perhaps to the Refuse or Dung Gate (Neh. 2:13; 3:13–14; 12:31) located 1,000 cubits away. (2) The East Gate of the outer court of the Temple. Since the Temple faced east, this gate was the main entrance to the Temple complex (Ezek. 47:1). Levites in charge of the East Gate of Solomon's Temple had responsibility for the free-will offerings (2 Chron. 31:14). In a vision, Ezekiel saw the glory of the Lord depart through the East Gate before the destruction of the city (10:19). His vision of the new Temple included the return of God's glory through the same gate (43:1–2). God's use of this gate rendered it holy. It was to remain closed. Only the prince (messianic king) was allowed to enter it (44:1–3). (3) The East Gate of the inner court of the Temple. This gate was closed on the six working days but open on the sabbath (Ezek. 46:1).

The Golden Gate, sometimes called the East Gate, with the Kidron Valley in the foreground.

EAST SEA Ezekiel's expression for the Dead Sea (Ezek. 47:18). See Dead Sea.

EAST WIND See Wind.

EASTER The special celebration of the resurrection at Easter is the oldest Christian festival, except for the weekly Sunday celebration. Although the exact date was in dispute and the specific observances of the festival developed over the centuries, it is clear that Easter had special significance to the early generations of Christians. Since Christ's passion and resurrection occurred at the time of the Jewish Passover, the first Jewish Christians probably transformed their Passover observance into a celebration of the central events of their new faith. In the early centuries, the annual observance was called the "pascha," the Greek word for Passover, and focused on Christ as the paschal Lamb.

Although the New Testament does not give any account of a special observance of Easter and evidence from before A.D. 200 is scarce, the celebrations were probably well-established in most churches by A.D. 100. The earliest observance probably consisted of a vigil beginning on Saturday evening and ending on Sunday morning and included remembrance of Christ's crucifixion as well as the resurrection. Evidence from shortly after A.D. 200 shows that the climax of the vigil was the baptism of new Christians and the celebration of the Lord's Supper. By about A.D. 300 most churches divided the original observance, devoting Good Friday to the crucifixion and Easter Sunday to the resurrection. See Church Year.

Fred A. Grissom

EATING See Cooking; Food.

EBAL (Ē′ bal) Personal and place name possibly meaning, "bare." 1. Grandson of Seir and son of clan leader Shobal among the Horite descendants living in Edom (Gen. 36:23). 2. Son of Joktan in line of Shem (1 Chron. 1:22). He is called Obal in Genesis 10:28 through a scribal copying change.

3. Mountain near Shechem on which Moses set up the curse for the covenant ceremony (Deut. 11:29; 27:13). An altar was also on Ebal (Deut. 27:4–5). Ebal rises 3100 feet with its stark rock, bare of vegetation, giving the appearance of curse. On the north of Shechem, it stands opposed to the fruitful Mount Gerazim, the mount of blessing to the south. Joshua carried out the covenant ceremony on Ebal and Gerazim (Josh. 8:30–35; compare 24:1–27), building an altar on Ebal. Later the Samaritans built their temple on Mount Ebal (compare John 4:20). See Gerazim and Ebal.

EBED (E′ bĕd) Personal name meaning, "servant." 1. Father of Gaal, who led revolt in Shechem against Abimelech (Judg. 9:26–40). See Abimelech; Gaal.

2. Clan leader who returned from Exile under Ezra (Ezra 8:6).

EBED-MELECH (Ē′ bĕd mē′ lĕch) Personal name meaning, "servant of the king." An Ethiopian eunuch in the service of King Zedekiah of Judah (Jer. 38:7). When Jeremiah was imprisoned in a cistern used as a dungeon, Ebed-melech was responsible for the prophet's rescue. As a result of his faith in the Lord, he received the promise recorded in Jeremiah 39:15–18.

EBENEZER (Ĕb′ ĕn ē′ zĕr) Personal name meaning, "stone of help." The name of a site near Aphek where the Israelites camped before they fought in battle against the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:1). During the second of two engagements in the area, the Philistines captured the ark of the covenant. Later, after the recovery of the ark and a decisive Israelite victory over the Philistines, Samuel erected a monument to which he gave the name Eben-ezer.

EBER (Ē′ bĕr) Personal name meaning, "the opposite side." 1. The ancestor of Abraham and the Hebrew people, and a descendant of Shem (Gen. 10:21–25; 11:14–17). Numbers 24:24 apparently refers to him as the original ancestor of a people associated with the Assyrians and threatened by Balaam with destruction by Kittim. Precisely who was meant at this point is not known.

2. A member of the tribe of Gad, called Heber by KJV (1 Chron. 5:13). The name entered Israel's record about 750 B.C. (v. 17). 3. Clan leader in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:12). 4. Another clan leader of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:22). 5. Head of priestly family of Amok (Neh. 12:20) in days of Jehoiakim (609-597 B.C.).

EBEZ (Ē′ bĕz) Spelling of Abez in modern translations. See Abez.

EBIASAPH (Ē bī′ ȧ săph) Personal name meaning, "my father has collected or taken in." See Abiasaph, which has same Hebrew spelling. A Levite descended from Kohath (1 Chron. 6:23). The same person may be mentioned in verse 37, but the precise relationship of these family lists is uncertain with one or both possibly incomplete. He and his family kept the gate of the tabernacle (1 Chron. 9:19). The Abiasaph of Exodus 6:24 is apparently the same person.

EBLA (Ĕb′ la) A major ancient site located in Syria about 40 miles south of Aleppo. Covering about 140 acres, the mound is known today as Tell Mardikh. Excavations have been conducted since 1964 by an Italian team headed by P. Matthiae. The discovery of over 17,000 clay tablets in the mid-1970's revealed a major Syrian civilization in the mid-third millennium and brought the site worldwide prominence by the late 1970's.

Excavations have revealed fourteen occupation levels at Ebla dating from 3500 B.C. to 600 A.D. Only four levels, dating from 2000–1600 B.C., cover the whole site and indicate the greatest power and prosperity of Ebla.

Level IIB1 (2600–2250 B.C.): This is the best known but also the most controversial period. Matthiae dates this period about 2400–2250 B.C. while the original epigrapher, G. Pettinato, dates it about 2600–2400 B.C. In any event, it is during this period that Ebla became a major city. It was the largest in northern Syria and the capital of a major kingdom with a population estimated as high as 260,000. Though the boundaries of the kingdom are uncertain, it probably extended across all of northern Syria into Mesopotamia. There Elba was challenged by Sargon and Naram-Sin of Akkad; the latter eventually destroyed Ebla about 2250 B.C.

Near the ancient city of Shechem lies Mount Ebal.

Level IIB2 (2250–1900 B.C.): Though little excavation has been done on this level, Ebla was rebuilt and had some prosperity judging from references to it in contemporary Mesopotamian sources.

Level IIIA (1900–1800 B.C.): Ebla was again rebuilt with extensive fortifications. Some evidence indicates a new culture imposed by the Amorites which is also attested in Mesopotamia, Syria, and Palestine.

Level IIIB (1800–1600 B.C.): During this period Ebla was absorbed by the kingdom of Yamhad, a major kingdom to the north. Though not destroyed at the outset, Ebla's prosperity suffered. This period ended around 1600 B.C. when the Hittites under Hattusili I or Mursili I destroyed Ebla. Ebla never really rose to prominence again though limited occupation continued down to the Byzantine period around 600 A.D.

The 17,000 clay tablets have attracted the most interest at Ebla. Though few are published yet, they appear to date from about 2500 B.C. Most were discovered in the two rooms of Palace G in fallen debris, but in a way that allowed for reconstructing the original shelving. They are written in a cuneiform script similar to that used in Mesopotamia. Sumerian was used on a limited scale as well as a new language that has come to be called Eblaite. The later language was correctly assumed to be Semitic so that decipherment was almost immediate. Nevertheless, the complexity of reading the cuneiform signs has created significantly different readings, with attending controversies. At least four categories of texts are known: (1) administrative texts relating to the palace make up the majority (about 80%), (2) lexical texts for the scribes, (3) literary and religious texts, including accounts of creation and a flood, and (4) letters and decress.

Many early attempts to draw connections between Ebla and the Bible have not proven to be convincing. The term Ebla never occurs in the Bible, and no Biblical personalities or events have yet been identified in the Ebla tablets. Some Biblical personal names such as Ishmael have been attested at Ebla; but since they can be attested elsewhere in the Ancient Near East, this has no special significance. Claims that the Ebla tablets mention Biblical cities such as Sodom, Gomorrah, Jerusalem, and Hazor have not been substantiated. Efforts to identify the Israelite God Yahweh with the -ya elements of Eblaite personal names have not been compelling because these -ya elements can frequently occur in both Semitic and non-Semitic languages.

On the other hand, valuable general information can be gleaned from Ebla for the study of the Bible. Ebla was a major religious center, and over 500 gods are mentioned in the texts. The chief god was Dagon, a vegetation deity associated in the Bible with the Philistines (1 Sam. 5:2). Other gods include Baal, the Canaanite god of fertility, and Kamish (the Biblical Chemosh), god of the Moabites (Judg. 11:24). In addition, there is reference to "the god of my father" (compare Gen. 43:23). Some similarities between prophets at Ebla and Mari can be drawn with Israelite prophets, especially their call by the deity and their role as messengers of the deity to the people

Actually, contacts between Ebla and the Bible are by necessity limited for three reasons:

1. The illumination of the Bible using other Ancient Near Eastern civilizations is usually general cultural background rather than specific and direct connection.

2. A more specific limitation in this case is that the Elba tablets are generally too early to have specific bearing on the Old Testament.

3. Finally, the study of Ebla is in its infancy with very few texts already published. As more texts are published, we can expect additional information to illuminate not only the Bible but the rest of the Ancient Near East as well. James C. Moyer

EBONY See Plants, foreign trees.

EBRON (Ē′ brŏn) City in territory of Asher (Josh. 19:28), spelled Hebron in KJV. Several manuscripts in Joshua 19:28 plus the lists in Joshua 21:30; 1 Chronicles 6:39 have Abdon. See Abdon.

EBRONAH (Ē brō′ năh) KJV spelling for Abronah. See Abronah.

ECBATANA (Ĕc′ bă tā nà) Modern translation spelling of Achmetha. See Achmetha.

ECCLESIASTES, BOOK OF Ecclesiastes is the English title of this wisdom book derived from the Greek Septuagint's translation of the original Hebrew, "Qoheleth." The word Qoheleth (1:1; 7:27; 12:8) suggests one who has a function as teacher or preacher in the assembly.

Date and Author An almost universal agreement, even among conservative scholars, thinks that Ecclesiastes was not written by Solomon. Solomon's name is never mentioned in the book. Qoheleth refers to gaining more wisdom than "all they that have been before me in Jerusalem" (1:16), which does not fit Solomon who had only David as his royal predecessor. Elsewhere, the writer speaks as if he were a subject rather than a ruler (4:13; 8:2; 9:14–16; 10:16–17,20) in a time of oppression (4:14), injustice (5:8), and social confusion (10:6–7). Moreover, the language of the book is clearly late, being the closest to postbiblical Mishnaic Hebrew of any book in the Bible. From these and other clues, scholars conclude that a later writer used a literary device, the "didactic autobiography" to present his teaching, probably between 300 and 200 B.C. Some scholars continue to argue for Solomon as author, thinking this is the only way 1:1 can be interpreted.

Literary Character After the title (1:1) and the introductory poem on the vanity of all things (1:2–11), the book takes the form of a "didactic autobiography" which recounts Qoheleth's project "to study and explore by wisdom all that is done under heaven" (1:13 NIV). Qoheleth undertook great building projects, enjoyed the best of life's pleasures, and in every regard achieved the pinnacle of human success. Still, he concluded that all this, including work and play, is merely "vanity." Qoheleth loosely maintained the form of the autobiography (2:9,24; 3:10,16; 4:7; 7:15; 9:13) as a device to weave together a great many wisdom forms and reflections on life, elaborating the theme of vanity. He concluded with an allegory on death. The autobiography is framed by the observation which began the book: "Vanity of vanities . . . all is vanity (1:2; 12:8). The book ends with a short third person epilogue, probably by an editor, which puts Qoheleth and his difficult book in theological perspective (12:9–14).

Content Ecclesiastes is a book which focuses upon the limits of life to teach wisdom. The point of view is that of the Solomon-like Qoheleth whose wealth, wisdom, and glory placed him at the upper limit of human success. From his royal pinnacle Qoheleth surveyed life and judged it to be vanity because of the inescapable limits God and sin place on even the most successful human being. Thus the book cannot be dismissed as the disillusioned pessimism of one whom life had cheated. Human limits are various: humans cannot make straight what is crooked (1:15); what is lacking cannot be numbered (7:13); nor can humans remove injustice (3:16) and oppression (4:1–2; 5:8) from the earth. Sometimes good folk receive evil while the wicked prosper (7:15; 8:14; compare Ps. 73). Thus, humans are unable to achieve their dreams and ambitions because of sin and because of their limited knowledge, power, and goodness. In his focus on limits Qoheleth, like Job, attacked those who selectively misuse traditional wisdom to promote a false gospel of unlimited success for the "righteous." Even if humans do seem to succeed, like Qoheleth himself, had even this is vanity, because their knowledge is limited and imperfect: "no man (adam) can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end" (3:11). Moreover, even the best, richest, and wisest life is ended by death. Thus even the greatest goods and achievements, indeed, "everything under the sun" must be labeled as "vanity."

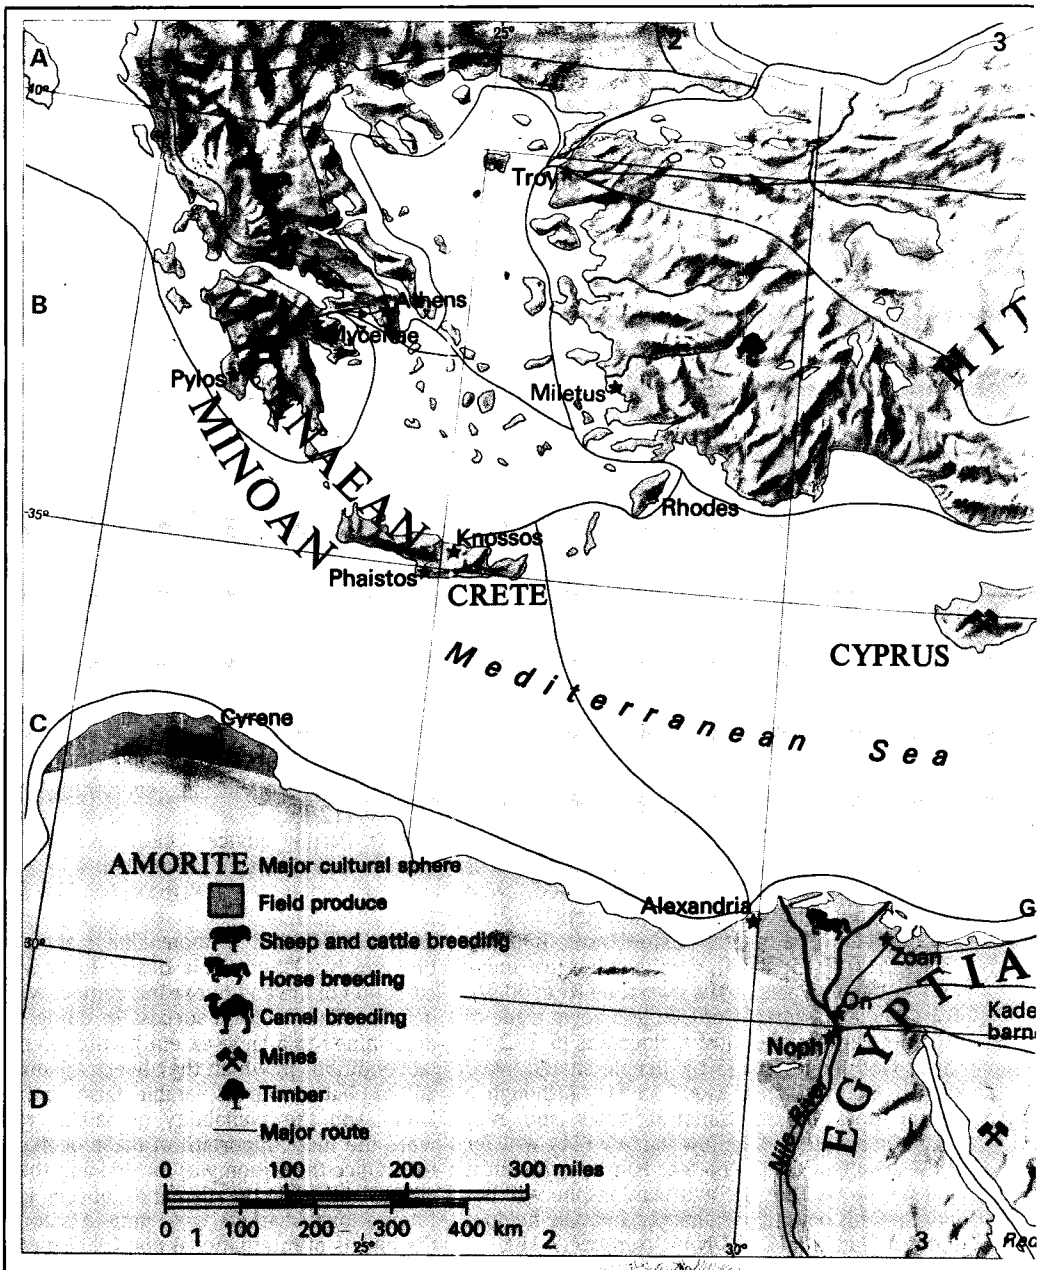
The Hebrew word translated as "vanity" is hevel whose literal meaning is "breath" or breeze. The author used this word metaphorically, often with the added phrase "striving after wind," to express the transience, weakness, and nothingness of human life. All things pass away.

Since life is vanity, what then is good? Qoheleth's answer has two points which are repeated several times in the book (though many commentators overlook this aspect of the book's teaching). The first point is summarized by the editor at the end of the book: "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man" (12:13). God's sovereign actions are beyond human ability to change (7:13); God has done this "that men should fear before him" (3:14). It is God who has set the limits on human life and knowledge (7:14). Thus Qoheleth's world is "vain," but only in the sense noted above. It is not a world without God. Apart from God, "who can eat and who can have enjoyment?" (2:25 NAS). Even if a person experiences injustice (3:16; 5:8; 7:15; 8:14), God is still a just Judge (3:17–18) who acts in His own time (8:6; 11:9). For Qoheleth, worship of God and vows made to Him are matters of utmost seriousness (5:1–2,4). Since God judges sin (5:6), people should avoid foolish talk and "fear God" (5:7). "Although a sinner does evil a hundred times and may lengthen his life, still I know that it will be well for those who fear God, who fear Him openly. But it will not be well for the evil man and he will not lengthen his days, like a shadow, because he does not fear God" (8:12–13 NAS; compare 7:18).

Qoheleth's second point is: humans do not have sovereign control over life, being limited by vanity in all its forms, especially death. Because of this, they should enjoy life and its ordinary pleasures of work and play, food and drink, love and family, all as gifts from God (2:24–26; 3:12–13; 5:18–20; 9:7–10). If there is resignation in Qoheleth, it is that of one who has left the riddles and painful mysteries of life in God's hands, while accepting its limited joys with sober thanks.



Outline

I. Life is vanity because nothing new ever occurs (1:1–11).
II. Wisdom produces only vanity (1:12–18).
III. Pleasure and possessions are all vanity (2:1–11).
IV. Wisdom is no better than folly (2:12–17).
V. Labor brings only vanity (2:18–26).
VI. God plans the world but hides the plan (3:1–11).
VII. The wise conclusion: seek to enjoy life (3:12–22).
VIII. Illustrations show life is vanity (4:1–16).
IX. The wise conclusion: fear God (5:1–7).
X. Wealth brings no advantage (5:8—6:12).
XI. Proverbs illustrate the way of wisdom (7:1–14).
XII. Righteousness results in vanity (7:15–25).
XIII. Warnings are needed against the wiles and devices of women (7:26–29).
XIV. Wise conclusion: obey the King (8:1–9).
XV. Righteousness goes unrewarded (8:10–17).
XVI. All people share the same ultimate fate (9:1–12).
XVII. Wisdom does not provide the ultimate answer (9:13—10:20).
XVIII. Wise conclusion: act in the face of vanity (11:1–8).
XIX. Youth has the advantage (11:9—12:7).
XX. Wise conclusion: everything is vanity (12:8).
XXI. Parting advice: Learn from the teacher and obey God (12:9–14).

Raymond C. Van Leeuwen

ECONOMIC LIFE Economic life in ancient Palestine involved the simple desire to improve the condition of life and to expand contact with other peoples. The people's success in doing this was determined to a large extent by the environmental conditions in which they lived. Adequate rainfall or water sources, arable farm and grazing lands, and the availability of natural resources were the most important of these ecological factors. Once the nation was formed and the monarchy established, the demands of the local and international markets, government stability, and the effects of international politics also came into play. Throughout their history, however, the economic life of the people of Israel was at least in part governed by the laws of God which concerned the treatment of fellow Israelites in matters of business and charity.

Like most of the rest of the Near East, the economy of ancient Palestine was primarily agricultural. However, unlike the major civilizations of Mesopotamia and Egypt, Israel's economy was not as completely dominated by the concerns of palace or temple as they were in other nations. For instance, there was no state monopoly on the ownership of arable land. Private ownership of

A
B
C
D
1
2
3
Troy
Athens
Mycenae
Pylos
Miletus
Rhodes
MINOAN MYCENAEAN
Knossos
Phaistos
CRETE
CYPRUS
Mediterranean Sea
Cyrene
AMORITE Major cultural sphere
Field produce
Sheep and cattle breeding
Horse breeding
Camel breeding
Mines
Timber
Major route
0 100 200 300 miles
0 1 100 200 300 400 km 2
Alexandria
Zoan
On Noph
Nile River
EGYPTIA
Kade barn
Hasmonean pirate ship
Tyri
timb ship

© carta

Skin-covered boat from Mesopotamia

Egyptian river boat

land and private enterprise were the rule during the early history of the tribes of Israel. This changed somewhat after the establishment of the monarchy when large estates were formed (2 Sam. 9:10) to support the kings and the nobility. Attempts were also made by the royal bureaucracy to control as much of the country's land and economic activity as possible (1 Kings 4:1–19).

Further changes took place after the conquest of the nation by Assyria and Babylon. From that point on, the economic efforts (farm production, industry, and trade) of the nation were largely controlled by the tribute demands of the dominant empires (2 Kings 18:14–16) and the maintenance of international trade routes. This pattern continued into the New Testament period when Roman roads speeded trade, but also held the populace in submission. The economy, while relatively stable, was burdened with heavy taxes (Matt. 22:17–21) to support the occupation army and government.

Environmental Conditions Many aspects of the economic life of the people were determined by the environmental conditions in which they lived. Palestine has a remarkably varied geographic pattern and huge shifts in climate. Within its environs are steppe and desert to the south and east in the Negev and the corresponding areas of the Transjordan. In these areas only dry or irrigation farming is possible, and much of the land is given over to pastoralists guiding their flocks and herds. A desolate wilderness region lies near the Dead Sea, while well-watered farm lands are found in the Shephelah plateau (between the coastal plain and the hill country) and in the Galilee area of northern Palestine. Rolling hill country dominates the center of the country where agriculture must be practiced on terraced hillsides and where water conservation and irrigation are necessary to grow crops.

The semi-tropical climate of Palestine includes a hot, dry summer and autumn during which no rains fall for six months. The drought is broken in September or October with rains continuing throughout the winter and into March and April. Yearly amounts of rainfall, which may all come in torrents within a few days, average 40 inches a year in the north and in the western areas of the hill country and Shephelah. Under the influence of the desert winds and the barrier of the hill country, these amounts decrease to the south and east, with less than eight inches a year in the desert regions of the Judean wilderness and the Negev. Average temperatures also vary widely, again with the highlands and northern coastal strip remaining cooler while the desert regions and low lying areas see temperatures well into the 90 degree range.

Uncertain climatic conditions often determined the economic activity of the local village, the region, and the nation. The fact that Abram's first experience in Palestine was a famine (Gen. 12:10) is not surprising. Drought, which destroyed crops (1 Kings 17:1; Jer. 14:1–6), had a ripple effect on the rest of the economy. Some people left the country for the more predictable climate of Egypt (Gen. 46:1–7) or went to areas in Transjordan unaffected by a famine (Ruth 1:1). Economic hardship brought on by climatic extremes also hurt the business of the local potter, tanner, blacksmith, and weaver.

Local Village Economy Agriculture in ancient Palestine took three basic forms: grain production (barley and wheat), cultivation of vines and fruit trees, and the care of oleaginous plants (olive, date, sesame) from which oil was extracted for cooking, lighting, and personal care uses. Most of the energies of the village population were taken up with plowing fields (1 Kings 19:19) and the construction and maintenance of the hillside terraces where vineyards (Isa. 5:1–6; Mark 12:1) and grain were planted. In the hill country, water sources were usually in the valleys, and thus it would have been too much work to carry water up to the hillside terraces. As a result, irrigation channels were dug to insure that the terraces were evenly watered by rain and dew. Roof catch basins and plastered cisterns were constructed to augment water supplies from the village's wells and springs during the dry summer months.

The ideal situation for every rural Israelite was to spend his days "under his vine and under his fig tree" (1 Kings 4:25). To insure this possibility for his sons, a man's ownership of land was considered part of a family trust from one generation to the next. Each plot of land was a grant to the household by Yahweh and as such had to be cared for so that it would remain productive (Deut. 14:28–29). Its abundance was the result of hard work (Prov. 24:30–34) and was to be shared with the poor (Deut. 24:19–21). Yahweh's grant of the land was repaid (Num. 18:21–32) through the payment of tithes to the Levites and through sacrifices.

The family's holdings were duly marked off. It was strictly against the law to remove the boundary stones (Deut. 19:14; Prov. 22:28). Inheritance laws were well defined with every eventuality provided for in the statutes. Normally, the oldest son inherited the largest portion of the lands of his father (Deut. 21:17; Luke 15:31). Sometimes this was all a man had to pass on to his children. It thus became traditional that land not be permanently sold outside the family or clan (Lev. 25:8–17). The tradition was so strong that Naboth could refuse King Ahab's request to purchase his vineyard saying he could not give him "the inheritance of my fathers" (1 Kings 21:3). In later periods, however, the prophets spoke of rich men who add "house to house, that lay field to field" (Isa. 5:8), taking advantage of the poor farmer whose land has been devastated by invading armies (Mic. 2:2) or drought.

If a man died without a male heir, his daughters would receive charge of the land (Num. 27:7–8), but they were required to marry within the tribe to insure it remained a part of the tribal legacy (Num. 36:6–9). A childless man's property passed to his nearest male relative (Num. 27:9–11). The tragedy of childlessness was sometimes resolved through the levirate obligation. In these cases the nearest male relative married the dead man's widow to provide an heir for the deceased (Gen. 38). The duty of the redeemer, or go'el, as the relative was called, also included the purchase of family lands which had been abandoned (Jer. 32:6–9).

Since life was uncertain and disease and war often took many of the village's inhabitants, laws were provided to insure that the widow, the orphan, and the stranger would not go hungry. Each field owner was required to leave a portion of the grain unharvested and some grapes on the vine (Lev. 19:9–10). This belonged to the poor and the needy who had the right to glean in these fields (Ruth 2:2–9). The land was also protected from exhaustion by the law of the sabbatical year which required that it be left fallow every seventh year (Lev. 25:3–7).

Despite the back-breaking work of harvesting fields with flint-edged sickles (Joel 3:13), the grain and the fruits meant the survival of the village and was cause for celebration (Judg. 21:19). Following the harvest, the threshingfloor became the center of the economic activity of the village and countryside (Joel 2:24). The sheaves of grain from the harvested fields of the district were brought here (Amos 2:13) to be trampled by oxen (Deut. 25:4) and threshing sledges (2 Sam. 24:22; Isa. 41:15). The grain was further separated from the chaff with winnowing forks (Ruth 3:2; Isa. 41:16; Jer. 15:7), and finally with sieves (Amos 9:9; Luke 22:31). Once this process was complete, the grain was guarded (Ruth 3:2–7) until it could be distributed to the people. The village may have had a communal granary, but most kept their grain in home storage pits or private granaries (Matt. 3:12).

Because of the importance this distribution held for the well-being of the people, the threshingfloor gradually became associated with the administration of justice for the community. This is seen in the Ugaritic epic of Aqhat (dated to about 1400 B.C.) where the hero's father Daniel is said to be judging the cases of widows and orphans at the threshingfloor. Similarly, Ruth's coming to Boaz as he lay on the threshingfloor after the winnowing (Ruth 3:8–14) may have been an attempt to obtain justice regarding the ownership of her dead husband's estate. In another instance from the monarchy period, it can be seen how the threshingfloor evolved into a symbolic place of judgment used by kings to augment their authority. First Kings 22:10 (NAS, NIV) portrays Kings Ahab and Jehoshaphat sitting enthroned before the gates of Samaria on a threshingfloor as they judge the statements of the prophet Micaiah.

Village economies also included the maintenance of small herds of sheep and goats. Nomadic pastoralism, like that described in the patriarchal narratives, was not a part of village life. The flocks were moved to new pastures in the hill country with the coming of the dry summer season (1 Sam. 25:7–8), but this would have required only a few herdsmen (1 Sam. 16:11). Only the shearing of the sheep would have involved large numbers of the community (Gen. 31:19; 1 Sam. 25:4; 2 Sam. 13:23–24).

What little industry existed in Israelite villages was designed to complement agricultural production and provide both necessities and some trade goods. This activity included the making of bricks and split timbers for house construction, and the weaving of material for clothing. Some households (usually consisting of a group of related families—Judg. 18:22) had the skill to shape cooking utensils and farm tolls from clay, stone, and metal. Few, however, had the ability to shape their own weapons, relying in many cases on clubs and ox goads (Judg. 3:31) for protection.

In exceptional cases village craftsmen may have set up stalls or business where they provided some of the more specialized items, especially fine pottery, bronze weapons, and gold and silver jewelry. Anything additional could either be done without or obtained in trade with other villages or nations who might possess a particularly fine artisan (1 Sam. 13:20). It is also possible that during a yearly visit to the city (Luke 2:41) to attend a religious festival the villager could visit the stalls of traders from all over the Near East and buy their wares.

Urban Economic Life Local trade expanded beyond the sale of surplus commodities and handcrafted items as the villages and towns grew in size. Population growth, sparked by the establishment of the monarchy and social stability, also increased the needs and appetites for metals (gold, tin, copper, iron), luxury items, and manufactured goods. A network of roads gradually developed to accommodate this economic activity and to tie together the villages and towns throughout the nation. More sophisticated road construction, designed to allow heavy vehicular traffic, was introduced by the kings who marshalled large numbers of corvée workers (persons who worked in lieu of paying taxes) to construct public works projects (1 Kings 9:15–22). Ezion-geber, a port on the Red Sea, was acquired from the Edomites and serviced a fleet of ships bringing gold from Ophir and rare woods and other luxury items to the royal court (1 Kings 9:26; 10:11–12). Another fleet joined that of Hiram of Tyre in the Mediterranean trade (1 Kings 10:22).

Within the walled cities and towns, most commercial activity occurred within the gate complex or its environs. This would have been the site of the heaviest traffic in any town and the most likely spot, other than private homes (Jer. 18:2–3), for stalls and shops to be set up for business. Since legal matters were also handled here (Deut. 21:18–19), business contracts could be witnessed (Gen. 23:15–16), and disputes settled (Ruth 4:1–6). Shops may have also been established within the walls of those cities which had hollow-wall (casemate) construction.

Since this was an economy without coined money until about 550 B.C., barter and specified weights (shekel, mina, talent) of precious metals were used as rates of exchange. Prices, as always, were determined by the law of supply and demand (2 Kings 6:25; Rev. 6:6), with an extra markup to cover the costs of transport, and, where applicable, manufacturing. For instance, luxury items such as spices and perfumes from Arabia and ivory and rare animals commanded high prices. They were portable enough to make the venture worthwhile.

Weights and measures also fitted into the sale of commodities in the town marketplace. These weights varied from one district and time period to the next (2 Sam. 14:26; Ezek. 45:10). However, the law required that Israelites provide a fair measure to their customers (Lev. 19:35–36). The fact that the law did not prevent fraud in every case is seen in the prophets' cries against deceitful weights (Mic. 6:11) and false balances (Amos 8:5). Archaeological evidence shows some attempt by the royal administration to standardize shekel weights. Hieratic symbols on these markers demonstrate a reliance on the Egyptian system of weights and measures.

Slave labor was also an outgrowth of the urbanization of Israel and the constant military campaigns of the kings. The large number of military prisoners joined the levies of forced labor gangs (1 Kings 5:13; 9:20–22) building roads and repairing the walls of the fortresses which guarded the kingdom. Royal estates were managed by stewards (1 Chron. 27:25–31) and worked by large bands of state-owned slaves and a levy of free men (1 Sam. 8:12).

It is unlikely that private individuals held as many slaves as the monarchy or the social elite. Since the laws regarding slaves were quite stringent (Ex. 21:1–11,20,26; Lev. 25:39–46), it is more likely that day laborers were hired by most landowners (Matt. 20:1–5). The leasing of land to tenant-farmers was another alternative to the labor problem, but this was not common in Israel until the New Testament period (Matt. 21:33–41; Mark 12:9).

Israelites could sell their families or themselves into slavery to resolve a debt (Ex. 21:7–11; Lev. 25:39; Matt. 18:25). This was regulated by the law so that the normal term of slavery or indenture was no more than six years. Then the slave was to be released and given a portion of the flock and the harvest with which to make a new start (Deut. 15:12–14). Perpetual slavery was only to occur if the Israelite himself chose to remain a slave. This choice might be made because he did not want to be separated from a wife and children acquired during his term of enslavement (Ex. 21:1–6) or because he did not feel he would have a better life on his own (Deut. 15:16).

Urbanization and the imposed demands of foreign conquerors brought greater complexity to the economic life of the people of Palestine. Travel and trade increased, and the variety of goods and services was magnified by the increased demands of consumers and the influx of new ideas and technologies from outside the country. Agriculture remained the staple of the economy, but it was augmented by the public works projects of the kings and foreign rulers. The increase in commercial and private traffic was facilitated by better highways and means of transport. Slave labor also became more common, but the majority of slaves came from a pool of military prisoners acquired in the wars that solidified and protected the nation's borders. See Agriculture; Commerce; Transportation and Travel; Slavery; Weights and Measures.

Victor H. Matthews

ECSTASY The state of being in a trance, especially a mys'ĕ: or prophetic trance. The derivation of our word "ecstasy" (from the Greek ek, out plus stasis, state) suggests an out of body state (2 Cor. 12:2–3) or the state of being out of control. In the Old Testament ecstasy was associated with bands or schools of prophets (1 Sam. 10:5,9; 19:20; 2 Kings 9:1). The ecstatic state was often accompanied by music (1 Sam. 10:5; 2 Kings 3:15–16) and rhythmic dance, though the "prophetic frenzy" was brought on by the onrush of the Spirit of God (1 Sam. 10:6,10; 19:20,23) or hand of the Lord (2 Kings 3:15). Prophetic ecstasy could be accompanied by irrational behavior (1 Sam. 19:24; perhaps 21:15) leading prophets to be identified with madmen (2 Kings 9:11; Jer. 29:26; Hos. 9:7). Efforts to control such prophetic expression (Jer. 29:26) were regarded as ill-founded (29:31).

In the New Testament Paul's experience of being caught up into the third heaven or paradise (2 Cor. 12:2–4) is an example of an ecstatic experience. Paul twice pleaded ignorance of whether this experience was "in or out of the body." Paul preferred to boast in his weakness than in such spiritual experiences (12:5). The gift of speaking in tongues is thought by some to involve an ecstatic state. See Prophecy, Prophets; Tongues, Gift of.

ED (Ĕd) Place name meaning, "witness." Altar that the tribes assigned territory east of the Jordan built as a witness that Yahweh is God of both the eastern and western tribes. The building resulted in a dispute between the two groups of tribes, but Phinehas, the priest, helped settle the dispute, ensuring the altar was a symbol and would not be used for burnt offering (Josh. 22:34). NAS, NIV, NRSV read, "witness."

EDAR (Ē′ dăr) KJV spelling of Eder in Genesis 35:21. See Eder.

EDEN (Ē′ dĕn) Garden of God. "Eden" is probably derived from the Sumerian-Akkadian edinu, meaning "flatland" or "wilderness." The similarity to the Hebrew verb 'adan, meaning "delight" or "pleasure," resulted in the Septuagint's translation of the expression "garden of Eden" as "garden of delight," hence paradise.

"Eden" appears twenty times in the Old Testament but never in the New Testament. Two usages refer to men (2 Chron. 29:12; 31:15). Twice the name is used to designate a city or region in the Assyrian province of Thelassar (Isa. 37:12; 2 Kings 19:12). Ezekiel 27:23 mentions a region named Eden located on the Euphrates. Amos 1:5 refers to the ruler of Damascus as holding the scepter of the house of Eden.

The fourteen remaining appearances relate to the idyllic place of creation. In Genesis (2:8,10,15; 3:23,24; 4:16) the reference is to the region in which a garden was placed. Though details seem precise, identification of the rivers which flow from the river issuing forth from Eden cannot be accomplished with certainty. The Euphrates and the Tigris can be identified, but there is no agreement on the location of the Pishon and the Gihon.

Joel 2:3 compares Judah's condition before its destruction with Eden. In Isaiah 51:3 and Ezekiel 36:35, Eden is used as an illustration of the great prosperity God would bestow on Judah. These exilic prophets promised that the nation God restored after the Exile would be like Eden's garden. Ezekiel also refers to the trees of Eden (31:9,16,18) and calls Eden the garden of God (28:13). See Paradise. Robert Anderson Street

EDER (Ē′ dĕr) Place and personal name meaning, "water puddle" or "herd." 1. Tower near Bethlehem (Gen. 35:21; compare verse 19). The exact location is not known. Micah referred to Jerusalem as the "tower of the flock," the same Hebrew expression as in Genesis (Mic. 4:8). 2. A town in the southern limits of the tribal territory of Judah near Edom (Josh. 15:21). Its location is not known. 3. A Levite of the clan of Merari (1 Chron. 23:23; 24:30). 4. A leader of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:15); KJV spelling is Ader.

EDICT See Decree.

EDIFICATION Literally "building up," it approximates encouragement and consolation (1 Cor. 14:3; 1 Thess. 5:11), though with edification focus falls on the goal, defined as being established in faith (Col. 2:7) or attaining unity of faith and knowledge, maturity, and the full measure of Christ (Eph. 4:13). Edification is the special responsibility of the various church leaders (Eph. 4:11–12) and is the legitimate context for the exercise of their authority (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10). The work of building up is, however, the work of all Christians (1 Thess. 5:11). Spiritual gifts are given for the edification of the Church. Of these gifts, those which involve speaking are especially important (Acts 20:32; 1 Cor. 14; Eph. 4:29). All elements of Christian worship should contribute to edification (1 Cor. 14:26). Prophecy and instruction are especially important (1 Cor. 14:3,-18–19). Edification is not all talk, however, but involves demonstrating love (1 Cor. 8:1) and consideration for those weak in faith (Rom. 15:1–2).

EDOM (Ē′ dom) The area southeast and southwest of the Dead Sea, on opposite sides of the Arabah, was known as Edom in biblical times and was the home of the Edomites. The name "Edom" derives from a Semitic root which means "red" or "ruddy" and characterizes the red sandstone terrain of much of the area in question. Moreover, the Edomite area was largely "wilderness"—semi-desert, not very conducive to agriculture—and many of the inhabitants were semi-nomads. Thus the boundaries of Edom would have been rather ill-defined. Yet not all of Edom was wilderness; the vicinity of present-day Tafileh and Buseireh, east of the Arabah, is fairly well watered, cultivable land, and would have boasted numerous villages during Old Testament times. This would have been the center of Edomite population. Buseireh is situated on the ruins of ancient Bozrah, the capital of Edom. Note that the modern name, "Buseireh," preserves memory of the ancient one, "Bozrah."

Most of the biblical passages pertaining to Edom refer to this Edomite center east of the Arabah. Isaiah 63:1, for example, speaks of one that " . . . cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, . . . glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength." (See also Jer. 49:22; Amos 1:11–12). Yet there are other passages which presuppose that the territory west of the Arabah, south of the Judean hill country and separating Judah from the Gulf of Aqaba, was also part of Edom. See especially the description of Judah's boundary in Numbers 34:3–4 and Joshua 15:1–3, where Judah's south side is described as extending "even to the border of Edom the wilderness of Zin." Certain of the tribal groups which ranged this wilderness area south of Judah are listed in the Edomite genealogy of Genesis 36. In New Testament times, even the southern end of the Judean hill country (south of approximately Hebron) was known officially as Idumea (Edom).

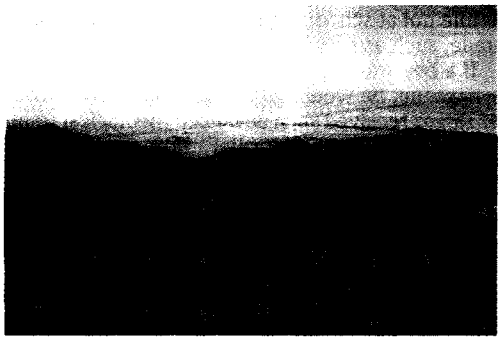
The "land of Seir" seems to be synonymous with Edom in some passages (Gen. 32:3; 36:8; Judg. 5:4). Egyptian texts from about 1300 to 1100 B.C. know of Shasu (apparently seminomadic tribes) from Seir and Edom. "Teman" also is used in apposition to Edom in at least one biblical passage (Amos 1:12), but normally refers to a specific district of Edom and possibly to a town by that name. One of Job's visitors was Eliphaz the Temanite (Job 2:11; compare Ezek. 25:13).



The Israelites regarded the Edomites as close relatives, even more closely related to them than the Ammonites or Moabites. Specifically, they identified the Ammonites and Moabites as descendants of Lot, Abraham's nephew, but the Edomites as descendants of Esau, Jacob's brother (Gen. 19:30–36; 36). Thus Edom occasionally is referred to as a "brother" to Israel (Amos 1:11–12). Edomites seem not to have been barred from worship in the Jerusalem Temple with the same strictness as the Ammonites and Moabites (Deut. 23:3–8). Yet, as is often the case with personal relations, the closest relative can be a bitter enemy. According to the biblical writers, enmity between Israel and Edom began already with Jacob and Esau (when the former stole the latter's birthright) and was exacerbated at the time of the Israelite Exodus from Egypt (when the Edomites refused the Israelites passage through their land). Be that as it may, much of the conflict also had to do with the fact that Edom was a constant threat to Judah's frontier, and moreover blocked Judean access to the Gulf of Aqaba.

Both Saul and David conducted warfare with the Edomites—probably frontier wars fought in the "wilderness" area southwest of the Dead Sea (1 Sam. 14:47–48; 2 Sam. 8:13–14). David achieved a decisive victory in the valley of salt, probably just southwest of Beersheba where the ancient name still is preserved in modern Arabic wadi el-Milk. Apparently this secured Davidic control of the Edomite area west of the Arabah as well as access to the Gulf of Aqaba. Thus we read that Solomon built a fleet of ships at Ezion-geber and sent them to distant places for exotic goods. Later Hadad of the royal Edomite line returned from Egypt and became an active adversary to Solomon. This would have involved Edomite attacks on Solomon's caravans which passed through traditionally Edomite territory from Ezion-geber to Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:14–22).

Apparently Judah gained the upper hand against Edom again during the reign of Jehoshaphat. Once again we read of a Judean attempt (unsuccessful this time) to undertake a shipping venture from Ezion-geber (1 Kings 22:47–50). Edom regained independence from Judah under Joram, who succeeded Jehoshaphat to the throne (2 Kings 8:20–22). A later Judean king, Amaziah, is reported to have defeated the Edomites again in the valley of salt and then to have pursued ten thousand survivors to "the top of the rock" from which they were thrown down and dashed to pieces (2 Chron. 25:11–12).

The mountainous landscape of the land of Edom.

The hills of Edom between Petra and Bozrah toward the Wadi Arabah.

Conflict between Judah and Edom and efforts on the part of Judean kings to exploit the commercial possibilities of the Gulf of Aqaba continued (2 Kings 14:22; 16:6; 2 Chron. 26:1–2; 28:17) until eventually the Edomites, like the other peoples and petty kingdoms of Syria-Palestine, fell under the shadow of the major eastern empires — the Assyrians, then the Babylonians, finally the Persians and the Greeks. Some scholars hold that the Edomites aided the Babylonians in their attacks on Jerusalem in 597 and 586 B.C. and then took advantage of the Judeans in their helpless situation. This would explain, for example, the bitter verbal attacks on Edom in passages such as Jeremiah 49:7–22 and the Book of Obadiah. Yet there is no clear evidence to support this view.

By New Testament times a people of Arabic origin known as the Nabateans had established a commercial empire with its center in the formerly Edomite territory east of the Arabah. Their chief city was Petra, and the whole region southeast of the Dead Sea had come to be known as Nabatea. Only the formerly Edomite territory west of the Arabah was still known as Idumea (Edom). Herod the Great was of Idumean ancestry. See Transjordan; Esau; Bozrah; Nabateans; Petra; Sela.

EDOMITES See Edom.

EDREI (Ĕd′ rē ī) Place name of unknown meaning. 1. Royal city of Og, king of Bashan (Josh. 12:4). Invading Israel defeated Og there (Num. 21:33–35). It is also known from Egyptian records. Its location is modern Dera halfway between Damascus and Amman. The clan of Machir in the tribe of Manasseh laid claim to the city (Josh. 13:31). 2. A fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:37).

EDUCATION IN BIBLE TIMES While the word "school" occurs in the Bible only once (Acts 19:9), there are numerous references to teachers and teaching in both Testaments. There are many references in the Old Testament to the importance of religious training but there is no Mosaic legislation requiring the establishment of schools for formal religious instruction.

Education in Old Testament Times The primary purpose of education among the Jews was the learning of and obedience to the law of God, the Torah.

The secondary purpose in education was to teach about the practical aspects of everyday life: a trade for the boy and the care of the house, application of dietary laws and how to be a good wife for the girl.

The home was considered the first and most effective agency in the education process, and parents were considered the first and most effective teachers of their children. This responsibility is expressed in Genesis 18:19 where God states his expectation that Abraham will train his children and his household to walk in the ways of the Lord. Proverbs 22:6 is another familiar exhortation for parents to teach their children according to the way of the Lord.

Deuteronomy 6:7 gives an interesting insight into how parents were to teach their children about God: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The parent was to use the various ordinary activities of life as avenues to teach about God. All of life was permeated by religious meaning and teaching about God should flow naturally from its activities.

Training in the Torah began very early. The father had an obligation to teach his children the Law by words and example. A child could observe his father binding the phylacteries on his arm and head. The natural question, "What are you doing?", could be used to teach the child that it was everyone's duty to "Love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might" (Deuteronomy 6:5).

When the son reached the age of twelve, the Jews believed his education in the Torah was complete enough to help him know the Law and keep it. He was then known as a "son of the Law." As a symbol of this attainment, the father would fasten the phylacteries upon the arm and forehead of his son. The box placed on the forehead indicated that the laws must be memorized. The other box was placed on the left arm so that it would press against the heart when the arms were folded or the hands were clasped in prayer. The box pressed against the heart would symbolize that the laws were to be loved and obeyed.

Girls received their education at home. A girl's mother taught her what she needed to know to be a good wife and mother.

A girl learned how to make the home ready for special holidays and Sabbath. In such preparation she learned the maning of the customs and history behind the events. This heritage she would be able to pass on to her own children in their very early years.

The girl would learn a variety of skills such as weaving, spinning, and treating illnesses. She might also learn to sing and dance and play a musical instrument such as a flute or harp.

The Jewish people had opportunity to receive religious education from priests and Levites (Lev. 10:10–11). The priests and Levites were to be supported by the offerings of the people and were to be the religious teachers of the nation. Apparently the educational function of their work was not well maintained. During the revival under King Jehoshaphat, the teaching function of Priests and Levites was resumed and the people were taught the ordinances of the Law. (2 Chron. 17:7–9).

The ineffective work of the priests was supplemented by the teaching of the prophets. The first of these prophets, Samuel, attempted to make his reform permanent by instituting a school of the prophets in Ramah (1 Sam. 19:19–20). Later other schools of the prophets were begun at other places. The main study at these centers was the Law and its interpretation. Not all of the students of these schools had predictive gifts nor were all the prophets students in such schools. Amos is a notable example of a prophet who was not educated in one of these schools (Amos 7:14–15).

Education in New Testament Times. The synagogue apparently came into existence during the Babylonian captivity when the Jews were deprived of the services of the Temple. During captivity they began meeting in small groups for prayer and Scripture reading. When they returned to Israel the synagogue spread rapidly and developed into an important educational institution. Synagogue services made an important educational contribution to the religious life of the community. The elementary school system among the Jews developed in connection with the synagogue. Even before the days of Jesus, schools for the young were located in practically every important Jewish community.

The teacher was generally the synagogue "attendant." An assistant was provided if there were more than twenty-five students. The primary aim of education at the synagogue school was religious. The Old Testament was the subject matter for this instruction. Reading, writing and arithmetic were also taught. Memorization, drill and review were used as approaches to teaching.

Boys usually began formal schooling at the "house of the book" at age five. He would spend at least a half day, six days a week for about five years, studying at the synagogue. Parents brought their son at daybreak and came for him at midday. While not at school the boy was usually learning a trade, such as farming or carpentry.

If a boy wanted training beyond that given in a synagogue, he would go to a scholarly scribe. Saul of Tarsus received such advanced theological training "at the feet of Gamaliel" in Jerusalem (Acts 22:3).

No formal educational approach is described in the New Testament. However, Jesus is pictured as teaching large crowds (Mark 4:1–2). While Jesus was much more than a teacher, he was recognized as a teacher by his contemporaries. He was a God-sent teacher who taught with an authority and challenge which held his audiences captive.

As risen Lord, Jesus commissioned his followers to carry their evangelism and teaching ministry into all the world (Matt. 28:19–20). As seen in Acts 2:42, 4:1–2; 5:21,28, teaching became an important work in the early church in Jerusalem.

The New Testament places importance on the teaching function of the church. Teaching is regarded as a primary function of the pastor (1 Tim. 3:2). Volunteer teachers are also important to the work of the church (James 3:1). Cos Davis

EGLAH (Ĕg′ lăh) Personal name meaning, "heifer, young cow." David's wife and mother of his son Ithream (2 Sam. 3:5).

EGLAIM (Ĕg′ lā ĭm) Place name meaning, "two cisterns." Place in Moab used by Isaiah to describe far limits of Moab's distress. It is modern rugm el-Gilimeh, southeast of el-Kerak. It is distinct in location and Hebrew spelling from En-eglaim (Ezek. 47:10).

EGLATH-SHELISHIYAH (Ĕg′ lăth-shĕ lĭsh′ ĭ yăh) Place name meaning, "the third heifer." Place apparently in Moab where Moab fugitives fled in Isaiah's description of disaster (Isa. 15:5). The name has given translators and interpreters many problems. The location is not known. The words do not apparently fit the poetic structure and are unexpected in the syntax and context, there being no adverb or preposition between Zoar and Eglath-Shelishiyah in the Hebrew. King James makes the phrase an identifying statement with Zoar—"an heifer of three years old." The same problems arise in the closely related Jeremiah 48:34.

EGLON (Ĕg′ lŏn) 1. A Moabite king who oppressed the Israelites (Judg. 3:12). Aided by the Amalekites and Ammonites, Eglon dominated Israel for eighteen years. He was finally slain by the Benjamite judge Ehud, who ran the obese monarch through with a short sword.

2. A Canaanite city whose king entered an alliance with four other Canaanite rulers against Gibeon (Josh. 10:3). The Gibeonites had made a treaty with Israel (Josh 9). Subsequently, Eglon was captured by the Israelite army under Joshua. It became a part of the territory of the tribe of Judah. Most scholars long held that the modern site of tell el-Hesi was the location of ancient Eglon. More recently, however, some have contended for tell Eton. Both places are to the southwest of Lachish. See Joshua; Judges; Ehud.

EGYPT A land in northeastern Africa, home to one of the earliest civilizations, and an important cultural and political influence on ancient Israel.

Geography Egypt lies at the northeastern corner of Africa, separated from Palestine by the Sinai Wilderness. In contrast to the modern nation, ancient Egypt was confined to the Nile River valley, a long, narrow ribbon of fertile land (the "black land") surrounded by uninhabitable desert (the "red land"). Egypt proper, from the first cataract of the Nile to the Mediterranean, is some 750 miles long.

Classical historians remarked that Egypt was a gift of the Nile. The river's three tributaries converge in the Sudan. The White Nile, with its source in Lake Victoria, provides a fairly constant water flow. The seasonal flow of the Blue Nile and Atbara caused an annual innundation beginning in June and cresting in September. Not only did the innundation provide for irrigation, but it replenished the soil with a new layer of fertile, black silt each year. The Nile also provided a vital communication link for the nation. While the river's flow carried boats northward, prevailing northerly winds allowed easy sailing upstream.

Despite the unifying nature of the Nile, the "Two Lands" of Egypt were quite distinct. Upper Egypt is the arable Nile Valley from the First Cataract to just south of Memphis in the north. Lower Egypt refers to the broad Delta of the Nile in the north, formed from alluvial deposits. Egypt was relatively isolated by a series of six Nile cataracts on the south and protected on the east and west by the desert. The Delta was the entryway to Egypt for travelers coming from the Fertile Crescent across the Sinai.

History The numerous Egyptian pharaohs were divided by the ancient historian Manetho into thirty dynasties. Despite certain difficulties, Manetho's scheme is still used and provides a framework for a review of Egyptian history.

Funerary statuettes from the tomb of King Tut (Pharaoh Tutankhamun).

Bust of the Egyptian queen Nefertiti, wife of Pharaoh Akhenaton.

The unification of originally separate kingdoms of Upper and Lower Egypt about 3100 B.C. began the Archaic Period (First and Second Dynasties). Egypt's first period of glory, the Third through Sixth Dynasties of the Old Kingdom (2700–2200 B.C.) produced the famous pyramids.

Low Nile innundations, the resultant bad harvests, and incursions of Asiatics in the Delta region brought the political chaos of the Seventh through Tenth Dynasties, called the First Intermediate Period (2200–2040 B.C.). Following a civil war, the Eleventh Dynasty reunited Egypt and began the Middle Kingdom (2040–1786 B.C.). Under the able pharaohs of the Twelfth Dynasty, Egypt prospered and conducted extensive trade. From the Middle Kingdom onward, Egyptian history is contemporary with biblical events. Abraham's brief sojourn in Egypt (Gen. 12:10–20) during this period may be understood in light of a tomb painting at Beni Hasan showing visiting Asiatics in Egypt about 1900 B.C.

Under the weak Thirteenth Dynasty, Egypt entered another period of division. Asiatics, mostly Semites like the Hebrews, migrated into the Delta region of Egypt and began to establish independent enclaves, eventually consolidating rule over Lower Egypt. These pharaohs, being Asiatics rather than native Egyptians, were remembered as Hyksos, or "rulers of foreign lands." This period, in which Egypt was divided between Hyksos (Fifteenth and Sixteenth) and native Egyptian (Thirteenth and Seventeenth) dynasties, is known as the Second Intermediate or Hyksos Period (1786–1550 B.C.). Joseph's rise to power (Gen. 41:39–45) may have taken place under a Hyksos pharaoh. See Hyksos.

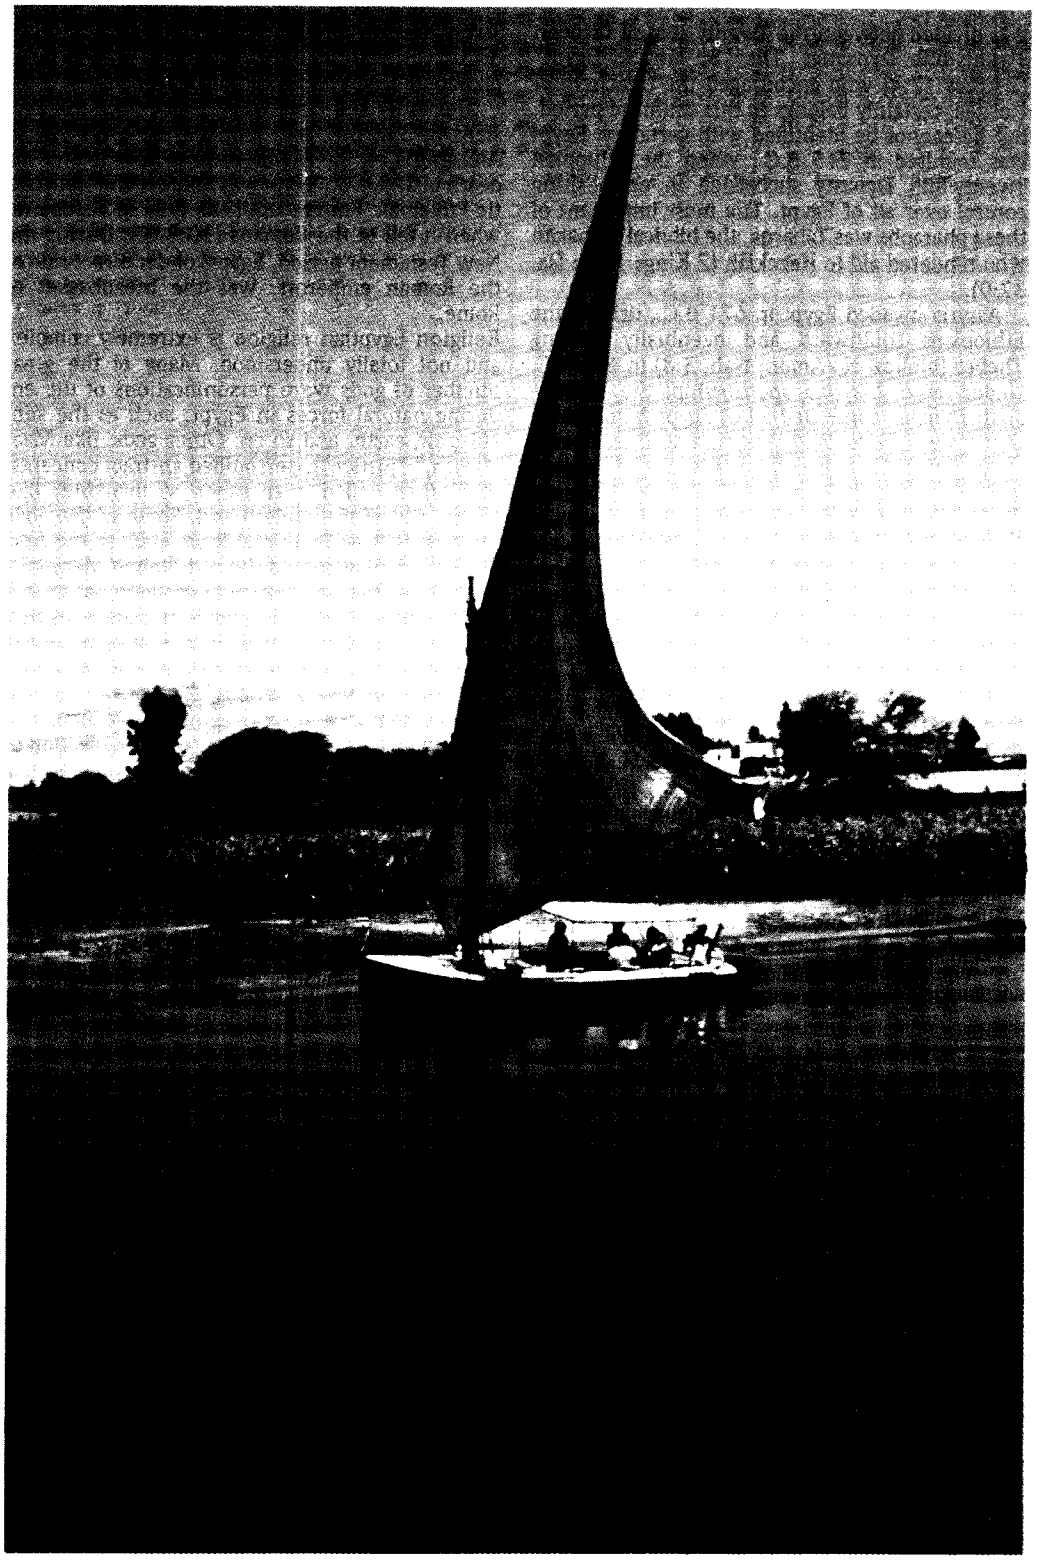
The Hyksos were expelled and Egypt reunited about 1550 B.C. by Ahmose I, who established the Eighteenth Dynasty and inaugurated the Egyptian New Kingdom. Successive Eighteenth Dynasty pharaohs made military campaigns into Canaan and against the Mitannian kingdom of Mesopotamia, creating an empire which reached the Euphrates River. Foremost among the pharaohs was Thutmose III (1479–1425 B.C.), who won a major victory at Megiddo in Palestine. Amenhotep III (1391–1353 B.C.) ruled over a magnificent empire in peace—thanks to a treaty with Mitanni—and devoted his energies to building projects in Egypt itself. The great successes of the Empire led to internal power struggles, especially between the powerful priesthood of Amen-Re and the throne.

Amenhotep III's son, Amenhotep IV (1353–1335 B.C.), changed his name to Akhenaton and embarked on a revolutionary reform which promoted worship of the sun disc Aton above all other gods. As Thebes was dominated by the powerful priesthood of Amen-Re, Akhenaton moved the capital over two hundred miles north to Akhetaton, modern tell el-Amarna. The Amarna Age, as this period is known, brought innovations in art and literature; but Akhenaton paid little attention to foreign affairs, and the Empire suffered. Documents from Akhetaton, the Amarna Letters, represent diplomatic correspondence between local rulers in Egypt's sphere of influence and pharaoh's court. They especially illuminate the turbulent situation in Canaan, a century prior to the Israelite invasion.

The reforms of Akhenaton failed. His second successor made clear his loyalties to Amen-Re by changing his name from Tutankhaton to Tutankhamen and abandoning the new capital in favor of Thebes. He died young, and his comparatively insignificant tomb was forgotten until its rediscovery in 1921. The Eighteenth Dynasty would not recover. The General Horemheb seized the throne and worked vigorously to restore order and erase all trace of the Amarna heresy. Horemheb had no heir and left the throne to his vizier, Ramses I, first king of the Nineteenth Dynasty.

Seti I (1302–1290 B.C.) reestablished Egyptian control in Canaan and campaigned against the Hittites, who had taken Egyptian territory in North Syria during the Amarna Age. See Hittites. Construction of a new capital was begun by Seti I in the eastern Delta, near the biblical Land of Goshen. Thebes would remain the national religious and traditional capital.



Ramses II (1290–1224 B.C.) was the most vigorous and successful of the Nineteenth Dynasty pharaohs. In his fifth year, he fought the Hittites at Kadesh-on-the-Orontes in north Syria. Although ambushed and nearly defeated, the pharaoh rallied and claimed a great victory. Nevertheless, the battle was inconclusive. In 1270 B.C. Ramses II concluded a peace treaty with the Hittites recognizing the status quo. At home he embarked on the most massive building program of any Egyptian ruler. Impressive additions were made to sanctuaries in Thebes and Memphis, a gigantic temple of Ramses II was built at Abu Simbel in Nubia, and his mortuary temple and tomb were prepared in Western Thebes. In the eastern Delta, the new capital was completed and called Pi-Ramesse ("domain of Ramses;" compare Gen. 47:11), the biblical Ramses (Ex. 1:11). Indeed, Ramses II may have been the unnamed pharaoh of the Exodus.

Ramses II was succeeded, after a long reign, by his son, Merneptah (1224–1214 B.C.). A stele of 1220 B.C. commemorates Merneptah's victory over a Libyan invasion and concludes with a poetic account of a campaign in Canaan. It includes the first extra-biblical mention of Israel and the only one in known Egyptian literature. After Merneptah, the Nineteenth Dynasty is a period of confusion.

Egypt had a brief period of renewed glory under Ramses III (1195–1164 B.C.) of the Twentieth Dynasty. He defeated an invasion of the Sea Peoples, among whom were the Philistines. The remainder of Twentieth Dynasty rulers, all named Ramses, saw increasingly severe economic and civil difficulties. The New Kingdom and the Empire petered out with the last of them in 1070 B.C. The Iron Age had taken dominance of the Near East elsewhere.

The Late Period (1070–332 B.C.) saw Egypt divided and invaded, but with occasional moments of greatness. While the high priesthood of Amen-Re controlled Thebes, the Twenty-first Dynasty ruled from the east Delta city of Tanis, biblical Zoan (Num. 13:22; Ps. 78:12; Ezek. 30:14; Isa. 19:11; 30:4). It was likely a pharaoh of this dynasty, perhaps Siamun, who took Gezer in Palestine and gave it to Solomon as his daughter's dowry (1 Kings 3:1; 9:16). The Twenty-second Dynasty was founded by Shoshenq I (945–924 B.C.), the Shishak of the Bible, who briefly united Egypt and made a successful campaign against the newly-divided nations Judah and Israel (1 Kings 14:25; 2 Chron. 12). Thereafter, Egypt was divided between the Twenty-second through Twenty-fifth Dynasties. The "So king of Egypt" (2 Kings 17:4) who encouraged the treachery of Hoshea, certainly belongs to this confused period, but he cannot be identified with certainty. Egypt was reunited in 715 B.C., when the Ethiopian Twenty-fifth Dynasty succeeded in establishing control over all of Egypt. The most important of these pharaohs was Taharqa, the biblical Tirhakah who rendered aid to Hezekiah (2 Kings 19:9; Isa. 37:9).

Sailboat on the Nile River near Luxor.

Assyria invaded Egypt in 671 B.C., driving the Ethiopians southward and eventually sacking Thebes (biblical No-Amon; Nah. 3:8) in 664 B.C. Under loose Assyrian sponsorship, the Twenty-sixth Dynasty controlled all of Egypt from Sais in the western Delta. With Assyria's decline, Neco II (610–595 B.C.) opposed the advance of Babylon and exercised brief control over Judah (2 Kings 23:29–35). After a severe defeat at the Battle of Carchemish (605 B.C.), Neco II lost Judah as a vassal (2 Kings 24:1) and was forced to defend her border against Babylon. The Pharaoh Hophra (Greek Apries; 589–570 B.C.) supported Judah's rebellion against Babylon, but was unable to provide the promised support (Jer. 37:5–10; 44:30). Despite these setbacks, the Twenty-sixth Dynasty was a period of Egyptian renaissance until the Persian conquest in 525 B.C. Persian rule (Twenty-seventh Dynasty) was interrupted by a period of Egyptian independence under the Twenty-eighth through Thirtieth Dynasties (404–343 B.C.). With Persian reconquest in 343 B.C., pharaonic Egypt had come to an end.

Alexander the Great took Egypt from the Persians in 332 B.C. and founded the great city of Alexandria on the Mediterranean coast. After his death in 323 B.C., Egypt was home to the Hellenistic Ptolemaic Empire until the time of Cleopatra, when it fell to the Romans (30 B.C.). During the New Testament period, Egypt, under direct rule of the Roman emperors, was the breadbasket of Rome.

Religion Egyptian religion is extremely complex and not totally understood. Many of the great number of gods were personifications of the enduring natural forces in Egypt, such as the sun, Nile, air, earth, and so on. Other gods, like Maat ("truth," "justice"), personified abstract concepts. Still others ruled over states of mankind, like Osiris, god of the underworld. Some of the gods were worshiped in animal form, such as the Apis bull which represented the god Ptah of Memphis.

Many of the principal deities were associated with particular cities or regions, and their position was often a factor of the political situation. This is reflected by the gods' names which dominate pharaohs' names in various dynasties. Thus the god Amen, later called Amen-Re, became the chief god of the Empire because of the position of Thebes. The confusion of local beliefs and political circumstances led to the assimilation of different gods to certain dominant figures. Theological systems developed around local gods at Hermopolis,

View of Giza, Egypt, showing two of the three pyramids located here and the famous sphinx.

The temple of Luxor, Egypt.

Memphis, and Heliopolis. At Memphis, Ptah was seen as the supreme deity which created the other gods by his own word, but this notion was too intellectual to be popular. Dominance was achieved by the system of Heliopolis, home of the sun god Atum, later identified with Ra. Similar to the Hermopolis cycle, it involved a primordial chaos from which appeared Atum who gave birth to the other gods.

Popular with common people was the Osiris myth. Osiris, the good king, was murdered and dismembered by his brother Seth. Osiris' wife, Isis, gathered his body to be mummified by the jackal-headed embalming god Anubis. Magically restored, Osiris was buried by his son, Horus, and reigned as king of the underworld. Horus, meanwhile, overcame the evil Seth to rule on earth. This cycle became the principle of divine kingship. In death, the pharaoh was worshiped as Osiris. As the legitimate heir Horus buried the dead Osiris, the new pharaoh became the living Horus by burying his dead predecessor.

The consistent provision of the Nile gave Egyptians, in contrast to Mesopotamians, a generally optimistic outlook on life. This is reflected in their preoccupation with the afterlife, which was viewed as an ideal continuation of life on earth. In the Old Kingdom it was the prerogative only of the king, as a god, to enjoy immortality. The common appeal of the Osiris cult was great, however, and in later years any dead person was referred to as "the Osiris so and so."

To assist the dead in the afterlife, magical texts were included in the tomb. In the Old Kingdom they were for royalty only, but by the Middle Kingdom variations were written inside coffin lids of any who could afford them. In the New Kingdom and later, magical texts known as The Book of the Dead were written on papyrus and placed in the coffin. Pictorial vignettes show, among other things, the deceased at a sort of judgment in which his heart was weighted against truth. This indicates some concept of sin, but the afterlife for the Egyptian was not an offer from a gracious god, but merely an optimistic hope based on observation of his surroundings.

The Bible mentions no Egyptian gods, and Egyptian religion did not significantly influence the Hebrews. There are some interesting parallels between biblical texts and Egyptian literature. An Amarna Age hymn to the Aton has similarities to Psalm 104, but direct borrowing seems unlikely. More striking parallels are found in wisdom literature, as between Proverbs 22 and the Egyptian Instruction of Amen-em-ope.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

EGYPTIAN, THE The leader of an unsuccessful attempt to capture Jerusalem in about A.D. 54. In Acts 21:38 the tribune commanding the Antonia fortress mistook Paul for this revolutionary who led 4,000 "Assassins" into the wilderness. Josephus mentioned two incidents involving the same, or similar, character. In the first, an Egyptian false prophet led a group into the desert. The procurator Felix dispersed this revolutionary band with calvary and foot soldiers. Later the Egyptian gathered 30,000 in the wilderness, leading the multitude to the Mount of Olives from which, so he promised, they would see the walls of Jerusalem fall at his command. Felix again responded with force, killing 400 and taking 200 captive. The Egyptian ringleader escaped.

Such a sizeable following suggests that either an Egyptian Jew or a proselyte to Judaism was the leader of the revolt rather than a pagan Egyptian. The tribune presumed that the Egyptian was a barbarian (unable to speak Greek). This presumption together with Paul's response that he was a Jew of Tarsus, an important city of Cilicia, suggests a rural origin for the Egyptian rebel.

EHI (Ē′ hī) Personal name meaning, "my brother." A son of Benjamin (Gen. 46:21). He does not appear in the lists of Benjamin's sons in Numbers 26:38–40; 1 Chronicles 8:1–2.

EHUD (Ē′ hŭd) Personal name meaning, "unity, powerful." 1. A lefthanded Benjamite whom the Lord raised up to deliver the Israelites from Moabite oppression (Judg. 3:15). By a ruse, he gained access to the Moabite King Eglon and assassinated him.

2. Great grandson of Benjamin and clan leader in that tribe (1 Chron. 7:10). 3. Clan leader in tribe of Benjamin who originally lived in Geba but were deported by someone unknown to Manahath (1 Chron. 8:6). The name Ehud appears unexpectedly in the text, so that scholars search for other names in the lists of Numbers 26 and 1 Chronicles 8:1–5 who might be the same person without sure results.

EKER (Ē′ kĕr) Personal name meaning, "root" or "offspring." Son of Jerahmeel and grandson of Hezron in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:27).

EKRON (Ĕk′ rŏn) Ekron is the northernmost of the five major Philistine cities known as the pentapolis. The site of ancient Ekron has been much debated, but now is generally agreed to be modern tell Miqne, about 14 miles inland from the Mediterranean Sea and 10 miles from Ashdod. The site is one of the largest in Palestine, covering some 50 acres. Ekron lies on the road leading from Ashdod into the Judean hill country and up to Jerusalem through the Sorek Valley.

Ekron was assigned to both Judah (Josh. 15:11,45–46) and Dan (Josh. 19:43) in the tribal allotments. It probably lay on the border between the tribes. Judges 1:18 reports that Judah captured Ekron along with other parts of the Philistine coast, but Ekron was certainly in Philistine hands at the time the ark was captured (1 Sam. 5:10). It was also the place to which the Philistines retreated after David slew Goliath (1 Sam. 17:52). Ahaziah, the son of King Ahab of Israel, called on the god of Ekron, Baal-zebub, when he was sick (2 Kings 1:2–16).

Excavations at tell Miqne have discovered much pottery that is typically Philistine. From the last period before tell Miqne was destroyed by the Babylonians, the excavators found an important industrial complex near the city gate. A hoard of iron agricultural tools was found. Hundreds of whole pottery vessels were present. Perhaps most importantly, a well-preserved olive press was discovered. This press is the largest and best preserved known in Israel. A horned altar was also found during the excavations. Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

EL (Ĕl) One of several words for God found in biblical Hebrew and the name of the high god among the Canaanites. The word is common to Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic, yet the origin and root from which the word was derived is obscure. "El" is a general term that expresses majesty or power.

Biblical Usage "El" occurs 238 times in the Old Testament, most frequently in Psalms and Job. The normal biblical usage is as a simple noun for deity. "El" is a synonym for the more frequent noun for God: Elohim. "El" refers to the God of Israel and in other passages to one of the pagan gods. In some instances, qualifying words are associated with "El" in order to distinguish which god is being addressed. Exodus 34:14 is an example of the expression "other god"; Psalm 44:20 and Psalm 81:9 are translated "strange god."

"El" was frequently combined with nouns or adjectives to express the name for God with reference to particular attributes or characteristics of His being. El Shaddai, "God Almighty," appears in Genesis 17:1. El-elohe-Israel, in Genesis 33:20, was used to distinguish the God of Israel from all others. El Elyon, in Genesis 14:18 and Psalm 78:35, was written to suggest the exalted nature of God. El Gibbor (Isa. 9:6; Jer. 32:18) has been interpreted as a portrayal of God as a mighty warrior. El Roi, the God who sees, is found only in Genesis 16:13. See Canaan. James Newell

ELA (Ē′ lă) Personal name of unknown meaning, perhaps related either to 'el, Hebrew word for God, or to Elah, a slightly different Hebrew spelling not noted in KJV. See Elah. Father of one of Solomon's district superintendents (1 Kings 4:18).

ELADAH (Ĕl′ ă dăh) KJV spelling of Eleadah. See Eleadah.

ELAH (Ē′ lăh) Personal and place name meaning, "oak," "mighty tree," or "terebinth." See Terebinth. 1. Clan chief descended from Esau (Gen. 36:41) and thus an Edomite. See Edom;

Esau. 2. A valley where Saul and his army set up battle lines against the Philistines (1 Sam. 17:2). The valley runs east and west just north of Socoh. There David defeated Goliath (1 Sam. 21:9). 3. King of Israel (886-885 B.C.), killed while he was drunk during rebellion Zimri, his general, led successfully (1 Kings 16:6–14). 4. Father of Hoshea, who led a revolt and became king of Israel (886-885 B.C.) (2 Kings 15:30). 5. Son of Caleb and father of Kenaz among clans of Judah (1 Chron. 4:15). 6. Head of a clan from Benjamin who settled in Jerusalem after the Exile (1 Chron. 9:8).

ELAM (Ē′ lăm) A personal name and a place name 1. Elam was a son of Shem, one of the sons of Noah (Gen. 10:22; 1 Chron. 1:17). He may have given his name to the region known as Elam. 2. The region of Elam is on the western edge of ancient Persia, modern Iran. The Zagros Mountains lie east and north while the Persian Gulf is to the south and the Tigris River is on the west. The ancient capital of the area is Susa. The region has been inhabited since before 3000 B.C., but only a few of the periods are of importance for biblical history.

Elam appeared in history when Sargon of Akkad subdued it about 2300 B.C. Soon, though, Elamites reversed the role, sacked Ur, and set up an Elamite king in Eshnunna. The Elamite presence continued in Babylon until the time of Hammurabi about 1700 B.C.

After Hammurabi, Kassites invaded Elam. Their rule lasted until about 1200 B.C. The next century was the high point of Elam's power. All of western Iran was theirs. Again the Babylonians brought Elamite power to an end. The Assyrian Ashurbanipal brought an end to the periods of strength and weakness. He swept through the region in a series of campaigns and captured Susa in 641 B.C. He may have moved some Elamites to Samaria at that time (Ezra 4:9). Earlier, Elam had incorporated Anshan, later home of Cyrus the Great, into the kingdom. As Assyria weakened, Elam and Anshan became part of the kingdom of the Medes. Thus, they participated, with the Babylonians, in the defeat of the Assyrian empire. Elam had little subsequent independent history, but it continued to be part of the Medes' and the Persians' empires. In Scripture Elam's importance may have been due to its role as a vassal of the great empires, supplying troops for them.

Elam is mentioned in Scripture in narratives and oracles. Abraham fought Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, to secure the return of Lot and others (Gen. 14). Although this king cannot be identified from other records, the events may have occurred during Elam's time of strength prior to Hammurabi. Prophets mentioned Elam in oracles.

Other biblical references mention Elam as a personal name or homeland. Perhaps most interesting is the presence of men from Elam on the day of Pentecost. These may have been Jews from the region of Elam or converts to Judaism (Acts 2:9). God was still gathering His people from there. See Persia; Cyrus; Assyria.

3. A clan head of tribe of Benjamin living in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 8:24). 4. A priestly gatekeeper under David (1 Chron. 26:3). 5. Two clan leaders among the exiles who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:7,31). Compare Ezra 8:7; 10:2, 26. 6. A post-exilic leader who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:14). 7. A priest who helped Nehemiah lead the people in celebrating the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:42).

Albert F. Bean

ELASAH (Ĕl ā′ săh) Personal name meaning, "God has made." 1. Son of Shaphan, the royal scribe. He took Jeremiah's message to the exiled community in Babylon while on a mission for King Zedekiah (Jer. 29:3). 2. Descendant of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:39–40); spelled Eleasah in English translations. 3. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37); spelled Eleasah in English translations. Compare 9:43. 4. Priest with a foreign wife who agreed to divorce her to avoid temptation of foreign gods in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:22).

ELATH (Ē′ lăth) or ELOTH (Ē′ lōth) Place name meaning, "ram," "mighty trees," or "terebinth." See Terebinth. Port city on northern end of Red Sea. Israel passed through it on way through Edom in wilderness (Deut. 2:8). It was significant enough to serve as a point of reference to identify Ezion-geber, where King Solomon made his naval vessels (1 Kings 9:26; compare 2 Chron. 8:17–18). Later King Uzziah (792-740) rebuilt the seaport and controlled it for Judah (2 Kings 14:22). Archaeologists have usually identified Elath as another name for Ezion-geber and located it at tell el-Kheleifeh. More recent archaeological work has attempted to show that Ezion-geber was the port city on the island of Jezirat Faraun. Elath would then be the mainland base to which goods were transferred for loading onto pack animals for the long caravan travels northward to Judah, Israel, Syria, or Phoenicia or for travels eastward to Assyria or Babylonia or westward to Egypt. See Ezion-geber.

Aqaba, Jordan, at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba. In the distance is Elath.

EL-BERITH (El-bĕr′ ĭth) Name of god meaning, "god of the covenant." A god worshiped in a temple at Shechem. It had a stronghold or citadel guarding it. There the citizens of Shechem sought protection when Abimelech attacked them, but Abimelech set the citadel on fire (Judg. 9:46–49). KJV translates "god Berith." See Baal-berith; Shechem.

EL-BETHEL (Ĕl-bĕth′ ĕl) Place name meaning, "god of the house of El (god)." Either Bethel or place in or near Bethel, where Jacob built an altar to God as memorial to his previous visit to Bethel, when he had seen a vision of God (Gen. 35:7; compare 28:10–19). Apparently the name used for God was used as a place name. See God of the Fathers.

ELDAAH (Ĕl dā′ ăh) Personal name meaning, "God has called," "God has sought," or "God of wisdom." Son of Midian and grandson of Abraham thus original ancestor of clan of Midianites (Gen. 25:4).

ELDAD (Ĕl′ dăd) Personal name meaning, "God loved." Along with Medad, he was one of seventy elders of Israel God selected to help Moses, but the two did not meet at the tabernacle with the others. Still the Spirit came upon Eldad and Medad in the camp, and they prophesied. Joshua attempted to stop them, but Moses prayed that all God's people might have the Spirit (Num. 11:16–29). See Prophet; Spirit; Medad

ELDER Prominent member of both Jewish and early Christian communities. In the Old Testament, "elder" usually translates the Hebrew word zaqen from a root which means "beard" or "chin." In the New Testament, the Greek word is presbuteros, which is transliterated in English as "presbyter" and from which the word "priest" was derived.

Elders in the Old Testament From the beginning of Israelite history, the elders were the leaders of the various clans and tribes. When the tribes came together to form the nation of Israel, the elders of the tribes naturally assumed important roles in governing the affairs of the nation. Moses was commanded to inform the "elders of Israel" of the Lord's intention to deliver Israel from Egypt and to take the elders with him to confront the pharaoh (Ex. 3:16,18). Similarly, seventy of the elders participated with Moses at the covenant meal at Sinai (Ex. 24:9–11). As the task of governing Israel grew in complexity, part of the burden was transferred from Moses to a council of seventy elders (Num. 11:16–17).

During the period of the Judges and the monarchy, the elders were prominent in the political and judicial life of Israel. They demanded that Samuel appoint a king (1 Sam. 8:4–5); they played crucial roles in David's getting and retaining the throne (2 Sam. 3:17; 5:3; 17:15; 19:11–12); and they represented the people at the consecration of the Temple of Solomon (1 Kings 8:1,3). In the legal codes of Deuteronomy the elders are responsible for administering justice, sitting as judges in the city gate (Deut. 22:15), deciding cases affecting family life (Deut. 21:18–21, 22:13–21), and executing decisions (Deut. 19:11–13; 21:1–9).

Although elders were less prominent in the post-exilic period and the term was apparently not much used in Jewish communities outside Palestine, the "council of elders" was an integral part of the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem. In the New Testament, frequent reference is made to the elders of the Jews, usually in conjunction with the chief priests or scribes (for example, Matt. 21:23; Mark 14:43). In this context the elders, apparently members of leading families, had some authority but were not the principal leaders in either religious or political affairs.

Elders in the New Testament In the earliest Jewish Christian churches, at least the church in Jerusalem, the position of "elder" was almost certainly modeled after the synagogue pattern. Although there are few specific details about the function of elders in the Jerusalem church, they apparently served as a decision-making council. They are often mentioned in conjunction with the apostles, and some passages give the impression that the apostles and elders of Jerusalem considered themselves to be a decision-making council for the whole church (Acts 15; 21:17–26).

Other churches also had elders. Acts 14:23 reports that Paul and Barnabas appointed elders in churches on their missionary journey. These elders do not seem to fit the Jewish pattern, however. In the address to the Ephesian elders Paul referred to them as overseeing the church and serving as shepherds of the church (Acts 20:28). Paul did not use the term "elders" often usually referring to the functions of ministry rather than titles of offices. For example, in Romans 12:6–9, Paul referred to those with gifts for prophecy, serving, teaching, and several other aspects of ministry (compare 1 Cor. 12). Although those exercising such gifts in churches are not expressly called elders, it is likely that at least some of them were elders. Thus, elders in the Pauline churches were probably spiritual leaders and ministers, not simply a governing council.

One of the most debated questions concerning the pattern of early Christian ministry is the relationship between bishops and elders. Some scholars believe the two terms are interchangeable; others argue that they refer to distinct offices. Nowhere in the letters of Paul is there any explicit reference to the duties of either, nor is there any listing of the qualifications of elders. Titus 1: 5–9 is the only passage which mentions both terms. The passage begins with a direction that elders be appointed in every town and continues with a description of the qualifications for a bishop. The context leads to the conclusion that the directions and the qualifications refer to the same persons, thus implying that the terms are interchangeable.

The qualifications in Titus 1:6–9 and in 1 Timothy 3:1–7 apparently apply to elders. It becomes apparent that the elders were the spiritual leaders of the churches. Taken as a whole, the qualifications describe one who is a mature Christian of good repute, with gifts for teaching, management, and pastoral ministry. The only specific reference to the ministry of elders is the description (Jas. 5:14–15) of elders praying for and anointing a sick person. Although "bishop" usually occurs in the singular form, none of these passages indicate that there was only one elder in each congregation. The nature of the relationship between the various elders is nowhere described.

Fred A. Grissom

ELEAD (Ĕl′ ė ăd) Personal name meaning, "God is a witness." Member of tribe of Ephraim killed by men of Gath for stealing their cattle (1 Chron. 7:21). See Ezer.

ELEADAH (Ĕl′ ė ā dăh) Personal name meaning, "God adorned Himself." Modern translation spelling for KJV Eladah, a descendant of Ephraim (1 Chron. 7:20).

ELEALEH (Ĕl ė ā′ lĕh) Moabite place name meaning, "God went up" or "high ground." Town that tribe of Reuben requested from Moses and strengthened (Num. 32:3,37). Isaiah announced judgment on the town (Isa. 15:4; 16:9; compare Jer. 48:34). It is modern el-ʿAl, a mile north of Heshbon in a fertile plain.

ELEASAH (Ĕl ė ā′ săh) Personal name meaning, "God acted," or "God made," using same Hebrew spelling as Elasah. 1. A member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:39–40). 2. A descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37; 9:43).

ELEAZAR (Ĕl ė ā ′ zȧ r) Personal name meaning, "God helps." 1. The third son of Aaron (Ex. 6:23) and high priest of Israel (Num. 20:28). After Aaron's death, Eleazar took his place as Moses' helper. It was in the presence of Eleazar that Moses commissioned Joshua (Num. 27:22). According to Joshua 14:1, Eleazar and Joshua were the key figures in the distribution of Canaanite territories among the Israelite tribes. When he died, Eleazar was buried on a hill belonging to his son Phinehas (Josh. 24:33). He was an ancestor of Ezra the scribe (Ezra 7:5). See Aaron; Priests and Levites.

2. The son of Abinadab who was sanctified by the men of Kirjath-jearim to have responsibility for the ark of the Lord (1 Sam. 7:1).

3. One of David's renowned warriors, the son of Dodo (2 Sam. 23:9).

4. A son of Mahli who died having had no sons, but only daughters (1 Chron. 23:21–22).

5. The son of Phinehas who assisted in weighing out the silver and gold utensils in the house of God (Ezra 8:33).

6. One of the sons of Parosh in a list of persons who had married foreign wives. He later put away his wife because of Ezra's reform banning foreign marriage (Ezra 10:25).

7. A musician involved in the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:42).

8. The son of Eliud and father of Matthan. He was an ancestor of Joseph the husband of Mary (Matt. 1:15).

ELECT LADY The recipient of John's second letter (2 John 1) sometimes understood to be an individual but the phrase probably is a way of referring to a local church congregation. The members of the church would then be the "children" who are mentioned in the same verse. The "elect sister" of verse 13 would be another congregation whose members were sending greeting.

ELECTION God's plan to bring salvation to His people and His world. The doctrine of election is at once one of the most central and one of the most misunderstood teachings of the Bible. At its most basic level, election refers to the purpose or plan of God whereby He has determined to effect His will. Thus election encompasses the entire range of divine activity from creation, God's decision to bring the world into being out of nothing, to the end time, the making anew of heaven and earth. The word "election" itself is derived from the Greek word, eklegomai, which means, literally, "to choose something for oneself." This in turn corresponds to the Hebrew word, bachar. The objects of divine selection are the elect ones, a term found with increasing frequency in the later writings of the Old Testament and at many places in the New (Matt. 22:14; Luke 18:7; Col. 3:12; Rev. 17:14). The Bible also uses other words such as "choose," "predestinate," "foreordain," "determine," and "call" to indicate that God has entered into a special relationship with certain individuals and groups through whom He has decided to fulfill His purpose within the history of salvation.

Israel as the Object of God's Election The doctrine of election is rooted in the particularity of the Judeo-Christian tradition, that is, the conviction that out of all the peoples on earth God has chosen to reveal Himself in a special, unique way to one particular people. This conviction resonates through every layer of Old Testament literature from the early awareness of Israel as "the people of Yahweh" through the Psalms (147:19–20*a*, "He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation"; compare Isa. 14:1; Ezek. 20:5). Five major motifs in the Old Testament portray God's election of Israel.

(1) Election is the result of the sovereign initiative of God. At the very beginning of Israel's role in salvation history is the call of Abraham to leave his homeland for a new one which would be shown unto him (Gen. 12:1–7). This directive came to Abraham from God who also promised to bless his descendants and all peoples on earth through them. While Abraham responded to this call in obedience and faith, his election was not the result of his own efforts, but solely of God's decision. (2) The central word in Israel's vocabulary for describing their special relationship with God was covenant. This covenant was not a contract between equal partners, but a bond established by God's unmerited favor and love. The gracious character of the covenant is a major theme in Deuteronomy. "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people" (Deut. 7:6–7). (3) Within the covenanted community God selected certain individuals to fulfill specific functions. The following persons are said to be elected in this sense: Abraham (Neh. 9:7), Moses (Ps. 106:23), Aaron (Num. 16:1—17:13), David (Ps. 78:70), Solomon (1 Chron. 28:10), and Zerubbabel (Hag. 2:23). Kings, priests, and prophets are all chosen by God, though in different ways and for various purposes. Jeremiah believed that he had been elected and set apart as a prophet even before he was born (Jer. 1:4–5). (4) Israel's election was never intended to be a pretext for pride, but rather an opportunity for service. "I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, . . . for a light of the Gentiles" (Isa. 42:6). From time to time the children of Israel were tempted to presume upon God's gracious favor, to assume, for example, that because the Lord had placed His temple at Jerusalem, they were exempt from judgment. Again and again the prophets tried to disabuse them of this false notion of security by pointing out the true meaning of the covenant and their mission among the nations (Jer. 7:1–14; Amos 3:2; Jonah). (5) In the later Old Testament writings, and especially during the intertestamental period, there is a tendency to identify the "elect ones" with the true, faithful "remnant" among the people of God. The birth of the Messiah is seen to mark the dawn of the age of salvation for the remnant (Ezek. 34:12–13, 23–31; Mic. 5:1–2). The community of Essenes at Qumran saw themselves as an elect remnant whose purity and faithfulness presaged the Messianic Age.

Election and the New Covenant The early Christians saw themselves as heirs of Israel's election, "a chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people" (1 Pet. 2:9). Paul treats this theme most extensively, but we should not overlook its central importance for the entire New Testament. Again, certain individuals are singled out as chosen by God: the twelve apostles (Luke 6:13), Peter (Acts 15:7), Paul (Acts 9:15), and Jesus Himself (Luke 9:35; 23:35). In the Synoptic Gospels the term "elect ones" is always set in an eschatological context, that is, the days of tribulation will be shortened "for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen" (Mark 13:20). Many of the parables of Jesus, such as that of the marriage feast (Matt. 22:1–14) and that of the laborers in the vineyard (Matt. 20:1–16), illustrate the sovereignty of God in salvation. In John, Jesus is the unmistakable Mediator of election: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you," He reminded the disciples (John 15:16*a*). Again, His followers are those who have been given to Him by the Father "before the world was" and "none of them is lost" (John 17:5,12). Also in John the shadow side of election is posed in the person of Judas, "the son of perdition." Though his status as one of the elect is called into question by his betrayal of Christ, not even this act was able to thwart the fulfillment of God's plan of salvation.

There are three passages where Paul deals at length with different aspects of the doctrine of election. In the first (Rom. 8:28–39) divine election is presented as the ground and assurance of the Christian's hope. Since those whom God has predestinated are also called, justified, and glorified, nothing can separate them from the love of God in Christ Jesus. The second passage (Rom. 9—11) is preoccupied with the fact of Israel's rejection of Christ which, in the purpose of God, has become the occasion for the entrance of Gentile believers into the covenant. In the third passage (Eph. 1:1–12) Paul pointed to the Christocentric character of election: God has chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world. We can refer to this statement as the evangelical center of the doctrine of election. Our election is strictly and solely in Christ. As the eternal Son, He is along with the Father and the Holy Spirit, the electing God; as the incarnate Mediator between God and humankind, He is the elected One. We should never speak of predestina-tion apart from this central truth.

Election and the Christian Life Paul admonished the Thessalonians to give thanks because of their election (2 Thess. 2:13), while Peter said that we should make our "calling and election sure" (2 Pet. 1:10). However, in the history of Christian thought few teachings have been more distorted or more misused. The following questions reveal common misperceptions. (1) Is not election the same thing as fatalism? Predestination does not negate the necessity for human repentance and faith; rather it establishes the possibility of both. God does not relate to human beings as sticks and stones but as free creatures made in His own image. (2) If salvation is based on election, then why preach the gospel? Because God has chosen preaching as the means to awaken faith in the elect (1 Cor. 1:21). We should proclaim the gospel to everyone without exception, knowing that it is only the Holy Spirit who can convict, regenerate, and justify. (3) Does the Bible teach "double predestination," that God has selected some for damnation as well as some for salvation? There are passages (Rom. 9:11–22; 2 Cor. 2:15–16) which portray God as a potter who has molded both vessels of mercy and vessels of destruction. Yet the Bible also teaches that God does not wish any one to perish but for all to be saved (John 3:16; 2 Pet. 3:9). We are not able to understand how everything the Bible says about election fits into a neat logical system. Our business is not to pry into the secret counsel of God but to share the message of salvation with everyone and to be grateful that we have been delivered from darkness into light. (4) Does not belief in election result in moral laxity and pride? Paul says that God chose us "to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit" (2 Thess. 2:13). We are to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, even though to be sure, it is God who is at work within us both to will and do His good pleasure (Phil. 2:12–13). The proper response to election is not pride but gratitude for God's amazing grace which saves eternally. Election, then, is neither a steeple from which we look in judgment on others, nor a pillow to sleep on. It is rather a stronghold in time of trial and a confession of praise to God's grace and to His glory. Timothy George

EL-ELOHE-ISRAEL (Ĕl-ē1 ō′ hĕ-Ĭs′ rā ĕl) Divine name meaning, "God, the God of Israel." The name Jacob gave altar he set up in land he bought near Shechem (Gen. 33:20). See Patriarchs.

EL-ELYON See El; God.

ELEMENTS, ELEMENTAL SPIRITS (Greek stoicheia) The basic idea of stoichei is a member in a series. At Hebrews 5:12 the term means basic or fundamental principles of Christian belief. The meaning of the term in other New Testament contexts is disputed. In the Pauline uses (Ga. 4:3,9; Col. 2:8,20) English translations are divided between rudiments, that is, basic principles, (KJV, NAS, NIV) and elementary spirits (NRSV, REB, TEV). At 2 Peter 3:10,12 most English translation render stoicheia as elements, that is, component parts. TEV takes the term with the preceding phrase, thus rendering it heavenly bodies.

ELEPH (Ē′ lĕph) KJV spelling of Haeleph. See Haeleph.

EL-HANAN (Ĕl hā′ năn) Personal name meaning, "God is gracious." The Bethlehemite who slew the brother of Goliath (2 Sam. 21:19). The Hebrew text, however, does not contain the words "the brother of." It states that El-hanan killed Goliath. First Chronicles 20:5 does indicate that El-hanan killed Lahmi, the brother of Goliath. A further variation in the texts from 2 Samuel and 1 Chronicles lies in the name of El-hanan's father: in 2 Samuel 21:19 it is Jaare-oregim; in 1 Chronicles 20:5, Jair. The proper reconciliation of these two passages, along with their relationship to 1 Samuel 17 (according to which Goliath was slain by David), constitutes one of the Old Testament's more baffling puzzles. See David.

ELI (Ē′ lī) Personal name meaning, "high." The priest at Shiloh who became the custodian of the child Samuel (1 Sam. 1:3). He was the father of Hophni and Phinehas. After Samuel's birth Hannah, his mother, brought him to the sanctuary at Shiloh in fulfillment of a vow she had made to the Lord. Eli thereby became the human agent largely responsible for the religious and spiritual training of the boy. When Samuel mistook the voice of God for the voice of Eli, Eli instructed him to ask the Lord to speak the next time he heard the voice (1 Sam. 3). Eli's death was precipitated by the news of the death of his sons and the capture of the ark of God by the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:18).

ELI, ELI, LAMA SABACHTHANI This cry of Jesus on the cross, traditionally known as the "fourth word from the cross" means, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34). It is a quotation from Psalm 22:1. The Markan form, Eloi, is closer to Aramaic than Matthew's more Hebraic Eli.

This saying of Jesus from the cross strikes a dissonant chord for some Christians, because it seems to indicate that Jesus felt forsaken by the Father. There are several ways to consider the meaning of this passage in reverent faith. It is possible to interpret these words as a beautiful testimony to Jesus' love of His Bible, the Old Testament, and His quoting of it in this hour of darkest crisis. In this case, such verses in Psalm 22 as 5, 7, 8, 12, 14, and 18 indicate that Jesus sees Himself and His fate in this Psalm. However, since the Gospels record only the first verse of the Psalm and we do not know whether Jesus quoted the entire Psalm, this view may run the risk of not taking the phrase at face value.

Another view sees this cry as indicating a genuine forsaking of Jesus by the Father, a forsaking which was necessary for our redemption. This view leads some to questions about the nature of the godhead and theories of atonement which we cannot address in this brief discussion. Perhaps the most serious difficulty of this view is that it raises the question of whether the idea of God the Father turning His back on the obedient Son is consistent with the general biblical teaching of the steadfastness and faithfulness of God. Would He desert a trusting child in such an hour?

A view which takes into consideration the full humanity—as well as full divinity—of Jesus seems most helpful. Obviously Jesus felt deserted as He bore the burden of human sin and suffered the agony of crucifixion. This feeling of His death as a "ransom for many" may, indeed, have obscured for a time His feeling of closeness with the Father, so that even in dying He was tempted as we are. Rather than forsaking the Father in that moment, He cried out to Him in prayer. Earl Dans ELIAB (Ē lī′ ăb) Personal name meaning, "God is father." 1. Leader of tribe of Zebulun under Moses (Num. 1:9). He brought the tribe's offering at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:24). 2. Member of tribe of Reuben and father of Dathan and Abiram. See Abiram; Dathan. 3. First son of Jesse to pass by and be rejected when Samuel searched for king to replace Saul (1 Sam. 16:6). He fought in Saul's army (1 Sam. 17:13) and became angry at David's interest in fighting Goliath (1 Sam. 17:28). His daughter married King Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:18). He is apparently called Elihu in 1 Chronicles 27:18. 4. A Levite in the line of Kohath and ancestor of Samuel (1 Chron. 6:27). The same person is apparently called Elihu in 1 Samuel 1:1 and Eliel (1 Chron. 6:34). 5. A Levite appointed as a Temple musician under David (1 Chron. 15:18,20; 16:5). 6. A military leader from the tribe of Gad under David (1 Chron. 12:9).

ELIADA (Ē lī′ ă dă) Personal name meaning, "God has known." 1. Son born to David after he established his rule in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). In 1 Chronicles 14:7 he is listed as Beeliada ("Baal has known" or "the lord has known"). 2. Father of Rezon, who established himself as king of Damascus after David conquered Zobah (1 Kings 11:23). 3. A military commander of the tribe of Benjamin (2 Chron. 17:17) under King Jehoshaphat (873-848 B.C.).

ELIADAH (Ē lī′ ă dăh) KJV spelling of Eliada in 1 Kings 11:23. See Eliada.

ELIAH (Ē lī′ ăh) KJV spelling of Elijah in 1 Chronicles 8:27; Ezra 10:26. See Elijah.

ELIAHBA (Ē lī′ ăh bă) Personal name meaning, "God hides in safety" or "my god is Chiba." A leading soldier in David's army (2 Sam. 23:32).

ELIAKIM (Ē lī′ ă kĭm) Personal name meaning, "God will raise up." The son of Hilkiah who was in charge of the household of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Kings 18:18). That responsibility had previously belonged to Shebna; Isaiah 22:15–25 deals with the displacing of Shebna by Eliakim.

2. The son of Josiah who was placed on the throne of Judah by Pharaoh Neco of Egypt (2 Kings 23:34). The Pharaoh changed the name of Eliakim to Jehoiakim. The latter name is the one by which this individual is more familiarly known. See Jehoiakim.

3. A priest who was involved in the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:41).

4. An ancestor of Joseph the husband of Mary (Matt. 1:13).

5. The son of Melea, mentioned in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:30).

ELIAM (Ē lī′ ăm) Personal name meaning, "God is an uncle or relative" or "God of the people." 1. Father of Bathsheba (2 Sam. 11:3). The two parts of his name are reversed in 1 Chronicles 3:5, becoming Ammiel. 2. A leading warrior under David (2 Sam. 23:34). The related list in 1 Chronicles 11 does not have Eliam but in a similar position has Ahijah ("my brother is Yahweh").

ELIAS (Ē lī′ ăs) KJV New Testament spelling of Elijah, transliterating the Greek spelling. See Elijah.

ELIASAPH (Ē lī′ ă săph) Personal name meaning, "God has added." 1. The leader of the tribe of Gad under Moses (Num. 1:14). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:42). 2. A Levite of the family of Gershon (Num. 3:24).

ELIASHIB (Ē lī′ ă shĭb) Personal name meaning, "God repays or leads back." 1. A descendant of David in Judah after the return from Exile in Babylon (1 Chron. 3:24). 2. A leading priest under David (1 Chron. 24:12). 3. High priest in time of Nehemiah who led in rebuilding the sheep gate in the Jerusalem wall, a gate through which sheep were led to the nearby Temple for sacrifice (Neh. 3:1). His house was built into the city wall (Neh. 3:20). He was the son of Joiakim and the father of Joiada (Neh. 12:10). His grandson married the daughter of Sanballat, who strongly opposed Nehemiah's efforts (Neh. 13:28), possibly indicating some tension between Nehemiah and the priestly leaders. He may be the Eliashib whose son had a room in the Temple (Ezra 10:6). 4. A priest in the time of Nehemiah who administered the Temple storerooms and provided a place for Tobiah, Nehemiah's strong opponent (Neh. 13:4–9). This may be the Eliashib of Ezra 10:6. 5. A Levite and Temple singer in Ezra's day who agreed to divorce his foreign wife to avoid tempting Israel to worship other gods (Ezra 10:24). 6. Two Israelites who agreed to divorce his foreign wife under Ezra's leadership (Ezra 10:27,36).

ELIATHAH (Ē lī′ ā thăh) Personal name meaning, "my God has come." A Temple musician appointed under David to play and prophesy (1 Chron. 25:4). He headed a division of Temple workers (1 Chron. 25:27, where the Hebrew spelling of the name varies slightly). Many scholars of the Hebrew language think the names of the last nine sons of Heman in verse 4*b* originally formed a verse of a Hebrew psalm in which Eliathah would have meant, "My God are you."

ELIDAD (Ē lī′ dăd) A personal name meaning, "God loved" or "My God is uncle or friend." The name in Hebrew is a variant spelling of Eldad. See Eldad. Representative of tribe of Benjamin on commission God chose to help Joshua and Eleazar divide the land of Canaan among the tribes (Num. 34:21).

ELIEHOENAI (Ĕl′ ĭ ē hō ē′ nāĭ) Personal name meaning, "to Yaho are my eyes." Compare Psalm 123:2. 1. One of the Temple porters or gatekeepers under David (1 Chron. 26:3). 2. One of the twelve clan heads who returned to Jerusalem from Babylon with Ezra (Ezra 8:4). See Elihoenai.

ELIEL (Ē lī′ ĕl) Personal name meaning, "my God is God" or "my God is El." 1. A clan leader in the tribe of Manasseh east of the Jordan River (1 Chron. 5:23). 2. A Levite and ancestor of the singer Heman (1 Chron. 6:34). 3. A member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:20). 4. Another Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:22). 5. Military leader under David (1 Chron. 11:46), not listed in 1 Samuel 23. 6. Another military leader under David not listed in 1 Samuel 23 (1 Chron. 11:47). 7. A warrior from the tribe of Gad who served under David in the wilderness (1 Chron. 12:11). 8. A chief Levite in the time of David (1 Chron. 15:9, 11) 9. An overseer of Temple offerings among the Levites (2 Chron. 31:13) under King Hezekiah (715-686 B.C.).

ELIENAI (Ĕl ĭ ē′ nāĭ) An abbreviated form of the Hebrew personal name Eliehoenai. See Eliehoenai. The abbreviated form's literal meaning is "my God my eyes." A member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:20).

ELIEZER (Ĕl ĭ ē′ zēr) Personal name meaning, "God helps." 1. The servant of Abram who would have been the patriarch's heir if Abram had remained childless (Gen. 15:2). 2. The second son of Moses and Zipporah (Ex. 18:4). 3. One of the sons of Becher the Benjamite (1 Chron. 7:8).

4. One of the priests who blew the trumpets when the ark of the covenant was brought to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:24). 5. A ruler of the Reubenites (1 Chron. 27:6). 6. The son of Dodavah, who prophesied against Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 20:37).

7. One of the leaders whom Ezra sent for (Ezra 8:16). 8. A priest who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:18). 9. A Levite who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:23). 10. A member of the clan of Harim who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:31). 11. The son of Jorim mentioned in the genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:29).

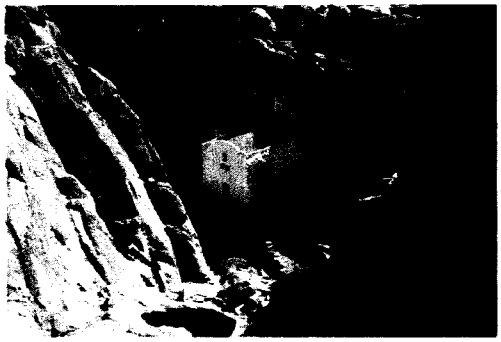
ELIHOENAI (Ĕl ĭ hō ē′ nāĭ) KJV spelling of Eliehoenai in Ezra 8:4. See Eliehoenai.

ELIHOREPH (Ĕl′ ĭ hō′ rĕph) Personal name meaning, "my God repays," or "my God is the giver of the autumn harvest," or borrowed from Egyptian, "Apis is my God." One of Solomon's two royal scribes with his brother Ahijah (1 Kings 4:3). Their father may have been Egyptian. The name could indicate that Solomon's father-in-law (1 Kings 3:1) had helped him organize and staff his administration. Shisha, the name of Elihorep's father, is the Egyptian word for scribe. REB takes Elihoreph as a title: "adjutant-general."

ELIHU (E lī′ hū) Personal name meaning, "he is God." 1. The son of Barachel the Buzite who addressed Job after the latter's first three friends had ended their speeches (Job 32:2). Elihu's words fill Job 32—37. Interpreters differ with regard to the significance of Elihu's speeches. His words seem to be somewhat more insightful than those of the other three friends, yet they still prove finally unsatisfactory as an explanation of Job's suffering. See Job.

2. Samuel's great grandfather (1 Sam. 1:1). 3. A member of tribe of Manasseh who defected to David (1 Chron. 12:20). 4. Mighty military hero under David (1 Chron. 26:7). 5. David's brother in charge of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 27:18).

ELIJAH (E lī′ jăh) Personal name meaning, "my God is Yah." The prophet from the ninth century B.C. from Tishbe of Gilead in the Northern Kingdom has been called the grandest and the most romantic character that Israel ever produced. See 1 Kings 17:1—2 Kings 2:18.



He was a complex man of the desert who counseled kings. His life is best understood when considered from four historical perspectives which at times are interrelated: his miracles, his struggle against Baalism, his prophetic role, and his eschatological relationship to Messiah.

Miracles His first miracle was associated with his prophecy before King Ahab (1 Kings 17:1) in which he said there would be no rain or dew apart from his declaration. Immediately after the prophecy, he retreated to the brook Cherith where he was fed by ravens.

His next refuge was Zarephath where he performed the miracle of raising the widow's dead son (1 Kings 17:17–24). Here he was first called "a man of God."

On Mount Carmel his greatest public miracle involved his encounter with the 450 prophets of Baal and the 400 prophets of Asherah (1 Kings 18:19–40). The contest was to determine the true God. The false prophets called on their gods, and Elijah called on His God to see which would rain fire from heaven. After the false prophets failed to hear from their gods, Elijah wet the wood on his altar to the true God by pouring four jars of water over it three times. In response of Elijah's prayer, Yahweh rained fire from heaven to consume the wet wood. As a result of their deception, Elijah ordered the false prophets killed.

The Chapel of Elijah on Mt. Sinai, commemorating the traditional site to which Elijah fled.

Elijah next prophesied that the drought was soon to end (1 Kings 18:41) after three rainless years. From Carmel, Elijah prayed. He sent his servant seven times to see if rain was coming. The seventh time a cloud the size of a hand appeared on the horizon. Ahab was told to flee before the storm. Elijah outran his chariot and the storm to arrive at Jezreel.

Baalism Interwoven in the life of Elijah is his struggle with Baalism. Jezebel, daughter of Ethbaal, king of Sidon and Tyre (1 Kings 16:31), was Ahab's wife and Israel's queen. She brought the worship of her god Baal into Ahab's kingdom. Even "Ahab served Baal a little" (2 Kings 10:18). The contest on Carmel showed a contrast between the contesting dieties. Yahweh's power and Baal's impotence was further revealed through the drought. A later involvement with Naboth showed the moral superiority of Elijah's faith (2 Kings 9:25–37).

Jezebel planned revenge toward Elijah for ordering the false prophets slain, so Elijah retreated to Judah and finally Mount Horeb. There he observed the power of the wind, earthquake, and fire; but the Lord was not seen in these forces. In a small voice the Lord commanded him to go anoint Hazael king of Syria, Jehu king of Israel, and Elisha as his own successor (1 Kings 19:1–17).

Prophet His prophetic role constantly placed Elijah in opposition to the majority of the people of his nation. His prophetic confrontations involved King Ahab and later his son Ahaziah. Their toleration of polytheism was the ongoing reason for Elijah's prophetic denunciations.

When Ahaziah fell and injured himself, he sent messengers to ask Baal-zebub (lord of flies) about his fate. Elijah intercepted them and sent word back to Ahaziah that he was soon to die (2 Kings 1). Ahaziah sent three different detachments of fifty soldiers each to arrest Elijah. The first two units were destroyed by fire from heaven. The captain of the third group pleaded for his life. He safely escorted Elijah to the king where he delivered the prophecy of his pending death personally.

Relationship to Messiah Elijah and Elisha were involved in the schools of the prophets when Elijah struck the waters of the Jordan and they parted to allow their crossing (2 Kings 2:1–12).

Malachi promised God would send Elijah the prophet before the coming "day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5). John the Baptist was spoken of as the one who would go before Messiah "in the spirit and power" of Elijah (Luke 1:17). John personally denied that he was literally Elijah reincarnate (John 1:21,25). Some considered Jesus to be Elijah (Matt. 16:14; Mark 6:15).

Entrance to Elijah's cave near Tyre.

Elijah appeared along with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus to discuss His "departure." Here Peter suggested that three tabernacles be built for Jesus, Moses, and Elijah (Matt. 17:4; Mark 9:5; Luke 9:33).

The two witnesses referred to in Revelation 11:6 are not identified by name, but their capacity

"to shut heaven, that it rain not . . . " leads many to conclude they are Moses and Elijah.

Nelson Price

ELIKA (Ē lī′ ká) Personal name meaning, "my God has arisen" or "my God has vomited." One of David's military heroes from the village of Harod (2 Sam. 23:25). He does not appear in the parallel list in 1 Chronicles 11.

ELIM (Ē′ lĭm) Place name meaning, "trees." One of the encampments of the Israelites after the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 15:27). It was the first place where they found water. It had twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees (Num. 33:9). Its exact location is unknown.

ELIMELECH (Ē lĭm′ ē lĕch) Personal name meaning, "my God is king." The husband of Naomi, who led his family from Bethlehem to Moab to escape famine and then died in Moab. This prepared the scene for the Book of Ruth (Ruth 1:2–3; compare 4:3).

ELIOENAI (Ēl ĭ ō ē′ nâi) Personal name meaning, "to Yo are my eyes," a Hebrew spelling variant of Eliehoenai. See Eliehoenai. 1. A post-exilic descendant of David, maintaining Israel's royal line (1 Chron. 3:23–24). 2. Clan leader of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36). 3. A grandson of Benjamin and thus great grandson of Jacob (1 Chron. 7:8). 4. A priest who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to protect the community from false worship (Ezra 10:22). 5. An Israelite who agreed to divorce his foreign wife (Ezra 10:27). 6. A priest who led in the service of dedication and thanksgiving for the completion of repairs of the wall around Jerusalem (Neh. 12:41).

ELIPHAL (Ē lī′ phăl) Personal name meaning, "God has judged." Military hero under David (1 Chron. 11:35). In 2 Samuel 23:34 the name appears as Eliphelet.

ELIPHALET (Ē lĭph′ ă lĕt) KJV spelling of Eliphelet (2 Sam. 5:16; 1 Chron. 14:7). See Eliphelet.

ELIPHAZ (Ĕl′ ĭ phăz) Personal name meaning, "my god is gold." 1. A son of Esau by his wife Adah the daughter of Elon the Hittite (Gen. 36:4). Eliphaz became the ancestor of the chieftains of several Edomite clans (Gen. 36:15–16).

2. One of three men who visited Job and engaged the sufferer in dialogue (Job 2:11). He is identified as a Temanite, meaning he was from Teman in Edom. His recorded speeches to Job are marked by a simplistic theological traditionalism and a tone of moral superiority. He may have been a descendant of Eliphaz the son of Esau. See Job.

ELIPHELEH (Ē lĭph′ ē lĕh) KJV spelling of Eliphelehu (1 Chron. 15:18,21) based on early Greek transliteration of the Hebrew. See Eliphelehu.

ELIPHELEHU (Ē lĭph′ ĕ lē hū) Personal name meaning, "God treated him with distinction." Levite and musician in Temple under David (1 Chron. 15:18,21).

ELIPHELET (Ē lĭph′ ĕ lĕt) Personal name meaning, "God is deliverance." 1. David's son born in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). He is apparently listed twice in both 1 Chronicles 3:6,8 and 14:5,7, with an abbreviated Hebrew spelling in 14:5. See Elpalet. 2. A descendant of Saul and Jonathan in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:39). 3. A clan leader who accompanied Ezra on his return from Exile in Babylon (Ezra 8:13). 4. A man who divorced his foreign wife under Ezra's leadership to avoid false worship among God's people (Ezra 10:33). 5. A famous warrior under David (2 Sam. 23:34).

ELISABETH (E′ lĭs ′ ă bĕth) Personal name meaning, "my God is good fortune" or "my God has sworn an oath." A woman descended from Aaron who was the wife of Zacharias the priest (Luke 1:5). Both she and her husband are described in Luke 1:6 as being noteworthy examples of piety and devotion to the Lord. However, she was barren in her old age. God removed from her the stigma of childlessness, and she became the mother of John the Baptist, forerunner of Christ. She also was kin to Mary the mother of Jesus; but the Bible does not indicate the exact degree of relationship between the two women. See John the Baptist; Annunciation.

ELISEUS (Ĕl ĭ sē′ ŭs) KJV spelling of Elisha, following the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew, in Luke 4:27. See Elisha.

ELISHA (E lī′ shà) Personal name meaning, "my God is salvation." A ninth century B.C. Israelite prophet, son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah (1 Kings 19:16).

His Name and Call Experience Elisha was plowing one day when "Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him." (1 Kings 19:19). This action symbolically manifested God's plan to bestow the prophetic powers of Elijah upon Elisha. The chosen one understood the call of God for, "he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah. . . . " (1 Kings 19:20). That Elisha felt the call of prophetic succession is again clear following Elijah's dramatic ascent into heaven. There Elisha "took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him. . . . " (2 Kings 2:13).

The beginning of Elisha's ministry should be dated to the last years of King Ahab's rule (1 Kings 19) or approximately 850 B.C. The prophet then served faithfully during the reigns of Ahaziah

(about 853 B.C.), Jehoram or Joram (852 B.C.), Jehu (c. 841 B.C.), Jehoahaz (c. 814 B.C.), and Jehoash or Joash (798 B.C.).

His Miracles After Elijah insisted to his chosen successor that he, "Ask what I shall do for you, before I am taken from you," Elisha answered, "Let me inherit a double portion of spirit" (2 Kings 2:9 NIV). Taking up the mantle of the departed prophet, he parted the Jordan River. Following this miracle the prophetic order or "sons of the prophets" declared, "The spirit of Elijah is resting on Elisha" (2 Kings 2:15).

Soon thereafter, Elisha made bad water wholesome (2 Kings 2:19–22). His reputation soon assumed so sacred an aura that harassment of the prophet merited severe punishment. For mocking the bald prophet, 42 boys were attacked by two she-bears (2 Kings 2:23–24).

The prophet used his power to provide a widow with an abundance of valuable oil to save her children from slavery (2 Kings 4:1–7). He made a poisonous pottage edible (2 Kings 4:38–41), fed a hundred men by multiplying limited resources (2 Kings 4:42–44), and miraculously provided water for thirsting armies (2 Kings 3:13–22). Once he made an iron ax head float (2 Kings 6:5–7).

Some of the miracles of Elisha are quite well known and loved. Who has not been moved by the story of the Shunammite woman and her son? This barren woman and her husband who had graciously opened their home to the prophet had in turn been given a son by the Lord. One day while the boy worked in the field with his father, he suffered an apparent heartstroke and died. The compassion and tenacious hope of the mother met its reward when she sought and found the man of God and pleaded for help. God's power through Elisha raised the boy from the dead (2 Kings 4:8–37).

Elisha's spring at Jericho which is the source for Elisha's well (located in the covered area).

Yet another well-known story is the healing of Naaman the leper and the subsequent affliction of Gehazi the dishonest servant of Elisha (2 Kings 5:1–27). The miraculous powers of the prophet were prominently displayed still further in the war between Syria and Israel. The Syrian soldiers were blinded, then made to see. Then, at last, divine intervention totally foiled the Syrian seige of Samaria (2 Kings 6:8–7:20).

Elisha's power did not end at death. For when a dead man was thrown into Elisha's grave and touched his bones, "he revived, and stood up on his feet" (2 Kings 13:21).

In carrying out the second and third commands of the "still small voice" to Elijah (1 Kings 19:11–16), Elisha enhanced his legacy beyond the realm of miracle worker. He played a major role in Hazael becoming king of Syria (2 Kings 8:7–15) and also in the anointing of Jehu as king of Israel (2 Kings 9:1–13).

Powerful enough to perform miracles and appoint kings, yet sensitive enough to weep over the fate of Israel (2 Kings 8:11,12), Elisha, disciple and successor to Elijah, proved to be both prophet and statesman. J. Randall O'Brien

ELISHAH (Ē lī′ shăh) Place name of unknown meaning. Elishah, or Alashiya as it appears in Hittite, Akkadian, and Ugaritic texts, is a name for all or part of the island of Cyprus, which exported copper and purple cloth. Others would locate it as the present Haghio Kyrko in Crete. Among the Amarna letters from Egypt are letters from the king of Elishah to the pharaoh mentioning copper exports. The Greeks established a colony on Cyprus by about 1500 B.C. This would explain the relationship of Elishah as a son of Javan or the Greeks in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:4). Compare 1 Chronicles 1:7. Ezekiel noted in his lament over Tyre that Tyre had imported from Elishah the purple fabric for which Tyre was famous (Ezek. 27:7).

ELISHAMA (Ē lĭsh′ ă má) Personal name meaning, "God heard." 1. Leader of the tribe of Ephraim under Moses in the wilderness (Num. 1:10). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:48–53). Compare 1 Chronicles 7:26. 2. David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). He is apparently listed twice in 1 Chronicles 3:6,8, though 1 Chronicles 14:5 reads the first Elishama as Elishua, as in 2 Samuel 5:15. 3. A royal scribe under King Jehoiakim (609-597 B.C.). Baruch's scroll of Jeremiah's preaching was stored in Elishama's room before it was taken to be read to the king (Jer. 36:12–21). 4. An ancestor with royal bloodlines of Ishmael, the person who murdered Gedaliah and took over political control of Judah immediately after Babylon had destroyed Jerusalem (2 Kings 25:25). 5. A descendant of the clan of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:41). 6. Priest under King Jehoshaphat (873-848 B.C.). He taught the book of the law to the people of Judah at the king's request (2 Chron. 17:7–9).

ELISHAPHAT (Ė lĭsh′ ȧ phăt) Personal name meaning, "God had judged." Military captain who helped Jehoiada, the priest, overthrow Queen Athaliah and establish Joash (835-796 B.C.) as king of Judah (2 Chron. 23:1).

ELISHEBA (Ė lĭsh′ ė bä) Personal name meaning, "God is good fortune." Wife of Aaron, the high priest (Ex. 6:23).

ELISHUA (Ĕl′ ĭ shū ȧ) Personal name meaning, "God is salvation." David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:15). See Elishama, 2.

ELIUD (Ė lī′ ŭd) Personal name meaning, "God is high and mighty." Great, great grandfather of Joseph, the earthly father of Jesus (Matt. 1:14–15).

ELIZABETH (Ė lĭz′ ȧ bĕth) Americanized spelling used in modern translations of KJV Elisabeth. See Elisabeth.

ELIZAPHAN (Ĕl′ ĭ zā phăn) Personal name meaning, "God has hidden or treasured up." 1. A clan leader among the sons of Kohath among the Levites in the wilderness with Moses (Num. 3:30). Compare 1 Chronicles 15:8; 2 Chronicles 29:13. 2. Representative of tribe of Zebulun on the council to help Joshua and Eleazar divide the land among the tribes (Num. 34:25).

ELIZUR (Ė lī′ zûr) Personal name meaning, "God is a rock." Leader of tribe of Reuben under Moses in the wilderness (Num. 1:5). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:30–35).

ELKANAH (Ĕl kā′ nah) Personal name meaning, "God created." 1. One of the sons of Korah, the priest (Ex. 6:24).

2. The son of Jeroham. He became the father of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:1). 3. A person named in a list of Levites (1 Chron. 6:23–26). 4. The father of Asa who is mentioned in a list of Levites (1 Chron. 9:16). 5. A Benjaminite warrior who deserted Saul and joined David (1 Chron. 12:6).

6. One of two gatekeepers for the ark of the covenant (1 Chron. 15:23).

7. An official in the service of King Ahaz of Judah who was assassinated by Zichri the Ephraimite (2 Chron. 28:7). See Samuel.

ELKOSH (Ĕl′ kŏsh) Place name of unknown meaning. The home of Nahum the prophet (Nah. 1:1). Although several traditions exist that identify various places as the site of Elkosh, its location remains unknown. That it was in Judea is fairly likely.

ELLASAR (Ĕl lā′ sär) Babylonian place name of unknown meaning. The capital city of King Arioch, who joined the eastern coalition against Sodom and Gomorrah, resulting in Abraham's involvement in war (Gen. 14:1). Identification with Larsa in Babylon was based on a false identification of Arioch. The Mari texts mention Ilanzura between Carchemish and Harran. Other scholars suggest Ellasar is an abbreviation for Til-Asurri on the Euphrates River. Others suggest it is located on the southern coast of the Black Sea near Pontus in Asia Minor. Thus the question of exact identification still remains open.

ELM See Plants in the Bible; Terebinth.

ELMADAM (Ĕl mā′ dăm) Personal name of unknown meaning. An ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:28).

ELMODAM (Ĕl mō′ dăm) KJV spelling of Elmadam. See Elmadam.

ELNAAM (Ĕl nā′ ăm) Personal name meaning, "God is a delight." Father of military leaders under David (1 Chron. 11:46). He is not listed in 2 Samuel 23.

ELNATHAN (Ĕl nā′ thăn) Personal name meaning, "God has given." 1. Father of King Jehoiachin's mother (2 Kings 24:8). 2. Possibly to be identified with 1. He was the member of King Jehoiakim's advisory staff who brought the prophet Uriah back to the king from Egypt for punishment (Jer. 26:22–23). He tried to prevent the king from burning Baruch's scroll of Jeremiah's preaching (Jer. 36:12–26). 2. Three men of the same name plus a "Nathan" are listed in Ezra 8:16 as part of the delegation Ezra sent to search for Levites to return from Babylon to Jerusalem with him. Many Bible students feel that copying of the manuscripts has introduced extra names into the list.

ELOI (Ė lō′ ī) Greek transliteration of Aramaic 'elohi, "my God." See Eli Eli Lama Sabachthani.

ELON (Ē′ lŏn) Personal and place name meaning, "great tree" or "tree of god." Compare Genesis 12:6; Judges 9:6,37. See Terebinth. 1. A son of Zebulun and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:14). A clan in Zebulun was thus named for him (Num. 26:26). 2. A judge from the tribe of Zebulun (Judg. 12:11–12). City in tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33), often transliterated into English as Allon. See Allon. The reference may simply be to a large tree which served as a boundary marker. 4. The site where Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, was buried, called, "Allon-bachuth" or "the oak of weeping" (Gen. 35:8). See Allonbachuth. The same point may be referred to as the "oak of Tabor" (1 Sam. 10:3) or the "palm tree of Deborah" (Judg. 4:5). See Bochim. 5. A leader in the tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:37).

A different Hebrew spelling underlies other examples of Elon in English translations. 1. The Hittite father of Esau's wife Bashemath (Gen. 26:34). 2. The Hittite father of Adah, Esau's wife (Gen. 36:2), Bashemath being listed as Ishmael's daughter (36:3). See Basemath. 3. City in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:43). It may be located at khirbet wadi Alin. It is probably the same place as Elon-beth-hanan (1 Kings 4:9), though some read Ajalon and Bethhanan or "Elon, and Beth-hanan" (REB).

ELON-BETH-HANAN (Ē′ lŏn-bĕth-hā′ năn) See Elon.

ELONITE (Ē′ lŏn īte) Citizen of Elon. See Elon.

ELOTH (Ē′ lŏth) Variant spelling of Elath. See Elath.

ELPAAL (Ĕl pā′ ăl) Personal name meaning, "God has made." A clan name in the tribe of Benjamin, mentioned twice in 1 Chronicles 8 (vv. 11-12,18). Bible students debate whether the references refer to the same clan ancestor or to two individuals. It is also uncertain whether he or his sons receive credit for building Ono and Lod (v. 12).

ELPALET (Ĕl pā′ lĕt) KJV spelling of Elpelet. See Elpelet.

ELPARAN (Ĕl pā′ rán) Place name meaning, "tree of Paran." The place where the eastern coalition of kings extended its victory over the Horites (Gen. 14:6). It is apparently a place in or near Elath. See Elath; Paran.

ELPELET (Ĕl pĕl′ ĕt) David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 14:5). This is apparently an abbreviated spelling of Eliphelet. See Eliphelet.

EL-SHADDAI See El; God.

ELTEKE or ELTEKEH (Ĕl tē kē) Place name meaning, "place of meeting," "place of hearing," or "plea for rain." A city in Dan (Josh. 19:44) assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:23). Egyptian pharaohs claim to have conquered an Altaku, which may be the same. Sennacherib of Assyria met an Egyptian army there about 701 B.C. It has been variously located at khirbet el-Muqenna' on the eastern edge of the coastal plain, at tell esh-Shalaf, and at tell el-Melat, northwest of Gezer.

ELTEKON (Ĕl tē′ kŏn) Place name meaning, "securing advice." Village in tribal territory of Judah in southern hill country (Josh. 15:59). Its location is unknown, though some have suggested khirbet ed-Deir west of Bethlehem.

ELTOLAD (Ĕl tō′ lăd) Place name meaning, "plea for a child." Village in tribal territory of Judah (Josh 15:30), given to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:4). First Chronicles 4:29 apparently abbreviates it as Tolad. Its location is not known.

ELUL (Ĕ̇′ lūl) Sixth month of Hebrew year, name taken over from Accadian. It included parts of August and September. See Nehemiah 6:15.

ELUZAI (Ĕ̇ lū′ zā ī) Personal name meaning, "God is my strength." A member of King Saul's tribe Benjamin, who became a military leader for David, while he lived as a fugitive in Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:5).

ELYMAS (Ĕl′ ỹ măs) Personal name possibly meaning, "wise." A magician and false prophet also known as Bar-jesus (Acts 13:6–11). At Paphos on the island of Cyprus, Elymas tried to dissuade the deputy Sergius Paulus from listening to the words of Barnabas and Paul. He was denounced by Paul and stricken temporarily blind. See Sergius Paulus.

ELYON See El; God.

ELZABAD (Ĕl zā′ băd) Personal name meaning, "God made a gift." 1. Soldier who fought for David while he was a fugitive in Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:12). 2. A Levite and grandson of Obed-Edom, identified as a valiant man (1 Chron. 26:7). He was a porter or gatekeeper in the Temple.

ELZAPHAN (Ĕl zā′ phăn) Personal name meaning, "God has hidden or treasured up." An abbreviated form of Elizaphan. A son of Uzziel, Aaron's uncle (Ex. 6:22). He helped carry the dead bodies of Nadab and Abihu out of the wilderness camp after God punished them (Lev. 10:4–5).

EMBALMING The process of preserving bodies from decay. Embalming originated in Egypt and was seldom used by the Hebrews. The practice is rarely mentioned in the Bible, and the human remains unearthed in Palestinian tombs generally show no signs of having been embalmed. In Genesis 50:2–3, it is recorded that Joseph ordered the embalming of Jacob's body and that "physicians" required forty days to perform the process. Verse 26 says Joseph was embalmed and laid to rest in Egypt. The embalming of these two patriarchs testifies both to their importance in the community and to plans to remove their bodies for burial in Canaan (Gen. 50:13; Ex. 13:19).

Related passages include 2 Chronicles 16:14 which describes the burial of Asa and the John 19:39–40 account of Jesus' burial. The use of spices mentioned in both of these passages did not constitute embalming but ceremonial purification.

The Egyptian art of mummification was an elaborate version of embalming which required seventy days for completion. Joe Haag EMEK-KEZIZ (Ē′ měk-kē′ zĭz) Place name meaning, "the cut off valley" or "the valley of gravel." It is listed as one of the cities assigned the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:21). Its location is not known.

EMERALD See Minerals and Metals.

EMERODS An archaic form of the word hemorrhoids used by the KJV for the disease(s) in Deuteronomy 28:27 and 1 Samual 5—6. It is impossible to identify the disease with certainty. Whatever its precise nature, the disease was regarded as incurable and fatal. Modern speech translations are agreed that the malady is likely not hemorrhoids. The underlying Hebrew term is rendered tumors except for the passage in Deuternomy where NRSV and TEV opt for ulcers or sores. The presence of tumors associated with an infestation of mice has suggested bubonic plague to some interpreters. On the basis of the earliest Greek Old Testament reading, the NIV includes the margin reading "tumors of the groin."

EMIM (Ē′ mĭm) National name meaning, "frightening ones." They lost a war to the eastern coalition of kings (Gen. 14:6) and are identified with a place in northern Moab, Shaveh Kiriathaim. They were ancient giants or Rephaim (Deut. 2:10–11). See Rephaim.

EMITES (Ē′ mītes) NIV translation of Emim. See Emim.

EMMANUEL (Em măn′ ū ĕl) See Immanuel.

EMMAUS (Ĕm mā′ ŭs) Place name meaning, "hot baths." A village that was the destination of two of Jesus' disciples on the day of His resurrection (Luke 24:13). As they traveled, they were joined by a person whom they later realized was the risen Christ. Emmaus was about 60 furlongs (approximately seven miles) from Jerusalem. That statement is the only clue to its location. As many as four sites have been proposed as the location of Emmaus, but certainty is not possible. See Resurrection.

EMMOR (Ĕm′ môr) KJV spelling of Hamor in Acts 7:16. See Hamor.

EMPEROR WORSHIP The practice of assigning the status of deity to rulers and high ranking officials so honored by the ruler.

Old Testament Kings who conquered a nation would displace the local gods in favor of their own as a way of establishing authority. Frequently this included worshiping the king himself (or queen). The assumption was that only a god could rise to such a high position on earth. Entire religions were built around the worship of the ruler, including ceremonies, sacrifices, statues, and images.

In the Book of Esther, Haman was made part of the imperial cult by King Ahasuerus; all the people were required to bow to him and hail him (Esther 3:1–5). The most obvious example of emperor worship in the Old Testament is the well-known story of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan. 3). King Nebuchadnezzar made an image of gold, presumably of himself, and commanded everyone to fall down and worship the image or be killed (3:5–6). Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refused to commit idolatry by worshiping the image (3:16–18). They were thrown into a furnace, but were not burned (3:27). Thereafter, Nebuchadnezzar permitted them to worship their God unhindered (3:29).

New Testament Emperor worship was firmly in place in the Roman Empire in the early days of Christianity. During the reigns of Nero, Domitian, and other Roman emperors, persecution of Christians was severe because of gross misconceptions regarding the practice of the Christian faith. Christians were considered undesirable and were vigorously rooted out. Standing trial if they worshiped the pagan gods, that is, the emperor and the imperial cult, they would be freed. If not, they would suffer all manner of punishments and death. All the suspected Christian had to do was sprinkle a few sacrificial grains of incense into the eternal flame burning in front of the statue of the emperor. Since the punishments were so horrible and the means of escape so easy, many Christians gave in. Many did not and were burned alive, killed by lions in the arena, or crucified.

Forum and Temple of Augustus in Rome—the major center of emperor worship.

A specific New Testament example of emperor worship is the worship of the beast in the Book of Revelation. Revelation 13 speaks of a beast that is given ruling authority. An image is made of the beast, and all are commanded to worship it (13:4,12, 14–15). Donna R. Ridge

ENAIM (Ē nā′ ĭm) Place name meaning, "two eyes or springs." A village near Timnah, where Tamar seduced Judah (Gen. 38:14). It is probably the same as Enam in the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:34). The exact location is not known. See Timnah.

ENAM (Ē′ năm) See Enaim.

ENAN (Ē′ năn) Personal name meaning, "eyes or springs." Father of Ahira, the leader of the tribe of Naphtali under Moses (Num. 1:15). See Ahira.

ENCHANTER See Magic; Sorcery; Divination.

ENDOR (Ĕn′ dôr) Place name meaning, "spring of Dor, that is, "spring of settlement." 1. Home of witch who brought up Samuel from the grave (1 Sam. 28:7). Psalm 83:10 says Jabin died there. Compare Judges 4—5. It is modern khirbet Safsafe, three miles south of Mount Tabor. 2. City tribe of Manasseh claimed but could not conquer (Josh. 17:11; compare Judg. 1:27).

ENEAS (Ē nē′ ăs) Variant spelling of Aeneas. See Aeneas.

EN-EGLAIM (Ĕn-ĕg′ lā ĭm) Place name meaning, "spring of the two calves." A spring near the Dead Sea, where Ezekiel predicted a miracle, the salt waters being made fresh and becoming a paradise for fishing (Ezek. 47:10). It is apparently Ain Feshcha on the western coast of the Dead Sea.

ENEMY An adversary, foe, or hater. An enemy is one who dislikes or hates another and seeks to harm the person. It can refer to an individual opponent or to a hostile force, either a nation or an army.

The natural inclination of all people is to hate their enemies. Some have even misconstrued God's law to teach hatred. Jesus taught rather to love one's enemies and to seek their good (Matt. 5:43–47). This is also the teaching of the Old Testament (Prov. 24:17; 25:21).

In the Bible, a person who disobeys divine commands is declared to be God's enemy. Paul referred to sinners as the enemies of God (Rom. 5:10). Job felt that God had become his enemy, too (Job 13:24). Because of this severed relationship, God has made provision for our forgiveness in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Satan is also called "the enemy" (1 Tim. 5:14–15). He has revealed himself as such throughout history by seeking to hurt men and women, leading them away from God.

The greatest and final enemy is death itself (1 Cor. 15:24). It is feared by all because of its finality and unknown nature. But the Bible teaches that Jesus has "abolished" death once for all (2 Tim. 1:10). Death need not be feared by those who have trusted Christ for the salvation He freely gives. Bradley S. Butler

EN-GANNIM (Ĕn-găn′ nĭm) Place name meaning, "the spring of gardens." 1. A town in the tribal territory of Judah located in the Shephalah (Josh. 15:34). It has been located at modern Beit Jemal, about two miles south of Beth-shemesh or at 'umm Giina one mile southwest of Beth-shemesh. 2. Town in tribal territory of Issachar designated as city for Levites (Josh. 19:21; 21:29). Anem (1 Chron. 6:73) is apparently an alternate spelling. The same place may be meant in 2 Kings 9:27 by Beth Haggan (NIV, REB, NRSV) or the "garden house" (KJV, NAS). It is located at modern Jenin west of Beth-shean and about 65 miles north of Jerusalem.

ENGEDI (Ĕn′ gĕ dī) Place name meaning, "place of the young goat." A major oasis along the western side of the Dead Sea about 35 miles southeast of Jerusalem. The springs of Engedi are full, and the vegetation is semitropical. Both biblical and extra-biblical sources describe Engedi as a source of fine dates, aromatic plants used in perfumes, and medicinal plants (Song of Sol. 1:14). It was a chief source of balsam, an important plant used for perfumes, and a major source of income for the area. Engedi apparently lay on a caravan route that led from the east shore of the Dead Sea around to its south, then up the west side to Engedi. From there the road went up to Tekoa and then to Jerusalem.

Engedi, also called Hazazon-tamar (2 Chron. 20:2), was inhabited by Amorites in the time of Abraham and was subjugated by Chedorlaomer (Gen. 14:7). In the tribal allotments, it was given to Judah and was in the district of Judah known as the wilderness district (Josh. 15:62). When David was fleeing from Saul, he hid in the area of Engedi (1 Sam. 23:29). Saul was in a cave near Engedi when David cut off a piece of his robe but spared his life (1 Sam. 24). During the reign of Jehoshaphat, Moabites, Ammonites, and others gathered at Engedi to attack Judah (2 Chron. 20:1–2).

The only natural waterfall in Israel is located at Engedi on the west side of the Dead Sea.

Recent excavations at Engedi have uncovered a fortress belonging to the period of the monarchy, a workshop used in producing perfumes, and a sanctuary belonging to the Chalcolithic or Early Bronze Age. Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

ENGINE A catapult or battering ram. See Arms and Armor.

ENGRAVE To impress deeply, to carve. Many materials were engraved including clay writing tablets (Isa. 8:1), metal, precious gems, stone (Zech. 3:9), and wood. Engraving was frequently done with an iron pen, a stylus, sometimes with a diamond point (Job 19:24; Jer. 17:1). Signet rings engraved with the sign or symbol of the owner were quite common throughout the ancient world (Gen. 38:18; Esther 3:12; Jer. 22:24). In fact, "like the engravings of a signet" ring or cylinder is a set phrase used to describe the various engraved gems of the high priest's vestments (Ex. 28:11, 21,36; 39:6,14). The Hebrew words translated engrave are used both for carving wood and working with precious stones in the construction of the tabernacle and Temple (Ex. 31:5; 35:33; 1 Kgs. 6:18,35; 2 Chron. 2:7). A graven image (Ex. 20:4) is a carved idol (as opposed to one cast in a mold).

EN-HADDAH (Ĕn-hăd′ dȧh) City in tribal lot of Issachar (Josh. 19:21). It is apparently el-Hadetheh about six miles east of Mount Tabor.

EN-HAKKORE (Ĕn-hăk′ kōr rė) Place name meaning, "spring of the partridge" or "spring of the caller." Place where God gave Samson water from the jawbone he had used to kill a thousand Philistines (Judg. 15:18–19). It is near Lehi, or literally translated, "Jawbone," which is probably near Beth-shemesh.

EN-HAZOR (Ĕn-hā′ zôr) Place name meaning, "spring of the enclosed village." A fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:37). It may be located at khirbet Hazireh, west of Kadesh. Others would locate it southwest of Kedesh on the border joining Naphtali and Asher.

EN-MISHPAT (Ĕn-mĭsh′ pȧt) Place name meaning, "spring of judgment." Another name for Kadesh, where the eastern coalition of kings defeated the Amalekites and Amorites. The location is usually called Kadesh-Barnea and identified with the oasis now called ain Hudeirat. See Kadesh-Barnea.

ENOCH (Ē′ nôch) Personal name meaning, "dedicated." 1. The son of Jared taken up to God without dying (Gen. 5:18). He became the father of Methuselah. Enoch lived in such close fellowship with God that he was translated into the presence of God without dying. Hebrews 11:5 attributes his translation to faith. According to Jude 14, he prophesied. The name of Enoch is associated with a large body of ancient extra-biblical literature. See Genesis; Resurrection; Apocalyptic; Apocrypha; Pseudepigrapha.

2. Son of Cain for whom Cain built a city and named it (Gen. 4:17–18).

ENON CITY (Ē′ nŏn Cĭ′ tў) TEV translation of Hazar-enan (Ezek. 47:17). See Hazar-enan.

ENOS (Ē′ nōs) or ENOSH (Ē′ nōsh) Personal name meaning, "humanity"or "a man." The son of Seth and therefore the grandson of Adam (Gen. 4:26). The period following his birth is identified as the time when people began to worship Yahweh. See Genesis 5:6–11.

EN-RIMMON (Ĕn-rĭm′ mōn) Place name meaning, "spring of the pomegranate." A town in Judah (Neh. 11:29) where people lived in Nehemiah's day (about 445 B.C.). Ain and Rimmon or Remmon appear as separate cities in the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:32), settled by the tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:7). These two are often read as one city (19:7, RSV but not NRSV), but this makes the numbers of the cities in the lists inaccurate. It is located at khirbet er-Ramamin, about two miles south of Lahav.

EN-ROGEL (Ĕn-rō′ gĕl) Place name meaning, "spring of the fuller" or "spring of the foot." A border town between the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:7) and that of Benjamin (Josh. 18:16). Jonathan and Ahimaaz, the priests' sons, stayed at En-rogel as messengers to relay to David what the priests might learn from Absalom when he took over Jerusalem from his father (2 Sam 17:17). Adonijah staged a party there to proclaim himself as David's successor as king of Judah (1 Kings 1:9). En-rogel lay near Jerusalem where the Kidron and Hinnom valleys met at modern Bir Ayyub.

ENROLLMENT Term used by the KJV of Luke 2:1–5 for the census or registration. See Census.

EN-SHEMESH (Ĕn-shē′ mĕsh) Place name meaning, "spring of the sun." Town on border between tribal territories of Judah (Josh. 15:7) and Benjamin (Josh. 18:17). It is located at ain el-Hod, "the spring of the apostles," about two miles east of Jerusalem on the eastern edge of Bethany.

EN-TAPPUAH (Ĕn-tăp pū′ ăh) Place name meaning, "spring of apple." A spring near the town of Tappuah which marked the border of the tribe of Manasseh and Ephraim (Josh. 17:7). See Tappuah.

ENTRANCE ROOM See Arch.

ENVY A painful or resentful awareness of another's advantage joined with the desire to possess the same advantage. The advantage may concern material goods (Gen. 26:14) or social status (30:1). Old Testament wisdom frequently warns against envying the arrogant (Ps. 73:3), the violent (Pr. 3:31), or the wicked (Ps. 37:1; Pr. 24:1,19). In the New Testament envy is a common member of vice lists as that which comes out of the person and defiles (Mark 7:22), as a characteristic of humanity in rebellion to God (Rom. 1:29), as a fruit of the flesh (Gal. 5:21), as a characteristic of unregenerate life (Tit. 3:3) and as a trait of false teachers (1 Tim. 6:4). Envy (sometimes translated jealousy by modern translations) was the motive leading to the arrest of Jesus (Matt. 27:18; Mark 15:10) and to opposition to the gospel in Acts (Acts 5:17, 13:45; 17:5). Christians are called to avoid envy (Ga. 5:26; 1 Peter 2:1).

Envy is sometimes a motive for doing good. The Preacher was disillusioned that hard work and skill were the result of envying another (Eccl. 4:4). Paul was, however, able to rejoice that the gospel was preached even if the motive were envy (Phil. 1:15).

En-Rogel with the traditional site of Jacob's Well located under the dome in the center of the photo.

The KJV rightly understood the difficult text in Jas. 4:5, recognizing that it is a characteristic of the human spirit that it "lusteth to envy". Contrary to modern translations, the Greek word used for envy here (phthonos) is always used in a negative sense, never in the positive sense of God's jealousy (Greek zealos). God's response to the sinful longings of the human heart is to give more grace (4:6). See Jealousy.

EPAENETUS (Ĕ pāē′ nĕ tŭs) Personal name meaning, "praise." The first Christian convert in Achaia and thus a friend with special meaning for Paul (Rom. 16:5). See Achaia.

EPAPHRAS (Ĕp′ ȧ phrăs) Personal name meaning, "lovely." A Christian preacher from whom Paul learned of the situation of the church in Colosse (Col. 1:7). He was a native of Colosse whose ministry especially involved Colosse, Laodicea, and Hierapolis. Later he was a companion of Paul during the latter's imprisonment. Though Epaphras is mentioned in the New Testament only in the letters to the Colossians and to Philemon, Paul evidently held this man in high regard.

EPAPHRODITUS (E păph′ rō dī′ tŭs) Personal name meaning, "favored by Aphrodite or Venus." A friend and fellow worker of Paul and the apostle (Phil. 2:25). He had delivered to Paul a gift from the church at Philippi while the apostle was in prison. While he was with Paul, Epaphroditus became seriously ill. After his recovery, Paul sent him back to Philippi, urging the church there to receive him "with all gladness" (Phil 2:29). The name Epaphroditus was common in the first century Greek-speaking world.

EPENETUS (Ĕ pē′ nĕ tŭs) Variant spelling of Epaenetus. See Epaenetus.

EPHAH (Ē′ pháh) Personal name meaning, "darkness." 1. Son of Midian and grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:4). The line came through Abraham's wife Keturah rather than Sarah and did not inherit as did Isaac. Ephah was thus the original ancestor of a clan of Midianites, and the clan name could be used in poetry in parallel with Midian to talk about the Midianites (Isa. 60:6). 2. Concubine of Caleb and mother of his children (1 Chron. 2:46). 3. Son of Jahdai and apparently a descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:47).

An entirely different Hebrew word with a different first letter lies behind the English "ephah" as a dry measure of grain. It is one-tenth of a homer and equal to one bath of liquid (Ezek. 45:11). It is also equal to 10 omers (Ex. 16:36). Thus it is about 40 liters, though we do not have enough information to make precise estimates. Estimates place it about half a bushel. The vision of Zechariah 5:7 of a woman sitting in an ephah basket contains the imaginative images of visions, for any ephah would be far too small for a woman to sit in. Israel was constantly warned not to have two ephah measures, one to buy by and one to sell with (Deut. 25:14; Prov. 20:10). Compare Leviticus 19:36; Ezekiel 45:10; Amos 8:5.

EPHAI (Ē′ phāi) Personal name meaning, "bird." Father of men who joined Ishmael in revolt against and murder of Gedaliah, the governor of Judah after Babylon captured and destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (Jer. 40:8). Ephai was from Netophah near Bethlehem.

EPHER (Ē′ phēr) Personal name meaning, "young deer." 1. Son of Midian, grandson of Abraham through his wife Keturah, and clan father among the Midianites (Gen. 25:4). 2. A descendant of Caleb in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:17). 3. Original ancestor of clan in tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:24).

EPHES-DAMMIN (Ē′ phēs-dăm′ mĭn) Place name meaning, "end of bloodshed." Town between Shocoh and Azekah where Philistines gathered to fight Saul (1 Sam. 17:1) preceding David's killing of Goliath. It is apparently the same as Pas-dammim (1 Chron. 11:13). It is modern Damun, four miles northeast of Shocoh.

The entrance to the Basilica of St. John at the ancient port of Ephesus in western Asia Minor.

EPHESIANS, BOOK OF (E′ phē′ sians) While it is not the longest of the Pauline Epistles, Ephesians is the one which best sets out the basic concepts of the Christian faith.

Paul and the Ephesians Precise information on the introduction of Christianity to Ephesus is not available. From Acts 13:1—14:28 we know Christianity was introduced to the Asian peninsula early. Paul and Barnabas, during the first missionary journey about A.D. 45–48, established Christianity in Cilicia, Pamphylia, and Phrygia. The newly-established religion moved inevitably westward to the coast and to the flourishing city of Ephesus, a city of multiple religions, gods, and goddesses.

At the close of his second missionary journey about A.D. 49–52, Paul left Achaia (Greece) taking Aquila and Priscilla with him. They stopped at Ephesus and surveyed the situation in that city where religions flourished. The Ephesians urged Paul to stay there, but he declined. Leaving Aquila and Priscilla and perhaps Timothy there to carry on the Christian witness (Acts 18:18–21), Paul sailed to Antioch. He returned to Ephesus during a third missionary journey and experienced the triumph over the challenge of Jewish religious leaders as well as that of the Greco-Roman religions represented in the worship of the Greek goddess Artemis (Roman name—Diana; Acts 19:24).

His ministry in Ephesus lasted three years (Acts 20:31). From there he journeyed to Jerusalem where he was arrested by the Jews and turned over to the Romans. He was imprisoned in Caesarea for two years (Acts 21:15—26:32). He was sent to Rome where he was imprisoned for another two years (Acts 27:1—28:31).

Interpreters are divided in opinion as to the time and place of the writing of Ephesians. These two imprisonments of Paul are the only ones which might bear on the question of where and when the Imprisonment Epistles were written. In all four of these epistles, Paul mentioned his imprisonment.

A related and much debated question is the year of Paul's writing each epistle and the place. To our knowledge only two places appear to be viable options—Caesarea and Rome. Majority opinion through Christian history has favored Rome. A much smaller minority of interpreters have argued for Caesarea. The case for Caesarea has been posited on speculative questions such as: (1) Would it be easier for Paul to get letters to the three places involved (Ephesus, Colosse, and Philippi) from Caesarea or from Rome? (2) Would it be easier for the runaway slave, Onesimus, to meet Paul in a prison in faraway Rome or the much closer Caesarea?

A third opinion has grown out of Colossians 4:16 in which Paul urged the church at Colosse to exchange letters with the church at neighboring Laodicea so both might get the benefit of both letters. This opinion, which was never widely held, took the position that Paul was writing from an imprisonment in Ephesus and that the "Laodicean" letter was what we have as "Ephesians."

Careful review of this very extensive and complex issue leaves the subjective opinion that all four Prison Epistles were written by Paul during his imprisonment in Rome about A.D. 61–62. Also subjective is the opinion that they were written in this order: Ephesians A.D. 61; Colossians A.D. 61; Philemon A.D. 61; Philippians A.D. 62.

Introduction to the Epistle Paul's experiences in Ephesus combined with the work of his associates qualified him for writing to that church the Queen of the Epistles. Granting the inspiration of the Holy Spirit as the compelling reason for his writing this epistle as well as the related epistle to the Colossians, from the life-situation in the Mediterranean world of the first century A.D., what was the apostle's motive for writing? His motive was the challenge which Christianity faced in confrontation with other religions and philosophies of the day. Paul was convinced that the religion he proclaimed was the only way of redemption from sin and sonship to God.

The challenge was the struggle for human minds as they sought the "good life." Even in Judaism, the cradle in which it was born, Christianity faced that aggressive encounter.

Paul opposed a Judaism he considered to have become a religion of human attainment, doing the works of the law as a means of being right with God. He offered instead Christianity as a religion of divine provision, salvation by faith in God's providing what humans could never attain.

That distinction was also what brought Christianity into conflict with Greek philosophy and with the Greco-Roman nature religions. The Christian view is that the "good life" comes by faith, not by intellectual processes, speculations, and rules of conduct in the integration of personality.

Analysis of the Epistle: Theology and Ethics Following the pattern of all of his epistles, Paul introduced himself as an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God—not by human will, not even by his own will, but God's will. That was the driving force in his life.

The expression "at Ephesus" is not in the oldest manuscripts of Ephesians, but it is in many of the best ones. Its absence has led to speculation that in writing the epistle Paul left a blank space, that he meant the epistle to be a circular one to go to several churches. As the epistle was read in the churches, the public reader would insert the name of that church; such as, at Laodicea, at Hierapolis, at Colosse, etc. Indeed one manuscript of about the middle of the second century had "at Laodicea" in that place.

"Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph.1:2) is in all of Paul's epistles. It is always in that order, grace and peace. Grace is the work of the Father by which salvation from sin comes. Peace is the condition of the believer's heart after grace has done its work. They are in that order because there can be no peace in the heart until grace has done its work.

Following a frequently used pattern in Paul's epistles, two basic themes are developed. First there is a major section on some theological theme. Second there follows a major section in ethics growing out of the theological theme. In the New Testament, theology and ethics are bound together; they are never to be separated.

In his theological part (1:13—3:21) Paul centered attention on the plan and propagation of redemption. He began with a literary pattern of a poem or song to praise God for what He has done in providing salvation for sinful humanity. The provision of redemption is presented as the work of the Trinity: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. A refrain "to the praise of the glory of His grace" repeats itself after each section, each with a slight variation.

Paul turned to thanksgiving to show the blessings of redemption (1:15—2:10). He wanted his readers to know Christ better, the Christ who enables believers to have the incomparable power that resurrected Christ and that now rules in this age and the one to come. This power can come to persons who were dead in sin but are saved by grace, being raised up with Christ to participate in His rule but also to live out of grace in the good works God has planned for His people to do.

Paul turned to the language of imperative to explain the propagation of redemption (2:11—3:21). A people without hope, separated from the people of the covenant have been brought to salvation through the blood of Christ. Thus unity of all races is accomplished through Him. In the cross He brought peace and provided access to God through the one Holy Spirit. All are joined together in Christ's church built on the foundation of the apostles and serving as the residence of God the Spirit. This good news is a mystery, a mystery God calls people to share with other people through His grace and a mystery which allows all people to approach God in confidence and freedom.

Paul turned to prayer to conclude this section and reveal the goal of redemption (3:14–21). His prayer was that Christ may dwell in the believers who will be rooted in love and can grasp the marvelous greatness of that love.

In his ethical part (4:1—6:24) Paul looked at the application of redemption to the church, to personal life, and to domestic life. Ethical imperatives dominate the section. He sought unity in the Spirit—one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father. Within the unity he celebrated the diversity of the individuals within the church, a diversity stemming from the differing gifts Christ gives. The use of the gifts within the church leads to maturity for the church and its members. Maturity involves growing in Christ, in His love, each doing the work Christ gives and not seeking to do the work assigned another.

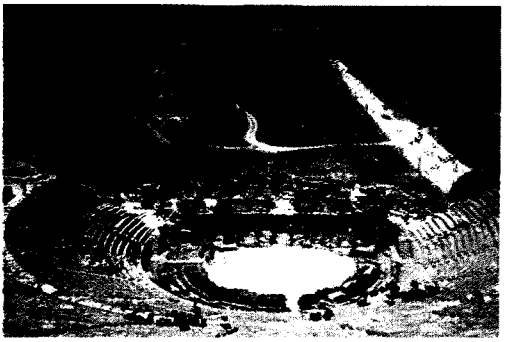
This has consequences for personal life, calling for a complete transformation from the life-styles of unbelievers. Without faith the individual is devoted to selfish lust and earthly dissipation. The believer becomes like God in holiness, purity, and righteousness. A central element of this is human speech, speaking the truth and saying that which helps build up others. Anger and malice must turn to love, compassion, and forgiveness. Walking in the light means pleasing God and showing the sinfulness of evil deeds. This is the wise path avoiding spirits that make one drunk but turning to the one Spirit which leads to praise and worship. This changes one's role at home. Submission to one another becomes the key, a submission motivated by loyalty to Christ and love to the marital partner. That love follows the example of Christ's love for His church. Parents expect honor from children while training children in the Lord's way of love. Similarly, masters and servants respect and help one another.

To complete his letter, Paul called his readers to put on God's armor to avoid Satan's temptations. This will lead to a life of prayer for self and for other servants of God. This will lead to concern for and encouragement from other Christians. As usual, Paul concluded his letter with a benediction, praying for peace, love, faith, and grace for his beloved readers.

Outline

I. Salutation: The apostle greets the church (1:1–2).
II. Theology: The plan of redemption leads to the propagation of redemption (1:3—3:21)
  A. The plan of redemption (1:3—1:14)
    1. The work of the Father: He has blessed and chosen us in Christ, predestining us for sonship in Him (1:3–6).
    2. The work of the Son: He brings redemption and forgiveness from sin through His blood (1:7–12).
    3. The work of the Spirit: He seals us as God's cherished possession (1:13–14).
  B. The blessings of redemption (1:15–2:10)
    1. A clear insight into the nature of redemption (1:15–19)
    2. A full insight into the nature of Christ (1:20–23)
    3. A transition from spiritual death to spiritual life (2:1–9)
    4. A life of good works wrought out in Christ (2:10)
  C. The propagation of redemption (2:11—3:21)
    1. Redemption is for all without regard to race (2:11–13).
    2. Redemption makes all people one in Christ (2:14–22).
    3. Redemption is to be revealed to people through other people (3:1–13).
    4. Redemption has a goal: revelation of the nature of God's love through Christ (3:14–21).
III. Ethics: Redemption is applied in church life, personal life, and domestic life (4:1—6:24).
  A. The application of redemption in church life (4:1–16)
    1. The Holy Spirit produces unity (4:1–6).
    2. Christ provides a diversity of gifts (4:7–11).
    3. The Spirit's unity and Christ's gifts result in maturity (4:12–16).
  B. The application of redemption in personal life (4:17—5:21)
    1. Desires and practices of old life are ended (4:17–32).
    2. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in love (5:1–5).
    3. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in light (5:6–14).
    4. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in wisdom (5:15–21).
  C. The application of redemption in domestic life (5:22—6:9)
    1. Mutual duties of husbands and wives to each other (5:22–33)
    2. Mutual duties of parents and children to each other (6:1–4)
    3. Mutual duties of masters and servants to each other (6:5–9)
IV. Conclusion: Prepare for the spiritual conflict of life (6:10–24).
  A. Know God is your Ally and Satan your enemy (6:10–12).
  B. Put on the armor God supplies (6:13–17).
  C. Pray for boldness for Christian leaders (6:18–20).
  D. Communicate with and encourage one another (6:21–22).
  E. Live under God's benediction of peace, love, faith, and grace (6:23–24).

Ray Summers



EPHESUS (Ĕph' ē sŭs) One of the largest and most impressive cities in the ancient world, a political, religious, and commercial center in Asia Minor. Associated with the ministries of Paul, Timothy, and the apostle John, the city played a significant role in the spread of early Christianity. Ephesus and its inhabitants are mentioned more than twenty times in the New Testament.

Location The ancient city of Ephesus, located in western Asia Minor at the mouth of the Cayster River, was an important seaport. Situated between the Maeander River to the south and the Hermus River to the north, Ephesus had excellent access to both river valleys which allowed it to flourish as a commercial center. Due to the accumulation of silt deposited by the river, the present site of the city is approximately five to six miles inland.

Historical Background The earliest inhabitants of Ephesus were a group of peoples called Leleges and Carians who were driven out around 1000 B.C. by Ionian Greek settlers led by Androclus of Athens. The new inhabitants of Ephesus assimilated the native religion of the area, the worship of a goddess of fertility whom they identified with the Greek goddess Artemis, the virgin huntress. (Later the Romans identified Artemis with their goddess Diana.)

Around 560 B.C. Croesus of Lydia conquered Ephesus and most of western Asia Minor. Under Croesus' rule, the city was moved farther south and a magnificent temple, the Artemision, was constructed for the worship of Artemis. In 547 B.C., following the defeat of Croesus by Cyrus of Persia, Ephesus came under Persian control. Disaster struck the city in 356 when fire destroyed the Artemision.

Alexander the Great, who was reportedly born on the same day as the Artemision fire, took over the area in 334 B.C. His offer to finance the ongoing reconstruction of the temple was diplomatically declined. The rebuilt temple, completed about 250 B.C., became known as one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

The Great Theater of Ephesus with the Arcadian Way in the background leading to the ancient harbor.

Lysimachus, one of Alexander's generals, ruled over Ephesus from about 301 to 281 B.C., when he was killed by Seleucus I. Under Lysimachus the city was moved again, this time to higher ground to escape the danger of flooding. City walls were built; a new harbor was constructed; and new streets were laid out. After the death of Lysimachus, Ephesus fell under the control of the Seleucids until their defeat by the Romans in 189 B.C. Rome gave the city to the king of Pergamum as a reward for his military assistance. In 133 B.C., at the death of the last Pergamum ruler, the city came under direct Roman control.

A baptismal pool from the Roman period located in the Double Church of Mary at ancient Ephesus.

Under the Romans, Ephesus thrived, reaching the pinnacle of its greatness during the first and second centuries of the Christian era. At the time of Paul, Ephesus was probably the fourth largest city in the world, with a population estimated at 250,000. During the reign of the emperor Hadrian, Ephesus was designated the capital of the Roman province of Asia. The grandeur of the ancient city is evident in the remains uncovered by archaeologists, including the ruins of the Artemision, the civic agora, the temple of Domitian, gymnasiums, public baths, a theater with seating for 24,000, a library, and the commercial agora, as well as several streets and private residences. Also discovered were the head and forearm of a colossal statue of the emperor Domitian. Today the Turkish town of Seljuk occupies the site of ancient Ephesus.

A part of the Roman Harbor Baths and Gymnasium complex excavated at ancient Ephesus.

The Great Theater of ancient Ephesus as viewed from the Arcadian Way on the way to the harbor.

Curetes Street in ancient Ephesus with the Library of Celsus in the background.

See Asia Minor; Ephesians; Revelation, Book of; Timothy. Mitchell G. Reddish

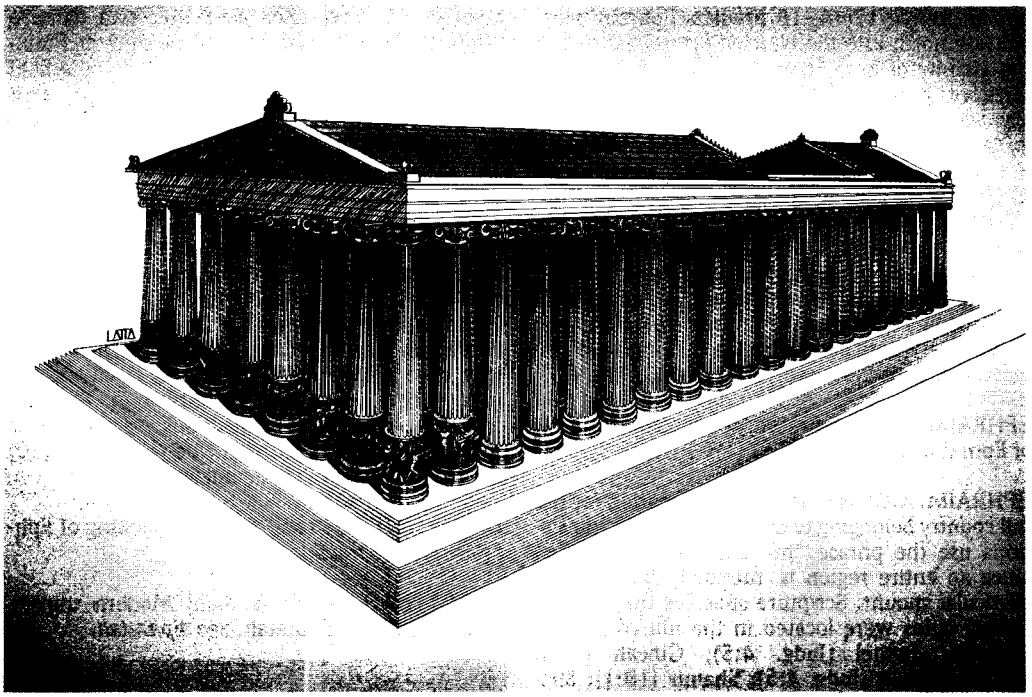
A carved paving stone in ancient Ephesus which is probably an advertisement for a brothel.

EPHLAL (Ĕph′ lăl) Personal name meaning, "notched" or "cracked." Descendant of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:37).

EPHOD (Ē′ phŏd) A priestly garment connected with seeking a word from God and used in a wrong way as an idol. The exact meaning and derivation of the term "ephod" are not clear.



In early Old Testament history, there are references to the ephod as a rather simple, linen garment, possibly a short skirt, apron, or loin cloth. It is identified as a priestly garment (1 Sam. 14:3; 22:18). It was worn by Samuel (1 Sam. 2:18) and by David when he danced before God on the occasion of the transfer of the ark of the covenant to David's capital city of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:14). From its earliest forms and uses, it appears that the ephod was associated with the presence of God or those who had a special relationship with

The re-erected marble facade of the Library of Celsus at ancient Ephesus.

God. It is portrayed as a source of divine guidance, as when David wanted to know if he should trust the people of Keilah (1 Sam. 23:9–12) or when he wanted to know if he should pursue the Amalekites (1 Sam. 30:7–8).

There are references to a special ephod associated with the high priest. It appears to have been an apron-like garment worn over the priest's robe and under his breastplate. It is described in detail in Exodus 28—35. Woven of gold, blue, purple, and scarlet materials, it was very elaborate and ornate. On top of each of the shoulders the ephod was fastened by two onyx clasps on which were engraved the names of six of the twelve tribes. Twelve gem stones on the breastplate contained the names of the twelve tribes. Some scholars believe that this breastplate also contained a pouch where the sacred lots, Urim and Thummim, were kept (Ex. 28:30). The ephod was fastened around the waist by a beautiful and intricately woven girdle. The robe worn with the ephod was equally elaborate. It was blue in color, with a fringe at the bottom comprised of golden bells and blue, purple, and scarlet pomegranates (Ex. 28:31–34). Apparently, the ephod of the high priest was not only worn by the high priest, but also prominently displayed in the tabernacle. It may have been placed upon a divine image and used as an object of worship at some times in Israel's history. This usage, plus the importance of the ephod, may have led to idolatrous use in worship during the time of the judges (Judg. 8:27; 17:5–6).

Reconstruction of the Artemesion, the great Temple of Artemis (Roman Diana) at Ephesus in ancient Asia Minor (modern Turkey) which was begun in 360 B.C. to honor the ancient many-breasted mother goddess of the Anatolian region. The cult was adopted by the conquering Alexander the Great of Greece and renamed Artemis (Roman Diana). The temple was completed by the Greeks and was recorded as one of the seven wonders of the ancient world—four times larger than the Parthenon at Athens.

The importance of the ephod in Hebrew worship is seen in the fact that, even after the division of the nation into the Northern and Southern Kingdoms, there is mention of the ephod in worship in the Northern Kingdom (Hos. 3:4).

See Priests; Tabernacle; Ark of the Covenant; Teraphim. Daniel B. McGee

EPHPHATHA (Ĕph′ phȧ thȧ) The Aramaic expression that Jesus spoke when He healed a person who was deaf and had a speech impediment. It is translated, "be opened." When Jesus had said it, the individual was healed.

EPHRAIM (Ē phrā ĭm) Personal and tribal name meaning, "two fruit land" or "two pasture lands." The younger son of Joseph by the Egyptian Asenath, daughter of the priest of On (Gen. 41:52). He was adopted by his grandfather Jacob and given precedence over his brother Manasseh (Gen. 48:14). He was the progenitor of the tribe of Ephraim, which occupied a region slightly to the northwest of the Dead Sea (Josh. 16) and was the leading tribe of the Northern Kingdom, ever ready to assert its rights (Josh. 17:15; Judg. 3:27; 4:5; 7:24—8:3; 12:1).

Ephraim played an important role in Israelite history. Joshua was an Ephraimite (Josh. 19:50). Samuel was an Ephraimite (1 Sam. 1:1). Jeroboam I was an Ephraimite (1 Kings 12:25). The important sanctuary at Shiloh was located in the territory of Ephraim. From the eighth century B.C., Ephraim was often used as a designation for Israel (Isa. 11:13; Jer. 7:15; Hos. 5:13). See Tribes of Israel; Patriarchs.

EPHRAIM, CITY OF Another name for Ephron. See Ephron.

EPHRAIM, FOREST OF The densely wooded site of the battle between the forces of King David and the rebel army of Absalom (2 Sam. 18:6,8). The location of the forest presents difficulties. The account in 2 Samuel suggests a site on the east side of the Jordan near enough to the city of Mahanaim in the Jabbok valley to allow David to send reinforcements. The difficulty arises since the tribal allotment for Ephraim was west of the Jordan. Joshua 17:14–18 predicts Ephraim's expansion north into the wooded Jezreel valley and the vicinity of Beth Shan, both within Issachar's territory. It is possible that this dominant tribe also settled in the wooded hills to the east of the Jordan.

EPHRAIM GATE An entrance to Jerusalem located 400 cubits (about 200 yards) from the Corner Gate (2 Kings 14:13). The section of wall between these two gates was destroyed by King Jehoash of Israel in eighth century. In Nehemiah's time the city square at the Ephraim Gate was one of the sites where booths for the celebration of the feast of tabernacles were set up (Neh. 8:16).

EPHRAIMITE (Ē′ phră ĭm īte) Member of tribe of Ephraim. See Ephraim.

EPHRAIM, MOUNT The KJV designation for the hill country belonging to Ephraim. Modern translations use the phrase "hill country of Ephraim" since an entire region is intended rather than a particular mount. Scripture specifies that the following cities were located in the hill country of Ephraim: Bethel (Judg. 4:5); Gibeah (Josh. 24:33); Ramah (Judg. 4:5); Shamir (10:1); Shechem (Josh. 20:7); Timnath-heres or -serah (Josh. 19:50; Judg. 2:9).

EPHRAIN (Ē′ phrā ĭn) KJV reading of city in 2 Chronicles 13:19 following the earliest Hebrew scribal note. Hebrew text reads, "Ephron," as do most modern translations. See Ephron.

EPHRATAH (Ĕph′ rà tăh) Place and personal name meaning, "fruitful." Modern translations spell Ephrathah. 1. Town near which Jacob buried his wife Rachel (Gen. 35:16–19; usually translated in English as Ephrath). Genesis 36:16 seems to indicate that Ephrath(ah) must have been near Bethel. This is supported by 1 Samuel 10:2; Jeremiah 31:15 which place Rachel's tomb near Ramah on the border between the tribal territories of Ephraim and Benjamin. Genesis 35:19, however, identifies Ephrath(ah) with Bethlehem. Compare Genesis 48:7. It is part of Judah's tribal territory according to the earliest Greek translation of the Old Testament, words omitted in current Hebrew manuscripts (Josh. 15:59 REB). Micah 5:2 also appears to equate Bethlehem and Ephrath(ah) as the home of the coming Messiah. This, in turn, was based on Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16:1) and Ephrath(ah) (1 Sam. 17:12) as the home of David's father Jesse and thus of David. In sending Messiah, God chose to start over at David's birthplace. Naomi's husband Elimelech was an Ephrathite from Bethlehem (Ruth 1:2). In Ruth 4:11 Bethlehem and Ephrathah are apparently identified in poetic parallelism. It may be that Ephrathah was a clan name of a family in Bethlehem whose importance made the clan name a synonym for the city. The parallelism in Psalm 132:6 seems to equate Ephrathah with "the field of Jaar" (NAS and most modern translations). This would be Kiriath-jearim, though two different resting points of the ark—Bethlehem and Kiriath-jearim—may be intended here. The identification with Kiriath-jearim could be supported by the genealogy in 1 Chronicles 2 which lists both personal and place names. Shobal, the founder of Kiriath-jearim, was the son of Ephrathah, Caleb's wife (1 Chron. 2:19,50). In 1 Chronicles 4:4 Ephrathah's son Hur was the father of Bethlehem. Ephrathah may have been a clan name associated with several different geographical localities, the most famous of which was Bethlehem. The textual and geographical connections are not always easy to figure out. 2. Caleb's wife (1 Chron. 2:50; spelled Ephrath in 2:19; compare 4:4).

EPHRATH (Ē′ phrăth) Alternate spelling of Ephratah. See Ephratah.

EPHRATHAH (Ĕph′ rà thăh) Modern translations' spelling of Ephratah. See Ephratah.

The entrance to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, or Ephratah.

EPHRATHITE (Ĕph′ rà thīte) Citizen or clan member of Ephratah. See Ephratah.

EPHRON (Ē′ phrŏn) Personal and place name meaning, "dusty." 1. A Hittite who sold the cave of Machpelah to Abraham (Gen. 23:8–20). The narrative follows the normal manner of concluding a purchase agreement among Near Eastern people. Abraham was also buried in the cave with Sarah (Gen. 25:9–10). It became the patriarchs' burying place (Gen. 49:30–33; 50:13). 2. A mountain marking the tribal border of Judah with Benjamin (Josh. 15:9). It is located northwest of Jerusalem near Mozah at el-Qastel. 3. A city King Abijah of Judah (913-910 B.C.) took from King Jeroboam of Israel (926-909 B.C.), according to spelling of Hebrew text (2 Chron. 13:19). The earliest Hebrew scribes suggested that Ephrain was the correct spelling (KJV). It is apparently identical with Ophrah in Benjamin (Josh. 18:23; 1 Sam. 13:17), located at et-Taiyibeh about four miles north of Bethel. The city of Ephraim (2 Sam. 13:23; John 11:54) is probably the same city. If et-Taiyibeh is the correct location, it is a high city, 300 feet higher than Jerusalem and could be quite cold. Some would locate the city of Ephraim in the lower valley at ain Samieh, on the edge of the desert.

EPICUREANISM (Ĕp ĭ cū rē′ ăn ĭsm) A school of philosophy which emerged in Athens about 300 B.C.

The school of thought was founded by Epicurus who was born in 341 B.C. on the Greek island of Samos. Epicurus founded his school (The Garden) in Athens. Around him he gathered his students and refined his philosophy. Epicurean thought had a significant impact on the Hellenistic world and later, Rome. Paul met Epicureans as he preached about Jesus and the resurrection in Athens (Acts 17:18).

Epicurean philosophy centered on the search for happiness. Pleasure is the beginning and fulfillment of a happy life. Often today, Epicurus' ideas are distorted. Many think he proposed a life of sensual pleasure and gluttony. This concept is far from his philosophy and his own life-style. To Epicurus happiness could only be achieved through tranquillity and a life of contemplation. The goal of Epicureanism was to acquire a trouble-free state of mind, to avoid the pains of the body, and especially mental anguish. Epicureans sought seclusion from worldly temptations. Epicurus taught that a man should not become involved in politics or affairs of the state. These activities simply served to distract one from the life of contemplation.

He believed in gods, but he thought that they were totally unconcerned with the lives or troubles of mortals. Gary Poulton

EPILEPSY A disorder marked by erratic electrical discharges of the central nervous system resulting in convulsions. In ancient times epilepsy was thought to be triggered by the moon. The term at Matt. 4:24 translated as epilepsy by most modern translations is literally "moonstruck". The KJV term "lunatic" from the Latin luna (moon) assumes the same cause for the disorder. Many interpreters understand the symptoms of the boy in Mark 9:17–29 (inability to speak, salivation, grinding teeth, rigid body, convulsions) as expressions of epilepsy.

EPIPHANY The term "epiphany" comes from a Greek word which means "appearance" or "manifestation." In Western Christianity the festival of Epiphany, observed on the sixth of January, celebrates the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, the coming of the Magi to see the child Jesus (Matt. 2:1–12). The twelve days between Christmas and Epiphany have often been called the "Twelve Days of Christmas."

In much of Eastern Christianity, Epiphany is a celebration of the baptism of Jesus, a recognition of His manifestation to humanity as the Son of God (Mark 1:9–11). In the early centuries, before the observance of Christmas, Epiphany celebrated both the birth of Jesus and His baptism. See Church Year. Fred A. Grissom

EPISTLE See Letters.

ER (Er) Personal name meaning, "protector" or "watchful." 1. Oldest son of Judah and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 38:3). He married Tamar but was so wicked that God killed him (Gen. 38:6–7). 2. A grandson of Judah (1 Chron. 4:21).

ERAN (Ē′ răn) Personal name meaning, "of the city," or "watchful." Some of the earliest translations and the Samaritan Pentateuch read "Eden" rather than Eran. Eran was grandson of Ephraim and a clan leader in the tribe of Ephraim (Num. 26:36).

ERANITE (Ē′ răn īte) Member of clan of Eran (Num. 26:36).

ERASTUS (Ē răs′ tŭs) Personal name meaning, "beloved." 1. Disciple Paul sent with Timothy from Ephesus to Macedonia to strengthen the churches during his third missionary journey (Acts 19:22). 2. City financial officer of Corinth who joined Paul in greeting the church at Rome (Rom. 16:23). He may have been a slave or a freed slave working for the city government; he may well have been a high-ranking and influential government leader—city treasurer. If so, he would have political power, prestige, and probably some wealth. 3. A disciple who remained at Corinth and was not with Paul when he wrote Timothy (2 Tim. 4:20). He may have been identical with either of the other men named Erastus or may be a separate individual.

ERECH (Ē′ rĕch) Hebrew transliteration of Akkadian place name: Uruk, one of the oldest Sumerian cities founded before 3100 B.C. Genesis' Table of Nations reports that Nimrod, the mighty hunter, included Erech in his kingdom (Gen. 10:10). Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria (668-629 B.C.), exiled "men of Erech" (NAS) to Samaria about 640 B.C. (Ezra 4:9). Sumerian literature lists Erech as one of the first cities after the flood. Gilgamesh, the hero of Akkadian flood stories, appears as king of Erech. Excavations at Erech provide early evidence of pictographic writing and numerical notation on clay tablets and reveal an astronomical observatory and a scribal school. It is modern Warka, about 120 miles southeast of Babylon and 40 miles northwest of Ur.

ERI (Ē′ rī) Personal name meaning, "of the city of" or "watchful." A son of Gad and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:16). Original ancestor of clan of Erites (Num. 26:16).

ERITE (Ē′ rīte) Member of clan of Eri. See Eri.

ESAIAS (Ē sâi′ ás) KJV transliteration of Greek spelling of Isaiah in New Testament. See Isaiah.

ESARHADDON (Ē′ sär hăd′ dŏn) Assyrian royal name meaning, "Ashur (the god) has given a brother." King of Assyria (681–669 B.C.). He was the favorite son of Sennacherib, who he succeeded as king.

There are many references to Esarhaddon in the Bible (2 Kings 19:36–37; Ezra 4:2; Isa. 19:4; 37:37–38). In Isaiah 19:4 he is probably the "cruel lord" and "fierce king" who conquered Egypt. In Ezra 4:2 he is recognized as the king who colonized Samaria. See Assyria.

M. Stephen Davis

ESAU (Ē′ sāū) Personal name whose meaning is not known. Son of Isaac and Rebekah; elder twin brother of Jacob (Gen. 25:24–26; 27:1,32,42; 1 Chron. 1:34); father of the Edomite nation (Gen. 26; Deut. 2:4–29; Mal. 1:2–3). At birth his body was hairy and red "and they called his name Esau" (Gen. 25:25,30; 27:11,21–23). The second born twin, Jacob, father of the nation Israel, held Esau's heel at birth (Gen. 25:22–26); thus depicting the struggle between the descendants of the two which ended when David lead Israel in the conquest of Edom (2 Sam. 8:12–14; 1 Chron. 18:13; compare Num. 24:18).

From the first Jacob sought to gain advantage over Esau (Hos. 12:3). Esau, the extrovert, was a favorite of his father and as a hunter provided him with his favorite meats. Jacob was the favorite of his mother Rebekah.

As a famished returning hunter, Esau, lacking self-control, sold his birthright to Jacob for food (Gen. 25:30–34). Birthright involved the right as head of the family (Gen. 27:29) and a double share of the inheritance (Deut. 21:15–17). This stripped Esau of the headship of the people through which Messiah would come. Thus, the lineage became Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

A well which marks the traditional site where Jacob met Esau.

Having lost his birthright, he was still eligible to receive from Isaac the blessing of the eldest son. Rebekah devised a deception whereby Jacob received this blessing (Gen. 27:1–30).

Years later the two brothers were reconciled when Jacob returned from Mesopotamia. Esau had lived in the land of Seir. As Jacob neared Palestine, he made plans for confronting his wronged brother and allaying his anger. Esau, with an army of 400, surprised Jacob, his guilty brother, and received him without bitterness (Gen. 33:4–16).

The two reconciled brothers met again for the final time at the death of their father (Gen. 35:29). Though their hostility was personally resolved, their descendants continue to this day to struggle against one another. Nelson Price

ESCHATOLOGY The teaching concerning the last things in world history. The Greek word eschatos means "last" or "final." Accordingly, eschatology is the study of the things expected to occur at the end of history. There are two basic ways of approaching eschatology. The first, which has been most common over the centuries, focuses on those final events or situations which have not yet occurred. These are, chiefly, Jesus' return, the millennium, the last judgment, the final resurrection, and heaven and hell. Over the last century, however, scholars have generally agreed that the New Testament was written in an atmosphere pervaded by eschatology. Early Christianity was rooted in the paradoxical conviction that the last things had "already" occurred, even though they were "not yet" fully completed. (Jesus' resurrection, for instance, was understood as the beginning of the final resurrection of the dead [1 Cor. 15:20]). This conviction lay at the heart of the early church's joy and hope. It shaped its understanding of Jesus, salvation, mission, and all else. Accordingly, when scholars speak of eschatology today, they are often referring not simply to events which have "not yet" occurred, but chiefly to the way in which the last things are "already" present, and to the attitudes and expectations which this arouses.

The Millennium For the last century or so, different overall eschatological perspectives have usually been classified according to their viewpoint regarding the millennium. The "millennium" (from the Latin mille, meaning "a thousand") refers to the 1,000 year reign of Christ and His saints described in Revelation 20:4–6. Not all proponents of the various millennial views, however, insist that this period must last exactly 1,000 years. There have been three basic millennial perspectives. Each has existed in a more general and a more specific form, although these have not been entirely consistent with each other.

1. Premillennialism Premillennialists hold that Jesus will return before ("pre-") He establishes a millennial kingdom on this earth. This return will be necessary because forces hostile to God will be governing the world, and Christ must conquer them before He can rule. Towards the end of the millennium evil will again arise, and it will have to be defeated once more before God's cosmic rule is perfected. Until the fourth century, the early church was generally premillennial. This perspective, which placed the church in sharp conflict with the Roman Empire, declined rapidly after Constantine made Christianity the Empire's favored religion. In subsequent centuries premillennialism was often held by radical groups at odds with state-supported religion. Those who hold the general expectation that Jesus will return before establishing an earthly millennium are called "historic premillennialists."

Premillennialism's more specific form is qualified by the adjective "dispensational." Dispensational premillennialism acquired its specific shape during the ministry of John Nelson Darby (1800–1882), founder of the Plymouth Brethren. It has remained popular among many American fundamentalists and conservative evangelicals. Dispensationalism contrasts God's way of working in at least two historical "dispensations": those of Israel and of the church. See Dispensation.

2. Postmillennialism Whereas premillennialists hold that Jesus will return before the millennium, postmillennialists maintain that He will return after ("post-") an earthly kingdom is established. This means, however, that the millennium will be simultaneous with an era of ordinary human history. This viewpoint was first comprehensively articulated by Augustine (354–430), who regarded the establishment of the church since about Constantine's time as the rule of Christ with His saints. Postmillennialism has often been the general perspective of Roman Catholic, Reformed, and other socially established churches. It became popular during the eighteenth and nineteenth century evangelical revivals, which emphasized social transformation. Today some socially-minded evangelicals are reviving it.

In a general sense, postmillennialism serves as a label for any eschatology which expects religious and social activity to play a large role in establishing God's kingdom. All such movements acknowledge that this kingdom is not yet fully established, for much evil still exists. They also grant that evil may sometimes gain the upper hand. Nevertheless, they hold that history and society in general have been and will be brought increasingly under Christ's rule and that the kingdom's advance is closely related to that of certain social and religious forces.

3. Amillennialism By adding the prefix "a-" (meaning "not"), amillennialists express their conviction that no historical period called the millennium does or will exist. In general sense, amillennialism can refer to everyone who interprets all language about a final, earthly realm of peace in a spiritual manner.

Paradoxically, it was during late antiquity, as many church leaders were adopting a postmillennial perspective, that much popular piety ceased hoping for any historical millennium and, focusing entirely on the afterlife, became amillennial. In this general sense, amillennialism tends to be individualistic, concentrating on the heavenly destiny of each person rather than on the future of this earth. It includes much medieval mysticism. Even modern existentialist theologians, such as Rudolf Bultmann, who regard futurist eschatology as mythological and emphasize encounter with God in the present, can be included under this general label.

During the nineteenth century, however, "amillennialism" was applied increasingly to a more specific eschatology. Like postmillennialists, these amillennialists believed that Christ was already reigning with His saints. They argued that He was doing so, however, in heaven with departed Christians, and not through specific ecclesiastical or social movements. Like premillennialists, these amillennialists expected Jesus to return, to conquer His enemies and to rule over a transformed earth. His perfected rule, however, would be established immediately, and not preceeded by an interim called the millennium. This specific form of amillennialism, then, is far less individualistic than the general one, and views history before Jesus' return much as does the more general, or "historic," premillennialism.

People claim the Bible describes five major final events: Jesus' return, defeat of evil, resurrection, judgment, and renewal of the cosmos. Postmillennialists and amillennialists expect them to occur more or less together and to be preceeded by a troubled time called the Great Tribulation (Mark 13:19) during which the antichrist will rule. They also anticipate a large-scale conversion of Jews before the end.

Historic premillennialists also expect Israelite conversion and the Great Tribulation to occur before Christ's return. However, they divide each of the other four final events into two phases. (1) At Jesus' return: antichrist will be defeated, and Satan will be bound (though not wholly destroyed); then "the just" alone shall rise from their graves; they will be judged and rewarded for their good works; and the millennial kingdom will be established. (2) Then, after the millennium: Satan and all evil will be destroyed; then the "unjust" will rise; they will be judged for their evil works; and the new heavens and new earth will descend (compare Rev. 21).

Dispensational premillennialists further subdivide this scheme. They distinguish two phases in Jesus' return. In the first, He will rapture the church. The Tribulation and Israel's conversion will follow (although in some versions, the rapture will occur in the middle of or even after the Tribulation). Then Jesus will return to defeat antichrist, bind Satan, and establish a Judeo-centric millennial kingdom. From then on, events will proceed much like those of historic premillennialism. The resurrection, however, must now occur in three phases: at the rapture, all who have died in Christ to that time will be raised; at Jesus' second return, those martyred during the Tribulation will rise; finally, after the millennium, the "unjust" will be resurrected. Judgment, too, will proceed somewhat differently: "the just" who join the rapture will be rewarded then, while those raised at Jesus' second return will be rewarded only after the millennium, when "the unjust" are raised and judged.

The Last Judgment While traditional eschatological discussion has been preoccupied with millennial issues for over a century, several other doctrines have received attention through much longer periods of history. Many ordinary Christians and theologians have been concerned not with exactly when the last judgment will occur, but with how many will be judged favorably, and with how the condemned will be punished.

1. Universalism Over the centuries, most Christians have believed that some people will finally be saved while others will be lost. They often assumed that the latter would outnumber the former. By the early third century, however, Origen (185—254) was teaching "universalism": the doctrine that everyone would finally be saved. (Origen even included the devil in that number, although this particular addition brought the church's official condemnation.) While universalism was revived from time to time, it was never widely accepted until the nineteenth century, when liberal Protestantism emphasized the goodness of human nature and often extolled God's love to the exclusion of final judgment. In this century, although talk of divine judgment has become more acceptable, even some fairly conservative theologians, such as Karl Barth, have apparently been universalists.

Numerically speaking, opponents of universalism have more biblical texts on their side. The Old Testament abounds with annihilating judgments (Ex. 14:23–28; Josh. 7:24–26; Jer. 51:39–40). Jesus proclaimed negative judgments in parables (Matt. 13) and many other sayings (Matt 5:29–30; 11:21–24; 23:33). Paul often spoke of future condemnation (Rom. 2:5–9; 2 Cor. 5:10; 1 Thess. 1:10) as do other New Testament writings (2 Peter 3:7; Jude 14,15; Rev. 20:11–15).

Universalists, however, can cite passages emphasizing God's desire that everyone be saved (1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Peter 3:9). They also argue that the scope of salvation becomes continally wider as biblical history advances (Rom. 5:15). Finally, certain texts seem to directly teach universalism: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22; "[Jesus'] act of righteousness leads to acquittal and life for all" (Rom. 5:18 RSV; compare Eph. 1:10; Col. 1:20; 1 Tim. 4:10; 1 John 2:2).

Positions on universalism, however, are not influenced by specific biblical texts alone. One's views on the character of God and of humanity and of salvation play important roles—sometimes in emotional ways. Universalists find negative judgment incompatible with God's overwhelming love and the dignity of the human person. Opponents of universalism feel that it seriously undercuts the urgency of the call to repentance and the firmness of God's justice and ignores too many biblical texts.

2. The Nature of Hell Negative judgment results in consignment to hell. Most Christians have supposed that this will involve eternal conscious torment. This seems to be taught by texts which speak of hell as enduring forever (Isa. 66:24; Mark 9:48; Rev. 14:9–11). Others, however, have argued that such texts should be taken figuratively since for them such a penalty is incompatible with God's mercy and also is disproportionate to all sins that a finite being could commit. Moreover, some find the eternal existence of hell inconsistent with the perfected rule of God over the cosmos. Accordingly, some have proposed that hell consists simply in the annihilation of "the unjust," involving their immediate loss of consciousness. Others have suggested that a gradual annihilation or deterioration of the wicked may be involved. Most evangelical Christians continue to expect a literal hell of torment. See Hell.

The Final Resurrection While the hope of resurrection has frequently been expressed in liturgy, hymns, and playful speculation, it has received far less theological discussion than have hell and judgment. Perhaps this is because most have regarded the affirmation of resurrection as far less problematic. In recent decades, however, some have questioned whether resurrection is compatible with another notion widely held since the first Christian centuries: the immortality of the soul.

Belief that the soul is inherently immortal implies, first, that every person passes immediately and automatically into God's presence at death. Yet this seems contrary to the biblical depiction of Death as an enemy barring the way to God and overcome only by Jesus' painful dying struggle and His resurrection. Second, since only the soul is immortal, this view implies only one part of the person comes directly into God's presence. This seems to contradict the biblical emphasis on resurrection of the body. Finally, if the soul passes immediately into God's full presence, eschatological hope would focus on the individual's death rather than on the return of Christ and the renewal of the cosmos. In other words, belief in inherent immortality of the soul tends to make one's eschatology spiritualistic and individualistic; belief in resurrection emphasizes eschatology's physical, historical, and corporate dimensions.

If a future resurrection be our ultimate hope, though, many will wonder: where are our departed loved ones, if they are not yet fully enjoying God's presence? Some, such as the Adventists, have long responded that souls simply sleep until the resurrection. Some talk of a distinction in eternity and historical time. Others think it best to simply affirm that the dead are somehow "in Christ." While the uncertainty involved may unsettle some who are bereaved, this approach can also help people deal realistically with the tragedy that is still involved in death.

Event and Meaning As judgment and resurrection have been discussed, it has become increasingly clear that eschatological discussions arise not merely from speculation about future events, but also from the hopes, fears, and perplexities which anticipation of these events arouses. Upon closer examination, this also proves to be true of millennial questions. For when people ask about the relationship between the millennium and the present, they often are seeking to determine what kind of actions and attitudes are appropriate in the present. For instance, postmillennialists will usually conclude that because the millennium is already here, vigorous involvement in certain social movements is imperative. Premillennialists may conclude that because the millennium is not yet here, social involvement is not appropriate; or perhaps that radical, counter-cultural criticism and involvement are called for.

In any case, the more one penetrates into the questions which underlie traditional eschatological discussions, the more one recognizes that eschatology has to do not only with the future, but also with the present. The last things, at least insofar as they arouse hope, fear, and perplexity, are already alive in the present.

New Testament Eschatology What features were essential to the eschatological atmosphere that pervaded the New Testament era—and therefore to a full understanding of eschatology in general? Jesus' contemporaries felt that they were living at the end of an "old Age" dominated by forces which opposed God. Pagan gods and pagan political rulers seemed to hold all things in their grip. They afflicted Yahweh's righteous remnant with suffering and death. Pious Israelites cried out for deliverance. They expected Yahweh to intervene radically in world affairs. More specifically, they expected God, first, to judge and defeat His enemies; second, to rescue His people and raise the righteous dead; and third, to inaugurate the "new Age" of life and peace through the Spirit.

The gospel story tells how God did these very things—though in an unforeseen and surprising way. Instead of coming as a warrior Messiah to destroy the pagan nations and their gods, God came as a humble Servant who was put to death, but then was unexpectedly resurrected. Yet as the early Christian community pondered these things, they began to acknowledge that they had rejected Jesus and had therefore participated, whether actively or passively, in putting Him to death. However, this meant that not only pagans, but they, too, were God's enemies (Rom. 5:10). By crucifying Jesus, they, too, had come under God's judgment. In fact, the last, decisive judgment of the world had "already" occurred.

The early church also discovered that the anticipated resurrection of the righteous dead had "already" occurred—although again in a surprising form. For instead of all the righteous being raised, Jesus alone had been, as the "firstfruits" of final harvest (1 Cor. 15:20, 23). His resurrection had two astounding consequences. On one hand, since Jesus was again alive and continuing to offer love and forgiveness, no one who had rejected Him need remain under God's judgment. Those who repented of their sin could receive new life in fellowship with Him. On the other hand, by overcoming death, Jesus had conquered the strongest of those evil forces which oppose God (1 Cor. 15:26,54–57). Since this power had been defeated, no other power in heaven and earth could separate those who participated in Jesus' resurrection from God (Rom. 8:37–39; Eph. 1:18–23; 1 Pet. 3:21–22).

Third, the early Christian community discovered that the "new Age" of life and peace had "already" begun among them through the outpouring of God's Spirit. They began to understand that the Spirit, like Jesus, was the "firstfruits" of a new creation (Rom. 8:23), while those who turned to Christ became the firstfruits of a new humanity (Rom. 16:5; Jas. 1:18; Rev. 14:4). Yet the "new Age," too, was present in an unexpected way. For although the powers which dominated the old Age had already been defeated, they were "not yet" wholly destroyed. Indeed, even as the Spirit impelled the early Christians to spread the good news among all nations, they experienced opposition much like that which Jesus had suffered.

The early church, then, continued to live in an atmosphere charged with eschatology. Like Jesus' contemporaries, they continued to struggle with forces which opposed God and to long eagerly for God's final triumph and deliverance. Yet they did so with a difference. For their conviction that the new Age had broken in imbued them with certainty of victory. Convinced that new ways of living were possible through the Spirit, they began to serve each other, to share their wealth, to bring people from all social groups into their fellowship.

General Implications for Eschatology Traditionally, the study of eschatology has suffered from two attitudes: neglect and overemphasis. Since eschatology has focused on events which have not yet occurred, many Christians have ignored it; and many theologians have treated it as an appendix at the end of their systems. Other Christians and theologians, however, have become so obsessed with these events that they have dealt with little else. Both attitudes have been encouraged by the separation of eschatology from the rest of Christian life and doctrine. If the "last things" have been occurring since Jesus' time, they must be far more relevant to the main themes of Christian activity and thought.

When the last judgment is regarded solely as a future event, it often arouses perplexity as to who will be rewarded or condemned and fear as to whether I might be condemned. It is more in line with biblical thinking to affirm that the last judgment, in the most decisive sense, has already occurred in Jesus' death and resurrection. Final judgment is not determined primarily by how many good or evil deeds one will do, but by how one responds to the judgment which these events already make upon oneself and the world. This emphasis, indeed, may not relieve all discomfort. It speaks about judgment in relation to concrete historical events and not solely in reference to an unknown future. It speaks, moreover, of events through which God's love, forgiveness, and triumph as well as condemnation are revealed. If eschatology can deal with the last judgment in this light, it might appear more clearly not only as an exercise of God's wrath, but also as the manifestation of His love and the consummation of His triumph.

When resurrection is regarded as wholly future, it often seems to stand in sharp contrast to one's present life. Earthly existence appears as a struggle which we must endure, largely on our own, until we are suddenly translated into a totally different realm. If resurrection, in the most decisive sense has already occurred in Jesus' triumph, then the strength which it unleashes is available to us now. Further, if all resurrection is rooted in Jesus' resurrection and if one's own resurrection is not totally a distant, isolated event, then the resurrection life already brings one into fellowship with Jesus and with all others who participate in it. If eschatology can deal with future resurrection in this light, it might appear more clearly as the joyous manifestation, perfection, and culmination of the life which all Christians now share in Him.

Finally, a deeper understanding of the "already-not yet" life on the new Age might help Christians relate more effectively to society at large. Postmillennialists, emphasizing that God's kingdom is already present, have usually been active in society, but have sometimes been unduly optimistic about possibilities for positive social change. Premillennialists, on the other hand, regarding God's kingdom as partially or wholly future, have often recognized the massive scope of evil in the world; but they have sometimes been unduly pessimistic about the value of social involvement. Perhaps a recognition that the new Age is both present and future and that neither side of this paradox dare be ignored could help the church maximize the strengths of different millennial perspectives without being overcome by the weaknesses of any.

See Christology; Kingdom of God; Millennium; Revelation, Book of. Thomas Finger

ESDRAELON (Ĕs drā´ ē lŏn) Greek translation of the word Jezreel, indicating the low-lying area separating the mountains of Galilee from the mountains of Samaria.

Old Testament Esdraelon, also called the Great Plain of Esdraelon or the Plain of Jezreel, is the area assigned to Zebulun and Issachar (Josh. 19:10–23). It extends from the Mediterranean Sea to the Jordan River at Beth-Shean. Included are the Valley or Plain of Megiddo in the east and the Valley of Jezreel in the west.

Sources disagree on the actual naming of the area. Some scholars say that the Valley of Jezreel is the name for the entire region; Esdraelon being the western portion, comprised of the Plain of Accho and the Valley of Megiddo. Whatever the entire region is called, it is assumed that references to Jezreel indicate both the town of Jezreel and the valley in which it is located; and references to Megiddo indicate both the town and the plain on which it is located.

The historical and biblical significance of Esdraelon in the Old Testament is its association with war and bloodshed. As a battleground, it was a strategically-favored place. It was occupied by Canaanites who were less than willing to relocate when the tribes of Israel tried to settle there (Judg. 1:27). The Song of Deborah in Judges 5 celebrates the battle "at Tanaach by the waters of Megiddo" (Judg. 5:19) where Barak finally routed the Canaanites.

Other important battles were fought in Esdraelon. Frequently the question of Israel's leadership was settled there. Josiah died in battle against Pharaoh Neco at Megiddo (2 Chron. 35:20–24). Saul and Jonathan died at the hands of the Philistines in the Valley of Jezreel (1 Sam. 29:1,11; 31:1–7). Jehu killed his rivals Joram and Ahaziah at Jezreel (2 Kings 9). He later slaughtered all the men of Ahab and Azariah and all the prophets of Baal there (2 Kings 10).

Brutal slaughter for other than political reasons took place in Esdraelon. Naboth owned a vineyard in Jezreel. Jezebel and Ahab wanted to buy the vineyard, but Naboth refused because it had been handed down to him from his ancestors (1 Kings

The Valley of Armageddon, or Plain of Esdraelon, as seen from the site of ancient Megiddo.

21:3). Jezebel arranged Naboth's murder so Ahab could take possession of the vineyard (1 Kings 21:5–16).

The tragedies at Esdraelon did not go unnoticed by God. For her part, Jezebel was later murdered at Jezreel as prophesied by Elijah (1 Kings 21:23; 2 Kings 9:36). Hosea prophesied vengeance on the house of Jehu for his role in the slaughter at Jezreel (Hos. 1:4–5).

New Testament Esdraelon is mentioned in the New Testament as Armageddon or har-Megiddon, meaning hill or city of Megiddo. Revelation 16:16 echoes the Old Testament portrayal of Esdraelon as a place of war and tragedy. The final battle of the Lord will be waged there (Rev. 16:14–16; 19:19). Donna R. Ridge

ESEK (Ē′ sĕk) Place name meaning, "strife." A well Isaac's servants dug in the valley near Gerar to find water for their herds. The shepherds of Gerar disputed Isaac's claim to the watering place. Isaac apparently gave in to the claim without warfare, thus receiving God's assurance of blessing (Gen. 26:18–22).

ESHAN (Ē′ shăn) Place name meaning, "I lean on." Town in the hill country of Judah assigned to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:52). KJV spells Eshean. A text tradition in the earliest Greek translation reads, "Soma," instead of Eshan, possibly pointing to a location at modern khirbet hallat Sama. Otherwise, the location is not known.

ESH-BAAL (Ĕsh-bā′ ăl) Personal name meaning, "man of Baal." Son of Saul, the first king of Israel (1 Chron. 8:33; 9:39). In 2 Samuel 2:8 the name is Ish-bosheth, "man of shame," apparently an intentional corruption in the Hebrew tradition to avoid the name of the Canaanite god and to characterize the person with such a name. First Samuel 14:49 lists Ishui or Ishvi as Saul's son, possibly another way of respelling the name to avoid Baal. In Saul's day "baal" may have been a title applied to Yahweh indicating, "He is Lord or Master." In this case Esh-baal would mean, "the man of the Lord." Otherwise, Saul's name for his son would seem to indicate some devotion to the Canaanite god Baal at the period in his life when he named the son. Saul's son Jonathan named his son Merib-baal. See Ish-bosheth; Ishvi; Merib-baal; Jonathan.

ESHBAN (Ĕsh′ băn) Personal name of unknown meaning. An Edomite listed as a descendant of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:26).

