24:4 But the king's edict stood, despite the objections of[10] Joab and the leaders of the army. So Joab and the leaders of the army left the king's presence in order to muster the Israelite army.

24:5 They crossed the Jordan and camped at Aroer, on the south side of the city, at[11] the wadi of Gad, near Jazer. 24:6 Then they went on to Gilead and to the region of Tahtim Hodshi, coming to Dan Jaan and on around to Sidon.[12] 24:7 Then they went to the fortress of Tyre[13] and all the cities of the Hivites and the Canaanites. Then they went on to the Negev of Judah, to Beer Sheba. 24:8 They went through all the land and after nine months and twenty days came back to Jerusalem.[14]

24:9 Joab reported the number of warriors[15] to the king. In Israel there were 800,000 sword-wielding warriors, and in Judah there were 500,000 soldiers.

24:10 David felt guilty[16] after he had numbered the army. David said to the LORD, "I have sinned greatly by doing this! Now, O LORD, please remove the guilt of your servant, for I have acted very foolishly."

24:11 When David got up the next morning, the LORD had already spoken[17] to Gad the prophet, David's seer: 24:12 "Go, tell David, 'This is what the LORD says: I am offering you three forms of judgment. Pick one of them and I will carry it out against you.'"

24:13 Gad went to David and told him, "Shall seven[18] years of famine come upon your land? Or shall you flee for three months from your enemy with him in hot pursuit? Or shall there be three days of plague in your land? Now decide[19] what I should tell the one who sent me." 24:14 David said to Gad, "I am very upset! I prefer that we be attacked by the LORD, for his

The Samuel version gives an underlying theological perspective, while the Chronicler simply describes what happened from a human perspective. The adversary in 1 Chr 21:1 is likely a human enemy, probably a nearby nation whose hostility against Israel pressured David into numbering the people so he could assess his military strength. mercy is great; I do not want to be attacked by men!"[1]

24:15 So the LORD sent a plague through Israel from the morning until the completion of the appointed time. Seventy thousand men died from Dan to Beer Sheba. 24:16 When the angel[2] extended his hand to destroy Jerusalem, the LORD relented from his judgment.[3] He told the angel who was killing the people, "That's enough! Stop now!"[4] (Now the LORD's angel was near the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite.)

24:17 When he saw the angel who was destroying the people, David said to the LORD, "Look, it is I who have sinned and done this evil thing! As for these sheep – what have they done? Attack me and my family."[5]

David Acquires a Threshing Floor and Constructs an Altar There

24:18 So Gad went to David that day and told him, "Go up and build an altar for the LORD on the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite." 24:19 So David went up as Gad instructed him to do, according to the LORD's instructions.

24:20 When Araunah looked out and saw the king and his servants approaching him, he[6] went out and bowed to the king with his face[7] to the ground. 24:21 Araunah said, "Why has my lord the king come to his servant?" David replied, "To buy from you the threshing floor so I can build an altar for the LORD, so that the plague may be removed from the people." 24:22 Araunah told David, "My lord the king may take whatever he wishes[8] and offer it. Look! Here are oxen for burnt offerings, and threshing sledges[9] and harnesses[10] for wood. 24:23 I, the servant of my lord[11] the king, give it all to the king!" Araunah also told the king, "May the LORD your God show you favor!" 24:24 But the king said to Araunah, "No, I insist on buying it from you! I will not offer to the LORD my God burnt sacrifices that cost me nothing."

So David bought the threshing floor and the oxen for fifty pieces of silver.[12] 24:25 Then David built an altar for the LORD there and offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings. And the LORD accepted prayers for the land, and the plague was removed from Israel.

[11] tc The Hebrew text is difficult here. The translation reads עֶבֶד אֲדֹנָי ('eved 'adoni, "the servant of my lord") rather than the MT's אַרַוְנָה ('Aravnah). In normal court etiquette a subject would not use his own name in this way, but would more likely refer to himself in the third person. The MT probably first sustained loss of עֶבֶד ('eved, "servant"), leading to confusion of the word for "my lord" with the name of the Jebusite referred to here.

[12] tn Heb "fifty shekels of silver." This would have been about 20 ounces (568 grams) of silver by weight.

Adonijah Tries to Seize the Throne

1:1 King David was very old;[1] even when they covered him with blankets,[2] he could not get warm. 1:2 His servants advised[3] him, "A young virgin must be found for our master, the king,[4] to take care of the king's needs[5] and serve as his nurse.
She can also sleep with you[6] and keep our master, the king, warm."[7] 1:3 So they looked through all Israel[8] for a beautiful young woman and found Abishag, a Shunammite, and brought her to the king. 1:4 The young woman was very beautiful; she became the king's nurse and served him, but the king did not have sexual relations with her.[9]

1:5 Now Adonijah, son of David and Hag-gith,[10] was promoting himself,[11] boasting,[12] "I will be king!" He managed to acquire[13] chariots and horsemen, as well as fifty men to serve as his royal guard.[14] 1:6 (Now his father had never corrected[15] him[16] by saying, "Why do you do such things?" He was also very handsome and had been born right after Absalom.[17]) 1:7 He collaborated[18] with Joab son of Zeruiah and with Abiathar the priest, and they supported[19] him.[20]
1:8 But Zadok the priest, Benaiah son of Jehoiada, Nathan the prophet, Shimei, Rei, and David's elite warriors[21] did not ally themselves[22] with Adonijah.
1:9 Adonijah sacrificed sheep, cattle, and fattened steers at the Stone of Zoheleth near En Rogel. He invited all his brothers, the king's sons,[23] as well as all the men of Judah, the king's servants. 1:10 But he did not invite Nathan the prophet, Benaiah, the elite warriors,[24] or his brother Solomon.

1:11 Nathan said to Bathsheba, Solomon's mother, "Has it been reported to you[25] that Hag-gith's son Adonijah has become king behind our master David's back?[26] 1:12 Now[27] let me give you some advice as to how[28] you can save your life and your son Solomon's life. 1:13 Visit[29] King David and say to him, 'My master, O king, did you not solemnly promise[30] your servant, "Surely your son Solomon will be king after me; he will sit on my throne"? So why has Adonijah become king?'
1:14 While[31] you are still there speaking to the king, I will arrive[32] and verify your report."[33]

1:15 So Bathsheba visited the king in his private quarters.[34] (The king was very old, and Abishag the Shunammite was serving the king.)
1:16 Bathsheba bowed down on the floor before[35] the king. The king said, "What do you want?" 1:17 She replied to him, "My master, you swore an oath to your servant by the LORD your God, 'Solomon your son will be king after me

3 tn Heb "said to."

4 tn Heb "let them seek for my master, the king, a young girl, a virgin." The third person plural subject of the verb is indefinite (see GKC 460 §144.f). The appositional expression, "a young girl, a virgin," is idiomatic; the second term specifically defines the more general first term (see IBHS 230 §12.3b).

5 tn Heb "and she will stand before the king." The Hebrew phrase "stand before" can mean "to attend; to serve" (BDB 764 s.v. עָמַד).

6 tn Heb "and she will lie down in your bosom." The expression might imply sexual intimacy (see 2 Sam 12:3 [where the lamb symbolizes Bathsheba] and Mic 7:5), though v. 4b indicates that David did not actually have sex with the young woman.

17 tn Heb "and she gave birth to him after Absalom." This does not imply they had the same mother; Absalom's mother was Maacah, not Haggith (2 Sam 3:4).

1:22 Just then,[9] while she was still speaking to the king, Nathan the prophet arrived. 1:23 The king was told, "Nathan the prophet is here." Nathan entered and bowed before the king with his face to the floor.[10] 1:24 Nathan said, "My master, O king, did you announce, 'Adonijah will be king after me; he will sit on my throne'? 1:25 For today he has gone down and sacrificed many cattle, steers, and sheep and has invited all the king's sons, the army commanders, and Abiathar the priest. At this moment[11] they are having a feast[12] in his presence, and they have declared, 'Long live King Adonijah!'[13] 1:26 But he did not invite me – your servant – or Zadok the priest, or Benaiah son of Jehoiada, or your servant Solomon. 1:27 Has my master the king authorized this without informing your servants[14] who should succeed my master the king on his throne?"[15]

David Picks Solomon as His Successor

1:28 King David responded,[16] "Summon Bathsheba!"[17] She came and stood before the king.[18] 1:29 The king swore an oath: "As certainly as the LORD lives (he who has rescued me[19] from every danger), 1:30 I will keep[20] today the oath I swore to you by the LORD God of Israel: 'Surely Solomon your son will be king after me; he will sit in my place on my throne.'" 1:31 Bathsheba bowed down to the king with her face to the floor[21] and said, "May my master, King David, live forever!"

1:32 King David said, "Summon Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet,[22] and Benaiah son of Jehoiada." They came before the king, 1:33 and he[23] told them, "Take your master's[24] servants with you, put my son Solomon on my mule, and lead him down to Gihon.[25] 1:34 There Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet will anoint[26] him king over Israel; then blow the trumpet and declare, 'Long live King Solomon!' 1:35 Then follow him up as he comes and sits on my throne. He will be king in my place; I have decreed[27] that he will be ruler over Israel and Judah." 1:36 Benaiah son of Jehoiada responded[28] to the king: "So be it![29] May the LORD God of my master the king confirm it![30] 1:37 As the LORD is with my master the king, so may he be with Solomon, and may he make him an even greater king than my master King David!"[31]

1:38 So Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, Benaiah son of Jehoiada, the Kerethites, and the Pelethites[32] went down, put Solomon on King David's mule, and led him to Gihon. 1:39 Zadok the priest took a horn filled with olive Adonijah said, "Come in, for[7] an important man like you must be bringing good news."[8] 1:43 Jonathan replied[9] to Adonijah: "No![10] Our master[11] King David has made Solomon king. 1:44 The king sent with him Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, Benaiah son of Jehoiada, the Kerethites, and the Pelethites and they put him on the king's mule. 1:45 Then Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anointed[12] him king in Gihon. They went up from there rejoicing, and the city is in an uproar. That is the sound you hear. 1:46 Furthermore, Solomon has assumed the royal throne.[13] 1:47 The king's servants have even come to congratulate[14] our master[15] King David, saying, 'May your God[16] make Solomon more famous than you and make him an even greater king than you!'[17] Then the king leaned[18] on the bed 1:48 and said[19] this: 'The LORD God of Israel is worthy of praise because[20] today he has placed a successor on my throne and allowed me to see it.'"[21]

1:49 All of Adonijah's guests panicked;[22] they jumped up and rushed off their separate ways. 1:50 Adonijah feared Solomon, so he got up and went and grabbed hold of the horns of the altar.[23] 1:51 Solomon was told, "Look, Adonijah fears you;[24] see, he has taken hold of the horns of the altar, saying, 'May King Solomon solemnly promise[25] me today that he will not kill his servant with the sword.'" 1:52 Solomon said, "If he is a loyal subject,[26] not a hair of his head will be harmed, but if he is found to be a traitor,[27] he will die." 1:53 King Solomon sent men to bring him down[28] from the altar. He came and bowed down to King Solomon, and Solomon told him, "Go home."[29]

David's Final Words to Solomon

2:1 When David was close to death,[30] he told[31] Solomon his son: 2:2 "I am about to die.[32] Be strong and become a man! 2:3 Do the job the LORD your God has assigned you[33] by following his instructions[34] and obeying[35] his rules, commandments, regulations, and laws as written in the law of Moses. Then you will succeed in all you do and seek to accomplish,[36] 2:4 and the LORD will fulfill his promise to me,[37] 'If your

[3] tn Heb "and all the people went up after him, and the people were playing flutes and rejoicing with great joy and the ground split open at the sound of them." The verb בָּקַע (baqa', "to split open"), which elsewhere describes the effects of an earthquake, is obviously here an exaggeration for the sake of emphasis.

[4] tn Heb "And Adonijah and all the guests who were with him heard, now they had finished eating."

[5] tn Heb "Why is the city's sound noisy?"

[6] tn The Hebrew text has "look" at this point. The particle הִנֵּה (hinneh), "look" draws attention to Jonathan's arrival and invites the audience to view the scene through the eyes of the participants.

[7] tn Or "surely."

[8] tn Heb "you are a man of strength [or "ability"] and you bring a message [that is] good." Another option is to understand the phrase אִישׁ חַיִל ('ish khayil) in the sense of "a worthy man," that is "loyal." See also 1 Kgs 1:52 and HALOT 311 s.v. חַיִל.

[9] tn Heb "answered and said."

[19] tn The Hebrew text reads, "and the king said."

[20] tn Or "Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who...." In this blessing formula אֲשֶׁר ('asher, "who; because") introduces the reason why the one being blessed deserves the honor.

[21] tn Heb "and my eyes are seeing."

[22] tn Or "were afraid, trembled."

[23] sn Grabbed hold of the horns of the altar. The "horns" of the altar were the horn-shaped projections on the four corners of the altar (see Exod 27:2). By going to the holy place and grabbing hold of the horns of the altar, Adonijah was seeking asylum from Solomon.

[24] tn Heb "King Solomon." The name and title have been replaced by the pronoun ("you") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[25] tn Or "swear an oath to."

[26] tn Heb "if he is a man of strength [or ability]." In this context, where Adonijah calls himself a "servant," implying allegiance to the new king, the phrase אִישׁ חַיִל ('ish khayil) probably carries the sense of "a worthy man," that is, "loyal" (see HALOT 311 s.v. חַיִל).

descendants watch their step[1] and live faithfully in my presence[2] with all their heart and being,[3] then,' he promised,[4] 'you will not fail to have a successor on the throne of Israel.'[5]

2:5 "You know what Joab son of Zeruiah did to me – how he murdered two commanders of the Israelite armies, Abner son of Ner and Amasa son of Jether.[6] During peacetime he struck them down like he would in battle;[7] when he shed their blood as if in battle, he stained his own belt and the sandals on his feet.[8] 2:6 Do to him what you think is appropriate,[9] but don't let him live long and die a peaceful death.[10]

2:7 "Treat fairly[11] the sons of Barzillai of Gilead and provide for their needs,[12] because they helped me[13] when I had to flee from your brother Absalom.

2:8 "Note well, you still have to contend with Shimei son of Gera, the Benjaminite from Bahurim,[14] who tried to call down upon me a horrible judgment when I went to Mahanaim.[15] He came down and met me at the Jordan, and I solemnly promised[16] him by the LORD, 'I will not strike you down[17] with the sword.' 2:9 But now[18] don't treat him as if he were innocent. You are a wise man and you know how to handle him;[19] make sure he has a bloody death."[20]

2:10 Then David passed away[21] and was buried in the City of David.[22] 2:11 David reigned over Israel forty years; he reigned in Hebron seven years, and in Jerusalem[23] thirty-three years.

Solomon Secures the Throne

2:12 Solomon sat on his father David's throne, and his royal authority[24] was firmly solidified.

2:13 Haggith's son Adonijah visited Bathsheba, Solomon's mother. She asked, "Do you come in peace?" He answered, "Yes."[25] 2:14 He added,[26] "I have something to say to you." She replied, "Speak." 2:15 He said, "You know that the kingdom[27] was mine and all Israel considered me king.[28] But then the kingdom was given to my brother, for the LORD decided it should be his.[29] 2:16 Now I'd like to ask you for just one thing. Please don't refuse me."[30] She said, "Go ahead and ask."[31] 2:17 He said, "Please ask King Solomon if he would give me Abishag the Shunammite as a wife, for he won't refuse you."[32] 2:18 Bathsheba replied, "That's fine,[33] I'll speak to the king on your behalf."

2:19 So Bathsheba visited King Solomon to speak to him on Adonijah's behalf. The king got up to greet[34] her, bowed to her, and then sat on his throne. He ordered a throne to be brought for the king's mother,[35] and she sat at his right hand. 2:20 She said, "I would like to ask you for just one small favor.[36] Please don't refuse me."[37] He said,[38] "Go ahead and ask, my mother, for I would not refuse you." 2:21 She said, "Allow Abishag the Shunammite to be given to your brother Adonijah as a wife." 2:22 King Solomon answered his mother, "Why just request Abishag the Shunammite for him?[39] Since he is my older brother, you should also request the kingdom for him, for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab son of Zeruiah!"

2:23 King Solomon then swore an oath by the LORD, "May God judge me severely,[40] if Adonijah does not pay for this request with his life![41] 2:24 Now, as certainly as the LORD lives (he who made me secure, allowed me to sit on my father David's throne, and established a dynasty[42] for me as he promised), Adonijah will be executed today!" 2:25 King Solomon then sent[1] Benaiah son of Jehoiada, and he killed Adonijah.[2]

2:26 The king then told Abiathar the priest, "Go back to your property[3] in Anathoth. You deserve to die,[4] but today I will not kill you because you did carry the ark of the sovereign LORD before my father David and you suffered with my father through all his difficult times."[5] 2:27 Solomon dismissed Abiathar from his position as priest of the LORD,[6] fulfilling the decree of judgment the LORD made in Shiloh against the family of Eli.[7]

2:28 When the news reached Joab (for Joab had supported[8] Adonijah, although he had not supported Absalom), he[9] ran to the tent of the LORD and grabbed hold of the horns of the altar.[10] 2:29 When King Solomon heard[11] that Joab had run to the tent of the LORD and was right there beside the altar, he ordered Benaiah son of Jehoiada,[12] "Go, strike him down." 2:30 When Benaiah arrived at the tent of the LORD, he said to him, "The king says, 'Come out!'" But he replied, "No, I will die here!" So Benaiah sent word to the king and reported Joab's reply.[13] 2:31 The king told him, "Do as he said! Strike him down and bury him. Take away from me and from my father's family[14] the guilt of Joab's murderous, bloody deeds.[15] 2:32 May the LORD punish him for the blood he shed;[16] behind my father David's back he struck down and murdered with the sword two men who were more innocent and morally upright than he[17] – Abner son of Ner, commander of Israel's army, and Amasa son of Jether, commander of Judah's army. 2:33 May Joab and his descendants be perpetually guilty of their shed blood, but may the LORD give perpetual peace to David, his descendants, his family,[18] and his dynasty."[19] 2:34 So Benaiah son of Jehoiada went up and executed Joab;[20] he was buried at his home in the wilderness. 2:35 The king appointed Benaiah son of Jehoiada to take his place at the head of[21] the army, and the king appointed Zadok the priest to take Abiathar's place.[22]

2:36 Next the king summoned[23] Shimei and told him, "Build yourself a house in Jerusalem[24] and live there – but you may not leave there to go anywhere![25] 2:37 If you ever do leave and cross the Kidron Valley, know for sure that you will certainly die! You will be responsible for your own death."[26] 2:38 Shimei said to the king, "My master the king's proposal is acceptable.[27] Your servant will do as you say."[28] So Shimei lived in Jerusalem for a long time.[29]

2:39 Three years later two of Shimei's servants ran away to King Achish son of Maacah of Gath. Shimei was told, "Look, your servants are in Gath." 2:40 So Shimei got up, saddled his donkey, and went to Achish at Gath to find his servants; Shimei went and brought back his servants from Gath. 2:41 When Solomon was told that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath and had then returned, 2:42 the king summoned[30] Shimei and said to him, "You will recall[31] that I made you take an oath by the LORD, and I solemnly warned you, 'If you ever leave and go anywhere,[32] know for sure that you will certainly die.' The Lord Gives Solomon Wisdom

3:1 Solomon made an alliance by marriage with Pharaoh, king of Egypt; he married Pharaoh's daughter. He brought her to the City of David[7] until he could finish building his residence and the temple of the LORD and the wall around Jerusalem.[8] 3:2 Now the people were offering sacrifices at the high places,[9] because in those days a temple had not yet been built to honor the LORD.[10] 3:3 Solomon demonstrated his loyalty to the LORD by following[11] the practices[12] of his father David, except that he offered sacrifices and burned incense on the high places.

3:4 The king went to Gibeon to offer sacrifices, for it had the most prominent of the high places.[13] Solomon would offer up[14] a thousand burnt sacrifices on the altar there. 3:5 One night in Gibeon the LORD appeared[15] to Solomon in a dream. God said, "Tell[16] me what I should give you." 3:6 Solomon replied, "You demonstrated[17] great loyalty to your servant, my father David, as he served[18] you faithfully, properly, and sincerely.[19] You have maintained this great loyalty to this day by allowing his son to sit on his throne.[20] 3:7 Now, O LORD my God, you have made your servant king in my father David's place, even though I am only a young man and am inexperienced.[21] 3:8 Your servant stands[22] among your chosen people;[23] they are a great nation that is too numerous to count or number. 3:9 So give your servant a discerning mind[24] so he can make judicial decisions for[25] your people and distinguish right from wrong.[26] Otherwise[27] no one is able[28] to make judicial decisions for[29] this great nation of yours."[30] 3:10 The Lord[31] was pleased that Solomon made this request.[32] 3:11 God said to him, "Because you asked for the ability to make wise judicial decisions, and not for long life, or riches, or vengeance on your enemies,[33] 3:12 I[34] grant your request,[35] and give[36] you a wise and discerning mind[37] superior to that of anyone who has preceded or will succeed you.[38] 3:13 Furthermore, I am giving[39] you what you did not request – riches and honor so that you will be the greatest king of your generation.[40] 3:14 If you follow my instructions[41] by obeying[42] my rules and regulations, just as your father David did,[43] then I will grant you long life."[1] 3:15 Solomon then woke up and realized it was a dream.[2] He went to Jerusalem, stood before the ark of the Lord's covenant, offered up burnt sacrifices, presented peace offerings,[3] and held a feast for all his servants.

[10] tn Heb "for the name of the LORD." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor (thus the translation here, "to honor the LORD"). The "name" of the LORD sometimes designates the LORD himself, being indistinguishable from the proper name.

[36] tn This statement is introduced by the particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "look") which draws attention to and emphasizes what follows. The translation assumes that the perfect tense here indicates that the action occurs as the statement is made (i.e., "right now I give you").

Solomon Demonstrates His Wisdom

3:16 Then two prostitutes came to the king and stood before him. 3:17 One of the women said, "My master, this woman and I live in the same house. I had a baby while she was with me in the house. 3:18 Then three days after I had my baby, this woman also had a baby. We were alone; there was no one else in the house except the two of us.[4] 3:19 This woman's child suffocated[5] during the night when she rolled[6] on top of him. 3:20 She got up in the middle of the night and took my son from my side, while your servant was sleeping. She put him in her arms, and put her dead son in my arms. 3:21 I got up in the morning to nurse my son, and there he was,[7] dead! But when I examined him carefully in the morning, I realized it was not my baby."[8] 3:22 The other woman said, "No! My son is alive; your son is dead!" But the first woman replied, "No, your son is dead; my son is alive." Each presented her case before the king.[9]

3:23 The king said, "One says, 'My son is alive; your son is dead,' while the other says, 'No, your son is dead; my son is alive.'" 3:24 The king ordered, "Get me a sword!" So they placed a sword before the king. 3:25 The king then said, "Cut the living child in two, and give half to one and half to the other!" 3:26 The real mother[10] spoke up to the king, for her motherly instincts were aroused.[11] She said, "My master, give her the living child! Whatever you do, don't kill him!"[12] But the other woman said, "Neither one of us will have him! Let them cut him in two!" 3:27 The king responded, "Give the first woman the living child; don't kill him. She is the mother." 3:28 When all Israel heard about the judicial decision which the king had rendered, they respected[13] the king, for they realized[14] that he possessed supernatural wisdom[15] to make judicial decisions.

Solomon's Royal Court and Administrators

4:1 King Solomon ruled over all Israel. 4:2 These were his officials:

Azariah son of Zadok was the priest.

4:3 Elihoreph and Ahijah, the sons of Shisha, wrote down what happened.[16]

Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud was in charge of the records.

4:4 Benaiah son of Jehoiada was commander of[17] the army.

Zadok and Abiathar were priests.

4:5 Azariah son of Nathan was supervisor of[18] the district governors.

Zabud son of Nathan was a priest and adviser to[19] the king.

4:6 Ahishar was supervisor of the palace.[20]

Adoniram son of Abda was supervisor of[21] the work crews.[22]

4:7 Solomon had twelve district governors appointed throughout Israel who acquired supplies for the king and his palace. Each was responsible for one month in the year. 4:8 These were their names:

Ben Hur was in charge of the hill country of Ephraim.

4:9 Ben Deker was in charge of Makaz, Shaalbim, Beth Shemesh, and Elon Beth Hanan.

4:10 Ben Hesed was in charge of Arubboth; he controlled Socoh and all the territory of Hepher.

4:11 Ben Abinadab was in charge of Naphath Dor. (He was married to Solomon's daughter Taphath.)

4:12 Baana son of Ahilud was in charge of Taanach and Megiddo,[23] as well as all of Beth Shean next to Zarethan below Jezreel, from Beth Shean to Abel Meholah and on past Jokmeam.

4:13 Ben Geber was in charge of Ramoth Gilead; he controlled the villages of Jair son of Manasseh in Gilead, as well as the region of Argob in Bashan, including sixty large walled cities with bronze bars locking their gates.

4:14 Ahinadab son of Iddo was in charge of Mahanaim.

4:15 Ahimaaz was in charge of Naphtali. (He married Solomon's daughter Basemath.)

Solomon's Wealth and Fame

4:20 The people of Judah and Israel were as innumerable as the sand on the seashore; they had plenty to eat and drink and were happy. 4:21 (5:1)[1] Solomon ruled all the kingdoms from the Euphrates River[2] to the land of the Philistines, as far as the border of Egypt. These kingdoms paid tribute as Solomon's subjects throughout his lifetime.[3] 4:22 Each day Solomon's royal court consumed[4] thirty cors[5] of finely milled flour, sixty cors of cereal, 4:23 ten calves fattened in the stall,[6] twenty calves from the pasture, and a hundred sheep, not to mention rams, gazelles, deer, and well-fed birds. 4:24 His royal court was so large because[7] he ruled over all the kingdoms west of the Euphrates River from Tiphsah[8] to Gaza; he was at peace with all his neighbors.[9] 4:25 All the people of Judah and Israel had security; everyone from Dan to Beer Sheba enjoyed the produce of their vines and fig trees throughout Solomon's lifetime.[10] 4:26 Solomon had 4,000[11] stalls for his chariot horses and 12,000 horses. 4:27 The district governors acquired supplies for King Solomon and all who ate in his royal palace.[12] Each was responsible for one month in the year; they made sure nothing was lacking. 4:28 Each one also brought to the assigned location his quota of barley and straw for the various horses.[13]

4:29 God gave Solomon wisdom and very great discernment; the breadth of his understanding[14] was as infinite as the sand on the seashore. 4:30 Solomon was wiser than all the men of the east and all the sages of Egypt.[15] 4:31 He was wiser than any man, including Ethan the Ezrahite or Heman, Calcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol. He was famous in all the neighboring nations.[16] 4:32 He composed[17] 3,000 proverbs and 1,005 songs. 4:33 He produced manuals on botany, describing every kind of plant,[18] from the cedars of Lebanon to the hyssop that grows on walls. He also produced manuals on biology, describing[19] animals, birds, insects, and fish. 4:34 People from all nations came to hear Solomon's display of wisdom;[20] they came from all the kings of the earth who heard about his wisdom.

Solomon Gathers Building Materials for the Temple

5:1 (5:15)[21] King Hiram of Tyre[22] sent messengers[23] to Solomon when he heard that he had been anointed king in his father's place. (Hiram had always been an ally of David.) 5:2 Solomon then sent this message to Hiram: 5:3 "You know that my father David was unable to build a temple to honor the LORD[24] his God, for he was busy fighting battles on all fronts while the LORD subdued his enemies.[25] 5:4 But now the LORD my God has made me secure on all fronts; there is no adversary or dangerous threat. 5:5 So I have decided[26] to build a temple to honor the

[1] sn Beginning with 4:21, the verse numbers through 5:18 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 4:21 ET = 5:1 HT, 4:22 ET = 5:2 HT, etc., through 5:18 ET = 5:32 HT. Beginning with 6:1 the numbering of verses in the English Bible and the Hebrew text is again the same.

[2] tn Heb "the River" (also in v. 24). This is the standard designation for the Euphrates River in biblical Hebrew.

[3] tn Heb "[They] were bringing tribute and were serving Solomon all the days of his life."

[4] tn Heb "the food of Solomon for each day was."

[5] tn As a unit of dry measure a cor was roughly equivalent to six bushels.

[6] tn The words "in the stall" are added for clarification; note the immediately following reference to cattle from the pasture.

[7] tn Heb "because." The words "his royal court was so large" are added to facilitate the logical connection with the preceding verse.

[8] sn Tiphsah. This was located on the Euphrates River.

[9] tn Heb "for he was ruling over all [the region] beyond the River, from Tiphsah to Gaza, over all the kingdoms beyond the River, and he had peace on every side all around."

[10] tn Heb "Judah and Israel lived securely, each one under his vine and under his fig tree, from Dan to Beer Sheba, all the days of Solomon."

[11] tn The Hebrew text has "40,000," but this is probably an inflated number (nevertheless it is followed by KJV, ASV, NASB, NRSV, TEV, CEV). Some Greek MSS of the OT and the parallel in 2 Chr 9:25 read "4,000" (cf. NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT).

[12] tn Heb "everyone who drew near to the table of King Solomon."

[13] tn Heb "barley and straw for the horses and the steeds they brought to the place which was there, each according to his measure."

[14] tn Heb "heart," i.e., mind. (The Hebrew term translated "heart" often refers to the mental faculties.)

[15] tn Heb "the wisdom of Solomon was greater than the wisdom of all the sons of the east and all the wisdom of Egypt."

[16] tn Heb "his name was in all the surrounding nations."

[17] tn Heb "spoke."

[18] tn Heb "he spoke about plants."

[19] tn Heb "he spoke about."

[20] tn Heb "the wisdom of Solomon."

[21] sn The verse numbers in the English Bible differ from those in the Hebrew text (BHS) here; 5:1-18 in the English Bible corresponds to 5:15-32 in the Hebrew text. See the note at 4:21.

[22] map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

[23] tn Heb "his servants."

[24] tn Heb "a house for the name of the LORD." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor. The "name" of the LORD sometimes designates the LORD himself, being indistinguishable from the proper name.

[25] tn Heb "because of the battles which surrounded him until the LORD placed them under the soles of his feet."

[26] tn Heb "Look, I am saying."

LORD[1] my God, as the LORD instructed my father David, 'Your son, whom I will put on your throne in your place, is the one who will build a temple to honor me.'[2] 5:6 So now order some cedars of Lebanon to be cut for me. My servants will work with your servants. I will pay your servants whatever you say is appropriate, for you know that we have no one among us who knows how to cut down trees like the Sidonians."

5:7 When Hiram heard Solomon's message, he was very happy. He said, "The LORD is worthy of praise today because he[3] has given David a wise son to rule over this great nation." 5:8 Hiram then sent this message to Solomon: "I received[4] the message you sent to me. I will give you all the cedars and evergreens you need.[5] 5:9 My servants will bring the timber down from Lebanon to the sea. I will send it by sea in raft-like bundles to the place you designate.[6] There I will separate the logs[7] and you can carry them away. In exchange you will supply the food I need for my royal court."[8]

5:10 So Hiram supplied the cedars and evergreens Solomon needed,[9] 5:11 and Solomon supplied Hiram annually with 20,000 cors[10] of wheat as provision for his royal court,[11] as well as 120,000 gallons[12] of pure[13] olive oil.[14] 5:12 So the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, as he had promised him. And Hiram and Solomon were at peace and made a treaty.[15]

5:13 King Solomon conscripted[16] work crews[17] from throughout Israel, 30,000 men in all. 5:14 He sent them to Lebanon in shifts of 10,000 men per month. They worked in Lebanon for one month, and then spent two months at home. Adoniram was supervisor of[18] the work crews. 5:15 Solomon also had 70,000 common laborers[19] and 80,000 stonecutters[20] in the hills, 5:16 besides 3,300[21] officials who supervised the workers.[22] 5:17 By royal order[23] they supplied large valuable stones in order to build the temple's foundation with chiseled stone. 5:18 Solomon's and Hiram's construction workers,[24] along with men from Byblos,[25] did the chiseling and prepared the wood and stones for the building of the temple.[26]

The Building of the Temple

6:1 In the four hundred and eightieth year after the Israelites left Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, during the month Ziv[27] (the second month), he began building the LORD's temple. 6:2 The temple King Solomon built for the LORD was 90 feet[28] long, 30 feet[29] wide, and 45 feet[30] high. 6:3 The porch in front of the main hall of the temple was 30 feet[31] long, corresponding to the width of the temple. It was 15 feet[32] wide, extending out from the front of the temple. 6:4 He made framed windows for the temple. 6:5 He built an extension all around the walls of the temple's main hall and holy place and constructed side rooms in it.[33] 6:6 The bottom floor of the extension was seven and a half feet[34] wide, the middle floor nine feet[35] wide,

[1] tn Heb "a house for the name of the LORD." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor. The "name" of the LORD sometimes designates the LORD himself, being indistinguishable from the proper name.

[2] tn Heb "a house for my name." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor. The "name" of the LORD sometimes designates the LORD himself, being indistinguishable from the proper name.

[3] tn Or "Blessed be the LORD today, who...."

[4] tn Heb "heard."

[5] tn Heb "I will satisfy all your desire with respect to cedar wood and with respect to the wood of evergreens."

[6] tn Heb "I will place them [on? as?] rafts in the sea to the place where you designate to me." This may mean he would send them by raft, or that he would tie them in raft-like bundles, and have ships tow them down to an Israelite port.

[7] tn Heb "smash them," i.e., untie the bundles.

[8] tn Heb "as for you, you will satisfy my desire by giving food for my house."

[9] tn Heb "and Hiram gave to Solomon cedar wood and the wood of evergreens, all his desire."

[10] sn As a unit of dry measure a cor was roughly equivalent to six bushels.

[11] tn Heb "his house."

[12] tc The Hebrew text has "twenty cors," but the ancient Greek version and the parallel text in 2 Chr 2:10 read "twenty thousand baths."

sn A bath was a liquid measure roughly equivalent to six gallons (about 22 liters), so this was a quantity of about 120,000 gallons (440,000 liters).

[13] tn Or "pressed."

[14] tn Heb "and Solomon supplied Hiram with twenty thousand cors of wheat...pure olive oil. So Solomon would give to Hiram year by year."

[15] tn Heb "a covenant," referring to a formal peace treaty or alliance.

[16] tn Heb "raised up."

[17] sn Work crews. This Hebrew word (מַס, mas) refers to a group of laborers conscripted for royal or public service.

[18] tn Heb "was over."

[19] tn Heb "carriers of loads."

[20] tn Heb "cutters" (probably of stones).

[21] tc Some Greek MSS of the OT read "3,600"; cf. 2 Chr 2:2, 18 and NLT.

[22] tn Heb "besides thirty-three hundred from the officials of Solomon's governors who were over the work, the ones ruling over the people, the ones doing the work."

[23] tn Heb "and the king commanded."

[24] tn Heb "builders."

[25] tn Heb "the Gebalites." The reading is problematic and some emend to a verb form meaning, "set the borders."

[26] tc The LXX includes the words "for three years."

[27] sn During the month Ziv. This would be April-May, 966 B.C. by modern reckoning.

[28] tn Heb "sixty cubits." A cubit was a unit of measure roughly equivalent to 18 inches or 45 cm. Measurements in vv. 2-10 have been converted to feet in the translation for clarity.

[29] tn Heb "twenty cubits."

[30] tn Heb "thirty cubits."

[31] tn Heb "twenty cubits."

[32] tn Heb "ten cubits."

[33] tn Heb "and he built on the wall of the temple an extension all around, the walls of the temple all around, for the main hall and for the holy place, and he made side rooms all around."

and the third floor ten and a half[1] feet wide. He made ledges[2] on the temple's outer walls so the beams would not have to be inserted into the walls.[3] 6:7 As the temple was being built, only stones shaped at the quarry[4] were used; the sound of hammers, pickaxes, or any other iron tool was not heard at the temple while it was being built. 6:8 The entrance to the bottom[5] level of side rooms was on the south side of the temple; stairs went up[6] to the middle floor and then on up to the third[7] floor. 6:9 He finished building the temple[8] and covered it[9] with rafters[10] and boards made of cedar.[11] 6:10 He built an extension all around the temple; it was seven and a half feet high[12] and it was attached to the temple by cedar beams.

6:11[13] The LORD said[14] to Solomon: 6:12 "As for this temple you are building, if you follow[15] my rules, observe[16] my regulations, and obey all my commandments,[17] I will fulfill through you the promise I made to your father David.[18] 6:13 I will live among the Israelites and will not abandon my people Israel."

6:14 So Solomon finished building the temple.[19] 6:15 He constructed the walls inside the temple with cedar planks; he paneled the inside with wood from the floor of the temple to the rafters[20] of the ceiling. He covered the temple floor with boards made from the wood of evergreens. 6:16 He built a wall 30 feet in from the rear of the temple as a partition for an inner sanctuary that would be the most holy place.[21] He paneled the wall with cedar planks from the floor to the rafters.[22] 6:17 The main hall in front of the inner sanctuary was 60 feet long.[23] 6:18 The inside of the temple was all cedar and was adorned with carvings of round ornaments and of flowers in bloom. Everything was cedar; no stones were visible.[24]

6:19 He prepared the inner sanctuary inside the temple so that the ark of the covenant of the LORD could be placed there. 6:20 The inner sanctuary was 30 feet[25] long, 30 feet wide, and 30 feet high. He plated it with gold,[26] as well as the cedar altar.[27] 6:21 Solomon plated the inside of the temple with gold.[28] He hung golden chains in front of the inner sanctuary and plated the inner sanctuary[29] with gold. 6:22 He plated the entire inside of the temple with gold, as well as the altar inside the inner sanctuary.[30]

6:23 In the inner sanctuary he made two cherubs of olive wood; each stood 15 feet[31] high. 6:24 Each of the first cherub's wings was seven and a half feet long; its entire wingspan was 15 feet.[32] 6:25 The second cherub also had a wingspan of 15 feet; it was identical to the first in measurements and shape.[33] 6:26 Each cherub stood 15 feet high.[34] 6:27 He put the cherubs in the inner sanctuary of the temple.[35] Their wings were spread out. One of the first cherub's wings touched one wall and one of the other cherub's wings touched the opposite wall. The first cherub's other wing touched the second cherub's other wing in the middle of the room.[36] 6:28 He plated the cherubs with gold.

[1] tn Heb "seven cubits."

[2] tn Or "offsets" (ASV, NAB, NASB, NRSV); NIV "offset ledges."

[3] tn Heb "so that [the beams] would not have a hold in the walls of the temple."

[4] tn Heb "finished stone of the quarry," i.e., stones chiseled and shaped at the time they were taken out of the quarry.

[5] tc The Hebrew text has "middle," but the remainder of the verse suggests this is an error.

[6] tn Heb "by stairs they went up." The word translated "stairs" occurs only here. Other options are "trapdoors" or "ladders."

[7] tc The translation reads with a few medieval Hebrew MSS, the Syriac Peshitta, and Vulgate הַשְּׁלִשִׁית (hash^{e}lishit, "the third") rather than MT הַשְּׁלִשִׁים (hash^{e}lishim, "the thirty").

[8] tn Heb " built the house and completed it."

[9] tn Heb "the house."

[10] tn The word occurs only here; the precise meaning is uncertain.

[11] tn Heb "and rows with cedar wood."

[12] tn Heb "five cubits." This must refer to the height of each floor or room.

[13] tc The LXX lacks vv. 11-14.

[14] tn Heb "the word of the LORD was."

[15] tn Heb "walk in."

[16] tn Heb "do."

[17] tn Heb "and keep all my commandments by walking in them."

[18] tn Heb "I will establish my word with you which I spoke to David your father."

[20] tc The MT reads קִירוֹת (qirot, "walls"), but this should be emended to קוֹרוֹת (qorot, "rafters"). See BDB 900 s.v. קוֹרָה.

[21] tn Heb "He built twenty cubits from the rear areas of the temple with cedar planks from the floor to the walls, and he built it on the inside for an inner sanctuary, for a holy place of holy places."

[22] tc The MT has קְלָעִים (q^{e}la'im, "curtains"), but this should be emended to קוֹרוֹת (qorot, "rafters"). See BDB 900 s.v. קוֹרָה.

[23] tn Heb "and the house was forty cubits, that is, the main hall before it."

[24] tn Heb "Cedar was inside the temple, carvings of gourds (i.e., gourd-shaped ornaments) and opened flowers; the whole was cedar, no stone was seen."

[25] tn Heb "twenty cubits" (this measurement occurs three times in this verse).

[26] tn Heb "with plated gold" (or perhaps, "with pure gold").

[27] tn Heb "he plated [the] altar of cedar."

[29] tn Heb "it."

[30] tn Heb "all the temple he plated with gold until all the temple was finished; and the whole altar which was in the inner sanctuary he plated with gold."

[31] tn Heb "ten cubits" (a cubit was a unit of measure roughly equivalent to 18 inches or 45 cm).

[32] tn Heb "The first wing of the [one] cherub was five cubits, and the second wing of the cherub was five cubits, ten cubits from the tips of his wings to the tips of his wings."

[33] tn Heb "and the second cherub was ten cubits, the two cherubs had one measurement and one shape."

[34] tn Heb "the height of the first cherub was ten cubits; and so was the second cherub."

[35] tn Heb "in the midst of the inner house," i.e., in the inner sanctuary.

[36] tn Heb "and their wings were in the middle of the room, touching wing to wing."

6:29 On all the walls around the temple, inside and out,[1] he carved[2] cherubs, palm trees, and flowers in bloom. 6:30 He plated the floor of the temple with gold, inside and out.[3] 6:31 He made doors of olive wood at the entrance to the inner sanctuary; the pillar on each doorpost was five-sided.[4] 6:32 On the two doors made of olive wood he carved[5] cherubs, palm trees, and flowers in bloom, and he plated them with gold.[6] He plated the cherubs and the palm trees with hammered gold.[7] 6:33 In the same way he made doorposts of olive wood for the entrance to the main hall, only with four-sided pillars.[8] 6:34 He also made[9] two doors out of wood from evergreens; each door had two folding leaves.[10] 6:35 He carved cherubs, palm trees, and flowers in bloom and plated them with gold, leveled out over the carvings. 6:36 He built the inner courtyard with three rows of chiseled stones and a row of cedar beams.

6:37 In the month Ziv[11] of the fourth year of Solomon's reign[12] the foundation was laid for the LORD's temple. 6:38 In the eleventh year, in the month Bul[13] (the eighth month) the temple was completed in accordance with all its specifications and blueprints. It took seven years to build.[14]

The Building of the Royal Palace

7:1 Solomon took thirteen years to build his palace.[15] 7:2 He named[16] it "The Palace of the Lebanon Forest";[17] it was 150 feet[18] long, 75 feet[19] wide, and 45 feet[20] high. It had four rows of cedar pillars and cedar beams above the pillars. 7:3 The roof above the beams supported by the pillars was also made of cedar; there were forty-five beams, fifteen per row. 7:4 There were three rows of windows arranged in sets of three.[21] 7:5 All of the entrances[22] were rectangular in shape[23] and they were arranged in sets of three.[24] 7:6 He made a colonnade[25] 75 feet[26] long and 45 feet[27] wide. There was a porch in front of this and pillars and a roof in front of the porch.[28] 7:7 He also made a throne room, called "The Hall of Judgment," where he made judicial decisions.[29] It was paneled with cedar from the floor to the rafters.[30] 7:8 The palace where he lived was constructed in a similar way.[31] He also constructed a palace like this hall for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had married.[32] 7:9 All of these were built with the best[33] stones, chiseled to the right size[34] and cut with a saw on all sides,[35] from the foundation to the edge of the roof[36] and from the outside to the great courtyard. 7:10 The foundation was made of large valuable stones, measuring either 15 feet or

[1] sn Inside and out probably refers to the inner and outer rooms within the building.

[2] tn Heb "carved engravings of carvings."

[3] sn Inside and out probably refers to the inner and outer rooms within the building.

[4] tn Heb "the pillar, doorposts, a fifth part" (the precise meaning of this description is uncertain).

[5] tn Heb "carved carvings of."

[6] tn Heb "he plated [with] gold" (the precise object is not stated).

[7] tn Heb "and he hammered out the gold on the cherubs and the palm trees."

[8] tn Heb "and so he did at the entrance of the main hall, doorposts of olive wood, from a fourth."

[9] tn The words "he also made" are added for stylistic reasons.

[10] tc Heb "two of the leaves of the first door were folding, and two of the leaves of the second door were folding." In the second half of the description, the MT has קְלָעִים (qe'la'im, "curtains"), but this is surely a corruption of צְלָעִים (tse'la'im, "leaves") which appears in the first half of the statement.

[11] sn In the month Ziv. This would be April-May, 966 B.C. by modern reckoning.

[12] tn The words "of Solomon's reign" are added for clarification. See v. 1.

[13] sn In the month Bul. This would be October-November 959 B.C. in modern reckoning.

[14] tn Heb "he built it in seven years."

[15] tn Heb "His house Solomon built in thirteen years and he completed all his house."

[16] tn Heb "he built."

[17] sn The Palace of the Lebanon Forest. This name was appropriate because of the large amount of cedar, undoubtedly brought from Lebanon, used in its construction. The cedar pillars in the palace must have given it the appearance of a forest.

[18] tn Heb "one hundred cubits."

[19] tn Heb "fifty cubits."

[20] tn Heb "thirty cubits."

[21] tn Heb "and framed [windows in] three rows, and opening to opening three times." The precise meaning of this description is uncertain. Another option might be, "overhung [in] three rows." This might mean they were positioned high on the walls.

[22] tn Heb "all of the doors and doorposts."

[23] sn Rectangular in shape. That is, rather than arched.

[24] tn Heb "and all the entrances and the doorposts [had] four frames, and in front of opening to opening three times" (the precise meaning of the description is uncertain).

[25] tn Heb "a porch of pillars."

[27] tn Heb "thirty cubits."

[28] tn Heb "and a porch was in front of them (i.e., the aforementioned pillars) and pillars and a roof in front of them (i.e., the aforementioned pillars and porch)." The precise meaning of the term translated "roof" is uncertain; it occurs only here and in Ezek 41:25-26.

[29] tn Heb "and a porch for the throne, where he was making judicial decisions, the Porch of Judgment, he made."

[30] tc The Hebrew text reads, "from the floor to the floor." The second occurrence of the term הַקַּרְקַע (haqqarqa', "the floor") is probably an error; one should emend to הַכְּוֹרוֹת (haqqorot, "the rafters"). See 6:16.

[31] tn Heb "and his house where he lived, the other court [i.e., as opposed to the great court], separated from the house belonging to the hall, was like this work [i.e., this style of architecture]."

[32] tn Heb "and a house he was making for the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Solomon had taken, like this porch."

[33] tn Or "valuable" (see 5:17).

[34] tn Heb "according to the measurement of chiseled [stone]."

[35] tn Heb "inside and out."

[36] tn The precise meaning of the Hebrew word מִטָּפְחוֹת (tefakhot) is uncertain, but it is clear that the referent stands in opposition to the foundation.

12 feet.[1] 7:11 Above the foundation[2] the best[3] stones, chiseled to the right size,[4] were used along with cedar. 7:12 Around the great courtyard were three rows of chiseled stones and one row of cedar beams, like the inner courtyard of the LORD's temple and the hall of the palace.[5]

Solomon Commissions Hiram to Supply the Temple

7:13 King Solomon sent for Hiram[6] of Tyre.[7] 7:14 He was the son of a widow from the tribe of Naphtali,[8] and his father was a craftsman in bronze from Tyre. He had the skill and knowledge[9] to make all kinds of works of bronze. He reported to King Solomon and did all the work he was assigned.

7:15 He fashioned two bronze pillars; each pillar was 27 feet[10] high and 18 feet[11] in circumference. 7:16 He made two bronze tops for the pillars; each was seven-and-a-half feet high.[12] 7:17 The latticework on the tops of the pillars was adorned with ornamental wreaths and chains; the top of each pillar had seven groupings of ornaments.[13] 7:18 When he made the pillars, there were two rows of pomegranate-shaped ornaments around the latticework covering the top of each pillar.[14] 7:19 The tops of the two pillars in the porch were shaped like lilies and were six feet high.[15] 7:20 On the top of each pillar, right above the bulge beside the latticework, there were two hundred pomegranate-shaped ornaments arranged in rows all the way around.[16] 7:21 He set up the pillars on the porch in front of the main hall. He erected one pillar on the right[17] side and called it Yakin;[18] he erected the other pillar on the left[19] side and called it Boaz.[20] 7:22 The tops of the pillars were shaped like lilies. So the construction of the pillars was completed.

7:23 He also made the large bronze basin called "The Sea."[21] It measured 15 feet[22] from rim to rim, was circular in shape, and stood seven-and-a-half feet[23] high. Its circumference was 45 feet.[24] 7:24 Under the rim all the way around it[25] were round ornaments[26] arranged in settings 15 feet long.[27] The ornaments were in two rows and had been cast with "The Sea."[28] 7:25 "The Sea" stood on top of twelve bulls. Three faced northward, three westward, three southward, and three eastward. "The Sea" was placed on top of them, and they all faced outward.[29] 7:26 It was four fingers thick and its rim was like that of a cup shaped like a lily blossom. It could hold about 12,000 gallons.[30]

7:27 He also made ten bronze movable stands. Each stand was six feet[31] long, six feet[32] wide, and four-and-a-half feet[33] high. 7:28 The stands were constructed with frames between the joints. 7:29 On these frames and joints were ornamental lions, bulls, and cherubs. Under the 10 tn Heb "eighteen cubits."

11 tn Heb "twelve cubits."

13 tn Heb "there were seven for the first capital, and seven for the second capital."

14 tn Heb "he made the pillars, and two rows surrounding one latticework to cover the capitals which were on top of the pomegranates, and so he did for the second latticework." The translation supplies "pomegranates" after "two rows," and understands "pillars," rather than "pomegranates," to be the correct reading after "on top of." The latter change finds support from many Hebrew MSS and the ancient Greek version.

15 tn Heb "the capitals which were on the top of the pillars were the work of lilies, in the porch, four cubits." It is unclear exactly what dimension is being measured.

16 tn Heb "and the capitals on the two pillars, also above, close beside the bulge which was beside the latticework, two hundred pomegranates in rows around, on the second capital." The precise meaning of the word translated "bulge" is uncertain.

17 tn Or "south."

18 tn The name "Yakin" appears to be a verbal form and probably means, "he establishes."

19 tn Or "north."

20 sn The meaning of the name Boaz is uncertain. For various proposals, see BDB 126-27 s.v. בעז. One attractive option is to revocalize the name as בְּעֹז (be'oz, "in strength") and to understand it as completing the verbal form on the first pillar. Taking the words together and reading from right to left, one can translate the sentence, "he establishes [it] in strength."

28 tn Heb "the gourd-shaped ornaments were in two rows, cast in its casting."

lions and bulls were decorative wreaths.[1] 7:30 Each stand had four bronze wheels with bronze axles and four supports. Under the basin the supports were fashioned on each side with wreaths.[2] 7:31 Inside the stand was a round opening that was a foot-and-a-half deep; it had a support that was two and one-quarter feet long.[3] On the edge of the opening were carvings in square frames.[4] 7:32 The four wheels were under the frames and the crossbars of the axles were connected to the stand. Each wheel was two and one-quarter feet[5] high. 7:33 The wheels were constructed like chariot wheels; their crossbars, rims, spokes, and hubs were made of cast metal. 7:34 Each stand had four supports, one per side projecting out from the stand.[6] 7:35 On top of each stand was a round opening three-quarters of a foot deep;[7] there were also supports and frames on top of the stands. 7:36 He engraved ornamental cherubs, lions, and palm trees on the plates of the supports and frames wherever there was room,[8] with wreaths[9] all around. 7:37 He made the ten stands in this way. All of them were cast in one mold and were identical in measurements and shape.

7:38 He also made ten bronze basins, each of which could hold about 240 gallons.[10] Each basin was six feet in diameter;[11] there was one basin for each stand. 7:39 He put five basins on the south side of the temple and five on the north side. He put "The Sea" on the south side, in the southeast corner.

7:40 Hiram also made basins, shovels, and bowls. He[12] finished all the work on the LORD's temple he had been assigned by King Solomon.[13] 7:41 He made[14] the two pillars, the two bowl-shaped tops of the pillars, the latticework for the bowl-shaped tops of the two pillars, 7:42 the four hundred pomegranate-shaped ornaments for the latticework of the two pillars (each latticework had two rows of these ornaments at the bowl-shaped top of the pillar), 7:43 the ten movable stands with their ten basins, 7:44 the big bronze basin called "The Sea" with its twelve bulls underneath,[15] 7:45 and the pots, shovels, and bowls. All these items King Solomon assigned Hiram to make for the LORD's temple[16] were made from polished bronze. 7:46 The king had them cast in earth foundries[17] in the region of the Jordan between Succoth and Zarethan. 7:47 Solomon left all these items unweighed; there were so many of them they did not weigh the bronze.[18]

7:48 Solomon also made all these items for the LORD's temple: the gold altar, the gold table on which was kept the Bread of the Presence,[19] 7:49 the pure gold lampstands at the entrance to the inner sanctuary (five on the right and five on the left), the gold flower-shaped ornaments, lamps, and tongs, 7:50 the pure gold bowls, trimming shears, basins, pans, and censers, and the gold door sockets for the inner sanctuary (the most holy place) and for the doors of the main hall of the temple. 7:51 When King Solomon finished constructing the LORD's temple, he[20] put the holy items that belonged to his father David (the silver, gold, and other articles) in the treasuries of the LORD's temple.

Solomon Moves the Ark into the Temple

8:1[21] Then Solomon convened in Jerusalem[22] Israel's elders, all the leaders of the Israelite tribes and families, so they could witness the transferal of the ark of the LORD's covenant from the City of David (that is, Zion).[23] 8:2 All the men of Israel assembled before King Solo-

[5] tn Heb "a cubit-and-a-half" (a cubit was a unit of measure roughly equivalent to 18 inches or 45 cm).

[6] tn Heb "four shoulders to the four sides of each stand, from the stand its shoulders." The precise meaning of the description is uncertain.

[20] tn Heb "Solomon." The proper name has been replaced by the pronoun ("he") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

mon during the festival[1] in the month Ethanim[2] (the seventh month). 8:3 When all Israel's elders had arrived, the priests lifted the ark. 8:4 The priests and Levites carried the ark of the LORD, the tent of meeting,[3] and all the holy items in the tent.[4] 8:5 Now King Solomon and all the Israelites who had assembled with him went on ahead of the ark and sacrificed more sheep and cattle than could be counted or numbered.[5]

8:6 The priests brought the ark of the LORD's covenant to its assigned[6] place in the inner sanctuary of the temple, in the most holy place, under the wings of the cherubs. 8:7 The cherubs' wings extended over the place where the ark sat; the cherubs overshadowed the ark and its poles.[7] 8:8 The poles were so long their ends were visible from the holy place in front of the inner sanctuary, but they could not be seen from beyond that point.[8] They have remained there to this very day. 8:9 There was nothing in the ark except the two stone tablets Moses had placed there in Horeb.[9] It was there that[10] the LORD made an agreement with the Israelites after he brought them out of the land of Egypt. 8:10 Once the priests left the holy place, a cloud filled the LORD's temple. 8:11 The priests could not carry out their duties[11] because of the cloud; the LORD's glory filled his temple.[12]

8:12 Then Solomon said, "The LORD has said that he lives in thick darkness. 8:13 O LORD,[13] truly I have built a lofty temple for you, a place where you can live permanently." 8:14 Then the king turned around[14] and pronounced a blessing over the whole Israelite assembly as they stood there.[15] 8:15 He said, "The LORD God of Israel is worthy of praise because he has fulfilled[16] what he promised[17] my father David. 8:16 He told David,[18] 'Since the day I brought my people Israel out of Egypt, I have not chosen a city from all the tribes of Israel to build a temple in which to live.[19] But I have chosen David to lead my people Israel.' 8:17 Now my father David had a strong desire[20] to build a temple to honor the LORD God of Israel.[21] 8:18 The LORD told my father David, 'It is right for you to have a strong desire to build a temple to honor me.[22] 8:19 But you will not build the temple; your very own son will build the temple for my honor.'[23] 8:20 The LORD has kept the promise he made.[24] I have taken my father David's place and have occupied the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised. I have built this temple for the honor[25] of the LORD God of Israel 8:21 and set up in it a place for the ark containing the covenant the LORD made with our ancestors[26] when he brought them out of the land of Egypt."

Solomon Prays for Israel

8:22 Solomon stood before the altar of the LORD in front of the entire assembly of Israel and spread out his hands toward the sky.[27] 8:23 He prayed:[28] "O LORD, God of Israel, there is no god like you in heaven above or on earth below! You maintain covenantal loyalty[29] to your servants who obey you with sincerity.[30] 8:24 You have kept your word to your servant, my father David;[31] this very day you have fulfilled what you promised.[32] 8:25 Now, O LORD, God of Israel, keep the promise you made to your servant, my father David, when you said, 'You will never fail to have a successor ruling before me on the throne of Israel,[33] provided that your descendants watch their step and serve me as you

[1] tn Heb "guard their way by walking before me as you have walked before me."

[2] tn Heb "the words that you spoke."

[3] tn Or "prove to be reliable."

[4] tn Heb "Indeed, can God really live on the earth?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Of course not," the force of which the translation above seeks to reflect.

[7] tn Heb "the loud cry and the prayer."

[10] tn Heb "by listening to the prayer which your servant is praying concerning this place."

[11] tn Heb "listen to the request of your servant and your people Israel which they are praying concerning this place."

[12] tn Heb "and you, hear inside your dwelling place, inside heaven." The precise nuance of the preposition אֶל ('el), used here with the verb "hear," is unclear. One expects the preposition "from," which appears in the parallel text in 2 Chr 6:21. The nuance "inside; among" is attested for אֶל (see Gen 23:19; 1 Sam 10:22; Jer 4:3), but in each case a verb of motion is employed with the preposition, unlike 1 Kgs 8:30. The translation above ("from inside") is based on the demands of the immediate context rather than attested usage elsewhere.

[14] tn Heb "and forgive the man who sins against his neighbor when one takes up against him a curse to curse him and the curse comes before your altar in this house." In the Hebrew text the words "and forgive" conclude v. 30, but the accusative sign at the beginning of v. 31 suggests the verb actually goes with what follows in v. 31. The parallel text in 2 Chr 6:22 begins with "and if," rather than the accusative sign. In this case "forgive" must be taken with what precedes, and v. 31 must be taken as the protasis ("if" clause) of a conditional sentence, with v. 32 being the apodosis ("then" clause) that completes the sentence.

sn Be willing to forgive the accused if the accusation is false. At first it appears that Solomon is asking God to forgive the guilty party. But in v. 32 Solomon asks the LORD to discern who is guilty and innocent, so v. 31 must refer to a situation where an accusation has been made, but not yet proven. The very periphrastic translation reflects this interpretation.

[15] tn Heb "and you, hear [from] heaven and act and judge your servants by declaring the guilty to be guilty, to give his way on his head, and to declare the innocent to be innocent, to give to him according to his innocence."

[16] tn Heb "when." In the Hebrew text vv. 33-34 actually contain one lengthy conditional sentence, which the translation has divided into two sentences for stylistic reasons.

[17] tn Or "are struck down before an enemy."

[18] tn Heb "confess [or perhaps, "praise"] your name."

[19] tn Heb "and they pray and ask for help."

[20] tn Heb "when." In the Hebrew text vv. 35-36a actually contain one lengthy conditional sentence, which the translation has divided into two sentences for stylistic reasons.

[21] tn Heb "they"; the referent (your people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Heb "confess [or perhaps, "praise"] your name."

[23] tn The Hebrew text has "because you answer them," as if the verb is from עָנָה ('anah, "to answer"). However, this reference to a divine answer is premature, since the next verse asks for God to intervene in mercy. It is better to revocalize the consonantal text as תְּעַנֵּם (t'annem, "you afflict them"), a Piel verb form from the homonym עָנָה ("to afflict").

[24] tn The translation understands כִּי (ki) in an emphatic or asseverative sense.

[25] tn Heb "the good way in which they should walk."

[26] tn Or "for an inheritance."

[27] tn Actually two Hebrew terms appear here, both of which are usually taken as referring to locusts. Perhaps different stages of growth or different varieties are in view.

[28] tn Heb "in the land, his gates."

[29] tn Heb "every prayer, every request for help which will be to all the people, to all your people Israel."

[30] tn The Hebrew term כּוּר (kur, "furnace," cf. Akkadian kūru) is a metaphor for the intense heat of purification. A כּוּר was not a source of heat but a crucible ("iron-smelting furnace") in which precious metals were melted down and their impurities burned away (see I. Cornelius, NIDOTTE 2:618-19). Thus Egypt served not as a place of punishment for the Israelites, but as a place of refinement to bring Israel to a place of submission to divine sovereignty.

Solomon Dedicates the Temple

8:62 The king and all Israel with him were presenting sacrifices to the LORD. 8:63 Solomon offered as peace offerings[13] to the LORD 22,000 cattle and 120,000 sheep. Then the king and all the Israelites dedicated the LORD's temple. 8:64 That day the king consecrated the middle of the courtyard that is in front of the LORD's temple. He offered there burnt sacrifices, grain offerings, and the fat from the peace offerings, because the bronze altar that stood before the LORD was too small to hold all these offerings.[14] 8:65 At that time Solomon and all Israel with him celebrated a festival before the LORD our God for two entire weeks. This great assembly included people from all over the land, from Lebo Hamath in the north to the Stream of Egypt[15] in the south.[16] 8:66 On the fifteenth day after the festival started,[17] he dismissed the people. They asked God to empower the king[18] and then went to their homes, happy and content[19] because of all the good the LORD had done for his servant David and his people Israel.

The Lord Gives Solomon a Promise and a Warning

9:1 After Solomon finished building the LORD's temple, the royal palace, and all the other construction projects he had planned,[20] 9:2 the LORD appeared to Solomon a second time, in the same way he had appeared to him at Gibeon.[21] 9:3 The LORD said to him, "I have answered[22] your prayer and your request for help that you made to me. I have consecrated this temple you built by making it my permanent home;[23] I will be constantly present there.[24] 9:4 You must serve me with integrity and sincerity, just as your father David did. Do everything I commanded and obey my rules and regulations.[25] 9:5 Then I will allow your dynasty to rule over Israel permanently,[26] just as I promised your father David, 'You will not fail to have a successor on the throne of Israel.'[27]

9:6 "But if you or your sons ever turn away from me, fail to obey the regulations and rules I instructed you to keep,[28] and decide to serve and worship other gods,[29] 9:7 then I will remove Israel from the land[30] I have given them, I will abandon this temple I have consecrated with my presence,[31] and Israel will be mocked and ridiculed[32] among all the nations. 9:8 This temple

[1] tn Heb "not one word from his entire good word he spoke by Moses his servant has fallen."

[2] tn Heb "to bend our hearts toward him." The infinitive is subordinate to the initial prayer, "may the LORD our God be with us." The Hebrew term לֵבָב (levav, "heart") here refers to the people's volition and will.

[3] tn Heb "to walk in all his ways."

[4] tn Heb "keep."

[5] tn Heb "May these words of mine, which I have requested before the LORD, be near the LORD our God day and night."

[8] tn Heb "the LORD, he is the God, there is no other."

[9] tn Heb "may your hearts be complete with the LORD our God."

[10] tn Heb "walking in."

[11] tn Heb "keeping."

[12] tn Heb "as this day."

[13] tn Or "tokens of peace"; NIV, TEV "fellowship offerings."

[14] tn Heb "to hold the burnt sacrifices, grain offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings."

[15] tn Or "the Wadi of Egypt" (NAB, NIV, NRSV); CEV "the Egyptian Gorge."

[16] tn Heb "Solomon held at that time the festival, and all Israel was with him, a great assembly from Lebo Hamath to the Stream of Egypt, before the LORD our God for seven days and seven days, fourteen days."

[17] tn Heb "on the eighth day" (that is, the day after the second seven-day sequence).

[18] tn Heb "they blessed the king."

[19] tn Heb "good of heart."

[22] tn Heb "I have heard."

[23] tn Heb "by placing my name there perpetually" (or perhaps, "forever").

[24] tn Heb "and my eyes and my heart will be there all the days."

[25] tn Heb "As for you, if you walk before me, as David your father walked, in integrity of heart and in uprightness, by doing all which I commanded you, [and] you keep my rules and my regulations." Verse 4 is actually a lengthy protasis ("if" section) of a conditional sentence, the apodosis ("then" section) of which appears in v. 5.

[26] tn Heb "I will establish the throne of your kingdom over Israel forever."

[27] tn Heb "there will not be cut off from you a man from upon the throne of Israel."

[29] tn Heb "and walk and serve other gods and bow down to them."

[30] tn Heb "I will cut off Israel from upon the surface of the land."

[31] tn Heb "and the temple which I consecrated for my name I will send away from before my face."

sn Instead of "I will send away," the parallel text in 2 Chr 7:20 has "I will throw away." The two verbs sound very similar in Hebrew, so the discrepancy is likely due to an oral transmissional error.

[32] tn Heb "will become a proverb and a taunt," that is, a proverbial example of destruction and an object of reproach.

will become a heap of ruins;[1] everyone who passes by it will be shocked and will hiss out their scorn,[2] saying, 'Why did the LORD do this to this land and this temple?' 9:9 Others will then answer,[3] 'Because they abandoned the LORD their God, who led their ancestors[4] out of Egypt. They embraced other gods whom they worshiped and served.[5] That is why the LORD has brought all this disaster down on them.'"

Foreign Affairs and Building Projects

9:10 After twenty years, during which Solomon built the LORD's temple and the royal palace,[6] 9:11 King Solomon gave King Hiram of Tyre[7] twenty cities in the region of Galilee, because Hiram had supplied Solomon with cedars, evergreens, and all the gold he wanted. 9:12 When Hiram went out from Tyre to inspect the cities Solomon had given him, he was not pleased with them.[8] 9:13 Hiram asked,[9] "Why did you give me these cities, my friend[10]?" He called that area the region of Cabul, a name which it has retained to this day.[11] 9:14 Hiram had sent to the king 120 talents[12] of gold.

9:15 Here are the details concerning the work crews[13] King Solomon conscripted[14] to build the LORD's temple, his palace, the terrace, the wall of Jerusalem,[15] and the cities of[16] Hazor,[17] Megiddo,[18] and Gezer. 9:16 (Pharaoh, king of Egypt, had attacked and captured Gezer. He burned it and killed the Canaanites who lived in the city. He gave it as a wedding present to his daughter, who had married Solomon.) 9:17 Solomon built up Gezer, lower Beth Horon, 9:18 Baalath, Tadmor in the wilderness,[19] 9:19 all the storage cities that belonged to him,[20] and the cities where chariots and horses were kept.[21] He built whatever he wanted in Jerusalem, Lebanon, and throughout his entire kingdom.[22] 9:20 Now several non-Israelite peoples were left in the land after the conquest of Joshua, including the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites.[23] 9:21 Their descendants remained in the land (the Israelites were unable to wipe them out completely). Solomon conscripted them for his work crews, and they continue in that role to this very day.[24] 9:22 Solomon did not assign Israelites to these work crews;[25] the Israelites served as his soldiers, attendants, officers, charioteers, and commanders of his chariot forces.[26] 9:23 These men were also in charge of Solomon's work projects; there were a total of 550 men who supervised the workers.[27] 9:24 Solomon built the terrace as soon as Pharaoh's daughter moved up from the City of David[28] to the palace Solomon built for her.[29]

9:25 Three times a year Solomon offered burnt offerings and peace offerings[30] on the altar he had built for the LORD, burning incense along

[1] tn Heb "and this house will be high [or elevated]." The statement makes little sense in this context, which predicts the desolation that judgment will bring. Some treat the clause as concessive, "Even though this temple is lofty [now]." Others, following the lead of several ancient versions, emend the text to, "this temple will become a heap of ruins."

[2] tn Heb "hiss," or perhaps "whistle." This refers to a derisive sound one would make when taunting an object of ridicule.

[3] tn Heb "and they will say."

[4] tn Heb "fathers."

[5] tn Heb "and they took hold of other gods and bowed down to them and served them."

[10] tn Heb "my brother." Kings allied through a parity treaty would sometimes address each other as "my brother." See 1 Kgs 20:32-33.

[11] tn Heb "he called them the land of Cabul to this day." The significance of the name is unclear, though it appears to be disparaging. The name may be derived from a root, attested in Akkadian and Arabic, meaning "bound" or "restricted." Some propose a wordplay, pointing out that the name "Cabul" sounds like a Hebrew phrase meaning, "like not," or "as good as nothing."

[12] tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 9,000 pounds of gold (cf. NCV, NLT); CEV "five tons"; TEV "4,000 kilogrammes."

[24] tn Heb "their sons who were left after them in the land, whom the sons of Israel were unable to wipe out, and Solomon raised them up for a crew of labor to this day."

[25] sn These work crews. The work crews referred to here must be different than the temporary crews described in 5:13-16.

[26] tn Heb "officers of his chariots and his horses."

[27] tn Heb "these [were] the officials of the governors who were over the work belonging to Solomon, five hundred fifty, the ones ruling over the people, the ones doing the work."

[28] sn The phrase City of David refers here to the fortress of Zion in Jerusalem, not to Bethlehem. See 2 Sam 5:7.

[29] tn Heb "As soon as Pharaoh's daughter went up from the City of David to her house which he built for her, then he built the terrace."

with them before the LORD. He made the temple his official worship place.[1] 9:26 King Solomon also built ships[2] in Ezion Geber, which is located near Elat in the land of Edom, on the shore of the Red Sea. 9:27 Hiram sent his fleet and some of his sailors, who were well acquainted with the sea, to serve with Solomon's men.[3] 9:28 They sailed[4] to Ophir, took from there 420 talents[5] of gold, and then brought them to King Solomon.

Solomon Entertains a Queen

10:1 When the queen of Sheba heard about Solomon,[6] she came to challenge[7] him with difficult questions.[8] 10:2 She arrived in Jerusalem[9] with a great display of pomp,[10] bringing with her camels carrying spices,[11] a very large quantity of gold, and precious gems. She visited Solomon and discussed with him everything that was on her mind. 10:3 Solomon answered all her questions; there was no question too complex for the king.[12] 10:4 When the queen of Sheba saw for herself Solomon's extensive wisdom,[13] the palace[14] he had built, 10:5 the food in his banquet hall,[15] his servants and attendants,[16] their robes, his cupbearers, and his burnt offerings which he presented in the LORD's temple, she was amazed.[17] 10:6 She said to the king, "The report I heard in my own country about your wise sayings and insight[18] was true! 10:7 I did not believe these things until I came and saw them with my own eyes. Indeed, I didn't hear even half the story![19] Your wisdom and wealth[20] surpass what was reported to me. 10:8 Your attendants, who stand before you at all times and hear your wise sayings, are truly happy![21] 10:9 May the LORD your God be praised because he favored[22] you by placing you on the throne of Israel! Because of the LORD's eternal love for Israel, he made you king so you could make just and right decisions."[23] 10:10 She gave the king 120 talents[24] of gold, a very large quantity of spices, and precious gems. The quantity of spices the queen of Sheba gave King Solomon has never been matched.[25] 10:11 (Hiram's fleet, which carried gold from Ophir, also brought from Ophir a very large quantity of fine timber and precious gems. 10:12 With the timber the king made supports[26] for the LORD's temple and for the royal palace and stringed instruments[27] for the musicians. No one has seen so much of this fine timber to this very day.[28]) 10:13 King Solomon gave the queen of Sheba everything she requested, besides what he had freely offered her.[29] Then she left and returned[30] to her homeland with her attendants.

4 tn Heb "went."

5 tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 31,500 pounds of gold (cf. NCV); CEV, NLT "sixteen tons"; TEV "more than 14,000 kilogrammes."

6 tn Heb "the report about Solomon." The Hebrew text also has, "to the name of the LORD," which fits very awkwardly in the sentence. If retained, perhaps it should be translated, "because of the reputation of the LORD." The phrase, which is omitted in the parallel passage in 2 Chr 9:1, may be an addition based on the queen's declaration of praise to the LORD in v. 9.

12 tn Heb "Solomon declared to her all her words; there was not a word hidden from the king which he did not declare to her." If riddles are specifically in view (see v. 1), then one might translate, "Solomon explained to her all her riddles; there was no riddle too complex for the king."

25 tn Heb "there has not come like those spices yet for quantity which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon."

26 tn This Hebrew architectural term occurs only here. The meaning is uncertain; some have suggested "banisters" or "parapets"; cf. TEV, NLT "railings." The parallel passage in 2 Chr 9:11 has a different word, meaning "tracks," or perhaps "steps."

27 tn Two types of stringed instruments are specifically mentioned, the כִּנּוֹר (kinnor, "zither" [?]), and נֵבֶל (nevel, "harp").

28 tn Heb "there has not come thus, the fine timber, and there has not been seen to this day."

29 tn Heb "besides what he had given her according to the hand of King Solomon."

30 tn Heb "turned and went."

Solomon's Wealth

10:14 Solomon received 666 talents[1] of gold per year,[2] 10:15 besides what he collected from the merchants,[3] traders, Arabian kings, and governors of the land. 10:16 King Solomon made two hundred large shields of hammered gold; 600 measures[4] of gold were used for each shield. 10:17 He also made three hundred small shields of hammered gold; three minas[5] of gold were used for each of these shields. The king placed them in the Palace of the Lebanon Forest.[6]

10:18 The king made a large throne decorated with ivory and overlaid it with pure gold. 10:19 There were six steps leading up to the throne, and the back of it was rounded on top. The throne had two armrests with a statue of a lion standing on each side.[7] 10:20 There were twelve statues of lions on the six steps, one lion at each end of each step. There was nothing like it in any other kingdom.[8]

10:21 All of King Solomon's cups were made of gold, and all the household items in the Palace of the Lebanon Forest were made of pure gold. There were no silver items, for silver was not considered very valuable in Solomon's time.[9] 10:22 Along with Hiram's fleet, the king had a fleet of large merchant ships[10] that sailed the sea. Once every three years the fleet[11] came into port with cargoes of[12] gold, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks.[13]

10:23 King Solomon was wealthier and wiser than any of the kings of the earth.[14] 10:24 Everyone[15] in the world wanted to visit Solomon to see him display his God-given wisdom.[16] 10:25 Year after year visitors brought their gifts, which included items of silver, items of gold, clothes, perfume, spices, horses, and mules.[17]

10:26 Solomon accumulated[18] chariots and horses. He had 1,400 chariots and 12,000 horses. He kept them in assigned cities and in Jerusalem.[19] 10:27 The king made silver as plentiful[20] in Jerusalem as stones; cedar was[21] as plentiful as sycamore fig trees are in the lowlands.[22] 10:28 Solomon acquired his horses from Egypt[23] and from Que; the king's traders purchased them from Que. 10:29 They paid 600 silver pieces for each chariot from Egypt and 150 silver pieces for each horse. They also sold chariots and horses to all the kings of the Hittites and to the kings of Syria.[24]

The Lord Punishes Solomon for Idolatry

11:1 King Solomon fell in love with many foreign women (besides Pharaoh's daughter), including Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Sidonians, and Hittites. 11:2 They came from nations about which the LORD had warned the Israelites, "You must not establish friendly relations with them![25] If you do, they will surely shift your allegiance to their gods."[26] But Solomon was irresistibly attracted to them.[27]

When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 50,000 pounds of gold (cf. NCV); CEV, NLT "twenty-five tons"; TEV "almost 23,000 kilogrammes."

[24] tn Heb "and a chariot went up and came out of Egypt for six hundred silver [pieces], and a horse for one hundred fifty, and in the same way to all the kings of the Hittites and to the kings of Aram by their hand they brought out."

[25] tn Heb "you must not go into them, and they must not go into you."

[26] tn Heb "Surely they will bend your heart after their gods." The words "if you do" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

11:3 He had 700 royal wives[1] and 300 concubines;[2] his wives had a powerful influence over him.[3] 11:4 When Solomon became old, his wives shifted his allegiance to[4] other gods; he was not wholeheartedly devoted to the LORD his God, as his father David had been.[5] 11:5 Solomon worshiped[6] the Sidonian goddess Astarte and the detestable Ammonite god Milcom.[7] 11:6 Solomon did evil in the LORD's sight;[8] he did not remain loyal to[9] the LORD, like his father David had. 11:7 Furthermore,[10] on the hill east of Jerusalem[11] Solomon built a high place[12] for the detestable Moabite god Chemosh[13] and for the detestable Ammonite god Milcom.[14] 11:8 He built high places for all his foreign wives so they could burn incense and make sacrifices to their gods.[15]

11:9 The LORD was angry with Solomon because he had shifted his allegiance[16] away from the LORD, the God of Israel, who had appeared to him on two occasions[17] 11:10 and had warned him about this very thing, so that he would not follow other gods.[18] But he did not obey[19] the LORD's command. 11:11 So the LORD said to Solomon, "Because you insist on doing these things and have not kept the covenantal rules I gave you,[20] I will surely tear the kingdom away from you and give it to your servant. 11:12 However, for your father David's sake I will not do this while you are alive. I will tear it away from your son's hand instead. 11:13 But I will not tear away the entire kingdom; I will leave[21] your son one tribe for my servant David's sake and for the sake of my chosen city Jerusalem."

11:14 The LORD brought[22] against Solomon an enemy, Hadad the Edomite, a descendant of the Edomite king. 11:15 During David's campaign against Edom,[23] Joab, the commander of the army, while on a mission to bury the dead, killed every male in Edom. 11:16 For six months Joab and the entire Israelite army[24] stayed there until they had exterminated every male in Edom.[25] 11:17 Hadad,[26] who was only a small boy at the time, escaped with some of his father's Edomite servants and headed for Egypt.[27] 11:18 They went from Midian to Paran; they took some men from Paran and went to Egypt. Pharaoh, king of Egypt, supplied him with a house and food and even assigned him some land.[28] 11:19 Pharaoh liked Hadad so well[29] he gave him his sister-in-law (Queen Tahpenes' sister) as a wife.[30] 11:20 Tahpenes' sister gave birth to his son,[31] named Genubath. Tahpenes raised[32] him in Pharaoh's palace; Genubath grew up in Pharaoh's palace among Pharaoh's sons. 11:21 While in Egypt Hadad heard that David had passed away[33] and that Joab, the commander of the army, was dead. So Hadad asked Pharaoh, "Give me permission to leave[34] so I can return to my homeland." 11:22 Pharaoh said to him, "What do you lack here that makes you want to

[2] sn Concubines were slave women in ancient Near Eastern societies who were the legal property of their master, but who could have legitimate sexual relations with their master. A concubine's status was more elevated than a mere servant, but she was not free and did not have the legal rights of a free wife. The children of a concubine could, in some instances, become equal heirs with the children of the free wife. The usage in the present passage suggests that after the period of the Judges concubines may have become more of a royal prerogative (cf. also 2 Sam 21:10-14).

[3] tn Heb "his wives bent his heart."

[4] tn Heb "bent his heart after."

[5] tn Heb "his heart was not complete with the LORD his God, like the heart of David his father."

[6] tn Heb "walked after."

[7] tn Heb "Milcom, the detestable thing of the Ammonites."

[8] tn Heb "in the eyes of the LORD."

[9] tn The idiomatic statement reads in Hebrew, "he did not fill up after."

[10] tn Heb "then."

[11] sn The hill east of Jerusalem refers to the Mount of Olives. map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[12] sn A high place. The "high places" were places of worship that were naturally or artificially elevated (see 1 Kgs 3:2).

[13] tn Heb "Chemosh, the detestable thing of Moab."

[14] tc The MT reads "Molech," but Milcom must be intended (see vv. 5, 33).

[15] tn Heb "and the same thing he did for all his foreign wives, [who] were burning incense and sacrificing to their gods."

[16] tn Heb "bent his heart."

[17] sn These two occasions are mentioned in 1 Kgs 3:5 and 9:2.

[18] tn Heb "and had commanded him concerning this thing not to walk after other gods."

[19] tn Or "keep."

[20] tn Heb "Because this is with you, and you have not kept my covenant and my rules which I commanded you."

[21] tn Heb "give."

[22] tn Or "raised up."

[23] tn Heb "when David was [fighting (?)] with Edom."

[24] tn Heb "and all Israel."

[25] tn Heb "until he had cut off every male in Edom."

[26] tn The MT reads "Adad," an alternate form of the name Hadad.

[27] tn Heb "and Adad fled, he and Edomite men from the servants of his father, to go to Egypt, and Hadad was a small boy."

[28] tn Heb "and they arose from Midian and went to Paran and they took men with them from Paran and went to Egypt to Pharaoh king of Egypt and he gave to him a house and food and he said to him, and a land he gave to him." Something seems to be accidentally omitted after "and he said to him."

[29] tn Heb "and Hadad found great favor in the eyes of Pharaoh."

[30] tn Heb "and he gave to him a wife, the sister of his wife, the sister of Tahpenes the queen."

[31] tn Heb "bore him Genubath his son."

[32] tc The Hebrew text reads וַתִּגְמְלֻהוּ (vattigm^{e}lehu, "weaned him") but a slight alteration of the consonantal text yields וַתִּגְדְּלֻהוּ (vattigd^{e}lehu, "raised him"), which seems to make better sense.

[33] tn Heb "lay down with his fathers."

go to your homeland?”[1] Hadad replied,[2] “Nothing, but please give me permission to leave.”[3]

11:23 God also brought against Solomon[4] another enemy, Rezon son of Eliada who had run away from his master, King Hadadezer of Zobah. 11:24 He gathered some men and organized a raiding band.[5] When David tried to kill them,[6] they went to Damascus, where they settled down and gained control of the city. 11:25 He was Israel’s enemy throughout Solomon’s reign and, like Hadad, caused trouble. He loathed[7] Israel and ruled over Syria.

11:26 Jeroboam son of Nebat, one of Solomon’s servants, rebelled against[8] the king. He was an Ephraimite[9] from Zeredah whose mother was a widow named Zeruah. 11:27 This is what prompted him to rebel against the king:[10] Solomon built a terrace and he closed up a gap in the wall of the city of his father David.[11] 11:28 Jeroboam was a talented man;[12] when Solomon saw that the young man was an accomplished worker, he made him the leader of the work crew from the tribe[13] of Joseph. 11:29 At that time, when Jeroboam had left Jerusalem, the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite met him on the road; the two of them were alone in the open country. Ahijah[14] was wearing a brand new robe, 11:30 and he grabbed the robe[15] and tore it into twelve pieces. 11:31 Then he told Jeroboam, “Take ten pieces, for this is what the LORD God of Israel says: ‘Look, I am about to tear the kingdom from Solomon’s hand and I will give ten tribes to you. 11:32 He will retain one tribe, for my servant David’s sake and for the sake of Jerusalem, the city I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel. 11:33 I am taking the kingdom from him[16] because they have[17] abandoned me and worshiped the Sidonian goddess Astarte, the Moabite god Chemosh, and the Ammonite god Milcom. They have not followed my instructions[18] by doing what I approve and obeying my rules and regulations, like Solomon’s father David did.[19] 11:34 I will not take the whole kingdom from his hand. I will allow him to be ruler for the rest of his life for the sake of my chosen servant David who kept my commandments and rules. 11:35 I will take the kingdom from the hand of his son and give ten tribes to you.[20] 11:36 I will leave[21] his son one tribe so my servant David’s dynasty may continue to serve me[22] in Jerusalem, the city I have chosen as my home.[23] 11:37 I will select[24] you; you will rule over all you desire to have and you will be king over Israel. 11:38 You must obey[25] all I command you to do, follow my instructions,[26] do what I approve,[27] and keep my rules and commandments, like my servant David did. Then I will be with you and establish for you a lasting dynasty, as I did for David;[28] I will give you Israel. 11:39 I will humiliate David’s descendants because of this,[29] but not forever.”[30] 11:40 Solomon tried to kill Jeroboam, but Jeroboam escaped to Egypt and found refuge with King Shishak of Egypt.[31] He stayed in Egypt until Solomon died.

[1] tn Heb “Indeed what do you lack with me, that now you are seeking to go to your land?”

[2] tn Heb “and he said.”

[3] sn So Hadad asked Pharaoh.... This lengthy description of Hadad’s exile in Egypt explains why Hadad wanted to oppose Solomon and supports the author’s thesis that his hostility to Solomon found its ultimate source in divine providence. Though Hadad enjoyed a comfortable life in Egypt, when the LORD raised him up (apparently stirring up his desire for vengeance) he decided to leave the comforts of Egypt and return to Edom.

[4] tn Heb “him”; the referent (Solomon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn Heb “and he was the officer of a raiding band.”

[6] tn The Hebrew text reads “when David killed them.” This phrase is traditionally joined with what precedes. The ancient Greek version does not reflect the phrase and some suggest that it has been misplaced from the end of v. 23.

[7] tn The construction (Qal of בָּ + קוּץ [quts + bet] preposition) is rare, but not without parallel (see Lev 20:23).

[8] tn Heb “raised a hand against.”

[9] tn Heb “Ephrathite,” which here refers to an Ephraimite (see HALOT 81 s.v. אֶפְרָיִם).

[10] tn Heb “this is the matter concerning which he raised a hand against the king.”

[11] sn The city of his father David. The phrase refers here to the fortress of Zion in Jerusalem, not to Bethlehem. See 2 Sam 5:7.

[12] tn Heb “man of strength.”

[13] tn Heb “house.”

[14] tn The Hebrew text has simply “he,” making it a bit unclear whether Jeroboam or Ahijah is the subject, but in the Hebrew word order Ahijah is the nearer antecedent, and this is followed by the present translation.

[15] tn Heb “and Ahijah grabbed the new robe that was on him.”

[16] tn The words “I am taking the kingdom from him” are supplied in the translation for clarification.

[17] tc This is the reading of the MT; the LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate read “he has.”

[18] tn Heb “walked in my ways.”

[19] tn Heb “by doing what is right in my eyes, my rules and my regulations, like David his father.”

[20] tn Heb “and I will give it to you, ten tribes.”

[22] tn Heb “so there might be a lamp for David my servant all the days before me in Jerusalem.” The metaphorical “lamp” symbolizes the Davidic dynasty. Because this imagery is unfamiliar to the modern reader, the translation “so my servant David’s dynasty may continue to serve me” has been used.

[23] tn Heb “so there might be a lamp for David my servant all the days before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen for myself to put my name there.”

[24] tn Heb “take.”

[25] tn Heb “If you obey.” In the Hebrew text v. 38 is actually one long conditional sentence, which has been broken into two parts in the translation for stylistic purposes.

[26] tn Heb “walk in my ways.”

[27] tn Heb “do what is right in my eyes.”

[28] tn Heb “I will build for you a permanent house, like I built for David.”

[29] sn Because of this. Reference is made to the idolatry mentioned earlier.

[30] tn Heb “but not all the days.”

[31] tn Heb “but Jeroboam arose and ran away to Egypt, to Shishak king of Egypt.”

Solomon's Reign Ends

11:41 The rest of the events of Solomon's reign, including all his accomplishments and his wise decisions, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of Solomon.[1] 11:42 Solomon ruled over all Israel from Jerusalem[2] for forty years. 11:43 Then Solomon passed away[3] and was buried in the city of his father David.[4] His son Rehoboam replaced him as king.[5]

Rehoboam Loses His Kingdom

12:1 Rehoboam traveled to Shechem, for all Israel had gathered in[6] Shechem to make Rehoboam[7] king. 12:2[8] When Jeroboam son of Nebat heard the news, he was still in Egypt, where he had fled from King Solomon and had been living ever since.[9] 12:3 They sent for him,[10] and Jeroboam and the whole Israelite assembly came and spoke to Rehoboam, saying, 12:4 "Your father made us work too hard.[11] Now if you lighten the demands he made and don't make us work as hard, we will serve you."[12] 12:5 He said to them, "Go away for three days, then return to me." So the people went away.

12:6 King Rehoboam consulted with the older advisers who had served[13] his father Solomon when he had been alive. He asked them,[14] "How do you advise me to answer these people?" 12:7 They said to him, "Today if you show a willingness to help these people and grant their request, they will be your servants from this time forward."[15] 12:8 But Rehoboam rejected their advice and consulted the young advisers who served him, with whom he had grown up.[16] 12:9 He asked them, "How do you advise me[17] to respond to these people who said to me, 'Lessen the demands your father placed on us'?"[18] 12:10 The young advisers with whom Rehoboam[19] had grown up said to him, "Say this to these people who have said to you, 'Your father made us work hard, but now lighten our burden.'[20] Say this to them: 'I am a lot harsher than my father![21] 12:11 My father imposed heavy demands on you; I will make them even heavier.[22] My father punished you with ordinary whips; I will punish you with whips that really sting your flesh.'"[23]

12:12 Jeroboam and all the people reported[24] to Rehoboam on the third day, just as the king had ordered when he said, "Return to me on the third day." 12:13 The king responded to the people harshly. He rejected the advice of the older men 12:14 and followed[25] the advice of the younger ones. He said, "My father imposed heavy demands on you; I will make them even heavier.[26] My father punished you with ordinary whips; I will punish you with whips that really sting your flesh."[27] 12:15 The king refused to listen to the people, because the LORD was instigating this turn of events[28] so that he might bring to pass the prophetic announcement he had

4 sn The city of his father David. The phrase refers here to the fortress of Zion in Jerusalem, not to Bethlehem. See 2 Sam 5:7.

5 tc Before this sentence the Old Greek translation includes the following words: "And it so happened that when Jeroboam son of Nebat heard – now he was in Egypt where he had fled from before Solomon and was residing in Egypt – he came straight to his city in the land of Sarira which is on mount Ephraim. And king Solomon slept with his fathers."

6 tn Heb "come [to]."

7 tn Heb "him"; the referent (Rehoboam) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tc Verse 2 is not included in the Old Greek translation. See the note on 11:43.

9 tn Heb "and Jeroboam lived in Egypt." The parallel text in 2 Chr 10:2 reads, "and Jeroboam returned from Egypt." In a purely consonantal text the forms "and he lived" and "and he returned" are identical (וישׁב).

10 tn Heb "They sent and called for him."

11 tn Heb "made our yoke burdensome."

12 tn Heb "but you, now, lighten the burdensome work of your father and the heavy yoke which he placed on us, and we will serve you." In the Hebrew text the prefixed verbal form with vav (וְנַעַבְדֶךָּ, [*v*ᵉ*na'avdekha*] "and we will serve you") following the imperative (הָקֵל [haqel], "lighten") indicates purpose (or result). The conditional sentence used in the translation above is an attempt to bring out the logical relationship between these forms.

13 tn Heb "stood before."

14 tn Heb "saying."

15 tn Heb "If today you are a servant to these people and you serve them and answer them and speak to them good words, they will be your servants all the days."

16 tn Heb "He rejected the advice of the elders which they advised and he consulted the young men with whom he had grown up, who stood before him." The referent (Rehoboam) of the initial pronoun ("he") has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn In the Hebrew text the verb "we will respond" is plural, although it can be understood as an editorial "we." The ancient versions have the singular here.

18 tn Heb "Lighten the yoke which your father placed on us."

19 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Rehoboam) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Heb "Your father made our yoke heavy, but make it lighter upon us."

21 tn Heb "My little one is thicker than my father's hips." The referent of "my little one" is not clear. The traditional view is that it refers to the little finger. As the following statement makes clear, Rehoboam's point is that he is more harsh and demanding than his father.

22 tn Heb "and now my father placed upon you a heavy yoke, but I will add to your yoke."

23 tn Heb "My father punished you with whips, but I will punish you with scorpions." "Scorpions" might allude to some type of torture using poisonous insects, but more likely it refers to a type of whip that inflicts an especially biting, painful wound. Cf. CEV "whips with pieces of sharp metal."

24 tn Heb "came."

25 tn Heb "and spoke to them according to."

26 tn Heb "My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add to your yoke."

27 tn Heb "My father punished you with whips, but I will punish you with scorpions." See the note on the same phrase in v. 11.

28 tn Heb "because this turn of events was from the LORD."

made[1] through Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam son of Nebat.

12:16 When all Israel saw that the king refused to listen to them, the people answered the king, "We have no portion in David, no share in the son of Jesse![2] Return to your homes, O Israel![3] Now, look after your own dynasty, O David!"[4] So Israel returned to their homes.[5] 12:17 (Rehoboam continued to rule over the Israelites who lived in the cities of Judah.) 12:18 King Rehoboam sent Adoniram,[6] the supervisor of the work crews,[7] out after them, but all Israel stoned him to death. King Rehoboam managed to jump into his chariot and escape to Jerusalem.[8] 12:19 So Israel has been in rebellion against the Davidic dynasty to this very day. 12:20 When all Israel heard that Jeroboam had returned, they summoned him to the assembly and made him king over all Israel. No one except the tribe of Judah remained loyal to the Davidic dynasty.[9]

12:21 When Rehoboam arrived in Jerusalem, he summoned 180,000 skilled warriors from all of Judah and the tribe of Benjamin[10] to attack Israel and restore the kingdom to Rehoboam son of Solomon. 12:22 But God told Shemaiah the prophet,[11] 12:23 "Say this to King Rehoboam son of Solomon of Judah, and to all Judah and Benjamin, as well as the rest of the people, 12:24 'The LORD says this: "Do not attack and make war with your brothers, the Israelites. Each of you go home, for I have caused this to happen."'"[12] They obeyed the LORD and went home as the LORD had ordered them to do.[13]

Jeroboam Makes Golden Calves

12:25[14] Jeroboam built up Shechem in the Ephraimite hill country and lived there. From there he went out and built up Penuel. 12:26 Jeroboam then thought to himself:[15] "Now the Davidic dynasty could regain the kingdom.[16] 12:27 If these people go up to offer sacrifices in the LORD's temple in Jerusalem,[17] their loyalty could shift to their former master,[18] King Rehoboam of Judah. They might kill me and return to King Rehoboam of Judah." 12:28 After the king had consulted with his advisers,[19] he made two golden calves. Then he said to the people,[20] "It is too much trouble for you to go up to Jerusalem. Look, Israel, here are your gods who brought you up from the land of Egypt." 12:29 He put one in Bethel[21] and the other in Dan. 12:30 This caused Israel to sin;[22] the people went to Bethel and Dan to worship the calves.[23]

12:31 He built temples[24] on the high places and appointed as priests people who were not Levites. 12:32 Jeroboam inaugurated a festival on the fifteenth day of the eighth month,[25] like the festival celebrated in Judah.[26] On the altar in Bethel he offered sacrifices to the calves he had made.[27] In Bethel he also appointed priests for the high places he had made.

[15] tn Heb "said in his heart."

[24] tn The Hebrew text has the singular, but the plural is preferable here (see 1 Kgs 13:32). The Old Greek translation and the Vulgate have the plural.

[25] sn The eighth month would correspond to October-November in modern reckoning.

[26] sn The festival celebrated in Judah probably refers to the Feast of Tabernacles (i.e., Booths or Temporary Shelters), held in the seventh month (September-October). See also 1 Kgs 8:2.

A Prophet from Judah Visits Bethel

12:33 On the fifteenth day of the eighth month (a date he had arbitrarily chosen)[1] Jeroboam[2] offered sacrifices on the altar he had made in Bethel.[3] He inaugurated a festival for the Israelites and went up to the altar to offer sacrifices. 13:1 Just then[4] a prophet[5] from Judah, sent by the LORD, arrived in Bethel,[6] as Jeroboam was standing near the altar ready to offer a sacrifice. 13:2 With the authority of the LORD[7] he cried out against the altar, "O altar, altar! This is what the LORD says, 'Look, a son named Josiah will be born to the Davidic dynasty. He will sacrifice on you the priests of the high places who offer sacrifices on you. Human bones will be burned on you.'"[8] 13:3 That day he also announced[9] a sign, "This is the sign the LORD has predetermined:[10] The altar will be split open and the ashes[11] on it will fall to the ground."[12] 13:4 When the king heard what the prophet[13] cried out against the altar in Bethel, Jeroboam, standing at the altar, extended his hand[14] and ordered,[15] "Seize him!" The hand he had extended shriveled up[16] and he could not pull it back. 13:5 The altar split open and the ashes[17] fell from the altar to the ground,[18] in fulfillment of the sign the prophet had announced with the LORD's authority.[19] 13:6 The king pled with[20] the prophet,[21] "Seek the favor of[22] the LORD your God and pray for me, so that my hand may be restored." So the prophet sought the LORD's favor[23] and the king's hand was restored to its former condition.[24] 13:7 The king then said to the prophet, "Come home with me and have something to eat. I'd like to give a present." 13:8 But the prophet said to the king, "Even if you were to give me half your possessions,[25] I could not go with you and eat and drink[26] in this place. 13:9 For the LORD gave me strict orders,[27] 'Do not eat or drink[28] there and do not go home the way you came.'" 13:10 So he started back on another road; he did not travel back on the same road he had taken to Bethel.

13:11 Now there was an old prophet living in Bethel.[29] When his sons came home, they told their father[30] everything the prophet[31] had done in Bethel that day and all the words he had spoken to the king.[32] 13:12 Their father asked them, "Which road did he take?" His sons showed him[33] the road the prophet[34] from Judah had taken. 13:13 He then told his sons, "Saddle the donkey for me." When they had saddled the donkey for him, he mounted it 13:14 and took off after the prophet,[35] whom he found sitting under an oak tree. He asked him, "Are you the prophet[36] from Judah?" He answered, "Yes, I am." 13:15 He then said to him, "Come home with me and eat something." 13:16 But he replied, "I can't go back with you[37] or eat and drink[38] with you in this place. 13:17 For the LORD gave me strict orders,[39] 'Do not eat or drink[40] there; do not go back the way you came.'" 13:18 The old prophet then said,[41] "I too am a prophet like you. An angel told me with the LORD's authority,[42] 'Bring him back with you to your house so he can eat and drink.'"[43] But he [30] tn Heb "and his son came and told him." The MT has the singular here, but several other textual witnesses have the plural, which is more consistent with the second half of the verse and with vv. 12-13.

[31] tn Heb "the man of God."

[32] tn Heb "all the actions which the man of God performed that day in Bethel, the words which he spoke to the king, and they told them to their father."

[33] tn The Hebrew text has "and his sons saw" (וַיִּרְאוּ [vayyir'u], Qal from רָאָה [ra'ah]). In this case the verbal construction (vav consecutive + prefixed verbal form) would have to be understood as pluperfect, "his sons had seen." Such uses of this construction are rare at best. Consequently many, following the lead of the ancient versions, prefer to emend the verbal form to a Hiphil with pronominal suffix (וַיַּרְאֻהוּ [vayyar'uhu], "and they showed him").

was lying to him.[1] 13:19 So the prophet went back with him and ate and drank in his house.[2]

13:20 While they were sitting at the table, the LORD spoke through the old prophet[3] 13:21 and he cried out to the prophet from Judah, "This is what the LORD says, 'You[4] have rebelled against the LORD[5] and have not obeyed the command the LORD your God gave you. 13:22 You went back and ate and drank in this place, even though he said to you, "Do not eat or drink there."[6] Therefore[7] your corpse will not be buried in your ancestral tomb.'"[8]

13:23 When the prophet from Judah finished his meal,[9] the old prophet saddled his visitor's donkey for him.[10] 13:24 As the prophet from Judah was traveling, a lion attacked him on the road and killed him.[11] His corpse was lying on the road, and the donkey and the lion just stood there beside it.[12] 13:25 Some men came by[13] and saw the corpse lying in the road with the lion standing beside it.[14] They went and reported what they had seen[15] in the city where the old prophet lived. 13:26 When the old prophet who had invited him to his house heard the news,[16] he said, "It is the prophet[17] who rebelled against the LORD.[18] The LORD delivered him over to the lion and it ripped him up[19] and killed him, just as the LORD warned him."[20] 13:27 He told his sons, "Saddle my donkey," and they did so.[21] 13:28 He went and found the corpse lying in the road with the donkey and the lion standing beside it;[22] the lion had neither eaten the corpse nor attacked the donkey. 13:29 The old prophet[23] picked up the corpse of the prophet,[24] put it on the donkey, and brought it back. The old prophet then entered the city to mourn him and to bury him. 13:30 He put the corpse into his own tomb, and they[25] mourned over him, saying, "Ah, my brother!" 13:31 After he buried him, he said to his sons, "When I die, bury me in the tomb where the prophet[26] is buried; put my bones right beside his bones, 13:32 for the prophecy he announced with the LORD's authority[27] against the altar in Bethel[28] and against all the temples on the high places in the cities of the north[29] will certainly be fulfilled."

A Prophet Announces the End of Jeroboam's Dynasty

13:33 After this happened, Jeroboam still did not change his evil ways;[30] he continued to appoint common people[31] as priests at the high places. Anyone who wanted the job he consecrated as a priest.[32] 13:34 This sin caused Jeroboam's dynasty[33] to come to an end and to be destroyed from the face of the earth.

14:1[34] At that time Jeroboam's son Abijah became sick. 14:2 Jeroboam told his wife, "Disguise[35] yourself so that people cannot recognize you are Jeroboam's wife. Then go to Shiloh; sn He was lying to him. The motives and actions of the old prophet are difficult to understand. The old man's response to the prophet's death (see vv. 26-32) suggests he did not trick him with malicious intent. The old prophet probably wanted the honor of entertaining such a celebrity, or perhaps simply desired some social interaction with a fellow prophet.

[1] tn Or "deceiving him."

[2] tn Heb "and he returned with him and ate food in his house and drank water."

[3] tn Heb "and the word of the LORD came to the prophet who had brought him back."

[4] tn The Hebrew text has "because" at the beginning of the sentence. In the Hebrew text vv. 21-22 are one long sentence comprised of a causal clause giving the reason for divine punishment (vv. 21-22a) and the main clause announcing the punishment (v. 22b). The translation divides this lengthy sentence for stylistic reasons.

[5] tn Heb "the mouth [i.e., command] of the LORD."

[6] tn Heb "and you returned and ate food and drank water in the place about which he said to you, 'do not eat food and do not drink water.'"

[7] tn "Therefore" is added for stylistic reasons. See the note at 1 Kgs 13:21 pertaining to the grammatical structure of vv. 21-22.

[8] tn Heb "will not go to the tomb of your fathers."

[9] tn Heb "and after he had eaten food and after he had drunk."

[10] tn Heb "and he saddled for him the donkey, for the prophet whom he had brought back."

[11] tn Heb "and he went and a lion met him in the road and killed him."

[12] tn Heb "and his corpse fell on the road, and the donkey was standing beside it, and the lion was standing beside the corpse."

[13] tn Heb "Look, men were passing by."

[14] tn Heb "the corpse." The noun has been replaced by the pronoun ("it") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[15] tn The words "what they had seen" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

[16] tn Heb "and the prophet who had brought him back from the road heard."

[17] tn Heb "the man of God."

[18] tn Heb "the mouth of the LORD."

[19] tn Heb "broke him," or "crushed him."

[20] tn Heb "according to the word of the LORD which he spoke to him."

[21] tn Heb "and they saddled [it]."

[22] tn Heb "the corpse." The noun has been replaced by the pronoun ("it") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[23] tn Heb "the prophet." The word "old" has been supplied in the translation to distinguish this individual from the other prophet.

[24] tn Heb "the man of God."

[25] tn "They" is the reading of the Hebrew text here; perhaps this is meant to include not only the old prophet but his sons (cf. v. 31).

[26] tn Heb "the man of God."

[27] tn Heb "for the word which he cried out by the word of the LORD"

[28] map For location see Map4-G4; Map5-C1; Map6-E3; Map7-D1; Map8-G3.

[29] tn Heb "Samaria." The name of Israel's capital city here stands for the northern kingdom as a whole. Actually Samaria was not built and named until several years after this (see 1 Kgs 16:24), so it is likely that the author of Kings, writing at a later time, is here adapting the old prophet's original statement.

[30] tn Heb "did not turn from his evil way."

[31] sn The expression common people refers to people who were not Levites. See 1 Kgs 12:31.

[32] tn Heb "and one who had the desire he was filling his hand so that he became [one of] the priests of the high places."

[33] tn Heb "house."

[34] tc Some MSS of the Old Greek lack vv. 1-20.

Ahijah the prophet, who told me I would rule over this nation, lives there.[1] 14:3 Take[2] ten loaves of bread, some small cakes, and a container of honey and visit him. He will tell you what will happen to the boy."

14:4 Jeroboam's wife did as she was told. She went to Shiloh and visited Ahijah.[3] Now Ahijah could not see; he had lost his eyesight in his old age.[4] 14:5 But the LORD had told Ahijah, "Look, Jeroboam's wife is coming to find out from you what will happen to her son, for he is sick. Tell her so-and-so.[5] When she comes, she will be in a disguise." 14:6 When Ahijah heard the sound of her footsteps as she came through the door, he said, "Come on in, wife of Jeroboam! Why are you pretending to be someone else? I have been commissioned to give you bad news.[6] 14:7 Go, tell Jeroboam, 'This is what the LORD God of Israel says: "I raised you up[7] from among the people and made you ruler over my people Israel. 14:8 I tore the kingdom away from the Davidic dynasty and gave it to you. But you are not like my servant David, who kept my commandments and followed me wholeheartedly by doing only what I approve.[8] 14:9 You have sinned more than all who came before you. You went and angered me by making other gods, formed out of metal; you have completely disregarded me.[9] 14:10 So I am ready to bring disaster[10] on the dynasty[11] of Jeroboam. I will cut off every last male belonging to Jeroboam in Israel, including even the weak and incapacitated.[12] I will burn up the dynasty of Jeroboam, just as one burns manure until it is completely consumed.[13] 14:11 Dogs will eat the members of your family[14] who die in the city, and the birds of the sky will eat the ones who die in the country."' Indeed, the LORD has announced it!

14:12 "As for you, get up and go home. When you set foot in the city, the boy will die. 14:13 All Israel will mourn him and bury him. He is the only one in Jeroboam's family[15] who will receive a decent burial, for he is the only one in whom the LORD God of Israel found anything good. 14:14 The LORD will raise up a king over Israel who will cut off Jeroboam's dynasty.[16] It is ready to happen![17] 14:15 The LORD will attack Israel, making it like a reed that sways in the water.[18] He will remove Israel from this good land he gave to their ancestors[19] and scatter them beyond the Euphrates River,[20] because they angered the LORD by making Asherah poles.[21] 14:16 He will hand Israel over to their enemies[22] because of the sins which Jeroboam committed and which he made Israel commit."

14:17 So Jeroboam's wife got up and went back to[23] Tirzah. As she crossed the threshold of the house, the boy died. 14:18 All Israel buried him and mourned for him, just as the LORD had predicted[24] through his servant the prophet Ahijah.

1 tn Heb "look, Ahijah the prophet is there, he told me [I would be] king over this nation."

2 tn Heb "take in your hand."

3 tn Heb "and the wife of Jeroboam did so; she arose and went to Shiloh and entered the house of Ahijah."

4 tn Heb "his eyes were set because of his old age."

5 sn Tell her so-and-so. Certainly the LORD gave Ahijah a specific message to give to Jeroboam's wife (see vv. 6-16), but the author of Kings here condenses the LORD's message with the words "so-and-so." For dramatic effect he prefers to have us hear the message from Ahijah's lips as he speaks to the king's wife.

6 tn Heb "I am sent to you [with] a hard [message]."

7 tn The Hebrew text has "because" at the beginning of the sentence. In the Hebrew text vv. 7-11 are one long sentence comprised of a causal clause giving the reason for divine punishment (vv. 7-9) and the main clause announcing the punishment (vv. 10-11). The translation divides this lengthy sentence for stylistic reasons.

8 tn Heb "what was right in my eyes."

9 tn Heb "you went and you made for yourself other gods, metal [ones], angering me, and you threw me behind your back."

10 sn Disaster. There is a wordplay in the Hebrew text. The word translated "disaster" (רָעָה, ra'ah) is from the same root as the expression "you have sinned" in v. 9 (וַתָּרַע [vattara'], from רָעַע, [ra'a']). Jeroboam's sins would receive an appropriate punishment.

11 tn Heb "house."

12 tn Heb "and I will cut off from Jeroboam those who urinate against a wall (including both those who are) restrained and let free (or "abandoned") in Israel." The precise meaning of the idiomatic phrase עָצוּר וְעָזוּב ('atsur v'azuv) is uncertain. For various options see HALOT 871 s.v. עצר 6 and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 107. The two terms are usually taken as polar opposites ("slaves and freemen" or "minors and adults"), but Cogan and Tadmor, on the basis of contextual considerations (note the usage with אֶפֶס ['efes], "nothing but") in Deut 32:36 and 2 Kgs 14:26, argue convincingly that the terms are synonyms, meaning "restrained and abandoned," and refer to incapable or incapacitated individuals.

13 tn The traditional view understands the verb בָּעַר (ba'ar) to mean "burn." Manure was sometimes used as fuel (see Ezek 4:12, 15). However, an alternate view takes בָּעַר as a homonym meaning "sweep away" (HALOT 146 s.v. II בער). In this case one might translate, "I will sweep away the dynasty of Jeroboam, just as one sweeps away manure it is gone" (cf. ASV, NASB, TEV). Either metaphor emphasizes the thorough and destructive nature of the coming judgment.

14 tn The Hebrew text has "belonging to Jeroboam" here.

15 tn Heb "house."

16 tn Heb "house."

17 tn Heb "This is the day. What also now?" The precise meaning of the second half of the statement is uncertain.

18 tn The elliptical Hebrew text reads literally "and the LORD will strike Israel as a reed sways in the water."

19 tn Heb "fathers" (also in vv. 22, 31).

20 tn Heb "the River." In biblical Hebrew this is a typical reference to the Euphrates River. The name "Euphrates" has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Heb "because they made their Asherah poles that anger the LORD"; or "their images of Asherah"; ASV, NASB "their Asherim"; NCV "they set up idols to worship Asherah."

sn Asherah was a leading deity of the Canaanite pantheon, wife/sister of El and goddess of fertility. She was commonly worshiped at shrines in or near groves of evergreen trees, or, failing that, at places marked by wooden poles. These were to be burned or cut down (Deut 12:3; 16:21; Judg 6:25, 28, 30; 2 Kgs 18:4).

22 tn Heb "and he will give [up] Israel."

23 tn Heb "went and entered."

24 tn Heb "according to the word of the LORD which he spoke."

Jeroboam's Reign Ends

14:19 The rest of the events of Jeroboam's reign, including the details of his battles and rule, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[1] 14:20 Jeroboam ruled for twenty-two years; then he passed away.[2] His son Nadab replaced him as king.

Rehoboam's Reign over Judah

14:21 Now Rehoboam son of Solomon ruled in Judah. He[3] was forty-one years old when he became king and he ruled for seventeen years in Jerusalem,[4] the city the LORD chose from all the tribes of Israel to be his home.[5] His mother was an Ammonite woman[6] named Naamah.

14:22 Judah did evil in the sight of[7] the LORD. They made him more jealous by their sins than their ancestors had done.[8] 14:23 They even built for themselves high places, sacred pillars, and Asherah poles on every high hill and under every green tree. 14:24 There were also male cultic prostitutes[9] in the land. They committed the same horrible sins as the nations[10] that the LORD had driven out from before the Israelites.

14:25 In King Rehoboam's fifth year, King Shishak of Egypt attacked Jerusalem. 14:26 He took away the treasures of the LORD's temple and of the royal palace; he took everything, including all the golden shields that Solomon had made. 14:27 King Rehoboam made bronze shields to replace them and assigned them to the officers of the royal guard[11] who protected the entrance to the royal palace. 14:28 Whenever the king visited the LORD's temple, the royal guard carried them and then brought them back to the guardroom.

14:29 The rest of the events of Rehoboam's reign, including his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[12] 14:30 Rehoboam and Jeroboam were continually at war with each other. 14:31 Rehoboam passed away[13] and was buried with his ancestors in the City of David. His mother was an Ammonite named Naamah. His son Abijah[14] replaced him as king.

Abijah's Reign over Judah

15:1 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Jeroboam son of Nebat, Abijah[15] became king over Judah. 15:2 He ruled for three years in Jerusalem.[16] His mother was Maacah, the daughter of Abishalom.[17] 15:3 He followed all the sinful practices of his father before him. He was not wholeheartedly devoted to the LORD his God, as his ancestor David had been.[18] 15:4 Nevertheless for David's sake the LORD his God maintained his dynasty[19] in Jerusalem by giving him a son[20] to succeed him[21] and by protecting Jerusalem.[22] 15:5 He did this[23] because David had done what he approved[24] and had not disregarded any of his commandments[25] his entire lifetime, except for the incident involving Uriah the Hittite. 15:6 Rehoboam[26] and Jeroboam were continually at war with each other throughout Abijah's[27] lifetime. 15:7 The rest of the events of Abijah's reign, including all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[28] Abijah and Jeroboam had been at war with each other. 15:8 Abijah passed away[29] and was buried[30] in the City of David. His son Asa replaced him as king.

[29] tn Heb "lay down with his fathers." The Old Greek also has these words: "in the twenty-eighth year of Jeroboam."

[30] tn Heb "and they buried him."

Asa's Reign over Judah

15:9 In the twentieth year of Jeroboam's reign over Israel, Asa became the king of Judah. 15:10 He ruled for forty-one years in Jerusalem.[1] His grandmother[2] was Maacah daughter of Abishalom. 15:11 Asa did what the LORD approved[3] like his ancestor[4] David had done. 15:12 He removed the male cultic prostitutes from the land and got rid of all the disgusting idols[5] his ancestors[6] had made. 15:13 He also removed Maacah his grandmother[7] from her position as queen mother[8] because she had made a loathsome Asherah pole. Asa cut down her Asherah pole and burned it in the Kidron Valley. 15:14 The high places were not eliminated, yet Asa was wholeheartedly devoted to the LORD throughout his lifetime.[9] 15:15 He brought the holy items that he and his father had made into the LORD's temple, including the silver, gold, and other articles.[10]

15:16 Now Asa and King Baasha of Israel were continually at war with each other.[11] 15:17 King Baasha of Israel attacked Judah and established Ramah as a military outpost to prevent anyone from leaving or entering the land of King Asa of Judah.[12] 15:18 Asa took all the silver and gold that was left in the treasuries of the LORD's temple and of the royal palace and handed it to his servants. He then told them to deliver it[13] to Ben Hadad son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, ruler in Damascus, along with this message: 15:19 "I want to make a treaty with you, like the one our fathers made.[14] See, I have sent you silver and gold as a present. Break your treaty with King Baasha of Israel, so he will retreat from my land."[15] 15:20 Ben Hadad accepted King Asa's offer and ordered his army commanders to attack the cities of Israel.[16] They conquered[17] Ijon, Dan, Abel Beth Maacah, and all the territory of Naphtali, including the region of Kinnereth.[18] 15:21 When Baasha heard the news, he stopped fortifying[19] Ramah and settled down in Tirzah. 15:22 King Asa ordered all the men of Judah (no exemptions were granted) to carry away the stones and wood that Baasha had used to build Ramah.[20] King Asa used the materials to build up[21] Geba (in Benjamin) and Mizpah.

15:23 The rest of the events of Asa's reign, including all his successes and accomplishments, as well as a record of the cities he built, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[22] Yet when he was very old he developed a foot disease.[23] 15:24 Asa passed away[24] and was buried with his ancestors in the city of his ancestor David. His son Jehoshaphat replaced him as king.

Nadab's Reign over Israel

15:25 In the second year of Asa's reign over Judah, Jeroboam's son Nadab became the king of Israel; he ruled Israel for two years. 15:26 He did evil in the sight of[25] the LORD. He followed in his father's footsteps and encouraged Israel to sin.[26]

15:27 Baasha son of Ahijah, from the tribe of Issachar, conspired against Nadab[27] and assassinated him in Gibbethon, which was in Philistine territory. This happened while Nadab and all the Israelite army were besieging Gibbethon. 15:28 Baasha killed him in the third year of Asa's reign over Judah and replaced him as king. 15:29 When he became king, he executed Jeroboam's entire family. He wiped out everyone who breathed,[1] just as the LORD had predicted[2] through his servant Ahijah the Shilonite. 15:30 This happened because of the sins which Jeroboam committed and which he made Israel commit. These sins angered the LORD God of Israel.[3] 15:31 The rest of the events of Nadab's reign, including all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[4] 15:32 Asa and King Nadab of Israel were continually at war with each other.

Baasha's Reign over Israel

15:33 In the third year of Asa's reign over Judah, Baasha son of Ahijah became king over all Israel in Tirzah; he ruled for twenty-four years. 15:34 He did evil in the sight of[5] the LORD; he followed in Jeroboam's footsteps and encouraged Israel to sin.[6]

16:1 Jehu son of Hanani received from the LORD this message predicting Baasha's downfall:[7] 16:2 "I raised you up[8] from the dust and made you ruler over my people Israel. Yet you followed in Jeroboam's footsteps[9] and encouraged my people Israel to sin; their sins have made me angry.[10] 16:3 So I am ready to burn up[11] Baasha and his family, and make your family[12] like the family of Jeroboam son of Nebat. 16:4 Dogs will eat the members of Baasha's family[13] who die in the city, and the birds of the sky will eat the ones who die in the country."

16:5 The rest of the events of Baasha's reign, including his accomplishments and successes, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[14] 16:6 Baasha passed away[15] and was buried in Tirzah. His son Elah replaced him as king. 16:7 The prophet Jehu son of Hanani received from the LORD the message predicting the downfall of Baasha and his family because of all the evil Baasha had done in the sight of the LORD.[16] His actions angered the LORD (including the way he had destroyed Jeroboam's dynasty), so that his family ended up like Jeroboam's.[17]

Elah's Reign over Israel

16:8 In the twenty-sixth year of King Asa's reign over Judah, Baasha's son Elah became king over Israel; he ruled in Tirzah for two years. 16:9 His servant Zimri, a commander of half of his chariot force, conspired against him. While Elah was drinking heavily[18] at the house of Arza, who supervised the palace in Tirzah, 16:10 Zimri came in and struck him dead. (This happened in the twenty-seventh year of Asa's reign over Judah.) Zimri replaced Elah as king.[19] 16:11 When he became king and occupied the throne, he killed Baasha's entire family. He did not spare any male belonging to him; he killed his relatives and his friends.[20] 16:12 Zimri destroyed Baasha's entire family, just as the LORD had predicted to Baasha[21] through Jehu the prophet. 16:13 This happened because of all the sins which Baasha and his son Elah committed and which they made Israel commit. They angered the LORD God of Israel with their worthless idols.[22]

16:14 The rest of the events of Elah's reign, including all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[23]

The translation divides this sentence for stylistic reasons.

In this case one might translate, "I am ready to sweep away Baasha and his family." Either metaphor emphasizes the thorough and destructive nature of the coming judgment.

Zimri's Reign over Israel

16:15 In the twenty-seventh year of Asa's reign over Judah, Zimri became king over Israel; he ruled for seven days in Tirzah. Zimri's revolt took place while the army was deployed[1] in Gibbethon, which was in Philistine territory. 16:16 While deployed there, the army received this report:[2] "Zimri has conspired against the king and assassinated him."[3] So all Israel made Omri, the commander of the army, king over Israel that very day in the camp. 16:17 Omri and all Israel went up from Gibbethon and besieged Tirzah. 16:18 When Zimri saw that the city was captured, he went into the fortified area of the royal palace. He set the palace on fire and died in the flames.[4] 16:19 This happened because of the sins he committed. He did evil in the sight of[5] the LORD and followed in Jeroboam's footsteps and encouraged Israel to continue sinning.[6]

16:20 The rest of the events of Zimri's reign, including the details of his revolt, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[7]

Omri's Reign over Israel

16:21 At that time the people of Israel were divided in their loyalties. Half the people supported Tibni son of Ginath and wanted to make him king; the other half supported Omri. 16:22 Omri's supporters were stronger than those who supported Tibni son of Ginath. Tibni died; Omri became king.

16:23 In the thirty-first year of Asa's reign over Judah, Omri became king over Israel. He ruled for twelve years, six of them in Tirzah. 16:24 He purchased the hill of Samaria[8] from Shemer for two talents[9] of silver. He launched a construction project there[10] and named the city he built after Shemer, the former owner of the hill of Samaria. 16:25 Omri did more evil in the sight of[11] the LORD than all who were before him. 16:26 He followed in the footsteps of Jeroboam son of Nebat and encouraged Israel to sin;[12] they angered the LORD God of Israel with their worthless idols.[13]

16:27 The rest of the events of Omri's reign, including his accomplishments and successes, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[14] 16:28 Omri passed away[15] and was buried in Samaria. His son Ahab replaced him as king.[16]

Ahab Promotes Idolatry

16:29 In the thirty-eighth year of Asa's reign over Judah, Omri's son Ahab became king over Israel. Ahab son of Omri ruled over Israel for twenty-two years in Samaria.[17] 16:30 Ahab son of Omri did more evil in the sight of[18] the LORD than all who were before him. 16:31 As if following in the sinful footsteps of Jeroboam son of Nebat were not bad enough, he married Jezebel the daughter of King Ethbaal of the Sidonians. Then he worshiped and bowed to Baal.[19] 16:32 He set up an altar for Baal in the temple of Baal he had built in Samaria. 16:33 Ahab also made an Asherah pole; he[20] did more to anger the LORD God of Israel than all the kings of Israel who were before him.

16:34 During Ahab's reign,[21] Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt Jericho.[22] Abiram, his firstborn son, died when he laid the foundation;[23] Segub, his youngest son, died when he erected its gates,[24] just as the LORD had warned[25] through Joshua son of Nun.[26]

Elijah Visits a Widow in Sidonian Territory

17:1 Elijah the Tishbite, from Tishbe in Gilead, said to Ahab, "As certainly as the LORD God of Israel lives (whom I serve),[1] there will be no dew or rain in the years ahead unless I give the command."[2] 17:2 The LORD told him:[3] 17:3 "Leave here and travel eastward. Hide out in the Kerith Valley near the Jordan. 17:4 Drink from the stream; I have already told[4] the ravens to bring you food[5] there." 17:5 So he did[6] as the LORD told him; he went and lived in the Kerith Valley near the Jordan. 17:6 The ravens would bring him bread and meat each morning and evening, and he would drink from the stream.

17:7 After a while,[7] the stream dried up because there had been no rain in the land. 17:8 The LORD told him,[8] 17:9 "Get up, go to Zarephath in Sidonian territory, and live there. I have already told[9] a widow who lives there to provide for you." 17:10 So he got up and went to Zarephath. When he went through the city gate, there was a widow gathering wood. He called out to her, "Please give me a cup[10] of water, so I can take a drink." 17:11 As she went to get it, he called out to her, "Please bring me a piece of bread."[11] 17:12 She said, "As certainly as the LORD your God lives, I have no food, except for a handful of flour in a jar and a little olive oil in a jug. Right now I am gathering a couple of sticks for a fire. Then I'm going home to make one final meal for my son and myself. After we have eaten that, we will die of starvation."[12] 17:13 Elijah said to her, "Don't be afraid. Go and do as you planned.[13] But first make a small cake for me and bring it to me; then make something for yourself and your son. 17:14 For this is what the LORD God of Israel says, 'The jar of flour will not be empty and the jug of oil will not run out until the day the LORD makes it rain on the surface of the ground.'" 17:15 She went and did as Elijah told her; there was always enough food for Elijah and for her and her family.[14] 17:16 The jar of flour was never empty and the jug of oil never ran out, just as the LORD had promised[15] through Elijah.

17:17 After this[16] the son of the woman who owned the house got sick. His illness was so severe he could no longer breathe. 17:18 She asked Elijah, "Why, prophet, have you come[17] to me to confront me with[18] my sin and kill my son?" 17:19 He said to her, "Hand me your son." He took him from her arms, carried him to the upper room where he was staying, and laid him down on his bed. 17:20 Then he called out to the LORD, "O LORD, my God, are you also bringing disaster on this widow I am staying with by killing her son?" 17:21 He stretched out over the boy three times and called out to the LORD, "O LORD, my God, please let this boy's breath return to him." 17:22 The LORD answered Elijah's prayer; the boy's breath returned to him and he lived. 17:23 Elijah took the boy, brought him down from the upper room to the house, and handed him to his mother. Elijah then said, "See, your son is alive!" 17:24 The woman said to Elijah, "Now I know that you are a prophet and that the LORD really does speak through you."[19]

Elijah Meets the King's Servant

18:1 Some time later, in the third year of the famine, the LORD told Elijah,[20] "Go, make an appearance before Ahab, so I may send rain on the surface of the ground." 18:2 So Elijah went to make an appearance before Ahab.

Now the famine was severe in Samaria.[21] 18:3 So Ahab summoned Obadiah, who supervised the palace. (Now Obadiah was a very loyal follower of the LORD.[22] 18:4 When Jezebel was killing[23] the LORD's prophets, Obadiah took one sn This episode is especially significant in light of Ahab's decision to promote Baal worship in Israel. In Canaanite mythology the drought that swept over the region (v. 1) would signal that Baal, a fertility god responsible for providing food for his subjects, had been defeated by the god of death and was imprisoned in the underworld. While Baal was overcome by death and unable to function like a king, Israel's God demonstrated his sovereignty and superiority to death by providing food for a widow and restoring life to her son. And he did it all in Sidonian territory, Baal's back yard, as it were. The episode demonstrates that Israel's God, not Baal, is the true king who provides food and controls life and death. This polemic against Baalism reaches its climax in the next chapter, when the LORD proves that he, not Baal, controls the elements of the storm and determines when the rains will fall.

Maybe we can find some grazing areas[1] so we can keep the horses and mules alive and not have to kill[2] some of the animals." 18:6 They divided up the land between them; Ahab went[3] one way and Obadiah went the other.

18:7 As Obadiah was traveling along, Elijah met him.[4] When he recognized him, he fell facedown to the ground and said, "Is it really you, my master, Elijah?" 18:8 He replied, "Yes,[5] go and say to your master, 'Elijah is back.'"[6] 18:9 Obadiah[7] said, "What sin have I committed that you are ready to hand your servant over to Ahab for execution?[8] 18:10 As certainly as the LORD your God lives, my master has sent to every nation and kingdom in an effort to find you. When they say, 'He's not here,' he makes them[9] swear an oath that they could not find you. 18:11 Now you say, 'Go and say to your master, "Elijah is back."'[10] 18:12 But when I leave you, the LORD's spirit will carry you away so I can't find you.[11] If I go tell Ahab I've seen you, he won't be able to find you and he will kill me.[12] That would not be fair,[13] because your servant has been a loyal follower of[14] the LORD from my youth. 18:13 Certainly my master is aware of what I did[15] when Jezebel was killing the LORD's prophets. I hid one hundred of the LORD's prophets in two caves in two groups of fifty and I brought them food and water. 18:14 Now you say, 'Go and say to your master, "Elijah is back,"'[16] but he will kill me." 18:15 But Elijah said, "As certainly as the LORD who rules over all[17] lives (whom I serve),[18] I will make an appearance before him today."

Elijah Confronts Baal's Prophets

18:16 When Obadiah went and informed Ahab, the king went to meet Elijah.[19] 18:17 When Ahab saw Elijah, he[20] said to him, "Is it really you, the one who brings disaster[21] on Israel?" 18:18 Elijah[22] replied, "I have not brought disaster[23] on Israel. But you and your father's dynasty have, by abandoning the LORD's commandments and following the Baals. 18:19 Now send out messengers[24] and assemble all Israel before me at Mount Carmel, as well as the 450 prophets of Baal and 400 prophets of Asherah whom Jezebel supports.[25]

18:20 Ahab sent messengers to all the Israelites and had the prophets assemble at Mount Carmel. 18:21 Elijah approached all the people and said, "How long are you going to be paralyzed by indecision?[26] If the LORD is the true God,[27] then follow him, but if Baal is, follow him!" But the people did not say a word. 18:22 Elijah said to them:[28] "I am the only prophet of the LORD who is left, but there are 450 prophets of Baal. 18:23 Let them bring us two bulls. Let them choose one of the bulls for themselves, cut it up into pieces, and place it on the wood. But they must not set it on fire. I will do the same to the other bull and place it on the wood. But I will not set it on fire. 18:24 Then you[29] will invoke the name of your god, and I will invoke the name of the LORD. The god who responds with fire will demonstrate that he is the true God."[30] All the people responded, "This will be a fair test."[31]

18:25 Elijah told the prophets of Baal, "Choose one of the bulls for yourselves and go first, for you are the majority. Invoke the name of your god, but do not light a fire."[32] 18:26 So they took a bull, as he had suggested,[33] and prepared it. They invoked the name of Baal from morning until noon, saying, "Baal, answer us." But there was no sound and no answer. They jumped[1] around on the altar they had made.[2] 18:27 At noon Elijah mocked them, "Yell louder! After all, he is a god; he may be deep in thought, or perhaps he stepped out for a moment or has taken a trip. Perhaps he is sleeping and needs to be awakened."[3] 18:28 So they yelled louder and, in accordance with their prescribed ritual,[4] mutilated themselves with swords and spears until their bodies were covered with blood.[5] 18:29 Throughout the afternoon they were in an ecstatic frenzy,[6] but there was no sound, no answer, and no response.[7]

18:30 Elijah then told all the people, "Approach me." So all the people approached him. He repaired the altar of the LORD that had been torn down.[8] 18:31 Then Elijah took twelve stones, corresponding to the number of tribes that descended from Jacob, to whom the LORD had said, "Israel will be your new[9] name."[10] 18:32 With the stones he constructed an altar for the LORD.[11] Around the altar he made a trench large enough to contain two seahs[12] of seed. 18:33 He arranged the wood, cut up the bull, and placed it on the wood. 18:34 Then he said, "Fill four water jars and pour the water on the offering and the wood." When they had done so,[13] he said, "Do it again." So they did it again. Then he said, "Do it a third time." So they did it a third time. 18:35 The water flowed down all sides of the altar and filled the trench. 18:36 When it was time for the evening offering,[14] Elijah the prophet approached the altar[15] and prayed: "O LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, prove[16] today that you are God in Israel and that I am your servant and have done all these things at your command. 18:37 Answer me, O LORD, answer me, so these people will know that you, O LORD, are the true God[17] and that you are winning back their allegiance."[18] 18:38 Then fire from the LORD fell from the sky.[19] It consumed the offering, the wood, the stones, and the dirt, and licked up the water in the trench. 18:39 When all the people saw this, they threw themselves down with their faces to the ground and said, "The LORD is the true God![20] The LORD is the true God!" 18:40 Elijah told them, "Seize the prophets of Baal! Don't let even one of them escape!" So they seized them, and Elijah led them down to the Kishon Valley and executed[21] them there.

18:41 Then Elijah told Ahab, "Go on up and eat and drink, for the sound of a heavy rainstorm can be heard."[22] 18:42 So Ahab went on up to eat and drink, while Elijah climbed to the top of Carmel. He bent down toward the ground and put his face between his knees. 18:43 He told his servant, "Go on up and look in the direction of the sea." So he went on up, looked, and reported, "There is nothing."[23] Seven times Elijah sent him to look.[24] 18:44 The seventh time the servant[25] said, "Look, a small cloud, the size of the palm of a man's hand, is rising up from the sea." Elijah[26] then said, "Go and tell Ahab, 'Hitch up the chariots and go down, so that the rain won't overtake you.'"[27] 18:45 Meanwhile the sky was covered with dark clouds, the wind blew, and there was a heavy rainstorm. Ahab rode toward[28] Jezreel. 18:46 Now the LORD energized Elijah Elijah's apparent ignorance of their theology is probably designed for dramatic effect; indeed the suggestion that Baal is away on a trip or deep in sleep comes precariously close to the truth as viewed by the prophets.

Elijah Runs for His Life

19:1 Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, including a detailed account of how he killed all the prophets with the sword. 19:2 Jezebel sent a messenger to Elijah with this warning,[3] "May the gods judge me severely[4] if by this time tomorrow I do not take your life as you did theirs!"[5]

19:3 Elijah was afraid,[6] so he got up and fled for his life to Beer Sheba in Judah. He left his servant there, 19:4 while he went a day's journey into the desert. He went and sat down under a shrub[7] and asked the LORD to take his life:[8] "I've had enough! Now, O LORD, take my life. After all, I'm no better than my ancestors."[9] 19:5 He stretched out[10] and fell asleep under the shrub. All of a sudden an angelic messenger[11] touched him and said, "Get up and eat." 19:6 He looked and right there by his head was a cake baking on hot coals and a jug of water. He ate and drank and then slept some more.[12] 19:7 The LORD's angelic messenger came back again, touched him, and said, "Get up and eat, for otherwise you won't be able to make the journey."[13] 19:8 So he got up and ate and drank. That meal gave him the strength to travel forty days and forty nights until he reached Horeb, the mountain of God.

19:9 He went into a cave there and spent the night. All of a sudden the LORD spoke to him, "Why are you here, Elijah?" 19:10 He answered, "I have been absolutely loyal[14] to the LORD, the sovereign God,[15] even though the Israelites have abandoned the agreement they made with you,[16] torn down your altars, and killed your prophets with the sword. I alone am left and now they want to take my life."[17] 19:11 The LORD[18] said, "Go out and stand on the mountain before the LORD. Look, the LORD is ready to pass by."

A very powerful wind went before the LORD, digging into the mountain and causing landslides,[19] but the LORD was not in the wind. After the windstorm there was an earthquake, but the LORD was not in the earthquake. 19:12 After the earthquake, there was a fire, but the LORD was not in the fire. After the fire, there was a soft whisper.[20] 19:13 When Elijah heard it, he covered his face with his robe and went out and stood at the entrance to the cave. All of a sudden[21] a voice asked him, "Why are you here, Elijah?" 19:14 He answered, "I have been absolutely loyal[22] to the LORD, the sovereign God,[23] even though the Israelites have abandoned the agreement they made with you,[24] torn down your altars, and killed your prophets with the sword. I alone am left and now they want to take my life."[25] 19:15 The LORD said to him, "Go back the way you came and then head for the Desert of Damascus. Go and anoint Hazael king over Syria. 19:16 You must anoint Jehu son of Nimshi king over Israel, and Elisha son of Shaphat from Abel Meholah to take your place as prophet. 19:17 Jehu will kill anyone who escapes Hazael's sword, and Elisha will kill anyone who escapes Jehu's sword. 19:18 I still have left in Israel seven thousand followers who have not bowed their knees to Baal or kissed the images of him."[26]

19:19 Elijah went from there and found Elisha son of Shaphat. He was plowing with twelve pairs of oxen; he was near the twelfth pair. Elijah passed by him and threw his robe over him. 19:20 He left the oxen, ran after Elijah, and said, "Please let me kiss my father and mother goodbye, then I will follow you." Elijah[27] said to him, "Go back! Indeed, what have I done to you?" 19:21 Elisha[28] went back and took his pair of oxen and slaughtered them. He cooked the meat over a fire that he made by

Ben Hadad Invades Israel

20:1 Now King Ben Hadad of Syria assembled all his army, along with thirty-two other kings with their horses and chariots. He marched against Samaria[2] and besieged and attacked it.[3] 20:2 He sent messengers to King Ahab of Israel, who was in the city.[4] 20:3 He said to him, "This is what Ben Hadad says, 'Your silver and your gold are mine, as well as the best of your wives and sons.'" 20:4 The king of Israel replied, "It is just as you say, my master, O king. I and all I own belong to you."

20:5 The messengers came again and said, "This is what Ben Hadad says, 'I sent this message to you, "You must give me your silver, gold, wives, and sons." 20:6 But now at this time tomorrow I will send my servants to you and they will search through your palace and your servants' houses. They will carry away all your valuables.'"[5] 20:7 The king of Israel summoned all the leaders[6] of the land and said, "Notice how this man is looking for trouble.[7] Indeed, he demanded my wives, sons, silver, and gold, and I did not resist him." 20:8 All the leaders and people said to him, "Do not give in or agree to his demands."[8] 20:9 So he said to the messengers of Ben Hadad, "Say this to my master, the king, 'I will give you everything you demanded at first from your servant, but I am unable to agree to this latest demand.'"[9] So the messengers went back and gave their report.

20:10 Ben Hadad sent another message to him, "May the gods judge me severely[10] if there is enough dirt left in Samaria for my soldiers to scoop up in their hands."[11] 20:11 The king of Israel replied, "Tell him the one who puts on his battle gear should not boast like one who is taking it off."[12] 20:12 When Ben Hadad received this reply,[13] he and the other kings were drinking in their quarters.[14] He ordered his servants, "Get ready to attack!" So they got ready to attack the city.

The Lord Delivers Israel

20:13 Now a prophet visited King Ahab of Israel and said, "This is what the LORD says, 'Do you see this huge army?[15] Look, I am going to hand it over to you this very day. Then you will know that I am the LORD.'" 20:14 Ahab asked, "By whom will this be accomplished?"[16] He answered, "This is what the LORD says, 'By the servants of the district governors.'" Ahab[17] asked, "Who will launch the attack?" He answered, "You will."

20:15 So Ahab[18] assembled the 232 servants of the district governors. After that he assembled all the Israelite army, numbering 7,000.[19] 20:16 They marched out at noon, while Ben Hadad and the thirty-two kings allied with him were drinking heavily[20] in their quarters.[21] 20:17 The servants of the district governors led the march. When Ben Hadad sent messengers, they reported back to him, "Men are marching out of Samaria."[22] 20:18 He ordered, "Whether they come in peace or to do battle, take them alive."[23] 20:19 They marched out of the city with the servants of the district governors in the lead and the army behind them. 20:20 Each one struck down an enemy soldier;[24] the Syrians fled and Israel chased them. King Ben Hadad of Syria escaped on horseback with some horsemen. 20:21 Then the king of Israel marched out and struck down the horses and chariots; he thoroughly defeated[25] Syria.

The Lord Gives Israel Another Victory

20:22 The prophet[26] visited the king of Israel and instructed him, "Go, fortify your defenses.[27] Determine[28] what you must do, for in the spring[29]

the king of Syria will attack[1] you." 20:23 Now the advisers[2] of the king of Syria said to him: "Their God is a god of the mountains. That's why they overpowered us. But if we fight them in the plains, we will certainly overpower them. 20:24 So do this: Dismiss the kings from their command, and replace them with military commanders. 20:25 Muster an army like the one you lost, with the same number of horses and chariots.[3] Then we will fight them in the plains; we will certainly overpower them." He approved their plan and did as they advised.[4]

20:26 In the spring[5] Ben Hadad mustered the Syrian army[6] and marched to Aphek to fight Israel.[7] 20:27 When the Israelites had mustered and had received their supplies, they marched out to face them in battle. When the Israelites deployed opposite them, they were like two small flocks[8] of goats, but the Syrians filled the land. 20:28 The prophet[9] visited the king of Israel and said, "This is what the LORD says: 'Because the Syrians said, "The LORD is a god of the mountains and not a god of the valleys," I will hand over to you this entire huge army.[10] Then you will know that I am the LORD.'"

20:29 The armies were deployed opposite each other for seven days. On the seventh day the battle began, and the Israelites killed 100,000 Syrian foot soldiers in one day. 20:30 The remaining 27,000 ran to Aphek and went into the city, but the wall fell on them.[11] Now Ben Hadad ran into the city and hid in an inner room.[12] 20:31 His advisers[13] said to him, "Look, we have heard that the kings of the Israelite dynasty are kind.[14] Allow us to put sackcloth around our waists and ropes on our heads[15] and surrender[16] to the king of Israel. Maybe he will spare our lives." 20:32 So they put sackcloth around their waists and ropes on their heads and went to the king of Israel. They said, "Your servant[17] Ben Hadad says, 'Please let me live!'" Ahab[18] replied, "Is he still alive? He is my brother."[19] 20:33 The men took this as a good omen and quickly accepted his offer, saying, "Ben Hadad is your brother." Ahab[20] then said, "Go, get him." So Ben Hadad came out to him, and Ahab pulled him up into his chariot. 20:34 Ben Hadad[21] said, "I will return the cities my father took from your father. You may set up markets[22] in Damascus, just as my father did in Samaria."[23] Ahab then said, "I want to make a treaty with you before I dismiss you."[24] So he made a treaty with him and then dismissed him.

A Prophet Denounces Ahab's Actions

20:35 One of the members of the prophetic guild, speaking with divine authority, ordered his companion, "Wound me!"[25] But the man refused to wound him. 20:36 So the prophet[26] said to him, "Because you have disobeyed the LORD, as soon as you leave me a lion will kill you." When he left him, a lion attacked and killed him. 20:37 He found another man and said, "Wound me!" So the man wounded him severely.[27] 20:38 The prophet then went and stood by the road, waiting for the king. He also disguised himself by putting a bandage down

In this case the noun refers to something "stripped off" or "made bare." HALOT 359 s.v. In this case the derived noun could refer to goats that are undersized because they are born prematurely.

17 sn Your servant. By referring to Ben Hadad as Ahab's servant, they are suggesting that Ahab make him a subject in a vassal treaty arrangement.

18 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Ahab) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 sn He is my brother. Ahab's response indicates that he wants to make a parity treaty and treat Ben Hadad as an equal partner.

20 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Ahab) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Ben Hadad) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn Heb "streets," but this must refer to streets set up with stalls for merchants to sell their goods. See HALOT 299 s.v. חוּץ.

23 map For location see Map2-B1; Map4-D3; Map5-E2; Map6-A4; Map7-C1.

24 tn Heb "I will send you away with a treaty." The words "Ahab then said" are supplied in the translation. There is nothing in the Hebrew text to indicate that the speaker has changed from Ben Hadad to Ahab. Some suggest adding "and he said" before "I will send you away." Others prefer to maintain Ben Hadad as the speaker and change the statement to, "Please send me away with a treaty."

25 tn Heb "Now a man from the sons of the prophets said to his companion by the word of the LORD, 'Wound me.'" over his eyes. 20:39 When the king passed by, he called out to the king, "Your servant went out into the heat[1] of the battle, and then a man turned aside and brought me a prisoner.[2] He told me, 'Guard this prisoner. If he ends up missing for any reason,[3] you will pay with your life or with a talent[4] of silver.'[5] 20:40 Well, it just so happened that while your servant was doing this and that, he disappeared." The king of Israel said to him, "Your punishment is already determined by your own testimony."[6] 20:41 The prophet[7] quickly removed the bandage from his eyes and the king of Israel recognized he was one of the prophets. 20:42 The prophet[8] then said to him, "This is what the LORD says, 'Because you released a man I had determined should die, you will pay with your life and your people will suffer instead of his people.'"[9] 20:43 The king of Israel went home to Samaria[10] bitter and angry.

Ahab Murders Naboth

21:1 After this the following episode took place.[11] Naboth the Jezreelite owned a vineyard in Jezreel adjacent to the palace of King Ahab of Samaria.[12] 21:2 Ahab said to Naboth, "Give me your vineyard so I can make a vegetable garden out of it, for it is adjacent to my palace. I will give you an even better vineyard in its place, or if you prefer,[13] I will pay you silver for it."[14] 21:3 But Naboth replied to Ahab, "The LORD forbid that I should sell you my ancestral inheritance."[15]

21:4 So Ahab went into his palace, bitter and angry that Naboth the Jezreelite had said,[16] "I will not sell to you my ancestral inheritance."[17] He lay down on his bed, pouted,[18] and would not eat. 21:5 Then his wife Jezebel came in and said to him, "Why do you have a bitter attitude and refuse to eat?" 21:6 He answered her, "While I was talking to Naboth the Jezreelite, I said to him, 'Sell me your vineyard for silver, or if you prefer, I will give you another vineyard in its place.' But he said, 'I will not sell you my vineyard.'"[19] 21:7 His wife Jezebel said to him, "You are the king of Israel![20] Get up, eat some food, and have a good time.[21] I will get the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite for you."

21:8 She wrote out orders,[22] signed Ahab's name to them,[23] and sealed them with his seal. She then sent the orders[24] to the leaders[25] and to the nobles who lived in Naboth's city.[26] 21:9 This is what she wrote:[27] "Observe a time of fasting and seat Naboth in front of the people. 21:10 Also seat two villains opposite him and have them testify, 'You cursed God and the king.' Then take him out and stone him to death."

21:11 The men of the[28] city, the leaders[29] and the nobles who lived there,[30] followed the written orders Jezebel had sent them.[31] 21:12 They observed a time of fasting and put Naboth in front of the people. 21:13 The two villains arrived and sat opposite him. Then the villains testified against Naboth right before the people, saying, "Naboth cursed God and the king." So they dragged him[32] outside the city and stoned him to death.[33] 21:14 Then they reported to Jezebel, "Naboth has been stoned to death."[34]

[1] tn Heb "middle."

[2] tn Heb "man" (also a second time later in this verse).

[3] tn Heb "if being missed, he is missed." The emphatic infinitive absolute before the finite verbal form lends solemnity to the warning.

[4] tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 75 pounds of silver.

[5] tn Heb "your life will be in place of his life, or a unit of silver you will pay."

[6] tn Heb "so [i.e., in accordance with his testimony] is your judgment, you have determined [it]."

[12] sn King Ahab of Samaria. Samaria, as the capital of the northern kingdom, here stands for the nation of Israel.

[15] tn Heb "Far be it from me, by the LORD, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers to you."

[16] tn Heb "on account of the word that Naboth the Jezreelite spoke to him."

[18] tn Heb "turned away his face."

[19] tn Heb "While I was talking..., I said..., he said...." Ahab's explanation is one lengthy sentence in the Hebrew text, which is divided in the English translation for stylistic reasons.

[32] tn Heb "led him."

[33] tn Heb "and they stoned him with stones and he died."

[34] tn Heb "Naboth was stoned and he died." So also in v. 15.

21:15 When Jezebel heard that Naboth had been stoned to death, she[1] said to Ahab, "Get up, take possession of the vineyard Naboth the Jezreelite refused to sell you for silver, for Naboth is no longer alive; he's dead." 21:16 When Ahab heard that Naboth was dead,[2] he got up and went down to take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

21:17 The LORD told Elijah the Tishbite:[3] 21:18 "Get up, go down and meet King Ahab of Israel who lives in Samaria. He is at the vineyard of Naboth; he has gone down there to take possession of it. 21:19 Say to him, 'This is what the LORD says: "Haven't you committed murder and taken possession of the property of the deceased?"' Then say to him, 'This is what the LORD says: "In the spot where dogs licked up Naboth's blood they will also lick up your blood – yes, yours!"'"

21:20 When Elijah arrived, Ahab said to him,[4] "So, you have found me, my enemy!" Elijah[5] replied, "I have found you, because you are committed[6] to doing evil in the sight of[7] the LORD. 21:21 The LORD says,[8] 'Look, I am ready to bring disaster[9] on you. I will destroy you[10] and cut off every last male belonging to Ahab in Israel, including even the weak and incapacitated.[11] 21:22 I will make your dynasty[12] like those of Jeroboam son of Nebat and Baasha son of Ahijah because you angered me and made Israel sin.'[13] 21:23 The LORD says this about Jezebel, 'Dogs will devour Jezebel by the outer wall[14] of Jezreel.' 21:24 As for Ahab's family, dogs will eat the ones[15] who die in the city, and the birds of the sky will eat the ones who die in the country." 21:25 (There had never been anyone like Ahab, who was firmly committed[16] to doing evil in the sight of[17] the LORD, urged on by his wife Jezebel.[18] 21:26 He was so wicked he worshiped the disgusting idols,[19] just like the Amorites[20] whom the LORD had driven out from before the Israelites.)

21:27 When Ahab heard these words, he tore his clothes, put on sackcloth, and fasted. He slept in sackcloth and walked around dejected. 21:28 The LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite,[21] 21:29 "Have you noticed how Ahab shows remorse[22] before me? Because he shows remorse before me, I will not bring disaster on his dynasty during his lifetime, but during the reign of his son."[23]

Ahab Dies in Battle

22:1 There was no war between Syria and Israel for three years.[24] 22:2 In the third year King Jehoshaphat of Judah came down to visit[25] the king of Israel. 22:3 The king of Israel said to his servants, "Surely you recognize that Ramoth Gilead belongs to us, though we are hesitant to reclaim it from the king of Syria."[26] 22:4 Then he said to Jehoshaphat, "Will you go with me to

1 tn Heb "Jezebel"; the proper name has been replaced by the pronoun ("she") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

2 tc The Old Greek translation includes the following words here: "he tore his garments and put on sackcloth. After these things."

3 tn Heb "the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite."

4 tn Heb "and Ahab said to Elijah." The narrative is elliptical and streamlined. The words "when Elijah arrived" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

5 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elijah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Heb "you have sold yourself."

7 tn Heb "in the eyes of."

8 tn The introductory formula "the LORD says" is omitted in the Hebrew text, but supplied in the translation for clarification.

9 sn Disaster. There is a wordplay in the Hebrew text. The word translated "disaster" (רָעָה, ra'ah) is similar to the word translated "evil" (v. 20, הֲרַע, hara'). Ahab's sins would receive an appropriate punishment.

10 tn Heb "I will burn after you." Some take the verb בָּעַר (ba'ar) to mean here "sweep away." See the discussion of this verb in the notes at 14:10 and 16:3.

11 tn Heb "and I will cut off from Ahab those who urinate against a wall, [including both those who are] restrained and let free [or "abandoned"] in Israel." The precise meaning of the idiomatic phrase עָצוּר וְעָזוּב ('atsur v'e'azuv, translated here "weak and incapacitated") is uncertain. For various options see HALOT 871 s.v. עצר and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 107. The two terms are usually taken as polar opposites ("slaves and freemen" or "minors and adults"), but Cogan and Tadmor, on the basis of contextual considerations (note the usage with אֶפֶס ('efes), "nothing but") in Deut 32:36 and 2 Kgs 14:26, argue convincingly that the terms are synonyms, meaning "restrained and abandoned," and refer to incapable or incapacitated individuals.

13 tn Heb "because of the provocation by which you angered [me], and you caused Israel to sin."

14 tc A few Hebrew MSS and some ancient versions agree with 2 Kgs 9:10, 36, which reads, "the plot [of ground] at Jezreel." The Hebrew words translated "outer wall" (חֵל, khel, defectively written here!) and "plot [of ground]" (חֶלְקַ, kheleq) are spelled similarly.

15 tn "Dogs will eat the ones who belonging to Ahab who die in the city."

16 tn Heb "who sold himself."

17 tn Heb "in the eyes of."

18 tn Heb "like Ahab...whom his wife Jezebel incited."

19 tn The Hebrew word used here, גִּלּוּלִים (gillulim) is always used as a disdainful reference to idols. It is generally thought to have originally referred to "dung pellets" (cf. KBL 183 s.v. גִּלּוּלִים). It is only one of several terms used in this way, such as אֱלִילִים ('elilim, "worthless things") and הֲבָלִים (havalim, "vanities" or "empty winds").

20 tn Heb "He acted very abominably by walking after the disgusting idols, according to all which the Amorites had done."

21 tn Heb "the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite."

22 tn Or "humbles himself." The expression occurs a second time later in this verse.

23 tn Heb "I will not bring the disaster during his days, [but] in the days of his son I will bring the disaster on his house."

24 tn Heb "and they lived three years without war between Aram and Israel."

25 tn The word "visit" is supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons.

26 tn Heb "Do you know that Ramoth Gilead belongs to us, and we hesitate to take it from the hand of the king of Aram?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Of course, you must know!"

attack Ramoth Gilead?" Jehoshaphat replied to the king of Israel, "I will support you; my army and horses are at your disposal."[1] 22:5 Then Jehoshaphat added,[2] "First seek an oracle from the LORD."[3] 22:6 So the king of Israel assembled about four hundred prophets and asked them, "Should I attack Ramoth Gilead or not?"[4] They said, "Attack! The sovereign one[5] will hand it over to the king." 22:7 But Jehoshaphat asked, "Is there not a prophet of the LORD still here, that we may ask him?" 22:8 The king of Israel answered Jehoshaphat, "There is still one man through whom we can seek the LORD's will.[6] But I despise[7] him because he does not prophesy prosperity for me, but disaster. His name is Micaiah son of Imlah.[8] Jehoshaphat said, "The king should not say such things." 22:9 The king of Israel summoned an official and said, "Quickly bring Micaiah son of Imlah."

22:10 Now the king of Israel and King Jehoshaphat of Judah were sitting on their respective thrones,[9] dressed in their robes, at the threshing floor at the entrance of the gate of Samaria.[10] All the prophets were prophesying before them. 22:11 Zedekiah son of Kenaanah made iron horns and said, "This is what the LORD says, 'With these you will gore Syria until they are destroyed.'" 22:12 All the prophets were prophesying the same, saying, "Attack Ramoth Gilead! You will succeed; the LORD will hand it over to the king." 22:13 Now the messenger who went to summon Micaiah said to him, "Look, the prophets are in complete agreement that the king will succeed.[11] Your words must agree with theirs; you must predict success."[12] 22:14 But Micaiah said, "As certainly as the LORD lives, I will say what the LORD tells me to say."

22:15 When he came before the king, the king asked him, "Micaiah, should we attack Ramoth Gilead or not?" He answered him, "Attack! You will succeed; the LORD will hand it over to the king."[13] 22:16 The king said to him, "How many times must I make you solemnly promise in[14] the name of the LORD to tell me only the truth?" 22:17 Micaiah[15] said, "I saw all Israel scattered on the mountains like sheep that have no shepherd. Then the LORD said, 'They have no master. They should go home in peace.'" 22:18 The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "Didn't I tell you he does not prophesy prosperity for me, but disaster?" 22:19 Micaiah[16] said, "That being the case, hear the word of the LORD. I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, with all the heavenly assembly standing on his right and on his left. 22:20 The LORD said, 'Who will deceive Ahab, so he will attack Ramoth Gilead and die[17] there?' One said this and another that. 22:21 Then a spirit[18] stepped forward and stood before the LORD. He said, 'I will deceive him.' The LORD asked him, 'How?' 22:22 He replied, 'I will go out and be a lying spirit in the mouths of all his prophets.' The LORD[19] said, 'Deceive and overpower him.[20] Go out and do as you have

[1] tn Heb "Like me, like you; like my people, like your people; like my horses; like your horses."

[2] tn Heb "and Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel."

[3] tn Heb "the word of the LORD." Jehoshaphat is requesting a prophetic oracle revealing the Lord's will in the matter and their prospects for success. For examples of such oracles, see 2 Sam 5:19, 23-24.

[4] tn Heb "Should I go against Ramoth Gilead for war or should I refrain?"

[5] tn Though Jehoshaphat requested an oracle from "the LORD" (יְהוָה, Yahweh), they stop short of actually using this name and substitute the title אֲדֹנָי ('adonai, "lord; master"). This ambiguity may explain in part Jehoshaphat's hesitancy and caution (vv. 7-8). He seems to doubt that the four hundred are genuine prophets of the LORD.

[6] tn Heb "to seek the LORD from him."

[7] tn Or "hate."

[8] tn The words "his name is" are supplied for stylistic reasons.

[9] tn Heb "were sitting, a man on his throne."

[12] tn Heb "let your words be like the word of each of them and speak good."

[13] sn "Attack! You will succeed; the LORD will hand it over to the king." One does not expect Micaiah, having just vowed to speak only what the Lord tells him, to agree with the other prophets and give the king an inaccurate prophecy. Micaiah's actions became understandable later, when it is revealed that the LORD desires to deceive the king and lead him to his demise. The LORD even dispatches a lying spirit to deceive Ahab's prophets. Micaiah can lie to the king because he realizes this lie is from the LORD. It is important to note that in v. 14 Micaiah only vows to speak the word of the LORD; he does not necessarily say he will tell the truth. In this case the LORD's word itself is deceptive. Only when the king adjures him to tell the truth (v. 16), does Micaiah do so.

[14] tn Or "swear an oath by."

[15] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Micaiah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Micaiah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] tn Heb "and fall."

[18] tn Heb "the spirit." The significance of the article prefixed to רוּחַ (ruakh) is uncertain, but it could contain a clue as to this spirit's identity, especially when interpreted in light of v. 24. It is certainly possible, and probably even likely, that the article is used in a generic or dramatic sense and should be translated, "a spirit." In the latter case it would show that this spirit was vivid and definite in the mind of Micaiah the storyteller. However, if one insists that the article indicates a well-known or universally known spirit, the following context provides a likely referent. Verse 24 tells how Zedekiah slapped Micaiah in the face and then asked sarcastically, "Which way did the spirit from the LORD (רוּחַ־יְהוָה, [ruakh-Yahweh], Heb "the spirit of the LORD") go when he went from me to speak to you?" When the phrase "the spirit of the LORD" refers to the divine spirit (rather than the divine breath or mind, Isa 40:7, 13) elsewhere, the spirit energizes an individual or group for special tasks or moves one to prophesy. This raises the possibility that the deceiving spirit of vv. 20-23 is the same as the divine spirit mentioned by Zedekiah in v. 24. This would explain why the article is used on רוּחַ; he can be called "the spirit" because he is the well-known spirit who energizes the prophets.

[20] tn The Hebrew text has two imperfects connected by וְגַם (v^{e}gam). These verbs could be translated as specific futures, "you will deceive and also you will prevail," in which case the LORD is assuring the spirit of success on his mission. However, in a commissioning context (note the following imperatives) such as this, it is more likely that the imperfects are injuncproposed.' 22:23 So now, look, the LORD has placed a lying spirit in the mouths of all these prophets of yours, but the LORD has decreed disaster for you." 22:24 Zedekiah son of Kenaanah approached, hit Micaiah on the jaw, and said, "Which way did the LORD's spirit go when he went from me to speak to you?" 22:25 Micaiah replied, "Look, you will see in the day when you go into an inner room to hide." 22:26 Then the king of Israel said, "Take Micaiah and return him to Amon the city official and Joash the king's son. 22:27 Say, 'This is what the king says, "Put this man in prison. Give him only a little bread and water[1] until I safely return."'"[2] 22:28 Micaiah said, "If you really do safely return, then the LORD has not spoken through me." Then he added, "Take note,[3] all you people."

22:29 The king of Israel and King Jehoshaphat of Judah attacked Ramoth Gilead. 22:30 The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "I will disguise myself and then enter[4] into the battle, but you wear your royal robes." So the king of Israel disguised himself and then entered into the battle. 22:31 Now the king of Syria had ordered his thirty-two chariot commanders, "Do not fight common soldiers or high-ranking officers;[5] fight only the king of Israel." 22:32 When the chariot commanders saw Jehoshaphat, they said, "He must be the king of Israel." So they turned and attacked him, but Jehoshaphat cried out. 22:33 When the chariot commanders realized he was not the king of Israel, they turned away from him. 22:34 Now an archer shot an arrow at random,[6] and it struck the king of Israel between the plates of his armor. The king[7] ordered his charioteer, "Turn around and take me from the battle line,[8] because I'm wounded." 22:35 While the battle raged throughout the day, the king stood propped up in his chariot opposite the Syrians. He died in the evening; the blood from the wound ran down into the bottom of the chariot. 22:36 As the sun was setting, a cry went through the camp, "Each one should return to his city and to his homeland." 22:37 So the king died and was taken to Samaria, where they buried him.[9] 22:38 They washed off the chariot at the pool of Samaria (this was where the prostitutes bathed);[10] dogs licked his blood, just as the LORD had said would happen.[11]

22:39 The rest of the events of Ahab's reign, including a record of his accomplishments and how he built a luxurious palace and various cities, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[12] 22:40 Ahab passed away.[13] His son Ahaziah replaced him as king.

Jehoshaphat's Reign over Judah

22:41 In the fourth year of King Ahab's reign over Israel, Asa's son Jehoshaphat became king over Judah. 22:42 Jehoshaphat was thirty-five years old when he became king and he reigned for twenty-five years in Jerusalem.[14] His mother was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi. 22:43 He followed in his father Asa's footsteps and was careful to do what the LORD approved.[15] (22:44)[16] However, the high places were not eliminated; the people continued to offer sacrifices and burn incense on the high places. 22:44 (22:45) Jehoshaphat was also at peace with the king of Israel.

22:45 The rest of the events of Jehoshaphat's reign, including his successes and military exploits, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[17] 22:46 He removed from the land any male cultic prostitutes who had managed to survive the reign of his father Asa.[18] 22:47 There was no king in Edom at this time; a governor ruled. 22:48 Jehoshaphat built a fleet of large merchant ships[19] to travel to Ophir

The forms are better interpreted as infinitives absolute functioning as cohortatives. See IBHS 594 §35.5.2a. Some prefer to emend the forms to imperfects.

[16] sn Beginning with 22:43b, the verse numbers through 22:53 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), because 22:43b in the English Bible = 22:44 in the Hebrew text. The remaining verses in the chapter differ by one, with 22:44-53 ET = 22:45-54 HT.

sn Despite Asa's opposition to these male cultic prostitutes (see 1 Kgs 15:12) some of them had managed to remain in the land. Jehoshaphat finished what his father had started.

22:50 Jehoshaphat passed away[2] and was buried with his ancestors in the city of his ancestor[3] David. His son Jehoram replaced him as king.

Ahaziah's Reign over Israel

22:51 In the seventeenth year of King Jehoshaphat's reign over Judah, Ahab's son Ahaziah became king over Israel in Samaria.[4] He ruled for two years over Israel. 22:52 He did evil in the sight of[5] the LORD and followed in the footsteps[6] of his father and mother; like Jeroboam son of Nebat, he encouraged Israel to sin.[7] 22:53 He worshiped and bowed down to Baal,[8] angering the LORD God of Israel just as his father had done.[9]

2 Kings

Elijah Confronts the King and His Commanders

1:1 After Ahab died, Moab rebelled against Israel.[1] 1:2 Ahaziah fell through a window lattice in his upper chamber in Samaria[2] and was injured. He sent messengers with these orders,[3] "Go, ask[4] Baal Zebub,[5] the god of Ekron, if I will survive this injury."

1:3 But the LORD's angelic messenger told Elijah the Tishbite, "Get up, go to meet the messengers from the king of Samaria. Say this to them: 'You must think there is no God in Israel! That explains why you are on your way to seek an oracle from Baal Zebub the god of Ekron.[6] 1:4 Therefore this is what the LORD says, "You will not leave the bed you lie on, for you will certainly die!"'" So Elijah went on his way.

1:5 When the messengers returned to the king,[7] he asked them, "Why have you returned?" 1:6 They replied,[8] "A man came up to meet us. He told us, 'Go back to the king who sent you and tell him, 'This is what the LORD says: "You must think there is no God in Israel! That explains why you are sending for an oracle from Baal Zebub, the god of Ekron.[9] Therefore you will not leave the bed you lie on, for you will certainly die."'" 1:7 The king[10] asked them, "Describe the appearance[11] of this man who came up to meet you and told you these things." 1:8 They replied,[12] "He was a hairy man[13] and had a leather belt[14] tied around his waist." The king[15] said, "He is Elijah the Tishbite."

1:9 The king[16] sent a captain and his fifty soldiers[17] to retrieve Elijah.[18] The captain[19] went up to him, while he was sitting on the top of a hill.[20] He told him, "Prophet,[21] the king says, 'Come down!'" 1:10 Elijah replied to the captain,[22] "If I am indeed a prophet, may fire come down from the sky and consume you and your fifty soldiers!" Fire then came down[23] from the sky and consumed him and his fifty soldiers.

1:11 The king[24] sent another captain and his fifty soldiers to retrieve Elijah. He went up and told him,[25] "Prophet, this is what the king says, 'Come down at once!'"[26] 1:12 Elijah replied to them,[27] "If I am indeed a prophet, may fire come down from the sky and consume you and your fifty soldiers!" Fire from God[28] came down from 1 sn This statement may fit better with the final paragraph of 1 Kgs 22.

2 map For location see Map2-B1; Map4-D3; Map5-E2; Map6-A4; Map7-C1.

3 tn Heb "and he sent messengers and said to them."

4 tn That is, "seek an oracle from."

5 sn Apparently Baal Zebub refers to a local manifestation of the god Baal at the Philistine city of Ekron. The name appears to mean "Lord of the Flies," but it may be a deliberate scribal corruption of Baal Zebul, "Baal, the Prince," a title known from the Ugaritic texts. For further discussion and bibliography, see HALOT 261 s.v. זְבוּב בַּעַל and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 25.

6 tn Heb "Is it because there is no God in Israel [that] you are going to inquire of Baal Zebub, the god of Ekron?" The translation seeks to bring out the sarcastic tone of the rhetorical question.

7 tn Heb "to him."

sn The narrative is elliptical and telescoped here. The account of Elijah encountering the messengers and delivering the Lord's message is omitted; we only here of it as the messengers report what happened to the king.

8 tn Heb "said to him."

9 tn Heb "Is it because there is no God in Israel [that] you are sending to inquire of Baal Zebub, the god of Ekron?" The translation seeks to bring out the sarcastic tone of the rhetorical question. In v. 3 the messengers are addressed (in the phrase "you are on your way" the second person plural pronoun is used in Hebrew), but here the king is addressed (in the phrase "you are sending" the second person singular pronoun is used).

10 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Heb "What was the manner...?"

12 tn Heb "said to him."

13 tn Heb "an owner of hair." This idiomatic expression indicates that Elijah was very hairy. For other examples where the idiom "owner of" is used to describe a characteristic of someone, see HALOT 143 s.v. בַּעַל. For example, an "owner of dreams" is one who frequently has dreams (Gen 37:19) and an "owner of anger" is a hot-tempered individual (Prov 22:24).

14 tn Heb "belt of skin" (i.e., one made from animal hide).

15 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Heb "officer of fifty and his fifty."

18 tn Heb "to him."

19 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the captain) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 sn The prophet Elijah's position on the top of the hill symbolizes his superiority to the king and his messengers.

21 tn Heb "man of God" (also in vv. 10, 11, 12, 13).

22 tn Heb "answered and said to the officer of fifty."

23 tn Wordplay contributes to the irony here. The king tells Elijah to "come down" (Hebrew יָרַד, yarad), but Elijah calls fire down (יֵרֵד) on the arrogant king's officer.

24 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tc The MT reads, "he answered and said to him." The verb "he answered" (וַיַּעַן, vayya'an) is probably a corruption of "he went up" (וַיַּעַל, vayya'al). See v. 9.

26 sn In this second panel of the three-paneled narrative, the king and his captain are more arrogant than before. The captain uses a more official sounding introduction ("this is what the king says") and the king adds "at once" to the command.

27 tc Two medieval Hebrew MSS, the LXX, and the Syriac Peshitta have the singular "to him."

28 tn Or "intense fire." The divine name may be used idiomatically to emphasize the intensity of the fire. Whether one translates אֱלֹהִים ('elohim) here as a proper name or idiomatically, this addition to the narrative (the name is omitted in the first panel, v. 10b) emphasizes the severity of the judgment and is appropriate given the more intense command delivered by the king to the prophet in this panel.

the sky and consumed him and his fifty soldiers.

1:13 The king[1] sent a third captain and his fifty soldiers. This third captain went up and fell[2] on his knees before Elijah. He begged for mercy, "Prophet, please have respect for my life and for the lives of these fifty servants of yours. 1:14 Indeed,[3] fire came down from the sky and consumed the two captains who came before me, along with their men.[4] So now, please have respect for my life." 1:15 The LORD's angelic messenger said to Elijah, "Go down with him. Don't be afraid of him." So he got up and went down[5] with him to the king.

1:16 Elijah[6] said to the king,[7] "This is what the LORD says, 'You sent messengers to seek an oracle from Baal Zebub, the god of Ekron. You must think there is no God in Israel from whom you can seek an oracle![8] Therefore you will not leave the bed you lie on, for you will certainly die.'"[9]

1:17 He died just as the LORD had prophesied through Elijah.[10] In the second year of the reign of King Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat over Judah, Ahaziah's brother Jehoram replaced him as king of Israel, because he had no son.[11] 1:18 The rest of the events of Ahaziah's reign, including his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[12]

Elijah Makes a Swift Departure

2:1 Just before[13] the LORD took Elijah up to heaven in a windstorm, Elijah and Elisha were traveling from Gilgal. 2:2 Elijah told Elisha, "Stay here, for the LORD has sent me to Bethel."[14] But Elisha said, "As certainly as the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you." So they went down to Bethel. 2:3 Some members of the prophetic guild[15] in Bethel came out to Elisha and said, "Do you know that today the LORD is going to take your master from you?"[16] He answered, "Yes, I know. Be quiet."

2:4 Elijah said to him, "Elisha, stay here, for the LORD has sent me to Jericho."[17] But he replied, "As certainly as the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you." So they went to Jericho. 2:5 Some members of the prophetic guild in Jericho approached Elisha and said, "Do you know that today the LORD is going to take your master from you?" He answered, "Yes, I know. Be quiet."

2:6 Elijah said to him, "Stay here, for the LORD has sent me to the Jordan." But he replied, "As certainly as the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you." So they traveled on together. 2:7 The fifty members of the prophetic guild went and stood opposite them at a distance, while Elijah and Elisha[18] stood by the Jordan. 2:8 Elijah took his cloak, folded it up, and hit the water with it. The water divided, and the two of them crossed over on dry ground.

2:9 When they had crossed over, Elijah said to Elisha, "What can I do for you,[19] before I am taken away from you?" Elisha answered, "May I receive a double portion of the prophetic spirit that energizes you."[20] 2:10 Elijah[21] replied, "That's a difficult request![22] If you see me taken from you, may it be so, but if you don't, it will not happen."

2 tn Heb "went up and approached and kneeled."

3 tn Heb "look."

4 tn Heb "their fifty."

5 sn In this third panel the verb "come down" (יָרַד, yarad) occurs again, this time describing Elijah's descent from the hill at the Lord's command. The moral of the story seems clear: Those who act as if they have authority over God and his servants just may pay for their arrogance with their lives; those who, like the third commander, humble themselves and show the proper respect for God's authority and for his servants will be spared and find God quite cooperative.

6 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elijah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Heb "him"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Heb "Because you sent messengers to inquire of Baal Zebub, the god of Ekron, is there no God in Israel to inquire of his word?"

9 sn For the third time in this chapter we read the Lord's sarcastic question to king and the accompanying announcement of judgment. The repetition emphasizes one of the chapter's main themes. Israel's leaders should seek guidance from their own God, not a pagan deity, for Israel's sovereign God is the one who controls life and death.

10 tn Heb "according to the word of the LORD which he spoke through Elijah."

11 tn Heb "Jehoram replaced him as king...because he had no son." Some ancient textual witnesses add "his brother," which was likely added on the basis of the statement later in the verse that Ahaziah had no son.

12 tn Heb "As for the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not recorded in the scroll of the events of the days of the kings of Israel?"

13 tn Or "when."

19 tn Heb "Ask! What can I do for you....?"

20 tn Heb "May a double portion of your spirit come to me."

21 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elijah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn Heb "You have made difficult [your] request."

2:11 As they were walking along and talking, suddenly a fiery chariot[1] pulled by fiery horses appeared.[2] They went between Elijah and Elisha,[3] and Elijah went up to heaven in a windstorm. 2:12 While Elisha was watching, he was crying out, "My father, my father! The chariot and horsemen of Israel!"[4] Then he could no longer see him. He grabbed his clothes and tore them in two. 2:13 He picked up Elijah's cloak, which had fallen off him, and went back and stood on the shore of the Jordan. 2:14 He took the cloak that had fallen off Elijah,[5] hit the water with it, and said, "Where is the LORD, the God of Elijah?" When he hit the water, it divided and Elisha crossed over.

2:15 When the members of the prophetic guild in Jericho,[6] who were standing at a distance,[7] saw him do this, they said, "The spirit that energized Elijah[8] rests upon Elisha." They went to meet him and bowed down to the ground before him. 2:16 They said to him, "Look, there are fifty capable men with your servants. Let them go and look for your master, for the wind sent from the LORD[9] may have carried him away and dropped him on one of the hills or in one of the valleys." But Elisha[10] replied, "Don't send them out." 2:17 But they were so insistent, he became embarrassed. So he said, "Send them out." They sent the fifty men out and they looked for three days, but could not find Elijah.[11] 2:18 When they came back, Elisha[12] was staying in Jericho. He said to them, "Didn't I tell you, 'Don't go'?"

Elisha Demonstrates His Authority

2:19 The men of the city said to Elisha, "Look, the city has a good location, as our[13] master can see. But the water is bad and the land doesn't produce crops."[14] 2:20 Elisha[15] said, "Get me a new jar and put some salt in it." So they got it. 2:21 He went out to the spring and threw the salt in. Then he said, "This is what the LORD says, 'I have purified[16] this water. It will no longer cause death or fail to produce crops.'"[17] 2:22 The water has been pure to this very day, just as Elisha prophesied.[18]

2:23 He went up from there to Bethel.[19] As he was traveling up the road, some young boys[20] came out of the city and made fun of him, saying, "Go on up, baldy! Go on up, baldy!" 2:24 When he turned around and saw them, he called God's judgment down on them.[21] Two female bears came out of the woods and ripped forty-two of the boys to pieces. 2:25 From there he traveled to Mount Carmel and then back to Samaria.[22]

Moab Fights with Israel

3:1 In the eighteenth year of King Jehoshaphat's reign over Judah, Ahab's son Jehoram became king over Israel in Samaria;[23] he ruled for twelve years. 3:2 He did evil in the sight of[24] the LORD, but not to the same degree as his father and mother. He did remove the sacred pillar of Baal that his father had made. 3:3 Yet he persisted in[25] the sins of Jeroboam son of Nebat,

[1] tn Though the noun is singular here, it may be collective, in which case it could be translated "chariots."

[2] tn Heb "look, a chariot of fire and horses of fire."

[3] tn Heb "and they made a division between the two of them."

[4] sn Elisha may be referring to the fiery chariot(s) and horses as the Lord's spiritual army that fights on behalf of Israel (see 2 Kgs 6:15-17; 7:6). However, the juxtaposition with "my father" (clearly a reference to Elijah as Elisha's mentor), and the parallel in 2 Kgs 13:14 (where the king addresses Elisha with these words), suggest that Elisha is referring to Elijah. In this case Elijah is viewed as a one man army, as it were. When the Lord spoke through him, his prophetic word was as powerful as an army of chariots and horses. See M. A. Beek, "The Meaning of the Expression 'The Chariots and Horsemen of Israel' (II Kings ii 12)," The Witness of Tradition (OTS 17), 1-10.

[5] tn Heb "Elijah's cloak, which had fallen off him." The wording is changed slightly in the translation for the sake of variety of expression (see v. 13).

[20] tn The word נַעַר (na'ar), here translated "boy," can refer to a broad age range, including infants as well as young men. But the qualifying term "young" (or "small") suggests these youths were relatively young. The phrase in question ("young boy") occurs elsewhere in 1 Sam 20:35; 1 Kgs 3:7 (used by Solomon in an hyperbolic manner); 11:17; 2 Kgs 5:14; and Isa 11:6.

[21] tn Heb "he cursed them in the name of the LORD." A curse was a formal appeal to a higher authority (here the Lord) to vindicate one's cause through judgment. As in chapter one, this account makes it clear that disrespect for the Lord's designated spokesmen can be deadly, for it is ultimately rejection of the Lord's authority.

[22] sn The two brief episodes recorded in vv. 19-25 demonstrate Elisha's authority and prove that he is the legitimate prophetic heir of Elijah. He has the capacity to bring life and blessing to those who recognize his authority, or death and judgment to those who reject him.

who encouraged Israel to sin; he did not turn from them.[1]

3:4 Now King Mesha of Moab was a sheep breeder.[2] He would send as tribute[3] to the king of Israel 100,000 male lambs and the wool of 100,000 rams. 3:5 When Ahab died, the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel. 3:6 At that time King Jehoram left Samaria and assembled all Israel for war. 3:7 He sent[4] this message to King Jehoshaphat of Judah: "The king of Moab has rebelled against me. Will you fight with me against Moab?" Jehoshaphat[5] replied, "I will join you in the campaign; my army and horses are at your disposal."[6] 3:8 He then asked, "Which invasion route are we going to take?"[7] Jehoram[8] answered, "By the road through the Desert of Edom." 3:9 So the kings of Israel, Judah, and Edom[9] set out together. They wandered around on the road for seven days and finally ran out of water for the men and animals they had with them. 3:10 The king of Israel said, "Oh no![10] Certainly the LORD has summoned these three kings so that he can hand them over to the king of Moab!" 3:11 Jehoshaphat asked, "Is there no prophet of the LORD here that we might seek the LORD's direction?"[11] One of the servants of the king of Israel answered, "Elisha son of Shapat is here; he used to be Elijah's servant."[12] 3:12 Jehoshaphat said, "The LORD speaks through him."[13] So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to visit him.

3:13 Elisha said to the king of Israel, "Why are you here?[14] Go to your father's prophets or your mother's prophets!" The king of Israel replied to him, "No, for the LORD is the one who summoned these three kings so that he can hand them over to Moab." 3:14 Elisha said, "As certainly as the LORD who rules over all[15] lives (whom I serve),[16] if I did not respect King Jehoshaphat of Judah,[17] I would not pay attention to you or acknowledge you.[18] 3:15 But now, get me a musician."[19] When the musician played, the LORD energized him,[20] 3:16 and he said, "This is what the LORD says, 'Make many cisterns in this valley,'[21] 3:17 for this is what the LORD says, 'You will not feel[22] any wind or see any rain, but this valley will be full of water and you and your cattle and animals will drink.' 3:18 This is an easy task for the LORD;[23] he will also hand Moab over to you. 3:19 You will defeat every fortified city and every important[24] city. You must chop down[25] every productive[26] tree, stop up all the springs, and cover all the cultivated land with stones."[27]

3:20 Sure enough, the next morning, at the time of the morning sacrifice, water came flowing down from Edom and filled the land.[28] 3:21 Now all Moab had heard that the kings were attacking,[29] so everyone old enough to fight was mustered and placed at the border.[30] 3:22 When they got up early the next morning, the sun was shining on the water. To the Moabites, who were some distance away, the water looked red like blood. 3:23 The Moabites[31] said, "It's blood! The kings are totally destroyed![32] They have struck

[1] tc The Hebrew text has the singular, "it." Some ancient witnesses read the plural, which seems preferable since the antecedent ("sins") is plural. Another option is to emend the plural "sins" to a singular. One ancient Greek witness has the singular "sin."

[20] tn Heb "the hand of the LORD came on him." This may refer to what typically happened, "[for] when a musician played, the hand of the LORD would come upon him."

[21] tn Heb "making this valley cisterns, cisterns." The Hebrew noun גֵּב (gev) means "cistern" in Jer 14:3 (cf. Jer 39:10). The repetition of the noun is for emphasis. See GKC 396 §123.e. The verb ("making") is an infinitive absolute, which has to be interpreted in light of the context. The translation above takes it in an imperatival sense. The command need not be understood as literal, but as hyperbolic. Telling them to build cisterns is a dramatic way of leading into the announcement that he would miraculously provide water in the desert. Some prefer to translate the infinitive as an imperfect with the Lord as the understood subject, "I will turn this valley [into] many pools."

one another down! Now, Moab, seize the plunder!" 3:24 When they approached the Israelite camp, the Israelites rose up and struck down the Moabites, who then ran from them. The Israelites[1] thoroughly defeated[2] Moab. 3:25 They tore down the cities and each man threw a stone into every cultivated field until they were covered.[3] They stopped up every spring and chopped down every productive tree.

Only Kir Hareseth was left intact,[4] but the slingers surrounded it and attacked it. 3:26 When the king of Moab realized he was losing the battle,[5] he and 700 swordsmen tried to break through and attack[6] the king of Edom, but they failed. 3:27 So he took his firstborn son, who was to succeed him as king, and offered him up as a burnt sacrifice on the wall. There was an outburst of divine anger against Israel,[7] so they broke off the attack[8] and returned to their homeland.

Elisha Helps a Widow and Her Sons

4:1 Now a wife of one of the prophets[9] appealed[10] to Elisha for help, saying, "Your servant, my husband is dead. You know that your servant was a loyal follower of the LORD.[11] Now the creditor is coming to take away my two boys to be his servants." 4:2 Elisha said to her, "What can I do for you? Tell me, what do you have in the house?" She answered, "Your servant has nothing in the house except a small jar of olive oil." 4:3 He said, "Go and ask all your neighbors for empty containers.[12] Get as many as you can.[13] 4:4 Go and close the door behind you and your sons. Pour the olive oil into all the containers;[14] set aside each one when you have filled it." 4:5 So she left him and closed the door behind her and her sons. As they were bringing the containers to her, she was pouring the olive oil. 4:6 When the containers were full, she said to one of her sons,[15] "Bring me another container." But he answered her, "There are no more." Then the olive oil stopped flowing. 4:7 She went and told the prophet.[16] He said, "Go, sell the olive oil. Repay your creditor, and then you and your sons can live off the rest of the profit."

Elisha Gives Life to a Boy

4:8 One day Elisha traveled to Shunem, where a prominent[17] woman lived. She insisted that he stop for a meal.[18] So whenever he was passing through, he would stop in there for a meal.[19] 4:9 She said to her husband, "Look, I'm sure[20] that the man who regularly passes through here is a very special prophet.[21] 4:10 Let's make a small private upper room[22] and furnish it with[23] a bed, table, chair, and lamp. When he visits us, he can stay there."

4:11 One day Elisha[24] came for a visit; he went[25] into the upper room and rested.[26] 4:12 He told his servant Gehazi, "Ask the Shunammite woman to come here."[27] So he did so and she came to him.[28] 4:13 Elisha said to Gehazi,[29] "Tell her, 'Look, you have treated us with such great tive with a Niphal finite verb, see Lev 19:20. Cf. also IBHS 582 §35.2.1c.) Some prefer to derive the verb from a proposed homonym meaning "at HALOT 349 s.v. II חרב and BDB 352 s.v. חָרְבָה).

1 tn Heb "they."

2 tc The consonantal text (Kethib) suggests, "and they went, striking down," but the marginal reading (Qere) is "they struck down, striking down." For a discussion of the textual problem, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 46.

3 tn Heb "and [on] every good portion they were throwing each man his stone and they filled it." The vav + perfect ("and they filled") here indicates customary action contemporary with the situation described in the preceding main clause (where a customary imperfect is used, "they were throwing"). See the note at 3:4.

4 tn Heb "until he had allowed its stones to remain in Kir Hareseth."

5 tn Heb "and the king of Moab saw that the battle was too strong for him."

6 tn Heb "he took with him seven hundred men, who drew the sword, to break through against."

7 tn Heb "there was great anger against Israel."

sn The meaning of this statement is uncertain, for the subject of the anger is not indicated. Except for two relatively late texts, the noun קֶצֶף (qetsef) refers to an outburst of divine anger. But it seems unlikely the Lord would be angry with Israel, for he placed his stamp of approval on the campaign (vv. 16-19). D. N. Freedman suggests the narrator, who obviously has a bias against the Omride dynasty, included this observation to show that the Lord would not allow the Israelite king to "have an undiluted victory" (as quoted in M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings [AB], 52, n. 8). Some suggest that the original source identified Chemosh the Moabite god as the subject and that his name was later suppressed by a conscientious scribe, but this proposal raises more questions than it answers. For a discussion of various views, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 47-48, 51-52.

8 tn Heb "they departed from him."

9 tn Heb "a wife from among the wives of the sons of the prophets."

10 tn Or "cried out."

11 tn Heb "your servant feared the LORD." "Fear" refers here to obedience and allegiance, the products of healthy respect for the Lord's authority.

12 tn Heb "Go, ask for containers from outside, from all your neighbors, empty containers."

13 tn Heb "Do not borrow just a few."

14 tn Heb "all these vessels."

15 tn Heb "to her son."

16 tn Heb "man of God" (also in vv. 16, 22, 25, 27 [twice]).

17 tn Heb "great," perhaps "wealthy."

18 tn Or "she urged him to eat some food."

19 tn Or "he would turn aside there to eat some food."

20 tn Heb "I know."

21 tn Heb "holy man of God."

22 tn Heb "a small upper room of a wall"; according to HALOT 832 s.v. עֲלִיָּה, this refers to "a fully walled upper room."

23 tn Heb "and let's put there for him."

24 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Heb "turned aside."

26 tn Or "slept there."

27 tn Heb "Call for this Shunammite woman."

28 tn Heb "and he called for her and she stood before him."

29 tn Heb "he said to him."

respect.[1] What can I do for you? Can I put in a good word for you with the king or the commander of the army?"" She replied, "I'm quite secure."[2] 4:14 So he asked Gehazi,[3] "What can I do for her?" Gehazi replied, "She has no son, and her husband is old." 4:15 Elisha told him, "Ask her to come here."[4] So he did so[5] and she came and stood in the doorway.[6] 4:16 He said, "About this time next year[7] you will be holding a son." She said, "No, my master! O prophet, do not lie to your servant!" 4:17 The woman did conceive, and at the specified time the next year she gave birth to a son, just as Elisha had told her.

4:18 The boy grew and one day he went out to see his father who was with the harvest workers.[8] 4:19 He said to his father, "My head! My head!" His father[9] told a servant, "Carry him to his mother." 4:20 So he picked him up and took him to his mother. He sat on her lap[10] until noon and then died. 4:21 She went up and laid him down on the prophet's[11] bed. She shut the door behind her and left. 4:22 She called to her husband, "Send me one of the servants and one of the donkeys, so I can go see the prophet quickly and then return." 4:23 He said, "Why do you want to go see him today? It is not the new moon[12] or the Sabbath." She said, "Everything's fine."[13] 4:24 She saddled the donkey and told her servant, "Lead on.[14] Do not stop unless I say so."[15]

4:25 So she went to visit[16] the prophet at Mount Carmel. When he[17] saw her at a distance, he said to his servant Gehazi, "Look, it's the Shunammite woman. 4:26 Now, run to meet her and ask her, 'Are you well? Are your husband and the boy well?'" She told Gehazi,[18] "Everything's fine." 4:27 But when she reached the prophet on the mountain, she grabbed hold of his feet. Gehazi came near to push her away, but the prophet said, "Leave her alone, for she is very upset.[19] The LORD has kept the matter hidden from me; he didn't tell me about it." 4:28 She said, "Did I ask my master for a son? Didn't I say, 'Don't mislead me?'" 4:29 Elisha[20] told Gehazi, "Tuck your robes into your belt, take my staff,[21] and go! Don't stop to exchange greetings with anyone![22] Place my staff on the child's face." 4:30 The mother of the child said, "As certainly as the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you." So Elisha[23] got up and followed her back.

4:31 Now Gehazi went on ahead of them. He placed the staff on the child's face, but there was no sound or response. When he came back to Elisha[24] he told him, "The child did not wake up." 4:32 When Elisha arrived at the house, there was[25] the child lying dead on his bed. 4:33 He went in by himself and closed the door.[26] Then he prayed to the LORD. 4:34 He got up on the bed and spread his body out over[27] the boy; he put his mouth on the boy's[28] mouth, his eyes over the boy's eyes, and the palms of his hands against the boy's palms. He bent down over him, and the boy's skin[29] grew warm. 4:35 Elisha[30] went back and walked around in the house.[31] Then he got up on the bed again[32] and bent down over him. The child sneezed seven times and opened his eyes. 4:36 Elisha[33] called to Gehazi and said, "Get the Shunammite woman." So he did so[34] and she came to him. He said to her, "Take your son." 4:37 She came in, fell at his feet, and bowed down. Then she picked up her son and left.

[1] tn Heb "you have turned trembling to us with all this trembling." The exaggerated language is probably idiomatic. The point seems to be that she has taken great pains or gone out of her way to be kind to them. Her concern was a sign of her respect for the prophetic office.

[2] tn Heb "Among my people I am living." This answer suggests that she has security within the context of her family.

[3] tn Heb "and he said."

[4] tn Heb "Call for her."

[5] tn Heb "and he called her."

[6] tn Heb "and he called for her and she stood in the door."

[7] tn Heb "at this appointed time, at the time [when it is] reviving." For a discussion of the second phrase see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 57.

[8] tn Heb "to his father, to the harvesters."

[9] tn Heb "He"; the referent (the boy's father) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[10] tn Heb "knees."

[11] tn Heb "man of God's."

[12] sn The new moon was a time of sacrifice and special feasts (Num 28:14; 1 Sam 20:5). Apparently it was a convenient time to visit a prophet. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 57.

[13] tn Heb "peace."

[14] tn Heb "lead [the donkey on] and go."

[15] tn Heb "do not restrain for me the riding unless I say to you."

[16] tn Heb "went and came."

[17] tn Heb "the man of God." The phrase has been replaced by the relative pronoun "he" in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[18] tn Heb "she said." The narrator streamlines the story at this point, omitting any reference to Gehazi running to meet her and asking her the questions.

[19] tn Heb "her soul [i.e., 'disposition'] is bitter."

[20] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn Heb "take my staff in your hand."

[22] tn Heb "If you meet a man, do not greet him with a blessing; if a man greets you with a blessing, do not answer."

[23] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The referent must be Elisha here, since the following verse makes it clear that Gehazi had gone on ahead of them.

[24] tn Heb "to meet him."

[25] tn Heb "look."

[26] tn Heb "and closed the door behind the two of them."

[27] tn Heb "he went up and lay down over."

[28] tn Heb "his" (also in the next two clauses).

[29] tn Or perhaps, "body"; Heb "flesh."

[30] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn Heb "and he returned and went into the house, once here and once there."

[32] tn Heb "and he went up."

[33] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[34] tn Heb "and he called for her."

Elisha Makes a Meal Edible

4:38 Now Elisha went back to Gilgal, while there was famine in the land. Some of the prophets were visiting him[1] and he told his servant, "Put the big pot on the fire[2] and boil some stew for the prophets."[3] 4:39 Someone went out to the field to gather some herbs and found a wild vine.[4] He picked some of its fruit,[5] enough to fill up the fold of his robe. He came back, cut it up, and threw the slices[6] into the stew pot, not knowing they were harmful.[7] 4:40 The stew was poured out[8] for the men to eat. When they ate some of the stew, they cried out, "Death is in the pot, O prophet!" They could not eat it. 4:41 He said, "Get some flour." Then he threw it into the pot and said, "Now pour some out for the men so they may eat."[9] There was no longer anything harmful in the pot.

Elisha Miraculously Feeds a Hundred People

4:42 Now a man from Baal Shalisha brought some food for the prophet[10] – twenty loaves of bread made from the firstfruits of the barley harvest, as well as fresh ears of grain.[11] Elisha[12] said, "Set it before the people so they may eat." 4:43 But his attendant said, "How can I feed a hundred men with this?"[13] He replied, "Set it before the people so they may eat, for this is what the LORD says, 'They will eat and have some left over.'"[14] 4:44 So he set it before them; they ate and had some left over, just as the LORD predicted.[15]

Elisha Heals a Syrian General

5:1 Now Naaman, the commander of the king of Syria's army, was esteemed and respected by his master,[16] for through him the LORD had given Syria military victories. But this great warrior had a skin disease.[17] 5:2 Raiding parties went out from Syria and took captive from the land of Israel a young girl, who became a servant to Naaman's wife. 5:3 She told her mistress, "If only my master were in the presence of the prophet who is in Samaria![18] Then he would cure him of his skin disease."

5:4 Naaman[19] went and told his master what the girl from the land of Israel had said. 5:5 The king of Syria said, "Go! I will send a letter to the king of Israel." So Naaman[20] went, taking with him ten talents[21] of silver, six thousand shekels of gold,[22] and ten suits of clothes. 5:6 He brought the letter to king of Israel. It read: "This is a letter of introduction for my servant Naaman,[23] whom I have sent to be cured of his skin disease." 5:7 When the king of Israel read the letter, he tore his clothes and said, "Am I God? Can I kill or restore life? Why does he ask me to cure a man of his skin disease?[24] Certainly you must see that he is looking for an excuse to fight me!"[25]

5:8 When Elisha the prophet[26] heard that the king had torn his clothes, he sent this message to the king, "Why did you tear your clothes? Send him[27] to me so he may know there is a prophet in Israel." 5:9 So Naaman came with his horses and chariots and stood in the doorway of Elisha's house. 5:10 Elisha sent out a messenger who told him, "Go and wash seven times in the Jordan; your skin will be restored[28] and you will be healed." 5:11 Naaman went away angry. He said,

[7] tc The Hebrew text reads, "for they did not know" (יָדָעוּ, yada'u) but some emend the final shureq (וּ, indicating a third plural subject) to holem vav (וֹ, a third masculine singular pronominal suffix on a third singular verb) and read "for he did not know it." Perhaps it is best to omit the final vav as dittographic (note the vav at the beginning of the next verb form) and read simply, "for he did not know." See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 59.

[8] tn Heb "and they poured out [the stew]." The plural subject is probably indefinite.

[21] tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 750 pounds of silver (cf. NCV, NLT, CEV).

[22] tn Heb "six thousand gold [...]." The unit of measure is not given in the Hebrew text. A number of English versions supply "pieces" (e.g., KJV, ASV, NAB, TEV) or "shekels" (e.g., NASB, NIV, NRSV).

[23] tn Heb "and now when this letter comes to you, look, I have sent to you Naaman my servant."

[24] tn Heb "Am I God, killing and restoring life, that this one sends to me to cure a man from his skin disease?" In the Hebrew text this is one lengthy rhetorical question, which has been divided up in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[25] tn Heb "Indeed, know and see that he is seeking an occasion with respect to me."

[26] tn Heb "man of God" (also in vv. 15, 20).

[27] tn Heb "Let him come."

"Look, I thought for sure he would come out, stand there, invoke the name of the LORD his God, wave his hand over the area, and cure the skin disease. 5:12 The rivers of Damascus, the Abana and Pharpar, are better than any of the waters of Israel![1] Could I not wash in them and be healed?" So he turned around and went away angry. 5:13 His servants approached and said to him, "O master,[2] if the prophet had told you to do some difficult task,[3] you would have been willing to do it.[4] It seems you should be happy that he simply said, 'Wash and you will be healed.'"[5] 5:14 So he went down and dipped in the Jordan seven times, as the prophet had instructed.[6] His skin became as smooth as a young child's[7] and he was healed.

5:15 He and his entire entourage returned to the prophet. Naaman[8] came and stood before him. He said, "For sure[9] I know that there is no God in all the earth except in Israel! Now, please accept a gift from your servant." 5:16 But Elisha[10] replied, "As certainly as the LORD lives (whom I serve),[11] I will take nothing from you." Naaman[12] insisted that he take it, but he refused. 5:17 Naaman said, "If not, then please give your servant a load of dirt, enough for a pair of mules to carry,[13] for your servant will never again offer a burnt offering or sacrifice to a god other than the LORD.[14] 5:18 May the LORD forgive your servant for this one thing: When my master enters the temple of Rimmon to worship, and he leans on my arm and I bow down in the temple of Rimmon, may the LORD forgive your servant for this."[15] 5:19 Elisha[16] said to him, "Go in peace."

When he had gone a short distance,[17] 5:20 Gehazi, the prophet Elisha's servant, thought,[18] "Look, my master did not accept what this Syrian Naaman offered him.[19] As certainly as the LORD lives, I will run after him and accept something from him." 5:21 So Gehazi ran after Naaman. When Naaman saw someone running after him, he got down from his chariot to meet him and asked, "Is everything all right?"[20] 5:22 He answered, "Everything is fine.[21] My master sent me with this message, 'Look, two servants of the prophets just arrived from the Ephraimite hill country.[22] Please give them a talent[23] of silver and two suits of clothes.'" 5:23 Naaman said, "Please accept two talents of silver.[24] He insisted, and tied up two talents of silver in two bags, along with two suits of clothes. He gave them to two of his servants and they carried them for Gehazi.[25] 5:24 When he arrived at the hill, he took them from the servants[26] and put them in the house. Then he sent the men on their way.[27]

5:25 When he came and stood before his master, Elisha asked him, "Where have you been, Gehazi?" He answered, "Your servant hasn't been anywhere." 5:26 Elisha[28] replied, "I was there in spirit when a man turned and got down from his chariot to meet you.[29] This is not the proper time to accept silver or to accept clothes, olive groves, vineyards, sheep, cattle, and male and female servants.[1] 5:27 Therefore Naaman's skin disease will afflict[2] you and your descendants forever!" When Gehazi[3] went out from his presence, his skin was as white as snow.[4]

When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. [29] tn Heb "Did not my heart go as a man turned from his chariot to meet you?" The rhetorical question emphasizes that he was indeed present in "heart" (or "spirit") and was very much aware of what Gehazi had done. In the MT the interrogative particle has been accidentally omitted before the negative particle.

Elisha Makes an Ax Head Float

6:1 Some of the prophets[5] said to Elisha, "Look, the place where we meet with you[6] is too cramped[7] for us. 6:2 Let's go to the Jordan. Each of us will get a log from there and we will build a meeting place for ourselves there." He said, "Go." 6:3 One of them said, "Please come along with your servants." He replied, "All right, I'll come." 6:4 So he went with them. When they arrived at the Jordan, they started cutting down trees. 6:5 As one of them was felling a log, the ax head[8] dropped into the water. He shouted, "Oh no,[9] my master! It was borrowed!" 6:6 The prophet[10] asked, "Where did it drop in?" When he showed him the spot, Elisha[11] cut off a branch, threw it in at that spot, and made the ax head float. 6:7 He said, "Lift it out." So he reached out his hand and grabbed it.

Elisha Defeats an Army

6:8 Now the king of Syria was at war with Israel. He consulted his advisers, who said, "Invade[12] at such and such[13] a place." 6:9 But the prophet sent this message to the king of Israel, "Make sure you don't pass through this place because Syria is invading there." 6:10 So the king of Israel sent a message to the place the prophet had pointed out, warning it[14] to be on its guard. This happened on several occasions.[15] 6:11 This made the king of Syria upset.[16] So he summoned his advisers[17] and said to them, "One of us must be helping the king of Israel."[18] 6:12 One of his advisers said, "No, my master, O king. The prophet Elisha who lives in Israel keeps telling the king of Israel the things you say in your bedroom." 6:13 The king[19] ordered, "Go, find out where he is, so I can send some men to capture him."[20] The king was told, "He is in Dothan." 6:14 So he sent horses and chariots there, along with a good-sized army.[21] They arrived during the night and surrounded the city.

6:15 The prophet's[22] attendant got up early in the morning. When he went outside there was an army surrounding the city, along with horses and chariots. He said to Elisha,[23] "Oh no, my master! What will we do?" 6:16 He replied, "Don't be afraid, for our side outnumbers them."[24] 6:17 Then Elisha prayed, "O LORD, open his eyes so he can see." The LORD opened the servant's eyes and he saw that[25] the hill was full of horses and chariots of fire all around Elisha. 6:18 As they approached him,[26] Elisha prayed to the LORD, "Strike these people[27] with blindness."[28] The LORD[29] struck them with blindness as Elisha requested.[30] 6:19 Then Elisha said to them, "This is not the right road or city. Follow me, and I will lead you to the man you're looking for." He led them to Samaria.[31]

6:20 When they had entered Samaria, Elisha said, "O LORD, open their eyes, so they can see." The LORD opened their eyes and they saw that they were in the middle of Samaria.[32] 6:21 When 1 tn In the MT the statement is phrased as a rhetorical question, "Is this the time...?" It expects an emphatic negative response.

2 tn Heb "cling to."

3 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Gehazi) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Traditionally, "he went from before him, leprous like snow." But see the note at 5:1, as well as M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 66.

5 tn Heb "the sons of the prophets."

6 tn Heb "sit before you."

7 tn Heb "narrow, tight."

8 tn Heb "iron."

9 tn Or "ah."

10 tn Heb "man of God" (also in v. 9).

11 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tc The verb form used here is difficult to analyze. On the basis of the form נְחֻתִים (nekhutim) in v. 9 from the root נָחַת (nakhat), it is probably best to emend the verb to תִּנָּחֵתוּ (tinkhetu; a Qal imperfect form from the same root). The verb נָחַת in at least two other instances carries the nuance "go down, descend" in a military context. For a defense of this view, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 72.

13 sn The advisers would have mentioned a specific location, but the details are not significant to the narrator's purpose, so he simply paraphrases here.

14 tn The vav + perfect here indicates action contemporary with the preceding main verb ("sent"). See IBHS 533-34 §32.2.3e.

15 tn Heb "and the king of Israel sent to the place about which the man of God spoke to him, and he warned it and he guarded himself there, not once and not twice."

17 tn Heb "servants."

18 tn Heb "Will you not tell me who among us [is] for the king of Israel?" The sarcastic rhetorical question expresses the king's suspicion.

19 tn Heb "he" (also a second time in this verse); the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Heb "Go and see where he [is] so I can send and take him."

21 tn Heb "heavy force."

22 tn Heb "man of God's."

23 tn Heb "his young servant said to him."

24 tn Heb "for those who are with us are more than those who are with them."

25 tn Heb "and he saw, and look."

26 tn Heb "and they came down to him."

28 tn On the basis of the Akkadian etymology of the word, M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 74) translate "blinding light." HALOT 761 s.v. סַנְוֵרִים suggests the glosses "dazzling, deception."

29 tn Heb "he"; the referent (the LORD) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

the king of Israel saw them, he asked Elisha, "Should I strike them down,[1] my master?"[2] 6:22 He replied, "Do not strike them down! You did not capture them with your sword or bow, so what gives you the right to strike them down?[3] Give them some food and water, so they can eat and drink and then go back to their master." 6:23 So he threw a big banquet[4] for them and they ate and drank. Then he sent them back[5] to their master. After that no Syrian raiding parties again invaded the land of Israel.

The Lord Saves Samaria

6:24 Later King Ben Hadad of Syria assembled his entire army and attacked[6] and besieged Samaria.[7] 6:25 Samaria's food supply ran out.[8] They laid siege to it so long that[9] a donkey's head was selling for eighty shekels of silver[10] and a quarter of a kab[11] of dove's droppings[12] for five shekels of silver.[13]

6:26 While the king of Israel was passing by on the city wall, a woman shouted to him, "Help us, my master, O king!" 6:27 He replied, "No, let the LORD help you. How can I help you? The threshing floor and winepress are empty."[14] 6:28 Then the king asked her, "What's your problem?" She answered, "This woman said to me, 'Hand over your son; we'll eat him today and then eat my son tomorrow.' 6:29 So we boiled my son and ate him. Then I said to her the next day, 'Hand over your son and we'll eat him.' But she hid her son!" 6:30 When the king heard what the woman said, he tore his clothes. As he was passing by on the wall, the people could see he was wearing sackcloth under his clothes.[15] 6:31 Then he said, "May God judge me severely[16] if Elisha son of Shaphat still has his head by the end of the day!"[17]

6:32 Now Elisha was sitting in his house with the community leaders.[18] The king[19] sent a messenger on ahead, but before he arrived,[20] Elisha[21] said to the leaders,[22] "Do you realize this assassin intends to cut off my head?"[23] Look, when the messenger arrives, shut the door and lean against it. His master will certainly be right behind him."[24] 6:33 He was still talking to them when[25] the messenger approached[26] and said, "Look, the LORD is responsible for this disaster![27] Why should I continue to wait for the LORD to help?" 7:1 Elisha replied, "Hear the word of the LORD! This is what the LORD says, 'About this time tomorrow a seah[28] of finely milled flour will sell for a shekel and two seahs of barley for a shekel at the gate of Samaria.'" 7:2 An officer who was the king's right-hand man[29] responded to the prophet,[30] "Look, even if the LORD made it rain by opening holes in the sky, could this happen so soon?"[31] Elisha[32] said, "Look, you will see it happen with your own eyes, but you will not eat any of the food!"[33]

7:3 Now four men with a skin disease[34] were sitting at the entrance of the city gate. They said to one another, "Why are we just sitting here waiting to die?[35] 7:4 If we go into the city, we'll die of starvation,[36] and if we stay here we'll die!

1 tn Heb "Should I strike them down? I will strike them down." In the Hebrew text the first person imperfect form is repeated; the first form has the interrogative he prefixed to it; the second does not. It is likely that the second form should be omitted as dittographic or that the first should be emended to an infinitive absolute.

2 tn Heb "my father." The king addresses the prophet in this way to indicate his respect. See 2 Kgs 2:12.

10 tn Heb "eighty, silver." The unit of measurement is omitted.

11 sn A kab was a unit of dry measure, equivalent to approximately 2 quarts (2 liters).

12 tn The consonantal text (Kethib) reads "dove dung" (חֲרִיּוֹנִים, khareyonim), while the marginal reading (Qere) has "discharge" (דִּבְיוֹנִים, divyonim). Based on evidence from Akkadian, M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 79) suggest that "dove's dung" was a popular name for the inedible husks of seeds.

13 tn Heb "five, silver." The unit of measurement is omitted.

14 tn Heb "From where can I help you, from the threshing floor or the winepress?" The rhetorical question expresses the king's frustration. He has no grain or wine to give to the masses.

15 tn Heb "the people saw, and look, [there was] sackcloth against his skin underneath."

16 tn Heb "So may God do to me, and so may he add."

23 tn Heb "Do you see that this son of an assassin has sent to remove my head?"

24 tn Heb "Is not the sound of his master's footsteps behind him?"

25 tn The Hebrew text also has "look" here.

26 tn Heb "came down to him."

27 tn Heb "Look, this is a disaster from the LORD."

28 sn A seah was a dry measure equivalent to about 11 quarts (11 liters).

29 tn Heb "the officer on whose hand the king leans."

30 tn Heb "man of God."

31 tn Heb "the LORD was making holes in the sky, could this thing be?" Opening holes in the sky would allow the waters stored up there to pour to the earth and assure a good crop. But, the officer argues, even if this were to happen, it would take a long time to grow and harvest the crop.

32 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn Heb "you will not eat from there."

34 sn See the note at 2 Kgs 5:1.

35 tn Heb "until we die."

36 tn Heb "If we say, 'We will enter the city,' the famine is in the city and we will die there."

So come on, let's defect[1] to the Syrian camp! If they spare us,[2] we'll live; if they kill us – well, we were going to die anyway."[3] 7:5 So they started toward[4] the Syrian camp at dusk. When they reached the edge of the Syrian camp, there was no one there. 7:6 The LORD had caused the Syrian camp to hear the sound of chariots and horses and a large army. Then they said to one another, "Look, the king of Israel has paid the kings of the Hittites and Egypt to attack us!" 7:7 So they got up and fled at dusk, leaving behind their tents, horses, and donkeys. They left the camp as it was and ran for their lives. 7:8 When the men with a skin disease reached the edge of the camp, they entered a tent and had a meal.[5] They also took some silver, gold, and clothes and went and hid it all.[6] Then they went back and entered another tent. They looted it[7] and went and hid what they had taken. 7:9 Then they said to one another, "It's not right what we're doing! This is a day to celebrate, but we haven't told anyone.[8] If we wait until dawn,[9] we'll be punished.[10] So come on, let's go and inform the royal palace." 7:10 So they went and called out to the gatekeepers[11] of the city. They told them, "We entered the Syrian camp and there was no one there. We didn't even hear a man's voice.[12] But the horses and donkeys are still tied up, and the tents remain up."[13] 7:11 The gatekeepers relayed the news to the royal palace.[14]

7:12 The king got up in the night and said to his advisers,[15] "I will tell you what the Syrians have done to us. They know we are starving, so they left the camp and hid in the field, thinking, 'When they come out of the city, we will capture them alive and enter the city.'" 7:13 One of his advisers replied, "Pick some men and have them take five of the horses that are left in the city. (Even if they are killed, their fate will be no different than that of all the Israelite people – we're all going to die!)[16] Let's send them out so we can know for sure what's going on."[17] 7:14 So they picked two horsemen and the king sent them out to track the Syrian army.[18] He ordered them, "Go and find out what's going on."[19] 7:15 So they tracked them[20] as far as the Jordan. The road was filled with clothes and equipment that the Syrians had discarded in their haste.[21] The scouts[22] went back and told the king. 7:16 Then the people went out and looted the Syrian camp. A seah[23] of finely milled flour sold for a shekel, and two seahs of barley for a shekel, just as the LORD had said they would.[24]

7:17 Now the king had placed the officer who was his right-hand man[25] at the city gate. When the people rushed out, they trampled him to death in the gate.[26] This fulfilled the prophet's word which he had spoken when the king tried to arrest him.[27] 7:18 The prophet told the king, "Two seahs of barley will sell for a shekel, and a seah of finely milled flour for a shekel; this will happen about this time tomorrow in the gate of Samaria." 7:19 But the officer replied to the prophet, "Look, even if the LORD made it rain by opening holes in the sky, could this happen so soon?"[28] Elisha[29] said, "Look, you will see it happen with your own eyes, but you will not eat any of the food!"[30] 7:20 This is exactly what happened to him. The people trampled him to death in the city gate.

Elisha Again Helps the Shunammite Woman

[9] tn Heb "the light of the morning."

[10] tn Heb "punishment will find us."

[11] tn The MT has a singular form ("gatekeeper"), but the context suggests a plural. The pronoun that follows ("them") is plural and a plural noun appears in v. 11. The Syriac Peshitta and the Targum have the plural here.

[12] tn Heb "and, look, there was no man or voice of a man there."

[13] tn Heb "but the horses are tied up and the donkeys are tied up and the tents are as they were."

[14] tn Heb "and the gatekeepers called out and they told [it] to the house of the king."

[15] tn Heb "servants" (also in v. 13).

[16] tn Heb "Let them take five of the remaining horses that remain in it. Look, they are like all the people of Israel that remain in it. Look, they are like all the people of Israel that have come to an end." The MT is dittographic here; the words "that remain in it. Look they are like all the people of Israel" have been accidentally repeated. The original text read, "Let them take five of the remaining horses that remain in it. Look, they are like all the people of Israel that have come to an end."

[17] tn Heb "and let us send so we might see."

[18] tn Heb "and the king sent [them] after the Syrian camp."

[19] tn Heb "Go and see."

[29] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

while,[1] for the LORD has decreed that a famine will overtake the land for seven years." 8:2 So the woman did as the prophet said.[2] She and her family went and lived in the land of the Philistines for seven years. 8:3 After seven years the woman returned from the land of the Philistines and went to ask the king to give her back her house and field.[3] 8:4 Now the king was talking to Gehazi, the prophet's[4] servant, and said, "Tell me all the great things which Elisha has done." 8:5 While Gehazi[5] was telling the king how Elisha[6] had brought the dead back to life, the woman whose son he had brought back to life came to ask the king for her house and field.[7] Gehazi said, "My master, O king, this is the very woman and this is her son whom Elisha brought back to life!" 8:6 The king asked the woman about it, and she gave him the details.[8] The king assigned a eunuch to take care of her request and ordered him,[9] "Give her back everything she owns, as well as the amount of crops her field produced from the day she left the land until now."

Elisha Meets with Hazael

8:7 Elisha traveled to Damascus while King Ben Hadad of Syria was sick. The king[10] was told, "The prophet[11] has come here." 8:8 So the king told Hazael, "Take a gift[12] and go visit the prophet. Request from him an oracle from the LORD. Ask him,[13] 'Will I recover from this sickness?'" 8:9 So Hazael went to visit Elisha.[14] He took along a gift,[15] as well as[16] forty camel loads of all the fine things of Damascus. When he arrived, he stood before him and said, "Your son,[17] King Ben Hadad of Syria, has sent me to you with this question,[18] 'Will I recover from this sickness?'" 8:10 Elisha said to him, "Go and tell him, 'You will surely recover,'[19] but the LORD has revealed to me that he will surely die." 8:11 Elisha[20] just stared at him until Hazael became uncomfortable.[21] Then the prophet started crying. 8:12 Hazael asked, "Why are you crying, my master?" He replied, "Because I know the trouble you will cause the Israelites. You will set fire to their fortresses, kill their young men with the sword, smash their children to bits, and rip open their pregnant women." 8:13 Hazael said, "How could your servant, who is as insignificant as a dog, accomplish this great military victory?"[22] Elisha answered, "The LORD has revealed to me that you will be the king of Syria."[23] 8:14 He left Elisha and went to his master. Ben Hadad[24] asked him, "What did Elisha tell you?" Hazael[25] replied, "He told me you would surely recover." 8:15 The next day Hazael[26] took a piece of cloth, dipped it in water, and spread it over Ben Hadad's[27] face until he died. Then Hazael replaced him as king.

[1] tn Heb "Get up and go, you and your house, and live temporarily where you can live temporarily."

[2] tn Heb "and the woman got up and did according to the word of the man of God."

[7] tn Heb "and look, the woman whose son he had brought back to life was crying out to the king for her house and her field."

sn The legal background of the situation is uncertain. For a discussion of possibilities, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 87-88.

[8] tn Heb "and the king asked the woman and she told him."

[9] tn Heb "and he assigned to her an official, saying."

[10] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[11] tn Heb "man of God" (also a second time in this verse and in v. 11).

[12] tn The Hebrew text also has "in your hand."

[13] tn Heb "Inquire of the LORD through him, saying."

[14] tn Heb "him"; the referent (Elisha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn The Hebrew text also has "in his hand."

[16] tn Heb "and." It is possible that the conjunction is here explanatory, equivalent to English "that is." In this case the forty camel loads constitute the "gift" and one should translate, "He took along a gift, consisting of forty camel loads of all the fine things of Damascus."

[17] sn The words "your son" emphasize the king's respect for the prophet.

[18] tn Heb "saying."

[19] tc The consonantal text (Kethib) reads, "Go, say, 'Surely you will not (לֹא, lo') recover" In this case the vav beginning the next clause should be translated, "for, because." The marginal reading (Qere) has, "Go, say to him (לוֹ, lo), 'You will surely recover." In this case the vav (ו) beginning the next clause should be translated, "although, but." The Qere has the support of some medieval Hebrew MSS and the ancient versions, and is consistent with v. 14, where Hazael tells the king, "You will surely recover." It is possible that a scribe has changed לוֹ, "to him," to לֹא, "not," because he felt that Elisha would not lie to the king. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 90. Another possibility is that a scribe has decided to harmonize Elisha's message with Hazael's words in v. 14. But it is possible that Hazael, once he found out he would become the next king, decided to lie to the king to facilitate his assassination plot by making the king feel secure.

[21] tn Heb "and he made his face stand [i.e., be motionless] and set [his face?] until embarrassment."

[22] tn Heb "Indeed, what is your servant, a dog, that he could do this great thing?" With his reference to a dog, Hazael is not denying that he is a "dog" and protesting that he would never commit such a dastardly "dog-like" deed. Rather, as Elisha's response indicates, Hazael is suggesting that he, like a dog, is too insignificant to ever be in a position to lead such conquests.

[23] tn Heb "The LORD has shown me you [as] king over Syria."

[24] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Ben Hadad) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[25] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Hazael) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[27] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Ben Hadad) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

Jehoram's Reign over Judah

8:16 In the fifth year of the reign of Israel's King Joram, son of Ahab, Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram became king over Judah.[1] 8:17 He was thirty-two years old when he became king and he reigned for eight years in Jerusalem.[2] 8:18 He followed in the footsteps of the kings of Israel, just as Ahab's dynasty had done, for he married Ahab's daughter.[3] He did evil in the sight of[4] the LORD. 8:19 But the LORD was unwilling to destroy Judah. He preserved Judah for the sake of[5] his servant David to whom he had promised a perpetual dynasty.[6]

8:20 During his reign Edom freed themselves from Judah's control and set up their own king.[7] 8:21 Joram[8] crossed over to Zair with all his chariots. The Edomites, who had surrounded him, attacked at night and defeated him and his chariot officers.[9] The Israelite army retreated to their homeland.[10] 8:22 So Edom has remained free from Judah's control to this very day.[11] At that same time Libnah also rebelled.

8:23 The rest of the events of Joram's reign, including a record of his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[12] 8:24 Joram passed away[13] and was buried with his ancestors in the City of David. His son Ahaziah replaced him as king.

Ahaziah Takes the Throne of Judah

8:25 In the twelfth year of the reign of Israel's King Joram, son of Ahab, Jehoram's son Ahaziah became king over Judah. 8:26 Ahaziah was twenty-two years old when he became king and he reigned for one year in Jerusalem.[14] His mother was Athaliah, the granddaughter[15] of King Omri of Israel. 8:27 He followed in the footsteps of Ahab's dynasty and did evil in the sight of[16] the LORD, like Ahab's dynasty, for he was related to Ahab's family.[17]

8:28 He joined Ahab's son Joram in a battle against King Hazael of Syria at Ramoth Gilead in which the Syrians defeated Joram. 8:29 King Joram returned to Jezreel to recover from the wounds he received from the Syrians[18] in Ramah when he fought against King Hazael of Syria. King Ahaziah son of Jehoram of Judah went down to visit[19] Joram son of Ahab in Jezreel, for he was ill.

Jehu Becomes King

9:1 Now Elisha the prophet summoned a member of the prophetic guild[20] and told him, "Tuck your robes into your belt, take this container[21] of olive oil in your hand, and go to Ramoth Gilead. 9:2 When you arrive there, look for Jehu son of Jehoshaphat son of Nimshi and take him aside into an inner room.[22] 9:3 Take the container of olive oil, pour it over his head, and say, 'This is what the LORD says, "I have designated[23] you as king over Israel."' Then open the door and run away quickly!"[24]

1 tc The Hebrew text reads, "and in the fifth year of Joram son of Ahab king of Israel, and [or, 'while'?] Jehoshaphat [was?] king of Judah, Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah became king." The first reference to "Jehoshaphat king of Judah" is probably due to a scribe accidentally copying the phrase from the later in the verse. If the Hebrew text is retained, the verse probably refers to the beginning of a coregency between Jehoshaphat and Jehoram.

3 tn Heb "he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, just as the house of Ahab did, for the daughter of Ahab was his wife."

4 tn Heb "in the eyes of."

5 tn The Hebrew has only one sentence, "and the LORD was unwilling to destroy Judah for the sake of." The translation divides it for the sake of clarity.

6 tn Heb "just as he had promised to give him and his sons a lamp all the days." The metaphorical "lamp" symbolizes the Davidic dynasty; this is reflected in the translation.

7 tn Heb "in his days Edom rebelled from under the hand of Judah and enthroned a king over them."

8 sn Joram is a short form of the name Jehoram.

9 tn Heb "and he arose at night and defeated Edom, who had surrounded him, and the chariot officers." The Hebrew text as it stands gives the impression that Joram was surrounded and launched a victorious night counterattack. It would then be quite natural to understand the last statement in the verse to refer to an Edomite retreat. Yet v. 22 goes on to state that the Edomite revolt was successful. Therefore, if the MT is retained, it may be better to understand the final statement in v. 21 as a reference to an Israelite retreat (made in spite of the success described in the preceding sentence). The translation above assumes an emendation of the Hebrew text. Adding a third masculine singular pronominal suffix to the accusative sign before Edom (reading אֹתוֹ ['eto], "him," instead of just אֵת ['et]) and taking Edom as the subject of verbs allows one to translate the verse in a way that is more consistent with the context, which depicts an Israelite defeat, not victory. There is, however, no evidence for this emendation.

10 tn Heb "and the people fled to their tents."

11 tn Heb "and Edom rebelled from under the hand of Judah until this day."

12 tn Heb "As for the rest of the acts of Joram and all which he did, are they not written on the scroll of the events of the days of the kings of Judah?"

13 tn Heb "lay down with his fathers."

9:4 So the young prophet[1] went to Ramoth Gilead. 9:5 When he arrived, the officers of the army were sitting there.[2] So he said, "I have a message for you, O officer."[3] Jehu asked, "For which one of us?"[4] He replied, "For you, O officer." 9:6 So Jehu[5] got up and went inside. Then the prophet[6] poured the olive oil on his head and said to him, "This is what the LORD God of Israel says, 'I have designated you as king over the LORD's people Israel. 9:7 You will destroy the family of your master Ahab.[7] I will get revenge against Jezebel for the shed blood of my servants the prophets and for the shed blood of all the LORD's servants.[8] 9:8 Ahab's entire family will die. I[9] will cut off every last male belonging to Ahab in Israel, including even the weak and incapacitated.[10] 9:9 I will make Ahab's dynasty[11] like those of Jeroboam son of Nebat and Baasha son of Ahijah. 9:10 Dogs will devour Jezebel on the plot of ground in Jezreel; she will not be buried.'"[12] Then he opened the door and ran away.

9:11 When Jehu rejoined[13] his master's servants, they[14] asked him, "Is everything all right?[15] Why did this madman visit you?" He replied, "Ah, it's not important. You know what kind of man he is and the kinds of things he says."[16] 9:12 But they said, "You're lying! Tell us what he said." So he told them what he had said. He also related how he had said,[17] "'This is what the LORD says, 'I have designated you as king over Israel.'" 9:13 Each of them quickly took off his cloak and they spread them out at Jehu's[18] feet on the steps.[19] The trumpet was blown[20] and they shouted, "Jehu is[21] king!" 9:14 Then Jehu son of Jehoshaphat son of Nimshi conspired against Joram.

Jehu the Assassin

Now Joram had been in Ramoth Gilead with the whole Israelite army,[22] guarding against an invasion by King Hazael of Syria. 9:15 But King Joram had returned to Jezreel to recover from the wounds he received from the Syrians[23] when he fought against King Hazael of Syria.[24] Jehu told his supporters,[25] "If you really want me to be king,[26] then don't let anyone escape from the city to go and warn Jezreel." 9:16 Jehu drove his chariot[27] to Jezreel, for Joram was recuperating[28] there. (Now King Ahaziah of Judah had come down to visit[29] Joram.)

9:17 Now the watchman was standing on the tower in Jezreel and saw Jehu's troops approaching.[30] He said, "I see troops!"[31] Jehoram ordered,[32] "Send a rider out to meet them and have him ask, 'Is everything all right?'"[33] 9:18 So the horseman[34] went to meet him and said, "This is

[1] tc Heb "the young man, the young man, the prophet." The MT is probably dittographic, the phrase "the young man" being accidentally repeated. The phrases "the young man" and "the prophet" are appositional, with the latter qualifying more specifically the former.

[2] tn Heb "and he arrived and look, the officers of the army were sitting."

[3] tn Heb "[there is] a word for me to you, O officer."

[4] tn Heb "To whom from all of us?"

[5] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehu) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the prophet) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Heb "strike down the house of Ahab your master."

[8] tn Heb "I will avenge the shed blood of my servants the prophets and the shed blood of all the servants of the LORD from the hand of Jezebel."

[9] tc The LXX has the second person, "you."

[10] tn Heb "and I will cut off from Ahab those who urinate against a wall, [including both those who are] restrained and let free [or, 'abandoned'] in Israel." On the phrase וְעָצוּר וְעָזוּב (v'atsur v'azur, translated here "weak and incapacitated") see the note at 1 Kgs 14:10.

[11] tn Heb "house."

[12] sn Note how the young prophet greatly expands the message Elisha had given to him. In addition to lengthening the introductory formula (by adding "the God of Israel") and the official declaration that accompanies the act of anointing (by adding "the LORD's people"), he goes on to tell how Jehu will become king (by a revolt against Ahab's dynasty), makes it clear that Jehu will be an instrument of divine vengeance, and predicts the utter annihilation of Ahab's family and the violent death of Jezebel.

[13] tn Heb "went out to."

[14] tc The MT has the singular, "he said," but many witnesses correctly read the plural.

[15] tn Heb "Is there peace?"

[16] tn Heb "He said, 'You, you know the man and his thoughts.'" Jehu tries to deflect their question by reminding them that the man is an eccentric individual who says strange things. His reply suggests that the man said nothing of importance. The translation seeks to bring out the tone and intent of Jehu's reply.

[17] tn Heb "So he said, 'Like this and like this he said to me, saying.'" The words "like this and like this" are probably not a direct quote of Jehu's words to his colleagues. Rather this is the narrator's way of avoiding repetition and indicating that Jehu repeated, or at least summarized, what the prophet had said to him.

[18] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Jehu) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] tn Heb "and they hurried and took, each one his garment, and they placed [them] beneath him on the bone [?] of the steps." The precise nuance of גֶּרֶם (gerem), "bone," is unclear. Some suggest the nuance "bare" here; it may be a technical architectural term in this context.

[20] tn Heb "they blew the trumpet." This has been translated as a passive to avoid the implication that the same ones who shouted had all blown trumpets.

[21] tn Or "has become."

[22] tn Heb "he and all Israel."

[23] tn Heb "which the Syrians inflicted [on] him."

[24] sn See 2 Kgs 8:28-29a.

[25] tn The words "his supporters" are added for clarification.

[26] tn Heb "If this is your desire." נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) refers here to the seat of the emotions and will. For other examples of this use of the word, see BDB 660-61 s.v.

[27] tn Heb "rode [or, 'mounted'] and went."

[28] tn Heb "lying down."

[29] tn Heb "to see."

[30] tn Heb "the quantity [of the men] of Jehu, when he approached." Elsewhere שִׁפְעָה (shif'ah), "quantity," is used of a quantity of camels (Isa 60:6) or horses (Ezek 26:10) and of an abundance of water (Job 22:11; 38:34).

[31] tn The term שִׁפְעַת (shifat) appears to be a construct form of the noun, but no genitive follows.

[32] tn Heb "said."

[33] tn Heb "Get a rider and send [him] to meet him and let him ask, 'Is there peace?'" what the king says, 'Is everything all right?'"[1] Jehu replied, "None of your business![2] Follow me." The watchman reported, "The messenger reached them, but hasn't started back." 9:19 So he sent a second horseman out to them[3] and he said, "This is what the king says, 'Is everything all right?'"[4] Jehu replied, "None of your business! Follow me." 9:20 The watchman reported, "He reached them, but hasn't started back. The one who drives the lead chariot drives like Jehu son of Nimshi;[5] he drives recklessly." 9:21 Jehoram ordered, "Hitch up my chariot."[6] When his chariot had been hitched up,[7] King Jehoram of Israel and King Ahaziah of Judah went out in their respective chariots[8] to meet Jehu. They met up with him[9] in the plot of land that had once belonged to Naboth of Jezreel.

9:22 When Jehoram saw Jehu, he asked, "Is everything all right, Jehu?" He replied, "How can everything be all right as long as your mother Jezebel promotes idolatry and pagan practices?"[10] 9:23 Jehoram turned his chariot around and took off.[11] He said to Ahaziah, "It's a trap,[12] Ahaziah!" 9:24 Jehu aimed his bow and shot an arrow right between Jehoram's shoulders.[13] The arrow went through[14] his heart and he fell to his knees in his chariot. 9:25 Jehu ordered[15] his officer Bidkar, "Pick him up and throw him into the part of the field that once belonged to Naboth of Jezreel. Remember, you and I were riding together behind his father Ahab, when the LORD pronounced this judgment on him, 9:26 '"Know for sure that I saw the shed blood of Naboth and his sons yesterday," says the LORD, "and that I will give you what you deserve right here in this plot of land,"'[16] says the LORD.' So now pick him up and throw him into this plot of land, just as the LORD said."[17]

9:27 When King Ahaziah of Judah saw what happened, he took off[18] up the road to Beth Haggan. Jehu chased him and ordered, "Shoot him too." They shot him while he was driving his chariot up the ascent of Gur near Ibleam.[19] He fled to Megiddo[20] and died there. 9:28 His servants took his body[21] back to Jerusalem[22] and buried him in his tomb with his ancestors in the City of David. 9:29 Ahaziah had become king over Judah in the eleventh year of Joram son of Ahab.

9:30 Jehu approached Jezreel. When Jezebel heard the news, she put on some eye liner,[23] fixed up her hair, and leaned out the window. 9:31 When Jehu came through the gate, she said, "Is everything all right, Zimri, murderer of his master?"[24] 9:32 He looked up at the window and said, "Who is on my side? Who?" Two or three[25] eunuchs looked down at him. 9:33 He said, "Throw her down!" So they threw her down, and when she hit the ground,[26] her blood splattered against the wall and the horses, and Jehu drove his chariot over her.[27] 9:34 He went inside and had a meal.[28] Then he said, "Dispose of this accursed woman's corpse. Bury her, for

2 tn Heb "What concerning you and concerning peace?" That is, "What concern is that to you?"

3 tn Heb "and he came to them."

4 tc The MT has simply "peace," omitting the prefixed interrogative particle. It is likely that the particle has been accidentally omitted; several ancient witnesses include it or assume its presence.

5 tn Heb "and the driving is like the driving of Jehu son of Nimshi."

6 tn The words "my chariot" are added for clarification.

7 tn Heb "and he hitched up his chariot."

8 tn Heb "each in his chariot and they went out."

9 tn Heb "they found him."

10 tn Heb "How [can there be] peace as long as the adulterous acts of Jezebel your mother and her many acts of sorcery [continue]?" In this instance "adulterous acts" is employed metaphorically for idolatry. As elsewhere in the OT, worshiping other gods is viewed as spiritual adultery and unfaithfulness to the one true God. The phrase "many acts of sorcery" could be taken literally, for Jezebel undoubtedly utilized pagan divination practices, but the phrase may be metaphorical, pointing to her devotion to pagan customs in general.

11 tn Heb "and Jehoram turned his hands and fled." The phrase "turned his hands" refers to how he would have pulled on the reins in order to make his horses turn around.

12 tn Heb "Deceit, Ahaziah."

13 tn Heb "and Jehu filled his hand with the bow and he struck Jehoram between his shoulders."

14 tn Heb "went out from."

15 tn Heb "said to."

16 tn Heb "and I will repay you in this plot of land."

17 tn Heb "according to the word of the LORD."

18 tn Heb "and Ahaziah king of Judah saw and fled."

19 tn After Jehu's order ("kill him too"), the MT has simply, "to the chariot in the ascent of Gur which is near Ibleam." The main verb in the clause, "they shot him" (וַיַּכֻּהוּ, vayyikhhu), has been accidentally omitted by virtual haplography/homoioteleuton. Note that the immediately preceding form הַכֻּהוּ (hakkuhu), "shoot him," ends with the same suffix.

23 tn Heb "she fixed her eyes with antimony." Antimony (פּוּךְ, pukh) was used as a cosmetic. The narrator portrays her as a prostitute (see Jer 4:30), a role she has played in the spiritual realm (see the note at v. 22).

24 sn Jezebel associates Jehu with another assassin, Zimri, who approximately 44 years before had murdered King Elah, only to meet a violent death just a few days later (1 Kgs 16:9-20). On the surface Jezebel's actions seem contradictory. On the one hand, she beautifies herself as if to seduce Jehu, but on the other hand, she insults and indirectly threatens him with this comparison to Zimri. Upon further reflection, however, her actions reveal a clear underlying motive. She wants to retain her power, not to mention her life. By beautifying herself, she appeals to Jehu's sexual impulses; by threatening him, she reminds him that he is in the same precarious position as Zimri. But, if he makes Jezebel his queen, he can consolidate his power. In other words through her actions and words Jezebel is saying to Jehu, "You desire me, don't you? And you need me!"

25 tn Heb "two, three." The narrator may be intentionally vague or uncertain here, or the two numbers may represent alternate traditions.

26 tn The words "when she hit the ground" are added for stylistic reasons.

28 tn Heb "and he went and ate and drank."

He warned,[3] 'In the plot of land at Jezreel, dogs will devour Jezebel's flesh. 9:37 Jezebel's corpse will be like manure on the surface of the ground in the plot of land at Jezreel. People will not be able to even recognize her.'"[4]

Jehu Wipes Out Ahab's Family

10:1 Ahab had seventy sons living in Samaria.[5] So Jehu wrote letters and sent them to Samaria to the leading officials of Jezreel and to the guardians of Ahab's dynasty. This is what the letters said,[6] 10:2 "You have with you the sons of your master, chariots and horses, a fortified city, and weapons. So when this letter arrives,[7] 10:3 pick the best and most capable[8] of your master's sons, place him on his father's throne, and defend[9] your master's dynasty."

10:4 They were absolutely terrified[10] and said, "Look, two kings could not stop him![11] How can we?"[12] 10:5 So the palace supervisor,[13] the city commissioner,[14] the leaders,[15] and the guardians sent this message to Jehu, "We are your subjects![16] Whatever you say, we will do. We will not make anyone king. Do what you consider proper."[17]

10:6 He wrote them a second letter, saying, "If you are really on my side and are willing to obey me,[18] then take the heads of your master's sons and come to me in Jezreel at this time tomorrow."[19] Now the king had seventy sons, and the prominent[20] men of the city were raising them. 10:7 When they received the letter, they seized the king's sons and executed all seventy of them.[21] They put their heads in baskets and sent them to him in Jezreel. 10:8 The messenger came and told Jehu,[22] "They have brought the heads of the king's sons." Jehu[23] said, "Stack them in two piles at the entrance of the city gate until morning." 10:9 In the morning he went out and stood there. Then he said to all the people, "You are innocent. I conspired against my master and killed him. But who struck down all of these men? 10:10 Therefore take note that not one of the judgments the LORD announced against Ahab's dynasty has failed to materialize. The LORD had done what he announced through his servant Elijah."[24] 10:11 Then Jehu killed all who were left of Ahab's family in Jezreel, and all his nobles, close friends, and priests. He left no survivors.

10:12 Jehu then left there and set out for Samaria.[25] While he was traveling through Beth Eked of the Shepherds, 10:13 Jehu encountered[26] the relatives[27] of King Ahaziah of Judah. He asked, "Who are you?" They replied, "We are Ahaziah's relatives. We have come down to see how[28] the king's sons and the queen mother's sons are doing." 10:14 He said, "Capture them alive!" So they captured them alive and then executed all forty-two of them in the cistern at Beth Eked. He left no survivors.

10:15 When he left there, he met[29] Jehonadab, son of Rekab, who had been looking for him.[30] Jehu greeted him and asked,[31] "Are you as committed to me as I am to you?"[32] Jeho-

[6] tn Heb "to the officers of Jezreel, the elders, and to the guardians of Ahab, saying." It is not certain why the officials of Jezreel would be in Samaria. They may have fled there after they heard what happened to Joram and before Jehu entered the city. They would have had time to flee while Jehu was pursuing Ahaziah.

[7] tn Heb "And now when this letter comes to you – with you are the sons of your master and with you are chariots and horses and a fortified city and weapons."

[8] tn Hebrew יָשָׁר (yashar) does not have its normal moral/ethical nuance here ("upright"), but a more neutral sense of "proper, right, suitable." For the gloss "capable," see HALOT 450 s.v. יָשָׁר.

Does he mean that they should bring the guardians (those who are "heads" over Ahab's sons) for a meeting, or does he mean that they should bring the literal heads of Ahab's sons with them? (So LXX, Syriac Peshitta, and some MSS of the Targum) The city leaders interpret his words in the literal sense, but Jehu's command is so ambiguous he is able to deny complicity in the executions (see v. 9).

Jehu Executes the Prophets and Priests of Baal

10:18 Jehu assembled all the people and said to them, "Ahab worshiped[8] Baal a little; Jehu will worship[9] him with great devotion.[10] 10:19 So now, bring to me all the prophets of Baal, as well as all his servants and priests.[11] None of them must be absent, for I am offering a great sacrifice to Baal. Any of them who fail to appear will lose their lives." But Jehu was tricking them[12] so he could destroy the servants of Baal. 10:20 Then Jehu ordered, "Make arrangements for[13] a celebration for Baal." So they announced it. 10:21 Jehu sent invitations throughout Israel, and all the servants of Baal came; not one was absent. They arrived at the temple of Baal and filled it up from end to end.[14] 10:22 Jehu ordered the one who was in charge of the wardrobe,[15] "Bring out robes for all the servants of Baal." So he brought out robes for them. 10:23 Then Jehu and Jehonadab son of Rekab went to the temple of Baal. Jehu[16] said to the servants of Baal, "Make sure there are no servants of the LORD here with you; there must be only servants of Baal."[17] 10:24 They went inside to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings. Now Jehu had stationed eighty men outside. He had told them, "If any of the men inside get away, you will pay with your lives!"[18]

10:25 When he finished offering the burnt sacrifice, Jehu ordered the royal guard[19] and officers, "Come in and strike them down! Don't let any escape!" So the royal guard and officers struck them down with the sword and left their bodies lying there.[20] Then they entered the inner sanctuary of the temple of Baal.[21] 10:26 They hauled out the sacred pillar of the temple of Baal and burned it. 10:27 They demolished[22] the sacred pillar of Baal and[23] the temple of Baal; it is used as[24] a latrine[25] to this very day. 10:28 So Jehu eradicated Baal worship[26] from Israel.

A Summary of Jehu's Reign

10:29 However, Jehu did not repudiate the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had encouraged Israel to commit; the golden calves remained in Bethel[27] and Dan.[28] 10:30 The LORD said to Jehu, "You have done well. You have accomplished my will and carried out my wishes with regard to Ahab's dynasty. Therefore four generations of your descendants will rule over

[1] tc Heb "Jehonadab said, 'There is and there is. Give your hand.'" If the text is allowed to stand, there are two possible ways to understand the syntax of וְיֵשׁ (vayesh), "and there is": (1) The repetition of יֵשׁ (yesh, "there is and there is") could be taken as emphatic, "indeed I am." In this case, the entire statement could be taken as Jehonadab's words or one could understand the words "give your hand" as Jehu's. In the latter case the change in speakers is unmarked. (2) וְיֵשׁ begins Jehu's response and has a conditional force, "if you are." In this case, the transition in speakers is unmarked. However, it is possible that וַיֹּאמֶר (vayyo'mer), "and he said," or וַיֹּאמֶר יֵהוּא (vayyo'mer yehu), "and Jehu said," originally appeared between יֵשׁ and וְיֵשׁ and has accidentally dropped from the text by homoioarcton (note that both the proposed וַיֹּאמֶר and וְיֵשׁ begin with vav, ו). The present translation assumes such a textual reconstruction; it is supported by the LXX, Syriac Peshitta, and Vulgate.

[2] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehu) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehu) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Heb "and see my zeal for the LORD."

[5] tc The MT has a plural form, but this is most likely an error. The LXX, Syriac Peshitta, and Vulgate all have the singular.

[6] tn Heb "and he struck down all the remaining ones to Ahab in Samaria until he destroyed him."

[7] tn Heb "according to the word of the LORD which he spoke to Elijah."

[8] tn Or "served."

[9] tn Or "serve."

[10] tn Heb "much" or "greatly."

[11] tn Heb "and now, all the prophets of Baal, all his servants and all his priests summon to me."

[12] tn Heb "acted with deception [or, 'trickery']."

[13] tn Heb "set apart"; or "observe as holy."

[14] tn Heb "and the house of Baal was filled mouth to mouth."

[15] tn Heb "and he said to the one who was over the wardrobe."

[16] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehu) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] tn Heb "Search carefully and observe so that there are not here with you any servants of the LORD, only the servants of Baal."

[18] tn Heb "The man who escapes from the men whom I am bringing into your hands, [it will be] his life in place of his life."

[19] tn Heb "runners."

[20] tn Heb "and they threw." No object appears. According to M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 116), this is an idiom for leaving a corpse unburied.

[21] tn Heb "and they came to the city of the house of Baal." It seems unlikely that a literal city is meant. Some emend עִיר ('ir), "city," to דְּבִיר (dᵉvir) "holy place," or suggest that עִיר is due to dittography of the immediately preceding עַד ('ad) "to." Perhaps עִיר is here a technical term meaning "fortress" or, more likely, "inner room."

[22] tn Or "pulled down."

[23] tn The verb "they demolished" is repeated in the Hebrew text.

[24] tn Heb "and they made it into."

[25] tn The consonantal text (Kethib) has the hapax legomenon מַחֲרָאוֹת (makhara'ot), "places to defecate" or "dung houses" (note the related noun חרא (khr')/חרי (khri), "dung," HALOT 348-49 s.v. *חֲרָאִים). The marginal reading (Qere) glosses this, perhaps euphemistically, מוֹצָאוֹת (motsa'ot), "outhouses."

Israel."[1] 10:31 But Jehu did not carefully and wholeheartedly obey the law of the LORD God of Israel.[2] He did not repudiate the sins which Jeroboam had encouraged Israel to commit.[3]

10:32 In those days the LORD began to reduce the size of Israel's territory.[4] Hazael attacked their eastern border.[5] 10:33 He conquered all the land of Gilead, including the territory of Gad, Reuben, and Manasseh, extending all the way from the Aroer in the Arnon Valley through Gilead to Bashan.[6]

10:34 The rest of the events of Jehu's reign, including all his accomplishments and successes, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[7] 10:35 Jehu passed away[8] and was buried in Samaria.[9] His son Jehoahaz replaced him as king. 10:36 Jehu reigned over Israel for twenty-eight years in Samaria.

Athaliah is Eliminated

11:1 When Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she was determined to destroy the entire royal line.[10] 11:2 So Jehosheba, the daughter of King Joram and sister of Ahaziah, took Ahaziah's son Joash and sneaked[11] him away from the rest of the royal descendants who were to be executed. She hid him and his nurse in the room where the bed covers were stored.[12] So he was hidden from Athaliah and escaped execution.[13] 11:3 He hid out with his nurse in the LORD's temple[14] for six years, while Athaliah was ruling over the land.

11:4 In the seventh year Jehoiada summoned[15] the officers of the units of hundreds of the Carians[16] and the royal bodyguard.[17] He met with them[18] in the LORD's temple. He made an agreement[19] with them and made them swear an oath of allegiance in the LORD's temple. Then he showed them the king's son. 11:5 He ordered them, "This is what you must do. One third of the unit that is on duty during the Sabbath will guard the royal palace. 11:6 Another third of you will be stationed at the Foundation[20] Gate. Still another third of you will be stationed at the gate behind the royal guard.[21] You will take turns guarding the palace.[22] 11:7 The two units who are off duty on the Sabbath will guard the LORD's temple and protect the king.[23] 11:8 You must surround the king. Each of you must hold his weapon in his hand. Whoever approaches

[1] tn Heb "Because you have done well by doing what is proper in my eyes – according to all which was in my heart you have done to the house of Ahab – sons of four generations will sit for you on the throne of Israel." In the Hebrew text the Lord's statement is one long sentence (with a parenthesis). The translation above divides it into shorter sentences for stylistic reasons.

sn Jehu ruled over Israel from approximately 841-814 B.C. Four of his descendants (Jehoahaz, Jehoash, Jeroboam II, and Zechariah) ruled from approximately 814-753 B.C. The dynasty came to an end when Shallum assassinated Zechariah in 753 B.C. See 2 Kgs 15:8-12.

[2] tn Heb "But Jehu was not careful to walk in the law of the LORD God of Israel with all his heart."

[3] tn Heb "He did not turn aside from the sins of Jeroboam which he caused Israel to commit."

[4] tn Heb "began to cut off Israel."

[5] tn Heb "Hazael struck them down in all the territory of Israel, from the Jordan on the east." In the Hebrew text the phrase "from the Jordan on the east" begins v. 33.

[6] tn Heb "all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manassehites, from Aroer which is near the Arnon Valley, and Gilead, and Bashan."

[7] tn Heb "As for the rest of the events of Jehu, and all which he did and all his strength, are they not written on the scroll of the events of the days of the kings of Israel?"

[8] tn Heb "lay down with his fathers."

[9] map For location see Map2-B1; Map4-D3; Map5-E2; Map6-A4; Map7-C1.

[10] tn Heb "she arose and she destroyed all the royal offspring." The verb קוּם (qum) "arise," is here used in an auxiliary sense to indicate that she embarked on a campaign to destroy the royal offspring. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 125.

[11] tn Heb "stole."

[12] tn Heb "him and his nurse in an inner room of beds." The verb is missing in the Hebrew text. The parallel passage in 2 Chr 22:11 has "and she put" at the beginning of the clause. M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 126) regard the Chronicles passage as an editorial attempt to clarify the difficulty of the original text. They prefer to take "him and his nurse" as objects of the verb "stole" and understand "in the bedroom" as the place where the royal descendants were executed. The phrase בְּחֶדֶר הַמִּטּוֹת (bakhadar hammittot), "an inner room of beds," is sometimes understood as referring to a bedroom (HALOT 293 s.v. חֶדֶר), though some prefer to see here a "room where the covers and cloths were kept for the beds (HALOT 573 s.v. מִטָּה). In either case, it may have been a temporary hideout, for v. 3 indicates that the child hid in the temple for six years.

[13] tn Heb "and they hid him from Athaliah and he was not put to death." The subject of the plural verb ("they hid") is probably indefinite.

[14] tn Heb "and he was with her [in] the house of the LORD hiding."

[15] tn Heb "Jehoiada sent and took."

[16] sn The Carians were apparently a bodyguard, probably comprised of foreigners. See HALOT 497 s.v. כָּרִי and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 126.

[17] tn Heb "the runners."

[18] tn Heb "he brought them to himself."

[19] tn Or "covenant."

[20] tn Heb "the gate of Sur" (followed by many English versions) but no such gate is mentioned elsewhere in the OT. The parallel account in 2 Chr 23:5 has "Foundation Gate." סוּר (sur), "Sur," may be a corruption of יְסוֹד (yesod) "foundation," involving in part dalet-resh confusion.

[22] tn The meaning of מַסָּח (massakh) is not certain. The translation above, rather than understanding it as a genitive modifying "house," takes it as an adverb describing how the groups will guard the palace. See HALOT 605 s.v. מַסָּח for the proposed meaning "alternating" (i.e., "in turns").

[23] tn Verses 5b-7 read literally, "the third of you, the ones entering [on] the Sabbath and the ones guarding the guard of the house of the king, and the third in the gate of Sur, and the third in the gate behind the runners, and you will guard the guard of the house, alternating. And the two units of you, all the ones going out [on] the Sabbath, and they will guard the guard of the house of the LORD for the king." The precise meaning of this text is impossible to determine. It would appear that the Carians and royal bodyguard were divided into three units. One unit would serve during the Sabbath; the other two would be off duty on the Sabbath. Jehoiada divided the first unit into three groups and assigned them different locations. The two off duty units were assigned the task of guarding the king.

your ranks must be killed. You must accompany the king wherever he goes."[1]

11:9 The officers of the units of hundreds did just as[2] Jehoiada the priest ordered. Each of them took his men, those who were on duty during the Sabbath as well as those who were off duty on the Sabbath, and reported[3] to Jehoiada the priest. 11:10 The priest gave to the officers of the units of hundreds King David's spears and the shields that were kept in the LORD's temple. 11:11 The royal bodyguard[4] took their stations, each holding his weapon in his hand. They lined up from the south side of the temple to the north side and stood near the altar and the temple, surrounding the king.[5] 11:12 Jehoiada[6] led out the king's son and placed on him the crown and the royal insignia.[7] They proclaimed him king and poured olive oil on his head.[8] They clapped their hands and cried out, "Long live the king!"

11:13 When Athaliah heard the royal guard[9] shout, she joined the crowd[10] at the LORD's temple. 11:14 Then she saw[11] the king standing by the pillar, according to custom. The officers stood beside the king with their trumpets and all the people of the land were celebrating and blowing trumpets. Athaliah tore her clothes and screamed, "Treason, treason!"[12] 11:15 Jehoiada the priest ordered the officers of the units of hundreds, who were in charge of the army,[13] "Bring her outside the temple to the guards.[14] Put the sword to anyone who follows her." The priest gave this order because he had decided she should not be executed in the LORD's temple.[15] 11:16 They seized her and took her into the precincts of the royal palace through the horses' entrance.[16] There she was executed.

11:17 Jehoiada then drew up a covenant between the LORD and the king and people, stipulating that they should be loyal to the LORD.[17] 11:18 All the people of the land went and demolished[18] the temple of Baal. They smashed its altars and idols[19] to bits.[20] They killed Mattan the priest of Baal in front of the altar. Jehoiada the priest[21] then placed guards at the LORD's temple. 11:19 He took the officers of the units of hundreds, the Carians, the royal bodyguard, and all the people of land, and together they led the king down from the LORD's temple. They entered the royal palace through the Gate of the Royal Bodyguard,[22] and the king[23] sat down on the royal throne. 11:20 All the people of the land celebrated, for the city had rest now that they had killed Athaliah with the sword in the royal palace.

Joash's Reign over Judah

11:21 (12:1)[24] Jehoash[25] was seven years old when he began to reign. 12:1 (12:2) In Jehu's seventh year Jehoash became king; he reigned for forty years in Jerusalem.[26] His mother was Zibiah, who was from Beer Sheba. 12:2 Throughout his lifetime Jehoash did what the LORD approved,[27] just as[28] Jehoiada the priest taught him. 12:3 But the high places were not

[1] tn Heb "and be with the king in his going out and in his coming in."

[2] tn Heb "according to all that."

[3] tn Heb "came."

[4] tn Heb "the runners" (also in v. 19).

[5] tn Heb "and the runners stood, each with his weapons in his hand, from the south shoulder of the house to the north shoulder of the house, at the altar and at the house, near the king all around."

[6] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehoiada) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn The Hebrew term עֵדוּת ('edut) normally means "witness" or "testimony." Here it probably refers to some tangible symbol of kingship, perhaps a piece of jewelry such as an amulet or neck chain. See the discussion in M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 128. Some suggest that a document is in view, perhaps a copy of the royal protocol or of the stipulations of the Davidic covenant. See HALOT 790-91 s.v. עֵדוּת.

[8] tn Or "they made him king and anointed him."

[9] tc The MT reads, "and Athaliah heard the sound of the runners, the people." The term הָעָם (ha'am), "the people," is probably a scribal addition anticipating the reference to the people later in the verse and in v. 14.

[10] tn Heb "she came to the people."

[11] tn Heb "and she saw, and look."

[12] tn Or "conspiracy, conspiracy."

[13] tn The Hebrew text also has, "and said to them." This is redundant in English and has not been translated.

[14] tn Heb "ranks."

[15] tn Heb "for the priest had said, 'Let her not be put to death in the house of the LORD.'"

[16] tn Heb "and they placed hands on her, and she went the way of the entrance of the horses [into] the house of the king."

[17] tn Heb "and Jehoiada made a covenant between the LORD and [between] the king and [between] the people, to become a people for the LORD, and between the king and [between] the people." The final words of the verse ("and between the king and [between] the people") are probably accidentally repeated from earlier in the verse. They do not appear in the parallel account in 2 Chr 23:16. If retained, they probably point to an agreement governing how the king and people should relate to one another.

[18] tn Or "tore down."

[19] tn Or "images."

[20] tn The Hebrew construction translated "smashed...to bits" is emphatic. The adverbial infinitive absolute הֵיטֵב [hetev], "well") accompanying the Piel form of the verb שָׁבַר (shavar), "break," suggests thorough demolition.

[21] tn Heb "the priest." Jehoiada's name is added for clarification.

[22] tn Heb "the Gate of the Runners of the House of the King."

[23] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] sn Beginning with 11:21, the verse numbers through 12:21 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 11:21 ET = 12:1 HT, 12:1 ET = 12:2 HT, 12:2 ET = 12:3 HT, etc., through 12:21 ET = 12:22 HT. With 13:1 the verse numbers in the ET and HT are again the same.

12:4 Jehoash said to the priests, "I place at your disposal[1] all the consecrated silver that has been brought to the LORD's temple, including the silver collected from the census tax,[2] the silver received from those who have made vows,[3] and all the silver that people have voluntarily contributed to the LORD's temple.[4] 12:5 The priests should receive the silver they need from the treasurers and repair any damage to the temple they discover."[5]

12:6 By the twenty-third year of King Jehoash's reign the priests had still not repaired the damage to the temple. 12:7 So King Jehoash summoned Jehoiada the priest along with the other priests, and said to them, "Why have you not repaired the damage to the temple? Now, take no more silver from your treasurers unless you intend to use it to repair the damage."[6] 12:8 The priests agreed[7] not to collect silver from the people and relieved themselves of personal responsibility for the temple repairs.[8]

12:9 Jehoiada the priest took a chest and drilled a hole in its lid. He placed it on the right side of the altar near the entrance of[9] the LORD's temple. The priests who guarded the entrance would put into it all the silver brought to the LORD's temple. 12:10 When they saw the chest was full of silver, the royal secretary[10] and the high priest counted the silver that had been brought to the LORD's temple and bagged it up.[11]

12:11 They would then hand over[12] the silver that had been weighed to the construction foremen[13] assigned to the LORD's temple. They hired carpenters and builders to work on the LORD's temple, 12:12 as well as masons and stonecutters. They bought wood and chiseled stone to repair the damage to the LORD's temple and also paid for all the other expenses.[14] 12:13 The silver brought to the LORD's temple was not used for silver bowls, trimming shears, basins, trumpets, or any kind of gold or silver implements. 12:14 It was handed over[15] to the foremen who used it to repair the LORD's temple. 12:15 They did not audit the treasurers who disbursed[16] the funds to the foremen, for they were honest.[17] 12:16 (The silver collected in conjunction with reparation offerings and sin offerings was not brought to the LORD's temple; it belonged to the priests.)

12:17 At that time King Hazael of Syria attacked[18] Gath and captured it. Hazael then decided to attack Jerusalem.[19] 12:18 King Jehoash of Judah collected all the sacred items that his ancestors Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, and Ahaziah, kings of Judah, had consecrated, as well as his own sacred items and all the gold that could be found in the treasuries of the LORD's temple and the royal palace. He sent it all[20] to King Hazael of Syria, who then withdrew[21] from Jerusalem.

12:19 The rest of the events of Joash's reign, including all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[22] 12:20 His servants conspired against him[23] and murdered Joash at Beth-Millo, on the road that goes down to Silla.[24] 12:21 His servants Jozabad son of Shimeath and Jehozabad son of Shomer murdered him.[25] He was buried[26] with his ancestors in the City of David. His son Amaziah replaced him as king.

[1] tn The words "I place at your disposal" are added in the translation for clarification.

[2] tn Heb "the silver of passing over a man." The precise meaning of the phrase is debated, but עָבַר ('avar), "pass over," probably refers here to counting, suggesting the reference is to a census conducted for taxation purposes. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 137.

[3] tn Heb "the silver of persons, his valuation." The precise meaning of the phrase is uncertain, but parallels in Lev 27 suggest that personal vows are referred to here. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 137.

[4] tn Heb "all the silver which goes up on the heart of a man to bring to the house of the LORD."

[5] tn Heb "Let the priests take for themselves, each from his treasurer, and let them repair the damage of the temple, with respect to all the damage that is found there." The word מַכָּר (makar), translated here "treasurer," occurs only in this passage. Some suggest it means "merchant" or "benefactor." Its usage in Ugaritic texts, where it appears in a list of temple officials, suggests that it refers in this context to individuals who were in charge of disbursing temple funds.

[6] tn Heb "Now, do not take silver from your treasurers, because for the damages to the temple you must give it."

[7] tn Outside of this passage the verb אוּת ('ut) appears only in Gen 34:15-22.

[8] tn Heb "and not to repair the damages to the temple." This does not mean that the priests were no longer interested in repairing the temple. As the following context makes clear, the priests decided to hire skilled workers to repair the damage to the temple, rather than trying to make the repairs themselves.

[9] tn Heb "on the right side of the altar as a man enters."

[10] tn Heb "the king's scribe."

[11] tn Heb "went up and tied [it] and counted the silver that was found in the house of the LORD." The order of the clauses has been rearranged in the translation to make better sense in English, since it seems more logical to count the money before bagging it (cf. NIV, NCV, NRSV, NLT).

[12] tn Heb "would give."

[13] tn Heb "doers of the work."

[14] tn Heb "and for all that which was going out concerning the house for repair."

[15] tn Heb "was given."

[16] tn Heb "gave."

[17] tn Heb "and they did not conduct a reckoning of the men who gave the silver into their hand to give to the doers of the work, for in honesty they were working."

[18] tn Heb "went up and fought against."

[19] tn Heb "Hazael set his face to go up against Jerusalem."

[20] tn The object ("it all") is supplied in the translation for clarification.

[21] tn Heb "went up."

[22] tn Heb "As for the rest of the events of Joash, and all which he did, are they not written on the scroll of the events of the days of the kings of Judah?"

[23] tn Heb "rose up and conspired [with] a conspiracy."

[24] tn Heb "Beth Millo which goes down [toward] Silla."

[25] tn Heb "struck him down and he died."

[26] tn Heb "they buried him."

Jehoahaz's Reign over Israel

13:1 In the twenty-third year of the reign of Judah's King Joash son of Ahaziah, Jehu's son Jehoahaz became king over Israel. He reigned in Samaria[1] for seventeen years. 13:2 He did evil in the sight of[2] the LORD. He continued in[3] the sinful ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat who had encouraged Israel to sin; he did not repudiate those sins.[4] 13:3 The LORD was furious with[5] Israel and handed them over to[6] King Hazael of Syria and to Hazael's son Ben Hadad for many years.[7]

13:4 Jehoahaz asked for the LORD's mercy[8] and the LORD responded favorably,[9] for he saw that Israel was oppressed by the king of Syria.[10] 13:5 The LORD provided a deliverer[11] for Israel and they were freed from Syria's power.[12] The Israelites once more lived in security.[13] 13:6 But they did not repudiate[14] the sinful ways of the family[15] of Jeroboam, who encouraged Israel to sin; they continued in those sins.[16] There was even an Asherah pole[17] standing in Samaria. 13:7 Jehoahaz had no army left[18] except for fifty horsemen, ten chariots, and 10,000 foot soldiers. The king of Syria had destroyed his troops[19] and trampled on them like dust.[20] 13:8 The rest of the events of Jehoahaz's reign, including all his accomplishments and successes, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[21] 13:9 Jehoahaz passed away[22] and was buried[23] in Samaria. His son Joash replaced him as king.

Jehoash's Reign over Israel

13:10 In the thirty-seventh year of King Joash's reign over Judah, Jehoahaz's son Jehoash became king over Israel. He reigned in Samaria[24] for sixteen years. 13:11 He did evil in the sight of[25] the LORD. Elisha Makes One Final Prophecy

13:14 Now Elisha had a terminal illness.[32] King Joash of Israel went down to visit him.[33] He wept before him and said, "My father, my father! The chariot[34] and horsemen of Israel!"[35] 13:15 Elisha told him, "Take a bow and some arrows," and he did so.[36] 13:16 Then Elisha[37] told the king of Israel, "Aim the bow."[38] He did so,[39] and Elisha placed his hands on the king's hands. 13:17 Elisha[40] said, "Open the east window," and he did so.[41] Elisha said, "Shoot!" and sn Asherah was a leading deity of the Canaanite pantheon, wife/sister of El and goddess of fertility. She was commonly worshiped at shrines in or near groves of evergreen trees, or, failing that, at places marked by wooden poles. These were to be burned or cut down (Deut 12:3; 16:21; Judg 6:25, 28, 30; 2 Kgs 18:4).

he did so.[1] Elisha[2] said, "This arrow symbolizes the victory the LORD will give you over Syria.[3] You will annihilate Syria in Aphek!"[4] 13:18 Then Elisha[5] said, "Take the arrows," and he did so.[6] He told the king of Israel, "Strike the ground!" He struck the ground three times and stopped. 13:19 The prophet[7] got angry at him and said, "If you had struck the ground five or six times, you would have annihilated Syria![8] But now, you will defeat Syria only three times."

13:20 Elisha died and was buried.[9] Moabite raiding parties invaded[10] the land at the beginning of the year.[11] 13:21 One day some men[12] were burying a man when they spotted[13] a raiding party. So they threw the dead man[14] into Elisha's tomb. When the body[15] touched Elisha's bones, the dead man[16] came to life and stood on his feet.

13:22 Now King Hazael of Syria oppressed Israel throughout Jehoahaz's reign.[17] 13:23 But the LORD had mercy on them and felt pity for them.[18] He extended his favor to them[19] because of the promise he had made[20] to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He has been unwilling to destroy them or remove them from his presence to this very day.[21] 13:24 When King Hazael of Syria died, his son Ben Hadad replaced him as king. 13:25 Jehoahaz's son Jehoash took back from[22] Ben Hadad son of Hazael the cities that he had taken from his father Jehoahaz in war. Joash defeated him three times and recovered the Israelite cities.

Amaziah's Reign over Judah

14:1 In the second year of the reign of Israel's King Joash son of Joahaz,[23] Joash's[24] son Amaziah became king over Judah. 14:2 He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for twenty-nine years in Jerusalem.[25] His mother[26] was Jehoaddan, who was from Jerusalem. 14:3 He did what the LORD approved,[27] but not like David his father. He followed the example of his father Joash.[28] 14:4 But the high places were not eliminated; the people continued to offer sacrifices and burn incense on the high places.

14:5 When he had secured control of the kingdom,[29] he executed the servants who had assassinated his father.[30] 14:6 But he did not execute the sons of the assassins. He obeyed the LORD's commandment as recorded in the law scroll of Moses,[31] "Fathers must not be put to death for what their sons do,[32] and sons must not be put to death for what their fathers do.[33] A man must be put to death only for his own sin."[34]

14:7 He defeated[35] 10,000 Edomites in the Salt Valley; he captured Sela in battle and renamed it Joktheel, a name it has retained to this very day. 14:8 Then Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoash son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel. He said, "Come, let's meet face to face."[36] 14:9 King Jehoash of Israel sent this message back to King Amaziah of Judah, "A thornbush in Lebanon sent this message to a cedar in Lebanon, 'Give your daughter to my son as a wife.' The phrase "to Judah" is probably not original; it may be a scribal addition by a Judahite scribe who was trying to link Jeroboam's conquests with the earlier achievements of David and Solomon, who ruled in Judah. The Syriac Peshitta has simply "to Israel." M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 162) offer this proposal, but acknowledge that it is Jeroboam passed away[1] and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.[2] His son Zechariah replaced him as king.

Azariah's Reign over Judah

15:1 In the twenty-seventh year of King Jeroboam's reign over Israel, Amaziah's son Azariah became king over Judah. 15:2 He was sixteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for fifty-two years in Jerusalem.[3] His mother's name was Jecholiah, who was from Jerusalem. 15:3 He did what the LORD approved, just as his father Amaziah had done.[4] 15:4 But the high places were not eliminated; the people continued to offer sacrifices and burn incense on the high places. 15:5 The LORD afflicted the king with an illness; he suffered from a skin disease[5] until the day he died. He lived in separate quarters,[6] while his son Jotham was in charge of the palace and ruled over the people of the land.

15:6 The rest of the events of Azariah's reign, including all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[7] 15:7 Azariah passed away[8] and was buried[9] with his ancestors in the City of David. His son Jotham replaced him as king.

Zechariah's Reign over Israel

15:8 In the thirty-eighth year of King Azariah's reign over Judah, Jeroboam's son Zechariah became king over Israel. He reigned in Samaria[10] for six months. 15:9 He did evil in the sight of[11] the LORD, as his ancestors had done. He did not repudiate[12] the sinful ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat who encouraged Israel to sin. 15:10 Shallum son of Jabesh conspired against him; he assassinated him in Ibleam[13] and took his place as king. 15:11 The rest of the events of Zechariah's reign are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[14] 15:12 His assassination brought to fulfillment the LORD's word to Jehu,[15] "Four generations of your descendants will rule over Israel."[16] That is exactly what happened.[17]

15:13 Shallum son of Jabesh became king in the thirty-ninth year of King Uzziah's[18] reign over Judah. He reigned for one month[19] in Samaria. 15:14 Menahem son of Gadi went up from Tirzah to[20] Samaria and attacked Shallum son of Jabesh.[21] He killed him and took his place as king. 15:15 The rest of the events of Shallum's reign, including the conspiracy he organized, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Israel.[22] 15:16 At that time Menahem came from Tirzah and attacked Tiphsah. He struck down all who lived in the city and the surrounding territory, because they would not surrender.[23] He even ripped open the pregnant women.

Menahem's Reign over Israel

[2] tn The MT has simply "with the kings of Israel," which appears to stand in apposition to the immediately preceding "with his fathers." But it is likely that the words "and he was buried in Samaria" have been accidentally omitted from the text. See 13:13 and 14:16.

However, the reading קָבַל עָם (qaval'am), "before the people," is problematic to some because קָבַל is a relatively late Aramaic term. Nevertheless, the Aramaic term qobel certainly antedates the writing of Kings. The bigger problem seems to be the unnecessary intrusion of an Aramaic word at all here. Most interpreters prefer to follow Lucian's Greek version and read "in Ibleam" (בְּיִבְלְעָם, bᵉivle'am). Cf. NAB, TEV.

However, it may be preferable to emend the text to בְּיֵ֥מָיו (bᵉyomav), "in his days," and join the phrase to what follows. The translation assumes this change.

When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 75,000 pounds of silver (cf. NCV "about seventy-four thousand pounds"); NLT "thirty-seven tons"; CEV "over thirty tons"; TEV "34,000 kilogrammes."

The usual assumption is that they were officials assassinated along with Pekahiah, or that they were two of the more prominent Gileadites involved in the revolt. For discussion see M. Cogan and H. the high places. He built the Upper Gate to the LORD's temple.

15:36 The rest of the events of Jotham's reign, including his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[1] 15:37 In those days the LORD prompted King Rezin of Syria and Pekah son of Remaliah to attack Judah.[2] 15:38 Jotham passed away[3] and was buried with his ancestors in the city of his ancestor David. His son Ahaz replaced him as king.

Ahaz's Reign over Judah

16:1 In the seventeenth year of the reign of Pekah son of Remaliah, Jotham's son Ahaz became king over Judah. 16:2 Ahaz was twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem.[4] He did not do what pleased the LORD his God, in contrast to his ancestor David.[5] 16:3 He followed in the footsteps of[6] the kings of Israel. He passed his son through the fire,[7] a horrible sin practiced by the nations[8] whom the LORD drove out from before the Israelites. 16:4 He offered sacrifices and burned incense on the high places, on the hills, and under every green tree.

16:5 At that time King Rezin of Syria and King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel attacked Jerusalem.[9] They besieged Ahaz,[10] but were unable to conquer him.[11] 16:6 (At that time King Rezin of Syria[12] recovered Elat for Syria; he drove the Judahites from there.[13] Syrians[14] arrived in Elat and live there to this very day.) 16:7 Ahaz sent messengers to King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria, saying, "I am your servant and your dependent.[15] March up and rescue me from the power[16] of the king of Syria and the king of Israel, who have attacked[17] me." 16:8 Then Ahaz took the silver and gold that were[18] in the LORD's temple and in the treasuries of the royal palace and sent it as tribute[19] to the king of Assyria. 16:9 The king of Assyria responded favorably to his request;[20] he[21] attacked Damascus and captured it. He deported the people[22] to Kir and executed Rezin.

16:10 When King Ahaz went to meet with King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria in Damascus, he saw the altar there.[23] King Ahaz sent to Uriah the priest a drawing of the altar and a blueprint for its design.[24] 16:11 Uriah the priest built an altar in conformity to the plans King Ahaz had sent from Damascus.[25] Uriah the priest finished it before King Ahaz arrived back from Damascus.[26] 16:12 When the king arrived back from Damascus and[27] saw the altar, he approached it[28] and offered a sacrifice on it.[29] 16:13 He offered his burnt sacrifice and his grain offering. He poured out his libation and sprinkled the blood from his peace offerings on the altar. 16:14 He moved the bronze altar that stood in the LORD's presence from the front of the temple (between the altar and the LORD's temple) and put it on the north side of the new[30] altar. 16:15 King Ahaz ordered Uriah the priest, "On the large altar[31] offer the morning burnt sacrifice, the evening grain offering, the royal burnt sacrifices and grain offering, the burnt sacrifice for all the people of Israel, their grain offering, and their libations. Sprinkle all the blood of the burnt sacrifice and other sacrifices on it. The bronze altar will be for my personal use."[32] 16:16 So Uriah the priest did exactly as[33] King Ahaz ordered.

See Num 22:11; 1 Sam 17:9; and the parallel passage in Isa 7:1.

[12] tc Some prefer to read "the king of Edom" and "for Edom" here. The names Syria (Heb "Aram," אֲרָם, 'aram) and Edom (אֱדֹם, 'edom) are easily confused in the Hebrew consonantal script.

16:17 King Ahaz took off the frames of the movable stands, and removed the basins from them. He took "The Sea"[1] down from the bronze bulls that supported it[2] and put it on the pavement. 16:18 He also removed the Sabbath awning[3] that had been built[4] in the temple and the king's outer entranceway, on account of the king of Assyria.[5] 16:19 The rest of the events of Ahaz's reign, including his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[6] 16:20 Ahaz passed away[7] and was buried with his ancestors in the City of David. His son Hezekiah replaced him as king.

Hoshea's Reign over Israel

17:1 In the twelfth year of King Ahaz's reign over Judah, Hoshea son of Elah became king over Israel. He reigned in Samaria[8] for nine years. 17:2 He did evil in the sight of[9] the LORD, but not to the same degree as the Israelite kings who preceded him. 17:3 King Shalmaneser of Assyria threatened[10] him; Hoshea became his subject and paid him tribute. 17:4 The king of Assyria discovered that Hoshea was planning a revolt.[11] Hoshea had sent messengers to King So[12] of Egypt and had not sent his annual tribute to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria arrested him and imprisoned him.[13] 17:5 The king of Assyria marched through[14] the whole land. He attacked Samaria and besieged it for three years. 17:6 In the ninth year of Hoshea's reign, the king of Assyria captured Samaria and deported the people of Israel[15] to Assyria. He settled them in Halah, along the Habor (the river of Gozan), and in the cities of the Medes.

A Summary of Israel's Sinful History

17:7 This happened because the Israelites sinned against the LORD their God, who brought them up from the land of Egypt and freed them from the power of[16] Pharaoh king of Egypt. They worshiped[17] other gods; 17:8 they observed the practices[18] of the nations whom the LORD had driven out from before Israel, and followed the example of the kings of Israel.[19] 17:9 The Israelites said things about the LORD their God that were not right.[20] They built high places in all their cities, from the watchtower to the fortress.[21] 17:10 They set up sacred pillars and Asherah poles on every high hill and under every green tree. 17:11 They burned incense on all the high places just like the nations whom the LORD had driven away from before them. Their evil practices made the LORD angry.[22] 17:12 They worshiped[23] the disgusting idols[24] in blatant disregard of the LORD's command.[25]

17:13 The LORD solemnly warned Israel and Judah through all his prophets and all the seers, "Turn back from your evil ways; obey my commandments and rules that are recorded in the law. I ordered your ancestors to keep this law and sent my servants the prophets to remind you of its demands."[26] 17:14 But they did not pay attention and were as stubborn as their ancestors,[27] who had not trusted the LORD their God. 17:15 They rejected his rules, the covenant he had made with their ancestors, and the laws he had commanded them to obey.[28] They paid allegiance to[29] worthless idols, and so became

Some relate it to the verbal root חָפַה (khafah), "to cover," and translate "they did it in secret" (see BDB 341 s.v. חָפָא). However, the pagan practices specified in the following sentences were hardly done in secret. Others propose a meaning "ascribe, impute," which makes good contextual sense but has little etymological support (see HALOT 339 s.v. חפא). In this case Israel claimed that the LORD authorized their pagan practices.

29 tn Heb "They went [or, 'followed'] after." This idiom probably does not mean much if translated literally. It is found most often in Deuteronomy or in literature related to the covenant. It refers in the first instance to loyalty to God and to His covenant or His commandments (1 Kgs 14:8; 2 Chr 34:31) with the metaphor of a path or way underlying it (Deut 11:28; 28:14). To "follow other gods" was to abandon this way and this loyalty (to "abandon" or "forget" God, Judg 2:12; Hos worthless to the LORD.[1] They copied the practices of the surrounding nations in blatant disregard of the LORD's command.[2] 17:16 They abandoned all the commandments of the LORD their God; they made two metal calves and an Asherah pole, bowed down to all the stars in the sky,[3] and worshiped[4] Baal. 17:17 They passed their sons and daughters through the fire,[5] and practiced divination and omen reading. They committed themselves to doing evil in the sight of the LORD and made him angry.[6] 17:18 So the LORD was furious[7] with Israel and rejected them;[8] only the tribe of Judah was left. 17:19 Judah also failed to keep the commandments of the LORD their God; they followed Israel's example.[9] 17:20 So the LORD rejected all of Israel's descendants; he humiliated[10] them and handed them over to robbers, until he had thrown them from his presence. 17:21 He tore Israel away from David's dynasty, and Jeroboam son of Nebat became their king.[11] Jeroboam drove Israel away[12] from the LORD and encouraged them to commit a serious sin.[13] 17:22 The Israelites followed in the sinful ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat and did not repudiate[14] them. 17:23 Finally[15] the LORD rejected Israel[16] just as he had warned he would do[17] through all his servants the prophets. Israel was deported from its land to Assyria and remains there to this very day.

The King of Assyria Populates Israel with Foreigners

17:24 The king of Assyria brought foreigners[18] from Babylon, Cuthah, Avva, Hamath, and Sepharvaim and settled them in the cities of Samaria[19] in place of the Israelites. They took possession of Samaria and lived in its cities. 17:25 When they first moved in,[20] they did not worship[21] the LORD. So the LORD sent lions among them and the lions were killing them. 17:26 The king of Assyria was told,[22] "The nations whom you deported and settled in the cities of Samaria do not know the requirements of the God of the land, so he has sent lions among them. They are killing the people[23] because they do not know the requirements of the God of the land." 17:27 So the king of Assyria ordered, "Take back one of the priests whom you[24] deported from there. He must settle there and teach them the requirements of the God of the land."[25] 17:28 So one of the priests whom they had deported from Samaria went back and settled in Bethel.[26] He taught them how to worship[27] the LORD.

17:29 But each of these nations made[28] its own gods and put them in the shrines on the high places that the people of Samaria[29] had made. Each nation did this in the cities where they lived. 17:30 The people from Babylon made Succoth Benoth,[30] the people from Cuth made

2:13) and to follow the customs or religious traditions of the pagan nations (2 Kgs 17:15). The classic text on "following" God or another god is 1 Kgs 18:18, 21 where Elijah taunts the people with "halting between two opinions" whether the LORD was the true God or Baal was. The idiom is often found followed by "to serve and to worship" or "they served and worshiped" such and such a god or entity (Jer 8:2; 11:10; 13:10; 16:11; 25:6; 35:15).

[1] tn Heb "they followed after the worthless thing/things and became worthless." The words "to the LORD" are not in the Hebrew text but are implicit from the context. There is an obvious wordplay on the verb "became worthless" and the noun "worthless thing", which is probably to be understood collectively and to refer to idols as it does in Jer 8:19; 10:8; 14:22; Jonah 2:8.

[2] tn Heb "and [they walked] after the nations which were around them, concerning which the LORD commanded them not to do like them."

[3] tn The phrase כָּל צְבָא הַשָּׁמַיִם (khol tsevaʾ hashamayim), traditionally translated "all the host of heaven," refers to the heavenly lights, including stars and planets. In 1 Kgs 22:19 these heavenly bodies are pictured as members of the Lord's royal court or assembly, but many other texts view them as the illegitimate objects of pagan and Israelite worship.

[22] tn Heb "and they said to the king of Assyria, saying." The plural subject of the verb is indefinite.

[23] tn Heb "Look they are killing them."

[24] tc The second plural subject may refer to the leaders of the Assyrian army. However, some prefer to read "whom I deported," changing the verb to a first person singular form with a third masculine plural pronominal suffix. This reading has some support from Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic witnesses.

[25] tc Heb "and let them go and let them live there, and let him teach them the requirements of the God of the land." The two plural verbs seem inconsistent with the preceding and following contexts, where only one priest is sent back to Samaria. The singular has the support of Greek, Syriac, and Latin witnesses.

Hezekiah Becomes King of Judah

18:1 In the third year of the reign of Israel's King Hoshea son of Elah, Ahaz's son Hezekiah became king over Judah. 18:2 He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem.[14] His mother[15] was Abi,[16] the daughter of Zechariah. 18:3 He did what the LORD approved, just as his ancestor David had done.[17] 18:4 He eliminated the high places, smashed the sacred pillars to bits, and cut down the Asherah pole.[18] He also demolished the bronze serpent that Moses had made, for up to that time[19] the Israelites had been offering incense to it; it was called Nehushtan.[20] 18:5 He trusted in the LORD God of Israel; in this regard there was none like him among the kings of Judah either before or after.[21] 18:6 He was loyal to[22] the LORD and did not abandon him.[23] He obeyed the commandments which the LORD had given to[24] Moses. 18:7 The LORD was with him; he succeeded in all his endeavors.[25] He rebelled against the king of Assyria and refused to submit to him.[26] 18:8 He defeated the Philistines as far as Gaza and its territory, from the watchtower to the city fortress.[27] agreement with them.[1] They did not pay attention to and obey all that Moses, the LORD's servant, had commanded.[2]

Sennacherib Invades Judah

18:13 In the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah's reign, King Sennacherib of Assyria marched up against all the fortified cities of Judah and captured them. 18:14 King Hezekiah of Judah sent this message to the king of Assyria, who was at Lachish, "I have violated our treaty.[3] If you leave, I will do whatever you demand."[4] So the king of Assyria demanded that King Hezekiah of Judah pay three hundred talents[5] of silver and thirty talents of gold. 18:15 Hezekiah gave him all the silver in[6] the LORD's temple and in the treasuries of the royal palace. 18:16 At that time King Hezekiah of Judah stripped the metal overlays from the doors of the LORD's temple and from the posts which he had plated[7] and gave them to the king of Assyria.

18:17 The king of Assyria sent his commanding general, the chief eunuch, and the chief adviser[8] from Lachish to King Hezekiah in Jerusalem,[9] along with a large army. They went up and arrived at Jerusalem. They went[10] and stood at the conduit of the upper pool which is located on the road to the field where they wash and dry cloth.[11] 18:18 They summoned the king, so Eliakim son of Hilkiah, the palace supervisor, accompanied by Shebna the scribe and Joah son of Asaph, the secretary, went out to meet them.

18:19 The chief adviser said to them, "Tell Hezekiah: 'This is what the great king, the king of Assyria, says: "What is your source of confidence?[12] 18:20 Your claim to have a strategy and military strength is just empty talk.[13] In whom are you trusting that you would dare to rebel against me? 18:21 Now look, you must be trusting in Egypt, that splintered reed staff. If a man leans for support on it, it punctures his hand and wounds him. That is what Pharaoh king of Egypt does to all who trust in him. 18:22 Perhaps you will tell me, 'We are trusting in the LORD our God.' But Hezekiah is the one who eliminated his high places and altars and then told the people of Judah and Jerusalem, 'You must worship at this altar in Jerusalem.' 18:23 Now make a deal[14] with my master the king of Assyria, and I will give you two thousand horses, provided you can find enough riders for them. 18:24 Certainly you will not refuse one of my master's minor officials and trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen.[15] 18:25 Furthermore it was by the command of the LORD that I marched up against this place to destroy it. The LORD told me, 'March[16] up against this land and destroy it.'"'"[17]

18:26 Eliakim son of Hilkiah, Shebna, and Joah said to the chief adviser, "Speak to your servants in Aramaic,[18] for we understand it. Don't speak with us in the Judahite dialect[19] in the hearing of the people who are on the wall." 18:27 But the chief adviser said to them, "My master did not send me to speak these words only to your master and to you.[20] His message is also for the men who sit on the wall, for they will eat their own excrement and drink their own urine along with you."[21]

18:28 The chief adviser then stood there and called out loudly in the Judahite dialect,[22] "Listen to the message of the great king, the king of Assyria. 18:29 This is what the king says: 'Don't let Hezekiah mislead you, for he is not able to

1 tn Heb "his covenant."

2 tn Heb "all that Moses, the LORD's servant, had commanded, and they did not listen and they did not act."

3 tn Or "I have done wrong."

4 tn Heb "Return from upon me; what you place upon me, I will carry."

5 tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 22,500 pounds of silver and 2,250 pounds of gold.

6 tn Heb "that was found."

7 tn Heb "At that time Hezekiah stripped the doors of the LORD's temple, and the posts which Hezekiah king of Judah had plated."

8 sn For a discussion of these titles see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 229-30.

9 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

10 tn Heb "and they went up and came."

11 tn Heb "the field of the washer."

12 tn Heb "What is this object of trust in which you are trusting?"

13 tn Heb "you say only a word of lips, counsel and might for battle." Sennacherib's message appears to be in broken Hebrew at this point. The phrase "word of lips" refers to mere or empty talk in Prov 14:23.

14 tn Heb "exchange pledges."

15 tn Heb "How can you turn back the face of an official [from among] the least of my master's servants and trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen?" In vv. 23-24 the chief adviser develops further the argument begun in v. 21. His reasoning seems to be as follows: "In your weakened condition you obviously need military strength. Agree to the king's terms and I will personally give you more horses than you are capable of outfitting. If I, a mere minor official, am capable of giving you such military might, just think what power the king has. There is no way the Egyptians can match our strength. It makes much better sense to deal with us."

16 tn Heb "Go."

17 sn In v. 25 the chief adviser develops further the argument begun in v. 22. He claims that Hezekiah has offended the Lord and that the Lord has commissioned Assyria as his instrument of discipline and judgment.

18 sn Aramaic was the diplomatic language of the empire.

19 tn Or "Hebrew."

20 tn Heb "To your master and to you did my master send me to speak these words?" The rhetorical question expects a negative answer.

21 tn Heb "[Is it] not [also] to the men...?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Yes, it is."

sn The chief adviser alludes to the horrible reality of siege warfare, when the starving people in the besieged city would resort to eating and drinking anything to stay alive.

22 tn The Hebrew text also has, "and he spoke and said."

rescue you from my hand![1] 18:30 Don't let Hezekiah talk you into trusting in the LORD when he says, "The LORD will certainly rescue us; this city will not be handed over to the king of Assyria." 18:31 Don't listen to Hezekiah!' For this is what the king of Assyria says, 'Send me a token of your submission and surrender to me.[2] Then each of you may eat from his own vine and fig tree and drink water from his own cistern, 18:32 until I come and take you to a land just like your own – a land of grain and new wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of olive trees and honey. Then you will live and not die. Don't listen to Hezekiah, for he is misleading you when he says, "The LORD will rescue us." 18:33 Have any of the gods of the nations actually rescued his land from the power of the king of Assyria?[3] 18:34 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arpad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?[4] Indeed, did any gods rescue Samaria[5] from my power?[6] 18:35 Who among all the gods of the lands has rescued their lands from my power? So how can the LORD rescue Jerusalem from my power?'"[7] 18:36 The people were silent and did not respond, for the king had ordered, "Don't respond to him."

18:37 Eliakim son of Hilkiah, the palace supervisor, accompanied by Shebna the scribe and Joah son of Asaph, the secretary, went to Hezekiah with their clothes torn[8] and reported to him what the chief adviser had said. 19:1 When King Hezekiah heard this, he tore his clothes, put on sackcloth, and went to the LORD's temple. 19:2 He sent Eliakim the palace supervisor, Shebna the scribe, and the leading priests,[9] clothed in sackcloth, with this message to the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz: 19:3 "This is what Hezekiah says:[10] 'This is a day of distress, insults,[11] and humiliation,[12] as when a baby is ready to leave the birth canal, but the mother lacks the strength to push it through.[13] 19:4 Perhaps the LORD your God will hear all these things the chief adviser has spoken on behalf of his master, the king of Assyria, who sent him to taunt the living God.[14] When the LORD your God hears, perhaps he will punish him for the things he has said.[15] So pray for this remnant that remains.'"[16]

19:5 When King Hezekiah's servants came to Isaiah, 19:6 Isaiah said to them, "Tell your master this: 'This is what the LORD says: "Don't be afraid because of the things you have heard – these insults the king of Assyria's servants have hurled against me.[17] 19:7 Look, I will take control of his mind;[18] he will receive[19] a report and return to his own land. I will cut him down[20] with a sword in his own land."'"

19:8 When the chief adviser heard the king of Assyria had departed from Lachish, he left and went to Libnah, where the king was campaigning.[21] 19:9 The king[22] heard that King Tirhakah of Ethiopia was marching out to fight him.[23] He again sent messengers to Hezekiah, ordering them: 19:10 "Tell King Hezekiah of Judah this: 'Don't let your God in whom you trust mislead you when he says, "Jerusalem will not be handed over[24] to the king of Assyria." 19:11 Certainly you have heard how the kings of Assyria have annihilated all lands.[25] Do you really think you will be rescued?[26] 19:12 Were the nations whom my ancestors destroyed – the nations of Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, and the people

[1] tc The MT has "his hand," but this is due to graphic confusion of vav (ו) and yod (י). The translation reads "my hand," along with many medieval Hebrew MSS, the LXX, Syriac Peshitta, Targum, and Vulgate.

[2] tn Heb "make with me a blessing and come out to me."

[3] tn Heb "Have the gods of the nations really rescued, each his land, from the hand of the king of Assyria?" The infinitive absolute lends emphasis to the main verb. The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Of course not!"

[4] tn The parallel passage in Isa 36:19 omits "Hena and Ivvah." The rhetorical questions in v. 34a suggest the answer, "Nowhere, they seem to have disappeared in the face of Assyria's might."

[5] map For location see Map2-B1; Map4-D3; Map5-E2; Map6-A4; Map7-C1.

[6] tn Heb "that they rescued Samaria from my hand?" But this gives the impression that the gods of Sepharvaim were responsible for protecting Samaria, which is obviously not the case. The implied subject of the plural verb "rescued" must be the generic "gods of the nations/lands" (vv. 33, 35).

[7] tn Heb "that the LORD might rescue Jerusalem from my hand?" The logic runs as follows: Since no god has ever been able to withstand the Assyrian onslaught, how can the people of Jerusalem possibly think the LORD will rescue them?

[8] sn As a sign of grief and mourning.

[9] tn Heb "elders of the priests."

[10] tn In the Hebrew text this verse begins with "they said to him."

[11] tn Or "rebuke," "correction."

[12] tn Or "contempt."

[13] tn Heb "when sons come to the cervical opening and there is no strength to give birth."

[14] tn Heb "all the words of the chief adviser whom his master, the king of Assyria, sent to taunt the living God."

[15] tn Heb "and rebuke the words which the LORD your God hears."

[16] tn Heb "and lift up a prayer on behalf of the remnant that is found."

[17] tn Heb "by which the servants of the king of Assyria have insulted me."

[18] tn Heb "I will put in him a spirit." The precise sense of רוּחַ (ruakh), "spirit," is uncertain in this context. It may refer to a spiritual being who will take control of his mind (see 1 Kgs 22:19), or it could refer to a disposition of concern and fear. In either case the LORD's sovereignty over the king is apparent.

[19] tn Heb "hear."

[20] tn Heb "cause him to fall," that is, "kill him."

[21] tn Heb "and the chief adviser returned and he found the king of Assyria fighting against Libnah, for he heard that he had departed from Lachish."

[22] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[23] tn Heb "heard concerning Tirhakah king of Cush, 'Look, he has come out to fight with you.'"

[24] tn Heb "will not be given."

[25] tn Heb "Look, you have heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all the lands, annihilating them."

[26] tn Heb "and will you be rescued?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "No, of course not!"

of Eden in Telassar – rescued by their gods?[1] 19:13 Where are the king of Hamath, the king of Arpad, and the king of Lair,[2] Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?'"

19:14 Hezekiah took the letter[3] from the messengers and read it.[4] Then Hezekiah went up to the LORD's temple and spread it out before the LORD. 19:15 Hezekiah prayed before the LORD: "LORD God of Israel, who is enthroned on the cherubs![5] You alone are God over all the kingdoms of the earth. You made the sky[6] and the earth. 19:16 Pay attention, LORD, and hear! Open your eyes, LORD, and observe! Listen to the message Sennacherib sent and how he taunts the living God![7] 19:17 It is true, LORD, that the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands. 19:18 They have burned the gods of the nations,[8] for they are not really gods, but only the product of human hands manufactured from wood and stone. That is why the Assyrians could destroy them.[9] 19:19 Now, O LORD our God, rescue us from his power, so that all the kingdoms of the earth will know that you, LORD, are the only God."

19:20 Isaiah son of Amoz sent this message to Hezekiah: "This is what the LORD God of Israel says: 'I have heard your prayer concerning King Sennacherib of Assyria.[10] 19:21 This is what the LORD says about him:[11]

"The virgin daughter Zion[12] despises you, she makes fun of you;
Daughter Jerusalem
shakes her head after you.[13] 19:22 Whom have you taunted and hurled insults at?
At whom have you shouted,[14] and looked so arrogantly?[15]
At the Holy One of Israel![16]
19:23 Through your messengers you taunted the sovereign master,[17]
'With my many chariots[18]
I climbed up the high mountains,
the slopes of Lebanon.
I cut down its tall cedars,
and its best evergreens.
I invaded its most remote regions,[19] its thickest woods.
19:24 I dug wells and drank water in foreign lands.[20]
With the soles of my feet I dried up all the rivers of Egypt.'
19:25[21] Certainly you must have heard![22]
Long ago I worked it out,
In ancient times I planned[23] it;
and now I am bringing it to pass.
The plan is this:
Fortified cities will crash into heaps of ruins.[24]
19:26 Their residents are powerless,[25] they are terrified and ashamed.
They are as short-lived as plants in the field, or green vegetation.[26]
They are as short-lived as grass on the rooftops[27]
when it is scorched by the east wind.[28]

1 tn Heb "Did the gods of the nations whom my fathers destroyed rescue them – Gozan and Haran, and Rezeph and the sons of Eden who are in Telassar?"

2 sn Lair is a city located in northeastern Babylon. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 235.

3 tc The MT has the plural, "letters," but the final mem is probably dittographic (note the initial mem on the form that immediately follows). Some Greek and Aramaic witnesses have the singular.

4 tc The MT has the plural suffix, "them," but this probably reflects a later harmonization to the preceding textual corruption (of "letter" to "letters"). The parallel passage in Isa 37:14 has the singular suffix.

5 sn This refers to the cherub images that were above the ark of the covenant.

6 tn Or "the heavens."

7 tn Heb "Hear the words of Sennacherib which he sent to taunt the living God."

8 tn Heb "and they put their gods in the fire."

9 tn Heb "so they destroyed them."

10 tn Heb "That which you prayed to me concerning Sennacherib king of Assyria I have heard." The verb "I have heard" does not appear in the parallel passage in Isa 37:21, where אֲשֶׁר ('asher) probably has a causal sense, "because."

11 tn Heb "this is the word which the LORD has spoken about him."

12 sn Zion (Jerusalem) is pictured here as a young, vulnerable daughter whose purity is being threatened by the would-be Assyrian rapist. The personification hints at the reality which the young girls of the city would face if the Assyrians conquer it.

13 sn Shaking the head was a mocking gesture of derision.

14 tn Heb "have you raised a voice."

15 tn Heb "and lifted your eyes on high?"

16 sn This divine title pictures the Lord as the sovereign king who rules over his covenant people and exercises moral authority over them.

17 tn The word is אֲדֹנָי ('adonai), "lord," but some Hebrew MSS have יְהוָה (yehvah), "LORD."

18 tc The consonantal text (Kethib) has בִּרְכָב (birekhev), but this must be dittographic (note the following רִכְבִי [rikhbi], "my chariots"). The marginal reading (Qere) ברב (berov), "with many," is supported by many Hebrew MSS and ancient versions, as well as the parallel passage in Isa 37:24.

19 tn Heb "the lodging place of its extremity."

20 tn Heb "I dug and drank foreign waters."

21 tn Having quoted the Assyrian king's arrogant words in vv. 23-24, the Lord now speaks to the king.

22 tn Heb "Have you not heard?" The rhetorical question expresses the Lord's amazement that anyone might be ignorant of what he is about to say.

23 tn Heb "formed."

24 tn Heb "and it is to cause to crash into heaps of ruins fortified cities." The subject of the third feminine singular verb תִּהִי (tehi) is the implied plan, referred to in the preceding lines with third feminine singular pronominal suffixes.

25 tn Heb "short of hand."

26 tn Heb "they are plants in the field and green vegetation." The metaphor emphasizes how short-lived these seemingly powerful cities really were. See Ps 90:5-6; Isa 40:6-8, 24.

27 tn Heb "[they are] grass on the rooftops." See the preceding note.

28 tc The Hebrew text has "scorched before the standing grain" (perhaps meaning "before it reaches maturity"), but it is preferable to emend קָמָה (qamah), "standing grain," to קָדִים (qadim), "east wind" (with the support of 1Q Isa[a] in Isa 37:27).

19:27 I know where you live, and everything you do.[1] 19:28 Because you rage against me, and the uproar you create has reached my ears;[2]
I will put my hook in your nose,[3] and my bridle between your lips, and I will lead you back the way you came."

19:29[4] This will be your confirmation that I have spoken the truth:[5] This year you will eat what grows wild,[6] and next year[7] what grows on its own from that. But in the third year you will plant seed and harvest crops; you will plant vines and consume their produce.[8] 19:30 Those who remain in Judah will take root in the ground and bear fruit.[9]

19:31 For a remnant will leave Jerusalem; survivors will come out of Mount Zion.
The intense devotion of the sovereign LORD[10] to his people[11] will accomplish this.
19:32 So this is what the LORD says about the king of Assyria:
"He will not enter this city,
nor will he shoot an arrow here.[12]
He will not attack it with his shield-carrying warriors,[13] nor will he build siege works against it.
19:33 He will go back the way he came.
He will not enter this city," says the LORD.

19:34 I will shield this city and rescue it for the sake of my reputation and because of my promise to David my servant.'"[14]

19:35 That very night the LORD's messenger went out and killed 185,000 men in the Assyrian camp. When they[15] got up early the next morning, there were all the corpses.[16] 19:36 So King Sennacherib of Assyria broke camp and went on his way. He went home and stayed in Nineveh.[17] 19:37 One day,[18] as he was worshiping in the temple of his god Nisroch,[19] his sons[20] Adrammelech and Sharezer struck him down with the sword.[21] They escaped to the land of Ararat; his son Esarhaddon replaced him as king.

Hezekiah is Healed

20:1 In those days Hezekiah was stricken with a terminal illness.[22] The prophet Isaiah son of Amoz visited him and told him, "This is what the LORD says, 'Give your household instructions, for you are about to die; you will not get well.'"[23] 20:2 He turned his face to the wall and prayed to the LORD, 20:3 "Please, LORD. Remember how I have served you[24] faithfully and with wholehearted devotion,[25] and how I have carried out your will."[26] Then Hezekiah wept bitterly.[27]

20:4 Isaiah was still in the middle courtyard when the LORD told him,[28] 20:5 "Go back and tell Hezekiah, the leader of my people: 'This is what the LORD God of your ancestor David says: "I have heard your prayer; I have seen your tears. Look, I will heal you. The day after tomorrow[29] you will go up to the LORD's temple. 20:6 I will add fifteen years to your life and rescue you and this city from the king of Assyria. I will

1 tc Heb "your going out and your coming in." The MT also has here, "and how you have raged against me." However, this line is probably dittographic (note the beginning of the next line).

2 tc Heb "and your complacency comes up into my ears." The parallelism is improved if שַׁאֲנָנֵךְ (sha'ananekh), "your complacency," is emended to שַׁאֲוֹנֵךְ (sha'avanekh), "your uproar." See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 237-38.

3 sn The word picture has a parallel in Assyrian sculpture. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 238.

4 tn At this point the word concerning the king of Assyria (vv. 21-28) ends and the Lord again directly addresses Hezekiah and the people (see v. 20).

5 tn Heb "and this is your sign." In this case the אוֹת ('ot), "sign," is a future confirmation of God's intervention designated before the actual intervention takes place. For similar "signs" see Exod 3:12 and Isa 7:14-25.

6 sn This refers to crops that grew up on their own (that is, without cultivation) from the seed planted in past years.

7 tn Heb "and in the second year."

8 tn The four plural imperatival verb forms in v. 29b are used rhetorically. The Lord commands the people to plant, harvest, etc. to emphasize the certainty of restored peace and prosperity. See IBHS 572 §34.4.c.

9 tn Heb "The remnant of the house of Judah that is left will add roots below and produce fruit above."

10 tn Traditionally "the LORD of hosts."

11 tn Heb "the zeal of the LORD." In this context the Lord's "zeal" refers to his intense devotion to and love for his people which prompts him to protect and restore them. The Qere, along with many medieval Hebrew MSS and the ancient versions, has "the zeal of the LORD of hosts" rather than "the zeal of the LORD" (Kethib). The translation follows the Qere here.

12 tn Heb "there."

13 tn Heb "[with] a shield." By metonymy the "shield" stands for the soldier who carries it.

14 tn Heb "for my sake and for the sake of David my servant."

15 tn This refers to the Israelites and/or the rest of the Assyrian army.

16 tn Heb "look, all of them were dead bodies."

17 tn Heb "and Sennacherib king of Assyria departed and went and returned and lived in Nineveh."

18 sn The assassination probably took place in 681 B.C.

19 sn No such Mesopotamian god is presently known. Perhaps the name is a corruption of Nusku.

20 tc Although "his sons" is absent in the Kethib, it is supported by the Qere, along with many medieval Hebrew MSS and the ancient versions. Cf. Isa 37:38.

21 sn Extra-biblical sources also mention the assassination of Sennacherib, though they refer to only one assassin. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 239-40.

22 tn Heb "was sick to the point of dying."

23 tn Heb "will not live."

24 tn Heb "walked before you." For a helpful discussion of the background and meaning of this Hebrew idiom, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 254.

25 tn Heb "and with a complete heart."

26 tn Heb "and that which is good in your eyes I have done."

27 tn Heb "wept with great weeping."

28 tc Heb "and Isaiah had not gone out of the middle courtyard, and the word of the LORD came to him, saying." Instead of "courtyard" (חָצֵר, khatser), the marginal reading, (Qere), the Hebrew consonantal text (Kethib) has הָעִיר (ha'ir), "the city."

29 tn Heb "on the third day."

shield this city for the sake of my reputation and because of my promise to David my servant.'"'"[1] 20:7 Isaiah ordered, "Get a fig cake." So they did as he ordered[2] and placed it on the ulcerated sore, and he recovered.[3]

20:8 Hezekiah had said to Isaiah, "What is the confirming sign that the LORD will heal me and that I will go up to the LORD's temple the day after tomorrow?" 20:9 Isaiah replied, "This is your sign from the LORD confirming that the LORD will do what he has said. Do you want the shadow to move ahead ten steps or to go back ten steps?"[4] 20:10 Hezekiah answered, "It is easy for the shadow to lengthen ten steps, but not for it[5] to go back ten steps." 20:11 Isaiah the prophet called out to the LORD, and the LORD[6] made the shadow go back ten steps on the stairs of Ahaz.[7]

Messengers from Babylon Visit Hezekiah

20:12 At that time Merodach-Baladan[8] son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a gift to Hezekiah, for he had heard that Hezekiah was ill. 20:13 Hezekiah welcomed[9] them and showed them his whole storehouse, with its silver, gold, spices, and high quality olive oil, as well as his armory and everything in his treasuries. Hezekiah showed them everything in his palace and in his whole kingdom.[10] 20:14 Isaiah the prophet visited King Hezekiah and asked him, "What did these men say? Where do they come from?" Hezekiah replied, "They come from the distant land of Babylon." 20:15 Isaiah[11] asked, "What have they seen in your palace?" Hezekiah replied, "They have seen everything in my palace. I showed them everything[12] in my treasuries." 20:16 Isaiah said to Hezekiah, "Listen to the word of the LORD, 20:17 'Look, a time is[13] coming when everything in your palace and the things your ancestors have accumulated to this day will be carried away to Babylon; nothing will be left,' says the LORD. 20:18 'Some of your very own descendants whom you father[14] will be taken away and will be made eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.'" 20:19 Hezekiah said to Isaiah, "The LORD's word which you have announced is appropriate."[15] Then he added,[16] "At least there will be peace and stability during my lifetime."[17]

20:20 The rest of the events of Hezekiah's reign and all his accomplishments, including how he built a pool and conduit to bring[18] water into the city, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[19] 20:21 Hezekiah passed away[20] and his son Manasseh replaced him as king.

Manasseh's Reign over Judah

21:1 Manasseh was twelve years old when he became king, and he reigned for fifty-five years in Jerusalem.[21] His mother[22] was Hephzibah. 21:2 He did evil in the sight of[23] the LORD and committed the same horrible sins practiced by the nations[24] whom the LORD drove out from before the Israelites. 21:3 He rebuilt the high places that his father Hezekiah had destroyed; he set up altars for Baal and made an Asherah pole just like King Ahab of Israel had done. He bowed down to all the stars in the sky[25] and worshiped[26] them. 21:4 He built altars in the LORD's temple, about which the LORD had said, "Jerusalem will be my home."[27] 21:5 In the two courtyards of the LORD's temple he built altars for all the stars in the sky. 21:6 He passed his son[28] through the fire[29] and practiced divination and omen reading. He set up a ritual pit to conjure up underworld spirits, and appointed magicians to supervise it.[1] He did a great amount of evil in the sight of the LORD, provoking him to anger.[2] 21:7 He put an idol of Asherah he had made in the temple, about which the LORD had said to David and to his son Solomon, "This temple in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, will be my permanent home.[3] 21:8 I will not make Israel again leave the land I gave to their ancestors,[4] provided that they carefully obey all I commanded them, the whole law my servant Moses ordered them to obey." 21:9 But they did not obey,[5] and Manasseh misled them so that they sinned more than the nations whom the LORD had destroyed from before the Israelites.

21:10 So the LORD announced through[6] his servants the prophets: 21:11 "King Manasseh of Judah has committed horrible sins.[7] He has sinned more than the Amorites before him and has encouraged Judah to sin by worshiping his disgusting idols.[8] 21:12 So this is what the LORD God of Israel says, 'I am about to bring disaster on Jerusalem and Judah. The news will reverberate in the ears of those who hear about it.[9] 21:13 I will destroy Jerusalem the same way I did Samaria[10] and the dynasty of Ahab.[11] I will wipe Jerusalem clean, just as one wipes a plate on both sides.[12] 21:14 I will abandon this last remaining tribe among my people[13] and hand them over to their enemies; they will be plundered and robbed by all their enemies,[14] 21:15 because they have done evil in my sight[15] and have angered me from the time their ancestors left Egypt right up to this very day!'"

21:16 Furthermore Manasseh killed so many innocent people, he stained Jerusalem with their blood from end to end,[16] in addition to encouraging Judah to sin by doing evil in the sight of the LORD.[17]

21:17 The rest of the events of Manasseh's reign and all his accomplishments, as well as the sinful acts he committed, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[18] 21:18 Manasseh passed away[19] and was buried in his palace garden, the garden of Uzzah, and his son Amon replaced him as king.

Amon's Reign over Judah

21:19 Amon was twenty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned for two years in Jerusalem.[20] His mother[21] was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz, from Jotbah. 21:20 He did evil in the sight of[22] the LORD, just like his father Manasseh had done. 21:21 He followed in the footsteps of his father[23] and worshiped and bowed down to the disgusting idols[24] which his father had worshiped.[25] 21:22 He abandoned the LORD God of his ancestors and did not follow the LORD's instructions.[26] 21:23 Amon's servants conspired against him and killed the king in his palace. 21:24 The people of the land executed all those who had conspired against King Amon, and they[27] made his son Josiah king in his place.

In 1 Sam 28:7 the witch of Endor is called a בַּעֲלַת אוֹב (ba'alat 'ov), "owner of a ritual pit." See H. Hoffner, "Second millennium Antecedents to the Hebrew 'ÔB," JBL 86 (1967), 385-401.

The measuring line and plumb line are normally used in building a structure, not tearing it down. But here they are used ironically as metaphors of judgment, emphasizing that he will give careful attention to the task of judgment.

[12] tn Heb "just as one wipes a plate, wiping and turning [it] on its face." The word picture emphasizes how thoroughly the Lord will judge the city.

the Kings of Judah.[1] 21:26 He was buried[2] in his tomb in the garden of Uzzah, and his son Josiah replaced him as king.

Josiah Repents

22:1 Josiah was eight years old when he became king, and he reigned for thirty-one years in Jerusalem.[3] His mother[4] was Jedidah, daughter of Adaiah, from Bozkath. 22:2 He did what the LORD approved[5] and followed in his ancestor David's footsteps;[6] he did not deviate to the right or the left.

22:3 In the eighteenth year of King Josiah's reign, the king sent the scribe Shaphan son of Azaliah, son of Meshullam, to the LORD's temple with these orders:[7] 22:4 "Go up to Hilkiah the high priest and have him melt down[8] the silver that has been brought by the people to the LORD's temple and has been collected by the guards at the door. 22:5 Have them hand it over to the construction foremen[9] assigned to the LORD's temple. They in turn should pay the temple workers to repair it,[10] 22:6 including craftsmen, builders, and masons, and should buy wood and chiseled stone for the repair work.[11] 22:7 Do not audit the foremen who disburse the silver, for they are honest."[12]

22:8 Hilkiah the high priest informed Shaphan the scribe, "I found the law scroll in the LORD's temple." Hilkiah gave the scroll to Shaphan and he read it. 22:9 Shaphan the scribe went to the king and reported,[13] "Your servants melted down the silver in the temple[14] and handed it over to the construction foremen assigned to the LORD's temple." 22:10 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, "Hilkiah the priest has given me a scroll." Shaphan read it out loud before the king. 22:11 When the king heard the words of the law scroll, he tore his clothes. 22:12 The king ordered Hilkiah the priest, Ahikam son of Shaphan, Achbor son of Micaiah, Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah the king's servant, 22:13 "Go, seek an oracle from[15] the LORD for me and the people – for all Judah. Find out about[16] the words of this scroll that has been discovered. For the LORD's fury has been ignited against us,[17] because our ancestors have not obeyed the words of this scroll by doing all that it instructs us to do."[18]

22:14 So Hilkiah the priest, Ahikam, Achbor, Shaphan, and Asaiah went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shullam son of Tikvah, the son of Harhas, the supervisor of the wardrobe.[19] (She lived in Jerusalem in the Mishneh[20] district.) They stated their business,[21] 22:15 and she said to them: "This is what the LORD God of Israel says: 'Say this to the man who sent you to me: 22:16 "This is what the LORD says: 'I am about to bring disaster on this place and its residents, the details of which are recorded in the scroll which the king of Judah has read.[22] 22:17 This will happen because they have abandoned me and offered sacrifices[23] to other gods, angering me with all the idols they have made.[24] My anger will ignite against this place and will not be extinguished!'" 22:18 Say this to the king of Judah, who sent you to seek an oracle from the LORD: "This is what the LORD God of Israel says concerning the words you have heard: 22:19 'You displayed a sensitive spirit[25] and humbled yourself before the LORD when you heard how I intended to make this place and its residents into an appalling example of an accursed people.[26]

[1] tc Heb "As for the rest of the things of Amon which he did, are they not written on the scroll of the events of the days of the kings of Judah?" Many Hebrew MSS have וְכָל (vekhol), "and all," before אֲשֶׁר ('asher). In this case we can translate, "As for the rest of the events of Amon's reign, and all his accomplishments,...."

[2] tn Heb "he buried him." Here "he" probably refers to Amon's son Josiah.

[7] tn Heb "with these orders, saying."

[8] tc The MT has וְיִתֵּם (veyyattem), "and let them add up" (Hiphil of תָּמַם [tammam], "be complete"), but the appearance of הִתִּיכוּ (hitikhu), "they melted down" (Hiphil of נָתַךְ [natakh], "pour out") in v. 9 suggests that the verb form should be emended to וְיִתֵּךְ (veyyattekh), "and let him melt down" (a Hiphil of נָתַךְ [natakh]). For a discussion of this and other options see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 281.

[9] tn Heb "doers of the work."

[10] tn Heb "and let them give it to the doers of the work who are in the house of the LORD to repair the damages to the house."

[11] tn Heb "and to buy wood and chiseled stone to repair the house."

[12] tn Heb "only the silver that is given into their hand should not be reckoned with them, for in faithfulness they are acting."

[13] tn Heb "returned the king a word and said."

[14] tn Heb "that was found in the house."

[15] tn Or "inquire of."

[16] tn Heb "concerning."

[17] tn Heb "for great is the anger of the LORD which has been ignited against us."

[18] tn Heb "by doing all that is written concerning us." Perhaps עָלֵינוּ ('alenu), "concerning us," should be altered to עָלָיו ('alav), "upon it," in which case one could translate, "by doing all that is written in it."

[19] tn Heb "the keeper of the clothes."

[20] tn Or "second." For a discussion of the possible location of this district, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 283.

[21] tn Heb "and they spoke to her."

[22] tn Heb "all the words of the scroll which the king of Judah has read."

[23] tn Or "burned incense."

[24] tn Heb "angering me with all the work of their hands." The translation assumes that this refers to idols they have manufactured (note the preceding reference to "other gods," as well as 19:18). However, it is possible that this is a general reference to their sinful practices, in which case one might translate, "angering me by all the things they do."

[25] tn Heb "Because your heart was tender."

[26] tn Heb "how I said concerning this place and its residents to become [an object of] horror and [an example of] a curse." The final phrase ("horror and a curse") refers to Judah becoming a prime example of an accursed people. In curse formulations they would be held up as a prime example of divine judgment. For an example of such a curse, see Jer 29:22.

You tore your clothes and wept before me, and I have heard you,' says the LORD. 22:20 'Therefore I will allow you to die and be buried in peace.[1] You will not have to witness[2] all the disaster I will bring on this place.'"" Then they reported back to the king.

The King Institutes Religious Reform

23:1 The king summoned all the leaders of Judah and Jerusalem.[3] 23:2 The king went up to the LORD's temple, accompanied by all the people of Judah, all the residents of Jerusalem, the priests, and the prophets. All the people were there, from the youngest to the oldest. He read aloud[4] all the words of the scroll of the covenant that had been discovered in the LORD's temple. 23:3 The king stood by the pillar and renewed[5] the covenant before the LORD, agreeing to follow[6] the LORD and to obey his commandments, laws, and rules with all his heart and being,[7] by carrying out the terms[8] of this covenant recorded on this scroll. All the people agreed to keep the covenant.[9]

23:4 The king ordered Hilkiah the high priest, the high-ranking priests,[10] and the guards[11] to bring out of the LORD's temple all the items that were used in the worship of[12] Baal, Asherah, and all the stars of the sky.[13] The king[14] burned them outside of Jerusalem in the terraces[15] of Kidron, and carried their ashes to Bethel.[16] 23:5 He eliminated[17] the pagan priests whom the kings of Judah had appointed to offer sacrifices[18] on the high places in the cities of Judah and in the area right around Jerusalem. (They offered sacrifices[19] to Baal, the sun god, the moon god, the constellations, and all the stars in the sky.) 23:6 He removed the Asherah pole from the LORD's temple and took it outside Jerusalem to the Kidron Valley, where he burned it.[20] He smashed it to dust and then threw the dust in the public graveyard.[21] 23:7 He tore down the quarters[22] of the male cultic prostitutes in the LORD's temple, where women were weaving shrines[23] for Asherah.

23:8 He brought all the priests from the cities of Judah and ruined[24] the high places where the priests had offered sacrifices, from Geba to Beer Sheba.[25] He tore down the high place of the goat idols[26] situated at the entrance of the gate of Joshua, the city official, on the left side of the city gate. 23:9 (Now the priests of the high places did not go up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, but they did eat unleavened cakes among their fellow priests.)[27] 23:10 The king[28] ruined Topheth in the Valley of Ben Hinnom so that no one could pass his son or his daughter through the fire to Molech.[29] 23:11 He removed from the entrance to the LORD's temple the statues of horses[30] that the kings of Judah had placed there in honor of the sun god. (They were kept near the room of Nathan Melech the eunuch, which was situated among the courtyards.)[31] He burned up the chariots devoted to the sun god.[32] 23:12 The king tore down the altars

[22] tn Or "cubicles." Heb "houses."

[23] tn Heb "houses." Perhaps tent-shrines made from cloth are in view (see BDB 109 s.v. בַּיִת). M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (II Kings [AB], 286) understand this as referring to clothes made for images of the goddess.

[24] tn Heb "defiled; desecrated," that is, "made ritually unclean and unusable."

[25] sn These towns marked Judah's northern and southern borders, respectively, at the time of Josiah.

The translation assumes an emendation to בָּמוֹת הַשְּׂעִירִם (bamot hash'e'arim), "the high place of the goats" (that is, goat idols). Worship of such images is referred to in Lev 17:7 and 2 Chr 11:15. For a discussion of the textual issue, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 286-87.

[30] tn The MT simply reads "the horses." The words "statues of" have been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn Heb "who/which was in the [...?]." The meaning of the Hebrew term פַּרְוָרִים (parvarim), translated here "courtyards," is uncertain. The relative clause may indicate where the room was located or explain who Nathan Melech was, "the eunuch who was in the courtyards." See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 288-89, who translate "the officer of the precincts."

the kings of Judah had set up on the roof of Ahaz's upper room, as well as the altars Manasseh had set up in the two courtyards of the LORD's temple. He crushed them up[1] and threw the dust in the Kidron Valley. 23:13 The king ruined the high places east of Jerusalem, south of the Mount of Destruction,[2] that King Solomon of Israel had built for the detestable Sidonian goddess Astarte, the detestable Moabite god Chemosh, and the horrible Ammonite god Milcom. 23:14 He smashed the sacred pillars to bits, cut down the Asherah pole, and filled those shrines[3] with human bones.

23:15 He also tore down the altar in Bethel[4] at the high place made by Jeroboam son of Nebat, who encouraged Israel to sin.[5] He burned all the combustible items at that high place and crushed them to dust; including the Asherah pole.[6] 23:16 When Josiah turned around, he saw the tombs there on the hill. So he ordered the bones from the tombs to be brought;[7] he burned them on the altar and defiled it. This fulfilled the LORD's announcement made by the prophet while Jeroboam stood by the altar during a festival. King Josiah[8] turned and saw the grave of the prophet who had foretold this.[9] 23:17 He asked, "What is this grave marker I see?" The men from the city replied, "It's the grave of the prophet[10] who came from Judah and foretold these very things you have done to the altar of Bethel." 23:18 The king[11] said, "Leave it alone! No one must touch his bones." So they left his bones undisturbed, as well as the bones of the Israelite prophet buried beside him.[12]

23:19 Josiah also removed all the shrines on the high places in the cities of Samaria. The kings of Israel had made them and angered the LORD.[13] He did to them what he had done to the high place in Bethel.[14] 23:20 He sacrificed all the priests of the high places on the altars located there, and burned human bones on them. Then he returned to Jerusalem.

23:21 The king ordered all the people, "Observe the Passover of the LORD your God, as prescribed in this scroll of the covenant." 23:22 He issued this edict because[15] a Passover like this had not been observed since the days of the judges; it was neglected for the entire period of the kings of Israel and Judah.[16] 23:23 But in the eighteenth year of King Josiah's reign, such a Passover of the LORD was observed in Jerusalem.

23:24 Josiah also got rid of[17] the ritual pits used to conjure up spirits,[18] the magicians, per-

[1] tc The MT reads, "he ran from there," which makes little if any sense in this context. Some prefer to emend the verbal form (Qal of רוּץ [ruts], "run") to a Hiphil of רוּץ with third plural suffix and translate, "he quickly removed them" (see BDB 930 s.v. רוּץ, and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings [AB], 289). The suffix could have been lost in MT by haplography (note the mem [מ] that immediately follows the verb on the form מִשָּׁם, misham, "from there"). Another option, the one reflected in the translation, is to emend the verb to a Piel of רָצַץ (ratsats), "crush," with third plural suffix.

[2] sn This is a derogatory name for the Mount of Olives, involving a wordplay between מָשְׁחָה (mash^{e}khah), "anointing," and מַשְׁחִית (mash^{e}khit), "destruction." See HALOT 644 s.v. מַשְׁחִית and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 289.

[3] tn Heb "their places."

[4] map For location see Map4-G4; Map5-C1; Map6-E3; Map7-D1; Map8-G3.

[5] tn Heb "And also the altar that is in Bethel, the high place that Jeroboam son of Nebat who encouraged Israel to sin, also that altar and the high place he tore down." The more repetitive Hebrew text is emphatic.

[6] tn Heb "he burned the high place, crushing to dust, and he burned the Asherah pole." High places per se are never referred to as being burned elsewhere. בָּמָה (bamah) here stands by metonymy for the combustible items located on the high place. See M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 289.

[7] tn Heb "and he sent and took the bones from the tombs."

[8] tn Heb "the king"; this has been specified as "King Josiah" in the translation for clarity (cf. TEV, CEV, NLT).

[9] tc The MT is much shorter than this. It reads, "according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words." The LXX has a much longer text at this point. It reads: "[which was proclaimed by the man of God] while Jeroboam stood by the altar at a celebration. Then he turned and saw the grave of the man of God [who proclaimed these words]." The extra material attested in the LXX was probably accidentally omitted in the Hebrew tradition when a scribe's eye jumped from the first occurrence of the phrase "man of God" (which appears right before the extra material) and the second occurrence of the phrase (which appears at the end of the extra material).

sn This recalls the prophecy recorded in 1 Kgs 13:2.

[11] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Heb "and they left undisturbed his bones, the bones of the prophet who came from Samaria." If the phrase "the bones of the prophet" were appositional to "his bones," one would expect the sentence to end "from Judah" (see v. 17). Apparently the "prophet" referred to in the second half of the verse is the old prophet from Bethel who buried the man of God from Judah in his own tomb and instructed his sons to bury his bones there as well (1 Kgs 13:30-31). One expects the text to read "from Bethel," but "Samaria" (which was not even built at the time of the incident recorded in 1 Kgs 13) is probably an anachronistic reference to the northern kingdom in general. See the note at 1 Kgs 13:32 and the discussion in M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 290.

[13] tc Heb "which the kings of Israel had made, angering." The object has been accidentally omitted in the MT. It appears in the LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate versions.

[14] tn Heb "and he did to them according to all the deeds he had done in Bethel."

map For location see Map4-G4; Map5-C1; Map6-E3; Map7-D1; Map8-G3.

[15] tn The Hebrew text has simply "because." The translation attempts to reflect more clearly the logical connection between the king's order and the narrator's observation. Another option is to interpret כִּי (ki) as asseverative and translate, "indeed."

[16] tn Heb "because there had not been observed [one] like this Passover from the days of the judges who judged Israel and all the days of the kings of Israel and the kings of Judah."

sonal idols, disgusting images,[1] and all the detestable idols that had appeared in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem. In this way he carried out the terms of the law[2] recorded on the scroll that Hilkiah the priest had discovered in the LORD's temple. 23:25 No king before or after repented before the LORD as he did, with his whole heart, soul, and being in accordance with the whole law of Moses.[3]

23:26 Yet the LORD's great anger against Judah did not subside; he was still infuriated by all the things Manasseh had done.[4] 23:27 The LORD announced, "I will also spurn Judah,[5] just as I spurned Israel. I will reject this city that I chose – both Jerusalem and the temple, about which I said, 'I will live there.'"[6]

23:28 The rest of the events of Josiah's reign and all his accomplishments are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[7] 23:29 During Josiah's reign Pharaoh Necho king of Egypt marched toward[8] the Euphrates River to help the king of Assyria. King Josiah marched out to fight him, but Necho[9] killed him at Megiddo[10] when he saw him. 23:30 His servants transported his dead body[11] from Megiddo in a chariot and brought it to Jerusalem, where they buried him in his tomb. The people of the land took Josiah's son Jehoahaz, poured olive oil on his head,[12] and made him king in his father's place.

Jehoahaz's Reign over Judah

23:31 Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.[13] His mother[14] was Hamutal the daughter of Jeremiah, from Libnah. 23:32 He did evil in the sight of[15] the LORD as his ancestors had done.[16] 23:33 Pharaoh Necho imprisoned him in Riblah in the land of Hamath and prevented him from ruling in Jerusalem.[17] He imposed on the land a special tax[18] of one hundred talents[19] of silver and a talent of gold. 23:34 Pharaoh Necho made Josiah's son Eliakim king in Josiah's place, and changed his name to Jehoiakim. He took Jehoahaz to Egypt, where he died.[20] 23:35 Jehoiakim paid Pharaoh the required amount of silver and gold, but to meet Pharaoh's demands Jehoiakim had to tax the land. He collected an assessed amount from each man among the people of the land in order to pay Pharaoh Necho.[21]

Jehoiakim's Reign over Judah

23:36 Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned for eleven years in Jerusalem.[22] His mother was Zebidah the daughter of Pedaiah, from Rumah. 23:37 He did evil in the sight of[23] the LORD as his ancestors had done.

24:1 During Jehoiakim's reign,[24] King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon attacked.[25] Jehoiakim was his subject for three years, but then he rebelled against him.[26] 24:2 The LORD sent against him Babylonian, Syrian, Moabite, and Ammonite raiding bands; he sent them to destroy Judah, as he had warned he would do through his

[3] tn Heb "and like him there was not a king before him who returned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his being according to all the law of Moses, and after him none arose like him."

sn The description of Josiah's devotion as involving his whole "heart, soul, and being" echoes the language of Deut 6:5.

[4] tn Heb "Yet the LORD did not turn away from the fury of his great anger, which raged against Judah, on account of all the infuriating things by which Manasseh had made him angry."

[5] tn Heb "Also Judah I will turn away from my face."

[19] tn The Hebrew term כִּכָּר (kikkar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or to a standard unit of weight, generally regarded as a talent. Since the accepted weight for a talent of metal is about 75 pounds, this would have amounted to about 7,500 pounds of silver and 75 pounds of gold (cf. NCV, NLT); CEV "almost four tons of silver and about seventy-five pounds of gold."

[20] tn Heb "and he took Jehoahaz, and he came to Egypt and he died there."

[21] tn Heb "And the silver and the gold Jehoiakim gave to Pharaoh, but he taxed the land to give the silver at the command of Pharaoh, [from] each according to his tax he collected the silver and the gold, from the people of the land, to give to Pharaoh Necho."

servants the prophets.[1] 24:3 Just as the LORD had announced, he rejected Judah because of all the sins which Manasseh had committed.[2] 24:4 Because he killed innocent people and stained Jerusalem with their blood, the LORD was unwilling to forgive them.[3] 24:5 The rest of the events of Jehoiakim's reign and all his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll called the Annals of the Kings of Judah.[4] 24:6 He passed away[5] and his son Jehoiachin replaced him as king. 24:7 The king of Egypt did not march out from his land again, for the king of Babylon conquered all the territory that the king of Egypt had formerly controlled between the Stream of Egypt and the Euphrates River.

Jehoiachin's Reign over Judah

24:8 Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.[6] His mother[7] was Nehushta the daughter of Elnathan, from Jerusalem. 24:9 He did evil in the sight of[8] the LORD as his ancestors had done.

24:10 At that time the generals[9] of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon marched to Jerusalem and besieged the city.[10] 24:11 King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon came to the city while his generals were besieging it. 24:12 King Jehoiachin of Judah, along with his mother, his servants, his officials, and his eunuchs surrendered[11] to the king of Babylon. The king of Babylon, in the eighth year of his reign,[12] took Jehoiachin[13] prisoner. 24:13 Nebuchadnezzar[14] took from there all the riches in the treasuries of the LORD's temple and of the royal palace. He removed all the gold items which King Solomon of Israel had made for the LORD's temple, just as the LORD had warned. 24:14 He deported all the residents of Jerusalem, including all the officials and all the soldiers (10,000 people in all). This included all the craftsmen and those who worked with metal. No one was left except for the poorest among the people of the land. 24:15 He deported Jehoiachin from Jerusalem to Babylon, along with the king's mother and wives, his eunuchs, and the high-ranking officials of the land.[15] 24:16 The king of Babylon deported to Babylon all the soldiers (there were 7,000), as well as 1,000 craftsmen and metal workers. This included all the best warriors.[16] 24:17 The king of Babylon made Mattaniah, Jehoiachin's[17] uncle, king in Jehoiachin's place. He renamed him Zedekiah.

Zedekiah's Reign over Judah

24:18 Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he became king, and he ruled for eleven years in Jerusalem.[18] His mother[19] was Hamutal,[20] the daughter of Jeremiah, from Libnah. 24:19 He did evil in the sight of[21] the LORD, as Jehoiakim had done.[22]

24:20 What follows is a record of what happened to Jerusalem and Judah because of the LORD's anger; he finally threw them out of his presence.[23] Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. 25:1 So King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon came against Jerusalem with his whole army and set up camp outside[24] it. They built siege ramps all around it. He arrived on the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign.[25] 25:2 The city remained under siege until King Zedekiah's eleventh year. 25:3 By the ninth day of the fourth month[26] the famine in the city was so severe the residents[27] had no food. 25:4 The enemy broke through the city walls,[1] and all the soldiers tried to escape. They left the city during the night.[2] They went through the gate between the two walls that is near the king's garden.[3] (The Babylonians were all around the city.) Then they headed for the Jordan Valley.[4] 25:5 But the Babylonian army chased after the king. They caught up with him in the plains of Jericho,[5] and his entire army deserted him. 25:6 They captured the king and brought him up to the king of Babylon at Riblah,[6] where he[7] passed sentence on him. 25:7 Zedekiah's sons were executed while Zedekiah was forced to watch.[8] The king of Babylon[9] then had Zedekiah's eyes put out, bound him in bronze chains, and carried him off to Babylon.

Nebuchadnezzar Destroys Jerusalem

25:8 On the seventh[10] day of the fifth month,[11] in the nineteenth year of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, Nebuzaradan, the captain of the royal guard[12] who served the king of Babylon, arrived in Jerusalem.[13] 25:9 He burned down the LORD's temple, the royal palace, and all the houses in Jerusalem, including every large house.[14] 25:10 The whole Babylonian army that came with the captain of the royal guard tore down the walls that surrounded Jerusalem. 25:11 Nebuzaradan, the captain of the royal guard, deported the rest of the people who were left in the city, those who had deserted to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the craftsmen.[15] 25:12 But he[16] left behind some of the poor of the land and gave them fields and vineyards.

25:13 The Babylonians broke the two bronze pillars in the LORD's temple, as well as the movable stands and the big bronze basin called the "The Sea."[17] They took the bronze to Babylon. 25:14 They also took the pots, shovels,[18] trimming shears,[19] pans, and all the bronze utensils used by the priests.[20] 25:15 The captain of the royal guard took the golden and silver censers[21] and basins. 25:16 The bronze of the items that King Solomon made for the LORD's temple – including the two pillars, the big bronze basin called "The Sea," the twelve bronze bulls under "The Sea,"[22] and the movable stands – was too heavy to be weighed. 25:17 Each of the pillars was about twenty-seven feet[23] high. The bronze top of one pillar was about four and a half feet[24] high and had bronze latticework and pomegranate shaped ornaments all around it. The second pillar with its latticework was like it.

25:18 The captain of the royal guard took Seraiah the chief priest and Zephaniah, the priest who was second in rank, and the three doorkeepers. 25:19 From the city he took a eunuch who was in charge of the soldiers, five[25] of the king's advisers[26] who were discovered in the city, an official army secretary who drafted citizens[27] for military service, and sixty citizens from the people of the land who were discovered in the city. 25:20 Nebuzaradan, captain of the royal guard, took them and brought them to the king of Babylon at Riblah. 25:21 The king of Babylon ordered them to be executed[28] at Riblah

1 tn Heb "the city was breached."

2 tn The Hebrew text is abrupt here: "And all the men of war by the night." The translation attempts to capture the sense.

3 sn The king's garden is mentioned again in Neh 3:15 in conjunction with the pool of Siloam and the stairs that go down from the City of David. This would have been in the southern part of the city near the Tyropean Valley which agrees with the reference to the "two walls" which were probably the walls on the eastern and western hills.

4 sn Heb "toward the Arabah." The Arabah was the rift valley north and south of the Dead Sea. Here the intention was undoubtedly to escape across the Jordan to Moab or Ammon. It appears from Jer 40:14; 41:15 that the Ammonites were known to harbor fugitives from the Babylonians.

Pharaoh Necho had earlier received Jehoahaz there and put him in chains (2 Kgs 23:33) prior to taking him captive to Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar had set up his base camp for conducting his campaigns against the Palestinian states there and was now sitting in judgment on prisoners brought to him.

Gedaliah Appointed Governor

25:22 Now King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon appointed Gedaliah son of Ahikam, son of Shaphan, as governor over the people whom he allowed to remain in the land of Judah.[2] 25:23 All of the officers of the Judahite army[3] and their troops heard that the king of Babylon had appointed Gedaliah to govern. So they came to Gedaliah at Mizpah. The officers who came were Ishmael son of Nethaniah, Johanan son of Kareah, Seraiah son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah son of the Maacathite. 25:24 Gedaliah took an oath so as to give them and their troops some assurance of safety.[4] He said, "You don't need to be afraid to submit to the Babylonian officials. Settle down in the land and submit to the king of Babylon. Then things will go well for you." 25:25 But in the seventh month[5] Ishmael son of Nethaniah, son of Elishama, who was a member of the royal family,[6] came with ten of his men and murdered Gedaliah,[7] as well as the Judeans and Babylonians who were with him at Mizpah. 25:26 Then all the people, from the youngest to the oldest, as well as the army officers, left for[8] Egypt, because they were afraid of what the Babylonians might do.

Jehoiachin in Babylon

25:27 In the thirty-seventh year of the exile of King Jehoiachin of Judah, on the twenty-seventh[9] day of the twelfth month,[10] King Evil-Merodach of Babylon, in the first year of his reign, pardoned[11] King Jehoiachin of Judah and released him[12] from prison. 25:28 He spoke kindly to him and gave him a more prestigious position than[13] the other kings who were with him in Babylon. 25:29 Jehoiachin[14] took off his prison clothes and ate daily in the king's presence for the rest of his life. 25:30 He was given daily provisions by the king for the rest of his life until the day he died.[15]

[1] tn Heb "land."

[2] tn Heb "And the people who were left in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon left, he appointed over them Gedaliah son of Ahikam, son of Shaphan."

[3] tn Heb "of the army." The word "Judahite" has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn The words "so as to give them...some assurance of safety" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

[5] sn It is not altogether clear whether this is in the same year that Jerusalem fell or not. The wall was breached in the fourth month (= early July; Jer 39:2) and Nebuzaradan came and burned the palace, the temple, and many of the houses and tore down the wall in the fifth month (= early August; Jer 52:12). That would have left time between the fifth month and the seventh month (October) to gather in the harvest of grapes, dates and figs, and olives (Jer 40:12). However, many commentators feel that too much activity takes place in too short a time for this to have been in the same year and posit that it happened the following year or even five years later when a further deportation took place, possibly in retaliation for the murder of Gedaliah and the Babylonian garrison at Mizpah (Jer 52:30). The assassination of Gedaliah had momentous consequences and was commemorated in one of the post exilic fast days lamenting the fall of Jerusalem (Zech 8:19).

[6] tn Heb "[was] from the seed of the kingdom."

[7] tn Heb "and they struck down Gedaliah and he died."

[8] tn Heb "arose and went to."

[9] sn The parallel account in Jer 52:31 has "twenty-fifth."

[10] sn The twenty-seventh day would be March 22, 561 B.C. in modern reckoning.

[11] tn Heb "lifted up the head of."

[12] tn The words "released him" are supplied in the translation on the basis of Jer 52:31.

[14] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehoiachin) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tc The words "until the day he died" do not appear in the MT, but they are included in the parallel passage in Jer 52:34. Probably they have been accidentally omitted by homoioteleuton. A scribe's eye jumped from the final vav (ו) on בְּיוֹמוֹ (bᵉyomo), "in his day," to the final vav (ו) on מוֹתוֹ (moto), "his death," leaving out the intervening words.

1 Chronicles

The sons of Raamah:
Sheba and Dedan.
1:10 Cush was the father of Nimrod, who established himself as a mighty warrior on earth.[6]
1:11 Mizraim was the father of the Ludites, Anamites, Lehabites, Naphtuhites, 1:12 Pathrusites, Casluhites (from whom the Philistines descended[7]), and the Caphtorites.
1:13 Canaan was the father of Sidon – his firstborn – and Heth, 1:14 as well as the Jebusites, Amorites, Girgashites, 1:15 Hivites, Arkites, Sinites, 1:16 Arvadites, Zemarites, and Hamathites.

Shem's Descendants

1:17 The sons of Shem:
Elam, Asshur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram.
The sons of Aram:[8]
Uz, Hul, Gether, and Meshech.[9]
1:18 Arphaxad was the father of Shelah, and Shelah was the father of Eber. 1:19 Two sons were born to Eber: the first was named Peleg, for during his lifetime the earth was divided;[10] his brother's name was Joktan.
1:20 Joktan was the father of Almodad, Sheleph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, 1:21 Hadoram, Uzal, Diklah, 1:22 Ebal,[11] Abimael, Sheba, 1:23 Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab. All these were the sons of Joktan.
1:24 Shem, Arphaxad, Shelah,[12] 1:25 Eber, Peleg, Reu, 1:26 Serug, Nahor, Terah, 1:27 Abram (that is, Abraham).
1:28 The sons of Abraham:
Isaac and Ishmael.
1:29 These were their descendants:

Ishmael's Descendants

Ishmael's firstborn son was Nebaioth; the others were[13] Kedar, Adbeel, Mibsam, 1:30 Mishma, Dumah, Massa, Hadad, Tema, 1:31 Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These were the sons of Ishmael.

Keturah's Descendants

1:32 The sons to whom Keturah, Abraham's concubine,[14] gave birth:

---

1 tc The LXX reads "Noah; the sons of Noah [were] Shem, Ham, and Japheth." Several English translations (e.g., NIV, NLT) follow the LXX.
sn Shem, Ham, and Japheth were Noah's three sons (Gen 6:10).

2 tc Many medieval Hebrew MSS, along with the LXX and Vulgate, read "Riphath" (see Gen 10:3). This is followed by several English translations (e.g., NAB, NIV, NLT), while others (e.g., ASV, NASB, NRSV) follow the MT reading ("Diphath").

3 tn Or in this case, "descendants."

4 tc The Kethib has "Rodanim," which probably refers to the island of Rhodes. The Qere has "Dodanim," which refers to one of the most ancient and revered locations in ancient Greece. The MT and most medieval Hebrew MSS of the parallel list in Gen 10:4 read "Dodanim," but a few have "Rodanim."
tn Heb "Kittim and Rodanim."

5 tn That is, "Egypt."

6 tn Heb "he began to be a mighty warrior in the earth."

7 tn Heb "came forth."

8 tc The words "the sons of Aram" do not appear in the Hebrew text. Apparently the phrase וּבְנֵי אֲרָם (uv^{e}ney 'aram) has accidentally dropped out of the text by homoioteleuton (note the presence of אֲרָם just before this). The phrase is included in Gen 10:23.

9 tc The MT of the parallel geneaology in Gen 10:23 reads "Mash," but the LXX there reads "Meshech" in agreement with 1 Chr 1:17.

10 sn Perhaps this refers to the scattering of the people at Babel (Gen 11:1-9).

11 tc Some medieval Hebrew MSS and the Syriac read "Obal" (see Gen 10:28).

12 tc Some LXX MSS read "Arphaxad, Cainan, Shelah" (see also the notes on Gen 10:24; 11:12-13).

13 tn The words "the others were" are supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons.

14 sn A concubine was a slave woman in ancient Near Eastern societies who was the legal property of her master, but who could have legitimate sexual relations with her master. A concubine's status was more elevated than a mere servant, but she was not free and did not have the legal rights of a free wife. The children of a concubine could, in some instances, become equal heirs with the children of the free wife. After the period of the Judges concubines may have become more of a royal prerogative (2 Sam 21:10-14; 1 Kgs 11:3).

Zimran, Jokshan, Medan, Midian, Ishbak, Shuah.
The sons of Jokshan:
Sheba and Dedan.
1:33 The sons of Midian:
Ephah, Epher, Hanoch, Abida, and Eldaah. All these were the sons of Keturah.

Isaac's Descendants

1:34 Abraham was the father of Isaac. The sons of Isaac:
Esau and Israel.

Esau's Descendants

1:35 The sons of Esau:
Eliphaz, Reuel, Jeush, Jalam, and Korah.
1:36 The sons of Eliphaz:
Teman, Omar, Zephi,[1] Gatam, Kenaz, and (by Timna) Amalek.[2]
1:37 The sons of Reuel:
Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah.

The Descendants of Seir

1:38 The sons of Seir:
Lotan, Shobal, Zibeon, Anah, Dishon, Ezer, and Dishan.
1:39 The sons of Lotan:
Hori and Homam. (Timna was Lotan's sister.)[3]
1:40 The sons of Shobal:
Alyan,[4] Manahath, Ebal, Shephi,[5] and Onam.
The sons of Zibeon:
Aiah and Anah.
1:41 The son[6] of Anah:
Dishon.
The sons of Dishon:
Hamran,[7] Eshban, Ithran, and Keran.
1:42 The sons of Ezer:
Bilhan, Zaavan, Jaakan.[8]
The sons of Dishan:[9]
Uz and Aran.

Kings of Edom

1:43 These were the kings who reigned in the land of Edom before any king ruled over the Israelites:
Bela son of Beor; the name of his city was Dinhabah.
1:44 When Bela died, Jobab son of Zerah from Bozrah, succeeded him.[10]
1:45 When Jobab died, Husham from the land of the Temanites succeeded him.
1:46 When Husham died, Hadad son of Bedad succeeded him. He struck down the Midianites in the plains of Moab; the name of his city was Avith.
1:47 When Hadad died, Samlah from Masrekah succeeded him.
1:48 When Samlah died, Shaul from Rehoboth on the River[11] succeeded him.
1:49 When Shaul died, Baal-Hanan son of Achbor succeeded him.
1:50 When Baal-Hanan died, Hadad succeeded him; the name of his city was Pai.[12] His wife was Mehetabel, daughter of Matred, daughter of Me-Zahab.
1:51 Hadad died.

Tribal Chiefs of Edom

The tribal chiefs of Edom were:
Timna, Alvah, Jetheth, 1:52 Oholibamah, Elah, Pinon, 1:53 Kenaz, Teman,[13] Mibzar, 1:54 Magdiel, Iram.[14] These were the tribal chiefs of Edom.

Israel's Descendants

2:1 These were the sons of Israel:[15]
Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah;
Issachar and Zebulun;
2:2 Dan, Joseph, and Benjamin;
Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.

1 tc Many medieval Hebrew MSS, along with some LXX MSS and the Syriac, read "Zepho" (see Gen 36:11).

2 tn The Hebrew text has simply, "and Timna and Amalek," but Gen 36:12 indicates that Timna, a concubine of Eliphaz, was the mother of Amalek. See also v. 39 below, which states that Timna was the sister of Lotan.

3 tn Perhaps this is the Timna mentioned in v. 36.

4 tc Some medieval Hebrew MSS and a few LXX MSS read "Alvan" (see Gen 36:23).

5 tc A few medieval Hebrew MSS read "Shepho" (see Gen 36:23).

6 tn Heb "sons." The Hebrew text has the plural, but only one son is listed. For stylistic reasons the singular "son" was used in the translation.

7 tn The parallel geneaology in Gen 36:26 has the variant spelling "Hemdan." Some English versions follow the variant spelling here (e.g., NAB, NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT).

8 tn The parallel geneaology in Gen 36:27 has the variant spelling "Akan." Among English versions that use the variant spelling here are NIV, NCV, NLT.

9 tc The MT reads "Dishon" here, but this should be emended to "Dishan." See the list in v. 38 and Gen 36:28.

10 tn Heb "ruled in his place," here and in vv. 45-50.

11 tn Or "near the river."
sn The river may refer to the Euphrates River (cf. NRSV, CEV, NLT).

12 tc Many medieval Hebrew MSS, along with some LXX MSS, the Syriac, and Vulgate, read "Pau." See also Gen 36:39.

13 tn The parallel genealogy in Gen 36:42 has the variant spelling "Temam."

14 tn Each of the names in this list is preceded by the word "chief" in the Hebrew text. This has not been included in the translation because it would appear very redundant to the modern reader.

15 tn The groupings in the list that follows, as well as the conjunctions (vav-consecutives in Hebrew), reflect those of the Hebrew text.

Judah's Descendants

2:3 The sons of Judah:

Er, Onan, and Shelah. These three were born to him by Bathshua,[1] a Canaanite woman. Er, Judah's firstborn, displeased the LORD, so the LORD killed him.[2]

2:4 Tamar, Judah's[3] daughter-in-law, bore to him Perez and Zerah. Judah had five sons in all.

2:5 The sons of Perez:

Hezron and Hamul.

2:6 The sons of Zerah:

Zimri, Ethan, Heman, Kalkol, Dara[4] – five in all.

2:7 The son[5] of Carmi:

Achan,[6] who brought the disaster on Israel when he stole what was devoted to God.[7]

2:8 The son[8] of Ethan:

Azariah.

2:9 The sons born to Hezron:

Jerahmeel, Ram, and Caleb.[9]

Ram's Descendants

2:10 Ram was the father of Amminadab, and Amminadab was the father of Nahshon, the tribal chief of Judah. 2:11 Nahshon was the father of Salma,[10] and Salma was the father of Boaz. 2:12 Boaz was the father of Obed, and Obed was the father of Jesse.

2:13 Jesse was the father of Eliab, his firstborn; Abinadab was born second, Shimea third, 2:14 Nethanel fourth, Raddai fifth, 2:15 Ozem sixth, David seventh. 2:16 Their sisters were Zeruiah and Abigail. Zeruiah's three sons were Abshai,[11] Joab, and Asahel. 2:17 Abigail bore Amasa, whose father was Jether the Ishmaelite.

Caleb's Descendants

2:18 Caleb son of Hezron fathered sons by his wife Azubah (also known as Jerioth).[12] Her sons were Jesher, Shobab, and Ardon. 2:19 When Azubah died, Caleb married[13] Ephrath, who bore him Hur. 2:20 Hur was the father of Uri, and Uri was the father of Bezalel.

2:21 Later[14] Hezron had sexual relations with[15] the daughter of Makir, the father of Gilead. (He had married[16] her when he was sixty years old.) She bore him Segub. 2:22 Segub was the father of Jair, who owned twenty-three cities in the land of Gilead. 2:23 (Geshur and Aram captured the towns of Jair,[17] along with Kenath and its sixty surrounding towns.) All these were descendants of Makir, the father of Gilead.

2:24 After Hezron's death, Caleb had sexual relations with Ephrath, his father Hezron's widow, and she bore to him Ashhur the father of Tekoa.[18]

Jerahmeel's Descendants

2:25 The sons of Jerahmeel, Hezron's firstborn, were Ram, the firstborn, Bunah, Oren, Ozem, and Ahijah. 2:26 Jerahmeel had another wife named Atarah; she was Onam's mother.

2:27 The sons of Ram, Jerahmeel's firstborn, were Maaz, Jamin, and Eker.

2:28 The sons of Onam were Shammai and Jada.

The sons of Shammai:

Nadab and Abishur.

2:29 Abishur's wife was Abihail, who bore him Ahban and Molid.

2:30 The sons of Nadab:

1 tn The name means "daughter of Shua." Shua is identified in Gen 38:2 as a "Canaanite man."

2 tn Heb "was evil in the eyes of the LORD, so he [i.e., the LORD] killed him [i.e., Er]."

3 tn Heb "his"; the referent (Judah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tc Many medieval Hebrew MSS, some LXX MSS, and Syriac read "Darda" (see 1 Kgs 4:31 ET = 1 Kgs 5:11 HT).

5 tn Heb "sons." The Hebrew text has the plural, but only one son is listed.

6 tc The Hebrew text has "Achar," which means "disaster," but a few medieval Hebrew MSS read "Achan." See Josh 7:1.

7 tn Heb "the troubler of Israel who was unfaithful with respect to the devoted [things]."

8 tn Heb "sons." The Hebrew text has the plural, but only one son is listed.

9 tn The Hebrew text has "Celubai," but see v. 18, where Caleb is described as the son of Hezron.

10 tc The LXX reads "Salmon" (cf. Ruth 4:21) and is followed by some English versions (e.g., NIV, NCV, TEV, NLT).

11 tn In 2 Sam 2:18 this name appears as "Abishai," a spelling followed by many English versions here.

12 tn Heb "and Caleb son of Hezron fathered [children] with Azubah, a wife, and with Jerioth." Jerioth could be viewed as a second wife (so NLT; cf. also NASB, NIV, NRSV), but the following context mentions only "her [presumably Azubah's] sons." Another option, the one chosen in the translation, is that Jerioth is another name for Azubah.

13 tn Heb "took for himself."

14 sn This means "later" in relation to the births of the three sons (Jerahmeel, Ram and Caleb) mentioned in v. 9.

15 tn Heb "Hezron went to."

16 tn Heb "he took," referring to taking in marriage.

17 tn Or "Havvoth Jair" (NIV, NRSV). Some translations do not translate the phrase ("havvoth" = "the towns of"), but treat it as part of the place name.

18 tn Heb "And after the death of Hezron in Caleb Ephrathah, and the wife of Hezron, Abijah, and she bore to him Ashhur the father of Tekoa." Perhaps one could translate: "After Hezron died in Caleb Ephrathah, Abijah, Hezron's wife, bore to him Ashhur, the father of Tekoa" (cf. NASB, NIV, NRSV). In this case the text suggests that Abijah was born after his father's death. Because of the awkward syntax and the odd appearance of "Caleb Ephrathah" as a place name, some prefer to emend the text. Some alter בְּכָלֵב אֶפְרָתָה (bᵉkhalev 'efratah, "in Caleb Ephrathah") to בָּא כָלֵב אֶפְרָתָה (bo' khalev 'efratah, "Caleb had sexual relations with Ephrath") and then change אֲבִיָּה ('aviyyah, "Abijah") to אֲבִיהוּ ('avihu, "his father"). This results in the following translation: "And after Hezron's death, Caleb had sexual relations with Ephrath, his father Hezron's wife, and she bore to him Ashhur the father of Tekoa" (cf. NAB). This would mean that Caleb's second wife Ephrath had actually been his late father's wife (probably Caleb's stepmother). Perhaps the text was subsequently altered because Caleb's actions appeared improper in light of the injunctions in Lev 18:8; 20:11; Deut 22:30; 27:20 (which probably refer, however, to a son having sexual relations with his stepmother while his father is still alive).

Seled and Appaim. (Seled died without having sons.)

2:31 The son[1] of Appaim:

Ishi.

The son of Ishi:

Sheshan.

The son of Sheshan:

Ahlai.

2:32 The sons of Jada, Shammai's brother:

Jether and Jonathan. (Jether died without having sons.)

2:33 The sons of Jonathan:

Peleth and Zaza.

These were the descendants of Jerahmeel.

2:34 Sheshan had no sons, only daughters. Sheshan had an Egyptian servant named Jarha. 2:35 Sheshan gave his daughter to his servant Jarha as a wife; she bore him Attai.

2:36 Attai was the father of Nathan, and Nathan was the father of Zabad. 2:37 Zabad was the father of Ephlal, and Ephlal was the father of Obed. 2:38 Obed was the father of Jehu, and Jehu was the father of Azariah. 2:39 Azariah was the father of Helez, and Helez was the father of Eleasah. 2:40 Eleasah was the father of Sismai, and Sismai was the father of Shallum. 2:41 Shallum was the father of Jekamiah, and Jekamiah was the father of Elishama.

More of Caleb's Descendants

2:42 The sons of Caleb, Jerahmeel's brother:

His firstborn Mesha, the father of Ziph, and his second son Mareshah,[2] the father of Hebron.

2:43 The sons of Hebron:

Korah, Tappuah, Rekem, and Shema.

2:44 Shema was the father of Raham, the father of Jorkeam. Rekem was the father of Shammai. 2:45 Shammai's son was Maon, who was the father of Beth-Zur.

2:46 Caleb's concubine[3] Ephah bore Haran, Moza, and Gazez. Haran was the father of Gazez.

2:47 The sons of Jahdai:

Regem, Jotham, Geshan, Pelet, Ephah, and Shaaph.

2:48 Caleb's concubine Maacah bore Sheber and Tirhanah. 2:49 She also bore Shaaph the father of Madmannah and Sheva the father of Machbenah and Gibea. Caleb's daughter was Achsah.

2:50 These were the descendants of Caleb.

The sons[4] of Hur, the firstborn of Ephrath:[5]

Shobal, the father of Kiriath Jearim, 2:51 Salma, the father of Bethlehem, Hareph, the father of Beth-Gader.

2:52 The sons of Shobal, the father of Kiriath Jearim, were Haroeh, half of the Manahathites,[6] 2:53 the clans of Kiriath Jearim – the Ithrites, Puthites, Shumathites, and Mishraites. (The Zorathites and Eshtaolites descended from these groups.)[7]

2:54 The sons of Salma:

Bethlehem, the Netophathites, Atroth Beth-Joab, half the Manahathites, the Zorites, 2:55 and the clans of the scribes[8] who lived in Jabez: the Tirathites, Shimeathites, and Sucathites. These are the Kenites who descended[9] from Hammath, the father of Beth-Rechab.[10]

David's Descendants

3:1 These were the sons of David who were born to him in Hebron:

The firstborn was Amnon, whose mother was Ahinoam from Jezreel;

the second was Daniel, whose mother was Abigail from Carmel;

3:2 the third was Absalom whose mother was Maacah, daughter of King Talmai of Geshur;

the fourth was Adonijah, whose mother was Haggith;

3:3 the fifth was Shephatiah, whose mother was Abital;

the sixth was Ithream, whose mother was Eglah.

3:4 These six were born to David[11] in Hebron, where he ruled for seven years and six months.

He ruled thirty-three years in Jerusalem.[12] 3:5 These were the sons born to him in Jerusalem:

[1] tn Heb "sons." The Hebrew text has the plural "sons" in all three instances in this verse, even though the following lists have only one name each.

[2] tc Heb "and the sons of Mareshah," but this does not fit contextually. Perhaps the text originally had וּבְנוֹ מִשְׁנָה מָרֵשָׁה (uv^eno mishneh mareshah, "and his second son, Mareshah"), with מִשְׁנָה ("second") later accidentally falling out by homoioteleuton (cf. the note in BHS here).

[3] sn See the note on the word "concubine" in 1:32.

[4] tn Heb "son." The Hebrew text has the singular, but the following list contains more than one name.

[5] tn The Hebrew text reads "Ephrathah" here, but see v. 19, which mentions "Ephrath" as the wife of Hur.

[6] tn The Hebrew text has "Menuchites" here, but v. 54 has "Manachathites."

[7] tn Heb "from these went forth the Zorathites and Eshtaolites."

[8] tn Or perhaps "the Sopherim." The NAB transliterates this term and treats it as a proper name.

[9] tn Heb "came."

[10] tn Or (if בֵּית [beth] is translated as "house" rather than considered to be part of the name) "the father of the house [i.e., family] of Rechab."

[11] tn Heb "him"; the referent (David) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

Shimea,[1] Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon – the mother of these four was Bathsheba[2] the daughter of Ammiel.[3]

3:6 The other nine were Ibhar, Elishua,[4] Elpelet,[5] 3:7 Nogah, Nepheg, Japhia, 3:8 Elishama, Eliada, and Eliphelet.

3:9 These were all the sons of David, not counting the sons of his concubines.[6] Tamar was their sister.

3:10 Solomon's son was Rehoboam, followed by Abijah his son,
Asa his son,

The sons of Zerubbabel:

Meshullam and Hananiah. Shelomith was their sister.

3:20 The five others were Hashubah, Ohel, Berechiah, Hasadiah, and Jushab-Hesed.

3:21 The descendants of Hananiah:

4:2 Reaiah the son of Shobal was the father of Jahath, and Jahath was the father of Ahumai and Lahad. These were the clans of the Zorathites.

4:3 These were the sons of Etam:

Jezreel, Ishma, and Idbash. Their sister was Hazzelelponi.

4:4 Penuel was the father of Gedor, and Ezer was the father of Hushah. These were the descendants of Hur, the firstborn of Ephrathah and the father of Bethlehem.

These were the sons of Naarah. 4:7 The sons of Helah: Zereth, Zohar, Ethnan, 4:8 and Koz, who was the father of Anub, Hazzobebah, and the clans of Aharhel the son of Harum.

4:9 Jabez was more respected than his brothers. His mother had named him Jabez, for she said, "I experienced pain when I gave birth to him."[10] 4:10 Jabez called out to the God of Israel, "If only[11] you would greatly bless me and expand my territory! May your hand be with me! Keep me from harm so I might not endure pain!"[12] God answered his prayer.[13]

4:11 Kelub, the brother of Shuhah, was the father of Mehir, who was the father of Eshton. 4:12 Eshton was the father of Beth-Rapha, Paseah, and Tehinnah, the father of Ir Nahash.[14] These were the men of Recah.

[1] tn "Shimea" (שִׁמְעָא, shim'a') is a variant spelling of "Shammua" (שַׁמּוּעַ, shammua'; see 2 Sam 5:14). Some English versions use the spelling "Shammua" here (e.g., NIV, NCV).

[2] tn Most Hebrew MSS read "Bathshua" here, but 2 Sam 12:24 makes it clear Bathsheba was Solomon's mother. "Bathsheba" is read by one Hebrew MS and the Vulgate. Many English translations (e.g., NAB, NIV, NLT) render the name "Bathsheba" to avoid confusion.

[3] tn In 2 Sam 11:3 Bathsheba is called "the daughter of Eliam," while here her father's name is given as "Ammiel."

[4] tn All but two Hebrew MSS read "Elishama" here, but 1 Chr 14:5 lists the name as "Elishua," and is followed by a number of English versions here (e.g., NAB, NIV, NCV, TEV, CEV, NLT). Another son named "Elishama" is listed in 3:8.

[5] tn The MT reads "Eliphelet" here, but 1 Chr 14:5 lists the name as "Elpelet" and is followed by some English versions here (e.g., TEV, NLT). Another son named "Eliphelet" is listed in 3:8.

[6] sn See the note on the word "concubine" in 1:32.

[7] sn Joram is a variant spelling of the name "Jehoram."

[8] tn Heb "Jeconiah," a variation of the name "Jehoiachin" (also in v. 17).

[9] tn Heb "prisoner." Jehoiachin was carried off to Babylon as a prisoner. See 2 Chr 36:10.

[10] tn In Hebrew the name יַעְבֵּץ (ya'bets, "Jabez") sounds like the noun עֹצֶב ('otsev) which means "pain."

[11] tn On the use of אִם ('im, "if") here, see HALOT 60 s.v.

[12] tn Heb "and act from [i.e., so as to prevent] harm so that I might not be in pain."

[13] tn Heb "and God brought about what he had asked."

[14] tn Or "of the city of Nahash."

Hathath and Meonothai.[1] 4:14 Meonothai was the father of Ophrah.

Seraiah was the father of Joab, the father of those who live in the Valley of the Craftsmen,[2] for they were craftsmen.

4:15 The sons of Caleb son of Jephunneh:
Iru, Elah, and Naam.
The son of Elah:
Kenaz.[3]

4:16 The sons of Jehallelel:
Ziph, Ziphah, Tiria, and Asarel.
4:17 The sons of Ezrah:
Jether, Mered, Epher, and Jalon.
Mered's wife Bithiah[4] gave birth to Miriam, Shammai, and Ishbah, the father of Eshtemoa. 4:18 (His Judahite wife gave birth to Jered the father of Gedor, Heber the father of Soco, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah.) These were the sons of Pharaoh's daughter Bithiah, whom Mered married.[5]

4:19 The sons of Hodiah's wife, the sister of Naham:
the father of Keilah the Garmite, and Eshtemoa the Maacathite.
4:20 The sons of Shimon:
Amnon, Rinnah, Ben Hanan, and Tilon.
The descendants of Ishi:
Zoheth and Ben Zoheth.[6]
4:21 The sons of Shelah son of Judah:
Er the father of Lecah, Laadah the father of Mareshah, the clans of the linen workers at Beth-Ashbea, 4:22 Jokim, the men of Cozeba, and Joash and Saraph, both of whom ruled in Moab and Jashubi Lehem. (This information is from ancient records.)[7] 4:23 They were the potters who lived in Netaim and Gederah; they lived there and worked for the king.[8]

Simeon's Descendants

4:24 The descendants of Simeon:
Nemuel, Jamin, Jarib, Zerah, Shaul, 4:25 his son Shallum, his son Mibsam, and his son Mishma.
4:26 The descendants of Mishma:
His son Hammuel, his son Zaccur, and his son Shimei.
4:27 Shimei had sixteen sons and six daughters. But his brothers did not have many sons, so their whole clan was not as numerous as the sons of Judah. 4:28 They lived in Beer Sheba, Moladah, Hazar Shual, 4:29 Bilhah, Ezem, Tolad, 4:30 Bethuel, Hormah, Ziklag, 4:31 Beth Marcaboth, Hazar Susim, Beth Biri, and Shaaraim. These were their towns until the reign of David. 4:32 Their settlements also included Etam, Ain, Rimmon, Tochen, and Ashan – five towns. 4:33 They also lived in all the settlements that surrounded these towns as far as Baal.[9] These were their settlements; they kept genealogical records.

4:34 Their clan leaders were:[10]
Meshobab, Jamlech, Joshah son of Amaziah, 4:35 Joel, Jehu son of Joshibiah (son of Seraiah, son of Asiel), 4:36 Eleoenai, Jaakobah, Jeshohaiah, Asaiah, Adiel, Jesimiel, Benaiah, 4:37 Ziza son of Shipi (son of Allon, son of Jedaiah, son of Shimri, son of Shemaiah). 4:38 These who are named above were the leaders of their clans.

Their extended families increased greatly in numbers. 4:39 They went to the entrance of Gedor, to the east of the valley, looking for pasture for their sheep. 4:40 They found fertile and rich pasture; the land was very broad, undisturbed and peaceful. Indeed some Hamites had been living there prior to that. 4:41 The men whose names are listed came during the time of King Hezekiah of Judah and attacked the Hamites' settlements,[11] as well as the Meunites they discovered there, and they wiped them out to this very day. They dispossessed them,[12] for they found pasture for their sheep there. 4:42 Five hundred men of Simeon, led by Pelatiah, Neariah, Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi, went to the hill country of Seir 4:43 and defeated the rest of the Amalekite refugees;[13] they live there to this very day.

[1] tc "Meonothai" is read here by some MSS of the LXX, along with the Vulgate. The name apparently was dropped from the Hebrew text by haplography. Note that the name appears at the beginning of the next verse as well.

[2] tn Heb "Ge-harashim," which could be left untranslated as a place name.

[3] tn Heb "and the sons of Elah and Kenaz." Kenaz was actually the son of Elah.

[4] tn The Hebrew text has simply, "and she gave birth to," without identifying the subject. The words "Mered's wife Bithiah" are added in the translation for clarification. See v. 18b, which mentions "Bethiah, whom Mered married."

[5] tn Heb "took," referring to taking in marriage.

[6] tn Or "and the son of Zoheth" (NAB). The word בֶּן (ben) in Hebrew means "son [of]."

[7] tn Heb "and the words are old."

[8] tn Heb "and those who lived in Netaim and Gederah; with the king in his work they lived there."

[9] tc Some LXX MSS read "Baalath" (cf. Josh 19:8). This is followed by some English versions (e.g., NIV, NCV, TEV, NLT).

[10] tn The words "their clan leaders were" are added in the translation for clarification. See v. 38a, which makes this clear.

[11] tn The Hebrew text reads "their tents," apparently referring to those of the Hamites mentioned at the end of v. 40. Some prefer to emend the text to read, "the tents of Ham."

[12] tn Heb "and they lived in place of them."

[13] tn Heb "and struck down the remnant that had escaped belonging to Amalek."

Reuben's Descendants

5:1 The sons of Reuben, Israel's firstborn –
(Now he was the firstborn, but when he defiled his father's bed,[1] his rights as firstborn were given to the sons of Joseph, Israel's son. So Reuben is not listed as firstborn in the genealogical records.[2] 5:2 Though Judah was the strongest among his brothers and a leader descended from him,[3] the right of the firstborn belonged to Joseph.)

5:3 The sons of Reuben, Israel's firstborn:
Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi.

5:4 The descendants of Joel:
His son Shemaiah, his son Gog, his son Shimei, 5:5 his son Micah, his son Reaiah, his son Baal, 5:6 and his son Beerah, whom King Tiglath-pileser[4] of Assyria carried into exile. Beerah[5] was the tribal leader of Reuben.

5:7 His brothers by their clans, as listed in their genealogical records:
The leader Jeiel, Zechariah, 5:8 and Bela son of Azaz, son of Shema, son of Joel.
They lived in Aroer as far as Nebo and Baal Meon. 5:9 In the east they settled as far as the entrance to the desert that stretches to the Euphrates River, for their cattle had increased in numbers in the land of Gilead. 5:10 During the time of Saul they attacked the Hagrites and defeated them. They took over their territory in the entire eastern region of Gilead.[6]

Gad's Descendants

5:11 The descendants of Gad lived near them in the land of Bashan, as far as Salecah.

5:12 They included Joel the leader, Shapham the second in command, Janai, and Shaphat in Bashan. 5:13 Their relatives, listed according to their families,[7] included Michael, Meshullam, Sheba, Jorai, Jacan, Zia, and Eber – seven in all.

5:14 These were the sons of Abihail son of Huri, son of Jaroah, son of Gilead, son of Michael, son of Jeshishai, son of Jahdo, son of Buz. 5:15 Ahi son of Abdiel, son of Guni, was the leader of the family.[8] 5:16 They lived in Gilead, in Bashan and its surrounding settlements, and in the pasturelands of Sharon to their very borders.[9] 5:17 All of them were listed in the genealogical records in the time of King Jotham of Judah and in the time of King Jeroboam of Israel.

5:18 The Reubenites, Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh had 44,760 men in their combined armies, warriors who carried shields and swords, were equipped with bows, and were trained for war.[10] 5:19 They attacked[11] the Hagrites, Jetur, Naphish, and Nodab. 5:20 They received divine help in fighting them, and the Hagrites and all their allies were handed over to them. They cried out to God during the battle; he responded to their prayers because they trusted in him.[12] 5:21 They seized the Hagrites'[13] animals, including 50,000 camels, 250,000 sheep, and 2,000 donkeys. They also took captive 100,000 people. 5:22 Because God fought for them,[14] they killed many of the enemy.[15] They dispossessed the Hagrites and lived in their land until the exile.[16]

The Half-Tribe of Manasseh

5:23 The half-tribe of Manasseh settled in the land from Bashan as far as Baal Hermon, Senir, and Mount Hermon. They grew in number.

5:24 These were the leaders of their families:[17]
Epher, Ishi, Eliel, Azriel, Jeremiah, Hodaviah, and Jahdiel. They were skilled warriors, men of reputation,[18] and leaders of their families. 5:25 But they were unfaithful to the God of their ancestors[19] and worshiped instead[20] the gods of the native peoples[21] whom God had destroyed before them. 5:26 So the God of Israel stirred up[22] King Pul of Assyria (that is, King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria),[23] and he carried away the [1] sn The phrase when he defiled his father's bed refers to Reuben having sexual relations with his father Jacob's concubine Bilhah. This incident is recorded in Gen 35:22.

[2] tn Heb "and not to be listed in the genealogical records as (having) the right of the firstborn."

[3] tn Heb "and [one] for a leader [was] from him." This probably refers to the Davidic king.

[4] tn Heb "Tilgath-pilneser," a variant spelling of Tiglath-pileser (also in v. 26).

[5] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Beerah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Heb "and in the days of Saul they made war with the Hagrites and they fell by their hand and they lived in their tents unto all the face of the east of Gilead."

[7] tn Heb "and their brothers by the house of their fathers."

[8] tn Heb "was the head of the house of their fathers."

[9] tn Heb "unto their extremities."

[10] tn Heb "the sons of Reuben and the Gadites and half of the tribe of Manasseh, from the sons of bravery, men carrying a shield and sword and treading a bow and trained for war, 44,760 going out for warfare."

[11] tn Heb "made war with."

[12] tn Heb "and they were helped against them and they were given over into their hand, the Hagrites and all who were with them, for to God they cried out in the battle and he was entreated [or "allowed himself to be entreated"] by them for they trusted in him."

[13] tn Heb "their"; the referent (the Hagrites) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[14] tn Heb "from God [was] the battle."

[15] tn Heb "many slain fell."

[16] tn Heb "and they lived in place of them until the exile." The referent of "them" (the Hagrites) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] tn Heb "and these [were] the heads of the house of their fathers."

[18] tn Heb "men of names."

[19] tn Heb "fathers."

[20] tn Heb "prostituted themselves after."

[21] tn Heb "the peoples of the land."

[22] tn Heb "stirred up the spirit of."

[23] tn Heb "and the spirit of Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria." "Pul" and "Tilgath-pilneser" were names of the same Assyrian ruler, more commonly known as Tiglath-pileser (cf. 2 Kgs 15:29).

Reubenites, Gadites, and half-tribe of Manasseh and took them to Halah, Habor, Hara, and the river of Gozan, where they remain to this very day.

Professional Musicians

6:31 These are the men David put in charge of music in the LORD's sanctuary,[12] after the ark was placed there. 6:32 They performed music[13] before the sanctuary[14] of the meeting tent until Solomon built the LORD's temple in Jerusalem.[15] They carried out their tasks according to regulations.

[1] sn Beginning with 6:1, the verse numbers through 6:81 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 6:1 ET = 5:27 HT, 6:2 ET = 5:28 HT, 6:16 ET = 6:1 HT, etc., through 6:81 ET = 6:66 HT. Beginning with 7:1 the verse numbers in the ET and HT are again the same.

[3] tn The words "the people of" are added in the translation for clarification.

[4] sn Chapter 6 of 1 Chr begins here in the Hebrew text; 6:16-81 ET = 6:1-66 HT. See the note at 6:1.

[5] tn The name "Gershom" (also in vv. 17, 20, 43, 62, 71) appears as "Gershon" in 1 Chr 6:1.

[6] tn Heb "by their fathers."

[7] tn Or perhaps, "descendants," since the list differs from the one in v. 18.

[8] tn Heb "and Achimoth."

[9] tc The consonantal Hebrew text (Kethib) has, "Elkanah, his son, Elkanah." The marginal reading (Qere) is "Elkanah, the sons of Elkanah." The text probably originally read simply, "Elkanah his son."

[10] tc After the last named individual ("Elkanah" in v. 27) some LXX MSS insert the words "Samuel his son" to facilitate a transition to the following verse, which beings "and the sons of Samuel." Among the English versions that include this added phrase are NAB, NIV, and NLT.

[11] tc The Hebrew text lacks the name יוֹאֵל (yo'el, "Joel"), which has probably dropped out due to homoioteleuton (note the last three letters of the preceding name שְׁמוּאֵל (sh^{e}muel, "Samuel").

[12] tn Heb "house."

[13] tn Heb "they were serving...with music."

[14] tn Or traditionally "tabernacle."

6:40 son of Michael, son of Baaseiah,[1] son of Malkijah, 6:41 son of Ethni, son of Zerah, son of Adaiah, 6:42 son of Ethan, son of Zimmah, son of Shimei, 6:43 son of Jahath, son of Gershom, son of Levi.

6:44 Serving beside them were their fellow Levites, the descendants of Merari, led by[2] Ethan, son of Kishi, son of Abdi, son of Malluch, 6:45 son of Hashabiah, son of Amaziah, son of Hilkiah, 6:46 son of Amzi, son of Bani, son of Shemer, 6:47 son of Mahli, son of Mushi, son of Merari, son of Levi.

6:48 The rest of their fellow Levites[3] were assigned to perform the remaining tasks at God's sanctuary.[4] 6:49 But Aaron and his descendants offered sacrifices on the altar for burnt offerings and on the altar for incense as they had been assigned to do in the most holy sanctuary.[5] They made atonement for Israel, just as God's servant Moses had ordered.[6]

6:54 These were the areas where Aaron's descendants lived:[7]

The following belonged to the Kohathite clan, for they received the first allotment:[8]

6:55 They were allotted Hebron in the territory of Judah, as well as its surrounding pasturelands. 6:56 (But the city's land and nearby towns were allotted to Caleb son of Jephunneh.) 6:57 The descendants of Aaron were also allotted as cities[9] of refuge Hebron, Libnah and its pasturelands, Jattir, Eshtemoa and its pasturelands, 6:58 Hilez[10] and its pasturelands, Debir and its pasturelands, 6:59 Ashan[11] and its pasturelands,[12] and Beth Shemesh and its pasturelands.

6:60 Within the territory of the tribe of Benjamin they were allotted[13] Geba and its pasturelands, Alemeth and its pasturelands, and Anathoth and its pasturelands. Their clans were allotted thirteen cities in all. 6:61 The rest of Kohath's descendants were allotted ten cities in the territory of the half-tribe of Manasseh.[14]

6:62 The clans of Gershom's descendants received thirteen cities within the territory of the tribes of Issachar, Asher, Naphtali, and Manasseh (in Bashan).[15]

6:63 The clans of Merari's descendants were allotted twelve cities within the territory of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Zebulun.[16]

6:64 So the Israelites gave to the Levites these cities and their pasturelands. 6:65 They allotted these previously named cities from the territory of the tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin.[17]

6:66 The clans of Kohath's descendants also received territory within the tribe of Ephraim.[18] 6:67 They were allotted as cities[19] of refuge Shechem and its pasturelands (in the hill country of Ephraim), Gezer and its pasturelands, 6:68 Jokmeam and its pasturelands, Beth Horon and its pasturelands, 6:69 Aijalon and its pasturelands, and Gath Rimmon and its pasturelands.

6:71 The following belonged to Gershom's descendants:[21]

Within the territory of the half-tribe of Manasseh: Golan in Bashan and its pasturelands and Ashtaroth and its pasturelands.

6:72 Within the territory of the tribe of Issachar: Kedesh and its pasturelands, Daberath and [11] tc The MT reads "Ashan" here; the place name appears as "Ain" in Josh 21:16.

[12] tc The LXX and Syriac (following the parallel list in Josh 21:16) add "Juttah and its pasturelands" here. Cf. NAB "Jetta"; also NIV, NCV, NLT "Juttah."

[13] tn The parallel passage in Josh 21:17 adds "Gibeon and its pasturelands" (cf. NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT). The words "they were allotted" are supplied in the translation for both clarity and stylistic reasons.

[14] tn Heb "to the sons of Kohath who were left from the clan of the tribe, from the half of the tribe of the half of Manasseh by lot ten cities."

[15] tn Heb "and to the sons of Gershom by their clans from the tribe of Issachar, and from the tribe of Asher, and from the tribe of Naphtali, and from the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities."

[16] tn Heb "and to the sons of Merari by their clans from the tribe of Reuben, and from the tribe of Gad, and from the tribe of Zebulun by lot, twelve cities."

[18] tn Heb "and from [it is probably preferable to read "to" here] the clans of the sons of Kohath and there were the cities of their territory from the tribe of Ephraim."

[19] tn The parallel account in Josh 21:21 has the singular "city," referring only to Shechem.

[20] tn Heb "and from the half of the tribe of Manasseh, Aner and its pasturelands and Bileam and its pasturelands to the clan, to the sons of Kohath who were left."

[1] tn Heb "to the sons of Merari, who were left."

[2] tc Before "Rimmono" the LXX (following the parallel passage in Josh 21:34) adds "Jokneam and its pasturelands, Kartah and its pasturelands." This addition is included in some English versions (e.g., NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT).

[3] tn Heb "and from across the Jordan at Jericho, on the east of the Jordan, from the tribe of Reuben." The word "River" is supplied in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Many English versions spell this name "Ibsam."

[5] tn Many English versions retain a form of this name closer to the Hebrew, i.e., "Shemuel."

[6] tn Heb "heads of the house of their fathers."

[7] tn Heb "to Tola [there were] warriors by their generations, their number in the days of David [was] 22,600."

[8] tn The Hebrew text has the plural "sons," but only one son is listed.

[9] tn Heb "and unto them by their generations to the house of their fathers [were] troops of war of battle, 36,000, for they had many wives and sons."

[10] tn Heb "and their brothers, according to all the clans of Issachar, the warriors [were] 87,000 listed in the genealogical records for all."

[11] tc The Hebrew text has simply "Benjamin," but בְּנֵי (beney, "sons of") has dropped out by haplography (בְּנֵי בִנְיָמִן, beney binyamin).

[12] tn The Hebrew text has the plural "sons," but only one son is listed.

[13] tn The name "Aher" appears as "Ahiram" in Num 26:38.

[14] tn The name "Jahziel" appears as "Jahzeel" in Gen 46:24.

[15] tc Most Hebrew MSS read "Shallum"; some Hebrew MSS and some LXX MSS read "Shillem," the form of the name that appears in Gen 46:24 and Num 26:49.

[16] sn See the note on the word "concubine" in 1:32.

[17] tn Some translations treat the terms שֻׁפִּים (shuppim) and חֻפִּים (khuppim) as proper names of individuals ("Huppim" and "Shuppim"), but others consider these forms to be plurals and refer to tribal or clan names.

Zelophehad was Manasseh's second son;[1] he had only daughters.

7:16 Maacah, Makir's wife, gave birth to a son, whom she named Peresh. His brother was Sheresh, and his sons were Ulam and Rekem.

7:17 The son[2] of Ulam:

Bedan.

These were the sons of Gilead, son of Makir, son of Manasseh. 7:18 His sister Hammoleketh gave birth to Ishhod, Abiezer, and Mahlah.

7:19 The sons of Shemida were Ahian, Shechem, Likhi, and Aniam.

Ephraim[3] named him Beriah because tragedy had come to his family.[4] 7:24 His daughter was Sheerah, who built Lower and Upper Beth Horon, as well as Uzzen Sheerah), 7:25 his[5] son Rephah, his son Resheph,[6] his son Telah, his son Tahan, 7:26 his son Ladan, his son Ammihud, his son Elishama, 7:27 his son Nun,[7] and his son Joshua.

7:28 Their property and settlements included Bethel[8] and its surrounding towns, Naaran to the east, Gezer and its surrounding towns to the west, and Shechem and its surrounding towns as far as Ayyah and its surrounding towns. 7:29 On the border of Manasseh's territory were Beth Shean[9] and its surrounding towns, Taanach and its surrounding towns, Megiddo[10] and its surrounding towns, and Dor and its surrounding towns. Benjamin's Descendants (Continued)

[1] tn Heb "and the name of the second was Zelophehad."

[2] tn The Hebrew text has the plural "sons," but only one son is listed.

[3] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Ephraim) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Heb "because in tragedy there had come to his house." The preposition prefixed to רָעָה (ra'ah) should probably be omitted. The Hebrew noun רָעָה ("tragedy") should be understood as the subject of the feminine verb form that follows.

[5] tn The antecedent of the pronoun "his" is not clear. The translation assumes that v. 25 resumes the list of Ephraim's descendants (see vv. 20-21a) after a lengthy parenthesis (vv. 21b-24).

[6] tc The Hebrew text has simply "Resheph," but the phrase "his son" has probably been accidentally omitted, since the names before and after this one include the phrase.

[7] tn Heb "Non" (so KJV, NASB; cf. Exod 33:11, where the more familiar spelling "Nun" occurs).

[8] map For location see Map4-G4; Map5-C1; Map6-E3; Map7-D1; Map8-G3.

[10] map For location see Map1-D4; Map2-C1; Map4-C2; Map5-F2; Map7-B1.

[11] tc The Hebrew text has אֲחִי ('akhiy, "the brother of"), but this should probably be emended to אַחִיו ('akhiyv, "his brother"). Cf. v. 35. Most English versions treat this Hebrew word as a proper name ("Ahi") and list it before "Rohgah."

[12] tn Or "Shomer," cf. v. 32.

[13] tc "Hubbah" is the marginal reading (Qere); the consonantal text (Kethib) has "Jachbah."

[14] tn Or "Hotham," cf. v. 32.

[15] tn The name "Ithran" is sometimes understood to be another name for "Jether" (v. 38).

[16] tn Heb "all these were the sons of Asher, heads of the house of the fathers, selected, warriors, heads of the leaders, and there was listed in the genealogical records in war, in battle, their number, men, 26,000."

[17] sn Aharah is called "Ahiram" in Num 26:38.

Ahijah, and Gera, who moved them. Gera[1] was the father of Uzzah and Ahihud.

8:8 Shaharaim fathered sons in Moab after he divorced his wives Hushim and Baara. 8:9 By his wife Hodesh he fathered Jobab, Zibia, Mesha, Malkam, 8:10 Jeuz, Sakia, and Mirmah. These were his sons; they were family leaders. 8:11 By Hushim he fathered Abitub and Elpaal.

8:12 The sons of Elpaal:

Eber, Misham, Shemed (who built Ono and Lod, as well as its surrounding towns), 8:13 Beriah, and Shema. They were leaders of the families living in Aijalon and chased out the inhabitants of Gath.

8:14 Ahio, Shashak, Jeremoth, 8:15 Zebadiah, Arad, Eder, 8:16 Michael, Ishpah, and Joha were the sons of Beriah.

8:19 Jakim, Zikri, Zabdi, 8:20 Elienai, Zillethai, Eliel, 8:21 Adaiah, Beraiah, and Shimrath were the sons of Shimei.

8:22 Ishpan, Eber, Eliel, 8:23 Abdon, Zikri, Hanan, 8:24 Hananiah, Elam, Anthothijah, 8:25 Iphdeiah, and Penuel were the sons of Shashak.

8:26 Shamsherai, Shechariah, Athaliah, 8:27 Jaareshiah, Elijah, and Zikri were the sons of Jeroham. 8:28 These were the family leaders listed in the genealogical records; they lived in Jerusalem.[2]

8:29 The father of Gibeon[3] lived in Gibeon; his wife's name was Maacah. 8:30 His firstborn son was Abdon, followed by Zur, Kish, Baal,[4] Nadab, 8:31 Gedor, Ahio, Zeker, and Mikloth.[5]

8:32 Mikloth was the father of Shimeah. They also lived near their relatives in Jerusalem.[6]

8:33 Ner was the father of Kish, and Kish was the father of Saul. Saul was the father of Jonathan, Malki-Shua, Abinadab, and Eshbaal.[7]

8:34 The son of Jonathan:

Meribbaal.[8]

Meribbaal was the father of Micah.

8:35 The sons of Micah:

Pithon, Melech, Tarea, and Ahaz.

8:36 Ahaz was the father of Jehoaddah, and Jehoaddah was the father of Alemeth, Azmaveth, and Zimri. Zimri was the father of Moza, 8:37 and Moza was the father of Binea. His son was Raphah, whose son was Eleasah, whose son was Azel.

8:38 Azel had six sons: Azrikam his firstborn,[9] followed by Ishmael, Sheariah,[10] Obadiah, and Hanan. All these were the sons of Azel.

8:39 The sons of his brother Eshek:

Ulam was his firstborn, Jeush second, and Eliphelet third. 8:40 The sons of Ulam were warriors who were adept archers.[11] They had many sons and grandsons, a total of 150.

All these were the descendants of Benjamin.

9:1 Genealogical records were kept for all Israel; they are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Israel.

Exiles Who Resettled in Jerusalem

The people of Judah[12] were carried away to Babylon because of their unfaithfulness. 9:2 The first to resettle on their property and in their cities were some Israelites, priests, Levites, and temple servants.[13] 9:3 Some from the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Ephraim and Manasseh settled in Jerusalem.[14]

9:4 The settlers included:[15] Uthai son of Ammihud, son of Omri, son of Imri, son of Bani, who was a descendant of Perez son of Judah.

9:5 From the Shilonites: Asaiah the firstborn and his sons.

9:6 From the descendants of Zerah: Jeuel.

Their relatives numbered 690.

9:7 From the descendants of Benjamin:

Sallu son of Meshullam, son of Hodaviah, son of Hassenuah; 9:8 Ibneiah son of Jeroham; Elah son of Uzzi, son of Mikri; and Meshullam son of Shephatiah, son of Reuel, son of Ibnijah.

[1] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Gera) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[3] tc Some LXX MSS supply the name "Jeiel," which is not in the MT (cf. 1 Chr 9:35). The addition of the name here is followed by many English versions (e.g., ASV, NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT).

[4] tc Some LXX MSS add "Ner" here (cf. 1 Chr 9:36 and v. 33 below, where Ner is mentioned as the father of Kish). The form וְנֵר (v^{e}ner) could have been accidentally omitted by homoioarcton since each name in the list has the conjunction prefixed to it. Some English versions follow the LXX here and add "Ner" (e.g., NAB, NIV, NLT).

[5] tc The Hebrew text omits the name "Mikloth," but it may have fallen out accidentally by haplography. Note that the name immediately follows at the beginning of v. 32; cf. NAB.

[6] tn Heb "and also they, opposite their brothers, lived in Jerusalem with their brothers." This redundancy has been removed in the translation.

[7] sn Eshbaal is called "Ishbosheth" in 2 Sam 2:8.

[8] sn Meribbaal is called "Mephibosheth" in 2 Sam 4:4.

[9] tc The Hebrew text has בֹּכְרוֹ (bokh^{e}ru), which some understand as a name: "Bocheru" (so, e.g., NEB, NASB, NIV, NRSV). But the form should probably be revocalized בְּכֹרוֹ (b^{e}khoru, "his firstborn"). A name has accidentally dropped from the list, and a scribe apparently read בְּכֹרוֹ as one of the names.

[10] tc The Lucianic recension of the LXX inserts another name here, καὶ Ἀζαριας (kai Azarias, "and Azariah"), presumably to make up the six sons mentioned at the beginning of the verse (see the previous tc note on "firstborn"). Cf. NAB.

[11] tn Heb "and the sons of Ulam were men, warriors and treaders of a bow."

[12] tn The Hebrew text has simply "Judah," though the verb הָגְלוּ (hoglu, "carried away") is plural.

[13] tn Heb "and the inhabitants, the first who [were] in their property in their cities, Israel, the priests, the Levites, and the temple servants."

[15] tn The words "the settlers included" are supplied in the translation for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

9:9 Their relatives, listed in their genealogical records, numbered 956. All these men were leaders of their families.[1]

9:10 From the priests:

Jedaiah; Jehoiarib; Jakin; 9:11 Azariah son of Hilkiah, son of Meshullam, son of Zadok, son of Meraioth, son of Ahitub the leader in God's temple; 9:12 Adaiah son of Jeroham, son of Pashhur, son of Malkijah; and Maasai son of Adiel, son of Jahzerah, son of Meshullam, son of Meshillemith, son of Immer.

9:13 Their relatives, who were leaders of their families, numbered 1,760. They were capable men who were assigned to carry out the various tasks of service in God's temple.[2]

9:14 From the Levites:

Shemaiah son of Hasshub, son of Azrikam, son of Hashabiah a descendant of Merari; 9:15 Bakbakkar; Heresh; Galal; Mattaniah son of Mika, son of Zikri, son of Asaph; 9:16 Obadiah son of Shemaiah, son of Galal, son of Jeduthun; and Berechiah son of Asa, son of Elkanah, who lived among the settlements of the Netophathites.

9:17 The gatekeepers were:

Shallum, Akkub, Talmon, Ahiman, and their brothers. Shallum was the leader; 9:18 he serves to this day at the King's Gate on the east. These were the gatekeepers from the camp of the descendants of Levi.

9:19 Shallum son of Kore, son of Ebiasaph, son of Korah, and his relatives from his family (the Korahites) were assigned to guard the entrance to the sanctuary.[3] Their ancestors had guarded the entrance to the LORD's dwelling place.[4] 9:20 Phinehas son of Eleazar had been their leader in earlier times, and the LORD was with him. 9:21 Zechariah son of Meshelemiah was the guard at the entrance to the meeting tent.

9:22 All those selected to be gatekeepers at the entrances numbered 212. Their names were recorded in the genealogical records of their settlements. David and Samuel the prophet[5] had appointed them to their positions.[6] 9:23 They and their descendants were assigned to guard the gates of the LORD's sanctuary (that is, the tabernacle).[7] 9:24 The gatekeepers were posted on all four sides – east, west, north, and south. 9:25 Their relatives, who lived in their settlements, came from time to time and served with them for seven-day periods. 9:26 The four head gatekeepers, who were Levites, were assigned to guard the storerooms and treasuries in God's sanctuary.[8] 9:27 They would spend the night in their posts all around God's sanctuary,[9] for they were assigned to guard it and would open it with the key every morning. 9:28 Some of them were in charge of the articles used by those who served; they counted them when they brought them in and when they brought them out.[10] 9:29 Some of them were in charge of the equipment and articles of the sanctuary,[11] as well as the flour, wine, olive oil, incense, and spices. 9:30 (But some of the priests mixed the spices.) 9:31 Mattithiah, a Levite, the firstborn son[12] of Shallum the Korahite, was in charge of baking the bread for offerings. 9:32 Some of the Kohathites, their relatives, were in charge of preparing the bread that is displayed each Sabbath.

9:33 The musicians and Levite family leaders stayed in rooms at the sanctuary[13] and were exempt from other duties, for day and night they had to carry out their assigned tasks. 9:34 These were the family leaders of the Levites, as listed in their genealogical records. They lived in Jerusalem.

Jeiel's Descendants

9:35 Jeiel (the father of Gibeon) lived in Gibeon. His wife was Maacah. 9:36 His firstborn son was Abdon, followed by Zur, Kish, Baal, Ner, Nadab, 9:37 Gedor, Ahio, Zechariah, and Mikloth. 9:38 Mikloth was the father of Shimeam. They also lived near their relatives in Jerusalem.[14]

9:39 Ner was the father of Kish, and Kish was the father of Saul. Saul was the father of Jonathan, Malki-Shua, Abinadab, and Eshbaal.[15]

9:40 The son of Jonathan:

Meribbaal,[16] who was the father of Micah.

Saul's Death

10:1 Now the Philistines fought against Israel. The Israelites fled before the Philistines and many of them fell dead on Mount Gilboa. 10:2 The Philistines stayed right on the heels of[4] Saul and his sons. They[5] struck down Saul's[6] sons Jonathan, Abinadab, and Malki-Shua. 10:3 The battle was thick[7] around Saul; the archers spotted him and wounded him.[8] 10:4 Saul told his armor bearer, "Draw your sword and stab me with it. Otherwise these uncircumcised people will come and torture me."[9] But his armor bearer refused to do it, because he was very afraid. So Saul took the sword and fell on it. 10:5 When his armor bearer saw that Saul was dead, he also fell on his sword and died. 10:6 So Saul and his three sons died; his whole household[10] died together. 10:7 When all the Israelites who were in the valley saw that the army[11] had fled and that Saul and his sons were dead, they abandoned their cities and fled. The Philistines came and occupied them.

10:8 The next day, when the Philistines came to strip loot from the corpses, they discovered Saul and his sons lying dead on Mount Gilboa. 10:9 They stripped his corpse, and then carried off his head and his armor. They sent messengers throughout the land of the Philistines proclaiming the news to their idols and their people. 10:10 They placed his armor in the temple of their gods[12] and hung his head in the temple of Dagon. 10:11 When all the residents of Jabesh Gilead heard about everything the Philistines had done to Saul, 10:12 all the warriors went and recovered the bodies of Saul and his sons[13] and brought them to Jabesh. They buried their remains[14] under the oak tree in Jabesh and fasted for seven days.

10:13 So Saul died because he was unfaithful to the LORD and did not obey the LORD's instructions; he even tried to conjure up underworld spirits.[15] 10:14 He did not seek the LORD's guidance, so the LORD[16] killed him and transferred the kingdom to David son of Jesse.

David Becomes King

11:1 All Israel joined David at Hebron and said, "Look, we are your very flesh and blood![17] 11:2 In the past, even when Saul was king, you were Israel's commanding general.[18] The LORD your God said to you, 'You will shepherd my people Israel; you will rule over my people Israel.'" 11:3 When all the leaders[19] of Israel came to the king at Hebron, David made an agreement[20] with them in Hebron before the LORD.

[1] tc The name "Ahaz" is included in the Vulgate and Syriac, but omitted in the MT. It probably was accidentally omitted by haplography. Note that the name appears at the beginning of the next verse. Cf. also 8:35.

[2] tc So MT; some Hebrew MSS and the LXX read "Jadah" (cf. NIV, NCV, NLT) while in 8:36 the name "Jehoaddah' appears (cf. NAB).

[3] tc The Hebrew text has בְּכֹרוֹ (bokh^{e}ru), which some understand as a name: "Bocheru" (so, e.g., NEB, NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). But the form should probably be revocalized בְּכֹרוֹ (b^{e}khoro, "his firstborn"). A name has accidentally dropped from the list, and a scribe apparently read בְּכֹרוֹ as one of the names. Cf. also 1 Chr 8:38.

[10] tn Heb "all his house." This is probably to be understood as a general summary statement. It could include other males in Saul's household besides his three sons, cf. 1 Sam 31:6. If it refers only to the male members of his household who would have stood in succession to the throne (cf. NLT, "bringing his dynasty to an end,") even here there is an exception, since one of Saul's sons, Eshbaal (or "Ishbosheth" in 2 Sam 2:8) was not killed in the battle and became king over Israel, which he ruled for two years (2 Sam 2:10) until he was assassinated by Rechab and Baanah (2 Sam 4:5-6). The tribe of Judah never acknowledged Ishbosheth as king; instead they followed David (2 Sam 2:10).

[11] tn Heb "they"; the referent (the army) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Heb "and Saul died because of his unfaithfulness by which he acted unfaithfully against the LORD, concerning the word of the LORD which he did not keep, also to Saul, a ritual pit to seek." The text alludes to the incident recorded in 1 Sam 28. The Hebrew term אוֹב ('ov, "ritual pit") refers to a pit used by a magician to conjure up underworld spirits. In 1 Sam 28:7 the witch of Endor is called a בַּעֲלַת־אוֹב (ba'alat-'ov, "owner of a ritual pit"). See H. A. Hoffner, "Second Millennium Antecedents to the Hebrew 'ôb," JBL 86 (1967): 385-401.

They anointed[1] David king over Israel, just as the LORD had announced through Samuel.[2]

David Conquers Jerusalem

11:4 David and the whole Israelite army[3] advanced to Jerusalem (that is, Jebus).[4] (The Jebusites, the land's original inhabitants, lived there.)[5] 11:5 The residents of Jebus said to David, "You cannot invade this place!" But David captured the fortress of Zion (that is, the City of David). 11:6[6] David said, "Whoever attacks[7] the Jebusites first will become commanding general!"[8] So Joab son of Zeruiah attacked[9] first and became commander.[10] 11:7 David lived in the fortress; for this reason it is called the City of David. 11:8 He built up the city around it, from the terrace to the surrounding walls;[11] Joab restored the rest of the city. 11:9 David's power steadily grew, for the LORD who commands armies was with him.[12]

David's Warriors

11:10 These were the leaders of David's warriors who helped establish and stabilize his rule over all Israel, in accordance with the LORD's word.[13] 11:11 This is the list of David's warriors:[14]

Jashobeam, a Hacmonite, was head of the officers.[15] He killed three hundred men with his spear in a single battle.[16]

11:12 Next in command[17] was Eleazar son of Dodo the Ahohite. He was one of the three elite warriors. 11:13 He was with David in Pas Dammim[18] when the Philistines assembled there for battle. In an area of the field that was full of barley, the army retreated before the Philistines, 11:14 but then they made a stand in the middle of that area. They defended it[19] and defeated the Philistines; the LORD gave them a great victory.[20]

11:15 Three of the thirty leaders went down to David at the rocky cliff at the cave of Adullam, while a Philistine force was camped in the Valley of Rephaim. 11:16 David was in the stronghold at the time, while a Philistine garrison was in Bethlehem.[21] 11:17 David was thirsty and said, "How I wish someone would give me some water to drink[22] from the cistern in Bethlehem near the city gate!" 11:18 So the three elite warriors[23] broke through the Philistine forces and drew some water from the cistern in Bethlehem near the city gate. They carried it back to David, but David refused to drink it. He poured it out as a drink offering to the LORD 11:19 and said, "God forbid that I should do this![24] Should I drink the blood of these men who risked their lives?"[25] Because they risked their lives to bring it to him, he refused to drink it. Such were the exploits of the three elite warriors.[26]

11:20 Abishai the brother of Joab was head of the three[27] elite warriors. He killed three hundred men with his spear[28] and gained fame along with the three elite warriors.[29] 11:21 From[30] the three he was given double honor and he became their officer, even though he was not one of them.[31]

11:22 Benaiah son of Jehoiada was a brave warrior from Kabzeel who performed great exploits. He struck down the two sons of Ariel of Moab;[32] he also went down and killed a lion inside a cistern on a snowy day. 11:23 He even

He grabbed the spear out of the Egyptian's hand and killed him with his own spear. 11:24 Such were the exploits of Benaiah son of Jehoiada, who gained fame along with the three elite warriors. 11:25 He received honor from[3] the thirty warriors, though he was not one of the three elite warriors. David put him in charge of his bodyguard.

Warriors Who Joined David at Ziklag

12:1 These were the men who joined David in Ziklag, when he was banished[19] from the presence of Saul son of Kish. (They were among the warriors who assisted him in battle. 12:2 They were armed with bows and could shoot arrows or sling stones right or left-handed. They were fellow tribesmen of Saul from Benjamin.[20]) These were:[21]

12:3 Ahiezer, the leader, and Joash, the sons of Shemaah the Gibeathite; Jeziel and Pelet, the sons of Azmaveth; Berachah,
Jehu the Anathothite,
12:4 Ishmaiah the Gibeonite, one of the thirty warriors and their leader, [22] sn In the Hebrew text (BHS) a verse division occurs at this point, and for the remainder of the chapter the verse numbers of the Hebrew Bible differ by one from the English Bible. Thus 1 Chr 12:4b ET = 12:5 HT, and 12:5-40 ET = 12:6-41 HT. Beginning with 13:1 the verse numbers in the ET and HT are again the same.

Jozabad the Gederathite,
12:5 (12:6) Eluzai,
Jerimoth, Bealiah,
Shemariah,
Shephatiah the Haruphite,
12:6 Elkanah, Isshiah, Azarel, Joezer, and Jashobeam, who were Korahites, 12:7 and Joelah and Zebadiah, the sons of Jeroham from Gedor.

12:8 Some of the Gadites joined David at the stronghold in the desert. They were warriors who were trained for battle; they carried shields and spears. They were as fierce as lions and could run as quickly as gazelles across the hills.[1] 12:9 Ezer was the leader, Obadiah the second in command, Eliab the third, 12:10 Mishmannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth, 12:11 Attai the sixth, Eliel the seventh, 12:12 Johanan the eighth, Elzabad the ninth, 12:13 Jeremiah the tenth, and Machbannai the eleventh. 12:14 These Gadites were military leaders; the least led a hundred men, the greatest a thousand.[2] 12:15 They crossed the Jordan River[3] in the first month,[4] when it was overflowing its banks, and routed those living in all the valleys to the east and west.[5]

12:16 Some from Benjamin and Judah also came to David's stronghold. 12:17 David went out to meet them and said,[6] "If you come to me in peace and want to help me, then I will make an alliance with you.[7] But if you come to betray me to my enemies when I have not harmed you,[8] may the God of our ancestors[9] take notice and judge!" 12:18 But a spirit[10] empowered[11] Amasai, the leader of the thirty warriors, and he said:[12]

"We are yours, O David!
We support[13] you, O son of Jesse!
May you greatly prosper![14]
May those who help you prosper![15]
Indeed[16] your God helps you!"

So David accepted them and made them leaders of raiding bands.

12:19 Some men from Manasseh joined[17] David when he went with the Philistines to fight against Saul. (But in the end they did not help the Philistines because, after taking counsel, the Philistine lords sent David away, saying: "It would be disastrous for us if he deserts to his master Saul.")[18] 12:20 When David[19] went to Ziklag, the men of Manasseh who joined him were Adnach, Jozabad, Jediael, Michael, Jozabad, Elihu, and Zillethai, leaders of a thousand soldiers each in the tribe of Manasseh. 12:21 They helped David fight against raiding bands, for all of them were warriors and leaders in the army. 12:22 Each day men came to help David until his army became very large.[20]

Support for David in Hebron

12:23 The following is a record of the armed warriors who came with their leaders and joined David in Hebron in order to make David king in Saul's place, in accordance with the LORD's decree:[21]

12:24 From Judah came 6,800 trained warriors carrying shields and spears.[22]

12:25 From Simeon there were 7,100 warriors.

12:26 From Levi there were 4,600. 12:27 Jehoiada, the leader of Aaron's descendants, brought 3,700 men with him, 12:28 along with Zadok, a young warrior, and twenty-two leaders from his family.

12:29 From Benjamin, Saul's tribe,[23] there were 3,000, most of whom, up to that time, had been loyal to Saul.[24]

12:30 From Ephraim there were 20,800 warriors, who had brought fame to their families.[25]

12:31 From the half tribe of Manasseh there were 18,000 who had been designated by name to come and make David king.

12:32 From Issachar there were 200 leaders and all their relatives at their command – they understood the times and knew what Israel should do.[1]

12:33 From Zebulun there were 50,000 warriors who were prepared for battle, equipped with all kinds of weapons, and ready to give their undivided loyalty.[2]

12:34 From Naphtali there were 1,000 officers, along with 37,000 men carrying shields and spears.

12:35 From Dan there were 28,600 men prepared for battle.

12:36 From Asher there were 40,000 warriors prepared for battle.

12:37 From the other side of the Jordan, from Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, there were 120,000 men armed with all kinds of weapons.

12:38 All these men were warriors who were ready to march.[3] They came to Hebron to make David king over all Israel by acclamation;[4] all the rest of the Israelites also were in agreement that David should become king.[5] 12:39 They spent three days feasting[6] there with David, for their relatives had given them provisions. 12:40 Also their neighbors, from as far away as Issachar, Zebulun, and Naphtali, were bringing food on donkeys, camels, mules, and oxen. There were large supplies of flour, fig cakes, raisins, wine, olive oil, beef, and lamb,[7] for Israel was celebrating.[8]

Uzzah Meets Disaster

13:1 David consulted with his military officers, including those who led groups of a thousand and those who led groups of a hundred.[9] 13:2 David said to the whole Israelite assembly, "If you so desire and the LORD our God approves,[10] let's spread the word[11] to our brothers who remain in all the regions of Israel, and to the priests and Levites in their cities,[12] so they may join us. 13:3 Let's move the ark of our God back here,[13] for we did not seek his will[14] throughout Saul's reign."[15] 13:4 The whole assembly agreed to do this,[16] for the proposal seemed right to all the people.[17] 13:5 So David assembled all Israel from the Shihor River[18] in Egypt to Lebo Hamath,[19] to bring the ark of God from Kiriath Jearim. 13:6 David and all Israel went up to Baalah (that is, Kiriath Jearim) in Judah to bring up from there the ark of God the LORD, who sits enthroned between the cherubim – the ark that is called by his name.[20]

13:7 They transported the ark on a new cart from the house of Abinadab; Uzzah and Ahio were guiding the cart, 13:8 while David and all Israel were energetically[21] celebrating before God, singing and playing various stringed instruments,[22] tambourines, cymbals, and trumpets. 13:9 When they arrived at the threshing floor of Kidon, Uzzah reached out his hand to take hold of[23] the ark, because the oxen stumbled. 13:10 The LORD was so furious with Uzzah,[24] he killed him, because he reached out his hand and touched the ark.[25] He died right there before God.[26]

13:11 David was angry because the LORD attacked Uzzah;[27] so he called that place Perez Uzzah,[28] which remains its name to this very day. 13:12 David was afraid of God that day and

[3] tc Heb "all these [were] men of war, helpers of the battle line." The present translation assumes an emendation of עֹדְרֵי ('od^{e}rey, "helpers of") to עֹרְכֵי, ('or^{e}khey, "prepared for").

[4] tn Heb "with a complete heart they came to Hebron to make David king over all Israel."

[5] tn Heb "and also all the rest of Israel [was of] one mind to make David king."

[6] tn Heb "eating and drinking."

[7] tn Heb "cattle and sheep."

[8] tn Heb "for there was joy in Israel."

[9] tn Heb "and David consulted with the officers of thousands and hundreds, to every ruler."

[10] tn Heb "If to you [it is] good and from the LORD our God."

[11] tn Heb "let us spread and let us send." The words "the word" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

[12] tn Heb "in the cities of their pasturelands."

[13] tn Heb "to us."

[14] tn Heb "him." In this case, seeking God's will is what is implied.

[15] tn Heb "in the days of Saul."

[16] tn Heb "all the assembly said to do so."

[17] tn Heb "for right was the word in the eyes of all the people."

[18] tn The word "River" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied for clarity.

sn The Shihor River was a river on the border of Egypt, probably the eastern branch of the Nile.

[19] tn Or "the entrance to Hamath."

[20] tn Heb "the ark of God the LORD who sits [between] the cherubim which is called [by his] name."

[21] tn Heb "with all strength."

[22] tn Heb "with songs and with zithers [meaning uncertain] and with harps." Due to the collocation with "harps," some type of stringed instrument is probably in view.

[23] tn Or "to steady."

[24] tn Heb "and the anger of the LORD burned against Uzzah."

[25] tn Heb "because he stretched out his hand over the ark."

[26] sn The modern reader might think God seemed to overreact here, but Israel needed a vivid object lesson of God's holiness. By loading the ark on a cart, David had violated the instructions in God's law (Exod 25:12-14; Num 4:5-6, 15). Uzzah's action, however innocent it may seem, betrayed a certain lack of reverence for God's presence. God had to remind his people that his holiness could not under any circumstances be violated.

[28] sn The name Perez Uzzah means in Hebrew "the outburst [against] Uzzah."

said, "How will I ever be able to bring the ark of God up here?" 13:13 So David did not move the ark to the City of David;[1] he left it in the house of Obed-Edom the Gittite. 13:14 The ark of God remained in Obed-Edom's house for three months; the LORD blessed Obed-Edom's family and everything that belonged to him.

David's Prestige Grows

14:1 King Hiram of Tyre[2] sent messengers to David, along with cedar logs, stonemasons,[3] and carpenters to build a palace for him. 14:2 David realized that the LORD had established him as king over Israel and that he had elevated[4] his kingdom for the sake of his people Israel.

14:3 In Jerusalem[5] David married[6] more wives and fathered more sons and daughters. 14:4 These are the names of children born to him in Jerusalem: Shammua, Shobab, Nathan, Solomon, 14:5 Ibhar, Elishua, Elpelet, 14:6 Nogah, Nepheg, Japhia, 14:7 Elishama, Beeliada,[7] and Eliphelet.

14:8 When the Philistines heard that David had been anointed[8] king of all Israel, all the Philistines marched up to confront him.[9] When David heard about it, he marched out against[10] them. 14:9 Now the Philistines had come and raided[11] the Valley of Rephaim. 14:10 David asked God, "Should I march up against the Philistines? Will you hand them over to me?" The LORD said to him, "March up! I will hand them over to you!" 14:11 So they marched against Baal Perazim and David defeated them there. David said, "Using me as his instrument,[12] God has burst out against my enemies like water bursts out." So that place is called Baal Perazim.[13] 14:12 The Philistines left[14] their idols[15] there, so David ordered that they be burned.

14:13 The Philistines again raided the valley. 14:14 So David again asked God what he should do.[16] This time[17] God told him, "Don't march up after them; circle around them and come against them in front of the trees.[18] 14:15 When you hear the sound of marching in the tops of the trees, then attack.[19] For at that moment the LORD is going before you to strike down the army[20] of the Philistines." 14:16 David did just as God commanded him, and they struck down the Philistine army from Gibeon to Gezer.

14:17 So David became famous[21] in all the lands; the LORD caused all the nations to fear him.[22]

David Brings the Ark to Jerusalem

15:1 David constructed buildings in the City of David; he then prepared a place for the ark of God and pitched a tent for it. 15:2 Then David said, "Only the Levites may carry the ark of God, for the LORD chose them to carry the ark of the LORD and to serve before him perpetually. 15:3 David assembled all Israel at Jerusalem[23] to bring the ark of the LORD up to the place he had prepared for it. 15:4 David gathered together the descendants of Aaron and the Levites:

15:5 From the descendants of Kohath: Uriel the leader and 120 of his relatives.

15:6 From the descendants of Merari: Asaiah the leader and 220 of his relatives.

15:7 From the descendants of Gershom:[24] Joel the leader and 130 of his relatives.

15:8 From the descendants of Elizaphan: Shemaiah the leader and 200 of his relatives.

15:9 From the descendants of Hebron: Eliel the leader and 80 of his relatives.

15:10 From the descendants of Uzziel: Amminadab the leader and 112 of his relatives.

15:11 David summoned the priests Zadok and Abiathar, along with the Levites Uriel, Asaiah, Joel, Shemaiah, Eliel, and Amminadab. 15:12 He told them: "You are the leaders of the Levites' families. You and your relatives must consecrate yourselves and bring the ark of the LORD God of Israel up to the place I have prepared for it. 15:13 The first time you did not carry it; that is why the LORD God attacked us, because we did not ask him about the proper way to carry it."[25] 15:14 The priests and Levites consecrated themselves so they could bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel. 15:15 The descendants of Levi carried the ark of God on their shoulders with poles, just as Moses had ordered according to the divine command.

15:16 David told the leaders of the Levites to appoint some of their relatives as musicians; they were to play various instruments, including stringed instruments and cymbals, and to sing loudly and joyfully.[1] 15:17 So the Levites appointed Heman son of Joel; one of his relatives, Asaph son of Berechiah; one of the descendants of Merari,[2] Ethan son of Kushaiah; 15:18 along with some of their relatives who were second in rank, including Zechariah,[3] Jaaziel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Unni, Eliab, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattithiah, Eliphelehu, Mikneiah, Obed-Edom, and Jeiel, the gatekeepers.

15:19 The musicians Heman, Asaph, and Ethan were to sound the bronze cymbals; 15:20 Zechariah, Aziel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Unni, Eliab, Maaseiah, and Benaiah were to play the harps according to the alamoth style;[4] 15:21 Mattithiah, Eliphelehu, Mikneiah, Obed-Edom, Jeiel, and Azaziah were to play the lyres according to the sheminith style,[5] as led by[6] the director; 15:22 Kenaniah, the leader of the Levites, was in charge of transport, for he was well-informed on this matter;[7] 15:23 Berechiah and Elkanah were guardians[8] of the ark; 15:24 Shebaniah, Joshaphat, Nethanel, Amasai, Zechariah, Benaiah, and Eliezer the priests were to blow the trumpets before the ark of God; Obed-Edom and Jehiel were also guardians[9] of the ark.

15:25 So David, the leaders of Israel, and the commanders of units of a thousand went to bring up the ark of the LORD's covenant from the house of Obed-Edom with celebration. 15:26 When God helped the Levites who were carrying the ark of the LORD's covenant, they sacrificed seven bulls and seven rams. 15:27 David was wrapped in a linen robe, as were all the Levites carrying the ark, the musicians, and Kenaniah the supervisor of transport and the musicians;[10] David also wore a linen ephod.[11] 15:28 All Israel brought up the ark of the LORD's covenant; they were shouting, blowing trumpets, sounding cymbals, and playing stringed instruments. 15:29 As the ark of the LORD's covenant entered the City of David, Michal, Saul's daughter, looked out the window. When she saw King David jumping and celebrating, she despised him.[12]

David Leads in Worship

16:1 They brought the ark of God and put it in the middle of the tent David had pitched for it. Then they offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings[13] before God. 16:2 When David finished offering burnt sacrifices and peace offerings, he pronounced a blessing over the people in the LORD's name. 16:3 He then handed out to each Israelite man and woman a loaf of bread, a date cake, and a raisin cake. 16:4 He appointed some of the Levites to serve before the ark of the LORD, to offer prayers, songs of thanks, and hymns to the LORD God of Israel. 16:5 Asaph was the leader and Zechariah second in command, followed by Jeiel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Mattithiah, Eliab, Benaiah, Obed-Edom, and Jeiel. They were to play stringed instruments; Asaph was to sound the cymbals; 16:6 and the priests Benaiah and Jahaziel were to blow trumpets regularly before the ark of God's covenant.

David Thanks God

16:7 That day David first gave to Asaph and his colleagues this song of thanks to the LORD:

16:8 Give thanks to the LORD!
Call on his name!
Make known his accomplishments
among the nations!
16:9 Sing to him! Make music to him!
Tell about all his miraculous deeds!
16:10 Boast about his holy name!
Let the hearts of those who seek the LORD rejoice!
16:11 Seek the LORD and the strength he gives!
Seek his presence[14] continually!
16:12 Recall the miraculous deeds he performed, his mighty acts and the judgments he decreed,[15]

[1] tn Heb "causing to be heard to lift up with a voice of joy."

[2] tn The Hebrew text adds, "their brothers."

[3] tc The Hebrew text adds בֶּן (ben, "son") here; the word is omitted in three Hebrew MSS and most LXX MSS. If the word is original, perhaps the name of Zechariah's father was accidentally omitted. Some English versions treat the word as an additional name in the list ("Ben"; e.g., KJV, ASV, NASB).

[4] tn The meaning of the Hebrew word עֲלָמוֹת ('alamot) is uncertain; perhaps it refers to a particular style of music. See HALOT 835-36 s.v. עַלְמָה.

[5] tn The meaning of the Hebrew word שְׁמִינִית (sh^{e}minit) is uncertain; perhaps it refers to a particular style of music. See HALOT 1562 s.v. שְׁמִינִי.

[6] tn Heb "for" or "according to."

[7] tn Heb "and Kenaniah, the leader of the Levites, with lifting up, supervising with lifting up, for he was well-informed." The precise nuance of מַשָּׂא (masa', "lifting up") is unclear. Some understand it as a reference to supervising the singing and music (e.g., NIV: "Kenaniah...was in charge of the singing"; NEB: "Kenaniah...was precentor in charge of the music").

[8] tn Heb "gatekeepers."

[9] tn Heb "gatekeepers."

[12] tn The Hebrew text adds "in her heart."

[13] tn Or "tokens of peace"; NIV "fellowship offerings."

[14] tn Heb "face."

[15] tn Heb "and the judgments of his mouth."

16:13 O children[1] of Israel, God's[2] servant, you descendants of Jacob, God's[3] chosen ones!
16:14 He is the LORD our God;
he carries out judgment throughout the earth.[4] 16:15 Remember[5] continually his covenantal decree, the promise he made[6] to a thousand generations – 16:16 the promise[7] he made to Abraham, the promise he made by oath to Isaac![8] 16:17 He gave it to Jacob as a decree, to Israel as a lasting promise,[9] 16:18 saying, "To you I will give the land of Canaan as the portion of your inheritance."
16:19 When they were few in number,
just a very few, and foreign residents within it, 16:20 they wandered from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another.[10] 16:21 He let no one oppress them, he disciplined kings for their sake,
16:22 saying,[11] "Don't touch my anointed ones!
Don't harm my prophets!"
16:23 Sing to the LORD, all the earth!
Announce every day[12] how he delivers!
16:24 Tell the nations about his splendor, tell[13] all the nations about his miraculous deeds!
16:25 For the LORD is great and certainly worthy of praise, he is more awesome than[14] all gods.
16:26 For all the gods of the nations are worthless,[15]
but the LORD made the heavens.[16] 16:27 Majestic splendor emanates from him,[17]
he is the source of strength and joy.[18] 16:28 Ascribe to the LORD, O families of the nations, ascribe to the LORD splendor and strength!
16:29 Ascribe to the LORD the splendor he deserves![19]
Bring an offering and enter his presence!
Worship the LORD in holy attire![20]
16:30 Tremble before him, all the earth!
The world is established, it cannot be moved.
16:31 Let the heavens rejoice, and the earth be happy!
Let the nations say,[21] 'The LORD reigns!'
16:32 Let the sea and everything in it shout!
Let the fields and everything in them celebrate!
16:33 Then let the trees of the forest shout with joy before the LORD, for he comes to judge the earth!
16:34 Give thanks to the LORD, for he is good and his loyal love endures.[22]
16:35 Say this prayer:[23] "Deliver us, O God who delivers us!
Gather us! Rescue us from the nations!
Then we will give thanks[24] to your holy name, and boast about your praiseworthy deeds."[25] 16:36 May the LORD God of Israel be praised, in the future and forevermore.[26]
Then all the people said, "We agree![27] Praise the LORD!"

[5] tn The Hebrew text has a masculine plural imperative, addressed to the people. Some LXX MSS harmonize the wording here to Ps 105:8, which has זָכַר (zakhar), the perfect third masculine singular form of the verb, "He (the LORD) remembers" (so NIV; NEB reads "He called to mind his covenant").

[6] tn Heb "[the] word he commanded." The text refers here to God's unconditional covenantal promise to Abraham and the patriarchs, as vv. 16-18 make clear.

[13] tn The verb "tell" is understood by ellipsis (note the preceding line).

[14] tn Or "feared above."

[15] tn The Hebrew word אֱלִילִים ('elilim, "worthless") sounds like אֱלֹהִים ('elohim, "gods"). The sound play draws attention to the statement. Many modern English translations render this term as "idols" here.

David Appoints Worship Leaders

16:37 David[1] left Asaph and his colleagues there before the ark of the LORD's covenant to serve before the ark regularly and fulfill each day's requirements,[2] 16:38 including Obed-Edom and sixty-eight colleagues. Obed-Edom son of Jeduthun and Hosah were gatekeepers. 16:39 Zadok the priest and his fellow priests served[3] before the LORD's tabernacle at the worship center[4] in Gibeon, 16:40 regularly offering burnt sacrifices to the LORD on the altar for burnt sacrifice, morning and evening, according to what is prescribed in the law of the LORD which he charged Israel to observe.[5] 16:41 Joining them were Heman, Jeduthun, and the rest of those chosen and designated by name to give thanks to the LORD. (For his loyal love endures!)[6] 16:42 Heman and Jeduthun were in charge of the music, including the trumpets, cymbals, and the other musical instruments used in praising God. The sons of Jeduthun guarded the entrance.[7]

16:43 Then all the people returned to their homes, and David went to pronounce a blessing on his family.[8]

God Makes a Promise to David

17:1 When David had settled into his palace,[9] he[10] said to Nathan the prophet, "Look, I am living in a palace[11] made from cedar, while the ark of the LORD's covenant is under a tent."[12] 17:2 Nathan said to David, "You should do whatever you have in mind,[13] for God is with you."

17:3 That night God told Nathan the prophet,[14] 17:4 "Go, tell my servant David: 'This is what the LORD says: "You must not build me a house in which to live. 17:5 For I have not lived in a house from the time I brought Israel up from Egypt[15] to the present day. I have lived in a tent that has been in various places.[16] 17:6 Wherever I moved throughout Israel, I did not say[17] to any of the leaders whom I appointed to care for my people Israel,[18] 'Why have you not built me a house made from cedar?'"'

17:7 "So now, say this to my servant David: 'This is what the LORD who commands armies[19] says: "I took you from the pasture and from your work as a shepherd[20] to make you a leader of my people Israel. 17:8 I was with you wherever you went and I defeated[21] all your enemies before you. Now I will make you as famous as the great men of the earth.[22] 17:9 I will establish a place for my people Israel and settle[23] them there; they will live there and not be disturbed[24] anymore. Violent men will not oppress them again, as they did in the beginning[25] 17:10 and during the time when I appointed judges to lead my people Israel. I will subdue all your enemies.

"'"I declare to you that the LORD will build a dynastic house[26] for you! 17:11 When the time comes for you to die,[27] I will raise up your descendant,[28] one of your own sons, to succeed you, and I will establish his kingdom. 17:12 He will build me a house, and I will make his

[1] tn Heb "he"; the referent (David) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Heb "according to the matter of the day in its day."

[3] tn The word "served" is supplied in the translation for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

[4] tn Or "high place."

[5] tn Heb "which he commanded Israel."

[6] tn Perhaps this refers to the refrain of their songs of praise (see Ps 136). In this case one could translate, "to give thanks to the LORD with songs using the refrain, 'For his loyal love endures.'"

[7] tn Heb "and with them, Heman and Jeduthun, trumpets and cymbals for sounding, and the instrument of song of God, and the sons of Jeduthun [were] at the gate."

[8] tn Heb "to bless his house." Elsewhere when "house" is the object of "bless," it refers to a household or family. See, for example, 1 Chr 13:14; 17:27. However, since בֵּית (bet, "house") refers to a literal house or home earlier in the verse and to David's palace in 17:1, one might translate here, "David went to pronounce a blessing on [i.e., dedicate] his house [i.e., palace]."

[9] tn Heb "house."

[10] tn Heb "David." The pronoun "he" has been used in the translation here to avoid redundancy in keeping with contemporary English style.

[11] tn Heb "house."

[12] tn Heb "tent curtains."

[13] tn Heb "all which is in your heart."

[14] tn Heb "the word of God was [i.e., came] to Nathan the prophet."

[15] tn The words "from Egypt" are supplied in the translation for clarification.

[16] tc Heb "and I was from tent to tent and from tabernacle." The words אֶל־מִשְׁכָּן ('el-mish^{e}kan, "to tabernacle") should probably be added at the end of the sentence to complete this prepositional phrase and produce symmetry with the preceding prepositional phrase. The words probably fell from the text by homoioteleuton.

sn I have lived in a tent that has been in various places. The point here is that the Lord moved with the tabernacle as it moved from place to place; he did not confine himself to a particular location.

[17] tn In the Hebrew text the statement is phrased as a rhetorical question ("Did I say?") meaning "I did not say."

[18] tn Heb "to one of the judges of Israel whom I commanded to shepherd my people."

[19] tn Traditionally, "LORD of hosts."

[20] tn Heb "and from after sheep."

[21] tn Heb "cut off."

[22] tn Heb "and I will make for you a name like the name of the great men who are in the earth."

[23] tn Heb "plant."

[24] tn Heb "shaken."

[25] tn Heb "and sons of violence will no longer consume them as in the beginning."

[26] tn Here the word "house" is used in a metaphorical sense, referring to a royal dynasty. The LORD's use of the word here plays off the literal sense that David had in mind as he contemplated building a temple ("house") for the LORD. In the translation the adjective "dynastic" is supplied to indicate that the term is used metaphorically.

[27] tn Heb "and it will be when your days are full to go with your ancestors."

[28] tn Heb "your seed."

dynasty permanent.[1] 17:13 I will become his father and he will become my son. I will never withhold my loyal love from him, as I withheld it from the one who ruled before you.[2] 17:14 I will put him in permanent charge of my house and my kingdom; his dynasty will be permanent.'"'"[3] 17:15 Nathan told David all these words that were revealed to him.[4]

David Praises God

17:16 David went in, sat before the LORD, and said: "Who am I, O LORD God, and what is my family,[5] that you should have brought me to this point? 17:17 And you did not stop there, O God! You have also spoken about the future of your servant's family.[6] You have revealed to me what men long to know,[7] O LORD God. 17:18 What more can David say[8] to you? You have honored your servant; you have given your servant special recognition.[9] 17:19 O LORD, for the sake of your servant and according to your will,[10] you have done this great thing in order to reveal your greatness.[11] 17:20 O LORD, there is none like you; there is no God besides you! What we heard is true![12] 17:21 And who is like your people, Israel, a unique nation[13] in the earth? Their God[14] went to claim[15] a nation for himself! You made a name for yourself by doing great and awesome deeds[16] when you drove out[17] nations before your people whom you had delivered from the Egyptian empire and its gods.[18] 17:22 You made Israel your very own nation for all time.[19] You, O LORD, became their God. 17:23 So now, O LORD, may the promise you made about your servant and his family become a permanent reality![20] Do as you promised,[21] 17:24 so[22] it may become a reality[23] and you may gain lasting fame,[24] as people say,[25] 'The LORD who commands armies is the God of Israel.'[26] David's dynasty[27] will be established before you, 17:25 for you, my God, have revealed to your servant that you will build a dynasty[28] for him. That is why your servant has had the courage to pray to you.[29] 17:26 Now, O LORD, you are the true God;[30] you have made this good promise to your servant.[31] 17:27 Now you are willing to bless your servant's dynasty[32] so that it may stand permanently before you, for you, O LORD, have blessed it and it will be blessed from now on into the future."[33]

David Conquers the Neighboring Nations

18:1 Later David defeated the Philistines and subdued them. He took Gath and its surrounding towns[34] away from the Philistines.[35]

1 tn Heb "and I will establish his throne permanently."

2 sn The one who ruled before you is a reference to Saul, from whom the kingdom was taken and given to David.

3 tn Heb "and his throne will be established permanently."

4 tn Heb "according to all these words and according to all this revelation, so Nathan said to David."

5 tn Heb "house."

6 tn Heb "and this was small in your eyes, O God, so you spoke concerning the house of your servant for a distance."

7 tn The translation "You have revealed to me what men long to know" is very tentative; the meaning of the Hebrew text is unclear. The text appears to read literally, "and you see me like the searching of man, that which is upward," which is nonsensical. The translation above assumes the following: (1) The Qal verb translated "you see me" is repointed as a Hiphil, "you showed me," (2) תּוֹר (tor) is understood in the sense of "searching, exploring," and (3) הַמַּעֲלָה (hamma'alah) is taken in a temporal sense of "that which lies beyond." Thus one could translate, "you have shown me what men search for, what lies beyond."

8 tn The word "say" is supplied in the translation for clarification.

9 tn Heb "for honoring your servant, and you, your servant, know."

10 tn Heb "heart."

11 tn Heb "to make known all the great deeds."

12 tn The Hebrew text reads literally, "in all which we heard with our ears," but בְּכֹל (bekhol, "in all") should probably be emended to כְּכֹל (kekhol, "according to all").

13 tn Heb "a nation, one."

14 tn Heb "whose God," or "because God." In the Hebrew text this clause is subordinated to what precedes. The clauses are separated in the translation for stylistic reasons.

15 tn Heb "redeem" or "deliver."

16 tn Heb "to make for yourself a name [with] great and awesome [deeds]."

17 tn Heb "to drive out."

18 tn Heb "from Egypt, nations." The parallel text in 2 Sam 7:23 reads "from Egypt, nations and its gods."

19 tn Heb "and you made your people Israel your own for a people permanently."

20 tn Heb "and now, O LORD, the word which you spoke concerning your servant and concerning his house, may it be established permanently."

21 tn Heb "as you have spoken."

22 tn Following the imperative in v. 23b, the prefixed verbal form with vav (ו) conjunctive indicates purpose/result: "so it might become a reality."

23 tn Heb "so it might be established."

24 tn Heb "and your name might be great permanently." Following the imperative in v. 23b, the prefixed verbal form with vav conjunctive indicates purpose/result (parallel to the previous purpose/result clause): "[so]...you might gain lasting fame."

25 tn Heb "saying." The words "as people" are supplied in the translation for clarification and for stylistic reasons.

26 tc Heb "the LORD who commands armies [traditionally, the LORD of hosts], the God of Israel, Israel's God." The phrases אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל ('elohey yisra'el, "God of Israel") and אֱלֹהִים לְיִשְׂרָאֵל ('elohim leyisra'el, "Israel's God") are probably alternative readings that have been conflated in the text.

27 tn Heb "the house of David."

28 tn Heb "house."

29 tn Heb "That is why your servant found to pray before you." Perhaps the phrase אֶת לִבּוֹ ('et libbo, "his heart") should be supplied as the object of the verb "found."

30 tn Heb "the God." The article indicates uniqueness here.

31 tn Heb "and you have spoken to your servant this good thing."

32 tn Heb "house."

33 tn Heb "for you, O LORD, have blessed and [it is] blessed permanently."

34 tn 2 Sam 8:1 identifies this region as "Metheg Ammah."

35 tn Heb "from the hand of the Philistines." Here "hand" is figurative language for "control."

18:2 He defeated the Moabites; the Moabites became David's subjects and brought tribute.[1]

18:3 David defeated King Hadadezer of Zobah as far as Hamath, when he went to extend his authority[2] to the Euphrates River.[3] 18:4 David seized from him 1,000 chariots, 7,000 charioteers,[4] and 20,000 infantrymen. David cut the hamstrings of all but a hundred of Hadadezer's[5] chariot horses.[6] 18:5 The Arameans of Damascus came to help King Hadadezer of Zobah, but David killed 22,000 of the Arameans. 18:6 David placed garrisons in the territory of the Arameans of Damascus;[7] the Arameans became David's subjects and brought tribute. The LORD protected[8] David wherever he campaigned.[9] 18:7 David took the golden shields which Hadadezer's servants had carried[10] and brought them to Jerusalem.[11] 18:8 From Tibhath[12] and Kun,[13] Hadadezer's cities, David took a great deal of bronze. (Solomon used it to make the big bronze basin called "The Sea,"[14] the pillars, and other bronze items.)

18:9 When King Tou[15] of Hamath heard that David had defeated the entire army of King Hadadezer of Zobah, 18:10 he sent his son Hadoram[16] to King David to extend his best wishes[17] and to pronounce a blessing on him for his victory over Hadadezer, for Tou had been at war with Hadadezer.[18] He also sent various items made of gold, silver, and bronze.[19] 18:11 King David dedicated these things to the LORD,[20] along with the silver and gold which he had carried off from all the nations, including[21] Edom,[22] Moab, the Ammonites, the Philistines, and Amalek.

18:12 Abishai son of Zeruiah[23] killed 18,000 Edomites in the Valley of Salt. 18:13 He placed garrisons in Edom, and all the Edomites became David's subjects. The LORD protected[24] David wherever he campaigned.[25]

David's Officials

18:14 David reigned over all Israel; he guaranteed justice for all his people.[26] 18:15 Joab son of Zeruiah was commanding general of[27] the army; Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud was secretary; 18:16 Zadok son of Ahitub and Abimelech son of Abiathar were priests; Shavsha[28] was scribe; 18:17 Benaiah son of Jehoiada supervised[29] the Kerethites and Pelethites; and David's sons were the king's leading officials.[30]

David's Campaign against the Ammonites

19:1 Later King Nahash of the Ammonites died and his son succeeded him. 19:2 David said, "I will express my loyalty[31] to Hanun son of Nahash, for his father was loyal[32] to me." So David sent messengers to express his sympathy over his father's death.[33] When David's servants entered Ammonite territory to visit Hanun and express the king's sympathy,[34] 19:3 the Ammonite officials said to Hanun, "Do you really think David is trying to honor your father by sending

2 tn Heb "hand."

3 tn Heb "when he went to set up his hand at the Euphrates River." The Hebrew word יָד (yad, "hand") is usually understood to mean "control" or "dominion" here. However, since יָד does occasionally refer to a monument, perhaps one could translate, "to set up his monument at the Euphrates River" (i.e., as a visible marker of the limits of his dominion). For another example of the Hiphil of נָצַב (natsav) used with יָד ("monument"), see 1 Sam 15:12.

5 tn Heb "his"; the referent (Hadadezer) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Heb "and David cut the hamstrings of all the chariot horses, and he left from them one hundred chariot horses."

7 tc Heb "and David placed in Aram of Damascus." The object נְצִיבִים (n^{e}tsivim, "garrisons") appears to have been accidentally omitted from the text. See v. 13, as well as the parallel passage in 2 Sam 8:6, which includes it.

8 tn Or "delivered."

9 tn Or "wherever he went."

10 tn Heb "which were upon the servants of Hadadezer."

12 tn The MT reads "Tibhath" here, a variant name for Tebah (cf. 2 Sam 8:8). Some English translations substitute the other version of the name here (e.g., NIV, NLT), while others follow the reading of the Hebrew text at this point (e.g., NAB, NASB, NRSV).

13 tn The parallel text of 2 Sam 8:8 has the variant name "Berothai."

14 tn Heb "the sea of bronze," or "[the] sea, the bronze one." See the note at 1 Kgs 7:23.

15 tn The name is spelled "Toi" in the parallel text in 2 Sam 8:9.

16 tn The name is spelled "Joram" in the parallel text in 2 Sam 8:10.

17 tn Heb "to ask concerning him for peace."

18 tn Heb "and to bless him because he fought with Hadadezer and defeated him, for Hadadezer was a man of battles with Tou."

19 tn Heb "[along with] all items of gold and silver and bronze."

20 tn Heb "also them King David made holy to the LORD."

21 tn Heb "from."

22 tc The parallel text of 2 Sam 8:12 of the MT reads "Aram." However, a few Hebrew MSS along with the LXX and Syriac of 2 Sam 8:12 read "Edom" in agreement with 1 Chr 18:11 (cf. 2 Sam 8:14).

23 tn The parallel text of 2 Sam 8:13 attributes this victory to David.

24 tn Or "delivered."

25 tn Or "wherever he went."

26 tn Heb "and he was doing what is just and fair for all his people."

27 tn Heb "over."

28 tn The parallel text of 2 Sam 8:17 has the variant spelling "Seraiah."

29 tn Heb "[was] over."

30 tn Heb "and the sons of David [were] the heads at the hand of David." The parallel text of 2 Sam 8:18 identifies them as "priests" (see sn there on the word "priests").

31 tn Heb "do loyalty."

32 tn Heb "did loyalty."

33 tn Heb "to console him concerning his father."

34 tn Heb "and the servants of David came to the land of the sons of Ammon to Hanun to console him."

these messengers to express his sympathy?[1] No, his servants have come to you so they can get information and spy out the land!"[2] 19:4 So Hanun seized David's servants and shaved their beards off.[3] He cut off the lower part of their robes so that their buttocks were exposed[4] and then sent them away. 19:5 Messengers[5] came and told David what had happened to the men, so he summoned them, for the men were thoroughly humiliated. The king said, "Stay in Jericho[6] until your beards grow again; then you may come back."

19:6 When the Ammonites realized that David was disgusted with them,[7] Hanun and the Ammonites sent 1,000 talents[8] of silver to hire chariots and charioteers from Aram Naharaim, Aram Maacah, and Zobah.[9] 19:7 They hired 32,000 chariots, along with the king of Maacah and his army, who came and camped in front of Medeba. The Ammonites also assembled from their cities and marched out to do battle.

19:8 When David heard the news, he sent Joab and the entire army to meet them.[10] 19:9 The Ammonites marched out and were deployed for battle at the entrance to the city, while the kings who had come were by themselves in the field. 19:10 When Joab saw that the battle would be fought on two fronts, he chose some of Israel's best men and deployed them against the Arameans.[11] 19:11 He put his brother Abishai in charge of the rest of the army and they were deployed against the Ammonites. 19:12 Joab[12] said, "If the Arameans start to overpower me,[13] you come to my rescue. If the Ammonites start to overpower you,[14] I will come to your rescue. 19:13 Be strong! Let's fight bravely for the sake of our people and the cities of our God! The LORD will do what he decides is best!"[15] 19:14 So Joab and his men[16] marched toward the Arameans to do battle, and they fled before him. 19:15 When the Ammonites saw the Arameans flee, they fled before Joab's[17] brother Abishai and withdrew into the city. Joab went back to Jerusalem.[18]

19:16 When the Arameans realized they had been defeated by Israel, they sent for reinforcements from beyond the Euphrates River,[19] led by Shophach the commanding general of Hadadezer's army.[20] 19:17 When David was informed, he gathered all Israel, crossed the Jordan River,[21] and marched against them.[22] David deployed his army against the Arameans for battle and they fought against him.[23] 19:18 The Arameans fled before Israel. David killed 7,000[24] Aramean charioteers and 40,000 infantrymen; he also killed Shophach[25] the commanding general. 19:19 When Hadadezer's subjects saw they were defeated by Israel, they made peace with David and became his subjects. The Arameans were no longer willing to help the Ammonites.

20:1 In the spring, at the time when kings normally conduct wars,[26] Joab led the army into battle and devastated the land of the Ammonites. He went and besieged Rabbah, while David stayed in Jerusalem. Joab defeated Rabbah and tore it down. 20:2 David took the crown from the

[2] tc Heb "Is it not to explore and to overturn and to spy out the land (that) his servants have come to you?" The Hebrew term לְהַפֵּךְ (lahafakh, "to overturn") seems misplaced in the sequence. Some emend the form to לְחָפֹר (lakhpor, "to spy out"). The sequence of three infinitives may be a conflation of alternative readings.

[8] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the Ammonites hired chariots and charioteers for about 33.7 tons (30,600 kg) of silver.

[9] tn The parallel text of 2 Sam 10:6 has "Aram Beth Rehob and Aram Zobah."

[10] tn The words "the news" and "to meet them" are added in the translation for stylistic reasons and for clarification.

[11] tc The parallel text of 2 Sam 10:10 has "the Ammonites" in place of "the Arameans" here.

[22] tc The parallel text of 2 Sam 10:17 "he came to Helam."

tn Heb "and he came to them and was deployed against them."

[23] tn Heb "and David was deployed to meet Aram [for] battle and they fought with him."

[24] tc The parallel text of 2 Sam 10:18 has "seven hundred."

[25] tn The parallel text of 2 Sam 10:18 has the variant spelling "Shobach."

head of their king[1] and wore it[2] (its weight was a talent[3] of gold and it was set with precious stones). He took a large amount of plunder from the city. 20:3 He removed the city's residents and made them do hard labor with saws, iron picks, and axes.[4] This was his policy[5] with all the Ammonite cities. Then David and all the army returned to Jerusalem.

Battles with the Philistines

20:4 Later there was a battle[6] with the Philistines in Gezer.[7] At that time Sibbekai the Hushathite killed Sippai,[8] one of the descendants of the Rephaim, and the Philistines[9] were subdued.

20:5 There was another battle with the Philistines in which Elhanan son of Jair the Bethlehemite killed the brother of Goliath the Gittite,[10] whose spear had a shaft as big as the crossbeam of a weaver's loom.[11]

20:6 In a battle in Gath[12] there was a large man who had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot – twenty-four in all! He too was a descendant of Rapha. 20:7 When he taunted Israel, Jonathan son of Shimea,[13] David's brother, killed him.

20:8 These were the descendants of Rapha who lived in Gath; they were killed[14] by the hand of David and his soldiers.[15]

The Lord Sends a Plague against Israel

21:1 An adversary[16] opposed[17] Israel, inciting David to count how many warriors Israel had.[18] 21:2 David told Joab and the leaders of the army,[19] "Go, count the number of warriors[20] from Beer Sheba to Dan. Then bring back a report to me so I may know how many we have."[21] 21:3 Joab replied, "May the LORD make his army[22] a hundred times larger! My master, O king, do not all of them serve my master? Why does my master want to do this? Why bring judgment on Israel?"[23]

21:4 But the king's edict stood, despite Joab's objections.[24] So Joab left and traveled throughout Israel before returning to Jerusalem.[25] 21:5 Joab reported to David the number of warriors.[26] In all Israel there were 1,100,000[27] sword-wielding soldiers; Judah alone had 470,000 sword-wielding soldiers.[28] 21:6 Now Joab[29] did not number Levi and Benjamin, for the king's edict disgusted him. 21:7 God was also offended by it,[30] so he attacked Israel.

[1] tc The translation follows the MT, which reads "of their king"; the LXX and Vulgate read "of Milcom" (cf. 1 Kgs 11:5). Milcom, also known as Molech, was the god of the Ammonites.

[2] tn Heb "and it was on the head of David."

[3] sn See the note on the word "talents" in 19:6.

[4] tc The Hebrew text reads "saws," but since saws were just mentioned, it is preferable to emend מְגֵרוֹת (m^{e}gerot, "saws") to מַגְזְרוֹת (magz^{e}rot, "axes").

[5] tn Heb "and so he would do."

[6] tn Heb "battle stood."

[8] tn The parallel text in 2 Sam 21:18 has the variant spelling "Saph."

[9] tn Heb "they"; the referent (the Philistines) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[10] tc The Hebrew text reads, "Elchanan son of Jair killed Lachmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite." But it is likely that the accusative marker in front of לַחְמִי (lakhmiy, "Lachmi") is a corruption of בֵּית (bet), and that אֶת־לַחְמִי ('et-lakhmiy) should be emended to בֵּית הַלַּחְמִי (bet hallakhmiy, "the Bethlehemite"). See 2 Sam 21:19.

[11] tc See tc note on the parallel passage in 2 Sam 21:19.

[12] tn Heb "and there was another battle, in Gath."

[13] tn The parallel text in 2 Sam 21:21 has the variant spelling "Shimeah."

[14] tn Heb "they fell."

[15] tn Heb "his servants."

[16] tn Or "Satan." The Hebrew word שָׂטָן (satan) can refer to an adversary in general or Satan in particular. There is no article accompanying the term here, which suggests it should be understood generally (cf. NAB "a satan").

[17] tn Heb "stood against."

[18] tn Heb "and incited David to count Israel." As v. 5 indicates, David was not interested in a general census, but in determining how much military strength he had.

sn The parallel text in 2 Sam 24:1 says, "The LORD's anger again raged against Israel and he incited David against them, saying: 'Go, count Israel and Judah!'" The version of the incident in the Book of 2 Samuel gives an underlying theological perspective, while the Chronicler simply describes what happened from a human perspective. Many interpreters and translations render the Hebrew שָׂטָן as a proper name here, "Satan" (NEB, NASB, NIV, NRSV). However, the Hebrew term שָׂטָן, which means "adversary," is used here without the article. Elsewhere when it appears without the article, it refers to a personal or national adversary in the human sphere, the lone exception being Num 22:22, 32, where the angel of the Lord assumes the role of an adversary to Balaam. When referring elsewhere to the spiritual entity known in the NT as Satan, the noun has the article and is used as a title, "the Adversary" (see Job 1:6-9, 12; 2:1-4, 6-7; Zech 3:1-2). In light of usage elsewhere the adversary in 1 Chr 21:1 is likely a human enemy, probably a nearby nation whose hostility against Israel pressured David into numbering the people so he could assess his military strength. For compelling linguistic and literary arguments against taking the noun as a proper name here, see S. Japhet, I & II Chronicles (OTL), 374-75.

[26] tn Heb "and Joab gave to David the number of the numbering of the army [or "people"]."

[27] tn Heb "a thousand thousands and one hundred thousand."

[28] tc The parallel text in 2 Sam 24:9 has variant figures: "In Israel there were eight hundred thousand sword-wielding warriors, and in Judah there were five hundred thousands soldiers."

[29] tn Heb "he"; the proper name ("Joab") has been substituted for the pronoun here for stylistic reasons; the proper name occurs at the end of the verse in the Hebrew text, where it has been replaced by the pronoun ("him") in the translation.

[30] tn Heb "There was displeasure in the eyes of God concerning this thing."

21:8 David said to God, "I have sinned greatly by doing this! Now, please remove the guilt of your servant, for I have acted very foolishly." 21:9 The LORD told Gad, David's prophet,[1] 21:10 "Go, tell David, 'This is what the LORD says: "I am offering you three forms of judgment from which to choose. Pick one of them."'"[2] 21:11 Gad went to David and told him, "This is what the LORD says: 'Pick one of these: 21:12 three[3] years of famine, or three months being chased by your enemies and struck down by their swords,[4] or three days being struck down by the LORD, during which a plague will invade the land and the LORD's messenger will destroy throughout Israel's territory.'[5] Now, decide what I should tell the one who sent me." 21:13 David said to Gad, "I am very upset! I prefer to be attacked by the LORD, for his mercy is very great; I do not want to be attacked by men!"[6] 21:14 So the LORD sent a plague through Israel, and 70,000 Israelite men died.

21:15 God sent an angel[7] to ravage[8] Jerusalem. As he was doing so,[9] the LORD watched[10] and relented from[11] his judgment.[12] He told the angel who was destroying, "That's enough![13] Stop now!"[14]

Now the LORD's angel was standing near the threshing floor of Ornan[15] the Jebusite. 21:16 David looked up and saw the LORD's messenger standing between the earth and sky with his sword drawn and in his hand, stretched out over Jerusalem. David and the leaders, covered with sackcloth, threw themselves down with their faces to the ground.[16] 21:17 David said to God, "Was I not the one who decided to number the army? I am the one who sinned and committed this awful deed![17] As for these sheep – what have they done? O LORD my God, attack me and my family,[18] but remove the plague from your people!"[19]

21:18 So the LORD's messenger told Gad to instruct David to go up and build[20] an altar for the LORD on the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite. 21:19 So David went up as Gad instructed him to do in the name of the LORD.[21] 21:20 While Ornan was threshing wheat, he turned and saw the messenger, and he and his four sons hid themselves. 21:21 When David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David; he came out from the threshing floor and bowed to David with his face[22] to the ground. 21:22 David said to Ornan, "Sell me the threshing floor[23] so I can build[24] on it an altar for the LORD – I'll pay top price[25] – so that the plague may be removed[26] from the people." 21:23 Ornan told David, "You can have it![27] My master, the king, may do what he wants.[28] Look, I am giving you the oxen for burnt sacrifices, the threshing sledges for wood, and the wheat for an offering. I give it all to you." 21:24 King David replied to Ornan, "No, I insist on buying it for top price.[29] I will not offer to the LORD what belongs to you or offer a burnt sacrifice[30] that cost me nothing.[31] 21:25 So David bought the place from Ornan for 600 pieces of gold.[32] 21:26 David built there an altar to the LORD and offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings.[33] He called out to the LORD, [26] tn Following the imperative and first person prefixed verbal form with vav (ו) conjunctive, this third person prefixed verbal form with vav conjunctive introduces the ultimate purpose/result: "so the plague may be removed." Another option is subordinate this form to the preceding imperative, but the latter may be taken as a parenthetical expansion of the initial request.

21:28 At that time, when David saw that the LORD responded to him at the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, he sacrificed there. 21:29 Now the LORD's tabernacle (which Moses had made in the wilderness) and the altar for burnt sacrifices were at that time at the worship center[3] in Gibeon. 21:30 But David could not go before it to seek God's will, for he was afraid of the sword of the LORD's messenger. 22:1 David then said, "This is the place where the temple of the LORD God will be, along with the altar for burnt sacrifices for Israel."

David Orders a Temple to Be Built

22:2 David ordered the resident foreigners in the land of Israel to be called together. He appointed some of them to be stonecutters to chisel stones for the building of God's temple. 22:3 David supplied a large amount of iron for the nails of the doors of the gates and for braces, more bronze than could be weighed, 22:4 and more cedar logs than could be counted. (The Sidonians and Tyrians had brought a large amount of cedar logs to David.)

22:5 David said, "My son Solomon is just an inexperienced young man,[4] and the temple to be built for the LORD must be especially magnificent so it will become famous and be considered splendid by all the nations.[5] Therefore I will make preparations for its construction." So David made extensive preparations before he died.

22:6 He summoned his son Solomon and charged him to build a temple for the LORD God of Israel. 22:7 David said to Solomon: "My son, I really wanted[6] to build a temple to honor[7] the LORD my God. 22:8 But the LORD said to me:[8] 'You have spilled a great deal of blood and fought many battles. You must not build a temple to honor me,[9] for you have spilled a great deal of blood on the ground before me. 22:9 Look, you will have a son, who will be a peaceful man.[10] I will give him rest from all his enemies on every side.[11] Indeed, Solomon[12] will be his name; I will give Israel peace and quiet during his reign.[13] 22:10 He will build a temple to honor me;[14] he will become my son, and I will become his father. I will grant to his dynasty permanent rule over Israel.'[15]

22:11 "Now, my son, may the LORD be with you! May you succeed and build a temple for the LORD your God, just as he announced you would.[16] 22:12 Only may the LORD give you insight and understanding when he places you in charge of Israel, so you may obey[17] the law of the LORD your God. 22:13 Then you will succeed, if you carefully obey the rules and regulations which the LORD ordered Moses to give to Israel.[18] Be strong and brave! Don't be afraid and don't panic![19] 22:14 Now, look, I have made every effort to supply what is needed to build the LORD's temple.[20] I have stored up 100,000 talents[21] of gold, 1,000,000[22] talents of silver, and so much bronze and iron it cannot be weighed, as well as wood and stones. Feel free to add more! 22:15 You also have available many workers, including stonecutters, masons, carpenters,[23] and an innumerable array of workers who are skilled 22:16 in using gold, silver, bronze, and iron.[24] Get up and begin the work! May the LORD be with you!"

22:17 David ordered all the officials of Israel to support[25] his son Solomon. 22:18 He told them,[26] "The LORD your God is with you![27] He has made you secure on every side,[28] for he handed over to me the inhabitants of the region[29] and the region[30] is subdued before the LORD and his people. 22:19 Now seek the LORD your God

David Organizes the Levites

23:1 When David was old and approaching the end of his life,[5] he made his son Solomon king over Israel.

23:2 David[6] assembled all the leaders of Israel, along with the priests and the Levites. 23:3 The Levites who were thirty years old and up were counted; there were 38,000 men.[7] 23:4 David said,[8] "Of these, 24,000 are to direct the work of the LORD's temple; 6,000 are to be officials and judges; 23:5 4,000 are to be gatekeepers; and 4,000 are to praise the LORD with the instruments I supplied for worship."[9] 23:6 David divided them into groups corresponding to the sons of Levi: Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

23:7 The Gershonites included Ladan and Shimei.

23:8 The sons of Ladan:

Jehiel the oldest, Zetham, and Joel – three in all.

23:9 The sons of Shimei:

Shelomoth, Haziel, and Haran – three in all.

These were the leaders of the family of Ladan.

23:10 The sons of Shimei:

Jahath, Zina,[10] Jeush, and Beriah. These were Shimei's sons – four in all.[11] 23:11 Jahath was the oldest and Zizah the second oldest. Jeush and Beriah did not have many sons, so they were considered one family with one responsibility.

23:12 The sons of Kohath:

Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel – four in all.

23:13 The sons of Amram:

Aaron and Moses.

Aaron and his descendants were chosen on a permanent basis to consecrate the most holy items, to offer sacrifices before the LORD, to serve him, and to praise his name.[12] 23:14 The descendants of Moses the man of God were considered Levites.[13]

23:15 The sons of Moses:

Gershom and Eliezer.

23:16 The son[14] of Gershom:

Shebuel[15] the oldest.

23:17 The son of Eliezer was[16] Rehabiah, the oldest. Eliezer had no other sons, but Rehabiah had many descendants.

23:18 The son[17] of Izhar:

Shelomith the oldest.

23:19 The sons of Hebron:

Jeriah the oldest, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, and Jekameam the fourth.

23:20 The sons of Uzziel:

Micah the oldest, and Isshiah the second.

23:21 The sons of Merari:

Mahli and Mushi.

The sons of Mahli:

Eleazar and Kish.

23:22 Eleazar died without having sons; he had only daughters. The sons of Kish, their cousins, married them.[18]

23:23 The sons of Mushi:

Mahli, Eder, and Jeremoth – three in all.

23:24 These were the descendants of Levi according to their families, that is, the leaders of families as counted and individually listed who carried out assigned tasks in the LORD's temple and were twenty years old and up.[19] 23:25 For David said, "The LORD God of Israel has given his people rest and has permanently settled

[9] tn Heb "made to [or "for"] praise."

[10] tc The MT reads "Zina" here and "Zizah" in v. 11. One Hebrew MS, the LXX, and the Vulgate, harmonizing the form of the name to that found in v. 11, read "Zizah" here.

[11] sn Verses 8-10 are confusing. Two different lists of Shimei's sons appear. In between these lists is the statement "these were the leaders of the family of Ladan," suggesting that the list just before this includes the sons of Ladan, not Shimei. But verse 8 already lists Ladan's sons. Apparently the text as it stands is a conflation of differing traditions.

[12] tn Heb "and Aaron was set apart to consecrate it, the most holy things, he and his sons, permanently, to sacrifice before the LORD, to serve him, and to bless his name permanently."

[13] tn Heb "and Moses the man of God, his sons were called to the tribe of Levi."

[14] tn The Hebrew text has the plural "sons," but only one name appears after this. The attached phrase "the oldest" might indicate that Shebuel was not Gershom's only son, but note v. 17.

[15] tc The LXX reads Σουβαηλ (Soubaēl) here, a reading followed by NAB, NIV, NCV, CEV ("Shubael"); cf. 24:20.

[16] tn The Hebrew text has "the sons of Eliezer were," but only one name appears after this in the verse, and we are specifically told that Eliezer had no other sons.

[17] tn The Hebrew text has the plural "sons," but only one name appears after this. The attached phrase "the oldest" might indicate that Shelomith was not Izhar's only son, but note v. 17.

[18] tn Heb "the sons of Kish, their brothers [i.e., relatives/cousins] lifted them up." For other uses of נָשָׂא (na'as, "lift up") in the sense of "marry," see BDB 671 s.v. Qal.3.d.

[19] tn Heb "these were the sons of Levi according to the house of their fathers, heads of the fathers, according to their numberings, by number of names, according to their heads, doer[s] of the work for the service of the house of the LORD, from a son of twenty years and upwards."

in Jerusalem.[1] 23:26 So the Levites no longer need to carry the tabernacle or any of the items used in its service." 23:27 According to David's final instructions, the Levites twenty years old and up were counted.[2]

23:28 Their job was to help Aaron's descendants in the service of the LORD's temple. They were to take care of the courtyards, the rooms, ceremonial purification of all holy items, and other jobs related to the service of God's temple.[3] 23:29 They also took care of[4] the bread that is displayed, the flour for offerings, the unleavened wafers, the round cakes, the mixing, and all the measuring.[5] 23:30 They also stood in a designated place[6] every morning and offered thanks and praise to the LORD. They also did this in the evening 23:31 and whenever burnt sacrifices were offered to the LORD on the Sabbath and at new moon festivals and assemblies. A designated number were to serve before the LORD regularly in accordance with regulations.[7] 23:32 They were in charge of the meeting tent and the holy place, and helped their relatives, the descendants of Aaron, in the service of the LORD's temple.[8]

David Organizes the Priests

24:1 The divisions of Aaron's descendants were as follows:

The sons of Aaron:

Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

24:2 Nadab and Abihu died before their father did; they had no sons. Eleazar and Ithamar served as priests.

24:3 David, Zadok (a descendant of Eleazar), and Ahimelech (a descendant of Ithamar) divided them into groups to carry out their assigned responsibilities.[9] 24:4 The descendants of Eleazar had more leaders than the descendants of Ithamar, so they divided them up accordingly; the descendants of Eleazar had sixteen leaders, while the descendants of Ithamar had eight.[10] 24:5 They divided them by lots, for there were officials of the holy place and officials designated by God among the descendants of both Eleazar and Ithamar.[11] 24:6 The scribe Shemaiah son of Nethanel, a Levite, wrote down their names before the king, the officials, Zadok the priest, Ahimelech son of Abiathar, and the leaders of the priestly and Levite families. One family was drawn by lot from Eleazar, and then the next from Ithamar.[12]

24:7 The first lot went to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah, 24:8 the third to Harim,
the fourth to Seorim, 24:9 the fifth to Malkijah,
the sixth to Mijamin,
24:10 the seventh to Hakkoz,
the eighth to Abijah, 24:11 the ninth to Jeshua,
the tenth to Shecaniah, 24:12 the eleventh to Eliashib,
the twelfth to Jakim,
24:13 the thirteenth to Huppah,
the fourteenth to Jeshebeab, 24:14 the fifteenth to Bilgah,
the sixteenth to Immer, 24:15 the seventeenth to Hezir,
the eighteenth to Happizzez, 24:16 the nineteenth to Pethahiah,
the twentieth to Jehezkel, 24:17 the twenty-first to Jakin,
the twenty-second to Gamul, 24:18 the twenty-third to Delaiah,
the twenty-fourth to Maaziah.

24:19 This was the order in which they carried out their assigned responsibilities when they entered the LORD's temple, according to the regulations given them by their ancestor[13] Aaron, just as the LORD God of Israel had instructed him.[14]

Remaining Levites

24:20 The rest of the Levites included:[15]
Shubael[16] from the sons of Amram,
Jehdeiah from the sons of Shubael,

24:29 From Kish:
Jerahmeel.[5]

24:30 The sons of Mushi:
Mahli, Eder, and Jerimoth.
These were the Levites, listed by their families.

24:31 Just like their relatives, the descendants of Aaron, they also cast lots before King David, Zadok, Ahimelech, the leaders of families, the priests, and the Levites. The families of the oldest son cast lots along with the those of the youngest.[6]

David Organizes the Musicians

25:1 David and the army officers selected some of the sons of Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun to prophesy as they played stringed instruments and cymbals.[7] The following men were assigned this responsibility:[8]

25:2 From the sons of Asaph: Zaccur, Joseph, Nethaniah, and Asarelah. The sons of Asaph were supervised by Asaph, who prophesied under the king's supervision.[9]

25:3 From the sons of Jeduthun:[10] Gedaliah, Zeri,[11] Jeshaiah,[12] Hashabiah, and Mattithiah – six in all,[13] under supervision of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied as he played a harp, giving thanks and praise to the LORD.

25:4 From the sons of Heman:[14] Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, Romamti-Ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth.
25:5 All these were the sons of Heman, the king's prophet. God had promised him these sons in order to make him prestigious.[15] God gave Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

25:6 All of these were under the supervision of their fathers; they were musicians in the LORD's temple, playing cymbals and stringed instruments as they served in God's temple. Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman were under the supervision of the king.
25:7 They and their relatives, all of them skilled and trained to make music to the LORD, numbered two hundred eighty-eight.[16]

25:8 They cast lots to determine their responsibilities – oldest as well as youngest, teacher as well as student.[17]

25:9 The first lot went to Asaph's son Joseph and his relatives and sons – twelve in all,[18]

the second to Gedaliah and his relatives and sons – twelve in all,

25:10 the third to Zaccur and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,

25:11 the fourth to Izri[19] and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,

25:12 the fifth to Nethaniah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,

25:13 the sixth to Bukkiah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,

7 tn Heb "David and the officers of the army set apart for service the sons of Asaph and Heman and Jeduthun, the ones prophesying by harps, by lyres, and by cymbals."

8 tn Heb "and their number was, the men of work for their service."

9 tn Heb "the sons of Asaph [were] upon the hand of Asaph, the one prophesying upon the hands of the king."

10 tn Heb "belonging to Jeduthun, the sons of Jeduthun."

11 tn This name appears as "Izri" in v. 11.

12 tc One Hebrew MS and some LXX MSS supply the name "Shimei" after "Jeshaiah." Most Hebrew MSS omit the name here (but cf. v. 17).

13 tc The list includes only five names. Apparently the name "Shimei" (see v. 17), which appears in one medieval Hebrew MS and in the LXX, has been accidentally omitted from the Hebrew text.

14 tn Heb "belonging to Heman, the sons of Heman."

15 tn Heb "by the words of God to exalt a horn." An animal's horn is sometimes used metaphorically as a symbol of strength and honor. See BDB 901-2 s.v. קֶרֶן.

16 tn Heb "and their number with their brothers, trained in music to the LORD, all skilled, was 288."

17 tn Heb "and they cast lots [for] service, just as like small, like great, teacher with student."

18 tc Heb "The first lot went to Asaph, to Joseph." Apparently the recurring formula, "and his sons and his relatives, twelve" has been accidentally omitted from the Hebrew text at this point (see vv. 10-31; the formula is slightly different in v. 9b). If the number "twelve" is not supplied here, the total comes to only 276, not the 288 required by v. 7.

19 tn "Izri" is a variant of the name "Zeri" (cf. 25:3).

25:14 the seventh to Jesharelah[1] and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:15 the eighth to Jeshaiah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:16 the ninth to Mattaniah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:17 the tenth to Shimei and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:18 the eleventh to Azarel[2] and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:19 the twelfth to Hashabiah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:20 the thirteenth to Shubael and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:21 the fourteenth to Mattithiah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:22 the fifteenth to Jerimoth and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:23 the sixteenth to Hananiah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:24 the seventeenth to Joshbekashah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:25 the eighteenth to Hanani and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:26 the nineteenth to Mallothi and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:27 the twentieth to Eliathah and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:28 the twenty-first to Hothir and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:29 the twenty-second to Giddalti and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:30 the twenty-third to Mahazioth and his sons and relatives – twelve in all,
25:31 the twenty-fourth to Romamti-Ezer and his sons and relatives – twelve in all.

Divisions of Gatekeepers

26:1 The divisions of the gatekeepers:
From the Korahites: Meshelemiah, son of Kore, one of the sons of Asaph.
26:2 Meshelemiah's sons:
The firstborn Zechariah, the second Jediael, the third Zebadiah, the fourth Jathniel, 26:3 the fifth Elam, the sixth Jehohanan, and the seventh Elihoenai.
26:4 Obed-Edom's sons:
The firstborn Shemaiah, the second Jehozabad, the third Joah, the fourth Sakar, the fifth Nethanel, 26:5 the sixth Ammiel, the seventh Issachar, and the eighth Peullethai. (Indeed, God blessed Obed-Edom.)
26:6 His son Shemaiah also had sons, who were leaders of their families, for they were highly respected. 26:7 The sons of Shemaiah:
Othni, Rephael, Obed, and Elzabad. His relatives[3] Elihu and Semakiah were also respected.
26:8 All these were the descendants of Obed-Edom. They and their sons and relatives were respected men, capable of doing their responsibilities. There were sixty-two of them related to Obed-Edom.
26:9 Meshelemiah had sons and relatives who were respected – eighteen in all.
26:10 Hosah, one of the descendants of Merari, had sons:
The firstborn Shimri (he was not actually the firstborn, but his father gave him that status), 26:11 the second Hilkiah, the third Tebaliah, and the fourth Zechariah. All of Hosah's sons and relatives numbered thirteen.
26:12 These divisions of the gatekeepers, corresponding to their leaders, had assigned responsibilities, like their relatives, as they served in the LORD's temple.
26:13 They cast lots, both young and old, according to their families, to determine which gate they would be responsible for.[4] 26:14 The lot for the east gate went to Shelemiah.[5] They then cast lots for his son Zechariah, a wise adviser, and the lot for the north gate went to him. 26:15 Obed-Edom was assigned the south gate, and his sons were assigned the storehouses. 26:16 Shuppim and Hosah were assigned the west gate, along with the Shalleketh gate on the upper road. One guard was adjacent to another.[6] 26:17 Each day there were six Levites posted on the east, four on the north, and four on the south. At the storehouses they were posted in pairs. 26:18 At the court on the west there were four posted on the road and two at the court. 26:19 These were the divisions of the gatekeepers who were descendants of Korah and Merari.

Supervisors of the Storehouses

26:20 Their fellow Levites were in charge of the storehouses[7] in God's temple and the storehouses containing consecrated items. 26:21 The descendants of Ladan,[8] who were descended from Gershon through Ladan and were leaders of the families of Ladan the Gershonite, included Jehieli[9] 26:22 and the sons of Jehieli, Zetham and his brother Joel. They were in charge of the storehouses in the LORD's temple.
26:23 As for the Amramites, Izharites, Hebronites, and Uzzielites:
26:24 Shebuel[10] son of Gershom, the son of Moses, was the supervisor of the storehouses. 26:25 His relatives through Eliezer included:

[1] tn "Jesharelah" is a variant of the name "Asarelah" (cf. 25:2).
[2] tn "Azarel" is a variant of the name "Uzziel" (cf. 25:4).
[3] tn Or "brothers."
[4] tn Heb "for a gate and a gate," i.e., for each gate.
[5] tn "Shelemiah" is a variant of the name "Meshelemiah" (cf. 26:2).
[6] tn Heb "a guard alongside a guard."
[7] tn Or "treasuries."
[8] tn "Ladan" is a variant of the name "Libni" (cf. 6:17).
[9] tn "Jehieli" is a variant of the name "Jehiel" (cf. 23:8).
[10] tn A number of English versions follow the LXX and Vulgate and read "Shubael" here (e.g., NAB, NIV, NCV, CEV).

Rehabiah his son, Jeshaiah his son, Joram his son, Zikri his son, and Shelomith[1] his son. 26:26 Shelomith[2] and his relatives were in charge of all the storehouses containing the consecrated items dedicated by King David, the family leaders who led units of a thousand and a hundred, and the army officers. 26:27 They had dedicated some of the plunder taken in battles to be used for repairs on the LORD's temple. 26:28 They were also in charge of everything dedicated by Samuel the prophet,[3] Saul son of Kish, Abner son of Ner, and Joab son of Zeruiah; Shelomith and his relatives were in charge of everything that had been dedicated.

26:29 As for the Izharites: Kenaniah and his sons were given responsibilities outside the temple[4] as officers and judges over Israel.

26:30 As for the Hebronites: Hashabiah and his relatives, 1,700 respected men, were assigned responsibilities in Israel west of the Jordan; they did the LORD's work and the king's service.

26:31 As for the Hebronites: Jeriah was the leader of the Hebronites according to the genealogical records. In the fortieth year of David's reign, they examined the records and discovered[5] there were highly respected men in Jazer in Gilead. 26:32 Jeriah had 2,700 relatives who were respected family leaders.[6] King David placed them in charge of the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh; they took care of all matters pertaining to God and the king.[7]

Leaders of the Army

27:1 What follows is a list of Israelite family leaders and commanders of units of a thousand and a hundred, as well as their officers who served the king in various matters. Each division was assigned to serve for one month during the year; each consisted of 24,000 men.[8]

27:2 Jashobeam son of Zabdiel was in charge of the first division, which was assigned the first month. His division consisted of 24,000 men.

27:3 He was a descendant of Perez; he was in charge of all the army officers for the first month.

27:5 The third army commander, assigned the third month, was Benaiah son of Jehoiada the priest. He was the leader of his division, which consisted of 24,000 men. 27:6 Benaiah was the leader of the thirty warriors and his division; his son was Ammizabad.[10]

[2] tc The MT reads "Shelomoth"; the name is spelled "Shelomith" in the marginal reading (Qere) of v. 25.

[10] tn Heb "That [was the] Benaiah [who was] a warrior of the thirty and over the thirty, and his division, Ammizabad his son."

Joel son of Pedaiah led the half-tribe of Manasseh,

27:21 Iddo son of Zechariah led the half-tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Jaasiel son of Abner led Benjamin,

27:22 Azarel son of Jeroham led Dan.

These were the commanders of the Israelite tribes.

27:23 David did not count the males twenty years old and under, for the LORD had promised to make Israel as numerous as the stars in the sky. 27:24 Joab son of Zeruiah started to count the men but did not finish. God was angry with Israel[1] because of this, so the number was not recorded in the scroll[2] called The Annals of King David.

27:25 Azmaveth son of Adiel was in charge of the king's storehouses;

27:34 Ahithophel was succeeded by Jehoiada son of Benaiah and by Abiathar.

David Commissions Solomon to Build the Temple

28:1 David assembled in Jerusalem[9] all the officials of Israel, including the commanders of the tribes, the commanders of the army divisions that served the king, the commanders of units of a thousand and a hundred, the officials who were in charge of all the property and livestock of the king and his sons, the eunuchs, and the warriors, including the most skilled of them.

28:2 King David rose to his feet and said: "Listen to me, my brothers and my people. I wanted to build a temple where the ark of the LORD's covenant could be placed as a footstool for our God.[10] I have made the preparations for building it. 28:3 But God said to me, 'You must not build a temple to honor me,[11] for you are a warrior and have spilled blood.' 28:4 The LORD God of Israel chose me out of my father's entire family to become king over Israel and have a permanent dynasty.[12] Indeed,[13] he chose Judah as leader, and my father's family within Judah, and then he picked me out from among my father's sons and made me king over all Israel.[14] 28:5 From all the many sons the LORD has given me, he chose Solomon my son to rule on his behalf over Israel.[15] 28:6 He said to me, 'Solomon your son is the one who will build my temple and my courts, for I have chosen him to become my son and I will become his father. 28:7 I will establish his kingdom permanently, if he remains committed to obeying my commands and regulations, as you are doing this day.'[16] 28:8 So now, in the sight of all Israel, the LORD's assembly, and in the hearing of our God, I say this:[17] Carefully observe[18] all the commands of the LORD your God, so that you may possess this good land and may leave it as a permanent inheritance for your children after you.

28:9 "And you, Solomon my son, obey[1] the God of your father and serve him with a submissive attitude and a willing spirit,[2] for the LORD examines all minds and understands every motive of one's thoughts. If you seek him, he will let you find him,[3] but if you abandon him, he will reject you permanently. 28:10 Realize[4] now that the LORD has chosen you to build a temple as his sanctuary. Be strong and do it!"

28:11 David gave to his son Solomon the blueprints for the temple porch,[5] its buildings, its treasuries,[6] its upper areas, its inner rooms, and the room[7] for atonement. 28:12 He gave him[8] the blueprints of all he envisioned[9] for the courts of the LORD's temple, all the surrounding rooms, the storehouses of God's temple, and the storehouses for the holy items.

28:13 He gave him the regulations[10] for the divisions of priests and Levites, for all the assigned responsibilities within the LORD's temple, and for all the items used in the service of the LORD's temple.

28:14 He gave him[11] the prescribed weight for all the gold items to be used in various types of service in the LORD's temple, for all the silver items to be used in various types of service,[12] 28:15 for the gold lampstands and their gold lamps, including the weight of each lampstand and its lamps, for the silver lampstands, including the weight of each lampstand and its lamps, according to the prescribed use of each lampstand, 28:16 for the gold used in the display tables, including the amount to be used in each table, for the silver to be used in the silver tables, 28:17 for the pure gold used for the meat forks, bowls, and jars, for the small gold bowls, including the weight for each bowl, for the small silver bowls, including the weight for each bowl, 28:18 and for the refined gold of the incense altar.

He gave him[13] the blueprint for the seat[14] of the gold cherubim that spread their wings[15] and provide shelter for the ark of the LORD's covenant.

28:19 David said,[16] "All of this I put in writing as the LORD directed me and gave me insight regarding the details of the blueprints."[17]

28:20 David said to his son Solomon: "Be strong and brave! Do it! Don't be afraid and don't panic![18] For the LORD God, my God, is with you. He will not leave you or abandon you before all the work for the service of the LORD's temple is finished. 28:21 Here are the divisions of the priests and Levites who will perform all the service of God's temple. All the willing and skilled men are ready to assist you in all the work and perform their service.[19] The officials and all the people are ready to follow your instructions."[20]

The People Contribute to the Project

29:1 King David said to the entire assembly: "My son Solomon, the one whom God has chosen, is just an inexperienced young man,[21] and the task is great, for this palace is not for man, but for the LORD God. 29:2 So I have made every effort[22] to provide what is needed for the temple of my God, including the gold, silver, bronze, iron, wood,[23] as well as a large amount of onyx, settings of antimony and other stones, all kinds of precious stones, and alabaster. 29:3 Now, to show my commitment to the temple of my God, I donate my personal treasure of gold and silver to the temple of my God, in addition to all that I have already supplied for this holy temple. 29:4 This includes 3,000 talents[24] of gold from Ophir and 7,000 talents of refined silver for overlaying the walls of the buildings, 29:5 for gold and silver items, and for all the work of the craftsmen. Who else wants to contribute to the LORD today?"

29:6 The leaders of the families, the leaders of the Israelite tribes, the commanders of units of a thousand and a hundred, and the supervisors of the king's work contributed willingly. 29:7 They donated for the service of God's temple 5,000 talents[1] and 10,000 darics[2] of gold, 10,000 talents of silver, 18,000 talents of bronze, and 100,000 talents of iron. 29:8 All who possessed precious[3] stones donated them to the treasury of the LORD's temple, which was under the supervision of Jehiel the Gershonite. 29:9 The people were delighted with their donations, for they contributed to the LORD with a willing attitude;[4] King David was also very happy.[5]

29:10 David praised the LORD before the entire assembly:[6]

"O LORD God of our father Israel, you deserve praise forevermore! 29:11 O LORD, you are great, mighty, majestic, magnificent, glorious, and sovereign[7] over all the sky and earth! You have dominion and exalt yourself as the ruler[8] of all. 29:12 You are the source of wealth and honor;[9] you rule over all. You possess strength and might to magnify and give strength to all.[10] 29:13 Now, our God, we give thanks to you and praise your majestic name!

29:14 "But who am I and who are my people, that we should be in a position to contribute this much?[11] Indeed, everything comes from you, and we have simply given back to you what is yours.[12] 29:15 For we are resident foreigners and nomads in your presence, like all our ancestors;[13] our days are like a shadow on the earth, without security.[14] 29:16 O LORD our God, all this wealth, which we have collected to build a temple for you to honor your holy name, comes from you; it all belongs to you. 29:17 I know, my God, that you examine thoughts[15] and are pleased with integrity. With pure motives[16] I contribute all this; and now I look with joy as your people who have gathered here contribute to you. 29:18 O LORD God of our ancestors Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, maintain the motives of your people and keep them devoted to you.[17] 29:19 Make my son Solomon willing to obey your commands, rules, and regulations, and to complete building the palace for which I have made preparations."[18]

29:20 David told the entire assembly: "Praise the LORD your God!" So the entire assembly praised the LORD God of their ancestors; they bowed down and stretched out flat on the ground before the LORD and the king.

David Designates Solomon King

29:21 The next day they made sacrifices and offered burnt sacrifices to the LORD (1,000 bulls, 1,000 rams, 1,000 lambs), along with their accompanying drink offerings and many other sacrifices for all Israel. 29:22 They held a feast[19] before the LORD that day and celebrated.[20]

Then they designated Solomon, David's son, as king a second time;[21] before the LORD they anointed him as ruler and Zadok as priest. 29:23 Solomon sat on the LORD's throne as king in place of his father David; he was successful and all Israel was loyal to him.[22] 29:24 All the officers and warriors, as well as all of King David's sons, pledged their allegiance to King Solomon.[23] 29:25 The LORD greatly magnified Solomon before all Israel and bestowed on him greater majesty than any king of Israel before him.[24]

[1] tn See the note on the word "talents" in 19:6. Using the "light" standard talent of 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg) as the standard for calculation, the people donated 168.3 tons (153,000 kg) of gold, 336.5 tons (306,000 kg) of silver, 605.7 tons (550,800 kg) of bronze, and 3,365 tons (3,060,000 kg) of iron.

[2] tn On the "daric" as a unit of measure, see BDB 204 s.v. דַּרְכְּמוֹן. Some have regarded the daric as a minted coin, perhaps even referring to the Greek drachma, but this is less likely.

sn The daric was a unit of weight perhaps equal to between 8 and 9 grams (just under one-third of an ounce), so 10,000 darics of gold would weigh between 80 and 90 kilograms (between 176 and 198 pounds).

David's Reign Comes to an End

29:26 David son of Jesse reigned over all Israel. 29:27 He reigned over Israel forty years; he reigned in Hebron seven years and in Jerusalem[1] thirty-three years. 29:28 He died at a good old age, having enjoyed long life, wealth, and honor.[2] His son Solomon succeeded him. 29:29 King David's accomplishments, from start to finish, are recorded in the Annals of Samuel the prophet, the Annals of Nathan the prophet, and the Annals of Gad the prophet.[3] 29:30 Recorded there are all the facts about his reign and accomplishments, and an account of the events that involved him, Israel, and all the neighboring kingdoms.[4]

2 Chronicles

The Lord Gives Solomon Wisdom

1:1 Solomon son of David solidified his royal authority,[1] for[2] the LORD his God was with him and magnified him greatly.

1:2 Solomon addressed all Israel, including those who commanded units of a thousand and a hundred, the judges, and all the leaders of all Israel who were heads of families. 1:3 Solomon and the entire assembly went to the worship center[3] in Gibeon, for the tent where they met God[4] was located there, which Moses the LORD's servant had made in the wilderness. 1:4 (Now David had brought up the ark of God from Kiriath Jearim to the place he had prepared for it, for he had pitched a tent for it in Jerusalem.[5] 1:5 But the bronze altar made by Bezalel son of Uri, son of Hur, was in front of the LORD's tabernacle.[6] Solomon and the entire assembly prayed to him[7] there.) 1:6 Solomon went up to the bronze altar before the LORD which was at the meeting tent, and he offered up a thousand burnt sacrifices.

1:7 That night God appeared[8] to Solomon and said to him, "Tell me[9] what I should give you." 1:8 Solomon replied to God, "You demonstrated[10] great loyalty to my father David and have made me king in his place. 1:9 Now, LORD God, may your promise[11] to my father David be realized,[12] for you have made me king over a great nation as numerous as the dust of the earth. 1:10 Now give me wisdom and discernment so[13] I can effectively lead this nation.[14] Otherwise[15] no one is able[16] to make judicial decisions for[17] this great nation of yours."[18]

1:11 God said to Solomon, "Because you desire this,[19] and did not ask for riches, wealth, and honor, or for vengeance on your enemies,[20] and because you did not ask for long life,[21] but requested wisdom and discernment so you can make judicial decisions for my people over whom I have made you king, 1:12 you are granted wisdom and discernment.[22] Furthermore I am giving you riches, wealth, and honor surpassing that of any king before or after you."[23]

1:13 Solomon left the meeting tent at the worship center in Gibeon and went to Jerusalem, where he reigned over Israel.[24]

Solomon's Wealth

1:14 Solomon accumulated[25] chariots and horses. He had 1,400 chariots and 12,000 horses. He kept them in assigned cities and in Jerusalem.[26] 1:15 The king made silver and gold as plentiful[27] in Jerusalem as stones; cedar was[28] as plentiful as sycamore fig trees are in the lowlands.[29] 1:16 Solomon acquired his horses from Egypt[30] and from Que; the king's traders purchased them from Que. 1:17 They paid 600 silver pieces for each chariot from Egypt, and 150 silver pieces for each horse. They also sold chariots and horses to all the kings of the Hittites and to the kings of Syria.[31]

Solomon Gathers Building Materials for the Temple

2:1 (1:18)[1] Solomon ordered a temple to be built to honor the LORD, as well as a royal palace for himself.[2] 2:2 (2:1) Solomon had[3] 70,000 common laborers[4] and 80,000 stonecutters[5] in the hills, in addition to 3,600 supervisors.[6]

2:3 Solomon sent a message to King Huram[7] of Tyre:[8] "Help me[9] as you did my father David, when you sent him cedar logs[10] for the construction of his palace.[11] 2:4 Look, I am ready to build a temple to honor[12] the LORD my God and to dedicate it to him in order to burn fragrant incense before him, to set out the bread that is regularly displayed,[13] and to offer burnt sacrifices each morning and evening, and on Sabbaths, new moon festivals, and at other times appointed by the LORD our God. This is something Israel must do on a permanent basis.[14] 2:5 I will build a great temple, for our God is greater than all gods. 2:6 Of course, who can really build a temple for him, since the sky[15] and the highest heavens cannot contain him? Who am I that I should build him a temple! It will really be only a place to offer sacrifices before him.[16]

2:7 "Now send me a man who is skilled in working with gold, silver, bronze, and iron, as well as purple, crimson, and violet colored fabrics, and who knows how to engrave. He will work with my skilled craftsmen here in Jerusalem[17] and Judah, whom my father David provided. 2:8 Send me cedars, evergreens, and algum[18] trees from Lebanon, for I know your servants are adept[19] at cutting down trees in Lebanon. My servants will work with your servants 2:9 to supply me with large quantities of timber, for I am building a great, magnificent temple. 2:10 Look, I will pay your servants who cut the timber 20,000 cors[20] of ground wheat, 20,000 cors of barley, 120,000 gallons[21] of wine, and 120,000 gallons of olive oil."

2:11 King Huram[22] of Tyre sent this letter to Solomon: "Because the LORD loves his people, he has made you their king." 2:12 Huram also said, "Worthy of praise is the LORD God of Israel, who made the sky and the earth! He has given David a wise son who has discernment and insight and will build a temple for the LORD, as well as a royal palace for himself.[23] 2:13 Now I am sending you Huram Abi,[24] a skilled and capable man, 2:14 whose mother is a Danite and whose father is a Tyrian.[25] He knows how to work with gold, silver, bronze, iron, stones, and wood, as well as purple, violet, white, and crimson fabrics. He knows how to do all kinds of engraving and understands any design given to him. He will work with your skilled craftsmen and the skilled craftsmen of my lord David your father. 2:15 Now let my lord send to his servants the wheat, barley, olive oil, and wine he has promised; 2:16 we will get all the timber you need from Lebanon[26] and bring it[27] in raft-like bundles[28] by sea to Joppa. You can then haul it on up to Jerusalem."

[22] tn Heb "Huram" (also in v. 12). Some medieval Hebrew MSS, along with the LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate spell the name "Hiram," agreeing with 1 Chr 14:1. "Huram" is a variant spelling referring to the same individual.

census his father David had taken. There were 153,600 in all. 2:18 He designated[1] 70,000 as common laborers,[2] 80,000 as stonecutters[3] in the hills, and 3,600 as supervisors to make sure the people completed the work.[4]

The Building of the Temple

3:1 Solomon began building the LORD's temple in Jerusalem[5] on Mount Moriah, where the LORD had appeared to his father David. This was the place that David prepared at the threshing floor of Ornan[6] the Jebusite. 3:2 He began building on the second day of the second month of the fourth year of his reign.[7]

3:3 Solomon laid the foundation for God's temple;[8] its length (determined according to the old standard of measure) was 90 feet, and its width 30 feet.[9] 3:4 The porch in front of the main hall was 30 feet long, corresponding to the width of the temple,[10] and its height was 30 feet.[11] He plated the inside with pure gold. 3:5 He paneled[12] the main hall[13] with boards made from evergreen trees[14] and plated it with fine gold, decorated with palm trees and chains.[15] 3:6 He decorated the temple with precious stones; the gold he used came from Parvaim.[16] 3:7 He overlaid the temple's rafters, thresholds, walls and doors with gold; he carved decorative cherubim on the walls.

3:8 He made the most holy place;[17] its length was 30 feet,[18] corresponding to the width of the temple, and its width 30 feet.[19] He plated it with 600 talents[20] of fine gold. 3:9 The gold nails weighed 50 shekels; he also plated the upper areas with gold. 3:10 In the most holy place he made two images of cherubim and plated them with gold. 3:11 The combined wing span of the cherubs was 30 feet.[21] One of the first cherub's wings was seven and one-half feet long and touched one wall of the temple; its other wing was also seven and one-half feet long and touched one of the second cherub's wings.[22] 3:12 Likewise one of the second cherub's wings was seven and one-half feet long and touched the other wall of the temple; its other wing was also seven and one-half feet long and touched one of the first cherub's wings.[23] 3:13 The combined wingspan of these cherubim was 30 feet.[24] They stood upright, facing inward.[25] 3:14 He made the curtain out of violet, purple, crimson, and white fabrics, and embroidered on it decorative cherubim.

[6] tn In 2 Sam 24:16 this individual is called אַרַוְנָא ("Aravna"; traditionally "Araunah"). The form of the name found here also occurs in 1 Chr 21:15; 18-28.

[7] sn This would be April-May, 966 B.C. by modern reckoning.

[8] tn Heb "and these are the founding of Solomon to build the house of God."

[9] tn Heb "the length [in] cubits by the former measure was sixty cubits, and a width of twenty cubits." Assuming a length of 18 inches (45 cm) for the standard cubit, the length of the foundation would be 90 feet (27 m) and its width 30 feet (9 m).

[10] tc Heb "and the porch which was in front of the length corresponding to the width of the house, twenty cubits." The phrase הֵיכַל הַבַּיִת (heykhal habbayit, "the main hall of the temple," which appears in the parallel account in 1 Kgs 6:3) has been accidentally omitted by homoioarcton after עַל־פְּנֵי ('al-pᵉney, "in front of"). Note that the following form, הָאֹרֶךְ (ha'orekh, "the length"), also begins with the Hebrew letter he (ה). A scribe's eye probably jumped from the initial he on הֵיכַל to the initial he on הָאֹרֶךְ, leaving out the intervening letters in the process.

[11] tc The Hebrew text has "one hundred and twenty cubits," i.e. (assuming a cubit of 18 inches) 180 feet (54 m). An ancient Greek witness and the Syriac version read "twenty cubits," i.e., 30 feet (9 m). It is likely that מֵאָה (me'ah, "a hundred"), is a corruption of an original אַמּוֹת ('ammot, "cubits").

[12] tn Heb "covered."

[13] tn Heb "the large house."

[14] tn Heb "wood of evergreens."

[15] tn Heb "and he put up on it palm trees and chains."

[16] tn Heb "and he plated the house [with] precious stone for beauty, and the gold was the gold of Parvaim."

sn The location of Parvaim, the source of the gold for Solomon's temple, is uncertain. Some have identified it with modern Farwa in Yemen; others relate it to the Sanskrit parvam and understand it to be a general term for the regions east of Israel.

[17] tn Heb "the house of the holy place of holy places."

[18] tn Heb "twenty cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), this would give a length of 30 feet (9 m).

[19] tc Heb "twenty cubits." Some suggest adding, "and its height twenty cubits" (see 1 Kgs 6:20). The phrase could have been omitted by homoioteleuton.

[20] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the gold plating was 40,380 lbs. (18,360 kg).

[21] tn Heb "and the wings of the cherubs, their length was twenty cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), the wingspan of the cherubs would have been 30 feet (9 m).

[22] tn Heb "the wing of the one was five cubits from the touching of the wall of the house, and the other wing was five cubits from the touching of the wing of the other cherub." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), each wing would have been 7.5 feet (2.25 m) long.

[23] tn Heb "and the wing of the one (הָאֶחָד, ha'ekhad, "the one"; this should probably be emended to הָאַחֵר, ha'akher, "the other") cherub was five cubits, touching the wall of the house, and the other wing was five cubits, clinging to the wing of the other cherub."

[24] tn Heb "the wings of these cherubs were spreading twenty cubits."

[25] tn Heb "and they were standing on their feet, with their faces to the house." An alternative translation of the last clause would be, "with their faces to the main hall."

3:15 In front of the temple he made two pillars which had a combined length[1] of 52½ feet,[2] with each having a plated capital seven and one-half feet high.[3] 3:16 He made ornamental chains[4] and put them on top of the pillars. He also made one hundred pomegranate-shaped ornaments and arranged them within the chains. 3:17 He set up the pillars in front of the temple, one on the right side and the other on the left.[5] He named the one on the right Yakin,[6] and the one on the left Boaz.[7]

4:1 He made a bronze altar, 30 feet[8] long, 30 feet[9] wide, and 15 feet[10] high. 4:2 He also made the big bronze basin called "The Sea."[11] It measured 15 feet[12] from rim to rim, was circular in shape, and stood seven and one-half feet[13] high. Its circumference was 45 feet.[14] 4:3 Images of bulls were under it all the way around, ten every eighteen inches[15] all the way around. The bulls were in two rows and had been cast with "The Sea." 4:4 "The Sea" stood on top of twelve bulls. Three faced northward, three westward, three southward, and three eastward. "The Sea" was placed on top of them, and they all faced outward.[16] 4:5 It was four fingers thick and its rim was like that of a cup shaped like a lily blossom. It could hold 18,000 gallons.[17] 4:6 He made ten washing basins; he put five on the south side and five on the north side. In them they rinsed the items used for burnt sacrifices; the priests washed in "The Sea."

4:7 He made ten gold lampstands according to specifications and put them in the temple, five on the right and five on the left. 4:8 He made ten tables and set them in the temple, five on the right and five on the left. He also made one hundred gold bowls. 4:9 He made the courtyard of the priests and the large enclosure and its doors;[18] he plated their doors with bronze. 4:10 He put "The Sea" on the south side, in the southeast corner.

4:11 Huram Abi[19] made the pots, shovels, and bowls. He finished all the work on God's temple he had been assigned by King Solomon.[20] 4:12 He made[21] the two pillars, the two bowl-shaped tops of the pillars, the latticework for the bowl-shaped tops of the two pillars, 4:13 the four hundred pomegranate-shaped ornaments for the latticework of the two pillars (each latticework had two rows of these ornaments at the bowl-shaped top of the pillar), 4:14 the ten[22] movable stands with their ten[23] basins, 4:15 the big bronze basin called "The Sea" with its twelve bulls underneath, 4:16 and the pots, shovels, and meat forks.[24] All the items King Solomon assigned Huram Abi to make for the LORD's temple[25] were made from polished bronze. 4:17 The king had them cast in earth foundries[26] in the region of the Jordan between Succoth and Zarethan. 4:18 Solomon made so many of these items they did not weigh the bronze.[27]

4:19 Solomon also made these items for God's temple: the gold altar, the tables on which

1 sn The figure given here appears to refer to the combined length of both pillars (perhaps when laid end-to-end on the ground prior to being set up; cf. v. 17); the figure given for the height of the pillars in 1 Kgs 7:15, 2 Kgs 25:17, and Jer 52:21 is half this (i.e., eighteen cubits).

2 tc The Syriac reads "eighteen cubits" (twenty-seven feet). This apparently reflects an attempt at harmonization with 1 Kgs 7:15, 2 Kgs 25:17, and Jer 52:21.

3 tn Heb "and he made before the house two pillars, thirty-five cubits [in] length, and the plated capital which was on its top [was] five cubits." The significance of the measure "thirty-five cubits" (52.5 feet or 15.75 m, assuming a cubit of 18 inches) for the "length" of the pillars is uncertain. According to 1 Kgs 7:15, each pillar was eighteen cubits (27 feet or 8.1 m) high. Perhaps the measurement given here was taken with the pillars lying end-to-end on the ground before they were set up.

4 tn The Hebrew text adds here, "in the inner sanctuary," but the description at this point is of the pillars, not the inner sanctuary.

5 tn Or "one on the south and the other on the north."

6 tn The name "Yakin" appears to be a verbal form and probably means, "he establishes."

7 tn The meaning of the name "Boaz" is uncertain. For various proposals, see BDB 126-27 s.v. בֹּעַז. One attractive option is to revocalize the name as בְּעֹז (bÿ'oz, "in strength") and to understand it as completing the verbal form on the first pillar. Taking the words together and reading from right to left, one can translate the sentence, "he establishes [it] in strength."

8 tn Heb "twenty cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), the length would have been 30 feet (9 m).

9 tn Heb "twenty cubits."

10 tn Heb "ten cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), the height would have been 15 feet (4.5 m).

11 tn Heb "He made the sea, cast."

sn The large bronze basin known as "The Sea" was mounted on twelve bronze bulls and contained water for the priests to bathe themselves (see v. 6; cf. Exod 30:17-21).

12 tn Heb "ten cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), the diameter would have been 15 feet (4.5 m).

13 tn Heb "five cubits." Assuming a cubit of 18 inches (45 cm), the height would have been 7.5 feet (2.25 m).

14 tn Heb "and a measuring line went around it thirty cubits all around."

15 tn Heb "ten every cubit."

16 tn Heb "all their hindquarters were toward the inside."

17 tn Heb "3,000 baths" (note that the capacity is given in 1 Kings 7:26 as "2,000 baths"). A bath was a liquid measure roughly equivalent to six gallons (about 22 liters), so 3,000 baths was a quantity of about 18,000 gallons (66,000 liters).

18 tn Heb "and the doors for the enclosure."

19 tn Heb "Huram," but here this refers to Huram Abi (2 Chr 2:13). The complete name has been used in the translation to avoid possible confusion with King Huram of Tyre.

20 tn Heb "Huram finished doing all the work which he did for King Solomon [on] the house of God."

21 tn The words "he made" are added for stylistic reasons.

22 tc The Hebrew text has עָשָׂה ('asah, "he made"), which is probably a corruption of עֶשֶׂר ('eser, "ten"; see 1 Kgs 7:43).

23 tc The Hebrew text has עָשָׂה ('asah, "he made"), which is probably a corruption of עֲשָׂרָה ('asarah, "ten"; see 1 Kgs 7:43).

24 tc Some prefer to read here "bowls," see v. 11 and 1 Kgs 7:45.

25 tn Heb "Huram Abi made for King Solomon [for] the house of the LORD."

26 tn Or perhaps, "molds."

27 tn Heb "Solomon made all these items in great abundance; the weight of the bronze was not sought."

the Bread of the Presence[1] was kept, 4:20 the pure gold lampstands and their lamps which burned as specified at the entrance to the inner sanctuary, 4:21 the pure gold flower-shaped ornaments, lamps, and tongs, 4:22 the pure gold trimming shears, basins, pans, and censers, and the gold door sockets for the inner sanctuary (the most holy place) and for the doors of the main hall of the temple. 5:1 When Solomon had finished constructing the LORD's temple, he put the holy items that belonged to his father David (the silver, gold, and all the other articles) in the treasuries of God's temple.

Solomon Moves the Ark into the Temple

5:2 Then Solomon convened Israel's elders – all the leaders of the Israelite tribes and families – in Jerusalem,[2] so they could witness the transferal of the ark of the covenant of the LORD from the City of David[3] (that is, Zion).[4] 5:3 All the men of Israel assembled before the king during the festival[5] in the seventh month.[6] 5:4 When all Israel's elders had arrived, the Levites lifted the ark. 5:5 The priests and Levites carried the ark, the tent where God appeared to his people,[7] and all the holy items in the tent.[8] 5:6 Now King Solomon and all the Israelites who had assembled with him went on ahead of the ark and sacrificed more sheep and cattle than could be counted or numbered.[9]

5:7 The priests brought the ark of the covenant of the LORD to its assigned[10] place in the inner sanctuary of the temple, in the most holy place under the wings of the cherubs. 5:8 The cherubs' wings extended over the place where the ark sat; the cherubs overshadowed the ark and its poles.[11] 5:9 The poles were so long their ends extending out from the ark were visible from in front of the inner sanctuary, but they could not be seen from beyond that point.[12] They have remained there to this very day. 5:10 There was nothing in the ark except the two tablets Moses had placed there in Horeb.[13] (It was there that[14] the LORD made an agreement with the Israelites after he brought them out of the land of Egypt.)

5:11 The priests left the holy place.[15] All the priests who participated had consecrated themselves, no matter which division they represented.[16] 5:12 All the Levites who were musicians, including Asaph, Heman, Jeduthun, and their sons and relatives, wore linen. They played cymbals and stringed instruments as they stood east of the altar. They were accompanied by 120 priests who blew trumpets. 5:13 The trumpeters and musicians played together, praising and giving thanks to the LORD. Accompanied by trumpets, cymbals, and other instruments, they loudly praised the LORD, singing:[17] "Certainly he is good; certainly his loyal love endures!" Then a cloud filled the LORD's temple.[18] 5:14 The priests could not carry out their duties[19] because of the cloud; the LORD's splendor filled God's temple.

6:1 Then Solomon said, "The LORD has said that he lives in thick darkness. 6:2 O LORD,[20] I have built a lofty temple for you, a place where you can live permanently." 6:3 Then the king turned around[21] and pronounced a blessing over the whole Israelite assembly as they stood there.[22] 6:4 He said, "The LORD God of Israel is worthy of praise because he has fulfilled[23] what he promised[24] my father David. 6:5 He told [10] tn The word "assigned" is supplied in the translation for clarification.

[11] sn These poles were used to carry the ark. The Levites were to carry it with the poles on their shoulders. See Exod 25:13-15; 1 Chr 15:15.

[15] tn Heb "and when the priests went from the holy place." The syntactical relationship of this temporal clause to the following context is unclear. Perhaps the thought is completed in v. 14 after a lengthy digression.

[16] tn Heb "Indeed [or "for"] all the priests who were found consecrated themselves without guarding divisions."

[17] tn Heb "like one were the trumpeters and the musicians, causing one voice to be heard, praising and giving thanks to the LORD, and while raising a voice with trumpets and with cymbals and with instruments of music, and while praising the LORD."

[18] tn Heb "and the house was filled with a cloud, the house of the LORD."

[19] tn Heb "were not able to stand to serve."

[20] tn The words "O LORD" do not appear in the Hebrew text, but they are supplied in the translation for clarification; Solomon addresses the Lord in prayer at this point.

[21] tn Heb "turned his face."

[22] tn Heb "and he blessed all the assembly of Israel, and all the assembly of Israel was standing."

[23] tn The Hebrew text reads, "fulfilled by his hand," but the phrase "by his hand" is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[24] tn The Hebrew text reads, "promised by his mouth," but the phrase "by his mouth" is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

David,[1] 'Since the day I brought my people out of the land of Egypt, I have not chosen a city from all the tribes of Israel to build a temple in which to live.[2] Nor did I choose a man as leader of my people Israel. 6:6 But now I have chosen Jerusalem as a place to live,[3] and I have chosen David to lead my people Israel.' 6:7 Now my father David had a strong desire to build a temple to honor the LORD God of Israel.[4] 6:8 The LORD told my father David, 'It is right for you to have a strong desire to build a temple to honor me.[5] 6:9 But you will not build the temple; your very own son will build the temple for my honor.'[6] 6:10 The LORD has kept the promise he made. I have taken my father David's place and have occupied the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised. I have built this temple for the honor of the LORD God of Israel 6:11 and set up in it a place for the ark containing the covenant the LORD made with the Israelites."

6:12 He stood before the altar of the LORD in front of the entire assembly of Israel and spread out his hands. 6:13 Solomon had made a bronze platform and had placed it in the middle of the enclosure. It was seven and one-half feet[7] long, seven and one-half feet[8] wide, and four and one-half feet[9] high. He stood on it and then got down on his knees in front of the entire assembly of Israel. He spread out his hands toward the sky, 6:14 and prayed:[10] "O LORD God of Israel, there is no god like you in heaven or on earth! You maintain covenantal loyalty[11] to your servants who obey you with sincerity.[12] 6:15 You have kept your word to your servant, my father David;[13] this very day you have fulfilled what you promised.[14] 6:16 Now, O LORD God of Israel, keep the promise you made to your servant, my father David, when you said, 'You will never fail to have a successor ruling before me on the throne of Israel,[15] provided that your descendants watch their step and obey my law as you have done.'[16] 6:17 Now, O LORD God of Israel, may the promise you made to your servant David be realized.[17]

6:18 "God does not really live with humankind on the earth![18] Look, if the sky and the highest heaven cannot contain you, how much less this temple I have built! 6:19 But respond favorably to[19] your servant's prayer and his request for help, O LORD my God. Answer[20] the desperate prayer[21] your servant is presenting to you.[22] 6:20 Night and day may you watch over this temple, the place where you promised you would live.[23] May you answer your servant's prayer for this place.[24] 6:21 Respond to the requests of your servant and your people Israel for this place.[25] Hear from your heavenly dwelling place and respond favorably and forgive.[26]

6:22 "When someone is accused of sinning against his neighbor and the latter pronounces a curse on the alleged offender before your altar in this temple,[27] 6:23 listen from heaven and make a just decision about your servants' claims. Condemn the guilty party, declare the other innocent, and give both of them what they deserve.[28]

6:24 "If your people Israel are defeated by an enemy[29] because they sinned against you, then if they come back to you, renew their allegiance to you,[30] and pray for your help[31] before you in this temple, 6:25 then listen from heaven, forgive the sin of your people Israel, and bring them back to the land you gave to them and their ancestors.[32]

[1] tn Heb "saying."

[2] tn Heb "to build a house for my name to be there." Here "name" is used by metonymy for the LORD himself, and thus the expression "to be there" refers to his taking up residence there (hence the translation, "a temple in which to live"). In this case the temple is referred to as a "house" where the LORD himself can reside.

[3] tn Heb for my name to be there." See also the note on the word "live" in v. 5.

[4] tn Heb "and it was with the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the LORD God of Israel."

[15] tn Heb "there will not be cut off from you a man from before me sitting on the throne of Israel."

[16] tn Heb "guard their way by walking in my law as you have walked before me."

[17] tn Or "prove to be reliable."

[18] tn Heb "Indeed, can God really live with mankind on the earth?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Of course not," the force of which is reflected in the translation "God does not really live with mankind on the earth."

[20] tn Heb "by listening to."

Certainly[6] you will then teach them the right way to live[7] and send rain on your land that you have given your people to possess.[8]

6:28 "The time will come when the land suffers from a famine, a plague, blight, and disease, or a locust[9] invasion, or when their enemy lays siege to the cities of the land,[10] or when some other type of plague or epidemic occurs. 6:29 When all your people Israel pray and ask for help,[11] as they acknowledge their intense pain[12] and spread out their hands toward this temple, 6:30 then listen from your heavenly dwelling place, forgive their sin,[13] and act favorably toward each one based on your evaluation of their motives.[14] (Indeed you are the only one who can correctly evaluate the motives of all people.)[15] 6:31 Then they will honor[16] you by obeying you[17] throughout their lifetimes as[18] they live on the land you gave to our ancestors.

[1] tn Heb "when." In the Hebrew text vv. 26-27a actually contain one lengthy conditional sentence, which the translation has divided into two sentences for stylistic reasons.

[2] tn Or "heavens" (also in v. 12). The Hebrew term שָׁמַיִם (shamayim) may be translated "heaven(s)" or "sky" depending on the context.

[3] tn Heb "they."

[4] tn Heb "confess [or perhaps, "praise"] your name."

[5] tn The Hebrew text reads "because you answer them," as if the verb is from עָנָה ('anah, "answer"). However, this reference to a divine answer is premature, since the next verse asks for God to intervene in mercy. It is better to revocalize the consonantal text as תְעַנֵּם (te'annem, "you afflict them"), a Piel verb form from the homonym עָנָה ("afflict").

[6] tn The present translation understands כִּי (ki) in an emphatic or asseverative sense ("Certainly"). Other translation have "indeed" (NASB), "when" (NRSV), "so" (NEB), or leave the word untranslated (NIV).

[8] tn Or "for an inheritance."

[9] tn Actually two Hebrew words appear here, both of which are usually (but not always) taken as referring to locusts. Perhaps different stages of growth or different varieties are in view, but this is uncertain. NEB has "locusts new-sloughed or fully grown"; NASB has "locust or grasshopper"; NIV has "locusts or grasshoppers"; NRSV has "locust, or caterpillar."

[13] tn The words "their sin" are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied for clarification.

[14] tn Heb "and act and give to each one according to all his ways because you know his heart." In the Hebrew text vv. 28-30a actually contain one lengthy conditional sentence, which the translation has divided up for stylistic reasons.

[15] tn Heb "Indeed you know, you alone, the heart of all the sons of mankind."

[16] tn Heb "fear."

[17] tn Heb "by walking in your ways."

[18] tn Heb "all the days [in] which."

[19] tn Heb "your great name." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor (thus the translation here, "your great reputation").

[21] tn Heb "and do all which the foreigner calls to [i.e., "requests of"] you."

[23] tn Heb "fear."

[24] tn Heb "that your name is called over this house which I built." The Hebrew idiom "call the name over" indicates ownership. See 2 Sam 12:28.

[25] tn Heb "When your people go out for battle against their enemies in the way which you send them."

[26] tn Heb "toward this city which you have chosen and the house which I built for your name."

6:40 "Now, my God, may you be attentive and responsive to the prayers offered in this place.[3] 6:41 Now ascend, O LORD God, to your resting place, you and the ark of your strength! May your priests, O LORD God, experience your deliverance![4] May your loyal followers rejoice in the prosperity you give![5] 6:42 O LORD God, do not reject your chosen ones![6] Remember the faithful promises you made to your servant David!"

Solomon Dedicates the Temple

7:1 When Solomon finished praying, fire came down from heaven[7] and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices, and the LORD's splendor filled the temple. 7:2 The priests were unable to enter the LORD's temple because the LORD's splendor filled the LORD's temple. 7:3 When all the Israelites saw the fire come down and the LORD's splendor over the temple, they got on their knees with their faces downward toward the pavement. They worshiped and gave thanks to the LORD, saying,[8] "Certainly he is good; certainly his loyal love endures!"

7:4 The king and all the people were presenting sacrifices to the LORD. 7:5 King Solomon sacrificed 22,000 cattle and 120,000 sheep. Then the king and all the people dedicated God's temple. 7:6 The priests stood in their assigned spots, along with the Levites who had the musical instruments used for praising the LORD.[9] (These were the ones King David made for giving thanks to the LORD and which were used by David when he offered praise, saying, "Certainly his loyal love endures.")[10] Opposite the Levites,[11] the priests were blowing the trumpets, while all Israel stood there. 7:7 Solomon consecrated the middle of the courtyard that is in front of the LORD's temple. He offered burnt sacrifices, grain offerings,[12] and the fat from the peace offerings there, because the bronze altar that Solomon had made was too small to hold all these offerings.[13] 7:8 At that time Solomon and all Israel with him celebrated a festival for seven days. This great assembly included people from Lebo Hamath in the north to the Stream of Egypt in the south.[14] 7:9 On the eighth day they held an assembly, for they had dedicated the altar for seven days and celebrated the festival for seven more days. 7:10 On the twenty-third day of the seventh month, Solomon[15] sent the people home. They left[16] happy and contented[17] because of the good the LORD had done for David, Solomon, and his people Israel.

The Lord Gives Solomon a Promise and a Warning

7:11 After Solomon finished building the LORD's temple and the royal palace, and accomplished all his plans for the LORD's temple and his royal palace,[18] 7:12 the LORD appeared to Solomon at night and said to him: "I have answered[19] your prayer and chosen this place to be my temple where sacrifices are to be made.[20] 7:13 When[21] I close up the sky[22] so that it doesn't rain, or command locusts to devour the land's vegetation,[23] or send a plague among my people, 7:14 if my people, who belong to me,[24] humble themselves, pray, seek to please me,[25]

[1] tn Heb "their prayer and their requests for help."

[2] tn Heb "and accomplish their justice."

[3] tn Heb "May your eyes be open and your ears attentive to the prayer of this place."

[4] tn Heb "be clothed with deliverance."

[5] tn Heb "and may your loyal ones rejoice in good."

[6] tc Heb "do not turn away the face of your anointed ones." Many medieval Hebrew MSS, as well as the ancient versions, read the singular, "your anointed," which would probably refer to Solomon specifically, rather than the people.

[7] tn Or "the sky." The Hebrew term שָׁמַיִם (shamayim) may be translated "heaven(s)" or "sky" depending on the context.

[8] tn The word "saying" is supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[9] tn Heb "and the priests were standing at their posts, and the Levites with the instruments of music of the LORD."

[10] tn Heb "which David the king made to give thanks to the LORD, for lasting is his loyal love, when David praised by them."

[11] tn Heb "opposite them"; the referent (the Levites) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tc The Hebrew text omits reference to the grain offerings at this point, but note that they are included both in the list in the second half of the verse (see note on "offerings" at the end of this verse) and in the parallel account in 1 Kgs 8:64. The construction וְאֵת־הַמִּנְחָה (*v*e*'et-hamminkhah*; vav [ו] + accusative sign + noun with article; "grain offerings") was probably omitted accidentally by homoioarcton. Note the וְאֵת (*v*e*'et*) that immediately follows.

[13] tn Heb "to hold the burnt sacrifices, grain offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings." Because this is redundant, the translation employs a summary phrase: "all these offerings."

[14] tn Heb "Solomon held the festival at that time for seven days, and all Israel was with him, a very great assembly from Lebo Hamath to the wadi of Egypt."

[15] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Solomon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn The words "they left" are supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[17] tn Heb "good of heart."

[18] tn Heb "and all that entered the heart of Solomon to do in the house of the LORD and in his house he successfully accomplished."

[19] tn Heb "I have heard."

[20] tn Heb "temple of sacrifice." This means the LORD designated the temple as the place for making sacrifices, and this has been clarified in the translation.

[21] tn Or "if."

[22] tn Or "heavens." The Hebrew term שָׁמַיִם (shamayim) may be translated "heaven(s)" or "sky" depending on the context.

[23] tn Heb "the land," which stands here by metonymy for the vegetation growing in it.

[24] tn Heb "over whom my name is called." The Hebrew idiom "call the name over" indicates ownership. See 2 Sam 12:28.

[25] tn Heb "seek my face," where "my face" is figurative for God's presence and acceptance.

and repudiate their sinful practices,[1] then I will respond[2] from heaven, forgive their sin, and heal their land.[3] 7:15 Now I will be attentive and responsive to the prayers offered in this place.[4] 7:16 Now I have chosen and consecrated this temple by making it my permanent home;[5] I will be constantly present there.[6] 7:17 You must serve me as your father David did. Do everything I commanded and obey my rules and regulations.[7] 7:18 Then I will establish your dynasty,[8] just as I promised your father David, 'You will not fail to have a successor ruling over Israel.'[9]

7:19 "But if you people[10] ever turn away from me, fail to obey the regulations and rules I instructed you to keep,[11] and decide to serve and worship other gods,[12] 7:20 then I will remove you[13] from my land I have given you,[14] I will abandon this temple I have consecrated with my presence,[15] and I will make you[16] an object of mockery and ridicule[17] among all the nations. 7:21 As for this temple, which was once majestic,[18] everyone who passes by it will be shocked and say, 'Why did the LORD do this to this land and this temple?' 7:22 Others will then answer,[19] 'Because they abandoned the LORD God of their ancestors,[20] who led them out of Egypt. They embraced other gods whom they worshiped and served.[21] That is why he brought all this disaster down on them.'"

Building Projects and Commercial Efforts

8:1 After twenty years, during which Solomon built the LORD's temple and his royal palace, 8:2 Solomon rebuilt the cities that Huram[22] had given him and settled Israelites there. 8:3 Solomon went to Hamath Zobah and seized it. 8:4 He built up Tadmor in the wilderness and all the storage cities he had built in Hamath. 8:5 He made upper Beth Horon and lower Beth Horon fortified cities with walls and barred gates,[23] 8:6 and built up Baalath, all the storage cities that belonged to him,[24] and all the cities where chariots and horses were kept.[25] He built whatever he wanted in Jerusalem,[26] Lebanon, and throughout his entire kingdom.[27]

8:7 Now several non-Israelite peoples were left in the land after the conquest of Joshua, including the Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites.[28] 8:8 Their descendants remained in the land (the Israelites were unable to wipe them out). Solomon conscripted them for his work crews and they continue in that role to this very day.[29] 8:9 Solomon did not assign Israelites to these work crews;[30] the Israelites

[1] tn Heb "and turn from their sinful ways."

[2] tn Heb "hear."

[3] sn Here the phrase heal their land means restore the damage done by the drought, locusts and plague mentioned in v. 13.

[4] tn Heb "my eyes will be open and my ears attentive to the prayer of this place." Note Solomon's request in 6:40.

[5] tn Heb "for my name to be there perpetually [or perhaps, "forever"]."

[6] tn Heb "and my eyes and my heart will be there all the days."

[7] tn Heb "As for you, if you walk before me, as David your father walked, by doing all which I commanded you, [and] you keep my rules and my regulations."

sn Verse 17 is actually a lengthy protasis ("if" section) of a conditional sentence, the apodosis ("then" section) of which appears in v. 18.

[8] tn Heb "I will establish the throne of your kingdom."

[9] tn Heb "there will not be cut off from you a man ruling over Israel."

[10] tn The Hebrew pronoun is plural, suggesting that Solomon and all Israel (or perhaps Solomon and his successors) are in view. To convey this to the English reader, the translation "you people" has been employed.

[11] tn Heb "which I placed before you."

[12] tn Heb "and walk and serve other gods and bow down to them."

[13] tn Heb "them." The switch from the second to the third person pronoun is rhetorically effective, for it mirrors God's rejection of his people – he has stopped addressing them as "you" and begun addressing them as "them." However, the switch is awkward and confusing in English, so the translation maintains the direct address style.

[14] tn Heb "them." See the note on "you" earlier in this verse.

[15] tc Instead of "I will throw away," the parallel text in 1 Kgs 9:7 has "I will send away." The two verbs sound very similar in Hebrew, so the discrepancy is likely due to an oral transmissional error.

tn Heb "and this temple which I consecrated for my name I will throw away from before my face."

[16] tn Heb "him," which appears in context to refer to Israel (i.e., "you" in direct address). Many translations understand the direct object of the verb "make" to be the temple (NEB, NASB, NIV, NRSV "it").

[17] tn Heb "and I will make him [i.e., Israel] a proverb and a taunt," that is, a proverbial example of destruction and an object of reproach.

[18] tn Heb "and this house which was high/elevated." The statement makes little sense in this context, which predicts the desolation that judgment will bring. Some treat the clause as concessive, "Even though this temple is lofty [now]." Others, following the lead of several ancient versions, emend the text to, "this temple will become a heap of ruins."

[19] tn Heb "and they will say."

[20] tn Heb "fathers."

[21] tn Heb "and they took hold of other gods and bowed down to them and served them."

[22] tn Heb "Huram" (also in v. 18). Some medieval Hebrew MSS, along with the LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate spell the name "Hiram," agreeing with 1 Chr 14:1. "Huram" is a variant spelling referring to the same individual.

[23] tn Heb "and he built...[as] cities of fortification, [with] walls, doors, and a bar."

[24] tn Heb "Solomon." The recurrence of the proper name is unexpected in terms of contemporary English style, so the pronoun has been used in the translation instead.

[25] tn Heb "the cities of the chariots and the cities of the horses."

[26] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[27] tn Heb "and all the desire of Solomon which he desired to build in Jerusalem and in Lebanon and in all the land of his kingdom."

[28] tn Heb "all the people who were left from the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, who were not from Israel."

[29] tn Heb "from their sons who were left after them in the land, whom the sons of Israel did not wipe out, and Solomon raised them up for a work crew to this day."

[30] tn Heb "and from the sons of Israel which Solomon did not assign to the laborers for his work."

served as his soldiers, officers, charioteers, and commanders of his chariot forces.[1] 8:10 These men worked for Solomon as supervisors; there were a total of 250 of them who were in charge of the people.[2]

8:11 Solomon moved Pharaoh's daughter up from the City of David[3] to the palace he had built for her, for he said, "My wife must not live in the palace of King David of Israel, for the places where the ark of the LORD has entered are holy."

8:12 Then Solomon offered burnt sacrifices to the LORD on the altar of the LORD which he had built in front of the temple's porch.[4] 8:13 He observed the daily requirements for sacrifices that Moses had specified for Sabbaths, new moon festivals, and the three annual celebrations – the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the Feast of Weeks, and the Feast of Temporary Shelters.[5] 8:14 As his father David had decreed, Solomon[6] appointed the divisions of the priests to do their assigned tasks, the Levitical orders to lead worship and help the priests with their daily tasks,[7] and the divisions of the gatekeepers to serve at their assigned gates.[8] This was what David the man of God had ordered.[9] 8:15 They did not neglect any detail of the king's orders pertaining to the priests, Levites, and treasuries.[10]

8:16 All the work ordered by Solomon was completed, from the day the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid until it was finished; the LORD's temple was completed.

8:17 Then Solomon went to Ezion Geber and to Elat on the coast in the land of Edom. 8:18 Huram sent him ships and some of his sailors, men who were well acquainted with the sea. They sailed with Solomon's men to Ophir,[11] and took from there 450 talents[12] of gold, which they brought back to King Solomon.

Solomon Entertains a Queen

9:1 When the queen of Sheba heard about Solomon,[13] she came to challenge[14] him[15] with difficult questions.[16] She arrived in Jerusalem[17] with a great display of pomp,[18] bringing with her camels carrying spices,[19] a very large quantity of gold, and precious gems. She visited Solomon and discussed with him everything that was on her mind. 9:2 Solomon answered all her questions; there was no question too complex for the king.[20] 9:3 When the queen of Sheba saw for herself Solomon's extensive wisdom,[21] the palace[22] he had built, 9:4 the food in his banquet hall,[23] his servants and attendants[24] in their robes, his cupbearers in their robes, and his burnt sacrifices which he presented in the LORD's temple,[25] she was amazed.[26] 9:5 She said to the king, "The report I heard in my own country about your wise sayings and insight[27] was true! 9:6 I did not believe these things until I came and saw them with my own eyes. Indeed, I didn't

[1] tn Heb "officers of his chariots and his horses."

[2] tn Heb "these [were] the officials of the governors who belonged to the king, Solomon, 250, the ones ruling over the people."

[3] sn The phrase the City of David refers here to the fortress of Zion in Jerusalem, not to Bethlehem. See 2 Sam 5:7.

[4] tn Heb "the porch."

[5] tn The Hebrew phrase חַג [הַסֻּכּוֹת] (khag hassukot, "[festival of] huts" [or "shelters"]) is traditionally known as the Feast of Tabernacles. The rendering "booths" (cf. NAB, NASB, NRSV) is probably better than the traditional "tabernacles" in light of the meaning of the term סֻכָּה (sukkah, "hut; booth"), but "booths" are frequently associated with trade shows and craft fairs in contemporary American English. The nature of the celebration during this feast as a commemoration of the wanderings of the Israelites after they left Egypt suggests that a translation like "temporary shelters" is more appropriate.

[6] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Solomon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Heb "and the Levites, according to their posts, to praise and to serve opposite the priests according to the matter of a day in its day."

[8] tn Heb "and the gatekeepers by their divisions for a gate and a gate."

[9] tn Heb "for so [was] the command of David the man of God."

[10] tn Heb "and they did not turn aside from the command of the king concerning the priests and the Levites with regard to any matter and with regard to the treasuries."

[11] tn Heb "and Huram sent to him by the hand of his servants, ships, and servants [who] know the sea, and they came with the servants of Solomon to Ophir."

[12] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the gold was 30,285 lbs. (13,770 kg).

[14] tn Or "test."

[15] tn Heb "Solomon." The recurrence of the proper name here is redundant in terms of contemporary English style, so the pronoun has been used in the translation instead.

[16] tn Or "riddles."

[17] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[18] tn Heb "with very great strength." The Hebrew word חַיִל (khayil, "strength") may refer here to the size of her retinue or to the great wealth she brought with her.

[19] tn Or "balsam oil."

[21] tn Heb "all the wisdom of Solomon."

[22] tn Heb "house."

[23] tn Heb "the food on his table."

[24] tn Heb "the seating of his servants and the standing of his attendants."

[25] tc The Hebrew text has here, "and his upper room [by] which he was going up to the house of the LORD." But עֲלִיָּתוֹ ('aliyyato, "his upper room") should be emended to עֹלָתוֹ ('olato, "his burnt sacrifice[s]"). See the parallel account in 1 Kgs 10:5.

[26] tn Or "it took her breath away"; Heb "there was no breath still in her."

[27] tn Heb "about your words [or perhaps, "deeds"] and your wisdom."

hear even half the story![1] Your wisdom surpasses what was reported to me. 9:7 Your attendants, who stand before you at all times and hear your wise sayings, are truly happy![2] 9:8 May the LORD your God be praised because he favored[3] you by placing you on his throne as the one ruling on his behalf![4] Because of your God's love for Israel and his lasting commitment to them,[5] he made you king over them so you could make just and right decisions."[6] 9:9 She gave the king 120 talents[7] of gold and a very large quantity of spices and precious gems. The quantity of spices the queen of Sheba gave King Solomon has never been matched.[8] 9:10 (Huram's[9] servants, aided by Solomon's servants, brought gold from Ophir, as well as[10] fine[11] timber and precious gems. 9:11 With the timber the king made steps[12] for the LORD's temple and royal palace as well as stringed instruments[13] for the musicians. No one had seen anything like them in the land of Judah prior to that.[14]) 9:12 King Solomon gave the queen of Sheba everything she requested, more than what she had brought him.[15] Then she left and returned[16] to her homeland with her attendants.

Solomon's Wealth

9:13 Solomon received 666 talents[17] of gold per year,[18] 9:14 besides what he collected from the merchants[19] and traders. All the Arabian kings and the governors of the land also brought gold and silver to Solomon. 9:15 King Solomon made two hundred large shields of hammered gold; 600 measures[20] of hammered gold were used for each shield. 9:16 He also made three hundred small shields of hammered gold; 300 measures[21] of gold were used for each of those shields. The king placed them in the Palace of the Lebanon Forest.[22]

9:17 The king made a large throne decorated with ivory and overlaid it with pure gold. 9:18 There were six steps leading up to the throne, and a gold footstool was attached to the throne.[23] The throne had two armrests with a statue of a lion standing on each side.[24] 9:19 There were twelve statues of lions on the six steps, one lion at each end of each step. There was nothing like it in any other kingdom.[25]

9:20 All of King Solomon's cups were made of gold, and all the household items in the Palace of the Lebanon Forest were made of pure gold. There were no silver items, for silver was not considered very valuable in Solomon's time.[26] 9:21 The king had a fleet of large merchant ships[27] manned by Huram's men[28] that sailed the sea. Once every three years the fleet[29] came into

[4] tn Heb "as king for the LORD your God."

[5] tn Heb "to make him stand permanently."

[6] tn Heb "to do justice and righteousness."

[7] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the gold was 8,076 lbs. (3,672 kg).

[8] tn Heb "there has not been like those spices which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon."

[9] tn Heb "Huram's" (also in v. 21). Some medieval Hebrew MSS, along with the LXX, Syriac, and Vulgate spell the name "Hiram," agreeing with 1 Chr 14:1. "Huram" is a variant spelling referring to the same individual.

[10] tn Heb "who brought gold from Ophir, brought."

[11] tn Heb "algum."

[12] tn Heb "tracks." The parallel text in 1 Kgs 10:12 has a different term whose meaning is uncertain: "supports," perhaps "banisters" or "parapets."

[13] tn Two types of stringed instruments are specifically mentioned in the Hebrew text, the כִּנּוֹר (kinnor, "zither") and נֵבֶל (nevel, "harp").

[14] tn Heb "there was not seen like these formerly in the land of Judah."

[15] tn Heb "besides what she brought to the king."

[16] tn Heb "turned and went."

(58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the gold Solomon received annually was 44,822 lbs. (20,380 kg).

[18] tn Heb "the weight of the gold which came to Solomon in one year was 666 units of gold."

[19] tn Heb "traveling men."

[20] tn The Hebrew text has simply "600," with no unit of measure given.

[21] tn The Hebrew text has simply "300," with no unit of measure given.

[22] sn This name was appropriate because of the large amount of cedar, undoubtedly brought from Lebanon, used in its construction. The cedar pillars in the palace must have given it the appearance of a forest. See 1 Kgs 7:2.

[23] tc The parallel text of 1 Kgs 10:19 has instead "and the back of it was rounded on top."

[24] tn Heb "[There were] armrests on each side of the place of the seat, and two lions standing beside the armrests."

[25] tn Heb "nothing like it had been made for any kingdom."

[26] tn Heb "there was no silver, it was not regarded as anything in the days of Solomon."

[27] tn Heb "for ships belonging to the king were going [to] Tarshish with the servants of Huram." This probably refers to large ships either made in or capable of traveling to the distant western port of Tarshish.

port with cargoes of[1] gold, silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks.[2]

9:22 King Solomon was wealthier and wiser than any of the kings of the earth.[3] 9:23 All the kings of the earth wanted to visit Solomon to see him display his God-given wisdom.[4] 9:24 Year after year visitors brought their gifts, which included items of silver, items of gold, clothes, perfume, spices, horses, and mules.[5]

9:25 Solomon had 4,000 stalls for his chariot horses[6] and 12,000 horses. He kept them in assigned cities and in Jerusalem.[7] 9:26 He ruled all the kingdoms from the Euphrates River[8] to the land of the Philistines as far as the border of Egypt. 9:27 The king made silver as plentiful[9] in Jerusalem as stones; cedar was[10] as plentiful as sycamore fig trees are in the lowlands[11]. 9:28 Solomon acquired horses from Egypt and from all the lands.

Solomon's Reign Ends

9:29 The rest of the events of Solomon's reign, from start to finish, are recorded[12] in the Annals of Nathan the Prophet, the Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and the Vision of Iddo the Seer pertaining to Jeroboam son of Nebat. 9:30 Solomon ruled over all Israel from Jerusalem[13] for forty years. 9:31 Then Solomon passed away[14] and was buried in the city of his father David. His son Rehoboam replaced him as king.

The Northern Tribes Rebel

10:1 Rehoboam traveled to Shechem, for all Israel had gathered in[15] Shechem to make Rehoboam[16] king. 10:2 When Jeroboam son of Nebat heard the news, he was still in Egypt, where he had fled from King Solomon. Jeroboam returned from Egypt. 10:3 They sent for him[17] and Jeroboam and all Israel came and spoke to Rehoboam, saying, 10:4 "Your father made us work too hard![18] Now if you lighten the demands he made and don't make us work as hard, we will serve you."[19] 10:5 He said to them, "Go away for three days, then return to me." So the people went away.

10:6 King Rehoboam consulted with the older advisers who had served[20] his father Solomon when he had been alive. He asked them,[21] "How do you advise me to answer these people?" 10:7 They said to him, "If you are fair to these people, grant their request, and are cordial to them, they will be your servants from this time forward."[22] 10:8 But Rehoboam rejected their advice and consulted the young advisers who served him, with whom he had grown up.[23] 10:9 He asked them, "How do you advise me to respond to these people who said to me, 'Lessen the demands your father placed on us'?"[24] 10:10 The young advisers with whom Rehoboam[25] had grown up said to him, "Say this to these people who have said to you, 'Your father made us work hard, but now lighten our burden'[26] – say this to them: 'I am a lot harsher than my father![27] 10:11 My father imposed heavy demands on you; I will make them even heavier.[28] My father punished you with ordinary whips; I will punish you with whips that really sting your flesh.'"[29]

1 tn Heb "the ships of Tarshish came carrying."

2 tn The meaning of this word is unclear; some suggest it refers to "baboons." NEB has "monkeys," NASB, NRSV "peacocks," and NIV "baboons."

4 tn Heb "and all the kings of the earth were seeking the face of Solomon to hear his wisdom which God had placed in his heart."

5 tn Heb "and they were bringing each one his gift, items of silver...and mules, the matter of a year in a year."

6 tc The parallel text of 1 Kgs 10:26 reads "fourteen hundred chariots."

7 tn Heb "he placed them in the chariot cities and with the king in Jerusalem."

17 tn Heb "They sent and called for him."

18 tn Heb "made our yoke burdensome."

19 tn Heb "but you, now, lighten the burdensome work of your father and the heavy yoke which he placed on us, and we will serve you." In the Hebrew text the prefixed verbal form with vav (וְנַעַבְדֶךָּ, vᵉna'avdekha, "and we will serve you") following the imperative (הָקֵל, haqel, "lighten") indicates purpose/result. The conditional sentence used in the present translation is an attempt to bring out the logical relationship between these forms.

20 tn Heb "stood before."

21 tn Heb "saying."

22 tn Heb "If today you are for good to these people and you are favorable to them and speak to them good words, they will be your servants all the days."

23 tn Heb "Rehoboam rejected the advice of the elders which they advised and he consulted the young men with whom he had grown up, who stood before him."

24 tn Heb "Lighten the yoke which your father placed on us."

25 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Rehoboam) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Heb "Your father made our yoke heavy, but make it lighter upon us."

27 tn Heb "My little one is thicker than my father's hips." The referent of "my little one" is not clear. The traditional view is that it refers to the little finger (so NEB, NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). As the following statement makes clear, Rehoboam's point is that he is more harsh and demanding than his father.

28 tn Heb "and now my father placed upon you a heavy yoke, but I will add to your yoke."

29 tn Heb "My father punished you with whips, but I [will punish you] with scorpions." "Scorpions" might allude to some type of torture, but more likely it refers to a type of whip that inflicts an especially biting, painful wound.

10:12 Jeroboam and all the people reported to Rehoboam on the third day, just as the king had ordered when he said, "Return to me on the third day." 10:13 The king responded to the people harshly. He[1] rejected the advice of the older men 10:14 and followed the advice of the younger ones. He said, "My father imposed heavy demands on you;[2] I will make them even heavier.[3] My father punished you with ordinary whips; I will punish you with whips that really sting your flesh."[4] 10:15 The king refused to listen to the people, because God was instigating this turn of events[5] so that he might bring to pass the prophetic announcement he had made[6] through Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam son of Nebat.

10:16 When all Israel saw that the king refused to listen to them, the people answered the king, "We have no portion in David – no share in the son of Jesse![7] Return to your homes, O Israel![8] Now, look after your own dynasty, O David!"[9] So all Israel returned to their homes.[10] 10:17 (Rehoboam continued to rule over the Israelites who lived in the cities of Judah.) 10:18 King Rehoboam sent Hadoram,[11] the supervisor of the work crews, out after them, but the Israelites stoned him to death. King Rehoboam managed to jump into his chariot and escape to Jerusalem.[12] 10:19 So Israel has been in rebellion against the Davidic dynasty to this very day.

11:1 When Rehoboam arrived in Jerusalem, he summoned 180,000 skilled warriors from Judah and Benjamin[13] to attack Israel and restore the kingdom to Rehoboam. 11:2 But the LORD told Shemaiah the prophet,[14] 11:3 "Say this to King Rehoboam son of Solomon of Judah and to all the Israelites in Judah and Benjamin, 11:4 'The LORD says this: "Do not attack and make war with your brothers. Each of you go home, for I have caused this to happen."'"[15] They obeyed the LORD and called off the attack against Jeroboam.[16]

Rehoboam's Reign

11:5 Rehoboam lived in Jerusalem;[17] he built up these fortified cities throughout Judah: 11:6 Bethlehem,[18] Etam, Tekoa, 11:7 Beth Zur, Soco, Adullam, 11:8 Gath, Mareshah, Ziph, 11:9 Adoraim, Lachish, Azekah, 11:10 Zorah, Aijalon, and Hebron. These were the fortified cities in Judah and Benjamin. 11:11 He fortified these cities and placed officers in them, as well as storehouses of food, olive oil, and wine. 11:12 In each city there were shields and spears; he strongly fortified them.[19] Judah and Benjamin belonged to him.

11:13 The priests and Levites who lived throughout Israel supported him, no matter where they resided.[20] 11:14 The Levites even left their pasturelands and their property behind and came to Judah and Jerusalem, for Jeroboam and his sons prohibited them from serving as the LORD's priests. 11:15 Jeroboam[21] appointed his own priests to serve at the worship centers[22] and to lead in the worship of the goat idols and calf idols he had made.[23] 11:16 Those among all the Israelite tribes who were determined to worship the LORD God of Israel followed them to Jerusalem[24] to sacrifice to the LORD God of their ancestors.[25] 11:17 They supported[26] the kingdom of Judah and were loyal to[27] Rehoboam son of Solomon for three years; they followed the edicts of[28] David and Solomon for three years.

11:18 Rehoboam married[29] Mahalath the daughter of David's son Jerimoth and of[30] Abihail, the daughter of Jesse's son Eliab. 11:19 She bore him sons named Jeush, Shemariah, and Zaham. 11:20 He later married Maacah the daughter of Absalom. She bore to him Abijah, Attai, Ziza, and Shelomith. 11:21 Rehoboam loved Maacah daughter of Absalom more than his other wives and concubines.[1] He had eighteen wives and sixty concubines; he fathered twenty-eight sons and sixty daughters.

12:1 After Rehoboam's rule was established and solidified, he and all Israel rejected the law of the LORD. 12:2 Because they were unfaithful to the LORD, in King Rehoboam's fifth year, King Shishak of Egypt attacked Jerusalem. 12:3 He had 1,200 chariots, 60,000 horsemen, and an innumerable number of soldiers who accompanied him from Egypt, including Libyans, Sukkites, and Cushites. 12:4 He captured the fortified cities of Judah and marched against Jerusalem.

12:5 Shemaiah the prophet visited Rehoboam and the leaders of Judah who were assembled in Jerusalem because of Shishak. He said to them, "This is what the LORD says: 'You have rejected me, so I have rejected you and will hand you over to Shishak.'"[5] 12:6 The leaders of Israel and the king humbled themselves and said, "The LORD is just."[6] 12:7 When the LORD saw that they humbled themselves, he gave this message to Shemaiah:[7] "They have humbled themselves, so I will not destroy them. I will deliver them soon.[8] My anger will not be unleashed against[9] Jerusalem through[10] Shishak. 12:8 Yet they will become his subjects, so they can experience how serving me differs from serving the surrounding nations."[11]

12:9 King Shishak of Egypt attacked Jerusalem and took away the treasures of the LORD's temple and of the royal palace; he took everything, including the gold shields that Solomon had made. 12:10 King Rehoboam made bronze shields to replace them and assigned them to the officers of the royal guard[12] who protected the entrance to the royal palace. 12:11 Whenever the king visited the LORD's temple, the royal guards carried them and then brought them back to the guardroom.[13]

12:12 So when Rehoboam[14] humbled himself, the LORD relented from his anger and did not annihilate him;[15] Judah experienced some good things.[16] 12:13 King Rehoboam solidified his rule in Jerusalem;[17] he[18] was forty-one years old when he became king and he ruled for seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city the LORD chose from all the tribes of Israel to be his home.[19] Rehoboam's[20] mother was an Ammonite named Naamah. 12:14 He did evil because he was not determined to follow the LORD.[21]

12:15 The events of Rehoboam's reign, from start to finish, are recorded[22] in the Annals of Shemaiah the prophet and of Iddo the Seer that include genealogical records. 12:16 Then Rehoboam passed away[23] and was buried in the City of David.[24] His son Abijah replaced him as king.

Abijah's Reign

13:1 In the eighteenth year of the reign of King Jeroboam, Abijah became king over Judah. 13:2 He ruled for three years in Jerusalem.[25] His mother was Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel from Gibeah.[1]

[1] sn *Concubine*s were slave women in ancient Near Eastern societies who were the legal property of their master, but who could have legitimate sexual relations with their master. A concubine's status was more elevated than a mere servant, but she was not free and did not have the legal rights of a free wife. The children of a concubine could, in some instances, become equal heirs with the children of the free wife. After the period of the Judges concubines may have become more of a royal prerogative (2 Sam 21:10-14; 1 Kgs 11:3).

There was war between Abijah and Jeroboam. 13:3 Abijah launched the attack with 400,000 well-trained warriors,[2] while Jeroboam deployed against him 800,000 well-trained warriors.[3]

13:4 Abijah ascended Mount Zemaraim, in the Ephraimite hill country, and said: "Listen to me, Jeroboam and all Israel! 13:5 Don't you realize that the LORD God of Israel has given David and his dynasty lasting dominion over Israel by a formal agreement?[4] 13:6 Jeroboam son of Nebat, a servant of Solomon son of David, rose up and rebelled against his master. 13:7 Lawless good-for-nothing men[5] gathered around him and conspired[6] against Rehoboam son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was an inexperienced young man[7] and could not resist them. 13:8 Now you are declaring that you will resist the LORD's rule through the Davidic dynasty.[8] You have a huge army,[9] and bring with you the gold calves that Jeroboam made for you as gods. 13:9 But you banished[10] the LORD's priests, Aaron's descendants, and the Levites, and appointed your own priests just as the surrounding nations do! Anyone who comes to consecrate himself with a young bull or seven rams becomes a priest of these fake gods![11] 13:10 But as for us, the LORD is our God and we have not rejected him. Aaron's descendants serve as the LORD's priests and the Levites assist them with the work.[12] 13:11 They offer burnt sacrifices to the LORD every morning and every evening, along with fragrant incense. They arrange the Bread of the Presence on a ritually clean table and light the lamps on the gold lampstand every evening. Certainly[13] we are observing the LORD our God's regulations, but you have rejected him. 13:12 Now look, God is with us as our leader. His priests are ready to blow the trumpets to signal the attack against you.[14] You Israelites, don't fight against the LORD God of your ancestors,[15] for you will not win!"

13:13 Now Jeroboam had sent some men to ambush the Judahite army from behind.[16] The main army was in front of the Judahite army;[17] the ambushers were behind it. 13:14 The men of Judah turned around and realized they were being attacked from the front and the rear.[18] So they cried out for help to the LORD. The priests blew their trumpets, 13:15 and the men of Judah gave[19] the battle cry. As the men of Judah gave the battle cry, the LORD struck down Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah. 13:16 The Israelites fled from before the Judahite army,[20] and God handed them over to the men of Judah.[21] 13:17 Abijah and his army thoroughly defeated them;[22] 500,000 well-trained Israelite men fell dead.[23] 13:18 That day[24] the Israelites were defeated; the men of Judah prevailed because they relied on the LORD God of their ancestors.

13:19 Abijah chased Jeroboam; he seized from him these cities: Bethel[25] and its surrounding towns, Jeshanah and its surrounding towns, and Ephron and its surrounding towns. 13:20 Jeroboam did not regain power during the reign of Abijah.[26] The LORD struck him down and he died. 13:21 Abijah's power grew; he had[27] fourteen wives and fathered twenty-two sons and sixteen daughters.

13:22 The rest of the events of Abijah's reign, including his deeds and sayings,[28] are recorded in the writings of the prophet Iddo.

14:1 (13:23)[1] Abijah passed away[2] and was buried in the City of David.[3] His son Asa replaced him as king. During his reign[4] the land had rest for ten years.

Asa's Religious and Military Accomplishments

14:2 (14:1) Asa did what the LORD his God desired and approved.[5] 14:3 He removed the pagan altars[6] and the high places, smashed the sacred pillars, and cut down the Asherah poles.[7] 14:4 He ordered Judah to seek the LORD God of their ancestors[8] and to observe his law and commands.[9] 14:5 He removed the high places and the incense altars from all the cities of Judah. The kingdom had rest under his rule.[10]

14:6 He built fortified cities throughout Judah, for the land was at rest and there was no war during those years; the LORD gave him peace. 14:7 He said to the people of Judah:[11] "Let's build these cities and fortify them with walls, towers, and barred gates.[12] The land remains ours because we have followed[13] the LORD our God and he has made us secure on all sides."[14] So they built the cities[15] and prospered.

14:8 Asa had an army of 300,000 men from Judah, equipped with large shields and spears. He also had 280,000 men from Benjamin who carried small shields and were adept archers; they were all skilled warriors. 14:9 Zerah the Cushite marched against them with an army of 1,000,000[16] men and 300 chariots. He arrived at Mareshah, 14:10 and Asa went out to oppose him. They deployed for battle in the Valley of Zephathah near Mareshah.

14:11 Asa prayed[17] to the LORD his God: "O LORD, there is no one but you who can help the weak when they are vastly outnumbered.[18] Help us, O LORD our God, for we rely on you and have marched on your behalf against this huge army.[19] O LORD our God, don't let men prevail against you!"[20] 14:12 The LORD struck down the Cushites before Asa and Judah. The Cushites fled, 14:13 and Asa and his army chased them as far as Gerar. The Cushites were wiped out;[21] they were shattered before the LORD and his army. The men of Judah[22] carried off a huge amount of plunder. 14:14 They defeated all the cities surrounding Gerar, for the LORD caused them to panic.[23] The men of Judah[24] looted all the cities, for they contained a huge amount of goods.[25] 14:15 They also attacked the tents of the herdsmen in charge of the livestock.[26] They carried off many sheep and camels and then returned to Jerusalem.[27]

15:1 God's Spirit came upon Azariah son of Oded. 15:2 He met[28] Asa and told him, "Listen to me, Asa and all Judah and Benjamin! The LORD is with you when you are loyal to him.[29] If you seek him, he will respond to you,[30] but if you reject him, he will reject you. 15:3 For a long time[31] Israel had no true God, or priest to instruct them, or law. 15:4 Because of their distress, they turned back to the LORD God of Israel. They sought him and he responded to them.[32] 15:5 In those days[33] no one could travel safely,[34] for total chaos had overtaken all the people of the surrounding lands.[35] 15:6 One nation was crushed by another, and one city by another, for God caused them to be in great turmoil.[1] 15:7 But as for you, be strong and don't get discouraged,[2] for your work will be rewarded."[3]

15:8 When Asa heard these words and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he was encouraged.[4] He removed the detestable idols from the entire land of Judah and Benjamin and from the cities he had seized in the Ephraimite hill country. He repaired the altar of the LORD in front of the porch of the LORD's temple.[5]

15:9 He assembled all Judah and Benjamin, as well as the settlers[6] from Ephraim, Manasseh, and Simeon who had come to live with them. Many people from Israel had come there to live[7] when they saw that the LORD his God was with him. 15:10 They assembled in Jerusalem in the third month of the fifteenth year of Asa's reign. 15:11 At that time[8] they sacrificed to the LORD some of the plunder they had brought back, including 700 head of cattle and 7,000 sheep.[9] 15:12 They solemnly agreed[10] to seek the LORD God of their ancestors[11] with their whole heart and being. 15:13 Anyone who would not seek the LORD God of Israel would be executed, whether they were young or old,[12] male or female. 15:14 They swore their allegiance to the LORD, shouting their approval loudly and sounding trumpets and horns.[13] 15:15 All Judah was happy about the oath, because they made the vow with their whole heart. They willingly sought the LORD and he responded to them.[14] He made them secure on every side.[15]

15:16 King Asa also removed Maacah his grandmother[16] from her position as queen mother[17] because she had made a loathsome Asherah pole. Asa cut down her Asherah pole and crushed and burned it in the Kidron Valley. 15:17 The high places were not eliminated from Israel, yet Asa was wholeheartedly devoted to the LORD throughout his lifetime.[18] 15:18 He brought the holy items that his father and he had made into God's temple, including the silver, gold, and other articles.[19]

Asa's Failures

15:19 There was no more war until the thirty-fifth year of Asa's reign. 16:1 In the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign, King Baasha of Israel attacked Judah, and he established Ramah as a military outpost to prevent anyone from leaving or entering the land of King Asa of Judah.[20] 16:2 Asa took all the silver and gold that was left in the treasuries of the LORD's temple and of the royal palace and sent it to King Ben Hadad of Syria, ruler in Damascus, along with this message: 16:3 "I want to make a treaty with you, like the one our fathers made.[21] See, I have sent you silver and gold. Break your treaty with King Baasha of Israel, so he will retreat from my land."[22] 16:4 Ben Hadad accepted King Asa's offer and ordered his army commanders to attack the cities of Israel.[23] They conquered[24] Ijon, Dan, Abel Maim,[25] and all the storage cities of Naphtali. 16:5 When Baasha heard the news, he stopped fortifying[26] Ramah and abandoned the project.[27] 16:6 King Asa ordered all the men of Judah to carry away the stones and wood that Baasha had used to build Ramah.[28] He used the materials to build up[29] Geba and Mizpah.

16:7 At that time Hanani the prophet[30] visited King Asa of Judah and said to him: "Because you relied on the king of Syria and did not rely on the LORD your God, the army of the king of Syria has escaped from your hand. 16:8 Did not the Cushites and Libyans have a huge army with chariots and a very large number of horsemen? But when you relied on the LORD, he handed them over to you! 16:9 Certainly[31] the LORD watches the whole earth carefully[32] and is

Asa's Reign Ends

16:11 The events of Asa's reign, from start to finish, are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Judah and Israel.[3] 16:12 In the thirty-ninth year of his reign, Asa developed a foot disease.[4] Though his disease was severe, he did not seek the LORD, but only the doctors.[5] 16:13 Asa passed away[6] in the forty-first year of his reign. 16:14 He was buried in the tomb he had carved out in the City of David.[7] They laid him to rest on a bier covered with spices and assorted mixtures of ointments. They made a huge bonfire to honor him.[8]

Jehoshaphat Becomes King

17:1 His son Jehoshaphat replaced him as king and solidified his rule over Israel.[9] 17:2 He placed troops in all of Judah's fortified cities and posted garrisons[10] throughout the land of Judah and in the cities of Ephraim that his father Asa had seized.

17:3 The LORD was with Jehoshaphat because he followed in his ancestor[11] David's footsteps at the beginning of his reign.[12] He did not seek the Baals, 17:4 but instead sought the God of his ancestors[13] and obeyed[14] his commands, unlike the Israelites.[15] 17:5 The LORD made his kingdom secure;[16] all Judah brought tribute to Jehoshaphat, and he became very wealthy and greatly respected.[17] 17:6 He was committed to following the LORD;[18] he even removed the high places and Asherah poles from Judah.

17:7 In the third year of his reign he sent his officials Ben Hail, Obadiah, Zechariah, Nethanel, and Micaiah to teach in the cities of Judah. 17:8 They were accompanied by the Levites Shemaiah, Nethaniah, Zebadiah, Asahel, Shemiramoth, Jehonathan, Adonijah, Tobijah, and Tob-Adonijah, and by the priests Elishama and Jehoram. 17:9 They taught throughout Judah, taking with them the scroll of the law of the LORD. They traveled to all the cities of Judah and taught the people.

17:10 The LORD put fear into all the kingdoms surrounding Judah;[19] they did not make war with Jehoshaphat. 17:11 Some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat tribute, including a load of silver. The Arabs brought him 7,700 rams and 7,700 goats from their flocks.

17:12 Jehoshaphat's power kept increasing. He built fortresses and storage cities throughout Judah. 17:13 He had many supplies stored in the cities of Judah and an army of skilled warriors stationed in Jerusalem.[20] 17:14 These were their divisions by families:

There were a thousand officers from Judah.[21] Adnah the commander led 300,000 skilled warriors, 17:15 Jehochanan the commander led 280,000, 17:16 and Amasiah son of Zikri, who volunteered to serve the LORD, led 200,000 skilled warriors.

17:17 From Benjamin, Eliada, a skilled warrior, led 200,000 men who were equipped with bows and shields, 17:18 and Jehozabad led 180,000 trained warriors.

17:19 These were the ones who served the king, besides those whom the king placed in the fortified cities throughout Judah.

Jehoshaphat Allies with Ahab

18:1 Jehoshaphat was very wealthy and greatly respected. He made an alliance by marriage with Ahab, 18:2 and after several years[22] went down to visit[23] Ahab in Samaria.[24] Ahab slaughtered many sheep and cattle to honor Jehoshaphat and those who came with him.[1] He persuaded him to join in an attack[2] against Ramoth Gilead. 18:3 King Ahab of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "Will you go with me to attack Ramoth Gilead?" Jehoshaphat replied to the king of Israel, "I will support you; my army is at your disposal and will support you in battle."[3] 18:4 Then Jehoshaphat added,[4] "First seek an oracle from the LORD."[5] 18:5 So the king of Israel assembled 400 prophets and asked them, "Should we attack Ramoth Gilead or not?"[6] They said, "Attack! God[7] will hand it over to the king." 18:6 But Jehoshaphat asked, "Is there not a prophet of the LORD still here, that we may ask him?" 18:7 The king of Israel answered Jehoshaphat, "There is still one man through whom we can seek the LORD's will.[8] But I despise[9] him because he does not prophesy prosperity for me, but always[10] disaster. His name is Micaiah son of Imlah.[11] Jehoshaphat said, "The king should not say such things!" 18:8 The king of Israel summoned an officer and said, "Quickly bring Micaiah son of Imlah."

18:14 Micaiah[15] came before the king and the king asked him, "Micaiah, should we attack Ramoth Gilead or not?" He answered him, "Attack! You will succeed; they will be handed over to you."[16] 18:15 The king said to him, "How many times must I make you solemnly promise in[17] the name of the LORD to tell me only the truth?" 18:16 Micaiah[18] replied, "I saw all Israel scattered on the mountains like sheep that have no shepherd. Then the LORD said, 'They have no master. They should go home in peace.'" 18:17 The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "Didn't I tell you he does not prophesy prosperity for me, but disaster?" 18:18 Micaiah[19] said, "That being the case, hear the word of the LORD: I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, with all the heavenly assembly standing on his right and on his left. 18:19 The LORD said, 'Who will deceive King Ahab of Israel, so he will attack Ramoth Gilead and die there?' One said this and another that. 18:20 Then a spirit[20] stepped forward and stood before the LORD. He said, 'I will deceive him.' The LORD asked him, 'How?' 18:21 He replied,

[5] tn Heb "the word of the LORD." Jehoshaphat is requesting a prophetic oracle revealing the Lord's will in the matter and their prospects for success. For examples of such oracles, see 2 Sam 5:19, 23-24.

[6] tn Heb "Should we go against Ramoth Gilead for war or should I refrain?"

[7] tn Though Jehoshaphat had requested an oracle from "the LORD" (יְהוָה, yehvah, "Yahweh"), the Israelite prophets stop short of actually using this name and substitute the title הָאֱלֹהִים (ha'elohim, "the God"). This ambiguity may explain in part Jehoshaphat's hesitancy and caution (vv. 7-8). He seems to doubt that the 400 are genuine prophets of the LORD.

[15] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Micaiah) has been specified in the translation both for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

[16] sn One does not expect Micaiah, having just vowed to speak only what the LORD tells him, to agree with the other prophets and give the king an inaccurate prophecy. Micaiah's actions became understandable later, when we discover that the LORD desires to deceive the king and lead him to his demise. The LORD even dispatches a lying spirit to deceive Ahab's prophets. Micaiah can lie to the king because he realizes this lie is from the LORD. It is important to note that in v. 13 Micaiah only vows to speak the word of his God; he does not necessarily say he will tell the truth. In this case the LORD's word is deliberately deceptive. Only when the king adjures him to tell the truth (v. 15), does Micaiah do so.

[20] tn Heb "the spirit." The significance of the article prefixed to רוּחַ (ruakh) is uncertain, but it could contain a clue as to this spirit's identity, especially when interpreted in light of verse 23. It is certainly possible, and probably even likely, that the article is used in a generic or dramatic sense and should be translated, "a spirit." In the latter case it would show that this spirit was vivid and definite in the mind of Micaiah the storyteller. However, if one insists that the article indicates a well-known or universally known spirit, the following context provides a likely referent. Verse 23 tells how Zedekiah slapped Micaiah in the face and then asked sarcastically, "Which way did the spirit from the LORD (רוּחַ־יְהוָה, ruakh-yehvah) go when he went from me to speak to you?" When the phrase "the spirit of the LORD" refers to the divine spirit (rather than the divine breath or mind, as in Isa 40:7, 13) elsewhere, the spirit energizes an individual or group for special tasks or moves one to prophesy. This raises the possibility that the deceiving spirit of vv. 20-22 is the same as the divine spirit mentioned by Zedekiah in v. 23. This would explain why the article is used on רוּחַ (ruakh); he can be called "the spirit" because he is the well-known spirit who energizes the prophets.

'I will go out and be a lying spirit in the mouths of all his prophets.' The LORD[1] said, 'Deceive and overpower him.[2] Go out and do as you have proposed.' 18:22 So now, look, the LORD has placed a lying spirit in the mouths of all these prophets of yours, but the LORD has decreed disaster for you." 18:23 Zedekiah son of Kenaanah approached, hit Micaiah on the jaw, and said, "Which way did the LORD's spirit go when he went from me to speak to you?" 18:24 Micaiah replied, "Look, you will see in the day when you go into an inner room to hide." 18:25 Then the king of Israel said, "Take Micaiah and return him to Amon the city official and Joash the king's son. 18:26 Say, 'This is what the king says: "Put this man in prison. Give him only a little bread and water[3] until I return safely."'" 18:27 Micaiah said, "If you really do return safely, then the LORD has not spoken through me!" Then he added, "Take note,[4] all you people."

18:28 The king of Israel and King Jehoshaphat of Judah attacked Ramoth Gilead. 18:29 The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, "I will disguise myself and then enter[5] the battle, but you wear your royal attire." So the king of Israel disguised himself and they entered the battle. 18:30 Now the king of Syria had ordered his chariot commanders, "Do not fight common soldiers or high ranking officers;[6] fight only the king of Israel!" 18:31 When the chariot commanders saw Jehoshaphat, they said, "He must be the king of Israel!" So they turned and attacked him, but Jehoshaphat cried out. The LORD helped him; God lured them away from him. 18:32 When the chariot commanders realized he was not the king of Israel, they turned away from him. 18:33 Now an archer shot an arrow at random[7] and it struck the king of Israel between the plates of his armor. The king[8] ordered his charioteer, "Turn around and take me from the battle line,[9] for I am wounded." 18:34 While the battle raged throughout the day, the king stood propped up in his chariot opposite the Syrians. He died in the evening as the sun was setting.

19:1 When King Jehoshaphat of Judah returned home safely to Jerusalem,[10] 19:2 the prophet[11] Jehu son of Hanani confronted him;[12] he said to King Jehoshaphat, "Is it right to help the wicked and be an ally of those who oppose the LORD?[13] Because you have done this the LORD is angry with you![14] 19:3 Nevertheless you have done some good things;[15] you removed[16] the Asherah poles from the land and you were determined to follow the LORD."[17]

Jehoshaphat Appoints Judges

19:4 Jehoshaphat lived in Jerusalem.[18] He went out among the people from Beer Sheba to the hill country of Ephraim and encouraged them to follow[19] the LORD God of their ancestors.[20] 19:5 He appointed judges throughout the land and in each of the fortified cities of Judah.[21] 19:6 He told the judges, "Be careful what you do,[22] for you are not judging for men, but for the LORD, who will be with you when you make judicial decisions. 19:7 Respect the LORD and make careful decisions, for the LORD our God disapproves of injustice, partiality, and bribery."[23]

19:8 In Jerusalem Jehoshaphat appointed some Levites, priests, and Israelite family leaders to judge on behalf of the LORD[24] and to settle disputes among the residents of Jerusalem.[25] 19:9 He commanded them: "Carry out your duties with respect for the LORD, with honesty, and with pure motives.[26] 19:10 Whenever your country-

The Lord Gives Jehoshaphat Military Success

20:1 Later the Moabites and Ammonites, along with some of the Meunites,[6] attacked Jehoshaphat. 20:2 Messengers[7] arrived and reported to Jehoshaphat, "A huge army is attacking you from the other side of the Dead Sea,[8] from the direction of Edom.[9] Look, they are in Hazezon Tamar (that is, En Gedi)." 20:3 Jehoshaphat was afraid, so he decided to seek the LORD's advice.[10] He decreed that all Judah should observe a fast. 20:4 The people of Judah[11] assembled to ask for the LORD's help;[12] they came from all the cities of Judah to ask for the LORD's help.[13]

20:5 Jehoshaphat stood before the assembly of Judah and Jerusalem[14] at the LORD's temple, in front of the new courtyard. 20:6 He prayed: "O LORD God of our ancestors,[15] you are the God who lives in heaven[16] and rules over all the kingdoms of the nations. You possess strength and power; no one can stand against you. 20:7 Our God, you drove out[17] the inhabitants of this land before your people Israel and gave it as a permanent possession[18] to the descendants of your friend[19] Abraham. 20:8 They settled down in it and built in it a temple[20] to honor you,[21] saying, 20:9 'If disaster comes on us in the form of military attack,[22] judgment, plague, or famine, we will stand in front of this temple before you, for you are present in this temple.[23] We will cry out to you for help in our distress, so that you will[24] hear and deliver us.' 20:10 Now the Ammonites, Moabites, and men from Mount Seir are coming![25] When Israel came from the land of Egypt, you did not allow them to invade these lands.[26] They bypassed them and did not destroy them. 20:11 Look how they are repaying us! 20:13 All the men of Judah[28] were standing before the LORD, along with their infants, wives, and children. 20:14 Then in the midst of the assembly, the LORD's Spirit came upon Jachaziel son of Zechariah, son of Benaiah, son of Jeiel, son of Mattaniah, a Levite and descendant of Asaph. 20:15 He said: "Pay attention, all you people of Judah,[29] residents of Jerusalem, and King Jehoshaphat! [4] tn Heb "and look, Amariah the chief priest is over you with respect to every matter of the LORD, and Zebadiah...with respect to every matter of the king."

[5] tn Heb "Be strong and act!"

[6] tc The Hebrew text has "Ammonites," but they are mentioned just before this. Most translations, following some MSS of the LXX, read "Meunites" (see 2 Chr 26:7; so NASB, NIV, NRSV).

[7] tn Heb "they"; the implied referent (messengers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Heb "the Sea"; in context ("from the direction of Edom") this must refer to the Dead Sea, which has been specified in the translation for clarity (cf. NEB, NLT).

[9] tc Most Hebrew MSS read "from Aram" (i.e., Syria), but this must be a corruption of "Edom," which is the reading of the LXX and Vulgate.

[10] tn Heb "and he set his face to seek the LORD."

[11] tn The words "the people of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. The Hebrew text uses the name "Judah" by metonymy for the people of Judah.

[12] tn Heb "to seek from the LORD." The verb here (בָּקַשׁ, baqash) is different from the one translated "seek" in v. 3 (דָּרַשׁ, darash).

[13] tn Heb "to seek the LORD." The verb here (בִּקֵּשׁ, baqash) is different from the one translated "seek" in v. 3 (דָּרַשׁ, darash).

[15] tn Heb "fathers" (also in v. 33).

[16] tn Heb "are you not God in heaven?" The rhetorical question expects the answer "yes," resulting in the positive statement "you are the God who lives in heaven" employed in the translation.

[17] tn Heb "did you not drive out?" This is another rhetorical question which expects a positive response; see the note on the word "heaven" in the previous verse.

[18] tn Heb "permanently."

[19] tn Or perhaps "your covenantal partner." See Isa 41:8.

[20] tn Or "sanctuary."

[21] tn Heb "for your name." The word "name" sometimes refers to one's reputation or honor (thus the translation here, "to honor you").

[22] tn Heb "sword."

[23] tn Heb "for your name is in this house." The "name" of the LORD sometimes designates the LORD himself, being indistinguishable from the proper name. In this case the temple is referred to as a "house" where the LORD himself can reside.

[24] tn Or "so that you may."

[25] tn Heb "now, look, the sons of Ammon, Moab and Mount Seir."

[26] tn Heb "whom you did not allow Israel to enter when they came from the land of Egypt."

[27] tn Heb "for [or "indeed"] upon you are our eyes."

[28] tn Heb "Judah." The words "the men of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. The Hebrew text uses the name "Judah" by metonymy for the men of Judah.

[29] tn Heb "all Judah." The words "you people of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. The Hebrew text uses the name "Judah" by metonymy for the people of Judah. Unlike the previous instance in v. 13 where infants, wives, and children are mentioned separately, this reference appears to include them all.

you: 'Don't be afraid and don't panic[1] because of this huge army! For the battle is not yours, but God's. 20:16 Tomorrow march down against them as[2] they come up the Ascent of Ziz. You will find them at the end of the ravine in front of the Desert of Jeruel. 20:17 You will not fight in this battle. Take your positions, stand, and watch the LORD deliver you,[3] O Judah and Jerusalem. Don't be afraid and don't panic![4] Tomorrow march out toward them; the LORD is with you!'"

20:18 Jehoshaphat bowed down with his face toward the ground, and all the people of Judah[5] and the residents of Jerusalem fell down before the LORD and worshiped him.[6] 20:19 Then some Levites, from the Kohathites and Korahites, got up and loudly praised the LORD God of Israel.[7]

20:20 Early the next morning they marched out to the Desert of Tekoa. When they were ready to march, Jehoshaphat stood up and said: "Listen to me, you people of Judah[8] and residents of Jerusalem! Trust in the LORD your God and you will be safe![9] Trust in the message of his prophets and you will win." 20:21 He met[10] with the people and appointed musicians to play before the LORD and praise his majestic splendor. As they marched ahead of the warriors they said: "Give thanks to the LORD, for his loyal love endures."[11]

20:22 When they began to shout and praise, the LORD suddenly attacked[12] the Ammonites, Moabites, and men from Mount Seir[13] who were invading Judah, and they were defeated. 20:23 The Ammonites and Moabites attacked the men from Mount Seir[14] and annihilated them.[15] When they had finished off the men[16] of Seir, they attacked and destroyed one another.[17]

20:24 When the men of Judah[18] arrived at the observation post overlooking the desert and looked at[19] the huge army, they saw dead bodies on the ground; there were no survivors! 20:25 Jehoshaphat and his men[20] went to gather the plunder; they found a huge amount of supplies, clothing,[21] and valuable items. They carried away everything they could.[22] There was so much plunder, it took them three days to haul it off.[23]

20:26 On the fourth day they assembled in the Valley of Berachah, where[24] they praised the LORD. So that place is called the Valley of Berachah[25] to this very day. 20:27 Then all the men of Judah and Jerusalem returned joyfully to Jerusalem with Jehoshaphat leading them; the LORD had given them reason to rejoice over their enemies. 20:28 They entered Jerusalem to the sound of stringed instruments and trumpets and proceeded to the temple of the LORD. 20:29 All the kingdoms of the surrounding lands were afraid of God[26] when they heard how the LORD had fought against Israel's enemies. 20:30 Jehoshaphat's kingdom enjoyed peace; his God made him secure on every side.[27]

Jehoshaphat's Reign Ends

20:31 Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah. He was thirty-five years old when he became king and he reigned for twenty-five years in Jerusalem.[28] His mother was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi. 20:32 He followed in his father Asa's footsteps and was careful to do what the LORD approved.[29] 20:33 However, the high places were not eliminated; the people were still not devoted to the God of their ancestors.[30]

[1] tn Or perhaps "don't get discouraged."

[2] tn Heb "look."

[3] tn Heb "the deliverance of the LORD with you."

[4] tn Or perhaps "don't get discouraged."

[5] tn Heb "all Judah." The words "you people of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. See the note on the word "Judah" in v. 15.

[6] tn Heb "to worship the LORD."

[7] tn Heb "arose to praise the LORD God of Israel with a very loud voice."

[8] tn Heb "O Judah." The words "you people of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. See the note on the word "Judah" in v. 15.

[9] tn There is a word play in the Hebrew text. The Hiphil verb form הַאֲמִינוּ (ha'aminu, "trust") and the Niphal form תֵּאָמֵנוּ (te'amenu, "you will be safe") come from the same verbal root (אָמַן, 'aman).

[10] tn Or "consulted."

[11] tn Or "is eternal."

[12] tn Heb "set ambushers against." This is probably idiomatic here for launching a surprise attack.

[13] tn Heb "the sons of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir."

[14] tn Heb "the sons of Ammon and Moab stood against the residents of Mount Seir."

[15] tn Heb "to annihilate and to destroy."

[16] tn Heb "residents."

[17] tn Heb "they helped, each one his fellow, for destruction." The verb עָזַר ('azar), traditionally understood as the well-attested verb meaning "to help," is an odd fit in this context. It is possible that it is from a homonymic root, perhaps meaning to "attack." This root is attested in Ugaritic in a nominal form meaning "young man, warrior, hero." For a discussion of the proposed root, see HALOT 811 s.v. II עזר.

[18] tn Heb "Judah." The words "the men of" are supplied in the translation for clarity. The Hebrew text uses the name "Judah" by metonymy for the men of Judah.

[19] tn Heb "turned toward."

[20] tn Or "army."

[21] tc The MT reads פְּגָרִים (pegarim, "corpses"), but this seems odd among a list of plunder. A few medieval Hebrew MSS and the Vulgate read בְּגָדִים (vegadim, "clothing"), which fits the context much better.

[22] tn Heb "and they snatched away for themselves so that there was no carrying away."

[23] tn Heb "and they were three days looting the plunder for it was great."

[24] tn Heb "for there."

[25] sn The name Berachah, which means "blessing" in Hebrew, is derived from the verbal root "to praise [or "to bless"]," which appears earlier in the verse.

[26] tn Heb "and the terror of God [or "a great terror"] was upon all the kingdoms of the lands." It is uncertain if אֱלֹהִים ('elohim) should be understood as a proper name here ("God"), or taken in an idiomatic superlative sense.

[27] tn Heb "and his God gave him rest all around."

[28] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[29] tn Heb "he walked in the way of his father Asa and did not turn from it, doing what is right in the eyes of the LORD."

20:34 The rest of the events of Jehoshaphat's reign, from start to finish, are recorded in the Annals of Jehu son of Hanani which are included in Scroll of the Kings of Israel.[1]

20:35 Later King Jehoshaphat of Judah made an alliance with King Ahaziah of Israel, who[2] did evil. 20:36 They agreed[3] to make large seagoing merchant ships;[4] they built the ships in Ezion Geber. 20:37 Eliezer son of Dodavahu from Mareshah prophesied against Jehoshaphat, "Because[5] you made an alliance with Ahaziah, the LORD will shatter what you have made." The ships were wrecked and unable to go to sea.[6]

21:1 Jehoshaphat passed away[7] and was buried with his ancestors[8] in the City of David.[9] His son Jehoram[10] replaced him as king.

Jehoram's Reign

21:2 His brothers, Jehoshaphat's sons, were Azariah, Jechiel, Zechariah, Azariahu, Michael, and Shephatiah. All of these were sons of King Jehoshaphat of Israel.[11] 21:3 Their father gave them many presents, including silver, gold, and other precious items, along with fortified cities in Judah. But he gave the kingdom to Jehoram because he was the firstborn.

21:4 Jehoram took control of his father's kingdom and became powerful.[12] Then he killed all his brothers,[13] as well as some of the officials of Israel. 21:5 Jehoram was thirty-two years old when he became king and he reigned for eight years in Jerusalem.[14] 21:6 He followed in the footsteps of the kings of Israel, just as Ahab's dynasty had done, for he married Ahab's daughter.[15] He did evil in the sight of[16] the LORD. 21:7 But the LORD was unwilling to destroy David's dynasty[17] because of the promise[18] he had made to give David a perpetual dynasty.[19]

21:8 During Jehoram's[20] reign Edom freed themselves from Judah's control and set up their own king.[21] 21:9 Jehoram crossed over to Zair with his officers and all his chariots. The Edomites, who had surrounded him, attacked at night and defeated him and his chariot officers.[22] 21:10 So Edom has remained free from Judah's control to this very day.[23] At that same time Libnah also rebelled and freed themselves from Judah's control[24] because Jehoram[25] rejected the LORD God of his ancestors. 21:11 He also built high places on the hills of Judah; he encouraged the residents of Jerusalem to be unfaithful to the LORD[26] and led Judah away from the LORD.[27]

21:12 Jehoram[28] received this letter from Elijah the prophet: "This is what the LORD God of your ancestor David says: 'You[29] have not followed in the footsteps[30] of your father Jehoshaphat and of[31] King Asa of Judah, 21:13 but have instead followed in the footsteps of the kings of Israel. You encouraged the people of Judah and the residents of Jerusalem to be unfaithful to the LORD, just as the family of Ahab

[2] tn Heb "he." The pronoun has been translated as a relative pronoun for stylistic reasons.

[3] tn Heb "he made an alliance with him."

[4] tn Heb "make ships to go to Tarshish." This probably refers to large ships either made in or capable of traveling to the distant western port of Tarshish; a "Tarshish-ship" was essentially a large seagoing merchant ship.

[5] tn Heb "when."

[6] tn Heb "to go to Tarshish."

[10] tn The parallel account in 2 Kgs 8:20-24 has the variant spelling "Joram" for the son of Jehoshaphat.

[11] sn A number of times in 2 Chronicles "Israel" is used instead of the more specific "Judah"; see 2 Chr 12:6; 23:2). In the interest of consistency some translations (e.g., NAB, NRSV) substitute "Judah" for "Israel" here.

[18] tn Or "covenant."

[19] tn Heb "which he made to David, just as he had promised to give him and his sons a lamp all the days." Here "lamp" is metaphorical, symbolizing the Davidic dynasty.

[20] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Jehoram) has been specified in the translation for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

[21] tn Heb "in his days Edom rebelled from under the hand of Judah and enthroned a king over them."

[22] tc Heb "and he arose at night and defeated Edom, who had surrounded him, and the chariot officers." The Hebrew text as it stands gives the impression that Jehoram was surrounded and launched a victorious nighttime counterattack. Yet v. 10 goes on to state that the Edomite revolt was successful. The translation above assumes an emendation of the Hebrew text. Adding a third masculine singular pronominal suffix to the accusative sign before Edom (reading אֹתוֹ ['oto, "him"] instead of just אֵת ['et]) and taking Edom as the subject of verbs allows one to translate the verse in a way that is more consistent with the context, which depicts an Israelite defeat, not victory. See also 2 Kgs 8:21.

[24] tn Or "from Jehoram's control"; Heb "from under his hand." The pronominal suffix may refer to Judah in general or, more specifically, to Jehoram.

[25] tn Heb "he." This pronoun could refer to Judah, but the context focuses on Jehoram's misdeeds. See especially v. 11.

[26] tn Heb "and he caused the residents of Jerusalem to commit adultery." In this context spiritual unfaithfulness to the LORD is in view rather than physical adultery.

[27] tn Heb "and drove Judah away."

[28] tn Heb "he"; the referent (Jehoram) has been specified in the translation for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

[29] tn Heb "Because you..." In the Hebrew text this lengthy sentence is completed in vv. 14-15. Because of its length and complexity (and the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences), the translation has divided it up into several English sentences.

does in Israel.[1] You also killed your brothers, members of your father's family,[2] who were better than you. 21:14 So look, the LORD is about to severely afflict[3] your people, your sons, your wives, and all you own. 21:15 And you will get a serious, chronic intestinal disease which will cause your intestines to come out."[4]

21:16 The LORD stirred up against Jehoram the Philistines[5] and the Arabs who lived beside the Cushites. 21:17 They attacked Judah and swept through it.[6] They carried off everything they found in the royal palace,[7] including his sons and wives. None of his sons was left, except for his youngest, Ahaziah. 21:18 After all this happened, the LORD afflicted him with an incurable intestinal disease.[8] 21:19 After about two years his intestines came out because of the disease, so that he died a very painful death.[9] His people did not make a bonfire to honor him, as they had done for his ancestors.[10]

21:20 Jehoram was thirty-two years old when he became king and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem. No one regretted his death;[11] he was buried in the City of David,[12] but not in the royal tombs.

Ahaziah's Reign

22:1 The residents of Jerusalem[13] made his youngest son Ahaziah king in his place, for the raiding party that invaded the city with the Arabs had killed all the older sons.[14] So Ahaziah son of Jehoram became king of Judah. 22:2 Ahaziah was twenty-two[15] years old when he became king and he reigned for one year in Jerusalem. His mother was Athaliah, the granddaughter[16] of Omri. 22:3 He followed in the footsteps of Ahab's dynasty,[17] for his mother gave him evil advice.[18] 22:4 He did evil in the sight of[19] the LORD like Ahab's dynasty because, after his father's death, they[20] gave him advice that led to his destruction. 22:5 He followed their advice and joined Ahab's son King Joram[21] of Israel in a battle against King Hazael of Syria[22] at Ramoth Gilead in which the Syrians defeated Joram. 22:6 Joram[23] returned to Jezreel to recover from the wounds he received from the Syrians[24] in Ramah when he fought against King Hazael of Syria. Ahaziah[25] son of King Jehoram of Judah went down to visit Joram son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he had been wounded.[26]

22:7 God brought about Ahaziah's downfall through his visit to Joram.[27] When Ahaziah[28] arrived, he went out with Joram to meet Jehu son of Nimshi, whom the LORD had commissioned[29] to wipe out Ahab's family.[30] 22:8 While Jehu was dishing out punishment to Ahab's family, he discovered the officials of Judah and the sons of Ahaziah's relatives who were serving Ahaziah and killed them. 22:9 He looked for Ahaziah, who was captured while hiding in Samaria.[31] They brought him to Jehu and then executed him. They did give him a burial, for they reasoned,[32] "He is the son of Jehoshaphat, who sought the LORD with his whole heart." There was no one in Ahaziah's family strong enough to rule in his place.[33] to destroy the entire royal line[1] of Judah.[2] 22:11 So Jehoshabeath,[3] the daughter of King Jehoram,[4] took Ahaziah's son Joash and sneaked him away[5] from the rest of the royal descendants who were to be executed. She hid him and his nurse in the room where the bed covers were stored. So Jehoshabeath the daughter of King Jehoram, wife of Jehoiada the priest and sister of Ahaziah, hid him from Athaliah so she could not execute him. 22:12 He remained in hiding in God's temple[6] for six years, while Athaliah was ruling over the land.

23:1 In the seventh year Jehoiada made a bold move. He made a pact[7] with the officers of the units of hundreds: Azariah son of Jehoram, Ishmael son of Jehochanan, Azariah son of Obed, Maaseiah son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat son of Zikri. 23:2 They traveled throughout Judah and assembled the Levites from all the cities of Judah, as well as the Israelite family leaders.

They came to Jerusalem,[8] 23:3 and the whole assembly made a covenant with the king in the temple of God. Jehoiada[9] said to them, "The king's son will rule, just as the LORD promised David's descendants. 23:4 This is what you must do. One third of you priests and Levites who are on duty during the Sabbath will guard the doors. 23:5 Another third of you will be stationed at the royal palace and still another third at the Foundation Gate. All the others[10] will stand in the courtyards of the LORD's temple. 23:6 No one must enter the LORD's temple except the priests and Levites who are on duty. They may enter because they are ceremonially pure. All the others should carry out their assigned service to the LORD. 23:7 The Levites must surround the king. Each of you must hold his weapon in his hand. Whoever tries to enter the temple[11] must be killed. You must accompany the king wherever he goes."[12]

23:8 The Levites and all the men of Judah[13] did just as Jehoiada the priest ordered. Each of them took his men, those who were on duty during the Sabbath as well as those who were off duty on the Sabbath. Jehoiada the priest did not release his divisions from their duties. 23:9 Jehoiada the priest gave to the officers of the units of hundreds King David's spears and shields[14] that were kept in God's temple. 23:10 He placed the men at their posts, each holding his weapon in his hand. They lined up from the south side of the temple to the north side and stood near the altar and the temple, surrounding the king.[15] 23:11 Jehoiada and his sons led out the king's son and placed on him the crown and the royal insignia.[16] They proclaimed him king and poured olive oil on his head.[17] They declared, "Long live the king!"

23:12 When Athaliah heard the royal guard[18] shouting and praising the king, she joined the crowd[19] at the LORD's temple. 23:13 Then she saw[20] the king standing by his pillar at the entrance. The officers and trumpeters stood beside the king and all the people of the land were celebrating and blowing trumpets, and the musicians with various instruments were leading the celebration. Athaliah tore her clothes and yelled, "Treason! Treason!"[21] 23:14 Jehoiada the priest sent out the officers of the units of hundreds, who were in charge of the army, and ordered them, "Bring her outside the temple to the guards.[22] Put the sword to anyone who follows her." The priest gave this order because he had decided she should not be executed in the LORD's temple.[23] 23:15 They seized her and took her into the precincts of the royal palace through the horses' entrance.[24] There they executed her.

Here it probably refers to some tangible symbol of kingship, perhaps a piece of jewelry such as an amulet or neck chain (see the discussion in M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings [AB], 128). Some suggest that a document is in view, perhaps a copy of the royal protocol or of the stipulations of the Davidic covenant (see HALOT 790-91 s.v.).

23:16 Jehoiada then drew up a covenant stipulating that he, all the people, and the king should be loyal to the LORD.[1] 23:17 All the people went and demolished[2] the temple of Baal. They smashed its altars and idols.[3] They killed Mattan the priest of Baal in front of the altars. 23:18 Jehoiada then assigned the duties of the LORD's temple to the priests, the Levites whom David had assigned to the LORD's temple. They were responsible for offering burnt sacrifices to the LORD with joy and music, according to[4] the law of Moses and the edict of David. 23:19 He posted guards at the gates of the LORD's temple, so no one who was ceremonially unclean in any way could enter. 23:20 He summoned[5] the officers of the units of hundreds, the nobles, the rulers of the people, and all the people of land, and he then led the king down from the LORD's temple. They entered the royal palace through the Upper Gate and seated the king on the royal throne. 23:21 All the people of the land celebrated, for the city had rest now that they had killed Athaliah.[6]

Joash's Reign

24:1 Joash was seven years old when he began to reign. He reigned for forty years in Jerusalem.[7] His mother was Zibiah, who was from Beer Sheba. 24:2 Joash did what the LORD approved[8] throughout the lifetime[9] of Jehoiada the priest. 24:3 Jehoiada chose two wives for him who gave him sons and daughters.

24:4 Joash was determined to repair the LORD's temple.[10] 24:5 He assembled the priests and Levites and ordered them, "Go out to the cities of Judah and collect the annual quota of silver from all Israel for repairs on the temple of your God. Be quick about it!" But the Levites delayed.

24:6 So the king summoned Jehoiada the chief priest,[11] and said to him, "Why have you not made[12] the Levites collect[13] from Judah and Jerusalem the tax authorized by Moses the LORD's servant and by the assembly of Israel at the tent containing the tablets of the law?"[14] 24:7 (Wicked Athaliah and her sons had broken into God's temple and used all the holy items of the LORD's temple in their worship of the Baals.) 24:8 The king ordered a chest to be made and placed outside the gate of the LORD's temple.[15] 24:9 An edict was sent throughout Judah and Jerusalem requiring the people to bring to the LORD the tax that Moses, God's servant, imposed on Israel in the wilderness.[16] 24:10 All the officials and all the people gladly brought their silver and threw it into the chest until it was full. 24:11 Whenever the Levites brought the chest to the royal accountant and they saw there was a lot of silver, the royal scribe and the accountant of the high priest emptied the chest and then took it back to its place. They went through this routine every day and collected a large amount of silver.

24:12 The king and Jehoiada gave it to the construction foremen[17] assigned to the LORD's temple. They hired carpenters and craftsmen to repair the LORD's temple, as well as those skilled in working with iron and bronze to restore the LORD's temple. 24:13 They worked hard and made the repairs.[18] They followed the measurements specified for God's temple and restored it.[19] 24:14 When they were finished, they brought the rest of the silver to the king and Jehoiada. They used it to make items for the LORD's temple, including items used in the temple service and for burnt sacrifices, pans, and various other gold and silver items. Throughout Jehoiada's lifetime, burnt sacrifices were offered regularly in the LORD's temple.

24:15 Jehoiada grew old and died at the age of 130.[20] 24:16 He was buried in the City of David[21] with the kings, because he had accomplished good in Israel and for God and his temple.

24:17 After Jehoiada died, the officials of Judah visited the king and declared their loyalty to him.[22] The king listened to their advice.[23] 24:18 They abandoned the temple of the LORD God of their ancestors,[24] and worshiped[25] the Asherah poles and idols. Because of this sinful activity, God was angry with Judah and Jerusalem. 24:19 The LORD sent prophets among them to lead them back to him.[1] They warned[2] the people, but they would not pay attention. 24:20 God's Spirit energized[3] Zechariah son of Jehoiada the priest. He stood up before the people and said to them, "This is what God says: 'Why are you violating the commands of the LORD? You will not be prosperous! Because you have rejected the LORD, he has rejected you!'" 24:21 They plotted against him and by royal decree stoned him to death in the courtyard of the LORD's temple. 24:22 King Joash disregarded[4] the loyalty his father Jehoiada had shown him and killed Jehoiada's[5] son. As Zechariah[6] was dying, he said, "May the LORD take notice and seek vengeance!"[7]

24:23 At the beginning[8] of the year the Syrian army attacked[9] Joash[10] and invaded Judah and Jerusalem. They wiped out all the leaders of the people and sent all the plunder they gathered to the king of Damascus. 24:24 Even though the invading Syrian army was relatively weak, the LORD handed over to them Judah's very large army,[11] for the people of Judah[12] had abandoned the LORD God of their ancestors. The Syrians[13] gave Joash what he deserved.[14] 24:25 When they withdrew, they left Joash[15] badly wounded. His servants plotted against him because of what he had done to[16] the son[17] of Jehoiada the priest. They murdered him on his bed. Thus[18] he died and was buried in the City of David,[19] but not in the tombs of the kings. 24:26 The conspirators were Zabad son of Shimeath (an Ammonite woman) and Jehozabad son of Shimrith (a Moabite woman).

24:27 The list of Joash's[20] sons, the many prophetic oracles pertaining to him, and the account of his building project on God's temple are included in the record of the Scroll of the Kings.[21] His son Amaziah replaced him as king.

Amaziah's Reign

25:1 Amaziah was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for twenty-nine years in Jerusalem.[22] His mother was Jehoaddan, who was from Jerusalem. 25:2 He did what the LORD approved,[23] but not with wholehearted devotion.[24]

25:3 When he had secured control of the kingdom,[25] he executed the servants who had assassinated his father.[26] 25:4 However, he did not execute their sons. He obeyed the LORD's commandment as recorded in the law scroll of Moses,[27] "Fathers must not be executed for what their sons do,[28] and sons must not be executed for what their fathers do.[29] A man must be executed only for his own sin."[30]

25:5 Amaziah assembled the people of Judah[31] and assigned them by families to the commanders of units of a thousand and the commanders of units of a hundred for all Judah and Benjamin. He counted those twenty years old and up and discovered there were 300,000 young men of fighting age[32] equipped with spears and shields.[33] 25:6 He hired 100,000 Israelite warriors for a hundred talents[34] of silver.

[34] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the silver was 6,730 lbs. (3,060 kg).

25:7 But a prophet[1] visited him and said: "O king, the Israelite troops must not go with you, for the LORD is not with Israel or any of the Ephraimites.[2] 25:8 Even if you go and fight bravely in battle, God will defeat you[3] before the enemy. God is capable of helping or defeating."[4] 25:9 Amaziah asked the prophet:[5] "But what should I do about the hundred talents of silver I paid the Israelite troops?" The prophet[6] replied, "The LORD is capable of giving you more than that." 25:10 So Amaziah dismissed the troops that had come to him from Ephraim and sent them home.[7] They were very angry at Judah and returned home incensed. 25:11 Amaziah boldly led his army to the Valley of Salt,[8] where he defeated[9] 10,000 Edomites.[10] 25:12 The men[11] of Judah captured 10,000 men alive. They took them to the top of a cliff and threw them over.[12] All the captives[13] fell to their death.[14] 25:13 Now the troops Amaziah had dismissed and had not allowed to fight in the battle[15] raided[16] the cities of Judah from Samaria[17] to Beth Horon. They killed[18] 3,000 people and carried off a large amount of plunder.

25:14 When Amaziah returned from defeating the Edomites, he brought back the gods of the people[19] of Seir and made them his personal gods.[20] He bowed down before them and offered them sacrifices. 25:15 The LORD was angry at Amaziah and sent a prophet to him, who said, "Why are you following[21] these gods[22] that could not deliver their own people from your power?"[23] 25:16 While he was speaking, Amaziah[24] said to him, "Did we appoint you to be a royal counselor? Stop prophesying or else you will be killed!"[25] So the prophet stopped, but added, "I know that the LORD has decided[26] to destroy you, because you have done this thing and refused to listen to my advice."

25:17 After King Amaziah of Judah consulted with his advisers,[27] he sent this message to the king of Israel, Joash son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, "Come, face me on the battlefield."[28] 25:18 King Joash of Israel sent this message back to King Amaziah of Judah, "A thorn bush in Lebanon sent this message to a cedar in Lebanon, 'Give your daughter to my son as a wife.' Then a wild animal of Lebanon came by and trampled down the thorn bush.[29] 25:19 You defeated Edom[30] and it has gone to your head.[31] Gloat over your success,[32] but stay in your palace. Why bring calamity on yourself? Why bring down yourself and Judah along with you?"[33]

25:20 But Amaziah did not heed the warning,[34] for God wanted to hand them over to Joash because they followed the gods of Edom.[35] 25:21 So King Joash of Israel attacked. He and King Amaziah of Judah faced each other on the battlefield[36] in Beth Shemesh of Judah. 25:22 Judah was defeated by Israel, and each man ran back home.[37] 25:23 King Joash of Israel captured King Amaziah of Judah, son of Joash son of Jehoahaz, in Beth Shemesh and brought him to Jerusalem. He broke down the wall of Jerusalem from the Gate of Ephraim to the Corner Gate – a distance of about six hundred feet.[38] 25:24 He took away all the gold and silver, all the items found in God's temple that were in the care of Obed-Edom, the riches in the royal palace, and some hostages. Then he went back to Samaria.

25:25 King Amaziah son of Joash of Judah lived for fifteen years after the death of King Joash son of Jehoahaz of Israel. 25:26 The rest of the events of Amaziah's reign, from start to finish, are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Judah and Israel.[1] 25:27 From the time Amaziah turned from following the LORD, conspirators plotted against him in Jerusalem,[2] so he fled to Lachish. But they sent assassins after him[3] and they killed him there. 25:28 His body was carried back by horses,[4] and he was buried in Jerusalem with his ancestors[5] in the City of David.[6]

Uzziah's Reign

26:1 All the people of Judah took Uzziah,[7] who was sixteen years old, and made him king in his father Amaziah's place. 26:2 Uzziah[8] built up Elat and restored it to Judah after King Amaziah[9] had passed away.[10]

26:3 Uzziah was sixteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for fifty-two years in Jerusalem.[11] His mother's name was Jecholiah, who was from Jerusalem. 26:4 He did what the LORD approved, just as his father Amaziah had done.[12] 26:5 He followed[13] God during the lifetime of[14] Zechariah, who taught him how to honor God. As long as he followed[15] the LORD, God caused him to succeed.[16]

26:6 Uzziah attacked[17] the Philistines and broke down the walls of Gath, Jabneh, and Ashdod. He built cities in the region of Ashdod and throughout Philistine territory.[18] 26:7 God helped him in his campaigns[19] against the Philistines, the Arabs living in Gur Baal, and the Meunites. 26:8 The Ammonites paid tribute to Uzziah and his fame reached[20] the border of Egypt, for he grew in power.

26:9 Uzziah built and fortified towers in Jerusalem at the Corner Gate, Valley Gate, and at the Angle.[21] 26:10 He built towers in the desert and dug many cisterns, for he owned many herds in the lowlands[22] and on the plain. He had workers in the fields and vineyards in the hills and in Carmel,[23] for he loved agriculture.[24]

26:11 Uzziah had an army of skilled warriors trained for battle. They were organized by divisions according to the muster rolls made by Jeiel the scribe and Maaseiah the officer under the authority of Hananiah, a royal official. 26:12 The total number of family leaders who led warriors was 2,600. 26:13 They commanded an army of 307,500 skilled and able warriors who were ready to defend[25] the king against his enemies. 26:14 Uzziah supplied shields, spears, helmets, breastplates, bows, and slingstones for the entire army. 26:15 In Jerusalem he made war machines carefully designed to shoot arrows and large stones from the towers and corners of the walls. He became very famous, for he received tremendous support and became powerful.[26]

26:16 But once he became powerful, his pride destroyed him.[27] He disobeyed[28] the LORD his God. He entered the LORD's temple to offer incense on the incense altar. 26:17 Azariah the priest and eighty other brave priests of the LORD followed him in. 26:18 They confronted[29] King Uzziah and said to him, "It is not proper for you, Uzziah, to offer incense to the LORD. That is the responsibility of the priests, the descendants of Aaron, who are consecrated to offer incense. Leave the sanctuary, for you have disobeyed[30] and the LORD God will not honor you!" 26:19 Uzziah, who had an incense censer in his hand, became angry. While he was ranting and raving[31] at the priests, a skin disease[32] appeared on his forehead right there in front of the priests in the LORD's temple near the incense altar.

26:20 When Azariah the high priest and the other priests looked at[1] him, there was a skin disease on his forehead. They hurried him out of there; even the king[2] himself wanted to leave quickly because the LORD had afflicted him. 26:21 King Uzziah suffered from a skin disease until the day he died. He lived in separate quarters,[3] afflicted by a skin disease and banned from the LORD's temple. His son Jotham was in charge of the palace and ruled over the people of the land.

26:22 The rest of the events of Uzziah's reign, from start to finish, were recorded by the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz.[4] 26:23 Uzziah passed away[5] and was buried near his ancestors[6] in a cemetery[7] belonging to the kings. (This was because he had a skin disease.)[8] His son Jotham replaced him as king.

Jotham's Reign

27:1 Jotham was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem.[9] His mother was Jerusha the daughter of Zadok. 27:2 He did what the LORD approved, just as his father Uzziah had done.[10] (He did not, however, have the audacity to enter the temple.)[11] Yet the people were still sinning.

27:3 He built the Upper Gate to the LORD's temple and did a lot of work on the wall in the area known as Ophel.[12] 27:4 He built cities in the hill country of Judah and fortresses and towers in the forests.

27:5 He launched a military campaign[13] against the king of the Ammonites and defeated them. That year the Ammonites paid him 100 talents[14] of silver, 10,000 cors[15] of wheat, and 10,000 cors[16] of barley. The Ammonites also paid this same amount of annual tribute the next two years.[17]

27:6 Jotham grew powerful because he was determined to please the LORD his God.[18] 27:7 The rest of the events of Jotham's reign, including all his military campaigns and his accomplishments, are recorded in the scroll of the kings of Israel and Judah.[19] 27:8 He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem. 27:9 Jotham passed away[20] and was buried in the City of David.[21] His son Ahaz replaced him as king.

Ahaz's Reign

28:1 Ahaz was twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem.[22] He did not do what pleased the LORD, in contrast to his ancestor David.[23] 28:2 He followed in the footsteps of[24] the kings of Israel; he also made images of the Baals. 28:3 He offered sacrifices in the Valley of Ben Hinnom and passed his sons through the fire,[25] a horrible sin practiced by the nations[26] whom the LORD drove out before the Israelites. 28:4 He offered sacrifices and burned incense on the high places, on the hills, and under every green tree.

28:5 The LORD his God handed him over to the king of Syria. The Syrians[27] defeated him and deported many captives to Damascus.[28] He was also handed over to the king of Israel, who thoroughly defeated him.[29] 28:6 In one day King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel killed 120,000 warriors in Judah, because they had abandoned the LORD God of their ancestors.[1] 28:7 Zikri, an Ephraimite warrior, killed the king's son Maaseiah, Azrikam, the supervisor of the palace, and Elkanah, the king's second-in-command. 28:8 The Israelites seized from their brothers 200,000 wives, sons, and daughters. They also carried off a huge amount of plunder and took it[2] back to Samaria.[3] 28:9 Oded, a prophet of the LORD, was there. He went to meet the army as they arrived in Samaria and said to them: "Look, because the LORD God of your ancestors was angry with Judah he handed them over to you. You have killed them so mercilessly that God has taken notice.[4] 28:10 And now you are planning[5] to enslave[6] the people[7] of Judah and Jerusalem. Yet are you not also guilty before the LORD your God? 28:11 Now listen to me! Send back those you have seized from your brothers, for the LORD is very angry at you!"[8] 28:12 So some of[9] the Ephraimite family leaders, Azariah son of Jehochanan, Berechiah son of Meshillemoth, Jechizkiah son of Shallum, and Amasa son of Hadlai confronted[10] those returning from the battle. 28:13 They said to them, "Don't bring those captives here! Are you planning on making us even more sinful and guilty before the LORD?[11] Our guilt is already great and the LORD is very angry at Israel."[12] 28:14 So the soldiers released the captives and the plunder before the officials and the entire assembly. 28:15 Men were assigned to take the prisoners and find clothes among the plunder for those who were naked.[13] So they clothed them, supplied them with sandals, gave them food and drink, and provided them with oil to rub on their skin.[14] They put the ones who couldn't walk on donkeys.[15] They brought them back to their brothers at Jericho,[16] the city of the date palm trees, and then returned to Samaria.

28:16 At that time King Ahaz asked the king[17] of Assyria for help. 28:17 The Edomites had again invaded and defeated Judah and carried off captives. 28:18 The Philistines had raided the cities of Judah in the lowlands[18] and the Negev. They captured and settled in Beth Shemesh, Aijalon, Gederoth, Soco and its surrounding villages, Timnah and its surrounding villages, and Gimzo and its surrounding villages. 28:19 The LORD humiliated[19] Judah because of King Ahaz of Israel,[20] for he encouraged Judah to sin and was very[21] unfaithful to the LORD. 28:20 King Tiglath-pileser[22] of Assyria came, but he gave him more trouble than support.[23] 28:21 Ahaz gathered riches[24] from the LORD's temple, the royal palace, and the officials and gave them to the king of Assyria, but that did not help.

28:22 During his time of trouble King Ahaz was even more unfaithful to the LORD. 28:23 He offered sacrifices to the gods of Damascus whom he thought had defeated him.[25] He reasoned,[26] "Since the gods of the kings of Damascus helped them, I will sacrifice to them so they will help me." But they caused him and all Israel to stumble. 28:24 Ahaz gathered the items in God's temple and removed them. He shut the doors of the LORD's temple and erected altars on every street corner in Jerusalem. 28:25 In every city throughout Judah he set up high places to offer sacrifices to other gods. He angered the LORD God of his ancestors.

28:26 The rest of the events of Ahaz's reign, including his accomplishments from start to finish, are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Judah and Israel.[27] 28:27 Ahaz passed away[28] and was buried in the City of David;[1] they did not bring him to the tombs of the kings of Israel. His son Hezekiah replaced him as king.

Hezekiah Consecrates the Temple

29:1 Hezekiah was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem.[2] His mother was Abijah,[3] the daughter of Zechariah. 29:2 He did what the LORD approved, just as his ancestor David had done.[4]

29:3 In the first month of the first year of his reign, he opened the doors of the LORD's temple and repaired them. 29:4 He brought in the priests and Levites and assembled them in the square on the east side. 29:5 He said to them: "Listen to me, you Levites! Now consecrate yourselves, so you can consecrate the temple of the LORD God of your ancestors![5] Remove from the sanctuary what is ceremonially unclean! 29:6 For our fathers were unfaithful; they did what is evil in the sight of[6] the LORD our God and abandoned him! They turned[7] away from the LORD's dwelling place and rejected him.[8] 29:7 They closed the doors of the temple porch and put out the lamps; they did not offer incense or burnt sacrifices in the sanctuary of the God of Israel. 29:8 The LORD was angry at Judah and Jerusalem and made them an appalling object of horror at which people hiss out their scorn,[9] as you can see with your own eyes. 29:9 Look, our fathers died violently[10] and our sons, daughters, and wives were carried off[11] because of this. 29:10 Now I intend[12] to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, so that he may relent from his raging anger.[13] 29:11 My sons, do not be negligent now, for the LORD has chosen you to serve in his presence and offer sacrifices."[14]

29:12 The following Levites prepared to carry out the king's orders:[15]

From the Kohathites: Mahath son of Amasai and Joel son of Azariah; from the Merarites: Kish son of Abdi and Azariah son of Jehallelel; from the Gershonites: Joah son of Zimmah and Eden son of Joah;

29:13 from the descendants of Elizaphan: Shimri and Jeiel;

from the descendants of Asaph: Zechariah and Mattaniah;

29:14 from the descendants of Heman: Jehiel and Shimei; from the descendants of Jeduthun: Shemaiah and Uzziel.

29:15 They assembled their brothers and consecrated themselves. Then they went in to purify the LORD's temple, just as the king had ordered, in accordance with the word[16] of the LORD. 29:16 The priests then entered the LORD's temple to purify it; they brought out to the courtyard of the LORD's temple every ceremonially unclean thing they discovered inside.[17] The Levites took them out to the Kidron Valley. 29:17 On the first day of the first month they began consecrating; by the eighth day of the month they reached the porch of the LORD's temple.[18] For eight more days they consecrated the LORD's temple. On the sixteenth day of the first month they were finished. 29:18 They went to King Hezekiah and said: "We have purified the entire temple of the LORD, including the altar of burnt sacrifice and all its equipment, and the table for the Bread of the Presence and all its equipment. 29:19 We have prepared and consecrated all the items that King Ahaz removed during his reign when he acted unfaithfully. They are in front of the altar of the LORD."

29:20 Early the next morning King Hezekiah assembled the city officials and went up to the LORD's temple. 29:21 They brought seven bulls, seven rams, seven lambs, and seven goats as a sin offering for the kingdom, the sanctuary, and Judah.[19] The king[20] told the priests, the descendants of Aaron, to offer burnt sacrifices on the altar of the LORD. 29:22 They slaughtered the bulls, and the priests took the blood and splashed it on the altar. Then they slaughtered the rams and splashed the blood on the altar; next they slaughtered the lambs and splashed the blood on the altar. 29:23 Finally they brought the goats for the sin offering before the king and the assembly, and they placed their hands on them. 29:24 Then the priests slaughtered them. king had decreed[1] that the burnt sacrifice and sin offering were for all Israel.

29:25 King Hezekiah[2] stationed the Levites in the LORD's temple with cymbals and stringed instruments, just as David, Gad the king's prophet,[3] and Nathan the prophet had ordered. (The LORD had actually given these orders through his prophets.) 29:26 The Levites had[4] David's musical instruments and the priests had trumpets. 29:27 Hezekiah ordered the burnt sacrifice to be offered on the altar. As they began to offer the sacrifice, they also began to sing to the LORD, accompanied by the trumpets and the musical instruments of King David of Israel. 29:28 The entire assembly worshiped, as the singers sang and the trumpeters played. They continued until the burnt sacrifice was completed.

29:29 When the sacrifices were completed, the king and all who were with him bowed down and worshiped. 29:30 King Hezekiah and the officials told the Levites to praise the LORD, using the psalms[5] of David and Asaph the prophet.[6] So they joyfully offered praise and bowed down and worshiped. 29:31 Hezekiah said, "Now you have consecrated yourselves[7] to the LORD. Come and bring sacrifices and thank offerings[8] to the LORD's temple." So the assembly brought sacrifices and thank offerings, and whoever desired to do so[9] brought burnt sacrifices.

29:32 The assembly brought a total of 70 bulls, 100 rams, and 200 lambs as burnt sacrifices to the LORD,[10] 29:33 and 600 bulls and 3,000 sheep[11] were consecrated. 29:34 But there were not enough priests to skin all the animals,[12] so their brothers, the Levites, helped them until the work was finished and the priests could consecrate themselves. (The Levites had been more conscientious about consecrating themselves than the priests.)[13] 29:35 There was a large number of burnt sacrifices, as well as fat from the peace offerings and drink offerings that accompanied the burnt sacrifices. So the service of the LORD's temple was reinstituted.[14] 29:36 Hezekiah and all the people were happy about what God had done[15] for them,[16] for it had been done quickly.[17]

Hezekiah Observes the Passover

30:1 Hezekiah sent messages throughout Israel and Judah; he even wrote letters to Ephraim and Manasseh, summoning them to come to the LORD's temple in Jerusalem[18] and observe a Passover celebration for the LORD God of Israel. 30:2 The king, his officials, and the entire assembly in Jerusalem decided to observe the Passover in the second month. 30:3 They were unable to observe it at the regular[19] time because not enough priests had consecrated themselves and the people had not assembled in Jerusalem. 30:4 The proposal seemed appropriate to[20] the king and the entire assembly. 30:5 So they sent an edict[21] throughout Israel from Beer Sheba to Dan, summoning the people[22] to come and observe a Passover for the LORD God of Israel in Jerusalem, for they had not observed it on a nationwide scale as prescribed in the law.[23] 30:6 Messengers[24] delivered the letters from the king and his officials throughout Israel and Judah.

This royal edict read:[25] "O Israelites, return to the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, so he may return[26] to you who have been spared from the kings of Assyria.[27] 30:7 Don't be like your fathers and brothers who were unfaithful to the LORD God of their ancestors,[28] provoking him to destroy them,[29] as you can see. 30:8 Now, don't be stubborn[30] like your fathers! Submit[31] to the LORD and come to his sanctuary which he has permanently consecrated. Serve the LORD your God so that he might relent from his raging anger.[32]

The priests were splashing the blood as the Levites handed it to them.[6] 30:17 Because many in the assembly had not consecrated themselves, the Levites slaughtered[7] the Passover lambs of all who were ceremonially unclean and could not consecrate their sacrifice to the LORD.[8] 30:18 The majority of the many people from Ephraim, Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun were ceremonially unclean, yet they ate the Passover in violation of what is prescribed in the law.[9] For Hezekiah prayed for them, saying: "May the LORD, who is good, forgive[10] 30:19 everyone who has determined to follow God,[11] the LORD God of his ancestors, even if he is not ceremonially clean according to the standards of the temple."[12] 30:20 The LORD responded favorably[13] to Hezekiah and forgave[14] the people.

30:21 The Israelites who were in Jerusalem observed the Feast of Unleavened Bread for seven days with great joy. The Levites and priests were praising the LORD every day with all their might.[15] 30:22 Hezekiah expressed his appreciation to all the Levites,[16] who demonstrated great skill in serving the LORD.[17] They feasted for the seven days of the festival,[18] and were making peace offerings and giving thanks to the LORD God of their ancestors.

30:23 The entire assembly then decided to celebrate for seven more days; so they joyfully celebrated for seven more days. 30:24 King Hezekiah of Judah supplied 1,000 bulls and 7,000 sheep[19] for the assembly, while the officials supplied them[20] with 1,000 bulls and 10,000 sheep. Many priests consecrated themselves. 30:25 The celebration included[21] the entire assembly of Judah, the priests, the Levites, the entire assembly of those who came from Israel, the resident foreigners who came from the land of Israel, and the residents of Judah. 30:26 There was a great celebration in Jerusalem, unlike anything that had occurred in Jerusalem since the time of King Solomon son of David of Israel.[22] 30:27 The priests and Levites got up and pronounced blessings on the people. The LORD responded favorably to them[23] as their prayers reached his holy dwelling place in heaven.

The phrase בִּכְלֵי־עֹז (bikhley-'oz, "with instruments of strength") might refer to loud sounding musical instruments (NASB "with loud instruments"; NEB "with unrestrained fervour"). The present translation assumes an emendation to בְּכָל־עֹז (b^{e}khol-'oz, "with all strength"); see 1 Chr 13:8, as well as HALOT 805 s.v. I עֹז and BDB 739 s.v. עֹז).

31:1 When all this was over, the Israelites[1] who were in the cities of Judah went out and smashed the sacred pillars, cut down the Asherah poles, and demolished[2] all the high places and altars throughout Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh.[3] Then all the Israelites returned to their own homes in their cities.[4]

The People Contribute to the Temple

31:2 Hezekiah appointed the divisions of the priests and Levites to do their assigned tasks[5] – to offer burnt sacrifices and present offerings and to serve, give thanks, and offer praise in the gates of the LORD's sanctuary.[6]

31:3 The king contributed[7] some of what he owned for burnt sacrifices, including the morning and evening burnt sacrifices and the burnt sacrifices made on Sabbaths, new moon festivals, and at other appointed times prescribed[8] in the law of the LORD. 31:4 He ordered[9] the people living in Jerusalem[10] to contribute the portion prescribed for the priests and Levites so they might be obedient[11] to the law of the LORD. 31:5 When the edict was issued,[12] the Israelites freely contributed[13] the initial portion of their grain, wine, olive oil, honey, and all the produce of their fields. They brought a tenth of everything, which added up to a huge amount. 31:6 The Israelites and people of Judah[14] who lived in the cities of Judah also contributed a tenth of their cattle and sheep, as well as a tenth of the holy items consecrated to the LORD their God. They brought them and placed them in many heaps.[15] 31:7 In the third month they began piling their contributions in heaps[16] and finished in the seventh month. 31:8 When Hezekiah and the officials came and saw the heaps, they praised the LORD and pronounced blessings on his people Israel.[17]

31:9 When Hezekiah asked the priests and Levites about the heaps, 31:10 Azariah, the head priest from the family of Zadok, said to him, "Since the contributions began arriving in the LORD's temple, we have had plenty to eat and have a large quantity left over. For the LORD has blessed his people, and this large amount remains." 31:11 Hezekiah ordered that storerooms be prepared in the LORD's temple. When this was done,[18] 31:12 they brought in the contributions, tithes,[19] and consecrated items that had been offered.[20] Konaniah, a Levite, was in charge of all this, assisted by his brother Shimei. 31:13 Jehiel, Azaziah, Nahath, Asahel, Jerimoth, Jozabad, Eliel, Ismakiah, Mahath, and Benaiah worked under the supervision of Konaniah and his brother Shimei, as directed by King Hezekiah and Azariah, the supervisor of God's temple.

31:14 Kore son of Imnah, a Levite and the guard on the east side, was in charge of the voluntary offerings made to God and disbursed the contributions made to the LORD and the consecrated items. 31:15 In the cities of the priests, Eden, Miniamin, Jeshua, Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah faithfully assisted him in making disbursements to their fellow priests[21] according to their divisions, regardless of age.[22] 31:16 They made disbursements to all the males three years old and up who were listed in the genealogical records – to all who would enter the LORD's temple to serve on a daily basis and fulfill their duties as assigned to their divisions.[23] 31:17 They made disbursements to the priests listed in the genealogical records by their families, and to the Levites twenty years old and up, according to their duties as assigned to their divisions, 31:18 and to all the infants, wives, sons, and daughters of the entire assembly listed in the genealogical records, for they faithfully consecrated themselves. 31:19 As for the descendants of Aaron, the priests who lived in the outskirts of all their cities,[24] men were assigned[25] to disburse portions to every male among the priests and to every Levite listed in the genealogical records.

Sennacherib Invades Judah

32:1 After these faithful deeds were accomplished, King Sennacherib of Assyria invaded Judah. He besieged the fortified cities, intending to seize them.[2] 32:2 When Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib had invaded and intended to attack Jerusalem,[3] 32:3 he consulted with his advisers and military officers about stopping up the springs[4] outside the city, and they supported him. 32:4 A large number of people gathered together and stopped up all the springs and the stream that flowed through the district.[5] They reasoned,[6] "Why should the kings of Assyria come and find plenty of water?" 32:5 Hezekiah[7] energetically rebuilt[8] every broken wall. He erected towers and an outer wall,[9] and fortified the terrace of the City of David.[10] He made many weapons and shields.

32:6 He appointed military officers over the army[11] and assembled them in the square at the city gate. He encouraged them,[12] saying, 32:7 "Be strong and brave! Don't be afraid and don't panic[13] because of the king of Assyria and this huge army that is with him! We have with us one who is stronger than those who are with him.[14] 32:8 He has with him mere human strength,[15] but the LORD our God is with us to help us and fight our battles!" The army[16] was encouraged by the words of King Hezekiah of Judah.

32:9 Afterward King Sennacherib of Assyria, while attacking Lachish with all his military might, sent his messengers[17] to Jerusalem. The message was for King Hezekiah of Judah and all the people of[18] Judah who were in Jerusalem. It read: 32:10 "This is what King Sennacherib of Assyria says: 'Why are you so confident that you remain in Jerusalem while it is under siege?[19] 32:11 Hezekiah says, "The LORD our God will rescue us from the power[20] of the king of Assyria." But he is misleading you and you will die of hunger and thirst![21] 32:12 Hezekiah is the one who eliminated[22] the LORD's[23] high places and altars and then told Judah and Jerusalem, "At one altar you must worship and offer sacrifices." 32:13 Are you not aware of what I and my predecessors[24] have done to all the nations of the surrounding lands? Have the gods of the surrounding lands actually been able to rescue their lands from my power?[25] 32:14 Who among all the gods of these nations whom my predecessors annihilated was able to rescue his people from my power?[26] 32:15 Now don't let Hezekiah deceive you or mislead you like this. Don't believe him, for no god of any nation or kingdom has been able to rescue his people from my power or the power of my predecessors. So how[27] can your gods rescue[28] you from my power?'"

32:16 Sennacherib's[29] servants further insulted[30] the LORD God and his servant Hezekiah. 32:17 He wrote letters mocking the LORD God of Israel and insulting him with these words:[31] "The gods of the surrounding nations could not rescue their people from my power. Neither can Hezekiah's god rescue his people from my power."[32] 32:18 They called out loudly in the Judahite dialect to the people of Jerusalem who were on the wall, trying to scare and terrify them so they could seize the city. 32:19 They talked about the

God of Jerusalem as if he were one of the man-made gods of the nations of the earth.

32:20 King Hezekiah and the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz prayed about this and cried out to heaven. 32:21 The LORD sent a messenger[1] and he wiped out all the soldiers, princes, and officers in the army of the king of Assyria. So Sennacherib[2] returned home humiliated.[3] When he entered the temple of his god, some of his own sons[4] struck him down with the sword. 32:22 The LORD delivered Hezekiah and the residents of Jerusalem from the power of King Sennacherib of Assyria and from all the other nations.[5] He made them secure on every side.[6] 32:23 Many were bringing presents[7] to the LORD in Jerusalem and precious gifts to King Hezekiah of Judah. From that time on he was respected by[8] all the nations.

Hezekiah's Shortcomings and Accomplishments

32:24 In those days Hezekiah was stricken with a terminal illness.[9] He prayed to the LORD, who answered him and gave him a sign confirming that he would be healed.[10] 32:25 But Hezekiah was ungrateful; he had a proud attitude, provoking God to be angry at him, as well as Judah and Jerusalem.[11] 32:26 But then Hezekiah and the residents of Jerusalem humbled themselves and abandoned their pride, and the LORD was not angry with them for the rest of Hezekiah's reign.[12]

32:27 Hezekiah was very wealthy and greatly respected. He made storehouses for his silver, gold, precious stones, spices, and all his other valuable possessions.[13] 32:28 He made storerooms for the harvest of grain, wine, and olive oil, and stalls for all his various kinds of livestock and his flocks.[14] 32:29 He built royal cities[15] and owned a large number of sheep and cattle, for God gave him a huge amount of possessions.

32:30 Hezekiah dammed up the source of the waters of the Upper Gihon and directed them down to the west side of the City of David.[16] Hezekiah succeeded in all that he did. 32:31 So when the envoys arrived from the Babylonian officials to visit him and inquire about the sign that occurred in the land,[17] God left him alone to test him, in order to know his true motives.[18]

32:32 The rest of the events of Hezekiah's reign, including his faithful deeds, are recorded in the vision of the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz, included in the Scroll of the Kings of Judah and Israel.[19] 32:33 Hezekiah passed away[20] and was buried on the ascent of the tombs of the descendants of David. All the people of Judah and the residents of Jerusalem buried him with great honor.[21] His son Manasseh replaced him as king.

Manasseh's Reign

33:1 Manasseh was twelve years old when he became king, and he reigned for fifty-five years in Jerusalem.[22] 33:2 He did evil in the sight of[23] the LORD and committed the same horrible sins practiced by the nations[24] whom the LORD drove out ahead of the Israelites. 33:3 He rebuilt the high places that his father Hezekiah had destroyed; he set up altars for the Baals and made Asherah poles. He bowed down to all the stars in the sky[25] and worshiped[26] them. 33:4 He built altars in the LORD's temple, about which the LORD had said, "Jerusalem will be my permanent home."[27] 33:5 In the two courtyards of the LORD's temple he built altars for all the stars in the sky. 33:6 He passed his sons through the fire[1] in the Valley of Ben Hinnom and practiced divination, omen reading, and sorcery. He set up a ritual pit to conjure up underworld spirits and appointed magicians to supervise it.[2] He did a great amount of evil in the sight of the LORD and angered him.[3] 33:7 He put an idolatrous image he had made in God's temple, about which God had said to David and to his son Solomon, "This temple in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, will be my permanent home.[4] 33:8 I will not make Israel again leave the land I gave to their ancestors,[5] provided that they carefully obey all I commanded them, the whole law, the rules and regulations given to Moses." 33:9 But Manasseh misled the people of[6] Judah and the residents of Jerusalem so that they sinned more than the nations whom the LORD had destroyed ahead of the Israelites.

33:10 The LORD confronted[7] Manasseh and his people, but they paid no attention. 33:11 So the LORD brought against them the commanders of the army of the king of Assyria. They seized Manasseh, put hooks in his nose,[8] bound him with bronze chains, and carried him away to Babylon. 33:12 In his pain[9] Manasseh[10] asked the LORD his God for mercy[11] and truly[12] humbled himself before the God of his ancestors.[13] 33:13 When he prayed to the LORD,[14] the LORD[15] responded to him[16] and answered favorably[17] his cry for mercy. The LORD[18] brought him back to Jerusalem to his kingdom. Then Manasseh realized that the LORD is the true God.

33:14 After this Manasseh[19] built up the outer wall of the City of David[20] on the west side of the Gihon in the valley to the entrance of the Fish Gate and all around the terrace; he made it much higher. He placed army officers in all the fortified cities in Judah.

33:15 He removed the foreign gods and images from the LORD's temple and all the altars he had built on the hill of the LORD's temple and in Jerusalem; he threw them outside the city. 33:16 He erected the altar of the LORD and offered on it peace offerings and thank offerings. He told the people of[21] Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel. 33:17 The people continued to offer sacrifices at the high places, but only to the LORD their God.

33:18 The rest of the events of Manasseh's reign, including his prayer to his God and the words the prophets[22] spoke to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, are recorded[23] in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. 33:19 The Annals of the Prophets include his prayer, give an account of how the LORD responded to it, record all his sins and unfaithful acts, and identify the sites where he built high places and erected Asherah poles and idols before he humbled himself.[24] 33:20 Manasseh passed away[25] and was buried in his palace. His son Amon replaced him as king.

Amon's Reign

33:21 Amon was twenty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned for two years in Jerusalem.[26] 33:22 He did evil in the sight of[27] the LORD, just like his father Manasseh had done. He offered sacrifices to all the idols his father Manasseh had made, and worshiped[28] them. 33:23 He did not humble himself before the LORD as his father Manasseh had done.[29]

This may refer to child sacrifice, though some interpret it as a less drastic cultic practice (NEB, NASV "made his sons pass through the fire"; NIV "sacrificed his sons in the fire"; NRSV "made his sons pass through fire"). Amon was guilty of great sin.[1] 33:24 His servants conspired against him and killed him in his palace. 33:25 The people of the land executed all who had conspired against King Amon, and they[2] made his son Josiah king in his place.

Josiah Institutes Religious Reforms

34:1 Josiah was eight years old when he became king, and he reigned for thirty-one years in Jerusalem.[3] 34:2 He did what the LORD approved[4] and followed in his ancestor David's footsteps;[5] he did not deviate to the right or the left.

34:3 In the eighth year of his reign, while he was still young, he began to seek the God of his ancestor[6] David. In his twelfth year he began ridding[7] Judah and Jerusalem of the high places, Asherah poles, idols, and images. 34:4 He ordered the altars of the Baals to be torn down,[8] and broke the incense altars that were above them. He smashed the Asherah poles, idols and images, crushed them up and sprinkled the dust over the tombs of those who had sacrificed to them. 34:5 He burned the bones of the pagan priests[9] on their altars; he purified Judah and Jerusalem. 34:6 In the cities of Manasseh, Ephraim, and Simeon, as far as Naphtali, and in the ruins[10] around them, 34:7 he tore down the altars and Asherah poles, demolished the idols, and smashed all the incense altars throughout the land of Israel. Then he returned to Jerusalem.

34:8 In the eighteenth year of his reign, he continued his policy of purifying the land and the temple.[11] He sent Shaphan son of Azaliah, Maaseiah the city official, and Joah son of Joahaz the secretary to repair the temple of the LORD his God. 34:9 They went to Hilkiah the high priest and gave him the silver that had been brought to God's temple. The Levites who guarded the door had collected it from the people of[12] Manasseh and Ephraim and from all who were left in Israel, as well as from all the people of[13] Judah and Benjamin and the residents of[14] Jerusalem. 34:10 They handed it over to the construction foremen[15] assigned to the LORD's temple. They in turn paid the temple workers to restore and repair it.[16] 34:11 They gave money to the craftsmen and builders to buy chiseled stone and wood for the braces and rafters of the buildings that the kings of Judah had allowed to fall into disrepair.[17] 34:12 The men worked faithfully. Their supervisors were Jahath and Obadiah (Levites descended from Merari), as well as Zechariah and Meshullam (descendants of Kohath). The Levites, all of whom were skilled musicians, 34:13 supervised the laborers and all the foremen on their various jobs.[18] Some of the Levites were scribes, officials, and guards.

34:14 When they took out the silver that had been brought to the LORD's temple, Hilkiah the priest found the law scroll the LORD had given to Moses. 34:15 Hilkiah informed Shaphan the scribe, "I found the law scroll in the LORD's temple." Hilkiah gave the scroll to Shaphan. 34:16 Shaphan brought the scroll to the king and reported,[19] "Your servants are doing everything assigned to them. 34:17 They melted down the silver in the LORD's temple[20] and handed it over to the supervisors of the construction foremen." 34:18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, "Hilkiah the priest has given me a scroll." Shaphan read it out loud before the king. 34:19 When the king heard the words of the law scroll, he tore his clothes. 34:20 The king ordered Hilkiah, Ahikam son of Shaphan, Abdon son of Micah,[21] Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah the king's servant, 34:21 "Go, seek an oracle from[22] the LORD for me and those who remain in Israel and Judah. Find out about[23] the words of this scroll that has been discovered. For the LORD's fury has been ignited against us,[24] because our ancestors[25] have not obeyed the word of the LORD by doing all that this scroll instructs!"[26]

34:22 So Hilkiah and the others sent by the king[1] went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum son of Tokhath, the son of Hasrah,[2] the supervisor of the wardrobe.[3] (She lived in Jerusalem in the Mishneh[4] district.) They stated their business,[5] 34:23 and she said to them: "This is what the LORD God of Israel says: 'Say this to the man who sent you to me: 34:24 "This is what the LORD says: 'I am about to bring disaster on this place and its residents, the details of which are recorded in the scroll which they read before the king of Judah. 34:25 This will happen because they have abandoned me and offered sacrifices[6] to other gods, angering me with all the idols they have made.[7] My anger will ignite against this place and will not be extinguished!'" 34:26 Say this to the king of Judah, who sent you to seek an oracle from the LORD: "This is what the LORD God of Israel says concerning the words you have heard: 34:27 'You displayed a sensitive spirit[8] and humbled yourself before God when you heard his words concerning this place and its residents. You humbled yourself before me, tore your clothes and wept before me, and I have heard you,' says the LORD. 34:28 'Therefore I will allow you to die and be buried in peace.[9] You will not have to witness all the disaster I will bring on this place and its residents.'"" Then they reported back to the king.

34:29 The king summoned all the leaders of Judah and Jerusalem.[10] 34:30 The king went up to the LORD's temple, accompanied by all the people of Judah, the residents of Jerusalem, the priests, and the Levites. All the people were there, from the oldest to the youngest. He read aloud all the words of the scroll of the covenant that had been discovered in the LORD's temple. 34:31 The king stood by his pillar[11] and renewed[12] the covenant before the LORD, agreeing to follow[13] the LORD and to obey his commandments, laws, and rules with all his heart and being,[14] by carrying out the terms[15] of this covenant recorded on this scroll. 34:32 He made all who were in Jerusalem and Benjamin agree to it.[16] The residents of Jerusalem acted in accordance with the covenant of God, the God of their ancestors. 34:33 Josiah removed all the detestable idols from all the areas belonging to the Israelites and encouraged[17] all who were in Israel to worship the LORD their God. Throughout the rest of his reign[18] they did not turn aside from following the LORD God of their ancestors.

Josiah Observes the Passover

35:1 Josiah observed a Passover festival for the LORD in Jerusalem.[19] They slaughtered the Passover lambs on the fourteenth day of the first month. 35:2 He appointed the priests to fulfill their duties and encouraged them to carry out their service in the LORD's temple. 35:3 He told the Levites, who instructed all Israel about things consecrated to the LORD, "Place the holy ark in the temple which King Solomon son of David of Israel built. Don't carry it on your shoulders. Now serve the LORD your God and his people Israel! 35:4 Prepare yourselves by your families according to your divisions, as instructed[20] by King David of Israel and his son Solomon. 35:5 Stand in the sanctuary and, together with the Levites, represent the family divisions of your countrymen.[21] 35:6 Slaughter the Passover lambs, consecrate yourselves, and make preparations for your countrymen to do what the LORD commanded through Moses."[22]

35:7 From his own royal flocks and herds, Josiah supplied the people with 30,000 lambs and goats for the Passover sacrifice, as well as 3,000 cattle.[23] 35:8 His officials also willingly contributed to the people, priests, and Levites. Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, the leaders of God's temple, supplied 2,600 Passover sacrifices and 300 cattle. 35:9 Konaniah and his brothers Shemaiah and Nethanel, along with Hashabiah, Jeiel, and Jozabad, the officials of the Levites, supplied the Levites with 5,000 Passover sacri-

However, it is possible that this is a general reference to their sinful practices, in which case one might translate, "angering me by all the things they do."

fices and 500 cattle. 35:10 Preparations were made,[1] and the priests stood at their posts and the Levites in their divisions as prescribed by the king. 35:11 They slaughtered the Passover lambs and the priests splashed the blood,[2] while the Levites skinned the animals. 35:12 They reserved the burnt offerings and the cattle for the family divisions of the people to present to the LORD, as prescribed in the scroll of Moses.[3] 35:13 They cooked the Passover sacrifices over the open fire as prescribed and cooked the consecrated offerings in pots, kettles, and pans. They quickly served them to all the people. 35:14 Afterward they made preparations for themselves and for the priests, because the priests, the descendants of Aaron, were offering burnt sacrifices and fat portions until evening. The Levites made preparations for themselves and for the priests, the descendants of Aaron. 35:15 The musicians, the descendants of Asaph, manned their posts, as prescribed by David, Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun the king's prophet.[4] The guards at the various gates did not need to leave their posts, for their fellow Levites made preparations for them. 35:16 So all the preparations for the LORD's service were made that day, as the Passover was observed and the burnt sacrifices were offered on the altar of the LORD, as prescribed by King Josiah. 35:17 So the Israelites who were present observed the Passover at that time, as well as the Feast of Unleavened Bread for seven days. 35:18 A Passover like this had not been observed in Israel since the days of Samuel the prophet. None of the kings of Israel had observed a Passover like the one celebrated by Josiah, the priests, the Levites, all the people of Judah and Israel who were there, and the residents of Jerusalem. 35:19 This Passover was observed in the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign.

Josiah's Reign Ends

35:20 After Josiah had done all this for the temple,[5] King Necho of Egypt marched up to do battle at Carchemish on the Euphrates River.[6] Josiah marched out to oppose him. 35:21 Necho[7] sent messengers to him, saying, "Why are you opposing me, O king of Judah?[8] I am not attacking you today, but the kingdom with which I am at war.[9] God told me to hurry. Stop opposing God, who is with me, or else he will destroy you."[10] 35:22 But Josiah did not turn back from him;[11] he disguised himself for battle. He did not take seriously[12] the words of Necho which he had received from God; he went to fight him in the Plain of Megiddo.[13] 35:23 Archers shot King Josiah; the king ordered his servants, "Take me out of this chariot,[14] for I am seriously wounded." 35:24 So his servants took him out of the chariot, put him in another chariot that he owned, and brought him to Jerusalem,[15] where he died. He was buried in the tombs of his ancestors;[16] all the people of Judah and Jerusalem mourned Josiah. 35:25 Jeremiah composed laments for Josiah which all the male and female singers use to mourn Josiah to this very day. It has become customary in Israel to sing these; they are recorded in the Book of Laments.

35:26 The rest of the events of Josiah's reign, including the faithful acts he did in obedience to what is written in the law of the LORD[17] 35:27 and his accomplishments, from start to finish, are recorded[18] in the Scroll of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

Jehoahaz's Reign

36:1 The people of the land took Jehoahaz son of Josiah and made him king in his father's place in Jerusalem.[19] 36:2 Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. 36:3 The king of Egypt prevented him from ruling in Jerusalem and imposed on the land a special tax[20] of one hundred talents[21] of silver and a talent of gold. 36:4 The king of Egypt made Jehoahaz's[22] brother Eliakim king over Judah and Jerusalem, and changed his name to Jehoiakim. Necho seized his brother Jehoahaz and took him to Egypt.

[21] tn The Hebrew word כִּכָּר (kikar, "circle") refers generally to something that is round. When used of metals it can refer to a disk-shaped weight made of the metal or, by extension, to a standard unit of weight. According to the older (Babylonian) standard the "talent" weighed 130 lbs. (58.9 kg), but later this was lowered to 108.3 lbs. (49.1 kg). More recent research suggests the "light" standard talent was 67.3 lbs. (30.6 kg). Using this as the standard for calculation, the weight of the silver was 6,730 lbs. (3,060 kg).

Jehoiakim's Reign

36:5 Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned for eleven years in Jerusalem.[1] He did evil in the sight of[2] the LORD his God. 36:6 King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon attacked him,[3] bound him with bronze chains, and carried him away[4] to Babylon. 36:7 Nebuchadnezzar took some of the items in the LORD's temple to Babylon and put them in his palace[5] there.[6]

36:8 The rest of the events of Jehoiakim's reign, including the horrible sins he committed and his shortcomings, are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Israel and Judah.[7] His son Jehoiachin replaced him as king.

Jehoiachin's Reign

36:9 Jehoiachin was eighteen[8] years old when he became king, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem.[9] He did evil in the sight of[10] the LORD. 36:10 At the beginning of the year King Nebuchadnezzar ordered him to be brought[11] to Babylon, along with the valuable items in the LORD's temple. In his place he made his relative[12] Zedekiah king over Judah and Jerusalem.

Zedekiah's Reign

36:11 Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he became king, and he ruled for eleven years in Jerusalem.[13] 36:12 He did evil in the sight of[14] the LORD his God. He did not humble himself before Jeremiah the prophet, the LORD's spokesman. 36:13 He also rebelled against King Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him vow allegiance[15] in the name of God. He was stubborn and obstinate, and refused to return[16] to the LORD God of Israel. 36:14 All the leaders of the priests and people became more unfaithful and committed the same horrible sins practiced by the nations.[17] They defiled the LORD's temple which he had consecrated in Jerusalem.

The Babylonians Destroy Jerusalem

36:15 The LORD God of their ancestors[18] continually warned them through his messengers,[19] for he felt compassion for his people and his dwelling place. 36:16 But they mocked God's messengers, despised his warnings,[20] and ridiculed his prophets.[21] Finally the LORD got very angry at his people and there was no one who could prevent his judgment.[22] 36:17 He brought against them the king of the Babylonians, who slaughtered[23] their young men in their temple.[24] He did not spare[25] young men or women, or even the old and aging. God[26] handed everyone over to him. 36:18 He carried away to Babylon all the items in God's temple, whether large or small, as well as what was in the treasuries of the LORD's temple and in the treasuries of the king and his officials. 36:19 They burned down the LORD's temple and tore down the wall of Jerusalem.[27] They burned all its fortified buildings and destroyed all its valuable items. 36:20 He deported to Babylon all who escaped the sword. They served him and his sons until the Persian kingdom rose to power. 36:21 This took place to fulfill the LORD's message delivered

Cyrus Allows the Exiles to Go Home

36:22 In the first year of the reign of[6] King Cyrus of Persia, in fulfillment of the promise he delivered through Jeremiah,[7] the LORD moved[8] King Cyrus of Persia to issue a written decree throughout his kingdom. 36:23 It read: "This is what King Cyrus of Persia says: 'The LORD God of the heavens has given to me all the kingdoms of the earth. He has appointed me to build for him a temple in Jerusalem[9] in Judah. May the LORD your God energize you who belong to his people, so you may be able to go back there!'"[10]

[3] sn According to Lev 25:4, the land was to remain uncultivated every seventh year. Lev 26:33-35 warns that the land would experience a succession of such sabbatical rests if the people disobeyed God, for he would send them away into exile.

[4] sn Concerning the seventy years see Jer 25:11.

[5] tn Heb "all the days of the desolation it rested to fulfill the seventy years."

sn Cyrus' edict (see vv. 22-23) occurred about fifty years after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., which is most naturally understood as the beginning point of the "days of desolation" mentioned in v. 21. The number "seventy" is probably used in a metaphorical sense, indicating a typical lifetime and suggesting a thorough or complete judgment that would not be lifted until an entirely new generation emerged.

The Decree of Cyrus

1:1[1] In the first[2] year of King Cyrus of Persia, in order to fulfill the LORD's message[3] spoken through[4] Jeremiah,[5] the LORD stirred the mind[6] of King Cyrus of Persia. He disseminated[7] a proclamation[8] throughout his entire kingdom, announcing in a written edict[9] the following:[10]

1:2 "Thus says King Cyrus of Persia:

"'The LORD God of heaven has given me all the kingdoms of the earth. He has instructed me to build a temple[11] for him in Jerusalem,[12] which is in Judah. 1:3 Anyone from[13] his people among you (may his God be with him!) may go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and may build the temple of the LORD God of Israel – he is the God who is in Jerusalem. 1:4 Anyone who survives in any of those places where he is a resident foreigner must be helped by his neighbors[14] with silver, gold, equipment, and animals, along with voluntary offerings for the temple of God which is in Jerusalem.'"

The Exiles Prepare to Return to Jerusalem

1:5 Then the leaders[15] of Judah and Benjamin, along with the priests and the Levites – all those whose mind God had stirred – got ready[16] to go up in order to build the temple of the LORD in Jerusalem.[17] 1:6 All their neighbors assisted[18] them with silver utensils,[19] gold, equipment, animals, and expensive gifts, not to mention[20] all the voluntary offerings.

1:7 Then King Cyrus brought out the vessels of the LORD's temple which Nebuchadnezzar had brought from Jerusalem and had displayed[21] in the temple of his gods. 1:8 King Cyrus of Persia entrusted[22] them to[23] Mithredath[24] the treasurer, who counted them

1 sn In addition to the canonical books of Ezra and Nehemiah, there are two deuterocanonical books that are also called "Ezra." Exactly how these books are designated varies in ancient literature. In the Septuagint (LXX) canonical Ezra is called Second Esdras, but in the Latin Vulgate it is called First Esdras. Our Nehemiah is called Third Esdras in some manuscripts of the LXX, but it is known as Second Esdras in the Latin Vulgate. (In the earliest LXX manuscripts Ezra and Nehemiah were regarded as one book, as they were in some Hebrew manuscripts.) The deuterocanonical books of Ezra are called First and Fourth Esdras in the LXX, but Third and Fourth Esdras in the Latin Vulgate. The titles for the so-called books of Ezra are thus rather confusing, a fact that one must keep in mind when consulting this material.

2 sn The first year of Cyrus would be ca. 539 B.C. Cyrus reigned in Persia from ca. 539-530 B.C.

3 tn Heb "the word of the LORD."

4 tc The MT reads מִפִּי (mippi, "from the mouth of"), but this should probably be emended to בְּפִי (bᵉfi, "by the mouth of"), which is the way the parallel passage in 2 Chr 36:22 reads. This is also reflected in the LXX, which is either reflecting an alternate textual tradition of בְּפִי or is attempting to harmonize Ezra 1:1 in light of 2 Chronicles.

tn Heb "from the mouth of."

5 sn Cf. Jer 29:10; 25:11-14. Jeremiah had prophesied that after a time of seventy years the Jews would return "to this place." How these seventy years are to be reckoned is a matter of debate among scholars. Some understand the period to refer to the approximate length of Babylon's ascendancy as a world power, beginning either with the fall of Nineveh (612 B.C.) or with Nebuchadnezzar's coronation (605 B.C.) and continuing till the fall of Babylon to the Persians in 539 B.C. Others take the seventy years to refer to the period from the destruction of the temple in 586 B.C. till its rebuilding in 516 B.C.

6 tn Heb "spirit." The Hebrew noun רוּחַ (ruakh, "spirit") has a broad range of meanings (see BDB 924-26 s.v.). Here, it probably refers to (1) "mind" as the seat of mental acts (e.g., Exod 28:3; Deut 34:9; Isa 29:24; 40:13; Ezek 11:5; 20:32; 1 Chr 28:12; cf. BDB 925 s.v. 6) or (2) "will" as the seat of volitional decisions (e.g., Exod 35:5, 22; Pss 51:12, 14; 57:8; 2 Chr 29:31; cf. BDB 925 s.v. 7). So also in v. 5.

7 tn Heb "caused to pass."

8 tn Heb "a voice." The Hebrew noun קוֹל (qol, "voice, sound") has a broad range of meanings, including the metonymical (cause – effect) nuance "proclamation" (e.g., Exod 36:6; 2 Chr 24:9; 30:5; 36:22; Ezra 1:1; 10:7; Neh 8:15). See BDB 877 s.v. 3.a.2.

9 sn For an interesting extrabiblical parallel to this edict see the Cyrus cylinder (ANET 315-16).

10 tn Heb "in writing, saying."

11 tn Heb "house." The Hebrew noun בַּיִת (bayit, "house") is often used in reference to the temple of Yahweh (BDB 108 s.v. 1.a). This is also frequent elsewhere in Ezra and Nehemiah (e.g., Ezra 1:3, 4, 5, 7; 2:68; 3:8, 9, 11, 12; 4:3; 6:22; 7:27; 8:17, 25, 29, 30, 33, 36; 9:9; 10:1, 6, 9).

18 tn Heb "strengthened their hands."

19 tc The MT reads בִּכְלִי־כֶסֶף (bikhley khesef, "with silver vessels"). However, part of the LXX manuscript tradition reads ἐν πᾶσιν ἀργυρίῳ (en pasin arguriō), which reflects an alternate Hebrew reading of בַּכֹּל־בַּכֶּסֶף (bakkol-bakkesef, "everywhere, with silver"). The textual variant involves (1) simple omission of yod (י) between two words, a common scribal mistake; (2) haplography of the preposition bet (ב); and (3) an alternate vocalization tradition of the first term.

20 tn Heb "besides" or "in addition to."

21 tn Heb "and he gave them."

22 tn Heb "brought them forth."

out to Sheshbazzar[1] the leader of the Judahite exiles.[2]

1:9 The inventory[3] of these items was as follows:

30 gold basins,[4]
1,000 silver basins,
29 silver utensils,[5]
1:10 30 gold bowls,
410 other[6] silver bowls,
and 1,000 other vessels.

1:11 All these gold and silver vessels totaled 5,400.[7] Sheshbazzar brought them all along when the captives were brought up from Babylon to Jerusalem.

The Names of the Returning Exiles

2:1[8] These are the people[9] of the province who were going up,[10] from the captives of the exile whom King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon had forced into exile in Babylon. They returned to Jerusalem[11] and Judah, each to his own city. 2:2 They came with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispar, Bigvai, Rehum, and Baanah.

The number of Israelites[12] was as follows:[13]
2:3 the descendants[14] of Parosh: 2,172;
2:4 the descendants of Shephatiah: 372;
2:5 the descendants of Arah: 775;
2:6 the descendants of Pahath-Moab (from the line[15] of Jeshua and[16] Joab): 2,812;
2:7 the descendants of Elam: 1,254;
2:8 the descendants of Zattu: 945;
2:9 the descendants of Zaccai: 760;

[2] tn Heb "Sheshbazzar the prince to Judah"; TEV, CEV "the governor of Judah."

[3] tn Heb "these are their number."

[4] tn The exact meaning of the Hebrew noun אֲגַרְטָל ('agartal, which occurs twice in this verse) is somewhat uncertain. The lexicons suggest that it is related to a common Semitic root (the Hebrew derivative has a prosthetic prefixed א [aleph] and interchange between ג [gimel] and ק [kof]): Judean Aramaic and Syriac qartalla, Arabic qirtallat, Ethiopic qartalo, all meaning "basket" (BDB 173-74 s.v.; HALOT 11 s.v.). There is debate whether this is a loanword from Greek κάρταλλος (kartallos, "basket"), Persian hirtal ("leather bag") or Hittite kurtal ("container"). The term is traditionally understood as a kind of vessel, such as "basket, basin" (BDB 173-74 s.v.; HALOT 11 s.v.); but some suggest "leather bag" or a basket-shaped container of some sort (P. Humbert, "En marge du dictionnaire hébraïque," ZAW 62 [1950]: 199-207; DCH 1:118 s.v.). The LXX translated it as ψυκτήρ (psuktēr, "metal bowl"). The precise meaning depends on whether the nouns כֶּסֶף (kesef, "silver") and זָהָב (zahav, "gold"), which follow each use of this plural construct noun, are genitives of content ("containers full of silver" and "containers full of gold") or genitives of material ("silver containers" and "gold containers" = containers made from silver and gold). If they are genitives of content, the term probably means "baskets" or "leather bags" (filled with silver and gold); however, if they are genitives of material, the term would mean "basins" (made of silver and gold). Elsewhere in Ezra 1, the nouns כֶּסֶף ("silver") and זָהָב ("gold") are used as genitives or material, not genitives of contents; therefore, the translation "gold basins" and "silver basins" is preferred.

[5] tn Heb "knives." The Hebrew noun מַחֲלָפִים (makhalafim, "knives") is found only here in the OT. While the basic meaning of the term is fairly clear, what it refers to here is unclear. The verb II חָלַף (khalaf) means "to pass through" (BDB 322 s.v. חָלַף) or "to cut through" (HALOT 321 s.v. II חלף; see also Judg 5:26; Job 20:24); thus, the lexicons suggest מַחֲלָפִים means "knives" (BDB 322 s.v. מַחֲלָף; HALOT 569 s.v. *מַחֲלָף). The related noun חַלְפוּת (khalafot, "knife") is used in Mishnaic Hebrew (HALOT 321 s.v. II חלף), and חֲלִיפוֹת (khalifot, "knives") appears in the Talmud. The noun appears in the cognate languages: Ugaritic khlpnm ("knives"; UT 19) and Syriac khalofta ("shearing knife"; HALOT 321 s.v. II חלף). The Vulgate translated it as "knives," while the LXX understood it as referring to replacement pieces for the offering basins. The English translations render it variously; some following the Vulgate and others adopting the approach of the LXX: "knives" (KJV, NKJV, NRSV), "censers" (RSV), "duplicates" (NASV), "silver pans" (NIV), "bowls" (TEV), "other dishes" (CEV). Verse 11 lists these twenty-nine objects among the "gold and silver vessels" brought back to Jerusalem for temple worship. The translation above offers the intentionally ambiguous "silver utensils" (the term מַחֲלָפִים ["knives"] would hardly refer to "gold" items, but could refer to "silver items").

[6] tn The meaning of the Hebrew term מִשְׁנִים (mishnim) is uncertain. The noun מִשְׁנֶה (mishneh) means "double, second" (BDB 1041 s.v.), "what is doubled, two-fold" (HALOT 650 s.v. מִשְׁנֶה 3). The translations reflect a diversity of approaches: "410 silver bowls of a second kind" (KJV, NASV, RSV margin), "410 other silver bowls" (NRSV) and "410 matching silver bowls" (NIV). BDB 1041 s.v. מִשְׁנֶה 3.a suggests it was originally a numeral that was garbled in the transmission process, as reflected in the LXX: "two thousand" (so RSV: "two thousand four hundred and ten bowls of silver"). The BHS editor suggests revocalizing the term to מְשֻׁנִּים (m^{e}shunim, "changed").

[7] sn The total number as given in the MT does not match the numbers given for the various items in v. 9. It is not clear whether the difference is due to error in textual transmission or whether the constituent items mentioned are only a selection from a longer list, in which case the total from that longer list may have been retained. The numbers provided in 1 Esdras come much closer to agreeing with the number in Ezra 1:9-11, but this does not necessarily mean that 1 Esdras has been better preserved here than Ezra. 1 Esdras 2:13-15 (RSV) says, "The number of these was: a thousand gold cups, a thousand silver cups, twenty-nine silver censures, thirty gold bowls, two thousand four hundred and ten silver bowls, and a thousand other vessels. All the vessels were handed over, gold and silver, five thousand four hundred and sixty-nine, and they were carried back by Shesbazzar with the returning exiles from Babylon to Jerusalem."

[8] sn The list of names and numbers in this chapter of Ezra has a parallel account in Neh 7:6-73. The fact that the two lists do not always agree in specific details suggests that various textual errors have crept into the accounts during the transmission process.

[9] tn Heb "the sons of."

[10] tn The Hebrew term הָעֹלִים (ha'olim, "those who were going up" [Qal active participle]) refers to continual action in the past. Most translations render this as a simple past: "went up" (KJV), "came up" (RSV, ASV, NASV, NIV), "came" (NRSV). CEV paraphrases: "were on their way back."

[10] tn The meaning of the Hebrew word דַּרְכְּמוֹנִים (dark^{e}monim, cf. Neh 7:69, 70, 71) is uncertain. It may be a Greek loanword meaning "drachmas" (the view adopted here and followed also by NAB, NASB, NIV) or a Persian loanword "daric," referring to a Persian gold coin (BDB 204 s.v. דַּרְכְּמוֹן; HALOT 232 s.v. דַּרְכְּמֹנִים(ו); cf. ASV, NRSV). For further study, see R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 206-9.

[11] sn The מָנִים (manim, cf. Neh 7:71, 72) is a measuring weight for valuable metals, equal to 160/ of a talent or 60 shekels (BDB 584 s.v. מָנֶה; HALOT 599 s.v. מָנֶה). For further study, see R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 203-6.

[12] tn Or "garments."

[13] tn Heb "the sons of Israel."

[14] tn The word "living" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied. Some translations supply "settled" (cf. NAB, NIV, NLT).

[15] tc The translation reads with some medieval Hebrew MSS and ancient versions בְּעָרֵיהֶם (be'arehem, "in their towns"), rather than the reading בֶּעָרִים (be'arim, "in the towns") found in the MT. Cf. Neh 7:72 HT [7:73 ET].

[16] tn The Hebrew text adds the phrase "like one man." This has not been included in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[17] tn Heb "to."

[20] tn Heb "his brothers the priests."

[21] tn Heb "his brothers."

[22] tn Heb "arose and built."

[23] tn Heb "written in." Cf. v. 4.

[24] tn Heb "the peoples of the lands."

[25] tn The Hebrew phrase אֶת חַג־הַסֻּכּוֹת ('et khag-hassukot, "festival of huts" [or "shelters"]) is traditionally known as the Feast of Tabernacles. The rendering "booths" (cf. NAB, NASB, NRSV) is probably better than the traditional "tabernacles" in light of the meaning of the term סֻכָּה (sukkah, "hut; booth"), but "booths" are frequently associated with trade shows and craft fairs in contemporary American English. The nature of the celebration during this feast as a commemoration of the wanderings of the Israelites after they left Egypt suggests that a translation like "temporary shelters" is more appropriate.

[26] tn Heb "according to what is written."

son of Jozadak initiated the work,[1] along with the rest of their associates,[2] the priests and the Levites, and all those who were coming to Jerusalem from the exile. They appointed[3] the Levites who were at least twenty years old[4] to take charge of the work on the LORD's temple. 3:9 So Jeshua appointed both his sons and his relatives,[5] Kadmiel and his sons (the sons of Yehudah[6]), to take charge of the workers in the temple of God, along with the sons of Henadad, their sons, and their relatives[7] the Levites. 3:10 When the builders established the LORD's temple, the priests, ceremonially attired and with their clarions,[8] and the Levites (the sons of Asaph) with their cymbals, stood to praise the LORD according to the instructions left by[9] King David of Israel.[10] 3:11 With antiphonal response they sang,[11] praising and glorifying the LORD:

"For he is good;
his loyal love toward Israel is forever."

All the people gave a loud[12] shout as they praised the LORD when the temple of the LORD was established. 3:12 Many of the priests, the Levites, and the leaders[13] – older people who had seen with their own eyes the former temple while it was still established[14] – were weeping loudly,[15] and many others raised their voice in a joyous shout. 3:13 People were unable to tell the difference between the sound of joyous shouting and the sound of the people's weeping, for the people were shouting so loudly[16] that the sound was heard a long way off.

Opposition to the Building Efforts

4:1 When the enemies of Judah and Benjamin learned that the former exiles[17] were building a temple for the LORD God of Israel, 4:2 they came to Zerubbabel and the leaders[18] and said to them, "Let us help you build,[19] for like you we seek your God and we have been sacrificing to him[20] from the time[21] of King Esarhaddon[22] of Assyria, who brought us here."[23] 4:3 But Zerubbabel, Jeshua, and the rest of the leaders of Israel said to them, "You have no right[24] to help us build the temple of our God. We will build it by ourselves for the LORD God of Israel, just as King Cyrus, the king of Persia, has commanded us." 4:4 Then the local people[25] began to discourage[26] the people of Judah and to dishearten them from building. 4:5 They were hiring advisers to oppose them, so as to frustrate their plans, throughout the time[27] of King Cyrus of Persia until the reign of King Darius[28] of Persia.[29]

[1] tn Heb "began"; the phrase "the work" is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity.

[2] tn Heb "their brothers."

[3] tn Heb "stood."

[4] tn Heb "from twenty years and upward."

[5] tn Heb "brothers."

[6] sn The name יְהוּדָה (Yehudah; cf. KJV, ASV, NASB "Judah") is probably a variant of Hodaviah (see Ezra 2:40; cf. NIV, NCV, TEV, CEV, NLT).

[7] tn Heb "brothers."

[8] sn This was a long, straight, metallic instrument used for signal calls, rather than the traditional ram's horn (both instruments are typically translated "trumpet" by English versions).

[9] tn Heb "according to the hands of."

[10] sn See Ps 107:1; 118:1, 29; 136:1. Cf. 2 Chr 5:13; 7:3; 20:21.

[11] tn Heb "they answered."

[12] tn Heb "great."

[13] tn Heb "the heads of the fathers."

[14] sn The temple had been destroyed some fifty years earlier by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.

[15] tn Heb "with a great voice."

[16] tn Heb "a great shout."

[17] tn Heb "the sons of the exile."

[18] tn Heb "the heads of the fathers." So also in v. 3.

[19] tn Heb "Let us build with you."

[20] tc The translation reads with the Qere, a Qumran MS, the LXX, the Syriac Peshitta, and the Arabic version וְלוֹ (vᵉlo, "and him") rather than the Kethib of the MT, וְלֹא (vᵉlo', "and not").

[21] tn Heb "days."

[22] sn Esarhaddon was king of Assyria ca. 681-669 B.C.

[23] sn The Assyrian policy had been to resettle Samaria with peoples from other areas (cf. 2 Kgs 17:24-34). These immigrants acknowledged Yahweh as well as other deities in some cases. The Jews who returned from the Exile regarded them with suspicion and were not hospitable to their offer of help in rebuilding the temple.

[24] tn Heb "not to you and to us."

[25] tn Heb "the people of the land." Elsewhere this expression sometimes has a negative connotation, referring to a lay population that was less zealous for Judaism than it should have been. Here, however, it seems to refer to the resident population of the area without any negative connotation.

[26] tn Heb "were making slack the hands of."

[27] tn Heb "all the days of."

[28] sn Darius ruled Persia ca. 522-486 B.C.

[29] sn The purpose of the opening verses of this chapter is to summarize why the Jews returning from the exile were unable to complete the rebuilding of the temple more quickly than they did. The delay was due not to disinterest on their part but to the repeated obstacles that had been placed in their path by determined foes.

Official Complaints Are Lodged Against the Jews

4:6[1] At the beginning of the reign of Ahasuerus[2] they filed an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.[3] 4:7 And during the reign[4] of Artaxerxes, Bishlam,[5] Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their colleagues[6] wrote to King Artaxerxes[7] of Persia. This letter[8] was first written in Aramaic but then translated.

[Aramaic:][9]

4:8 Rehum the commander[10] and Shimshai the scribe[11] wrote a letter concerning[12] Jerusalem to King Artaxerxes as follows: 4:9 From[13] Rehum the commander, Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their colleagues – the judges, the rulers, the officials, the secretaries, the Erechites, the Babylonians, the people of Susa (that is,[14] the Elamites), 4:10 and the rest of nations whom the great and noble Ashurbanipal[15] deported and settled in the cities[16] of Samaria and other places in Trans-Euphrates.[17] 4:11 (This is a copy of the letter they sent to him:)

"To King Artaxerxes,[18] from your servants in[19] Trans-Euphrates: 4:12 Now[20] let the king be aware that the Jews who came up to us from you have gone to Jerusalem. They are rebuilding that rebellious and odious city.[21] They are

1 sn The chronological problems of Ezra 4:6-24 are well known and have been the subject of extensive discussion since ancient times. Both v. 5 and v. 24 describe the reign of Darius I Hystaspes, who ruled Persia ca. 522–486 B.C. and in whose time the rebuilt temple was finished. The material in between is from later times (v. 16 describes the rebuilding of the walls, not the temple), and so appear to be a digression. Even recognizing this, there are still questions, such as why Cambyses (530-522 B.C.) is not mentioned at all, and why events from the time of Xerxes (486-465 B.C.) and Artaxerxes (464-423 B.C.) are included here if the author was discussing opposition to the building of the temple, which was finished in 516 B.C. Theories to explain these difficulties are too numerous to mention here, but have existed since ancient times: Josephus, the first century Jewish historian, rearranged the account to put Cambyses before Xerxes and replacing Artaxerxes with Xerxes (for further discussion of Josephus' rearrangement see L. L. Grabbe, "Josephus and the Reconstruction of the Judean Restoration" JBL 106 [1987]: 231-46). In brief, it seems best to view the author's primary concern here as thematic (the theme of opposition to the Jewish resettlement in Jerusalem, including the rebuilding of the temple and restoration of Jerusalem's walls) rather than purely chronological. In the previous verses the author had shown how the Jews had rejected an offer of assistance from surrounding peoples and how these people in turn harassed them. The inserted account shows how, in light of the unremitting opposition the Jews experienced (even extending down to more recent times), this refusal of help had been fully justified. Some of the documents the author employed show how this opposition continued even after the temple was rebuilt. (The failure to mention Cambyses may simply mean the author had no documents available from that period.) For detailed discussion of the difficulties presented by the passage and the various theories advanced to explain them, see H. G. M. Williamson, Ezra, Nehemiah (WBC), 56-60.

2 sn Ahasuerus, otherwise known as Xerxes I, ruled ca. 486-464 B.C.

4 tn Heb "And in the days."

5 tn The LXX understands this word as a prepositional phrase ("in peace") rather than as a proper name ("Bishlam"). Taken this way it would suggest that Mithredath was "in agreement with" the contents of Tabeel's letter. Some scholars regard the word in the MT to be a corruption of either "in Jerusalem" (i.e., "in the matter of Jerusalem") or "in the name of Jerusalem." The translation adopted above follows the traditional understanding of the word as a name.

6 tc The translation reads the plural with the Qere rather than the singular found in the MT Kethib.

7 sn Artaxerxes I ruled in Persia from ca. 465–425 B.C.

8 tc It is preferable to delete the MT's וּכְתָב (ukh^{e}tav) here.

9 sn The double reference in v. 7 to the Aramaic language is difficult. It would not make sense to say that the letter was written in Aramaic and then translated into Aramaic. Some interpreters understand the verse to mean that the letter was written in the Aramaic script and in the Aramaic language, but this does not seem to give sufficient attention to the participle "translated" at the end of the verse. The second reference to Aramaic in the verse is more probably a gloss that calls attention to the fact that the following verses retain the Aramaic language of the letter in its original linguistic form. A similar reference to Aramaic occurs in Dan 2:4b, where the language of that book shifts from Hebrew to Aramaic. Ezra 4:8–6:18 and 7:12-26 are written in Aramaic, whereas the rest of the book is in Hebrew.

10 tn Aram "lord of the command." So also in vv. 9, 17.

11 sn Like Rehum, Shimshai was apparently a fairly high-ranking official charged with overseeing Persian interests in this part of the empire. His title was "scribe" or "secretary," but in a more elevated political sense than that word sometimes has elsewhere. American governmental titles such as "Secretary of State" perhaps provide an analogy in that the word "secretary" can have a broad range of meaning.

12 tn Or perhaps "against."

13 tn Aram "then." What follows in v. 9 seems to be the preface of the letter, serving to identify the senders of the letter. The word "from" is not in the Aramaic text but has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

14 tn For the qere of the MT (דְּהַיָא, dehaye', a proper name) it seems better to retain the Kethib דְּהוּא (dihu', "that is"). See F. Rosenthal, Grammar, 25, §35; E. Vogt, Lexicon linguae aramaicae, 36.

15 tn Aram "Osnappar" (so ASV, NASB, NRSV), another name for Ashurbanipal.

sn Ashurbanipal succeeded his father Esarhaddon as king of Assyria in 669 B.C. Around 645 B.C. he sacked the city of Susa, capital of Elam, and apparently some of these people were exiled to Samaria and other places.

16 tc The translation reads with the ancient versions the plural בְּקִרְיָה (b^{e}qiryah, "in the cities") rather than the singular ("in the city") of the MT.

17 tn Aram "beyond the river." In Ezra this term is a technical designation for the region west of the Euphrates river.

18 tn The Masoretic accents indicate that the phrase "to Artaxerxes the king" goes with what precedes and that the letter begins with the words "from your servants." But it seems better to understand the letter to begin by identifying the addressee.

19 tn Aram "men of."

20 tn The MT takes this word with the latter part of v. 11, but in English style it fits better with v. 12.

21 sn Management of the provinces that were distantly removed from the capital was difficult, and insurrection in such places was a perennial problem. The language used in this report about Jerusalem (i.e., "rebellious," "odious") is intentionally inflammatory. It is calculated to draw immediate attention to the perceived problem.

completing its walls and repairing its foundations.
4:13 Let the king also be aware that if this city is built and its walls are completed, no more tax, custom, or toll will be paid, and the royal treasury[1] will suffer loss. 4:14 In light of the fact that we are loyal to the king,[2] and since it does not seem appropriate to us that the king should sustain damage,[3] we are sending the king this information[4] 4:15 so that he may initiate a search of the records[5] of his predecessors[6] and discover in those records[7] that this city is rebellious[8] and injurious to both kings and provinces, producing internal revolts[9] from long ago.[10] It is for this very reason that this city was destroyed. 4:16 We therefore are informing the king that if this city is rebuilt and its walls are completed, you will not retain control[11] of this portion of Trans-Euphrates."

4:17 The king sent the following response:

"To Rehum the commander, Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their colleagues who live in Samaria and other parts of Trans-Euphrates: Greetings![12] 4:18 The letter you sent to us has been translated and read in my presence. 4:19 So I gave orders,[13] and it was determined[14] that this city from long ago has been engaging in insurrection against kings. It has continually engaged in[15] rebellion and revolt. 4:20 Powerful kings have been over Jerusalem who ruled throughout the entire Trans-Euphrates[16] and who were the beneficiaries of[17] tribute, custom, and toll. 4:21 Now give orders that these men cease their work and that this city not be rebuilt until such time as I so instruct.[18] 4:22 Exercise appropriate caution so that there is no negligence in this matter. Why should danger increase to the point that kings sustain damage?"

4:23 Then, as soon as the copy of the letter from King Artaxerxes was read in the presence of Rehum, Shimshai the scribe, and their colleagues, they proceeded promptly to the Jews in Jerusalem[19] and stopped them with threat of armed force.[20]

4:24 So the work on the temple of God in Jerusalem came to a halt. It remained halted until the second year of the reign of King Darius of Persia.[21]

Tattenai Appeals to Darius

5:1 Then the prophets Haggai and Zechariah son[22] of Iddo[23] prophesied concerning the Jews who were in Judah and Jerusalem[24] in the name of the God of Israel who was over them. 5:2 Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel and Jeshua the son of Jozadak began[25] to rebuild the temple of God in Jerusalem. The prophets of God were with them, supporting them.

5:3 At that time Tattenai governor of Trans-Euphrates, Shethar-Bozenai, and their colleagues came to them and asked, "Who gave you authority[26] to rebuild this temple and to complete this structure?"[27] 5:4 They[28] also asked them, "What are the names of the men who are building this edifice?" 5:5 But God was watching over[29] the elders of Judah, and they were not stopped[30] until a report could be dispatched[31] to Darius and a letter could be sent back concerning this.

5:6 This is a copy of the letter that Tattenai governor of Trans-Euphrates, Shethar-Bozenai, and his colleagues who were the officials of [1] tn Aram "the treasury of kings." The plural "kings" is Hebrew, not Aramaic. If the plural is intended in a numerical sense the reference is not just to Artaxerxes but to his successors as well. Some scholars understand this to be the plural of majesty, referring to Artaxerxes. See F. C. Fensham, Ezra and Nehemiah (NICOT), 74.

[2] tn Aram "we eat the salt of the palace."

[15] tn Aram "are being done."

[16] sn The statement that prior Jewish kings ruled over the entire Trans-Euphrates is an overstatement. Not even in the days of David and Solomon did the kingdom of Israel extend its borders to such an extent.

[17] tn Aram "were being given to them."

[18] tn Aram "until a command is issued from me."

[25] tn Aram "arose and began." For stylistic reasons this has been translated as a single concept.

[26] tn Aram "who placed to you a command?" So also v. 9.

[27] tn The exact meaning of the Aramaic word אֻשַּׁרְנָא ('ussarna') here and in v. 9 is uncertain (BDB 1083 s.v.). The LXX and Vulgate understand it to mean "wall." Here it is used in collocation with בַּיְתָא (bayta', "house" as the temple of God), while in 5:3, 9 it is used in parallelism with this term. It might be related to the Assyrian noun ashurru ("wall") or ashru ("sanctuary"; so BDB). F. Rosenthal, who translates the word "furnishings," thinks that it probably enters Aramaic from Persian (Grammar, 62-63, §189).

[28] tc The translation reads with one medieval Hebrew MS, the LXX, and the Syriac Peshitta אֲמַרוּ ('amaru, "they said") rather than the reading אֲמַרְנָא ('amarna', "we said") of the MT.

[29] tn Aram "the eye of their God was on." The idiom describes the attentive care that one exercises in behalf of the object of his concern.

[30] tn Aram "they did not stop them."

[31] tn Aram "[could] go." On this form see F. Rosenthal, Grammar, 58, §169.

Trans-Euphrates sent to King Darius. 5:7 The report they sent to him was written as follows:[1]

"To King Darius: All greetings![2] 5:8 Let it be known to the king that we have gone to the province of Judah, to the temple of the great God. It is being built with large stones,[3] and timbers are being placed in the walls. This work is being done with all diligence and is prospering in their hands. 5:9 We inquired of those elders, asking them, 'Who gave you the authority to rebuild this temple and to complete this structure?' 5:10 We also inquired of their names in order to inform you, so that we might write the names of the men who were their leaders. 5:11 They responded to us in the following way: 'We are servants of the God of heaven and earth. We are rebuilding the temple which was previously built many years ago. A great king[4] of Israel built it and completed it. 5:12 But after our ancestors[5] angered the God of heaven, he delivered them into the hands[6] of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this temple and exiled the people to Babylon.[7] 5:13 But in the first year of King Cyrus of Babylon,[8] King Cyrus enacted a decree to rebuild this temple of God. 5:14 Even the gold and silver vessels of the temple of God that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple in Jerusalem and had brought to the palace[9] of Babylon – even those things King Cyrus brought from the palace of Babylon and presented[10] to a man by the name of Sheshbazzar whom he had appointed as governor. 5:15 He said to him, "Take these vessels and go deposit them in the temple in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be rebuilt in its proper location."[11] 5:16 Then this Sheshbazzar went and laid the foundations of the temple of God in Jerusalem. From that time to the present moment[12] it has been in the process of being rebuilt, although it is not yet finished.'

5:17 "Now if the king is so inclined,[13] let a search be conducted in the royal archives[14] there in Babylon in order to determine whether King Cyrus did in fact issue orders for this temple of God to be rebuilt in Jerusalem. Then let the king send us a decision concerning this matter."

Darius Issues a Decree

6:1 So Darius the king issued orders, and they searched in the archives[15] of the treasury which were deposited there in Babylon. 6:2 A scroll was found in the citadel[16] of Ecbatana which is in the province of Media, and it was inscribed as follows:

"Memorandum: 6:3 In the first year of his reign,[17] King Cyrus gave orders concerning the temple of God in Jerusalem:[18] 'Let the temple be rebuilt as a place where sacrifices are offered. Let its foundations be set in place.[19] Its height is to be ninety feet and its width ninety[20] feet,[21] 6:4 with three layers of large stones[22] and one[23] layer of timber. The expense is to be subsidized[24] by the royal treasury.[25] 6:5 Furthermore let the gold and silver vessels of the temple of God, which Nebuchadnezzar brought from the temple in Jerusalem and carried to Babylon, be returned and brought to their proper place in the temple in Jerusalem. Let them be deposited in the temple of God.'

6:6 "Now Tattenai governor of Trans-Euphrates, Shethar Bozenai, and their colleagues, the officials of Trans-Euphrates – all of you stay far away from there! 6:7 Leave the work on this temple of God alone.[26] Let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews rebuild this temple of God in its proper place.

[8] sn Cyrus was actually a Persian king, but when he conquered Babylon in 539 B.C. he apparently appropriated to himself the additional title "king of Babylon." The Syriac Peshitta substitutes "Persia" for "Babylon" here, but this is probably a hyper-correction.

[19] tn Aram "raised"; or perhaps "retained" (so NASB; cf. NLT), referring to the original foundations of Solomon's temple.

[20] tc The Syriac Peshitta reads "twenty cubits" here, a measurement probably derived from dimensions given elsewhere for Solomon's temple. According to 1 Kgs 6:2 the dimensions of the Solomonic temple were as follows: length, 60 cubits; width, 20 cubits; height, 30 cubits. Since one would expect the dimensions cited in Ezra 6:3 to correspond to those of Solomon's temple, it is odd that no dimension for length is provided. The Syriac has apparently harmonized the width dimension provided here ("twenty cubits") to that given in 1 Kgs 6:2.

[21] tn Aram "Its height sixty cubits and its width sixty cubits." The standard cubit in the OT is assumed by most authorities to be about eighteen inches (45 cm) long.

[22] tn Aram "stones of rolling."

[23] tc The translation follows the LXX reading חַד (khad, "one") rather than the MT חֲדַת (khadat, "new"). If the MT reading "new" is understood to mean freshly cut timber that has not yet been seasoned it would seem to be an odd choice for construction material.

[24] tn Aram "let be given."

[25] tn Aram "house."

[26] tc For the MT reading "the work on this temple of God" the LXX reads "the servant of the Lord Zurababel" [= Zerubbabel].

6:8 "I also hereby issue orders as to what you are to do with those elders of the Jews in order to rebuild this temple of God. From the royal treasury, from the taxes of Trans-Euphrates the complete costs are to be given to these men, so that there may be no interruption of the work.[1] 6:9 Whatever is needed – whether oxen or rams or lambs or burnt offerings for the God of heaven or wheat or salt or wine or oil, as required by[2] the priests who are in Jerusalem – must be given to them daily without any neglect, 6:10 so that they may be offering incense to the God of heaven and may be praying for the good fortune of the king and his family.[3]

6:11 "I hereby give orders that if anyone changes this directive a beam is to be pulled out from his house and he is to be raised up and impaled[4] on it, and his house is to be reduced[5] to a rubbish heap[6] for this indiscretion.[7] 6:12 May God who makes his name to reside there overthrow any king or nation[8] who reaches out[9] to cause such change so as to destroy this temple of God in Jerusalem. I, Darius, have given orders. Let them be carried out with precision!"

The Temple Is Finally Dedicated

6:13 Then Tattenai governor of Trans-Euphrates, Shethar-Bozenai, and their colleagues acted accordingly – with precision, just as Darius the king had given instructions.[10] 6:14 The elders of the Jews continued building and prospering, while at the same time[11] Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo continued prophesying. They built and brought it to completion by the command of the God of Israel and by the command of Cyrus and Darius and Artaxerxes king of Persia. 6:15 They finished this temple on the third day of the month Adar, which is the sixth[12] year of the reign of King Darius.

6:16 The people[13] of Israel – the priests, the Levites, and the rest of the exiles[14] – observed the dedication of this temple of God with joy. 6:17 For the dedication of this temple of God they offered one hundred bulls, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs, and twelve male goats for the sin of all Israel, according to the number of the tribes of Israel. 6:18 They appointed the priests by their divisions and the Levites by their divisions over the worship of God at Jerusalem,[15] in accord with[16] the book of Moses. 6:19[17] The exiles[18] observed the Passover on the fourteenth day of the first month. 6:20 The priests and the Levites had purified themselves, every last one,[19] and they all were ceremonially pure. They sacrificed the Passover lamb for all the exiles, for their colleagues[20] the priests, and for themselves. 6:21 The Israelites who were returning from the exile ate it, along with all those who had joined them[21] in separating themselves from the uncleanness of the nations of the land to seek the LORD God of Israel. 6:22 They observed the Feast of Unleavened Bread for seven days with joy, for the LORD had given them joy and had changed the opinion[22] of the king of Assyria[23] toward them, so that he assisted[24] them in the work on the temple of God, the God of Israel.

The Arrival of Ezra

7:1 Now after these things had happened, during the reign of King Artaxerxes[25] of Persia,

[1] tn The words "of the work" are not in the Aramaic, but are supplied in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Aram "according to the word of."

[3] tn Aram "for the life of the king and his sons."

[4] sn The practice referred to in v. 11 has been understood in various ways: hanging (cf. 1 Esd 6:32 and KJV); flogging (cf. NEB, NLT); impalement (BDB 1091 s.v. זְקַף; HALOT 1914 s.v. מְחָא hitpe; cf. NAB, NIV, NRSV). The latter seems the most likely.

[5] tn Aram "made."

[6] tn Aram "a dunghill."

[7] tn Aram "for this."

[8] tn Aram "people."

[9] tn Aram "who sends forth his hand."

[10] tn Aram "sent."

[11] tn Aram "in" or "by," in the sense of accompaniment.

[12] sn The sixth year of the reign of Darius would be ca. 516 B.C.

[13] tn Aram "sons of."

[14] tn Aram "sons of the exile."

[15] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[16] tn Aram "according to the writing of."

[17] sn At this point the language of the book reverts from Aramaic (4:8–6:18) back to Hebrew. Aramaic will again be used in Ezra 7:12-26.

[18] tn Heb "the sons of the exile." So also in v. 20.

[19] tn Heb "as one." The expression is best understood as referring to the unity shown by the religious leaders in preparing themselves for the observance of Passover. On the meaning of the Hebrew phrase see DCH 1:182 s.v. אֶחָד 3b. See also HALOT 30 s.v. אֶחָד 5.

[20] tn Heb "brothers."

[21] tn Heb "who had separated from the uncleanness of the nations of the land to them."

[22] tn Heb "heart."

[23] sn The expression "king of Assyria" is anachronistic, since Assyria fell in 612 B.C., long before the events of this chapter. Perhaps the expression is intended subtly to contrast earlier kings of Assyria who were hostile toward Israel with this Persian king who showed them favor.

[24] tn Heb "to strengthen their hands."

[25] sn If the Artaxerxes of Ezra 7:1 is Artaxerxes I Longimanus (ca. 464–423 B.C.), Ezra must have arrived in Jerusalem ca. 458 B.C., since Ezra 7:7-8 connects the time of his arrival to the seventh year of the king. The arrival of Nehemiah is then linked to the twentieth year of the king (Neh 1:1), or ca. 445 B.C. Some scholars, however, have suggested that Ezra 7:7 should be read as "the thirty-seventh year" rather than "the seventh year." This would have Ezra coming to Jerusalem after, rather than before, the arrival of Nehemiah. Others have taken the seventh year of Ezra 7:7-8 to refer not to Artaxerxes I but to Artaxerxes II, who ruled ca. 404–358 B.C. In this understanding Ezra would have returned to Jerusalem ca. 398 B.C., a good many years after the return of Nehemiah. Neither of these views is certain, however, and it seems better to retain the traditional understanding of the chronological sequence of returns by Ezra and Nehemiah. With this understanding there is a gap of about fifty-eight years between chapter six, which describes the dedication of the temple in 516 B.C., and chapter seven, which opens with Ezra's coming to Jerusalem in 458 B.C.

Ezra came up from Babylon.[1] Ezra was the son of Seraiah, who was the son of Azariah, who was the son of Hilkiah, 7:2 who was the son of Shallum, who was the son of Zadok, who was the son of Ahitub, 7:3 who was the son of Amariah, who was the son of Azariah, who was the son of Meraioth, 7:4 who was the son of Zerahiah, who was the son of Uzzi, who was the son of Bukki, 7:5 who was the son of Abishua, who was the son of Phinehas, who was the son of Eleazar, who was the son of Aaron the chief priest. 7:6 This Ezra is the one who came up from Babylon. He was a scribe who was skilled in the law of Moses which the LORD God of Israel had given. The king supplied him with everything he requested, for the hand of the LORD his God was on him. 7:7 In the seventh year of King Artaxerxes, Ezra brought[2] up to Jerusalem[3] some of the Israelites and some of the priests, the Levites, the attendants, the gatekeepers, and the temple servants. 7:8 He entered Jerusalem in the fifth month of the seventh year of the king. 7:9 On the first day of the first month he had determined to make[4] the ascent from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month he arrived at Jerusalem,[5] for the good hand of his God was on him. 7:10 Now Ezra had dedicated himself[6] to the study of the law of the LORD, to its observance, and to teaching[7] its statutes and judgments in Israel.

Artaxerxes Gives Official Endorsement to Ezra's Mission

7:11 What follows[8] is a copy of the letter that King Artaxerxes gave to Ezra the priestly scribe.[9] Ezra was[10] a scribe in matters pertaining to the commandments of the LORD and his statutes over Israel:

7:12[11] "Artaxerxes, king of kings, to Ezra the priest, a scribe of the perfect law of the God of heaven: 7:13 I have now issued a decree[12] that anyone in my kingdom from the people of Israel – even the priests and Levites – who wishes to do so may go up with you to Jerusalem.[13] 7:14 You are authorized[14] by the king and his seven advisers to inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of your God which is in your possession,[15] 7:15 and to bring silver and gold which the king and his advisers have freely contributed to the God of Israel, who resides in Jerusalem, 7:16 along with all the silver and gold that you may collect[16] throughout all the province of Babylon and the contributions of the people and the priests for the temple of their God which is in Jerusalem. 7:17 With this money you should be sure to purchase bulls, rams, and lambs, along with the appropriate[17] meal offerings and libations. You should bring them to the altar of the temple of your God which is in Jerusalem. 7:18 You may do whatever seems appropriate to you and your colleagues[18] with the rest of the silver and the gold, in keeping with the will of your God. 7:19 Deliver to[19] the God of Jerusalem the vessels that are given to you for the service of the temple of your God. 7:20 The rest of the needs for the temple of your God that you may have to supply,[20] you may do so from the royal treasury.

7:21 "I, King Artaxerxes, hereby issue orders to all the treasurers of[21] Trans-Euphrates, that you precisely execute all that Ezra the priestly scribe of the law of the God of heaven may request of you – 7:22 up to 100 talents of silver, 100 cors of wheat, 100 baths of wine, 100 baths of olive oil,[22] and unlimited[23] salt. 7:23 Everything that the God of heaven has required should be precisely done for the temple of the God of heaven. Why should there be wrath[24] against the empire of the king and his

[1] tn The words "came up from Babylon" do not appear in the Hebrew text until v. 6. They have been supplied here for the sake of clarity.

[2] tc The translation reads the Hiphil singular וַיַּעַל (vayya'al, "he [Ezra] brought up") rather than the Qal plural וַיַּעֲלוּ (vayya'alu, "they came up") of the MT.

tn Heb "he brought"; the referent (Ezra) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] sn Apparently it took the caravan almost four months to make the five hundred mile journey.

[6] tn Heb "established his heart."

[7] tn Heb "to do and to teach." The expression may be a hendiadys, in which case it would have the sense of "effectively teaching."

[8] tn Heb "this."

[9] tn Heb "the priest, the scribe." So also in v. 21.

[10] tn The words "Ezra was" are not in the Hebrew text but have been added in the translation for clarity.

[11] sn Ezra 7:12-26 is written in Aramaic rather than Hebrew.

[19] tn Or "before."

[20] tn Aram "may fall to you to give."

[21] tn Aram "who are in."

[22] tc The translation reads מְשַׁח בַּתִּין (me'shakh battin) rather than מְשַׁח בַּתִּין (battin me'shakh) of the MT.

[23] tn Aram "he did not write."

[24] tn The Aramaic word used here for "wrath" (קְצַף, qe'tsaf; cf. Heb קֶצֶף, qatsaf) is usually used in the Hebrew Bible for God's anger as opposed to human anger (but contra Eccl 5:17 [MT 5:16]; Esth 1:18; 2 Kgs 3:27). The fact that this word is used in v. 23 may have theological significance, pointing to the possibility of divine judgment if the responsible parties should fail to make available these provisions for the temple.

sons? 7:24 Furthermore, be aware of the fact[1] that you have no authority to impose tax, tribute, or toll on any of the priests, the Levites, the musicians, the doorkeepers, the temple servants, or the attendants at the temple of this God.

7:25 "Now you, Ezra, in keeping with the wisdom of your God which you possess,[2] appoint judges[3] and court officials who can arbitrate cases on behalf of all the people who are in Trans-Euphrates who know the laws of your God. Those who do not know this law should be taught. 7:26 Everyone who does not observe both the law of your God and the law of the king will be completely[4] liable to the appropriate penalty, whether it is death or banishment or confiscation of property or detainment in prison."

7:27[5] Blessed be the LORD God of our fathers, who so moved in the heart of the king to so honor the temple of the LORD which is in Jerusalem! 7:28 He has also conferred his favor on me before the king, his advisers, and all the influential leaders of the king. I gained strength as the hand of the LORD my God was on me, and I gathered leaders from Israel to go up with me.

The Leaders Who Returned with Ezra

8:1 These are the leaders[6] and those enrolled with them by genealogy who were coming up with me from Babylon during the reign of King Artaxerxes:

8:2 from the descendants of Phinehas, Gershom; from the descendants of Ithamar, Daniel;

from the descendants of David, Hattush 8:3 the son of Shecaniah;[7] from the descendants of Parosh, Zechariah, and with him were enrolled by genealogy 150 men;

8:4 from the descendants of Pahath-Moab, Eliehoenai son of Zerahiah, and with him 200 men;

8:5 from the descendants of Zattu,[8] Shecaniah son of Jahaziel, and with him 300 men;

8:6 from the descendants of Adin, Ebed son of Jonathan, and with him 50 men;

8:7 from the descendants of Elam, Jeshaiah son of Athaliah, and with him 70 men;

8:8 from the descendants of Shephatiah, Zebadiah son of Michael, and with him 80 men;

8:9 from the descendants of Joab, Obadiah son of Jehiel, and with him 218 men;

8:10 from the descendants of Bani,[9] Shelomith son of Josiphiah, and with him 160 men;

8:11 from the descendants of Bebai, Zechariah son of Bebai, and with him 28 men;

8:12 from the descendants of Azgad, Johanan son of Hakkatan, and with him 110 men;

8:13 from the descendants of Adonikam there were the latter ones.[10] Their names were Eliphelet, Jeuel, and Shemaiah, and with them 60 men;

8:14 from the descendants of Bigvai, Uthai, and Zaccur,[11] and with them[12] 70 men.

The Exiles Travel to Jerusalem

8:15 I had them assemble[13] at the canal[14] that flows toward Ahava, and we camped there for three days. I observed that the people and the priests were present, but I found no Levites there. 8:16 So I sent for Eliezer, Ariel, Shemaiah, Elnathan, Jarib, Elnathan,[15] Nathan, Zechariah, and Meshullam, who were leaders, and Joiarib and Elnathan, who were teachers. 8:17 I sent them to Iddo, who was the leader in the place called Casiphia. I told them[16] what to say to Iddo and his relatives,[17] who were the

[1] tn Aram "we are making known to you."

[2] tn Aram "in your hand."

[3] tc For the MT reading שָׁפְטִין (shoftim, "judges") the LXX uses the noun γραμματεῖς (grammateis, "scribes").

[4] tn On the meaning of this word see HALOT 1820-21 s.v. אֲסְפַּרְנָא; E. Vogt, Lexicon linguae aramaicae, 14.

[5] sn At this point the language of the book reverts from Aramaic (7:12-26) back to Hebrew.

[6] tn Heb "the heads of their families."

[7] tc The MT reads here "from the sons of Shecaniah" with no descendant identified in what follows, contrary to the pattern of the context elsewhere. However, it seems better to understand the first phrase of v. 3 with the end of v. 2; the phrase would then modify the name "Hattush." This understanding requires emending the reading מִבְּנֵי (mibbᵉne, "from the sons of") in the MT to בֶּן (ben, "[the] son of"). Cf. NAB, TEV, CEV, NLT.

[8] tc The MT lacks "of Zattu." The translation adopted above follows the LXX in including the words.

[9] tc The MT lacks "Bani." It is restored on the basis of certain LXX MSS.

[10] tn Or "those who came later." The exact meaning of this Hebrew phrase is uncertain. It may refer to the last remaining members of Adonikam's family who were in Babylon. So, for example, H. G. M. Williamson, Ezra, Nehemiah (WBC), 108; cf. NASB, NIV, NCV. The phrase has also been taken to mean "the younger sons (so NAB), or the ones who "returned at a later date" (so TEV).

[11] tc The translation reads with the Qere, the Lucianic Greek recension, the Syriac Peshitta, and the Vulgate וְזַכּוּר (vᵉzakkur, "and Zaccur") rather than the Kethib of the MT, וְזָבוּד (vᵉzavud, "and Zabbud").

[12] tn The MT has "with him" (so NAB). The present translation ("with them") is based on the reading of many medieval Hebrew MSS, the Lucianic Greek recension, the Syriac Peshitta, and the Vulgate (so also KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

[13] tn Or "I gathered them."

[14] tn Heb "river." So also in vv. 21, 31.

[15] tc The name "Elnathan" occurs twice in this list. Some, assuming an accidental repetition, would include it only once (cf. NAB).

[16] tn Heb "I placed in their mouth words."

temple servants in[1] Casiphia, so they would bring us attendants for the temple of our God.

8:18 Due to the fact that the good hand of our God was on us, they brought us a skilled man, from the descendants of Mahli the son of Levi son of Israel. This man was Sherebiah,[2] who was accompanied by his sons and brothers,[3] 18 men, 8:19 and Hashabiah, along with Jeshaiah from the descendants of Merari, with his brothers and their sons, 20 men, 8:20 and some of the temple servants that David and his officials had established for the work of the Levites – 220 of them. They were all designated by name.

8:21 I called for a fast there by the Ahava Canal, so that we might humble ourselves before our God and seek from him a safe journey[4] for us, our children, and all our property. 8:22 I was embarrassed to request soldiers and horsemen from the king to protect us from the enemy[5] along the way, because we had said to the king, "The good hand of our God is on everyone who is seeking him, but his great anger[6] is against everyone who forsakes him." 8:23 So we fasted and prayed to our God about this, and he answered us.

8:24 Then I set apart twelve of the leading priests, together with[7] Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brothers,[8] 8:25 and I weighed out to them the silver, the gold, and the vessels intended for the temple of our God – items that the king, his advisers, his officials, and all Israel who were present had contributed. 8:26 I weighed out to them[9] 650 talents of silver, silver vessels worth 100 talents,[10] 100 talents of gold, 8:27 20 gold bowls worth 1,000 darics, and two exquisite vessels of gleaming bronze, as valuable as gold. 8:28 Then I said to them, "You are holy to the LORD, just as these vessels are holy. The silver and the gold are a voluntary offering to the LORD, the God of your fathers. 8:29 Be careful with them and protect them, until you weigh them out before the leading priests and the Levites and the family leaders of Israel in Jerusalem,[11] in the storerooms of the temple of the LORD."

8:30 Then the priests and the Levites took charge of[12] the silver, the gold, and the vessels that had been weighed out, to transport them to Jerusalem to the temple of our God.

8:31 On the twelfth day of the first month we began traveling from the Ahava Canal to go to Jerusalem. The hand of our God was on us, and he delivered us from our enemy and from bandits[13] along the way. 8:32 So we came to Jerusalem, and we stayed there for three days. 8:33 On the fourth day we weighed out the silver, the gold, and the vessels in the house of our God into the care[14] of Meremoth son of Uriah, the priest, and Eleazar son of Phinehas, who were accompanied by Jozabad son of Jeshua and Noadiah son of Binnui, who were Levites. 8:34 Everything was verified[15] by number and by weight, and the total weight was written down at that time.

8:35 The exiles who were returning from the captivity offered burnt offerings to the God of Israel – twelve bulls for all Israel, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven male lambs, along with twelve male goats as a sin offering. All this was a burnt offering to the LORD. 8:36 Then they presented the decrees of the king to the king's satraps and to the governors of Trans-Euphrates, who gave help to the people and to the temple of God.

A Prayer of Ezra

9:1 Now when these things had been completed, the leaders approached me and said, "The people of Israel, the priests, and the Levites have not separated themselves from the local residents[16] who practice detestable things similar to those of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites. 9:2 Indeed, they have taken some of their daughters as wives for themselves and for their sons, so that the holy race[17] has become intermingled with the local residents. Worse still, the leaders and the officials have been at the forefront of all of this!"

9:3 When I heard this report, I tore my tunic and my robe and ripped out some of the hair from my head and beard. Then I sat down, quite devastated. 9:4 Everyone who held the words of the God of Israel in awe[1] gathered around me because of the unfaithful acts of the people of the exile.[2] Devastated, I continued to sit there until the evening offering.

9:5 At the time of the evening offering I got up from my self-abasement,[3] with my tunic and robe torn, and then dropped to my knees and spread my hands to the LORD my God. 9:6 I prayed,[4]

"O my God, I am ashamed and embarrassed to lift my face to you, my God! For our iniquities have climbed higher than our heads, and our guilt extends to the heavens. 9:7 From the days of our fathers until this very day our guilt has been great. Because of our iniquities we, along with our kings and[5] priests, have been delivered over by the local kings[6] to sword, captivity, plunder, and embarrassment – right up to the present time.

9:8 "But now briefly[7] we have received mercy from the LORD our God, in that he has left us a remnant and has given us a secure position[8] in his holy place. Thus our God has enlightened our eyes[9] and has given us a little relief in our time of servitude. 9:9 Although we are slaves, our God has not abandoned us in our servitude. He has extended kindness to us in the sight of the kings of Persia, in that he has revived us[10] to restore the temple of our God and to raise[11] up its ruins and to give us a protective wall in Judah and Jerusalem.[12]

9:10 "And now what are we able to say after this, our God? For we have forsaken your commandments 9:11 which you commanded us through your servants the prophets with these words:[13] 'The land that you are entering to possess is a land defiled by the impurities of the local residents![14] With their abominations they have filled it from one end to the other with their filthiness. 9:12 Therefore do not give your daughters in marriage to their sons, and do not take their daughters in marriage for your sons. Do not ever seek their peace or welfare, so that you may be strong and may eat the good of the land and may leave it as an inheritance for your children[15] forever.'

9:13 "Everything that has happened to us has come about because of our wicked actions and our great guilt. Even so, our God, you have exercised restraint[16] toward our iniquities and have given us a remnant such as this. 9:14 Shall we once again break your commandments and intermarry with these abominable peoples? Would you not be so angered by us that you would wipe us out, with no survivor or remnant? 9:15 O LORD God of Israel, you are righteous, for we are left as a remnant this day. Indeed, we stand before you in our guilt. However, because of this guilt[17] no one can really stand before you."

The People Confess Their Sins

10:1 While Ezra was praying and confessing, weeping and throwing himself to the ground before the temple of God, a very large crowd of Israelites – men, women, and children alike – gathered around him. The people wept loudly.[18] 10:2 Then Shecaniah son of Jehiel, from the descendants of Elam,[19] addressed Ezra:

"We have been unfaithful to our God by marrying[20] foreign women from the local peoples.[21] Nonetheless, there is still hope for Israel in this regard.[22] 10:3 Therefore let us enact[23] a covenant with our God to send away all these women and their offspring, in keeping with your counsel, my lord,[24] and that of those who respect[25] the commandments of our God.

1 tn Heb "who trembled at the words of the God of Israel."

2 tn Heb "the exile"; the words "the people" are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied in the translation for clarity.

3 tn The Hebrew word used here is a hapax legomenon. It refers to the self-abasement that accompanies religious sorrow and fasting.

4 tn Heb "I said."

5 tc The MT lacks "and" here, but see the LXX and Vulgate.

6 tn Heb "the kings of the lands."

7 tn Heb "according to a little moment."

8 tn Heb "a peg" or "tent peg." The imagery behind this word is drawn from the experience of nomads who put down pegs as they pitched their tents and made camp after times of travel.

9 tn Heb "to cause our eyes to shine." The expression is a figure of speech for "to revive." See DCH 1:160 s.v. אור Hi.7.

10 tn Heb "has granted us reviving."

11 tn Heb "to cause to stand."

12 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

13 tn Heb "through your servants the prophets, saying."

14 tn Heb "the peoples of the lands."

15 tn Heb "sons"; cf. KJV, NAB, NIV, NLT "children"; NCV, TEV "descendants."

16 tn Heb "held back downwards from"; KJV "hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve" (NIV, NRSV, NLT all similar).

17 tn Heb "this"; the referent (the guilt mentioned previously) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn Heb "with much weeping."

19 tc The translation reads with the Qere, many medieval Hebrew MSS, the LXX, the Syriac Peshitta, and Vulgate עֵילָם ('elam, "Elam") rather than the reading עוֹלָם ('olam, "eternity") found in the MT.

20 tn Heb "in that we have given a dwelling to." So also in vv. 14, 17, 18.

21 tn Heb "the peoples of the lands."

22 tn Heb "upon this."

23 tn Heb "cut."

24 tn The MT vocalizes this word as a plural, which could be understood as a reference to God. But the context seems to suggest that a human lord is intended. The apparatus of BHS suggests repointing the word as a singular ("my lord"), but this is unnecessary. The plural ("my lords") can be understood in an honorific sense even when a human being is in view. Most English versions regard this as a reference to Ezra, so the present translation supplies "your" before "counsel" to make this clear.

25 tn Heb "who tremble at"; NAB, NIV "who fear."

And let it be done according to the law. 10:4 Get up, for this matter concerns you. We are with you, so be strong and act decisively!"

10:5 So Ezra got up and made the leading priests and Levites and all Israel take an oath to carry out this plan.[1] And they all took a solemn oath. 10:6 Then Ezra got up from in front of the temple of God and went to the room of Jehohanan son of Eliashib. While he stayed[2] there, he did not eat food or drink water, for he was in mourning over the infidelity of the exiles.

10:7 A proclamation[3] was circulated[4] throughout Judah and Jerusalem[5] that all the exiles were to be assembled in Jerusalem. 10:8 Everyone who did not come within three days would thereby forfeit all his property, in keeping with the counsel of the officials and the elders. Furthermore, he himself would be excluded from the assembly of the exiles.

10:9 All the men of Judah and Benjamin were gathered in Jerusalem within the three days. (It was in the ninth month, on the twentieth day of that month.) All the people sat in the square at the temple of God, trembling because of this matter and because of the rains.

10:10 Then Ezra the priest stood up and said to them, "You have behaved in an unfaithful manner by taking foreign wives! This has contributed to the guilt of Israel. 10:11 Now give praise to the LORD God of your fathers, and do his will. Separate yourselves from the local residents[6] and from these foreign wives."

10:12 All the assembly replied in a loud voice: "We will do just as you have said![7] 10:13 However, the people are numerous and it is the rainy season.[8] We are unable to stand here outside. Furthermore, this business cannot be resolved in a day or two, for we have sinned greatly in this matter. 10:14 Let our leaders take steps[9] on behalf of all the assembly. Let all those in our towns who have married foreign women come at an appointed time, and with them the elders of each town and its judges, until the hot anger of our God is turned away from us in this matter."

10:15 Only Jonathan son of Asahel and Jahzeiah son of Tikvah were[10] against this, assisted by Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite. 10:16 So the exiles proceeded accordingly. Ezra the priest separated out[11] by name men who were leaders in their family groups.[12] They sat down to consider this matter on the first day of the tenth month, 10:17 and on the first day of the first month they finished considering all the men who had married foreign wives.

Those Who Had Taken Foreign Wives

10:18 It was determined[13] that from the descendants of the priests, the following had taken foreign wives: from the descendants of Jeshua son of Jozadak, and his brothers: Maaseiah, Eliezer, Jarib, and Gedaliah. 10:19 (They gave their word[14] to send away their wives; their guilt offering was a ram from the flock for their guilt.)

10:20 From the descendants of Immer: Hanani and Zebadiah.

10:21 From the descendants of Harim: Maaseiah, Elijah, Shemaiah, Jehiel, and Uzziah.

10:22 From the descendants of Pashhur: Elioenai, Maaseiah, Ishmael, Nethanel, Jozabad, and Elasah.

10:23 From the Levites: Jozabad, Shimei, Kelaiah (also known as Kelita), Pethahiah, Judah, and Eliezer.

10:24 From the singers: Eliashib. From the gatekeepers: Shallum, Telem, and Uri.

10:25 From the Israelites: from the descendants of Parosh: Ramiah, Izziah, Malkijah, Mijamin, Eleazar, Malkijah, and Benaiah.

10:26 From the descendants of Elam: Mattaniah, Zechariah, Jehiel, Abdi, Jeremoth, and Elijah.

10:27 From the descendants of Zattu: Elioenai, Eliashib, Mattaniah, Jeremoth, Zabad, and Aziza.

10:28 From the descendants of Bebai: Jehohanan, Hananiah, Zabbai, and Athlai.

10:29 From the descendants of Bani: Meshullam, Malluch, Adaiah, Jashub, Sheal, and Jeremoth.

10:30 From the descendants of Pahath-Moab: Adna, Kelal, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattaniah, Bezalel, Binnui, and Manasseh.

10:31 From[15] the descendants of Harim: Eliezer, Ishijah, Malkijah, Shemaiah, Shimeon, 10:32 Benjamin, Malluch, and Shemariah.

[1] tn Heb "to do according to this plan."

[2] tc The translation reads וַיָּלֶן (vayyalen, "and he stayed") rather than the reading וַיֵּלֶךְ (vayyelekh, "and he went") of the MT. Cf. the LXX.

[3] tn Heb "voice."

[4] tn Heb "they sent."

[12] tn Heb "the heads of the fathers, to the house of their fathers, and all of them by name."

10:33 From the descendants of Hashum:
Mattenai, Mattattah, Zabad, Eliphelet, Jeremai, Manasseh, and Shimei.

10:34 From the descendants of Bani:[1] Maadai,
Amram, Uel, 10:35 Benaiah, Bedeiah, Keluhi,
10:36 Vaniah, Meremoth, Eliashib, 10:37 Mattaniah, Mattenai, and Jaasu.

10:38 From[2] the descendants of Binnui:
Shimei, 10:39 Shelemiah, Nathan, Adaiah,
10:40 Machnadebai, Shashai, Sharai, 10:41 Azarel, Shelemiah, Shemariah, 10:42 Shallum, Amariah,

10:43 From the descendants of Nebo: Jeiel, Mattithiah, Zabad, Zebina, Jaddai, Joel, and Benaiah.

10:44 All these had taken foreign wives, and some of them also had children by these women.[3]

[1] tn The name "Bani" appears in both v. 29 and v. 34. One of these names has probably undergone alteration in the transmission process, but it is not clear exactly where the problem lies or how it should be corrected.

[2] tc The translation reads וּמִבְּנֵי בִנּוּי (umibbᵉney vinnuy, "and from the sons of Binnui") rather than the reading וּבָנִי וּבִנּוּי (uvani uvinnuy, "and Bani and Binnui") of the MT.

[3] tc The final statement in v. 44 is difficult in terms of both its syntax and its meaning. The present translation attempts to make sense of the MT. But the passage may have undergone corruption in the transmission process. One proposal is that the text should be emended to read "and they sent these wives and children away" (cf. NAB, NRSV, TEV, CEV).

Nehemiah

A Prayer of Nehemiah

1:1[1] These are the words of Nehemiah[2] son of Hacaliah:

It so happened that in the month of Kislev, in the twentieth year,[3] I was in Susa[4] the citadel. 1:2 Hanani, who was one of my relatives,[5] along with some of the men from Judah, came to me,[6] and I asked them about the Jews who had escaped and had survived the exile, and about Jerusalem.[7]

1:3 They said to me, "The remnant that remains from the exile there in the province are experiencing considerable[8] adversity and reproach. The wall of Jerusalem lies breached, and its gates have been burned down!"[9]

1:4 When I heard these things I sat down abruptly,[10] crying and mourning for several days. I continued fasting and praying before the God of heaven. 1:5 Then I said, "Please, O LORD God of heaven, great and awesome God, who keeps his loving covenant[11] with those who love him and obey[12] his commandments, 1:6 may your ear be attentive and your eyes be open to hear the prayer of your servant that I am praying to you today throughout both day and night on behalf of your servants the Israelites. I am confessing the sins of the Israelites that we have committed[13] against you – both I myself and my family[14] have sinned. 1:7 We have behaved corruptly against you, not obeying the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments that you commanded your servant Moses. 1:8 Please recall the word you commanded your servant Moses: 'If you act unfaithfully, I will scatter you among the nations.[15] 1:9 But if you repent[16] and obey[17] my commandments and do them, then even if your dispersed people are in the most remote location,[18] I will gather them from there and bring them to the place I have chosen for my name to reside.' 1:10 They are your servants and your people, whom you have redeemed by your mighty strength and by your powerful hand. 1:11 Please,[19] O Lord, listen attentively[20] to the prayer of your servant and to the prayer of your servants who take pleasure in showing respect[21] to your name. Grant your servant success today and show compassion to me[22] in the presence of this man."

Now[23] I was cupbearer for the king.

Nehemiah Is Permitted to Go to Jerusalem

2:1 Then in the month of Nisan, in the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes, when wine

[1] sn In ancient Judaism Ezra and Nehemiah were regarded as a single book with dual authorship. According to the Talmud, "Ezra wrote his book" (b. Bava Batra 15a). The Gemara then asks and answers, "And who finished it? Nehemiah the son of Hacaliah." Accordingly, the two are joined in the Leningrad Codex (ca. A.D. 1008), the manuscript upon which modern printed editions of the Hebrew Bible (e.g., BHK and BHS) are based.

[2] sn The name Nehemiah in Hebrew (נְחֶמְיָה, n^{e}khemyah) means "the LORD comforts."

[3] tn That is, the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes' reign (cf. 2:1).

[4] tn Heb "Shushan."

[5] tn Heb "brothers."

[6] tn The Hebrew text does not include the words "to me"; these words were supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity.

[7] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[8] tn Heb "great."

[9] tn Heb "have been burned with fire" (so also in Neh 2:17). The expression "burned with fire" is redundant in contemporary English; the translation uses "burned down" for stylistic reasons.

[10] tn Heb "sat down." Context suggests that this was a rather sudden action, resulting from the emotional shock of the unpleasant news, so "abruptly" has been supplied in the present translation.

[11] tn Heb "the covenant and loyal love." The phrase is a hendiadys: the first noun retains its full nominal sense, while the second noun functions adjectivally ("loyal love" = loving). Alternately, the first might function adjectivally and the second noun function as the noun: "covenant and loyal love" = covenant fidelity (see Neh 9:32).

[12] tn Heb "keep." The Hebrew verb שָׁמַר (shamar, "to observe; to keep") is often used as an idiom that means "to obey" the commandments of God (e.g., Exod 20:6; Deut 5:16; 23:24; 29:8; Judg 2:22; 1 Kgs 2:43; 11:11; Ps 119:8, 17, 34; Jer 35:18; Ezek 17:14; Amos 2:4). See BDB 1036 s.v. 3.c.

[13] tn Heb "have sinned." For stylistic reasons – to avoid redundancy in English – this was translated as "committed."

[14] tn Heb "the house of my father."

[15] tn Heb "peoples."

[16] tn Heb "turn to me."

[17] tn Heb "keep." See the note on the word "obey" in Neh 1:5.

[18] tn Heb "at the end of the heavens."

[19] tn The interjection אָנָּא ('anna') is an emphatic term of entreaty: "please!" (BDB 58 s.v.; HALOT 69-70 s.v.). This term is normally reserved for pleas for mercy from God in life-and-death situations (2 Kgs 20:3 = Isa 38:3; Pss 116:4; 118:25; Jonah 1:14; 4:2) and for forgiveness of heinous sins that would result or have resulted in severe judgment from God (Exod 32:31; Dan 9:4; Neh 1:5, 11).

[20] tn Heb "let your ear be attentive."

[21] tn Heb "fear."

[22] tn Heb "grant compassion." The words "to me" are supplied in the translation for the sake of smoothness and style in English.

[23] tn The vav (ו) on וַאֲנִי (va'ani, "Now, I") introduces a disjunctive parenthetical clause that provides background information to the reader.

was brought to me,[1] I took the wine and gave it to the king. Previously[2] I had not been depressed[3] in the king's presence.[4] 2:2 So the king said to me, "Why do you appear to be depressed when you aren't sick? What can this be other than sadness of heart?" This made me very fearful.

2:3 I replied to the king, "O king, live forever! Why would I not appear dejected when the city with the graves of my ancestors[5] lies desolate and its gates destroyed[6] by fire?" 2:4 The king responded,[7] "What is it you are seeking?" Then I quickly prayed to the God of heaven 2:5 and said to the king, "If the king is so inclined[8] and if your servant has found favor in your sight, dispatch me to Judah, to the city with the graves of my ancestors, so that I can rebuild it." 2:6 Then the king, with his consort[9] sitting beside him, replied, "How long would your trip take, and when would you return?" Since the king was amenable to dispatching me,[10] I gave him a time. 2:7 I said to the king, "If the king is so inclined, let him give me letters for the governors of Trans-Euphrates[11] that will enable me to travel safely until I reach Judah, 2:8 and a letter for Asaph the keeper of the king's nature preserve,[12] so that he will give me timber for beams for the gates of the fortress adjacent to the temple and for the city wall[13] and for the house to which I go." So the king granted me these requests,[14] for the good hand of my God was on me. 2:9 Then I went to the governors of Trans-Euphrates, and I presented to them the letters from the king. The king had sent with me officers of the army and horsemen. 2:10 When Sanballat the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite official[15] heard all this, they were very displeased that someone had come to seek benefit for the Israelites.

Nehemiah Arrives in Jerusalem

2:11 So I came to Jerusalem.[16] When I had been there for three days, 2:12 I got up during the night, along with a few men who were with me. But I did not tell anyone what my God was putting on my heart to do for Jerusalem. There were no animals with me, except for the one[17] I was riding. 2:13 I proceeded through the Valley Gate by night, in the direction of the Well of the Dragons[18] and the Dung Gate,[19] inspecting[20] the walls of Jerusalem that had been breached and its gates that had been destroyed by fire. 2:14 I passed on to the Gate of the Well and the King's Pool, where there was not enough room for my animal to pass with me. 2:15 I continued up the valley during the night, inspecting the wall. Then I turned back and came to the Valley Gate, and so returned. 2:16 The officials did not know where I had gone or what I had been doing, for up to this point I had not told any of the Jews or the priests or the nobles or the officials or the rest of the workers. 2:17 Then I said to them, "You see the problem that we have: Jerusalem is desolate and its gates are burned. Come on! Let's rebuild the wall of Jerusalem so that this reproach will not continue." 2:18 Then I related to them how the good hand of my God was on me and what[21] the king had said to me. Then they replied, "Let's begin rebuilding right away!"[22] So they readied themselves[23] for this good project. 2:19 But when Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite official, and Geshem the Arab heard all this,[24] they derided us and expressed contempt toward us. They said, "What is this you are doing? Are you rebelling against the king?" 2:20 I responded to them by saying, "The God of

[1] tc The translation reads with the LXX וְיַיִן לְפָנַי (v^eyayin l^efanay, "and wine before me") rather than יַיִן לְפָנָיו (yayin l^efanayv, "wine before him") of the MT. The initial vav (ו) on original וְיַיִן probably dropped out due to haplograpy or orthographic confusion with the two yods (י) which follow. The final vav on לְפָנָיו in the MT was probably added due to dittography with the vav on the immediately following word.

[2] tc The translation reads לְפָנִים (l^efanim, "formerly") rather than לְפָנָיו (l^efanayv, "to his face") of the MT. The MT seems to suggest that Nehemiah was not sad before the king, which is contrary to what follows.

[3] tn Or "showed him a sullen face." See HALOT 1251 s.v. רָע, רַע 9.

[4] tn This expression is either to be inferred from the context, or perhaps one should read לְפָנָיו (l^efanayv, "before him"; cf. the MT) in addition to לְפָנִים (l^efanim, "formerly"). See preceding note on the word "previously."

[5] tn Heb "fathers" (also in v. 5).

[6] tn Heb "devoured" or "eaten" (so also in Neh 2:13).

[7] tn Heb "said to me."

[8] tn Heb "If upon the king it is good." So also in v. 7.

[9] tn Or "queen," so most English versions (cf. HALOT 1415 s.v. שֵׁגַל); TEV "empress."

[10] tn Heb "It was good before the king and he sent me."

[11] tn Heb "beyond the river," here and often elsewhere in the Book of Nehemiah.

[12] tn Or "forest." So HALOT 963 s.v. פַּרְדֵּס 2.

[13] tc One medieval Hebrew MS, the Syriac Peshitta, Vulgate, and the Arabic read here the plural וּלְחוֹמוֹת (ul^ekhomot, "walls") against the singular וּלְחוֹמַת (ul^ekhomat) in the MT. The plural holem vav (ו) might have dropped out due to dittography or the plural form might have been written defectively.

[14] tn The Hebrew text does not include the expression "these requests," but it is implied.

[15] tn Heb "servant" (so KJV, ASV; NAB "slave"; NCV "officer." This phrase also occurs in v. 19.

[16] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[17] tn Heb "the animal."

[18] tn Or "Well of the Serpents"; or "Well of the Jackals" (cf. ASV, NIV, NLT).

[19] tn Or "Rubbish Gate" (so TEV); NASB "Refuse Gate"; NCV "Trash Gate"; CEV "Garbage Gate."

[20] tc For the MT reading שֹׁבֵר (sover, "inspecting") the LXX erroneously has שֹׁבֵר (shover, "breaking"). However, further destruction of Jerusalem's walls was obviously not a part of Nehemiah's purpose.

[21] tn Heb "the words of the king which he had spoken to me."

[22] tn Heb "Arise! Let us rebuild!"

[23] tn Heb "strengthened their hands."

[24] tn The Hebrew text does not include the words "all this," but they have been added in the translation for clarity.

heaven will prosper us. We his servants will start the rebuilding.[1] But you have no just or ancient right in Jerusalem."[2]

The Names of the Builders

3:1 Then Eliashib the high priest and his priestly colleagues[3] arose and built the Sheep Gate. They dedicated[4] it and erected its doors, working as far as the Tower of the Hundred[5] and[6] the Tower of Hananel. 3:2 The men of Jericho[7] built adjacent to it, and Zaccur son of Imri built adjacent to them.[8]

3:3 The sons of Hassenaah rebuilt the Fish Gate. They laid its beams and positioned its doors, its bolts, and its bars. 3:4 Meremoth son of Uriah, the son of Hakoz, worked on the section adjacent to them. Meshullam son of Berechiah the son of Meshezabel worked on the section next to them. And Zadok son of Baana worked on the section adjacent to them. 3:5 The men of Tekoa worked on the section adjacent to them, but their town leaders[9] would not assist[10] with the work of their master.[11]

3:6 Joiada son of Paseah and Meshullam son of Besodeiah worked on the Jeshanah Gate.[12] They laid its beams and positioned its doors, its bolts, and its bars. 3:7 Adjacent to them worked Melatiah the Gibeonite and Jadon the Meronothite, who were men of Gibeon and Mizpah. These towns were under the jurisdiction[13] of the governor of Trans-Euphrates. 3:8 Uzziel son of Harhaiah, a member of the goldsmiths' guild, worked on the section adjacent to him. Hananiah, a member of the perfumers' guild, worked on the section adjacent to him. They plastered[14] the city wall of Jerusalem[15] as far as the Broad Wall. 3:9 Rephaiah son of Hur, head of a half-district of Jerusalem, worked on the section adjacent to them. 3:10 Jedaiah son of Harumaph worked on the section adjacent to them opposite[16] his house, and Hattush son of Hashabneiah worked on the section adjacent to him. 3:11 Malkijah son of Harim and Hasshub son of Pahath-Moab worked on another section and the Tower of the Fire Pots. 3:12 Shallum son of Hallohesh, head of a half-district of Jerusalem, worked on the section adjacent to him, assisted by his daughters.[17]

3:13 Hanun and the residents of Zanoah worked on the Valley Gate. They rebuilt it and positioned its doors, its bolts, and its bars, in addition to working on fifteen hundred feet[18] of the wall as far as the Dung Gate.

3:14 Malkijah son of Recab, head of the district of Beth Hakkerem, worked on the Dung Gate. He rebuilt it and positioned its doors, its bolts, and its bars.

3:15 Shallun son of Col-Hozeh, head of the district of Mizpah, worked on the Fountain Gate. He rebuilt it, put on its roof, and

1 tn Heb "will arise and build." The idiom "arise and..." means to begin the action described by the second verb.

2 tn Heb "portion or right or remembrance." The expression is probably a hendiatris: The first two nouns retain their full nominal function, while the third noun functions adjectivally ("right or remembrance" = "ancient right").

3 tn Heb "his brothers the priests."

4 tn Or "consecrated" (so NASB, NRSV); KJV, ASV "sanctified"; NCV "gave it to the Lord's service."

5 tc The MT adds קִדְּשׁוּהוּ (qidshuhu, "they sanctified it"). This term is repeated from the first part of the verse, probably as an intentional scribal addition to harmonize this statement with the preceding parallel statement.

6 tc The translation reads וְעַד (v^{e}'ad, "and unto") rather than the MT reading עַד (ad, "unto"). The original vav (ו) was probably dropped accidentally due to haplography with the final vav on the immediately preceding word in the MT.

7 map For the location of Jericho see Map5-B2; Map6-E1; Map7-E1; Map8-E3; Map10-A2; Map11-A1.

8 tn Heb "it."

9 tn Heb "their nobles."

10 tn Heb "bring their neck."

11 tn The plural form אֲדֹנֵיהֶם ('adonehem, "lords") is probably a plural of majesty referring to Nehemiah (e.g., Isa 19:4; see GKC 399 §124.i). However, some English versions take the plural to refer to the "supervisors" (NIV, NCV, TEV) and others to "their Lord" (KJV, NRSV).

12 tn Or "the Old Gate" (cf. KJV, ASV, NASB, NCV, NRSV, NLT).

13 tn Heb "to the seat."

14 tc Assuming that the MT reading וַיְעַזְּבוּ (vayya'azvu) is related to the root עָזַב I ("to abandon") – which makes little sense contextually – some interpreters emend the MT to וַיְעָזְרוּ (vayya'azru, "they aided"), as suggested by the editors of BHS. However, it is better to relate this term to the root II עָזַב meaning "to restore; to repair" (BDB 738 s.v. II עָזַב) or "to plaster" (HALOT 807 s.v. II עזב qal.1). This homonymic root is rare, appearing elsewhere only in Exod 23:5 and Job 9:27, where it means "to restore; to put in order" (HALOT 807-8 s.v. II עזב qal.2). The related Mishnaic Hebrew noun מעזיבה refers to a "plastered floor." This Hebrew root is probably related to the cognate Ugaritic, Old South Arabic and Sabean verbs that mean "to restore" and "to prepare; to lay" (see BDB 738 s.v.; HALOT 807 s.v.). Some scholars in the nineteenth century suggested that this term be nuanced "paved." However, most modern English versions have "restored" (so NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV) or "rebuilt" (so NCV, CEV).

15 tn Heb "[the city wall of] Jerusalem." The term "Jerusalem" probably functions as a metonymy of association for the city wall of Jerusalem. Accordingly, the phrase "the city wall of" has been supplied in the translation to clarify this figurative expression.

16 tc The translation reads נֶגֶד (neged, "before") with a few medieval Hebrew MSS, some MSS of the LXX, the Syriac Peshitta, and the Vulgate, rather than וְנֶגֶד (v^{e}neged, "and before") of the MT.

17 tc The reference to daughters, while not impossible, is odd in light of the cultural improbability that young women would participate in the strenuous labor of rebuilding city walls. All other such references in the Book of Nehemiah presuppose male laborers. Not surprisingly, some scholars suspect a textual problem. One medieval Hebrew MS and the Syriac Peshitta read וּבָנָיו (uvanayv, "and his sons") rather than the MT reading וּבְנוֹתָיו (uv^{e}notayv, "and his daughters"). Some scholars emend the MT to וּבוֹנָיו (uvonayv, "and his builders"). On the other hand, the MT is clearly the more difficult reading, and so it is preferred.

18 tn Heb "one thousand cubits." The standard cubit in the OT is assumed by most authorities to be about eighteen inches (45 cm) long, so this section of the wall would be about fifteen hundred feet (450 m).

positioned its doors, its bolts, and its bars. In addition, he rebuilt the wall of the Pool of Siloam,[1] by the royal garden, as far as the steps that go down from the City of David. 3:16 Nehemiah son of Azbuk, head of a half-district of Beth Zur, worked after him as far as the tombs of David and the artificial pool and the House of the Warriors.

3:17 After him the Levites worked – Rehum son of Bani and[2] after him Hashabiah, head of half the district of Keilah, for his district. 3:18 After him their relatives[3] worked – Binnui[4] son of Henadad, head of a half-district of Keilah. 3:19 Adjacent to him Ezer son of Jeshua, head of Mizpah, worked on another section, opposite the ascent to the armory at the buttress. 3:20 After him Baruch son of Zabbai worked on another section, from the buttress to the door of the house of Eliashib the high priest. 3:21 After him Meremoth son of Uriah, the son of Hakkoz, worked on another section from the door of Eliashib's house to the end of it.[5]

3:22 After him the priests worked, men of the nearby district. 3:23 After them Benjamin and Hasshub worked opposite their house. After them Azariah son of Maaseiah, the son of Ananiah, worked near his house. 3:24 After him Binnui son of Henadad worked on another section, from the house of Azariah to the buttress and the corner. 3:25 After him Palal son of Uzai worked[6] opposite the buttress and the tower that protrudes from the upper palace[7] of the court of the guard. After him Pedaiah son of Parosh 3:26 and the temple servants who were living on Ophel worked[8] up to the area opposite the Water Gate toward the east and the protruding tower. 3:27 After them the men of Tekoa worked on another section, from opposite the great protruding tower to the wall of Ophel.

3:28 Above the Horse Gate the priests worked, each in front of his house. 3:29 After them Zadok son of Immer worked opposite his house, and after him Shemaiah son of Shecaniah, guard at the East Gate, worked. 3:30 After him[9] Hananiah son of Shelemiah, and Hanun, the sixth son of Zalaph, worked on another section. After them Meshullam son of Berechiah worked opposite his quarters. 3:31 After him Malkijah, one of the goldsmiths, worked as far as the house of the temple servants and the traders, opposite the Inspection Gate,[10] and up to the room above the corner. 3:32 And between the room above the corner and the Sheep Gate the goldsmiths and traders worked.

Opposition to the Work Continues

4:1 (3:33)[11] Now when Sanballat heard that we were rebuilding the wall he became angry and was quite upset. He derided the Jews, 4:2 and in the presence of his colleagues[12] and the army of Samaria[13] he said, "What are these feeble Jews doing? Will they be left to themselves?[14] Will they again offer sacrifice? Will they finish this in a day? Can they bring these burnt stones to life again from piles of dust?"

4:3 Then Tobiah the Ammonite, who was close by, said, "If even a fox were to climb up on what they are building, it would break down their wall of stones!"

4:4 Hear, O our God, for we are despised! Return their reproach on their own head! Reduce them to plunder in a land of exile!

1 tn The Hebrew word translated "Siloam" is הַשֶּׁלַח (hashelakh, "water-channel"; cf. ASV, NASB, NRSV, TEV, CEV "Shelah"). It apparently refers to the Pool of Siloam whose water supply came from the Gihon Spring via Hezekiah's Tunnel built in 701 B.C. (cf. Isa 8:6). See BDB 1019 s.v. שֶׁלַח; W. L. Holladay, Concise Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon, 372. On the etymology of the word, which is a disputed matter, see HALOT 1517 s.v. III שֶׁלַח.

2 tc The translation reads וְעַל (ve'al, "and unto") with several medieval Hebrew MSS and some MSS of LXX, rather than the MT reading עַל ('al, "unto").

3 tn Heb "brothers."

4 tc The translation reads with a few medieval Hebrew MSS and the Syriac Peshitta בִּנּוי (binnuy) rather than the MT reading בַּוַּי (bavvay).

5 tn Heb "the house of Eliashib." This has not been repeated in the translation for stylistic reasons.

6 tc The MT lacks the phrase אַחֲרָיו חִזֵּק ('akharayv hekheziq, "after him worked"). This phrase is used repeatedly in Neh 3:16-31 to introduce each worker and his location. It probably dropped out accidentally through haplography.

7 tn Heb "house of the king."

8 tc The Hebrew text lacks the verb "worked." It is implied, however, and has been supplied in the translation.

9 tc The translation reads אַחֲרָיו ('akharayv, "after him") with the Qere and many medieval Hebrew MSS, rather than the reading אַחֲרֵי ('akharey, "after me") of the MT. So also in v. 31.

10 tn Heb "Miphkad Gate" (so TEV; KJV similar); NRSV "Muster Gate."

11 sn Beginning with 4:1, the verse numbers through 4:23 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 4:1 ET = 3:33 HT, 4:2 ET = 3:34 HT, 4:3 ET = 3:35 HT, 4:4 ET = 3:36 HT, 4:5 ET = 3:37 HT, 4:6 ET = 3:38 HT, 4:7 ET = 4:1 HT, etc., through 4:23 ET = 4:17 HT. Thus in the Hebrew Bible chap. 3 of the Book of Nehemiah has 38 verses, while chap. 4 has only 17 verses.

12 tn Heb "brothers."

13 map For location see Map2-B1; Map4-D3; Map5-E2; Map6-A4; Map7-C1.

14 tc The Hebrew text is difficult here. The present translation follows the MT, but the text may be corrupt. H. G. M. Williamson (Ezra, Nehemiah [WBC], 213-14) translates these words as "Will they commit their cause to God?" suggesting that MT לָהֶם (lahem, "to them") should be emended to לֵאלֹהִים (lelohim, "to God"), a proposal also found in the apparatus of BHS. In his view later scribes altered the phrase out of theological motivations. J. Blenkinsopp's translation is similar: "Are they going to leave it all to God?" (Ezra–Nehemiah [OTL], 242-44). However, a problem for this view is the absence of external evidence to support the proposed emendation. The sense of the MT reading may be the notion that the workers – if left to their own limited resources – could not possibly see such a demanding and expensive project through to completion. This interpretation understands the collocation עָזַב ('azav, "to leave") plus לְ (l^{e}, "to") to mean "commit a matter to someone," with the sense in this verse "Will they leave the building of the fortified walls to themselves?"

4:5 Do not cover their iniquity, and do not wipe out their sin from before them. For they have bitterly offended[1] the builders![2]

4:6 So we rebuilt the wall, and the entire wall was joined together up to half its height.[3] The people were enthusiastic in their work.[4]

4:7 (4:1)[5] When Sanballat, Tobiah, the Arabs, the Ammonites, and the people of Ashdod heard that the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem[6] had moved ahead and that the breaches had begun to be closed, they were very angry. 4:8 All of them conspired together to move with armed forces[7] against Jerusalem and to create a disturbance in it. 4:9 So we prayed to our God and stationed a guard to protect against them[8] both day and night. 4:10 Then those in Judah said, "The strength of the laborers[9] has failed! The debris is so great that we are unable to rebuild the wall."

4:11 Our adversaries also boasted,[10] "Before they are aware or anticipate[11] anything, we will come in among them and kill them, and we will bring this work to a halt!"

4:12 So it happened that the Jews who were living near them came and warned us repeatedly[12] about all the schemes[13] they were plotting[14] against us.

4:13 So I stationed people at the lower places behind the wall in the exposed places.[15] I stationed the people by families, with their swords, spears, and bows. 4:14 When I had made an inspection,[16] I stood up and said to the nobles, the officials, and the rest of the people, "Don't be afraid of them. Remember the great and awesome Lord,[17] and fight on behalf of your brothers, your sons, your daughters, your wives, and your families!"[18]

4:15 It so happened that when our adversaries heard that we were aware of these matters,[19] God frustrated their intentions. Then all of us returned to the wall, each to his own work. 4:16 From that day forward, half of my men were doing the work and half of them were taking up spears,[20] shields, bows, and body armor. Now the officers were behind all the people[21] of Judah 4:17 who were rebuilding the wall.[22] Those who were carrying loads did so[23] by keeping one hand on the work and the other on their weapon. 4:18 The builders to a man had their swords strapped to their sides while they were building. But the trumpeter[24] remained with me.

4:19 I said to the nobles, the officials, and the rest of the people, "The work is demanding[25] and extensive, and we are spread out on the wall, far removed from one another. 4:20 Wherever you hear the sound of the trumpet, gather there with us. Our God will fight for us!"

4:21 So we worked on,[26] with half[27] holding spears, from dawn till dusk.[28] 4:22 At that time I instructed[29] the people, "Let every man and his coworker spend the night in Jerusalem and

[1] tn The Hiphil stem of כָּעַס (ka'as) may mean: (1) "to provoke to anger"; (2) "to bitterly offend"; or (3) "to grieve" (BDB 495 s.v. Hiph.; HALOT 491 s.v. כעס hif). The Hebrew lexicons suggest that "bitterly offend" is the most appropriate nuance here.

[2] tn Heb "before the builders." The preposition נֶגֶד (neged, "before") here connotes "in the sight of" or "in the view of" (BDB 617 s.v. 1.a; HALOT 666 s.v. 1.a).

[3] tn Heb "up to its half."

[4] tn Heb "the people had a heart to work."

[5] sn Chapter 4 begins here in the Hebrew text (BHS). See the note at 4:1.

[7] tn Heb "to fight."

[8] tn Heb "against them." The words "to protect" are added in the translation for the sake of clarity and smoothness. Some emend MT עֲלֵיהֶם ('alehem, "against them") to עָלֶיהָ ('aleha, "against it," i.e., Jerusalem).

[9] tn Heb "burden-bearers."

[10] tn Heb "said."

[11] tn Heb "see."

[12] tn Heb "ten times."

[13] tc The MT reads the anomalous מִכָּל־הַמְּקֹמוֹת (mikkol hamm^{e}qomot, "from every place") but the BHS editors propose כָּל־הַמְּזִמּוֹת (kol hamm^{e}zimmot, "about every scheme"). The initial mem (מ) found in the MT may have been added accidentally due to dittography with the final mem (ם) on the immediately preceding word, and the MT qof (ק) may have arisen due to orthographic confusion with the similar looking zayin (ז). The emendation restores sense to the line in the MT, which makes little sense and features an abrupt change of referents: "Wherever you turn, they will be upon us!" The threat was not against the villagers living nearby but against those repairing the wall, as the following context indicates. See also the following note on the word "plotting."

[14] tc The MT reads תָּשׁוּבוּ (tashuvu, "you turn") which is awkward contextually. The BHS editors propose emending to חָשְׁבוּ (hash^{e}vu, "they were plotting") which harmonizes well with the context. This emendation involves mere orthographic confusion between similar looking ח (khet) and ת (tav), and the resultant dittography of middle vav (ו) in MT. See also the preceding note on the word "schemes."

[15] tc The MT preserves the anomalous Kethib form צְחִיִּים (ts^{e}khikhiyyim); the Qere reads צְחִיחִים (ts^{e}khikhim) which is preferred (BDB 850 s.v. צְחִיחַ; HALOT 1018 s.v. *צְחִיחַ).

tn The meaning of the Hebrew term צְחִיחִים (ts^{e}khikhim) here is uncertain. Elsewhere (Ezek 24:7, 8; 26:4, 14) it refers to a shining or glaring surface of a rock (BDB 850 s.v. צְחִיחַ; HALOT 1018 s.v. *צְחִיחַ), but here it refers to an exposed or vulnerable portion of the wall: "open positions of the wall" (HALOT 1018 s.v. 2).

[16] tn Heb "And I saw."

[17] tn The Hebrew term translated "Lord" here is אֲדֹנָי ('adonay).

[18] tn Heb "houses."

[19] tn Heb "it was known to us."

[20] tc The MT reads "and spears." The conjunction should be deleted.

[21] tn Heb "all the house."

[22] tn The first words of v. 17, "who were rebuilding the wall," should be taken with the latter part of v. 16.

[23] tn Heb "were carrying loads." The LXX reads ἐν ὅπλοις (en hoplois, "with weapons").

[24] tn Heb "the one blowing the shofar."

[25] tn Heb "much."

[26] tn Heb "and we were doing the work."

[27] tn Heb "half of them."

[28] tn Heb "from the coming up of the dawn till the coming forth of the stars."

[29] tn Heb "said [to]."

let them be guards for us by night and workers by day. 4:23 We did not change clothes[1] – not I, nor my relatives, nor my workers, nor the watchmen who were with me. Each had his weapon, even when getting a drink of water.[2]

Nehemiah Intervenes on behalf of the Oppressed

5:1 Then there was a great outcry from the people and their wives against their fellow Jews.[3] 5:2 There were those who said, "With our sons and daughters, we are many. We must obtain[4] grain in order to eat and stay alive." 5:3 There were others who said, "We are putting up our fields, our vineyards, and our houses as collateral in order to obtain grain during the famine." 5:4 Then there were those who said, "We have borrowed money to pay our taxes to the king[5] on our fields and our vineyards. 5:5 And now, though we share the same flesh and blood as our fellow countrymen,[6] and our children are just like their children,[7] still we have found it necessary to subject our sons and daughters to slavery.[8] Some of our daughters have been subjected to slavery, while we are powerless to help,[9] since our fields and vineyards now belong to other people."[10]

5:6 I was very angry when I heard their outcry and these complaints.[11] 5:7 I considered these things carefully[12] and then registered a complaint with the wealthy[13] and the officials. I said to them, "Each one of you is seizing the collateral[14] from your own countrymen!"[15] Because of them I called for[16] a great public assembly. 5:8 I said to them, "To the extent possible we have bought back our fellow Jews[17] who had been sold to the Gentiles. But now you yourselves want to sell your own countrymen,[18] so that we can then buy them back!" They were utterly silent, and could find nothing to say.

5:9 Then I[19] said, "The thing that you are doing is wrong![20] Should you not conduct yourselves[21] in the fear of our God in order to avoid the reproach of the Gentiles who are our enemies? 5:10 Even I and my relatives[22] and my associates[23] are lending them money and grain. But let us abandon this practice of seizing collateral![24] 5:11 This very day return to them their fields, their vineyards, their olive trees, and their houses, along with the interest[25] that you are exacting from them on the money, the grain, the new wine, and the olive oil."

5:12 They replied, "We will return these things,[26] and we will no longer demand anything from them. We will do just as you say." Then I called the priests and made the wealthy and the officials[27] swear to do what had been promised.[28] 5:13 I also shook out my garment,[29] and I said, "In this way may God shake out from his house and his property every person who does not carry out[30] this matter. In this

[1] tn Heb "strip off our garments."

[2] tc Heb "a man, his weapon, the waters." The MT, if in fact it is correct, is elliptical and difficult. Some scholars emend the MT reading הַמָּיִם (hammayim, "the waters") to בִּמְנוֹ (bimino, "in his right hand"; cf. NAB, NRSV) or הֶחֱ(י)מִינוּ (hemiru, "they held on the right side").

[3] tn Heb "their brothers the Jews."

[4] tn Heb "take" (so also in v. 3).

[5] tn Heb "for the tax of the king."

[6] tn Heb "according to the flesh of our brothers is our flesh."

[7] tn Heb "like their children, our children."

[8] tn Heb "to become slaves" (also later in this verse).

[9] tn Heb "there is not power for our hand." The Hebrew expression used here is rather difficult.

[10] sn The poor among the returned exiles were being exploited by their rich countrymen. Moneylenders were loaning large amounts of money, and not only collecting interest on loans which was illegal (Lev 25:36-37; Deut 23:19-20), but also seizing pledges as collateral (Neh 5:3) which was allowed (Deut 24:10). When the debtors missed a payment, the moneylenders would seize their collateral: their fields, vineyards and homes. With no other means of income, the debtors were forced to sell their children into slavery, a common practice at this time (Neh 5:5). Nehemiah himself was one of the moneylenders (Neh 5:10), but he insisted that seizure of collateral from fellow Jewish countrymen was ethically wrong (Neh 5:9).

[11] tn Heb "words."

[12] tn Heb "my heart was advised upon me."

[13] tn Heb "nobles."

[14] tn Heb "taking a creditor's debt." The Hebrew noun מַשָּׁא (masha') means "interest; debt" and probably refers to the collateral (pledge) collected by a creditor (HALOT 641-42 s.v.). This particular noun form appears only in Nehemiah (5:7, 10; 10:32); however, it is related to מַשְׁאָה (masha'ah, "contractual loan; debt; collateral") which appears elsewhere (Deut 24:10; Prov 22:26; cf. Neh 5:11). See the note on the word "people" at the end of v. 5. The BHS editors suggest emending the MT to מָשָׂא (masa', "burden"), following several medieval Hebrew MSS; however, the result is not entirely clear: "you are bearing a burden, a man with his brothers."

[15] tn Heb "his brothers."

[16] tn Heb "I gave."

[17] tn Heb "our brothers, the Jews."

[18] tn Heb "your brothers."

[19] tc The translation reads with the Qere and the ancient versions וָאוֹמַר (va'omar, "and I said") rather than the MT Kethib, וַיֹּאמֶר (vayyo'mer, "and he said").

[20] tn Heb "not good." The statement "The thing...is not good" is an example of tapeinosis, a figurative expression which emphasizes the intended point ("The thing...is wrong!") by negating its opposite.

[21] tn Heb "[should you not] walk."

[22] tn Heb "brothers."

[23] tn Heb "servants."

[24] tn Heb "this debt." This expression is a metonymy of association: "debt" refers to the seizure of the collateral of the debt.

[25] tc The MT reads וּמְאַת (um^{e}'at, "and the hundredth") which is somewhat enigmatic. The BHS editors suggest emending to וּמַשְׁאַת (umasha't, "and the debt") which refers to the interest or collateral (pledge) seized by a creditor (Deut 24:10; Prov 22:26; see HALOT 641-42 s.v. מַשָּׂא). The term מַשְׁאַת (masha't) is related to the noun מַשָּׁא (masha', "debt") in 5:7, 10.

[26] tn The words "these things" are not included in the Hebrew text, but have been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[27] tn Heb "took an oath from them"; the referents (the wealthy and the officials, cf. v. 7) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tn Heb "according to this word."

[29] tn Heb "my bosom."

[30] tn Heb "cause to stand."

way may he be shaken out and emptied!" All the assembly replied, "So be it!" and they praised the LORD. Then the people did as they had promised.[1]

5:14 From the day that I was appointed[2] governor[3] in the land of Judah, that is, from the twentieth year until the thirty-second year of King Artaxerxes – twelve years in all – neither I nor my relatives[4] ate the food allotted to the governor.[5] 5:15 But the former governors who preceded me had burdened the people and had taken food and wine from them, in addition to[6] forty shekels of silver. Their associates were also domineering over the people. But I did not behave in this way, due to my fear of God. 5:16 I gave myself to the work on this wall, without even purchasing[7] a field. All my associates were gathered there for the work.

5:17 There were 150 Jews and officials who dined with me routinely,[8] in addition to those who came to us from the nations[9] all around us. 5:18 Every day one ox, six select sheep, and some birds were prepared for me, and every ten days all kinds of wine in abundance. Despite all this I did not require the food allotted to the governor, for the work was demanding on this people.

5:19 Please remember me for good, O my God, for all that I have done for this people.

Opposition to the Rebuilding Efforts Continues

6:1 When Sanballat, Tobiah, Geshem the Arab, and the rest of our enemies heard that I had rebuilt the wall and no breach remained in it (even though up to that time I had not positioned doors in the gates), 6:2 Sanballat and Geshem sent word to me saying, "Come on! Let's set up a time to meet together at Kephirim[10] in the plain of Ono." Now they intended to do me harm.

6:3 So I sent messengers to them saying, "I am engaged in[11] an important work, and I am unable to come down. Why should the work come to a halt when I leave it to come down to you?" 6:4 They contacted[12] me four times in this way, and I responded the same way each time.[13]

6:5 The fifth time that Sanballat sent his assistant to me in this way, he had an open letter in his hand. 6:6 Written in it were the following words:

"Among the nations it is rumored[14] (and Geshem[15] has substantiated[16] this) that you and the Jews have intentions of revolting, and for this reason you are building the wall. Furthermore, according to these rumors[17] you are going to become their king. 6:7 You have also established prophets to announce[18] in Jerusalem[19] on your behalf, 'We have a king in Judah!' Now the king is going to hear about these rumors. So come on! Let's talk about this."[20]

6:8 I sent word back to him, "We are not engaged in these activities you are describing.[21] All of this is a figment of your imagination."[22]

6:9 All of them were wanting[23] to scare us, supposing, "Their hands will grow slack from the work, and it won't get done."

So now, strengthen my hands![24]

6:10 Then I went to the house of Shemaiah son of Delaiah, the son of Mehetabel. He was confined to his home.[25] He said, "Let's set up a time to meet in the house of God, within the temple. Let's close the doors of the temple, for

[1] tn Heb "according to this word."

[2] tc The BHS editors suggest reading צִוּאתִי (tsuvve'ti, "and I was appointed") rather than the reading of the MT, צִוָּה אֹתִי (tsivvah 'oti, "he appointed me").

[3] tc The translation reads with one medieval Hebrew MS פֶּחָה (pekhah, "governor") rather than פַּחָם (pekham, "their governor") of the MT. One would expect the form with pronominal suffix to have a tav (ת) before the suffix.

[4] tn Heb "brothers."

[5] tn Heb "the food of the governor." Cf. v. 18.

[6] tc The Hebrew term אַחַר ('akhar) is difficult here. It normally means "after," but that makes no sense here. Some scholars emend it to אֶחָד ('akhad) and supply the word "day," which yields the sense "daily." Cf. TEV "40 silver coins a day for food and wine."

[7] tn Heb "we did not purchase."

[8] tn Heb "who were gathered around us at my table."

[9] tn Or "from the Gentiles." The same Hebrew word can refer to "the Gentiles" or "the nations." Cf. the phrase in 6:16.

[10] tn It is not entirely clear whether the Hebrew word כְּפִירִים (kefirim) is a place-name not mentioned elsewhere in the OT (as indicated in the present translation; so also NAB, NASB) or whether it means "in [one of] the villages" (so, e.g., NIV, NRSV, NLT; see BDB 499 s.v.; HALOT 493 s.v.). The LXX and Vulgate understand it in the latter sense. Some scholars connect this term with the identically spelled word כְּפִירִים ("lions") as a figurative description of princes or warriors (e.g., Pss 34:11; 35:17; 58:7; Jer 2:15; Ezek 32:2, 13; Nah 2:14 HT [2:13 ET]; see HALOT 493 s.v.): "let us meet together with the leaders in the plain of Ono."

[11] tn Heb "[am] doing."

[12] tn Heb "sent to."

[13] tn Heb "and I answered them according to this word."

[14] tn Heb "heard."

[15] tn Heb "Gashmu"; in Neh 2:19 this name appears as Geshem. Since it is important for the modern reader to recognize that this is the same individual, the form of the name used here in the translation is the same as that in v. 19.

[16] tn Heb "is saying."

[17] tn Heb "words." So also in v. 7.

[18] tn Heb "call."

[19] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[20] tn Heb "Let us consult together."

[21] tn Heb "We are not according to these matters that you are saying."

[22] tn Heb "For from your heart you are inventing them."

[23] tn The participle has a desiderative nuance here, describing the desire of the subject and not necessarily the actual outcome. See also v. 14.

[24] tn The statement "So now, strengthen my hands" is frequently understood as an implied prayer, but is taken differently by NAB ("But instead, I now redoubled my efforts").

[25] tn Heb "shut in." The reason for his confinement is not stated. BDB 783 s.v. עָצַר suggests that it had to do with the fulfillment of a vow or was related to an issue of ceremonial uncleanness.

they are coming to kill you. It will surely be at night that they will come to kill you."

6:11 But I replied, "Should a man like me run away? Would someone like me flee to the temple in order to save his life?[1] I will not go!" 6:12 I recognized the fact that God had not sent him, for he had spoken the prophecy against me as a hired agent of Tobiah and Sanballat.[2] 6:13 He had been hired to scare me so that I would do this and thereby sin. They would thus bring reproach on me and I[3] would be discredited.[4]

6:14 Remember, O my God, Tobiah and Sanballat in light of these actions of theirs – also Noadiah the prophetess and the other prophets who were trying to scare me!

The Rebuilding of the Wall Is Finally Completed

6:15 So the wall was completed on the twenty-fifth day of Elul, in just fifty-two days. 6:16 When all our enemies heard and all the nations who were around us saw[5] this, they were greatly disheartened.[6] They knew that this work had been accomplished with the help of our God.

6:17 In those days the aristocrats of Judah repeatedly sent letters to Tobiah, and responses from Tobiah were repeatedly coming to them. 6:18 For many in Judah had sworn allegiance to him,[7] because he was the son-in-law of Shecaniah son of Arah. His son Jonathan had married the daughter of Meshullam son of Berechiah. 6:19 They were telling me about his good deeds and then taking back to him the things I said.[8] Tobiah, on the other hand, sent letters in order to scare[9] me.

7:1 When the wall had been rebuilt and I had positioned the doors, and the gatekeepers, the singers, and the Levites had been appointed, 7:2 I then put in charge over Jerusalem[10] my brother Hanani and Hananiah[11] the chief of the citadel, for he was a faithful man and feared God more than many do. 7:3 I[12] said to them, "The gates of Jerusalem must not be opened in the early morning,[13] until those who are standing guard close the doors and lock them.[14] Position residents of Jerusalem as guards, some at their guard stations and some near their homes." 7:4 Now the city was spread out[15] and large, and there were not a lot of people in it.[16] At that time houses had not been rebuilt. 7:5 My God placed it on my heart to gather the leaders,[17] the officials, and the ordinary people so they could be enrolled on the basis of genealogy. I found the genealogical records[18] of those who had formerly returned. Here is what I found written in that record:[19]

7:6 These are the people[20] of the province who returned[21] from the captivity of the exiles, whom King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon had forced into exile.[22] They returned to Jerusalem and to Judah, each to his own city. 7:7 They came with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, and Baanah.

The number of Israelite men[23] was as follows:

7:8 the descendants[24] of Parosh, 2,172;

7:9 the descendants of Shephatiah, 372;

7:10 the descendants of Arah, 652;

7:11 the descendants of Pahath-Moab (from the line[25] of Jeshua and Joab), 2,818;

7:12 the descendants of Elam, 1,254;

7:13 the descendants of Zattu, 845;

1 tn Heb "go into the temple and live."

2 tn Heb "and Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him."

3 tc The translation reads לִי (li, "to me") rather than the MT reading לָהֶם (lahem, "to them").

4 tn Heb "would have a bad name."

5 tc The MT understands the root here to be יָרֵא (yare', "to fear") rather than רָאָה (ra'ah, "to see").

6 tn Heb "they greatly fell [i.e., were cast down] in their own eyes." Some scholars suggest emending the reading of the MT, וַיִּפָּלוּ (vayyip^{e}lu) to וַיִּפָּלֵא (vayyippale', "it was very extraordinary in their eyes").

7 tn Heb "were lords of oath."

8 tn Heb "my words."

9 tn Or "to intimidate" (so NIV, NRSV, NLT).

10 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

11 tn Some have suggested that "Hananiah" is another name for Hanani, Nehemiah's brother, so that only one individual is mentioned here. However, the third person plural in v. 3 indicates two people are in view.

12 tc The present translation (along with most English versions) reads with the Qere, a Qumran text, and the ancient versions וְאֹמַר (va'omar, "and I said") rather than the Kethib of the MT, which reads וַיֹּאמֶר (vayyo'mer, "and he said").

13 tn Heb "until the heat of the sun." The phrase probably means that the gates were to be opened only after the day had progressed a bit, not at the first sign of morning light (cf. KJV, NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV, TEV, CEV). It is possible, however, that the Hebrew preposition עַד ('ad), here translated as "until," has a more rare sense of "during." If so, this would mean that the gates were not to be left open and unattended during the hot part of the day when people typically would be at rest (cf. NLT).

14 tn Presumably this would mean the gates were not to be opened until later in the morning and were to remain open until evening. Some, however, have understood Nehemiah's instructions to mean that the gates were not to be left open during the hottest part of the day, but must be shut and locked while the guards are still on duty. See J. Barr, "Hebrew עַד, especially at Job i.18 and Neh vii.3," JJS 27 (1982): 177-88.

15 tn Heb "wide of two hands."

16 tn Heb "the people were few in its midst."

17 tn Heb "nobles"; NCV "important men."

18 tn Heb "the book of genealogy."

19 tn Heb "in it"; the referent (the genealogical record) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Heb "the sons of"; KJV, ASV "the children of"; NAB "the inhabitants of."

21 tn Heb "who were going up."

22 tc One medieval Hebrew manuscript has "to Babylon." Cf. Ezra 2:1.

23 tn Heb "the men of the people of Israel." Some English versions translate as "the people from Israel" (NCV) or "the Israelite people" (NRSV), but "men" should be retained because the following numbers presumably include only adult males.

24 tn Heb "the sons of."

25 tn Heb "to the sons of."

7:14 the descendants of Zaccai, 760;

7:60 All the temple servants and the descendants of the servants of Solomon, 392.

7:61 These are the ones who came up from Tel Melah, Tel Harsha, Kerub, Addon, and Immer (although they were unable to certify[5] their family connection[6] or their ancestry,[7] as to whether they were really from Israel):

7:62 the descendants of Delaiah, the descendants of Tobiah, and the descendants of Nekoda, 642.

7:63 And from among the priests: the descendants of Hobaiah, the descendants of Hakkoz, and the descendants of Barzillai (who had married a woman from the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite and was called by that name). 7:64 They searched for their records in the genealogical materials, but none were found. They were therefore excluded[8] from the priesthood. 7:65 The governor[9] instructed them not to eat any of the sacred food until there was a priest who could consult[10] the Urim and Thummim.

7:66 The entire group numbered 42,360, 7:67 not counting their 7,337 male and female servants. They also had 245 male and female singers. 7:68 They had 736 horses, 245 mules, 7:69 (7:68)[11] 435 camels, and 6,720 donkeys.

[10] tn Heb "stood."

[11] tc Most Hebrew MSS omit 7:68 ET, which reads "They had 736 horses, 245 mules," and thus have one less verse in chap. 7, ending the chapter at 7:72. This verse is included in the LXX and most English versions. Cf. Ezra 2:66.

7:70 Some of the family leaders[1] contributed to the work. The governor contributed to the treasury 1,000 gold drachmas,[2] 50 bowls, and 530 priestly garments. 7:71 Some of the family leaders gave to the project treasury 20,000 gold drachmas and 2,200 silver minas. 7:72 What the rest of the people gave amounted to 20,000 gold drachmas, 2,000 silver minas, and 67 priestly garments.

7:73 The priests, the Levites, the gatekeepers, the singers, some of the people, the temple servants, and all the rest of Israel lived in their cities.

The People Respond to the Reading of the Law

When the seventh month arrived and the Israelites[3] were settled in their cities,[4] 8:1 all the people gathered together[5] in the plaza which was in front of the Water Gate. They asked[6] Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses which the LORD had commanded Israel. 8:2 So Ezra the priest brought the law before the assembly which included men and women and all those able to understand what they heard. (This happened on the first day of the seventh month.) 8:3 So he read it before the plaza in front of the Water Gate from dawn till noon[7] before the men and women and those children who could understand.[8] All the people were eager to hear[9] the book of the law.

8:4 Ezra the scribe stood on a towering wooden platform[10] constructed for this purpose. Standing near him on his right were Mattithiah, Shema, Anaiah, Uriah, Hilkiah, and Masseiah. On his left were Pedaiah, Mishael, Malkijah, Hashum, Hashbaddanah, Zechariah, and Meshullam. 8:5 Ezra opened the book in plain view[11] of all the people, for he was elevated above all the people. When he opened the book,[12] all the people stood up. 8:6 Ezra blessed the LORD, the great God, and all the people replied "Amen! Amen!" as they lifted their hands. Then they bowed down and worshiped the LORD with their faces to the ground.

8:7 Jeshua, Bani, Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodiah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, and Pelaiah – all of whom were Levites[13] – were teaching the people the law, as the people remained standing. 8:8 They read from the book of God's law, explaining it[14] and imparting insight. Thus the people[15] gained understanding from what was read.

8:9 Then Nehemiah the governor,[16] Ezra the priestly scribe,[17] and the Levites who were imparting understanding to the people said to all of them,[18] "This day is holy to the LORD your God. Do not mourn or weep." For all the people had been weeping when they heard the words of the law. 8:10 He said to them, "Go and eat delicacies and drink sweet drinks and send portions to those for whom nothing is prepared. For this day is holy to our Lord.[19] Do not grieve, for the joy of the LORD is your strength."

8:11 Then the Levites quieted all the people saying, "Be quiet, for this day is holy. Do not grieve." 8:12 So all the people departed to eat

[1] tn Heb "the heads of the fathers."

[2] tn Heb "darics" (also in vv. 71, 72).

[3] tn Heb "the sons of Israel." So also in vv. 14, 17; 9:1.

[4] tn The traditional understanding of the chapter and verse division here is probably incorrect. The final part of v. 73 is best understood as belonging with 8:1.

[5] tn Heb "like one man."

[6] tn Heb "said [to]."

[7] tn Heb "from the light till the noon of the day."

[8] tn Heb "all who could hear with understanding." The word "children" is understood to be implied here by a number of English versions (e.g., NAB, TEV, NLT).

[9] tn Heb "the ears of all the people were toward."

[10] tn Heb "a tower of wood."

[11] tn Heb "to the eyes."

[12] tn Heb "it"; the referent (the book) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tc The MT reads "and the Levites." The conjunction ("and") should be deleted, following the LXX, Aquila, and the Vulgate. That the vav (ו) of the MT is the vav explicativum ("even the Levites") is unlikely here.

[14] tn The exact meaning of the pual participle מְפֹרָשׁ (mᵉforash) in this verse is uncertain. The basic sense of the Hebrew word seems to be "to make distinct." The word may also have the sense of "to divide in parts," "to interpret," or "to translate." The context of Neh 8:8 does not decisively clarify how the participle is to be understood here. It probably refers to the role of the Levites as those who explained or interpreted the portions of biblical text that had been publicly read on this occasion. A different option, however, is suggested by the translation distincte ("distinctly") of the Vulgate (cf. KJV, ASV). If the Hebrew word means "distinctly" here, it would imply that the readers paid particular attention to such things as word-grouping and pronunciation so as to be sure that the listeners had every opportunity to understand the message that was being read. Yet another view is found in the Talmud, which understands translation of the Hebrew text into Aramaic to be what is in view here. The following explanation of Neh 8:8 is found in b. Megillah 3a: "'And they read in the book, in the law of God': this indicates the [Hebrew] text; 'with an interpretation': this indicates the targum; 'and they gave the sense': this indicates the verse stops; 'and caused them to understand the reading': this indicates the accentuation, or, according to another version, the Masoretic notes." However, this ancient rabbinic view that the origins of the Targum are found in Neh 8:8 is debatable. It is not clear that the practice of paraphrasing the Hebrew biblical text into Aramaic in order to accommodate the needs of those Jews who were not at home in the Hebrew language developed this early. The translation of מְפֹרָשׁ adopted above (i.e., "explaining it") understands the word to have in mind an explanatory function (cf. NAB, NCV, TEV, NLT) rather than one of translation.

[15] tn Heb "they"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tc The unexpected reference to Nehemiah here has led some scholars to suspect that the phrase "Nehemiah the governor" is a later addition to the text and not original.

[17] tn Heb "the priest, the scribe."

[18] tn Heb "the people." The pronoun has been used in the translation for stylistic reasons, to avoid redundancy.

[19] tn The Hebrew term translated "Lord" here is אֲדֹנָי ('adonay).

and drink and to share their food[1] with others[2] and to enjoy tremendous joy,[3] for they had gained insight in the matters that had been made known to them.

8:13 On the second day of the month the family leaders[4] met with[5] Ezra the scribe, together with all the people, the priests, and the Levites, to consider the words of the law. 8:14 They discovered written in the law that the LORD had commanded through[6] Moses that the Israelites should live in temporary shelters during the festival of the seventh month, 8:15 and that they should make a proclamation and disseminate this message[7] in all their cities and in Jerusalem:[8] "Go to the hill country and bring back olive branches and branches of wild olive trees, myrtle trees, date palms, and other leafy trees to construct temporary shelters, as it is written."

8:16 So the people went out and brought these things[9] back and constructed temporary shelters for themselves, each on his roof and in his courtyard and in the courtyards of the temple[10] of God and in the plaza of the Water Gate and the plaza of the Ephraim Gate. 8:17 So all the assembly which had returned from the exile constructed temporary shelters and lived in them. The Israelites had not done so from the days of Joshua son of Nun until that day. Everyone experienced very great joy.[11] 8:18 Ezra[12] read in the book of the law of God day by day, from the first day to the last.[13] They observed the festival for seven days, and on the eighth day they held an assembly[14] as was required.[15]

The People Acknowledge Their Sin before God

9:1 On the twenty-fourth day of this same month the Israelites assembled; they were fasting and wearing sackcloth, their heads covered with dust. 9:2 Those truly of Israelite descent[16] separated from all the foreigners,[17] standing and confessing their sins and the iniquities of their ancestors.[18] 9:3 For one-fourth of the day they stood in their place and read from the book of the law of the LORD their God, and for another fourth they were confessing their sins[19] and worshiping the LORD their God. 9:4 Then the Levites – Jeshua, Binnui,[20] Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Kenani – stood on the steps and called out loudly[21] to the LORD their God. 9:5 The Levites – Jeshua, Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabneiah, Sherebiah, Hodiah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah – said, "Stand up and bless the LORD your God!"

"May you be blessed, O LORD our God, from age to age.[22] May your glorious name[23] be blessed; may it be lifted up above all blessing and praise. 9:6 You alone are the LORD. You made the heavens, even the highest heavens,[24] along with all their multitude of stars,[25] the earth and all that is on it, the seas and all that is in them. You impart life to them all, and the multitudes of heaven worship you.

9:7 "You are the LORD God who chose Abram and brought him forth from Ur of the Chaldeans. You changed his name to Abraham. 9:8 When you perceived that his heart was faithful toward you, you established a[26] covenant with him to give his descendants[27] the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, and the Girgashites. You have fulfilled your promise,[28] for you are righteous.

[12] tn Heb "He"; the referent (Ezra) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tn Heb "the last day."

[14] tn Heb "on the eighth day an assembly." The words "they held" have been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Heb "according to the judgment."

[16] tn Heb "the seed of Israel."

[17] tn Heb "sons of a foreigner."

[18] tn Heb "fathers" (also in vv. 9, 16, 23, 32, 34, 36).

[19] tn Heb "confessing." The words "their sins" are not present in the Hebrew text of v. 3, but are clearly implied here because they are explicitly stated in v. 2.

[20] tc Heb "Bani." The translation reads "Binnui" (so also NAB) rather than the MT reading "Bani." Otherwise there are two individuals with the same name in this verse. The name "Binnui" appears, for example, in Neh 10:10.

[21] tn Heb "in a great voice."

[22] tc The MT reads here only "from age to age," without the preceding words "May you be blessed, O LORD our God" which are included in the present translation. But apparently something has dropped out of the text. This phrase occurs elsewhere in the OT as a description of the Lord (see Ps 41:13; 106:48), and it seems best to understand it here in that light. The LXX adds "And Ezra said" at the beginning of v. 6 as a transition: "And Ezra said, 'You alone are the LORD.'" Without this addition (which is not included by most modern English translations) the speakers of vv. 9:5b-10:1 continue to be the Levites of v. 5a.

[23] tn Heb "the name of your glory."

[24] tn Heb "the heavens of the heavens."

[25] tn Heb "all their host."

[26] tn Heb "the" (so NAB).

[27] tn Heb "seed."

[28] tn Heb "your words."

9:9 "You saw the affliction of our ancestors in Egypt, and you heard their cry at the Red Sea.[1] 9:10 You performed awesome signs[2] against Pharaoh, against his servants, and against all the people of his land, for you knew that the Egyptians[3] had acted presumptuously[4] against them. You made for yourself a name that is celebrated to this day. 9:11 You split the sea before them, and they crossed through[5] the sea on dry ground! But you threw their pursuers[6] into the depths, like a stone into surging[7] waters. 9:12 You guided them with a pillar of cloud by day and with a pillar of fire by night to illumine for them the path they were to travel.

9:13 "You came down on Mount Sinai and spoke with them from heaven. You provided them with just judgments, true laws, and good statutes and commandments. 9:14 You made known to them your holy Sabbath; you issued commandments, statutes, and law to them through[8] Moses your servant. 9:15 You provided bread from heaven for them in their time of hunger, and you brought forth water from the rock for them in their time of thirst. You told them to enter in order to possess the land that you had sworn[9] to give them.

9:16 "But they – our ancestors[10] – behaved presumptuously; they rebelled[11] and did not obey your commandments. 9:17 They refused to obey and did not recall your miracles that you had performed among them. Instead, they rebelled and appointed a leader to return to their bondage in Egypt.[12] But you are a God of forgiveness, merciful and compassionate, slow to get angry and unfailing in your loyal love.[13] You did not abandon them, 9:18 even when they made a cast image of a calf for themselves and said, 'This is your God who brought you up from Egypt,' or when they committed atrocious[14] blasphemies.

9:19 "Due to your great compassion you did not abandon them in the desert. The pillar of cloud did not stop guiding them in the path by day,[15] nor did the pillar of fire stop illuminating for them by night the path on which they should travel. 9:20 You imparted your good Spirit to instruct them. You did not withhold your manna from their mouths; you provided water for their thirst. 9:21 For forty years you sustained them. Even in the desert they never lacked anything. Their clothes did not wear out and their feet did not swell.

9:22 "You gave them kingdoms and peoples, and you allocated them to every corner of the land.[16] They inherited the land of King Sihon of Heshbon[17] and the land of King Og of Bashan. 9:23 You multiplied their descendants like the stars of the sky. You brought them to the land you had told their ancestors to enter in order to possess. 9:24 Their descendants[18] entered and possessed the land. You subdued before them the Canaanites who were the inhabitants of the land. You delivered them into their hand, together with their kings and the peoples of the land, to deal with as they pleased. 9:25 They captured fortified cities and fertile land. They took possession of houses full of all sorts of good things – wells previously dug, vineyards, olive trees, and fruit trees in abundance. They ate until they were full[19] and grew fat. They enjoyed to the full your great goodness.

9:26 "Nonetheless they grew disobedient and rebelled against you; they disregarded your law.[20] They killed your prophets who had solemnly admonished them in order to cause them to return to you. They committed atrocious blasphemies. 9:27 Therefore you delivered them into the hand of their adversaries, who oppressed them. But in the time of their distress they called to you, and you heard from heaven. In your abundant compassion you provided them with deliverers to rescue them from[21] their adversaries.

[1] tn Heb "the Sea of Reeds." Traditionally this is identified as the Red Sea, and the modern designation has been used in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Heb "signs and wonders." This phrase is a hendiadys. The second noun functions adjectivally, while the first noun retains its full nominal sense: "awesome signs" or "miraculous signs."

[3] tn Heb "they"; the referent (the Egyptians) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Or "arrogantly" (so NASB); NRSV "insolently."

[5] tn Heb "in the midst of."

[6] tn Heb "those who pursued them."

[7] tn Heb "mighty."

[8] tn Heb "by the hand of."

[9] tn Heb "had lifted your hand."

[10] tn Heb "and our fathers." The vav is explicative.

[11] tn Heb "they stiffened their neck" (so also in the following verse).

[12] tc The present translation follows a few medieval Hebrew MSS and the LXX in reading בְּמִצְרַיִם (bemitsrayim, "in Egypt"; so also NAB, NASB, NRSV, TEV, NLT) rather than the MT reading בְּמֹרִים (bemoriym, "in their rebellion").

[13] tc The translation follows the Qere reading חֶסֶד (khesed, "loyal love") rather than the Kethib reading וְחֶסֶד (vekhesed, "and loyal love") of the MT.

[14] tn Heb "great."

[15] tn Heb "did not turn from them by day to guide them in the path."

[16] tn The words "of the land" are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied in the translation for clarity.

[17] tc Most Hebrew MSS read "the land of Sihon and the land of the king of Heshbon." The present translation (along with NAB, NASB, NIV, NCV, NRSV, CEV, NLT) follows the reading of one Hebrew MS, the LXX, and the Vulgate.

[18] tn Heb "the sons."

[19] tn Heb "they ate and were sated." This expression is a hendiadys. The first verb retains its full verbal sense, while the second functions adverbially: "they ate and were filled" = "they ate until they were full."

[20] tn Heb "they cast your law behind their backs."

[21] tn Heb "from the hand of" (so NASB, NIV); NAB "from the power of."

9:28 "Then, when they were at rest again, they went back to doing evil before you. Then you abandoned them to[1] their enemies, and they gained dominion over them. When they again cried out to you, in your compassion you heard from heaven and rescued them time and again. 9:29 And you solemnly admonished them in order to return them to your law, but they behaved presumptuously and did not obey your commandments. They sinned against your ordinances – those by which an individual, if he obeys them,[2] will live. They boldly turned from you;[3] they rebelled[4] and did not obey. 9:30 You prolonged your kindness[5] with them for many years, and you solemnly admonished them by your Spirit through your prophets. Still they paid no attention,[6] so you delivered them into the hands of the neighboring peoples.[7] 9:31 However, due to your abundant mercy you did not do away with them altogether; you did not abandon them. For you are a merciful and compassionate God.

9:32 "So now, our God – the great, powerful, and awesome God, who keeps covenant fidelity[8] – do not regard as inconsequential[9] all the hardship that has befallen us – our kings, our leaders, our priests, our prophets, our ancestors, and all your people – from the days of the kings of Assyria until this very day! 9:33 You are righteous with regard to all that has happened to us, for you have acted faithfully.[10] It is we who have been in the wrong! 9:34 Our kings, our leaders, our priests, and our ancestors have not kept your law. They have not paid attention to your commandments or your testimonies by which you have solemnly admonished them. 9:35 Even when they were in their kingdom and benefiting from your incredible[11] goodness that you had lavished[12] on them in the spacious and fertile land you had set[13] before them, they did not serve you, nor did they turn from their evil practices.

9:36 "So today we are slaves! In the very land you gave to our ancestors to eat its fruit and to enjoy[14] its good things – we are slaves! 9:37 Its abundant produce goes to the kings you have placed over us due to our sins. They rule over our bodies and our livestock as they see fit,[15] and we are in great distress!

The People Pledge to be Faithful

9:38 (10:1)[16] "Because of all of this we are entering into a binding covenant[17] in written form;[18] our leaders, our Levites, and our priests have affixed their names[19] on the sealed document."

10:1 On the sealed documents were the following names:[20]

10:6 Daniel, Ginnethon, Baruch,

10:7 Meshullam, Abijah, Mijamin,

10:8 Maaziah, Bilgai, and Shemaiah. These were the priests.

10:9 The Levites were as follows:

Jeshua[21] son of Azaniah, Binnui of the sons of Henadad, Kadmiel.

10:10 Their colleagues[22] were as follows:

10:16 Adonijah, Bigvai, Adin,

10:17 Ater, Hezekiah, Azzur,

10:18 Hodiah, Hashum, Bezai,

10:19 Hariph, Anathoth, Nebai,

10:30 "We will not give our daughters in marriage to the neighboring peoples, and we will not take their daughters in marriage for our sons. 10:31 We will not buy[7] on the Sabbath or on a holy day from the neighboring peoples who bring their wares and all kinds of grain to sell on the Sabbath day. We will let the fields lie fallow every seventh year, and we will cancel every loan.[8] 10:32 We accept responsibility for fulfilling[9] the commands to give[10] one third of a shekel each year for the work of the temple[11] of our God, 10:33 for the loaves of presentation and for the regular grain offerings and regular burnt offerings, for the Sabbaths, for the new moons, for the appointed meetings, for the holy offerings, for the sin offerings to make atonement for Israel, and for all the work of the temple of our God.

The Population of Jerusalem

11:1 So the leaders of the people settled in Jerusalem,[17] while the rest of the people cast lots to bring one out of every ten to settle in Jerusalem, the holy city, while the other nine[18] remained in other cities. 11:2 The people gave their blessing on all the men who volunteered to settle in Jerusalem.

(While other Israelites, the priests, the Levites, the temple attendants, and the sons of the servants of Solomon settled in the cities of Judah, each on his own property in their cities, 11:4 some of the descendants of Judah and some of the descendants of Benjamin settled in Jerusalem.)

Of the descendants of Judah:

Athaiah son of Uzziah, the son of Zechariah, the son of Amariah, the son of Shephatiah, the son of Mahalalel, from the descendants of Perez; 11:5 and Maaseiah son of Baruch, the son of Col-Hozeh, the son of Hazaiah, the son of Adaiah, the son of Joiarib, the son of [11] tn Heb "house" (also in vv. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39).

Zechariah, from the descendants of Shelah.[1] 11:6 The sum total of the descendants of Perez who were settling in Jerusalem was 468 exceptional men.

11:7 These are the descendants of Benjamin:

Sallu son of Meshullam, the son of Joed, the son of Pedaiah, the son of Kolaiah, the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ithiel, the son of Jeshaiah, 11:8 and his followers,[2] Gabbai and Sallai – 928 in all. 11:9 Joel son of Zicri was the officer in charge of them, and Judah son of Hassenuah was second-in-command over the city.

The officer over them was Zabdiel the son of Haggedolim.

11:15 From the Levites:

Shemaiah son of Hasshub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni; 11:16 Shabbethai and Jozabad, leaders[6] of the Levites, were in charge of the external work for the temple of God; 11:17 Mattaniah son of Mica, the son of Zabdi, the son of Asaph, the praise[7] leader who led in thanksgiving and prayer; Bakbukiah, second among his colleagues; and Abda son of Shammua, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun. 11:18 The sum total of the Levites in the holy city was 284.

11:19 And the gatekeepers:

Akkub, Talmon and their colleagues who were guarding the gates – 172.

11:20 And the rest of the Israelites, with the priests and the Levites, were in all the cities of Judah, each on his own property.

11:21 The temple attendants were living on Ophel, and Ziha and Gishpa were over them.[8]

11:22 The overseer of the Levites in Jerusalem was Uzzi son of Bani, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Mica. He was one of Asaph's descendants who were the singers responsible for the service of the temple of God. 11:23 For they were under royal orders[9] which determined their activity day by day.[10]

11:24 Pethahiah son of Meshezabel, one of the descendants of Zerah son of Judah, was an adviser to the king[11] in every matter pertaining to the people.

The Priests and the Levites Who Returned to Jerusalem

12:1 These are the priests and Levites who returned[1] with Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel and Jeshua: Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra, 12:2 Amariah, Malluch, Hattush, 12:3 Shecaniah, Rehum, Meremoth, 12:4 Iddo, Ginnethon,[2] Abijah, 12:5 Mijamin, Moadiah, Bilgah, 12:6 Shemaiah, Joiarib, Jedaiah, 12:7 Sallu, Amok, Hilkiah, and Jedaiah. These were the leaders[3] of the priests and their colleagues[4] in the days of Jeshua.

12:8 And the Levites: Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah, who together with his colleagues[5] was in charge of the songs of thanksgiving. 12:9 Bakbukiah and Unni,[6] their colleagues, stood opposite them in the services.

12:10 Jeshua was the father of[7] Joiakim, Joiakim was the father of Eliashib, Eliashib was the father of Joiada, 12:11 Joiada was the father of Jonathan, and Jonathan was the father of Jaddua.

12:12 In the days of Joiakim, these were the priests who were leaders of the families: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah; 12:13 of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan; 12:14 of Malluch,[8] Jonathan; of Shecaniah,[9] Joseph; 12:15 of Harim, Adna; of Meremoth,[10] Helkai; 12:16 of Iddo,[11] Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam; 12:17 of Abijah, Zicri; of Miniamin and[12] of Moadiah, Piltai; 12:18 of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan; 12:19 of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi; 12:20 of Sallu,[13] Kallai; of Amok, Eber; 12:21 of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethanel.

12:22 As for the Levites,[14] in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, Johanan and Jaddua the heads of families were recorded, as were the priests during the reign of Darius the Persian. 12:23 The descendants of Levi were recorded in the Book of the Chronicles[15] as heads of families up to the days of Johanan son of Eliashib. 12:24 And the leaders of the Levites were Hashabiah, Sherebiah, Jeshua son of Kadmiel, and their colleagues, who stood opposite them to offer praise and thanks, one contingent corresponding to the other, as specified by[16] David the man of God.

12:25 Mattaniah, Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, and Akkub were gatekeepers who were guarding the storerooms at the gates. 12:26 These all served in the days of Joiakim son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor and of Ezra the priestly scribe.[17]

The Wall of Jerusalem is Dedicated

12:27 At the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem,[18] they sought out the Levites from all the places they lived[19] to bring them to Jerusalem to celebrate the dedication joyfully with songs of thanksgiving and songs accompanied by cymbals, harps, and lyres. 12:28 The singers[20] were also assembled from the district around Jerusalem and from the settlements of the Netophathites 12:29 and from Beth Gilgal and from the fields of Geba and Azmaveth, for the singers had built settlements for themselves around Jerusalem. 12:30 When the priests and Levites had purified themselves, they purified the people, the gates, and the wall.

12:31 I brought the leaders of Judah up on top of the wall, and I appointed two large choirs to give thanks. One was to proceed[21] on the top of the wall southward toward the Dung Gate. 12:32 Going after them were Hoshaiah, half the leaders of Judah, 12:33 Azariah, Ezra, Meshullam, 12:34 Judah, Benjamin, Shemaiah, [8] tc The present translation reads with the LXX לְמַלּוּךְ (l'mallukh) rather than לְמַלּוּכִי (limlukhi) of the Kethib (by dittography) or לְמַלִּיכוּ (limlikhu) of the Qere.

[9] tc Most Hebrew MSS read "Shebaniah" (cf. KJV, NAB, NASB, NRSV, CEV); the present translation follows the reading of some Hebrew MSS, some LXX MSS, and the Syriac (cf. Neh 12:3 and NIV, NCV, NLT).

[10] tc The present translation reads with the Lucianic Greek recension and the Syriac Peshitta לְמֵרְמוֹת (limremot, cf. NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT "Meremoth") rather than the MT reading לְמֵרָיוֹת (limrayot, cf. KJV, NASB, NRSV, CEV "Meraioth"). Cf. v. 3.

[11] tc The present translation (along with most English versions) reads with the Qere and the Syriac Peshitta לְעִדּוֹא (l'iddo', "Iddo") rather than the MT reading לַעֲדָיָא (la'adaya') which probably arose through graphic confusion. Cf. v. 4.

Jeremiah, 12:35 some of the priests[1] with trumpets, Zechariah son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Micaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph, 12:36 and his colleagues – Shemaiah, Azarel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethanel, Judah, and Hanani – with musical instruments of[2] David the man of God. (Ezra the scribe led them.)[3] 12:37 They went over the Fountain Gate and continued directly up the steps of the City of David on the ascent to the wall. They passed the house of David and continued on to the Water Gate toward the east.

12:38 The second choir was proceeding[4] in the opposite direction. I followed them, along with half the people, on top of the wall, past the Tower of the Ovens to the Broad Wall, 12:39 over the Ephraim Gate, the Jeshanah Gate,[5] the Fish Gate, the Tower of Hananel, and the Tower of the Hundred, to the Sheep Gate. They stopped[6] at the Gate of the Guard.

12:40 Then the two choirs that gave thanks took their stations[7] in the temple of God. I did also, along with half the officials with me, 12:41 and the priests – Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Micaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with their trumpets – 12:42 and also Maaseiah, Shemaiah, Eleazar, Uzzi, Jehohanan, Malkijah, Elam, and Ezer. The choirs sang loudly[8] under the direction of Jezrahiah. 12:43 And on that day they offered great sacrifices and rejoiced, for God had given them great joy. The women and children also rejoiced. The rejoicing in Jerusalem could be heard from far away.

12:44 On that day men were appointed over the storerooms for the contributions, first fruits, and tithes, to gather into them from[9] the fields of the cities the portions prescribed by the law for the priests and the Levites, for the people of Judah[10] took delight in the priests and Levites who were ministering.[11] 12:45 They performed the service of their God and the service of purification, along with the singers and gatekeepers, according to the commandment of David and[12] his son Solomon. 12:46 For long ago, in the days of David and Asaph, there had been directors[13] for the singers and for the songs of praise and thanks to God. 12:47 So in the days of Zerubbabel and in the days of Nehemiah, all Israel was contributing the portions for the singers and gatekeepers, according to the daily need.[14] They also set aside[15] the portion for the Levites, and the Levites set aside the portion for the descendants of Aaron.

Further Reforms by Nehemiah

13:1 On that day the book of Moses was read aloud in the hearing[16] of the people. They found[17] written in it that no Ammonite or Moabite may ever enter the assembly of God, 13:2 for they had not met the Israelites with food[18] and water, but instead had hired Balaam to curse them. (Our God, however, turned the curse into blessing.) 13:3 When they heard the law, they removed from Israel all who were of mixed ancestry.

13:4 But prior to this time, Eliashib the priest, a relative of Tobiah, had been appointed over the storerooms[19] of the temple of our God. 13:5 He made for himself a large storeroom where previously they had been keeping[20] the grain offering, the incense, and the vessels, along with the tithes of the grain, the new wine, and the olive oil as commanded for the Levites, the singers, the gate keepers, and the offering for the priests.

13:6 During all this time I was not in Jerusalem,[21] for in the thirty-second year of King Artaxerxes of Babylon, I had gone back to the king. After some time[22] I had requested leave of the king, 13:7 and I returned to Jerusalem. Then I discovered the evil that Eliashib had done for Tobiah by supplying him with a storeroom in the courts of the temple of God. 13:8 I was very upset, and I threw all of Tobiah's household possessions out of the storeroom. 13:9 Then I gave instructions that the storerooms should be purified, and I brought back

11 tn Heb "standing."

12 tc With many medieval Hebrew MSS and the ancient versions the translation reads the conjunction ("and"). It is absent in the Leningrad MS that forms the textual basis for BHS.

13 tn Heb "heads." The translation reads with the Qere the plural ראשֵׁי (ro'shey, "heads") rather than the Kethib singular ראש (ro'sh, "head") of the MT.

the equipment[1] of the temple of God, along with the grain offering and the incense.

13:10 I also discovered that the grain offerings for the Levites had not been provided, and that as a result the Levites and the singers who performed this work had all gone off to their fields. 13:11 So I registered a complaint with the leaders, asking "Why is the temple of God neglected?" Then I gathered them and reassigned them to their positions.[2]

13:12 Then all of Judah brought the tithe of the grain, the new wine, and the olive oil to the storerooms. 13:13 I gave instructions[3] that Shelemiah the priest, Zadok the scribe, and a certain Levite named Pedaiah be put in charge of[4] the storerooms, and that Hanan son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah, be their assistant,[5] for they were regarded as trustworthy. It was then their responsibility to oversee the distribution to their colleagues.[6]

13:14 Please remember me for this, O my God, and do not wipe out the kindness that I have done for the temple of my God and for its services!

13:15 In those days I saw people in Judah treading winepresses on the Sabbath, bringing in heaps of grain and loading them onto donkeys, along with wine, grapes, figs, and all kinds of loads, and bringing them to Jerusalem on the Sabbath day. So I warned them on the day that they sold these provisions. 13:16 The people from Tyre[7] who lived there were bringing fish and all kinds of merchandise and were selling it on the Sabbath to the people of Judah – and in Jerusalem, of all places![8] 13:17 So I registered a complaint with the nobles of Judah, saying to them, "What is this evil thing that you are doing, profaning the Sabbath day? 13:18 Isn't this the way your ancestors[9] acted, causing our God to bring on them and on this city all this misfortune? And now you are causing even more wrath on Israel, profaning the Sabbath like this!"

13:19 When the evening shadows[10] began to fall on the gates of Jerusalem before the Sabbath, I ordered[11] the doors to be closed. I further directed that they were not to be opened until after the Sabbath. I positioned[12] some of my young men at the gates so that no load could enter on the Sabbath day. 13:20 The traders and sellers of all kinds of merchandise spent the night outside Jerusalem once or twice. 13:21 But I warned them and said,[13] "Why do you spend the night by the wall? If you repeat this, I will forcibly remove you!"[14] From that time on they did not show up on the Sabbath.[15] 13:22 Then I directed the Levites to purify themselves and come and guard the gates in order to keep the Sabbath day holy.

For this please remember me, O my God, and have pity on me in keeping with your great love.

13:23 Also in those days I saw the men of Judah who had married women from Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab. 13:24 Half of their children spoke the language of Ashdod (or the language of one of the other peoples mentioned[16]) and were unable to speak the language of Judah. 13:25 So I entered a complaint with them. I called down a curse on them, and I struck some of the men and pulled out their hair. I had them swear by God saying, "You will not marry off[17] your daughters to their sons, and you will not take any of their daughters as wives for your sons or for yourselves! 13:26 Was it not because of things like these that King Solomon of Israel sinned? Among the many nations there was no king like him. He was loved by his God, and God made[18] him king over all Israel. But the foreign wives made even him sin! 13:27 Should we then in your case hear that you do all this great evil, thereby being unfaithful to our God by marrying[19] foreign wives?"

13:28 Now one of the sons of Joiada son of Eliashib the high priest was a son-in-law of Sanballat the Horonite. So I banished him from my sight.

13:30 So I purified them of everything foreign, and I assigned specific[2] duties to the priests and the Levites. 13:31 I also provided for[3] the wood offering at the appointed times and also for the first fruits.

Please remember me for good, O my God.

[1] tc One medieval Hebrew MS, the Lucianic Greek recension, and the Syriac Peshitta read the plural הַכֹּהֲנִים (hakkohanim, "the priests") rather than the singular reading of the MT, הַכְּהֻנָּה (hakk^{e}hunnah, "the priesthood").

Esther

The King Throws a Lavish Party

1:1[1] The following events happened[2] in the days of Ahasuerus.[3] (I am referring to[4] that Ahasuerus who used to rule over a hundred and twenty-seven provinces[5] extending all the way from India to Ethiopia.[6]) 1:2 In those days, as King Ahasuerus sat on his royal throne in Susa[7] the citadel,[8] 1:3 in the third[9] year of his reign he provided a banquet for all his officials and his servants. The army[10] of Persia and Media[11] was present,[12] as well as the nobles and the officials of the provinces.

1:4 He displayed the riches of his royal glory and the splendor of his majestic greatness for a lengthy period of time[13] – a hundred and eighty days, to be exact![14] 1:5 When those days[15] were completed, the king then provided a seven-day[16] banquet for all the people who were present[17] in Susa the citadel, for those of highest standing to the most lowly.[18] It was held in the court located in the garden of the royal palace. 1:6 The furnishings included linen and purple curtains hung by cords of the finest

[1] sn In the English Bible Esther appears adjacent to Ezra-Nehemiah and with the historical books, but in the Hebrew Bible it is one of five short books (the so-called Megillot) that appear toward the end of the biblical writings. The canonicity of the book was questioned by some in ancient Judaism and early Christianity. It is one of five OT books that were at one time regarded as antilegomena (i.e., books "spoken against"). The problem with Esther was the absence of any direct mention of God. Some questioned whether a book that did not mention God could be considered sacred scripture. Attempts to resolve this by discovering the tetragrammaton (YHWH) encoded in the Hebrew text (e.g., in the initial letters of four consecutive words in the Hebrew text of Esth 5:4) are unconvincing, although they do illustrate how keenly the problem was felt by some. Martin Luther also questioned the canonicity of this book, objecting to certain parts of its content. Although no copy of Esther was found among the Dead Sea Scrolls, this does not necessarily mean that the Qumran community did not regard it as canonical. It is possible that the absence of Esther from what has survived at Qumran is merely a coincidence. Although the book does not directly mention God, it would be difficult to read it without sensing the providence of God working in powerful, though at times subtle, ways to rescue his people from danger and possible extermination. The absence of mention of the name of God may be a deliberate part of the literary strategy of the writer.

[2] tn Heb "it came about"; KJV, ASV "Now it came to pass."

[3] tn Where the Hebrew text has "Ahasuerus" (so KJV, NAB, NASB, NRSV) in this book the LXX has "Artaxerxes." The ruler mentioned in the Hebrew text is Xerxes I (ca. 486-465 B.C.), and a number of modern English versions use "Xerxes" (e.g., NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT).

[4] tn Heb "in the days of Ahasuerus, that Ahasuerus who used to rule..." The phrase "I am referring to" has been supplied to clarify the force of the third person masculine singular pronoun, which is functioning like a demonstrative pronoun.

[5] sn The geographical extent of the Persian empire was vast. The division of Xerxes' empire into 127 smaller provinces was apparently done for purposes of administrative efficiency.

[6] tn Heb "Cush" (so NIV, NCV; KJV "Ethiopia") referring to the region of the upper Nile in Africa. India and Cush (i.e., Ethiopia) are both mentioned in a tablet taken from the foundation of Xerxes' palace in Persepolis that describes the extent of this empire. See ANET 316-17.

[7] tn Heb "Shushan" (so KJV, ASV). Most recent English versions render this as "Susa."

sn The city of Susa served as one of several capitals of Persia during this time; the other locations were Ecbatana, Babylon, and Persepolis. Partly due to the extreme heat of its summers, Susa was a place where Persian kings stayed mainly in the winter months. Strabo indicates that reptiles attempting to cross roads at midday died from the extreme heat (Geography 15.3.10-11).

[8] tn The Hebrew word בִּירָה (birah) can refer to a castle or palace or temple. Here it seems to have in mind that fortified part of the city that might be called an acropolis or citadel. Cf. KJV "palace"; NAB "stronghold"; NASB "capital"; NLT "fortress."

[9] sn The third year of Xerxes' reign would be ca. 483 B.C.

[10] tc Due to the large numbers of people implied, some scholars suggest that the original text may have read "leaders of the army" (cf. NAB "Persian and Median aristocracy"; NASB "the army officers"; NIV "the military leaders"). However, there is no textual evidence for this emendation, and the large numbers are not necessarily improbable.

[11] sn Unlike the Book of Daniel, the usual order for this expression in Esther is "Persia and Media" (cf. vv. 14, 18, 19). In Daniel the order is "Media and Persia," indicating a time in their history when Media was in the ascendancy.

[12] sn The size of the banquet described here, the number of its invited guests, and the length of its duration, although certainly immense by any standard, are not without precedent in the ancient world. C. A. Moore documents a Persian banquet for 15,000 people and an Assyrian celebration with 69,574 guests (Esther [AB], 6).

[13] tn Heb "many days" (so KJV, ASV); NASB, NRSV "for many days."

[14] tn The words "to be exact!" are not in the Hebrew text but have been supplied in the translation to bring out the clarifying nuance of the time period mentioned. Cf. KJV "even an hundred and fourscore days."

[15] tc The Hebrew text of Esther does not indicate why this elaborate show of wealth and power was undertaken. According to the LXX these were "the days of the wedding" (αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ γάμου, hai hēmerai tou gamou), presumably the king's wedding. However, a number of scholars have called attention to the fact that this celebration takes place just shortly before Xerxes' invasion of Greece. It is possible that the banquet was a rallying for the up-coming military effort. See Herodotus, Histories 7.8. There is no reason to adopt the longer reading of the LXX here.

[16] tc The LXX has ἕξ (hex, "six") instead of "seven." Virtually all English versions follow the reading of the MT here, "seven."

[17] tn Heb "were found."

[18] tn Heb "from the great and unto the small."

Royal wine was available in abundance at the king's expense. 1:8 There were no restrictions on the drinking,[4] for the king had instructed all of his supervisors[5] that they should do as everyone so desired.[6] 1:9 Queen Vashti[7] also gave a banquet for the women in King Ahasuerus' royal palace.

Queen Vashti is Removed from Her Royal Position

1:10 On the seventh day, as King Ahasuerus was feeling the effects of the wine,[8] he ordered Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven eunuchs who attended him,[9] 1:11 to bring Queen Vashti into the king's presence wearing her royal high turban. He wanted to show the people and the officials her beauty, for she was very attractive.[10] 1:12 But Queen Vashti refused[11] to come at the king's bidding[12] conveyed through the eunuchs. Then the king became extremely angry, and his rage consumed[13] him.

1:13 The king then inquired of the wise men who were discerners of the times – for it was the royal custom to confer with all those who were proficient in laws and legalities.[14] 1:14 Those who were closest to him were Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan. These men were the seven officials of Persia and Media who saw the king on a regular basis[15] and had the most prominent offices[16] in the kingdom. 1:15 The king asked,[17] "By law,[18] what should be done to Queen Vashti in light of the fact that she has not obeyed the instructions of King Ahasuerus conveyed through the eunuchs?"

1:16 Memucan then replied to the king and the officials, "The wrong of Queen Vashti is not against the king alone, but against all the officials and all the people who are throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus. 1:17 For the matter concerning the queen will spread to all the women, leading them to treat their husbands with contempt, saying, 'When King Ahasuerus gave orders to bring Queen Vashti into his presence, she would not come.' 1:18 And this very day the noble ladies of Persia and Media who have heard the matter concerning the queen will respond in the same way to all the royal officials, and there will be more than enough contempt and anger! 1:19 If the king is so inclined,[19] let a royal edict go forth from him, and let it be written in the laws of Persia and Media that cannot be repealed,[20] that Vashti[21] may not come into the presence of

[2] tn The Hebrew noun מִטָּה (mittah) refers to a reclining couch (cf. KJV "beds") spread with covers, cloth and pillow for feasting and carousing (Ezek 23:41; Amos 3:12; 6:4; Esth 1:6; 7:8). See BDB 641-42 s.v.; HALOT 573 s.v.

[4] tn Heb "the drinking was according to law; there was no one compelling."

[5] tn Heb "every chief of his house"; KJV "all the officers of his house"; NLT "his staff."

[6] tn Heb "according to the desire of man and man."

[7] sn Vashti is the name of Xerxes' queen according to the Book of Esther. But in the Greek histories of this period the queen's name is given as Amestris (e.g., Herodotus, Histories 9.108-13). The name Vashti does not seem to occur in the nonbiblical records from this period. Apparently the two women are not to be confused, but not enough is known about this period to reconcile completely the biblical and extrabiblical accounts.

[8] tn Heb "as the heart of the king was good with the wine." Here the proper name (King Ahasuerus) has been substituted for the title in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[9] tn Heb "King Ahasuerus"; here the proper name has been replaced by the pronoun "him" in the translation for stylistic reasons. Cf. similarly NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT "King Xerxes."

[10] tn Heb "was good of appearance"; KJV "was fair to look on"; NAB "was lovely to behold."

[11] sn Refusal to obey the king was risky even for a queen in the ancient world. It is not clear why Vashti behaved so rashly and put herself in such danger. Apparently she anticipated humiliation of some kind and was unwilling to subject herself to it, in spite of the obvious dangers. There is no justification in the biblical text for an ancient Jewish targumic tradition that the king told her to appear before his guests dressed in nothing but her royal high turban, that is, essentially naked.

[13] tn Heb "burned in him" (so KJV).

[14] tn Heb "judgment" (so KJV); NASB, NIV "justice"; NRSV "custom."

[15] tn Heb "seers of the face of the king"; NASB "who had access to the king's presence."

[16] tn Heb "were sitting first"; NAB "held first rank in the realm."

[17] tn These words are not present in the Hebrew text, but have been supplied in the translation for clarity (cf. NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT, all of which supply similar phrases).

[18] tc The location of the prepositional phrase "according to law" is somewhat unusual in the Hebrew text, but not so much so as to require emendation. Some scholars suggest deleting the phrase as an instance of dittography from the final part of the immediately preceding word in v. 14. Others suggest taking the phrase with the end of v. 14 rather than with v. 15. Both proposals, however, lack adequate justification.

[19] sn Heb "If upon the king it is good"; KJV "If it please the king." Deferential language was common in ancient Near Eastern court language addressing a despot; it occurs often in Esther.

[20] sn Laws...that cannot be repealed. On the permanence of the laws of Media and Persia see also Esth 8:8 and Dan 6:8, 12, 15.

[21] sn Previously in this chapter the word "queen" accompanies Vashti's name (cf. vv. 9, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17). But here, in anticipation of her demotion, the title is dropped.

King Ahasuerus, and let the king convey her royalty to another[1] who is more deserving than she.[2] 1:20 And let the king's decision which he will enact be disseminated[3] throughout all his kingdom, vast though it is.[4] Then all the women will give honor to their husbands, from the most prominent to the lowly."

1:21 The matter seemed appropriate to the king and the officials. So the king acted on the advice of Memucan. 1:22 He sent letters throughout all the royal provinces, to each province according to its own script and to each people according to its own language,[5] that every man should be ruling his family[6] and should be speaking the language of his own people.[7]

Esther Becomes Queen in Vashti's Place

2:1 When these things had been accomplished[8] and the rage of King Ahasuerus had diminished, he remembered[9] Vashti and what she had done and what had been decided[10] against her. 2:2 The king's servants who attended him said, "Let a search be conducted in the king's behalf for attractive young women.[11] 2:3 And let the king appoint officers throughout all the provinces of his kingdom to gather all the attractive young women to Susa the citadel, to the harem[12] under the authority of Hegai, the king's eunuch who oversees the women, and let him provide whatever cosmetics they desire.[13] 2:4 Let the young woman whom the king finds most attractive[14] become queen in place of Vashti." This seemed like a good idea to the king,[15] so he acted accordingly.

2:5 Now there happened to be a Jewish man in Susa the citadel whose name was Mordecai.[16] He was the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjaminite, 2:6 who had been taken into exile from Jerusalem[17] with the captives who had been carried into exile with Jeconiah[18] king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had taken into exile. 2:7 Now he was acting as the guardian[19] of Hadassah[20] (that is, Esther), the daughter of his uncle, for neither her father nor her mother was alive.[21] This young woman was very attractive and had a beautiful figure.[22] When her father

1 tn Heb "her neighbor"; NIV "someone else."

2 tn Heb "who is better than she." The reference is apparently to worthiness of the royal position as demonstrated by compliance with the king's wishes, although the word טוֹב (tob, "good") can also be used of physical beauty. Cf. NAB, NASB, NLT "more worthy than she."

3 tn Heb "heard"; KJV, NAB, NLT "published"; NIV, NRSV "proclaimed."

4 tc The phrase "vast though it is" is not included in the LXX, although it is retained by almost all English versions.

5 sn For purposes of diplomacy and governmental communication throughout the far-flung regions of the Persian empire the Aramaic language was normally used. Educated people throughout the kingdom could be expected to have competence in this language. But in the situation described in v. 22 a variety of local languages are to be used, and not just Aramaic, so as to make the king's edict understandable to the largest possible number of people.

6 tn Heb "in his house"; NIV "over his own household."

7 tc The final prepositional phrase is not included in the LXX, and this shorter reading is followed by a number of English versions (e.g., NAB, NRSV, NLT). Some scholars suggest the phrase may be the result of dittography from the earlier phrase "to each people according to its language," but this is not a necessary conclusion. The edict was apparently intended to reassert male prerogative with regard to two things (and not just one): sovereign and unquestioned leadership within the family unit, and the right of deciding which language was to be used in the home when a bilingual situation existed.

8 tn Heb "after these things" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV). The expression is very vague from a temporal standpoint, not indicating precisely just how much time might have elapsed. Cf. v. 21.

9 sn There may be a tinge of regret expressed in the king's remembrance of Vashti. There is perhaps a hint that he wished for her presence once again, although that was not feasible from a practical standpoint. The suggestions by the king's attendants concerning a replacement seem to be an effort to overcome this nostalgia. Certainly it was to their advantage to seek the betterment of the king's outlook. Those around him the most were probably the most likely to suffer the effects of his ire.

10 tn Or "decreed" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV); TEV "and about his proclamation against her."

11 tn Heb "young women, virgins, good of form." The same phrase also occurs in v. 3.

12 tn Heb "the house of the women" (so KJV, ASV). So also in vv. 9, 11, 13, and 14.

13 tn Heb "their ointments"; cf. NIV, CEV, NLT "beauty treatments."

14 tn Heb "who is good in the eyes of the king."

15 tn Heb "the matter was good in the eyes of the king." Cf. TEV "The king thought this was good advice."

16 sn Mordecai is a pagan name that reflects the name of the Babylonian deity Marduk. Probably many Jews of the period had two names, one for secular use and the other for use especially within the Jewish community. Mordecai's Jewish name is not recorded in the biblical text.

17 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

18 sn Jeconiah is an alternative name for Jehoiachin. A number of modern English versions use the latter name to avoid confusion (e.g., NIV, NCV, TEV, NLT).

19 tn According to HALOT 64 s.v. II אמן the term אֹמֶן ('omen) means: (1) "attendant" of children (Num 11:12; Isa 49:23); (2) "guardian" (2 Kgs 10:1, 5; Esth 2:7); (3) "nurse-maid" (2 Sam 4:4; Ruth 4:16); and (4) "to look after" (Isa 60:4; Lam 4:5). Older lexicons did not distinguish this root from the homonym I אָמַן ('aman, "to support; to confirm"; cf. BDB 52 s.v. אָמַן). This is reflected in a number of translations by use of a phrase like "brought up" (KJV, ASV, RSV, NIV) or "bringing up" (NASB).

20 sn Hadassah is a Jewish name that probably means "myrtle"; the name Esther probably derives from the Persian word for "star," although some scholars derive it from the name of the Babylonian goddess Ishtar. Esther is not the only biblical character for whom two different names were used. Daniel (renamed Belteshazzar) and his three friends Hananiah (renamed Shadrach), Mishael (renamed Meshach), and Azariah (renamed Abednego) were also given different names by their captors.

21 tn Heb "for there was not to her father or mother." This is universally understood to mean Esther's father and mother were no longer alive.

22 tn Heb "beautiful of form." The Hebrew noun תֹּאַר (to'ar, "form; shape") is used elsewhere to describe the physical bodily shape of a beautiful woman (Gen 29:17; Deut 21:11; 1 Sam 25:3); see BDB 1061 s.v. Cf. TEV "had a good figure."

and mother died, Mordecai had raised her[1] as if she were his own daughter.

2:8 It so happened that when the king's edict and his law became known[2] many young women were taken to Susa the citadel to be placed under the authority of Hegai. Esther also was taken to the royal palace[3] to be under the authority of Hegai, who was overseeing the women. 2:9 This young woman pleased him,[4] and she found favor with him. He quickly provided her with her cosmetics and her rations; he also provided her with the seven specially chosen[5] young women who were from the palace. He then transferred her and her young women to the best quarters in the harem.[6]

2:10 Now Esther had not disclosed her people or her lineage,[7] for Mordecai had instructed her not to do so.[8] 2:11 And day after day Mordecai used to walk back and forth in front of the court of the harem in order to learn how Esther was doing[9] and what might happen to her.

2:12 At the end of the twelve months that were required for the women,[10] when the turn of each young woman arrived to go to King Ahasuerus – for in this way they had to fulfill their time of cosmetic treatment: six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with perfume and various ointments used by women – 2:13 the woman would go to the king in the following way: Whatever she asked for would be provided for her to take with her from the harem to the royal palace. 2:14 In the evening she went, and in the morning she returned to a separate part[11] of the harem, to the authority of Shaashgaz the king's eunuch who was overseeing the concubines. She would not go back to the king unless the king was pleased with her[12] and she was requested by name.

2:15 When it became the turn of Esther daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai (who had raised her as if she were his own daughter[13]) to go to the king, she did not request anything except what Hegai the king's eunuch, who was overseer of the women, had recommended. Yet Esther met with the approval of all who saw her. 2:16 Then Esther was taken to King Ahasuerus at his royal residence in the tenth[14] month (that is, the month of Tebeth) in the seventh[15] year of his reign. 2:17 And the king loved Esther more than all the other women, and she met with his loving approval[16] more than all the other young women.[17] So he placed the royal high turban on her head and appointed her queen[18] in place of Vashti. 2:18 Then the king prepared a large banquet for all his officials and his servants – it was actually Esther's banquet. He also set aside a holiday for the provinces, and he provided for offerings at the king's expense.[19]

Mordecai Learns of a Plot against the King

2:19 Now when the young women were being gathered again,[20] Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate.[21] 2:20 Esther was still not divulging her lineage or her people,[22] just as

[1] tn Heb "had taken her to him." The Hebrew verb לָקַח (laqakh, "to take") describes Mordecai adopting Esther and treating her like his own daughter: "to take as one's own property" as a daughter (HALOT 534 s.v. I לקח 6).

[2] tn Heb "were heard" (so NASB); NRSV "were (had been NIV) proclaimed."

[3] tn Heb "the house of the king." So also in vv. 9, 13. Cf. NLT "the king's harem."

[4] tn Heb "was good in his eyes"; NLT "Hegai was very impressed with Esther."

[5] tn Heb "being looked at (with favor)."

[6] tn Heb "of the house of the women" (so KJV, ASV). So also in vv. 11, 13, 14.

[7] tn Cf. v. 20, where the same phrase occurs but with the word order reversed.

[8] tn Heb "that she not tell" (NRSV similar); NASB "that she should not make them known."

[9] tn Heb "to know the peace of Esther."

[10] tc The LXX does not include the words "that were required for the women."

tn Heb "to be to her according to the law of the women"; NASB "under the regulations for the women."

[11] tn Heb "second." The numerical adjective שֵׁנִי (sheniy, "second") is difficult here. As a modifier for "house" in v. 14 the word would presumably refer to a second part of the harem, one which was under the supervision of a separate official. But in this case the definite article would be expected before "second" (cf. LXX τὸν δεύτερον, ton deuteron). Some scholars emend the text to שֵׁנִית (shenit, "a second time"), but this does not completely resolve the difficulty since the meaning remains unclear. The translation adopted above follows the LXX and understands the word to refer to a separate group of women in the king's harem, a group housed apparently in a distinct part of the residence complex.

[12] tc The LXX does not include the words "was pleased with her."

[13] tn Heb "who had taken her to him as a daughter"; NRSV "who had adopted her as his own daughter."

[14] tc The Greek MSS Codex Alexandrinus (A) and Codex Vaticanus (B) read "twelfth" here.

[15] tc The Syriac Peshitta reads "fourth" here.

[16] tn Heb "grace and loyal love." The expression is probably a hendiadys.

[17] tc The LXX does not include the words "more than all the other young women."

[18] tn Heb "caused her to rule."

[19] tc The LXX does not include the words "and he provided for offerings at the king's expense."

[20] tc The LXX does not include the words "Now when the young women were being gathered again." The Hebrew word שֵׁנִית (shenit, "a second time") is difficult in v. 19, but apparently it refers to a subsequent regathering of the women to the harem.

[21] sn That Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate apparently means that he was a high-ranking government official. It was at the city gate where important business was transacted. Being in this position afforded Mordecai an opportunity to become aware of the plot against the king's life, although the author does not include the particular details of how this information first came to Mordecai's attention.

[22] sn That Esther was able so effectively to conceal her Jewish heritage suggests that she was not consistently observing Jewish dietary and religious requirements. As C. A. Moore observes, "In order for Esther to have concealed her ethnic and religious identity...in the harem, she must have eaten..., dressed, and lived like a Persian rather than an observant Jewess" (Esther [AB], 28.) In this regard her public behavior stands in contrast to that of Daniel, for example.

Mordecai had instructed her.[1] Esther continued to do whatever Mordecai said, just as she had done when he was raising her.

2:21 In those days while Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate, Bigthan[2] and Teresh,[3] two of the king's eunuchs who protected the entrance,[4] became angry and plotted to assassinate[5] King Ahasuerus. 2:22 When Mordecai learned of the conspiracy,[6] he informed Queen Esther,[7] and Esther told the king in Mordecai's behalf.[8] 2:23 The king then had the matter investigated and, finding it to be so, had the two conspirators[9] hanged on a gallows.[10] It was then recorded in the daily chronicles in the king's presence.

Haman Conspires to Destroy the Jews

3:1 Some time later[11] King Ahasuerus promoted[12] Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, exalting him and setting his position[13] above that of all the officials who were with him. 3:2 As a result,[14] all the king's servants who were at the king's gate were bowing and paying homage to Haman, for the king had so commanded. However, Mordecai did not bow,[15] nor did he pay him homage.

3:3 Then the servants of the king who were at the king's gate asked Mordecai, "Why are you violating the king's commandment?" 3:4 And after they had spoken to him day after day[16] without his paying any attention to them, they informed Haman to see whether this attitude on Mordecai's part would be permitted.[17] Furthermore, he had disclosed to them that he was a Jew.[18]

3:5 When Haman saw that Mordecai was not bowing or paying homage to him, he[19] was filled with rage. 3:6 But the thought of striking out against[20] Mordecai alone was repugnant to him, for he had been informed[21] of the identity of Mordecai's people.[22] So Haman sought to destroy all the Jews (that is, the people of Mordecai)[23] who were in all the kingdom of Ahasuerus.

3:7 In the first month (that is, the month of Nisan), in the twelfth year[24] of King Ahasuerus' reign, pur[25] (that is, the lot) was cast be-

1 tc The LXX adds the words "to fear God."

2 tn This individual is referred to as "Bigthana," a variant spelling of the name, in Esth 6:2.

3 tc The LXX does not include the names "Bigthan and Teresh" here.

4 tn Heb "guarders of the threshold"; NIV "who guarded the doorway."

5 tn Heb "sought to send a hand against"; CEV "decided to kill."

6 sn The text of Esther does not disclose exactly how Mordecai learned about the plot against the king's life. Ancient Jewish traditions state that Mordecai overheard conspiratorial conversation, or that an informant brought this information to him, or that it came to him as a result of divine prompting. These conjectures are all without adequate support from the biblical text. The author simply does not tell the source of Mordecai's insight into this momentous event.

7 tc The LXX simply reads "Esther" and does not include "the queen."

8 tc The LXX adds here "the things concerning the plot."

tn Heb "in the name of Mordecai" (so NRSV); NIV "giving credit to Mordecai."

9 tn Heb "they both were hanged." The referent (the two eunuchs who conspired against the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn Or "on a pole"; KJV, ASV "on a tree."

11 tn Heb "after these things" (so KJV, ASV); NAB, NASB, NIV "After these events."

12 tn Heb "made great"; NAB "raised...to high rank"; NIV "honored."

sn The promotion of Haman in 3:1 for reasons unexplained contrasts noticeably with 2:19-23, where Mordecai's contribution to saving the king's life goes unnoticed. The irony is striking.

13 tn Heb "chair"; KJV, NRSV "seat"; NASB "established his authority."

14 tn Heb "and" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV). Other modern English versions leave the conjunction untranslated here (NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT).

15 sn Mordecai did not bow. The reason for Mordecai's refusal to bow before Haman is not clearly stated here. Certainly the Jews did not refuse to bow as a matter of principle, as though such an action somehow violated the second command of the Decalogue. Many biblical texts bear witness to their practice of falling prostrate before people of power and influence (e.g., 1 Sam 24:8; 2 Sam 14:4; 1 Kgs 1:16). Perhaps the issue here was that Haman was a descendant of the Amalekites, a people who had attacked Israel in an earlier age (see Exod 17:8-16; 1 Sam 15:17-20; Deut 25:17-19).

16 sn Mordecai's position in the service of the king brought him into regular contact with these royal officials. Because of this association the officials would have found ample opportunity to complain of Mordecai's refusal to honor Haman by bowing down before him.

17 tn Heb "Will the matters of Mordecai stand?"; NASB "to see whether Mordecai's reason would stand."

18 sn This disclosure of Jewish identity is a reversal of the practice mentioned in 2:10, 20.

19 tn Heb "Haman." The pronoun ("he") was used in the translation for stylistic reasons. Repeating the proper name here is redundant according to contemporary English style, although the name is repeated in NASB and NRSV.

20 tn Heb "to send a hand against"; KJV, NRSV "to lay hands on."

21 tn Heb "they had related to him." For stylistic reasons this has been translated as a passive construction.

22 tc The entire first half of the verse is not included in the LXX.

23 tc This parenthetical phrase is not included in the LXX. Some scholars emend the MT reading עַם ('am, "people") to עִם ('im, "with"), arguing that the phrase is awkwardly placed and syntactically inappropriate. While there is some truth to their complaint, the MT makes sufficient sense to be acceptable here, and is followed by most English versions.

24 sn This year would be ca. 474 B.C. The reference to first month and twelfth month indicate that about a year had elapsed between this determination and the anticipated execution.

25 tn The term פּוּר (pur, "lot") is an Akkadian loanword; the narrator therefore explains it for his Hebrew readers ("that is, the lot"). It is from the plural form of this word (i.e., Purim) that the festival celebrating the deliverance of the Jews takes its name (cf. 9:24, 26, 28, 31).

fore Haman in order to determine a day and a month.[1] It turned out to be the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar).[2]

3:8 Then Haman said to King Ahasuerus, "There is a particular people[3] that is dispersed and spread among the inhabitants[4] throughout all the provinces of your kingdom whose laws differ from those of all other peoples. Furthermore, they do not observe the king's laws. It is not appropriate for the king to provide a haven for them.[5] 3:9 If the king is so inclined,[6] let an edict be issued[7] to destroy them. I will pay 10,000 talents of silver[8] to be conveyed to the king's treasuries for the officials who carry out this business."

3:10 So the king removed his signet ring[9] from his hand and gave it to Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, who was hostile toward the Jews. 3:11 The king replied to Haman, "Keep your money,[10] and do with those people whatever you wish."[11]

3:12 So the royal scribes[12] were summoned in the first month, on the thirteenth day of the month. Everything Haman commanded was written to the king's satraps[13] and governors who were in every province and to the officials of every people, province by province according to its script and people by people according to its language. In the name of King Ahasuerus it was written and sealed with the king's signet ring. 3:13 Letters were sent by the runners to all the king's provinces stating that[14] they should destroy, kill, and annihilate all the Jews, from youth to elderly, both women and children,[15] on a particular day, namely the thirteenth day[16] of the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar), and to loot and plunder their possessions. 3:14 A copy of this edict was to be presented as law throughout every province; it was to be made known to all the inhabitants,[17] so that they would be prepared for this day. 3:15 The messengers[18] scurried forth[19] with the king's order.[20] The edict was issued in Susa the citadel. While the king and Haman sat down to drink, the city of Susa was in an uproar![21]

Esther Decides to Risk Everything in order to Help Her People

4:1 Now when Mordecai became aware of all that had been done, he[22] tore his garments and put on sackcloth and ashes. He went out into the city, crying out in a loud[23] and bitter voice. 4:2 But he went no further than the king's gate, for no one was permitted to enter the king's gate clothed in sackcloth. 4:3 Throughout each and every province where the king's edict and law were announced[24] there was considerable[25] mourning among the Jews, along with fasting, weeping, and sorrow.[26]

---

[1] tc The LXX adds the following words: "in order to destroy in one day the race of Mordecai, and the lot fell on the fourteenth day of the month." The LXX reading is included by NAB.

tn Heb "from day to day and from month to month" (so KJV, NASB).

[2] tn Since v. 7 seems to interrupt the flow of the narrative, many scholars have suggested that it is a late addition to the text. But there is not enough evidence to warrant such a conclusion. Even though its placement is somewhat awkward, the verse supplies to the reader an important piece of chronological information.

[3] tn Heb "one people." Note the subtle absence at this point of a specific mention of the Jewish people by name.

[4] tn Heb "peoples" (so NASB, NIV); NAB "nations"

[5] tn Heb "to cause them to rest"; NASB "to let them remain"; NAB, NIV, NRSV "to tolerate them."

[6] tn Heb "If upon the king it is good"; KJV "If it please the king."

[7] tn Heb "let it be written" (so KJV, ASV); NASB "let it be decreed."

[8] sn The enormity of the monetary sum referred to here can be grasped by comparing this amount (10,000 talents of silver) to the annual income of the empire, which according to Herodotus (Histories 3.95) was 14,500 Euboic talents. In other words Haman is offering the king a bribe equal to two-thirds of the royal income. Doubtless this huge sum of money was to come (in large measure) from the anticipated confiscation of Jewish property and assets once the Jews had been destroyed. That such a large sum of money is mentioned may indicate something of the economic standing of the Jewish population in the empire of King Ahasuerus.

[9] sn Possessing the king's signet ring would enable Haman to act with full royal authority. The king's ring would be used to impress the royal seal on edicts, making them as binding as if the king himself had enacted them.

[10] tn Heb "the silver is given to you"; NRSV "the money is given to you"; CEV "You can keep their money." C. A. Moore (Esther [AB], 40) understands these words somewhat differently, taking them to imply acceptance of the money on Xerxes' part. He translates, "Well, it's your money."

[11] tn Heb "according to what is good in your eyes"; NASB "do with them as you please."

[12] tn Or "secretaries" (so NIV, NRSV, NLT).

[13] tn Or "princes" (so NLT); CEV "highest officials."

[14] tn The words "stating that" are not in the Hebrew text but have been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Heb "children and women." The translation follows contemporary English idiom, which reverses the order.

[16] tc The LXX does not include the words "on the thirteenth day."

[17] tn Heb "peoples" (so NASB, NRSV).

[18] tn Heb "runners." So also in 8:10, 14. Cf. NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV "couriers."

[19] tn Or "went forth in haste" (so ASV).

[20] tn Heb "with the word of the king."

[21] sn The city of Susa was in an uproar. This final statement of v. 15 is a sad commentary on the pathetic disregard of despots for the human misery and suffering that they sometimes inflict on those who are helpless to resist their power. Here, while common people braced for the reckless loss of life and property that was about to begin, the perpetrators went about their mundane activities as though nothing of importance was happening.

[22] tn Heb "Mordecai." The pronoun ("he") was used in the translation for stylistic reasons. A repetition of the proper name here is redundant in terms of contemporary English style.

[23] tn Heb "great."

[24] tn Heb "reached" (so NAB, NLT); KJV, NASB, NIV "came"; TEV "wherever the king's proclamation was made known."

[25] tn Heb "great" (so KJV, NIV, NRSV, NLT); NAB "the Jews went into deep mourning."

[26] sn Although prayer is not specifically mentioned here, it is highly unlikely that appeals to God for help were not a part of this reaction to devastating news. As elsewhere in the book of Esther, the writer seems deliberately to keep religious actions in the background.

Sackcloth and ashes were characteristic[1] of many. 4:4 When Esther's female attendants and her eunuchs came and informed her about Mordecai's behavior,[2] the queen was overcome with anguish. Although she sent garments for Mordecai to put on so that he could remove his sackcloth, he would not accept them. 4:5 So Esther called for Hathach, one of the king's eunuchs who had been placed at her service,[3] and instructed him to find out the cause and reason for Mordecai's behavior.[4] 4:6 So Hathach went to Mordecai at the plaza of the city in front of the king's gate. 4:7 Then Mordecai related to him everything that had happened to him, even the specific amount of money that Haman had offered to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews to be destroyed. 4:8 He also gave him a written copy of the law that had been disseminated[5] in Susa for their destruction so that he could show it to Esther and talk to her about it. He also gave instructions that she should go to the king to implore him and petition him on behalf of her people. 4:9 So Hathach returned and related Mordecai's instructions[6] to Esther.

4:10 Then Esther replied to Hathach with instructions for Mordecai: 4:11 "All the servants of the king and the people of the king's provinces know that there is only one law applicable[7] to any man or woman who comes uninvited to the king in the inner court – that person will be put to death, unless the king extends to him the gold scepter, permitting him to be spared.[8] Now I have not been invited to come to the king for some thirty days!"

4:12 When Esther's reply[9] was conveyed to Mordecai, 4:13 he[10] said to take back this answer to Esther: 4:14 "Don't imagine that because you are part of the king's household you will be the one Jew[11] who will escape. If you keep quiet at this time, liberation and protection for the Jews will appear[12] from another source,[13] while you and your father's household perish. It may very well be[14] that you have achieved royal status[15] for such a time as this!"

4:15 Then Esther sent this reply to Mordecai: 4:16 "Go, assemble all the Jews who are found in Susa and fast in my behalf. Don't eat and don't drink for three days, night or day. My female attendants and I[16] will also fast in the same way. Afterward I will go to the king, even though it violates the law.[17] If I perish, I perish!"

4:17 So Mordecai set out to do everything that Esther had instructed him.

Esther Appeals to the King for Help

5:1 It so happened that on the third day Esther put on her royal attire and stood in the inner court of the palace,[18] opposite the king's quarters.[19] The king was sitting on his royal throne in the palace, opposite the entrance.[20] 5:2 When the king saw Queen Esther standing in the court, she met with his approval.[21] The king extended to Esther the gold scepter that was in his hand, and Esther approached and touched the end of the scepter.

[1] tn Heb "were spread to many"; KJV, NIV "many (+ people NLT) lay in sackcloth and ashes."

[2] tn The words "about Mordecai's behavior" are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied in translation for the sake of clarity. Cf. NIV, NLT "about Mordecai"; TEV, CEV "what Mordecai was doing."

[3] tn Heb "whom he caused to stand before her"; NASB "whom the king had appointed to attend her."

[4] tn Heb "concerning Mordecai, to know what this was, and why this was."

[5] tn Heb "given" (so KJV); NASB, NRSV, TEV, NLT "issued"; NIV "published"; NAB "promulgated."

[6] tn Heb "the words of Mordecai" (so KJV); NIV, NRSV, CEV "what Mordecai had said"; NLT "with Mordecai's message."

[7] tn Heb "one is his law"; NASB "he (the king NIV) has but one law"

[8] tn Heb "and he will live"; KJV, ASV "that he may live"; NIV "and spare his life."

[9] tn Heb "the words of Esther"; TEV, NLT "Esther's message."

[10] tn Heb "Mordecai." The pronoun ("he") was used in the translation for stylistic reasons. A repetition of the proper name here is redundant in terms of contemporary English style.

[11] tn Heb "from all the Jews"; KJV "more than all the Jews"; NIV "you alone of all the Jews."

[12] tn Heb "stand"; KJV, NASB, NIV, NLT "arise."

[13] tn Heb "place" (so KJV, NIV, NLT); NRSV "from another quarter." This is probably an oblique reference to help coming from God. D. J. A. Clines disagrees; in his view a contrast between deliverance by Esther and deliverance by God is inappropriate (Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther [NCBC], 302). But Clines' suggestion that perhaps the reference is to deliverance by Jewish officials or by armed Jewish revolt is less attractive than seeing this veiled reference as part of the literary strategy of the book, which deliberately keeps God's providential dealings entirely in the background.

[14] tn Heb "And who knows whether" (so NASB). The question is one of hope, but free of presumption. Cf. Jonah 3:9.

[15] tn Heb "have come to the kingdom"; NRSV "to royal dignity"; NIV "to royal position"; NLT "have been elevated to the palace."

[16] tn Heb "I and my female attendants." The translation reverses the order for stylistic reasons.

[17] tn Heb "which is not according to the law" (so KJV, NASB); NAB "contrary to the law."

[18] tn Heb "of the house of the king"; NASB, NRSV "of the king's palace."

[19] tn Heb "the house of the king"; NASB "the king's rooms"; NIV, NLT "the king's hall." This expression is used twice in this verse. In the first instance, it is apparently the larger palace complex that is in view, whereas in the second instance the expression seems to refer specifically to the quarters from which the king governed.

[20] tn Heb "the entrance of the house" (so ASV).

[21] tn Heb "she obtained grace in his eyes"; NASB "she obtained favor in his sight"; NIV "he was pleased with her"; NLT "he welcomed her."

5:3 The king said to her, "What is on your mind,[1] Queen Esther? What is your request? Even as much as half the kingdom will be given to you!"

5:4 Esther replied, "If the king is so inclined,[2] let the king and Haman come today to the banquet that I have prepared for him." 5:5 The king replied, "Find Haman quickly so that we can do as Esther requests."

So the king and Haman went to the banquet that Esther had prepared. 5:6 While at the banquet of wine, the king said to Esther, "What is your request? It shall be given to you. What is your petition? Ask for as much as half the kingdom,[3] and it shall be done!"

5:7 Esther responded,[4] "My request and my petition is this: 5:8 If I have found favor in the king's sight and if the king is inclined[5] to grant my request and perform my petition, let the king and Haman come tomorrow to the banquet that I will prepare for them. At that time[6] I will do as the king wishes.[7]

Haman Expresses His Hatred of Mordecai

5:9 Now Haman went forth that day pleased and very much encouraged.[8] But when Haman saw Mordecai at the king's gate, and he did not rise nor tremble in his presence,[9] Haman was filled with rage toward Mordecai. 5:10 But Haman restrained himself and went on to his home.

He then sent for his friends to join him,[10] along with his wife Zeresh. 5:11 Haman then recounted to them his fabulous wealth,[11] his many sons,[12] and how the king had magnified him and exalted him over the king's other officials and servants. 5:12 Haman said, "Furthermore, Queen Esther invited[13] only me to accompany the king to the banquet that she prepared! And also tomorrow I am invited[14] along with the king. 5:13 Yet all of this fails to satisfy me so long as I have to see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate."

5:14 Haman's[15] wife Zeresh and all his friends said to him, "Have a gallows seventy-five feet[16] high built, and in the morning tell the king that Mordecai should be hanged on it. Then go with the king to the banquet contented."[17]

It seemed like a good idea to Haman, so he had the gallows built.

The Turning Point: The King Honors Mordecai

6:1 Throughout that night the king was unable to sleep,[18] so he asked for the book containing the historical records[19] to be brought. As the records[20] were being read in the king's presence, 6:2 it was found written that Mordecai had disclosed that Bigthana[21] and Teresh, two of the king's eunuchs who guarded the entrance, had plotted to assassinate[22] King Ahasuerus.

6:3 The king asked, "What great honor[23] was bestowed on Mordecai because of this?"

[1] tn Heb "What to you?"; NAB, NIV NRSV "What is it, Queen Esther?"

[2] tn Heb "If upon the king it is good"; NASB "If it please the king."

[3] sn As much as half the kingdom. Such a statement would no doubt have been understood for the exaggeration that it clearly was. Cf. the similar NT scene recorded in Mark 6:23, where Herod makes a similar promise to the daughter of Herodias. In that case the request was for the head of John the Baptist, which is a lot less than half the kingdom.

[4] tn Heb "answered and said." This is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

[5] tn Heb "if upon the king it is good." Cf. the similar expression in v. 4, which also occurs in 7:3; 8:5; 9:13.

[6] tn Heb "and tomorrow" (so NASB); NAB, NRSV "and then."

[7] tn Heb "I will do according to the word of the king," i.e., answer the question that he has posed. Cf. NCV "Then I will answer your question about what I want."

[8] tn Heb "happy and good of heart"; NASB "glad and pleased of heart"; NIV "happy and in high spirits."

[9] tn Heb "tremble from before him"; NIV "nor showed fear in his presence"; TEV "or show any sign of respect as he passed."

[10] tn Heb "sent and brought." The expression is probably a hendiadys (a figure of speech in which a single idea is expressed through two words or phrases), in which case the two verbs could be translated simply as "summoned" (so NAB) or "sent for" (NASB).

[11] tn Heb "the glory of his riches" (so KJV, NASB); NRSV "the splendor of his riches."

[12] sn According to Esth 9:10 Haman had ten sons.

[13] tn Heb "caused to come"; KJV "did let no man come in... but myself."

[14] tn Heb "called to her"; KJV "invited unto her"; NAB "I am to be her guest."

[15] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Haman) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Heb "fifty cubits." Assuming a standard length for the cubit of about 18 inches (45 cm), this would be about seventy-five feet (22.5 meters), which is a surprisingly tall height for the gallows. Perhaps the number assumes the gallows was built on a large supporting platform or a natural hill for visual effect, in which case the structure itself may have been considerably smaller. Cf. NCV "a seventy-five foot platform"; CEV "a tower built about seventy-five feet high."

[17] tn Or "joyful"; NRSV "in good spirits"; TEV "happy."

[18] tn Heb "and the sleep of the king fled." In place of the rather innocuous comment of the Hebrew text, the LXX reads here, "And the Lord removed the sleep from the king." The Greek text thus understands the statement in a more overtly theological way than does the Hebrew text, although even in the Hebrew text there may be a hint of God's providence at work in this matter. After all, this event is crucial to the later reversal of Haman's plot to destroy the Jewish people, and a sympathetic reader is likely to look beyond the apparent coincidence.

[19] tn Heb "the book of the remembrances of the accounts of the days"; NAB "the chronicle of notable events."

[20] tn Heb "they"; the referent (the records) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn This individual is referred to as "Bigthan," a variant spelling of the name, in Esth 2:21.

[22] tn Heb "to send a hand against"; NASB "had sought to lay hands on."

[23] tn Heb "honor and greatness." The expression is a hendiadys (see the note on 5:10 for an explanation of this figure).

The king's attendants who served him responded, "Not a thing was done for him."

6:4 Then the king said, "Who is that in the courtyard?" Now Haman had come to the outer courtyard of the palace to suggest that the king hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had constructed for him. 6:5 The king's attendants said to him, "It is Haman who is standing in the courtyard." The king said, "Let him enter."

6:6 So Haman came in, and the king said to him, "What should be done for the man whom the king wishes to honor?" Haman thought to himself,[1] "Who is it that the king would want to honor more than me?" 6:7 So Haman said to the king, "For the man whom the king wishes to honor, 6:8 let them bring royal attire which the king himself has worn and a horse on which the king himself has ridden – one bearing the royal insignia![2] 6:9 Then let this clothing and this horse be given to one of the king's noble officials. Let him[3] then clothe the man whom the king wishes to honor, and let him lead him about through the plaza of the city on the horse, calling[4] before him, 'So shall it be done to the man whom the king wishes to honor!'"

6:10 The king then said to Haman, "Go quickly! Take the clothing and the horse, just as you have described, and do as you just indicated to Mordecai the Jew who sits at the king's gate. Don't neglect[5] a single thing of all that you have said."

6:11 So Haman took the clothing and the horse, and he clothed Mordecai. He led him about on the horse throughout the plaza of the city, calling before him, "So shall it be done to the man whom the king wishes to honor!"

6:12 Then Mordecai again sat at the king's gate, while Haman hurried away to his home, mournful and with a veil over his head. 6:13 Haman then related to his wife Zeresh and to all his friends everything that had happened to him. These wise men,[6] along with his wife Zeresh, said to him, "If indeed this Mordecai before whom you have begun to fall is Jewish,[7] you will not prevail against him. No, you will surely fall before him!"

6:14 While they were still speaking with him, the king's eunuchs arrived. They quickly brought Haman to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

The King Has Haman Executed

7:1 So the king and Haman came to dine[8] with Queen Esther. 7:2 On the second day of the banquet of wine the king asked Esther, "What is your request, Queen Esther? It shall be granted to you. And what is your petition? Ask up to half the kingdom, and it shall be done!"

7:3 Queen Esther replied, "If I have met with your approval,[9] O king, and if the king is so inclined, grant me my life as my request, and my people as my petition. 7:4 For we have been sold[10] – both I and my people – to destruction and to slaughter and to annihilation! If we had simply been sold as male and female slaves, I would have remained silent, for such distress would not have been sufficient for troubling the king."

7:5 Then King Ahasuerus responded[11] to Queen Esther, "Who is this individual? Where is this person to be found who is presumptuous enough[12] to act in this way?"

7:6 Esther replied, "The oppressor and enemy is this evil Haman!"

Then Haman became terrified in the presence of the king and queen. 7:7 In rage the king arose from the banquet of wine and withdrew to the palace garden. Meanwhile, Haman stood to beg Queen Esther for his life,[13] for he realized that the king had now determined a catastrophic end for him.[14]

7:8 When the king returned from the palace garden to the banquet of wine, Haman was

[1] tn Heb "said in his heart" (so ASV); NASB, NRSV "said to himself."

[2] tc The final comment ("one on whose head the royal crown has been") is not included in the LXX.

tn Heb "a royal crown on his head." The reference is to an official decoration or headdress for horses in royal service. See HALOT 506 s.v. כֶּתֶר; DCH 4:477 s.v. כֶּתֶר. Cf. TEV "a royal ornament"; CEV "a fancy headdress."

[3] tc The present translation reads with the LXX וְהַלְבִּישׁוּ (vehilbisho, "and he will clothe him") rather than the reading of the MT וְהַלְבִּישׁוּ (vehilbishu, "and they will clothe"). The reading of the LXX is also followed by NAB, NRSV, TEV, CEV, and NLT. Likewise, the later verbs in this verse ("cause him to ride" and "call") are better taken as singulars rather than plurals.

[4] tn Heb "and let them call" (see the previous note).

[5] tn Heb "do not let fall"; NASB "do not fall short."

[6] tc Part of the Greek tradition and the Syriac Peshitta understand this word as "friends," probably reading the Hebrew term רֵעָיו (rakhamayv, "his friends") rather than the reading of the MT חֲכָמָיו (hakhamayv, "his wise men"). Cf. NLT "all his friends"; the two readings appear to be conflated by TEV as "those wise friends of his."

[7] tn Heb "from the seed of the Jews"; KJV, ASV similar.

[8] tn Heb "to drink"; NASB "to drink wine." The expression is a metaphor for lavish feasting, cf. NRSV "to feast"; KJV "to banquet."

[9] tn Heb "If I have found grace in your eyes" (so also in 8:5); TEV "If it please Your Majesty."

[10] sn The passive verb ("have been sold") is noncommittal and nonaccusatory with regard to the king's role in the decision to annihilate the Jews.

[11] tc The second occurrence of the Hebrew verb וַיֹּאמֶר (vayyo'mer, "and he said") in the MT should probably be disregarded. The repetition is unnecessary in the context and may be the result of dittography in the MT.

[12] tn Heb "has so filled his heart"; NAB "who has dared to do this."

[13] sn There is great irony here in that the man who set out to destroy all the Jews now finds himself begging for his own life from a Jew.

throwing himself down[1] on the couch where Esther was lying.[2] The king exclaimed, "Will he also attempt to rape the queen while I am still in the building!"

As these words left the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face. 7:9 Harbona,[3] one of the king's eunuchs, said, "Indeed, there is the gallows that Haman made for Mordecai, who spoke out in the king's behalf. It stands near Haman's home and is seventy-five feet[4] high."

The king said, "Hang him on it!" 7:10 So they hanged Haman on the very gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. The king's rage then abated.

The King Acts to Protect the Jews

8:1 On that same day King Ahasuerus gave the estate[5] of Haman, that adversary of the Jews, to Queen Esther. Now Mordecai had come before the king, for Esther had revealed how he was related to her. 8:2 The king then removed his signet ring (the very one he had taken back from Haman) and gave it to Mordecai. And Esther designated Mordecai to be in charge of Haman's estate.

8:3 Then Esther again spoke with the king, falling at his feet. She wept and begged him for mercy, that he might nullify the evil of Haman the Agagite which he had intended against the Jews.[6] 8:4 When the king extended to Esther the gold scepter, she[7] arose and stood before the king.

8:5 She said, "If the king is so inclined and if I have met with his approval and if the matter is agreeable to the king and if I am attractive to him, let an edict be written rescinding those recorded intentions of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite,[8] which he wrote in order to destroy the Jews who are throughout all the king's provinces. 8:6 For how can I watch the calamity that will befall my people, and how can I watch the destruction of my relatives?"[9]

8:7 King Ahasuerus replied to Queen Esther and to Mordecai the Jew, "Look, I have already given Haman's estate to Esther, and he has been hanged on the gallows because he took hostile action[10] against the Jews. 8:8 Now you write in the king's name whatever in your opinion is appropriate concerning the Jews and seal it with the king's signet ring. Any decree that is written in the king's name and sealed with the king's signet ring cannot be rescinded.

8:9 The king's scribes were quickly[11] summoned – in the third month (that is, the month of Sivan), on the twenty-third day.[12] They wrote out[13] everything that Mordecai instructed to the Jews and to the satraps and the governors and the officials of the provinces all the way from India to Ethiopia[14] – a hundred and twenty-seven provinces in all – to each province in its own script and to each people in their own language, and to the Jews according to their own script and their own language. 8:10 Mordecai[15] wrote in the name of King Ahasuerus and sealed it with the king's signet ring. He then sent letters by couriers on horses, who rode royal horses that were very swift.

8:11 The king thereby allowed the Jews who were in every city to assemble and to stand up for themselves – to destroy, to kill, and to annihilate any army of whatever people or province that should become their adversaries, including their women and children,[16] and to confiscate their property. 8:12 This was to take place on a certain day throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus – namely, on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar). 8:13 A copy of the edict was to be presented as law throughout each and every province and made known to all peoples, so that the Jews might be prepared on that[17] day to avenge themselves from their enemies.

8:14 The couriers who were riding the royal horses went forth with the king's edict without delay.[18] And the law was presented in Susa the citadel as well.

[15] tn Heb "He"; the referent (Mordecai) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Heb "children and women." As in 3:13, the translation follows contemporary English idiom, which reverses the order.

[17] tn Heb "this" (so NASB); most English versions read "that" here for stylistic reasons.

[18] tn Heb "making haste and hurrying"; KJV, ASV "being hastened and pressed."

8:15 Now Mordecai went out from the king's presence in purple and white royal attire, with a large golden crown and a purple linen mantle. The city of Susa shouted with joy.[1] 8:16 For the Jews there was radiant happiness and joyous honor.[2] 8:17 Throughout every province and throughout every city where the king's edict and his law arrived, the Jews experienced happiness and joy, banquets and holidays. Many of the resident peoples[3] pretended[4] to be Jews, because the fear of the Jews had overcome them.[5]

The Jews Prevail over Their Enemies

9:1 In the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar), on its thirteenth day, the edict of the king and his law were to be executed. It was on this day that the enemies of the Jews had supposed that they would gain power over them. But contrary to expectations, the Jews gained power over their enemies. 9:2 The Jews assembled themselves in their cities throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus to strike out against those who were seeking their harm. No one was able to stand before them, for dread of them fell on all the peoples. 9:3 All the officials of the provinces, the satraps, the governors and those who performed the king's business were assisting the Jews, for the dread of Mordecai had fallen on them. 9:4 Mordecai was of high rank[6] in the king's palace, and word about him was spreading throughout all the provinces. His influence[7] continued to become greater and greater.

9:5 The Jews struck all their enemies with the sword, bringing death and destruction, and they did as they pleased with their enemies. 9:6 In Susa the citadel the Jews killed and destroyed five hundred men. 9:7 In addition, they also killed Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, 9:8 Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, 9:9 Parmashta, Arisai, Aridai, and Vaizatha, 9:10 the ten sons of Haman son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews. But they did not confiscate their property.

9:11 On that same day the number of those killed in Susa the citadel was brought to the king's attention. 9:12 Then the king said to Queen Esther, "In Susa the citadel the Jews have killed and destroyed five hundred men and the ten sons of Haman! What then have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? What is your request? It shall be given to you. What other petition do you have? It shall be done."

9:13 Esther replied, "If the king is so inclined, let the Jews who are in Susa be permitted to act tomorrow also according to today's law, and let them hang the ten sons of Haman on the gallows."

9:14 So the king issued orders for this to be done. A law was passed in Susa, and the ten sons of Haman were hanged. 9:15 The Jews who were in Susa then assembled on the fourteenth day of the month of Adar, and they killed three hundred men in Susa. But they did not confiscate their property.

9:16 The rest of the Jews who were throughout the provinces of the king assembled in order to stand up for themselves and to have rest from their enemies. They killed seventy-five thousand[8] of their adversaries, but they did not confiscate their property. 9:17 All of this happened on the thirteenth day of the month of Adar. They then rested on the fourteenth day and made it a day for banqueting and happiness.

The Origins of the Feast of Purim

9:18 But the Jews who were in Susa assembled on the thirteenth and fourteenth days, and rested on the fifteenth, making it a day for banqueting and happiness. 9:19 This is why the Jews who are in the rural country – those who live in rural cities – set aside the fourteenth day of the month of Adar as a holiday for happiness, banqueting, holiday, and sending gifts to one another.

9:20 Mordecai wrote these matters down and sent letters to all the Jews who were throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus, both near and far, 9:21 to have them observe the fourteenth and the fifteenth day of the month of Adar each year 9:22 as the time when the Jews gave themselves rest from their enemies – the month when their trouble was turned to happiness and their mourning to a holiday. These were to be days of banqueting, happi-

[1] tn Heb "shouted and rejoiced." The expression is a hendiadys (see the note on 5:10 for an explanation of this figure).

[2] tn Heb "light and gladness and joy and honor" (so NASB). The present translation understands the four terms to be a double hendiadys.

[3] tn Heb "peoples of the land" (so NASB); NIV "people of other nationalities"; NRSV "peoples of the country."

[4] tn Heb "were becoming Jews"; NAB "embraced Judaism." However, the Hitpael stem of the verb is sometimes used of a feigning action rather than a genuine one (see, e.g., 2 Sam 13:5, 6), which is the way the present translation understands the use of the word here (cf. NEB "professed themselves Jews"; NRSV "professed to be Jews"). This is the only occurrence of this verb in the Hebrew Bible, so there are no exact parallels. However, in the context of v. 17 the motivation of their conversion (Heb "the fear of the Jews had fallen upon them") should not be overlooked. The LXX apparently understood the conversion described here to be genuine, since it adds the words "they were being circumcised and" before "they became Jews."

[5] tn Heb "had fallen upon them" (so NRSV); NIV "had seized them."

[6] tn Heb "great"; NRSV "powerful"; NIV "prominent"; NCV "very important."

[7] tn Heb "the man Mordecai" (so NASB, NRSV).

[8] tc For this number much of the Greek MS tradition reads "fifteen thousand." The Lucianic Greek recension reads "70,100."

ness, sending gifts to one another, and providing for the poor.

9:23 So the Jews committed themselves to continue what they had begun to do and to what Mordecai had written to them. 9:24 For Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised plans against the Jews to destroy them. He had cast pur (that is, the lot) in order to afflict and destroy them. 9:25 But when the matter came to the king's attention, the king[1] gave written orders that Haman's[2] evil intentions that he had devised against the Jews should fall on his own head. He and his sons were hanged on the gallows. 9:26 For this reason these days are known as Purim, after the name of pur. 9:27 Therefore, because of the account found in this letter and what they had faced in this regard and what had happened to them, the Jews established as binding on themselves, their descendants, and all who joined their company that they should observe these two days without fail, just as written and at the appropriate time on an annual basis. 9:28 These days were to be remembered and to be celebrated in every generation and in every family, every province, and every city. The Jews were not to fail to observe these days of Purim; the remembrance of them was not to cease among their descendants.

9:29 So Queen Esther, the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew wrote with full authority to confirm this second[3] letter about Purim. 9:30 Letters were sent[4] to all the Jews in the hundred and twenty-seven provinces of the empire of Ahasuerus – words of true peace[5] – 9:31 to establish these days of Purim in their proper times, just as Mordecai the Jew and Queen Esther had established, and just as they had established both for themselves and their descendants, matters pertaining to fasting and lamentation. 9:32 Esther's command established these matters of Purim, and the matter was officially recorded.[6]

[1] tn Heb "he"; the referent (the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Haman) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tc The LXX and the Syriac Peshitta omit the word "second."

[4] tc The present translation is based on the Niphal form וַיִּשָּׁלַח (vayyishalakh, "were sent"; so also NRSV, TEV, CEV, NLT) rather than the reading of the MT וַיִּשְׁלַח (vayyishlakh, Qal, "and he sent"). The subject of the MT verb would have to be Mordecai (cf. NAB, NIV, NCV), but this is problematic in light of v. 29, where both Esther and Mordecai are responsible for the letters.

[5] tn Heb "peace and truth." The expression is probably a hendiadys (see the note on 5:10 for an explanation of this figure).

[6] tn Heb "written in the book" (so NASB); NIV, NLT "written down in the records"; NRSV "recorded in writing."

Mordecai's Fame Increases

10:1 King Ahasuerus then imposed forced labor on the land and on the coastlands of the sea. 10:2 Now all the actions carried out under his authority and his great achievements, along with an exact statement concerning the greatness of Mordecai, whom the king promoted, are they not written in the Book of the Chronicles[7] of the Kings of Media and Persia? 10:3 Mordecai the Jew was second only to King Ahasuerus. He was the highest-ranking[8] Jew, and he was admired by his numerous relatives.[9] He worked enthusiastically[10] for the good of his people and was an advocate for the welfare of[11] all his descendants.[12]

[7] tn Or "the Book of the Official Records."

[8] tn Heb "great among the Jews" (so KJV, NASB); NIV "preeminent among the Jews"; NRSV "powerful among the Jews."

[9] tn Heb "brothers"; NASB "kinsmen"; NIV "fellow Jews."

[10] tn Heb "he was seeking"; NAB "as the promoter of his people's welfare."

[11] tn Heb "he was speaking peace to"; NRSV "and interceded for the welfare of."

[12] sn A number of additions to the Book of Esther appear in the apocryphal (or deuterocanonical) writings. These additions supply further information about various scenes described in the canonical book and are interesting in their own right. However, they were never a part of the Hebrew Bible. The placement of this additional material in certain Greek manuscripts of the Book of Esther may be described as follows. At the beginning of Esther there is an account (= chapter 11) of a dream in which Mordecai is warned by God of a coming danger for the Jews. In this account two great dragons, representing Mordecai and Haman, prepare for conflict. But God responds to the prayers of his people, and the crisis is resolved. This account is followed by another one (= chapter 12) in which Mordecai is rewarded for disclosing a plot against the king's life. After Esth 3:13 there is a copy of a letter from King Artaxerxes authorizing annihilation of the Jews (= chapter 13). After Esth 4:17 the account continues with a prayer of Mordecai (= part of chapter 13), followed by a prayer of Esther (= chapter 14), and an account which provides details about Esther's appeal to the king in behalf of her people (= chapter 15). After Esth 8:12 there is a copy of a letter from King Artaxerxes in which he denounces Haman and his plot and authorizes his subjects to assist the Jews (= chapter 16). At the end of the book, following Esth 10:3, there is an addition which provides an interpretation to Mordecai's dream, followed by a brief ascription of genuineness to the entire book (= chapter 11).

Job

I. The Prologue (1:1-2:13)

Job's Good Life[1]

1:1[2] There was a man[3] in the land of Uz[4] whose[5] name was Job.[6] And that man was pure[7] and upright,[8] one who feared God and turned away from evil.[9] 1:2 Seven[10] sons and three daughters were born to him.[11]

[1] sn See N. C. Habel, "The Narrative Art of Job," JSOT 27 (1983): 101-11; J. J. Owens, "Prologue and Epilogue," Rev-Exp 68 (1971): 457-67; and R. Polzin, "The Framework of the Book of Job," Int 31 (1974): 182-200.

[2] sn The book of Job is one of the major books of wisdom literature in the Bible. But it is a different kind of wisdom. Whereas the book of Proverbs is a collection of the short wisdom sayings, Job is a thorough analysis of the relationship between suffering and divine justice put in a dramatic poetic form. There are a number of treatises on this subject in the ancient Near East, but none of them are as thorough and masterful as Job. See J. Gray, "The Book of Job in the Context of Near Eastern Literature," ZAW 82 (1970): 251-69; S. N. Kramer, "Man and His God, A Sumerian Variation on the 'Job' Motif," VTSup 3 (1953): 170-82. While the book has fascinated readers for ages, it is a difficult book, difficult to translate and difficult to study. Most of it is written in poetic parallelism. But it is often very cryptic, it is written with unusual grammatical constructions, and it makes use of a large number of very rare words. All this has led some scholars to question if it was originally written in Hebrew or some other related Semitic dialect or language first. There is no indication of who the author was. It is even possible that the work may have been refined over the years, but there is no evidence for this either. The book uses a variety of genres (laments, hymns, proverbs, and oracles) in the various speeches of the participants. This all adds to the richness of the material. And while it is a poetic drama using cycles of speeches, there is no reason to doubt that the events represented here do not go back to a real situation and preserve the various arguments. Several indications in the book would place Job's dates in the time of the patriarchs. But the composition of the book, or at least its final form, may very well come from the first millennium, maybe in the time of the flowering of wisdom literature with Solomon. We have no way of knowing when the book was written, or when its revision was completed. But dating it late in the intertestamental period is ruled out by the appearance of translations and copies of it, notably bits of a Targum of Job in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Among the general works and commentaries, see A. Hurvitz, "The Date of the Prose Tale of Job Linguistically Reconsidered," HTR 67 (1974): 17-34; R. H. Pfeiffer, "The Priority of Job over Isaiah 40-55," JBL 46 (1927): 202ff. The book presents many valuable ideas on the subject of the suffering of the righteous. Ultimately it teaches that one must submit to the wisdom of the Creator. But it also indicates that the shallow answers of Job's friends do not do justice to the issue. Their arguments that suffering is due to sin are true to a point, but they did not apply to Job. His protests sound angry and belligerent, but he held tenaciously to his integrity. His experience shows that it is possible to live a pure life and yet still suffer. He finally turns his plea to God, demanding a hearing. This he receives, of course, only to hear that God is sovereignly ruling the universe. Job can only submit to him. In the end God does not abandon his sufferer. For additional material, see G. L. Archer, The Book of Job; H. H. Rowley, "The Book of Job and Its Meaning," BJRL 41 (1958/59): 167-207; J. A. Baker, The Book of Job; C. L. Feinberg, "The Book of Job," BSac 91 (1934): 78-86; R. Polzin and D. Robertson, "Studies in the Book of Job," Semeia 7 (Missoula: Scholars Press, 1977).

[3] tn The Hebrew construction is literally "a man was," using אִישׁ הָיָה ('ish hayah) rather than a preterite first. This simply begins the narrative.

[4] sn The term Uz occurs several times in the Bible: a son of Aram (Gen 10:23), a son of Nahor (Gen 22:21), and a descendant of Seir (Gen 36:28). If these are the clues to follow, the location would be north of Syria or south near Edom. The book tells how Job's flocks were exposed to Chaldeans, the tribes between Syria and the Euphrates (1:17), and in another direction to attacks from the Sabeans (1:15). The most prominent man among his friends was from Teman, which was in Edom (2:11). Uz is also connected with Edom in Lamentations 4:21. The most plausible location, then, would be east of Israel and northeast of Edom, in what is now North Arabia. The LXX has "on the borders of Edom and Arabia." An early Christian tradition placed his home in an area about 40 miles south of Damascus, in Baashan at the southeast foot of Hermon.

[5] tn In Hebrew the defining relative clause ("whose name was Job") is actually an asyndetic verbless noun-clause placed in apposition to the substantive ("a man"); see GKC 486 §155.e.

[6] sn The name "Job" is mentioned by Ezekiel as one of the greats in the past – Noah, Job, and Daniel (14:14). The suffering of Job was probably well known in the ancient world, and this name was clearly part of that tradition. There is little reason to try to determine the etymology and meaning of the name, since it may not be Hebrew. If it were Hebrew, it might mean something like "persecuted," although some suggest "aggressor." If Arabic it might have the significance of "the one who always returns to God."

[7] tn The word תָּם (tam) has been translated "perfect" (so KJV, ASV). The verbal root תָּמַם (tamam) means "to be blameless, complete." The word is found in Gen 25:27 where it describes Jacob as "even-tempered." It also occurs in Ps 64:5 (64:4 ET) and Prov 29:10. The meaning is that a person or a thing is complete, perfect, flawless. It does not mean that he was sinless, but that he was wholeheartedly trying to please God, that he had integrity and was blameless before God.

[8] tn The word יָשָׁר (yashar, "upright") is complementary to "blameless." The idea is "upright, just," and applies to his relationships with others (Ps 37:37 and 25:21).

[9] sn These two expressions indicate the outcome of Job's character. "Fearing God" and "turning from evil" also express two correlative ideas in scripture; they signify his true piety – he had reverential fear of the LORD, meaning he was a truly devoted worshiper who shunned evil.

[10] sn The numbers used in the chapter, seven, three, and five, carry the symbolism in the Bible of perfection and completeness (see J. J. Davis, Biblical Numerology). Job's "seven sons" are listed first because in the East sons were considered more valuable than daughters (recall Ruth, who is "better than seven sons" [Ruth 4:15]).

[11] tn The verb begins the sentence: "and there were born." This use of the preterite with vav (ו) consecutive, especially after the verb הָיָה (hayah, "to be"), is explanatory: there was a man...and there was born to him..." (IBHS 551-52 §33.2.2b).

1:3 His possessions[1] included[2] 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, and 500 female donkeys; in addition he had a very great household.[3] Thus he[4] was the greatest of all the people in the east.[5]

1:4 Now his sons used to go[6] and hold[7] a feast in the house of each one in turn,[8] and they would send and invite[9] their three[10] sisters to eat and to drink with them. 1:5 When[11] the days of their feasting were finished,[12] Job would send[13] for them and sanctify[14] them; he would get up early[15] in the morning and offer burnt offerings according to[16] the number of them all. For Job thought, "Perhaps[17] my children[18] have sinned and cursed[19] God in their hearts." This was Job's customary practice.[20]

Satan's Accusation of Job[21]

1:6 Now the day came when[22] the sons of God[23] came to present themselves

---

[1] tn The word means "cattle, livestock, possessions" (see also Gen 26:14). Here it includes the livestock, but also the entire substance of his household.

[2] tn Or "amounted to," "totaled." The preterite of הָיָה (hayah, "to be") is sometimes employed to introduce a total amount or an inventory (see Exod 1:5; Num 3:43).

[3] tn The word עֲבֻדָּה ('avuddah, "service of household servants") indicates that he had a very large body of servants, meaning a very large household.

[4] tn Heb "and that man."

[5] tn The expression is literally "sons of the east." The use of the genitive after "sons" in this construction may emphasize their nature (like "sons of belial"); it would refer to them as easterners (like "sons of the south" in contemporary American English). BDB 869 s.v. קֶדֶם says "dwellers in the east."

[6] tn The perfect verb with the ו (vav), וְהָלְכוּ (v^{e}hal^{e}khu, "they went") indicates their characteristic action, actions that were frequently repeated (GKC 335-36 §112.dd).

[7] tn Heb "make a feast."

[8] tn The sense is cryptic; it literally says "house – a man – his day." The word "house" is an adverbial accusative of place: "in the house." "Man" is the genitive; it also has a distributive sense: "in the house of each man." And "his day" is an adverbial accusative: "on his day." The point is that they feasted every day of the week in rotation.

[9] tn The use of קָרָא (qara', "to call, invite") followed by the ל (lamed) usually has the force of "to summon." Here the meaning would not be so commanding, but would refer to an invitation (see also 1 Kgs 1:19, 25, 26).

[10] tn Normally cardinal numerals tend to disagree in gender with the numbered noun. In v. 2 "three daughters" consists of the masculine numeral followed by the feminine noun. However, here "three sisters" consists of the feminine numeral followed by the feminine noun. The distinction appears to be that the normal disagreement between numeral and noun when the intent is merely to fix the number (3 daughters as opposed to 2 or 4 daughters). However, when a particular, previously known group is indicated, the numeral tends to agree with the noun in gender. A similar case occurs in Gen 3:13 ("three wives" of Noah's sons).

[11] tn The verse begins with the temporal indicator "and it happened" or "and it came to pass," which need not be translated. The particle כִּי (ki, "when") with the initial verbal form indicates it is a temporal clause.

[12] tn The verb is the Hiphil perfect of נָקַף (naqaf, "go around"), here it means "to make the round" or "complete the circuit" (BDB 668-69 s.v. II נָקַף Hiph). It indicates that when the feasting had made its circuit of the seven sons, then Job would sanctify them.

[13] tn The form is a preterite with vav (ו) consecutive. The same emphasis on repeated or frequent action continues here in this verse. The idea here is that Job would send for them, because the sanctification of them would have consisted of washings and changes of garments as well as the sacrifices (see Gen 35:2; 1 Sam 16:5).

[14] tn Or "purify."

[15] tn The first verb could also be joined with the next to form a verbal hendiadys: "he would rise early and he would sacrifice" would then simply be "he would sacrifice early in the morning" (see M. Delcor, "Quelques cas de survivances du vocabulaire nomade en hébreu biblique," VT 25 [1975]: 307-22). This section serves to explain in more detail how Job sanctified his children.

sn In the patriarchal society it was normal for the father to act as priest for the family, making the sacrifices as needed. Job here is exceptional in his devotion to the duty. The passage shows the balance between the greatest earthly rejoicing by the family, and the deepest piety and affection of the father.

[16] tn The text does not have "according to"; the noun "number" is an accusative that defines the extent of his actions (GKC 373-74 §118.e, h).

[17] tn The clause stands as an accusative to the verb, here as the direct object introduced with "perhaps" (IBHS 645-46 §38.8d).

[18] tn Heb "sons," but since the three daughters are specifically mentioned in v. 4, "children" has been used in the translation. In this patriarchal culture, however, it is possible that only the sons are in view.

[19] tn The Hebrew verb is בָּרַךְ (barakh), which means "to bless." Here is a case where the writer or a scribe has substituted the word "curse" with the word "bless" to avoid having the expression "curse God." For similar euphemisms in the ancient world, see K. A. Kitchen, Ancient Orient and Old Testament, 166. It is therefore difficult to know exactly what Job feared they might have done. The opposite of "bless" would be "curse," which normally would convey disowning or removing from blessing. Some commentators try to offer a definition of "curse" from the root in the text, and noting that "curse" is too strong, come to something like "renounce." The idea of blaspheming is probably not meant; rather, in their festivities they may have said things that renounced God or their interest in him. Job feared this momentary turning away from God in their festivities, perhaps as they thought their good life was more important than their religion.

[20] tn The imperfect expresses continual action in past time, i.e., a customary imperfect (GKC 315 §107.e).

[21] sn The text draws the curtain of heaven aside for the reader to understand the background of this drama. God extols the virtue of Job, but Satan challenges the reasons for it. He receives permission to try to dislodge Job from his integrity. In short, God is using Job to prove Satan's theory wrong.

[22] tn The beginning Hebrew expression "and there was – the day" indicates that "there came a day when" or more simply "the day came when." It emphasizes the particular day. The succeeding clause is then introduced with a preterite with the with vav (ו) consecutive (see E. Dhorme, Job, 5).

[23] sn The "sons of God" in the OT is generally taken to refer to angels. They are not actually "sons" of Elohim; the idiom is a poetic way of describing their nature and relationship to God. The phrase indicates their supernatural nature, and their submission to God as the sovereign Lord. It may be classified as a genitive that expresses how individuals belong to a certain class or type, i.e., the supernatural (GKC 418 §128.v). In the pagan literature, especially of Ugarit, "the sons of God" refers to the lesser gods or deities of the pantheon. See H. W. Robinson, "The Council of Yahweh," JTS 45 (1943): 151-57; G. Cooke, "The Sons of (the) God(s)," ZAW 76 (1964): 22-47; M. Tsevat, "God and the Gods in the Assembly," HUCA 40-41 (1969/70): 123-37.

before[1] the LORD – and Satan[2] also arrived among them. 1:7 The LORD said to Satan, "Where have you come from?"[3] And Satan answered the LORD,[4] "From roving about[5] on the earth, and from walking back and forth across it."[6] 1:8 So the LORD said to Satan, "Have you considered[7] my servant Job? There[8] is no one like him on the earth, a pure and upright man, one who fears God and turns away[9] from evil."

1:9 Then Satan answered the LORD, "Is it for nothing that Job fears God?[10] 1:10 Have you[11] not made a hedge[12] around him and his household and all that he has on every side? You have blessed[13] the work of his hands, and his livestock[14] have increased[15] in the land. 1:11 But[16] extend your hand and strike[17] everything he has, and he will no doubt[18] curse you[19] to your face!"

1:12 So the LORD said to Satan, "All right then,[20] everything he has is[21] in your power.[22] Only do not extend your hand against the man himself!"[23] So Satan went out[24] from the presence of the LORD.[25]

1 tn The preposition עַל ('al) in this construction after a verb of standing or going means "before" (GKC 383 §119.cc).

2 sn The word means "adversary" or with the article "the adversary" – here the superhuman adversary or Satan. The word with the article means that the meaning of the word should receive prominence. A denominative verb meaning "to act as adversary" occurs. Satan is the great accuser of the saints (see Zech 3 where "Satan was standing there to 'satanize' Joshua the priest"; and see Rev 12 which identifies him with the Serpent in Genesis). He came among the angels at this time because he is one of them and has access among them. Even though fallen, Satan has yet to be cast down completely (see Rev 12).

3 tn The imperfect may be classified as progressive imperfect; it indicates action that although just completed is regarded as still lasting into the present (GKC 316 §107.h).

4 tn Heb "answered the LORD and said" (also in v. 9). The words "and said" here and in v. 9 have not been included in the translation for stylistic reasons.

5 tn The verb שׁוּט (shut) means "to go or rove about" (BDB 1001-2 s.v.). Here the infinitive construct serves as the object of the preposition.

6 tn The Hitpael (here also an infinitive construct after the preposition) of the verb הָלַךְ (halakh) means "to walk to and fro, back and forth, with the sense of investigating or reconnoitering (see e.g. Gen 13:17).

sn As the words are spoken by Satan, there is no self-condemnation in them. What they signify is the swiftness and thoroughness of his investigation of humans. The good angels are said to go to and fro in the earth on behalf of the suffering righteous (Zech 1:10, 11; 6:7), but Satan goes seeking whom he may devour (1 Pet 5:8).

7 tn The Hebrew has "have you placed your heart on Job?" This means "direct your mind to" (cf. BDB 963 s.v. I שׂוּם 2.b).

sn The question is undoubtedly rhetorical, for it is designed to make Satan aware of Job as God extols his fine qualities.

8 tn The Hebrew conjunction כִּי (ki) need not be translated in this case or it might be taken as emphatic (cf. IBHS 665 §39.3.4e): "Certainly there is no one like him."

9 tn The same expressions that appeared at the beginning of the chapter appear here in the words of God. In contrast to that narrative report about Job, the emphasis here is on Job's present character, and so the participle form is translated here asa gnomic or characteristic present ("turns"). It modifies "man" as one who is turning from evil.

10 tn The Hebrew form has the interrogative ה (he) on the adverb חִנָּם (khinnam, "gratis"), a derivative either of the verb חָנַן (khanan, "to be gracious, show favor"), or its related noun חֵן (khen, "grace, favor"). The adverb has the sense of "free; gratis; gratuitously; for nothing; for no reason" (see BDB 336 s.v. חִנָּם). The idea is that Satan does not disagree that Job is pious, but that Job is loyal to God because of what he receives from God. He will test the sincerity of Job.

11 tn The use of the independent personal pronoun here emphasizes the subject of the verb: "Have you not put up a hedge."

12 tn The verb שׂוּךְ (sukh) means "to hedge or fence up, about" something (BDB 962 s.v. I שׂוּךְ). The original idea seems to have been to surround with a wall of thorns for the purpose of protection (E. Dhorme, Job, 7). The verb is an implied comparison between making a hedge and protecting someone.

13 sn Here the verb "bless" is used in one of its very common meanings. The verb means "to enrich," often with the sense of enabling or empowering things for growth or fruitfulness. See further C. Westermann, Blessing in the Bible and the Life of the Church (OBT).

14 tn Or "substance." The herds of livestock may be taken by metonymy of part for whole to represent possessions or prosperity in general.

15 tn The verb פָּרַץ (parats) means "to break through." It has the sense of abundant increase, as in breaking out, overflowing (see also Gen 30:30 and Exod 1:12).

16 tn The particle אוּלָם ('ulam, "but") serves to restrict the clause in relation to the preceding clause (IBHS 671-73 §39.3.5e, n. 107).

17 tn The force of the imperatives in this sentence are almost conditional – if God were to do this, then surely Job would respond differently.

sn The two imperatives ("stretch out" and "strike") and the word "hand" all form a bold anthropomorphic sentence. It is as if God would deliver a blow to Job with his fist. But the intended meaning is that God would intervene to destroy Job's material and physical prosperity.

18 sn The formula used in the expression is the oath formula: "if not to your face he will curse you" meaning "he will surely curse you to your face." Satan is so sure that the piety is insincere that he can use an oath formula.

19 tn See the comments on Job 1:5. Here too the idea of "renounce" may fit well enough, but the idea of actually cursing God may not be out of the picture if everything Job has is removed. Satan thinks he will denounce God.

20 tn The particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") introduces a foundational clause upon which the following volitional clause is based.

21 tn The versions add a verb here: "delivered to" or "abandoned to" the hand of Satan.

22 tn Heb "in your hand." The idiom means that it is now Satan's to do with as he pleases.

23 tn The Hebrew word order emphatically holds out Job's person as the exception: "only upon him do not stretch forth your hand."

24 tn The Targum to Job adds "with permission" to show that he was granted leave from God's presence.

25 sn So Satan, having received his permission to test Job's sincerity, goes out from the LORD's presence. But Satan is bound by the will of the Most High not to touch Job himself. The sentence gives the impression that Satan's departure is with a certain eagerness and confidence.

Job's Integrity in Adversity[1]

1:13 Now the day[2] came when Job's[3] sons and daughters were eating and drinking wine in their oldest brother's house, 1:14 and a messenger came to Job, saying, "The oxen were plowing[4] and the donkeys were grazing beside them, 1:15 and the Sabeans[5] swooped down[6] and carried them all away, and they killed[7] the servants with the sword![8] And I – only I alone[9] – escaped to tell you!"

1:16 While this one was still speaking,[10] another messenger arrived[11] and said, "The fire of God[12] has fallen from heaven[13] and has burned up the sheep and the servants – it has consumed them! And I – only I alone – escaped to tell you!"

1:17 While this one was still speaking another messenger arrived and said, "The Chaldeans[14] formed three bands and made a raid[15] on the camels and carried them all away, and they killed the servants with the sword![16] And I – only I alone – escaped to tell you!"

1:18 While this one was still speaking another messenger arrived and said, "Your sons and your daughters were eating and drinking wine in their oldest brother's house, 1:19 and suddenly[17] a great wind[18] swept across[19] the wilderness and struck the four corners of the house, and it fell on the young people, and they died! And I – only I alone – escaped to tell you!"

1:20 Then Job got up[20] and tore his robe.[21] He shaved his head,[22] and then he threw himself down with his face to the ground.[23]

[1] sn The series of catastrophes and the piety of Job is displayed now in comprehensive terms. Everything that can go wrong goes wrong, and yet Job, the pious servant of Yahweh, continues to worship him in the midst of the rubble. This section, and the next, will lay the foundation for the great dialogues in the book.

[2] tn The Targum to Job clarifies that it was the first day of the week. The fact that it was in the house of the firstborn is the reason.

[3] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn The use of the verb "to be" with the participle gives emphasis to the continuing of the action in the past (GKC 360 §116.r).

[5] tn The LXX has "the spoilers spoiled them" instead of "the Sabeans swooped down." The translators might have connected the word to שָׁבָה (shavah, "to take captive") rather than שְׁבָא (sh^{e}va', "Sabeans"), or they may have understood the name as general reference to all types of Bedouin invaders from southern Arabia (HALOT 1381 s.v. שְׁבָא 2.c).

sn The name "Sheba" is used to represent its inhabitants, or some of them. The verb is feminine because the name is a place name. The Sabeans were a tribe from the Arabian peninsula. They were traders mostly (6:19). The raid came from the south, suggesting that this band of Sabeans were near Edom. The time of the attack seems to be winter since the oxen were plowing.

[6] tn The Hebrew is simply "fell" (from נָפַל, nafal). To "fall upon" something in war means to attack quickly and suddenly.

[7] sn Job's servants were probably armed and gave resistance, which would be the normal case in that time. This was probably why they were "killed with the sword."

[8] tn Heb "the edge/mouth of the sword"; see T. J. Meek, "Archaeology and a Point of Hebrew Syntax," BASOR 122 (1951): 31-33.

[9] tn The pleonasms in the verse emphasize the emotional excitement of the messenger.

[10] tn The particle עוֹד ('od, "still") is used with the participle to express the past circumstances when something else happened (IBHS 625-26 §37.6d).

[11] tn The Hebrew expression is literally "yet/this/speaking/ and this/ arrived." The sentence uses the two demonstratives as a contrasting pair. It means "this one was still speaking when that one arrived" (IBHS 308-9 §17.3c). The word "messenger" has been supplied in the translation in vv. 16, 17, and 18 for clarity and for stylistic reasons.

[12] sn The "fire of God" would refer to lightning (1 Kgs 18:38; 2 Kgs 1:12; cf. NAB, NCV, TEV). The LXX simply has "fire." The first blow came from enemies; the second from heaven, which might have confused Job more as to the cause of his troubles. The use of the divine epithet could also be an indication of the superlative degree; see D. W. Thomas, "A Consideration of Some Unusual Ways of Expressing the Superlative in Hebrew," VT 3 (1953): 209-24.

[13] tn Or "from the sky." The Hebrew word שָׁמַיִם (shamayim) may be translated "heaven[s]" or "sky" depending on the context.

[14] sn The name may have been given to the tribes that roamed between the Euphrates and the lands east of the Jordan. These are possibly the nomadic Kaldu who are part of the ethnic Aramaeans. The LXX simply has "horsemen."

[15] tn The verb פָּשַׁט (pashat) means "to hurl themselves" upon something (see Judg 9:33, 41). It was a quick, plundering raid to carry off the camels.

[16] tn Heb "with the edge/mouth of the sword."

[17] tn The use of the particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") in this sentence is deictic, pointing out with excitement the events that happened as if the listener was there.

[18] sn Both wind and lightning (v. 16) were employed by Satan as his tools. God can permit him such control over factors of the weather when it suits the divine purpose, but God retains ultimate control (see 28:23-27; Prov 3:4; Luke 8:24-25).

[19] tn The word מֵעֵבֶר (me'ever) is simply "from the direction of"; the word עֵבֶר ('ever) indicates the area the whirlwind came across.

[20] tn The verb וַיָּקָם (vayyaqom, "and he arose") indicates the intentionality and the rapidity of the actions to follow. It signals the beginning of his response to the terrible news. Therefore, the sentence could be translated, "Then Job immediately began to tear his robe."

[21] sn It was the custom to tear the robe in a time of mourning, to indicate that the heart was torn (Joel 2:13). The "garment, mantel" here is the outer garment frequently worn over the basic tunic. See further D. R. Ap-Thomas, "Notes on Some Terms Relating to Prayer," VT 6 (1956): 220-24.

[22] sn In mourning one normally put off every adornment that enhanced or embellished the person, including that which nature provided (Jer 7:29; Mic 1:16).

[23] tn This last verb is the Hishtaphel of the word חָוָה (khavah; BDB 1005 s.v. שָׁחָה); it means "to prostrate oneself, to cause oneself to be low to the ground." In the OT it is frequently translated "to worship" because that is usually why the individual would kneel down and then put his or her forehead to the ground at the knees. But the word essentially means "to bow down to the ground." Here "worship" (although employed by several English translations, cf. KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV, CEV) conveys more than what is taking place – although Job's response is certainly worshipful. See G. I. Davies, "A Note on the Etymology of histah^{a}wah," VT 29 (1979): 493-95; and J. A. Emerton, "The Etymology of histah^{a}wah," OTS (1977): 41-55.

1:21 He said, "Naked[1] I came from my mother's womb, and naked I will return there.[2] The LORD gives, and the LORD takes away.[3] May the name of the LORD[4] be blessed!" 1:22 In all this Job did not sin, nor did he charge God with moral impropriety.[5]

Satan's Additional Charge

2:1 Again the day came when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan also arrived among them to present himself before the LORD.[6] 2:2 And the LORD said to Satan,
"Where do you come from?" Satan answered the LORD,[7] "From roving about on the earth, and from walking back and forth across it."[8] 2:3 Then the LORD said to Satan, "Have you considered my servant Job? For there is no one like him on the earth, a pure and upright man, one who fears God and turns away from evil. And he still holds firmly[9] to his integrity,[10] so that[11] you stirred me up to destroy him[12] without reason."[13]

2:4 But[14] Satan answered the LORD, "Skin for[15] skin![16] Indeed, a man will give up[17] all that he has to save his life![18] 2:5 But extend your hand and strike his bone and his flesh,[19] and he will no doubt[20] curse you to your face!"

2:6 So the LORD said to Satan, "All right,[21] he is[22] in your power;[23] only preserve[24] his life."

1 tn The adjective "naked" is functioning here as an adverbial accusative of state, explicative of the state of the subject. While it does include the literal sense of nakedness at birth, Job is also using it symbolically to mean "without possessions."

2 sn While the first half of the couplet is to be taken literally as referring to his coming into this life, this second part must be interpreted only generally to refer to his departure from this life. It is parallel to 1 Tim 6:7, "For we have brought nothing into this world and so we cannot take a single thing out either."

3 tn The two verbs are simple perfects. (1) They can be given the nuance of gnomic imperfect, expressing what the sovereign God always does. This is the approach taken in the present translation. Alternatively (2) they could be referring specifically to Job's own experience: "Yahweh gave [definite past, referring to his coming into this good life] and Yahweh has taken away" [present perfect, referring to his great losses]. Many English versions follow the second alternative.

4 sn Some commentators are troubled by the appearance of the word "Yahweh" on the lips of Job, assuming that the narrator inserted his own name for God into the story-telling. Such thinking is based on the assumption that Yahweh was only a national god of Israel, unknown to anyone else in the ancient world. But here is a clear indication that a non-Israelite, Job, knew and believed in Yahweh.

5 tn The last clause is difficult to translate. It simply reads, "and he did not give unseemliness to God." The word תִּפְלָה (tiflah) means "unsavoriness" or "unseemliness" in a moral sense. The sense is that Job did not charge God with any moral impropriety in his dealings with him. God did nothing worthless or tasteless. The ancient versions saw the word connected with "foolishness" or "stupidity" (תָּפַל, tafel, "to be tasteless"). It is possible that "folly" would capture some of what Job meant here. See also M. Dahood, "Hebrew-Ugaritic Lexicography XII," Bib 55 (1974): 381-93.

6 tc This last purpose clause has been omitted in some Greek versions.

7 tn Heb "answered the LORD and said" (also in v. 4). The words "and said" here and in v. 9 have not been included in the translation for stylistic reasons.

8 tn See the note on this phrase in 1:7.

9 tn The form is the Hiphil participle, "make strong, seize, hold fast." It is the verbal use here; joined with עֹדֶנּוּ ('odennu, "yet he") it emphasizes that "he is still holding firmly." The testing has simply strengthened Job in his integrity.

10 tn This is the same word used to describe Job as "blameless, pure." Here it carries the idea of "integrity"; Job remained blameless, perfect.

11 tn The vav (ו) with the preterite is used here to express the logical conclusion or consequence of what was stated previously. God is saying that Job has maintained his integrity, so that now it is clear that Satan moved against him groundlessly (GKC 328 §111.l).

12 tn The verb literally means "to swallow"; it forms an implied comparison in the line, indicating the desire of Satan to ruin him completely. See A Guillaume, "A Note on the Root bala`," JTS 13 (1962): 320-23; and N. M. Sarna, "Epic Substratum in the Prose of Job," JBL 76 (1957): 13-25, for a discussion of the Ugaritic deity Mot swallowing up the enemy.

13 sn Once again the adverb חִנָּם (khinnam, "gratis") is used. It means "graciously, gratis, free, without cause, for no reason." Here the sense has to be gratuitously, for no reason." The point of the verb חָנַן (khanan, "to be gracious") and its derivatives is that the action is undeserved. In fact, they would deserve the opposite. Sinners seeking grace deserve punishment. Here, Job deserves reward, not suffering.

14 tn The form is the simply preterite with the vav (ו) consecutive. However, the speech of Satan is in contrast to what God said, even though in narrative sequence.

15 tn The preposition בְּעַד (bə'ad) designates interest or advantage arising from the idea of protection for ("for the benefit of"); see IBHS 201-2 §11.2.7a.

16 sn The meaning of the expression is obscure. It may come from the idea of sacrificing an animal or another person in order to go free, suggesting the expression that one type of skin that was worth less was surrendered to save the more important life. Satan would then be saying that Job was willing for others to die for him to go free, but not himself. "Skin" would be a synecdoche of the part for the whole (like the idiomatic use of skin today for a person in a narrow escape). The second clause indicates that God has not even scratched the surface because Job has been protected. His "skin" might have been scratched, but not his flesh and bone! But if his life had been put in danger, he would have responded differently.

17 tc The LXX has "make full payment, pay a full price" (LSJ 522 s.v. ἐκτίνω).

18 tn Heb "Indeed, all that a man has he will give for his life."

19 sn The "bones and flesh" are idiomatic for the whole person, his physical and his psychical/spiritual being (see further H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 26-28).

20 sn This is the same oath formula found in 1:11; see the note there.

21 tn The particle הִנּוֹ (hinno) is literally, "here he is!" God presents Job to Satan, with the restriction on preserving Job's life.

22 tn The LXX has "I deliver him up to you."

23 tn Heb "hand."

24 sn The irony of the passage comes through with this choice of words. The verb שָׁמַר (shamar) means "to keep; to guard; to preserve." The exceptive clause casts Satan in the role of a savior – he cannot destroy this life but must protect it.

Job's Integrity in Suffering

2:7 So Satan went out from the presence of the LORD, and he afflicted[1] Job with a malignant ulcer[2] from the sole of his feet to the top of his head.[3] 2:8 Job took a shard of broken pottery to scrape[4] himself[5] with while he was sitting[6] among the ashes.[7]

2:9 Then[8] his wife said to him, "Are you still holding firmly to your integrity?[9] Curse[10] God, and die!"[11] 2:10 But he replied,[12] "You're talking like one of the godless[13] women would do! Should we receive[14] what is good from God, and not also[15] receive[16] what is evil?"[17] In all this Job did not sin by what he said.[18]

The Visit of Job's Friends[19]

2:11 When Job's three friends heard about all this calamity that had happened to him, each of them came from his own country[20] – Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite.[21] They met together[22] to come

1 tn The verb is נָכָה (nakhah, "struck, smote"); it can be rendered in this context as "afflicted."

2 sn The general consensus is that Job was afflicted with a leprosy known as elephantiasis, named because the rough skin and the swollen limbs are animal-like. The Hebrew word שְׁחִין (shekhin, "boil") can indicate an ulcer as well. Leprosy begins with such, but so do other diseases. Leprosy normally begins in the limbs and spreads, but Job was afflicted everywhere at once. It may be some other disease also characterized by such a malignant ulcer. D. J. A. Clines has a thorough bibliography on all the possible diseases linked to this description (Job [WBC], 48). See also HALOT 1460 s.v. שְׁחִין.

3 tn Heb "crown."

4 tn The verb גָּרַד (garad) is a hapax legomenon (only occurring here). Modern Hebrew has retained a meaning "to scrape," which is what the cognate Syriac and Arabic indicate. In the Hitpael it would mean "scrape himself."

5 sn The disease required constant attention. The infection and pus had to be scraped away with a piece of broken pottery in order to prevent the spread of the infection. The skin was so disfigured that even his friends did not recognize him (2:12). The book will add that the disease afflicted him inwardly, giving him a foul breath and a loathsome smell (19:17, 20). The sores bred worms; they opened and ran, and closed and tightened (16:8). He was tormented with dreams (7:14). He felt like he was choking (7:14). His bones were racked with burning pain (30:30). And he was not able to rise from his place (19:18). The disease was incurable, but it would last for years, leaving the patient longing for death.

6 tn The construction uses the disjunctive vav (ו) with the independent pronoun with the active participle. The construction connects this clause with what has just been said, making this a circumstantial clause.

7 sn Among the ashes. It is likely that the "ashes" refers to the place outside the city where the rubbish was collected and burnt, i.e., the ash-heap (cf. CEV). This is the understanding of the LXX, which reads "dung-hill outside the city."

8 tn The versions have some information here that is interesting, albeit fanciful. The Targum calls her "Dinah." The LXX has "when a long time had passed." But the whole rendering of the LXX is paraphrastic: "How long will you hold out, saying, 'Behold, I wait yet a little while, expecting the hope of my deliverance?' for behold, your memorial is abolished from the earth, even your sons and daughters, the pangs and pains of my womb which I bore in vain with sorrows, and you yourself sit down to spend the night in the open air among the corruption of worms, and I am a wanderer and a servant from place to place and house to house, waiting for the setting sun, that I may rest from my labors and pains that now beset me, but say some word against the Lord and die."

9 sn See R. D. Moore, "The Integrity of Job," CBQ 45 (1983): 17-31. The reference of Job's wife to his "integrity" could be a precursor of the conclusion reached by Elihu in 32:2 where he charged Job with justifying himself rather than God.

10 tn The verb is literally בָּרַךְ, (barakh, "bless"). As in the earlier uses, the meaning probably has more to do with renouncing God than of speaking a curse. The actual word may be taken as a theological euphemism for the verb קִלֵּל (qillel, "curse"). If Job's wife had meant that he was trying to justify himself rather than God, "bless God" might be translated "speak well of God," the resolution accepted by God in 42:7-8 following Job's double confession of having spoken wrongly of God (40:3-5; 42:1-6).

sn The church fathers were quick to see here again the role of the wife in the temptation – she acts as the intermediary between Satan and Job, pressing the cause for him. However, Job's wife has been demonized falsely. Job did not say that she was a foolish woman, only that she was speaking like one of them (2:10). Also, Job did not exclude her from sharing in his suffering ("should we receive"). He evidently recognized that her words were the result of her personal loss and pain as well as the desire to see her husband's suffering ended. When God gave instructions for the restoration of Job's friends because of their foolish words (42:7-9), no mention is made of any need for Job's wife to be restored.

11 tn The imperative with the conjunction in this expression serves to express the certainty that will follow as the result or consequence of the previous imperative (GKC 324-25 §110.f).

12 tn Heb "he said to her."

13 tn The word "foolish" (נָבָל, naval) has to do with godlessness more than silliness (Ps 14:1). To be foolish in this sense is to deny the nature and the work of God in life its proper place. See A. Phillips, "NEBALA – A Term for Serious Disorderly Unruly Conduct," VT 25 (1975): 237-41; and W. M. W. Roth, "NBL," VT 10 (1960): 394-409.

14 tn The verb קִבֵּל (qibbel) means "to accept, receive." It is attested in the Amarna letters with the meaning "receive meekly, patiently."

15 tn The adverb גַּם (gam, "also, even") is placed here before the first clause, but belongs with the second. It intensifies the idea (see GKC 483 §153). See also C. J. Labuschagne, "The Emphasizing Particle GAM and Its Connotations," Studia Biblica et Semitica, 193-203.

16 tn The two verbs in this sentence, Piel imperfects, are deliberative imperfects; they express the reasoning or deliberating in the interrogative sentences.

17 tn A question need not be introduced by an interrogative particle or adverb. The natural emphasis on the words is enough to indicate it is a question (GKC 473 §150.a).

sn The Hebrew words טוֹב (tov, "good") and רַע (ra', "evil") have to do with what affects life. That which is good benefits people because it produces, promotes and protects life; that which is evil brings calamity and disaster, it harms, pains, or destroys life.

18 tn Heb "sin with his lips," an idiom meaning he did not sin by what he said.

19 sn See N. C. Habel, "'Only the Jackal is My Friend,' On Friends and Redeemers in Job," Int 31 (1977): 227-36.

20 tn Heb "a man from his place"; this is the distributive use, meaning "each man came from his place."

21 sn Commentators have tried to analyze the meanings of the names of the friends and their locations. Not only has this proven to be difficult (Teman is the only place that is known), it is not necessary for the study of the book. The names are probably not symbolic of the things they say.

22 tn The verb can mean that they "agreed together," but it also (and more likely) means that they came together at a meeting point to go visit Job together.

to show sympathy[1] for him and to console[2] him.
2:12 But when they gazed intently[3] from a distance but did not recognize[4] him, they began to weep loudly. Each of them tore his robes, and they threw dust into the air over their heads.[5] 2:13 Then they sat down with him on the ground for seven days and seven nights, yet no one spoke a word to him, for they saw that his pain[6] was very great.[7]

II. Job's Dialogue With His Friends (3:1-27:33)[8]

Job Regrets His Birth

3:1 After this Job opened his mouth[9] and cursed[10] the day he was born.[11] 3:2 Job spoke up[12] and said:

3:3 "Let the day on which[13] I was born[14]
perish,
and the night that said,[15]
'A man[16] has been conceived!'[17]
3:4 That day[18] – let it be darkness;[19] let not God on high regard[20] it, nor let light shine[21] on it!
3:5 Let darkness and the deepest

---

1 tn The verb "to show grief" is נוּד (nud), and literally signifies "to shake the head." It may be that his friends came to show the proper sympathy and express the appropriate feelings. They were not ready for what they found.

2 tn The second infinitive is from נָחַם (nakham, "to comfort, console" in the Piel). This word may be derived from a word with a meaning of sighing deeply.

3 tn Heb "they lifted up their eyes." The idiom "to lift up the eyes" (or "to lift up the voice") is intended to show a special intensity in the effort. Here it would indicate that they were trying to see Job from a great distance away.

4 tn The Hiphil perfect here should take the nuance of potential perfect – they were not able to recognize him. In other words, this does not mean that they did not know it was Job, only that he did not look anything like the Job they knew.

5 tn Heb "they tossed dust skyward over their heads."

6 tn The word כְּאֵב (k^{e}'ev) means "pain" – both mental and physical pain. The translation of "grief" captures only part of its emphasis.

7 sn The three friends went into a more severe form of mourning, one that is usually reserved for a death. E. Dhorme says it is a display of grief in its most intense form (Job, 23); for one of them to speak before the sufferer spoke would have been wrong.

8 sn The previous chapters (1-2) were prose narrative, this chapter, however, commences the poetic section of the book (chs. 3-41) containing the cycles of speeches.

9 sn The detailed introduction to the speech with "he opened his mouth" draws the readers attention to what was going to be said. As the introduction to the poetic speech that follows (3:3-26), vv. 1-2 continue the prose style of chapters 1-2. Each of the subsequent speeches is introduced by such a prose heading.

10 tn The verb "cursed" is the Piel preterite from the verb קָלַל (qalal); this means "to be light" in the Qal stem, but here "to treat lightly, with contempt, curse." See in general H. C. Brichto, The Problem of "Curse" in the Hebrew Bible (JBLMS); and A. C. Thiselton, "The Supposed Power of Words in the Biblical Writings," JTS 25 (1974): 283-99.

11 tn Heb "his day" (so KJV, ASV, NAB). The Syriac has "the day on which he was born." The context makes it clear that Job meant the day of his birth. But some have tried to offer a different interpretation, such as his destiny or his predicament. For this reason the Syriac clarified the meaning for their readers in much the same way as the present translation does by rendering "his day" as "the day he was born." On the Syriac translation of the book of Job, see Heidi M. Szpek, Translation Technique in the Peshitta to Job (SBLDS).

12 tn The text has וַיַּעַן (vayya'an), literally, "and he answered." The LXX simply has "saying" for the entire verse. The Syriac, Targum, and Greek A have what the MT has. "[Someone] answered and said" is phraseology characteristic of all the speeches in Job beginning with Satan in 1:9. Only in 40:1 is it employed when God is speaking. No other portion of the OT employs this phraseology as often or as consistently.

13 tn The relative clause is carried by the preposition with the resumptive pronoun: "the day [which] I was born in it" meaning "the day on which I was born" (see GKC 486-88 §155.f, i).

14 tn The verb is the Niphal imperfect. It may be interpreted in this dependent clause (1) as representing a future event from some point of time in the past – "the day on which I was born" or "would be born" (see GKC 316 §107.k). Or (2) it may simply serve as a preterite indicating action that is in the past.

15 tn The MT simply has "and the night – it said...." By simple juxtaposition with the parallel construction ("on which I was born") the verb "it said" must be a relative clause explaining "the night." Rather than supply "in which" and make the verb passive (which is possible since no specific subject is provided, but leaves open the question of who said it), it is preferable to take the verse as a personification. First Job cursed the day; now he cursed the night that spoke about what it witnessed. See A. Ehrman, "A Note on the Verb 'amar," JQR 55 (1964/65): 166-67.

16 tn The word is גֶּבֶר (gever, "a man"). The word usually distinguishes a man as strong, distinct from children and women. Translations which render this as "boy" (to remove the apparent contradiction of an adult being "conceived" in the womb) miss this point.

17 sn The announcement at birth is to the fact that a male was conceived. The same parallelism between "brought forth/born" and "conceived" may be found in Ps 51:7 HT (51:5 ET). The motifs of the night of conception and the day of birth will be developed by Job. For the entire verse, which is more a wish or malediction than a curse, see S. H. Blank, "'Perish the Day!' A Misdirected Curse (Job 3:3)," Prophetic Thought, 61-63.

18 tn The first two words should be treated as a casus pendens (see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 69), referred to as an extraposition in recent grammarians.

19 sn This expression by Job is the negation of the divine decree at creation – "Let there be light," and that was the first day. Job wishes that his first day be darkness: "As for that day, let there be darkness." Since only God has this prerogative, Job adds the wish that God on high would not regard that day.

20 tn The verb דָּרַשׁ (darash) means "to seek, inquire," and "to address someone, be concerned about something" (cf. Deut 11:12; Jer 30:14,17). Job wants the day to perish from the mind of God.

21 tn The verb is the Hiphil of יָפַע (yafa'), which means here "cause to shine." The subject is the term נְהָרָה (n^{e}harah, "light"), a hapax legomenon which is from the verb נָהַר (nahar, "to gleam" [see Isa 60:5]).

shadow[1] claim it;[2]
let a cloud settle on it;
let whatever blackens the day[3] terrify it!
3:6 That night – let darkness seize[4] it;
let it not be included[5] among the days of the year;
let it not enter among the number of the months![6] 3:7 Indeed,[7] let that night be barren;[8] let no shout of joy[9] penetrate[10] it!
3:8 Let those who curse the day[11] curse it[12] –
those who are prepared to rouse[13] Leviathan.[14] 3:9 Let its morning stars[15] be darkened; let it wait[16] for daylight but find none,[17]
nor let it see the first rays[18] of dawn, 3:10 because it[19] did not shut the doors[20] of my mother's womb on me,[21] nor did it hide trouble[22] from my eyes!

[1] sn The translation of צַלְמָוֶת (tsalmavet, "shadow of death") has been traditionally understood to indicate a dark, death shadow (supported in the LXX), but many scholars think it may not represent the best etymological analysis of the word. The word may be connected to an Arabic word which means "to be dark," and an Akkadian word meaning "black." It would then have to be repointed throughout its uses to צַלְמוּת (tsalmut) forming an abstract ending. It would then simply mean "darkness" rather than "shadow of death." Or the word can be understood as an idiomatic expression meaning "gloom" that is deeper than חֹשֶׁךְ (khoshekh; see HALOT 1029 s.v. צַלְמָוֶת). Since "darkness" has already been used in the line, the two together could possibly form a nominal hendiadys: "Let the deepest darkness...." There is a significant amount of literature on this; one may begin with W. L. Michel, "SLMWT, 'Deep Darkness' or 'Shadow of Death'?" BR 29 (1984): 5-20.

[2] tn The verb is גָּאַל (ga'al, "redeem, claim"). Some have suggested that the verb is actually the homonym "pollute." This is the reading in the Targum, Syriac, Vulgate, and Rashi, who quotes from Mal 1:7,12. See A. R. Johnson, "The Primary Meaning of ga'al," VTSup 1 (1953): 67-77.

[3] tn The expression "the blackness of the day" (כִּמְרִירֵי יוֹם, kimrire yom) probably means everything that makes the day black, such as supernatural events like eclipses. Job wishes that all ominous darknesses would terrify that day. It comes from the word כָּמַר (kamar, "to be black"), related to Akkadian kamaru ("to overshadow, darken"). The versions seem to have ignored the first letter and connected the word to מָרַר (marar, "be bitter").

[4] tn The verb is simply לָקַח (laqakh, "to take"). Here it conveys a strong sense of seizing something and not letting it go.

[5] tn The pointing of the verb is meant to connect it with the root חָדָה (khadah, "rejoice"). But the letters in the text were correctly understood by the versions to be from יָחַד (yakhad, "to be combined, added"). See G. Rendsburg, "Double Polysemy in Genesis 49:6 and Job 3:6," CBQ 44 (1982): 48-51.

[6] sn The choice of this word for "moons," יְרָחִים (yerakhim) instead of חֳדָשִׁים (khodashim) is due to the fact that "month" here is not a reference for which an exact calendar date is essential (in which case חֹדֶשׁ [khodesh] would have been preferred). See J. Segal, "'yrḥ' in the Gezer 'Calendar,'" JSS 7 (1962): 220, n. 4. Twelve times in the OT יֶרַח (yerakh) means "month" (Exod 2:2; Deut 21:13; 33:14; 1 Kgs 6:37, 38; 8:2; 2 Kgs 15:13; Zech 11:8; Job 3:6; 7:3; 29:2; 39:2).

[7] tn The particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") in this sentence focuses the reader's attention on the statement to follow.

[8] tn The word גַּלְמוּד (galmud) probably has here the idea of "barren" rather than "solitary." See the parallelism in Isa 49:21. In Job it seems to carry the idea of "barren" in 15:34, and "gloomy" in 30:3. Barrenness can lead to gloom.

[9] tn The word is from רָנַן (ranan, "to give a ringing cry" or "shout of joy"). The sound is loud and shrill.

[10] tn The verb is simply בּוֹא (bo', "to enter"). The NIV translates interpretively "be heard in it." A shout of joy, such as at a birth, that "enters" a day is certainly heard on that day.

[11] tn Not everyone is satisfied with the reading of the MT. Gordis thought "day" should be "sea," and "cursers" should be "rousers" (changing 'alef to 'ayin; cf. NRSV). This is an unnecessary change, for there is no textual problem in the line (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 71). Others have taken the reading "sea" as a personification and accepted the rest of the text, gaining the sense of "those whose magic binds even the sea monster of the deep" (e.g., NEB).

sn Those who curse the day are probably the professional enchanters and magicians who were thought to cast spells on days and overwhelm them with darkness and misfortune. The myths explained eclipses as the dragon throwing its folds around the sun and the moon, thus engulfing or swallowing the day and the night. This interpretation matches the parallelism better than the interpretation that says these are merely professional mourners.

[12] tn The verb is probably "execrate, curse," from קָבַב (qavav). But E. Ullendorff took it from נָקַב (naqav, "pierce") and gained a reading "Let the light rays of day pierce it (i.e. the night) apt even to rouse Leviathan" ("Job 3:8," VT 11 [1961]: 350-51).

[13] tn The verbal adjective עָתִיד ('atid) means "ready, prepared." Here it has a substantival use similar to that of participles. It is followed by the Polel infinitive construct עֹרֵר ('orer). The infinitive without the preposition serves as the object of the preceding verbal adjective (GKC 350 §114.m).

[14] sn Job employs here the mythological figure Leviathan, the monster of the deep or chaos. Job wishes that such a creation of chaos could be summoned by the mourners to swallow up that day. See E. Ullendorff, "Job 3:8," VT 11 (1961): 350-51.

[15] tn Heb "the stars of its dawn." The word נֶשֶׁף (neshef) can mean "twilight" or "dawn." In this context the morning stars are in mind. Job wishes that the morning stars – that should announce the day – go out.

[16] tn The verb "wait, hope" has the idea of eager expectation and preparation. It is used elsewhere of waiting on the LORD with anticipation.

[17] tn The absolute state אַיִן ('ayin, "there is none") is here used as a verbal predicate (see GKC 480 §152.k). The concise expression literally says "and none."

[18] sn The expression is literally "the eyelids of the morning." This means the very first rays of dawn (see also Job 41:18). There is some debate whether it refers to "eyelids" or "eyelashes" or "eyeballs." If the latter, it would signify the flashing eyes of a person. See for the Ugaritic background H. L. Ginsberg, The Legend of King Keret (BASORSup), 39; see also J. M. Steadman, "'Eyelids of Morn': A Biblical Convention," HTR 56 (1963): 159-67.

[19] tn The subject is still "that night." Here, at the end of this first section, Job finally expresses the crime of that night – it did not hinder his birth.

[20] sn This use of doors for the womb forms an implied comparison; the night should have hindered conception (see Gen 20:18 and 1 Sam 1:5).

[21] tn The Hebrew has simply "my belly [= womb]." The suffix on the noun must be objective – it was the womb of Job's mother in which he lay before his birth. See however N. C. Habel, "The Dative Suffix in Job 33:13," Bib 63 (1982): 258-59, who thinks it is deliberately ambiguous.

[22] tn The word עָמָל ('amal) means "work, heavy labor, agonizing labor, struggle" with the idea of fatigue and pain.

Job Wishes He Had Died at Birth[1]

3:11 "Why did I not[2] die[3] at birth,[4] and why did I not expire
as[5] I came out of the womb?
3:12 Why did the knees welcome me,[6] and why were there[7] two breasts[8] that I might nurse at them?[9] 3:13 For now[10] I would be lying down and[11] would be quiet,[12]
I would be asleep and then at peace[13]
3:14 with kings and counselors of the earth who built for themselves places now desolate,[14] 3:15 or with princes who possessed gold,[15] who filled their palaces[16] with silver.
3:16 Or why[17] was[18] I not buried[19] like a stillborn infant,[20] like infants[21] who have never seen the light?[22] 3:17 There[23] the wicked[24] cease[25] from

[1] sn Job follows his initial cry with a series of rhetorical questions. His argument runs along these lines: since he was born (v. 10), the next chance he had of escaping this life of misery would have been to be still born (vv. 11-12, 16). In vv. 13-19 Job considers death as falling into a peaceful sleep in a place where there is no trouble. The high frequency of rhetorical questions in series is a characteristic of the book of Job that sets it off from all other portions of the OT. The effect is primarily dramatic, creating a tension that requires resolution. See W. Watson, Classical Hebrew Poetry, 340-41.

[2] tn The negative only occurs with the first clause, but it extends its influence to the parallel second clause (GKC 483 §152.z).

[3] tn The two verbs in this verse are both prefix conjugations; they are clearly referring to the past and should be classified as preterites. E. Dhorme (Job, 32) notes that the verb "I came out" is in the perfect to mark its priority in time in relation to the other verbs.

[4] tn The translation "at birth" is very smooth, but catches the meaning and avoids the tautology in the verse. The line literally reads "from the womb." The second half of the verse has the verb "I came out/forth" which does double duty for both parallel lines. The second half uses "belly" for the womb.

[5] tn The two halves of the verse use the prepositional phrases ("from the womb" and "from the belly I went out") in the temporal sense of "on emerging from the womb."

[6] tn The verb קִדְּמוּנִי (qidᵉmuni) is the Piel from קָדַם (qadam), meaning "to come before; to meet; to prevent." Here it has the idea of going to meet or welcome someone. In spite of various attempts to connect the idea to the father or to adoption rites, it probably simply means the mother's knees that welcome the child for nursing. See R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 42.

sn The sufferer is looking back over all the possible chances of death, including when he was brought forth, placed on the knees or lap, and breastfed.

[7] tn There is no verb in the second half of the verse. The idea simply has, "and why breasts that I might suck?"

[8] sn The commentaries mention the parallel construction in the writings of Ashurbanipal: "You were weak, Ashurbanipal, you who sat on the knees of the goddess, queen of Nineveh; of the four teats that were placed near to your mouth, you sucked two and you hid your face in the others" (M. Streck, Assurbanipal [VAB], 348).

[9] tn Heb "that I might suckle." The verb is the Qal imperfect of יָנַק (yanaq, "suckle"). Here the clause is subordinated to the preceding question and so function as a final imperfect.

[10] tn The word עַתָּה ('attah, "now") may have a logical nuance here, almost with the idea of "if that had been the case..." (IBHS 667-68 §39.3.4f). However, the temporal "now" is retained in translation since the imperfect verb following two perfects "suggests what Job's present state would be if he had had the quiet of a still birth" (J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 95, n. 23). Cf. GKC 313 §106.p.

[11] tn The copula on the verb indicates a sequence for the imperfect: "and then I would...." In the second half of the verse it is paralleled by "then."

[12] tn The text uses a combination of the perfect (lie down/sleep) and imperfect (quiet/rest). The particle עַתָּה ('attah, "now") gives to the perfect verb its conditional nuance. It presents actions in the past that are not actually accomplished but seen as possible (GKC 313 §106.p).

[13] tn The last part uses the impersonal verb "it would be at rest for me."

[14] tn The difficult term חָרְבוֹת (khoravot) is translated "desolate [places]". The LXX confused the word and translated it "who gloried in their swords." One would expect a word for monuments, or tombs (T. K. Cheyne emended it to "everlasting tombs" ["More Critical Gleanings in Job," ExpTim 10 (1898/99): 380-83]). But this difficult word is of uncertain etymology and therefore cannot simply be made to mean "royal tombs." The verb means "be desolate, solitary." In Isa 48:21 there is the clear sense of a desert. That is the meaning of Assyrian huribtu. It may be that like the pyramids of Egypt these tombs would have been built in the desert regions. Or it may describe how they rebuilt ruins for themselves. He would be saying then that instead of lying here in pain and shame if he had died he would be with the great ones of the earth. Otherwise, the word could be interpreted as a metonymy of effect, indicating that the once glorious tomb now is desolate. But this does not fit the context – the verse is talking about the state of the great ones after their death.

[15] tn The expression simply has "or with princes gold to them." The noun is defined by the noun clause serving as a relative clause (GKC 486 §155.e).

[16] tn Heb "filled their houses." There is no reason here to take "houses" to mean tombs; the "houses" refer to the places the princes lived (i.e., palaces). The reference is not to the practice of burying treasures with the dead. It is simply saying that if Job had died he would have been with the rich and famous in death.

[17] tn The verb is governed by the interrogative of v. 12 that introduces this series of rhetorical questions.

[18] tn The verb is again the prefix conjugation, but the narrative requires a past tense, or preterite.

[19] tn Heb "hidden." The LXX paraphrases: "an untimely birth, proceeding from his mother's womb."

[20] tn The noun נֶפֶל (nefel, "miscarriage") is the abortive thing that falls (hence the verb) from the womb before the time is ripe (Ps 58:9). The idiom using the verb "to fall" from the womb means to come into the world (Isa 26:18). The epithet טָמוּן (tamun, "hidden") is appropriate to the verse. The child comes in vain, and disappears into the darkness – it is hidden forever.

[21] tn The word עֹלֲלִים ('olᵉlim) normally refers to "nurslings." Here it must refer to infants in general since it refers to a stillborn child.

[22] tn The relative clause does not have the relative pronoun; the simple juxtaposition of words indicates that it is modifying the infants.

[23] sn The reference seems to be death, or Sheol, the place where the infant who is stillborn is either buried (the grave) or resides (the place of departed spirits) and thus does not see the light of the sun.

[24] sn The wicked are the ungodly, those who are not members of the covenant (normally) and in this context especially those who oppress and torment other people.

[25] tn The parallelism uses the perfect verb in the first parallel part, and the imperfect opposite it in the second. Since the verse projects to the grave or Sheol ("there") where the action is perceived as still continuing or just taking place, both receive an English present tense translation (GKC 312 §106.l).

turmoil,[1]
and there the weary[2] are at rest.
3:18 There[3] the prisoners[4] relax[5] together;[6]
they do not hear the voice of the oppressor.[7] 3:19 Small and great are[8] there, and the slave is free[9] from his master.[10]

Longing for Death[11]

3:20 "Why does God[12] give[13] light to one who is in misery,[14] and life to those[15] whose soul is bitter, 3:21 to[16] those who wait[17] for death that[18] does not come,
and search for it[19]
more than for hidden treasures,
3:22 who rejoice[20] even to jubilation,[21] and are exultant[22] when[23] they find the grave?[24]
3:23 Why is light given[25] to a man[26]

---

1 tn Here the noun רִגְז (rogez) refers to the agitation of living as opposed to the peaceful rest of dying. The associated verb רָגַז (ragaz) means "to be agitated, excited." The expression indicates that they cease from troubling, meaning all the agitation of their own lives.

2 tn The word יְגִיעַ (yagia') means "exhausted, wearied"; it is clarified as a physical exhaustion by the genitive of specification ("with regard to their strength").

3 tn "There" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied from the context.

4 tn The LXX omits the verb and translates the noun not as prisoners but as "old men" or "men of old time."

5 tn The verb שָׁאֲנָנוּ (sha'ananu) is the Pilpel of שָׁאַן (sha'an) which means "to rest." It refers to the normal rest or refreshment of individuals; here it is contrasted with the harsh treatment normally put on prisoners.

6 sn See further J. C. de Moor, "Lexical Remarks Concerning yahad and yahdaw," VT 7 (1957): 350-55.

7 tn Or "taskmaster." The same Hebrew word is used for the taskmasters in Exod 3:7.

8 tn The versions have taken the pronoun in the sense of the verb "to be." Others give it the sense of "the same thing," rendering the verse as "small and great, there is no difference there." GKC 437 §135.a, n. 1, follows this idea with a meaning of "the same."

9 tn The LXX renders this as "unafraid," although the negative has disappeared in some MSS to give the reading "and the servant that feared his master." See I. Mendelsohn, "The Canaanite Term for 'Free Proletarian'," BASOR 83 (1941): 36-39; idem, "New Light on hupsu," BASOR 139 (1955): 9-11.

10 tn The plural "masters" could be taken here as a plural of majesty rather than as referring to numerous masters.

11 sn Since he has survived birth, Job wonders why he could not have died a premature death. He wonders why God gives light and life to those who are in misery. His own condition throws gloom over life, and so he poses the question first generally, for many would prefer death to misery (20-22); then he comes to the individual, himself, who would prefer death (23). He closes his initial complaint with some depictions of his suffering that afflicts him and gives him no rest (24-26).

12 tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn The verb is the simple imperfect, expressing the progressive imperfect nuance. But there is no formal subject to the verb, prompting some translations to make it passive in view of the indefinite subject (so, e.g., NAB, NIV, NRSV). Such a passive could be taken as a so-called "divine passive" by which God is the implied agent. Job clearly means God here, but he stops short of naming him (see also the note on "God" earlier in this verse).

sn In vv. 11, 12, and 16 there was the first series of questions in which Job himself was in question. Now the questions are more general for all mankind – why should the sufferers in general have been afflicted with life?

14 sn In v. 10 the word was used to describe the labor and sorrow that comes from it; here the one in such misery is called the עָמֵל ('amel, "laborer, sufferer").

15 tn The second colon now refers to people in general because of the plural construct מָרֵי נָפֶשׁ (mare nafesh, "those bitter of soul/life"). One may recall the use of מָרָה (marah, "bitter") by Naomi to describe her pained experience as a poor widow in Ruth 1:20, or the use of the word to describe the bitter oppression inflicted on Israel by the Egyptians (Exod 1:14). Those who are "bitter of soul" are those whose life is overwhelmed with painful experiences and suffering.

16 tn The verse simply begins with the participle in apposition to the expressions in the previous verse describing those who are bitter. The preposition is added from the context.

17 tn The verb is the Piel participle of חָכָה (khakhah, "to wait for" someone; Yahweh is the object in Isa 8:17; 64:3; Ps 33:20). Here death is the supreme hope of the miserable and the suffering.

18 tn The verse simply has the form אַיִן ('en, "there is not") with a pronominal suffix and a conjunction – "and there is not it" or "and it is not." The LXX and the Vulgate add a verb to explain this form: "and obtain it not."

19 tn The parallel verb is now a preterite with a vav (ו) consecutive; it therefore has the nuance of a characteristic perfect or gnomic perfect – the English present tense.

sn The verb חָפַר (khafar) means "to dig; to excavate." It may have the accusative of the thing that is being sought (Exod 7:24), but here it is followed by a comparative min (מִן). The verse therefore describes the sufferers who excavate or dig the ground to find death, more than others who seek for treasure.

20 tn Here too the form is the participle in apposition "to him who is in misery" in v. 20. It continues the description of those who are destitute and would be delighted to die.

21 tn The Syriac has "and gather themselves together," possibly reading גִּיל (gil, "rejoicing") as גַּל (gal, "heap"). Some have tried to emend the text to make the word mean "heap" or "mound," as in a funerary mound. While one could argue for a heap of stones as a funerary mound, the passage has already spoken of digging a grave, which would be quite different. And while such a change would make a neater parallelism in the verse, there is no reason to force such; the idea of "jubilation" fits the tenor of the whole verse easily enough and there is no reason to change it. A similar expression is found in Hos 9:1, which says, "rejoice not, O Israel, with jubilation." Here the idea then is that these sufferers would rejoice "to the point of jubilation" at death.

22 tn This sentence also parallels an imperfect verb with the substantival participle of the first colon. It is translated as an English present tense.

23 tn The particle could be "when" or "because" in this verse.

24 sn The expression "when they find a grave" means when they finally die. The verse describes the relief and rest that the sufferer will obtain when the long-awaited death is reached.

25 tn This first part of the verse, "Why is light given," is supplied from the context. In the Hebrew text the verse simply begins with "to a man...." It is also in apposition to the construction in v. 20. But after so many qualifying clauses and phrases, a restatement of the subject (light, from v. 20) is required.

26 sn After speaking of people in general (in the plural in vv. 21 and 22), Job returns to himself specifically (in the singular, using the same word גֶּבֶר [gever, "a man"] that he employed of himself in v. 3). He is the man whose way is hidden. The clear path of his former life has been broken off, or as the next clause says, hedged in so that he is confined to a life of suffering. The statement includes the spiritual perplexities that this involves. It is like saying that God is leading him in darkness and he can no longer see where he is going.

whose way is hidden,[1]
and whom God has hedged in?[2] 3:24 For my sighing comes in place of[3] my food,[4]
and my groanings[5] flow forth like water.[6] 3:25 For the very thing I dreaded[7] has happened[8] to me, and what I feared has come upon me.[9]
3:26 I have no ease,[10] I have no quietness;
I cannot rest;[11] turmoil has come upon me."[12]

Eliphaz Begins to Speak[13]

4:1 Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered:[14]
4:2 "If someone[15] should attempt[16] a word with you,
will you be impatient?[17]
But who can refrain from speaking[18]?
4:3 Look,[19] you have instructed[20] many;
you have strengthened[21] feeble hands.[22]
4:4 Your words have supported[23] those

[2] tn The verb is the Hiphil of סָכַךְ (sakhakh,"to hedge in"). The key parallel passage is Job 19:8, which says, "He has blocked [גָּדַר, gadar] my way so I cannot pass, and has set darkness over my paths." To be hedged in is an implied metaphor, indicating that the pathway is concealed and enclosed. There is an irony in Job's choice of words in light of Satan's accusation in 1:10. It is heightened further when the same verb is employed by God in 38:8 (see F. I. Andersen, Job [TOTC], 109).

[3] tn For the prepositional לִפְנֵי (lifne), the temporal meaning "before" ("my sighing comes before I eat") makes very little sense here (as the versions have it). The meaning "in place of, for" fits better (see 1 Sam 1:16, "count not your handmaid for a daughter of Belial").

[4] sn The line means that Job's sighing, which results from the suffering (metonymy of effect) is his constant, daily food. Parallels like Ps 42:3 which says "my tears have been my bread/food" shows a similar figure.

[5] tn The word normally describes the "roaring" of a lion (Job 4:10), but it is used for the loud groaning or cries of those in distress (Pss 22:1; 32:3).

[6] tn This second colon is paraphrased in the LXX to say, "I weep being beset with terror." The idea of "pouring forth water" while groaning can be represented by "I weep." The word "fear, terror" anticipates the next verse.

[7] tn The construction uses the cognate accusative with the verb: "the fear I feared," or "the dread thing I dreaded" (פַּחַד פָּחַדְתִּי, pakhad pakhadti). The verb פָּחַד (pakhad) has the sense of "dread" and the noun the meaning "thing dreaded." The structure of the sentence with the perfect verb followed by the preterite indicates that the first action preceded the second – he feared something but then it happened. Some commentaries suggest reading this as a conditional clause followed by the present tense translation: "If I fear a thing it happens to me" (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 24). The reason for this change is that it is hard for some to think that in his prime Job had such fears. He did have a pure trust and confidence in the LORD (16:19, 29:18ff). But on the other hand, he did make sacrifices for his sons because he thought they might sin. There is evidence to suggest that he was aware that calamity could strike, and this is not necessarily incompatible with trust.

[8] tn The verb אָתָה ('atah) is Aramaic and is equivalent to the Hebrew verb בּוֹא (bo', "come, happen").

[9] tn The final verb is יָבֹא (yavo', "has come"). It appears to be an imperfect, but since it is parallel to the preterite of the first colon it should be given that nuance here. Of course, if the other view of the verse is taken, then this would simply be translated as "comes," and the preceding preterite also given an English present tense translation.

[10] tn The LXX "peace" bases its rendering on שָׁלֵם (shalam) and not שַׁלְוָה (shalah), which retains the original vav (ו). The verb means "to be quiet, to be at ease."

[11] tn The verb is literally "and I do/can not rest." A potential perfect nuance fits this passage well. The word נוּחַ (nuakh, "rest") implies "rest" in every sense, especially in contrast to רֹגֶז (rogez, "turmoil, agitation" [vv. 26 and 17]).

[12] tn The last clause simply has "and trouble came." Job is essentially saying that since the trouble has come upon him there is not a moment of rest and relief.

[13] sn The speech of Eliphaz can be broken down into three main sections. In 4:1-11 he wonders that Job who had comforted so many people in trouble, and who was so pious, should fall into such despair, forgetting the great truth that the righteous never perish under affliction – calamity only destroys the wicked. Then in 4:12–5:7 Eliphaz tries to warn Job about complaining against God because only the ungodly resent the dealings of God and by their impatience bring down his wrath upon them. Finally in 5:8-27 Eliphaz appeals to Job to follow a different course, to seek after God, for God only smites to heal or to correct, to draw people to himself and away from evil. See K. Fullerton, "Double Entendre in the First Speech of Eliphaz," JBL 49 (1930): 320-74; J. C. L. Gibson, "Eliphaz the Temanite: A Portrait of a Hebrew Philosopher," SJT 28 (1975): 259-72; and J. Lust, "A Stormy Vision: Some Remarks on Job 4:12-16," Bijdr 36 (1975): 308-11.

[15] tn The verb has no expressed subject, and so may be translated with "one" or "someone."

[16] tn The Piel perfect is difficult here. It would normally be translated "has one tried (words with you)?" Most commentaries posit a conditional clause, however.

[17] tn The verb means "to be weary." But it can have the extended sense of being either exhausted or impatient (see v. 5). A. B. Davidson (Job, 29) takes it in the sense of "will it be too much for you?" There is nothing in the sentence that indicates this should be an interrogative clause; it is simply an imperfect. But in view of the juxtaposition of the first part, this seems to make good sense. E. Dhorme (Job, 42) has "Shall we address you? You are dejected."

[18] tn The construction uses a noun with the preposition: "and to refrain with words – who is able?" The Aramaic plural of "words" (מִלִּין, millin) occurs 13 times in Job, with the Hebrew plural ten times. The commentaries show that Eliphaz's speech had a distinctly Aramaic coloring to it.

[19] tn The deictic particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") summons attention; it has the sense of "consider, look."

[20] tn The verb יָסַר (yasar) in the Piel means "to correct," whether by words with the sense of teach, or by chastening with the sense of punish, discipline. The double meaning of "teach" and "discipline" is also found with the noun מוּסָר (musar).

[21] tn The parallelism again uses a perfect verb in the first colon and an imperfect in the second, but since the sense of the line is clearly what Job has done in the past, the second verb may be treated as a preterite, or a customary imperfect – what Job repeatedly did in the past (GKC 315 §107.e). The words in this verse may have double meanings. The word יָסַר (yasar, "teach, discipline") may have the idea of instruction and correction, but also the connotation of strength (see Y. Hoffmann, "The Use of Equivocal Words in the First Speech of Eliphaz [Job IV–V]," VT 30 [1980]: 114-19).

[22] tn The "feeble hands" are literally "hands hanging down." This is a sign of weakness, helplessness, or despondency (see 2 Sam 4:1; Isa 13:7).

[23] tn Both verbs in this line are imperfects, and probably carry the same nuance as the last verb in v. 3, namely, either customary imperfect or preterite. The customary has the aspect of stressing that this was what Job used to do.

who stumbled,[1]
and you have strengthened the knees that gave way.[2]
4:5 But now the same thing[3] comes to you,
and you are discouraged;[4]
it strikes you,
and you are terrified.[5]
4:6 Is not your piety[6] your confidence,[7] and your blameless ways your hope?[8]
4:7 Call to mind now:[9]
Who,[10] being innocent, ever perished?[11]
And where were upright people[12] ever destroyed?[13]
4:8 Even as I have seen,[14] those who plow[15] iniquity[16]
and those who sow trouble reap the same.[17]
4:9 By the breath[18] of God they perish,[19] and by the blast[20] of his anger they are consumed.
4:10 There is[21] the roaring of the lion[22]
and the growling[23] of the young lion, but the teeth of the young lions are broken.[24]

[1] tn The form is the singular active participle, interpreted here collectively. The verb is used of knees that give way (Isa 35:3; Ps 109:24).

[2] tn The expression is often translated as "feeble knees," but it literally says "the bowing [or "tottering"] knees." The figure is one who may be under a heavy load whose knees begin to shake and buckle (see also Heb 12:12).

sn Job had been successful at helping others not be crushed by the weight of trouble and misfortune. It is easier to help others than to preserve a proper perspective when one's self is afflicted (E. Dhorme, Job, 44).

[3] tn The sentence has no subject, but the context demands that the subject be the same kind of trouble that has come upon people that Job has helped.

[4] tn This is the same verb used in v. 2, meaning "to be exhausted" or "impatient." Here with the vav (ו) consecutive the verb describes Job's state of mind that is a consequence of the trouble coming on him. In this sentence the form is given a present tense translation (see GKC 329 §111.t).

[5] tn This final verb in the verse is vivid; it means "to terrify, dismay" (here the Niphal preterite). Job will go on to speak about all the terrors that come on him.

[6] tn The word יִרְאָה (yir'ah, "fear") in this passage refers to Job's fear of the LORD, his reverential devotion to God. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 46) says that on the lips of Eliphaz the word almost means "your religion." He refers to Moffatt's translation, "Let your religion reassure you."

[7] tn The word כִּסְלָתֶךָ (kislatekha, "your confidence") is rendered in the LXX by "founded in folly." The word כֶּסֶל (kesel) is "confidence" (see 8:14) and elsewhere "folly." Since it is parallel to "your hope" it must mean confidence here.

[8] tn This second half of the verse simply has "your hope and the integrity of your ways." The expression "the perfection of your ways" is parallel to "your fear," and "your hope" is parallel to "your confidence." This sentence is an example of casus pendens or extraposition: "as for your hope, it is the integrity of your ways" (see GKC 458 §143.d).

sn Eliphaz is not being sarcastic to Job. He knows that Job is a God-fearing man who lives out his faith in life. But he also knows that Job should apply to himself the same things he tells others.

[9] sn Eliphaz will put his thesis forward first negatively and then positively (vv. 8ff). He will argue that the suffering of the righteous is disciplinary and not for their destruction. He next will argue that it is the wicked who deserve judgment.

[10] tn The use of the independent personal pronoun is emphatic, almost as an enclitic to emphasize interrogatives: "who indeed...." (GKC 442 §136.c).

[11] tn The perfect verb in this line has the nuance of the past tense to express the unique past – the uniqueness of the action is expressed with "ever" ("who has ever perished").

[12] tn The adjective is used here substantivally. Without the article the word stresses the meaning of "uprightness." Job will use "innocent" and "upright" together in 17:8.

[13] tn The Niphal means "to be hidden" (see the Piel in 6:10; 15:18; and 27:11); the connotation here is "destroyed" or "annihilated."

[14] tn The perfect verb here represents the indefinite past. It has no specific sighting in mind, but refers to each time he has seen the wicked do this.

[15] sn The figure is an implied metaphor. Plowing suggests the idea of deliberately preparing (or cultivating) life for evil. This describes those who are fundamentally wicked.

[16] tn The LXX renders this with a plural "barren places."

[17] tn Heb "reap it."

[18] tn The LXX in the place of "breath" has "word" or "command," probably to limit the anthropomorphism. The word is מִנִּשְׁמַת (minnishmat) comprising מִן (min) + נִשְׁמַת (nishmat, the construct of נְשָׁמָה [n^{e}shamah]): "from/at the breath of." The "breath of God" occurs frequently in Scripture. In Gen 2:7 it imparts life, but here it destroys it. The figure probably does indicate a divine decree from God (e.g., "depart from me") – so the LXX may have been simply interpreting.

[19] sn The statement is saying that if some die by misfortune it is because divine retribution or anger has come upon them. This is not necessarily the case, as the NT declares (see Luke 13:1-5).

[20] tn The word רוּחַ (ruakh) is now parallel to נְשָׁמָה (n^{e}shamah); both can mean "breath" or "wind." To avoid using "breath" for both lines, "blast" has been employed here. The word is followed by אַפּוֹ ('afo) which could be translated "his anger" or "his nostril." If "nostril" is retained, then it is a very bold anthropomorphism to indicate the fuming wrath of God. It is close to the picture of the hot wind coming off the desert to scorch the plants (see Hos 13:15).

[21] tn "There is" has been supplied to make a smoother translation out of the clauses.

[22] sn Eliphaz takes up a new image here to make the point that the wicked are destroyed – the breaking up and scattering of a den of lions. There are several words for "lion" used in this section. D. J. A. Clines observes that it is probably impossible to distinguish them (Job [WBC], 109, 110, which records some bibliography of those who have tried to work on the etymologies and meanings). The first is אַרְיֵה ('aryeh) the generic term for "lion." It is followed by שַׁחַל (shakhal) which, like כְּפִיר (k^{e}fir), is a "young lion." Some have thought that the שַׁחַל (shakhal) is a lion-like animal, perhaps a panther or leopard. KBL takes it by metathesis from Arabic "young one." The LXX for this verse has "the strength of the lion, and the voice of the lioness and the exulting cry of serpents are quenched."

[23] tn Heb "voice."

[24] tn The verb belongs to the subject "teeth" in this last colon, but it is used by zeugma (a figure of speech in which one word is made to refer to two or more other words, but has to be understood differently in the different contexts) of the three subjects (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 46-47).

4:11 The mighty lion[1] perishes[2] for lack of prey, and the cubs of the lioness[3] are scattered.

Ungodly Complainers Provoke God's Wrath

4:12 "Now a word was secretly[4] brought[5] to me, and my ear caught[6] a whisper[7] of it.
4:13 In the troubling thoughts[8] of the dreams[9] in the night when a deep sleep[10] falls on men, 4:14 a trembling[11] gripped me – and a terror! – and made all my bones shake.[12]

4:15 Then a breath of air[13] passes[14] by my face; it makes[15] the hair of my flesh stand up.
4:16 It stands still,[16]
but I cannot recognize[17] its appearance;
an image is before my eyes,
and I hear a murmuring voice:[18]
4:17 "Is[19] a mortal man[20] righteous[21] before[22] God?

1 tn The word לַיִשׁ (layish) traditionally rendered "strong lion," occurs only here and in Prov 30:30 and Isa 30:6. It has cognates in several of the Semitic languages, and so seems to indicate lion as king of the beasts.

2 tn The form of the verb is the Qal active participle; it stresses the characteristic action of the verb as if a standard universal truth.

3 tn The text literally has "sons of the lioness."

4 tn The LXX of this verse offers special problems. It reads, "But if there had been any truth in your words, none of these evils would have fallen upon you; shall not my ear receive excellent [information] from him?" The major error involves a dittography from the word for "secret," yielding "truth."

5 tn The verb גָּנַב (ganav) means "to steal." The Pual form in this verse is probably to be taken as a preterite since it requires a past tense translation: "it was stolen for me" meaning it was brought to me stealthily (see 2 Sam 19:3).

6 tn Heb "received."

7 tn The word שְׁמֶץ (shemets, "whisper") is found only here and in Job 26:14. A cognate form שִׁמְצָה (shimtsah) is found in Exod 32:25 with the sense of "a whisper." In postbiblical Hebrew the word comes to mean "a little." The point is that Eliphaz caught just a bit, just a whisper of it, and will recount it to Job.

8 tn Here too the word is rare. The form שִׂעִפִּים (se'ippim, "disquietings") occurs only here and in 20:2. The form שַׂרְעַפִּים (sar'appim, "disquieting thoughts"), possibly related by dissimilation, occurs in Pss 94:19 and 139:23. There seems to be a connection with סְעִפִּים (se'ippim) in 1 Kgs 18:21 with the meaning "divided opinion"; this is related to the idea of סְעָפָה (se'ippah, "bough"). H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 47) concludes that the point is that like branches the thoughts lead off into different and bewildering places. E. Dhorme (Job, 50) links the word to an Arabic root ("to be passionately smitten") for the idea of "intimate thoughts." The idea here and in Ps 139 has more to do with anxious, troubling, disquieting thoughts, as in a nightmare.

9 tn Heb "visions" of the night.

10 tn The word תַּרְדֵּמָה (tardemah) is a "deep sleep." It is used in the creation account when the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall on Adam; and it is used in the story of Jonah when the prophet was asleep during the storm. The LXX interprets it to mean "fear," rendering the whole verse "but terror falls upon men with dread and a sound in the night."

11 tn The two words פַּחַד (pakhad, "trembling") and רְעָדָה (re'adah, "terror") strengthen each other as synonyms (see also Ps 55:6). The subject of the verb קָרָא (qara', "befall, encounter") is פַּחַד (pakhad, "trembling"); its compound subject has been placed at the end of the colon.

12 tn The subject of the Hiphil verb הִפְחִיד (hifkhid, "dread") is פַּחַד (pakhad, "trembling"), which is why it is in the singular. The cognate verb intensifies and applies the meaning of the noun. BDB 808 s.v. פַּחַד Hiph translates it "fill my bones with dread." In that sense "bones" would have to be a metonymy of subject representing the framework of the body, so that the meaning is that his whole being was filled with trembling.

13 tn The word רוּחַ (ruakh) can be "spirit" or "breath." The implication here is that it was something that Eliphaz felt – what he saw follows in v. 16. The commentators are divided on whether this is an apparition, a spirit, or a breath. The word can be used in either the masculine or the feminine, and so the gender of the verb does not favor the meaning "spirit." In fact, in Isa 21:1 the same verb חָלַף (khalaf, "pass on, through") is used with the subject being a strong wind or hurricane "blowing across." It may be that such a wind has caused Eliphaz's hair to stand on end here. D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 111) also concludes it means "wind," noting that in Job a spirit or spirits would be called רְפָאִים (re'fa'im), אֱלֹהִים ('elohim) or אוֹב ('ov).

14 tn The verbs in this verse are imperfects. In the last verse the verbs were perfects when Eliphaz reported the fear that seized him. In this continuation of the report the description becomes vivid with the change in verbs, as if the experience were in progress.

15 tn The subject of this verb is also רוּחַ (ruakh, "spirit"), since it can assume either gender. The "hair of my flesh" is the complement and not the subject; therefore the Piel is to be retained and not changed to a Qal as some suggest (and compare with Ps 119:120).

16 tc The LXX has the first person of the verb: "I arose and perceived it not, I looked and there was no form before my eyes, but I only heard a breath and a voice."

17 tn The imperfect verb is to be classified as potential imperfect. Eliphaz is unable to recognize the figure standing before him.

18 sn The colon reads "a silence and a voice I hear." Some have rendered it "there is a silence, and then I hear." The verb דָּמַם (damam) does mean "remain silent" (Job 29:21; 31:34) and then also "cease." The noun דְּמָמָה (demamah, "calm") refers to the calm after the storm in Ps 107:29. Joined with the true object of the verb, "voice," it probably means something like stillness or murmuring or whispering here. It is joined to "voice" with a conjunction, indicating that it is a hendiadys, "murmur and a voice" or a "murmuring voice."

19 tn The imperfect verbs in this verse express obvious truths known at all times (GKC 315 §107.f).

20 tn The word for man here is first אֱנוֹשׁ ('enosh), stressing man in all his frailty, his mortality. This is paralleled with גֶּבֶר (gever), a word that would stress more of the strength or might of man. The verse is not making a great contrast between the two, but it is rhetorical question merely stating that no human being of any kind is righteous or pure before God the Creator. See H. Kosmala, "The Term geber in the OT and in the Scrolls," VTSup 17 (1969): 159-69; and E. Jacob, Theology of the Old Testament, 156-57.

21 tn The imperfect verb in this interrogative sentence could also be interpreted with a potential nuance: "Can a man be righteous?"

22 tn The classification of מִן (min) as a comparative in this verse (NIV, "more righteous than God"; cf. also KJV, ASV, NCV) does not seem the most probable. The idea of someone being more righteous than God is too strong to be reasonable. Job will not do that – but he will imply that God is unjust. In addition, Eliphaz had this vision before hearing of Job's trouble and so is not addressing the idea that Job is making himself more righteous than God. He is stating that no man is righteous before God. Verses 18-21 will show that no one can claim righteousness before God. In 9:2 and 25:4 the preposition "with" is used. See also Jer 51:5 where the preposition should be rendered "before" [the Holy One].

Or a man pure[1] before his Creator?[2]
4:18 If[3] God[4] puts no trust in[5] his servants[6] and attributes[7] folly[8] to his angels, 4:19 how much more to those who live in houses of clay,[9] whose foundation is in the dust, who are crushed[10] like[11] a moth?

4:20 They are destroyed[12] between morning and evening;[13]
they perish forever[14] without anyone regarding it.[15]
4:21 Is not their excess wealth[16] taken away from them?[17]
They die,[18] yet without attaining wisdom.[19]

---

1 sn In Job 15:14 and 25:4 the verb יִזְכֶּה (yizkeh, from זָכָה [zakhah, "be clean"]) is paralleled with יִצְדַּק (yitsdaq, from צָדַק [tsadeq, "be righteous").

2 tn The double question here merely repeats the same question with different words (see GKC 475 §150.h). The second member could just as well have been connected with ו (vav).

3 tn The particle הֵן (hen) introduces a conditional clause here, although the older translations used "behold." The clause forms the foundation for the point made in the next verse, an argument by analogy – if this be true, then how much more/less the other.

4 tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn The verb יַאֲמִין (ya'amin), a Hiphil imperfect from אָמַן ('aman) followed by the preposition ב (bet), means "trust in."

6 sn The servants here must be angels in view of the parallelism. The Targum to Job interpreted them to be the prophets. In the book we have already read about the "sons of God" who take their stand as servants before the LORD (1:6; 2:1). And Ps 104:4 identifies the angels as servants (using שָׂרַת, sharat).

7 tn The verb שִׂים (sim, "set") with the preposition ב (bet) has the sense of "impute" or "attribute something to someone."

8 tn The word תְּהִלָּה (toholah) is a hapax legomenon, and so has created some confusion in the various translations. It seems to mean "error; folly." The word is translated "perverseness" in the LXX, but Symmachus connects it with the word for "madness." Some commentators have repointed the word to תְּהִלָּה (t^{e}hillah, "praise") making the line read: "he finds no [cause for] praise in his angels." Others suggest תִּפְלָה (tiflah, "offensiveness, silliness") a bigger change; this matches the idiom in Job 24:12. But if the etymology of the word is הָלַל (halal, "to be mad") then that change is not necessary. The feminine noun "madness" still leaves the meaning of the line a little uncertain: "[if] he does not impute madness to his angels." The point of the verse is that God finds flaws in his angels and does not put his trust in them.

9 sn Those who live in houses of clay are human beings, for the human body was made of clay (Job 10:9; 33:6; and Isa 64:7). In 2 Cor 4:7 the body is an "earthen vessel" – a clay pot. The verse continues the analogy: houses have foundations, and the house of clay is founded on dust, and will return to dust (Gen 3:19; Ps 103:14). The reasoning is that if God finds defects in angels, he will surely find them in humans who are inferior to the angels because they are but dust. In fact, they are easily crushed like the moth.

10 tn The imperfect verb is in the plural, suggesting "they crush." But since there is no subject expressed, the verb may be given an impersonal subject, or more simply, treated as a passive (see GKC 460 §144.g).

11 tn The prepositional compound לִפְנֵי (lifne) normally has the sense of "before," but it has been used already in 3:24 in the sense of "like." That is the most natural meaning of this line. Otherwise, the interpretation must offer some explanation of a comparison between how quickly a moth and a human can be crushed. There are suggestions for different readings here; see for example G. R. Driver, "Linguistic and Textual Problems: Jeremiah," JQR 28 (1937/38): 97-129 for a change to "bird's nest"; and J. A. Rimbach, "'Crushed before the Moth' (Job 4:19)," JBL 100 (1981): 244-46, for a change of the verb to "they are pure before their Maker." However, these are unnecessary emendations.

12 tn The form יֻכַּתּוּ (yukkatu) is the Hophal imperfect of the root כָּתַת (katat, "to be pounded, pulverized, reduced to ashes" [Jer 46:5; Mic 1:7]). It follows the Aramaic formation (see GKC 182 §67.y). This line appears to form a parallelism with "they are crushed like a moth," the third unit of the last verse, but it has its own parallel idea in this verse. See D. J. A. Clines, "Verb Modality and the Interpretation of Job 4:20, 21," VT 30 (1980): 354-57.

13 tn Or "from morning to evening." The expression "from morning to evening" is probably not a merism, but rather describes the time between the morning and the evening, as in Isa 38:12: "from day to night you make an end of me."

14 sn The second colon expresses the consequence of this day-long reducing to ashes – they perish forever! (see 20:7 and 14:20).

15 tn This rendering is based on the interpretation that מִבְּלִי מֵשִׂים (mibb^{e}li mesim) uses the Hiphil participle of שִׂים (sim, "set") with an understood object "heart" to gain the idiom of "taking to heart, considering, regarding it" – hence, "without anyone regarding it." Some commentators have attempted to resolve the difficulty by emending the text, a procedure that has no more support than positing the ellipses. One suggested emendation does have the LXX in its favor, namely, a reading of מוֹשִׁיעַ (moshia', "one who saves") in place of מֵשִׂים (mesim, "one who sets"). This would lead to "without one who saves they perish forever" (E. Dhorme, Job, 55).

16 tn The word יֶתֶר (yeter, here with the suffix, יִתְרָם [yitram]) can mean "what remains" or "rope." Of the variety of translations, the most frequently used idea seems to be "their rope," meaning their tent cord. This would indicate that their life was compared to a tent – perfectly reasonable in a passage that has already used the image "houses of clay." The difficulty is that the verb נָסַע (nasa') means more properly "to tear up; to uproot." and not "to cut off." A similar idea is found in Isa 38:12, but there the image is explicitly that of cutting the life off from the loom. Some have posited that the original must have said their tent peg was pulled up" as in Isa 33:20 (A. B. Davidson, Job, 34; cf. NAB). But perhaps the idea of "what remains" would be easier to defend here. Besides, it is used in 22:20. The wealth of an individual is what has been acquired and usually is left over when he dies. Here it would mean that the superfluous wealth would be snatched away. The preposition ב (bet) would carry the meaning "from" with this verb.

17 tc The text of the LXX does not seem to be connected to the Hebrew of v. 21a. It reads something like "for he blows on them and they are withered" (see Isa 40:24b). The Targum to Job has "Is it not by their lack of righteousness that they have been deprived of all support?"

tn On the interpretation of the preposition in this construction, see N. Sarna, "The Interchange of the Preposition bet and min in Biblical Hebrew," JBL 78 (1959): 310-16.

18 sn They die. This clear verb interprets all the images in these verses – they die. When the house of clay collapses, or when their excess perishes – their life is over.

19 tn Heb "and without wisdom." The word "attaining" is supplied in the translation as a clarification.

sn The expression without attaining wisdom is parallel to the previous without anyone regarding it. Both verses describe how easily humans perish: there is no concern for it, nor any sense to it. Humans die without attaining wisdom which can solve the mystery of human life.

5:1 "Call now![1] Is there anyone who will answer you?[2]
To which of the holy ones[3] will you turn?[4]
5:2 For[5] wrath kills the foolish person,[6] and anger[7] slays the silly one.
5:3 I myself[8] have seen the fool[9] taking root,
but suddenly I cursed his place of residence.[10]
5:4 His children are far[11] from safety, and they are crushed[12] at the place where judgment is rendered,[13]
nor is there anyone to deliver them.[14]
5:5 The hungry[15] eat up his harvest,[16] and take it even from behind the thorns,[17] and the thirsty[18] swallow up[19] their fortune.[20]

1 tn Some commentators transpose this verse with the following paragraph, placing it after v. 7 (see E. Dhorme, Job, 62). But the reasons for this are based on the perceived development of the argument and are not that compelling.

sn The imperative is here a challenge for Job. If he makes his appeal against God, who is there who will listen? The rhetorical questions are intended to indicate that no one will respond, not even the angels. Job would do better to realize that he is guilty and his only hope is in God.

2 tn The participle with the suffix could be given a more immediate translation to accompany the imperative: "Call now! Is anyone listening to you?"

3 tn The LXX has rendered "holy ones" as "holy angels" (cf. TEV, CEV, NLT). The LXX has interpreted the verb in the colon too freely: "if you will see."

4 sn The point being made is that the angels do not represent the cries of people to God as if mediating for them. But if Job appealed to any of them to take his case against God, there would be no response whatsoever for that.

5 tn One of the reasons that commentators transpose v. 1 is that the כִּי (ki, "for") here seems to follow 4:21 better. If people die without wisdom, it is folly that kills them. But the verse also makes sense after 5:1. He is saying that complaining against God will not bring deliverance (v. 1), but rather, by such impatience the fool will bring greater calamity on himself.

6 tn The two words for "foolish person" are common in wisdom literature. The first, אֱוִיל ('evil), is the fool who is a senseless person; the פֹּתֶה (poteh) is the naive and silly person, the simpleton, the one who is easily led astray. The direct object is introduced with the preposition לְ (lamed) in this verse (see GKC 366 §117.n).

7 tn The two parallel nouns are similar; their related verbs are also paralleled in Deut 32:16 with the idea of "vex" and "irritate." The first word כַּעַשׂ (ka'as) refers to the inner irritation and anger one feels, whereas the second word קִנְאָה (qin'ah) refers to the outward expression of the anger. In Job 6:2, Job will respond "O that my impatience [ka'as] were weighed...."

8 tn The use of the pronoun here adds emphasis to the subject of the sentence (see GKC 437 §135.a).

9 tn This word is אֱוִיל ('evil), the same word for the "senseless man" in the preceding verse. Eliphaz is citing an example of his principle just given – he saw such a fool for a brief while appearing to prosper (i.e., taking root).

10 tn A. B. Davidson argues that the verse does not mean that Eliphaz cursed his place during his prosperity. This line is metonymical (giving the effect). God judged the fool and his place was ruined; consequently, Eliphaz pronounced it accursed of God (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 36). Many emend the verb slightly to read "and it was suddenly cursed" (וַיֵּכַב [vayyukhav] instead of וְאֶקֹוב [va'eqqov]; see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 51).

11 tn The imperfect verbs in this verse describe the condition of the accursed situation. Some commentators follow the LXX and take these as jussives, making this verse the curse that the man pronounced upon the fool. Rashi adds "This is the malediction with which I have cursed him." That would make the speaker the one calling down the judgment on the fool rather than responding by observation how God destroyed the habitation of the fool.

12 tn The verb יִדַּכְּאוּ (yiddakk'u) could be taken as the passive voice, or in the reciprocal sense ("crush one another") or reflexive ("crush themselves"). The context favors the idea that the children of the foolish person will be destroyed because there is no one who will deliver them.

13 tn Heb "in the gate." The city gate was the place of both business and justice. The sense here seems to fit the usage of gates as the place of legal disputes, so the phrase "at the place of judgment" has been used in the translation.

14 tn The text simply says "and there is no deliverer." The entire clause could be subordinated to the preceding clause, and rendered simply "without a deliverer."

15 sn The hungry are other people, possibly the hungry poor to whom the wealthy have refused to give bread (22:7). The sons are so helpless that even the poor take their property.

16 tn The MT reads "whose harvest the hungry eat up." Some commentators want to follow the LXX and repoint קְצִירוֹ (q'tsiro, "his harvest") to קָצְרוּ (qats'ru, "[what] they have reaped"; cf. NAB). The reference as it stands in the MT seems to be to the image of taking root in v. 3; whatever took root – the prosperity of his life – will not belong to him or his sons to enjoy. If the emendation is accepted, then the reference would be immediately to the "sons" in the preceding verse.

17 tn The line is difficult; the Hebrew text reads literally "and unto from thorns he takes it." The idea seems to be that even from within an enclosed hedge of thorns other people will take the harvest. Many commentators either delete the line altogether or try to repoint it to make more sense out of it. G. R. Driver had taken the preposition אֶל ('el, "towards") as the noun אֵל ('el, "strong man") and the noun צִנִּים (tsinnim, "thorns") connected to Aramaic צִנָּה (tsinnah, "basket"); he read it as "a strong man snatches it from the baskets" (G. R. Driver, "on Job 5:5," TZ 12 [1956]: 485-86). E. Dhorme (Job, 60) changed the word slightly to מַצְפֻּנִים (matspunim, "hiding places"), instead of מִצִּנִּים (mitsinnim, "out of the thorns"), to get the translation "and unto hiding places he carries it." This fits the use of the verb לָקַח (laqakh, "to take") with the preposition אֶל ('el, "towards") meaning "carry to" someplace. There seems to be no easy solution to the difficulty of the line.

18 tn The word צַמִּים (tsammim) has been traditionally rendered "robbers." But it has been connected by some of the ancient versions to the word for "thirst," making a nice parallel with "hungry." This would likely be pointed צְמֵאִים (ts'me'im).

19 tn The verb has been given many different renderings, some more radical than others: "engulf," "draws," "gather," "swallow" (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 53). The idea of "swallow" is found in Job 20:15. The general sense of the line is clear, in spite of the difficulties of determining the exact meaning of the verb.

20 tn The LXX has several variations for the line. It reads something like the following: "for what they have collected the just shall eat, but they shall not be delivered out of calamities; let their strength be utterly exhausted." The LXX may have gotten the idea of the "righteous" as those who suffer from hunger. Instead of "thorns" the LXX has the idea of "trouble." The Targum to Job interprets it with "shield" and adds "warriors" as the subject.

5:6 For evil does not come up from the dust,[1] nor does trouble spring up from the ground, 5:7 but people[2] are born[3] to trouble, as surely as the sparks[4] fly[5] upward.[6]

Blessings for the One Who Seeks God[7]

5:8 "But[8] as for me,[9] I would seek[10] God,[11] and to God[12] I would set forth my case.[13]

5:9 He does[14] great and unsearchable[15] things, marvelous things without[16] number;[17]
5:10 he gives[18] rain on the earth,[19] and sends[20] water on the fields;[21] 5:11 he sets[22] the lowly[23] on high, that those who mourn[24] are raised[25] to safety.

[1] sn The previous discussion shows how trouble rises, namely, from the rebelliousness of the fool. Here Eliphaz simply summarizes the points made with this general principle – trouble does not come from outside man, nor does it come as a part of the natural order, but rather it comes from the evil nature of man.

[2] tn Heb "man [is]." Because "man" is used in a generic sense for humanity here, the generic "people" has been used in the translation.

[3] tn There is a slight difficulty here in that vv. 6 and 7 seem to be saying the opposite thing. Many commentators, therefore, emend the the Niphal יוּלַד (yullad, "is born") to an active participle יוֹלֵד (yoled, "begets") to place the source of trouble in man himself. But the LXX seems to retain the passive idea: "man is born to trouble." The contrast between the two verses does not seem too difficult, for it still could imply that trouble's source is within the man.

[4] tn For the Hebrew בְּנֵי־רֶשֶׁף (bᵉne reshef, "sons of the flame") the present translation has the rendering "sparks." E. Dhorme (Job, 62) thinks it refers to some kind of bird, but renders it "sons of the lightning" because the eagle was associated with lightning in ancient interpretations. Sparks, he argues, do not soar high above the earth. Other suggestions include Resheph, the Phoenician god of lightning (Pope), the fire of passion (Buttenwieser), angels (Peake), or demons (Targum Job). None of these are convincing; the idea of sparks flying upward fits the translation well and makes clear sense in the passage.

[5] tn The simple translation of the last two words is "fly high" or "soar aloft" which would suit the idea of an eagle. But, as H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 53) concludes, the argument to identify the expression preceding this with eagles is far-fetched.

[6] tn The LXX has the name of a bird here: "the vulture's young seek the high places." The Targum to Job has "sons of demons" or "the sparks which shoot from coals of fire."

[7] sn Eliphaz affirms that if he were in Job's place he would take refuge in God, but Job has to acknowledge that he has offended God and accept this suffering as his chastisement. Job eventually will submit to God in the end, but not in the way that Eliphaz advises here, for Job does not agree that the sufferings are judgments from God.

[8] tn The word אוּלָם ('ulam) is a strong adversative "but." This forms the contrast with what has been said previously and so marks a new section.

[9] tn The independent personal pronoun here adds emphasis to the subject of the verb, again strengthening the contrast with what Job is doing (see R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 22, §106).

[10] tn The imperfect verbs in this verse express not so much what Eliphaz does as what he would do if he were in Job's place (even though in 13:3 we have the affirmation). The use fits the category of the imperfect used in conditional clauses (see GKC 319 §107.x).

[11] tn The verb דָּרַשׁ (darash, "to seek") followed by the preposition אֶל ('el, "towards") has the meaning of addressing oneself to (God). See 8:19 and 40:10.

[12] tn The Hebrew employs אֵל ('el) in the first line and אֱלֹהִים ('elohim) in the second for "God", but the LXX uses κύριος (kurios, "Lord") in both places in this verse. However, in the second colon it also has "Lord of all." This is replaced in the Greek version of Aquila by παντοκράτωρ (pantokratōr, traditionally translated "Almighty"). On the basis of this information, H. M. Orlinsky suggests that the second name for God in the verses should be "Shaddai" (JQR 25 [1934/35]: 271).

[13] tn The Hebrew simply has "my word," but in this expression that uses שִׂים (sim) with the meaning of "lay before" or "expound a cause" in a legal sense, "case" or "cause" would be a better translation.

[14] tn Heb "who does." It is common for such doxologies to begin with participles; they follow the pattern of the psalms in this style. Because of the length of the sentence in Hebrew and the conventions of English style, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[15] tn The Hebrew has וְאֵין חֵקֶר (vᵉ'en kheqer), literally, "and no investigation." The use of the conjunction on the expression follows a form of the circumstantial clause construction, and so the entire expression describes the great works as "unsearchable."

[16] tn The preposition in עַד־אֵין ('ad 'en, "until there was no") is stereotypical; it conveys the sense of having no number (see Job 9:10; Ps 40:13).

[17] sn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 54) notes that the verse fits Eliphaz's approach very well, for he has good understanding of the truth, but has difficulty in making the correct conclusions from it.

[18] tn Heb "who gives." The participle continues the doxology here. But the article is necessary because of the distance between this verse and the reference to God.

sn He gives rain. The use of the verb "gives" underscores the idea that rain is a gift from God. This would be more keenly felt in the Middle East where water is scarce.

[19] tn In both halves of the verse the literal rendering would be "upon the face of the earth" and "upon the face of the fields."

[20] tn The second participle is simply coordinated to the first and therefore does not need the definite article repeated (see GKC 404 §126.b).

[21] tn The Hebrew term חוּצוֹת (khutsot) basically means "outside," or what is outside. It could refer to streets if what is meant is outside the house, but it refers to fields here (parallel to the more general word) because it is outside the village. See Ps 144:13 for the use of the expression for "countryside." The LXX gives a much wider interpretation: "what is under heaven."

[22] tn Heb "setting." The infinitive construct clause is here taken as explaining the nature of God, and so parallel to the preceding descriptions. If read simply as a purpose clause after the previous verse, it would suggest that the purpose of watering the earth was to raise the humble (cf. NASB, "And sends water on the fields, // So that He sets on high those who are lowly"). A. B. Davidson (Job, 39) makes a case for this interpretation, saying that God's gifts in nature have the wider purpose of blessing man, but he prefers to see the line as another benevolence, parallel to v. 10, and so suggests a translation "setting up" rather than "to set up."

[23] tn The word שְׁפָלִים (shᵉfalim) refers to "those who are down." This refers to the lowly and despised of the earth. They are the opposite of the "proud" (see Ps 138:6). Here there is a deliberate contrast between "lowly" and "on high."

[24] tn The meaning of the word is "to be dark, dirty"; therefore, it refers to the ash-sprinkled head of the mourner (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 54). The custom was to darken one's face in sorrow (see Job 2:12; Ps 35:14; 38:7).

[25] tn The perfect verb may be translated "be set on high; be raised up." E. Dhorme (Job, 64) notes that the perfect is parallel to the infinitive of the first colon, and so he renders it in the same way as the infinitive, comparing the construction to that of 28:25.

5:12 He frustrates[1] the plans[2] of the crafty[3] so that[4] their hands cannot accomplish what they had planned![5] 5:13 He catches[6] the wise in their own craftiness,[7] and the counsel of the cunning[8] is brought to a quick end.[9] 5:14 They meet with darkness in the daytime,[10] and grope about[11] in the noontime as if it were night.[12]

5:15 So he saves[13] from the sword that comes from their mouth,[14] even[15] the poor from the hand of the powerful.
5:16 Thus the poor have hope, and iniquity[16] shuts its mouth.[17]

5:17 "Therefore,[18] blessed[19] is the man whom God corrects,[20] so do not despise the discipline[21] of the Almighty.[22]

1 tn The Hiphil form מֵפֵר (mefer) is the participle from פָּרַר (parar, "to annul; to frustrate; to break"). It continues the doxological descriptions of God, but because of the numerous verses in this section, it may be clearer to start a new sentence with this form (rather than translating it "who...").

2 tn The word is related to the verb "to think; to plan; to devise," and so can mean "thoughts; plans; imagination." Here it refers to the plan of the crafty that must be frustrated (see also Isa 44:25 for the contrast).

3 tn The word עָרוּמִים ('arumim) means "crafty" or "shrewd." It describes the shrewdness of some to achieve their ends (see Gen 3:1, where the serpent is more cunning than all the creatures, that is, he knows where the dangers are and will attempt to bring down the innocent). In the next verse it describes the clever plans of the wise – those who are wise in their own sight.

4 tn The consecutive clause showing result or purpose is simply introduced with the vav and the imperfect/jussive (see GKC 504-5 §166.a).

5 tn The word תּוּשִׁיָּה (tushiyyah) is a technical word from wisdom literature. It has either the idea of the faculty of foresight, or of prudence in general (see 12:6; 26:3). It can be parallel in the texts to "wisdom," "counsel," "help," or "strength." Here it refers to what has been planned ahead of time.

6 tn The participles continue the description of God. Here he captures or ensnares the wise in their wickedly clever plans. See also Ps 7:16, where the wicked are caught in the pit they have dug – they are only wise in their own eyes.

7 sn This is the only quotation from the book of Job in the NT (although Rom 11:35 seems to reflect 41:11, and Phil 1:19 is similar to 13:6). Paul cites it in 1 Cor 3:19.

8 tn The etymology of נִפְתָּלִים (niftalim) suggests a meaning of "twisted" (see Prov 8:8) in the sense of tortuous. See Gen 30:8; Ps 18:26 [27].

9 tn The Niphal of מָהַר (mahar) means "to be hasty; to be irresponsible." The meaning in the line may be understood in this sense: The counsel of the wily is hastened, that is, precipitated before it is ripe, i.e., frustrated (A. B. Davidson, Job, 39).

10 sn God so confuses the crafty that they are unable to fulfill their plans – it is as if they encounter darkness in broad daylight. This is like the Syrians in 2 Kgs 6:18-23.

11 tn The verb מָשַׁשׁ (mashash) expresses the idea of groping about in the darkness. This is part of the fulfillment of Deut 28:29, which says, "and you shall grope at noonday as the blind grope in darkness." This image is also in Isa 59:10.

12 sn The verse provides a picture of the frustration and bewilderment in the crafty who cannot accomplish their ends because God thwarts them.

13 tn The verb, the Hiphil preterite of יָשַׁע (yasha', "and he saves") indicates that by frustrating the plans of the wicked God saves the poor. So the vav (ו) consecutive shows the result in the sequence of the verses.

14 tn The juxtaposition of "from the sword from their mouth" poses translation difficulties. Some MSS do not have the preposition on "their mouth," but render the expression as a construct: "from the sword of their mouth." This would mean their tongue, and by metonymy, what they say. The expression "from their mouth" corresponds well with "from the hand" in the next colon. And as E. Dhorme (Job, 67) notes, what is missing is a parallel in the first part with "the poor" in the second. So he follows Cappel in repointing "from the sword" as a Hophal participle, מֻחָרָב (mokhorav), meaning "the ruined." If a change is required, this has the benefit of only changing the pointing. The difficulty with this is that the word "desolate, ruined" is not used for people, but only to cities, lands, or mountains. The sense of the verse can be supported from the present pointing: "from the sword [which comes] from their mouth"; the second phrase could also be in apposition, meaning, "from the sword, i.e., from their mouth."

15 tn If the word "poor" is to do double duty, i.e., serving as the object of the verb "saves" in the first colon as well as the second, then the conjunction should be explanatory.

16 tn Other translations render this "injustice" (NIV, NRSV, CEV) or "unrighteousness" (NASB).

17 tn The verse summarizes the result of God's intervention in human affairs, according to Eliphaz' idea that even-handed justice prevails. Ps 107:42 parallels v. 16b.

18 tn The particle "therefore" links this section to the preceding; it points this out as the logical consequence of the previous discussion, and more generally, as the essence of Job's suffering.

19 tn The word אַשְׁרֵי ('ashre, "blessed") is often rendered "happy." But "happy" relates to what happens. "Blessed" is a reference to the heavenly bliss of the one who is right with God.

20 tn The construction is an implied relative clause. The literal rendering would simply be "the man God corrects him." The suffix on the verb is a resumptive pronoun, completing the use of the relative clause. The verb יָכַח (yakhakh) is a legal term; it always has some sense of a charge, dispute, or conflict. Its usages show that it may describe a strife breaking out, a charge or quarrel in progress, or the settling of a dispute (Isa 1:18). The derived noun can mean "reproach; recrimination; charge" (13:6; 23:4). Here the emphasis is on the consequence of the charge brought, namely, the correction.

21 tn The noun מוּסַר (musar) is parallel to the idea of the first colon. It means "discipline, correction" (from יָסַר, yasar). Prov 3:11 says almost the same thing as this line.

22 sn The name Shaddai occurs 31 times in the book. This is its first occurrence. It is often rendered "Almighty" because of the LXX and some of the early fathers. The etymology and meaning of the word otherwise remains uncertain, in spite of attempts to connect it to "mountains" or "breasts."

5:18 For[1] he[2] wounds,[3] but he also bandages;
he strikes, but his hands also heal.
5:19 He will deliver you[4] from six calamities;
yes, in seven[5] no evil will touch you.
5:20 In time of famine[6] he will redeem you from death, and in time of war from the power of the sword.[7] 5:21 You will be protected[8] from malicious gossip,[9] and will not be afraid of the destruction[10] when it comes.
5:22 You will laugh at destruction and famine[11] and need not[12] be afraid of the beasts of the earth.
5:23 For you will have a pact with the stones[13] of the field, and the wild animals[14] will be at peace[15] with you.
5:24 And[16] you will know[17] that your home[18] will be secure,[19]
and when you inspect[20] your domains, you will not be missing[21] anything.
5:25 You will also know that your children[22] will be numerous, and your descendants[23] like the grass of the earth.
5:26 You will come to your grave in a full age,[24]

[1] sn Verses 18-23 give the reasons why someone should accept the chastening of God – the hand that wounds is the same hand that heals. But, of course, the lines do not apply to Job because his suffering is not due to divine chastening.

[2] tn The addition of the independent pronoun here makes the subject emphatic, as if to say, "For it is he who makes...."

[3] tn The imperfect verbs in this verse describe the characteristic activities of God; the classification as habitual imperfect fits the idea and is to be rendered with the English present tense.

[4] tn The verb is the Hiphil imperfect of נָצַל (natsal, "deliver"). These verbs might have been treated as habitual imperfects if it were not for the use of the numerical images – "six calamities...in seven." So the nuance is specific future instead.

[5] tn The use of a numerical ladder as we have here – "six // seven" is frequent in wisdom literature to show completeness. See Prov 6:16; Amos 1:3, Mic 5:5. A number that seems to be sufficient for the point is increased by one, as if to say there is always one more. By using this Eliphaz simply means "in all troubles" (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 56).

[6] sn Targum Job here sees an allusion to the famine of Egypt and the war with Amalek.

[7] tn Heb "from the hand of the sword." This is idiomatic for "the power of the sword." The expression is also metonymical, meaning from the effect of the sword, which is death.

[8] tn The Hebrew verb essentially means "you will be hidden." In the Niphal the verb means "to be hidden, to be in a hiding place," and protected (Ps 31:20).

[9] tn Heb "from the lash [i.e., whip] of the tongue." Sir 26:9 and 51:2 show usages of these kinds of expressions: "the lash of the tongue" or "the blow of the tongue." The expression indicates that a malicious gossip is more painful than a blow.

sn The Targum saw here a reference to Balaam and the devastation brought on by the Midianites.

[10] tn The word here is שׁוֹד (shod); it means "destruction," but some commentators conjecture alternate readings: שׁוֹאָה (sho'ah, "desolation"); or שֵׁד (shed, "demon"). One argument for maintaining שׁוֹד (shod) is that it fits the assonance within the verse שׁוֹד ... לָשׁוֹן ... שׁוֹט (shot...lashon...shod).

[11] tc The repetition of "destruction" and "famine" here has prompted some scholars to delete the whole verse. Others try to emend the text. The LXX renders them as "the unrighteous and the lawless." But there is no difficulty in having the repetition of the words as found in the MT.

tn The word for "famine" is an Aramaic word found again in 30:3. The book of Job has a number of Aramaisms that are used to form an alternative parallel expression (see notes on "witness" in 16:19).

[12] tn The negated jussive is used here to express the conviction that something cannot or should not happen (GKC 322 §109.e).

[13] tn Heb "your covenant is with the stones of the field." The line has been variously interpreted and translated. It is omitted in the LXX. It seems to mean there is a deep sympathy between man and nature. Some think it means that the boundaries will not be violated by enemies; Rashi thought it represented some species of beings, like genii of the field, and so read אֲדֹנֵי ('adone, "lords") for אֲבְנֵי ('avne, "stones"). Ball takes the word as בְּנֵי (bᵉne, "sons"), as in "sons of the field," to get the idea that the reference is to the beasts. E. Dhorme (Job, 71) rejects these ideas as too contrived; he says to have a pact with the stones of the field simply means the stones will not come and spoil the ground, making it less fertile.

[14] tn Heb "the beasts of the field."

[15] tn This is the only occurrence of the Hophal of the verb שָׁלַם (shalem, "to make or have peace" with someone). Compare Isa 11:6-9 and Ps 91:13. The verb form is the perfect; here it is the perfect consecutive following a noun clause (see GKC 494 §159.g).

[16] sn Verses 19-23 described the immunity from evil and trouble that Job would enjoy – if he were restored to peace with God. Now, v. 24 describes the safety and peace of the homestead and his possessions if he were right with God.

[17] tn The verb is again the perfect, but in sequence to the previous structure so that it is rendered as a future. This would be the case if Job were right with God.

[18] tn Heb "tent."

[19] tn The word שָׁלוֹם (shalom) means "peace; safety; security; wholeness." The same use appears in 1 Sam 25:6; 2 Sam 20:9.

[20] tn The verb is פָּקַד (paqad, "to visit"). The idea here is "to gather together; to look over; to investigate," or possibly even "to number" as it is used in the book of Numbers. The verb is the perfect with the vav consecutive; it may be subordinated to the imperfect verb that follows to form a temporal clause.

[21] tn The verb is usually rendered "to sin," but in this context the more specific primary meaning of "to miss the mark" or "to fail to find something." Neither Job's tent nor his possessions will be lost.

[22] tn Heb "your seed."

[23] tn The word means "your shoots" and is parallel to "your seed" in the first colon. It refers here (as in Isa 34:1 and 42:5) to the produce of the earth. Some commentators suggest that Eliphaz seems to have forgotten or was insensitive to Job's loss of his children; H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 57) says his conventional theology is untouched by human feeling.

[24] tn The word translated "in a full age" has been given an array of meanings: "health; integrity"; "like a new blade of corn"; "in your strength [or vigor]." The numerical value of the letters in the word בְּכֶלֶה (bᵉkhelakh, "in old age") was 2, 20, 30, and 8, or 60. This led some of the commentators to say that at 60 one would enter the ripe old age (E. Dhorme, Job, 73).

As stacks of grain are harvested in their season.
5:27 Look, we have investigated this, so it is true.
Hear it,[1] and apply it for your own[2] good."[3]

Job Replies to Eliphaz

6:1 Then Job responded:[4]
6:2 "Oh,[5] if only my grief[6] could be weighed,[7] and my misfortune laid[8] on the scales too![9] 6:3 But because it is heavier[10] than the sand[11] of the sea, that is why my words have been wild.[12]
6:4 For the arrows[13] of the Almighty[14] are within me;
my spirit[15] drinks their poison;[16]
God's sudden terrors[17] are arrayed[18] against me.

Complaints Reflect Suffering

6:5 "Does the wild donkey[19] bray[20] when it is near grass?[21]
Or[22] does the ox low near its fodder?[23]

1 tn To make a better parallelism, some commentators have replaced the imperative with another finite verb, "we have found it."

2 tn The preposition with the suffix (referred to as the ethical dative) strengthens the imperative. An emphatic personal pronoun also precedes the imperative. The resulting force would be something like "and you had better apply it for your own good!"

3 sn With this the speech by Eliphaz comes to a close. His two mistakes with it are: (1) that the tone was too cold and (2) the argument did not fit Job's case (see further, A. B. Davidson, Job, 42).

4 tn Heb "answered and said."

5 tn The conjunction לוּ (lu, "if, if only") introduces the wish – an unrealizable wish – with the Niphal imperfect.

6 tn Job pairs כַּעְסִי (ka'si, "my grief") and הַוַּתִי (hayyati, "my misfortune"). The first word, used in Job 4:2, refers to Job's whole demeanor that he shows his friends – the impatient and vexed expression of his grief. The second word expresses his misfortune, the cause of his grief. Job wants these placed together in the balances so that his friends could see the misfortune is greater than the grief. The word for "misfortune" is a Kethib-Qere reading. The two words have essentially the same meaning; they derive from the verb הָוַה (havah, "to fall") and so mean a misfortune.

7 tn The Qal infinitive absolute is here used to intensify the Niphal imperfect (see GKC 344-45 §113.w). The infinitive absolute intensifies the wish as well as the idea of weighing.

8 tn The third person plural verb is used here; it expresses an indefinite subject and is treated as a passive (see GKC 460 §144.g).

9 tn The adverb normally means "together," but it can also mean "similarly, too." In this verse it may not mean that the two things are to be weighed together, but that the whole calamity should be put on the scales (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 43).

10 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 76) notes that כִּי־עַתָּה (ki 'attah) has no more force than "but"; and that the construction is the same as in 17:4; 20:19-21; 23:14-15. The initial clause is causative, and the second half of the verse gives the consequence ("because"…"that is why"). Others take 3a as the apodosis of v. 2, and translate it "for now it would be heavier…" (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 43).

11 sn The point of the comparison with the sand of the sea is that the sand is immeasurable. So the grief of Job cannot be measured.

12 tn The verb לָעוּ (la'u) is traced by E. Dhorme (Job, 76) to a root לָעָה (la'ah), cognate to an Arabic root meaning "to chatter." He shows how modern Hebrew has a meaning for the word "to stammer out." But that does not really fit Job's outbursts. The idea in the context is rather that of speaking wildly, rashly, or charged with grief. This would trace the word to a hollow or geminate word and link it to Arabic "talk wildly" (see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 158). In the older works the verb was taken from a geminate root meaning "to suck" or "to swallow" (cf. KJV), but that yields a very difficult sense to the line.

13 sn Job uses an implied comparison here to describe his misfortune – it is as if God had shot poisoned arrows into him (see E. Dhorme, Job, 76-77 for a treatment of poisoned arrows in the ancient world).

14 sn Job here clearly states that his problems have come from the Almighty, which is what Eliphaz said. But whereas Eliphaz said Job provoked the trouble by his sin, Job is perplexed because he does not think he did.

15 tn Most commentators take "my spirit" as the subject of the participle "drinks" (except the NEB, which follows the older versions to say that the poison "drinks up [or "soaks in"] the spirit.") The image of the poisoned arrow represents the calamity or misfortune from God, which is taken in by Job's spirit and enervates him.

16 tn The LXX translators knew that a liquid should be used with the verb "drink," but they took the line to be "whose violence drinks up my blood." For the rest of the verse they came up with, "whenever I am going to speak they pierce me."

17 tn The word translated "sudden terrors" is found only here and in Ps 88:16 [17]. G. R. Driver notes that the idea of suddenness is present in the root, and so renders this word as "sudden assaults" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 73).

18 tn The verb עָרַךְ ('arakh) means "to set in battle array." The suffix on the verb is dative (see GKC 369 §117.x). Many suggestions have been made for changing this word. These seem unnecessary since the MT pointing yields a good meaning: but for the references to these suggestions, see D. J. A. Clines, Job (WBC), 158. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 59), nonetheless, follows the suggestion of Driver that connects it to a root meaning "wear me down." This change of meaning requires no change in the Hebrew text. The image is of a beleaguering army; the host is made up of all the terrors from God. The reference is to the terrifying and perplexing thoughts that assail Job (A. B. Davidson, Job, 44).

19 tn There have been suggestions to identify this animal as something other than a wild donkey, but the traditional interpretation has been confirmed (see P. Humbert, "En marge du dictionnaire hébraïque," ZAW 62 [1950]: 199-207).

20 tn The verb נָהַק (nahaq, "bray") occurs in Arabic and Aramaic and only in Job 30:7 in Hebrew, where it refers to unfortunate people in the wilderness who utter cries like the hungry wild donkey.

21 sn In this brief section Job indicates that it would be wiser to seek the reason for the crying than to complain of the cry. The wild donkey will bray when it finds no food (see Jer 14:6).

22 tn The construction forms a double question (הַ…אִם, ha…'im) but not to express mutually exclusive questions in this instance. Instead, it is used to repeat the same question in different words (see GKC 475 §150.h).

23 tc The LXX captures the meaning of the verse, but renders it in a more expansive way.

tn This word occurs here and in Isa 30:24. In contrast to the grass that grows on the fields for the wild donkey, this is fodder prepared for the domesticated animals.

6:6 Can food that is tasteless[1] be eaten without salt?
Or is there any taste in the white[2] of an egg?
6:7 I[3] have refused[4] to touch such things;[5]
they are like loathsome food to me.[6]

A Cry for Death

6:8 "Oh that[7] my request would be realized,[8]
and that God would grant me what I long for![9]
6:9 And that God would be willing[10] to crush me, that he would let loose[11] his hand and[12] kill me.[13]
6:10 Then I would yet have my comfort,[14] then[15] I would rejoice,[16] in spite of pitiless pain,[17] for[18] I have not concealed the words[19] of the Holy One.[20]
6:11 What is my strength, that I should wait?[21]

1 tn Heb "a tasteless thing"; the word "food" is supplied from the context.

2 tn Some commentators are not satisfied with the translation "white of an egg"; they prefer something connected to "slime of purslane" (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 59; cf. NRSV "juice of mallows"). This meaning is based on the Syriac and Arabic version of Sa`adia. The meaning "white of the egg" comes from the rabbinic interpretation of "slime of the yolk." Others carry the idea further and interpret it to mean "saliva of dreams" or after the LXX "in dream words." H. H. Rowley does not think that the exact edible object can be identified. The idea of the slimy glaring white around the yolk of an egg seems to fit best. This is another illustration of something that is tasteless or insipid.

3 tn The traditional rendering of נַפְשִׁי (nafshi) is "my soul." But since נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) means the whole person, body and soul, it is best to translate it with its suffix simply as an emphatic pronoun.

4 tn For the explanation of the perfect verb with its completed action in the past and its remaining effects, see GKC 311 §106.g.

5 tn The phrase "such things" is not in the Hebrew text but has been supplied.

6 tn The second colon of the verse is difficult. The word דְּוֵי (d^{e}ve) means "sickness of" and yields a meaning "like the sickness of my food." This could take the derived sense of דָּוָה (davah) and mean "impure" or "corrupt" food. The LXX has "for I loathe my food as the smell of a lion" and so some commentators emend "they" (which has no clear antecedent) to mean "I loathe it [like the sickness of my food]." Others have more freely emended the text to "my palate loathes my food" (McNeile) or "my bowels resound with suffering" (I. Eitan, "An unknown meaning of RAHAMĪM," JBL 53 [1934]: 271). Pope has "they are putrid as my flesh [= my meat]." D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 159) prefers the suggestion in BHS, "it [my soul] loathes them as my food." E. Dhorme (Job, 80) repoints the second word of the colon to get כְּבֹדִי (k^{e}vodi, "my glory"): "my heart [glory] loathes/is sickened by my bread."

7 tn The Hebrew expresses the desire (desiderative clause) with "who will give?" (see GKC 477 §151.d).

8 tn The verb בּוֹא (bo', "go") has the sense of "to be realized; to come to pass; to be fulfilled." The optative "Who will give [that] my request be realized?" is "O that my request would be realized."

9 tn The text has תִּכְוָתִי (tiqvati, "hope"). There is no reason to change the text to "my desire" (as Driver and others do) if the word is interpreted metonymically – it means "what I hope for." What Job hopes for and asks for is death.

sn See further W. Riggans, "Job 6:8-10: Short Comments," ExpTim 99 (1987): 45-46.

10 tn The verb יֹאַל (ya'al) in the Hiphil means "to be willing, to consent, to decide." It is here the jussive followed by the dependent verb with a ו (vav: "that God would be willing and would crush me" means "to crush me." Gesenius, however, says that the conjunction introduces coordination rather than subordination; he says the principal idea is introduced in the second verb, the first verb containing the definition of the manner of the action (see GKC 386 §120.d).

11 tn The verb is used for loosening shoe straps in Isa 58:6, and of setting prisoners free in Pss 105:20 and 146:7. Job thinks that God's hand has been restrained for some reason, and so desires that God be free to destroy him.

12 tn The final verb is an imperfect (or jussive) following the jussive (of נָתַר, natar); it thus expresses the result ("and then" or "so that") or the purpose ("in order that"). Job longs for death, but it must come from God.

13 tn Heb "and cut me off." The LXX reads this verse as "Let the Lord begin and wound me, but let him not utterly destroy me." E. Dhorme (Job, 81) says the LXX is a paraphrase based on a pun with "free hand." Targum Job has, "God has begun to make me poor; may he free his hand and make me rich," apparently basing the reading on a metaphorical interpretation.

14 tn Heb "and it will/may be yet my comfort." The comfort or consolation that he seeks, that he wishes for, is death. The next colon in the verse simply intensifies this thought, for he affirms if that should happen he would rejoice, in spite of what death involves. The LXX, apparently confusing letters (reading עִיר ['ir, "city"] instead of עוֹד ['od, "yet"], which then led to the mistake in the next colon, חֵילָה [khelah, "its wall"] for חִילָה [khilah, "suffering"]), has "Let the grave be my city, upon the walls of which I have leaped."

15 tn In the apodosis of conditional clauses (which must be supplied from the context preceding), the cohortative expresses the consequence (see GKC 320 §108.d).

16 tn The Piel verb סָלַד (silled) is a hapax legomenon. BDB 698 s.v. סָלַד gives the meaning "to spring [i.e., jump] for joy," which would certainly fit the passage. Others have emended the text, but unnecessarily. The LXX "I jumped" and Targum Job's "exult" support the sense in the dictionaries, although the jumping is for joy and not over a wall (as the LXX has). D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 159) follows Driver in thinking this is untenable, choosing a meaning "recoiled in pain" for the line.

17 tn The word חִילָה (khilah) also occurs only here, but is connected to the verb חוּל / חִיל (khil / khul, "to writhe in pain"). E. Dhorme says that by extension the meaning denotes the cause of this trembling or writhing – terrifying pain. The final clause, לֹא יֶחְמוֹל (lo' yakhmol, "it has no pity"), serves as a kind of epithet, modifying "pain" in general. If that pain has no pity or compassion, it is a ruthless pain (E. Dhorme, Job, 82).

18 tn The כִּי (ki, "for") functions here to explain "my comfort" in the first colon; the second colon simply strengthens the first.

19 sn The "words" are the divine decrees of God's providence, the decisions that he makes in his dealings with people. Job cannot conceal these – he knows what they are. What Job seems to mean by this clause in this verse is that there is nothing that would hinder his joy of dying for he has not denied or disobeyed God's plan.

20 tn Several commentators delete the colon as having no meaning in the verse, and because (in their view) it is probably the addition of an interpolator who wants to make Job sound more pious. But Job is at least consoling himself that he is innocent, and at the most anticipating a worth-while afterlife (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 60).

21 sn Now, in vv. 11-13, Job proceeds to describe his hopeless condition. In so doing, he is continuing his defense of his despair and lament. The section begins with these rhetorical questions in which Job affirms that he does not have the strength to wait for the blessings that Eliphaz is talking about.

and what is my end,[1] that I should prolong my life?
6:12 Is my strength like that of stones?[2] or is my flesh made of bronze?
6:13 Is[3] not my power to help myself nothing, and has not every resource[4] been driven from me?

Disappointing Friends

6:14 "To the one in despair, kindness[5] should come from his friend[6] even if[7] he forsakes the fear of the Almighty.
6:15 My brothers[8] have been as treacherous[9] as a seasonal stream,[10] and as the riverbeds of the intermittent streams[11]
that flow away.[12]
6:16 They[13] are dark[14] because of ice; snow is piled[15] up over them.[16]
6:17 When they are scorched,[17] they dry up, when it is hot, they vanish[18] from their place.

[1] tn The word translated "my end" is קִצִי (qitsi). It refers to the termination of his life. In Ps 39:5 it is parallel to "the measure of my days." In a sense, Job is asking what future he has. To him, the "end" of his affliction can only be death.

[2] sn The questions imply negative answers. Job is saying that it would take great strength to hold up under these afflictions, but he is only flesh and bone. The sufferings have almost completely overwhelmed him. To endure all of this to the end he would need a strength he does not have.

[3] tn For the use of the particle אִם ('im) in this kind of interrogative clause, see GKC 475 §150.g, note.

[4] tn The word means something like "recovery," or the powers of recovery; it was used in Job 5:12. In 11:6 it applies to a condition of the mind, such as mental resource. Job is thinking not so much of relief or rescue from his troubles, but of strength to bear them.

[5] tn In this context חֶסֶד (khesed) could be taken as "loyalty" ("loyalty should be shown by his friend").

[6] tn The Hebrew of this verse is extremely difficult, and while there are many suggestions, none of them has gained a consensus. The first colon simply has "to the despairing // from his friend // kindness." Several commentators prefer to change the first word לַמָּס (lammas, "to the one in despair") to some sort of verb; several adopt the reading "the one who withholds/he withholds mercy from his friend forsakes...." The point of the first half of the verse seems to be that one should expect kindness (or loyalty) from a friend in times of suffering.

[7] tn The relationship of the second colon to the first is difficult. The line just reads literally "and the fear of the Almighty he forsakes." The ו (vav) could be interpreted in several different ways: "else he will forsake...," "although he forsakes...," "even the one who forsakes...," or "even if he forsakes..." – the reading adopted here. If the first colon receives the reading "His friend has scorned compassion," then this clause would be simply coordinated with "and forsakes the fear of the Almighty." The sense of the verse seems to say that kindness/loyalty should be shown to the despairing, even to the one who is forsaking the fear of the LORD, meaning, saying outrageous things, like Job has been doing.

[8] sn Here the brothers are all his relatives as well as these intimate friends of Job. In contrast to what a friend should do (show kindness/loyalty), these friends have provided no support whatsoever.

[9] tn The verb בָּגְדוּ (bage'du, "dealt treacherously) has been translated "dealt deceitfully," but it is a very strong word. It means "to act treacherously [or deceitfully]." The deception is the treachery, because the deception is not innocent – it is in the place of a great need. The imagery will compare it to the brook that may or may not have water. If one finds no water when one expected it and needed it, there is deception and treachery. The LXX softens it considerably: "have not regarded me."

[10] tn The Hebrew term used here is נַחַל (nakhal); this word differs from words for rivers or streams in that it describes a brook with an intermittent flow of water. A brook where the waters are not flowing is called a deceitful brook (Jer 15:18; Mic 1:14); one where the waters flow is called faithful (Isa 33:16).

[11] tn Heb "and as a stream bed of brooks/torrents." The word אָפִיק ('afiq) is the river bed or stream bed where the water flows. What is more disconcerting than finding a well-known torrent whose bed is dry when one expects it to be gushing with water (E. Dhorme, Job, 86)?

[12] tn The verb is rather simple – יַעַבְרוּ (ya'avoru). But some translate it "pass away" or "flow away," and others "overflow." In the rainy season they are deep and flowing, or "overflow" their banks. This is a natural sense to the verb, and since the next verse focuses on this, some follow this interpretation (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 15). But this idea does not parallel the first part of v. 15. So it makes better sense to render it "flow away" and see the reference to the summer dry spells when one wants the water but is disappointed.

[13] tn The article on the participle joins this statement to the preceding noun; it can have the sense of "they" or "which." The parallel sense then can be continued with a finite verb (see GKC 404 §126.b).

[14] tn The participle הַקֹּדְרִים (haqqode'rim), often rendered "which are black," would better be translated "dark," for it refers to the turbid waters filled with melting ice or melting snow, or to the frozen surface of the water, but not waters that are muddied. The versions failed to note that this referred to the waters introduced in v. 15.

[15] tn The verb יִתְעַלֶּם (yit'allem) has been translated "is hid" or "hides itself." But this does not work easily in the sentence with the preposition "upon them." Torczyner suggested "pile up" from an Aramaic root עֲלַם ('alam), and E. Dhorme (Job, 87) defends it without changing the text, contending that the form we have was chosen for alliterative value with the prepositional phrase before it.

[16] tn The LXX paraphrases the whole verse: "They who used to reverence me now come against me like snow or congealed ice."

[17] tn The verb יְזֹרְבוּ (ye'zore'vu, "burnt, scorched") occurs only here. A good number of interpretations take the root as a by-form of צָרַב (tsarav) which means in the Niphal "to be burnt" (Ezek 21:3). The expression then would mean "in the time they are burnt," a reference to the scorching heat of the summer ("when the great heat comes") and the rivers dry up. Qimchi connected it to the Arabic "canal," and this has led to the suggestion by E. Dhorme (Job, 88) that the root זָרַב (zarav) would mean "to flow." In the Piel it would be "to cause to flow," and in the passive "to be made to flow," or "melt." This is attractive, but it does require the understanding (or supplying) of "ice/snow" as the subject. G. R. Driver took the same meaning but translated it "when they (the streams) pour down in torrents, they (straightway) die down" (ZAW 65 [1953]: 216-17). Both interpretations capture the sense of the brooks drying up.

[18] tn The verb נִדְעֲכוּ (nid'akhu) literally means "they are extinguished" or "they vanish" (cf. 18:5-6; 21:17). The LXX, perhaps confusing the word with the verb יָדַע (yada', "to know") has "and it is not known what it was."

6:18 Caravans[1] turn aside from their routes;
they go[2] into the wasteland[3] and perish.[4] 6:19 The caravans of Tema[5] looked intently[6] for these streams;[7]
the traveling merchants[8] of Sheba hoped for them.
6:20 They were distressed,[9]
because each one had been[10] so confident; they arrived there,[11] but were disappointed.

6:21 For now[12] you have become like these streams that are no help;[13] you see a terror,[14] and are afraid.

Friends' Fears

6:22 "Have I[15] ever said,[16] 'Give me something, and from your fortune[17] make gifts[18] in my favor'?
6:23 Or 'Deliver me[19] from the enemy's power,[20]
and from the hand of tyrants[21] ransom[22]
me'?

---

1 tn This is the usual rendering of the Hebrew אֹרְחוֹת ('orkhot, "way, path"). It would mean that the course of the wadi would wind down and be lost in the sand. Many commentators either repoint the text to אָרְחוֹת ('orekhot) when in construct (as in Isa 21:13), or simply redefine the existing word to mean "caravans" as in the next verse, and translate something like "caravans deviate from their route." D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 160-61) allows that "caravans" will be introduced in the next verse, but urges retention of the usual sense here. The two verses together will yield the same idea in either case – the river dries up and caravans looking for the water deviate from their course looking for it.

2 tn The verb literally means "to go up," but here no real ascent is intended for the wasteland. It means that they go inland looking for the water. The streams wind out into the desert and dry up in the sand and the heat. A. B. Davidson (Job, 47) notes the difficulty with the interpretation of this verse as a reference to caravans is that Ibn Ezra says that it is not usual for caravans to leave their path and wander inland in search of water.

3 tn The word תֹּהוּ (tohu) was used in Genesis for "waste," meaning without shape or structure. Here the term refers to the trackless, unending wilderness (cf. 12:24).

4 sn If the term "paths" (referring to the brook) is the subject, then this verb would mean it dies in the desert; if caravaneers are intended, then when they find no water they perish. The point in the argument would be the same in either case. Job is saying that his friends are like this water, and he like the caravaneer was looking for refreshment, but found only that the brook had dried up.

5 sn Tema is the area of the oasis SE of the head of the Gulf of Aqaba; Sheba is in South Arabia. In Job 1:15 the Sabeans were raiders; here they are traveling merchants.

6 tn The verb נָבַט (navat) means "to gaze intently"; the looking is more intentional, more of a close scrutiny. It forms a fine parallel to the idea of "hope" in the second part. The NIV translates the second verb קִוּו (qivvu) as "look in hope." In the previous verbs the imperfect form was used, expressing what generally happens (so the English present tense was used). Here the verb usage changes to the perfect form. It seems that Job is narrating a typical incident now – they looked, but were disappointed.

7 tn The words "for these streams" are supplied from context to complete the thought and make the connection with the preceding context.

8 tn In Ps 68:24 this word has the meaning of "processions"; here that procession is of traveling merchants forming convoys or caravans.

9 tn The verb בּוֹשׁ (bosh) basically means "to be ashamed"; however, it has a wider range of meaning such as "disappointed" or "distressed." The feeling of shame or distress is because of their confidence that they knew what they were doing. The verb is strengthened here with the parallel חָפַר (khafar, "to be confounded, disappointed").

10 tn The perfect verb has the nuance of past perfect here, for their confidence preceded their disappointment. Note the contrast, using these verbs, in Ps 22:6: "they trusted in you and they were not put to shame [i.e., disappointed]."

11 tn The LXX misread the prepositional phrase as the noun "their cities"; it gives the line as "They too that trust in cities and riches shall come to shame."

12 tn There is a textual problem in this line, an issue of Kethib-Qere. Some read the form with the Qere as the preposition with a suffix referring to "the river," with the idea "you are like it." Others would read the form with the Kethib as the negative "not," meaning "for now you are nothing." The LXX and the Syriac read the word as "to me." RSV follows this and changes כִּי (ki, "for") to כֵּן (ken, "thus"). However, such an emendation is unnecessary since כִּי (ki) itself can be legitimately employed as an emphatic particle. In that case, the translation would be, "Indeed, now you are" in the sense of "At this time you certainly are behaving like those streams." The simplest reading is "for now you have become [like] it." The meaning seems clear enough in the context that the friends, like the river, proved to be of no use. But D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 161) points out that the difficulty with this is that all references so far to the rivers have been in the plural.

13 tn The perfect of הָיָה (hayah) could be translated as either "are" or "have been" rather than "have become" (cf. Joüon 2:373 §113.p with regard to stative verbs). "Like it" refers to the intermittent stream which promises water but does not deliver. The LXX has a paraphrase: "But you also have come to me without pity."

14 tn The word חַתַּת (khatat) is a hapax legomenon. The word חַת (khat) means "terror" in 41:25. The construct form חִתַּת (khittat) is found in Gen 35:5; and חִתִּית (khittit) is found in Ezek 26:17, 32:23). The Akkadian cognate means "terror." It probably means that in Job's suffering they recognized some dreaded thing from God and were afraid to speak any sympathy toward him.

15 tn The Hebrew הֲכִי (hakhi) literally says "Is it because...."

16 sn For the next two verses Job lashes out in sarcasm against his friends. If he had asked for charity, for their wealth, he might have expected their cold response. But all he wanted was sympathy and understanding (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 63).

17 tn The word כֹּחַ (koakh) basically means "strength, force," but like the synonym חַיִל (khayil), it can also mean "wealth, fortune." E. Dhorme notes that to the Semitic mind, riches bring power (Job, 90).

18 tn Or "bribes." The verb שַׁחֲדוּ (shikhadu) means "give a שֹׁחַד (shokhad, "bribe")." The significance is simply "make a gift" (especially in the sense of corrupting an official [Ezek 16:33]). For the spelling of the form in view of the guttural, see GKC 169 §64.a.

19 tn The verse now gives the ultimate reason why Job might have urged his friends to make a gift – if it were possible. The LXX, avoiding the direct speech in the preceding verse and this, does make this verse the purpose statement – "to deliver from enemies...."

20 tn Heb "hand," as in the second half of the verse.

21 tn The עָרִיצִים ('aritsim) are tyrants, the people who inspire fear (Job 15:20; 27:13); the root verb עָרַץ ('arats) means "to terrify" (Job 13:25).

22 tn The verb now is the imperfect; since it is parallel to the imperative in the first half of the verse it is imperfect of instruction, much like English uses the future for instruction. The verb פָּדָה (padah) means "to ransom, redeem," often in contexts where payment is made.

No Sin Discovered

6:24 "Teach[1] me and I, for my part,[2] will be silent;
explain to me[3] how I have been mistaken.[4]
6:25 How painful[5] are honest words!
But[6] what does your reproof[7] prove?[8] 6:26 Do you intend to criticize mere words, and treat[9] the words of a despairing man
as wind?
6:27 Yes, you would gamble[10] for the fatherless, and auction off[11] your friend.

Other Explanation

6:28 "Now then, be good enough to look[12] at me;[13]
and I will not[14] lie to your face!
6:29 Relent,[15] let there be no falsehood;[16] reconsider,[17] for my righteousness is intact![18]
6:30 Is there any falsehood[19] on my lips?
Can my mouth[20] not discern evil things?[21]

---

1 tn The verb "teach" or "instruct" is the Hiphil הוֹרוּנִי (horuni), from the verb יָרָה (yarah); the basic idea of "point, direct" lies behind this meaning. The verb is cognate to the noun תּוֹרָה (torah, "instruction, teaching, law").

2 tn The independent personal pronoun makes the subject of the verb emphatic: "and I will be silent."

3 tn The verb is הֲבִינוּ (havinu, "to cause someone to understand"); with the לְ (lamed) following, it has the sense of "explain to me."

4 tn The verb שָׁגָה (shagah) has the sense of "wandering, getting lost, being mistaken."

5 tn The word נִמְרְצוּ (nimr^{e}tsu, "[they] painful are") may be connected to מָרַץ (marats, "to be ill"). This would give the idea of "how distressing," or "painful" in this stem. G. R. Driver (JTS 29 [1927/28]: 390-96) connected it to an Akkadian cognate "to be ill" and rendered it "bitter." It has also been linked with מָרַס (maras), meaning "to be hard, strong," giving the idea of "how persuasive" (see N. S. Doniach and W. E. Barnes, "Job 4:25: The Root Maras," JTS [1929/30]: 291-92). There seems more support for the meaning "to be ill" (cf. Mal 2:10). Others follow Targum Job "how pleasant [to my palate are your words]"; E. Dhorme (Job, 92) follows this without changing the text but noting that the word has an interchange of letter with מָלַץ (malats) for מָרַץ (marats).

6 tn The ו (vav) here introduces the antithesis (GKC 484-85 §154.a).

7 tn The infinitive הוֹכֵחַ (hokheakh, "reproof," from יָכַח [yakhakh, "prove"]) becomes the subject of the verb from the same root, יוֹכִיחַ (yokhiakh), and so serves as a noun (see GKC 340 §113.b). This verb means "to dispute, quarrel, argue, contend" (see BDB 406-7 s.v. יָכַח). Job is saying, "What does reproof from you prove?"

8 tn The LXX again paraphrases this line: "But as it seems, the words of a true man are vain, because I do not ask strength of you." But the rest of the versions are equally divided on the verse.

9 tn This, in the context, is probably the meaning, although the Hebrew simply has the line after the first half of the verse read: "and as/to wind the words of a despairing man." The line could be translated "and the words of a despairing man, [which are] as wind." But this translation follows the same approach as RSV, NIV, and NAB, which take the idiom of the verb ("think, imagine") with the preposition on "wind" to mean "reckon as wind" – "and treat the words of a despairing man as wind."

10 tn The word "lots" is not in the text; the verb is simply תַּפִּילוּ (tappilu, "you cast"). But the word "lots" is also omitted in 1 Sam 14:42. Some commentators follow the LXX and repoint the word and divide the object of the preposition to read "and fall upon the blameless one." Fohrer deletes the verse. Peake transfers it to come after v. 23. Even though it does not follow quite as well here, it nonetheless makes sense as a strong invective against their lack of sympathy, and the lack of connection could be the result of emotional speech. He is saying they are the kind of people who would cast lots over the child of a debtor, who, after the death of the father, would be sold to slavery.

11 tn The verb תִּכְרוּ (tikhru) is from כָּרָה (karah), which is found in 40:30 with עַל ('al), to mean "to speculate" on an object. The form is usually taken to mean "to barter for," which would be an expression showing great callousness to a friend (NIV). NEB has "hurl yourselves," perhaps following the LXX "rush against." but G. R. Driver thinks that meaning is very precarious. As for the translation, "to speculate about [or "over"] a friend" could be understood to mean "engage in speculation concerning," so the translation "auction off" has been used instead.

12 tn The second verb, the imperative "turn," is subordinated to the first imperative even though there is no vav present (see GKC 385-87 §120.a, g).

13 tn The line has "and now, be pleased, turn to me [i.e., face me]." The LXX reverses the idea, "And now, having looked upon your countenances, I will not lie." The expression "turn to me" means essentially to turn the eyes toward someone to look at him.

14 tn The construction uses אִם ('im) as in a negative oath to mark the strong negative. He is underscoring his sincerity here. See M. R. Lehmann, "Biblical Oaths," ZAW 81 (1969): 74-92.

15 tn The Hebrew verb שׁוּבוּ (shuvu) would literally be "return." It has here the sense of "to begin again; to adopt another course," that is, proceed on another supposition other than my guilt (A. B. Davidson, Job, 49). The LXX takes the word from יָשַׁב (yashav, "sit, dwell") reading "sit down now."

16 tn The word עַוְלָה ('avlah) is sometimes translated "iniquity." The word can mean "perversion, wickedness, injustice" (cf. 16:11). But here he means in regard to words. Unjust or wicked words would be words that are false and destroy.

17 tn The verb here is also שׁוּבוּ (shuvu), although there is a Kethib-Qere reading. See R. Gordis, "Some Unrecognized Meanings of the Root Shub," JBL 52 (1933): 153-62.

18 tn The text has simply "yet my right is in it." A. B. Davidson (Job, 49, 50) thinks this means that in his plea against God, Job has right on his side. It may mean this; it simply says "my righteousness is yet in it." If the "in it" does not refer to Job's cause, then it would simply mean "is present." It would have very little difference either way.

19 tn The word עַוְלָה ('avlah) is repeated from the last verse. Here the focus is clearly on wickedness or injustice spoken.

sn These words make a fitting transition to ch. 7, which forms a renewed cry of despair from Job. Job still feels himself innocent, but in the hands of cruel fate which is out to destroy him.

20 tn Heb "my palate." Here "palate" is used not so much for the organ of speech (by metonymy) as of discernment. In other words, what he says indicates what he thinks.

21 tn The final word, הַוּוֹת (havvot) is usually understood as "calamities." He would be asking if he could not discern his misfortune. But some argue that the word has to be understood in the parallelism to "wickedness" of words (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 162). Gordis connects it to Mic 7:3 and Ps 5:10 [9] where the meaning "deceit, falsehood" is found. The LXX has "and does not my throat meditate understanding?"

The Brevity of Life

7:1 "Does not humanity have hard service[1] on earth?
Are not their days also like the days of a hired man?[2] 7:2 Like a servant[3] longing for the evening shadow,[4] and like a hired man looking[5] for his wages,[6] 7:3 thus[7] I have been made to inherit[8] months of futility,[9] and nights of sorrow[10]
have been appointed[11] to me.
7:4 If I lie down, I say,[12] 'When will I arise?', and the night stretches on[13] and I toss and turn restlessly[14]
until the day dawns.
7:5 My body[15] is clothed[16] with worms[17] and dirty scabs;[18]
my skin is broken[19] and festering.

[1] tn The word צָבָא (tsava') is actually "army"; it can be used for the hard service of military service as well as other toil. As a military term it would include the fixed period of duty (the time) and the hard work (toil). Job here is considering the lot of all humans, not just himself.

[2] tn The שָׂכִיר (sakhir) is a hired man, either a man who works for wages, or a mercenary soldier (Jer 46:21). The latter sense may be what is intended here in view of the parallelism, although the next verse seems much broader.

[3] tn This term עֶבֶד ('eved) is the servant or the slave. He is compelled to work through the day in the heat, but he longs for evening when he can rest from the slavery.

[4] tn The expression יִשְׁאַף־צֵל (yish'af tsel, "longing for the evening shadow") could also be taken as a relative clause (without the relative pronoun): "as a servant [who] longs for the evening shadow" (see GKC 487 §155.g). In either case, the expressions in v. 2 emphasize the point of the comparison, which will be summed up in v. 3.

[5] tn The two verbs in this verse stress the eager expectation and waiting. The first, שָׁאַף (sha'af), means "to long for; to desire"; and the second, קָוָה (qavah), has the idea of "to hope for; to look for; to wait." The words would give the sense that the servant or hired man had the longing on his mind all day.

[6] tn The word פֹּעַל (po'al) means "work." But here the word should be taken as a metonymy, meaning the pay for the work that he has done (compare Jer 22:13).

[7] tn "Thus" indicates a summary of vv. 1 and 2: like the soldier, the mercenary, and the slave, Job has labored through life and looks forward to death.

[8] tn The form is the Hophal perfect of נָחַל (nakhal): "I have been made to inherit," or more simply, "I have inherited." The form occurs only here. The LXX must have confused the letters or sounds, a ו (vav) for the ן (nun), for it reads "I have endured." As a passive the form technically has two accusatives (see GKC 388 §121.c). Job's point is that his sufferings have been laid on him by another, and so he has inherited them.

[9] tn The word is שָׁוְא (shav', "vanity, deception, nothingness, futility"). His whole life – marked here in months to show its brevity – has been futile. E. Dhorme (Job, 98) suggests the meaning "disillusionment," explaining that it marks the deceptive nature of mortal life. The word describes life as hollow, insubstantial.

[10] tn "Sorrow" is עָמָל ('amal), used in 3:10. It denotes anxious toil, labor, troublesome effort. It may be that the verse expresses the idea that the nights are when the pains of his disease are felt the most. The months are completely wasted; the nights are agonizing.

[11] tn The verb is literally "they have appointed"; the form with no expressed subject is to be interpreted as a passive (GKC 460 §144.g). It is therefore not necessary to repoint the verb to make it passive. The word means "to number; to count," and so "to determine; to allocate."

[12] tn This is the main clause, and not part of the previous conditional clause; it is introduced by the conjunction אִם ('im) (see GKC 336 §112.gg).

[13] tn The verb מָדַד (madad) normally means "to measure," and here in the Piel it has been given the sense of "to extend." But this is not well attested and not widely accepted. There are many conjectural emendations. Of the most plausible one might mention the view of Gray, who changes מִדַּד (middad, Piel of מָדַד) to מִדֵּי (midde, comprising the preposition מִן [min] plus the noun דֵּי [day], meaning "as often as"): "as often as evening comes." Dhorme, following the LXX to some extent, adds the word "day" after "when/if" and replaces מִדַּד (middad) with מָתַי (matay, "when") to read "If I lie down, I say, 'When comes the morning?' If I rise up, I say, 'How long till evening?'" The LXX, however, may be based more on a recollection of Deut 28:67. One can make just as strong a case for the reading adopted here, that the night seems to drag on (so also NIV).

[14] tn The Hebrew term נְדָדִים (n^{e}dudim, "tossing") refers to the restless tossing and turning of the sick man at night on his bed. The word is a hapax legomenon derived from the verb נָדַד (nadad, "to flee; to wander; to be restless"). The plural form here sums up the several parts of the actions (GKC 460 §144.f). E. Dhorme (Job, 99) argues that because it applies to both his waking hours and his sleepless nights, it may have more of the sense of wanderings of the mind. There is no doubt truth to the fact that the mind wanders in all this suffering, but there is no need to go beyond the contextually clear idea of the restlessness of the night.

[15] tn Heb "my flesh."

[16] tn The implied comparison is vivid: the dirty scabs cover his entire body like a garment – so he is clothed with them.

[17] sn The word for "worms" (רִמָּה, rimmah, a collective noun), is usually connected with rotten food (Exod 16:24), or the grave (Isa 14:11). Job's disease is a malignant ulcer of some kind that causes the rotting of the flesh. One may recall that both Antiochus Epiphanes (2 Macc 9:9) and Herod Agrippa (Acts 12:23) were devoured by such worms in their diseases.

[18] tn The text has "clods of dust." The word גִּישׁ (gish, "dirty scabs") is a hapax legomenon from גּוּשׁ (gush, "clod"). Driver suggests the word has a medical sense, like "pustules" (G. R. Driver, "Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 73) or "scabs" (JB, NEB, NAB, NIV). Driver thinks "clods of dust" is wrong; he repoints "dust" to make a new verb "to cover," cognate to Arabic, and reads "my flesh is clothed with worms, and scab covers my skin." This refers to the dirty scabs that crusted over the sores all over his body. The LXX links this with the second half of the verse: "And my body has been covered with loathsome worms, and I waste away, scraping off clods of dirt from my eruption."

[19] tn The meaning of רָגַע (raga') is also debated here. D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 163) does not think the word can mean "cracked" because scabs show evidence of the sores healing. But E. Dhorme (Job, 100) argues that the usage of the word shows the idea of "splitting, separating, making a break," or the like. Here then it would mean "my skin splits" and as a result festers. This need not be a reference to the scabs, but to new places. Or it could mean that the scabbing never heals, but is always splitting open.

7:6 My days[1] are swifter[2] than a weaver's shuttle[3] and they come to an end without hope.[4] 7:7 Remember[5] that my life is but a breath, that[6] my eyes will never again[7] see happiness.
7:8 The eye of him who sees me now will see me no more;[8] your eyes will look for me, but I will be gone.[9] 7:9 As[10] a cloud is dispersed and then disappears,[11] so the one who goes down to the grave[12] does not come up again.[13]

7:10 He returns no more to his house, nor does his place of residence[14] know him[15] any more.

Job Remonstrates with God

7:11 "Therefore,[16] I will not refrain my mouth;[17]
I will speak in the anguish of my spirit;
I will complain[18] in the bitterness of my soul.
7:12 Am I the sea, or the creature of the deep,[19] that you must put[20] me under guard?[21] 7:13 If[22] I say,[23] "My bed will comfort me,[24] my couch will ease[25] my complaint,"

---

1 sn The first five verses described the painfulness of his malady, his life; now, in vv. 6-10 he will focus on the brevity of his life, and its extinction with death. He introduces the subject with "my days," a metonymy for his whole life and everything done on those days. He does not mean individual days – they drag on endlessly.

2 tn The verb קָלַל (qalal) means "to be light" (40:4), and then by extension "to be swift; to be rapid" (Jer 4:13; Hab 1:8).

3 sn The shuttle is the part which runs through the meshes of the web. In Judg 16:14 it is a loom (see BDB 71 s.v. אֶרֶג), but here it must be the shuttle. Hezekiah uses the imagery of the weaver, the loom, and the shuttle for the brevity of life (see Isa 38:12). The LXX used, "My life is lighter than a word."

4 tn The text includes a wonderful wordplay on this word. The noun is תִּקְוָה (tiqvah, "hope"). But it can also have the meaning of one of its cognate nouns, קָו (qav, "thread, cord," as in Josh 2:18,21). He is saying that his life is coming to an end for lack of thread/for lack of hope (see further E. Dhorme, Job, 101).

5 sn Job is probably turning here to God, as is clear from v. 11 on. The NIV supplies the word "God" for clarification. It was God who breathed breath into man's nostrils (Gen 2:7), and so God is called to remember that man is but a breath.

6 tn The word "that" is supplied in the translation.

7 tn The verb with the infinitive serves as a verbal hendiadys: "return to see" means "see again."

8 sn The meaning of the verse is that God will relent, but it will be too late. God now sees him with a hostile eye; when he looks for him, or looks upon him in friendliness, it will be too late.

9 tn This verse is omitted in the LXX and so by several commentators. But the verb שׁוּר (shur, "turn, return") is so characteristic of Job (10 times) that the verse seems appropriate here.

10 tn The comparison is implied; "as" is therefore supplied in the translation.

11 tn The two verbs כָּלָה (kalah) and הָלַךְ (halakh) mean "to come to an end" and "to go" respectively. The picture is of the cloud that breaks up, comes to an end, is dispersed so that it is no longer a cloud; it then fades away or vanishes. This line forms a good simile for the situation of a man who comes to his end and disappears.

12 tn The noun שְׁאוֹל (she'ol) can mean "the grave," "death," or "Sheol" – the realm of departed spirits. In Job this is a land from which there is no return (10:21 and here). It is a place of darkness and gloom (10:21-22), a place where the dead lie hidden (14:13); as a place appointed for all no matter what their standing on earth might have been (30:23). In each case the precise meaning has to be determined. Here the grave makes the most sense, for Job is simply talking about death.

13 sn It is not correct to try to draw theological implications from this statement or the preceding verse (Rashi said Job was denying the resurrection). Job is simply stating that when people die they are gone – they do not return to this present life on earth. Most commentators and theologians believe that theological knowledge was very limited at such an early stage, so they would not think it possible for Job to have bodily resurrection in view. (See notes on ch. 14 and 19:25-27.)

14 tn M. Dahood suggests the meaning is the same as "his abode" ("Hebrew-Ugaritic Lexicography V," Bib 48 [1967]: 421-38).

15 tn The verb means "to recognize" by seeing. "His place," the place where he was living, is the subject of the verb. This personification is intended simply to say that the place where he lived will not have him any more. The line is very similar to Ps 103:16b – when the wind blows the flower away, its place knows it no more.

16 tn "Also I" has been rendered frequently as "therefore," introducing a conclusion. BDB 168-69 s.v. גַּם lists Ps 52:7 [5] as a parallel, but it also could be explained as an adversative.

17 sn "Mouth" here is metonymical for what he says – he will not withhold his complaints. Peake notes that in this section Job comes very close to doing what Satan said he would do. If he does not curse God to his face, he certainly does cast off restraints to his lament. But here Job excuses himself in advance of the lament.

18 tn The verb is not limited to mental musing; it is used for pouring out a complaint or a lament (see S. Mowinckel, "The Verb siḥ and the Nouns siḥ, siha," ST 15 [1961]: 1-10).

19 tn The word תַּנִּין (tannin) could be translated "whale" as well as the more mythological "dragon" or "monster of the deep" (see E. Dhorme, Job, 105). To the Hebrews this was part of God's creation in Gen 1; in the pagan world it was a force to be reckoned with, and so the reference would be polemical. The sea is a symbol of the tumultuous elements of creation; in the sea were creatures that symbolized the powerful forces of chaos – Leviathan, Tannin, and Rahab. They required special attention.

20 tn The imperfect verb here receives the classification of obligatory imperfect. Job wonders if he is such a threat to God that God must do this.

21 tn The word מִשְׁמָר (mishmar) means "guard; barrier." M. Dahood suggested "muzzle" based on Ugaritic, but that has proven to be untenable ("Mismar, 'Muzzle,' in Job 7:12," JBL 80 [1961]: 270-71).

22 tn The particle כִּי (ki) could also be translated "when," but "if" might work better to introduce the conditional clause and to parallel the earlier reasoning of Job in v. 4 (using אִם, 'im). See GKC 336-37 §112.hh.

23 tn The verb literally means "say," but here the connotation must be "think" or "say to oneself" – "when I think my bed...."

24 sn Sleep is the recourse of the troubled and unhappy. Here "bed" is metonymical for sleep. Job expects sleep to give him the comfort that his friends have not.

25 tn The verb means "to lift up; to take away" (נָשָׂא, nasa'). When followed by the preposition ב (bet) with the complement of the verb, the idea is "to bear a part; to take a share," or "to share in the burden" (cf. Num 11:7). The idea then would be that the sleep would ease the complaint. It would not end the illness, but the complaining for a while.

7:14 then you scare me[1] with dreams and terrify[2] me with[3] visions, 7:15 so that I[4] would prefer[5] strangling,[6] and[7] death[8] more[9] than life.[10] 7:16 I loathe[11] it;[12] I do not want to live forever;
leave me alone,[13] for my days are a vapor![14]

Insignificance of Humans

7:17 "What is mankind[15] that you make so much of them,[16]
and that you pay attention[17] to them?
7:18 And that you visit[18] them every morning, and try[19] them every moment?[20]
7:19 Will you never[21] look away from me,[22]
will you not let me alone[23]
long enough to swallow my spittle?
7:20 If[24] I have sinned – what have I done to you,[25]
O watcher of men?[26]

1 tn The Piel of חָתַת (khatat) occurs only here and in Jer 51:56 (where it is doubtful). The meaning is clearly "startle, scare." The perfect verb with the ו (vav) is fitting in the apodosis of the conditional sentence.

sn Here Job is boldly saying that it is God who is behind the horrible dreams that he is having at night.

2 tn The Piel of בָּעַת (ba'at, "terrify") is one of the characteristic words in the book of Job; it occurs in 3:5; 9:34; 13:11, 21; 15:24; 18:11; and 33:7.

3 tn The prepositions ב (bet) and מִן (min) interchange here; they express the instrument of causality. See N. Sarna, "The Interchange of the Prepositions bet and min in Biblical Hebrew," JBL 78 (1959): 310-16. Emphasis on the instruments of terror in this verse is highlighted by the use of chiasm in which the prepositional phrases comprise the central elements (ab//b'a'). Verse 18 contains another example.

4 tn The word נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) is often translated "soul." But since Hebrew thought does not make such a distinction between body and soul, it is usually better to translate it with "person." When a suffix is added to the word, then that pronoun would serve as the better translation, as here with "my soul" = "I" (meaning with every fiber of my being).

5 tn The verb בָּחַר (bakhar, "choose") followed by the preposition ב (bet) can have the sense of "prefer."

6 tn The meaning of the term מַחֲנָק (makhanaq, "strangling"), a hapax legomenon, is clear enough; the verb חָנַק (khanaq) in the Piel means "to strangle" (Nah 2:13), and in the Niphal "to strangle oneself" (2 Sam 17:23). This word has tempted some commentators to take נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) in a very restricted sense of "throat."

7 tn The conjunction "and" is supplied in the translation. "Death" could also be taken in apposition to "strangling," providing the outcome of the strangling.

8 tn This is one of the few words recognizable in the LXX: "You will separate life from my spirit, and yet keep my bones from death."

9 tn The comparative min (מִן) after the verb "choose" will here have the idea of preferring something before another (see GKC 429-30 §133.b).

10 tn The word מַעֲצֻמוֹתָי (me'atsmotay) means "more than my bones" (= life or being). The line is poetic; "bones" is often used in scripture metonymically for the whole living person, so there is no need here for conjectural emendation. Nevertheless, there have been several suggestions made. The simplest and most appealing for those who desire a change is the repointing to מַעֲצַבוֹתָי (me'ats^{e}votay, "my sufferings," adopted by NAB, JB, Moffatt, Driver-Gray, E. Dhorme, H. H. Rowley, and others). Driver obtains this idea by positing a new word based on Arabic without changing the letters; it means "great" – but he has to supply the word "sufferings."

11 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 107-8) thinks the idea of loathing or despising is problematic since there is no immediate object. He notes that the verb מָאַס (ma'as, "loathe") is parallel to מָסַס (masas, "melt") in the sense of "flow, drip" (Job 42:6). This would give the idea "I am fading away" or "I grow weaker," or as Dhorme chooses, "I am pining away."

12 tn There is no object for the verb in the text. But the most likely object would be "my life" from the last verse, especially since in this verse Job will talk about not living forever. Some have thought the object should be "death," meaning that Job despised death more than the pains. But that is a forced meaning; besides, as H. H. Rowley points out, the word here means to despise something, to reject it. Job wanted death.

13 tn Heb "cease from me." This construction means essentially "leave me in peace."

14 tn This word הֶבֶל (hevel) is difficult to translate. It means "breath; puff of air; vapor" and then figuratively, "vanity." Job is saying that his life is but a breath – it is brief and fleeting. Compare Ps 144:4 for a similar idea.

15 tn The verse is a rhetorical question; it is intended to mean that man is too little for God to be making so much over him in all this.

16 tn The Piel verb is a factitive meaning "to magnify." The English word "magnify" might not be the best translation here, for God, according to Job, is focusing inordinately on him. It means to magnify in thought, appreciate, think highly of. God, Job argues, is making too much of mankind by devoting so much bad attention on them.

17 tn The expression "set your heart on" means "concentrate your mind on" or "pay attention to."

18 tn The verb פָּקַד (paqad) is a very common one in the Bible; while it is frequently translated "visit," the "visit" is never comparable to a social call. When God "visits" people it always means a divine intervention for blessing or cursing – but the visit always changes the destiny of the one visited. Here Job is amazed that God Almighty would be so involved in the life of mere human beings.

19 tn Now the verb "to test" is introduced and gives further explanation to the purpose of the "visit" in the parallel line (see the same parallelism in Ps 17:3). The verb בָּחַן (bakhan) has to do with passing things through the fire or the crucible to purify the metal (see Job 23:10; Zech 13:3); metaphorically it means "to examine carefully" and "to purify by testing."

20 sn The amazing thing is the regularity of the testing. Job is at first amazed that God would visit him, but even more is he amazed that God is testing him every moment. The employment of a chiasm with the two temporal adverbial phrases as the central elements emphasizes the regularity.

21 tn Heb "according to what [= how long] will you not look away from me."

22 tn The verb שָׁעָה (sha'ah, "to look") with the preposition מִן (min) means "to look away from; to avert one's gaze." Job wonders if God would not look away from him even briefly, for the constant vigilance is killing him.

23 tn The Hiphil of רָפָה (rafah) means "to leave someone alone."

24 tn The simple perfect verb can be used in a conditional sentence without a conditional particle present (see GKC 494 §159.h).

25 sn Job is not here saying that he has sinned; rather, he is posing the hypothetical condition – if he had sinned, what would that do to God? In other words, he has not really injured God.

26 sn In the Bible God is often described as watching over people to protect them from danger (see Deut 32:10; Ps 31:23). However, here it is a hostile sense, for God may detect sin and bring it to judgment.

Why have you set me as your target?[1]
Have I become a burden to you?[2] 7:21 And why do you not pardon my transgression, and take away my iniquity?
For now I will lie down in the dust,[3] and you will seek me diligently,[4]
but I will be gone."

Bildad's First Speech to Job[5]

8:1 Then Bildad the Shuhite spoke up and said:

8:2 "How long will you speak these things,[6] seeing[7] that the words of your mouth are like a great[8] wind?[9]
8:3 Does God pervert[10] justice?[11]
Or does the Almighty pervert[12] what is right?
8:4 If[13] your children sinned against him, he gave them over[14] to the penalty[15] of their sin.
8:5 But[16] if you will look[17] to God, and make your supplication[18] to the Almighty, 8:6 if you become[19] pure[20] and upright,[21] even now he will rouse himself[22] for you,

1 tn This word is a hapax legomenon from the verb פָּגַע (paga', "meet, encounter"); it would describe what is hit or struck (as nouns of this pattern can indicate the place of the action) – the target.

2 tn In the prepositional phrase עָלַי ('alay) the results of a scribal change is found (these changes were called tiqqune sopherim, "corrections of the scribes" made to avoid using improper language about God). The prepositional phrase would have been עָלֶיךָ ('alekha, "to you," as in the LXX). But it offended the Jews to think of Job's being burdensome to God. Job's sin could have repercussions on him, but not on God.

3 tn The LXX has, "for now I will depart to the earth."

4 tn The verb שָׁחַר (shakhar) in the Piel has been translated "to seek early in the morning" because of the possible link with the word "dawn." But the verb more properly means "to seek diligently" (by implication).

5 sn This speech of Bildad ignores Job's attack on his friends and focuses rather on Job's comments about God's justice. Bildad cannot even imagine saying that God is unjust. The only conclusion open to him is that Job's family brought this on themselves, and so the only recourse is for Job to humble himself and make supplication to God. To make his point, Bildad will appeal to the wisdom of the ancients, for his theology is traditional. The speech has three parts: vv. 2-7 form his affirmation of the justice of God; vv. 8-19 are his appeal to the wisdom of the ancients, and vv. 20-22 are his summation. See N. C. Habel, "Appeal to Ancient Tradition as a Literary Form," ZAW 88 (1976): 253-72; W. A. Irwin, "The First Speech of Bildad," ZAW 51 (1953): 205-16.

6 sn "These things" refers to all of Job's speech, the general drift of which seems to Bildad to question the justice of God.

7 tn The second colon of the verse simply says "and a strong wind the words of your mouth." The simplest way to treat this is to make it an independent nominal sentence: "the words of your mouth are a strong wind." Some have made it parallel to the first by apposition, understanding "how long" to do double duty. The line beginning with the ו (vav) can also be subordinated as a circumstantial clause, as here.

8 tn The word כַּבִּיר (kabbir, "great") implies both abundance and greatness. Here the word modifies "wind"; the point of the analogy is that Job's words are full of sound but without solid content.

9 tn See, however, G. R. Driver's translation, "the breath of one who is mighty are the words of your mouth" ("Hebrew Studies," JRAS 1948: 170).

10 tn The Piel verb יְעַוֵּת (ye'avvet) means "to bend; to cause to swerve from the norm; to deviate; to pervert." The LXX renders the first colon as "will the Lord be unjust when he judges?"

11 tn The first word is מִשְׁפָּט (mishpat, "justice"). It can mean an act of judgment, place of judgment, or what is just, that is, the outcome of the decision. It basically describes an umpire's decision. The parallel word is צֶדֶק (tsedeq, "righteousness," or "what is right"). The basic idea here is that which conforms to the standard, what is right. See S. H. Scholnick, "The Meaning of Mishpat in the Book of Job," JBL 101 (1982): 521-29.

12 tn Some commentators think that the second verb should be changed in order to avoid the repetition of the same word and to reflect the different words in the versions. The suggestion is to read יְעַוֵּה (ye'avveh) instead; this would mean "to cause someone to deviate," for the root means "to bend." The change is completely unwarranted; the LXX probably chose different words for stylistic reasons (see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 198). The repetition in the Hebrew text is a common type; it strengthens the enormity of the charge Job seems to be making.

13 tn The AV and RV take the protasis down to the middle of v. 6. The LXX changes the "if" at the beginning of v. 5 to "then" and makes that verse the apodosis. If the apodosis comes in the second half of v. 4, then v. 4 would be a complete sentence (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 71; A. B. Davidson, Job, 60). The particle אִם ('im) has the sense of "since" in this section.

14 tn The verb is a Piel preterite with a vav (ו) consecutive. The ו (vav) need not be translated if the second half of the verse is the apodosis of the first – since they sinned...he did this. The verb שִׁלַּח (shilleakh) means "to expel; to thrust out" normally; here the sense of "deliver up" or "deliver over" fits the sentence well. The verse is saying that sin carries its own punishment, and so God merely delivered the young people over to it.

15 tn Heb "into the hand of their rebellion." The word "hand" often signifies "power." The rebellious acts have the power to destroy, and so that is what happened – according to Bildad. Bildad's point is that Job should learn from what happened to his family.

16 tn "But" is supplied to show the contrast between this verse and the preceding line.

17 tn The verb שָׁחַר (shikhar) means "to seek; to seek earnestly" (see 7:21). With the preposition אֶל ('el) the verb may carry the nuance of "to address; to have recourse to" (see E. Dhorme, Job, 114). The LXX connected it etymologically to "early" and read, "Be early in prayer to the Lord Almighty."

18 tn The verb תִּתְחַנַּן (titkhannan) means "to make supplication; to seek favor; to seek grace" (from חָנַן, khanan). Bildad is saying that there is only one way for Job to escape the same fate as his children – he must implore God's mercy. Job's speech had spoken about God's seeking him and not finding him, but Bildad is speaking of the importance of Job's seeking God.

19 tn A verb form needs to be supplied here. Bildad is not saying to Job, "If you are pure [as you say you are]." Bildad is convinced that Job is a sinner. Therefore, "If you become pure" makes more sense here.

20 tn Or "innocent" (i.e., acquitted).

21 tn Many commentators delete this colon as a moralizing gloss on v. 5, but the phrase makes good sense and simply serves as another condition. Besides, the expression is in the LXX.

22 tn The verb יָעִיר (ya'ir, "rouse, stir up") is a strong anthropomorphism. The LXX has "he will answer your prayer" (which is probably only the LXX's effort to avoid the anthropomorphism [D. J. A. Clines, Job (WBC), 198]). A reading of "watch over you" has been adopted because of parallel texts (see H. L. Ginsberg, "Two North Canaanite Letters from Ugarit," BASOR 72 [1938]: 18-19; and H. N. Richardson, "A Ugaritic Letter of a King to His Mother," JBL 66 [1947]: 321-24). Others suggest "his light will shine on you" or "he will bestow health on you." But the idea of "awake" is common enough in the Bible to be retained here.

[1] tn The Piel of שָׁלַם (shalam) means "to make good; to repay; to restore something to its wholeness; to reestablish." The best understanding here would be "restore [Job] to his place." Some take the verb in the sense of "reward [Job himself] with a righteous habitation."

[2] tn The construct נְוֵה (n^{e}vat) is feminine; only the masculine occurs in Hebrew. But the meaning "abode of your righteousness" is clear enough. The righteousness of Job is pictured as inhabiting an estate, or it pictures the place where Job lives as a righteous man. A translation "rightful habitation" would mean "the habitation that you deserve" – if you are righteous.

[3] tn The reference to "your beginning" is a reference to Job's former estate of wealth and peace. The reference to "latter end" is a reference to conditions still in the future. What Job had before will seem so small in comparison to what lies ahead.

[4] tn The verb has the idea of "to grow"; here it must mean "to flourish; to grow considerably" or the like. The statement is not so much a prophecy; rather Bildad is saying that "if Job had recourse to God, then...." This will be fulfilled, of course, at the end of the book.

[5] sn Bildad is not calling for Job to trace through the learning of antiquity, but of the most recent former generation. Hebrews were fond of recalling what the "fathers" had taught, for each generation recalled what their fathers had taught.

[6] tn The verb כּוֹנַן (khonen, from כּוּן, kun) normally would indicate "prepare yourself" or "fix" one's heart on something, i.e., give attention to it. The verb with the לְ (lamed) preposition after it does mean "to think on" or "to meditate" (Isa 51:13). But some commentators wish to change the כ (kaf) to a בּ (bet) in the verb to get "to consider" (from בִּין, bin). However, M. Dahood shows a connection between כנן (knn) and שׁאל (sh'l) in Ugaritic ("Hebrew-Ugaritic Lexicography," Bib 46 [1965]: 329).

[7] tn The Hebrew has "the search of their fathers," but the word is probably intended to mean what that observation or search yielded (so "search" is a metonymy of cause).

[8] tn Heb "fathers."

[9] tn The Hebrew has "we are of yesterday," the adverb functioning as a predicate. Bildad's point is that they have not had time to acquire great knowledge because they are recent.

[10] tn E. Dhorme (Job, 116) observes that the shadow is the symbol of ephemeral things (14:2; 17:7; Ps 144:4). The shadow passes away quickly (116).

[11] tn The sentence begins emphatically: "Is it not they."

[12] tn The "and" is not present in the line. The second clause seems to be in apposition to the first, explaining it more thoroughly: "Is it not they [who] will instruct you, [who] will speak to you."

[13] tn The noun may have been left indeterminate for the sake of emphasis (GKC 401-2 §125.c), meaning "important words."

[14] tn Heb "from their heart."

[15] sn H. H. Rowley observes the use of the words for plants that grow in Egypt and suspects that Bildad either knew Egypt or knew that much wisdom came from Egypt. The first word refers to papyrus, which grows to a height of six feet (so the verb means "to grow tall; to grow high"). The second word refers to the reed grass that grows on the banks of the river (see Gen 41:2, 18).

[16] tn The two verbs, גָּאָה (ga'ah) and שָׂגָה (sagah), have almost the same meanings of "flourish, grow, become tall."

[17] tn The word has been traditionally translated "greenness" (so KJV, ASV), but some modern commentators argue for "in flower." The word is found only in Song 6:11 (where it may be translated "blossoms"). From the same root is אָבִיב ('aviv, "fresh young ears of barley"). Here the word refers to the plant that is still in its early stages of flowering. It should not be translated to suggest the plant is flowering (cf. NRSV), but translating as if the plant is green (so NASB) is also problematic.

[18] sn The idea is that as the plant begins to flower, but before it is to be cut down, there is no sign of withering or decay in it. But if the water is withdrawn, it will wither sooner than any other herb. The point Bildad will make of this is that when people rebel against God and his grace is withheld, they perish more swiftly than the water reed.

[19] tn The imperfect verb here is the modal use of potential, "can wither away" if the water is not there.

[20] tn Heb "before."

[21] tn The LXX interprets the line: "does not any herb wither before it has received moisture?"

[22] tn The word אָרְחוֹת ('orkhot) means "ways" or "paths" in the sense of tracks of destiny or fate. The word דֶּרֶךְ (derekh, "way, road, path") is used in a similar way (Isa 40:27; Ps 37:5). However, many commentators emend the text to read אַחֲרִית ('akharit, "end") in harmony with the LXX. But Prov 1:19 (if not emended as well) confirms the primary meaning here without changing the text (see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 199).

[23] tn The word חָנֵף (khanef) is often translated "hypocrite." But the root verb means "to be profane," and this would be done by idolatry or bloodshed. It describes an irreligious person, a godless person. In Dan 11:32 the word seems to mean "make someone pagan." The word in this verse is parallel to "those who forget God."

[24] tn The relative pronoun introduces the verse as a relative clause, working with the "godless person" of the preceding verse. The relative pronoun is joined to the resumptive pronoun in the translation: "who + his trust" = "whose trust."

[25] tn The noun כֶּסֶל (kesel) in this half of the verse must correspond to "his security" in the second half. The meaning tile,[1]

whose security is a spider's web.[2] 8:15 He leans against his house but it does not hold up,[3] he takes hold[4] of it but it does not stand.
8:16 He is a well-watered plant[5] in[6] the sun, its shoots spread[7] over its garden.[8]
8:17 It wraps its roots around a heap[9] of stones[10] and it looks[11] for a place among stones.[12] 8:18 If he is uprooted[13] from his place, then that place[14] will disown him, saying,[15]
'I have never seen you!'
8:19 Indeed, this is the joy of his way,[16] and out of the earth[17] others spring up.[18]

8:20 "Surely, God does not reject a blameless man,[19] nor does he grasp the hand[20] must be "his trust" (see 4:6). The two words will again be parallel in 31:24.

1 tn The word יָקוֹט (yaqot) is not known anywhere else; here it looks like it should be a noun to parallel "spider's house" in the next colon. But scholars have tried to identify it as a verb, perhaps an imperfect of קוֹט (qot, BDB 876 s.v.), or related to an Arabic qatta, "to cut." Some versions have "break in sunder" (KJV, RV); others "cut off" (RSV). Apart from verbs, some commentators follow Sa`adia's Arabic translation "sun cords," meaning "gossamer." Accordingly, there are emendations like "threads," "threads of summer," "spider threads," and the like. D. J. A. Clines agrees with those who conclude that emendations based on Sa`adia's translation lack a sound philological basis. E. Dhorme "somewhat timidly" suggests יַלְקוּט (yalqut), the shepherd's bag or scrip (1 Sam 17:40). He suggests that an empty bag would be a symbol of something unstable and futile. It seems impossible to determine exactly what the word meant. One can only conclude that it means something like "fragile" or "futile." The LXX is of no help: "for his house shall be without inhabitants."

2 sn The second half of the verse is very clear. What the godless person relies on for security is as fragile as a spider's web – he may as well have nothing. The people of the Middle East view the spider's web as the frailest of all "houses."

3 tn The verb עָמַד ('amad, "to stand") is almost synonymous with the parallel קוּם (qum, "to rise; to stand"). The distinction is that the former means "to remain standing" (so it is translated here "hold up"), and the latter "rise, stand up."

4 sn The idea is that he grabs hold of the house, not to hold it up, but to hold himself up or support himself. But it cannot support him. This idea applies to both the spider's web and the false security of the pagan.

5 tn The figure now changes to a plant that is flourishing and spreading and then suddenly cut off. The word רָטַב (ratav) means "to be moist; to be watered." The word occurs in Arabic, Aramaic, and Akkadian, but only twice in the Bible: here as the adjective and in 24:8 as the verb.

6 tn The Hebrew is לִפְנֵי (lifne, "before"). Does this mean "in the presence of the sun," i.e., under a sweltering sun, or "before" the sun rises? It seems more natural to take לִפְנֵי (lifne) as "in the presence of" or "under."

7 tn Heb "its shoot goes out."

8 tc Some have emended this phrase to obtain "over the roofs." The LXX has "out of his corruption." H. M. Orlinsky has shown that this reading arose from an internal LXX change, saprias having replaced prasias, "garden" (JQR 26 [1935/36]: 134-35).

9 tn Cheyne reads "spring" or "well" rather than "heap." However, this does not fit the parallelism very well, and so he emends the second half as well. Nevertheless the Hebrew text needs no emending here.

10 tn The expression "of stones" is added for clarification of what the heap would be. It refers to the object around which the roots would grow. The parallelism with "house of stones" makes this reading highly probable.

11 tn The idea is that the plant grows, looking for a place to grow among the stones. Some trees grow so tightly around the rocks and stones that they are impossible to uproot. The rocky ground where it grows forms "a house of stones." The LXX supports an emendation from יְחֻזֶּה (yekhezeh, "it looks") to יִחְיֶה (yikhyeh, "it lives"). Others have tried to emend the text in a variety of ways: "pushes" (Budde), "cleave" (Gordis), "was opposite" (Driver), or "run against" (NEB, probably based on G. R. Driver). If one were to make a change, the reading with the LXX would be the easiest to defend, but there is no substantial reason to do that. The meaning is about the same without such a change.

12 sn The idea seems to be that the stones around which the roots of the tree wrap themselves suggest strength and security for the tree, but uprooting comes to it nevertheless (v. 18). The point is that the wicked may appear to be living in security and flourishing, yet can be quickly destroyed (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 74).

13 tc Ball reads אֵל ('el, "God") instead of אִם ('im, "if"): "God destroys it" – but there is no reason for this. The idea would be implied in the context. A. B. Davidson rightly points out that who destroys it is not important, but the fact that it is destroyed.

tn The Hebrew has "if one destroys it"; the indefinite subject allows for a passive interpretation. The verb means "swallow" in the Qal, but in the Piel it means "to engulf; to destroy; to ruin" (2:3; 10:8). It could here be rendered "removed from its place" (the place where it is rooted); since the picture is that of complete destruction, "uprooted" would be a good rendering.

14 tn Heb "it"; the referent ("his place" in the preceding line) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn The place where the plant once grew will deny ever knowing it. Such is the completeness of the uprooting that there is not a trace left.

15 tn Here "saying" is supplied in the translation.

16 tn This line is difficult. If the MT stands as it is, the expression must be ironic. It would be saying that the joy (all the security and prosperity) of its way (its life) is short-lived – that is the way its joy goes. Most commentators are not satisfied with this. Dhorme, for one, changes מְשׂוֹשׂ (mesos, "joy") to מָסוֹס (mesos, "rotting"), and gets "behold him lie rotting on the path." The sibilants can interchange this way. But Dhorme thinks the MT was written the way it was because the word was thought to be "joy," when it should have been the other way. The word "way" then becomes an accusative of place. The suggestion is rather compelling and would certainly fit the context. The difficulty is that a root סוס (sus, "to rot") has to be proposed. E. Dhorme does this by drawing on Arabic sas, "to be eaten by moths or worms," thus "worm-eaten; decaying; rotting." Cf. NIV "its life withers away"; also NAB "there he lies rotting beside the road."

17 tn Heb "dust."

18 sn As with the tree, so with the godless man – his place will soon be taken by another.

19 sn This is the description that the book gave to Job at the outset, a description that he deserved according to God's revelation. The theme "God will not reject the blameless man" becomes Job's main point (see 9:20,21; 10:3).

20 sn The idiom "to grasp the hand" of someone means to support or help the person.

of the evildoers.
8:21 He will yet[1] fill your mouth with laughter,[2]
and your lips with gladness.
8:22 Those who hate you[3] will be clothed with shame,[4]
and the tent of the wicked will be no more."

Job's Reply to Bildad[5]

9:1 Then Job answered:
9:2 "Truly,[6] I know that this is so.
But how[7] can a human[8] be just before[9]
God?[10]
9:3 If someone wishes[11] to contend[12] with him,
he cannot answer[13] him one time in a

9:5 He who removes mountains suddenly,[19] who overturns them in his anger;[20]

[1] tn The word עַד ('ad, "until") would give the reading "until he fills your mouth with laughter," subordinating the verse to the preceding with some difficulty in interpretation. It would be saying that God will not reject the blameless man until he filled Job with joy. Almost all commentators and modern versions change the pointing to עוֹד ('od, "yet"), forming a hope for the future blessing of joy for Job.

[2] sn "Laughter" (and likewise "gladness") will here be metonymies of effect or adjunct, being put in place of the reason for the joy – restoration.

[3] sn These verses show several points of similarity with the style of the book of Psalms. "Those who hate you" and the "evil-doers" are fairly common words to describe the ungodly in the Psalms. "Those who hate you" are enemies of the righteous man because of the parallelism in the verse. By this line Bildad is showing Job that he and his friends are not among those who are his enemies, and that Job himself is really among the righteous. It is an appealing way to end the discourse. See further G. W. Anderson, "Enemies and Evil-doers in the Book of Psalms," BJRL 48 (1965/66): 18-29.

[4] tn "Shame" is compared to a garment that can be worn. The "shame" envisioned here is much more than embarrassment or disgrace – it is utter destruction. For parallels in the Psalms, see Pss 35:26; 132:18; 109:29.

[5] sn This speech of Job in response to Bildad falls into two large sections, chs. 9 and 10. In ch. 9 he argues that God's power and majesty prevent him from establishing his integrity in his complaint to God. And in ch. 10 Job tries to discover in God's plan the secret of his afflictions. The speech seems to continue what Job was saying to Eliphaz more than it addresses Bildad. See K. Fullerton, "On Job 9 and 10," JBL 53 (1934): 321-49.

[6] tn The adverb אָמְנָם ('omnam, "in truth") is characteristic of the book of Job (12:2; 19:4; 34:12; 36:4). The friends make commonplace statements, general truths, and Job responds with "truly I know this is so." Job knows as much about these themes as his friends do.

[7] sn The interrogative is used to express what is an impossibility.

[8] tn The attempt to define אֱנוֹשׁ ('enosh) as "weak" or "mortal" man is not compelling. Such interpretations are based on etymological links without the clear support of usage (an issue discussed by J. Barr, Comparative Philology and the Text of the Old Testament). This seems to be a poetic word for "human" (the only nonpoetic use is in 2 Chr 14:10).

[9] tn The preposition is אֵם ('im, "with, before, in the presence of"). This is more specific than מִן (min) in 4:17.

[10] sn The point of Job's rhetorical question is that man cannot be justified as against God, because God is too powerful and too clever – he controls the universe. He is discussing now the question that Eliphaz raised in 4:17. Peake observes that Job is raising the question of whether something is right because God says it is right, or that God declares it right because it is right.

[11] tn Some commentators take God to be the subject of this verb, but it is more likely that it refers to the mortal who tries to challenge God in a controversy. The verb is used of Job in 13:3.

[12] tn The verb רִיב (riv) is a common one; it has the idea of "contention; dispute; legal dispute or controversy; go to law." With the preposition אֵם ('im) the idea must be "to contend with" or "to dispute with." The preposition reflects the prepositional phrase "with God" in v. 2, supporting the view that man is the subject.

[13] tn This use of the imperfect as potential imperfect assumes that the human is the subject, that in a dispute with God he could not answer one of God's questions (for which see the conclusion of the book when God questions Job). On the other hand, if the interpretation were that God does not answer the demands of mortals, then a simple progressive imperfect would be required. In support of this is the frustration of Job that God does not answer him.

[14] tn The genitive phrase translated "in heart" would be a genitive of specification, specifying that the wisdom of God is in his intelligent decisions.

sn The heart is the seat of intelligence and understanding, the faculty of decision making.

[15] sn The words אַמִּיץ ('ammits) and כֹּחַ (koakh) are synonyms, the first meaning "sturdy; mighty; robust," and the second "strength." It too can be interpreted as a genitive of specification – God is mighty with respect to his power. But that comes close to expressing a superlative idea (like "song of songs" or "anger of his wrath").

[16] tn The first half of the verse simply has "wise of heart and mighty of strength." The entire line is a casus pendens that will refer to the suffix on אֵלָיו ('elayv) in the second colon. So the question is "Who has resisted the one who is wise of heart and mighty of strength?" Again, the rhetorical question is affirming that no one has done this.

[17] tn The verb is the Hiphil of the verb קָשָׁה (qashah, "to be hard"). It frequently is found with the word for "neck," describing people as "stiff-necked," i.e., stubborn, unbending. So the idea of resisting God fits well. The fact that this word occurs in Exodus with the idea of hardening the heart against God may indicate that there is an allusion to Pharaoh here.

[18] tn The use of שָׁלֵם (shalem) in the Qal is rare. It has been translated "remain safe" by E. Dhorme, "survived" by the NEB, "remained unscathed" by the NAB and NIV, or "succeeded" by KJV, G. R. Driver.

[19] tn The verb is plural: "they do not know it." This suggests that the mountains would not know it. Some follow the Syriac with a singular verb, i.e., God does not know it, meaning, it is so trifling to God that he can do it without thinking. But the better interpretation may be "suddenly." This would be interpreted from the MT as it stands; it would imply "before they know anything," thus "suddenly" (Gray, Dhorme, Buttenwieser, et. al.). D. W. Thomas connects the meaning to another verb based on Arabic and translates it, " so that they are no longer still" ("Additional Notes on the Root yada` in Hebrew," JTS 15 [1964]: 54-57). J. A. Emerton works with a possible root יָדַע (yada') meaning "be still" ("A Consideration of Some Alleged Meanings of yada` in Hebrew," JSS 15 [1970]: 145-80).

[20] sn This line beginning with the relative pronoun can either be read as a parallel description of God, or it can be subordinated by the relative pronoun to the first ("they do not know who overturned them").

9:6 he who shakes the earth out of its place[1] so that its pillars tremble;[2] 9:7 he who commands the sun and[3] it does not shine[4] and seals up[5] the stars;
9:8 he alone spreads out the heavens, and treads[6] on the waves of the sea;[7] 9:9 he makes the Bear,[8] Orion,[9] and the Pleiades,[10] and the constellations of the southern sky;[11] 9:10 he does great and unsearchable things,[12]
and wonderful things without number.
9:11 If[13] he passes by me, I cannot see[14] him,[15]
if he goes by, I cannot perceive him.[16]
9:12 If he snatches away,[17] who can turn him back?[18]
Who dares to say to him, 'What are you doing?'
9:13 God does not restrain his anger;[19]
under him the helpers of Rahab[20] lie crushed.[21]

The Impossibility of Facing God in Court

9:14 "How much less,[22] then, can I

[1] sn Shakes the earth out of its place probably refers to earthquakes, although some commentators protest against this in view of the idea of the pillars. In the ancient world the poetical view of the earth is that it was a structure on pillars, with water around it and under it. In an earthquake the pillars were shaken, and the earth moved.

[2] tn The verb הִתְפַּלָּצ (hitfallats) is found only here, but the root seems clearly to mean "to be tossed; to be thrown about," and so in the Hitpael "quiver; shake; tremble." One of the three nouns from this root is פַּלָּצוּת (pallatsut), the "shudder" that comes with terror (see Job 21:6; Isa 21:4; Ezek 7:18; and Ps 55:6).

[3] tn The form could also be subordinated, "that it shine not" (see further GKC 323 §109.g).

[4] tn The verb זָרַח (zarakh) means "rise." This is the ordinary word for the sunrise. But here it probably has the idea of "shine; glisten," which is also attested in Hebrew and Aramaic.

sn There are various views on the meaning of this line in this verse. Some think it refers to some mysterious darkness like the judgment in Egypt (Exod 10:21-23), or to clouds building (3:5), often in accompaniment of earthquakes (see Joel 2:10, 3:15-16; Isa 13:10-13). It could also refer to an eclipse. All this assumes that the phenomenon here is limited to the morning or the day, but it could simply be saying that God controls light and darkness.

[5] tn The verb חָתַם (khatam) with בְּעַד (b^{e}'ad) before its complement, means "to seal; to wall up; to enclose." This is a poetic way of saying that God prevents the stars from showing their light.

[6] tn Or "marches forth."

[7] tn The reference is probably to the waves of the sea. This is the reading preserved in NIV and NAB, as well as by J. Crenshaw, "Wȳdorek `al-bamote 'ares," CBQ 34 (1972): 39-53. But many see here a reference to Canaanite mythology. The marginal note in the RSV has "the back of the sea dragon." The view would also see in "sea" the Ugaritic god Yammu.

[8] sn The Hebrew has עָשׁ ('ash), although in 38:32 it is עַיִשׁ ('ayish). This has been suggested to be Aldebaran, a star in the constellation Taurus, but there have been many other suggestions put forward by the commentaries.

[9] sn There is more certainty for the understanding of this word as Orion, even though there is some overlap of the usage of the words in the Bible. In classical literature we have the same stereotypical reference to these three (see E. Dhorme, Job, 131).

[10] sn The identification of this as the Pleiades is accepted by most (the Vulgate has "Hyades"). In classical Greek mythology, the seven Pleiades were seven sisters of the Hyades who were pursued by Orion until they were changed into stars by Zeus. The Greek myth is probably derived from an older Semitic myth.

[11] tn Heb "and the chambers of the south."

[12] tn Only slight differences exist between this verse and 5:9 which employs the simple ו (vav) conjunction before אֵין ('eyn) in the first colon and omits the ו (vav) conjunction before נִפְלָאוֹת (nifla'ot, "wonderful things") in the second colon.

sn There is probably great irony in Job's using this same verse as in 5:9. But Job's meaning here is different than Eliphaz.

[13] tn The NIV has "when" to form a temporal clause here. For the use of "if," see GKC 497 §159.w.

[14] tn The imperfect verbs in this verse are consistent with the clauses. In the conditional clauses a progressive imperfect is used, but in the following clauses the verbs are potential imperfects.

[15] tn The pronoun "him" is supplied here; it is not in MT, but the Syriac and Vulgate have it (probably for translation purposes as well).

[16] sn Like the mountains, Job knows that God has passed by and caused him to shake and tremble, but he cannot understand or perceive the reasons.

[17] tn E. Dhorme (Job, 133) surveys the usages and concludes that the verb חָתַף (khataf) normally describes the wicked actions of a man, especially by treachery or trickery against another. But a verb חָתַק (khataf) is found nowhere else; a noun "robber" is found in Prov 23:28. Dhorme sees no reason to emend the text, because he concludes that the two verbs are synonymous. Job is saying that if God acts like a plunderer, there is no one who can challenge what he does.

[18] tn The verb is the Hiphil imperfect (potential again) from שׁוּב (shuv). In this stem it can mean "turn back, refute, repel" (BDB 999 s.v. Hiph.5).

[19] sn The meaning of the line is that God's anger will continue until it has accomplished its purpose (23:13-14).

[20] sn "Rahab" is not to be confused with the harlot of the same name from Jericho. "Rahab" is identified with Tiamat of the Babylonian creation epic, or Leviathan of the Canaanite myths. It is also used in parallelism to the sea (26:12), or the Red Sea (Ps 74:13), and so comes to symbolize Egypt (Isa 30:7). In the Babylonian Creation Epic there is reference to the helpers of Tiamat. In the Bible the reference is only to the raging sea, which the LORD controlled at creation.

[21] tn The verb שָׁחַח (shakhakh) means "to be prostrate" or "to crouch." Here the enemies are prostrate under the feet of God – they are crushed.

[22] tn The construction אַף כִּי־אָנֹכִי ('af ki 'anokhi) is an expression that means either "how much more" or "how much less." Here it has to mean "how much less," for if powerful forces like Rahab are crushed beneath God's feet, how could Job contend with him?

answer him[1]
and choose my words[2] to argue[3] with[4] him![5]
9:15 Although[6] I am innocent,[7]
I could not answer him;[8]
I could only plead[9] with my judge[10] for mercy.
9:16 If I summoned him, and he answered me,[11]
I would not believe[12]
that he would be listening to my voice – 9:17 he who[13] crushes[14] me with a tempest, and multiplies my wounds for no reason.[15] 9:18 He does not allow[16] me to recover[17] my breath, for he fills[18] me with bitterness.
9:19 If it is a matter of strength,[19]
most certainly[20] he is the strong one!
And if it is a matter of justice,
he will say, 'Who will summon me?'[21]
9:20 Although I am innocent,[22]
my mouth[23] would condemn me;[24]
although I am blameless,

[1] tn The imperfect verb here is to be taken with the nuance of a potential imperfect. The idea of "answer him" has a legal context, i.e., answering God in a court of law. If God is relentless in his anger toward greater powers, then Job realizes it is futile for him.

[2] sn In a legal controversy with God it would be essential to choose the correct words very carefully (humanly speaking), but the calmness and presence of mind to do that would be shattered by the overwhelming terror of God's presence.

[3] tn The verb is supplied in this line.

[4] tn The preposition אִם ('im, "with") carries the idea of "in contest with" in a number of passages (compare vv. 2, 3; 16:21).

[5] tn The LXX goes a different way after changing the first person to the third: "Oh then that he would hearken to me, or judge my cause."

[6] tn The line begins with אֲשֶׁר ('asher, "which"), which is omitted in the LXX and the Syriac. The particle אִם ('im) can introduce a concessive clause (GKC 498 §160.a) or a conditional clause (GKC 495 §159.n). The idea here seems to be "even if I were...I could not...."

[7] tn The verb is צָדַקְתִּי (tsadaqti, "I am right [or "righteous"]"). The term here must be forensic, meaning "in the right" or "innocent" (see 11:2; 13:18; 33:12; 40:8). Job is claiming to be in the right, but still has difficulty speaking to God.

[8] tn The form is the Qal imperfect of the verb "answer." As the text stands, Job is saying that he cannot answer or could not answer (contend with) God if given a chance. Some commentators think a Niphal fits better here: "I am not answered," meaning God does not reply to him. This has the LXX, the Syriac, and Theodotion in support of it. The advantage would be to avoid the repetition of the same word from v. 14. But others rightly reject this, because all Job is saying here is that he would be too overwhelmed by God to answer him in court. The LXX change to a passive is understandable in that it would be seeking a different idea in this verse and without vocalization might have assumed a passive voice here.

[9] tn The verb אֶתְחַנַּן ('etkhannan) is the Hitpael of חָנַן (khanan), meaning "seek favor," make supplication," or "plead for mercy." The nuance would again be a modal nuance; if potential, then the translation would be "I could [only] plead for mercy."

[10] tn The word מִשְׁפָּטִי (mᵉshofti) appears to be simply "my judge." But most modern interpretations take the po'el participle to mean "my adversary in a court of law." Others argue that the form is at least functioning as a noun and means "judge" (see 8:5). This would fit better with the idea of appealing for mercy from God. The dilemma of Job, of course, is that the LORD would be both his adversary in the case and his judge.

[11] sn The idea of "answer" in this line is that of responding to the summons, i.e., appearing in court. This preterite and the perfect before it have the nuance of hypothetical perfects since they are in conditional clauses (GKC 330 §111.x). D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 219) translates literally, "If I should call and he should answer."

[12] tn The Hiphil imperfect in the apodosis of this conditional sentence expresses what would (not) happen if God answered the summons.

[13] tn The relative pronoun indicates that this next section is modifying God, the Judge. Job does not believe that God would respond or listen to him, because this is the one who is crushing him.

[14] tn The verb יְשׁוּפֵנִי (yᵉshufeni) is the same verb that is used in Gen 3:15 for the wounding of the serpent. The Targum to Job, the LXX, and the Vulgate all translate it "to crush; to pound," or "to bruise." The difficulty for many exegetes is that this is to be done "with a tempest." The Syriac and Targum Job see a different vocalization and read "with a hair." The text as it stands is understandable and so no change is needed. The fact that the word "tempest" is written with a different sibilant in other places in Job is not greatly significant in this consideration.

[15] tn חִנָּם (khinnam) is adverbial, meaning "gratuitously, without a cause, for no reason, undeservedly." See its use in 2:4.

[16] tn The verb נָתַן (natan) essentially means "to give," but followed by the infinitive (without the ל [lamed] here) it means "to permit; to allow."

[17] tn The Hiphil of the verb means "to bring back"; with the object "my breath," it means "get my breath" or simply "breathe." The infinitive is here functioning as the object of the verb (see GKC 350 §114.m).

[18] sn The meaning of the word is "to satiate; to fill," as in "drink to the full, be satisfied." Job is satiated – in the negative sense – with bitterness. There is no room for more.

[19] tn The MT has only "if of strength."

[20] tn "Most certainly" translates the particle הִנֵּה (hinneh).

[21] tn The question could be taken as "who will summon me?" (see Jer 49:19 and 50:44). This does not make immediate sense. Some have simply changed the suffix to "who will summon him." If the MT is retained, then supplying something like "he will say" could make the last clause fit the whole passage. Another option is to take it as "Who will reveal it to me?" – i.e., Job could be questioning his friends' qualifications for being God's emissaries to bring God's charges against him (cf. KJV, NKJV; and see 10:2 where Job uses the same verb in the Hiphil to request that God reveal what his sin has been that has led to his suffering).

sn Job is saying that whether it is a trial of strength or an appeal to justice, he is unable to go against God.

[22] tn The idea is the same as that expressed in v. 15, although here the imperfect verb is used and not the perfect. Once again with the concessive clause ("although I am right") Job knows that in a legal dispute he would be confused and would end up arguing against himself.

[23] tn Some commentators wish to change this to "his mouth," meaning God's response to Job's complaints. But the MT is far more expressive, and "my mouth" fits the context in which Job is saying that even though he is innocent, if he spoke in a court setting in the presence of God he would be overwhelmed, confused, and no doubt condemn himself.

[24] tn The verb has the declarative sense in the Hiphil, "to declare guilty [or wicked]" or "to condemn."

it would declare me perverse.[1]
9:21 I am blameless.[2] I do not know myself.[3]
I despise my life.

Accusation of God's Justice

9:22 "It is all one![4] That is why I say,[5]
'He destroys the blameless and the guilty.'
9:23 If a scourge brings sudden death,[6]
he mocks[7] at the despair[8] of the innocent.[9] 9:24 If a land[10] has been given into the hand of a wicked man,[11] he covers[12] the faces of its judges;[13]
if it is not he, then who is it?[14]

Renewed Complaint

9:25 "My days[15] are swifter than a runner,[16] they speed by without seeing happiness.
9:26 They glide by[17] like reed[18] boats, like an eagle that swoops[19] down on its prey.[20] 9:27 If I say,[21] 'I will[22] forget my complaint,
I will change my expression[23] and be cheerful,'[24]

1 tn The verb עָקַשׁ ('aqash) means "to be twisted; to be tortuous." The Piel has a meaning "to bend; to twist" (Mic 3:9) and "to pervert" (Isa 59:8). The form here is classified as a Hiphil, with the softening of the vowel i (see GKC 147 §53.n). It would then also be a declarative use of the Hiphil.

2 tn Dhorme, in an effort to avoid tautology, makes this a question: "Am I blameless?" The next clause then has Job answering that he does not know. But through the last section Job has been proclaiming his innocence. The other way of interpreting these verses is to follow NIV and make all of them hypothetical ("If I were blameless, he would pronounce me guilty") and then come to this verse with Job saying, "I am blameless." The second clause of this verse does not fit either view very well. In vv. 20, 21, and 22 Job employs the same term for "blameless" (תָּם, tam) as in the prologue (1:1). God used it to describe Job in 1:8 and 2:3. Bildad used it in 8:20. These are the final occurrences in the book.

3 tn The meaning of the expression "I do not know myself" seems to be, "I do not care." NIV translates it, "I have no concern for my life."

sn Job believes he is blameless and not deserving of all this suffering; he will hold fast to that claim, even if the future is uncertain, especially if that future involved a confrontation with God.

4 tc The LXX omits the phrase "It is all one." Modern scholars either omit it or transpose it for clarity.

sn The expression "it is one" means that God's dealings with people is indiscriminating. The number "one" could also be taken to mean "the same" – "it is all the same." The implication is that it does not matter if Job is good or evil, if he lives or dies. This is the conclusion of the preceding section.

5 tn The relationships of these clauses is in some question. Some think that the poet has inverted the first two, and so they should read, "That is why I have said: 'It is all one.'" Others would take the third clause to be what was said.

6 tc The LXX contains a paraphrase: "for the worthless die, but the righteous are laughed to scorn."

sn The point of these verses is to show – rather boldly – that God does not distinguish between the innocent and the guilty.

7 sn This bold anthropomorphism means that by his treatment of the despair of the innocent, God is in essence mocking them.

8 tn The term מַסָּה (massat), a hapax legomenon, was translated "trial" in the older versions, but it is not from נָסָה (nasah, "to tempt; to test; to try"); instead it is from מָסַס (masas, "to flow"). It is used in the Niphal to speak of the heart "melting" in suffering. So the idea behind this image is that of despair. This is the view that most interpreters adopt; it requires no change of the text whatsoever.

9 sn Job uses this word to refute Eliphaz; cf. 4:7.

10 tn Some would render this "earth," meaning the whole earth, and having the verse be a general principle for all mankind. But Job may have in mind the more specific issue of individual land.

11 sn The details of the verse are not easy to explain, but the meaning of the whole verse seems to be about the miscarriage of justice in the courts and the failure of God to do anything about it.

12 tn The subject of the verb is God. The reasoning goes this way: It is the duty of judges to make sure that justice prevails and that restitution and restoration are carried through, but when the wicked gain control of the land of other people and the judges are ineffective to stop it, then God must be veiling their eyes.

13 sn That these words are strong, if not wild, is undeniable. But Job is only taking the implications of his friends' speeches to their logical conclusion – if God dispenses justice in the world, and there is no justice, then God is behind it all. The LXX omitted these words, perhaps out of reverence for God.

14 tn This seems to be a broken-off sentence (anacoluthon), and so is rather striking. The scribes transposed the words אֲפוֹא ('efo') and הוּא (hu') to make the smoother reading: "If it is not he, who then is it?"

15 tn The text has "and my days" following the thoughts in the previous section.

16 sn Job returns to the thought of the brevity of his life (7:6). But now the figure is the swift runner instead of the weaver's shuttle.

17 tn Heb "they flee."

18 tn The word אֵבֶה ('eveh) means "reed, papyrus," but it is a different word than was in 8:11. What is in view here is a light boat made from bundles of papyrus that glides swiftly along the Nile (cf. Isa 18:2 where papyrus vessels and swiftness are associated).

19 tn The verb יָטוּשׁ (yatus) is also a hapax legomenon; the Aramaic cognate means "to soar; to hover in flight." The sentence here requires the idea of swooping down while in flight.

20 tn Heb "food."

21 tn The construction here uses the infinitive construct with a pronominal suffix – "if my saying" is this, or "if I say." For the conditional clause using אִם ('im) with a noun clause, see GKC 496 §159.u.

22 tn The verbal form is a cohortative of resolve: "I will forget" or "I am determined to forget." The same will be used in the second colon of the verse.

23 tn Heb "I will abandon my face," i.e., change my expression. The construction here is unusual; G. R. Driver connected it to an Arabic word 'adaba, "made agreeable" (IV), and so interpreted this line to mean "make my countenance pleasant" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 76). M. Dahood found a Ugaritic root meaning "make, arrange" ("The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 303-9), and said, "I will arrange my face." But see H. G. Williamson, "A Reconsideration of `azab II in Ugaritic," ZAW 87 (1985): 74-85; Williamson shows it is probably not a legitimate cognate. D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 219) observes that with all these suggestions there are too many homonyms for the root. The MT construction is still plausible.

24 tn In the Hiphil of בָּלַג (balag) corresponds to Arabic balija which means "to shine" and "to be merry." The shining face would signify cheerfulness and smiling. It could be translated "and brighten [my face]."

9:28 I dread[1] all my sufferings,[2] for[3] I know that you do not hold me blameless.[4]
9:29 If I am guilty,[5]
why then[6] weary myself[7] in vain?[8] 9:30 If I wash myself with snow water,[9] and make my hands clean with lye,[10] 9:31 then you plunge me into a slimy pit[11] and my own clothes abhor me.
9:32 For he[12] is not a human being like I am,
that[13] I might answer him, that we might come[14] together in judgment.
9:33 Nor is there an arbiter[15] between us,

An Appeal for Revelation

10:1 "I[25] am weary[26] of my life;
I will complain without restraint;[27]
I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.
10:2 I will say to God, 'Do not condemn[28]
me;

---

1 tn The word was used in Job 3:25; it has the idea of "dread, fear, tremble at." The point here is that even if Job changes his appearance, he still dreads the sufferings, because he knows that God is treating him as a criminal.

2 sn See Job 7:15; see also the translation by G. Perles, "I tremble in every nerve" ("The Fourteenth Edition of Gesenius-Buhl's Dictionary," JQR 18 [1905/06]: 383-90).

3 tn The conjunction "for" is supplied in the translation.

4 sn A. B. Davidson (Job, 73) appropriately notes that Job's afflictions were the proof of his guilt in the estimation of God. If God held him innocent, he would remove the afflictions.

5 tn The clause simply has "I am guilty." It is the same type of construction found in v. 24. It is also the opposite of that in v. 20. GKC 317 §107.n lists this as an example of the use of the imperfect to express an obligation or necessity according to the judgment of others; it would therefore mean "if I am to be guilty."

6 tn The demonstrative pronoun is included to bring particular emphasis to the question, as if to say, "Why in the world..." (see R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 24, §118).

7 tn The verb means "tire oneself"; see 3:17.

8 tn Here הֶבֶל (hevel, "breath, vapor, vanity") is used as an adverb (adverbial accusative).

9 tn The Syriac and Targum Job read with the Qere "with water of [בְּמֵי, bemê] snow." The Kethib simply has "in [בְּמוֹ, bemo] snow." In Ps 51:9 and Isa 1:18 snow forms a simile for purification. Some protest that snow water is not necessarily clean, but if fresh melting snow is meant, then the runoff would be very clear. The image would work well here. Nevertheless, others have followed the later Hebrew meaning for שֶׁלֶג (sheleg) – "soap" (so NIV, NRSV, NLT). Even though that makes a nice parallelism, it is uncertain whether that meaning was in use at the time this text was written.

10 tn The word בֹּר (bor, "lye, potash") does not refer to purity (Syriac, KJV, ASV), but refers to the ingredient used to make the hands pure or clean. It has the same meaning as בֹּרִית (borit), the alkali or soda made from the ashes of certain plants.

11 tn The pointing in the MT gives the meaning "pit" or "ditch." A number of expositors change the pointing to שְׁחוֹת (shukhot) to obtain the equivalent of שַׁחוֹת (sukhot) / סַחוֹת (sukhot): "filth" (Isa 5:25). This would make the contrast vivid – Job has just washed with pure water and soap, and now God plunges him into filth. M. H. Pope argues convincingly that the word "pit" in the MT includes the idea of "filth," making the emendation unnecessary ("The Word sahat in Job 9:31," JBL 83 [1964]: 269-78).

12 tn The personal pronoun that would be expected as the subject of a noun clause is sometimes omitted (see GKC 360 §116.s). Here it has been supplied.

13 tn The consecutive clause is here attached without the use of the ו (vav), but only by simple juxtaposition (see GKC 504-5 §166.a).

14 tn The sense of the verb "come" with "together in judgment" means "to confront one another in court." See Ps 143:2.

15 tn The participle מוֹכִיחַ (mokhiakh) is the "arbiter" or "mediator." The word comes from the verb יָכַח (yakhakh, "decide, judge"), which is concerned with legal and nonlegal disputes. The verbal forms can be used to describe the beginning of a dispute, the disputation in progress, or the settling of it (here, and in Isa 1:18).

sn The old translation of "daysman" came from a Latin expression describing the fixing of a day for arbitration.

16 tn The relative pronoun is understood in this clause.

17 tn The jussive in conditional sentences retains its voluntative sense: let something be so, and this must happen as a consequence (see GKC 323 §109.i).

18 sn The idiom of "lay his hand on the two of us" may come from a custom of a judge putting his hands on the two in order to show that he is taking them both under his jurisdiction. The expression can also be used for protection (see Ps 139:5). Job, however, has a problem in that the other party is God, who himself will be arbiter in judgment.

19 tn The verse probably continues the description from the last verse, and so a relative pronoun may be supplied here as well.

20 tn According to some, the reference of this suffix would be to God. The arbiter would remove the rod of God from Job. But others take it as a separate sentence with God removing his rod.

21 sn The "rod" is a symbol of the power of God to decree whatever judgments and afflictions fall upon people.

22 tn "His terror" is metonymical; it refers to the awesome majesty of God that overwhelms Job and causes him to be afraid.

23 tn There is no conjunction with this cohortative, but the implication from the context is that if God's rod were withdrawn, if the terror were removed, then Job would speak up without fear.

24 tn The last half of the verse is rather cryptic: "but not so I with me." NIV renders it "but as it now stands with me, I cannot." This is very smooth and interpretive. Others transpose the two halves of the verse to read, "Since it is not so, I with myself // will commune and not fear him." Job would be saying that since he cannot contend with God on equal terms, and since there is no arbiter, he will come on his own terms. English versions have handled this differently: "for I know I am not what I am thought to be" (NEB); "since this is not the case with me" (NAB); "I do not see myself like that at all" (JB).

25 tn The Hebrew has נַפְשִׁי (nafshi), usually rendered "my soul."

26 tn The verb is pointed like a Qal form but is originally a Niphal from קוּט (qut). Some wish to connect the word to Akkadian cognates for a meaning "I am in anguish," but the meaning "I am weary" fits the passage well.

27 tn The verb עָזַב ('azav) means "to abandon." It may have an extended meaning of "to let go" or "to let slip." But the expression "abandon to myself" means to abandon all restraint and give free course to the complaint.

28 tn The negated jussive is the Hiphil jussive of רָשַׁע (rasha'); its meaning then would be literally "do not declare me guilty." The negated jussive stresses the immediacy of the request.

tell me[1] why you are contending[2] with me.'
10:3 Is it good for you[3] to oppress,[4] to[5] despise the work of your hands, while[6] you smile[7]
on the schemes of the wicked?

Motivations of God

10:4 "Do you have eyes of flesh,[8] or do you see[9] as a human being sees?[10] 10:5 Are your days like the days of a mortal, or your years like the years[11] of a mortal, 10:6 that[12] you must search out[13] my iniquity, and inquire about my sin,
10:7 although you know[14] that I am not guilty, and that there is no one who can deliver[15] out of your hand?

Contradictions in God's Dealings

10:8 "Your hands have shaped[16] me and made me, but[17] now you destroy me completely.[18]
10:9 Remember that you have made me as with[19] the clay; will[20] you return me to dust?
10:10 Did you not pour[21] me out like milk,

1 tn The Hiphil imperative of יָדַע (yada') would more literally be "cause me to know." It is a plea for God to help him understand the afflictions.

2 tn The verb is רִיב (riv), meaning "to dispute; to contend; to strive; to quarrel" – often in the legal sense. The precise words chosen in this verse show that the setting is legal. The imperfect verb here is progressive, expressing what is currently going on.

3 tn Or "Does it give you pleasure?" The expression could also mean, "Is it profitable for you?" or "Is it fitting for you?"

4 tn The construction uses כִּי (ki) with the imperfect verb – "that you oppress." Technically, this clause serves as the subject, and "good" is the predicate adjective. In such cases one often uses an English infinitive to capture the point: "Is it good for you to oppress?" The LXX changes the meaning considerably: "Is it good for you if I am unrighteous, for you have disowned the work of your hands."

5 tn Heb "that you despise."

6 tn Now, in the second half of the verse, there is a change in the structure. The conjunction on the preposition followed by the perfect verb represents a circumstantial clause.

7 tn The Hiphil of the verb יָפַע (yafa') means "shine." In this context the expression "you shine upon" would mean "have a glowing expression," be radiant, or smile.

8 tn Here "flesh" is the sign of humanity. The expression "eyes of flesh" means essentially "human eyes," i.e., the outlook and vision of humans.

9 sn The verb translated "see" could also include the figurative category of perceive as well. The answer to Job's question is found in 1 Sam 16:7: "The LORD sees not as a man sees; man looks on the outward appearance, but the LORD looks on the heart."

10 sn In this verse Job asks whether or not God is liable to making mistakes or errors of judgment. He wonders if God has no more insight than his friends have. Of course, the questions are rhetorical, for he knows otherwise. But his point is that God seems to be making a big mistake here.

11 tn The Hebrew has repeated here "like the days of," but some scholars think that this was an accidental replacement of what should be here, namely, "like the years of." D. J. A. Clines notes that such repetition is not uncommon in Job, but suggests that the change should be made for English style even if the text is not emended (Job [WBC], 221). This has been followed in the present translation.

sn The question Job asks concerns the mode of life and not just the length of it (see Job 7:1). Humans spend their days and years watching each other and defending themselves. But there is also the implication that if God is so limited like humans he may not uncover Job's sins before he dies.

12 tn The clause seems to go naturally with v. 4: do you have eyes of flesh...that you have to investigate? For that reason some like Duhm would delete v. 5. But v. 5 adds to the premise: are you also like a human running out of time that you must try to find out my sin?

13 tn The imperfect verbs in this verse are best given modal nuances. Does God have such limitations that he must make such an investigation? H. H. Rowley observes that Job implies that God has not yet found the iniquity, or extracted a confession from him (Job [NCBC], 84).

14 tn Heb עַל־דַּעְתֶּךָ ('al da'tekha, "upon your knowledge"). The use of the preposition means basically "in addition to your knowledge," or "in spite of your knowledge," i.e., "notwithstanding" or "although" (see GKC 383 §119.aa, n. 2).

15 tn Heb "and there is no deliverer."

sn The fact is that humans are the work of God's hands. They are helpless in the hand of God. But it is also unworthy of God to afflict his people.

16 tn The root עָצַב ('atsav) is linked by some to an Arabic word meaning "to cut out, hew." The derived word עֲצַבִּים ('atsabbim) means "idols." Whatever the precise meaning, the idea is that God formed or gave shape to mankind in creation.

17 tn The verb in this part is a preterite with the vav (ו) consecutive. However, here it has merely an external connection with the preceding perfects, so that in reality it presents an antithesis (see GKC 327 §111.e).

18 tn Heb "together round about and you destroy me." The second half of this verse is very difficult. Most commentators follow the LXX and connect the first two words with the second colon as the MT accents indicate (NJPS, "then destroyed every part of me"), rather than with the first colon ("and made me complete," J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 185). Instead of "together" some read "after." Others see in סָבִיב (saviv) not so much an adjectival use but a verbal or adverbial use: "you turn and destroy" or "you destroy utterly (all around)." This makes more sense than "turn." In addition, the verb form in the line is the preterite with vav consecutive; this may be another example of the transposition of the copula (see 4:6). For yet another option ("You have engulfed me about altogether"), see R. Fuller, "Exodus 21:22: The Miscarriage Interpretation and the Personhood of the Fetus," JETS 37 (1994): 178.

19 tn The preposition "like" creates a small tension here. So some ignore the preposition and read "clay" as an adverbial accusative of the material (GKC 371 §117.hh but cf. 379 §119.i with reference to beth essentiae: "as it were, by clay"). The NIV gets around the problem with a different meaning for the verb: "you molded me like clay." Some suggest the meaning was "as [with] clay" (in the same manner that we have "as [in] the day of Midian" [Isa 9:4]).

20 tn The text has a conjunction: "and to dust...."

21 tn The verb נָתַךְ (natakh) means "to flow," and in the Hiphil, "to cause to flow."

and curdle[1] me like cheese?[2] 10:11 You clothed[3] me with skin and flesh and knit me together[4] with bones and sinews.
10:12 You gave me[5] life and favor,[6] and your intervention[7] watched over my spirit.

10:13 "But these things[8] you have concealed in your heart;
I know that this[9] is with you:[10]
10:14 If I sinned, then you would watch me and you would not acquit me of my iniquity.
10:15 If I am guilty,[11] woe[12] to me, and if I am innocent, I cannot lift my head;[13]
I am full of shame,[14]
and satiated with my affliction.[15]

10:16 If I lift myself up,[16] you hunt me as a fierce lion,[17] and again[18] you display your power[19] against me.
10:17 You bring new witnesses[20] against me, and increase your anger against me;
relief troops[21] come against me.

---

1 tn This verb קָפָא (qafa') means "to coagulate." In the Hiphil it means "to stiffen; to congeal."

2 tn The verbs in v. 10 are prefixed conjugations; since the reference is to the womb, these would need to be classified as preterites.

sn These verses figuratively describe the formation of the embryo in the womb.

3 tn The skin and flesh form the exterior of the body and so the image of "clothing" is appropriate. Once again the verb is the prefixed conjugation, expressing what God did.

4 tn This verb is found only here (related nouns are common) and in the parallel passage of Ps 139:13. The word סָכַךְ (sakhakh), here a Poel prefixed conjugation (preterite), means "to knit together." The implied comparison is that the bones and sinews form the tapestry of the person (compare other images of weaving the life).

5 tn Heb "you made with me."

6 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 150) suggests that the relation between these two words is like a hendiadys. In other words, "life," which he says is made prominent by the shift of the copula, specifies the nature of the grace. He renders it "the favor of life." D. J. A. Clines at least acknowledges that the expression "you showed loyal love with me" is primary. There are many other attempts to improve the translation of this unusual combination.

7 tn The noun פְּקֻדָּה (p^{e}quddah), originally translated "visitation," actually refers to any divine intervention for blessing on the life. Here it would include the care and overseeing of the life of Job. "Providence" may be too general for the translation, but it is not far from the meaning of this line. The LXX has "your oversight."

8 sn "These things" refers to the affliction that God had brought on Job. They were concealed by God from the beginning.

9 sn The meaning of the line is that this was God's purpose all along. "These things" and "this" refer to the details that will now be given in the next few verses.

10 sn The contradiction between how God had provided for and cared for Job's life and how he was now dealing with him could only be resolved by Job with the supposition that God had planned this severe treatment from the first as part of his plan.

11 sn The verbs "guilty" and "innocent" are actually the verbs "I am wicked," and "I am righteous."

12 tn The exclamation occurs only here and in Mic 7:1.

13 sn The action of lifting up the head is a symbol of pride and honor and self-respect (Judg 8:28) – like "hold your head high." In 11:15 the one who is at peace with God lifts his head (face).

14 tn The expression שְׂבַע קָלוֹן (s^{e}va' qalon) may be translated "full of shame." The expression literally means "sated of ignominy" (or contempt [קָלָל, qalal]).

16 tn The MT has the 3rd person of the verb, "and he lifts himself up." One might assume that the subject is "my head" – but that is rather far removed from the verb. It appears that Job is talking about himself in some way. Some commentators simply emend the text to make it first person. This has the support of Targum Job, which would be expected since it would be interpreting the passage in its context (see D. M. Stec, "The Targum Rendering of WYG'H in Job X 16," VT 34 [1984]: 367-8). Pope and Gordis make the word adjectival, modifying the subject: "proudly you hunt me," but support is lacking. E. Dhorme thinks the line should be parallel to the two preceding it, and so suggests יָגֵעַ (yagea', "exhausted") for יִגְאֶה (yig'eh, "lift up"). The contextual argument is that Job has said that he cannot raise his head, but if he were to do so, God would hunt him down. God could be taken as the subject of the verb if the text is using enallage (shifting of grammatical persons within a discourse) for dramatic effect. Perhaps the initial 3rd person was intended with respect within a legal context of witnesses and a complaint, but was switched to 2nd person for direct accusation.

17 sn There is some ambiguity here: Job could be the lion being hunted by God, or God could be hunting Job like a lion hunts its prey. The point of the line is clear in either case.

18 tn The text uses two verbs without a coordinating conjunction: "then you return, you display your power." This should be explained as a verbal hendiadys, the first verb serving adverbially in the clause (see further GKC 386-87 §120. g).

19 tn The form is the Hitpael of פָּלָא (pala', "to be wonderful; to be surpassing; to be extraordinary"). Here in this stem it has the sense of "make oneself admirable, surpassing" or "render oneself powerful, glorious." The text is ironic; the word that described God's marvelous creation of Job is here used to describe God's awesome destruction of Job.

20 tn The text has "you renew/increase your witnesses." This would probably mean Job's sufferings, which were witness to his sins. But some suggested a different word here, one that is cognate to Arabic 'adiya, "to be an enemy; to be hostile": thus "you renew your hostility against me." Less convincing are suggestions that the word is cognate to Ugaritic "troops" (see W. G. E. Watson, "The Metaphor in Job 10,17," Bib 63 [1982]: 255-57).

21 tn The Hebrew simply says "changes and a host are with me." The "changes and a host" is taken as a hendiadys, meaning relieving troops (relief troops of the army). The two words appear together again in 14:14, showing that emendation is to be avoided. The imagery depicts blow after blow from God – always fresh attacks.

An Appeal for Relief

10:18 "Why then did you bring me out from the womb?
I should have died[1]
and no eye would have seen me!
10:19 I should have been as though I had never existed;[2]
I should have been carried right from the womb to the grave!
10:20 Are not my days few?[3]
Cease,[4] then, and leave[5] me alone,[6] that I may find a little comfort,[7] 10:21 before I depart, never to return,[8] to the land of darkness and the deepest shadow,[9] 10:22 to the land of utter darkness, like the deepest darkness, and the deepest shadow and disorder,[10]
where even the light[11] is like darkness."[12]

Zophar's First Speech to Job[13]

11:1 Then Zophar the Naamathite spoke up and said:
11:2 "Should not this[14] abundance of words be answered,[15] or should this[16] talkative man[17] be vindicated?[18]
11:3 Will your idle talk[19] reduce people to silence,[20] and will no one rebuke[21] you when you mock?[22] 11:4 For you have said, 'My teaching[23] is flawless, and I am pure in your sight.'
11:5 But if only God would speak,[24]

[1] tn The two imperfect verbs in this section are used to stress regrets for something which did not happen (see GKC 317 §107.n).

[2] sn This means "If only I had never come into existence."

[3] tn Heb "are not my days few; cease/let it cease...." The versions have "the days of my life" (reading יְמֵי חֶלְדִּי [yemê kheldi] instead of יָמַי וַחֲדַל [yamay vakhadal]). Many commentators and the RSV, NAB, and NRSV accept this reading. The Kethib is an imperfect or jussive, "let it cease/ it will cease." The Qere is more intelligible for some interpreters – "cease" (as in 7:16). For a discussion of the readings, see D. W. Thomas, "Some Observations on the Hebrew Root hadal," VTSup 4 [1057]: 14). But the text is not impossible as it stands.

[4] tn Taking the form as the imperative with the ו (vav), the sentence follows the direct address to God (as in v. 18 as well as 7:16). This requires less changes. See the preceding note regarding the plausibility of the jussive. The point of the verse is clear in either reading – his life is short, and he wants the suffering to stop.

[5] tn In the different suggestions for the line, the י (yod) of this word is believed to belong to the preceding word making "my life." That would here leave an imperative rather than an imperfect. But if the Qere is read, then it would be an imperative anyway, and there would be no reason for the change.

[6] tn Heb "put from me," an expression found nowhere else. The Qere has a ו (vav) and not a י (yod), forming an imperative rather than an imperfect. H. H. Rowley suggests that there is an ellipsis here, "hand" needing to be supplied. Job wanted God to take his hand away from him. That is plausible, but difficult.

[7] tn The verb בָּלַג (balag) in the Hiphil means "to have cheer [or joy]" (see 7:27; Ps 39:14 HT [39:13 ET]). The cohortative following the imperatives shows the purpose or result – "in order that."

[8] sn The verbs are simple, "I go" and "I return," but Job clearly means before he dies. A translation of "depart" comes closer to communicating this. The second verb may be given a potential imperfect translation to capture the point. The NIV offered more of an interpretive paraphrase: "before I go to the place of no return."

[9] tn See Job 3:5.

[10] tn The word סֵדֶר (seder, "order") occurs only here in the Bible. G. R. Driver found a new meaning in Arabic sadira, "dazzled by the glare" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 76-77); this would mean "without a ray of light." This is accepted by those who see chaos out of place in this line. But the word "order" is well-attested in later Hebrew (see J. Carmignac, "Précisions apportées au vocabulaire d'hébreu biblique par La guerre des fils de lumière contre les fils de ténèbres," VT 5 [1955]: 345-65).

[11] tn The Hebrew word literally means "it shines"; the feminine verb implies a subject like "the light" (but see GKC 459 §144.c).

[12] tn The verse multiplies images for the darkness in death. Several commentators omit "as darkness, deep darkness" (כְּמוֹ אֹפֶל צַלְמָוֶת, kemo 'ofel tsalmavet) as glosses on the rare word עֵיפָתָה ('efatah, "darkness") drawn from v. 21 (see also RSV). The verse literally reads: "[to the] land of darkness, like the deep darkness of the shadow of death, without any order, and the light is like the darkness."

[13] sn Zophar begins with a strong rebuke of Job with a wish that God would speak (2-6); he then reflects for a few verses on the unsearchable wisdom of God (7-12); and finally, he advises Job that the way to restoration is repentance (13-20).

[14] tc The LXX, Targum Job, Symmachus, and Vulgate all assume that the vocalization of רב (rov, "abundance") should be רַב (rav, "great"): "great of words." This would then mean "one who is abundant of words," meaning, "a man of many words," and make a closer parallel to the second half. But the MT makes good sense as it stands.

tn There is no article or demonstrative with the word; it has been added here simply to make a smoother connection between the chapters.

[15] tn The Niphal verb יֵעָנֶה (ye'aneh, "he answered") would normally require a personal subject, but "abundance" functions as the subject in this sentence. The nuance of the imperfect is obligatory.

[16] tn The word is supplied here also for clarification.

[17] tn The bound construction "man of lips" means "a boaster" or "proud talker" (attributive genitive; and see GKC 417 §128.t). Zophar is saying that Job pours out this stream of words, but he is still not right.

[18] tn The word is literally "be right, righteous." The idea of being right has appeared before for this word (cf. 9:15). The point here is that just because Job talks a lot does not mean he is right or will be shown to be right through it all.

[19] tn The word means "chatter, pratings, boastings" (see Isa 16:6; Jer 48:30).

[20] tn The verb חָרַשׁ (kharash) in the Hiphil means "to silence" (41:4); here it functions in a causative sense, "reduce to silence."

[21] tn The form מַכְלִם (makhlim, "humiliating, mocking") is the Hiphil participle. The verb כָּלַם (kalam) has the meaning "cover with shame, insult" (Job 20:3).

[22] tn The construction shows the participle to be in the circumstantial clause: "will you mock – and [with] no one rebuking."

[23] tn The word translated "teaching" is related etymologically to the Hebrew word "receive," but that does not restrict the teaching to what is received.

[24] tn The wish formula מִי יִתֵּן (mi yitten, "who will give"; see GKC 477 §151.b) is followed here by an infinitive (Exod 16:3; 2 Sam 19:1).

if only he would open his lips against you,[1] 11:6 and reveal to you the secrets of wisdom – for true wisdom has two sides[2] – so that you would know[3] that God has forgiven some of your sins.[4]

11:7 "Can you discover[5] the essence[6] of God?
Can you find out[7]
the perfection of the Almighty?[8]
11:8 It is higher[9] than the heavens – what can you do?
It is deeper than Sheol[10] – what can you know?
11:9 Its measure is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea.
11:10 If he comes by[11] and confines[12] you[13]
and convenes a court,[14]
then who can prevent[15] him?
11:11 For he[16] knows deceitful[17] men;
when he sees evil, will he not[18] consider it?[19] 11:12 But an empty man will become wise, when a wild donkey's colt is born a human being.[20]

[1] sn Job had expressed his eagerness to challenge God; Zophar here wishes that God would take up that challenge.

[2] tn The text seems to be saying "that it [wisdom] is double in understanding." The point is that it is different than Job conceived it – it far exceeded all perception. But some commentators have thought this still too difficult, and so have replaced the word כִּפְלַיִם (khiflayim, "two sides") with כִּפְלָאִים (khifla'im, "like wonders," or, more simply, "wonders" without the preposition). But it is still a little strange to talk about God's wisdom being like wonders. Others have had more radical changes in the text; J. J. Slotki has "for sound wisdom is his. And know that double [punishment] shall God exact of you" ("Job 11:6," VT 35 [1985]: 229-30).

[3] tn The verb is the imperative with a ו (vav). Following the jussive, this clause would be subordinated to the preceding (see GKC 325 §110.i).

[4] tn Heb "God causes to be forgotten for you part of your iniquity." The meaning is that God was exacting less punishment from Job than Job deserved, for Job could not remember all his sins. This statement is fitting for Zophar, who is the cruelest of Job's friends (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 88). Others in an attempt to improve the text make too many unwarranted changes. Some would read יִשְׁאָלְךָ (yish'alkha, "he asks of you") instead of יַשֶּׁה לָךְ (yasseh lekha, "he causes to be forgotten for you"). This would mean that God demands an account of Job's sin. But, as D. J. A. Clines says, this change is weak and needless (Job [WBC], 254-55).

[5] tn The verb is מָצָא (matsa', "to find; to discover"). Here it should be given the nuance of potential imperfect. And, in the rhetorical question it is affirming that Job cannot find out the essence of God.

[6] tn The word means "search; investigation," but it here means what is discovered in the search (so a metonymy of cause for the effect).

[7] tn The same verb is now found in the second half of the verse, with a slightly different sense – "attain, reach." A. R. Ceresko notes this as an example of antanaclasis (repetition of a word with a lightly different sense – "find/attain"). See "The Function of Antanaclasis in Hebrew Poetry," CBQ 44 (1982): 560-61.

[8] tn The abstract תַּכְלִית (takhlit) from כָּלָה (kalah, "to be complete; to be perfect") may mean the end or limit of something, perhaps to perfection. So the NIV has "can you probe the limits of the Almighty?" The LXX has: "have you come to the end of that which the Almighty has made?"

[9] tn The Hebrew says "heights of heaven, what can you do?" A. B. Davidson suggested this was an exclamation and should be left that way. But most commentators will repoint גָּבְהֵי שָׁמַיִם (govhe shamayim, "heights of heaven") to גְּבֹהָה מִשְּׁמָיִם (gevohah mishamayim, "higher than the heavens") to match the parallel expression. The LXX may have rearranged the text: "heaven is high."

[10] tn Or "deeper than hell." The word "Sheol" always poses problems for translation. Here because it is the opposite of heaven in this merism, "hell" would be a legitimate translation. It refers to the realm of the dead – the grave and beyond. The language is excessive, but the point is that God's wisdom is immeasurable – and Job is powerless before it.

[11] tn The verb יַחֲלֹף (yakhalof) is literally "passes by/through" (NIV "comes along" in the sense of "if it should so happen"). Many accept the emendation to יַחְתֹּךְ (yakhtof, "he seizes," cf. Gordis, Driver), but there is not much support for these.

[12] tn The verb is the Hiphil of סָגַר (sagar, "to close; to shut") and so here in this context it probably means something like "to shut in; to confine." But this is a difficult meaning, and the sentence is cryptic. E. Dhorme (Job, 162) thinks this word and the next have to be antithetical, and so he suggests from a meaning "to keep confined" the idea of keeping a matter secret; and with the next verb, "to convene an assembly," he offers "to divulge it."

[13] tn The pronoun "you" is not in the Hebrew text but has been supplied in the translation.

[14] tn The denominative Hiphil of קָהָל (qahal, "an assembly") has the idea of "to convene an assembly." In this context there would be the legal sense of convening a court, i.e., calling Job to account (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 255). See E. Ullendorff, "The Meaning of QHLT," VT 12 (1962): 215; he defines the verb also as "argue, rebuke."

[15] tn The verb means "turn him back." Zophar uses Job's own words (see 9:12).

[16] tn The pronoun is emphatic implying that Zophar indicates that God indeed knows Job's sin even if Job does not.

[17] tn The expression is literally "men of emptiness" (see Ps 26:4). These are false men, for שָׁוְא (shav') can mean "vain, empty, or false, deceitful."

[18] tn E. Dhorme (Job, 162) reads the prepositional phrase "to him" rather than the negative; he translates the line as "he sees iniquity and observes it closely."

[19] tn Some commentators do not take this last clause as a question, but simply as a statement, namely, that when God sees evil he does not need to ponder or consider it – he knows it instantly. In that case it would be a circumstantial clause: "without considering it." D. J. A. Clines lists quite an array of other interpretations for the line (Job [WBC], 255); for example, "and he is himself unobserved"; taking the word לֹא (lo') as an emphatic; taking the negative as a noun, "considering them as nothing"; and others that change the verb to "they do not understand it." But none of these are compelling; they offer no major improvement.

[20] tn As A. B. Davidson (Job, 84) says, the one thing will happen when the other happens – which is never. The word "empty" נָבוּב (navuv) means "hollow; witless," and "become wise" (יִלָּבֵב, yillavev) is "will get heart" (not to "lack heart" as Driver suggested"). Many commentators do not like the last line of the verse, and so offer even more emendations. E. F. Sutcliffe wanted to change פֶּרֶא (pere', "donkey") to פֶּרֶד (pered, "stallion"), rendering "a witless wight may get wit when a mule is born a stallion" ("Notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 30 [1949]: 70-71); and others approached the verse by changing the verb from יִוָּלֵד (yivvaled, "is born") to יִלָּמֵד (yillamed, "is taught"), resulting in "a hollow man may get understanding, and a wild donkey's colt may be taught [= tamed]" (cf. NAB).

11:13 "As for you,[1] if you prove faithful,[2] and if[3] you stretch out your hands toward
him,[4]
11:14 if[5] iniquity is in your hand – put it far away,[6]
and do not let evil reside in your tents.
11:15 For[7] then you will lift up your face without[8] blemish;[9]
you will be securely established[10]
and will not fear.
11:16 For you[11] will forget your trouble;[12]
you will remember it like water that[13] has flowed away.
11:17 And life[14] will be brighter[15] than the noonday;
though there be darkness,[16]
it will be like the morning.
11:18 And you will be secure, because there is hope;
you will be protected[17]
and will take your rest in safety.
11:19 You will lie down with[18] no one to make you afraid, and many will seek your favor.[19] 11:20 But the eyes of the wicked fail,[20] and escape[21] eludes them; their one hope[22] is to breathe their last."[23]

Job's Reply to Zophar[24]

12:1 Then Job answered:

12:2 "Without a doubt you are the people,[25]

1 tn The pronoun is emphatic, designed to put Job in a different class than the hollow men – at least to raise the possibility of his being in a different class.

2 tn The Hebrew uses the perfect of כּוּן (kun, "establish") with the object "your heart." The verb can be translated "prepare, fix, make firm" your heart. To fix the heart is to make it faithful and constant, the heart being the seat of the will and emotions. The use of the perfect here does not refer to the past, but should be given a future perfect sense – if you shall have fixed your heart, i.e., prove faithful. Job would have to make his heart secure, so that he was no longer driven about by differing views.

3 tn This half-verse is part of the protasis and not, as in the RSV, the apodosis to the first half. The series of "if" clauses will continue through these verses until v. 15.

4 sn This is the posture of prayer (see Isa 1:15). The expression means "spread out your palms," probably meaning that the one praying would fall to his knees, put his forehead to the ground, and spread out his hands in front of him on the ground.

5 tn Verse 14 should be taken as a parenthesis and not a continuation of the protasis, because it does not fit with v. 13 in that way (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 256).

6 tn Many commentators follow the Vulgate and read the line "if you put away the sin that is in your hand." They do this because the imperative comes between the protasis (v. 13) and the apodosis (v. 15) and does not appear to be clearly part of the protasis. The idea is close to the MT, but the MT is much more forceful – if you find sin in your hand, get rid of it.

7 tn The absolute certainty of the statement is communicated with the addition of כִּי (ki) (see GKC 498 §159.ee).

8 tn For this use of the preposition מִן (min) see GKC 382 §119.w.

9 tn The word "lift up" is chosen to recall Job's statement that he could not lift up his head (10:15); and the words "without spot" recall his words "filled with shame." The sentence here says that he will lift up his face in innocence and show no signs of God's anger on him.

10 tn The form מֻצָק (mutsaq) is a Hophal participle from יָצַק (yatsaq, "to pour"). The idea is that of metal being melted down and then poured to make a statue, and so hard, firm, solid. The LXX reads the verse, "for thus your face shall shine again, like pure water, and you shall divest yourself of uncleanness, and shall not fear."

11 tn For a second time (see v. 13) Zophar employs the emphatic personal pronoun. Could he be providing a gentle reminder that Job might have forgotten the sin that has brought this trouble? After all, there will come a time when Job will not remember this time of trial.

12 sn It is interesting to note in the book that the resolution of Job's trouble did not come in the way that Zophar prescribed it.

13 tn The perfect verb forms an abbreviated relative clause (without the pronoun) modifying "water."

14 tn Some translations add the pronoun to make it specifically related to Job ("your life"), but this is not necessary. The word used here has the nuance of lasting life.

15 tn Heb "and more than the noonday life will arise." The present translation is an interpretation in the context. The connotation of "arise" in comparison with the noonday, and in contrast with the darkness, supports the interpretation.

16 tn The form in the MT is the 3fsg imperfect verb, "[though] it be dark." Most commentators revocalize the word to make it a noun (תְּעֻפָּה, t^{e}'ufah), giving the meaning "the darkness [of your life] will be like the morning." The contrast is with Job 10:22; here the darkness will shine like the morning.

17 tn The Hebrew verb means "to dig," but this does not provide a good meaning for the verse. A. B. Davidson offers an interpretation of "search," suggesting that before retiring at night Job would search and find everything in order. Some offer a better solution, namely, redefining the word on the basis of Arabic hafara, "to protect" and repointing it to וְחֻפַרְתָּ (v^{e}khufarta, "you will be protected"). Other attempts to make sense of the line have involved the same process, but they are less convincing (for some of the more plausible proposals, see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 257).

18 tn The clause that reads "and there is no one making you afraid," is functioning circumstantially here (see 5:4; 10:7).

19 tn Heb "they will stroke your face," a picture drawn from the domestic scene of a child stroking the face of the parent. The verb is a Piel, meaning "stroke, make soft." It is used in the Bible of seeking favor from God (supplication), but it may on the human level also mean seeking to sway people by flattery. See further D. R. Ap-Thomas, "Notes on Some Terms Relating to Prayer," VT 6 (1956): 225-41.

20 tn The verb כָּלָה (kalah) means "to fail, cease, fade away." The fading of the eyes, i.e., loss of sight, loss of life's vitality, indicates imminent death.

21 tn Heb a "place of escape" (with this noun pattern). There is no place to escape to because they all perish.

22 tn The word is to be interpreted as a metonymy; it represents what is hoped for.

23 tn Heb "the breathing out of the soul"; cf. KJV, ASV "the giving up of the ghost." The line is simply saying that the brightest hope that the wicked have is death.

24 sn This long speech of Job falls into three parts: in 12:2-25 Job expresses his resentment at his friends' attitude of superiority and acknowledges the wisdom of God; then, in 13:1-28 Job expresses his determination to reason with God, expresses his scorn for his friends' advice, and demands to know what his sins are; and finally, in 14:1-22 Job laments the brevity of life and the finality of death.

25 tn The expression "you are the people" is a way of saying that the friends hold the popular opinion – they represent it. The line is sarcastic. Commentators do not think the parallelism is served well by this, and so offer changes for "people." Some have suggested "you are complete" (based on Arabic), "you are the strong one" (based on Ugaritic), etc. J. A. Davies tried to solve the difficulty by making the second clause in the verse a paratactic relative clause: "you are the people with whom wisdom will die" ("Note on Job 12:2," VT 25 [1975]: 670-71).

and wisdom will die with you.[1] 12:3 I also have understanding[2] as well as you;
I am not inferior to you.[3]
Who does not know such things as these?[4]
12:4 I am[5] a laughingstock[6] to my friends,[7]
I, who called on God and whom he answered[8] – a righteous and blameless[9] man is a laughingstock!
12:5 For calamity,[10] there is derision
(according to the ideas of the fortunate[11]) – a fate[12] for those whose feet slip!
12:6 But[13] the tents of robbers are peaceful, and those who provoke God are confident[14] – who carry their god in their hands.[15]

Knowledge of God's Wisdom[16]

12:7 "But now, ask the animals and they[17] will teach you, or the birds of the sky and they will tell you.
12:8 Or speak[18] to the earth[19] and it will teach you, or let the fish of the sea declare to you.
12:9 Which of all these[20] does not know that the hand of the LORD[21] has done[22] this, 12:10 in whose hand[23] is the life[24] of every creature and the breath of all the human race.[25]

---

[1] sn The sarcasm of Job admits their claim to wisdom, as if no one has it besides them. But the rest of his speech will show that they do not have a monopoly on it.

[2] tn The word is literally "heart," meaning a mind or understanding.

[3] tn Because this line is repeated in 13:2, many commentators delete it from this verse (as does the LXX). The Syriac translates נִפַּל (nofel) as "little," and the Vulgate "inferior." Job is saying that he does not fall behind them in understanding.

[4] tn Heb "With whom are not such things as these?" The point is that everyone knows the things that these friends have been saying – they are commonplace.

[5] tn Some are troubled by the disharmony with "I am" and "to his friend." Even though the difficulty is not insurmountable, some have emended the text. Some simply changed the verb to "he is," which was not very compelling. C. D. Isbell argued that אֶהְיֶה ('ehyeh, "I am") is an orthographic variant of יִהְיֶה (yihyeh, "he will") – "a person who does not know these things would be a laughingstock" (JANESCU 37 [1978]: 227-36). G. R. Driver suggests the meaning of the MT is something like "(One that is) a mockery to his friend I am to be."

[6] tn The word simply means "laughter," but it can also mean the object of laughter (see Jer 20:7). The LXX jumps from one "laughter" to the next, eliminating everything in between, presumably due to haplography.

[7] tn Heb "his friend." A number of English versions (e.g., NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT) take this collectively, "to my friends."

[8] tn Heb "one calling to God and he answered him." H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 92) contends that because Job has been saying that God is not answering him, these words must be part of the derisive words of his friends.

[9] tn The two words, צַדִּיק תָּמִים (tsadiq tamim), could be understood as a hendiadys (= "blamelessly just") following W. G. E. Watson (Classical Hebrew Poetry, 327).

[10] tn The first word, לַפִּיד (lapid), could be rendered "a torch of scorn," but this gives no satisfying meaning. The ל (lamed) is often taken as an otiose letter, and the noun פִּיד (pid) is "misfortune, calamity" (cf. Job 30:24; 31:29).

[11] tn The noun עַשְׁתּוּת ('ashtut, preferably עַשְׁתּוֹת, 'ashtot) is an abstract noun from עָשַׁת ('ashat, "to think"). The word שַׁאֲנָן (sha'anan) means "easy in mind, carefree," and "happy."

[12] tn The form has traditionally been taken to mean "is ready" from the verb כון (kun, "is fixed, sure"). But many commentators look for a word parallel to "calamity." So the suggestion has been put forward that נָכוֹן (nakhon) be taken as a noun from נָכָה (nakhah, "strike, smite"): "a blow" (Schultens, Dhorme, Gordis), "thrust" or "kick" (HALOT 698 s.v. I נָכוֹן).

[13] tn The verse gives the other side of the coin now, the fact that the wicked prosper.

[14] tn The plural is used to suggest the supreme degree of arrogant confidence (E. Dhorme, Job, 171).

[15] sn The line is perhaps best understood as describing one who thinks he is invested with the power of God.

[16] sn As J. E. Hartley (Job [NICOT], 216) observes, in this section Job argues that respected tradition "must not be accepted uncritically."

[17] tn The singular verb is used here with the plural collective subject (see GKC 464 §145.k).

[18] tn The word in the MT means "to complain," not simply "to speak," and one would expect animals as the object here in parallel to the last verse. So several commentators have replaced the word with words for animals or reptiles – totally different words (cf. NAB, "reptiles"). The RSV and NRSV have here the word "plants" (see 30:4, 7; and Gen 21:15).

[19] tn A. B. Davidson (Job, 90) offers a solution by taking "earth" to mean all the lower forms of life that teem in the earth (a metonymy of subject).

[20] tn This line could also be translated "by all these," meaning "who is not instructed by nature?" (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 93). But D. J. A. Clines points out that the verses have presented the animals as having knowledge and communicating it, so the former reading would be best (Job [WBC], 279).

[21] tc Some commentators have trouble with the name "Yahweh" in this verse, which is not the pattern in the poetic section of Job. Three MSS of Kennicott and two of de Rossi have "God." If this is so the reminiscence of Isaiah 41:20 led the copyist to introduce the tetragrammaton. But one could argue equally that the few MSS with "God" were the copyists' attempt to correct the text in accord with usage elsewhere.

[22] sn The expression "has done this" probably refers to everything that has been discussed, namely, the way that God in his wisdom rules over the world, but specifically it refers to the infliction of suffering in the world.

[23] tn The construction with the relative clause includes a resumptive pronoun referring to God: "who in his hand" = "in whose hand."

[24] tn The two words נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) and רוּחַ (ruakh) are synonymous in general. They could be translated "soul" and "spirit," but "soul" is not precise for נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh), and so "life" is to be preferred. Since that is the case for the first half of the verse, "breath" will be preferable in the second part.

[25] tn Human life is made of "flesh" and "spirit." So here the line reads "and the spirit of all flesh of man." If the text had simply said "all flesh," that would have applied to all flesh in which there is the breath of life (see Gen 6:17; 7:15). But to limit this to human beings requires the qualification with "man."

12:11 Does not the ear test words, as[1] the tongue[2] tastes food?[3]
12:12 Is not wisdom found among the aged?[4]
Does not long life bring understanding?

12:13 "With God[5] are wisdom and power; counsel and understanding are his.[6]
12:14 If[7] he tears down, it cannot be rebuilt;
if he imprisons a person, there is no escape.[8] 12:15 If he holds back the waters, then they dry up;[9]
if he releases them,[10] they destroy[11] the land.
12:16 With him are strength and prudence;[12] both the one who goes astray[13] and the one who misleads are his.
12:17 He[14] leads[15] counselors away stripped[16] and makes judges[17] into fools.[18] 12:18 He loosens[19] the bonds[20] of kings and binds a loincloth[21] around their waist.
12:19 He leads priests away stripped[22] and overthrows[23] the potentates.[24]

---

1 tn The ו (vav) introduces the comparison here (see 5:7; 11:12); see GKC 499 §161.a.

2 tn Heb "the palate."

3 tn The final preposition with its suffix is to be understood as a pleonastic dativus ethicus and not translated (see GKC 439 §135.i).

sn In the rest of the chapter Job turns his attention away from creation to the wisdom of ancient men. In Job 13:1 when Job looks back to this part, he refers to both the eye and the ear. In vv. 13-25 Job refers to many catastrophes which he could not have seen, but must have heard about.

4 tn The statement in the Hebrew Bible simply has "among the aged – wisdom." Since this seems to be more the idea of the friends than of Job, scholars have variously tried to rearrange it. Some have proposed that Job is citing his friends: "With the old men, you say, is wisdom" (Budde, Gray, Hitzig). Others have simply made it a question (Weiser). But others take לֹא (lo') from the previous verse and make it the negative here, to say, "wisdom is not...." But Job will draw on the wisdom of the aged, only with discernment, for ultimately all wisdom is with God.

5 tn Heb "him"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 sn A. B. Davidson (Job, 91) says, "These attributes of God's [sic] confound and bring to nought everything bearing the same name among men."

7 tn The use of הֵן (hen, equivalent to הִנֵּה, hinneh, "behold") introduces a hypothetical condition.

8 tn The verse employs antithetical ideas: "tear down" and "build up," "imprison" and "escape." The Niphal verbs in the sentences are potential imperfects. All of this is to say that humans cannot reverse the will of God.

9 tc The LXX has a clarification: "he will dry the earth."

10 sn The verse is focusing on the two extremes of drought and flood. Both are described as being under the power of God.

11 tn The verb הָפַךְ (hafakh) means "to overthrow; to destroy; to overwhelm." It was used in Job 9:5 for "overturning" mountains. The word is used in Genesis for the destruction of Sodom.

12 tn The word תּוּשִׁיָּה (tushiyyah) is here rendered "prudence." Some object that God's power is intended here, and so a word for power and not wisdom should be included. But v. 13 mentioned wisdom. The point is that it is God's efficient wisdom that leads to success. One could interpret this as a metonymy of cause, the intended meaning being victory or success.

13 tn The Hebrew text uses a wordplay here: שֹׁגֵג (shogeg) is "the one going astray," i.e., the one who is unable to guard and guide his life. The second word is מַשְׁגֶּה (mashgeh), from a different but historically related root שָׁגָה (shagah), which here in the Hiphil means "the one who misleads, causes to go astray." These two words are designed to include everybody – all are under the wisdom of God.

14 tn The personal pronoun normally present as the subject of the participle is frequently omitted (see GKC 381 §119.s).

15 tn GKC 361-62 §116.x notes that almost as a rule a participle beginning a sentence is continued with a finite verb with or without a ו (vav). Here the participle ("leads") is followed by an imperfect ("makes fools") after a ו (vav).

16 tn The word שׁוֹלֵל (sholal), from the root שָׁלַל (shalal, "to plunder; to strip"), is an adjective expressing the state (and is in the singular, as if to say, "in the state of one naked" [GKC 375 §118.o]). The word is found in military contexts (see Mic 1:8). It refers to the carrying away of people in nakedness and shame by enemies who plunder (see also Isa 8:1-4). They will go away as slaves and captives, deprived of their outer garments. Some (cf. NAB) suggest "barefoot," based on the LXX of Mic 1:8, but the meaning of that is uncertain. G. R. Driver wanted to derive the word from an Arabic root "to be mad; to be giddy," forming a better parallel.

17 sn The judges, like the counselors, are nobles in the cities. God may reverse their lot, either by captivity or by shame, and they cannot resist his power.

18 tn Some translate this "makes mad" as in Isa 44:25, but this gives the wrong connotation today; more likely God shows them to be fools.

19 tn The verb may be classified as a gnomic perfect, or possibly a potential perfect – "he can loosen." The Piel means "to untie; to unbind" (Job 30:11; 38:31; 39:5).

20 tc There is a potential textual difficulty here. The MT has מוּסָר (musar, "discipline"), which might have replaced מוֹסֵר (moser, "bond, chain") from אָסַר ('asar, "to bind"). Or מוּסָר might be an unusual form of אֶסֶר (an option noted in HALOT 557 s.v. *מוּסָר). The line is saying that if the kings are bound, God can set them free, and in the second half, if they are free, he can bind them. Others take the view that this word "bond" refers to the power kings have over others, meaning that God can reduce kings to slavery.

21 tn Some commentators want to change אֵזוֹר ('ezor, "girdle") to אֱסוּר ('esur, "bond") because binding the loins with a girdle was an expression for strength. But H. H. Rowley notes that binding the king's loins this way would mean so that he would do servitude, menial tasks. Such a reference would certainly indicate troubled times.

22 tn Except for "priests," the phraseology is identical to v. 17a.

23 tn The verb has to be defined by its context: it can mean "falsify" (Exod 23:8), "make tortuous" (Prov 19:3), or "plunge" into misfortune (Prov 21:12). God overthrows those who seem to be solid.

24 tn The original meaning of אֵיתָן ('eytan) is "perpetual." It is usually an epithet for a torrent that is always flowing. It carries the connotations of permanence and stability; here applied to people in society, it refers to one whose power and influence does not change. These are the pillars of society.

12:20 He deprives the trusted advisers[1] of speech[2] and takes away the discernment[3] of elders.
12:21 He pours contempt on noblemen and disarms[4] the powerful.[5] 12:22 He reveals the deep things of darkness, and brings deep shadows[6] into the light.
12:23 He makes nations great,[7] and destroys them;
he extends the boundaries of nations and disperses[8] them.[9] 12:24 He deprives the leaders of the earth[10] of their understanding;[11]
he makes them wander in a trackless desert waste.[12] 12:25 They grope about in darkness[13] without light;
he makes them stagger[14] like drunkards.

Job Pleads His Cause to God[15]

13:1 "Indeed, my eyes have seen all this,[16] my ears have heard and understood it.
13:2 What you know,[17] I[18] know also;
I am not inferior[19] to you!
13:3 But I wish to speak[20] to the Almighty,[21] and I desire to argue[22] my case[23] with God.
13:4 But you, however, are inventors of lies;[24]
all of you are worthless physicians![25]
13:5 If only you would keep completely silent![26]
For you, that would be wisdom.[27]

1 tn The Hebrew נֶאֱמָנִים (ne'emanim) is the Niphal participle; it is often translated "the faithful" in the Bible. The Rabbis rather fancifully took the word from נְאֻם (n^{e}'um, "oracle, utterance") and so rendered it "those who are eloquent, fluent in words." But that would make this the only place in the Bible where this form came from that root or any other root besides אָמַן ('aman, "confirm, support"). But to say that God takes away the speech of the truthful or the faithful would be very difficult. It has to refer to reliable men, because it is parallel to the elders or old men. The NIV has "trusted advisers," which fits well with kings and judges and priests.

2 tn Heb "he removes the lip of the trusted ones."

3 tn Heb "taste," meaning "opinion" or "decision."

4 tn The expression in Hebrew uses מָזְיַח (m^{e}ziakh, "belt") and the Piel verb רִפָּה (rippah, "to loosen") so that "to loosen the belt of the mighty" would indicate "to disarm/incapacitate the mighty." Others have opted to change the text: P. Joüon emends to read "forehead" – "he humbles the brow of the mighty."

5 tn The word אָפַק ('afaq, "to be strong") is well-attested, and the form אָפִיק ('afiq) is a normal adjective formation. So a translation like "mighty" (KJV, NIV) or "powerful" is acceptable, and further emendations are unnecessary.

6 tn The Hebrew word is traditionally rendered "shadow of death" (so KJV, ASV); see comments at Job 3:3.

7 tn The word מַשְׂגִּיא (masgi', "makes great") is a common Aramaic word, but only occurs in Hebrew here and in Job 8:11 and 36:24. Some MSS have a change, reading the form from שָׁגָה (shagah, "leading astray"). The LXX omits the line entirely.

8 tn The difficulty with the verb נָחָה (nakhah) is that it means "to lead; to guide," but not "to lead away" or "to disperse," unless this passage provides the context for such a meaning. Moreover, it never has a negative connotation. Some vocalize it וַיְנִיחֵם (vayyannikhem), from נוּחַ (nuakh), the causative meaning of "rest," or "abandon" (Driver, Gray, Gordis). But even there it would mean "leave in peace." Blommerde suggests the second part is antithetical parallelism, and so should be positive. So Ball proposed וַיְמִיתֵם (vayyimkhem) from מָחָה (makhah): "and he cuts them off."

9 sn The rise and fall of nations, which does not seem to be governed by any moral principle, is for Job another example of God's arbitrary power.

10 tn Heb "the heads of the people of the earth."

11 tn Heb "heart."

12 tn The text has בְּתֹהוּ לֹא־דָרֶךְ (b^{e}tohu lo' darekh): "in waste – no way," or "in a wasteland [where there is] no way," thus, "trackless" (see the discussion of negative attributes using לֹא [lo'] in GKC 482 §152.u).

13 tn The word is an adverbial accusative.

14 tn The verb is the same that was in v. 24, "He makes them [the leaders still] wander" (the Hiphil of תָּעָה, ta'ah). But in this passage some commentators emend the text to a Niphal of the verb and put it in the plural, to get the reading "they reel to and fro." But even if the verse closes the chapter and there is no further need for a word of divine causation, the Hiphil sense works well here – causing people to wander like a drunken man would be the same as making them stagger.

15 sn Chapter 13 records Job's charges against his friends for the way they used their knowledge (1-5), his warning that God would find out their insincerity (6-12), and his pleading of his cause to God in which he begs for God to remove his hand from him and that he would not terrify him with his majesty and that he would reveal the sins that caused such great suffering (13-28).

16 tn Hebrew has כֹּל (kol, "all"); there is no reason to add anything to the text to gain a meaning "all this."

17 tn Heb "Like your knowledge"; in other words Job is saying that his knowledge is like their knowledge.

18 tn The pronoun makes the subject emphatic and stresses the contrast: "I know – I also."

19 tn The verb "fall" is used here as it was in Job 4:13 to express becoming lower than someone, i.e., inferior.

20 tn The verb is simply the Piel imperfect אֲדַבֵּר ('adabber, "I speak"). It should be classified as a desiderative imperfect, saying, "I desire to speak." This is reinforced with the verb "to wish, desire" in the second half of the verse.

21 tn The Hebrew title for God here is אֶל־שַׁדַּי ('el shadday, "El Shaddai").

22 tn The infinitive absolute functions here as the direct object of the verb "desire" (see GKC 340 §113.b).

23 tn The infinitive הוֹכֵחַ (hokheakh) is from the verb יָכַח (yakhakh), which means "to argue, plead, debate." It has the legal sense here of arguing a case (cf. 5:17).

24 tn The טֹפְלֵי־שָׁקֶר (tof^{e}le shaqer) are "plasterers of lies" (Ps 119:69). The verb means "to coat, smear, plaster." The idea is that of imputing something that is not true. Job is saying that his friends are inventors of lies. The LXX was influenced by the next line and came up with "false physicians."

25 tn The literal rendering of the construct would be "healers of worthlessness." Ewald and Dillmann translated it "patchers" based on a meaning in Arabic and Ethiopic; this would give the idea "botchers." But it makes equally good sense to take "healers" as the meaning, for Job's friends came to minister comfort and restoration to him – but they failed. See P. Humbert, "Maladie et medicine dans l'AT," RHPR 44 (1964): 1-29.

26 tn The construction is the imperfect verb in the wish formula preceded by the infinitive that intensifies it. The Hiphil is not directly causative here, but internally – "keep silent."

27 tn The text literally reads, "and it would be for you for wisdom," or "that it would become your wisdom." Job is rather sarcastic here, indicating if they shut up they would prove themselves to be wise (see Prov 17:28).

13:6 "Listen now to my argument,[1] and be attentive to my lips' contentions.[2] 13:7 Will you speak wickedly[3] on God's behalf?[4]
Will you speak deceitfully for him?
13:8 Will you show him partiality?[5]
Will you argue the case[6] for God?
13:9 Would it turn out well if he would examine[7] you?
Or as one deceives[8] a man would you deceive him?
13:10 He would certainly rebuke[9] you if you secretly[10] showed partiality!
13:11 Would not his splendor[11] terrify[12]
you and the fear he inspires[13] fall on you?
13:12 Your maxims[14] are proverbs of ashes;[15]
your defenses[16] are defenses of clay.[17] 13:13 "Refrain from talking[18] with me so that[19] I may speak;
then let come to me[20] what may.[21]
13:14 Why[22] do I put myself in peril,[23]
and take my life in my hands?
13:15 Even if he slays me, I will hope in
him;[24]
I will surely[25] defend[26] my ways to his face!

---

1 sn Job first will argue with his friends. His cause that he will plead with God begins in v. 13. The same root יָכַח (yakhakh, "argue, plead") is used here as in v. 3b (see note). Synonymous parallelism between the two halves of this verse supports this translation.

2 tn The Hebrew word רִבּוֹת (rivot, "disputes, contentions") continues the imagery of presenting a legal case. The term is used of legal disputations and litigation. See, also, v. 19a.

3 tn The construction literally reads "speak iniquity." The form functions adverbially. The noun עַוְלָה ('avlah) means "perversion; injustice; iniquity; falsehood." Here it is parallel to רְמִיָּה (remiyyah, "fraud; deceit; treachery").

4 tn The expression "for God" means "in favor of God" or "on God's behalf." Job is amazed that they will say false things on God's behalf.

5 sn The idiom used here is "Will you lift up his face?" Here Job is being very sarcastic, for this expression usually means that a judge is taking a bribe. Job is accusing them of taking God's side.

6 tn The same root is used here (רִיב, riv, "dispute, contention") as in v. 6b (see note).

7 tn The verb חָפַר (khafar) means "to search out, investigate, examine." In the conditional clause the imperfect verb expresses the hypothetical case.

8 tn Both the infinitive and the imperfect of תָּלַל (talal, "deceive, mock") retain the ה (he) (GKC 148 §53.q). But for the alternate form, see F. C. Fensham, "The Stem HTL in Hebrew," VT 9 (1959): 310-11. The infinitive is used here in an adverbial sense after the preposition.

9 tn The verbal idea is intensified with the infinitive absolute. This is the same verb used in v. 3; here it would have the sense of "rebuke, convict."

sn Peake's observation is worth noting, namely, that as Job attacks the unrighteousness of God boldly he nonetheless has confidence in God's righteousness that would not allow liars to defend him.

10 sn The use of the word "in secret" or "secretly" suggests that what they do is a guilty action (31:27a).

11 sn The word translated "his majesty" or "his splendor" (שְׂאֵתוֹ, s'eto) forms a play on the word "show partiality" (תִּשָּׂאוּן, tissa'un) in the last verse. They are both from the verb נָשָׂא (nasa', "to lift up").

12 tn On this verb in the Piel, see 7:14.

13 tn Heb "His dread"; the suffix is a subjective genitive.

14 tn The word is זִכְרֹנֵיכֶם (zikhronekhem, "your remembrances"). The word זִכָּרוֹן (zikkaron) not only can mean the act of remembering, but also what is remembered – what provokes memory or is worth being remembered. In the plural it can mean all the memorabilia, and in this verse all the sayings and teachings. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 99) suggests that in Job's speech it could mean "all your memorized sayings."

15 tn The parallelism of "dust" and "ashes" is fairly frequent in scripture. But "proverbs of ashes" is difficult. The genitive is certainly describing the proverbs; it could be classified as a genitive of apposition, proverbs that are/have become ashes. Ashes represent something that at one time may have been useful, but now has been reduced to what is worthless.

16 tn There is a division of opinion on the source of this word. Some take it from "answer", related to Arabic, Aramaic, and Syriac words for "answer," and so translate it "responses" (JB). Others take it from a word for "back," with a derived meaning of the "boss" of the shield, and translate it bulwark or "defenses" (NEB, RSV, NIV). The idea of "answers" may fit the parallelism better, but "defenses" can be taken figuratively to refer to verbal defenses.

17 sn Any defense made with clay would crumble on impact.

18 tn The Hebrew has a pregnant construction: "be silent from me," meaning "stand away from me in silence," or "refrain from talking with me." See GKC 384 §119.ff. The LXX omits "from me," as do several commentators.

19 tn The verb is the Piel cohortative; following the imperative of the first colon this verb would show purpose or result. The inclusion of the independent personal pronoun makes the focus emphatic – "so that I (in my turn) may speak."

20 tn The verb עָבַר ('avar, "pass over") is used with the preposition עַל ('al, "upon") to express the advent of misfortune, namely, something coming against him.

21 tn The interrogative pronoun מָה (mah) is used in indirect questions, here introducing a clause [with the verb understood] as the object – "whatever it be" (see GKC 443-44 §137.c).

22 tc Most editors reject עַל־מָה ('al mah) as dittography from the last verse.

23 tn Heb "why do I take my flesh in my teeth?" This expression occurs nowhere else. It seems to be drawn from animal imagery in which the wild beast seizes the prey and carries it off to a place of security. The idea would then be that Job may be destroying himself. An animal that fights with its flesh (prey) in its mouth risks losing it. Other commentators do not think this is satisfactory, but they are unable to suggest anything better.

24 tn There is a textual difficulty here that factors into the interpretation of the verse. The Kethib is לֹא (lo', "not"), but the Qere is לוֹ (lo, "to him"). The RSV takes the former: "Behold, he will slay me, I have no hope." The NIV takes it as "though he slay me, yet will I hope in him." Job is looking ahead to death, which is not an evil thing to him. The point of the verse is that he is willing to challenge God at the risk of his life; and if God slays him, he is still confident that he will be vindicated – as he says later in this chapter. Other suggestions are not compelling. E. Dhorme (Job, 187) makes a slight change of אִיָחֵל ('ayakhel, "I will hope") to אֶחָיֵל ('akhil, "I will [not] tremble"). A. B. Davidson (Job, 98) retains the MT, but interprets the verb more in line with its use in the book: "I will not wait" (cf. NLT).

25 tn On אַךְ ('akh, "surely") see GKC 483 §153 on intensive clauses.

26 tn The verb once again is יָכַח (yakhah, in the Hiphil, "argue a case, plead, defend, contest"). But because the word usually means "accuse" rather than "defend," I. L. Seeligmann proposed changing "my ways" to "his ways" ("Zur Terminologie für das Gerichtsverfahren im Wortschatz des biblischen Hebräisch," VTSup 16 [1967]: 251-78). But the word can be interpreted appropriately in the context without emendation.

13:16 Moreover, this will become my deliverance, for no godless person would come before him.[1] 13:17 Listen carefully[2] to my words;
let your ears be attentive to my explanation.[3] 13:18 See now,[4] I have prepared[5] my[6] case;[7]
I know that I am right.[8]
13:19 Who[9] will contend with me?
If anyone can, I will be silent and die.[10]
13:20 Only in two things spare me,[11] O God,[12]
and then I will not hide from your face:
13:21 Remove[13] your hand[14] far from me and stop making me afraid with your terror.[15] 13:22 Then call,[16] and I will answer, or I will speak, and you respond to me.
13:23 How many are my[17] iniquities and sins?
Show me my transgression and my sin.[18]
13:24 Why do you hide your face[19]
and regard me as your enemy?
13:25 Do you wish to torment[20] a windblown[21] leaf and chase after dry chaff?[22]
13:26 For you write down[23] bitter things against me and cause me to inherit the sins of my youth.[24] 13:27 And you put my feet in the stocks[25] and you watch all my movements;[26]

[1] sn The fact that Job will dare to come before God and make his case is evidence – to Job at least – that he is innocent.

[2] tn The infinitive absolute intensifies the imperative, which serves here with the force of an immediate call to attention. In accordance with GKC 342 §113.n, the construction could be translated, "Keep listening" (so ESV).

[3] tn The verb has to be supplied in this line, for the MT has "and my explanation in your ears." In the verse, both "word" and "explanation" are Aramaisms (the latter appearing in Dan 5:12 for the explanation of riddles).

[4] tn The particle הִנֵּה (hinneh) functions almost as an imperative here, calling attention to what follows: "look" (archaic: behold).

[5] tn The verb עָרַךְ ('arakh) means "to set in order, set in array [as a battle], prepare" in the sense here of arrange and organize a lawsuit.

[6] tn The pronoun is added because this is what the verse means.

[7] tn The word מִשְׁפָּט (mishpat) usually means "judgment; decision." Here it means "lawsuit" (and so a metonymy of effect gave rise to this usage; see Num 27:5; 2 Sam 15:4).

[8] tn The pronoun is emphatic before the verb: "I know that it is I who am right." The verb means "to be right; to be righteous." Some have translated it "vindicated," looking at the outcome of the suit.

[9] tn The interrogative is joined with the emphatic pronoun, stressing "who is he [who] will contend," or more emphatically, "who in the world will contend." Job is confident that no one can bring charges against him. He is certain of success.

[10] sn Job is confident that he will be vindicated. But if someone were to show up and have proof of sin against him, he would be silent and die (literally "keep silent and expire").

[11] tn The line reads "do not do two things."

[12] tn "God" is supplied to the verse, for the address is now to him. Job wishes to enter into dispute with God, but he first appeals that God not take advantage of him with his awesome power.

[13] tn The imperative הַרְחֵק (harkhaq, "remove"; GKC 98 §29.q), from רָחַק (rakhaq, "far, be far") means "take away [far away]; to remove."

[14] sn This is a common, but bold, anthropomorphism. The fact that the word used is כַּף (kaf, properly "palm") rather than יָד (yad, "hand," with the sense of power) may stress Job's feeling of being trapped or confined (see also Ps 139:5, 7).

[15] tn See Job 9:34.

[16] tn The imperatives in the verse function like the future tense in view of their use for instruction or advice. The chiastic arrangement of the verb forms is interesting: imperative + imperfect, imperfect + imperative. The imperative is used for God, but the imperfect is used when Job is the subject. Job is calling for the court to convene – he will be either the defendant or the prosecutor.

[17] tn The pronoun "my" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied here in the translation.

[18] sn Job uses three words for sin here: "iniquities," which means going astray, erring; "sins," which means missing the mark or the way; and "transgressions," which are open rebellions. They all emphasize different kinds of sins and different degrees of willfulness. Job is demanding that any sins be brought up. Both Job and his friends agree that great afflictions would have to indicate great offenses – he wants to know what they are.

[19] sn The anthropomorphism of "hide the face" indicates a withdrawal of favor and an outpouring of wrath (see Ps 30:7 [8]; Isa 54:8; Ps 27:9). Sometimes God "hides his face" to make himself invisible or aloof (see 34:29). In either case, if God covers his face it is because he considers Job an enemy – at least this is what Job thinks.

[20] tn The verb תְּעָרְיֵן (ta'arots, "you torment") is from עָרִץ ('arats), which usually means "fear; dread," but can also mean "to make afraid; to terrify" (Isa 2:19,21). The imperfect is here taken as a desiderative imperfect: "why do you want to," but it could also be a simple future: "will you torment."

[21] tn The word נִדָּף (niddaf) is "driven" from the root נָדַף (nadaf, "drive"). The words "by the wind" or the interpretation "windblown" has to be added for the clarification. Job is comparing himself to this leaf (so an implied comparison, called hypocatastasis) – so light and insubstantial that it is amazing that God should come after him. Guillaume suggests that the word is not from this root, but from a second root נָדַף (nadaf), cognate to Arabic nadifa, "to dry up" (A. Guillaume, "A Note on Isaiah 19:7," JTS 14 [1963]: 382-83). But as D. J. A. Clines notes (Job [WBC], 283), a dried leaf is a driven leaf – a point Guillaume allows as he says there is ambiguity in the term.

[22] tn The word קַשׁ (qash) means "chaff; stubble," or a wisp of straw. It is found in Job 41:20-21 for that which is so worthless and insignificant that it is hardly worth mentioning. If dried up or withered, it too will be blown away in the wind.

[23] tn The meaning is that of writing down a formal charge against someone (cf. Job 31:15).

[24] sn Job acknowledges sins in his youth, but they are trifling compared to the suffering he now endures. Job thinks it unjust of God to persecute him now for those – if that is what is happening.

[25] tn The word occurs here and in Job 33:11. It could be taken as "stocks," in which the feet were held fast; or it could be "shackles," which allowed the prisoner to move about. The parallelism favors the latter, if the two lines are meant to be referring to the same thing.

[26] tn The word means "ways; roads; paths," but it is used here in the sense of the "way" in which one goes about his activities.

you put marks[1] on the soles of my feet.
13:28 So I[2] waste away like something rotten,[3] like a garment eaten by moths.

The Brevity of Life

14:1 "Man, born of woman,[4] lives but a few days,[5] and they are full of trouble.[6] 14:2 He grows up[7] like a flower and then withers away;[8]
he flees like a shadow, and does not remain.[9] 14:3 Do you fix your eye[10] on such a one?[11]
And do you bring me[12] before you for judgment?
14:4 Who can make[13] a clean thing come from an unclean?[14]
No one!
14:5 Since man's days[15] are determined,[16]
the number of his months is under your control;[17] you have set his limit[18] and he cannot pass it.
14:6 Look away from him and let him desist,[19] until he fulfills[20] his time like a hired man.

The Inevitability of Death

14:7 "But there is hope for[21] a tree:[22]
If it is cut down, it will sprout again, and its new shoots will not fail.
14:8 Although its roots may grow old[23] in the ground

1 tn The verb תִּתְחַקֶּה (titkhaqqeh) is a Hitpael from the root חָקָה (khaqah, parallel to חָקַק, khaqaq). The word means "to engrave" or "to carve out." This Hitpael would mean "to imprint something on oneself" (E. Dhorme [Job, 192] says on one's mind, and so derives the meaning "examine."). The object of this is the expression "on the roots of my feet," which would refer to where the feet hit the ground. Since the passage has more to do with God's restricting Job's movement, the translation "you set a boundary to the soles of my feet" would be better than Dhorme's view. The image of inscribing or putting marks on the feet is not found elsewhere. It may be, as Pope suggests, a reference to marking the slaves to make tracking them easier. The LXX has "you have penetrated to my heels."

2 tn Heb "and he." Some of the commentators move the verse and put it after Job 14:2, 3 or 6.

3 tn The word רָקָב (raqav) is used elsewhere in the Bible of dry rot in a house, or rotting bones in a grave. It is used in parallelism with "moth" both here and in Hos 5:12. The LXX has "like a wineskin." This would be from רֹקֶב (roqev, "wineskin"). This word does not occur in the Hebrew Bible, but is attested in Sir 43:20 and in Aramaic. The change is not necessary.

4 tn The first of the threefold apposition for אָדָם ('adam, "man") is "born of a woman." The genitive ("woman") after a passive participle denotes the agent of the action (see GKC 359 §116.l).

5 tn The second description is simply "[is] short of days." The meaning here is that his life is short ("days" being put as the understatement for "years").

6 tn The third expression is "consumed/full/sated – with/of – trouble/restlessness." The latter word, רֹגֶז (rogez), occurred in Job 3:17; see also the idea in 10:15.

7 tn Heb יָצָא (yatsa', "comes forth"). The perfect verb expresses characteristic action and so is translated by the present tense (see GKC 329 §111.s).

8 tn The verb וַיִּמָּל (vayyimmal) is from the root מָלַל (malal, "to languish; to wither") and not from a different root מָלַל (malal, "to cut off").

9 tn The verb is "and he does not stand." Here the verb means "to stay fixed; to abide." The shadow does not stay fixed, but continues to advance toward darkness.

10 tn Heb "open the eye on," an idiom meaning to prepare to judge someone.

11 tn The verse opens with אַף־עַל־זֶה ('af-'al-zeh), meaning "even on such a one!" It is an exclamation of surprise.

12 tn The text clearly has "me" as the accusative, but many wish to emend it to say "him" (אֹתוֹ, 'oto). But D. J. A. Clines rightly rejects this in view of the way Job is written, often moving back and forth from his own tragedy and others' tragedies (Job [WBC], 283).

13 tn The expression is מִי־יִתֵּן (mi-yitten, "who will give"; see GKC 477 §151.b). Some commentators (H. H. Rowley and A. B. Davidson) wish to take this as the optative formula: "O that a clean might come out of an unclean!" But that does not fit the verse very well, and still requires the addition of a verb. The exclamation here simply implies something impossible – man is unable to attain purity.

14 sn The point being made is that the entire human race is contaminated by sin, and therefore cannot produce something pure. In this context, since man is born of woman, it is saying that the woman and the man who is brought forth from her are impure. See Ps 51:5; Isa 6:5; and Gen 6:5.

15 tn Heb "his days."

16 tn The passive participle is from חָרַץ (kharats), which means "determined." The word literally means "cut" (Lev 22:22, "mutilated"). E. Dhorme, (Job, 197) takes it to mean "engraved" as on stone; from a custom of inscribing decrees on tablets of stone he derives the meaning here of "decreed." This, he argues, is parallel to the way חָקַק (khaqaq, "engrave") is used. The word חֹק (khoq) is an "ordinance" or "statute"; the idea is connected to the verb "to engrave." The LXX has "if his life should be but one day on the earth, and his months are numbered by him, you have appointed him for a time and he shall by no means exceed it."

17 tn Heb "[is] with you." This clearly means under God's control.

18 tn The word חֹק (khoq) has the meanings of "decree, decision, and limit" (cf. Job 28:26; 38:10).

sn Job is saying that God foreordains the number of the days of man. He foreknows the number of the months. He fixes the limit of human life which cannot be passed.

19 tn The verb חֲדַל (khadal) means "to desist; to cease." The verb would mean here "and let him desist," which some take to mean "and let him rest." But since this is rather difficult in the line, commentators have suggested other meanings. Several emend the text slightly to make it an imperative rather than an imperfect; this is then translated "and desist." The expression "from him" must be added. Another suggestion that is far-fetched is that of P. J. Calderone ("CHDL-II in poetic texts," CBQ 23 [1961]: 451-60) and D. W. Thomas (VTSup 4 [1957]: 8-16), having a new meaning of "be fat."

20 tn There are two roots רָצָה (ratsah). The first is the common word, meaning "to delight in; to have pleasure in." The second, most likely used here, means "to pay; to acquit a debt" (cf. Lev 26:34, 41, 43). Here with the mention of the simile with the hired man, the completing of the job is in view.

21 tn The genitive after the construct is one of advantage – it is hope for the tree.

22 sn The figure now changes to a tree for the discussion of the finality of death. At least the tree will sprout again when it is cut down. Why, Job wonders, should what has been granted to the tree not also be granted to humans?

23 tn The Hiphil of זָקַן (zaqan, "to be old") is here an internal causative, "to grow old."

and its stump begins to die[1] in the soil,[2] 14:9 at the scent[3] of water it will flourish[4] and put forth[5] shoots like a new plant.
14:10 But man[6] dies and is powerless;[7]
he expires – and where is he?[8]
14:11 As[9] water disappears from the sea,[10] or a river drains away and dries up, 14:12 so man lies down and does not rise; until the heavens are no more,[11] they[12] will not awake nor arise from their sleep.

The Possibility of Another Life

14:13 "O that[13] you would hide me in Sheol,[14]
and conceal me till your anger has passed![15]
O that you would set me a time[16] and then remember me![17]
14:14 If a man dies, will he live again?[18]
All the days of my hard service[19] I will wait[20]
until my release comes.[21]

---

1 tn The Hiphil is here classified as an inchoative Hiphil (see GKC 145 §53.e), for the tree only begins to die. In other words, it appears to be dead, but actually is not completely dead.

2 tn The LXX translates "dust" [soil] with "rock," probably in light of the earlier illustration of the tree growing in the rocks.

sn Job is thinking here of a tree that dies or decays because of a drought rather than being uprooted, because the next verse will tell how it can revive with water.

3 tn The personification adds to the comparison with people – the tree is credited with the sense of smell to detect the water.

4 tn The sense of "flourish" for this verb is found in Ps 92:12,13[13,14], and Prov 14:11. It makes an appropriate parallel with "bring forth boughs" in the second half.

5 tn Heb "and will make."

6 tn There are two words for "man" in this verse. The first (גֶּבֶר, gever) can indicate a "strong" or "mature man" or "mighty man," the hero; and the second (אָדָם, 'adam) simply designates the person as mortal.

7 tn The word חָלַשׁ (khalash) in Aramaic and Syriac means "to be weak" (interestingly, the Syriac OT translated חָלַשׁ [khalash] with "fade away" here). The derived noun "the weak" would be in direct contrast to "the mighty man." In the transitive sense the verb means "to weaken; to defeat" (Exod 17:13); here it may have the sense of "be lifeless, unconscious, inanimate" (cf. E. Dhorme, Job, 199). Many commentators emend the text to יַחֲלֹף (yakhalof, "passes on; passes away"). A. Guillaume tries to argue that the form is a variant of the other, the letters שׁ (shin) and פ (pe) being interchangeable ("The Use of halas in Exod 17:13, Isa 14:12, and Job 14:10," JTS 14 [1963]: 91-92). G. R. Driver connected it to Arabic halasa, "carry off suddenly" ("The Resurrection of Marine and Terrestrial Creatures," JSS 7 [1962]: 12-22). But the basic idea of "be weak, powerless" is satisfactory in the text. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 105) says, "Where words are so carefully chosen, it is gratuitous to substitute less expressive words as some editors do."

8 tn This break to a question adds a startling touch to the whole verse. The obvious meaning is that he is gone. The LXX weakens it: "and is no more."

9 tn The comparative clause may be signaled simply by the context, especially when facts of a moral nature are compared with the physical world (see GKC 499 §161.a).

10 tn The Hebrew word יָם (yam) can mean "sea" or "lake."

11 tc The Hebrew construction is "until not," which is unusual if not impossible; it is found in only one other type of context. In its six other occurrences (Num 21:35; Deut 3:3; Josh 8:22; 10:33; 11:8; 2 Kgs 10:11) the context refers to the absence of survivors. Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Syriac, and Vulgate all have "till the heavens wear out." Most would emend the text just slightly from עַד־בִּלְתִּי ('ad-bilti, "are no more") to עַד בְּלוֹת ('ad bᵉlot, "until the wearing out of," see Ps 102:26 [27]; Isa 51:6). Gray rejects emendation here, finding the unusual form of the MT in its favor. Orlinsky (p. 57) finds a cognate Arabic word meaning "will not awake" and translates it "so long as the heavens are not rent asunder" (H. M. Orlinsky, "The Hebrew and Greek Texts of Job 14:12," JQR 28 [1937/38]: 57-68). He then deletes the last line of the verse as a later gloss.

12 tn The verb is plural because the subject, אִישׁ ('ish), is viewed as a collective: "mankind." The verb means "to wake up; to awake"; another root, קוּץ (quts, "to split open") cognate to Arabic qada and Akkadian kasu, was put forward by H. M. Orlinsky ("The Hebrew and Greek Texts of Job 14:12," JQR 28 [1937-38]: 57-68) and G. R. Driver ("Problems in the Hebrew Text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 72-93).

13 tn The optative mood is introduced here again with מִי יִתֵּן (mi yitten), literally, "who will give?"

sn After arguing that man will die without hope, Job expresses his desire that there be a resurrection, and what that would mean. The ancients all knew that death did not bring existence to an end; rather, they passed into another place, but they continued to exist. Job thinks that death would at least give him some respite from the wrath of God, but this wrath would eventually be appeased, and then God would remember the one he had hidden in Sheol just as he remembered Noah. Once that happened, it would be possible that Job might live again.

14 sn Sheol in the Bible refers to the place where the dead go. But it can have different categories of meaning: death in general, the grave, or the realm of the departed spirits [hell]. A. Heidel shows that in the Bible when hell is in view the righteous are not there – it is the realm of the departed spirits of the wicked. When the righteous go to Sheol, the meaning is usually the grave or death. See chapter 3 in A. Heidel, The Gilgamesh Epic and the Old Testament Parallels.

15 tn The construction used here is the preposition followed by the infinitive construct followed by the subjective genitive, forming an adverbial clause of time.

16 tn This is the same word used in v. 5 for "limit."

17 tn The verb זָכַר (zakhar) means more than simply "to remember." In many cases, including this one, it means "to act on what is remembered," i.e., deliver or rescue (see Gen 8:1, "and God remembered Noah"). In this sense, a prayer "remember me" is a prayer for God to act upon his covenant promises.

18 tc The LXX removes the interrogative and makes the statement affirmative, i.e., that man will live again. This reading is taken by D. H. Gard ("The Concept of the Future Life according to the Greek Translator of the Book of Job," JBL 73 [1954]: 137-38). D. J. A. Clines follows this, putting both of the expressions in the wish clause: "if a man dies and could live again…" (Job [WBC], 332). If that is the way it is translated, then the verbs in the second half of the verse and in the next verse would all be part of the apodosis, and should be translated "would." The interpretation would not greatly differ; it would be saying that if there was life after death, Job would long for his release – his death. If the traditional view is taken and the question was raised whether there was life after death (the implication of the question being that there is), then Job would still be longing for his death. The point the line is making is that if there is life after death, that would be all the more reason for Job to eagerly expect, to hope for, his death.

19 tn See Job 7:1.

20 tn The verb אַיָּחֵל ('ayakhel) may be rendered "I will/would wait" or "I will/would hope." The word describes eager expectation and longing hope.

21 tn The construction is the same as that found in the last verse: a temporal preposition עַד ('ad) followed by the infinitive construct followed by the subjective genitive "release/relief." Due, in part, to the same verb (חָלַף, khalaf) having the meaning "sprout again" in v. 7, some take "renewal" as the mean-

14:15 You will call[1] and I[2] – I will answer you; you will long for[3] the creature you have made.[4]

The Present Condition[5]

14:16 "Surely now you count my steps;[6] then you would not mark[7] my sin.[8] 14:17 My offenses would be sealed up[9] in a bag;[10] you would cover over[11] my sin.
14:18 But as[12] a mountain falls away and crumbles,[13]
and as a rock will be removed from its place, 14:19 as water wears away stones, and torrents[14] wash away the soil,[15]
so you destroy man's hope.[16] 14:20 You overpower him once for all,[17]
and he departs;
you change[18] his appearance and send him away.
14:21 If[19] his sons are honored,[20]
he does not know it;[21]
if they are brought low,
he does not see[22] it.
14:22 Only his flesh has pain for himself,[23] and he mourns for himself."[24]

Eliphaz's Second Speech[25]

15:1 Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered:

ing here (J. E. Hartley, Alden, NIV, ESV).

1 sn The idea would be that God would sometime in the future call Job into his fellowship again when he longed for the work of his hands (cf. Job 10:3).

2 tn The independent personal pronoun is emphatic, as if to say, "and I on my part will answer."

3 tn The word כָּסַף (kasaf) originally meant "to turn pale." It expresses the sentiment that causes pallor of face, and so is used for desire ardently, covet. The object of the desire is always introduced with the ל (lamed) preposition (see E. Dhorme, Job, 202).

4 tn Heb "long for the work of your hands."

5 sn The hope for life after death is supported now by a description of the severity with which God deals with people in this life.

6 tn If v. 16a continues the previous series, the translation here would be "then" (as in RSV). Others take it as a new beginning to express God's present watch over Job, and interpret the second half of the verse as a question, or emend it to say God does not pass over his sins.

7 sn Compare Ps 130:3-4, which says, "If you should mark iniquity O LORD, Lord, who could stand? But with you there is forgiveness, in order that you might be feared."

8 tn The second colon of the verse can be contrasted with the first, the first being the present reality and the second the hope looked for in the future. This seems to fit the context well without making any changes at all.

9 tn The passive participle חָתֻם (khatum), from חָתַם (khatam, "seal"), which is used frequently in the Bible, means "sealed up." The image of sealing sins in a bag is another of the many poetic ways of expressing the removal of sin from the individual (see 1 Sam 25:29). Since the term most frequently describes sealed documents, the idea here may be more that of sealing in a bag the record of Job's sins (see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 334).

10 tn The idea has been presented that the background of putting tally stones in a bag is intended (see A. L. Oppenheim, "On an Operational Device in Mesopotamian Bureaucracy," JNES 18 [1959]: 121-28).

11 tn This verb was used in Job 13:4 for "plasterers of lies." The idea is probably that God coats or paints over the sins so that they are forgotten (see Isa 1:18). A. B. Davidson (Job, 105) suggests that the sins are preserved until full punishment is exacted. But the verse still seems to be continuing the thought of how the sins would be forgotten in the next life.

12 tn The indication that this is a simile is to be obtained from the conjunction beginning 19c (see GKC 499 §161.a).

13 tn The word יָבוֹל (yibbol) usually refers to a flower fading and so seems strange here. The LXX and the Syriac translate "and will fall"; most commentators accept this and repoint the preceding word to get "and will surely fall." Duhm retains the MT and applies the image of the flower to the falling mountain. The verb is used of the earth in Isa 24:4, and so NIV, RSV, and NJPS all have the idea of "crumble away."

14 tn Heb "the overflowings of it"; the word סְפִיחֶיהָ (s^{e}fikheyha) in the text is changed by just about everyone. The idea of "its overflowings" or more properly "its aftergrowths" (Lev 25:5; 2 Kgs 19:29; etc.) does not fit here at all. Budde suggested reading סְחִפָּה (s^{e}khifah), which is cognate to Arabic sahifeh, "torrential rain, rainstorm" – that which sweeps away" the soil. The word סָחַף (sakhaf) in Hebrew might have a wider usage than the effects of rain.

15 tn Heb "[the] dust of [the] earth."

16 sn The meaning for Job is that death shatters all of man's hopes for the continuation of life.

17 tn D. W. Thomas took נֵצַח (netsakh) here to have a superlative meaning: "You prevail utterly against him" ("Use of netsach as a superlative in Hebrew," JSS 1 [1956]: 107). Death would be God's complete victory over him.

18 tn The subject of the participle is most likely God in this context. Some take it to be man, saying "his face changes." Others emend the text to read an imperfect verb, but this is not necessary.

19 tn The clause may be interpreted as a conditional clause, with the second clause beginning with the conjunction serving as the apodosis.

20 tn There is no expressed subject for the verb "they honor," and so it may be taken as a passive.

21 sn Death is separation from the living, from the land of the living. And ignorance of what goes on in this life, good or bad, is part of death. See also Eccl 9:5-6, which makes a similar point.

22 tn The verb is בִּין (bin, "to perceive; to discern"). The parallelism between "know" and "perceive" stress the point that in death a man does not realize what is happening here in the present life.

23 tn The prepositional phrases using עָלָיו ('alayv, "for him[self]") express the object of the suffering. It is for himself that the dead man "grieves." So this has to be joined with אַךְ ('akh), yielding "only for himself." Then, "flesh" and "soul/person" form the parallelism for the subjects of the verbs.

24 sn In this verse Job is expressing the common view of life beyond death, namely, that in Sheol there is no contact with the living, only separation, but in Sheol there is a conscious awareness of the dreary existence.

25 sn In the first round of speeches, Eliphaz had emphasized the moral perfection of God, Bildad his unwavering justice, and Zophar his omniscience. Since this did not bring the expected response from Job, the friends see him as a menace to true religion, and so they intensify their approach. Eliphaz, as dignified as ever, rebukes Job for his arrogance and warns about the judgment the wicked bring on themselves. The speech of Eliphaz falls into three parts: the rebuke of Job for his irreverence (2-6); the analysis of Job's presumption about wisdom (7-16), and his warning about the fate of the wicked (17-35).

15:2 "Does a wise man answer with blustery knowledge,[1] or fill his belly[2] with the east wind?[3] 15:3 Does he argue[4] with useless[5] talk, with words that have no value in them?
15:4 But you even break off[6] piety,[7] and hinder[8] meditation[9] before God.
15:5 Your sin inspires[10] your mouth;
you choose the language[11] of the crafty.[12] 15:6 Your own mouth condemns[13] you, not I;
your own lips testify against[14] you.

15:7 "Were you the first man ever born?
Were you brought forth before the hills?
15:8 Do you listen in on God's secret council?[15]
Do you limit[16] wisdom to yourself?
15:9 What do you know that we don't know?
What do you understand that we don't understand?[17]
15:10 The gray-haired[18] and the aged are on our side,[19] men far older than your father.[20] 15:11 Are God's consolations[21] too trivial for you;[22] or a word spoken[23] in gentleness to you?
15:12 Why[24] has your heart carried you away,[25] and why do your eyes flash,[26]
15:13 when you turn your rage[27] against God and allow such words to escape[28] from your mouth?
15:14 What is man that he should be pure, or one born of woman, that he should be righteous?
15:15 If God places no trust in his holy ones,[29]

---

1 tn The Hebrew is דַּעַת־רוּחַ (da'at-ruakh). This means knowledge without any content, vain knowledge.

2 tn The image is rather graphic. It is saying that he puffs himself up with the wind and then brings out of his mouth blasts of this wind.

3 tn The word for "east wind," קָדִים (qadim), is parallel to "spirit/wind" also in Hos 12:2. The east wind is maleficent, but here in the parallelism it is so much hot air.

4 tn The infinitive absolute in this place is functioning either as an explanatory adverb or as a finite verb.

sn Eliphaz draws on Job's claim with this word (cf. Job 13:3), but will declare it hollow.

5 tn The verb סָכַן (sakhan) means "to be useful, profitable." It is found 5 times in the book with this meaning. The Hiphil of יָעַל (ya'al) has the same connotation. E. Lipiński offers a new meaning on a second root, "incur danger" or "run risks" with words, but this does not fit the parallelism (FO 21 [1980]: 65-82).

6 tn The word פָּרַר (parar) in the Hiphil means "to annul; to frustrate; to destroy; to break," and this fits the line quite well. The NEB reflects G. R. Driver's suggestion of an Arabic cognate meaning "to expel; to banish" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 77).

7 tn Heb "fear," "reverence."

8 tn The word גָּרַע (gara') means "to diminish," regard as insignificant, occasionally with the sense of "pull down" (Deut 4:2; 13:1). It is here that Eliphaz is portraying Job as a menace to the religion of society because they dissuade people from seeking God.

9 tn The word שִׂיחָה (sikhah) is "complaint; cry; meditation." Job would be influencing people to challenge God and not to meditate before or pray to him.

10 tn The verb אִלֵּף ('allef) has the meaning of "to teach; to instruct," but it is unlikely that the idea of revealing is intended. If the verb is understood metonymically, then "to inspire; to prompt" will be sufficient. Dahood and others find another root, and render the verb "to increase," reversing subject and object: "your mouth increases your iniquity."

11 tn Heb "tongue."

12 tn The word means "shrewd; crafty; cunning" (see Gen 3:1). Job uses clever speech that is misleading and destructive.

13 tn The Hiphil of this root means "declare wicked, guilty" (a declarative Hiphil), and so "condemns."

14 tn The verb עָנָה ('anah) with the לְ (lamed) preposition following it means "to testify against." For Eliphaz, it is enough to listen to Job to condemn him.

15 tn The meaning of סוֹד (sod) is "confidence." In the context the implication is "secret counsel" of the LORD God (see Jer 23:18). It is a question of confidence on the part of God, that only wisdom can know (see Prov 8:30,31). Job seemed to them to claim to have access to the mind of God.

16 tn In v. 4 the word meant "limit"; here it has a slightly different sense, namely, "to reserve for oneself."

17 tn The last clause simply has "and it is not with us." It means that one possesses something through knowledge. Note the parallelism of "know" and "with me" in Ps 50:11.

18 tn The participle שָׂב (sav), from שִׂיב (siv, "to have white hair"; 1 Sam 12:2), only occurs elsewhere in the Bible in the Aramaic sections of Ezra. The word יָשִׁישׁ (yashish, "aged") occurred in 12:12.

19 tn Heb "with us."

20 tn The line reads: "[men] greater than your father [in] days." The expression "in days" underscores their age – they were older than Job's father, and therefore wiser.

21 sn The word תַּנְחֻמוֹת (tankhumot) occurs here and only in Job 21:34. The words of comfort and consolation that they have been offering to Job are here said to be "of God." But Job will call them miserable comforters (16:2).

22 tn The formula "is it too little for you" or "is it too slight a matter for you" is also found in Isa 7:13 (see GKC 430 §133. c).

23 tn The word "spoken" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation.

24 tn The interrogative מָה (mah) here has the sense of "why?" (see Job 7:21).

25 tn The verb simply means "to take." The RSV has "carry you away." E. Dhorme (Job, 212-13) goes further, saying that it implies being unhinged by passion, to be carried away by the passions beyond good sense (pp. 212-13). Pope and Tur-Sinai suggest that the suffix on the verb is dativa, and translate it, "What has taken from you your mind?" But the parallelism shows that "your heart" and "your eyes" are subjects.

26 tn Here is another word that occurs only here, and in the absence of a completely convincing suggestion, probably should be left as it is. The verb is רָזַם (razam, "wink, flash"). Targum Job and the Syriac equate it with a verb found in Aramaic and postbiblical Hebrew with the same letters but metathesized – רָמַז (ramaz). It would mean "to make a sign" or "to wink." Budde, following the LXX probably, has "Why are your eyes lofty?" Others follow an Arabic root meaning "become weak."

27 tn The Hebrew is רוּחֶךָ (rukhekha, "your spirit" or "your breath"). But the fact that this is turned "against God," means that it must be given a derived meaning, or a meaning that is metonymical. It is used in the Bible in the sense of anger – what the spirit vents (see Judg 8:3; Prov 16:32; and Job 4:9 with "blast").

28 tn The verb is a Hiphil perfect of yasa', "to go out, proceed, issue forth."

29 tn Eliphaz here reiterates the point made in Job 4:18.

if even the heavens[1] are not pure in his eyes, 15:16 how much less man, who is abominable and corrupt,[2] who drinks in evil like water![3]

15:17 "I will explain to you;
listen to me,
and what[4] I have seen, I will declare,[5] 15:18 what wise men declare, hiding nothing,
from the tradition of[6] their ancestors,[7] 15:19 to whom alone the land was given when no foreigner passed among them.[8] 15:20 All his days[9] the wicked man suffers torment,[10] throughout the number of the years that[11] are stored up for the tyrant.[12] 15:21 Terrifying sounds fill[13] his ears;
in a time of peace marauders[14] attack him.
15:22 He does not expect[15] to escape from darkness;[16]
he is marked for the sword;[17] 15:23 he wanders about – food for vultures;[18] he knows that the day of darkness is at hand.[19]

1 sn The question here is whether the reference is to material "heavens" (as in Exod 24:10 and Job 25:5), or to heavenly beings. The latter seems preferable in this context.

2 tn The two descriptions here used are "abominable," meaning "disgusting" (a Niphal participle with the value of a Latin participle [see GKC 356-57 §116.e]), and "corrupt" (a Niphal participle which occurs only in Pss 14:3 and 53:4), always in a moral sense. On the significance of the first description, see P. Humbert, "Le substantif to'ēbā et le verbe t'b dans l'Ancien Testament," ZAW 72 [1960]: 217ff.). On the second word, G. R. Driver suggests from Arabic, "debauched with luxury, corrupt" ("Some Hebrew Words," JTS 29 [1927/28]: 390-96).

3 sn Man commits evil with the same ease and facility as he drinks in water – freely and in large quantities.

4 tn The demonstrative pronoun is used here as a nominative, to introduce an independent relative clause (see GKC 447 §138.h).

5 tn Here the vav (ו) apodosis follows with the cohortative (see GKC 458 §143.d).

6 tn The word "tradition" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation.

7 tn Heb "their fathers." Some commentators change one letter and follow the reading of the LXX: "and their fathers have not hidden." Pope tries to get the same reading by classifying the מ (mem) as an enclitic mem. The MT on first glance would read "and did not hide from their fathers." Some take the clause "and they did not hide" as adverbial and belonging to the first part of the verse: "what wise men declare, hiding nothing, according to the tradition of their fathers."

8 sn Eliphaz probably thinks that Edom was the proverbial home of wisdom, and so the reference here would be to his own people. If, as many interpret, the biblical writer is using these accounts to put Yahwistic ideas into the discussion, then the reference would be to Canaan at the time of the fathers. At any rate, the tradition of wisdom to Eliphaz has not been polluted by foreigners, but has retained its pure and moral nature from antiquity.

9 tn Heb "all the days of the wicked, he suffers." The word "all" is an adverbial accusative of time, stating along with its genitives ("of the days of a wicked man") how long the individual suffers. When the subject is composed of a noun in construct followed by a genitive, the predicate sometimes agrees with the genitive (see GKC 467 §146.a).

10 tn The Hebrew term מִתְחוֹלֵל (mitkholel) is a Hitpolel participle from חִיל (khil, "to tremble"). It carries the idea of "torment oneself," or "be tormented." Some have changed the letter ח (khet) for a letter ה (he), and obtained the meaning "shows himself mad." Theodotion has "is mad." Syriac ("behave arrogantly," apparently confusing Hebrew חוּל with חלל; Heidi M. Szpek, Translation Technique in the Peshitta to Job [SBLDS], 277), Symmachus, and Vulgate have "boasts himself." But the reading of the MT is preferable.

11 tn It is necessary, with Rashi, to understand the relative pronoun before the verb "they are stored up/reserved."

12 tn This has been translated with the idea of "oppressor" in Job 6:23; 27:13.

13 tn The word "fill" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation.

14 tn The word שׁוֹדֵד (shoded) means "a robber; a plunderer" (see Job 12:6). With the verb bo' the sentence means that the robber pounces on or comes against him (see GKC 373 §118.f). H. H. Rowley observes that the text does not say that he is under attack, but that the sound of fears is in his ears, i.e., that he is terrified by thoughts of this.

15 tn This is the meaning of the Hiphil imperfect negated: "he does not believe" or "he has no confidence." It is followed by the infinitive construct functioning as the direct object – he does not expect to return (to escape) from darkness.

sn The meaning of this line is somewhat in question. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 111) thinks it could mean that he is afraid he will not wake up from the night, or he dreads misfortune, thinking it will be final for him.

16 sn In the context of these arguments, "darkness" probably refers to calamity, and so the wicked can expect a calamity that is final.

17 tn Heb "he is watched [or waited for] by the sword." G. R. Driver reads it, "he is marked down for the sword" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 78). Ewald suggested "laid up for the sword." Ball has "looks for the sword." The MT has a passive participle from צָפָה (tsafah, "to observe, watch") which can be retained in the text; the meaning of the form can then be understood as the result of the inspection (E. Dhorme, Job, 217).

18 tn The MT has "he wanders about for food – where is it?" The LXX has "he has been appointed for food for vultures," reading אַיֵּה ('ayyah, "vulture") for אַיֵּה ('ayyeh, "where is it?"). This would carry on the thought of the passage – he sees himself destined for the sword and food for vultures. Many commentators follow this reading while making a number of smaller changes in נֹדַד (noded, "wandering") such as נִתָּן (nittan, "is given"), נוֹעַד (no'ad, "is appointed"), נוֹדָע (noda', "is known"), or something similar. The latter involves no major change in consonants. While the MT "wandering" may not be as elegant as some of the other suggestions, it is not impossible. But there is no reading of this verse that does not involve some change. The LXX has "and he has been appointed for food for vultures."

19 tn This line is fraught with difficulties (perceived or real), which prompt numerous suggestions. The reading of the MT is "he knows that a day of darkness is fixed in his hand," i.e., is certain. Many commentators move "day of darkness" to the next verse, following the LXX. Then, suggestions have been offered for נָכוֹן (nakhon, "ready"), such as נֶכֶר (nekher, "disaster"); and for בְּיָדוֹ (beyado, "in his hand") a number of ideas – לְאֵיד (le'ed, "calamity") or פִּידוֹ (pido, "his disaster"). Wright takes this last view and renders it "he knows that misfortune is imminent," leaving the "day of darkness" to the next verse.

15:24 Distress and anguish[1] terrify him;
they prevail against him like a king ready to launch an attack,[2] 15:25 for he stretches out his hand against God,[3] and vaunts himself[4] against the Almighty, 15:26 defiantly charging against him[5] with a thick, strong shield![6] 15:27 Because he covered his face with fat,[7] and made[8] his hips bulge with fat,[9] 15:28 he lived in ruined towns[10] and in houses where[11] no one lives, where they are ready to crumble into heaps.[12] 15:29 He will not grow rich, and his wealth will not endure,
nor will his possessions[13] spread over the land.
15:30 He will not escape the darkness;[14]
a flame will wither his shoots and he will depart
by the breath of God's mouth.[15] 15:31 Let him not trust in what is worthless,[16]
deceiving himself;
for worthlessness will be his reward.[17]
15:32 Before his time[18] he will be paid in full,[19]

[1] tn If "day and darkness" are added to this line, then this verse is made into a tri-colon – the main reason for transferring it away from the last verse. But the newly proposed reading follows the LXX structure precisely, as if that were the approved construction. The Hebrew of MT has "distress and anguish terrify him."

[2] tn This last colon is deleted by some, moved to v. 26 by others, and the NEB puts it in brackets. The last word (translated here as "launch an attack") occurs only here. HALOT 472 s.v. כִּידוֹר links it to an Arabic root kadara, "to rush down," as with a bird of prey. J. Reider defines it as "perturbation" from the same root ("Etymological Studies in Biblical Hebrew," VT 2 [1952]: 127).

[3] sn The symbol of the outstretched hand is the picture of attempting to strike someone, or shaking a fist at someone; it is a symbol of a challenge or threat (see Isa 5:25; 9:21; 10:4).

[4] tn The Hitpael of גָּבַר (gavar) means "to act with might" or "to behave like a hero." The idea is that the wicked boldly vaunts himself before the LORD.

[5] tn Heb "he runs against [or upon] him with the neck." The RSV takes this to mean "with a stiff neck." Several commentators, influenced by the LXX's "insolently," have attempted to harmonize with some idiom for neck ("outstretched neck," for example). Others have made more extensive changes. Pope and Anderson follow Tur-Sinai in accepting "with full battle armor." But the main idea seems to be that of a headlong assault on God.

[6] tn Heb "with the thickness of the bosses of his shield." The bosses are the convex sides of the bucklers, turned against the foe. This is a defiant attack on God.

[7] sn This verse tells us that he is not in any condition to fight, because he is bloated and fat from luxurious living.

[8] tn D. W. Thomas defends a meaning "cover" for the verb עָשָׂה ('asah). See "Translating Hebrew `asah," BT 17 [1966]: 190-93.

[9] tn The term פִּימָה (pimah), a hapax legomenon, is explained by the Arabic fa'ima, "to be fat." Pope renders this "blubber." Cf. KJV "and maketh collops of fat on his flanks."

[10] sn K&D 11:266 rightly explains that these are not cities that he, the wicked, has destroyed, but that were destroyed by a judgment on wickedness. Accordingly, Eliphaz is saying that the wicked man is willing to risk such a curse in his confidence in his prosperity (see further H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 113).

[11] tn The verbal idea serves here to modify "houses" as a relative clause; so a relative pronoun is added.

[12] tn The Hebrew has simply "they are made ready for heaps." The LXX translates it, "what they have prepared, let others carry away." This would involve a complete change of the last word.

[13] tn This word מִנְלָם (minlam) also is a hapax legomenon, although almost always interpreted to mean "possession" (with Arabic manal) and repointed as מְנֹלָם (m^{e}nolam). M. Dahood further changes "earth" to the netherworld, and interprets it to mean "his possessions will not go down to the netherworld" ("Value of Ugaritic for Textual Criticism," Bib 40 [1959]: 164-66). Others suggest it means "ear of grain," either from the common word for "ears of grain" or a hapax legomenon in Deut 23:26 HT (23:25 ET).

[14] tn Some editions and commentators delete the first line of this verse, arguing that it is simply a paraphrase of v. 22a, and that it interrupts the comparison with a tree that falls (although that comparison only starts next).

[15] tn This last line in the verse is the difficult one. The MT has "he shall depart by the breath of his mouth." If this reading stands, then it must be understood that it is the breath of God's mouth that is intended. In place of "his mouth" the LXX has "flower" (reading פִּרְחוֹ [pirho, properly, "his fruit"] instead of פִּיו piv), and "fall" instead of "depart." Modern commentators and a number of English versions (e.g., RSV, NRSV, TEV) alter יָסוּר (yasur, "depart") to something like יְסֻעַר (y^{e}so'ar, from סָעַר [sa'ar, "to drive away"]), or the like, to get "will be swept away." The result is a reading: "and his blossom will be swept away by the wind." The LXX may have read the Hebrew exactly, but harmonized it with v. 33 (see H. Heater, A Septuagint Translation Technique in the Book of Job [CBQMS]: 61-62).

[16] tn The word, although difficult in its form, is "vanity," i.e., that which is worthless. E. Dhorme (Job, 224) thinks that the form שָׁוְא (shav') conceals the word שִׁיאוֹ (shi'o, "his stature"). But Dhorme reworks most of the verse. He changes נִתְעָה (nit'ah, "deceived") to נֵדַע (neda', "we know") to arrive at "we know that it is vanity." The last two words of the verse are then moved to the next. The LXX has "let him not think that he shall endure, for his end shall be vanity."

[17] tn This word is found in Job 20:18 with the sense of "trading." It can mean the exchange of goods or the profit from them. Some commentators change תְּמוּרָתוֹ (t^{e}murato, "his reward") because they wish to put it with the next verse as the LXX seems to have done (although the LXX does not represent this). Suggestions include תִּמֹּרָתוֹ (timorato, "his palm tree") and זְמֹרָתוֹ (z^{e}morato, "his vine shoot"). A number of writers simply delete all of v. 31. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 115) suggests the best reading (assuming one were going to make changes) would be, "Let him not trust in his stature, deceiving himself, for it is vanity." And then put "his palm tree" with the next verse, he thinks that achieves the proper balance.

[18] tn Heb "before his day."

[19] tn Those who put the last colon of v. 31 with v. 32 also have to change the verb תִּכְלֶא (timmale', "will be fulfilled"). E. Dhorme (Job, 225) says, "a mere glance at the use of yimmal...abundantly proves that the original text had timmal (G, Syr., Vulg), which became timmale' through the accidental transposition of the 'alep of bÿsi'o...in verse 31...." This, of course, is possible, if all the other changes up to now are granted. But the meaning of a word elsewhere in no way assures it should be the word here. The LXX has "his harvest shall perish before the time," which could translate any number of words that might have been in the underlying Hebrew text. A commercial metaphor is not out of place here, since parallelism does not demand that the same metaphor appear in both lines.

and his branches will not flourish.[1] 15:33 Like a vine he will let his sour grapes fall,[2]
and like an olive tree
he will shed his blossoms.[3] 15:34 For the company of the godless is barren,[4]
and fire[5] consumes the tents of those who accept bribes.[6]
15:35 They conceive[7] trouble and bring forth evil;
their belly[8] prepares deception."

Job's Reply to Eliphaz[9]

16:1 Then Job replied:
16:2 "I have heard many things like these before.
What miserable comforters[10] are you all!
16:3 Will[11] there be an end to your[12]
windy words?[13]
Or what provokes[14] you that you answer?[15]
16:4 I also could speak[16] like you, if[17] you were in my place;
I could pile up[18] words against you and I could shake my head at you.[19] 16:5 But[20] I would strengthen[21] you with my words;[22]
comfort from my lips would bring[23] you relief.

Abandonment by God and Man

16:6 "But[24] if I speak, my pain is not relieved,[25]
and if I refrain from speaking – how[26] much of it goes away?
16:7 Surely now he[27] has worn me out,
you have devastated my entire household.
16:8 You have seized me,[28]
and it[29] has become a witness;
my leanness[30] has risen up against me

1 tn Now, in the second half of the verse, the metaphor of a tree with branches begins.

2 tn The verb means "to treat violently" or "to wrong." It indicates that the vine did not nourish the grapes well enough for them to grow, and so they dry up and drop off.

3 sn The point is that like the tree the wicked man shows signs of life but produces nothing valuable. The olive tree will have blossoms in the years that it produces no olives, and so eventually drops the blossoms.

4 tn The LXX renders this line: "for death is the witness of an ungodly man. "Death" represents "barren/sterile," and "witness" represents "assembly."

5 sn This may refer to the fire that struck Job (cf. 1:16).

6 tn Heb "the tents of bribery." The word "bribery" can mean a "gift," but most often in the sense of a bribe in court. It indicates that the wealth and the possessions that the wicked man has gained may have been gained unjustly.

7 tn Infinitives absolute are used in this verse in the place of finite verbs. They lend a greater vividness to the description, stressing the basic meaning of the words.

8 tn At the start of the speech Eliphaz said Job's belly was filled with the wind; now it is there that he prepares deception. This inclusio frames the speech.

9 sn In the next two chapters we have Job's second reply to Eliphaz. Job now feels abandoned by God and by his friends, and so complains that this all intensifies his sufferings. But he still holds to his innocence as he continues his appeal to God as his witness. There are four sections to this speech: in vv. 2-5 he dismisses the consolation his friends offered; in vv. 6-17 he laments that he is abandoned by God and man; in 16:8–17:9 he makes his appeal to God in heaven as a witness; and finally, in 10-16 he anticipates death.

10 tn The expression uses the Piel participle in construct: מְנַחֲמֵי עָמָל (mᵉnahame 'amal, "comforters of trouble"), i.e., comforters who increase trouble instead of relieving it. D. W. Thomas translates this "breathers out of trouble" ("A Note on the Hebrew Root naham," ExpTim 44 [1932/33]: 192).

11 tn Disjunctive questions are introduced with the sign of the interrogative; the second part is introduced with אוֹ ('o, see GKC 475 §150.g).

12 tn In v. 3 the second person singular is employed rather than the plural as in vv. 2 and 4. The singular might be an indication that the words of v. 3 were directed at Eliphaz specifically.

13 tn Heb "words of wind."

14 tn The Hiphil of מָרַץ (marats) does not occur anywhere else. The word means "to compel; to force" (see 6:25).

15 tn The LXX seems to have gone a different way: "What, is there any reason in vain words, or what will hinder you from answering?"

16 tn For the use of the cohortative in the apodosis of conditional sentences, see GKC 322 §109.f.

17 tn The conjunction לוּ (lu) is used to introduce the optative, a condition that is incapable of fulfillment (see GKC 494-95 §159.l).

18 tn This verb אַחֲבִירָה ('akhbirah) is usually connected to חָבַר (khavar, "to bind"). There are several suggestions for this word. J. J. Finkelstein proposed a second root, a homonym, meaning "to make a sound," and so here "to harangue" ("Hebrew habar and Semitic HBR," JBL 75 [1956]: 328-31; see also O. Loretz, "HBR in Job 16:4," CBQ 23 [1961]: 293-94, who renders it "I could make noisy speeches"). Other suggestions have been for new meanings based on cognate studies, such as "to make beautiful" (i.e., make polished speeches).

19 sn The action is a sign of mockery (see Ps 22:7[8]; Isa 37:22; Matt 27:39).

20 tn "But" has been added in the translation to strengthen the contrast.

21 tn The Piel of אָמַץ ('amats) means "to strengthen, fortify."

22 tn Heb "my mouth."

23 tn The verb יַחְשֹׂךְ (yakhsokh) means "to restrain; to withhold." There is no object, so many make it first person subject, "I will not restrain." The LXX and the Syriac have a different person – "I would not restrain." G. R. Driver, arguing that the verb is intransitive here, made it "the solace of my lips would not [added] be withheld" (see JTS 34 [1933]: 380). D. J. A. Clines says that what is definitive is the use of the verb in the next line, where it clearly means "soothed, assuaged."

24 tn "But" is supplied in the translation to strengthen the contrast.

25 tn The Niphal יֵחָשֵׂךְ (yekhasekh) means "to be soothed; to be assuaged."

26 tn Some argue that מָה (mah) in the text is the Arabic ma, the simple negative. This would then mean "it does not depart far from me." The interrogative used rhetorically amounts to the same thing, however, so the suggestion is not necessary.

27 tn In poetic discourse there is often an abrupt change from person to another. See GKC 462 §144.p. Some take the subject of this verb to be God, others the pain ("surely now it has worn me out").

28 tn The verb is קָמַט (qamat) which is used only here and in 22:16; it means "to seize; to grasp." By God's seizing him, Job means his afflictions.

29 tn The subject is "my calamity."

30 tn The verb is used in Ps 109:24 to mean "to be lean"; and so "leanness" is accepted here for the noun by most. Otherwise the word is "lie, deceit." Accordingly, some take it here as "my slanderer" or "my liar" (gives evidence against me).

and testifies against me.
16:9 His[1] anger has torn me[2] and persecuted[3] me;
he has gnashed at me with his teeth;
my adversary locks[4] his eyes on me.
16:10 People[5] have opened their mouths against me, they have struck my cheek in scorn;[6]
they unite[7] together against me.
16:11 God abandons me to evil[8] men,[9]
and throws[10] me into the hands of wicked men.
16:12 I was in peace, and he has shattered me.[11]
He has seized me by the neck and crushed me.[12]
He has made me his target;
16:13 his archers[13] surround me.
Without pity[14] he pierces[15] my kidneys and pours out my gall[16] on the ground.
16:14 He breaks through against me, time and time again;[17] he rushes[18] against me like a warrior.
16:15 I have sewed sackcloth on my skin,[19]
and buried[20] my horn[21] in the dust; 16:16 my face is reddened[22] because of weeping,[23] and on my eyelids there is a deep darkness,[24] 16:17 although[25] there is no violence in my hands and my prayer is pure.

[1] tn The referent of these pronouns in v. 9 ("his anger…he has gnashed…his teeth…his eyes") is best taken as God.

[2] sn The figure used now is that of a wild beast. God's affliction of Job is compared to the attack of such an animal. Cf. Amos 1:11.

[3] tn The verb שָׂטַם (satam) is translated "hate" in the RSV, but this is not accepted by very many. Many emend it to שָׁטַם (shamat), reading "and he dropped me" (from his mouth). But that suggests escape. D. J. A. Clines notes that usage shows it reflects ongoing hatred represented by an action such as persecution or attack (Job [WBC], 370).

[4] tn The verb is used of sharpening a sword in Ps 7:12; here it means "to look intently" as an animal looks for prey. The verse describes God's relentless pursuit of Job.

[5] tn "People" is supplied; the Hebrew verb is third plural. The colon reads, "they have opened against me with [the preposition is instrumental] their mouth." The gestures here follow the animal imagery; they reflect destructive opposition and attack (see Ps 22:13 among others).

[6] tn This is an "insult" or a "reproach."

[7] tn The verb יִתְמַלְּאוּן (yitmalla'un) is taken from מָלֵא (male'), "to be full," and in this stem, "to pile up; to press together." The term has a military connotation, such as "to mobilize" (see D. W. Thomas, "ml'w in Jeremiah 4:5 : a military term," JJS 3 [1952]: 47-52). Job sees himself surrounded by enemies who persecute him and mock him.

[8] tn The word עָוִיל ('avil) means "child," and this cannot be right here. If it is read as עָוֶל ('avval) as in Job 27:7 it would be the unrighteous.

[9] sn Job does not refer here to his friends, but more likely to the wicked men who set about to destroy him and his possessions, or to the rabble in ch. 30.

[10] tn The word יְרִשֵׁנִי (yirteni) does not derive from the root רָשָׁה (ratah) as would fit the pointing in the MT, but from יָרַשׁ (yarat), cognate to Arabic warrata, "to throw; to hurl." E. Dhorme (Job, 236) thinks that since the normal form would have been יוֹרֵשֵׁנִי (yore'teni), it is probable that one of the yods (י) would have affected the word עָוִיל ('avil) – but that does not make much sense.

[11] tn The verb פָּרַר (parar) means "to shake." In the Hiphil it means "to break; to shatter" (5:12; 15:4). The Pilpel means "to break in pieces," and in the Poel in Jer 23:29 "to smash up." So Job was living at ease, and God shattered his life.

[12] tn Here is another Pilpel, now from פָּצַץ (patsats) with a similar meaning to the other verb. It means "to dash into pieces" and even scatter the pieces. The LXX translates this line, "he took me by the hair of the head and plucked it out."

[13] tn The meaning of "his archers" is supported for רַבָּיו (rabbayv) in view of Jer 50:29. The LXX, Syriac, Vulgate, Targum Job, followed by several translations and commentators prefer "arrows." They see this as a more appropriate figure without raising the question of who the archers might be (see 6:4). The point is an unnecessary distinction, for the figure is an illustration of the affliction that God has brought on him.

[14] tn Heb "and he does not pity," but the clause is functioning adverbially in the line.

[15] tn The verb פָּלַח (palakh) in the Piel means "to pierce" (see Prov 7:23). A fuller comparison should be made with Lam 3:12-13.

[16] tn This word מְרֹרָתִי (m^{e}rorati, "my gall") is found only here. It is close to the form in Job 13:26, "bitter things." In Job 20:14 it may mean "poison." The thought is also found in Lam 2:11.

[17] tn The word פָּרֵץ (parats) means "to make a breach" in a wall (Isa 5:5; Ps 80:13). It is used figuratively in the birth and naming of Peres in Gen 38:29. Here the image is now of a military attack that breaks through a wall. The text uses the cognate accusative, and then with the addition of עַל־פָּנַי ('al-p^{e}ne, "in addition") it repeats the cognate noun. A smooth translation that reflects the three words is difficult. E. Dhorme (Job, 237) has "he batters me down, breach upon breach."

[18] tn Heb "runs."

[19] sn The language is hyperbolic; Job is saying that the sackcloth he has put on in his lamentable state is now stuck to his skin as if he had stitched it into the skin. It is now a habitual garment that he never takes off.

[20] tn The Poel עִלַּלְתִּי ('olalti) from עָלַל ('alal, "to enter") has here the meaning of "to thrust in." The activity is the opposite of "raising high the horn," a picture of dignity and victory.

[21] tn There is no English term that captures exactly what "horn" is meant to do. Drawn from the animal world, the image was meant to convey strength and pride and victory. Some modern commentators have made other proposals for the line. Svi Rin suggested from Ugaritic that the verb be translated "lower" or "dip" ("Ugaritic – Old Testament Affinities," BZ 7 [1963]: 22-33).

[22] tn An intensive form, a Qetaltal form of the root חָמַר (khamar, "red") is used here. This word has as probable derivatives חֹמֶר (khomer, "[red] clay") and חֲמוֹר (khamor, "[red] ass") and the like. Because of the weeping, his whole complexion has been reddened (the LXX reads "my belly").

[23] sn A. B. Davidson (Job, 122) notes that spontaneous and repeated weeping is one of the symptoms of elephantiasis.

[24] sn See Job 3:5. Just as joy brings light and life to the eyes, sorrow and suffering bring darkness. The "eyelids" here would be synecdoche, reflecting the whole facial expression as sad and sullen.

[25] tn For the use of the preposition עַל ('al) to introduce concessive clauses, see GKC 499 §160.c.

An Appeal to God as Witness

16:18 "O earth, do not cover my blood,[1] nor let there be a secret[2] place for my cry.
16:19 Even now my witness[3] is in heaven;
my advocate[4] is on high.
16:20 My intercessor is my friend[5]
as my eyes pour out[6] tears to God;
16:21 and[7] he contends with God on behalf of man as a man[8] pleads[9] for his friend.
16:22 For the years that lie ahead are few,[10] and then I will go on the way of no return.[11] 17:1 My spirit is broken,[12] my days have faded out,[13]
the grave[14] awaits me.
17:2 Surely mockery[15] is with me;[16]
my eyes must dwell on their hostility.[17]
17:3 Make then my pledge[18] with you.
Who else will put up security for me?[19] 17:4 Because[20] you have closed their[21] minds to understanding, therefore you will not exalt them.[22]

1 sn Job knows that he will die, and that his death, signified here by blood on the ground, will cry out for vindication.

2 tn The word is simply "a place," but in the context it surely means a hidden place, a secret place that would never be discovered (see 18:21).

3 sn The witness in heaven must be God, to whom the cries and prayers come. Job's dilemma is serious, but common to the human experience: the hostility of God toward him is baffling, but he is conscious of his innocence and can call on God to be his witness.

4 tn The parallelism now uses the Aramaic word "my advocate" – the one who testifies on my behalf. The word again appears in Gen 31:47 for Laban's naming of the "heap of witness" in Aramaic – "Sahadutha."

5 tn The first two words of this verse are problematic: מְלִיצַי רֵעָי (m^{e}litsay re'ay, "my scorners are my friends"). The word מְלִיצַי (melits), from or related to the word for "scorner" (לִיץ, lits) in wisdom literature especially, can also mean "mediator" (Job 33:23), "interpreter" (Gen 42:23). This gives the idea that "scorn" has to do with the way words are used. It may be that the word here should have the singular suffix and be taken as "my spokesman." This may not be from the same root as "scorn" (see N. H. Richardson, "Some Notes on lis and Its Derivatives," VT 5 [1955]: 434-36). This is the view of the NIV, NJPS, JB, NAB, as well as a number of commentators. The idea of "my friends are scorners" is out of place in this section, unless taken as a parenthesis. Other suggestions are not convincing. The LXX has "May my prayer come to the Lord, and before him may my eye shed tears." Some have tried to change the Hebrew to fit this. The word "my friends" also calls for some attention. Instead of a plural noun suffix, most would see it as a singular, a slight vocalic change. But others think it is not the word "friend." D. J. A. Clines accepts the view that it is not "friends" but "thoughts" (רֵעַ, rea'). E. Dhorme takes it as "clamor," from רוּעַ (rua') and so interprets "my claimant word has reached God." J. B. Curtis tries "My intercessor is my shepherd," from רעי (ro'i). See "On Job's Witness in Heaven," JBL 102 [1983]: 549-62.

6 tn The Hebrew verb means "to drip; to stream; to flow"; the expression is cryptic, but understandable: "my eye flows [with tears as I cry out] to God." But many suggestions have been made for this line too. Driver suggested in connection with cognate words that it be given the meaning "sleepless" (JTS 34 [1933]: 375-85), but this would also require additional words for a smooth reading. See also E. A. Speiser, "The Semantic Range of dalapu," JCS 5 (1951): 64-66, for the Akkadian connection. But for the retention of "dripping eyes" based on the Talmudic use, see J. C. Greenfield, "Lexicographical Notes I," HUCA 29 (1958): 203-28.

7 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 240) alters this slightly to read "Would that" or "Ah! if only."

8 tn This is the simple translation of the expression "son of man" in Job. But some commentators wish to change the word בֶּן (ben, "son") to בֵּין (ben, "between"). It would then be "[as] between a man and [for] his friend." Even though a few MSS have this reading, it is to be rejected. But see J. Barr, "Some Notes on 'ben' in Classical Hebrew," JSS 23 (1978): 1-22.

9 tn The verb is supplied from the parallel clause.

10 tn The expression is "years of number," meaning that they can be counted, and so "the years are few." The verb simply means "comes" or "lie ahead."

11 tn The verbal expression "I will not return" serves here to modify the journey that he will take. It is "the road [of] I will not return."

12 tn The verb חָבַל (khaval, "to act badly") in the Piel means "to ruin." The Pual translation with "my spirit" as the subject means "broken" in the sense of finished (not in the sense of humbled as in Ps 51).

13 tn The verb זָעַךְ (za'aq, equivalent of Aramaic דָּעַךְ [da'aq]) means "to be extinguished." It only occurs here in the Hebrew.

14 tn The plural "graves" could be simply an intensification, a plural of extension (see GKC 397 §124.c), or a reference to the graveyard. Coverdale had: "I am harde at deathes dore." The Hebrew expression simply reads "graves for me." It probably means that graves await him.

15 tn The noun is the abstract noun, "mockery." It indicates that he is the object of derision. But many commentators either change the word to "mockers" (Tur-Sinai, NEB), or argue that the form in the text is a form of the participle (Gordis).

16 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 243) interprets the preposition to mean "aimed at me."

17 tn The meaning of הַמְּרוֹתָם (hamm^{e}rotam) is unclear, and the versions offer no help. If the MT is correct, it would probably be connected to מָרָה (marah, "to be rebellious") and the derived form something like "hostility; provocation." But some commentators suggest it should be related to מָרֹרוֹת (marorot, "bitter things"). Others have changed both the noun and the verb to obtain something like "My eye is weary of their contentiousness" (Holscher), or mine eyes are wearied by your stream of peevish complaints" (G. R. Driver, "Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 78). There is no alternative suggestion that is compelling.

18 tn The MT has two imperatives: "Lay down, pledge me, with me." Most commentators think that the second imperative should be a noun, and take it to say, "Lay my pledge with/beside you." A. B. Davidson (Job, 126) suggests that the first verb means "give a pledge," and so the two similar verbs would be emphatic: "Give a pledge, be my surety." Other than such a change (which would involve changing the vowels) one would have to interpret similarly by seeing the imperatives as a kind of hendiadys, with the main emphasis being on the second imperative, "make a pledge."

19 sn The idiom is "to strike the hand." Here the wording is a little different, "Who is he that will strike himself into my hand?"

20 tn This half-verse gives the reason for the next half-verse.

21 sn The pronoun their refers to Job's friends. They have not pledged security for him because God has hidden or sealed off their understanding.

22 tn The object "them" is supplied. This is the simplest reading of the line, taking the verb is an active Polel. Some suggest that the subject is "their hand" and the verb is to be translated "is not raised." This would carry through the thought of the last verse, but it is not necessary to the point.

17:5 If a man denounces his friends for personal gain,[1]
the eyes of his children will fail.
17:6 He has made me[2] a byword[3] to people,
I am the one in whose face they spit.[4]
17:7 My eyes have grown dim[5] with grief;
my whole frame[6] is but a shadow.
17:8 Upright men are appalled[7] at this;
the innocent man is troubled[8] with the godless.
17:9 But the righteous man holds to his way, and the one with clean hands grows stronger.[9]

Anticipation of Death

17:10 "But turn, all of you,[10] and come[11] now![12]
I will not find a wise man among you.
17:11 My days have passed, my plans[13] are shattered, even[14] the desires[15] of my heart.
17:12 These men[16] change[17] night into day; they say,[18] 'The light is near in the face of darkness.'[19] 17:13 If[20] I hope for the grave to be my home, if I spread out my bed in darkness,
17:14 If I cry[21] to corruption,[22] 'You are my father,' and to the worm, 'My Mother,' or 'My sister,' 17:15 where then[23] is my hope?
And my hope,[24] who sees it?

1 tn Heb "for a portion." This verse is rather obscure. The words are not that difficult, but the sense of them in this context is. Some take the idea to mean "he denounces his friends for a portion," and others have a totally different idea of "he invites his friends to share with him." The former fits the context better, indicating that Job's friends speak out against him for some personal gain. The second half of the verse then promises that his children will suffer loss for this attempt at gain. The line is surely proverbial. A number of other interpretations can be found in the commentaries.

2 tn The verb is the third person, and so God is likely the subject. The LXX has "you have made me." So most commentators clarify the verb in some such way. However, without an expressed subject it can also be taken as a passive.

3 tn The word "byword" is related to the word translated "proverb" in the Bible (מָשָׁל, mashal). Job's case is so well known that he is synonymous with afflictions and with abuse by people.

4 tn The word תֹּפֶת (tofet) is a hapax legomenon. The expression is "and a spitting in/to the face I have become," i.e., "I have become one in whose face people spit." Various suggestions have been made, including a link to Tophet, but they are weak. The verse as it exists in the MT is fine, and fits the context well.

5 tn See the usage of this verb in Gen 27:1 and Deut 34:7. Usually it is age that causes the failing eyesight, but here it is the grief.

6 tn The word יְצֻרִים (ʸetsurim), here with a suffix, occurs only here in the Bible. The word is related to יָצַר (yatsar, "to form, fashion"). And so Targum Job has "my forms," and the Vulgate "my members." The Syriac uses "thoughts" to reflect יֵצֶר (yetser). Some have followed this to interpret, "all my thoughts have dissolved into shadows." But the parallel with "eye" would suggest "form." The plural "my forms, all of them" would refer to the whole body.

7 tn This verb שָׁמַם (shamam, "appalled") is the one found in Isa 52:14, translated there "astonished."

8 tn The verb means "to rouse oneself to excitement." It naturally means "to be agitated; to be stirred up."

9 tn The last two words are the imperfect verb יֹסִיף (yosif) which means "he adds," and the abstract noun "energy, strength." This noun is not found elsewhere; its Piel verb occurs in Job 4:4 and 16:5. "he increases strength."

10 tn The form says "all of them." Several editors would change it to "all of you," but the lack of concord is not surprising; the vocative elsewhere uses the third person (see Mic 1:2; see also GKC 441 §135.r).

11 tn The first verb, the jussive, means "to return"; the second verb, the imperative, means "to come." The two could be taken as a hendiadys, the first verb becoming adverbial: "to come again."

12 tn Instead of the exact correspondence between coordinate verbs, other combinations occur – here we have a jussive and an imperative (see GKC 386 §120.e).

13 tn This term usually means "plans; devices" in a bad sense, although it can be used of God's plans (see e.g., Zech 8:15).

14 tn Although not in the Hebrew text, "even" is supplied in the translation, because this line is in apposition to the preceding.

15 tn This word has been linked to the root יָרַשׁ (yarash, "to inherit") yielding a meaning "the possessions of my heart." But it is actually to be connected to אָרַשׁ (ʾarash, "to desire") cognate to the Akkadian eresu, "desire." The LXX has "limbs," which may come from an Aramaic word for "ropes." An emendation based on the LXX would be risky.

16 tn The verse simply has the plural, "they change." But since this verse seems to be a description of his friends, a clarification of the referent in the translation is helpful.

17 tn The same verb שִׂים (sim, "set") is used this way in Isa 5:20: "...who change darkness into light."

18 tn The rest of the verse makes better sense if it is interpreted as what his friends say.

19 tn This expression is open to alternative translations: (1) It could mean that they say in the face of darkness, "Light is near." (2) It could also mean "The light is near the darkness" or "The light is nearer than the darkness."

20 tn The clause begins with אִם (ʾim) which here has more of the sense of "since." E. Dhorme (Job, 253) takes a rather rare use of the word to get "Can I hope again" (see also GKC 475 §150.f for the caveat).

21 tn This is understood because the conditional clauses seem to run to the apodosis in v. 15.

22 tn The word שַׁחַת (shakhat) may be the word "corruption" from a root שָׁחַת (shakhat, "to destroy") or a word "pit" from שׁוּחַ (shuakh, "to sink down"). The same problem surfaces in Ps 16:10, where it is parallel to "Sheol." E. F. Sutcliffe, The Old Testament and the Future Life, 76ff., defends the meaning "corruption." But many commentators here take it to mean "the grave" in harmony with "Sheol." But in this verse "worms" would suggest "corruption" is better.

23 tn The adverb אַפוֹ (ʾefo, "then") plays an enclitic role here (see Job 4:7).

24 tn The repetition of "my hope" in the verse has thrown the versions off, and their translations have led commentators also to change the second one to something like "goodness," on the assumption that a word cannot be repeated in the same verse. The word actually carries two different senses here. The first would be the basic meaning "hope," but the second a metonymy of cause, namely, what hope produces, what will be seen.

17:16 Will[1] it[2] go down to the barred gates[3] of death?
Will[4] we descend[5] together into the dust?"

Bildad's Second Speech[6]

18:1 Then Bildad the Shuhite answered:
18:2 "How long until you[7] make an end of words?[8]
You must consider,[9] and then[10] we can talk.
18:3 Why should we be regarded as beasts, and considered stupid[11] in your sight?
18:4 You who tear yourself[12] to pieces in your anger, will the earth be abandoned[13] for your sake?
Or will a rock be moved from its place?[14]

18:5 "Yes,[15] the lamp[16] of the wicked is extinguished; his flame of fire[17] does not shine.
18:6 The light in his tent grows dark;
his lamp above him is extinguished.[18] 18:7 His vigorous steps[19] are restricted,[20] and his own counsel throws him down.[21]
18:8 For he has been thrown into a net by his feet[22] and he wanders into a mesh.[23] 18:9 A trap[24] seizes him by the heel;

---

1 sn It is natural to assume that this verse continues the interrogative clause of the preceding verse.

2 tn The plural form of the verb probably refers to the two words, or the two senses of the word in the preceding verse. Hope and what it produces will perish with Job.

3 tn The Hebrew word בַּדִּים (baddim) describes the "bars" or "bolts" of Sheol, referring (by synecdoche) to the "gates of Sheol." The LXX has "with me to Sheol," and many adopt that as "by my side."

4 tn The conjunction אִם ('im) confirms the interrogative interpretation.

5 tn The translation follows the LXX and the Syriac versions with the change of vocalization in the MT. The MT has the noun "rest," yielding, "will our rest be together in the dust?" The verb נָחַת (nakhat) in Aramaic means "to go down; to descend." If that is the preferred reading – and it almost is universally accepted here – then it would be spelled נֵחַת (nekhat). In either case the point of the verse is clearly describing death and going to the grave.

6 sn Bildad attacks Job with less subtlety than Eliphaz. He describes the miserable existence of the wicked, indicating that it is the proof of sin. His speech falls into two main parts: why is Job so contemptuous toward his friends (Job 18:2-4), and the fate of the wicked (18:5-21). On this chapter see N. M. Sarna, "The Mythological Background of Job 18," JBL 82 (1963): 315-18; and W. A. Irwin, "Job's Redeemer," JBL 81 (1962): 217-29.

7 tn The verb is plural, and so most commentators make it singular. But it seems from the context that Bildad is addressing all of them, and not just Job.

8 tn The construction is קִנְצֵי לְמִלִּין (qintse l^{e}millin), which is often taken to be "end of words," as if the word was from קֵץ (qets, "end"). But a plural of "end" is not found in the OT. Some will link the word to Arabic qanasa, "to hunt; to give chase," to get an interpretation of "snares for words." But E. Dhorme (Job, 257) objects that this does not fit the speech of Bildad (as well as it might Job's). He finds a cognate qinsu, "fetters, shackles," and reads "how long will you put shackles on words." But G. R. Driver had pointed out that this cognate does not exist ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 72-93). So it would be preferable to take the reading "ends" and explain the ן (nun) as from a Aramaizing by-form. This is supported by 11QtgJob that uses סוֹף (sof, "end"). On the construction, GKC 421 §130.a explains this as a use of the construct in rapid narrative to connect the words; in such cases a preposition is on the following noun.

9 tn The imperfect verb, again plural, would be here taken in the nuance of instruction, or a modal nuance of obligation. So Bildad is telling his listeners to be intelligent. This would be rather cutting in the discourse.

10 tn Heb "afterward."

11 tn The verb נִטְמֵינוּ (nitminu) has been explained from different roots. Some take it from תָּמֵא (tame', "to be unclean"), and translate it "Why should we be unclean in your eyes?" Most would connect it to טָמַם (tamam, "to stop up"), meaning "to be stupid" in the Niphal. Another suggestion is to follow the LXX and read from דָּמַם (damam, "to be reduced to silence"). Others take it from דָּמָה (damah) with a meaning "to be like." But what is missing is the term of comparison – like what? Various suggestions have been made, but all are simply conjectures.

12 tn The construction uses the participle and then 3rd person suffixes: "O tearer of himself in his anger." But it is clearly referring to Job, and so the direct second person pronouns should be used to make that clear. The LXX is an approximation or paraphrase here: "Anger has possessed you, for what if you should die – would under heaven be desolate, or shall the mountains be overthrown from their foundations?"

13 tn There is a good deal of study on this word in this passage, and in Job in general. M. Dahood suggested a root עָזַב ('azav) meaning "to arrange; to rearrange" ("The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 303-9). But this is refuted by H. G. M. Williamson, "A Reconsideration of 'zb II in Biblical Hebrew," ZAW 97 (1985): 74-85.

14 sn Bildad is asking if Job thinks the whole moral order of the world should be interrupted for his sake, that he may escape the punishment for wickedness.

15 tn Hebrew גַּם (gam, "also; moreover"), in view of what has just been said.

16 sn The lamp or the light can have a number of uses in the Bible. Here it is probably an implied metaphor for prosperity and happiness, for the good life itself.

17 tn The expression is literally "the flame of his fire," but the pronominal suffix qualifies the entire bound construction. The two words together intensify the idea of the flame.

18 tn The LXX interprets a little more precisely: "his lamp shall be put out with him."

sn This thesis of Bildad will be questioned by Job in 21:17 – how often is the lamp of the wicked snuffed out?

19 tn Heb "the steps of his vigor," the genitive being the attribute.

20 tn The verb צָרַר (tsarar) means "to be cramped; to be straitened; to be hemmed in." The trouble has hemmed him in, so that he cannot walk with the full, vigorous steps he had before. The LXX has "Let the meanest of men spoil his goods."

21 tn The LXX has "causes him to stumble," which many commentators accept, but this involves the transposition of the three letters. The verb is שָׁלַךְ (shalakh, "throw") not כָּשַׁל (kashal, "stumble").

22 tn See Ps 25:15.

23 tn The word שְׂבָכָה (s^{e}vakhah) is used in scripture for the lattice window (2 Kgs 1:2). The Arabic cognate means "to be intertwined." So the term could describe a net, matting, grating, or lattice. Here it would be the netting stretched over a pit.

24 tn This word פַּח (pakh) specifically refers to the snare of the fowler – thus a bird trap. But its plural seems to refer to nets in general (see Job 22:10).

a snare[1] grips him.
18:10 A rope is hidden for him[2] on the ground and a trap for him[3] lies on the path.
18:11 Terrors[4] frighten him on all sides and dog[5] his every step.
18:12 Calamity is[6] hungry for him,[7] and misfortune is ready at his side.[8] 18:13 It eats away parts of his skin;[9]
the most terrible death[10] devours his limbs.
18:14 He is dragged from the security of his tent,[11] and marched off[12] to the king[13] of terrors.
18:15 Fire resides in his tent;[14]
over his residence burning sulfur is scattered.
18:16 Below his roots dry up, and his branches wither above.
18:17 His memory perishes from the earth,
he has no name in the land.[15]
18:18 He is driven[16] from light into darkness and is banished from the world.
18:19 He has neither children nor descendants[17] among his people, no survivor in those places he once stayed.[18] 18:20 People of the west[19] are appalled at his fate;[20]

[1] tn This word does not occur elsewhere. But another word from the same root means "plait of hair," and so this term has something to do with a net like a trellis or lattice.

[2] tn Heb "his rope." The suffix must be a genitive expressing that the trap was for him, to trap him, and so an objective genitive.

[3] tn Heb "his trap." The pronominal suffix is objective genitive here as well.

[4] sn Bildad is referring here to all the things that afflict a person and cause terror. It would then be a metonymy of effect, the cause being the afflictions.

[5] tn The verb פּוּץ (puts) in the Hiphil has the meaning "to pursue" and "to scatter." It is followed by the expression "at his feet." So the idea is easily derived: they chase him at his feet. But some commentators have other proposals. The most far-fetched is that of Ehrlich and Driver (ZAW 24 [1953]: 259-60) which has "and compel him to urinate on his feet," one of many similar readings the NEB accepted from Driver.

[6] tn The jussive is occasionally used without its normal sense and only as an imperfect (see GKC 323 §109.k).

[7] tn There are a number of suggestions for אוֹנוֹ ('ono). Some take it as "vigor": thus "his strength is hungry." Others take it as "iniquity": thus "his iniquity/trouble is hungry."

[8] tn The expression means that misfortune is right there to destroy him whenever there is the opportunity.

[9] tn The expression "the limbs of his skin" makes no sense, unless a poetic meaning of "parts" (or perhaps "layers") is taken. The parallelism has "his skin" in the first colon, and "his limbs" in the second. One plausible suggestion is to take בַּדֵּי (badde, "limbs of") in the first part to be בִּדְוַי (bidvay, "by a disease"; Dhorme, Wright, RSV). The verb has to be made passive, however. The versions have different things: The LXX has "let the branches of his feet be eaten"; the Syriac has "his cities will be swallowed up by force"; the Vulgate reads "let it devour the beauty of his skin"; and Targum Job has "it will devour the linen garments that cover his skin."

[10] tn The "firstborn of death" is the strongest child of death (Gen 49:3), or the deadliest death (like the "firstborn of the poor, the poorest). The phrase means the most terrible death (A. B. Davidson, Job, 134).

[11] tn Heb "from his tent, his security." The apposition serves to modify the tent as his security.

[12] tn The verb is the Hiphil of צָעַד (tsa'ad, "to lead away"). The problem is that the form is either a third feminine (Rashi thought it was referring to Job's wife) or the second person. There is a good deal of debate over the possibility of the prefix t- being a variant for the third masculine form. The evidence in Ugaritic and Akkadian is mixed, stronger for the plural than the singular. Gesenius has some samples where the third feminine form might also be used for the passive if there is no expressed subject (see GKC 459 §144.b), but the evidence is not strong. The simplest choices are to change the prefix to a י (yod), or argue that the ת (tav) can be masculine, or follow Gesenius.

[13] sn This is a reference to death, the king of all terrors. Other identifications are made in the commentaries: Mot, the Ugaritic god of death; Nergal of the Babylonians; Molech of the Canaanites, the one to whom people sent emissaries.

[14] tn This line is difficult as well. The verb, again a third feminine form, says "it dwells in his tent." But the next part (מִבְּלִי לוֹ, mibbeli lo) means something like "things of what are not his." The best that can be made of the MT is "There shall live in his tent they that are not his" (referring to persons and animals; see J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 279). G. R. Driver and G. B. Gray (Job [ICC], 2:161) refer "that which is naught of his" to weeds and wild animals. M. Dahood suggested a reading מַבֶּל (mabbel) and a connection to Akkadian nablu, "fire" (cf. Ugaritic nbl). The interchange of m and n is not a problem, and the parallelism with the next line makes good sense ("Some Northwest Semitic words in Job," Bib 38 [1957]: 312ff.). Others suggest an emendation to get "night-hag" or vampire. This suggestion, as well as Driver's "mixed herbs," are linked to the idea of exorcism. But if a change is to be made, Dahood's is the most compelling.

[15] tn Heb "outside." Cf. ESV, "in the street," referring to absence from his community's memory.

[16] tn The verbs in this verse are plural; without the expressed subject they should be taken in the passive sense.

[17] tn The two words נִין (nin, "offspring") and נֶכֶד (nekhed, "posterity") are always together and form an alliteration. This is hard to capture in English, but some have tried: Moffatt had "son and scion," and Tur-Sinai had "breed or brood." But the words are best simply translated as "lineage and posterity" or as in the NIV "offspring or descendants."

[18] tn Heb "in his sojournings." The verb גּוּר (gur) means "to reside; to sojourn" temporarily, without land rights. Even this word has been selected to stress the temporary nature of his stay on earth.

[19] tn The word אַחֲרֹנִים ('akharonim) means "those [men] coming after." And the next word, קַדְמֹנִים (qadmonim), means "those [men] coming before." Some commentators have tried to see here references to people who lived before and people who lived after, but that does not explain their being appalled at the fate of the wicked. So the normal way this is taken is in connection to the geography, notably the seas – "the hinder sea" refers to the Mediterranean, the West, and "the front sea" refers to the Dead Sea (Zech 14:8), namely, the East. The versions understood this as temporal: "the last groaned for him, and wonder seized the first" (LXX).

[20] tn Heb "his day."

people of the east are seized with horror,[1] saying,[2]
18:21 'Surely such is the residence[3] of an evil man; and this is the place of one who has not known God.'"[4]

Job's Reply to Bildad[5]

19:1 Then Job answered:
19:2 "How long will you torment me[6] and crush[7] me with your words?[8] 19:3 These ten times[9] you have been reproaching me;[10] you are not ashamed to attack me![11]
19:4 But even if it were[12] true that I have erred,[13] my error[14] remains solely my concern!
19:5 If indeed[15] you would exalt yourselves[16] above me and plead my disgrace against me,[17]
19:6 know[18] then that God has wronged me[19] and encircled[20] me with his net.[21]

Job's Abandonment and Affliction

19:7 "If[22] I cry out,[23] 'Violence!'[24]
I receive no answer;[25]
I cry for help,
but there is no justice.
19:8 He has blocked[26] my way so I cannot pass, and has set darkness[27] over my paths.

---

1 tn The expression has "they seize horror." The RSV renders this "horror seizes them." The same idiom is found in Job 21:6: "laid hold on shuddering." The idiom would solve the grammatical problem and not change the meaning greatly, but it would change the parallelism.

2 tn The word "saying" is supplied in the translation to mark and introduce the following as a quotation of these people who are seized with horror. The alternative is to take v. 21 as Bildad's own summary statement (cf. G. R. Driver and G. B. Gray, Job [ICC], 2:162; J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 280).

3 tn The term is in the plural, "the tabernacles"; it should be taken as a plural of local extension (see GKC 397 §124.b).

4 tn The word "place" is in construct; the clause following it replaces the genitive: "this is the place of – he has not known God."

5 sn Job is completely stunned by Bildad's speech, and feels totally deserted by God and his friends. Yet from his despair a new hope emerges with a stronger faith. Even though he knows he will die in his innocence, he knows that God will vindicate him and that he will be conscious of the vindication. There are four parts to this reply: Job's impatience with the speeches of his friends (2-6), God's abandonment of Job and his attack (7-12), Job's forsaken state and appeal to his friends (13-22), and Job's confidence that he will be vindicated (23-29).

6 tn Heb "torment my soul," with "soul" representing the self or individual. The MT has a verb from יָגָה (yagah, "to afflict; to torment"). This is supported by the versions. But the LXX has "to tire" which is apparently from יָגַע (yaga'). The form in the MT is unusual because it preserves the final (original) yod in the Hiphil (see GKC 214 §75.gg). So this unusual form has been preserved, and is the correct reading. A modal nuance for the imperfect fits best here: "How long do you intend to do this?"

7 tn The MT has דְּכָא (dakha'), "to crush" in the Piel. The LXX, however, has a more general word which means "to destroy."

8 tn The LXX adds to the verse: "only know that the Lord has dealt with me thus."

9 sn The number "ten" is a general expression to convey that this has been done often (see Gen 31:7; Num 14:22).

10 tn The Hiphil of the verb כָּלַם (kalam) means "outrage; insult; shame." The verbs in this verse are prefixed conjugations, and may be interpreted as preterites if the reference is to the past time. But since the action is still going on, progressive imperfects work well.

11 tn The second half of the verse uses two verbs, the one dependent on the other. It could be translated "you are not ashamed to attack me" (see GKC 385-86 §120.c), or "you attack me shamelessly." The verb חָכַר (hakhar) poses some difficulties for both the ancient versions and the modern commentators. The verb seems to be cognate to Arabic hakara, "to oppress; to ill-treat." This would mean that there has been a transformation of ח (khet) to ה (he). Three Hebrew MSS actually have the ח (khet). This has been widely accepted; other suggestions are irrelevant.

12 tn Job has held to his innocence, so the only way that he could say "I have erred" (שָׁגִיתִי, shagiti) is in a hypothetical clause like this.

13 tn There is a long addition in the LXX: "in having spoken words which it is not right to speak, and my words err, and are unreasonable."

14 tn The word מְשׁוּגָה (m^{e}shugah) is a hapax legomenon. It is derived from שׁוּג (shug, "to wander; to err") with root paralleling שָׁגַג (shagag) and שָׁגָה (shagah). What Job is saying is that even if it were true that he had erred, it did not injure them – it was solely his concern.

15 tn The introductory particles repeat אָמְנָם ('amnam, "indeed") but now with אִם ('im, "if"). It could be interpreted to mean "is it not true," or as here in another conditional clause.

16 tn The verb is the Hiphil of גָּדַל (gadal); it can mean "to make great" or as an internal causative "to make oneself great" or "to assume a lofty attitude, to be insolent." There is no reason to assume another root here with the meaning of "quarrel" (as Gordis does).

17 sn Job's friends have been using his shame, his humiliation in all his sufferings, as proof against him in their case.

18 tn The imperative is used here to introduce a solemn affirmation. This verse proves that Job was in no way acknowledging sin in v. 4. Here Job is declaring that God has wronged him, and in so doing, perverted justice.

19 tn The Piel of עָוַת ('avat) means "to warp justice" (see 8:3), or here, to do wrong to someone (see Ps 119:78). The statement is chosen to refute the question that Bildad asked in his first speech.

20 tn The verb נָקַף (naqaf) means "to turn; to make a circle; to encircle." It means that God has encircled or engulfed Job with his net.

21 tn The word מְצוּדוֹ (m^{e}tsudo) is usually connected with צוּד (tsud, "to hunt"), and so is taken to mean "a net." Gordis and Habel, however, interpret it to mean "siegeworks" thrown up around a city – but that would require changing the ד (dalet) to a ר (resh) (cf. NLT, "I am like a city under siege"). The LXX, though, has "bulwark." Besides, the previous speech used several words for "net."

22 tn The particle is used here as in 9:11 (see GKC 497 §159.w).

23 tc The LXX has "I laugh at reproach."

24 tn The same idea is expressed in Jer 20:8 and Hab 1:2. The cry is a cry for help, that he has been wronged, that there is no justice.

25 tn The Niphal is simply "I am not answered." See Prov 21:13b.

26 tn The verb גָּדַר (gadar) means "to wall up; to fence up; to block." God has blocked Job's way so that he cannot get through. See the note on 3:23. Cf. Lam 3:7.

27 tn Some commentators take the word to be חָשֵׁךְ (hasak), related to an Arabic word for "thorn hedge."

19:9 He has stripped me of my honor and has taken the crown off my head.[1] 19:10 He tears me down[2] on every side until I perish;[3]
he uproots[4] my hope[5] like one uproots[6]
a tree.
19:11 Thus[7] his anger burns against me, and he considers me among his enemies.[8] 19:12 His troops[9] advance together; they throw up[10] a siege ramp against me,
and they camp around my tent.

Job's Forsaken State

19:13 "He has put my relatives[11] far from me;
my acquaintances only[12] turn away from
me.
19:14 My kinsmen have failed me;
my friends[13] have forgotten me.[14]
19:15 My guests[15] and my servant girls consider[16] me a stranger;
I am a foreigner[17] in their eyes.
19:16 I summon[18] my servant, but he does not respond, even though I implore[19] him with my own mouth.
19:17 My breath is repulsive[20] to my wife;
I am loathsome[21] to my brothers.[22]
19:18 Even youngsters have scorned me; when I get up,[23] they scoff at me.[24]

1 sn The images here are fairly common in the Bible. God has stripped away Job's honorable reputation. The crown is the metaphor for the esteem and dignity he once had. See 29:14; Isa 61:3; see Ps 8:5 [6].

2 tn The metaphors are changed now to a demolished building and an uprooted tree. The verb is נָתַץ (natats, "to demolish"). Since it is Job himself who is the object, the meaning cannot be "demolish" (as of a house so that an inhabitant has to leave), but more of the attack or the battering.

3 tn The text has הָלַךְ (halakh, "to leave"). But in view of Job 14:20, "perish" or "depart" would be a better meaning here.

4 tn The verb נָסַע (nasa') means "to travel" generally, but specifically it means "to pull up the tent pegs and move." The Hiphil here means "uproot." It is used of a vine in Ps 80:9. The idea here does not contradict Job 14:7, for there the tree still had roots and so could grow.

5 tn The NEB has "my tent rope," but that seems too contrived here. It is absurd to pull up a tent-rope like a tree.

6 tn Heb "like a tree." The words "one uproots" are supplied in the translation for clarity.

7 tn The verb is a nonpreterite vayyiqtol perhaps employed to indicate that the contents of v. 11 are a logical sequence to the actions described in v. 10.

8 tn This second half of the verse is a little difficult. The Hebrew has "and he reckons me for him like his adversaries." Most would change the last word to a singular in harmony with the versions, "as his adversary." But some retain the MT pointing and try to explain it variously: Weiser suggests that the plural might have come from a cultic recitation of Yahweh's deeds against his enemies; Fohrer thinks it refers to the primeval enemies; Gordis takes it as distributive, "as one of his foes." If the plural is retained, this latter view makes the most sense.

9 sn Now the metaphor changes again. Since God thinks of Job as an enemy, he attacks with his troops, builds the siege ramp, and camps around him to besiege him. All the power and all the forces are at God's disposal in his attack of Job.

10 tn Heb "they throw up their way against me." The verb סָלַל (salal) means "to build a siege ramp" or "to throw up a ramp"; here the object is "their way." The latter could be taken as an adverbial accusative, "as their way." But as the object it fits just as well. Some delete the middle clause; the LXX has "Together his troops fell upon me, they beset my ways with an ambush."

11 tn Heb "brothers."

12 tn The LXX apparently took אַךְ־זָרוּ ('akh, "even, only," and zaru, "they turn away") together as if it was the verb אַכְזְרוּ ('akhzaru, "they have become cruel," as in 20:21). But the grammar in the line would be difficult with this. Moreover, the word is most likely from זור (zur, "to turn away"). See L. A. Snijders, "The Meaning of zar in the Old Testament," OTS 10 (1964): 1-154 (especially p. 9).

13 tn The Pual participle is used for those "known" to him, or with whom he is "familiar," whereas קָרוֹב (qarov, "near") is used for a relative.

14 tn Many commentators add the first part of v. 15 to this verse, because it is too loaded and this is too short. That gives the reading "My kinsmen and my familiar friends have disappeared, they have forgotten me (15) the guests I entertained." There is not much support for this, nor is there much reason for it.

15 tn The Hebrew גָּרֵי בֵיתִי (gare beti, "the guests of my house") refers to those who sojourned in my house – not residents, but guests.

16 tn The form of the verb is a feminine plural, which would seem to lend support to the proposed change of the lines (see last note to v. 14). But the form may be feminine primarily because of the immediate reference. On the other side, the suffix of "their eyes" is a masculine plural. So the evidence lies on both sides.

17 tn This word נָכְרִי (nokhri) is the person from another race, from a strange land, the foreigner. The previous word, גֵּר (ger), is a more general word for someone who is staying in the land but is not a citizen, a sojourner.

18 tn The verb קָרָא (qara') followed by the ל (lamed) preposition means "to summon." Contrast Ps 123:2.

19 tn Heb "plead for grace" or "plead for mercy" (ESV).

20 tn The Hebrew appears to have "my breath is strange to my wife." This would be the meaning if the verb was from זור (zur, "to turn aside; to be a stranger"). But it should be connected to זִיר (zir), cognate to Assyrian zaru, "to feel repugnance toward." Here it is used in the intransitive sense, "to be repulsive." L. A. Snijders, following Driver, doubts the existence of this second root, and retains "strange" ("The Meaning of zar in the Old Testament," OTS 10 [1964]: 1-154).

21 tn The normal meaning here would be based on the root חָנַן (khanan, "to be gracious"). And so we have versions reading "although I entreated" or "my supplication." But it seems more likely it is to be connected to another root meaning "to be offensive; to be loathsome." For the discussion of the connection to the Arabic, see E. Dhorme, Job, 278.

22 tn The text has "the sons of my belly [= body]." This would normally mean "my sons." But they are all dead. And there is no suggestion that Job had other sons. The word "my belly" will have to be understood as "my womb," i.e., the womb I came from. Instead of "brothers," the sense could be "siblings" (both brothers and sisters; G. R. Driver and G. B. Gray, Job [ICC], 2:168).

23 sn The use of the verb "rise" is probably fairly literal. When Job painfully tries to get up and walk, the little boys make fun of him.

24 tn The verb דִּבֵּר (dibber) followed by the preposition ב (bet) indicates speaking against someone, namely, scoffing or railing against someone (see Ps 50:20; 78:19). Some commentators find another root with the meaning "to turn one's back on; to turn aside from." The argument is rendered weak philologically because it requires a definition "from" for the preposition bet. See among others I. Eitan, "Studies in Hebrew Roots," JQR 14 (1923-24): 31-52 [especially 38-41].

19:19 All my closest friends[1] detest me;
and those whom[2] I love have turned against me.[3] 19:20 My bones stick to my skin and my flesh;[4]
I have escaped[5] alive[6] with only the skin of my teeth.
19:21 Have pity on me, my friends, have pity on me, for the hand of God has struck me.
19:22 Why do you pursue me like God does?[7]
Will you never be satiated with my flesh?[8]

Job's Assurance of Vindication

19:23 "O that[9] my words were written down,
O that they were written on a scroll,[10]
19:24 that with an iron chisel and with lead[11]
they were engraved in a rock forever!
19:25 As for me, I know that my Redeemer[12] lives, and that as the last[13]
he will stand upon the earth.[14]
19:26 And after my skin has been destroyed,[15]

[1] tn Heb "men of my confidence," or "men of my council," i.e., intimate friends, confidants.

[2] tn The pronoun זֶה (zeh) functions here in the place of a nominative (see GKC 447 §138.h).

[3] tn T. Penar translates this "turn away from me" ("Job 19,19 in the Light of Ben Sira 6,11," Bib 48 [1967]: 293-95).

[4] tn The meaning would be "I am nothing but skin and bones" in current English idiom. Both lines of this verse need attention. The first half seems to say, "My skin and my flesh sticks to my bones." Some think that this is too long, and that the bones can stick to the skin, or the flesh, but not both. Dhorme proposes "in my skin my flesh has rotted away" (רָקַב, raqav). This involves several changes in the line, however. He then changes the second line to read "and I have gnawed my bone with my teeth" (transferring "bone" from the first half and omitting "skin"). There are numerous other renderings of this; some of the more notable are: "I escape, my bones in my teeth" (Merx); "my teeth fall out" (Duhm); "my teeth fall from my gums" (Pope); "my bones protrude in sharp points" (Kissane). A. B. Davidson retains "the skin of my teeth," meaning "gums. This is about the last thing that Job has, or he would not be able to speak. For a detailed study of this verse, D. J. A. Clines devotes two full pages of textual notes (Job [WBC], 430-31). He concludes with "My bones hang from my skin and my flesh, I am left with only the skin of my teeth."

[5] tn Or "I am left."

[6] tn The word "alive" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for clarity.

[7] sn Strahan comments, "The whole tragedy of the book is packed into these extraordinary words."

[8] sn The idiom of eating the pieces of someone means "slander" in Aramaic (see Dan 3:8), Arabic and Akkadian.

[9] tn The optative is again expressed with the interrogative clause "Who will give that they be written?" Job wishes that his words be preserved long after his death.

[10] tn While the sense of this line is clear, there is a small problem and a plausible solution. The last word is indeed סֵפֶר (sefer, "book"), usually understood here to mean "scroll." But the verb that follows it in the verse is יֻחַקּוּ (yukhaqu), from חָקַק (khaqaq, "to engrave; to carve"). While the meaning is clearly that Job wants his words to be retained, the idea of engraving in a book, although not impossible, is unusual. And so many have suggested that the Akkadian word siparru, "copper; brass," is what is meant here (see Isa 30:8; Judg 5:14). The consonants are the same, and the vowel pattern is close to the original vowel pattern of this segholate noun. Writing on copper or bronze sheets has been attested from the 12th to the 2nd centuries, notably in the copper scroll, which would allow the translation "scroll" in our text (for more bibliography see D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 432). But H. S. Gehman notes that in Phoenician our word can mean "inscription" ("SĒFER, an inscription, in the book of Job," JBL 63 [1944]: 303-7), making the proposed substitution unnecessary.

[11] sn There is some question concerning the use of the lead. It surely cannot be a second description of the tool, for a lead tool would be of no use in chiseling words into a rock. It was Rashi's idea, followed by Dillmann and Duhm, that lead was run into the cut-out letters. The suggestion that they wrote on lead tablets does not seem to fit the verse (cf. NIV). See further A. Baker, "The Strange Case of Job's Chisel," CBQ 31 (1969): 370-79.

[12] tn Or "my Vindicator." The word is the active participle from גָּאַל (ga'al, "to redeem, protect, vindicate"). The word is well-known in the OT because of its identification as the kinsman-redeemer (see the book of Ruth). This is the near kinsman who will pay off one's debts, defend the family, avenge a killing, marry the widow of the deceased. The word "redeemer" evokes the wrong connotation for people familiar with the NT alone; a translation of "Vindicator" would capture the idea more. The concept might include the description of the mediator already introduced in Job 16:19, but surely here Job is thinking of God as his vindicator. The interesting point to be stressed here is that Job has said clearly that he sees no vindication in this life, that he is going to die. But he knows he will be vindicated, and even though he will die, his vindicator lives. The dilemma remains though: his distress lay in God's hiding his face from him, and his vindication lay only in beholding God in peace.

[13] tn The word אַחֲרוֹן ('akharon, "last") has triggered a good number of interpretations. Here it is an adjectival form and not adverbial; it is an epithet of the vindicator. Some commentators, followed by the RSV, change the form to make it adverbial, and translate it "at last." T. H. Gaster translates it "even if he were the last person to exist" ("Short notes," VT 4 [1954]: 78).

[14] tn The Hebrew has "and he will rise/stand upon [the] dust." The verb קוּם (qum) is properly "to rise; to arise," and certainly also can mean "to stand." Both English ideas are found in the verb. The concept here is that of God rising up to mete out justice. And so to avoid confusion with the idea of resurrection (which although implicit in these words which are pregnant with theological ideas yet to be revealed, is not explicitly stated or intended in this context) the translation "stand" has been used. The Vulgate had "I will rise," which introduced the idea of Job's resurrection. The word "dust" is used as in 41:33. The word "dust" is associated with death and the grave, the very earthly particles. Job assumes that God will descend from heaven to bring justice to the world. The use of the word also hints that this will take place after Job has died and returned to dust. Again, the words of Job come to mean far more than he probably understood.

[15] tn This verse on the whole has some serious interpretation problems that have allowed commentators to go in several directions. The verbal clause is "they strike off this," which is then to be taken as a passive in view of the fact that there is no expressed subject. Some have thought that Job was referring to this life, and that after his disease had done its worst he would see his vindication (see T. J. Meek, "Job 19:25-27," VT 6 [1956]: 100-103; E. F. Sutcliffe, "Further notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 31 [1950]: 377; and others). But Job has been clear – he does not expect to live and see his vindication in this life. There are a host of other interpretations that differ greatly from the sense expressed in the MT. Duhm, for example, has "and another shall arise as my witness." E. Dhorme (Job, 284-85) argues that the vindication comes after death; he emends the verb to get a translation: "and that, behind my skin, I shall stand up." He explains this to mean that it will be Job in person who will be present at the ultimate drama. But the interpretation is forced, and really unnecessary.

yet in my flesh[1] I will see God,[2] 19:27 whom I will see for myself,[3] and whom my own eyes will behold, and not another.[4]
My heart[5] grows faint within me.[6]
19:28 If you say, 'How we will pursue him, since the root of the trouble is found in him!'[7] 19:29 Fear the sword yourselves, for wrath[8] brings the punishment[9] by the sword, so that you may know that there is judgment."[10]

Zophar's Second Speech[11]

20:1 Then Zophar the Naamathite answered:
20:2 "This is why[12] my troubled thoughts bring me back[13] – because of my feelings[14] within me.
20:3 When[15] I hear a reproof that dishonors[16] me, then my understanding[17] prompts me to answer.[18]

1 tn The Hebrew phrase is "and from my flesh." This could mean "without my flesh," i.e., separated from my flesh, or "from my flesh," i.e., in or with my flesh. The former view is taken by those who think Job's vindication will come in this life, and who find the idea of a resurrection unlikely to be in Job's mind. The latter view is taken by those who interpret the preceding line as meaning death and the next verse underscoring that it will be his eye that will see. This would indicate that Job's faith rises to an unparalleled level at this point.

2 tn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 140) says, "The text of this verse is so difficult, and any convincing reconstruction is so unlikely, that it seems best not to attempt it." His words have gone unheeded, even by himself, and rightly so. There seem to be two general interpretations, the details of some words notwithstanding. An honest assessment of the evidence would have to provide both interpretations, albeit still arguing for one. Here Job says he will see God. This at the least means that he will witness his vindication, which it seems clear from the other complaints of Job will occur after his death (it is his blood that must be vindicated). But in what way, exactly, Job will see God is not clarified. In this verse the verb that is used is often used of prophetic visions, but in the next verse the plain word for seeing – with his eye – is used. The fulfillment will be more precise than Job may have understood. Rowley does conclude: "Though there is no full grasping of a belief in a worthwhile Afterlife with God, this passage is a notable landmark in the program toward such a belief." The difficulty is that Job expects to die – he would like to be vindicated in this life, but is resolved that he will die. (1) Some commentators think that vv. 25 and 26 follow the wish for vindication now; (2) others (traditionally) see it as in the next life. Some of the other interpretations that take a different line are less impressive, such as Kissane's, "did I but see God...were I to behold God"; or L. Waterman's translation in the English present, making it a mystic vision in which Job already sees that God is his vindicator ("Note on Job 19:23-27: Job's Triumph of Faith," JBL 69 [1950]: 379-80).

3 tn The emphasis is on "I" and "for myself." No other will be seeing this vindication, but Job himself will see it. Of that he is confident. Some take לִי (li, "for myself") to mean favorable to me, or on my side (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 143). But Job is expecting (not just wishing for) a face-to-face encounter in the vindication.

4 tn Hitzig offered another interpretation that is somewhat forced. The "other" (זָר, zar) or "stranger" would refer to Job. He would see God, not as an enemy, but in peace.

5 tn Heb "kidneys," a poetic expression for the seat of emotions.

6 tn Heb "fail/grow faint in my breast." Job is saying that he has expended all his energy with his longing for vindication.

7 tc The MT reads "in me." If that is retained, then the question would be in the first colon, and the reasoning of the second colon would be Job's. But over 100 MSS have "in him," and so this reading is accepted by most editors. The verse is a little difficult, but it seems to form a warning by Job that God's appearance which will vindicate Job will bring judgment on those who persecute him and charge him falsely.

8 tn The word "wrath" probably refers to divine wrath for the wicked. Many commentators change this word to read "they," or more precisely, "these things."

9 tn The word is "iniquities," but here as elsewhere it should receive the classification of the punishment for iniquity (a category of meaning that developed from a metonymy of effect).

10 tc The last word is problematic because of the textual variants in the Hebrew. In place of שַׁדִּין (shaddin, "judgment") some have proposed שַׁדַּי (shadday, "Almighty") and read it "that you may know the Almighty" (Ewald, Wright). Some have read it יֵשׁ דַּיָּן (yesh dayyan, "there is a judge," Gray, Fohrer). Others defend the traditional view, arguing that the שׁ (shin) is the abbreviated relative particle on the word דִּין (din, "judgment").

11 sn Zophar breaks in with an impassioned argument about the brevity and prosperity of the life of the wicked. But every statement that he makes is completely irrelevant to the case at hand. The speech has four sections: after a short preface (2-3) he portrays the brevity of the triumph of the wicked (4-11), retribution for sin (12-22), and God's swift judgment (23-29). See further B. H. Kelly, "Truth in Contradiction, A Study of Job 20 and 21," Int 15 (1961): 147-56.

12 tn The ordinary meaning of לָכֵן (lakhen) is "therefore," coming after an argument. But at the beginning of a speech it is an allusion to what follows.

13 tn The verb is שׁוּב (shuv, "to return"), but in the Hiphil, "bring me back," i.e., prompt me to make another speech. The text makes good sense as it is, and there is no reason to change the reading to make a closer parallel with the second half – indeed, the second part explains the first.

14 tn The word is normally taken from the root "to hasten," and rendered "because of my haste within me." But K&D 11:374 proposed another root, and similarly, but closer to the text, E. Dhorme (Job, 289-90) found an Arabic word with the meaning "feeling, sensation." He argues that from this idea developed the meanings in the cognates of "thoughts" as well. Similarly, Gordis translates it "my feeling pain." See also Eccl 2:25.

15 tn There is no indication that this clause is to be subordinated to the next, other than the logical connection, and the use of the וְ (vav) in the second half.

16 tn See Job 19:3.

17 tn The phrase actually has רוּחַ מִבִּינָתִי (ruakh mibbinati, "a spirit/wind/breath/impulse from my understanding"). Some translate it "out of my understanding a spirit answers me." The idea is not that difficult, and so the many proposals to rewrite the text can be rejected. The spirit of his understanding prompts the reply.

18 tn To take this verb as a simple Qal and read it "answers me," does not provide a clear idea. The form can just as easily be taken as a Hiphil, with the sense "causes me to answer." It is Zophar who will "return" and who will "answer."

20:4 "Surely you know[1] that it has been from old, ever since humankind was placed[2] on the earth, 20:5 that the elation of the wicked is brief,[3]
the joy of the godless[4] lasts but a moment.[5] 20:6 Even though his stature[6] reaches to the heavens and his head touches the clouds, 20:7 he will perish forever, like his own excrement;[7]
those who used to see him will say,
'Where is he?'
20:8 Like a dream he flies away, never again to be found,[8] and like a vision of the night he is put to flight.
20:9 People[9] who had seen him will not see him again, and the place where he was will recognize him no longer.
20:10 His sons must recompense[10] the poor;
his own hands[11] must return his wealth.
20:11 His bones[12] were full of his youthful vigor,[13]
but that vigor will lie down with him in the dust.

20:12 "If[14] evil is sweet in his mouth and he hides it under his tongue,[15] 20:13 if he retains it for himself and does not let it go, and holds it fast in his mouth,[16] 20:14 his food is turned sour[17] in his stomach;[18] it becomes the venom of serpents[19] within him.
20:15 The wealth that he consumed[20] he vomits up,
God will make him throw it out[21] of his stomach.
20:16 He sucks the poison[22] of serpents;[23]
the fangs[24] of a viper[25] kill him.

1 tn The MT has "Do you not know?" The question can be interpreted as a rhetorical question affirming that Job must know this. The question serves to express the conviction that the contents are well-known to the audience (see GKC 474 §150.e).

2 tn Heb "from the putting of man on earth." The infinitive is the object of the preposition, which is here temporal. If "man" is taken as the subjective genitive, then the verb would be given a passive translation. Here "man" is a generic, referring to "mankind" or "the human race."

3 tn The expression in the text is "quite near." This indicates that it is easily attained, and that its end is near.

4 tn For the discussion of חָנֵף (khanef, "godless") see Job 8:13.

5 tn The phrase is "until a moment," meaning it is short-lived. But see J. Barr, "Hebrew 'ad, especially at Job 1:18 and Neh 7:3," JSS 27 (1982): 177-88.

6 tn The word שְׁיָא (si') has been connected with the verb נָשָׂא (nasa', "to lift up"), and so interpreted here as "pride." The form is parallel to "head" in the next part, and so here it refers to his stature, the part that rises up and is crowned. But the verse does describe the pride of such a person, with his head in the heavens.

7 tn There have been attempts to change the word here to "like a whirlwind," or something similar. But many argue that there is no reason to remove a coarse expression from Zophar.

8 tn Heb "and they do not find him." The verb has no expressed subject, and so here is equivalent to a passive. The clause itself is taken adverbially in the sentence.

9 tn Heb "the eye that had seen him." Here a part of the person (the eye, the instrument of vision) is put by metonymy for the entire person.

10 tn The early versions confused the root of this verb, taking it from רָצִין (ratsats, "mistreat") and not from רָצָה (ratsah, "be please with"). So it was taken to mean, "Let inferiors destroy his children." But the verb is רָצָה (ratsah). This has been taken to mean "his sons will seek the favor of the poor." This would mean that they would be reduced to poverty and need help from even the poor. Some commentators see this as another root רָצָה (ratsah) meaning "to compensate; to restore" wealth their father had gained by impoverishing others. This fits the parallelism well, but not the whole context that well.

11 tn Some commentators are surprised to see "his hands" here, thinking the passage talks about his death. Budde changed it to "his children," by altering one letter. R. Gordis argued that "hand" can mean offspring, and so translated it that way without changing anything in the text ("A note on YAD," JBL 62 [1943]: 343).

12 tn "Bones" is often used metonymically for the whole person, the bones being the framework, meaning everything inside, as well as the body itself.

13 sn This line means that he dies prematurely – at the height of his youthful vigor.

14 tn The conjunction אִם ('im) introduces clauses that are conditional or concessive. With the imperfect verb in the protasis it indicates what is possible in the present or future. See GKC 496 §159.q).

15 sn The wicked person holds on to evil as long as he can, savoring the taste or the pleasure of it.

16 tn Heb "in the middle of his palate."

17 tn The perfect verb in the apodosis might express the suddenness of the change (see S. R. Driver, Tenses in Hebrew, 204), or it might be a constative perfect looking at the action as a whole without reference to inception, progress, or completion (see IBHS 480-81 §30.1d). The Niphal perfect simply means "is turned" or "turns"; "sour is supplied in the translation to clarify what is meant.

18 tn The word is "in his loins" or "within him." Some translate more specifically "bowels."

19 sn Some commentators suggest that the ancients believed that serpents secreted poison in the gall bladder, or that the poison came from the gall bladder of serpents. In any case, there is poison (from the root "bitter") in the system of the wicked person; it may simply be saying it is that type of poison.

20 tn Heb "swallowed."

21 tn The choice of words is excellent. The verb יָרַשׁ (yarash) means either "to inherit" or "to disinherit; to dispossess." The context makes the figure clear that God is administering the emetic to make the wicked throw up the wealth (thus, "God will make him throw it out..."), but since wealth is the subject there is a disinheritance meant here.

22 tn The word is a homonym for the word for "head," which has led to some confusion in the early versions.

23 sn To take the possessions of another person is hereby compared to sucking poison from a serpent – it will kill eventually.

24 tn Heb "tongue."

25 tn Some have thought this verse is a gloss on v. 14 and should be deleted. But the word for "viper" (אֶפְעֶה, 'ef'eh) is a rare word, occurring only here and in Isa 30:6 and 59:5. It is unlikely that a rarer word would be used in a gloss. But the point is similar to v. 14 – the wealth that was greedily sucked

20:17 He will not look on the streams,[1] the rivers, which are the torrents[2] of honey and butter.[3] 20:18 He gives back the ill-gotten gain[4] without assimilating it;[5] he will not enjoy the wealth from his commerce.[6]
20:19 For he has oppressed the poor and abandoned them;[7]
he has seized a house which he did not build.[8]
20:20 For he knows no satisfaction in his appetite;[9]
he does not let anything he desires[10] escape.[11]

20:21 "Nothing is left for him to devour;[12] that is why his prosperity does not last.[13] 20:22 In the fullness of his sufficiency,[14] distress[15] overtakes him.
the full force of misery will come upon
him.[16]

20:23 "While he is[17] filling his belly, God[18] sends his burning anger[19] against
him,
and rains down his blows upon him.[20] 20:24 If he flees from an iron weapon, then an arrow[21] from a bronze bow pierces him.

in by the wicked proves to be their undoing. Either this is totally irrelevant to Job's case, a general discussion, or the man is raising questions about how Job got his wealth.

[1] tn The word פַּלְגוֹת (p^{e}laggot) simply means "streams" or "channels." Because the word is used elsewhere for "streams of oil" (cf. 29:6), and that makes a good parallelism here, some supply "oil" (cf. NAB, NLT). But the second colon of the verse is probably in apposition to the first. The verb "see" followed by the preposition bet, "to look on; to look over," means "to enjoy as a possession," an activity of the victor.

[2] tn The construct nouns here have caused a certain amount of revision. It says "rivers of, torrents of." The first has been emended by Klostermann to יִצְהָר (yitshar, "oil") and connected to the first colon. Older editors argued for a נָהָר (nahar) that meant "oil" but that was not convincing. On the other hand, there is support for having more than one construct together serving as apposition (see GKC 422 §130.e). If the word "streams" in the last colon is a construct, that would mean three of them, but that one need not be construct. The reading would be "He will not see the streams, [that is] the rivers [which are] the torrents of honey and butter." It is unusual, but workable.

[3] sn This word is often translated "curds." It is curdled milk, possibly a type of butter.

[4] tn The idea is the fruit of his evil work. The word יְגֵעַ (yaga') occurs only here; it must mean ill-gotten gains. The verb is in 10:3.

[5] tn Heb "and he does not swallow." In the context this means "consume" for his own pleasure and prosperity. The verbal clause is here taken adverbially.

[6] sn The expression is "according to the wealth of his exchange." This means he cannot enjoy whatever he gained in his business deals. Some MSS have ב (bet) preposition, making the translation easier, but this is evidence of a scribal correction.

[7] tc The verb indicates that after he oppressed the poor he abandoned them to their fate. But there have been several attempts to improve on the text. Several have repointed the text to get a word parallel to "house." Ehrlich came up with עֹזֵב ('ozev, "mud hut"), Kissane had "hovel" (similar to Neh 3:8). M. Dahood did the same ("The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 306-7). J. Reider came up with עֶזֵב ('ezev, the "leavings"), what the rich were to leave for the poor ("Contributions to the Scriptural text," HUCA 24 [1952/53]: 103-6). But an additional root עָזַב ('azav) is questionable. And while the text as it stands is general and not very striking, there is absolutely nothing wrong with it. Dhorme reverses the letters to gain בַּעַז (b^{e}'oz, "with force [or violence]").

[8] tn The last clause says, "and he did not build it." This can be understood in an adverbial sense, supplying the relative pronoun to the translation.

[9] tn Heb "belly," which represents his cravings, his desires and appetites. The "satisfaction" is actually the word for "quiet; peace; calmness; ease." He was driven by greedy desires, or he felt and displayed an insatiable greed.

[10] tn The verb is the passive participle of the verb חָמַד (khamad) which is one of the words for "covet; desire." This person is controlled by his desires; there is no escape. He is a slave.

[11] tn The verb is difficult to translate in this line. It basically means "to cause to escape; to rescue." Some translate this verb as "it is impossible to escape"; this may work, but is uncertain. Others translate the verb in the sense of saving something else: N. Sarna says, "Of his most cherished possessions he shall save nothing" ("The Interchange of the Preposition bet and min in Biblical Hebrew," JBL 78 [1959]: 315-16). The RSV has "he will save nothing in which he delights"; NIV has "he cannot save himself by his treasure."

[12] tn Heb "for his eating," which is frequently rendered "for his gluttony." It refers, of course, to all the desires he has to take things from other people.

[13] sn The point throughout is that insatiable greed and ruthless plundering to satisfy it will be recompensed with utter and complete loss.

[14] tn The word שָׂפַק (safaq) occurs only here; it means "sufficiency; wealth; abundance (see D. W. Thomas, "The Text of Jesaia 2:6 and the Word sapaq," ZAW 75 [1963]: 88-90).

[15] tn Heb "there is straightness for him." The root צָרַר (tsarar) means "to be narrowed in straits, to be in a bind." The word here would have the idea of pressure, stress, trouble. One could say he is in a bind.

[16] tn Heb "every hand of trouble comes to him." The pointing of עָמֵל ('amel) indicates it would refer to one who brings trouble; LXX and Latin read an abstract noun עָמָל ('amal, "trouble") here.

[17] tn D. J. A. Clines observes that to do justice to the three jussives in the verse, one would have to translate "May it be, to fill his belly to the full, that God should send...and rain" (Job [WBC], 477). The jussive form of the verb at the beginning of the verse could also simply introduce a protasis of a conditional clause (see GKC 323 §109.h, i). This would mean, "if he [God] is about to fill his [the wicked's] belly to the full, he will send...." The NIV reads "when he has filled his belly." These fit better, because the context is talking about the wicked in his evil pursuit being cut down.

[18] tn "God" is understood as the subject of the judgment.

[19] tn Heb "the anger of his wrath."

[20] tn Heb "rain down upon him, on his flesh." Dhorme changes עָלֵימוֹ ('alemo, "upon him") to "his arrows"; he translates the line as "he rains his arrows upon his flesh." The word בִּלְחוּמוֹ (bilkhumo,"his flesh") has been given a wide variety of translations: "as his food," "on his flesh," "upon him, his anger," or "missiles or weapons of war."

[21] tn Heb "a bronze bow pierces him." The words "an arrow from" are implied and are supplied in the translation; cf. "pulls it out" in the following verse.

20:25 When he pulls it out[1] and it comes out of his back,
the gleaming point[2] out of his liver,
terrors come over him.
20:26 Total darkness waits to receive his treasures;[3]
a fire which has not been kindled[4] will consume him
and devour what is left in his tent.
20:27 The heavens reveal his iniquity;
the earth rises up against him.
20:28 A flood will carry off his house, rushing waters on the day of God's wrath.
20:29 Such is the lot God allots the wicked, and the heritage of his appointment[5] from God."

Job's Reply to Zophar[6]

21:1 Then Job answered:
21:2 "Listen carefully[7] to my words;
let this be[8] the consolation you offer me.[9] 21:3 Bear with me[10] and I[11] will speak, and after I have spoken[12] you may mock.[13]
21:4 Is my[14] complaint against a man?[15]
If so,[16] why should I not be impatient?[17]
21:5 Look[18] at me and be appalled; put your hands over your mouths.[19] 21:6 For, when I think[20] about this, I am terrified[21]
and my body feels a shudder.[22]

The Wicked Prosper

21:7 "Why do the wicked go on living,[23] grow old,[24] even increase in power?
21:8 Their children[25] are firmly established in their presence,[26]

---

[1] tn The MT has "he draws out [or as a passive, "it is drawn out/forth"] and comes [or goes] out of his back." For the first verb שָׁלַף (shalaf, "pull, draw"), many commentators follow the LXX and use שֶׁלַח (shelakh, "a spear"). It then reads "and a shaft comes out of his back," a sword flash comes out of his liver." But the verse could also be a continuation of the preceding.

[2] tn Possibly a reference to lightnings.

[3] tn Heb "all darkness is hidden for his laid up things." "All darkness" refers to the misfortunes and afflictions that await. The verb "hidden" means "is destined for."

[4] tn Heb "not blown upon," i.e., not kindled by man. But G. R. Driver reads "unquenched" ("Hebrew notes on the 'Wisdom of Jesus Ben Sirach'," JBL 53 [1934]: 289).

[5] tn For the word אִמְרוֹ ('imro) some propose reading "his appointment," and the others, "his word." Driver shows that "the heritage of his appointment" means "his appointed heritage" (see GKC 440 §135.n).

[6] sn In this chapter Job actually answers the ideas of all three of his friends. Here Job finds the flaw in their argument – he can point to wicked people who prosper. But whereas in the last speech, when he looked on his suffering from the perspective of his innocence, he found great faith and hope, in this chapter when he surveys the divine government of the world, he sinks to despair. The speech can be divided into five parts: he appeals for a hearing (2-6), he points out the prosperity of the wicked (7-16), he wonders exactly when the godless suffer (17-22), he shows how death levels everything (23-26), and he reveals how experience contradicts his friends' argument (27-34).

[7] tn The intensity of the appeal is again expressed by the imperative followed by the infinitive absolute for emphasis. See note on "listen carefully" in 13:17.

[8] tc The LXX negates the sentence, "that I may not have this consolation from you."

[9] tn The word תַּנְחוּמֹתֵיכֶם (tankhumotekhem) is literally "your consolations," the suffix being a subjective genitive. The friends had thought they were offering Job consolation (Job 14:11), but the consolation he wants from them is that they listen to him and respond accordingly.

[10] tn The verb נָשָׂא (nasa') means "to lift up; to raise up," but in this context it means "to endure; to tolerate" (see Job 7:21).

[11] tn The conjunction and the independent personal pronoun draw emphatic attention to the subject of the verb: "and I on my part will speak."

[12] tn The adverbial clauses are constructed of the preposition "after" and the Piel infinitive construct with the subjective genitive suffix: "my speaking," or "I speak."

[13] tn The verb is the imperfect of לָעַג (la'ag). The Hiphil has the same basic sense as the Qal, "to mock; to deride." The imperfect here would be modal, expressing permission. The verb is in the singular, suggesting that Job is addressing Zophar; however, most of the versions put it into the plural. Note the singular in 16:3 between the plural in 16:1 and 16:4.

[14] tn The addition of the independent pronoun at the beginning of the sentence ("Is it I / against a man / my complaint") strengthens the pronominal suffix on "complaint" (see GKC 438 §135.f).

[15] sn The point seems to be that if his complaint were merely against men he might expect sympathy from other men, but no one dares offer him sympathy when his complaint is against God. So he will give free expression to his spirit (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 147).

[16] tn On disjunctive interrogatives, see GKC 475 §150.g.

[17] tn Heb "why should my spirit/breath not be short" (see Num 21:4; Judg 16:16).

[18] tn The verb פְּנוּ (p^{e}nu) is from the verb "to turn," related to the word for "face." In calling for them to turn toward him, he is calling for them to look at him. But here it may be more in the sense of their attention rather than just a looking at him.

[19] tn The idiom is "put a hand over a mouth," the natural gesture for keeping silent and listening (cf. Job 29:9; 40:4; Mic 7:16).

[20] tn The verb is זָכַר (zakhar, "to remember"). Here it has the sense of "to keep in memory; to meditate; to think upon."

[21] tn The main clause is introduced here by the conjunction, following the adverbial clause of time.

[22] tn Some commentators take "shudder" to be the subject of the verb, "a shudder seizes my body." But the word is feminine (and see the usage, especially in Job 9:6 and 18:20). It is the subject in Isa 21:4; Ps 55:6; and Ezek 7:18.

[23] sn A. B. Davidson (Job, 154) clarifies that Job's question is of a universal scope. In the government of God, why do the wicked exist at all? The verb could be translated "continue to live."

[24] tn The verb עָתַק ('ataq) means "to move; to proceed; to advance." Here it is "to advance in years" or "to grow old." This clause could serve as an independent clause, a separate sentence, but it more likely continues the question of the first colon and is parallel to the verb "live."

[25] tn Heb "their seed."

[26] tn The text uses לִפְנֵיהֶם עִמָּם (lifnehem 'immam, "before them, with them"). Many editors think that these were alternative readings, and so omit one or the other. Dhorme moved עִמָּם ('immam) to the second half of the verse and emended it to read עִמְּדִים ('om^{e}dim, "abide"). Kissane and Gordis changed only the vowels and came up with עַמָּם ('ammam, "their kinfolk"). But Gordis thinks the presence of both of them in the line is evidence of a conflated reading (p. 229).

their offspring before their eyes.
21:9 Their houses are safe[1] and without fear;[2] and no rod of punishment[3] from God is upon them.[4] 21:10 Their bulls[5] breed[6] without fail;[7] their cows calve and do not miscarry.
21:11 They allow their children to run[8] like a flock;
their little ones dance about.
21:12 They sing[9] to the accompaniment of tambourine and harp, and make merry to the sound of the flute.
21:13 They live out[10] their years in prosperity and go down[11] to the grave[12] in peace.
21:14 So they say to God, 'Turn away from us!
We do not want to[13] know your ways.[14]
21:15 Who is the Almighty, that[15] we should serve him?
What would we gain
if we were to pray[16] to him?'[17]
21:16 But their prosperity is not their own doing.[18]
The counsel of the wicked is far from me![19]

How Often Do the Wicked Suffer?

21:17 "How often[20] is the lamp of the wicked extinguished?
How often does their[21] misfortune come upon them?
How often does God apportion pain[22] to them[23] in his anger?
21:18 How often[24] are they like straw before the wind, and like chaff swept away[25] by a whirlwind?
21:19 You may say,[26] 'God stores up a man's[27] punishment for his children!'[28]

1 tn The word שָׁלוֹם (shalom, "peace, safety") is here a substantive after a plural subject (see GKC 452 §141.c, n. 3).

2 tn The form מִפַּחַד (mippakhad) is translated "without fear," literally "from fear"; the preposition is similar to the alpha privative in Greek. The word "fear, dread" means nothing that causes fear or dread – they are peaceful, secure. See GKC 382 §119.w.

3 tn Heb "no rod of God." The words "punishment from" have been supplied in the translation to make the metaphor understandable for the modern reader by stating the purpose of the rod.

4 sn In 9:34 Job was complaining that there was no umpire to remove God's rod from him, but here he observes no such rod is on the wicked.

5 tn Heb "his bull," but it is meant to signify the bulls of the wicked.

6 tn The verb used here means "to impregnate," and not to be confused with the verb עָבַר ('avar, "to pass over").

7 tn The use of the verb נָעַר (ga'ar) in this place is interesting. It means "to rebuke; to abhor; to loathe." In the causative stem it means "to occasion impurity" or "to reject as loathsome." The rabbinic interpretation is that it does not emit semen in vain, and so the meaning is it does not fail to breed (see E. Dhorme, Job, 311; R. Gordis, Job, 229).

8 tn The verb שָׁלַח (shalakh) means "to send forth," but in the Piel "to release; to allow to run free." The picture of children frolicking in the fields and singing and dancing is symbolic of peaceful, prosperous times.

9 tn The verb is simply "they take up [or lift up]," but the understood object is "their voices," and so it means "they sing."

10 tc The Kethib has "they wear out" but the Qere and the versions have יְכַלּוּ (y'khallu, "bring to an end"). The verb כָּלָה (kalah) means "to finish; to complete," and here with the object "their days," it means that they bring their life to a (successful) conclusion. Both readings are acceptable in the context, with very little difference in the overall meaning (which according to Gordis is proof the Qere does not always correct the Kethib).

11 tc The MT has יַחְתּוּ (yekhattu, "they are frightened [or broken]"), taking the verb from חָתַת (khatat, "be terrified"). But most would slightly repoint it to יֵחָתוּ (yekhatu), an Aramaism, "they go down," from נָחַת (nakhat, "go down"). See Job 17:16.

12 tn The word רֶגַע (rega') has been interpreted as "in a moment" or "in peace" (on the basis of Arabic raja `a, "return to rest"). Gordis thinks this is a case of talhin – both meanings present in the mind of the writer.

13 tn The absence of the preposition before the complement adds greater vividness to the statement: "and knowing your ways – we do not desire."

14 sn Contrast Ps 25:4, which affirms that walking in God's ways means to obey God's will – the Torah.

15 tn The interrogative clause is followed by ki, similar to Exod 5:2, "Who is Yahweh, that I should obey him?"

16 tn The verb פָּגַע (paga') means "to encounter; to meet," but also "to meet with request; to intercede; to interpose." The latter meaning is a derived meaning by usage.

17 tn The verse is not present in the LXX. It may be that it was considered too blasphemous and therefore omitted.

18 tn Heb "is not in their hand."

sn The implication of this statement is that their well-being is from God, which is the problem Job is raising in the chapter. A number of commentators make it a question, interpreting it to mean that the wicked enjoy prosperity as if it is their right. Some emend the text to say "his hands" – Gordis reads it, "Indeed, our prosperity is not in his hands."

19 sn Even though their life seems so good in contrast to his own plight, Job cannot and will not embrace their principles – "far be from me their counsel."

20 tn The interrogative "How often" occurs only with the first colon; it is supplied for smoother reading in the next two.

21 tn The pronominal suffix is objective; it re-enforces the object of the preposition, "upon them." The verb in the clause is בּוֹא (bo') followed by עַל ('al), "come upon [or against]," may be interpreted as meaning attack or strike.

22 tn חֲבָלִים (khavalim) can mean "ropes" or "cords," but that would not go with the verb "apportion" in this line. The meaning of "pangs (as in "birth-pangs") seems to fit best here. The wider meaning would be "physical agony."

23 tn The phrase "to them" is understood and thus is supplied in the translation for clarification.

24 tn To retain the sense that the wicked do not suffer as others, this verse must either be taken as a question or a continuation of the question in v. 17.

25 tn The verb used actually means "rob." It is appropriate to the image of a whirlwind suddenly taking away the wisp of straw.

26 tn These words are supplied. The verse records an idea that Job suspected they might have, namely, that if the wicked die well God will make their children pay for the sins (see Job 5:4; 20:10; as well as Exod 20:5).

27 tn The text simply has אונוֹ ('ono, "his iniquity"), but by usage, "the punishment for the iniquity."

28 tn Heb "his sons."

Instead let him repay[1] the man himself[2]
so that[3] he may know it!
21:20 Let his own eyes see his destruction;[4]
let him drink of the anger of the Almighty.
21:21 For what is his interest[5] in his home after his death,[6] when the number of his months has been broken off?[7]
21:22 Can anyone teach[8] God knowledge, since[9] he judges those that are on high?[10]

Death Levels Everything

21:23 "One man dies in his full vigor,[11] completely secure and prosperous, 21:24 his body[12] well nourished,[13] and the marrow of his bones moist.[14]
21:25 And another man[15] dies in bitterness of soul,[16] never having tasted[17] anything good.
21:26 Together they lie down in the dust, and worms cover over them both.

Futile Words, Deceptive Answers

21:27 "Yes, I know what you are thinking,[18]
the schemes[19] by which you would wrong me.[20] 21:28 For you say,
'Where now is the nobleman's house,[21] and where are the tents in which the wicked lived?'[22]
21:29 Have you never questioned those who travel the roads?
Do you not recognize their accounts[23] –
21:30 that the evil man is spared from the day of his misfortune, that he is delivered[24]
from the day of God's wrath?
21:31 No one denounces his conduct to his face;

---

1 tn The verb שָׁלַם (shalam) in the Piel has the meaning of restoring things to their normal, making whole, and so reward, repay (if for sins), or recompense in general.

2 tn The text simply has "let him repay [to] him."

3 tn The imperfect verb after the jussive carries the meaning of a purpose clause, and so taken as a final imperfect: "in order that he may know [or realize]."

4 tc This word occurs only here. The word כִּיד (kid) was connected to Arabic kaid, "fraud, trickery," or "warfare." The word is emended by the commentators to other ideas, such as פִּיד (pid, "[his] calamity"). Dahood and others alter it to "cup"; Wright to "weapons." A. F. L. Beeston argues for a meaning "condemnation" for the MT form, and so makes no change in the text (Mus 67 [1954]: 315-16). If the connection to Arabic "warfare" is sustained, or if such explanations of the existing MT can be sustained, then the text need not be emended. In any case, the sense of the line is clear.

5 tn Heb "his desire." The meaning is that after he is gone he does not care about what happens to his household ("house" meaning "family" here).

6 tn Heb "after him," but clearly the meaning is "after he is gone."

7 tc The rare word חֻצְיוֹ (khutsatsu) is probably a cognate of hassa in Arabic, meaning "to cut off." There is also an Akkadian word "to cut in two" and "to break." These fit the context here rather well. The other Hebrew words that are connected to the root חָצַץ (khatsats) do not offer any help.

8 tn The imperfect verb in this question should be given the modal nuance of potential imperfect. The question is rhetorical – it is affirming that no one can teach God.

9 tn The clause begins with the disjunctive vav (ו) and the pronoun, "and he." This is to be subordinated as a circumstantial clause. See GKC 456 §142.d.

10 tc The Hebrew has רָמִים (ramim), a plural masculine participle of רוּם (rum, "to be high; to be exalted"). This is probably a reference to the angels. But M. Dahood restores an older interpretation that it refers to "the Most High" ("Some Northwest Semitic words in Job," Bib 38 [1957]: 316-17). He would take the word as a singular form with an enclitic mem (מ). He reads the verse, "will he judge the Most High?"

11 tn The line has "in the bone of his perfection." The word עֶצֶם ('etsem), which means "bone," is used pronominally to express "the same, very"; here it is "in the very fullness of his strength" (see GKC 449 §139.g). The abstract תֹּם (tom) is used here in the sense of physical perfection and strengths.

12 tn The verb עָתַן ('atan) has the precise meaning of "press olives." But because here it says "full of milk," the derived meaning for the noun has been made to mean "breasts" or "pails" (although in later Hebrew this word occurs – but with olives, not with milk). Dhorme takes it to refer to "his sides," and repoints the word for "milk" (חָלָב, khalav) to get "fat" (חֶלֶב, khelev) – "his sides are full of fat," a rendering followed by NASB. However, this weakens the parallelism.

13 tn This interpretation, adopted by several commentaries and modern translations (cf. NAB, NIV), is a general rendering to capture the sense of the line.

14 tn The verb שָׁקָה (shaqah) means "to water" and here "to be watered thoroughly." The picture in the line is that of health and vigor.

15 tn The expression "this (v. 23)...and this" (v. 25) means "one...the other."

16 tn The text literally has "and this [man] dies in soul of bitterness." Some simply reverse it and translate "in the bitterness of soul." The genitive "bitterness" may be an attribute adjective, "with a bitter soul."

17 tn Heb "eaten what is good." It means he died without having enjoyed the good life.

18 tn The word is "your thoughts." The word for "thoughts" (from חָצַב [khatsav, "to think; to reckon; to plan"]) has more to do with their intent than their general thoughts. He knows that when they talked about the fate of the wicked they really were talking about him.

19 tn For the meaning of this word, and its root זָמַם (zamam), see Job 17:11. It usually means the "plans" or "schemes" that are concocted against someone.

20 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 321) distinguishes the verb חָמַס (khamas) from the noun for "violence." He proposes a meaning of "think, imagine": "and the ideas you imagined about me."

21 sn The question implies the answer will be "vanished" or "gone."

22 tn Heb "And where is the tent, the dwellings of the wicked." The word "dwellings of the wicked" is in apposition to "tent." A relative pronoun must be supplied in the translation.

23 tc The LXX reads, "Ask those who go by the way, and do not disown their signs."

tn The idea is that the merchants who travel widely will talk about what they have seen and heard. These travelers give a different account of the wicked; they tell how he is spared. E. Dhorme (Job, 322) interprets "signs" concretely: "Their custom was to write their names and their thoughts somewhere at the main cross-roads. The main roads of Sinai are dotted with these scribblings made by such passers of a day."

24 tn The verb means "to be led forth." To be "led forth in the day of trouble" means to be delivered.

no one repays him for what[1] he has done.[2] 21:32 And when he is carried to the tombs, and watch is kept[3] over the funeral mound,[4] 21:33 The clods of the torrent valley[5] are sweet to him;
behind him everybody follows in procession, and before him goes a countless throng.
21:34 So how can you console me with your futile words?
Nothing is left of your answers but deception!"[6]

Eliphaz's Third Speech[7]

22:1 Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered:
22:2 "Is it to God that a strong man is of benefit?
Is it to him that even a wise man is profitable?[8] 22:3 Is it of any special benefit[9] to the Almighty that you should be righteous, or is it any gain to him that you make your ways blameless?[10]
22:4 Is it because of your piety[11] that he rebukes you and goes to judgment with you?[12]
22:5 Is not your wickedness great[13] and is there no end to your iniquity?

22:6 "For you took pledges[14] from your brothers for no reason,
and you stripped the clothing from the naked.[15]
22:7 You gave the weary[16] no water to drink and from the hungry you withheld food.
22:8 Although you were a powerful man,[17] owning land,[18] an honored man[19] living on it,[20] 22:9 you sent widows away empty-handed, and the arms[21] of the orphans you crushed.[22] 22:10 That is why snares surround you, and why sudden fear terrifies you,
22:11 why it is so dark you cannot see,[23]

1 tn The expression "and he has done" is taken here to mean "what he has done."

2 tn Heb "Who declares his way to his face? // Who repays him for what he has done?" These rhetorical questions, which expect a negative answer ("No one!") have been translated as indicative statements to bring out their force clearly.

3 tn The verb says "he will watch." The subject is unspecified, so the translation is passive.

4 tn The Hebrew word refers to the tumulus, the burial mound that is erected on the spot where the person is buried.

5 tn The clods are those that are used to make a mound over the body. And, for a burial in the valley, see Deut 34:6. The verse here sees him as participating in his funeral and enjoying it. Nothing seems to go wrong with the wicked.

6 tn The word מָעַל (ma'al) is used for "treachery; deception; fraud." Here Job is saying that their way of interpreting reality is dangerously unfaithful.

7 sn The third and final cycle of speeches now begins with Eliphaz' final speech. Eliphaz will here underscore the argument that man's ills are brought about by sin; he will then deduce from Job's sufferings the sins he must have committed and the sinful attitude he has about God. The speech has four parts: Job's suffering is proof of his sin (2-5), Job's sufferings demonstrate the kinds of sin Job committed (6-11), Job's attitude about God (12-20), and the final appeal and promise to Job (21-30).

8 tn Some do not take this to be parallel to the first colon, taking this line as a statement, but the parallel expressions here suggest the question is repeated.

9 tn The word חֵפֶץ (khefets) in this passage has the nuance of "special benefit; favor." It does not just express the desire for something or the interest in it, but the profit one derives from it.

10 tn The verb תַּתֵּם (tattem) is the Hiphil imperfect of תָּמַם (tamam, "be complete, finished"), following the Aramaic form of the geminate verb with a doubling of the first letter.

11 tn The word "your fear" or "your piety" refers to Job's reverence – it is his fear of God (thus a subjective genitive). When "fear" is used of religion, it includes faith and adoration on the positive side, fear and obedience on the negative.

12 sn Of course the point is that God does not charge Job because he is righteous; the point is he must be unrighteous.

13 tn The adjective רַבָּה (rabbah) normally has the idea of "great" in quantity ("abundant," ESV) rather than "great" in quality.

14 tn The verb חָבַל (khaval) means "to take pledges." In this verse Eliphaz says that Job not only took as pledge things the poor need, like clothing, but he did it for no reason.

15 tn The "naked" here refers to people who are poorly clothed. Otherwise, a reading like the NIV would be necessary: "you stripped the clothes...[leaving them] naked." So either he made them naked by stripping their garments off, or they were already in rags.

16 tn The term עָיֵף ('ayef) can be translated "weary," "faint," "exhausted," or "tired." Here it may refer to the fainting because of thirst – that would make a good parallel to the second part.

17 tn The idiom is "a man of arm" (= "powerful"; see Ps 10:15). This is in comparison to the next line, "man of face" (= "dignity; high rank"; see Isa 3:5).

18 tn Heb "and a man of arm, to whom [was] land." The line is in contrast to the preceding one, and so the vav here introduces a concessive clause.

19 tn The expression is unusual: "the one lifted up of face." This is the "honored one," the one to whom the dignity will be given.

20 tn Many commentators simply delete the verse or move it elsewhere. Most take it as a general reference to Job, perhaps in apposition to the preceding verse.

21 tn The "arms of the orphans" are their helps or rights on which they depended for support.

22 tn The verb in the text is Pual: יְדֻכָּא (y^{e}dukka', "was [were] crushed"). GKC 388 §121.b would explain "arms" as the complement of a passive imperfect. But if that is too difficult, then a change to Piel imperfect, second person, will solve the difficulty. In its favor is the parallelism, the use of the second person all throughout the section, and the reading in all the versions. The versions may have simply assumed the easier reading, however.

23 tn Heb "or dark you cannot see." Some commentators and the RSV follow the LXX in reading אוֹ ('o, "or") as אוֹר ('or, "light") and translate it "The light has become dark" or "Your light has become dark." A. B. Davidson suggests the reading "Or seest thou not the darkness." This would mean Job does not understand the true meaning of the darkness and the calamities.

and why a flood[1] of water covers you.

22:12 "Is not God on high in heaven?[2]
And see[3] the lofty stars,[4] how high they are!
22:13 But you have said, 'What does God know?
Does he judge through such deep darkness?[5] 22:14 Thick clouds are a veil for him, so he does not see us,[6] as he goes back and forth in the vault[7] of heaven.'[8] 22:15 Will you keep to the old path[9] that evil men have walked – 22:16 men[10] who were carried off[11] before their time,[12] when the flood[13] was poured out[14] on their foundations?[15]
22:17 They were saying to God, 'Turn away from us,' and 'What can the Almighty do to us?'[16] 22:18 But it was he[17] who filled their houses with good things – yet the counsel of the wicked[18] was far from me.[19]
22:19 The righteous see their destruction[20] and rejoice;
the innocent mock them scornfully,[21] saying, 22:20 'Surely our enemies[22] are destroyed, and fire consumes their wealth.'

22:21 "Reconcile yourself[23] with God,[24] and be at peace[25] with him;
in this way your prosperity will be good.
22:22 Accept instruction[26] from his mouth and store up his words[27] in your heart.
22:23 If you return to the Almighty, you will be built up;[28]
if you remove wicked behavior far from your tent,

[1] tn The word שִׁפְעַת (shif'at) means "multitude of." It is used of men, camels, horses, and here of waters in the heavens.

[2] tn This reading preserves the text as it is. The nouns "high" and "heavens" would then be taken as adverbial accusatives of place (see GKC 373-74 §118.g).

[3] tn The parallel passage in Isa 40:26-27, as well as the context here, shows that the imperative is to be retained here. The LXX has "he sees."

[4] tn Heb "head of the stars."

[5] sn Eliphaz is giving to Job the thoughts and words of the pagans, for they say, "How does God know, and is there knowledge in the Most High?" (see Ps 73:11; 94:11).

[6] tn Heb "and he does not see." The implied object is "us."

[7] sn The word is "circle; dome"; here it is the dome that covers the earth, beyond which God sits enthroned. A. B. Davidson (Job, 165) suggests "on the arch of heaven" that covers the earth.

[8] sn The idea suggested here is that God is not only far off, but he is unconcerned as he strolls around heaven – this is what Eliphaz says Job means.

[9] tn The "old path" here is the way of defiance to God. The text in these two verses is no doubt making reference to the flood in Genesis, one of the perennial examples of divine judgment.

[10] tn The word "men" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied to clarify the relative pronoun "who."

[11] tn The verb קָמַט (qamat) basically means "to seize; to tie together to make a bundle." So the Pual will mean "to be bundled away; to be carried off."

[12] tn The clause has "and [it was] not the time." It may be used adverbially here.

[13] tn The word is נָהָר (nahar, "river" or "current"); it is taken here in its broadest sense of the waters on the earth that formed the current of the flood (Gen 7:6, 10).

[14] tn The verb יָצַק (yatsaq) means "to pour out; to shed; to spill; to flow." The Pual means "to be poured out" (as in Lev 21:10 and Ps 45:3).

[15] tn This word is then to be taken as an adverbial accusative of place. Another way to look at this verse is what A. B. Davidson (Job, 165) proposes "whose foundation was poured away and became a flood." This would mean that that on which they stood sank away.

[16] tn The form in the text is "to them." The LXX and the Syriac versions have "to us."

[17] tn The pronoun is added for this emphasis; it has "but he" before the verb.

[18] tn See Job 10:3.

[19] tc The LXX has "from him," and this is followed by several commentators. But the MT is to be retained, for Eliphaz is recalling the words of Job. Verses 17 and 18 are deleted by a number of commentators as a gloss because they have many similarities to 21:14-16. But Eliphaz is recalling what Job said, in order to say that the prosperity to which Job alluded was only the prelude to a disaster he denied (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 156).

[20] tn The line is talking about the rejoicing of the righteous when judgment falls on the wicked. An object ("destruction") has to be supplied here to clarify this (see Pss 52:6 [8]; 69:32 [33]; 107:42).

[21] sn In Ps 2:4 it was God who mocked the wicked by judging them.

[22] tc The word translated "our enemies" is found only here. The word means "hostility," but used here as a collective for those who are hostile – "enemies." Some commentators follow the LXX and read "possessions," explaining its meaning and derivation in different ways. Gordis simply takes the word in the text and affirms that this is the meaning. On the other hand, to get this, E. Dhorme (Job, 336) repoints קִימָנוּ (qimanu) of the MT to יְקוּמָם (yequmam), arguing that יְקוּם (yequm) means "what exists [or has substance]" (although that is used of animals). He translates: "have not their possessions been destroyed."

[23] tn The verb סָכַן (sakhan) meant "to be useful; to be profitable" in v. 2. Now, in the Hiphil it means "to be accustomed to" or "to have experience with." Joined by the preposition "with" it means "to be reconciled with him." W. B. Bishai cites Arabic and Ugaritic words to support a meaning "acquiesce" ("Notes on hskn in Job 22:21," JNES 20 [1961]: 258-59).

[24] tn Heb "him"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[25] tn The two imperatives in this verse imply a relationship of succession and not consequence.

[26] tn The Hebrew word here is תּוֹרָה (torah), its only occurrence in the book of Job.

[27] tc M. Dahood has "write his words" ("Metaphor in Job 22:22," Bib 47 [1966]: 108-9).

[28] tc The MT has "you will be built up" (תִּבָּנֶה, tibbaneh). But the LXX has "humble yourself" (reading תֵּעָנֶה [te'anneh] apparently). Many commentators read this; Dahood has "you will be healed."

22:24 and throw[1] your gold[2] in the dust – your gold[3] of Ophir among the rocks in the ravines – 22:25 then the Almighty himself will be your gold,[4]
and the choicest[5] silver for you.
22:26 Surely then you will delight yourself[6] in the Almighty, and will lift up your face toward God.
22:27 You will pray to him and he will hear you,
and you will fulfill your vows to him.[7] 22:28 Whatever you decide[8] on a matter, it will be established for you,
and light will shine on your ways.
22:29 When people are brought low[9] and you say
'Lift them up!'[10]
then he will save the downcast;[11] 22:30 he will deliver even someone who is not innocent,[12]
who will escape[13] through the cleanness of your hands."

Job's Reply to Eliphaz[14]

23:1 Then Job answered:
23:2 "Even today my complaint is still bitter;[15]
his[16] hand is heavy despite[17] my groaning.
23:3 O that I knew[18] where I might find
him,[19]
that I could come[20] to his place of residence![21]
23:4 I would lay out my case[22] before him

---

1 tc The form is the imperative. Eliphaz is telling Job to get rid of his gold as evidence of his repentance. Many commentators think that this is too improbable for Eliphaz to have said, and that Job has lost everything anyway, and so they make proposals for the text. Most would follow Theodotion and the Syriac to read וְיִשָּׁתְּ (v'eshatta, "and you will esteem...."). This would mean that he is promising Job restoration of his wealth.

tn Heb "place."

2 tn The word for "gold" is the rare בֶּצֶר (betser), which may be derived from a cognate of Arabic basara, "to see; to examine." If this is the case, the word here would refer to refined gold. The word also forms a fine wordplay with בְּצוּר (b'tsur, "in the rock").

3 tn The Hebrew text simply has "Ophir," a metonymy for the gold that comes from there.

4 tn The form for "gold" here is plural, which could be a plural of extension. The LXX and Latin versions have "The Almighty will be your helper against your enemies."

5 tn E. Dhorme (Job, 339) connects this word with an Arabic root meaning "to be elevated, steep." From that he gets "heaps of silver."

6 tc This is the same verb as in Ps 37:4. G. R. Driver suggests the word comes from another root that means "abandon oneself to, depend on" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 84).

7 tn The words "to him" are not in the Hebrew text, but are implied.

8 tn The word is גָּזַר (gazar, "to cut"), in the sense of deciding a matter.

9 tn There is no expressed subject here, and so the verb is taken as a passive voice again.

10 tn The word גֵּוֶה (gevah) means "loftiness; pride." Here it simply says "up," or "pride." The rest is paraphrased. Of the many suggestions, the following provide a sampling: "It is because of pride" (ESV), "he abases pride" (H. H. Rowley); "[he abases] the lofty and the proud" (Beer); "[he abases] the word of pride" [Duhm]; "[he abases] the haughtiness of pride" [Fohrer and others]; "[he abases] the one who speaks proudly" [Weiser]; "[he abases] the one who boasts in pride" [Kissane]; and "God [abases] pride" [Budde, Gray].

11 tn Or "humble"; Heb "the lowly of eyes."

12 tc The Hebrew has אִי־נָקִי ('i naqi), which could be taken as "island of the innocent" (so Ibn-Ezra), or "him that is not innocent" (so Rashi). But some have changed אִי ('i) to אִישׁ ('ish, "the innocent man"). Others differ: A. Guillaume links אִי ('i) to Arabic 'ayya "whosoever," and so leaves the text alone. M. Dahood secures the same idea from Ugaritic, but reads it אֵי ('e).

13 tc The MT has "he will escape [or be delivered]." Theodotion has the second person, "you will be delivered."

14 sn Job answers Eliphaz, but not until he introduces new ideas for his own case with God. His speech unfolds in three parts: Job's longing to meet God (23:2-7), the inaccessibility and power of God (23:8-17), the indifference of God (24:1-25).

15 tc The MT reads here מְרִי (m'ri, "rebellious"). The word is related to the verb מָרָה (marah, "to revolt"). Many commentators follow the Vulgate, Targum Job, and the Syriac to read מַר (mar, "bitter"). The LXX offers no help here.

16 tc The MT (followed by the Vulgate and Targum) has "my hand is heavy on my groaning." This would mean "my stroke is heavier than my groaning" (an improbable view from Targum Job). A better suggestion is that the meaning would be that Job tries to suppress his groans but the hand with which he suppresses them is too heavy (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 159). Budde, E. Dhorme, J. E. Hartley, and F. I. Andersen all maintain the MT as the more difficult reading. F. I. Andersen (Job [TOTC], 208) indicates that the י (i) suffix could be an example of an unusual third masculine singular. Both the LXX and the Syriac versions have "his hand," and many modern commentators follow this, along with the present translation. In this case the referent of "his" would be God, whose hand is heavy upon Job in spite of Job's groaning.

17 tn The preposition can take this meaning; it could be also translated simply "upon." R. Gordis (Job, 260) reads the preposition "more than," saying that Job had been defiant (he takes that view) but God's hand had been far worse.

18 tn The optative here is again expressed with the verbal clause, "who will give [that] I knew...."

19 tn The form in Hebrew is וְאֶמְצָאֵהוּ (v'emtsa'ehu), simply "and I will find him." But in the optative clause this verb is subordinated to the preceding verb: "O that I knew where [and] I might find him." It is not unusual to have the perfect verb followed by the imperfect in such coordinate clauses (see GKC 386 §120.e). This could also be translated making the second verb a complementary infinitive: "knew how to find him."

sn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 159) quotes Strahan without reference: "It is the chief distinction between Job and his friends that he desires to meet God and they do not."

20 tn This verb also depends on מִי־יִתֵּן (mi-yitten, "who will give") of the first part, forming an additional clause in the wish formula.

21 tn Or "his place of judgment." The word is from כּוּן (kun, "to prepare; to arrange") in the Polel and the Hiphil conjugations. The noun refers to a prepared place, a throne, a seat, or a sanctuary. A. B. Davidson (Job, 169) and others take the word to mean "judgment seat" or "tribunal" in this context.

22 tn The word מִשְׁפָּט (mishpat) is normally "judgment; decision." But in these contexts it refers to the legal case that Job will bring before God. With the verb עָרַךְ ('arakh, "to set in order; to lay out") the whole image of drawing up a lawsuit is complete.

and fill my mouth with arguments.
23:5 I would know with what words[1] he would answer me, and understand what he would say to me.
23:6 Would he contend[2] with me with great power?
No, he would only pay attention to me.[3] 23:7 There[4] an upright person could present his case[5] before him, and I would be delivered forever from my judge.

The Inaccessibility and Power of God

23:8 "If I go to the east, he is not there, and to the west, yet I do not perceive him.
23:9 In the north[6] when he is at work,[7]
I do not see him;[8]
when he turns[9] to the south,
I see no trace of him.
23:10 But he knows the pathway that I take;[10]
if he tested me, I would come forth like gold.[11]
23:11 My feet[12] have followed[13] his steps closely;
I have kept to his way and have not turned aside.[14]
23:12 I have not departed from the commands of his lips;
I have treasured the words of his mouth more than my allotted portion.[15]
23:13 But he is unchangeable,[16] and who can change[17] him?
Whatever he[18] has desired, he does.
23:14 For he fulfills his decree against me,[19] and many such things are his plans.[20] 23:15 That is why I am terrified in his presence;
when I consider, I am afraid because of him.
23:16 Indeed, God has made my heart faint;[21]
the Almighty has terrified me.
23:17 Yet I have not been silent because of the darkness, because of the thick darkness that covered my face.[22]

[1] tn Heb "the words he would answer me."

[2] tn The verb is now רִיב (riv) and not יָכַח (yakhakh, "contend"); רִיב (riv) means "to quarrel; to dispute; to contend," often in a legal context. Here it is still part of Job's questioning about this hypothetical meeting – would God contend with all his power?

[3] tn The verbal clause בִי יָשֵׂם (yasim bi) has been translated "he would pay [attention] to me." Job is saying that God will not need all his power – he will just have pay attention to Job's complaint. Job does not need the display of power – he just wants a hearing.

[4] tn The adverb "there" has the sense of "then" – there in the future.

[5] tn The form of the verb is the Niphal נוֹכַח (nokkakh, "argue, present a case"). E. Dhorme (Job, 346) is troubled by this verbal form and so changes it and other things in the line to say, "he would observe the upright man who argues with him." The Niphal is used for "engaging discussion," "arguing a case," and "settling a dispute."

[6] sn The text has "the left hand," the Semitic idiom for directions. One faces the rising sun, and so left is north, right is south.

[7] tc The form בַּעֲשׂוֹתוֹ (ba'asoto) would be the temporal clause using the infinitive construct with a pronoun (subject genitive). This would be "when he works." Several follow the Syriac with "I seek him." The LXX has "[when] he turns." R. Gordis (Job, 261) notes that there is no need to emend the text; he shows a link to the Arabic cognate ghasa, "to cover." To him this is a perfect parallel to יַעְטֹף (ya'tof, "covers himself").

[8] tn The verb is the apocopated form of the imperfect. The object is supplied.

[9] tn The MT has "he turns," but the Syriac and Vulgate have "I turn."

[10] tn The expression דֶּרֶךְ עִמָּדִי (derekh 'immadi) means "the way with me," i.e., "the way that I take." The Syriac has "my way and my standing." Several commentators prefer "the way of my standing," meaning where to look for me. J. Reider offers "the way of my life" ("Some notes to the text of the scriptures," HUCA 3 [1926]: 115). Whatever the precise wording, Job knows that God can always find him.

[11] tn There is a perfect verb followed by an imperfect in this clause with the protasis and apodosis relationship (see GKC 493 §159.b).

[12] tn Heb "my foot."

[13] tn Heb "held fast."

[14] tn The last clause, "and I have not turned aside," functions adverbially in the sentence. The form אַט ('at) is a pausal form of אַתֶּה ('atteh), the Hiphil of נָטָה (natah, "stretch out").

[15] tc The form in the MT מִחֻקִּי, mekhuqqi) means "more than my portion" or "more than my law." An expanded meaning results in "more than my necessary food" (see Ps 119:11; cf. KJV, NASB, ESV). HALOT 346 s.v. חֹק 1 indicates that חֹק (khoq) has the meaning of "portion" and is here a reference to "what is appointed for me." The LXX and the Latin versions, along with many commentators, have בְּחֻקִּי (bekheqi, "in my bosom").

[16] tc The MT has "But he [is] in one." Many add the word "mind" to capture the point that God is resolute and unchanging. Some commentators find this too difficult, and so change the text from בְּאֶחָד (be'ekhad, here "unchangeable") to בָּחַר (bakhar, "he has chosen"). The wording in the text is idiomatic and should be retained. R. Gordis (Job, 262) translates it "he is one, i.e., unchangeable, fixed, determined." The preposition ב (bet) is a bet essentiae – "and he [is] as one," or "he is one" (see GKC 379 §119.i).

[17] tn Heb "cause him to return."

[18] tn Or "his soul."

[19] tn The text has "my decree," which means "the decree [plan] for/against me." The suffix is objective, equivalent to a dative of disadvantage. The Syriac and the Vulgate actually have "his decree." R. Gordis (Job, 262) suggests taking it in the same sense as in Job 14:5: "my limit.".

[20] tn Heb "and many such [things] are with him."

sn The text is saying that many similar situations are under God's rule of the world – his plans are infinite.

[21] tn The verb חֵרֵךְ (kherekh) means "to be tender"; in the Piel it would have the meaning "to soften." The word is used in parallel constructions with the verbs for "fear." The implication is that God has made Job fearful.

[22] tn This is a very difficult verse. The Hebrew text literally says: "for I have not been destroyed because of darkness, and because of my face [which] gloom has covered." Most commentators omit the negative adverb, which gives the meaning that Job is enveloped in darkness and reduced to terror. The verb נִצְמַתִּי (nitsmatti) means "I have been silent" (as in Arabic and Aramaic), and so obviously the negative must be retained – he has not been silent.

The Apparent Indifference of God

24:1 "Why are times not appointed by[1] the Almighty?[2]
Why do those who know him not see his days?
24:2 Men[3] move boundary stones;
they seize the flock and pasture them.[4] 24:3 They drive away the orphan's donkey;
they take the widow's ox as a pledge.
24:4 They turn the needy from the pathway, and the poor of the land hide themselves together.[5] 24:5 Like[6] wild donkeys in the desert they[7] go out to their labor,[8] seeking diligently for food;
the wasteland provides[9] food for them and for their children.
24:6 They reap fodder[10] in the field, and glean[11] in the vineyard of the wicked.
24:7 They spend the night naked because they lack clothing;
they have no covering against the cold.
24:8 They are soaked by mountain rains and huddle[12] in the rocks because they lack shelter.
24:9 The fatherless child is snatched[13] from the breast,[14]
the infant of the poor is taken as a pledge.[15] 24:10 They go about naked, without clothing, and go hungry while they carry the sheaves.[16]
24:11 They press out the olive oil between the rows of olive trees;[17] they tread the winepresses while they are thirsty.[18] 24:12 From the city the dying[19] groan, and the wounded[20] cry out for help, but God charges no one with wrongdoing.[21] 24:13 There are those[22] who rebel against the light;
they do not know its ways and they do not stay on its paths.

1 tn The preposition מִן (min) is used to express the cause (see GKC 389 §121.f).

2 tc The LXX reads "Why are times hidden from the Almighty?" as if to say that God is not interested in the events on the earth. The MT reading is saying that God fails to set the times for judgment and vindication and makes good sense as it stands.

3 tn The line is short: "they move boundary stones." So some commentators have supplied a subject, such as "wicked men." The reason for its being wicked men is that to move the boundary stone was to encroach dishonestly on the lands of others (Deut 19:14; 27:17).

4 tc The LXX reads "and their shepherd." Many commentators accept this reading. But the MT says that they graze the flocks that they have stolen. The difficulty with the MT reading is that there is no suffix on the final verb – but that is not an insurmountable difference.

5 sn Because of the violence and oppression of the wicked, the poor and needy, the widows and orphans, all are deprived of their rights and forced out of the ways and into hiding just to survive.

6 tc The verse begins with הֵן (hen), but the LXX, Vulgate, and Syriac all have "like." R. Gordis (Job, 265) takes הֵן (hen) as a pronoun "they" and supplies the comparative. The sense of the verse is clear in either case.

7 tn That is, "the poor."

8 tc The MT has "in the working/labor of them," or "when they labor." Some commentators simply omit these words. Dhorme retains them and moves them to go with עֲרָבָה ('aravah), which he takes to mean "evening"; this gives a clause, "although they work until the evening." Then, with many others, he takes לוֹ (lo) to be a negative and finishes the verse with "no food for the children." Others make fewer changes in the text, and as a result do not come out with such a hopeless picture – there is some food found. The point is that they spend their time foraging for food, and they find just enough to survive, but it is a day-long activity. For Job, this shows how unrighteous the administration of the world actually is.

9 tn The verb is not included in the Hebrew text but is supplied in the translation.

10 tc The word בְּלִילוֹ (bᵉlilo) means "his fodder." It is unclear to what this refers. If the suffix is taken as a collective, then it can be translated "they gather/reap their fodder." The early versions all have "they reap in a field which is not his" (taking it as בְּלִי לוֹ, bᵉli lo). A conjectural emendation would change the word to בַּלַּיְלָה (ballaylah, "in the night"). But there is no reason for this.

11 tn The verbs in this verse are uncertain. In the first line "reap" is used, and that would be the work of a hired man (and certainly not done at night). The meaning of this second verb is uncertain; it has been taken to mean "glean," which would be the task of the poor.

12 tn Heb "embrace" or "hug."

13 tn The verb with no expressed subject is here again taken in the passive: "they snatch" becomes "[child] is snatched."

14 tn This word is usually defined as "violence; ruin." But elsewhere it does mean "breast" (Isa 60:16; 66:11), and that is certainly what it means here.

15 tc The MT has a very brief and strange reading: "they take as a pledge upon the poor." This could be taken as "they take a pledge against the poor" (ESV). Kamphausen suggested that instead of עַל ('al, "against") one should read עוּל ('ul, "suckling"). This is supported by the parallelism. "They take as pledge" is also made passive here.

16 sn The point should not be missed – amidst abundant harvests, carrying sheaves about, they are still going hungry.

17 tc The Hebrew term is שׁוּרֹתָם (shurotam), which may be translated "terraces" or "olive rows." But that would not be the proper place to have a press to press the olives and make oil. E. Dhorme (Job, 360-61) proposes on the analogy of an Arabic word that this should be read as "millstones" (which he would also write in the dual). But the argument does not come from a clean cognate, but from a possible development of words. The meaning of "olive rows" works well enough.

18 tn The final verb, a preterite with the ו (vav) consecutive, is here interpreted as a circumstantial clause.

19 tc The MT as pointed reads "from the city of men they groan." Most commentators change one vowel in מְתִים (mᵉtim) to get מֵתִים (metim) to get the active participle, "the dying." This certainly fits the parallelism better, although sense could be made out of the MT.

20 tn Heb "the souls of the wounded," which here refers to the wounded themselves.

21 tc The MT has the noun תִּפְלָה (tiflah) which means "folly; tastelessness" (cf. 1:22). The verb, which normally means "to place; to put," would then be rendered "to impute; to charge." This is certainly a workable translation in the context. Many commentators have emended the text, changing the noun to תְּפִלָּה (tᵉfillah, "prayer"), and so then also the verb יָשִׂים (yasim, here "charges") to יִשְׁמַע (yishma', "hears"). It reads: "But God does not hear the prayer" – referring to the groans.

22 tn Heb "They are among those who."

24:14 Before daybreak[1] the murderer rises
up;
he kills the poor and the needy;
in the night he is[2] like a thief.[3] 24:15 And the eye of the adulterer watches for the twilight, thinking,[4] 'No eye can see me,' and covers his face with a mask.
24:16 In the dark the robber[5] breaks into houses,[6]
but by day they shut themselves in;[7]
they do not know the light.[8] 24:17 For all of them,[9] the morning is to them like deep darkness;
they are friends with the terrors of darkness.

24:18[10] "You say,[11] 'He is foam[12] on the face of the waters;[13] their portion of the land is cursed so that no one goes to their vineyard.[14] 24:19 The drought as well as the heat carry away
the melted snow;[15]
so the grave[16] takes away those who have sinned.[17]

24:20 The womb[18] forgets him,
the worm feasts on him,
no longer will he be remembered.
Like a tree, wickedness will be broken down.
24:21 He preys on[19] the barren and childless woman,[20]
and does not treat the widow well.
24:22 But God[21] drags off the mighty by his power;
when God[22] rises up against him, he has no faith in his life.[23] 24:23 God[24] may let them rest in a feeling of security,[25]
but he is constantly watching[26] all their ways.[27]
24:24 They are exalted for a little while, and then they are gone,[28]
they are brought low[29] like all others,

[1] tn The text simply has לָאוֹר (la'or, "at light" or "at daylight"), probably meaning just at the time of dawn.

[2] tn In a few cases the jussive is used without any real sense of the jussive being present (see GKC 323 §109.k).

[3] sn The point is that he is like a thief in that he works during the night, just before the daylight, when the advantage is all his and the victim is most vulnerable.

[4] tn Heb "saying."

[5] tn The phrase "the robber" has been supplied in the English translation for clarification.

[6] tc This is not the idea of the adulterer, but of the thief. So some commentators reverse the order and put this verse after v. 14.

[7] tc The verb חָתְמוּ (khitt^{e}mu) is the Piel from the verb חָתַם (khatam, "to seal"). The verb is now in the plural, covering all the groups mentioned that work under the cover of darkness. The suggestion that they "seal," i.e., "mark" the house they will rob, goes against the meaning of the word "seal."

[8] tc Some commentators join this very short colon to the beginning of v. 17: "they do not know the light. For together..." becomes "for together they have not known the light."

[9] tn Heb "together."

[10] tc Many commentators find vv. 18-24 difficult on the lips of Job, and so identify this unit as a misplaced part of the speech of Zophar. They describe the enormities of the wicked. But a case can also be made for retaining it in this section. Gordis thinks it could be taken as a quotation by Job of his friends' ideas.

[11] tn The verb "say" is not in the text; it is supplied here to indicate that this is a different section.

[12] tn Or "is swift."

[13] sn The wicked person is described here as a spray or foam upon the waters, built up in the agitation of the waters but dying away swiftly.

[14] tn The text reads, "he does not turn by the way of the vineyards." This means that since the land is cursed, he/one does not go there. Bickell emended "the way of the vineyards" to "the treader of the vineyard" (see RSV, NRSV). This would mean that "no wine-presser would turn towards" their vineyards.

[15] tn Heb "the waters of the snow."

[16] tn Or "so Sheol."

[17] tn This is the meaning of the verse, which in Hebrew only has "The grave / they have sinned."

[18] tn Here "womb" is synecdoche, representing one's mother.

[19] tc The form in the text is the active participle, "feed; graze; shepherd." The idea of "prey" is not natural to it. R. Gordis (Job, 270) argues that third he (ה) verbs are often by-forms of geminate verbs, and so the meaning here is more akin to רָעַע (ra'a', "to crush"). The LXX seems to have read something like הֵרַע (hera', "oppressed").

[20] tn Heb "the childless [woman], she does not give birth." The verbal clause is intended to serve as a modifier here for the woman. See on subordinate verbal clauses GKC 490 §156.d, f.

[21] tn God has to be the subject of this clause. None is stated in the Hebrew text, but "God" has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. See the note on the word "life" at the end of the line.

[23] tn This line has been given a number of interpretations due to its cryptic form. The verb יָקוּם (yaqum) means "he rises up." It probably is meant to have God as the subject, and be subordinated as a temporal clause to what follows. The words "against him" are not in the Hebrew text, but have been supplied in the translation to specify the object and indicate that "rise up" is meant in a hostile sense. The following verb וְלֹא־יַאֲמִין (v^{e}lo'-ya'amin), by its very meaning of "and he does not believe," cannot have God as the subject, but must refer to the wicked.

[24] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[25] tn The expression לָבֶטַח (lavetakh, "in security") precedes the verb that it qualifies – God "allows him to take root in security." For the meaning of the verb, see Job 8:15.

[26] tn Heb "his eyes are on."

[27] sn The meaning of the verse is that God may allow the wicked to rest in comfort and security, but all the time he is watching them closely with the idea of bringing judgment on them.

[28] tn The Hebrew throughout this section (vv. 18-24) interchanges the singular and the plural. Here again we have "they are exalted...but he is not." The verse is clear nonetheless: the wicked rise high, and then suddenly they are gone.

[29] tn The verb is the Hophal of the rare verb מָכַךְ (makhakh), which seems to mean "to bend; to collapse." The text would read "they are made to collapse like all others." There is no reason here to change "like others" just because the MT is banal. But many do, following the LXX with "like mallows." The LXX was making a translation according to sense. R. Gordis (Job, 271) prefers "like grass."

and gathered in,[1]
and like a head of grain they are cut off.'[2]

24:25 "If this is not so, who can prove me a liar and reduce my words to nothing?"[3]

Bildad's Third Speech[4]

25:1 Then Bildad the Shuhite answered:
25:2 "Dominion[5] and awesome might[6] belong to[7] God;
he establishes peace in his heights.[8]
25:3 Can his armies be numbered?[9]
On whom does his light[10] not rise?
25:4 How then can a human being be righteous before God?
How can one born of a woman be pure?[11]
25:5 If even the moon is not bright, and the stars are not pure as far as he is concerned,[12] 25:6 how much less a mortal man, who is but a maggot[13] – a son of man, who is only a worm!"

Job's Reply to Bildad[14]

26:1 Then Job replied:
26:2 "How you have helped[15] the powerless![16]
How you have saved the person who has no strength![17]
26:3 How you have advised the one without wisdom, and abundantly[18] revealed your insight!
26:4 To whom[19] did you utter these words?
And whose spirit has come forth from your mouth?[20]

A Better Description of God's Greatness[21]

26:5 "The dead[22] tremble[23] – those beneath the waters and all that live in them.[24]

---

[1] tn The verb קָפַץ (qafats) actually means "to shut in," which does not provide exactly the idea of being gathered, not directly at least. But a change to קָטַף (qataf, "pluck") while attractive, is not necessary.

[2] sn This marks the end of the disputed section, taken here to be a quotation by Job of their sentiments.

[3] tn The word אַל ('al, "not") is used here substantivally ("nothing").

[4] sn The third speech of Bildad takes up Job 25, a short section of six verses. It is followed by two speeches from Job; and Zophar does not return with his third. Does this mean that the friends have run out of arguments, and that Job is just getting going? Many scholars note that in chs. 26 and 27 there is material that does not fit Job's argument. Many have rearranged the material to show that there was a complete cycle of three speeches. In that light, 26:5-14 is viewed as part of Bildad's speech. Some, however, take Bildad's speech to be only ch. 25, and make 26:5-14 an interpolated hymn. For all the arguments and suggestions, one should see the introductions and the commentaries.

[5] tn The word הַמְשֶׁל (hamshel) is a Hiphil infinitive absolute used as a noun. It describes the rulership or dominion that God has, that which gives power and authority.

[6] tn The word פַּחַד (pakhad) literally means "fear; dread," but in the sense of what causes the fear or the dread.

[7] tn Heb "[are] with him."

[8] sn The line says that God "makes peace in his heights." The "heights" are usually interpreted to mean the highest heaven. There may be a reference here to combat in the spiritual world between angels and Satan. The context will show that God has a heavenly host at his disposal, and nothing in heaven or on earth can shatter his peace. "Peace" here could also signify the whole order he establishes.

[9] tn Heb "Is there a number to his troops?" The question is rhetorical: there is no number to them!

[10] tc In place of "light" here the LXX has "his ambush," perhaps reading אֹרְבוֹ ('orevo) instead of אוֹרֵהוּ ('orehu, "his light"). But while that captures the idea of troops and warfare, the change should be rejected because the armies are linked with stars and light. The expression is poetic; the LXX interpretation tried to make it concrete.

[11] sn Bildad here does not come up with new expressions; rather, he simply uses what Eliphaz had said (see Job 4:17-19 and 15:14-16).

[12] tn Heb "not pure in his eyes."

[13] tn The text just has "maggot" and in the second half "worm." Something has to be added to make it a bit clearer. The terms "maggot" and "worm" describe man in his lowest and most ignominious shape.

[14] sn These two chapters will be taken together under this title, although most commentators would assign Job 26:5-14 to Bildad and Job 27:7-23 to Zophar. Those sections will be noted as they emerge. For the sake of outlining, the following sections will be marked off: Job's scorn for Bildad (26:2-4); a better picture of God's greatness (26:5-14); Job's protestation of innocence (27:2-6); and a picture of the condition of the wicked (27:7-23).

[15] tn The interrogative clause is used here as an exclamation, and sarcastic at that. Job is saying "you have in no way helped the powerless." The verb uses the singular form, for Job is replying to Bildad.

[16] tn The "powerless" is expressed here by the negative before the word for "strength; power" – "him who has no power" (see GKC 482 §152.u, v).

[17] tn Heb "the arm [with] no strength." Here too the negative expression is serving as a relative clause to modify "arm," the symbol of strength and power, which by metonymy stands for the whole person. "Man of arm" denoted the strong in 22:8.

[18] tc The phrase לָרֹב (larov) means "to abundance" or "in a large quantity." It is also used ironically like all these expressions. This makes very good sense, but some wish to see a closer parallel and so offer emendations. Reiske and Kissane thought "to the tender" for the word. But the timid are not the same as the ignorant and unwise. So Graetz supplied "to the boorish" by reading לְבָעַר (lᵉba'ar). G. R. Driver did the same with less of a change: לַבּוֹר (labbor; HTR 29 [1936]: 172).

[19] tn The verse begins with the preposition and the interrogative: אֶת־מִי ('et-mi, "with who[se help]?"). Others take it as the accusative particle introducing the indirect object: "for whom did you utter..." (see GKC 371 §117.gg). Both are possible.

[20] tn Heb "has gone out from you."

[21] sn This is the section, Job 26:5-14, that many conclude makes better sense coming from the friend. But if it is attributed to Job, then he is showing he can surpass them in his treatise of the greatness of God.

[22] tn The text has הָרְפָאִים (harᵉfa'im, "the shades"), referring to the "dead," or the elite among the dead (see Isa 14:9; 26:14; Ps 88:10 [11]). For further discussion, start with A. R. Johnson, The Vitality of the Individual, 88ff.

[23] tn The verb is a Polal from חִיל (khil) which means "to tremble." It shows that even these spirits cannot escape the terror.

[24] tc Most commentators wish to lengthen the verse and make it more parallel, but nothing is gained by doing this.

26:6 The underworld[1] is naked before God;[2]
the place of destruction lies uncovered.[3] 26:7 He spreads out the northern skies[4] over empty space;[5]
he suspends the earth on nothing.[6] 26:8 He locks the waters in his clouds, and the clouds do not burst with the weight of them.
26:9 He conceals[7] the face of the full moon,[8] shrouding it with his clouds.
26:10 He marks out the horizon[9] on the surface of the waters as a boundary between light and darkness.
26:11 The pillars[10] of the heavens tremble and are amazed at his rebuke.[11]
26:12 By his power he stills[12] the sea;
by his wisdom he cut Rahab the great sea monster[13] to pieces.[14] 26:13 By his breath[15] the skies became fair; his hand pierced the fleeing serpent.[16]
26:14 Indeed, these are but the outer fringes of his ways![17]
How faint is the whisper[18] we hear of him!
But who can understand the thunder of his power?"

A Protest of Innocence

27:1 And Job took up his discourse again:[19]
27:2 "As surely as God lives,[20] who has denied me justice,[21]
the Almighty, who has made my life bitter[22] – 27:3 for while[23] my spirit[24] is still in me, and the breath from God is in my nostrils, 27:4 my[25] lips will not speak wickedness, and my tongue will whisper[26] no deceit.
27:5 I will never[27] declare that you three[28] are in the right;

---

1 tn Heb "Sheol."

2 tn Heb "before him."

3 tn The line has "and there is no covering for destruction." "Destruction" here is another name for Sheol: אֲבַדּוֹן ('avaddon, "Abaddon").

4 sn The Hebrew word is צָפוֹן (tsafon). Some see here a reference to Mount Zaphon of the Ugaritic texts, the mountain that Baal made his home. The Hebrew writers often equate and contrast Mount Zion with this proud mountain of the north. Of course, the word just means north, and so in addition to any connotations for pagan mythology, it may just represent the northern skies – the stars. Since the parallel line speaks of the earth, that is probably all that was intended in this particular context.

5 sn There is an allusion to the creation account, for this word is תֹהוּ (tohu), translated "without form" in Gen 1:2.

6 sn Buttenwieser suggests that Job had outgrown the idea of the earth on pillars, and was beginning to see it was suspended in space. But in v. 11 he will still refer to the pillars.

7 tn The verb means "to hold; to seize," here in the sense of shutting up, enshrouding, or concealing.

8 tc The MT has כִּסֵּה (khisseh), which is a problematic vocalization. Most certainly כֶּסֶה (keseh), alternative for כֶּסֶא (kese', "full moon") is intended here. The MT is close to the form of "throne," which would be כִּסֵּא (kisse', cf. NLT "he shrouds his throne with his clouds"). But here God is covering the face of the moon by hiding it behind clouds.

9 tn The expression חֹק־חָג (khoq-khag) means "he has drawn a limit as a circle." According to some the form should have been חָקַק־חוּג (khaq-khug, "He has traced a circle"). But others argues that the text is acceptable as is, and can be interpreted as "a limit he has circled." The Hebrew verbal roots are חָקַק (khaqaq, "to engrave; to sketch out; to trace") and חוּג (khug, "describe a circle") respectively.

10 sn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 173) says these are the great mountains, perceived to hold up the sky.

11 sn The idea here is that when the earth quakes, or when there is thunder in the heavens, these all represent God's rebuke, for they create terror.

12 tn The verb רָגַע (raga') has developed a Semitic polarity, i.e., having totally opposite meanings. It can mean "to disturb; to stir up" or "to calm; to still." Gordis thinks both meanings have been invoked here. But it seems more likely that "calm" fits the context better.

13 tn Heb "Rahab" (רָהַב), the mythical sea monster that represents the forces of chaos in ancient Near Eastern literature. In the translation the words "the great sea monster" have been supplied appositionally in order to clarify "Rahab."

14 sn Here again there are possible mythological allusions or polemics. The god Yam, "Sea," was important in Ugaritic as a god of chaos. And Rahab is another name for the monster of the deep (see Job 9:13).

15 tn Or "wind"; or perhaps "Spirit." The same Hebrew word, רוּחַ (ruakh), may be translated as "wind," "breath," or "spirit/Spirit" depending on the context.

16 sn Here too is a reference to pagan views indirectly. The fleeing serpent was a designation for Leviathan, whom the book will simply describe as an animal, but the pagans thought to be a monster of the deep. God's power over nature is associated with defeat of pagan gods (see further W. F. Albright, Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan; idem, BASOR 53 [1941]: 39).

17 tn Heb "the ends of his ways," meaning "the fringes."

18 tn Heb "how little is the word." Here "little" means a "fraction" or an "echo."

19 tn The Hebrew word מָשָׁל (mashal) is characteristically "proverb; by-word." It normally refers to a brief saying, but can be used for a discourse (see A. R. Johnson, "Mašal," VTSup 3 [1955]: 162ff.).

20 tn The expression חַי־אֵל (khay-'el) is the oath formula: "as God lives." In other words, the speaker is staking God's life on the credibility of the words. It is like saying, "As truly as God is alive."

21 tn "My judgment" would here, as before, be "my right." God has taken this away by afflicting Job unjustly (A. B. Davidson, Job, 187).

22 tn The verb הֵמַר (hemar) is the Hiphil perfect from מָרַר (marar, "to be bitter") and hence, "to make bitter." The object of the verb is "my soul," which is better translated as "me" or "my life."

23 tn The adverb עוֹד ('od) was originally a noun, and so here it could be rendered "all the existence of my spirit." The word comes between the noun in construct and its actual genitive (see GKC 415 §128.e).

24 tn The word נְשָׁמָה (n^{e}shamah) is the "breath" that was breathed into Adam in Gen 2:7. Its usage includes the animating breath, the spiritual understanding, and the functioning conscience – so the whole spirit of the person. The other word in this verse, רוּחַ (ruakh), may be translated as "wind," "breath," or "spirit/Spirit" depending on the context. Here, since it talks about the nostrils, it should be translated "breath."

25 tn The verse begins with אִם ('im), the formula used for the content of the oath ("God lives...if I do/do not..."). Thus, the content of the oath proper is here in v. 4.

26 tn The verb means "to utter; to mumble; to meditate." The implication is that he will not communicate deceitful things, no matter how quiet or subtle.

27 tn The text uses חָלִילָה לִי (khalilah li) meaning "far be it from me," or more strongly, something akin to "sacrilege."

28 tn In the Hebrew text "you" is plural – a reference to Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad. To make this clear, "three" is supplied in the translation.

until I die, I will not set aside my integrity!
27:6 I will maintain my righteousness and never let it go;
my conscience[1] will not reproach me for as long as I live.[2]

The Condition of the Wicked

27:7 "May my enemy be like the wicked,[3] my adversary[4] like the unrighteous.[5] 27:8 For what hope does the godless have when he is cut off,[6]
when God takes away his life?[7] 27:9 Does God listen to his cry when distress overtakes him?
27:10 Will he find delight[8] in the Almighty?
Will he call out to God at all times?
27:11 I will teach you[9] about the power[10]
of God;
What is on the Almighty's mind[11] I will not conceal.
27:12 If you yourselves have all seen this,
Why in the world[12] do you continue this meaningless talk?[13]
27:13 This is the portion of the wicked man allotted by God,[14]
the inheritance that evildoers receive from the Almighty.
27:14 If his children increase – it is for the sword![15]
His offspring never have enough to eat.[16]
27:15 Those who survive him are buried by the plague,[17]
and their[18] widows do not mourn for them.
27:16 If he piles up silver like dust and stores up clothing like mounds of clay,
27:17 what he stores up[19] a righteous man will wear,
and an innocent man will inherit his silver.
27:18 The house he builds is as fragile as a moth's cocoon,[20] like a hut[21] that a watchman has made.
27:19 He goes to bed wealthy, but will do so no more.[22]
When he opens his eyes, it is all gone.[23]
27:20 Terrors overwhelm him like a flood;[24]
at night a whirlwind carries him off.
27:21 The east wind carries him away, and he is gone;
it sweeps him out of his place.

---

1 tn Heb "my heart."

2 tn The prepositional phrase "from my days" probably means "from the days of my birth," or "all my life."

3 sn Of course, he means like his enemy when he is judged, not when he is thriving in prosperity and luxury.

4 tn The form is the Hitpolel participle from קוּם (qum): "those who are rising up against me," or "my adversary."

5 tc The LXX made a free paraphrase: "No, but let my enemies be as the overthrow of the ungodly, and they that rise up against me as the destruction of transgressors."

6 tn The verb יִבָּצֵע (yivtsa') means "to cut off." It could be translated transitively or intransitively – the latter is better here ("when he is cut off"). Since the next line speaks of prayer, some have thought this verse should be about prayer. Mandelkern, in his concordance (p. 228b), suggested the verb should be "when he prays" (reading יִפְגַּע [yifga'] in place of יִבָּצֵע [yivtsa']).

7 tn The verb יֵישֶׁל (yeshel) is found only here. It has been related spoils [or sheaves]"); שָׁאַל (sha'al, "to ask"); נָשָׂא (nasa', "to lift up" [i.e., pray]); and a host of others.

8 tn See the note on 22:26 where the same verb is employed.

9 tn The object suffix is in the plural, which gives some support to the idea Job is speaking to them.

10 tn Heb "the hand of."

11 tn Heb "[what is] with Shaddai."

12 tn The interrogative uses the demonstrative pronoun in its emphatic position: "Why in the world…?" (IBHS 312-13 §17.4.3c).

13 tn The text has the noun "vain thing; breath; vapor," and then a denominative verb from the same root: "to become vain with a vain thing," or "to do in vain a vain thing." This is an example of the internal object, or a cognate accusative (see GKC 367 §117.q). The LXX has "you all know that you are adding vanity to vanity."

14 tn The expression "allotted by God" interprets the simple prepositional phrase in the text: "with/from God."

15 tn R. Gordis (Job, 294) identifies this as a breviloquence. Compare Ps 92:8 where the last two words also constitute the apodosis.

16 tn Heb "will not be satisfied with bread/food."

17 tn The text says "will be buried in/by death." A number of passages in the Bible use "death" to mean the plague that kills (see Jer 15:2; Isa 28:3; and BDB 89 s.v. בְּ 2.a). In this sense it is like the English expression for the plague, "the Black Death."

18 tc The LXX has "their widows" to match the plural, and most commentators harmonize in the same way.

19 tn The text simply repeats the verb from the last clause. It could be treated as a separate short clause: "He may store it up, but the righteous will wear it. But it also could be understood as the object of the following verb, "[what] he stores up the righteous will wear." The LXX simply has, "All these things shall the righteous gain."

20 tn Heb עָשׁ (kha'ash, "like a moth"), but this leaves room for clarification. Some commentators wanted to change it to "bird's nest" or just "nest" (cf. NRSV) to make the parallelism; see Job 4:14. But the word is not found. The LXX has a double expression, "as moths, as a spider." So several take it as the spider's web, which is certainly unsubstantial (cf. NAB, NASB, NLT; see Job 8:14).

21 tn The Hebrew word is the word for "booth," as in the Feast of Booths. The word describes something that is flimsy; it is not substantial at all.

22 tc The verb is the Niphal יֵאָסֵף (ye'asef), from אָסַף ('asaf, "to gather"). So, "he lies down rich, but he is not gathered." This does not make much sense. It would mean "he will not be gathered for burial," but that does not belong here. Many commentators accept the variant יאסף (yo'sif) stood for יוֹסִיף (yosif, "will [not] add"). This is what the LXX and the Syriac have. This leads to the interpretive translation that "he will do so no longer."

23 tn Heb "and he is not." One view is that this must mean that he dies, not that his wealth is gone. R. Gordis (Job, 295) says the first part should be made impersonal: "when one opens one's eyes, the wicked is no longer there." E. Dhorme (Job, 396) has it more simply: "He has opened his eyes, and it is for the last time." But the other view is that the wealth goes overnight. In support of this is the introduction into the verse of the wealthy. The RSV, NRSV, ESV, and NLT take it that "wealth is gone."

24 tn Many commentators want a word parallel to "in the night." And so we are offered בַּיּוֹם (bayyom, "in the day") for כַּמַּיִם (khammayim, "like waters") as well as a number of others. But "waters" sometimes stand for major calamities, and so may be retained here. Besides, not all parallel structures are synonymous.

27:22 It hurls itself against him without pity[1]
as he flees headlong from its power.
27:23 It claps[2] its hands at him in derision and hisses him away from his place.[3]

III. Job's Search for Wisdom (28:1-28)

No Known Road to Wisdom[4]

28:1 "Surely[5] there is a mine[6] for silver, and a place where gold is refined.[7] 28:2 Iron is taken from the ground,[8] and rock is poured out[9] as copper.
28:3 Man puts an end to the darkness;[10]
he searches the farthest recesses for the ore in the deepest darkness.[11]
28:4 Far from where people live[12] he sinks a shaft, in places travelers have long forgotten,[13] far from other people he dangles and sways.[14] 28:5 The earth, from which food comes, is overturned below as though by fire;[15] 28:6 a place whose stones are sapphires[16] and which contains dust of gold;[17] 28:7 a hidden path[18] no bird of prey knows – no falcon's[19] eye has spotted it.
28:8 Proud beasts[20] have not set foot on it, and no lion has passed along it.

1 tn The verb is once again functioning in an adverbial sense. The text has "it hurls itself against him and shows no mercy."

2 tn If the same subject is to be carried through here, it is the wind. That would make this a bold personification, perhaps suggesting the force of the wind. Others argue that it is unlikely that the wind claps its hands. They suggest taking the verb with an indefinite subject: "he claps" means "one claps. The idea is that of people rejoicing when the wicked are gone. But the parallelism is against this unless the second line is changed as well. R. Gordis (Job, 296) has "men will clap their hands...men will whistle upon him."

3 tn Or "hisses at him from its place" (ESV).

4 sn As the book is now arranged, this chapter forms an additional speech by Job, although some argue that it comes from the writer of the book. The mood of the chapter is not despair, but wisdom; it anticipates the divine speeches in the end of the book. This poem, like many psalms in the Bible, has a refrain (vv. 12 and 20). These refrains outline the chapter, giving three sections: there is no known road to wisdom (1-11); no price can buy it (12-19); and only God has it, and only by revelation can man posses it (20-28).

5 tn The poem opens with כִּי (ki). Some commentators think this should have been "for," and that the poem once stood in another setting. But there are places in the Bible where this word occurs with the sense of "surely" and no other meaning (cf. Gen 18:20).

6 tn The word מוֹצָא (motsa', from יָצָא [yatsa', "go out"]) is the word for "mine," or more simply, "source." Mining was not an enormous industry in the land of Canaan or Israel; mined products were imported. Some editors have suggested alternative readings: Dahood found in the word the root for "shine" and translated the MT as "smelter." But that is going too far. P. Joüon suggested "place of finding," reading מִמְצָא (mimtsa') for מוֹצָא (motsa'; see Bib 11 [1930]: 323).

7 tn The verb יְזֹקֹּו (yazoqqu) translated "refined," comes from זָקַק (zaqaq), a word that basically means "to blow." From the meaning "to blow; to distend; to inflate" derives the meaning for refining.

8 tn Heb "from dust."

9 tn The verb יְצוּק (yatsuq) is usually translated as a passive participle "is smelted" (from יָצַק [yatsaq, "to melt"]): "copper is smelted from the ore" (ESV) or "from the stone, copper is poured out" (as an imperfect from צוּק [tsuq]). But the rock becomes the metal in the process. So according to R. Gordis (Job, 304) the translation should be: "the rock is poured out as copper." E. Dhorme (Job, 400), however, defines the form in the text as "hard," and simply has it "hard stone becomes copper."

10 sn The text appears at first to be saying that by opening up a mine shaft, or by taking lights down below, the miner dispels the darkness. But the clause might be more general, meaning that man goes deep into the earth as if it were day.

11 tn The verse ends with "the stone of darkness and deep darkness." The genitive would be location, describing the place where the stones are found.

12 tc The first part of this verse, "He cuts a shaft far from the place where people live," has received a lot of attention. The word for "live" is גָּר (gar). Some of the proposals are: "limestone," on the basis of the LXX; "far from the light," reading נֵר (ner); "by a foreign people," taking the word to means "foreign people"; "a foreign people opening shafts"; or taking gar as "crater" based on Arabic. Driver puts this and the next together: "a strange people who have been forgotten cut shafts" (see AJSL 3 [1935]: 162). L. Waterman had "the people of the lamp" ("Note on Job 28:4," JBL 71 [1952]: 167ff). And there are others. Since there is really no compelling argument in favor of one of these alternative interpretations, the MT should be preserved until shown to be wrong.

13 tn Heb "forgotten by the foot." This means that there are people walking above on the ground, and the places below, these mines, are not noticed by the pedestrians above.

14 sn This is a description of the mining procedures. Dangling suspended from a rope would be a necessary part of the job of going up and down the shafts.

15 sn The verse has been properly understood, on the whole, as comparing the earth above and all its produce with the upheaval down below.

16 tn It is probably best to take "place" in construct to the rest of the colon, with an understood relative clause: "a place, the rocks of which are sapphires."

sn The modern stone known as sapphire is thought not to have been used until Roman times, and so some other stone is probably meant here, perhaps lapis lazuli.

17 sn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 181) suggests that if it is lapis lazuli, then the dust of gold would refer to the particles of iron pyrite found in lapis lazuli which glitter like gold.

18 tn The "path" could refer to the mine shaft or it could refer to wisdom. The former seems more likely in the present context; the word "hidden is supplied in the translation to indicate the mines are "hidden" from sharp-eyed birds of prey above.

19 sn The kind of bird mentioned here is debated. The LXX has "vulture," and so some commentaries follow that. The emphasis on the sight favors the view that it is the falcon.

20 tn Heb "the sons of pride." In Job 41:26 the expression refers to carnivorous wild beasts.

28:9 On the flinty rock man has set to work[1] with his hand;
he has overturned mountains at their bases.[2] 28:10 He has cut out channels[3] through the rocks;
his eyes have spotted[4] every precious thing.
28:11 He has searched[5] the sources[6] of the rivers and what was hidden he has brought into the light.

No Price Can Buy Wisdom

28:12 "But wisdom – where can it be found?
Where is the place of understanding?
28:13 Mankind does not know its place;[7]
it cannot be found in the land of the living.
28:14 The deep[8] says, 'It is not with[9] me.'
And the sea says, 'It is not with me.'
28:15 Fine gold cannot be given in exchange for it, nor can its price be weighed out in silver.
28:16 It cannot be measured out for purchase[10] with the gold of Ophir, with precious onyx[11] or sapphires.
28:17 Neither gold nor crystal[12] can be compared with it, nor can a vase[13] of gold match its worth.
28:18 Of coral and jasper no mention will be made;
the price[14] of wisdom is more than pearls.[15] 28:19 The topaz of Cush[16] cannot be compared with it;
it cannot be purchased with pure gold.

God Alone Has Wisdom

28:20 "But wisdom – where does it come from?[17]
Where is the place of understanding?
28:21 For[18] it has been hidden from the eyes of every living creature, and from the birds of the sky it has been concealed.
28:22 Destruction[19] and Death say,
'With our ears we have heard a rumor about where it can be found.'[20] 28:23 God understands the way to it, and he alone knows its place.
28:24 For he looks to the ends of the earth and observes everything under the heavens.
28:25 When he made[21] the force of the wind

---

[1] tn The Hebrew verb is simply "to stretch out; to send" (שָׁלַח, shalakh). With יָדוֹ (yado, "his hand") the idea is that of laying one's hand on the rock, i.e., getting to work on the hardest of rocks.

[2] tn The Hebrew מִשֹּׁרֶשׁ (mishoresh) means "from/at [their] root [or base]." In mining, people have gone below ground, under the mountains, and overturned rock and dirt. It is also interesting that here in a small way humans do what God does – overturn mountains (cf. 9:5).

[3] tn Or "tunnels." The word is יְאֹרִים (y'orim), the word for "rivers" and in the singular, the Nile River. Here it refers to tunnels or channels through the rocks.

[4] tn Heb "his eye sees."

[5] tc The translation "searched" follows the LXX and Vulgate; the MT reads "binds up" or "dams up." This latter translation might refer to the damming of water that might seep into a mine (HALOT 289 s.v. חבשׁ; cf. ESV, NJPS, NASB, REB, NLT).

[6] tc The older translations had "he binds the streams from weeping," i.e., from trickling (מִבֶּכִי, mibbekhi). But the Ugaritic parallel has changed the understanding, reading "toward the spring of the rivers" (`m mbk nhrm). Earlier than that discovery, the versions had taken the word as a noun as well. Some commentators had suggested repointing the Hebrew. Some chose מַבְּכֵי (mabbekhe, "sources"). Now there is much Ugaritic support for the reading (see G. M. Landes, BASOR 144 [1956]: 32f.; and H. L. Ginsberg, "The Ugaritic texts and textual criticism," JBL 62 [1943]: 111).

[7] tc The LXX has "its way, apparently reading דַּרְכָּהּ (darkhah) in place of עֶרְכָּהּ ('erkah, "place"). This is adopted by most modern commentators. But R. Gordis (Job, 308) shows that this change is not necessary, for עֶרֶךְ ('erekh) in the Bible means "order; row; disposition," and here "place." An alternate meaning would be "worth" (NIV, ESV).

[8] sn The תְּהוֹם (t'hom) is the "deep" of Gen 1:2, the abyss or primordial sea. It was always understood to be a place of darkness and danger. As remote as it is, it asserts that wisdom is not found there (personification). So here we have the abyss and the sea, then death and destruction – but they are not the places that wisdom resides.

[9] tn The ב (bet) preposition is taken here to mean "with" in the light of the parallel preposition.

[10] tn The word actually means "weighed," that is, lifted up on the scale and weighed, in order to purchase.

[11] tn The exact identification of these stones is uncertain. Many recent English translations, however, have "onyx" and "sapphires."

[12] tn The word is from זָכָךְ (zakhakh, "clear"). It describes a transparent substance, and so "glass" is an appropriate translation. In the ancient world it was precious and so expensive.

[13] tc The MT has "vase," but the versions have a plural here, suggesting jewels of gold.

[14] tn The word מַשָּׂךְ (meshekh) comes from a root meaning "to grasp; to seize; to hold," and so the derived noun means "grasping; acquiring; taking possession," and therefore, "price" (see the discussion in R. Gordis, Job, 309). Gray renders it "acquisition" (so A. Cohen, AJSL 40 [1923/24]: 175).

[15] tn In Lam 4:7 these are described as red, and so have been identified as rubies (so NIV) or corals.

[16] tn Or "Ethiopia." In ancient times this referred to the region of the upper Nile, rather than modern Ethiopia (formerly known as Abyssinia).

[17] tn The refrain is repeated, except now the verb is תָּבוֹא (tavo', "come").

[18] tn The vav on the verb is unexpressed in the LXX. It should not be overlooked, for it introduces a subordinate clause of condition (R. Gordis, Job, 310).

[19] tn Heb "Abaddon."

[20] tn Heb "heard a report of it," which means a report of its location, thus "where it can be found."

[21] tn Heb "he gave weight to the wind." The form is the infinitive construct with the ל (lamed) preposition. Some have emended it to change the preposition to the temporal ב (bet) on the basis of some of the versions (e.g., Latin and Syriac) that have "who made." This is workable, for the infinitive would then take on the finite tense of the previous verbs. An infinitive of purpose does not work well, for that would be saying God looked everywhere in order to give wind its proper weight (see R. Gordis, Job, 310).

and measured[1] the waters with a gauge.
28:26 When he imposed a limit[2] for the rain, and a path for the thunderstorm,[3] 28:27 then he looked at wisdom[4] and assessed its value;[5]
he established[6] it and examined it closely.[7] 28:28 And he said to mankind,
'The fear of the Lord[8] – that is wisdom, and to turn away from evil is understanding.'"[9]

IV. Job's Concluding Soliloquy (29:1-31:40)

Job Recalls His Former Condition[10]

29:1 Then Job continued[11] his speech:
29:2 "O that I could be[12] as[13] I was in the months now gone,[14]
in the days[15] when God watched[16] over me, 29:3 when[17] he caused[18] his lamp[19]

and by his light
I walked[20] through darkness;[21]

1 tn The verb is the Piel perfect, meaning "to estimate the measure" of something. In the verse, the perfect verb continues the function of the infinitive preceding it, as if it had a ו (vav) prefixed to it. Whatever usage that infinitive had, this verb is to continue it (see GKC 352 §114.r).

2 tn Or "decree."

3 tn Or "thunderbolt," i.e., lightning. Heb "the roaring of voices/sounds," which describes the nature of the storm.

4 tn Heb "it"; the referent (wisdom) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn The verb סָפַר (safar) in the Piel basically means "to tell; to declare; to show" or "to count; to number." Many commentators offer different suggestions for the translation. "Declared" (as in the RSV, NASB, and NRSV) would be the simplest – but to whom did God declare it? Besides "appraised" which is the view of Pope, Dhorme and others (cf. NAB, NIV), J. Reider has suggested "probed" ("Etymological studies in biblical Hebrew," VT 2 [1952]: 127), Strahan has "studied," and Kissane has "reckoned." The difficulty is that the line has a series of verbs, which seem to build to a climax, but without more details it is hard to know how to translate them when they have such a range of meaning.

6 tc The verb כּוּן (kun) means "to establish; to prepare" in this stem. There are several MSS that have the form from בִּין (bin, "discern"), giving "he discerned it," making more of a parallel with the first colon. But the weight of the evidence supports the traditional MT reading.

7 tn The verb חָקַר (khaqar) means "to examine; to search out." Some of the language used here is anthropomorphic, for the sovereign LORD did not have to research or investigate wisdom. The point is that it is as if he did this human activity, meaning that as in the results of such a search God knows everything about wisdom.

8 tc A number of medieval Hebrew manuscripts have YHWH ("LORD"); BHS has אֲדֹנָי ('adonay, "Lord"). As J. E. Hartley (Job [NICOT], 383) points out, this is the only occurrence of אֲדֹנָי ('adonay, "Lord") in the book of Job, creating doubt for retaining it. Normally, YHWH is avoided in the book. "Fear of" (יִרְאַת, yir'at) is followed by שַׁדַּי (shaddai, "Almighty") in 6:14 – the only other occurrence of this term for "fear" in construct with a divine title.

9 tc Many commentators delete this verse because (1) many read the divine name Yahweh (translated "LORD") here, and (2) it is not consistent with the argument that precedes it. But as H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 185) points out, there is inconsistency in this reasoning, for many of the critics have already said that this chapter is an interpolation. Following that line of thought, then, one would not expect it to conform to the rest of the book in this matter of the divine name. And concerning the second difficulty, the point of this chapter is that wisdom is beyond human comprehension and control. It belongs to God alone. So the conclusion that the fear of the LORD is wisdom is the necessary conclusion. Rowley concludes: "It is a pity to rob the poem of its climax and turn it into the expression of unrelieved agnosticism."

10 sn Now that the debate with his friends is over, Job concludes with a soliloquy, just as he had begun with one. Here he does not take into account his friends or their arguments. The speech has three main sections: Job's review of his former circumstances (29:1-25); Job's present misery (30:1-31); and Job's vindication of his life (31:1-40).

11 tn The verse uses a verbal hendiadys: "and he added (וַיֹּסֶף, vayyosef)...to raise (שְׂאֵת, s'et) his speech." The expression means that he continued, or he spoke again.

12 tn The optative is here expressed with מִי־יִתְּנֵנִי (mi-yitt'neni, "who will give me"), meaning, "O that I [could be]..." (see GKC 477 §151.b).

13 tn The preposition כ (kaf) is used here in an expression describing the state desired, especially in the former time (see GKC 376 §118.u).

14 tn The expression is literally "months of before [or of old; or past]." The word קֶדֶם (qedem) is intended here to be temporal and not spatial; it means days that preceded the present.

15 tn The construct state ("days of") governs the independent sentence that follows (see GKC 422 §130.d): "as the days of [...] God used to watch over me."

16 tn The imperfect verb here has a customary nuance – "when God would watch over me" (back then), or "when God used to watch over me."

17 tn This clause is in apposition to the preceding (see GKC 426 §131.o). It offers a clarification.

18 tn The form בְּהִלּוֹ (b'hillo) is unusual; it should be parsed as a Hiphil infinitive construct with the elision of the ה (he). The proper spelling would have been with a ַ (patakh) under the preposition, reflecting הַהִלּוֹ (hahillo). If it were Qal, it would just mean "when his light shone."

19 sn Lamp and light are symbols of God's blessings of life and all the prosperous and good things it includes.

20 tn Here too the imperfect verb is customary – it describes action that was continuous, but in a past time.

21 tn The accusative ("darkness") is here an adverbial accusative of place, namely, "in the darkness," or because he was successfully led by God's light, "through the darkness" (see GKC 374 §118.h).

22 tn Heb "in the days of my ripeness." The word חֹרֶף (khoref) denotes the time when the harvest is gathered in because the fruit is ripe. Since this is the autumn, many translate that way here – but "autumn" has a different connotation now. The text is pointing to a time when the righteous reaps what he has sown, and can enjoy the benefits. The translation "most productive time" seems to capture the point better than "autumn" or even "prime."

23 tc The word סוֹד (sod) in this verse is an infinitive construct, prefixed with the temporal preposition and followed by a subjective genitive. It forms a temporal clause. There is some disagreement about the form and its meaning. The confusion in the versions shows that they were paraphrasing to get the general sense. In the Bible the derived noun (from יָסַד, yasad) means (a) a circle of close friends; (b) intimacy. Others follow the LXX and the Syriac with a meaning of "protect," based on a change from ד (dalet) to כ (kaf), and assuming the root was סָכַךְ (sakhakh). This would mean, "when experienced in my tent,

29:5 when the Almighty[1] was still with me and my children were[2] around me;
29:6 when my steps[3] were bathed[4] with butter[5] and the rock poured out for me streams of olive oil![6] 29:7 When I went out to the city gate and secured my seat in the public square,[7] 29:8 the young men would see me and step aside,[8] and the old men would get up and remain standing; 29:9 the chief men refrained from talking and covered their mouths with their hands; 29:10 the voices of the nobles fell silent,[9]
and their tongues stuck to the roof of their mouths.

Job's Benevolence

29:11 "As soon as the ear heard these things,[10] it blessed me,[11] and when the eye saw them, it bore witness to me, 29:12 for I rescued the poor who cried out for help, and the orphan who[12] had no one to assist him;
29:13 the blessing of the dying man descended on me,[13] and I made the widow's heart rejoice;[14] 29:14 I put on righteousness and it clothed me,[15] my just dealing[16] was like a robe and a turban; 29:15 I was eyes for the blind and feet for the lame;
29:16 I was a father[17] to the needy, and I investigated the case of the person I did not know; 29:17 I broke the fangs[18] of the wicked, and made him drop[19] his prey from his teeth.

Job's Confidence

29:18 "Then I thought, 'I will die in my own home,[20]

God protected my tent" (cf. NAB). D. W. Thomas tries to justify this meaning without changing the text ("The Interpretation of BSŌD in Job 29:4," JBL 65 [1946]: 63-66).

[1] tn Heb "Shaddai."

[2] tc Some commentators suggest that עִמָּדִי ('immadi, "with me") of the second colon of v. 6 (which is too long) belongs to the second colon of v. 5, and should be pointed as the verb עָמְדוּ ('amadu, "they stood"), meaning the boys stood around him (see, e.g., E. Dhorme, Job, 417). But as R. Gordis (Job, 319) notes, there is a purpose for the imbalance of the metric pattern at the end of a section.

[3] tn The word is a hapax legomenon, but the meaning is clear enough. It refers to the walking, the steps, or even the paths where one walks. It is figurative of his course of life.

[4] tn The Hebrew word means "to wash; to bathe"; here it is the infinitive construct in a temporal clause, "my steps" being the genitive: "in the washing of my steps in butter."

[5] tn Again, as in Job 21:17, "curds."

[6] tn The MT reads literally, "and the rock was poured out [passive participle] for me as streams of oil." There are some who delete the word "rock" to shorten the line because it seems out of place. But olive trees thrive in rocky soil, and the oil presses are cut into the rock; it is possible that by metonymy all this is intended here (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 186).

[7] sn In the public square. The area referred to here should not be thought of in terms of modern western dimensions. The wide space, plaza, or public square mentioned here is the open area in the gate complex where legal and business matters were conducted. The area could be as small as a few hundred square feet.

[8] tn The verb means "to hide; to withdraw." The young men out of respect would withdraw or yield the place of leadership to Job (thus the translation "step aside"). The old men would rise and remain standing until Job took his seat – a sign of respect.

[9] tn The verb here is "hidden" as well as in v. 8. But this is a strange expression for voices. Several argue that the word was erroneously inserted from 8a and needs to be emended. But the word "hide" can have extended meanings of "withdraw; be quiet; silent" (see Gen 31:27). A. Guillaume relates the Arabic habi'a, "the fire dies out," applying the idea of "silent" only to v. 10 (it is a form of repetition of words with different senses, called jinas). The point here is that whatever conversation was going on would become silent or hushed to hear what Job had to say.

[10] tn The words "these things" and "them" in the next colon are not in the Hebrew text, but have been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[11] tn The main clause is introduced by the preterite with the vav (ו) consecutive (see GKC 327 §111.h); the clause before it is therefore temporal and circumstantial to the main clause.

[12] tn The negative introduces a clause that serves as a negative attribute; literally the following clause says, "and had no helper" (see GKC 482 §152.u).

[13] tn The verb is simply בּוֹא (bo', "to come; to enter"). With the preposition עַל ('al, "upon") it could mean "came to me," or "came upon me," i.e., descended (see R. Gordis, Job, 320).

[14] tn The verb אַרְנֵן ('arnin) is from רָנַן (ranan, "to give a ringing cry") but here "cause to give a ringing cry," i.e., shout of joy. The rejoicing envisioned in this word is far greater than what the words "sing" or "rejoice" suggest.

[15] tn Both verbs in this first half-verse are from לָבַשׁ (lavash, "to clothe; to put on clothing"). P. Joüon changed the vowels to get a verb "it adorned me" instead of "it clothed me" (Bib 11 [1930]: 324). The figure of clothing is used for the character of the person: to wear righteousness is to be righteous.

[16] tn The word מִשְׁפָּטִי (mishpati) is simply "my justice" or "my judgment." It refers to the decisions he made in settling issues, how he dealt with other people justly.

[17] sn The word "father" does not have a wide range of meanings in the OT. But there are places that it is metaphorical, especially in a legal setting like this where the poor need aid.

[18] tn The word rendered "fangs" actually means "teeth," i.e., the molars probably; it is used frequently of the teeth of wild beasts. Of course, the language is here figurative, comparing the oppressing enemy to a preying animal.

[19] tn "I made [him] drop." The verb means "to throw; to cast," throw in the sense of "to throw away." But in the context with the figure of the beast with prey in its mouth, "drop" or "cast away" is the idea. Driver finds another cognate meaning "rescue" (see AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163).

[20] tc The expression in the MT is "with my nest." The figure is satisfactory for the context – a home with all the young together, a picture of unity and safety. In Isa 16:2 the word can mean "nestlings," and with the preposition "with" that might be the meaning here, except that his children had grown up my days as numerous as the grains of sand.[1] 29:19 My roots reach the water, and the dew lies on my branches all night long.

29:20 My glory[2] will always be fresh[3] in me, and my bow ever new in my hand.'

Job's Reputation

29:21 "People[4] listened to me and waited silently;[5] they kept silent for my advice.
29:22 After I had spoken, they did not respond;
my words fell on them drop by drop.[6]
29:23 They waited for me as people wait[7] for the rain, and they opened their mouths[8] as for[9] the spring rains.
29:24 If I smiled at them, they hardly believed it;[10] and they did not cause the light of my face to darken.[11] 29:25 I chose[12] the way for them[13] and sat as their chief;[14]
I lived like a king among his troops;
I was like one who comforts mourners.[15]

Job's Present Misery

30:1 "But now they mock me, those who are younger[16] than I, whose fathers I disdained too much[17] to put with my sheep dogs.[18] 30:2 Moreover, the strength of their[19] hands – what use was it to me?
Men whose strength[20] had perished;

and lived in their own homes. The figure cannot be pushed too far. But the verse apparently has caused enormous problems, because the versions offer a variety of readings and free paraphrases. The LXX has "My age shall grow old as the stem of a palm tree, I shall live a long time." The Vulgate has, "In my nest I shall die and like the palm tree increase my days." G. R. Driver found an Egyptian word meaning "strength" ("Birds in the Old Testament," PEQ 87 [1955]: 138-39). Several read "in a ripe old age" instead of "in my nest" (Pope, Dhorme; see P. P. Saydon, "Philological and Textual Notes to the Maltese Translation of the Old Testament," CBQ 23 [1961]: 252). This requires the verb זָקַן (zaqan, "be old"), i.e., בִּזְקוּנַי (bizqunay, "in my old age") instead of קִנִּי (qinni, "my nest"). It has support from the LXX.

[1] tc For חוֹל (khol, "sand") the LXX has a word that is "like the palm tree," but which could also be translated "like the phoenix" (cf. NAB, NRSV). This latter idea was developed further in rabbinical teaching (see R. Gordis, Job, 321). See also M. Dahood, "Nest and phoenix in Job 29:18," Bib 48 (1967): 542-44. But the MT yields an acceptable sense here.

[2] tn The word is "my glory," meaning his high respect and his honor. Hoffmann proposed to read בִּידוֹן (kidon) instead, meaning "javelin" (as in 1 Sam 17:6), to match the parallelism (RQ 3 [1961/62]: 388). But the parallelism does not need to be so tight.

[3] tn Heb "new."

[4] tn "People" is supplied; the verb is plural.

[5] tc The last verb of the first half, "wait, hope," and the first verb in the second colon, "be silent," are usually reversed by the commentators (see G. R. Driver, "Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 86). But if "wait" has the idea of being silent as they wait for him to speak, then the second line would say they were silent for the reason of his advice. The reading of the MT is not impossible.

[6] tn The verb simply means "dropped," but this means like the rain. So the picture of his words falling on them like the gentle rain, drop by drop, is what is intended (see Deut 32:2).

[7] tn The phrase "people wait for" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation.

[8] sn The analogy is that they received his words eagerly as the dry ground opens to receive the rains.

[9] tn The כ (kaf) preposition is to be supplied by analogy with the preceding phrase. This leaves a double proposition, "as for" (but see Job 29:2).

[10] tn The connection of this clause with the verse is difficult. The line simply reads: "[if] I would smile at them, they would not believe." Obviously something has to be supplied to make sense out of this. The view adopted here makes the most sense, namely, that when he smiled at people, they could hardly believe their good fortune. Other interpretations are strained, such as Kissane's, "If I laughed at them, they believed not," meaning, people rejected the views that Job laughed at.

[11] tn The meaning, according to Gordis, is that they did nothing to provoke Job's displeasure.

[12] tn All of these imperfects describe what Job used to do, and so they all fit the category of customary imperfect.

[13] tn Heb "their way."

[14] tn The text simply has "and I sat [as their] head." The adverbial accusative explains his role, especially under the image of being seated. He directed the deliberations as a king directs an army.

[15] tc Most commentators think this last phrase is odd here, and so they either delete it altogether, or emend it to fit the idea of the verse. Ewald, however, thought it appropriate as a transition to the next section, reminding his friends that unlike him, they were miserable comforters. Herz made the few changes in the text to get the reading "where I led them, they were willing to go" (ZAW 20 [1900]: 163). The two key words in the MT are אֲבֵלִים יִנָּחֵם ('avelim yenakhem, "he [one who] comforts mourners"). Following Herz, E. Dhorme (Job, 422) has these changed to אוֹבִילִם יִנָּהוּ ('ovilem yinnakhu). R. Gordis has "like one leading a camel train" (Job, 324). But Kissane also retains the line as a summary of the chapter, noting its presence in the versions.

[16] tn Heb "smaller than I for days."

[17] tn Heb "who I disdained their fathers to set...," meaning "whose fathers I disdained to set." The relative clause modifies the young fellows who mock; it explains that Job did not think highly enough of them to put them with the dogs. The next verse will explain why.

[18] sn Job is mocked by young fellows who come from low extraction. They mocked their elders and their betters. The scorn is strong here – dogs were despised as scavengers.

[19] tn The reference is to the fathers of the scorners, who are here regarded as weak and worthless.

[20] tn The word כֹּחַ (kelakh) only occurs in Job 5:26, but the Arabic cognate gives this meaning "strength." Others suggest כָּלַח (kalakh, "old age"), כל־חַיִל (kol-khayil, "all vigor"), כל־לֵחַ (kol-leakh, "all freshness"), and the like. But there is no reason for such emendation.

30:3 gaunt[1] with want and hunger, they would gnaw[2] the parched land, in former time desolate and waste.[3] 30:4 By the brush[4] they would gather[5] herbs from the salt marshes,[6] and the root of the broom tree was their food.
30:5 They were banished from the community[7] – people[8] shouted at them like they would shout at thieves[9] – 30:6 so that they had to live[10] in the dry stream beds,[11]
in the holes of the ground, and among the rocks.
30:7 They brayed[12] like animals among the bushes and were huddled together[13] under the nettles.
30:8 Sons of senseless and nameless people,[14] they were driven out of the land with whips.[15]

Job's Indignities

30:9 "And now I have become their taunt song;
I have become a byword[16] among them.
30:10 They detest me and maintain their distance;[17]
they do not hesitate to spit in my face.
30:11 Because God has untied[18] my tent cord and afflicted me, people throw off all restraint in my presence.[19] 30:12 On my right the young rabble[20] rise up; they drive me from place to place,[21]
and build up siege ramps[22] against me.[23] 30:13 They destroy[24] my path;
they succeed in destroying me[25]
without anyone assisting[26] them.
30:14 They come in as through a wide breach;

---

1 tn This word, גָּלְמוּד (galmud), describes something as lowly, desolate, bare, gaunt like a rock.

2 tn The form is the plural participle with the definite article – "who gnaw." The article, joined to the participle, joins on a new statement concerning a preceding noun (see GKC 404 §126.b).

3 tn The MT has "yesterday desolate and waste." The word "yesterday" (אֶמֶשׁ, 'emesh) is strange here. Among the proposals for 'emesh ('emesh), Duhm suggested יְמַשְּׁשׁוּ (yemashesshu, "they grope"), which would require darkness; Pope renders "by night," instead of "yesterday," which evades the difficulty; and Fohrer suggested with more reason אֶרֶץ ('erets), "a desolate and waste land." R. Gordis (Job, 331) suggests יָמִישׁוּ / יָמֵשׁוּ (yamishu/yamushu), "they wander off."

4 tn Or "the leaves of bushes" (ESV), a possibility dating back to Saadia and discussed by G. R. Driver and G. B. Gray (Job [ICC], 2:209) in their philological notes.

5 tn Here too the form is the participle with the article.

6 tn Heb "gather mallow," a plant which grows in salt marshes.

7 tn The word גּוֹ (gev) is an Aramaic term meaning "midst," indicating "midst [of society]." But there is also a Phoenician word that means "community" (DISO 48).

8 tn The form simply is the plural verb, but it means those who drove them from society.

9 tn The text merely says "as thieves," but it obviously compares the poor to the thieves.

10 tn This use of the infinitive construct expresses that they were compelled to do something (see GKC 348-49 §114.h, k).

11 tn The adjectives followed by a partitive genitive take on the emphasis of a superlative: "in the most horrible of valleys" (see GKC 431 §133.h).

12 tn The verb נָהַק (nahaq) means "to bray." It has cognates in Arabic, Aramaic, and Ugaritic, so there is no need for emendation here. It is the sign of an animal's hunger. In the translation the words "like animals" are supplied to clarify the metaphor for the modern reader.

13 tn The Pual of the verb סָפַח (safakh, "to join") also brings out the passivity of these people – "they were huddled together" (E. Dhorme, Job, 434).

14 tn The "sons of the senseless" (נָבָל, naval) means they were mentally and morally base and defective; and "sons of no-name" means without honor and respect, worthless (because not named).

15 tn Heb "they were whipped from the land" (cf. ESV) or "they were cast out from the land" (HALOT 697 s.v. נגא). J. E. Hartley (Job [NICOT], 397) follows Gordis suggests that the meaning is "brought lower than the ground."

16 tn The idea is that Job has become proverbial, people think of misfortune and sin when they think of him. The statement uses the ordinary word for "word" (מִלָּה, millah), but in this context it means more: "proverb; byword."

17 tn Heb "they are far from me."

18 tn The verb פָּתַח (patakh) means "to untie [or undo]" a rope or bonds. In this verse יִתְרוֹ (yitro, the Kethib, LXX, and Vulgate) would mean "his rope" (see יֶתֶר [yeter] in Judg 16:7-9). The Qere would be יִתְרִי (yitri, "my rope [or cord]"), meaning "me." The word could mean "rope," "cord," or "bowstring." If the reading "my cord" is accepted, the cord would be something like "my tent cord" (as in Job 29:20), more than K&D 12:147 "cord of life." This has been followed in the present translation. If it were "my bowstring," it would give the sense of disablement. If "his cord" is taken, it would signify that the restraint that God had in afflicting Job was loosened – nothing was held back.

19 sn People throw off all restraint in my presence means that when people saw how God afflicted Job, robbing him of his influence and power, then they turned on him with unrestrained insolence (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 193).

20 tn This Hebrew word occurs only here. The word פִּרְחָה (pirkhakh, "young rabble") is a quadriliteral, from פָּרַח (parakh, "to bud") The derivative אֶפְרֹחַ ('efroakh) in the Bible refers to a young bird. In Arabic farhun means both "young bird" and "base man." Perhaps "young rabble" is the best meaning here (see R. Gordis, Job, 333).

21 tn Heb "they cast off my feet" or "they send my feet away." Many delete the line as troubling and superfluous. E. Dhorme (Job, 438) forces the lines to say "they draw my feet into a net."

22 tn Heb "paths of their destruction" or "their destructive paths."

23 sn See Job 19:12.

24 tn This verb נָתְסוּ (natesu) is found nowhere else. It is probably a variant of the verb in Job 19:10. R. Gordis (Job, 333-34) notes the Arabic noun natsun ("thorns"), suggesting a denominative idea "they have placed thorns in my path." Most take it to mean they ruin the way of escape.

25 tc The MT has "they further my misfortune." The line is difficult, with slight textual problems. The verb יוֹעִילוּ (yo'ilu) means "to profit," and so "to succeed" or "to set forward." Good sense can be made from the MT as it stands, and many suggested changes are suspect.

26 tn The sense of "restraining" for "helping" was proposed by Dillmann and supported by G. R. Driver (see AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163).

amid the crash[1] they come rolling in.[2] 30:15 Terrors are turned loose[3] on me;
they drive away[4] my honor like the wind, and like a cloud my deliverance has passed away.

Job's Despondency

30:16 "And now my soul pours itself out within me;[5] days of suffering take hold of me.
30:17 Night pierces[6] my bones;[7]
my gnawing pains[8] never cease.
30:18 With great power God[9] grasps my clothing;[10]
he binds me like the collar[11] of my tunic.
30:19 He has flung me into the mud, and I have come to resemble dust and ashes.
30:20 I cry out to you,[12] but you do not answer me;
I stand up,[13] and you only look at me.[14]
30:21 You have become cruel to me;[15] with the strength of your hand you attack me.[16] 30:22 You pick me up on the wind and make me ride on it;[17]
you toss me about[18] in the storm.[19] 30:23 I know that you are bringing[20] me to death, to the meeting place for all the living.

The Contrast With the Past

30:24 "Surely one does not stretch out his hand against a broken man[21]
when he cries for help in his distress.[22]
30:25 Have I not wept for the unfortunate?[23]
Was not my soul grieved for the poor?
30:26 But when I hoped for good, trouble came;
when I expected light, then darkness came.

---

1 tn The MT has "under the crash," with the idea that they rush in while the stones are falling around them (which is continuing the figure of the military attack). G. R. Driver took the expression to mean in a temporal sense "at the moment of the crash" (AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163-64). Guillaume, drawing from Arabic, has "where the gap is made."

2 tn The verb, the Hitpalpel of גָּלַל (galal), means "they roll themselves." This could mean "they roll themselves under the ruins" (Dhorme), "they roll on like a storm" (Gordis), or "they roll on" as in waves of enemy attackers (see H. H. Rowley). This particular verb form is found only here (but see Amos 5:24).

3 tn The passive singular verb (Hophal) is used with a plural subject (see GKC 388 §121.b).

4 tc This translation assumes that "terrors" (in the plural) is the subject. Others emend the text in accordance with the LXX, which has, "my hope is gone like the wind."

5 tn This line can either mean that Job is wasting away (i.e., his life is being poured out), or it can mean that he is grieving. The second half of the verse gives the subordinate clause of condition for this.

6 tn The subject of the verb "pierces" can be the night (personified), or it could be God (understood), leaving "night" to be an adverbial accusative of time – "at night he pierces."

7 tc The MT concludes this half-verse with "upon me." That phrase is not in the LXX, and so many commentators delete it as making the line too long.

8 tn Heb "my gnawers," which is open to several interpretations. The NASB and NIV take it as "gnawing pains"; cf. NRSV "the pain that gnaws me." Some suggest worms in the sores (7:5). The LXX has "my nerves," a view accepted by many commentators.

9 tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tc This whole verse is difficult. The first problem is that this verb in the MT means "is disguised [or disfigured]," indicating that Job's clothes hang loose on him. But many take the view that the verb is a phonetic variant of חָבַשׁ (khavash, "to bind; to seize") and that the Hitpael form is a conflation of the third and second person because of the interchange between them in the passage (R. Gordis, Job, 335). The commentaries list a number of conjectural emendations, but the image in the verse is probably that God seizes Job by the garment and throws him down.

11 tn The phrase "like the collar" is difficult, primarily because their tunics did not have collars. A translation of "neck" would suit better. Some change the preposition to ב (bet), getting a translation "by the neck of my tunic."

12 sn The implication from the sentence is that this is a cry to God for help. The sudden change from third person (v. 19) to second person (v. 20) is indicative of the intense emotion of the sufferer.

13 sn The verb is simple, but the interpretation difficult. In this verse it probably means he stands up in prayer (Jer 15:1), but it could mean that he makes his case to God. Others suggest a more figurative sense, like the English expression "stand pat," meaning "remain silent" (see Job 29:8).

14 tn If the idea of prayer is meant, then a pejorative sense to the verb is required. Some supply a negative and translate "you do not pay heed to me." This is supported by one Hebrew MS and the Vulgate. The Syriac has the whole colon read with God as the subject, "you stand and look at me."

15 tn The idiom uses the Niphal verb "you are turned" with "to cruelty." See Job 41:20b, as well as Isa 63:10.

16 tc The LXX reads this verb as "you scourged/whipped me." But there is no reason to adopt this change.

17 sn Here Job changes the metaphor again, to the driving storm. God has sent his storms, and Job is blown away.

18 tn The verb means "to melt." The imagery would suggest softening the ground with the showers (see Ps 65:10 [11]). The translation "toss...about" comes from the Arabic cognate that is used for the surging of the sea.

19 tc The Qere is תּוּשִׁיָּה (tushiyyah, "counsel"), which makes no sense here. The Kethib is a variant orthography for תְּשָׁאָה (t^{e}shu'ah, "storm").

20 tn The imperfect verb would be a progressive imperfect, it is future, but it is also already underway.

21 tc Here is another very difficult verse, as is attested by the differences among commentaries and translations. The MT has "surely not against a ruinous heap will he [God] put forth his [God's] hand." But A. B. Davidson takes Job as the subject, reading "does not one stretch out his hand in his fall?" The RSV suggests a man walking in the ruins and using his hand for support. Dillmann changed it to "drowning man" to say "does not a drowning man stretch out his hand?" Beer has "have I not given a helping hand to the poor?" Dhorme has, "I did not strike the poor man with my hand." Kissane follows this but retains the verb form, "one does not strike the poor man with his hand."

22 tc The second colon is also difficult; it reads, "if in his destruction to them he cries." E. Dhorme (Job, 425-26) explains how he thinks "to them" came about, and he restores "to me." This is the major difficulty in the line, and Dhorme's suggestion is the simplest resolution.

23 tn Heb "for the hard of day."

30:27 My heart[1] is in turmoil[2] unceasingly;[3]
the days of my affliction confront me.
30:28 I go about blackened,[4] but not by the sun;
in the assembly I stand up and cry for help.
30:29 I have become a brother to jackals and a companion of ostriches.[5] 30:30 My skin has turned dark on me;[6]
my body[7] is hot with fever.[8] 30:31 My harp is used for[9] mourning and my flute for the sound of weeping.

Job Vindicates Himself

31:1 "I made a covenant with[10] my eyes;
how then could I entertain thoughts against a virgin?[11] 31:2 What then would be one's lot from God above, one's heritage from the Almighty[12] on high?
31:3 Is it not misfortune for the unjust, and disaster for those who work iniquity?
31:4 Does he not see my ways and count all my steps?
31:5 If[13] I have walked in falsehood, and if[14] my foot has hastened[15] to deceit – 31:6 let him[16] weigh me with honest[17] scales;
then God will discover[18] my integrity.
31:7 If my footsteps have strayed from the way, if my heart has gone after my eyes,[19] or if anything[20] has defiled my hands, 31:8 then let me sow[21] and let another eat, and let my crops[22] be uprooted.
31:9 If my heart has been enticed by a woman, and I have lain in wait at my neighbor's door,[23] 31:10 then let my wife turn the millstone[24] for another man, and may other men have sexual relations with her.[25]

---

1 tn Heb "my loins," "my bowels" (archaic), "my innermost being." The latter option is reflected in the translation; some translations take the inner turmoil to be literal (NIV: "The churning inside me never stops").

2 tn Heb "boils."

3 tn The last clause reads "and they [it] are not quiet" or "do not cease." The clause then serves adverbially for the sentence – "unceasingly."

4 tn The construction uses the word קֹדֵר (qoder) followed by the Piel perfect of הָלַךְ (halakh, "I go about"). The adjective "blackened" refers to Job's skin that has been marred by the disease. Adjectives are often used before verbs to describe some bodily condition (see GKC 374-75 §118.n).

5 sn The point of this figure is that Job's cries of lament are like the howls and screeches of these animals, not that he lives with them. In Job 39:13 the female ostrich is called "the wailer."

6 tn The MT has "become dark from upon me," prompting some editions to supply the verb "falls from me" (RSV, NRSV), or "peels" (NIV).

7 tn The word "my bones" may be taken as a metonymy of subject, the bony framework indicating the whole body.

8 tn The word חֹרֶב (khorev) also means "heat." The heat in this line is not that of the sun, but obviously a fever.

9 tn The verb הָיָה (hayah, "to be") followed by the preposition ל (lamed) means "to serve the purpose of" (see Gen 1:14ff., 17:7, etc.).

10 tn The idea of cutting a covenant for something may suggest a covenant that is imposed, except that this construction elsewhere argues against it (see 2 Chr 29:10).

11 tn This half-verse is the effect of the covenant. The interrogative מָה (mah) may have the force of the negative, and so be translated "not to pay attention."

12 tn Heb "lot of Shaddai," which must mean "the lot from Shaddai," a genitive of source.

13 tn The normal approach is to take this as the protasis, and then have it resumed in v. 7 after a parenthesis in v. 6. But some take v. 6 as the apodosis and a new protasis in v. 7.

14 tn The "if" is understood by the use of the consecutive verb.

15 sn The verbs "walk" and "hasten" (referring in the verse to the foot) are used metaphorically for the manner of life Job lived.

16 tn "God" is undoubtedly the understood subject of this jussive. However, "him" is retained in the translation at this point to avoid redundancy since "God" occurs in the second half of the verse.

17 tn The word צֶדֶק (tsedeq, "righteousness") forms a fitting genitive for the scales used in trade or justice. The "scales of righteousness" are scales that conform to the standard (see the illustration in Deut 25:13-15). They must be honest scales to make just decisions.

18 tn The verb is וְיֵדַע (vᵉyeda', "and [then] he [God] will know"). The verb could also be subordinated to the preceding jussive, "so that God may know." The meaning of "to know" here has more the idea of "to come to know; to discover."

19 sn The meaning is "been led by what my eyes see."

20 tc The word מְאוּם (mu'um) could be taken in one of two ways. One reading is to represent מוּם (mum, "blemish," see the Masorah); the other is for מְאוּמָה (mᵉ'umah, "anything," see the versions and the Kethib). Either reading fits the passage.

21 tn The cohortative is often found in the apodosis of the conditional clause (see GKC 320 §108.f).

22 tn The word means "what sprouts up" (from יָצָא [yatsa'] with the sense of "sprout forth"). It could refer metaphorically to children (and so Kissane and Pope), as well as in its literal sense of crops. The latter fits here perfectly.

23 tn Gordis notes that the word פֶּתַח (petakh, "door") has sexual connotations in rabbinic literature, based on Prov 7:6ff. (see b. Ketubbot 9b). See also the use in Song 4:12 using a synonym.

24 tn Targum Job interpreted the verb טָחַן (takhan, "grind") in a sexual sense, and this has influenced other versions and commentaries. But the literal sense fits well in this line. The idea is that she would be a slave for someone else. The second line of the verse then might build on this to explain what kind of a slave – a concubine (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 215).

25 tn Heb "bow down over her," an idiom for sexual relations.

sn The idea is that if Job were guilty of adultery it would be an offense against the other woman's husband, and so by talionic justice another man's adultery with Job's wife would be an offense against him. He is not wishing something on his wife; rather, he is simply looking at what would be offenses in kind.

31:11 For I would have committed[1] a shameful act,[2]
an iniquity to be judged.[3]
31:12 For it is a fire that devours even to Destruction,[4]
and it would uproot[5] all my harvest.

31:13 "If I have disregarded the right of my male servants or my female servants
when they disputed[6] with me, 31:14 then what will I do when God confronts me in judgment;[7] when he intervenes,[8]
how will I respond to him?
31:15 Did not the one who made me in the womb make them?[9]
Did not the same one form us in the womb?
31:16 If I have refused to give the poor
what they desired,[10]
or caused the eyes of the widow to fail, 31:17 If I ate my morsel of bread myself, and did not share any of it with orphans[11] – 31:18 but from my youth I raised the orphan[12] like a father, and from my mother's womb[13]
I guided the widow![14]
31:19 If I have seen anyone about to perish for lack of clothing, or a poor man without a coat, 31:20 whose heart did not bless me[15] as he warmed himself with the fleece of my sheep,[16]
31:21 if I have raised my hand[17] to vote against the orphan,
when I saw my support in the court,[18] 31:22 then[19] let my arm fall from the shoulder,[20]
let my arm be broken off at the socket.[21] 31:23 For the calamity from God was a terror to me,[22]
and by reason of his majesty[23] I was powerless.

31:24 "If I have put my confidence in gold or said to pure gold,

---

1 tn Heb "for that [would be]." In order to clarify the referent of "that," which refers to v. 9 rather than v. 10, the words "I have committed" have been supplied in the translation.

2 tn The word for "shameful act" is used especially for sexual offenses (cf. Lev 18:27).

3 tc Some have deleted this verse as being short and irrelevant, not to mention problematic. But the difficulties are not insurmountable, and there is no reason to delete it. There is a Kethib-Qere reading in each half verse; in the first the Kethib is masculine for the subject but the Qere is feminine going with "shameless deed." In the second colon the Kethib is the feminine agreeing with the preceding noun, but the Qere is masculine agreeing with "iniquity."

tn The expression עָוֹן פְּלִילִים ('avon pᵉlilim) means "an iniquity of the judges." The first word is not spelled as a construct noun, and so this has led some to treat the second word as an adjective (with enclitic mem [ם]). The sense is similar in either case, for the adjective occurs in Job 31:28 meaning "calling for judgment" (See GKC 427 §131.s).

4 tn Heb "to Abaddon."

5 tn The verb means "to root out," but this does not fit the parallelism with fire. Wright changed two letters and the vowels in the verb to get the root צָרַף (tsaraf, "to burn"). The NRSV has "burn to the root."

6 tn This construction is an adverbial clause using the temporal preposition, the infinitive from רִיב (riv, "contend"), and the suffix which is the subjective genitive.

7 tn Heb "arises." The LXX reads "takes vengeance," an interpretation that is somewhat correct but unnecessary. The verb "to rise" would mean "to confront in judgment."

8 tn The verb פָּקַד (paqad) means "to visit," but with God as the subject it means any divine intervention for blessing or cursing, anything God does that changes a person's life. Here it is "visit to judge."

9 tn Heb "him," but the plural pronoun has been used in the translation to indicate that the referent is the servants mentioned in v. 13 (since the previous "him" in v. 14 refers to God).

10 tn Heb "kept the poor from [their] desire."

11 tn Heb "and an orphan did not eat from it."

12 tn Heb "he grew up with me." Several commentators have decided to change the pronoun to "I," and make it causative.

13 tn The expression "from my mother's womb" is obviously hyperbolic. It is a way of saying "all his life."

14 tn Heb "I guided her," referring to the widow mentioned in v. 16.

15 tn The MT has simply "if his loins did not bless me." In the conditional clause this is another protasis. It means, "if I saw someone dying and if he did not thank me for clothing them." It is Job's way of saying that whenever he saw a need he met it, and he received his share of thanks – which prove his kindness. G. R. Driver has it "without his loins having blessed me," taking "If...not" as an Aramaism, meaning "except" (AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 164f.).

16 tn This clause is interpreted here as a subordinate clause to the first half of the verse. It could also be a separate clause: "was he not warmed...?"

17 tn The expression "raised my hand" refers to a threatening manner or gesture in the court rather than a threat of physical violence in the street. Thus the words "to vote" are supplied in the translation to indicate the setting.

18 tn Heb "gate," referring to the city gate where judicial decisions were rendered in the culture of the time. The translation uses the word "court" to indicate this to the modern reader, who might not associate a city gate complex with judicial functions.

19 sn Here is the apodosis, the imprecation Job pronounces on himself if he has done any of these things just listed.

20 tn The point is that if he has raised his arm against the oppressed it should be ripped off at the joint. The MT has "let fall my shoulder [כְּתֵפִי, kᵉtefi] from the nape of the neck [or shoulder blade (מִשְׁכְּמָה, mishikhmah)]."

21 tn The word קָנֶה (qaneh) is "reed; shaft; beam," and here "shoulder joint." All the commentaries try to explain how "reed" became "socket; joint." This is the only place that it is used in such a sense. Whatever the exact explanation – and there seems to be no convincing view – the point of the verse is nonetheless clear.

22 tc The LXX has "For the terror of God restrained me." Several commentators changed it to "came upon me." Driver had "The fear of God was burdensome." I. Eitan suggested "The terror of God was mighty upon me" ("Two unknown verbs: etymological studies," JBL 42 [1923]: 22-28). But the MT makes clear sense as it stands.

23 tn The form is וּמִשְּׂאֵתוֹ (umissᵉ'eto); the preposition is causal. The form, from the verb נָשָׂא (nasa', "to raise; to lift high"), refers to God's exalted person, his majesty (see Job 13:11).

'You are my security!'
31:25 if I have rejoiced because of the extent of my wealth, or because of the great wealth my hand had gained, 31:26 if I looked at the sun[1] when it was shining, and the moon advancing as a precious thing, 31:27 so that my heart was secretly enticed, and my hand threw them a kiss from my mouth,[2] 31:28 then this[3] also would be iniquity to be judged,[4] for I would have been false[5] to God above.
31:29 If[6] I have rejoiced over the misfortune of my enemy[7] or exulted[8] because calamity[9] found him – 31:30 I[10] have not even permitted my mouth[11] to sin by asking[12] for his life through a curse – 31:31 if[13] the members of my household[14] have never said,[15]
'If only there were[16] someone who has not been satisfied from Job's[17] meat!' – 31:32 But[18] no stranger had to spend the night outside, for I opened my doors to the traveler[19] – 31:33 if[20] I have covered my transgressions as men do,[21]
by hiding[22] iniquity in my heart,[23]
31:34 because I was terrified[24] of the great multitude,[25] and the contempt of families terrified me, so that I remained silent and would not go outdoors – [26]

Job's Appeal

31:35 "If only I had[27] someone to hear me!
Here is my signature – [28]

[1] tn Heb "light," but parallel to the moon it is the sun. This section speaks of false worship of the sun and the moon.

[2] tn Heb "and my hand kissed my mouth." The idea should be that of "my mouth kissed my hand." H. H. Rowley suggests that the hand was important in waving or throwing the kisses of homage to the sun and the moon, and so it receives the focus. This is the only place in the OT that refers to such a custom. Outside the Bible it was known, however.

[3] tn Heb "it."

[4] tn See v. 11 for the construction. In Deut 17:2ff. false worship of heavenly bodies is a capital offense. In this passage, Job is talking about just a momentary glance at the sun or moon and the brief lapse into a pagan thought. But it is still sin.

[5] tn The verb כָּחַשׁ (kakhash) in the Piel means "to deny." The root meaning is "to deceive; to disappoint; to grow lean." Here it means that he would have failed or proven unfaithful because his act would have been a denial of God.

[6] tn The problem with taking this as "if," introducing a conditional clause, is finding the apodosis, if there is one. It may be that the apodosis is understood, or summed up at the end. This is the view taken here. But R. Gordis (Job, 352) wishes to take this word as the indication of the interrogative, forming the rhetorical question to affirm he has never done this. However, in that case the parenthetical verses inserted become redundant.

[7] sn The law required people to help their enemies if they could (Exod 23:4; also Prov 20:22). But often in the difficulties that ensued, they did exult over their enemies' misfortune (Pss 54:7; 59:10 [11], etc.). But Job lived on a level of purity that few ever reach. Duhm said, "If chapter 31 is the crown of all ethical developments of the O.T., verse 29 is the jewel in that crown."

[8] tn The Hitpael of עוּר ('ur) has the idea of "exult."

[9] tn The word is רָע (ra', "evil") in the sense of anything that harms, interrupts, or destroys life.

[10] tn This verse would then be a parenthesis in which he stops to claim his innocence.

[11] tn Heb "I have not given my palate."

[12] tn The infinitive construct with the לְ (lamed) preposition ("by asking") serves in an epexegetical capacity here, explaining the verb of the first colon ("permitted...to sin"). To seek a curse on anyone would be a sin.

[13] tn Now Job picks up the series of clauses serving as the protasis.

[14] tn Heb "the men of my tent." In context this refers to members of Job's household.

[15] sn The line is difficult to sort out. Job is saying it is sinful "if his men have never said, 'O that there was one who has not been satisfied from his food.'" If they never said that, it would mean there were people out there who needed to be satisfied with his food.

[16] tn The optative is again expressed with "who will give?"

[17] tn Heb "his"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn This verse forms another parenthesis. Job stops almost at every point now in the conditional clauses to affirm his purity and integrity.

[19] tn The word in the MT, אֹרַח ('orakh, "way"), is a contraction from אוֹרֵחַ ('oreakh, "wayfarer"); thus, "traveler." The same parallelism is found in Jer 14:8. The reading here "on/to the road" is meaningless otherwise.

[20] tn Now the protasis continues again.

[21] sn Some commentators suggest taking the meaning here to be "as Adam," referring to the Paradise story of the sin and denial.

[22] tn The infinitive is epexegetical, explaining the first line.

[23] tn The MT has "in my bosom." This is the only place in the OT where this word is found. But its meaning is well attested from Aramaic.

[24] tn Here too the verb will be the customary imperfect – it explains what he continually did in past time.

[25] tn Heb "the great multitude." But some commentators take רַבָּה (rabbah) adverbially: "greatly" (see RSV).

[26] sn There is no clear apodosis for all these clauses. Some commentators transfer the verses around to make them fit the constructions. But the better view is that there is no apodosis – that Job broke off here, feeling it was useless to go further. Now he will address God and not men. But in vv. 38-40b he does return to a self-imprecation. However, there is not sufficient reason to start rearranging all the verses.

[27] tn The optative is again introduced with "who will give to me hearing me? – O that someone would listen to me!"

[28] tn Heb "here is my 'tav'" (הֵן תָּוִי, hen tavi). The letter ת (tav) is the last letter of the alphabet in Hebrew. In paleo-Hebrew the letter was in the form of a cross or an "X," and so used for one making a mark or a signature. In this case Job has signed his statement and delivered it to the court – but he has yet to be charged. Kissane thought that this being the last letter of the alphabet, Job was saying, "This is my last word." Others take the word to mean "desire" – "this is my desire, that God would answer me" (see E. F. Sutcliffe, "Notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 30 [1949]: 71-72; G. R. Driver, AJSL 3 [1935/36]: 166; P. P. Saydon, "Philological and Textual Notes to the Maltese Translation of the Old Testament," CBQ 23 [1961]: 252). R. Gordis (Job, 355) also argues strongly for this view.

let the Almighty answer me!
If only I had an indictment[1] that my accuser had written.[2] 31:36 Surely[3] I would wear it proudly[4] on my shoulder,
I would bind[5] it on me like a crown;
31:37 I would give him an accounting of my steps;
like a prince I would approach him.

Job's Final Solemn Oath[6]

31:38 "If my land cried out against me[7] and all its furrows wept together, 31:39 if I have eaten its produce without paying,[8]
or caused the death[9] of its owners,[10] 31:40 then let thorns sprout up in place of wheat,
and in place of barley, weeds!"[11]

The words of Job are ended.

V. The Speeches of Elihu (32:1-37:24)

Elihu's First Speech[12]

32:1 So these three men refused to answer[13] Job further, because he was righteous in his[14] own eyes. 32:2 Then Elihu son of Barakel the Buzite, of the family of Ram, became very angry.[15] He was angry[16] with Job for justifying[17] himself rather than God.[18] 32:3 With Job's[19] three friends he was also angry, because they could not find[20] an answer, and so declared Job guilty.[21] 32:4 Now Elihu had waited before speaking[22] to Job, because the

1 tn Heb "a scroll," in the context referring to a scroll containing the accusations of Job's legal adversary (see the next line).

2 tn The last line is very difficult; it simply says, "a scroll [that] my [legal] adversary had written." The simplest way to handle this is to see it as a continuation of the optative (RSV).

3 tn The clause begins with the positive oath formula, אִם־לֹא ('im-lo').

4 tn The word "proudly" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied (note the following line).

5 tn This verb is only found in Prov 6:21. But E. Dhorme (Job, 470) suggests that (with metathesis) we have a derivative מַעֲדָנוֹת (ma'adannot, "bonds; ties") in 38:31.

6 sn Many commentators place vv. 38-40b at the end of v. 34, so that there is no return to these conditional clauses after his final appeal.

7 sn Some commentators have suggested that the meaning behind this is that Job might not have kept the year of release (Deut 15:1), and the law against mixing seed (Lev 19:19). But the context will make clear that the case considered is obtaining the land without paying for it and causing the death of its lawful owner (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 206). Similar to this would be the case of Naboth's vineyard.

8 tn Heb "without silver."

9 tc The versions have the verb "grieved" here. The Hebrew verb means "to breathe," but the form is Hiphil. This verb in that stem could mean something of a contemptuous gesture, like "sniff" in Mal 1:13. But with נֶפֶשׁ (nefesh) in Job 11:20 it means "to cause death," i.e., "to cause to breathe out; to expire." This is likely the meaning here, although it is possible that it only meant "to cause suffering" to the people.

10 tn There is some debate over the meaning of בְּעָלֶיהָ (be'aleyha), usually translated "its owners." Dahood, following others (although without their emendations), thought it referred to "laborers" (see M. Dahood, Bib 41 [1960]: 303; idem, Bib 43 [1962]: 362).

11 tn The word בָּאְשָׁה [bo'shah, from בָּאַשׁ [ba'as, "to have a foul smell"]) must refer to foul smelling weeds.

12 sn There are now four speeches from another friend of Job, Elihu. But Job does not reply to any of these, nor does the LORD. The speeches show a knowledge of the debate that has gone on, but they take a different approach entirely. Elihu's approach is that suffering is a discipline from God, to teach his people. In other words, Job was suffering to vindicate God's confidence in him. His speeches are an interesting part of the book, but they too are irrelevant to Job's actual case. In the first speech, there is a short introduction (32:1-5), and then the speech proper with these sections: Elihu will speak because his youth is wiser (32:6-14), and his friends arguments failed (32:15-22); he calls for Job's attention (33:1-7), claims Job's case is wrong (33:8-13), and Job's argument that God does not answer is false (33:14-28), and then makes an appeal to Job (33:29-33). It becomes evident that Elihu correctly identified Job's determination to maintain his integrity at God's expense as the primary problem in at least the latter stages of the dialogues (32:1-3; 34:37; 35:16; cf. 38:2; 40:8; 42:3). Elihu was respectful of his elders (32:4), but remained uninfected by their error (32:14). He sought to maintain impartiality (32:21-22) and to offer true wisdom (33:33), believed like Job that a mediator existed (33:23-24), and desired Job's vindication (33:32). In addition, Elihu focused on vindicating God's actions (34:12; 35:10-11; 36:2-3, 22-26) and announced the coming theophany (37:1-5, 22). It appears that he was not included in the divine condemnation of Job's friends (42:7-9) and was excluded from Job's prayer of intercession (42:8-10) – both perhaps implying divine approval of his behavior and words.

13 tn The form is the infinitive construct ("answer") functioning as the object of the preposition; the phrase forms the complement of the verb "they ceased to answer" (= "they refused to answer further").

14 tc The LXX, Syriac, and Symmachus have "in their eyes." This is adopted by some commentators, but it does not fit the argument.

15 tn The verse begins with וַיִּחַר אַף (vayyikhar 'af, "and the anger became hot"), meaning Elihu became very angry.

16 tn The second comment about Elihu's anger comes right before the statement of its cause. Now the perfect verb is used: "he was angry."

17 tn The explanation is the causal clause עַל־צַדְּקוֹ נַפְשׁוֹ ('al-tsadde qo nafsho, "because he justified himself"). It is the preposition with the Piel infinitive construct with a suffixed subjective genitive.

18 tc The LXX and Latin versions soften the expression slightly by saying "before God."

19 tn Heb "his"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation to indicate whose friends they were.

20 tn The perfect verb should be given the category of potential perfect here.

21 tc This is one of the eighteen "corrections of the scribes" (tiqqune sopherim); it originally read, "and they declared God [in the wrong]." The thought was that in abandoning the debate they had conceded Job's point.

22 tc This reading requires repointing the word בִּדְבָרִים (bidbarim, "with words") to בְּדַבְּרָם (be dabbe ram, "while they spoke [with Job]"). If the MT is retained, it would mean "he waited for Job with words," which while understandable is awkward.

others[1] were older than he was. 32:5 But when Elihu saw[2] that the three men had no further reply,[3] he became very angry.

Elihu Claims Wisdom

32:6 So Elihu son of Barakel the Buzite spoke up:[4]

"I am young,[5] but you are elderly; that is why I was fearful,[6]
and afraid to explain[7] to you what I know.
32:7 I said to myself, 'Age[8] should speak,[9] and length of years[10] should make wisdom known.' 32:8 But it is a spirit in people, the breath[11] of the Almighty, that makes them understand.
32:9 It is not the aged[12] who are wise, nor old men who understand what is right.
32:10 Therefore I say, 'Listen[13] to me.
I, even I, will explain what I know.'
32:11 Look, I waited for you to speak;[14]
I listened closely to your wise thoughts,[15]while you were searching for words.
32:12 Now I was paying you close attention,[16] yet[17] there was no one proving Job wrong,[18] not one of you was answering his statements!
32:13 So do not say,[19] 'We have found wisdom!
God will refute[20] him, not man!'
32:14 Job[21] has not directed[22] his words to me, and so I will not reply to him with your arguments.[23]

Job's Friends Failed to Answer[24]

32:15 "They are dismayed[25] and cannot answer any more;
they have nothing left to say.[26]
32:16 And I have waited.[27] But because they do not speak,

---

1 tn Heb "they"; the referent (the other friends) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn The first clause beginning with a vav (ו) consecutive and the preterite can be subordinated to the next similar verb as a temporal clause.

3 tn Heb "that there was no reply in the mouth of the three men."

4 tn Heb "answered and said."

5 tn The text has "small in days."

6 tn The verb וָאֶחְלֹתִי (zakhalti) is found only here in the OT, but it is found in a ninth century Aramaic inscription as well as in Biblical Aramaic. It has the meaning "to be timid" (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 208).

7 tn The Piel infinitive with the preposition (מַחֲוֹת, mekhavvot) means "from explaining." The phrase is the complement: "explain" what Elihu feared.

8 tn Heb "days."

9 tn The imperfect here is to be classified as an obligatory imperfect.

10 tn Heb "abundance of years."

11 tn This is the word נִשְׁמָה (n^{e}shamah, "breath"); according to Gen 2:7 it was breathed into Adam to make him a living person ("soul"). With that divine impartation came this spiritual understanding. Some commentators identify the רוּחַ (ruakh) in the first line as the Spirit of God; this "breath" would then be the human spirit. Whether Elihu knew that much, however, is hard to prove.

12 tn The MT has "the great" or "the many," meaning great in years according to the parallelism.

13 tc In most Hebrew MSS this imperative is singular, and so addressed to Job. But two Hebrew MSS and the versions have the plural. Elihu was probably addressing all of them.

14 tn Heb "for your words."

15 tn The word means "understanding." It refers to the faculty of perception and comprehension, but it also can refer to what that produces, especially when it is in the plural (see Ps 49:4). See R. Gordis, Job, 368. Others translate it "reasonings," "arguments," etc.

16 tn The verb again is from בִּין (bin, "to perceive; to understand"); in this stem it means to "to pay close attention."

17 tn The particle הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") has a deictic force here, calling attention to the thought that is now presented.

18 tn The participle מוֹכִיחַ (mokhiakh) is from the verb יָכַח (yakhakh) that has been used frequently in the book of Job. It means "to argue; to contend; to debate; to prove; to dispute." The usage of the verb shows that it can focus on the beginning of an argument, the debating itself, or the resolution of the conflict. Here the latter is obviously meant, for they did argue and contend and criticize – but could not prove Job wrong.

19 tn Heb "lest you say." R. Gordis (Job, 368) calls this a breviloquence: "beware lest [you say]." He then suggests the best reading for their quote to be, "We have attained wisdom, but only God can refute him, not man." H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 209) suggests the meaning is a little different, namely, that they are saying they have found wisdom in Job, and only God can deal with it. Elihu is in effect saying that they do not need God, for he is quite capable for this.

20 tn The root is נָדַף (nadaf, "to drive away; to drive off"). Here it is in the abstract sense of "succeed in doing something; confound," and so "refute; rebut." Dhorme wants to change the meaning of the word with a slight emendation in the text, deriving it from אָלַף ('alaf, "instruct") the form becoming יַלֶּפֶנּוּ (yall^{e}fenu) instead of יִדְּפֶנּוּ (yidd^{e}fenu), obtaining the translation "God will instruct us." This makes a smoother reading, but does not have much support for it.

21 tn Heb "he"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn The verb עָרַךְ ('arakh) means "to arrange in order; to set forth; to direct; to marshal." It is used in military contexts for setting the battle array; it is used in legal settings for preparing the briefs.

23 tn Heb "your words."

24 sn Elihu now will give another reason why he will speak – the arguments of these friends failed miserably. But before he gets to his argument, he will first qualify his authority.

25 tn The verb חַתּוּ (khattu) is from חָתַת (khatat) which means "to be terrified." But here it stresses the resulting dilemma. R. Gordis (Job, 369) renders it, "they are shattered, beaten in an argument."

26 tn Heb "words have moved away from them," meaning words are gone from them, they have nothing left to say.

27 tn Some commentators take this as a question: "And shall [or must] I wait because they do not speak?" (A. B. Davidson, R. Gordis). But this is not convincing because the silence of the friends is the reason for him to speak, not to wait.

because they stand there and answer no more, 32:17 I too will answer my part,
I too will explain what I know.
32:18 For I am full of words, and the spirit within me[1] constrains me.[2] 32:19 Inside I am like wine which has no outlet,[3] like new wineskins[4] ready to burst!
32:20 I will speak,[5] so that I may find relief;
I will open my lips, so that I may answer.
32:21 I will not show partiality to anyone,[6]
nor will I confer a title[7] on any man.
32:22 for I do not know how to give honorary titles,[8]
if I did,[9] my Creator would quickly do away with me.[10]

Elihu Invites Job's Attention

33:1 "But now, O Job, listen to my words, and hear[11] everything I have to say![12] 33:2 See now, I have opened[13] my mouth;
my tongue in my mouth has spoken.[14]
33:3 My words come from the uprightness of my heart,[15] and my lips will utter knowledge sincerely.[16] 33:4 The Spirit of God has made me, and the breath of the Almighty gives me life.[17] 33:5 Reply to me, if you can;
set your arguments[18] in order before me and take your stand!
33:6 Look, I am just like you in relation to God;
I too have been molded[19] from clay.
33:7 Therefore no fear of me should terrify you, nor should my pressure[20] be heavy on you.[21]

Elihu Rejects Job's Plea of Innocence

33:8 "Indeed, you have said in my hearing[22]
(I heard the sound of the words!):
33:9[23] 'I am pure, without transgression;
I am clean[24] and have no iniquity.
33:10[25] Yet God[26] finds occasions[27] with me;

1 tn Heb "the spirit of my belly."

2 tn The verb צוּק (tsuq) means "to constrain; to urge; to press." It is used in Judg 14:17; 16:16 with the sense of wearing someone down with repeated entreaties. Elihu cannot withhold himself any longer.

3 tn Heb "in my belly I am like wine that is not opened" (a Niphal imperfect), meaning sealed up with no place to escape.

4 tc The Hebrew text has כְּאֹבוֹת חֲדָשִׁים (k^{e}'ovot khadashim), traditionally rendered "like new wineskins." But only here does the phrase have this meaning. The LXX has "smiths" for "new," thus "like smith's bellows." A. Guillaume connects the word with an Arabic word for a wide vessel for wine shaped like a cup ("Archaeological and philological note on Job 32:19," PEQ 93 [1961]: 147-50). Some have been found in archaeological sites. The poor would use skins, the rich would use jars. The key to putting this together is the verb at the end of the line, יִבָּקֵעַ (yibbaqea', "that are ready to burst"). The point of the statement is that Elihu is bursting to speak, and until now has not had the opening.

5 tn The cohortative expresses Elihu's resolve to speak.

6 tn The idiom is "I will not lift up the face of a man." Elihu is going to show no favoritism, but speak his mind.

7 tn The verb means "to confer an honorary title; to give a mark of distinction," but it is often translated with the verb "flatter." Elihu will not take sides, he will not use pompous titles.

8 tn The construction uses a perfect verb followed by the imperfect. This is a form of subordination equivalent to a complementary infinitive (see GKC 385-86 §120.c).

9 tn The words "if I did" are supplied in the translation to make sense out of the two clauses.

10 tn Heb "quickly carry me away."

11 tn Heb "give ear," the Hiphil denominative verb from "ear."

12 tn Heb "hear all my words."

13 tn The perfect verbs in this verse should be classified as perfects of resolve: "I have decided to open...speak."

14 sn H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 210) says, "The self-importance of Elihu is boundless, and he is the master of banality." He adds that whoever wrote these speeches this way clearly intended to expose the character rather than exalt him.

15 tc This expression is unusual; R. Gordis (Job, 371) says it can be translated, "the purity of my heart [is reflected] in my words," but that is far-fetched and awkward. So there have been suggestions for emending יְשָׁר (yosher, "uprightness"). Kissane's makes the most sense if a change is desired: "shall reveal" (an Arabic sense of yasher), although Holscher interpreted "shall affirm" (yasher, with a Syriac sense). Dhorme has "my heart will repeat" (יָשׁוּר, yashur), but this is doubtful. If Kissane's view is taken, it would say, "my heart will reveal my words." Some commentators would join "and knowledge" to this colon, and read "words of knowledge" – but that requires even more emendations.

16 tn More literally, "and the knowledge of my lips they will speak purely."

17 tc Some commentators want to put this verse after v. 6, while others omit the verse entirely. Elihu is claiming here that he is inspired by God.

tn The verb תְּחַיֵּנִי (t^{e}khayyeni) is the Piel imperfect of the verb "to live." It can mean "gives me life," but it can also me "quickens me, enlivens me."

18 tn The Hebrew text does not contain the term "arguments," but this verb has been used already for preparing or arranging a defense.

19 tn The verb means "nipped off," as a potter breaks off a piece of clay when molding a vessel.

20 tc The noun means "my pressure; my burden" in the light of the verb אָכַף ('akhaf, "to press on; to grip tightly"). In the parallel passages the text used "hand" and "rod" in the hand to terrify. The LXX has "hand" here for this word. But simply changing it to "hand" is ruled out because the verb is masculine.

21 tn See Job 9:34 and 13:21.

22 tn Heb "in my ears."

23 sn See Job 9:21; 10:7; 23:7; 27:4; ch. 31.

24 tn The word is a hapax legomenon; hap is from חָפַף (khafaf). It is used in New Hebrew in expressions like "to wash" the head. Cognates in Syriac and Akkadian support the meaning "to wash; to clean."

25 sn See Job 10:13ff.; 19:6ff.; and 13:24.

26 tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn The Hebrew means "frustrations" or "oppositions." The RSV has "displeasure," NIV "faults," and NRSV "occasions." Rashi chose the word found in Judg 14:4 – with metathesis – meaning "pretexts" (תְּאֲנוֹת, to'anot); this is followed by NAB, NASB.

he regards me as his enemy!
33:11[1] He puts my feet in shackles;
he watches closely all my paths.'
33:12 Now in this, you are not right – I answer you,[2] for God is greater than a human being.[3] 33:13 Why do you contend against him, that he does not answer all a person's[4] words?

Elihu Disagrees With Job's View of God

33:14 "For God speaks, the first time in one way, the second time in another,
though a person does not perceive[5] it.
33:15 In a dream, a night vision, when deep sleep falls on people as they sleep in their beds.
33:16 Then he gives a revelation[6] to people, and terrifies them with warnings,[7] 33:17 to turn a person from his sin,[8] and to cover a person's pride.[9] 33:18 He spares a person's life from corruption,[10] his very life from crossing over[11] the river.
33:19 Or a person is chastened[12] by pain on his bed, and with the continual strife of his bones,[13] 33:20 so that his life loathes food, and his soul rejects appetizing fare.[14]
33:21 His flesh wastes away from sight, and his bones, which were not seen,
are easily visible.[15]
33:22 He[16] draws near to the place of corruption, and his life to the messengers of death.[17] 33:23 If there is an angel beside him, one mediator[18] out of a thousand,
to tell a person what constitutes his uprightness;[19] 33:24 and if[20] God[21] is gracious to him and says,

[1] sn See Job 13:27.

[2] tn The meaning of this verb is "this is my answer to you."

[3] tc The LXX has "he that is above men is eternal." Elihu is saying that God is far above Job's petty problems.

[4] tc The MT has "all his words." This must refer to "man" in the previous verse. But many wish to change it to "my words," since it would be summarizing Job's complaint to God.

[5] tn The Syriac and the Vulgate have "and he does not repeat it," a reading of the text as it is, according to E. Dhorme (Job, 403). But his argument is based on another root with this meaning – a root which does not exist (see L. Dennefeld, RB 48 [1939]: 175). The verse is saying that God does speak to man.

[6] tn The idiom is "he uncovers the ear of men." This expression means "inform" in Ruth 4:4; 1 Sam 20:2, etc. But when God is the subject it means "make a revelation" (see 1 Sam 9:15; 2 Sam 7:27).

[7] tc Heb "and seals their bonds." The form of the present translation, "and terrifies them with warnings," is derived only by emending the text. Aquila, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Targum Job have "their correction" for "their bond," which is what the KJV used. But the LXX, Aquila, and the Syriac have "terrifies" for the verb. This involves a change in pointing from יַחְתֹּם (yakhtom) to יְחִתֵּם (yekhittem). The LXX has "appearances of fear" instead of "bonds." The point of the verse seems to be that by terrifying dreams God makes people aware of their ways.

[8] tc The MT simply has מַעֲשֵׂה (ma'aseh, "deed"). The LXX has "from his iniquity" which would have been מֵעַוְלָה (me'avlah). The two letters may have dropped out by haplography. The MT is workable, but would have to mean "[evil] deeds."

[9] tc Here too the sense of the MT is difficult to recover. Some translations took it to mean that God hides pride from man. Many commentators changed יְכַסֶּה (yekhasseh, "covers") to יְכַסֵּחַ (yekhasseakh, "he cuts away"), or יְכַלֶּה (yekhalleh, "he puts an end to"). The various emendations are not all that convincing.

[10] tn A number of interpreters and translations take this as "the pit" (see Job 17:14; cf. NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

[11] tc Here is another difficult line. The verb normally means "to pass through; to pass over," and so this word would normally mean "from passing through [or over]." The word שָׁלַח (shelakh) does at times refer to a weapon, but most commentators look for a parallel with "the pit [or corruption]." One suggestion is שְׁאוֹלָה (she'olah, "to Sheol"), proposed by Duhm. Dhorme thought it was שָׁלַח (shalakh) and referred to the passageway to the underworld (see M. Tsevat, VT 4 [1954]: 43; and Svi Rin, BZ 7 [1963]: 25). See discussion of options in HALOT 1517-18 s.v. IV שָׁלַח. The idea of crossing the river of death fits the idea of the passage well, although the reading "to perish by the sword" makes sense and was followed by the NIV.

[12] tc The MT has the passive form, and so a subject has to be added: "[a man] is chastened." The LXX has the active form, indicating "[God] chastens," but the object "a man" has to be added. It is understandable why the LXX thought this was active, within this sequence of verbs; and that is why it is the inferior reading.

[13] tc The Kethib "the strife of his bones is continual," whereas the Qere has "the multitude of his bones are firm." The former is the better reading in this passage. It indicates that the pain is caused by the ongoing strife.

[14] tn Heb "food of desire." The word "rejects" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for clarity.

[15] tc Heb "are laid bare." This is the Qere reading; the Kethib means "bare height." Gordis reverses the word order: "his bones are bare [i.e., crushed] so that they cannot be looked upon." But the sense of that is not clear.

[16] tn Heb "his soul [נַפְשׁ, nefesh, "life"] draws near."

[17] tn The MT uses the Hiphil participle, "to those who cause death." This seems to be a reference to the belief in demons that brought about death, an idea not mentioned in the Bible itself. Thus many proposals have been made for this expression. Hoffmann and Budde divide the word into לְמוֹ מֵתִים (lemo metim) and simply read "to the dead." Dhorme adds a couple of letters to get לִמְקוֹם מֵתִים (limqom metim, "to the place [or abode] of the dead").

[18] sn The verse is describing the way God can preserve someone from dying by sending a messenger (translated here as "angel"), who could be human or angelic. This messenger will interpret/mediate God's will. By "one ... out of a thousand" Elihu could have meant either that one of the thousands of messengers at God's disposal might be sent or that the messenger would be unique (see Eccl 7:28; and cp. Job 9:3).

[19] tn This is a smoother reading. The MT has "to tell to a man his uprightness," to reveal what is right for him. The LXX translated this word "duty"; the choice is adopted by some commentaries. However, that is too far from the text, which indicates that the angel/messenger is to call the person to uprightness.

[20] tn This verse seems to continue the protasis begun in the last verse, with the apodosis coming in the next verse.

[21] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

‘Spare[1] him from going down to the place of corruption,
I have found a ransom for him,’[2] 33:25 then his flesh is restored[3] like a youth’s;
he returns to the days of his youthful vigor.[4]
33:26 He entreats God, and God[5] delights in him,
he sees God’s face[6] with rejoicing, and God[7] restores to him his righteousness.[8]
33:27 That person sings[9] to others,[10] saying:
‘I have sinned and falsified what is right, but I was not punished according to what I deserved.[11]
33:28 He redeemed my life[12] from going down to the place of corruption,
and my life sees the light!’

Elihu’s Appeal to Job[13]

33:29 “Indeed, God does all these things, twice, three times, in his dealings[14] with a person,
33:30 to turn back his life from the place of corruption,
that he may be enlightened with the light of life.
33:31 Pay attention, Job – listen to me;
be silent, and I will speak.
33:32 If you have any words,[15] reply to
me;
speak, for I want to justify you.[16]
33:33 If not, you listen to me;
be silent, and I will teach you wisdom.”

Elihu’s Second Speech[17]

34:1 Elihu answered:
34:2 “Listen to my words, you wise men;
hear[18] me, you learned men.[19] 34:3 For the ear assesses[20] words as the mouth[21] tastes food.
34:4 Let us evaluate[22] for ourselves what is right;[23]
let us come to know among ourselves what is good.
34:5 For Job says, ‘I am innocent,[24]
but God turns away my right.
34:6 Concerning my right, should I lie?[25]
My wound[26] is incurable, although I am without transgression.’[27]
34:7 What man is like Job, who[28] drinks derision[29] like water!

---

1 tc The verb is either taken as an anomalous form of פָּדַע (pada’, “to rescue; to redeem,” or “to exempt him”), or it is emended to some similar word, like פָּרַע (para’, “to let loose,” so Wright).

2 sn This verse and v. 28 should be compared with Ps 49:7-9, 15 (8-10, 16 HT) where the same basic vocabulary and concepts are employed.

3 tc The word רַטַּשׁ (rutafash) is found nowhere else. One suggestion is that it should be יִרְטַב (yirtav, “to become fresh”), connected to רָטַב (ratav, “to be well watered [or moist]”). It is also possible that it was a combination of רָטַב (ratav, “to be well watered”) and טָפַשׁ (tafash, “to grow fat”). But these are all guesses in the commentaries.

4 tn The word describes the period when the man is healthy and vigorous, ripe for what life brings his way.

5 tn Heb “he”; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Heb “his face”; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn This is usually taken to mean that as a worshiper this individual comes into the presence of the LORD in prayer, and in the sanctuary he sees God’s face, i.e., he sees the evidence of God’s presence.

7 tn Heb “he”; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tc Many commentators think this line is superfluous and so delete it. The RSV changed the verb to “he recounts,” making the idea that the man publishes the news of his victory or salvation (taking “righteousness” as a metonymy of cause).

9 tc The verb יָשַׁר (yashor) is unusual. The typical view is to change it to יָשִׁיר (yashir, “he sings”), but that may seem out of harmony with a confession. Dhorme suggests a root שׁוּר (shur, “to repeat”), but this is a doubtful root. J. Reider reads it יָשִׁיר (yasher) and links it to an Arabic word “confesses” (ZAW 24 [1953]: 275).

10 tn Heb “to men.”

11 tn The verb שָׁוָה (shavah) has the impersonal meaning here, “it has not been requited to me.” The meaning is that the sinner has not been treated in accordance with his deeds: “I was not punished according to what I deserved.”

12 sn See note on “him” in v. 24.

13 sn Elihu will repeat these instructions for Job to listen, over and over in painful repetition. See note on the heading to 32:1.

14 tn The phrase “in his dealings” is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation for clarification.

15 tn Heb “if there are words.”

16 tn The infinitive construct serves as the complement or object of “I desire.” It could be rendered “to justify you” or “your justification, “namely, “that you be justified.”

17 sn This speech of Elihu focuses on defending God. It can be divided into these sections: Job is irreligious (2-9), God is just (10-15), God is impartial and omniscient (16-30), Job is foolish to rebel (31-37).

18 tn Heb “give ear to me.”

19 tn The Hebrew word means “the men who know,” and without a complement it means “to possess knowledge.”

20 tn Or “examines; tests; tries; discerns.”

21 tn Or “palate”; the Hebrew term refers to the tongue or to the mouth in general.

22 sn Elihu means “choose after careful examination.”

23 tn The word is מִשְׁפָּט (mishpat) again, with the sense of what is right or just.

24 tn Heb “righteous,” but in this context it means to be innocent or in the right.

25 tn The verb is the Piel imperfect of כָּזַב (kazav), meaning “to lie.” It could be a question: “Should I lie [against my right?] – when I am innocent. If it is repointed to the Pual, then it can be “I am made to lie,” or “I am deceived.” Taking it as a question makes good sense here, and so emendations are unnecessary.

26 tn The Hebrew text has only “my arrow.” Some commentators emend that word slightly to get “my wound.” But the idea could be derived from “arrows” as well, the wounds caused by the arrows. The arrows are symbolic of God’s affliction.

27 tn Heb “without transgression,” but this is parallel to the first part where the claim is innocence.

28 tn Heb “he drinks,” but coming after the question this clause may be subordinated.

29 tn The scorn or derision mentioned here is not against Job, but against God. Job scorns God so much, he must love

34:8 He goes about[1] in company[2] with evildoers, he goes along[3] with wicked men.[4] 34:9 For he says, 'It does not profit a man when he makes his delight with God.'[5]

God is Not Unjust

34:10 "Therefore, listen to me, you men of understanding.[6]
Far be it from[7] God to do wickedness, from the Almighty to do evil.
34:11 For he repays a person for his work,[8]
and according to the conduct of a person, he causes the consequences to find him.[9] 34:12 Indeed, in truth, God does not act wickedly, and the Almighty does not pervert justice.
34:13 Who entrusted[10] to him the earth?
And who put him over[11] the whole world?
34:14 If God[12] were to set his heart on it,[13]
and gather in his spirit and his breath, 34:15 all flesh would perish together and human beings would return to dust.

God Is Impartial and Omniscient

34:16 "If you have[14] understanding, listen to this, hear what I have to say.[15]
34:17 Do you really think[16] that one who hates justice can govern?[17]
And will you declare guilty
the supremely righteous[18] One, 34:18 who says to a king,[19] 'Worthless man'[20]
and to nobles, 'Wicked men,' 34:19 who shows no partiality to princes, and does not take note of[21] the rich more than the poor, because all of them are the work of his hands?
34:20 In a moment they die, in the middle of the night,[22] people[23] are shaken[24] and they pass away.
The mighty are removed effortlessly.[25]
34:21 For his eyes are on the ways of an individual, he observes all a person's[26] steps.
34:22 There is no darkness, and no deep darkness, it. So to reflect this idea, Gordis has translated it "blasphemy" (cf. NAB).

[1] tn The perfect verb with the vav (ו) consecutive carries the sequence forward from the last description.

[2] tn The word חֶבְרָה (khevrah, "company") is a hapax legomenon. But its meaning is clear enough from the connections to related words and this context as well.

[3] tn The infinitive construct with the ל (lamed) preposition may continue the clause with the finite verb (see GKC 351 §114.p).

[4] tn Heb "men of wickedness"; the genitive is attributive (= "wicked men").

[5] tn Gordis, however, takes this expression in the sense of "being in favor with God."

[6] tn Heb "men of heart." The "heart" is used for the capacity to understand and make the proper choice. It is often translated "mind."

[7] tn For this construction, see Job 27:5.

[8] tn Heb "for the work of man, he [= God] repays him."

[9] tn Heb "he causes it to find him." The text means that God will cause a man to find (or receive) the consequences of his actions.

[10] tn The verb פָּקַד (paqad) means "to visit; to appoint; to number." Here it means "to entrust" for care and governing. The implication would be that there would be someone higher than God – which is what Elihu is repudiating by the rhetorical question. No one entrusted God with this.

[11] tn The preposition is implied from the first half of the verse.

[12] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tc This is the reading following the Qere. The Kethib and the Syriac and the LXX suggest a reading יָשִׂים (yasim, "if he [God] recalls"). But this would require leaving out "his heart," and would also require redividing the verse to make "his spirit" the object. It makes better parallelism, but may require too many changes.

[14] tn The phrase "you have" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied.

[15] tn Heb "the sound of my words."

[16] tn The force of הַאַף (ha'af) is "Is it truly the case?" The point is being made that if Job were right God could not be judging the world.

[17] tn The verb חָבַשׁ (khavash) has the basic idea of "to bind," as in binding on the yoke, and then in the sense of subduing people under authority (cf. Assyrian absanu). The imperfect verb here is best expressed with the potential nuance.

[18] tn The two words could be taken separately, but they seem to form a fine nominal hendiadys, because the issue is God's justice. So the word for power becomes the modifier.

[19] tc Heb "Does one say," although some smooth it out to say "Is it fit to say?" For the reading "who says," the form has to be repointed to הָאֹמֵר (ha'omer) meaning, "who is the one saying." This reading is supported by the LXX, Vulgate, and Syriac. Also it seems to flow better with the following verse. It would be saying that God is over the rulers and can rebuke them. The former view is saying that no one rebukes kings, much less Job rebuking God.

[20] tn The word בְּלִיָּעַל (beliyya'al) means both "worthless" and "wicked." It is common in proverbial literature, and in later writings it became a description of Satan. It is usually found with "son of."

[21] tn The verb means "to give recognition; to take note of" and in this passage with לִפְנֵי (lifne, "before") it means to show preferential treatment to the rich before the poor. The word for "rich" here is an unusual word, found parallel to "noble" (Isa 32:2). P. Joüon thinks it is a term of social distinction (Bib 18 [1937]: 207-8).

[22] tn Dhorme transposes "in the middle of the night" with "they pass away" to get a smoother reading. But the MT emphasizes the suddenness by putting both temporal ideas first. E. F. Sutcliffe leaves the order as it stands in the text, but adds a verb "they expire" after "in the middle of the night" ("Notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 30 [1949]: 79ff.).

[23] tn R. Gordis (Job, 389) thinks "people" here mean the people who count, the upper class.

[24] tn The verb means "to be violently agitated." There is no problem with the word in this context, but commentators have made suggestions for improving the idea. The proposal that has the most to commend it, if one were inclined to choose a new word, is the change to יִגְוְעוּ (yigva'u, "they expire"; so Ball, Holscher, Fohrer, and others).

[25] tn Heb "not by hand." This means without having to use force.

[26] tn Heb "his"; the referent (a person) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

where evildoers can hide themselves.[1] 34:23 For he does not still consider a person,[2] that he should come before God in judgment.
34:24 He shatters the great without inquiry,[3] and sets up others in their place.
34:25 Therefore, he knows their deeds, he overthrows them[4] in the night[5]
and they are crushed.
34:26 He strikes them for their wickedness,[6] in a place where people can see,[7] 34:27 because they have turned away from following him, and have not understood[8] any of his ways, 34:28 so that they caused[9] the cry of the poor to come before him, so that he hears[10] the cry of the needy.
34:29 But if God[11] is quiet, who can condemn[12] him?
If he hides his face, then who can see him?
Yet[13] he is over the individual and the nation alike,[14] 34:30 so that the godless man should not rule, and not lay snares for the people.[15]

Job Is Foolish to Rebel

34:31 "Has anyone said to God,
'I have endured chastisement,[16]
but I will not act wrongly any more.
34:32 Teach me what I cannot see.[17]
If I have done evil, I will do so no more.'
34:33 Is it your opinion[18] that God[19] should recompense it, because you reject this?[20]
But you must choose, and not I, so tell us what you know.
34:34 Men of understanding say to me – any wise man listening to me says – 34:35 that[21] Job speaks without knowledge and his words are without understanding.[22] 34:36 But[23] Job will be tested to the end, because his answers are like those of wicked men.

[1] tn The construction of this colon uses the Niphal infinitive construct from סָתַר (satar, "to be hidden; to hide"). The resumptive adverb makes this a relative clause in its usage: "where the evildoers can hide themselves."

[2] tn Heb "for he does not put upon man yet." This has been given a wide variety of interpretations, all of which involve a lot of additional thoughts. The word עוֹד ('od, "yet, still") has been replaced with מוֹעֵד (mo'ed, "an appointed time," Reiske and Wright), with the ם (mem) having dropped out by haplography. This makes good sense. If the MT is retained, the best interpretation would be that God does not any more consider (from "place upon the heart") man, that he might appear in judgment.

[3] tn Heb "[with] no investigation."

[4] tn The direct object "them" is implied and has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn The Hebrew term "night" is an accusative of time.

[6] tn Heb "under wicked men," or "under wickednesses." J. C. Greenfield shows that the preposition can mean "among" as well ("Prepositions B Tachat in Jes 57:5," ZAW 32 [1961]: 227). That would allow "among wicked men." It could also be "instead of" or even "in return for [their wickedness]" which is what the RSV does.

[7] tn The text simply uses רֹאִים (ro'im): "[in the place where there are] seers," i.e., spectators.

[8] tn The verb הִשְׂכִּילוּ (hiskilu) means "to be prudent; to be wise." From this is derived the idea of "be wise in understanding God's will," and "be successful because of prudence" – i.e., successful with God.

[9] tn The verse begins with the infinitive construct of בּוֹא (bo', "go"), showing the result of their impious actions.

[10] tn The verb here is an imperfect; the clause is circumstantial to the preceding clause, showing either the result, or the concomitant action.

[11] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn The verb in this position is somewhat difficult, although it does make good sense in the sentence – it is just not what the parallelism would suggest. So several emendations have been put forward, for which see the commentaries.

[13] tn The line simply reads "and over a nation and over a man together." But it must be the qualification for the points being made in the previous lines, namely, that even if God hides himself so no one can see, yet he is still watching over them all (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 222).

[14] tn The word translated "alike" (Heb "together") has bothered some interpreters. In the reading taken here it is acceptable. But others have emended it to gain a verb, such as "he visits" (Beer), "he watches over" (Duhm), "he is compassionate" (Kissane), etc. But it is sufficient to say "he is over."

[15] tn This last verse is difficult because it is unbalanced and cryptic. Some have joined the third line of v. 29 with this entire verse to make a couplet. But the same result is achieved by simply regarding this verse as the purpose of v. 29. But there still are some words that must be added. In the first colon, "[he is over the nations]...preventing from ruling." And in the second colon, "laying" has to be supplied before "snares."

[16] tn The Hebrew text has only "I lift up" or "I bear" (= I endure). The reading "I have been led astray" is obtained by changing the vowels to read a passive. If the MT is retained, an object has to be supplied, such as "chastisement" (so RSV, NASB) or "punishment" (NRSV). If not, then a different reading would be followed (e.g., "I was misguided" [NAB]; "I am guilty" [NIV]).

[17] tn Heb "what I do not see," more specifically, "apart from [that which] I see."

[18] tn Heb "is it from with you," an idiomatic expression meaning "to suit you" or "according to your judgment."

[19] tn Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[20] tn There is no object on the verb, and the meaning is perhaps lost. The best guess is that Elihu is saying Job has rejected his teaching.

[21] tn Adding "that" in the translation clarifies Elihu's indirect citation of the wise individuals' words.

[22] tn The Hiphil infinitive construct is here functioning as a substantive. The word means "prudence; understanding."

[23] tc The MT reads אָבִי ('avi, "my father"), which makes no sense. Some follow the KJV and emend the word to make a verb "I desire" or use the noun "my desire of it." Others follow an Arabic word meaning "entreat, I pray" (cf. ESV, "Would that Job were tried"). The LXX and the Syriac versions have "but" and "surely" respectively. Since this is the only MS support, albeit weak, it may be the best choice. In this sense Elihu would be saying that because of Job's attitude God will continue to test him.

34:37 For he adds transgression[1] to his sin;
in our midst he claps his hands,[2] and multiplies his words against God."

Elihu's Third Speech[3]

35:1 Then Elihu answered:

35:2 "Do you think this to be[4] just:
when[5] you say, 'My right before God.'[6] 35:3 But you say, 'What will it profit you,'[7] and, 'What do I gain by not sinning?'[8] 35:4 I[9] will reply to you,[10]
and to your friends with you.
35:5 Gaze at the heavens and see;
consider the clouds, which are higher than you![11]
35:6 If you sin, how does it affect God?[12]
If your transgressions are many, what does it do to him?[13]
35:7 If you are righteous, what do you give to God, or what does he receive from your hand?
35:8 Your wickedness affects only[14] a person like yourself, and your righteousness only other people.[15]

35:9 "People[16] cry out because of the excess of oppression;[17] they cry out for help because of the power[18] of the mighty.[19] 35:10 But no one says, 'Where is God, my Creator, who gives songs in the night,[20] 35:11 who teaches us[21] more than[22] the wild animals of the earth, and makes us wiser than the birds of the sky?'
35:12 Then[23] they cry out – but he does not answer – because of the arrogance of the wicked.
35:13 Surely it is an empty cry[24] – God does not hear it;
the Almighty does not take notice of it.
35:14 How much less, then,
when you say that you do not perceive him, that the case is before him and you are waiting for him![25]
35:15 And further,[26] when you say that his anger does not punish,[27] and that he does not know transgression![28] 35:16 So Job opens his mouth to no pur-

[1] tn Although frequently translated "rebellion," the basic meaning of this Hebrew term is "transgression."

[2] tc If this reading stands, it would mean that Job shows contempt, meaning that he mocks them and accuses God. It is a bold touch, but workable. Of the many suggested emendations, Dhorme alters some of the vowels and obtains a reading "and casts doubt among us," and then takes "transgression" from the first colon for the complement. Some commentators simply delete the line.

[3] sn This short speech falls into two sections: Elihu refutes Job's claim that goodness avails nothing (35:2-8), asserting that when the cry of the afflicted goes unanswered they have not learned their lesson (35:9-16).

[4] tn The line could be read as "do you reckon this for justice? Here "to be" is understood.

[5] tn The word "when" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied.

[6] tn The brief line could be interpreted in a number of ways. The MT simply has "my right from God." It could be "I am right before God," "I am more just/right than God" (identifying the preposition as a comparative min (מִן); cf. J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 463), "I will be right before God," or "My just cause against God."

[7] tn The referent of "you" is usually understood to be God.

[8] tn The Hebrew text merely says, "What do I gain from my sin?" But Job has claimed that he has not sinned, and so this has to be elliptical: "more than if I had sinned" (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 224). It could also be, "What do I gain without sin?"

[9] tn The emphatic pronoun calls attention to Elihu who will answer these questions.

[10] tn The Hebrew text adds, "with words," but since this is obvious, for stylistic reasons it has not been included in the translation.

[11] tn The preposition is taken here as a comparative min (מִן). The line could also read "that are high above you." This idea has appeared in the speech of Eliphaz (22:12), Zophar (11:7ff.), and even Job (9:8ff.).

[12] tn Heb "him" (also in v. 7); the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tn See Job 7:20.

[14] tn The phrase "affects only" is supplied in the translation of this nominal sentence.

sn According to Strahan, "Elihu exalts God's greatness at the cost of His grace, His transcendence at the expense of His immanence. He sets up a material instead of a spiritual stand of profit and loss. He does not realize that God does gain what He desires most by the goodness of men, and loses what He most loves by their evil."

[15] tn Heb "and to [or for] a son of man, your righteousness."

[16] tn The word "people" is supplied, because the sentence only has the masculine plural verb.

[17] tn The final noun is an abstract plural, "oppression." There is no reason to change it to "oppressors" to fit the early versions. The expression is literally "multitude of oppression."

[18] tn Heb "the arm," a metaphor for strength or power.

[19] tn Or "of the many" (see HALOT 1172 s.v. I רַב 6.a).

[20] tn There have been several attempts to emend the line, none of which are particularly helpful or interesting. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 225) says, "It is a pity to rob Elihu of a poetic line when he creates one."

[21] tn The form in the text, the Piel participle from אָלַף ('alaf, "teach") is written in a contracted form; the full form is מְאַלְּפֵנוּ (m^{e}'all^{e}fenu).

[22] tn Some would render this "teaches us by the beasts." But Elihu is stressing the unique privilege humans have.

[23] tn The adverb שָׁם (sham, "there") connects this verse to v. 11. "There" can be locative or temporal – and here it is temporal (= "then").

[24] tn Heb "surely – vanity, he does not hear." The cry is an empty cry, not a prayer to God. Dhorme translates it, "It is a pure waste of words."

[25] sn The point is that if God does not listen to those who do not turn to him, how much less likely is he to turn to one who complains against him.

[26] tn The expression "and now" introduces a new complaint of Elihu – in addition to the preceding. Here the verb of v. 14, "you say," is understood after the temporal ki (כִּי).

[27] tn The verb פָּקַד (paqad) means "to visit" (also "to appoint; to muster; to number"). When God visits, it means that he intervenes in one's life for blessing or cursing (punishing, destroying).

[28] tn The word פַּשׁ (pash) is a hapax legomenon. K&D 12:275 derived it from an Arabic word meaning "belch," leading to the idea of "overflow." BDB 832 s.v. defines it as "folly." Several define it as "transgression" on the basis of the versions (Theodotion, Symmachus, Vulgate). The RSV took it as "greatly heed," but that is not exactly "greatly know," when the text beyond that requires "not know at all." The NIV has "he does not take the least notice of wickedness."

pose;[1]
without knowledge he multiplies words."

Elihu's Fourth Speech[2]

36:1 Elihu said further:[3]
36:2 "Be patient[4] with me a little longer and I will instruct you, for I still have words to speak on God's behalf.[5] 36:3 With my knowledge I will speak comprehensively,[6] and to my Creator I will ascribe righteousness.[7] 36:4 For in truth, my words are not false; it is one complete[8] in knowledge who is with you.
36:5 Indeed, God is mighty; and he does not despise people,[9]
he[10] is mighty, and firm[11] in his intent.[12] 36:6 He does not allow the wicked to live,[13] but he gives justice to the poor.
36:7 He does not take his eyes[14] off the righteous;
but with kings on the throne
he seats the righteous[15] and exalts them forever.[16] 36:8 But if they are bound in chains,[17] and held captive by the cords of affliction, 36:9 then he reveals[18] to them what they have done,[19]
and their transgressions, that they were behaving proudly.
36:10 And he reveals[20] this[21] for correction, and says that they must turn[22] from evil.
36:11 If they obey and serve him, they live out their days in prosperity and their years in pleasantness.[23]
36:12 But if they refuse to listen, they pass over the river of death,[24]
and expire without knowledge.
36:13 The godless at heart[25] nourish anger,[26] they do not cry out even when he binds them.

---

1 tn The word הֶבֶל (hevel) means "vanity; futility; to no purpose."

2 sn This very lengthy speech can be broken down into the following sections: the discipline of suffering (36:2-25), the work and wisdom of God (36:26–37:24).

3 tn The use of וַיֹּסֶף (vayyosef) is with the hendiadys construction: "and he added and said," meaning "and he said again, further."

4 tn The verb כָּתַר (kattar) is the Piel imperative; in Hebrew the word means "to surround" and is related to the noun for crown. But in Syriac it means "to wait." This section of the book of Job will have a few Aramaic words.

5 tn The Hebrew text simply has "for yet for God words."

6 tn Heb "I will carry my knowledge to-from afar." The expression means that he will give a wide range to knowledge, that he will speak comprehensively.

7 tn This line gives the essence of all of Elihu's speech – to give or ascribe righteousness to God against the charges of Job. Dhorme translates this "I will justify my Maker," and that is workable if it carries the meaning of "declaring to be right."

8 tn The word is תְּמִים (tᵉmim), often translated "perfect." It is the same word used of Job in 2:3. Elihu is either a complete stranger to modesty or is confident regarding the knowledge that he believes God has revealed to him for this situation. See the note on the heading before 32:1.

9 tn The object "people" is not in the Hebrew text but is implied.

10 tn The text simply repeats "mighty."

11 tn The last two words are simply כַּח לֵב (koakh lev, "strong in heart"), meaning something like "strong; firm in his decisions."

12 tc There are several problems in this verse: the repetition of "mighty," the lack of an object for "despise," and the meaning of "strength of heart." Many commentators reduce the verse to a single line, reading something like "Lo, God does not reject the pure in heart" (Kissane). Dhorme and Pope follow Nichols with: "Lo, God is mighty in strength, and rejects not the pure in heart." This reading moved "mighty" to the first line and took the second to be בַּר (bar, "pure").

13 tn Or "he does not keep the wicked alive."

14 tc Many commentators accept the change of "his eyes" to "his right" (reading דִּינוֹ [dino] for עֵינָיו [ʿenayv]). There is no compelling reason for the change; it makes the line commonplace.

15 tn Heb "them"; the referent (the righteous) has been repeated from the first part of the verse for clarity.

16 tn Heb "he seats them forever and exalts them." The last verb can be understood as expressing a logical consequence of the preceding action (cf. GKC 328 §111.l = "he seats them forever so that he exalts them"). Or the two verbs can be taken as an adverbial hendiadys whereby the first modifies the second adverbially: "he exalts them by seating them forever" or "when he seats them forever" (cf. GKC 326 §111.d). Some interpret this verse to say that God seats kings on the throne, making a change in subject in the middle of the verse. But it makes better sense to see the righteous as the subject matter throughout – they are not only protected, but are exalted.

17 tn Dhorme thinks that the verse is still talking about kings, who may be in captivity. But this diverts attention from Elihu's emphasis on the righteous.

18 tn The verb נָגַד (nagad) means "to declare; to tell." Here it is clear that God is making known the sins that caused the enslavement or captivity, so "reveal" makes a good interpretive translation.

19 tn Heb "their work."

20 tn The idiom once again is "he uncovers their ear."

21 tn The revelation is in the preceding verse, and so a pronoun must be added to make the reference clear.

22 tn The verb שׁוּב (shuv, "to turn; to return") is one of the two major words in the OT for "repent" – to return from evil. Here the imperfect should be obligatory – they must do it.

23 tc Some commentators delete this last line for metrical considerations. But there is no textual evidence for the deletion; it is simply the attempt by some to make the meter rigid.

24 tn This is a similar expression to the one in Job 33:18, where the suggestion was made by many that it means crossing over the canal or river of death. Some retain the earlier interpretation of "perish by the sword" (cf. NIV).

25 tn The expression "godless [or hypocrite] in heart" is an intensification of the description. It conveys that they are intentionally godless. See Matt 23:28.

26 tn Heb "they put anger." This is usually interpreted to mean they lay up anger, or put anger in their hearts.

36:14 They die[1] in their youth, and their life ends among the male cultic prostitutes.[2] 36:15 He delivers the afflicted by[3] their[4] afflictions, he reveals himself to them[5] by their suffering.
36:16 And surely, he drew you[6] from the mouth of distress, to a wide place, unrestricted,[7] and to the comfort[8] of your table filled with rich food.[9] 36:17 But now you are preoccupied with the judgment due the wicked, judgment and justice take hold of you.
36:18 Be careful that[10] no one entices you with riches;
do not let a large bribe[11] turn you aside.
36:19 Would your wealth[12] sustain you, so that you would not be in distress,[13]
even all your mighty efforts?[14]
36:20 Do not long for the cover of night to drag people away from their homes.[15] 36:21 Take heed, do not turn to evil, for because of this you have been tested[16] by affliction.
36:22 Indeed, God is exalted in his power; who is a teacher[17] like him?
36:23 Who has prescribed his ways for him?
Or said to him, 'You have done what is wicked'?
36:24 Remember to extol[18] his work, which people have praised in song.
36:25 All humanity has seen it;
people gaze on it from afar.

The Work and Wisdom of God

36:26 "Yes, God is great – beyond our knowledge![19]
The number of his years is unsearchable.
36:27 He draws up drops of water;
they distill[20] the rain into its mist,[21]
36:28 which the clouds pour down and shower on humankind abundantly.
36:29 Who can understand the spreading of the clouds, the thunderings of his pavilion?[22]
36:30 See how he scattered[23] his lightning[24] about him;
he has covered the depths[25] of the sea.
36:31 It is by these that he judges[26] the nations and supplies food in abundance.

1 tn The text expresses this with "their soul dies."

2 tn Heb "among the male prostitutes" who were at the temple – the "holy ones," with "holy" being used in that sense of "separated to that form of temple service." So uncleanness and shame are some of the connotations of the reference. Some modern translations give the general sense only: "their life ends in shame" (NRSV); "and perish among the reprobate" (NAB); "die...after wasting their lives in immoral living" (NLT).

3 tn The preposition ב (bet) in these two lines is not location but instrument, not "in" but "by means of." The affliction and the oppression serve as a warning for sin, and therefore a means of salvation.

4 tn Heb "his."

5 tn Heb "he uncovers their ear."

6 tn The Hebrew verb means "to entice; to lure; to allure; to seduce," but these have negative connotations. The English "to persuade; to draw" might work better. The verb is the Hiphil perfect of סוּת (sut). But the nuance of the verb is difficult. It can be equivalent to an English present expressing what God is doing (Peake). But the subject is contested as well. Since the verb usually has an evil connotation, there have been attempts to make the "plaza" the subject – "the wide place has led you astray" (Ewald).

7 tn Heb "a broad place where there is no cramping beneath [or under] it."

8 tn The word נַחַת (nakhat) could be translated "set" if it is connected with the verb נוּחַ (nuakh, "to rest," but then "to lay to rest, to set"). Kissane translates it "comfort." Dhorme thinks it could come from נוּחַ (nuakh, "to rest") or נָחַת (nakhat, "to descend"). But his conclusion is that it is a dittography after "under it" (p. 545).

9 tn Heb "filled with fat."

10 tn The first expression is idiomatic: the text says, "because wrath lest it entice you" – thus, beware.

11 tn The word is כֹּפֶר (kofer), often translated "ransom," but frequently in the sense of a bribe.

12 tn The form in the MT is "your cry (for help)." See J. E. Hartley (Job [NICOT], 472-73) and E. Dhorme (Job, 547-48) on the difficulties.

13 tn This part has only two words לֹא בָצָר (lo' b^{e}tsar, "not in distress"). The negated phrase serves to explain the first colon.

14 tc For the many suggestions and the reasoning here, see the commentaries.

15 tn The meaning of this line is difficult. There are numerous suggestions for emending the text. Kissane takes the first verb in the sense of "oppress," and for "the night" he has "belonging to you," meaning "your people." This reads: "Oppress not them that belong not to you, that your kinsmen may mount up in their place."

16 tn Normally "tested" would be the translation for the Niphal of בָּחַר (bakhar). Although the Qal is employed here, the context favors "tested" rather than "chose."

17 tn The word מוֹרֶה (moreh) is the Hiphil participle from יָרָה (yarah). It is related to the noun תּוֹרָה (torah, "what is taught" i.e., the law).

18 tn The expression is "that you extol," serving as an object of the verb.

19 tn The last part has the verbal construction, "and we do not know." This clause is to be used adverbially: "beyond our understanding."

20 tn The verb means "to filter; to refine," and so a plural subject with the drops of water as the subject will not work. So many read the singular, "he distills."

21 tn This word עֵד ('ed) occurs also in Gen 2:6. The suggestion has been that instead of a mist it represents an underground watercourse that wells up to water the ground.

22 tn Heb "his booth."

23 tn The word actually means "to spread," but with lightning as the object, "to scatter" appears to fit the context better.

24 tn The word is "light," but taken to mean "lightning." Theodotion had "mist" here, and so most commentators follow that because it is more appropriate to the verb and the context.

25 tn Heb "roots."

26 tn The verb is יָדִין (yadin, "he judges"). Houbigant proposed יָזוּן (yazun, "he nourishes"). This has found wide acceptance among commentators (cf. NAB). G. R. Driver retained the MT but gave a meaning "enriches" to the verb ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 88ff.).

36:32 With his hands[1] he covers[2] the lightning, and directs it against its target.
36:33[3] His thunder announces the coming storm, the cattle also, concerning the storm's approach.
37:1 At this also my heart pounds and leaps from its place.
37:2 Listen carefully[4] to the thunder of his voice, to the rumbling[5] that proceeds from his mouth.
37:3 Under the whole heaven he lets it go, even his lightning to the far corners[6] of the earth.
37:4 After that a voice roars;
he thunders with an exalted voice, and he does not hold back his lightning bolts[7]
when his voice is heard.
37:5 God thunders with his voice in marvelous ways;[8]
he does great things beyond our understanding.[9] 37:6 For to the snow he says, 'Fall[10] to earth,' and to the torrential rains,[11] 'Pour down.'[12] 37:7 He causes everyone to stop working,[13] so that all people[14] may know[15] his work.
37:8 The wild animals go to their lairs, and in their dens they remain.
37:9 A tempest blows out from its chamber, icy cold from the driving winds.[16]
37:10 The breath of God produces ice, and the breadth of the waters freeze solid.
37:11 He loads the clouds with moisture;[17]
he scatters his lightning through the clouds.
37:12 The clouds[18] go round in circles, wheeling about according to his plans, to carry out[19] all that he commands them over the face of the whole inhabited world.
37:13 Whether it is for punishment[20] for his land, or whether it is for mercy,
he causes it to find its mark.[21]

37:14 "Pay attention to this, Job!
Stand still and consider the wonders God works.
37:15 Do you know how God commands them,[22]
how he makes lightning flash in his storm cloud?[23]
37:16 Do you know about the balancing[24]

---

[1] tn R. Gordis (Job, 422) prefers to link this word with the later Hebrew word for "arch," not "hands."

[2] tn Because the image might mean that God grabs the lightning and hurls it like a javelin (cf. NLT), some commentators want to change "covers" to other verbs. Dhorme has "lifts" (נָשָׂא [nissa'] for כִּסָּה [kissah]). This fit the idea of God directing the lightning bolts.

[3] tn Peake knew of over thirty interpretations for this verse. The MT literally says, "He declares his purpose [or his shout] concerning it; cattle also concerning what rises." Dhorme has it: "The flock which sniffs the coming storm has warned the shepherd." Kissane: "The thunder declares concerning him, as he excites wrath against iniquity." Gordis translates it: "His thunderclap proclaims his presence, and the storm his mighty wrath." Many more could be added to the list.

[4] tn The imperative is followed by the infinitive absolute from the same root to express the intensity of the verb.

[5] tn The word is the usual word for "to meditate; to murmur; to groan"; here it refers to the low building of the thunder as it rumbles in the sky. The thunder is the voice of God (see Ps 29).

[6] tn Heb "wings," and then figuratively for the extremities of garments, of land, etc.

[7] tn The verb simply has the pronominal suffix, "them." The idea must be that when God brings in all the thunderings he does not hold back his lightning bolts either.

[8] tn The form is the Niphal participle, "wonders," from the verb פָּלָא (pala', "to be wonderful; to be extraordinary"). Some commentators suppress the repeated verb "thunders," and supply other verbs like "shows" or "works," enabling them to make "wonders" the object of the verb rather than leaving it in an adverbial role. But as H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 236) notes, no change is needed, for one is not surprised to find repetition in Elihu's words.

[9] tn Heb "and we do not know."

[10] tn The verb actually means "be" (found here in the Aramaic form). The verb "to be" can mean "to happen, to fall, to come about."

[11] tn Heb "and [to the] shower of rain and shower of rains, be strong." Many think the repetition grew up by variant readings; several Hebrew MSS delete the second pair, and so many editors do. But the repetition may have served to stress the idea that the rains were heavy.

[12] tn Heb "Be strong."

[13] tn Heb "by the hand of every man he seals." This line is intended to mean with the heavy rains God suspends all agricultural activity.

[14] tc This reading involves a change in the text, for in MT "men" is in the construct. It would be translated, "all men whom he made" (i.e., all men of his making"). This is the translation followed by the NIV and NRSV. Olshausen suggested that the word should have been אֲנָשִׁים ('anashim) with the final מ (mem) being lost to haplography.

[15] tn D. W. Thomas suggested a meaning of "rest" for the verb, based on Arabic. He then reads אֱנוֹשׁ ('enosh) for man, and supplies a מ (mem) to "his work" to get "that every man might rest from his work [in the fields]."

[16] tn The "driving winds" reflects the Hebrew "from the scatterers." This refers to the north winds that bring the cold air and the ice and snow and hard rains.

[17] tn The word "moisture" is drawn from רִי (ri) as a contraction for רִוְיָ (rivya). Others emended the text to get "hail" (NAB) or "lightning," or even "the Creator." For these, see the various commentaries. There is no reason to change the reading of the MT when it makes perfectly good sense.

[18] tn The words "the clouds" are supplied from v. 11; the sentence itself actually starts: "and it goes round," referring to the cloud.

[19] tn Heb "that it may do."

[20] tn Heb "rod," i.e., a rod used for punishment.

[21] tn This is interpretive; Heb "he makes find it." The lightning could be what is intended here, for it finds its mark. But R. Gordis (Job, 429) suggests man is the subject – let him find what it is for, i.e., the fate appropriate for him.

[22] tn The verb is בְּשׂוֹם (besum, from שִׂים [sim, "set"]), so the idea is how God lays [or sets] [a command] for them. The suffix is proleptic, to be clarified in the second colon.

[23] tn Dhorme reads this "and how his stormcloud makes lightning to flash forth?"

[24] tn As indicated by HALOT 618 s.v. מִפְלַשׂ, the concept of "balancing" probably refers to "floating" or "suspension" (cf. NIV's "how the clouds hang poised" and J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 481-82, n. 2).

of the clouds,
that wondrous activity of him who is perfect in knowledge?
37:17 You, whose garments are hot when the earth is still because of the south wind, 37:18 will you, with him, spread out[1] the clouds, solid as a mirror of molten metal?
37:19 Tell us what we should[2] say to him.
We cannot prepare a case[3]
because of the darkness.
37:20 Should he be informed that I want[4] to speak?
If a man speaks, surely he would be swallowed up!
37:21 But now, the sun[5] cannot be looked at[6] –
it is bright in the skies – after a wind passed and swept the clouds away.[7] 37:22 From the north he comes in golden splendor;[8] around God is awesome majesty.
37:23 As for the Almighty,[9] we cannot attain to him!
He is great in power,
but justice[10] and abundant righteousness he does not oppress.
37:24 Therefore people fear him, for he does not regard all the wise in heart."[11]

VI. The Divine Speeches (38:1-42:6)

The Lord's First Speech[12]

38:1 Then the LORD answered Job out of the whirlwind:[13]
38:2 "Who is this[14] who darkens counsel[15] with words without knowledge?
38:3 Get ready for a difficult task[16] like a man;
I will question you and you will inform me!

[1] tn The verb means "to beat out; to flatten," and the analogy in the next line will use molten metal. From this verb is derived the word for the "firmament" in Gen 1:6-8, that canopy-like pressure area separating water above and water below.

[2] tn The imperfect verb here carries the obligatory nuance, "what we should say?"

[3] tn The verb means "to arrange; to set in order." From the context the idea of a legal case is included.

[4] tn This imperfect works well as a desiderative imperfect.

[5] tn The light here must refer to the sun in the skies that had been veiled by the storm. Then, when the winds blew the clouds away, it could not be looked at because it was so dazzling. Elihu's analogy will be that God is the same – in his glory one cannot look at him or challenge him.

[6] tn The verb has an indefinite subject, and so should be a passive here.

[7] tn Heb "and cleaned them." The referent is the clouds (v. 18), which has been supplied in the translation for clarity. There is another way of reading this verse: the word translated "bright" means "dark; obscured" in Syriac. In this interpretation the first line would mean that they could not see the sun, because it was darkened by the clouds, but then the wind came and blew the clouds away. Dhorme, Gray, and several others take it this way, as does the NAB.

[8] tn The MT has "out of the north comes gold." Left in that sense the line seems irrelevant. The translation "golden splendor" (with RV, RSV, NRSV, NIV) depends upon the context of theophany. Others suggest "golden rays" (Dhorme), the aurora borealis (Graetz, Gray), or some mythological allusion (Pope), such as Baal's palace. Golden rays or splendor is what is intended, although the reference is not to a natural phenomenon – it is something that would suggest the glory of God.

[9] tn The name "Almighty" is here a casus pendens, isolating the name at the front of the sentence and resuming it with a pronoun.

[10] tn The MT places the major disjunctive accent (the atnach) under "power," indicating that "and justice" as a disjunctive clause starting the second half of the verse (with ESV, NASB, NIV, NLT). Ignoring the Masoretic accent, NRSV has "he is great in power and justice."

[11] sn The phrase "wise of heart" was used in Job 9:4 in a negative sense.

[12] sn This is the culmination of it all, the revelation of the LORD to Job. Most interpreters see here the style and content of the author of the book, a return to the beginning of the book. Here the LORD speaks to Job and displays his sovereign power and glory. Job has lived through the suffering – without cursing God. He has held to his integrity, and nowhere regretted it. But he was unaware of the real reason for the suffering, and will remain unaware throughout these speeches. God intervenes to resolve the spiritual issues that surfaced. Job was not punished for sin. And Job's suffering had not cut him off from God. In the end the point is that Job cannot have the knowledge to make the assessments he made. It is wiser to bow in submission and adoration of God than to try to judge him. The first speech of God has these sections: the challenge (38:1-3), the surpassing mysteries of earth and sky beyond Job's understanding (4-38), and the mysteries of animal and bird life that surpassed his understanding (38:39–39:30).

[13] sn This is not the storm described by Elihu – in fact, the LORD ignores Elihu. The storm is a common accompaniment for a theophany (see Ezek 1:4; Nah 1:3; Zech 9:14).

[14] tn The demonstrative pronoun is used here to emphasize the interrogative pronoun (see GKC 442 §136.c).

[15] sn The referent of "counsel" here is not the debate between Job and the friends, but the purposes of God (see Ps 33:10; Prov 19:21; Isa 19:17). Dhorme translates it "Providence."

[16] tn Heb "Gird up your loins." This idiom basically describes taking the hem of the long garment or robe and pulling it up between the legs and tucking it into the front of the belt, allowing easier and freer movement of the legs. "Girding the loins" meant the preparation for some difficult task (Jer 1:17), or for battle (Isa 5:27), or for running (1 Kgs 18:46). C. Gordon suggests that it includes belt-wrestling, a form of hand-to-hand mortal combat ("Belt-wrestling in the Bible World," HUCA 23 [1950/51]: 136).

God's questions to Job

38:4 "Where were you when I laid the foundation[1] of the earth?
Tell me,[2] if you possess understanding!
38:5 Who set its measurements – if[3] you know – or who stretched a measuring line across it?
38:6 On what[4] were its bases[5] set, or who laid its cornerstone – 38:7 when the morning stars[6] sang[7] in chorus,[8] and all the sons of God[9] shouted for joy?

38:8 "Who shut up[10] the sea with doors when it burst forth,[11] coming out of the womb, 38:9 when I made[12] the storm clouds its garment, and thick darkness its swaddling band,[13] 38:10 when I prescribed[14] its limits, and set[15] in place its bolts and doors, 38:11 when I said, 'To here you may come[16] and no farther,[17]
here your proud waves will be confined'?[18]

38:12 Have you ever in your life[19] commanded the morning, or made the dawn know[20] its place, 38:13 that it might seize the corners of the earth,[21] and shake the wicked out of it?
38:14 The earth takes shape like clay under a seal;[22] its features[23] are dyed[24] like a garment.
38:15 Then from the wicked the light is withheld, and the arm raised in violence[25] is broken.[26]

---

1 tn The construction is the infinitive construct in a temporal clause, using the preposition and the subjective genitive suffix.

2 tn The verb is the imperative; it has no object "me" in the text.

3 tn The particle כִּי (ki) is taken here for a conditional clause, "if you know" (see GKC 498 §159.dd). Others take it as "surely" with a biting irony.

4 tn For the interrogative serving as a genitive, see GKC 442 §136.b.

5 sn The world was conceived of as having bases and pillars, but these poetic descriptions should not be pressed too far (e.g., see Ps 24:2, which may be worded as much for its polemics against Canaanite mythology as anything).

6 sn The expression "morning stars" (Heb "stars of the morning") is here placed in parallelism to the angels, "the sons of God." It may refer to the angels under the imagery of the stars, or, as some prefer, it may poetically include all creation. There is a parallel also with the foundation of the temple which was accompanied by song (see Ezra 3:10,11). But then the account of the building of the original tabernacle was designed to mirror creation (see M. Fishbane, Biblical Text and Texture).

7 tn The construction, an adverbial clause of time, uses רָנַן (ranan), which is often a ringing cry, an exultation. The parallelism with "shout for joy" shows this to be enthusiastic acclamation. The infinitive is then continued in the next colon with the vav (ו) consecutive preterite.

8 tn Heb "together." This is Dhorme's suggestion for expressing how they sang together.

9 tn See Job 1:6.

10 tn The MT has "and he shut up." The Vulgate has "Who?" and so many commentaries and editions adopt this reading, if not from the Vulgate, then from the sense of the sequence in the text itself.

11 tn The line uses two expressions, first the temporal clause with גִּיחַ (giakh, "when it burst forth") and then the finite verb יָצָא (yetse', "go out") to mark the concomitance of the two actions.

12 tn The temporal clause here uses the infinitive from שִׂים (sim, "to place; to put; to make"). It underscores the sovereign placing of things.

13 tn This noun is found only here. The verb is in Ezek 16:4, and a related noun is in Ezek 30:21.

14 tc The MT has "and I broke," which cannot mean "set, prescribed" or the like. The LXX and the Vulgate have such a meaning, suggesting a verb עָשִׁית ('ashiyt, "plan, prescribe"). A. Guillaume finds an Arabic word with a meaning "measured it by span by my decree." Would God give himself a decree? R. Gordis simply argues that the basic meaning "break" develops the connotation of "decide, determine" (2 Sam 5:24; Job 14:3; Dan 11:36).

15 tn Dhorme suggested reversing the two verbs, making this the first, and then "shatter" for the second colon.

16 tn The imperfect verb receives the permission nuance here.

17 tn The text has תֹּסִיף (tosif, "and you may not add"), which is often used idiomatically (as in verbal hendiadys constructions).

18 tn The MT literally says, "here he will put on the pride of your waves." The verb has no expressed subject and so is made a passive voice. But there has to be some object for the verb "put," such as "limit" or "boundary"; the translations "confined; halted; stopped" all serve to paraphrase such an idea. The LXX has "broken" at this point, suggesting the verse might have been confused – but "breaking the pride" of the waves would mean controlling them. Some commentators have followed this, exchanging the verb in v. 11 with this one.

19 tn The Hebrew idiom is "have you from your days?" It means "never in your life" (see 1 Sam 25:28; 1 Kgs 1:6).

20 tn The verb is the Piel of יָדַע (yada', "to know") with a double accusative.

21 sn The poetic image is that darkness or night is like a blanket that covers the earth, and at dawn it is taken by the edges and shaken out. Since the wicked function under the cover of night, they are included in the shaking when the dawn comes up.

22 sn The verse needs to be understood in the context: as the light shines in the dawn, the features of the earth take on a recognizable shape or form. The language is phenomenological.

23 tn Heb "they"; the referent (the objects or features on the earth) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tc The MT reads "they stand up like a garment" (NASB, NIV) or "its features stand out like a garment" (ESV). The reference could be either to embroidered decoration on a garment or to the folds of a garment (REB: "until all things stand out like the folds of a cloak"; cf. J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 497, "the early light of day makes the earth appear as a beautiful garment, exquisite in design and glorious in color"). Since this is thought to be an odd statement, some suggest with Ehrlich that the text be changed to תִּתְצַבַּע (titsabba', "is dyed [like a garment]"). This reference would be to the colors appearing on the earth's surface under daylight. The present translation follows the emendation.

25 tn Heb "the raised arm." The words "in violence" are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied in the translation to clarify the metaphor.

the Old Testament," JTS 4 [1953]: 208-12).

[1] tn Heb "the springs of the sea." The words "that fill" are supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning of the phrase.

[2] tn Heb "uncovered to you."

[3] tn Some still retain the traditional phrase "shadow of death" in the English translation (cf. NIV). The reference is to the entrance to Sheol (see Job 10:21).

[4] tn The interrogative with דֶּרֶךְ (derekh) means "in what road" or "in what direction."

[5] tn The suffixes are singular ("that you may take it to its border...to its home"), referring to either the light or the darkness. Because either is referred to, the translation has employed plurals, since singulars would imply that only the second item, "darkness," was the referent. Plurals are also employed by NAB and NIV.

[6] tn The imperfect verb after the adverb אָז ('az, "then") functions as a preterite: "you were born." The line is sarcastic.

[7] sn Snow and ice are thought of as being in store, brought out by God for specific purposes, such as times of battle (see Josh 10:11; Exod 9:2ff.; Isa 28:17; Isa 30:30; and Ps 18:12 [13]).

[8] tn The same Hebrew term (אוֹצָר, 'otsar), has been translated "storehouse" in the first line and "armory" in the second. This has been done for stylistic variation, but also because "hail," as one of God's "weapons" (cf. the following verse) suggests military imagery; in this context the word refers to God's "ammunition dump" where he stockpiles hail.

[9] sn The terms translated war and battle are different Hebrew words, but both may be translated "war" or "battle" depending on the context.

[10] tn Because the parallel with "light" and "east wind" is not tight, Hoffmann proposed 'ed instead, "mist." This has been adopted by many. G. R. Driver suggests "parching heat" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 91-92).

[11] tn Heb "on a land, no man."

[12] tn Heb "a desert, no man in it."

[13] tn Heb "to cause to sprout a source of vegetation." The word מֹצָא (motsa') is rendered "mine" in Job 28:1. The suggestion with the least changes is Wright's: צָמָא (tsame', "thirsty"). But others choose מִצִּיָּה (mitsiyyah, "from the steppe").

[14] tn Or "heavens." The Hebrew term שָׁמַיִם (shamayim) may be translated "heaven(s)" or "sky" depending on the context.

[15] tn Several suggest that the verb is not from חָבָא (khava', "to hide") but from a homonym, "to congeal." This may be too difficult to support, however.

[16] tn This word is found here and in 1 Sam 15:32. Dhorme suggests, with others, that there has been a metathesis (a reversal of consonants), and it is the same word found in Job 31:36 ("bind"). G. R. Driver takes it as "cluster" without changing the text ("Two astronomical passages in the Old Testament," JTS 7 [1956] :3).

[17] tn The word מַזָּרוֹת (mazzarot) is taken by some to refer to the constellations (see 2 Kgs 23:5), and by others as connected to the word for "crown," and so "corona."

[18] sn See Job 9:9.

[19] tc The LXX has "answer you," and some editors have adopted this. However, the reading of the MT makes better sense in the verse.

[20] tn This verse is difficult because of the two words, מַחוֹת (tukhot, rendered here "heart") and שֶׂכְוִי (sekhvi, here "mind"). They have been translated a number of ways: "meteor" and "celestial appearance"; the stars "Procyon" and "Sirius"; "inward part" and "mind"; even as birds, "ibis" and "cock." One expects them to have something to do with nature – clouds and the like. The RSV accordingly took them to mean "me-

Will you commit[13] your labor to it?
39:12 Can you count on[14] it to bring in[15] your grain,[16] and gather the grain[17] to your threshing floor?[18]

teor" (from a verb "to wander") and "a celestial appearance." But these meanings are not well-attested.

[1] tn The word actually means "to cause to lie down."

[2] tn The word means "to flow" or "to cast" (as in casting metals). So the noun developed the sense of "hard," as in cast metal.

[3] tn Heb "fill up the life of."

[4] tn The verse is difficult, making some suspect that a line has dropped out. The little birds in the nest hardly go wandering about looking for food. Dhorme suggest "and stagger for lack of food."

[5] tn The text uses the infinitive as the object: "do you know the giving birth of?"

[6] tn Or "ibex."

[7] tn Here the infinitive is again a substantive: "the time of their giving birth."

[8] tc The Hebrew verb used here means "to cleave," and this would not have the object "their young." Olshausen and others after him change the ח (khet) to ט (tet) and get a verb "to drop," meaning "drop [= give birth to] young" as used in Job 21:10. G. R. Driver holds out for the MT, arguing it is an idiom, "to breach the womb" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 92-93).

[9] tn Heb "they cast forth their labor pains." This word usually means "birth pangs" but here can mean what caused the pains (metonymy of effect). This fits better with the parallelism, and the verb ("cast forth"). The words "their offspring" are supplied in the translation for clarity; direct objects were often omitted when clear from the context, although English expects them to be included.

[10] tn The idea is that of the open countryside. The Aramaism is found only here.

[11] sn The animal is happier in open countryside than in a busy town, and on its own rather than being driven by a herdsman.

[12] tn Some commentators think that the addition of the "wild ox" here is a copyist's error, making the stich too long. They therefore delete it. Also, binding an animal to the furrow with ropes is unusual. So with a slight emendation Kissane came up with "Will you bind him with a halter of cord?" While the MT is unusual, the sense is understandable, and no changes, even slight ones, are absolutely necessary.

[13] tn Heb "leave."

[14] tn The word is normally translated "believe" in the Bible. The idea is that of considering something dependable and acting on it. The idea of reliability is found also in the Niphal stem usages.

[15] tc There is a textual problem here: יָשׁוּב (yashuv) is the Kethib, meaning "[that] he will return"; יְשִׁיב (yashiv) is the Qere, meaning "that he will bring in." This is the preferred reading, since the object follows it. For commentators who think the line too unbalanced for this, the object is moved to the second colon, and the reading "returns" is taken for the first. But the MT is perfectly clear as it stands.

[16] tn Heb "your seed"; this must be interpreted figuratively for what the seed produces.

[17] tn Heb "gather it"; the referent (the grain) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn Simply, the MT has "and your threshing floor gather." The "threshing floor" has to be an adverbial accusative of place.

[19] tc This whole section on the ostrich is not included in the LXX. Many feel it is an interpolation and should therefore be deleted. The pattern of the chapter changes from the questions being asked to observations being made.

[20] tn The word occurs only here and means "shrill cries." If the MT is correct, this is a poetic name for the ostrich (see Lam 4:3).

[21] tn Many proposals have been made here. The MT has a verb, "exult." Strahan had "flap joyously," a rendering followed by the NIV. The RSV uses "wave proudly."

[22] tn The point of this statement would be that the ostrich cannot compare to the stork. But there are many other proposals for this line – just about every commentator has a different explanation for it. Of the three words here, the first means "pinion," the third "plumage," and the second prob-

39:14 For she leaves[1] her eggs on the ground, and lets them be warmed on the soil.
39:15 She forgets that a foot might crush them, or that a wild animal[2] might trample them.
39:16 She is harsh[3] with her young,
as if they were not hers;
she is unconcerned
about the uselessness of her labor.
39:17 For God deprived her of wisdom, and did not impart understanding to her.
39:18 But as soon as she springs up,[4]
she laughs at the horse and its rider.

39:19 "Do you give the horse its strength?
Do you clothe its neck with a mane?[5]
39:20 Do you make it leap[6] like a locust?
Its proud neighing[7] is terrifying!
39:21 It[8] paws the ground in the valley,[9]
exulting mightily,[10]
it goes out to meet the weapons.
39:22 It laughs at fear and is not dismayed;
it does not shy away from the sword.
39:23 On it the quiver rattles;
the lance and javelin[11] flash.
39:24 In excitement and impatience it consumes the ground;[12] it cannot stand still[13] when the trumpet is blown.
39:25 At the sound of the trumpet, it says, 'Aha!'
And from a distance it catches the scent of battle, the thunderous shouting of commanders, and the battle cries.

and spreads its wings toward the south?
39:27 Is it at your command[15] that the eagle soars, and builds its nest on high?
39:28 It lives on a rock and spends the night there, on a rocky crag[16] and a fortress.[17]
39:29 From there it spots[18] its prey,[19] its eyes gaze intently from a distance.
39:30 And its young ones devour the blood, and where the dead carcasses[20] are, there it is."

Job's Reply to God's Challenge

40:1 Then the LORD answered Job:

40:2 "Will the one who contends[21] with the Almighty correct him?[22]

ably "stork," although the LXX has "heron." The point of this whole section is that the ostrich is totally lacking in parental care, whereas the stork is characterized by it. The Hebrew word for "stork" is the same word for "love": חֲסִידָה (khasidah), an interpretation followed by the NASB. The most likely reading is "or are they the pinions and plumage of the stork?" The ostrich may flap about, but cannot fly and does not care for its young.

[1] tn The meaning may have the connotation of "lays; places," rather than simply abandoning (see M. Dahood, "The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 307f.).

[2] tn Heb "an animal of the field."

[3] sn This verb, "to deal harshly; to harden; to treat cruelly," is used for hardening the heart elsewhere (see Isa 63:17).

[4] tn The colon poses a slight problem here. The literal meaning of the Hebrew verb translated "springs up" (i.e., "lifts herself on high") might suggest flight. But some of the proposals involve a reading about readying herself to run.

[5] tn The second half of the verse contains this hapax legomenon, which is usually connected with the word רַעְמָה (ra'mah, "thunder"). A. B. Davidson thought it referred to the quivering of the neck rather than the mane. Gray thought the sound and not the movement was the point. But without better evidence, a reading that has "quivering mane" may not be far off the mark. But it may be simplest to translate it "mane" and assume that the idea of "quivering" is part of the meaning.

[6] sn The same ideas are found in Joel 2:4. The leaping motion is compared to the galloping of the horse.

[7] tn The word could mean "snorting" as well (see Jer 8:16). It comes from the root "to blow." If the horse is running and breathing hard, this could be the sense here.

[8] tc The Hebrew text has a plural verb, "they paw." For consistency and for stylistic reasons this is translated as a singular.

[9] tn The armies would prepare for battles that were usually fought in the valleys, and so the horse was ready to charge. But in Ugaritic the word `mk means "force" as well as "valley." The idea of "force" would fit the parallelism here well (see M. Dahood, "Value of Ugaritic for textual criticism," Bib 40 [1959]: 166).

[10] tn Or "in strength."

[11] tn This may be the scimitar (see G. Molin, "What is a kidon?" JSS 1 [1956]: 334-37).

[12] tn "Swallow the ground" is a metaphor for the horse's running. Gray renders the line: "quivering and excited he dashes into the fray."

[13] tn The use of אָמַן ('aman) in the Hiphil in this place is unique. Such a form would normally mean "to believe." But its basic etymological meaning comes through here. The verb means "to be firm; to be reliable; to be dependable." The causative here would mean "to make firm" or "to stand firm."

[14] tn This word occurs only here. It is connected to "pinions" in v. 13. Dhorme suggests "clad with feathers," but the line suggests more the use of the wings.

[15] tn Heb "your mouth."

[16] tn Heb "upon the tooth of a rock."

[17] tn The word could be taken as the predicate, but because of the conjunction it seems to be adding another description of the place of its nest.

[18] tn The word means "search," but can be used for a wide range of matters, including spying.

[19] tn Heb "food."

[20] tn The word חֲלָלִים (khalalim) designates someone who is fatally wounded, literally the "pierced one," meaning anyone or thing that dies a violent death.

[21] tn The form רַב (rov) is the infinitive absolute from the verb רִיב (riv, "contend"). Dhorme wishes to repoint it to make it the active participle, the "one who argues with the Almighty."

[22] tn The verb יִסּוֹר (yissor) is found only here, but comes from a common root meaning "to correct; to reprove." Several suggestions have been made to improve on the MT. Dhorme read it יָסוּר (yasur) in the sense of "to turn aside; to yield." Ehrlich read this emendation as "to come to an end." But the MT could be read as "to correct; to instruct."

Let the person who accuses God give him an answer!"

40:3 Then Job answered the LORD:
40:4 "Indeed, I am completely unworthy[1] – how could I reply to you?
I put[2] my hand over my mouth to silence myself.[3] 40:5 I have spoken once, but I cannot answer; twice, but I will say no more."[4]

The Lord's Second Speech[5]

40:6 Then the LORD answered Job from the whirlwind:

40:7 "Get ready for a difficult task[6] like a man.
I will question you and you will inform me!
40:8 Would you indeed annul[7] my justice?
Would you declare me guilty so that you might be right?
40:9 Do you have an arm as powerful as God's,[8] and can you thunder with a voice like his?
40:10 Adorn yourself, then, with majesty and excellency, and clothe yourself with glory and honor!
40:11 Scatter abroad[9] the abundance[10] of your anger.
Look at every proud man[11] and bring him low;
40:12 Look at every proud man and abase him;
crush the wicked on the spot![12]
40:13 Hide them in the dust[13] together, imprison[14] them[15] in the grave.[16]
40:14 Then I myself will acknowledge[17] to you that your own right hand can save you.[18]

The Description of Behemoth[19]

40:15 "Look now at Behemoth,[20] which I made as[21] I made you;
it eats grass like the ox.
40:16 Look[22] at its strength in its loins, and its power in the muscles of its belly.
40:17 It makes its tail stiff[23] like a cedar,
the sinews of its thighs are tightly wound.
40:18 Its bones are tubes of bronze, its limbs like bars of iron.

---

1 tn The word קַלֹּתִי (qalloti) means "to be light; to be of small account; to be unimportant." From this comes the meaning "contemptible," which in the causative stem would mean "to treat with contempt; to curse." Dhorme tries to make the sentence a conditional clause and suggests this meaning: "If I have been thoughtless." There is really no "if" in Job's mind.

2 tn The perfect verb here should be classified as an instantaneous perfect; the action is simultaneous with the words.

3 tn The words "to silence myself" are supplied in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Heb "I will not add."

5 sn The speech can be divided into three parts: the invitation to Job to assume the throne and rule the world (40:7-14), the description of Behemoth (40:15-24), and the description of Leviathan (41:1-34).

6 tn See note on "task" in 38:3.

7 tn The verb פָּרַר (parar) means "to annul; to break; to frustrate." It was one thing for Job to claim his own integrity, but it was another matter altogether to nullify God's righteousness in the process.

8 tn Heb "do you have an arm like God?" The words "as powerful as" have been supplied in the translation to clarify the metaphor.

9 tn The verb was used for scattering lightning (Job 37:11). God is challenging Job to unleash his power and judge wickedness in the world.

10 tn Heb "the overflowings."

11 tn The word was just used in the positive sense of excellence or majesty; now the exalted nature of the person refers to self-exaltation, or pride.

12 tn The expression translated "on the spot" is the prepositional phrase תַּחְתָּם (takhtam, "under them"). "Under them" means in their place. But it can also mean "where someone stands, on the spot" (see Exod 16:29; Jos 6:5; Judg 7:21, etc.).

13 tn The word "dust" can mean "ground" here, or more likely, "grave."

14 tn The verb חָבַשׁ (khavash) means "to bind." In Arabic the word means "to bind" in the sense of "to imprison," and that fits here.

15 tn Heb "their faces."

16 tn The word is "secret place," the place where he is to hide them, i.e., the grave. The text uses the word "secret place" as a metonymy for the grave.

17 tn The verb is usually translated "praise," but with the sense of a public declaration or acknowledgment. It is from יָדָה (yadah, in the Hiphil, as here, "give thanks, laud").

18 tn The imperfect verb has the nuance of potential imperfect: "can save; is able to save."

19 sn The next ten verses are devoted to a portrayal of Behemoth (the name means "beast" in Hebrew). It does not fit any of the present material very well, and so many think the section is a later addition. Its style is more like that of a textbook. Moreover, if the animal is a real animal (the usual suggestion is the hippopotamus), then the location of such an animal is Egypt and not Palestine. Some have identified these creatures Behemoth and Leviathan as mythological creatures (Gunkel, Pope). Others point out that these creatures could have been dinosaurs (P. J. Maarten, NIDOTTE, 2:780; H. M. Morris, The Remarkable Record of Job, 115-22). Most would say they are real animals, but probably mythologized by the pagans. So the pagan reader would receive an additional impact from this point about God's sovereignty over all nature.

20 sn By form the word is the feminine plural of the Hebrew word for "beast." Here it is an abstract word – a title.

21 tn Heb "with you." The meaning could be temporal ("when I made you") – perhaps a reference to the sixth day of creation (Gen 1:24).

22 tn In both of these verses הִנֵּה (hinneh, "behold") has the deictic force (the word is from Greek δείκνυμι, deiknumi, "to show"). It calls attention to something by pointing it out. The expression goes with the sudden look, the raised eye, the pointing hand – "O look!"

23 tn The verb חָפַץ (khafats) occurs only here. It may have the meaning "to make stiff; to make taut" (Arabic). The LXX and the Syriac versions support this with "erects." But there is another Arabic word that could be cognate, meaning "arch, bend." This would give the idea of the tail swaying. The other reading seems to make better sense here. However, "stiff" presents a serious problem with the view that the animal is the hippopotamus.

40:19 It ranks first among the works of God,[1]
the One who made it has furnished it with a sword.[2] 40:20 For the hills bring it food,[3] where all the wild animals play.
40:21 Under the lotus trees it lies, in the secrecy of the reeds and the marsh.
40:22 The lotus trees conceal it in their[4] shadow;
the poplars by the stream conceal it.
40:23 If the river rages,[5] it is not disturbed, it is secure,[6] though the Jordan should surge up to its mouth.
40:24 Can anyone catch it by its eyes,[7] or pierce its nose with a snare?[8]

The Description of Leviathan

41:1 (40:25)[9] "Can you pull in[10] Leviathan with a hook, and tie down[11] its tongue with a rope?
41:2 Can you put a cord through its nose, or pierce its jaw with a hook?
41:3 Will it make numerous supplications to you,[12] will it speak to you with tender words?[13] 41:4 Will it make a pact[14] with you, so you could take it[15] as your slave for life?
41:5 Can you play[16] with it, like a bird, or tie it on a leash[17] for your girls?
41:6 Will partners[18] bargain[19] for it?
Will they divide it up[20] among the merchants?
41:7 Can you fill its hide with harpoons or its head with fishing spears?
41:8 If you lay your hand on it,
you will remember[21] the fight,
and you will never do it again!
41:9 (41:1)[22] See, his expectation is wrong,[23]
he is laid low even at the sight of it.[24]

---

[1] tn Heb "the ways of God."

sn This may be a reference to Gen 1:24, where the first of the animal creation was the cattle – b^{e}hemah (בְּהֵמָה).

[2] tc The literal reading of the MT is "let the one who made him draw near [with] his sword." The sword is apparently a reference to the teeth or tusks of the animal, which cut vegetation like a sword. But the idea of a weapon is easier to see, and so the people who favor the mythological background see here a reference to God's slaying the Beast. There are again many suggestions on how to read the line. The RV probably has the safest: "He that made him has furnished him with his sword" (the sword being a reference to the sharp tusks with which he can attack).

[3] tn The word בּוּל (bul) probably refers to food. Many take it as an abbreviated form of יְבוּל (y^{e}vul, "produce of the field"). The vegetation that is produced on the low hills is what is meant.

[4] tn The suffix is singular, but must refer to the trees' shade.

[5] tn The word ordinarily means "to oppress." So many commentators have proposed suitable changes: "overflows" (Beer), "gushes" (Duhm), "swells violently" (Dhorme, from a word that means "be strong").

[6] tn Or "he remains calm."

[7] tn The idea would be either (1) catch it while it is watching, or (2) in some way disabling its eyes before the attack. But others change the reading; Ball suggested "with hooks" and this has been adopted by some modern English versions (e.g., NRSV).

[8] tn Ehrlich altered the MT slightly to get "with thorns," a view accepted by Driver, Dhorme and Pope.

[9] sn Beginning with 41:1, the verse numbers through 41:9 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 41:1 ET = 40:25 HT, 41:2 ET = 40:26 HT, etc., through 41:34 ET = 41:26 HT. The Hebrew verse numbers in the remainder of the chapter differ from the verse numbers in the English Bible. Beginning with 42:1 the verse numbers in the ET and HT are again the same.

[10] tn The verb מָשַׁךְ (mashakh) means "to extract from the water; to fish." The question here includes the use of a hook to fish the creature out of the water so that its jaws can be tied safely.

[11] tn The verb שָׁקַע (shaqa') means "to cause to sink," if it is connected with the word in Amos 8:8 and 9:5. But it may have the sense of "to tie; to bind." If the rope were put around the tongue and jaw, binding tightly would be the sense.

[12] tn The line asks if the animal, when caught and tied and under control, would keep on begging for mercy. Absolutely not. It is not in the nature of the beast. The construction uses יַרְבֶּה (yarbeh, "[will] he multiply" [= "make numerous"]), with the object, "supplications" i.e., prayers for mercy.

[13] tn The rhetorical question again affirms the opposite. The poem is portraying the creature as powerful and insensitive.

[14] tn Heb "will he cut a covenant."

[15] tn The imperfect verb serves to express what the covenant pact would cover, namely, "that you take."

[16] tn The Hebrew verb is שָׂחַק (sakhaq, "to sport; to trifle; to play," Ps 104:26).

[17] tn The idea may include putting Leviathan on a leash. D. W. Thomas suggested on the basis of an Arabic cognate that it could be rendered "tie him with a string like a young sparrow" (VT 14 [1964]: 114ff.).

[18] tn The word חָבַר (khabbar) is a hapax legomenon, but the meaning is "to associate" since it is etymologically related to the verb "to join together." The idea is that fishermen usually work in companies or groups, and then divide up the catch when they come ashore – which involves bargaining.

[19] tn The word כָּרָה (karah) means "to sell." With the preposition עַל ('al, "upon") it has the sense "to bargain over something."

[20] tn The verb means "to cut up; to divide up" in the sense of selling the dead body (see Exod 21:35). This will be between them and the merchants (כְּנַעֲנִים, k^{e}na'anim).

[21] tn The verse uses two imperatives which can be interpreted in sequence: do this, and then this will happen.

[22] sn Job 41:9 in the English Bible is 41:1 in the Hebrew text (BHS). From here to the end of the chapter the Hebrew verse numbers differ from those in the English Bible, with 41:10 ET = 41:2 HT, 41:11 ET = 41:3 HT, etc. See also the note on 41:1.

[23] tn The line is difficult. "His hope [= expectation]" must refer to any assailant who hopes or expects to capture the creature. Because there is no antecedent, Dhorme and others transpose it with the next verse. The point is that the man who thought he was sufficient to confront Leviathan soon finds his hope – his expectation – false (a derivative from the verb כָּזַב [kazab, "lie"] is used for a mirage).

[24] tn There is an interrogative particle in this line, which most commentators ignore. But others freely emend the MT. Gunkel, following the mythological approach, has "his appearance casts down even a god." Cheyne likewise has: "even divine beings the fear of him brings low" (JQR 9 [1896/97]: 579). Pope has, "Were not the gods cast down at the sight of him?" There is no need to bring in this mythological element.

41:10 Is it not fierce[1] when it is awakened?
Who is he, then, who can stand before it?[2]
41:11 (Who has confronted[3] me that I should repay?[4] Everything under heaven belongs to me!)[5] 41:12 I will not keep silent about its limbs, and the extent of its might,
and the grace of its arrangement.[6]
41:13 Who can uncover its outer covering?[7]
Who can penetrate to the inside of its armor?[8]
41:14 Who can open the doors of its mouth?[9]
Its teeth all around are fearsome.
41:15 Its back[10] has rows of shields, shut up closely[11] together as with a seal;
41:16 each one is so close to the next[12]
that no air can come between them.
41:17 They lock tightly together, one to the next;[13]
they cling together and cannot be separated.
41:18 Its snorting throws out flashes of light;
its eyes are like the red glow[14] of dawn.
41:19 Out of its mouth go flames,[15]
sparks of fire shoot forth!
41:20 Smoke streams from its nostrils as from a boiling pot over burning[16] rushes.
41:21 Its breath sets coals ablaze and a flame shoots from its mouth.
41:22 Strength lodges in its neck, and despair[17] runs before it.
41:23 The folds[18] of its flesh are tightly joined;
they are firm on it, immovable.[19] 41:24 Its heart[20] is hard as rock, hard as a lower millstone.
41:25 When it rises up, the mighty are terrified, at its thrashing about they withdraw.[21] 41:26 Whoever strikes it with a sword[22] will have no effect,[23]
nor with the spear, arrow, or dart.
41:27 It regards iron as straw and bronze as rotten wood.
41:28 Arrows[24] do not make it flee;

1 sn The description is of the animal, not the hunter (or fisherman). Leviathan is so fierce that no one can take him on alone.

2 tc MT has "before me" and can best be rendered as "Who then is he that can stand before me?" (ESV, NASB, NIV, NLT, NJPS). The following verse (11) favors the MT since both express the lesson to be learned from Leviathan: If a man cannot stand up to Leviathan, how can he stand up to its creator? The translation above has chosen to read the text as "before him" (cf. NRSV, NJB).

3 tn The verb קָדַם (qadam) means "to come to meet; to come before; to confront" to the face.

4 sn The verse seems an intrusion (and so E. Dhorme, H. H. Rowley, and many others change the pronouns to make it refer to the animal). But what the text is saying is that it is more dangerous to confront God than to confront this animal.

5 tn This line also focuses on the sovereign God rather than Leviathan. H. H. Rowley, however, wants to change לִי־הוּא (li-hu', "it [belongs] to me") into לֹא הוּא (lo' hu', "there is no one"). So it would say that there is no one under the whole heaven who could challenge Leviathan and live, rather than saying it is more dangerous to challenge God to make him repay.

6 tn Dhorme changes the noun into a verb, "I will tell," and the last two words into אֵין עָרְכִי ('en 'erekh, "there is no comparison"). The result is "I will tell of his incomparable might."

7 tn Heb "the face of his garment," referring to the outer garment or covering. Some take it to be the front as opposed to the back.

8 tc The word רִסְנוֹ (resen) has often been rendered "bridle" (cf. ESV), but that leaves a number of unanswered questions. The LXX reads סִרְיוֹן (siryon), with the transposition of letters, but that means "coat of armor." If the metathesis stands, there is also support from the cognate Akkadian.

9 tn Heb "his face."

10 tc The MT has גַּאֲוָה (ga'avah, "his pride"), but the LXX, Aquila, and the Vulgate all read גַּוּ (gavvo, "his back"). Almost all the modern English versions follow the variant reading, speaking about "his [or its] back."

11 tn Instead of צַר (tsar, "closely") the LXX has צוּר (tsor, "stone") to say that the seal was rock hard.

12 tn The expression "each one…to the next" is literally "one with one."

13 tn Heb "a man with his brother."

14 tn Heb "the eyelids," but it represents the early beams of the dawn as the cover of night lifts.

15 sn For the animal, the image is that of pent-up breath with water in a hot steam jet coming from its mouth, like a stream of fire in the rays of the sun. The language is hyperbolic, probably to reflect the pagan ideas of the dragon of the deep in a polemical way – they feared it as a fire breathing monster, but in reality it might have been a steamy crocodile.

16 tn The word "burning" is supplied. The Syriac and Vulgate have "a seething and boiling pot" (reading אֹגֶם ['ogem] for אַגְמֹן ['agmon]). This view is widely accepted.

17 tn This word, דְּאָבָה (de'avah) is a hapax legomenon. But the verbal root means "to languish; to pine." A related noun talks of dejection and despair in Deut 28:65. So here "despair" as a translation is preferable to "terror."

18 tn Heb "fallings."

19 tn The last clause says "it cannot be moved." But this part will function adverbially in the sentence.

20 tn The description of his heart being "hard" means that he is cruel and fearless. The word for "hard" is the word encountered before for molten or cast metal.

21 tc This verse has created all kinds of problems for the commentators. The first part is workable: "when he raises himself up, the mighty [the gods] are terrified." The mythological approach would render אֵלִים ('elim) as "gods." But the last two words, which could be rendered "at the breaking [crashing, or breakers] they fail," receive much attention. E. Dhorme (Job, 639) suggests "majesty" for "raising up" and "billows" (גַּלִּים, gallim) for אֵלִים ('elim), and gets a better parallelism: "the billows are afraid of his majesty, and the waves draw back." But H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 263) does not think this is relevant to the context, which is talking about the creature's defense against attack. The RSV works well for the first part, but the second part need some change; so Rowley adopts "in their dire consternation they are beside themselves."

22 tn This is the clearest reading, following A. B. Davidson, Job, 285. The versions took different readings of the construction.

23 tn The verb קוּם (qum, "stand") with בְּלִי (be'li, "not") has the sense of "does not hold firm," or "gives way."

24 tn Heb "the son of the bow."

slingstones become like chaff to it.
41:29 A club is counted[1] as a piece of straw;
it laughs at the rattling of the lance.
41:30 Its underparts[2] are the sharp points of potsherds, it leaves its mark in the mud like a threshing sledge.[3] 41:31 It makes the deep boil like a cauldron and stirs up the sea like a pot of ointment,[4] 41:32 It leaves a glistening wake behind it;
one would think the deep had a head of white hair.
41:33 The likes of it is not on earth,
a creature[5] without fear.
41:34 It looks on every haughty being;
it is king over all that are proud."[6]

Job's Confession

42:1 Then Job answered the LORD:
42:2 "I know that you can do all things;
no purpose of yours can be thwarted;
42:3 you asked,[7]
'Who is this who darkens counsel without knowledge?'
But[8] I have declared without understanding[9] things too wonderful for me to know.[10]
42:4 You said,[11]
'Pay attention, and I will speak;
I will question you, and you will answer me.'
42:5 I had heard of you by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye has seen you.[12]
42:6 Therefore I despise myself,[13] and I repent in dust and ashes!

VII. The Epilogue (42:7-17)

42:7 After the LORD had spoken these things to Job, he[14] said to Eliphaz the Temanite, "My anger is stirred up[15] against you and your two friends, because you have not spoken about me what is right,[16] as my servant Job has. 42:8 So now take[17] seven bulls and seven rams and go to my servant Job and offer a burnt offering for yourselves. And my servant Job will intercede[18] for you, and I will respect him,[19] so that I do not deal with you[20] according to your folly,[21] because you have not spoken about me what is right, as my servant Job has."[22]

42:9 So they went, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, and did just as the LORD had told them; and the LORD had respect for Job.[23]

---

[1] tn The verb is plural, but since there is no expressed subject it is translated as a passive here.

[2] tn Heb "under him."

[3] tn Here only the word "sharp" is present, but in passages like Isa 41:15 it is joined with "threshing sledge." Here and in Amos 1:3 and Isa 28:27 the word stands alone, but represents the "sledge."

[4] sn The idea is either that the sea is stirred up like the foam from beating the ingredients together, or it is the musk-smell that is the point of comparison.

[5] tn Heb "one who was made."

[6] tn Heb "the sons of pride." Dhorme repoints the last word to get "all the wild beasts," but this misses the point of the verse. This animal looks over every proud creature – but he is king of them all in that department.

[7] tn The expression "you asked" is added here to clarify the presence of the line to follow. Many commentators delete it as a gloss from Job 38:2. If it is retained, then Job has to be recalling God's question before he answers it.

[8] tn The word לָכֵן (lakhen) is simply "but," as in Job 31:37.

[9] tn Heb "and I do not understand." The expression serves here in an adverbial capacity. It also could be subordinated as a complement: "I have declared [things that] I do not understand."

[10] tn The last clause is "and I do not know." This is also subordinated to become a dependent clause.

[11] tn This phrase, "you said," is supplied in the translation to introduce the recollection of God's words.

[12] sn This statement does not imply there was a vision. He is simply saying that this experience of God was real and personal. In the past his knowledge of God was what he had heard – hearsay. This was real.

[13] tn Or "despise what I said." There is no object on the verb; Job could be despising himself or the things he said (see L. J. Kuyper, "Repentance of Job," VT 9 [1959]: 91-94).

[14] tn Heb "the LORD." The title has been replaced by the pronoun ("he") in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[15] tn Heb "is kindled."

[16] tn The form נְכוֹנָה (nekhonah) is from כון (kun, "to be firm; to be fixed; to be established"). Here it means "the right thing" or "truth." The Akkadian word kenu (from כון, kun) connotes justice and truth.

[17] tn The imperatives in this verse are plural, so all three had to do this together.

[18] tn The verb "pray" is the Hitpael from the root פָּלַל (palal). That root has the main idea of arbitration; so in this stem it means "to seek arbitration [for oneself]," or "to pray," or "to intercede."

[19] tn Heb "I will lift up his face," meaning, "I will regard him."

[20] tn This clause is a result clause, using the negated infinitive construct.

[21] tn The word "folly" can also be taken in the sense of "disgrace." If the latter is chosen, the word serves as the direct object. If the former, then it is an adverbial accusative.

[22] sn The difference between what they said and what Job said, therefore, has to do with truth. Job was honest, spoke the truth, poured out his complaints, but never blasphemed God. For his words God said he told the truth. He did so with incomplete understanding, and with all the impatience and frustration one might expect. Now the friends, however, did not tell what was right about God. They were not honest; rather, they were self-righteous and condescending. They were saying what they thought should be said, but it was wrong.

[23] tn The expression "had respect for Job" means God answered his prayer.

42:10 So the LORD[1] restored what Job had lost[2] after he prayed for his friends,[3] and the LORD doubled[4] all that had belonged to Job. 42:11 So they came to him, all his brothers and sisters and all who had known him before, and they dined[5] with him in his house. They comforted him and consoled him for all the trouble the LORD had brought on him, and each one gave him a piece of silver[6] and a gold ring.[7]

42:12 So the LORD blessed the second part of Job's life more than the first. He had 14,000 sheep, 6,000 camels, 1,000 yoke of oxen, and 1,000 female donkeys. 42:13 And he also had seven sons[8] and three daughters. 42:14 The first daughter he named Jemimah,[9] the second Keziah,[10] and the third Keren-Happuch.[11] 42:15 Nowhere in all the land could women be found who were as beautiful as Job's daughters, and their father granted them an inheritance alongside their brothers.

42:16 After this Job lived 140 years; he saw his children and their children to the fourth generation. 42:17 And so Job died, old and full of days.

[1] tn The paragraph begins with the disjunctive vav, "Now as for the LORD, he...."

[2] sn The expression here is interesting: "he returned the captivity of Job," a clause used elsewhere in the Bible of Israel (see e.g., Ps 126). Here it must mean "the fortunes of Job," i.e., what he had lost. There is a good deal of literature on this; for example, see R. Borger, "Zu sub sb(i)t," ZAW 25 (1954): 315-16; and E. Baumann, ZAW 6 (1929): 17ff.

[3] tn This is a temporal clause, using the infinitive construct with the subject genitive suffix. By this it seems that this act of Job was also something of a prerequisite for restoration – to pray for them.

[4] tn The construction uses the verb "and he added" with the word "repeat" (or "twice").

[5] tn Heb "ate bread."

[6] tn The Hebrew word קְשִׂיטָה (qesitah) is generally understood to refer to a unit of money, but the value is unknown.

sn The Hebrew word refers to a piece of silver, yet uncoined. It is the kind used in Gen 33:19 and Josh 24:32. It is what would be expected of a story set in the patriarchal age.

[7] sn This gold ring was worn by women in the nose, or men and women in the ear.

[8] tn The word for "seven" is spelled in an unusual way. From this some have thought it means "twice seven," or fourteen sons. Several commentators take this view, but it is probably not warranted.

[9] sn The Hebrew name Jemimah means "dove."

[10] sn The Hebrew name Keziah means "cassia."

[11] sn The Hebrew name Keren-Happuch means "horn of eye-paint."

Psalms

Book 1
(Psalms 1-41)

Psalm 1[1]

1:1 How blessed[2] is the one[3] who does not follow[4] the advice[5] of the wicked,[6] or stand in the pathway[7] with sinners, or sit in the assembly[8] of scoffers![9] 1:2 Instead[10] he finds pleasure in obeying the LORD's commands;[11]
he meditates on[12] his commands[13] day and night.
1:3 He is like[14] a tree planted by flowing streams;[15]
it[16] yields[17] its fruit at the proper time,[18] and its leaves never fall off.[19]
He succeeds in everything he attempts.[20]
1:4 Not so with the wicked!

[1] sn Psalm 1. In this wisdom psalm the author advises his audience to reject the lifestyle of the wicked and to be loyal to God. The psalmist contrasts the destiny of the wicked with that of the righteous, emphasizing that the wicked are eventually destroyed while the godly prosper under the Lord's protective care.

[2] tn The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see v. 3; Pss 2:12; 34:9; 41:1; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15).

[3] tn Heb "[Oh] the happiness [of] the man." Hebrew wisdom literature often assumes and reflects the male-oriented perspective of ancient Israelite society. The principle of the psalm is certainly applicable to all people, regardless of their gender or age. To facilitate modern application, we translate the gender and age specific "man" with the more neutral "one." (Generic "he" is employed in vv. 2-3). Since the godly man described in the psalm is representative of followers of God (note the plural form צַדִּיקִים [tsadiqim, "righteous, godly"] in vv. 5-6), one could translate the collective singular with the plural "those" both here and in vv. 2-3, where singular pronouns and verbal forms are utilized in the Hebrew text (cf. NRSV). However, here the singular form may emphasize that godly individuals are usually outnumbered by the wicked. Retaining the singular allows the translation to retain this emphasis.

[4] tn Heb "walk in." The three perfect verbal forms in v. 1 refer in this context to characteristic behavior. The sequence "walk–stand–sit" envisions a progression from relatively casual association with the wicked to complete identification with them.

[5] tn The Hebrew noun translated "advice" most often refers to the "counsel" or "advice" one receives from others. To "walk in the advice of the wicked" means to allow their evil advice to impact and determine one's behavior.

[6] tn In the psalms the Hebrew term רְשָׁעִים (resha'im, "wicked") describes people who are proud, practical atheists (Ps 10:2, 4, 11) who hate God's commands, commit sinful deeds, speak lies and slander (Ps 50:16-20), and cheat others (Ps 37:21).

[7] tn "Pathway" here refers to the lifestyle of sinners. To "stand in the pathway of/with sinners" means to closely associate with them in their sinful behavior.

[8] tn Here the Hebrew term מוֹשָׁב (moshav), although often translated "seat" (cf. NEB, NIV), appears to refer to the whole assembly of evildoers. The word also carries the semantic nuance "assembly" in Ps 107:32, where it is in synonymous parallelism with קָהָל (qahal, "assembly").

[9] tn The Hebrew word refers to arrogant individuals (Prov 21:24) who love conflict (Prov 22:10) and vociferously reject wisdom and correction (Prov 1:22; 9:7-8; 13:1; 15:12). To "sit in the assembly" of such people means to completely identify with them in their proud, sinful plans and behavior.

[10] tn Here the Hebrew expression כִּי־אִם (ki-'im, "instead") introduces a contrast between the sinful behavior depicted in v. 1 and the godly lifestyle described in v. 2.

[11] tn Heb "his delight [is] in the law of the LORD." In light of the following line, which focuses on studying the Lord's law, one might translate, "he finds pleasure in studying the LORD's commands." However, even if one translates the line this way, it is important to recognize that mere study and intellectual awareness are not ultimately what bring divine favor. Study of the law is metonymic here for the correct attitudes and behavior that should result from an awareness of and commitment to God's moral will; thus "obeying" has been used in the translation rather than "studying."

[12] tn The Hebrew imperfect verbal form draws attention to the characteristic behavior described here and lends support to the hyperbolic adverbial phrase "day and night." The verb הָגָה (hagag) means "to recite quietly; to meditate" and refers metonymically to intense study and reflection.

[13] tn Or "his law."

[14] tn The Hebrew perfect verbal form with vav (ו) consecutive here carries the same characteristic force as the imperfect in the preceding verse. According to the psalmist, the one who studies and obeys God's commands typically prospers.

[15] tn Heb "channels of water."

[16] tn Heb "which."

[17] tn The Hebrew imperfect verbal forms in v. 3 draw attention to the typical nature of the actions/states they describe.

[18] tn Heb "in its season."

[19] tn Or "fade"; "wither."

sn The author compares the godly individual to a tree that has a rich water supply (planted by flowing streams), develops a strong root system, and is filled with leaves and fruit. The simile suggests that the godly have a continual source of life which in turn produces stability and uninterrupted prosperity.

[20] tn Heb "and all which he does prospers"; or "and all which he does he causes to prosper." (The simile of the tree does not extend to this line.) It is not certain if the Hiphil verbal form (יַצְלִיחַ, yatsliakh) is intransitive-exhibitive ("prospers") or causative ("causes to prosper") here. If the verb is intransitive, then כֹּל (kol, "all, everything") is the subject. If the verb is causative, then the godly individual or the Lord himself is the subject and כֹּל is the object. The wording is reminiscent of Josh 1:8, where the Lord tells Joshua: "This law scroll must not leave your lips! You must memorize it day and night so you can carefully obey all that is written in it. Then you will prosper (literally, "cause your way to prosper") and be successful."

Instead[1] they are like wind-driven chaff.[2]
1:5 For this reason[3] the wicked cannot withstand[4] judgment,[5] nor can sinners join the assembly of the godly.[6] 1:6 Certainly[7] the LORD guards the way of the godly,[8] but the way of the wicked ends in destruction.[9]

Psalm 2[10]

2:1 Why[11] do the nations rebel?[12]
Why[13] are the countries[14] devising[15] plots that will fail?[16]
2:2 The kings of the earth[17] form a united front;[18]
the rulers collaborate[19] against the LORD and his anointed king.[20]
2:3 They say,[21] "Let's tear off the shackles they've put on us![22]
Let's free ourselves from[23] their ropes!"
2:4 The one enthroned[24] in heaven laughs in disgust;[25]
the Lord taunts[26] them.

---

1 tn Here the Hebrew expression כִּי־אִם (ki-'im, "instead," cf. v. 2) introduces a contrast between the prosperity of the godly depicted in v. 3 and the destiny of the wicked described in v. 4.

2 tn Heb "[they are] like the chaff which [the] wind blows about." The Hebrew imperfect verbal form draws attention to the typical nature of the action described.

sn Wind-driven chaff. In contrast to the well-rooted and productive tree described in v. 3, the wicked are like a dried up plant that has no root system and is blown away by the wind. The simile describes the destiny of the wicked (see vv. 5-6).

3 tn Or "Therefore."

4 tn Heb "arise in," but the verb is used metonymically here in the sense of "stand"; "endure," as in 1 Sam 13:14 and Job 8:15. The negated Hebrew imperfect verbal form is here taken as indicating incapability or lack of potential, though one could understand the verb form as indicating what is typical ("do not withstand") or what will happen ("will not withstand").

5 tn Heb "the judgment." The article indicates a judgment that is definite in the mind of the speaker. In the immediate context this probably does not refer to the "final judgment" described in later biblical revelation, but to a temporal/historical judgment which the author anticipates. Periodically during the OT period, God would come in judgment, removing the wicked from the scene, while preserving a godly remnant (see Gen 6-9; Ps 37; Hab 3).

6 tn Heb "and sinners in the assembly (or "circle") of [the] godly." The negative particle and verb from the preceding line are assumed by ellipsis here ("will not arise/stand").

sn The assembly of the godly is insulated from divine judgment (Ps 37:12-17, 28-29).

7 tn The translation understands כִּי as asseverative. Another option is to translate "for," understanding v. 6 as a theological explanation for vv. 3-5, which contrasts the respective destinies of the godly and the wicked.

8 tn Heb "the LORD knows the way of the righteous." To "know a way" means, in its most basic sense, "to recognize/acknowledge a pathway, route, or prescribed way of life" (see Josh 3:4; Job 21:14; Ps 67:2; Isa 42:16; Jer 5:4-5). Here it could refer to the Lord recognizing the behavior of the godly and, by metonymy, rewarding their godliness with security and prosperity (resulting in the translation, "the LORD rewards the behavior of the godly"). The present translation takes the verb in the sense of "mark out" (cf. Job 23:10), which metonymically could mean "watch over, protect, guard." In this case the "way of the godly" is not their behavior, but their course of life or destiny; a translation reflecting this would be "the LORD protects the lives of the godly" or "the LORD watches over the destiny of the godly" (cf. NEB, NIV, NRSV). The Hebrew active participle יוֹדֵעַ (yodea', "knows") has here a characteristic durative force.

9 tn Heb "but the way of the wicked perishes." The "way of the wicked" may refer to their course of life (Ps 146:9; Prov 4:19; Jer 12:1) or their sinful behavior (Prov 12:26; 15:9). The Hebrew imperfect verbal form probably describes here what typically happens, though one could take the form as indicating what will happen ("will perish").

10 sn Psalm 2. In this royal psalm the author asserts the special status of the divinely chosen Davidic king and warns the nations and their rulers to submit to the authority of God and his chosen vice-regent.

11 tn The question is rhetorical. Rather than seeking information, the psalmist expresses his outrage that the nations would have the audacity to rebel against God and his chosen king.

12 tn The Hebrew verb רָגַשׁ (ragash) occurs only here. In Dan 6:6, 11, 15 the Aramaic cognate verb describes several officials acting as a group. A Hebrew nominal derivative is used in Ps 55:14 of a crowd of people in the temple.

13 tn The interrogative לָמָּה (lamah, "why?") is understood by ellipsis in the second line.

14 tn Or "peoples" (so many English versions).

15 tn The Hebrew imperfect form describes the rebellion as underway. The verb הָגָה (hagah), which means "to recite quietly, meditate," here has the metonymic nuance "devise, plan, plot" (see Ps 38:12; Prov 24:2).

16 tn Heb "devising emptiness." The noun רִיק (riq, "emptiness") may characterize their behavior as "worthless, morally bankrupt" but more likely refers to the outcome of their plots (i.e., failure). As the rest of the psalm emphasizes, their rebellion will fail.

17 sn The expression kings of the earth refers somewhat hyperbolically to the kings who had been conquered by and were subject to the Davidic king.

18 tn Or "take their stand." The Hebrew imperfect verbal form describes their action as underway.

19 tn Or "conspire together." The verbal form is a Niphal from יָסַד (yasad). BDB 413-14 s.v. יָסַד defines the verb as "establish, found," but HALOT 417 s.v. II יסד proposes a homonym meaning "get together, conspire" (an alternate form of סוד, sud).

20 tn Heb "and against his anointed one." The Davidic king is the referent (see vv. 6-7).

21 tn The words "they say" are supplied in the translation for clarification. The quotation represents the words of the rebellious kings.

22 tn Heb "their (i.e., the LORD's and the king's) shackles." The kings compare the rule of the Lord and his vice-regent to being imprisoned.

23 tn Heb "throw off from us."

24 tn Heb "sitting." The Hebrew verb יָשַׁב (yashav) is here used metonymically of "sitting enthroned" (see Pss 9:7; 29:10; 55:19; 102:12; 123:1).

25 tn As the next line indicates, this refers to derisive laughter. The Hebrew imperfect verbal forms in vv. 4-5 describe the action from the perspective of an eyewitness who is watching the divine response as it unfolds before his eyes.

26 tn Or "scoffs at"; "derides"; "mocks."

2:5 Then he angrily speaks to them and terrifies them in his rage,[1] saying,[2] 2:6 "I myself[3] have installed[4] my king on Zion, my holy hill."
2:7 The king says,[5] "I will announce the LORD's decree. He said to me:[6]
'You are my son![7] This very day I have become your father!
2:8 Ask me,
and I will give you the nations as your inheritance,[8]
the ends of the earth as your personal property.
2:9 You will break them[9] with an iron scepter;[10]
you will smash them like a potter's jar!'"[11]
2:10 So now, you kings, do what is wise;[12]
you rulers of the earth, submit to correction![13]
2:11 Serve[14] the LORD in fear!
Repent in terror![15]
2:12 Give sincere homage![16]
Otherwise he[17] will be angry,[18] and you will die because of your behavior,[19] when his anger quickly ignites.[20]
How blessed[21] are all who take shelter in him![22]

---

1 sn And terrifies them in his rage. This line focuses on the effect that God's angry response (see previous line) has on the rebellious kings.

2 tn The word "saying" is supplied in the translation for clarification to indicate that the speaker is the Lord (cf. RSV, NIV).

3 tn The first person pronoun appears before the first person verbal form for emphasis, reflected in the translation by "myself."

4 tn Or perhaps "consecrated."

5 tn The words "the king says" are supplied in the translation for clarification. The speaker is the Lord's chosen king.

6 tn Or "I will relate the decree. The LORD said to me" (in accordance with the Masoretic accentuation).

7 sn 'You are my son!' The Davidic king was viewed as God's "son" (see 2 Sam 7:14; Ps 89:26-27). The idiom reflects ancient Near Eastern adoption language associated with covenants of grant, by which a lord would reward a faithful subject by elevating him to special status, referred to as "sonship." Like a son, the faithful subject received an "inheritance," viewed as an unconditional, eternal gift. Such gifts usually took the form of land and/or an enduring dynasty. See M. Weinfeld, "The Covenant of Grant in the Old Testament and in the Ancient Near East," JAOS 90 (1970): 184-203, for general discussion and some striking extra-biblical parallels.

8 sn I will give you the nations. The LORD promises the Davidic king universal dominion.

9 tc The LXX reads "you will shepherd them." This reading, quoted in the Greek text of the NT in Rev 2:27; 12:5; 19:15, assumes a different vocalization of the consonantal Hebrew text and understands the verb as רָעָה (ra'ah, "to shepherd") rather than רָעַע (ra'a', "to break"). But the presence of נָפַץ (nafats, "to smash") in the next line strongly favors the MT vocalization.

10 tn The Hebrew term שֵׁבֶט (shevet) can refer to a "staff" or "rod," but here it probably refers to the Davidic king's royal scepter, symbolizing his sovereignty.

11 sn Like a potter's jar. Before the Davidic king's awesome power, the rebellious nations are like fragile pottery.

12 sn The speaker here is either the psalmist or the Davidic king, who now addresses the rebellious kings.

13 tn The Niphal has here a tolerative nuance; the kings are urged to submit themselves to the advice being offered.

14 tn The Hebrew verb translated "serve" refers here to submitting to the Lord's sovereignty as expressed through the rule of the Davidic king. Such "service" would involve maintaining allegiance to the Davidic king by paying tribute on a regular basis.

15 tn Traditionally, "rejoice with trembling" (KJV). The verb גִּיל (gil) normally means "rejoice," but this meaning does not fit well here in conjunction with "in trembling." Some try to understand "trembling" (and the parallel יִרְאָה, yir'ah, "fear") in the sense of "reverential awe" and then take the verbs "serve" and "rejoice" in the sense of "worship" (cf. NASB). But רְעָדָה (r'adah, "trembling") and its related terms consistently refer to utter terror and fear (see Exod 15:15; Job 4:14; Pss 48:6; 55:5; 104:32; Isa 33:14; Dan 10:11) or at least great emotional distress (Ezra 10:9). It seems more likely here that גִּיל carries its polarized meaning "mourn, lament," as in Hos 10:5. "Mourn, lament" would then be metonymic in this context for "repent" (referring to one's rebellious ways). On the meaning of the verb in Hos 10:5, see F. I. Andersen and D. N. Freedman, Hosea (AB), 556-57.

16 tn Traditionally, "kiss the son" (KJV). But בַּר (bar) is the Aramaic word for "son," not the Hebrew. For this reason many regard the reading as suspect. Some propose emendations of vv. 11b-12a. One of the more popular proposals is to read בִּרְעָדָה נַשְּׁקוּ לְרַגְלָיו (bir'adah nashᵉqu lᵉraslayv, "in trembling kiss his feet"). It makes better sense to understand בַּר (bar) as an adjective meaning "pure" (see Pss 24:4; 73:1 and BDB 141 s.v. בַּר 3) functioning here in an adverbial sense. If read this way, then the syntactical structure of exhortation (imperative followed by adverbial modifier) corresponds to the two preceding lines (see v. 11). The verb נָשַׁק (nashaq, "kiss") refers metonymically to showing homage (see 1 Sam 10:1; Hos 13:2). The exhortation in v. 12a advocates a genuine expression of allegiance and warns against insincerity. When swearing allegiance, vassal kings would sometimes do so insincerely, with the intent of rebelling when the time was right. The so-called "Vassal Treaties of Esarhaddon" also warn against such an attitude. In this treaty the vassal is told: "If you, as you stand on the soil where this oath [is sworn], swear the oath with your words and lips [only], do not swear with your entire heart, do not transmit it to your sons who will live after this treaty, if you take this curse upon yourselves but do not plan to keep the treaty of Esarhaddon...may your sons and grandsons because of this fear in the future" (see J. B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East, 2:62).

17 tn Throughout the translation of this verse the third person masculine pronouns refer to the LORD (cf. v. 11).

18 tn The implied subject of the verb is the LORD, mentioned in v. 11. Elsewhere the subject of this verb is consistently the LORD, suggesting it may be a technical term for divine anger. Anger is here used metonymically for judgment, as the following statement makes clear. A Moabite cognate occurs in the Mesha inscription, where it is used of the Moabite god Chemosh's anger at his people (see J. B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East, 1:209).

19 tn Heb "and you will perish [in the] way." The Hebrew word דֶּרֶךְ (derekh, "way") here refers to their rebellious behavior (not to a pathway, as often understood). It functions syntactically as an adverbial accusative in relation to the verb "perish."

20 tn Or "burns." The LORD's anger is compared here to fire, the most destructive force known in ancient Israel.

21 tn The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see Pss 1:1; 34:9; 41:1; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15).

22 sn Who take shelter in him. "Taking shelter" in the Lord is an idiom for seeking his protection. Seeking his protection presupposes and even demonstrates the subject's loyalty to the Lord. In the psalms those who "take shelter" in the Lord are contrasted with the wicked and equated with those who love, fear, and serve the Lord (Pss 5:11-12; 31:17-20; 34:21-22).

Psalm 3[1]

A psalm of David, written when he fled from his son Absalom.[2]

3:1 LORD, how[3] numerous are my enemies!
Many attack me.[4]
3:2 Many say about me,
"God will not deliver him."[5] (Selah)[6] 3:3 But you, LORD, are a shield that protects me;[7]
you are my glory[8] and the one who restores me.[9] 3:4 To the LORD I cried out,[10] and he answered me from his holy hill.[11] (Selah)
3:5 I rested and slept;
I awoke,[12] for the LORD protects[13] me.
3:6 I am not afraid[14] of the multitude of people[15] who attack me from all directions.[16]
3:7 Rise up,[17] LORD!
Deliver me, my God!
Yes,[18] you will strike[19] all my enemies on the jaw;
you will break the teeth[20] of the wicked.[21]
3:8 The LORD delivers;[22]
you show favor to your people.[23] (Selah)

[1] sn Psalm 3. The psalmist acknowledges that he is confronted by many enemies (vv. 1-2). But, alluding to a divine oracle he has received (vv. 4-5), he affirms his confidence in God's ability to protect him (vv. 3, 6) and requests that God make his promise a reality (vv. 7-8).

[2] sn According to Jewish tradition, David offered this prayer when he was forced to flee from Jerusalem during his son Absalom's attempted coup (see 2 Sam 15:13-17).

[3] tn The Hebrew term מָה (mah, "how") is used here as an adverbial exclamation (see BDB 553 s.v.).

[4] tn Heb "many rise up against me."

[5] tn Heb "there is no deliverance for him in God."

[6] sn The function of the Hebrew term סֶלָה (selah), transliterated here "Selah," is uncertain. It may be a musical direction of some kind.

[7] tn Heb "a shield round about me."

[8] tn Heb "my glory," or "my honor." The psalmist affirms that the LORD is his source of honor, i.e., the one who gives him honor in the sight of others. According to BDB 459 s.v. II כָּבוֹד 7, the phrase refers to God as the one to whom the psalmist gives honor. But the immediate context focuses on what God does for the psalmist, not vice-versa.

[9] tn Heb "[the one who] lifts my head." This phrase could be understood to refer to a general strengthening of the psalmist by God during difficult circumstances. However, if one takes the suggestion of the superscription that this is a Davidic psalm written during the revolt of Absalom, the phrase "lift the head" could refer to the psalmist's desire for restoration to his former position (cf. Gen 40:13 where the same phrase is used). Like the Hebrew text, the present translation ("who restores me") can be understood in either sense.

[10] tn The prefixed verbal form could be an imperfect, yielding the translation "I cry out," but the verb form in the next line (a vav [ו] consecutive with the preterite) suggests this is a brief narrative of what has already happened. Consequently the verb form in v. 4a is better understood as a preterite, "I cried out." (For another example of the preterite of this same verb form, see Ps 30:8.) Sometime after the crisis arose, the psalmist prayed to the Lord and received an assuring answer. Now he confidently awaits the fulfillment of the divine promise.

[11] sn His holy hill. That is, Zion (see Pss 2:6; 48:1-2). The psalmist recognizes that the LORD dwells in his sanctuary on Mount Zion.

[12] tn The three verbal forms that appear in succession here (perfect + vav [ו] consecutive with preterite + perfect) are most naturally taken as narrational. When the psalmist received an assuring word from the LORD, he was able to sleep calmly. Because the LORD was protecting him, he awoke safely from his sleep.

[13] tn Or "supports"; "sustains." In this explanatory causal clause the imperfect verbal form probably has a habitual or present progressive nuance, for the psalmist is confident of God's continual protection (see v. 3). Another option is to take the verb as a preterite, "for the LORD protected me." In this case, the psalmist focuses specifically on the protection God provided while he slept.

[14] tn The imperfect verbal form here expresses the psalmist's continuing attitude as he faces the crisis at hand.

[15] tn Or perhaps "troops." The Hebrew noun עָם ('am) sometimes refers to a military contingent or army.

[16] tn Heb "who all around take a stand against me."

[17] tn In v. 2 the psalmist describes his enemies as those who "confront" him (קָמִים [qamim], literally, "rise up against him"). Now, using the same verbal root (קוּם, qum) he asks the LORD to rise up (קוּמָה, qumah) in his defense.

[18] tn Elsewhere in the psalms the particle כִּי (ki), when collocated with a perfect verbal form and subordinated to a preceding imperative directed to God, almost always has an explanatory or causal force ("for, because") and introduces a motivating argument for why God should respond positively to the request (see Pss 5:10; 6:2; 12:1; 16:1; 41:4; 55:9; 56:1; 57:1; 60:2; 69:1; 74:20; 119:94; 123:3; 142:6; 143:8). (On three occasions the כִּי is recitative after a verb of perception ["see/know that," see Pss 4:3; 25:19; 119:159]). If כִּי is taken as explanatory here, then the psalmist is arguing that God should deliver him now because that is what God characteristically does. However, such a motivating argument is not used in the passages cited above. The motivating argument usually focuses on the nature of the psalmist's dilemma or the fact that he trusts in the Lord. For this reason it is unlikely that כִּי has its normal force here. Most scholars understand the particle כִּי as having an asseverative (emphasizing) function here ("indeed, yes"; NEB leaves the particle untranslated).
