[10] sn When Jesus said to those who came to arrest him "I am," they retreated and fell to the ground. L. Morris says that "it is possible that those in front recoiled from Jesus' unexpected advance, so that they bumped those behind them, causing them to stumble and fall" (John [NICNT], 743-44). Perhaps this is what in fact happened on the scene, but the theological significance given to this event by the author implies that more is involved. The reaction on the part of those who came to arrest Jesus comes in response to his affirmation that he is indeed the one they are seeking, Jesus the Nazarene. But Jesus makes this affirmation of his identity using a formula which the reader has encountered before in the Fourth Gospel, e.g., 8:24, 28, 58. Jesus has applied to himself the divine Name of Exod 3:14, "I AM." Therefore this amounts to something of a theophany which causes even his enemies to recoil and prostrate themselves, so that Jesus has to ask a second time, "Who are you looking for?" This is a vivid reminder to the reader of the Gospel that even in this dark hour, Jesus holds ultimate power over his enemies and the powers of darkness, because he is the one who bears the divine Name.

[11] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "Jesus answered."

[13] tn Grk "if you are seeking."

[14] tn The word "men" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The translation uses the word "men" here rather than a more generic word like "people" because in context Jesus referred only to the eleven remaining disciples who were loyal to him and were present at his arrest.

[15] sn A second time Jesus replied, "I told you that I am he," identifying himself as the one they are seeking. Jesus also added, "If you are looking for me, let these men go." Jesus successfully diverted attention from his disciples by getting the soldiers and officers of the chief priests to admit (twice) that it is only him they were after. Even in this hour Jesus still protected and cared for his own, giving himself up on their behalf. By handing himself over to his enemies, Jesus ensured that his disciples went free. From the perspective of the author, this is acting out beforehand what Jesus will actually do for his followers when he goes to the cross.

[16] tn The words "He said this" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. There is an ellipsis in the Greek text that must be supplied for the modern English reader at this point.

[17] sn This expression is similar to John 6:39 and John 17:12.

[18] tn Grk "Of the ones whom you gave me, I did not lose one of them." The order of the clauses has been rearranged to reflect contemporary English style.

sn This action of Jesus on behalf of his disciples is interpreted by the author as a fulfillment of Jesus' own words: "I have not lost a single one of those whom you gave me." Here it is Jesus' own words, rather than the OT scriptures, which are quoted. This same formula will be used by the author again of Jesus' words in 18:32, but the verb is used elsewhere in the Fourth Gospel to describe the NT fulfillment of OT passages (12:38, 13:18, 15:25, 17:12, 19:24, and 19:36). It is a bit difficult to determine the exact referent, since the words of Jesus quoted in this verse are not an exact reproduction of a saying of Jesus elsewhere in John's Gospel. Although some have identified the saying with John 6:39, the closest parallel is in 17:12, where the betrayer, Judas, is specifically excluded. The words quoted here in 18:9 appear to be a free rendition of 17:12.

[19] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

cutting off his right ear.[1] (Now the slave's name was Malchus.)[2] 18:11 But Jesus said to Peter, "Put your sword back into its sheath! Am I not to drink the cup that the Father has given me?"[3]

Jesus Before Annas

18:12 Then the squad of soldiers[4] with their commanding officer[5] and the officers of the Jewish leaders[6] arrested[7] Jesus and tied him up.[8] 18:13 They[9] brought him first to Annas, for he was the father-in-law of Caiaphas, who was high priest that year.[10] 18:14 (Now it was Caiaphas who had advised[11] the Jewish leaders[12] that it was to their advantage that one man die for the people.)[13]

Peter's First Denial

18:15 Simon Peter and another disciple followed them as they brought Jesus to Annas.[14] (Now the other disciple[15] was acquainted with

1 sn The account of the attack on the high priest's slave contains details which suggest eyewitness testimony. It is also mentioned in all three synoptic gospels, but only John records that the disciple involved was Peter, whose impulsive behavior has already been alluded to (John 13:37). Likewise only John gives the name of the victim, Malchus, who is described as the high priest's slave. John and Mark (14:47) both use the word ὠτάριον (ōtarion, a double diminutive) to describe what was cut off, and this may indicate only part of the right ear (for example, the earlobe).

2 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

3 tn Grk "The cup that the Father has given me to drink, shall I not drink it?" The order of the clauses has been rearranged to reflect contemporary English style.

sn Jesus continues with what most would take to be a rhetorical question expecting a positive reply: "Shall I not drink the cup that the Father has given me?" The cup is also mentioned in Gethsemane in the synoptics (Matt 26:39, Mark 14:36, and Luke 22:42). In connection with the synoptic accounts it is mentioned in Jesus' prayer; this occurrence certainly complements the synoptic accounts if Jesus had only shortly before finished praying about this. Only here in the Fourth Gospel is it specifically said that the cup is given to Jesus to drink by the Father, but again this is consistent with the synoptic mention of the cup in Jesus' prayer: It is the cup of suffering which Jesus is about to undergo.

4 tn Grk "a cohort" (but since this was a unit of 600 soldiers, a smaller detachment is almost certainly intended).

5 tn Grk "their chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). In Greek the term χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos) literally described the "commander of a thousand," but it was used as the standard translation for the Latin tribunus militum or tribunus militaris, the military tribune who commanded a cohort of 600 men.

6 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, who were named as "chief priests and Pharisees" in John 18:3.

7 tn Or "seized."

8 tn Or "bound him."

9 tn Grk "up, and brought." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

10 sn Jesus was taken first to Annas. Only the Gospel of John mentions this pretrial hearing before Annas, and that Annas was the father-in-law of Caiaphas, who is said to be high priest in that year. Caiaphas is also mentioned as being high priest in John 11:49. But in 18:15, 16, 19, and 22 Annas is called high priest. Annas is also referred to as high priest by Luke in Acts 4:6. Many scholars have dismissed these references as mistakes on the part of both Luke and John, but as mentioned above, John 11:49 and 18:13 indicate that John knew that Caiaphas was high priest in the year that Jesus was crucified. This has led others to suggest that Annas and Caiaphas shared the high priesthood, but there is no historical evidence to support this view. Annas had been high priest from A.D. 6 to A.D. 15 when he was deposed by the Roman prefect Valerius Gratus (according to Josephus, Ant. 18.2.2 [18.34]). His five sons all eventually became high priests. The family was noted for its greed, wealth, and power. There are a number of ways the references in both Luke and John to Annas being high priest may be explained. Some Jews may have refused to recognize the changes in high priests effected by the Roman authorities, since according to the Torah the high priesthood was a lifetime office (Num 25:13). Another possibility is that it was simply customary to retain the title after a person had left the office as a courtesy, much as retired ambassadors are referred to as "Mr. Ambassador" or ex-presidents as "Mr. President." Finally, the use of the title by Luke and John may simply be a reflection of the real power behind the high priesthood of the time: Although Annas no longer technically held the office, he may well have managed to control those relatives of his who did hold it from behind the scenes. In fact this seems most probable and would also explain why Jesus was brought to him immediately after his arrest for a sort of "pretrial hearing" before being sent on to the entire Sanhedrin.

11 tn Or "counseled."

12 tn Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, specifically members of the Sanhedrin (see John 11:49-50). See also the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 12.

13 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

14 tn The words "them as they brought Jesus to Annas" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to clarify who Peter and the other disciple were following. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

15 tn Grk "that disciple."

sn Many have associated this unnamed other disciple with the beloved disciple, that is, John son of Zebedee, mainly because the phrase the other disciple which occurs here is also used to describe the beloved disciple in John 20:2, 3, 4, and 8. Peter is also closely associated with the beloved disciple in 13:23-26, 20:2-10, 21:7, and 21:20-23. But other identifications have also been proposed, chiefly because v. 16 states that this disciple who was accompanied by Peter was known to the high priest. As C. K. Barrett (St. John, 525) points out, the term γνωστός (gnōstos) is used in the LXX to refer to a close friend (Ps 54:14 LXX [55:14 ET]). This raises what for some is an insurmountable difficulty in identifying the "other disciple" as John son of Zebedee, since how could the uneducated son of an obscure Galilean fisherman be known to such a powerful and influential family in Jerusalem? E. A. Abbott (as quoted in "Notes of Recent Exposition," ExpTim 25 [1913/14]: 149-50) proposed that the "other disciple" who accompanied Peter was Judas, since he was the one disciple of whom it is said explicitly (in the synoptic accounts) that he had dealings with the high priest. E. A. Tindall ("Contributions and Comments: John xviii.15," ExpTim 28 [1916/17]: 283-84) suggested the disciple was Nicodemus, who as a member of the Sanhedrin, would have had access to the high priest's palace. Both of these suggestions, while ingenious, nevertheless lack support from the text of the Fourth Gospel itself or the synoptic accounts. W. Wuellner (The Meaning of "Fishers of Men" [NTL]) argues that the common attitude concerning the low social status and ignorance of the disciples from Galilee may in fact be a misconception. Zebedee is presented in Mark 1:20 as a man wealthy enough to have hired servants, and Mark 10:35-45 presents both of the sons of Zebedee as concerned about status and prestige. John's mother appears in the same light in Matt 20:20-28. Contact with the high priestly family in Jerusalem might not be so unlikely in such circumstances. Others have noted the possibility that John came from a priestly family, some of which is based upon a the high priest, and he went with Jesus into the high priest's courtyard.)[1] 18:16 But Simon Peter was left standing outside by the door. So the other disciple who was acquainted with the high priest came out and spoke to the slave girl who watched the door,[2] and brought Peter inside. 18:17 The girl[3] who was the doorkeeper said to Peter, "You're not one of this man's disciples too, are you?"[4] He replied,[5] "I am not." 18:18 (Now the slaves[6] and the guards[7] were standing around a charcoal fire they had made, warming themselves because it was cold.[8] Peter also was standing with them, warming himself.)[9]

Jesus Questioned by Annas

18:19 While this was happening,[10] the high priest questioned Jesus about his disciples and about his teaching.[11] 18:20 Jesus replied,[12] "I have spoken publicly to the world. I always taught in the synagogues[13] and in the temple courts,[14] where all the Jewish people[15] assemble together. I[16] have said nothing in secret. 18:21 Why do you ask me? Ask those who heard what I said.[17] They[18] know what I said." 18:22 When Jesus[19] had said this, one of the high priest's officers who stood nearby struck him on the face and said,[20] "Is that the way you answer the high priest?" 18:23 Jesus replied,[21] "If I have said something wrong,[22] confirm[23] what is wrong.[24] But if I spoke correctly, why strike me?" 18:24 Then Annas sent him, still tied up,[25] to Caiaphas the high priest.[26]

Peter's Second and Third Denials

18:25 Meanwhile Simon Peter was standing in the courtyard[27] warming himself. They said to him, "You aren't one of his disciples too, are you?"[28] Peter[29] denied it: "I am not!" 18:26 One of the high priest's slaves,[30] a relative of the man whose ear Peter had cut off,[31] said, "Did I not see you in the orchard[32] with him?"[33] 18:27 Then Peter denied it again, and immediately a rooster crowed.[34] statement in Eusebius (Ecclesiastical History 3.31.3) quoting Polycrates that John son of Zebedee was a priest. For further information on possible priestly connections among members of John's family see L. Morris (John [NICNT], 752, n. 32). None of this is certain, but on the whole it seems most probable that the disciple who accompanied Peter and gained entry into the courtyard for him was John son of Zebedee.

[1] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[2] tn Grk "spoke to the doorkeeper"; her description as a slave girl is taken from the following verse. The noun θυρωρός (thurōros) may be either masculine or feminine, but the article here indicates that it is feminine.

[3] tn Grk "slave girl." Since the descriptive term "slave girl" was introduced in the translation in the previous verse, it would be redundant to repeat the full expression here.

[4] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "are you?").

[5] tn Grk "He said."

[6] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

[7] tn That is, the "guards of the chief priests" as distinguished from the household slaves of Annas.

[8] tn Grk "because it was cold, and they were warming themselves."

[9] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[10] tn The introductory phrase "While this was happening" is not in the Greek text. It has been supplied in the translation to clarify the alternation of scenes in the narrative for the modern reader.

[11] sn The nature of this hearing seems to be more that of a preliminary investigation; certainly normal legal procedure was not followed, for no indication is given that any witnesses were brought forth at this point to testify against Jesus. True to what is known of Annas' character, he was more interested in Jesus' disciples than in the precise nature of Jesus' teaching, since he inquired about the followers first. He really wanted to know just how influential Jesus had become and how large a following he had gathered. This was of more concern to Annas than the truth or falsity of Jesus' teaching.

[13] sn See the note on synagogue in 6:59.

[14] tn Grk "in the temple."

[15] tn Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish people generally, for whom the synagogues and the temple courts in Jerusalem were important public gathering places. See also the note on the phrase "Jewish religious leaders" in v. 12.

[16] tn Grk "And I." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[17] tn Grk "Ask those who heard what I said to them." The words "to them" are not translated since they are redundant in English.

[18] tn Grk "Look, these know what I said."

[19] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[20] tn Grk "one of the high priest's servants standing by gave Jesus a strike, saying." For the translation of ῥάπισμα (rhapisma), see L&N 19.4.

[21] tn Grk "Jesus answered him."

[22] tn Or "something incorrect."

[23] tn Grk "testify."

[24] tn Or "incorrect."

[25] tn Or "still bound."

[26] sn Where was Caiaphas the high priest located? Did he have a separate palace, or was he somewhere else with the Sanhedrin? Since Augustine (4th century) a number of scholars have proposed that Annas and Caiaphas resided in different wings of the same palace, which were bound together by a common courtyard through which Jesus would have been led as he was taken from Annas to Caiaphas. This seems a reasonable explanation, although there is no conclusive evidence.

[27] tn The words "in the courtyard" are not in the Greek text. They are supplied for the benefit of the modern reader, to link this scene to the preceding one in John 18:15-18.

[28] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "are you?").

[29] tn Grk "That one denied it and said"; the referent of the pronoun (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[30] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

[31] sn This incident is recounted in v. 10.

[32] tn Or "garden."

[34] tn It seems most likely that this refers to a real rooster crowing, although a number of scholars have suggested that "cockcrow" is a technical term referring to the trumpet call which ended the third watch of the night (from midnight to 3 a.m.). This would then be a reference to the Roman gallicinium (ἀλεκτοροφωνία, alektorophōnia; the term is used in Mark 13:35 and is found in some MSS [𝔓^{37vid,45} f^{1}] in Matt 26:34) which would have been sounded at 3 a.m.; in this case Jesus would have prophesied a precise time by which the denials would have taken place. For more details see J. H. Ber-

Jesus Brought Before Pilate

18:28 Then they brought Jesus from Caiaphas to the Roman governor's residence.[1] (Now it was very early morning.)[2] They[3] did not go into the governor's residence[4] so they would not be ceremonially defiled, but could eat the Passover meal. 18:29 So Pilate came outside to them and said, "What accusation[5] do you bring against this man?"[6] 18:30 They replied,[7] "If this man[8] were not a criminal,[9] we would not have handed him over to you."[10]

18:31 Pilate told them,[11] "Take him yourselves and pass judgment on him[12] according to your own law!"[13] The Jewish leaders[14] replied,[15] "We cannot legally put anyone to death."[16] 18:32 (This happened[17] to fulfill the word Jesus had spoken when he indicated[18] what kind of death he was going to die.[19])

Pilate Questions Jesus

18:33 So Pilate went back into the governor's residence,[20] summoned Jesus, and asked him, "Are you the king of the Jews?"[21] 18:34 Jesus nard, St. John (ICC), 2:604. However, in light of the fact that Mark mentions the rooster crowing twice (Mark 14:72) and in Luke 22:60 the words are reversed (ἐφώνησεν ἀλέκτωρ, ephōnēsen alektōr), it is more probable that a real rooster is in view. In any event natural cockcrow would have occurred at approximately 3 a.m. in Palestine at this time of year (March-April) anyway.

sn No indication is given of Peter's emotional state at this third denial (as in Matt 26:74 and Mark 14:71) or that he remembered that Jesus had foretold the denials (Matt 26:75, Mark 14:72 and Luke 22:61), or the bitter remorse Peter felt afterward (Matt 26:75, Mark 14:72, and Luke 22:62).

[1] tn Grk "to the praetorium."

sn The permanent residence of the Roman governor of Palestine was in Caesarea (Acts 23:35). The governor had a residence in Jerusalem which he normally occupied only during principal feasts or in times of political unrest. The location of this building in Jerusalem is uncertain, but is probably one of two locations: either (1) the fortress or tower of Antonia, on the east hill north of the temple area, which is the traditional location of the Roman praetorium since the 12th century, or (2) the palace of Herod on the west hill near the present Jaffa Gate. According to Philo (Embassy 38 [299]) Pilate had some golden shields hung there, and according to Josephus (J. W. 2.14.8 [2.301], 2.15.5 [2.328]) the later Roman governor Florus stayed there.

[2] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[3] tn Grk "And they." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[4] tn Grk "into the praetorium."

[5] tn Or "charge."

[6] sn In light of the fact that Pilate had cooperated with them in Jesus' arrest by providing Roman soldiers, the Jewish authorities were probably expecting Pilate to grant them permission to carry out their sentence on Jesus without resistance (the Jews were not permitted to exercise capital punishment under the Roman occupation without official Roman permission, cf. v. 31). They must have been taken somewhat by surprise by Pilate's question "What accusation do you bring against this man," because it indicated that he was going to try the prisoner himself. Thus Pilate was regarding the trial before Caiaphas and the Sanhedrin as only an inquiry and their decision as merely an accusation.

[7] tn Grk "They answered and said to him."

[8] tn Grk "this one."

[9] tn Or "an evildoer"; Grk "one doing evil."

[10] tn Or "would not have delivered him over."

[11] tn Grk "Then Pilate said to them."

[12] tn Or "judge him." For the translation "pass judgment on him" see R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:848).

[13] sn Pilate, as the sole representative of Rome in a troubled area, was probably in Jerusalem for the Passover because of the danger of an uprising (the normal residence for the Roman governor was in Caesarea as mentioned in Acts 23:35). At this time on the eve of the feast he would have been a busy and perhaps even a worried man. It is not surprising that he offered to hand Jesus back over to the Jewish authorities to pass judgment on him. It may well be that Pilate realized when no specific charge was mentioned that he was dealing with an internal dispute over some religious matter. Pilate wanted nothing to do with such matters, as the statement "Pass judgment on him according to your own law!" indicates. As far as the author is concerned, this points out who was really responsible for Jesus' death: The Roman governor Pilate would have had nothing to do with it if he had not been pressured by the Jewish religious authorities, upon whom the real responsibility rested.

[14] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin. See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 12.

[15] tn Grk "said to him."

sn The historical background behind the statement We cannot legally put anyone to death is difficult to reconstruct. Scholars are divided over whether this statement in the Fourth Gospel accurately reflects the judicial situation between the Jewish authorities and the Romans in 1st century Palestine. It appears that the Roman governor may have given the Jews the power of capital punishment for specific offenses, some of them religious (the death penalty for Gentiles caught trespassing in the inner courts of the temple, for example). It is also pointed out that the Jewish authorities did carry out a number of executions, some of them specifically pertaining to Christians (Stephen, according to Acts 7:58-60; and James the Just, who was stoned in the 60s according to Josephus, Ant. 20.9.1 [20.200]). But Stephen's death may be explained as a result of "mob violence" rather than a formal execution, and as Josephus in the above account goes on to point out, James was executed in the period between two Roman governors, and the high priest at the time was subsequently punished for the action. Two studies by A. N. Sherwin-White (Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1-47; and "The Trial of Christ," Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament [SPCKTC], 97-116) have tended to support the accuracy of John's account. He concluded that the Romans kept very close control of the death penalty for fear that in the hands of rebellious locals such power could be used to eliminate factions favorable or useful to Rome. A province as troublesome as Judea would not have been likely to be made an exception to this.

[17] tn The words "This happened" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[18] tn Or "making clear."

[19] sn A reference to John 12:32.

[20] tn Grk "into the praetorium."

[21] sn It is difficult to discern Pilate's attitude when he asked, "Are you the king of the Jews?" Some have believed the remark to be sarcastic or incredulous as Pilate looked at this lowly and humble prisoner: "So you're the king of the Jews, are you?" Others have thought the Roman governor to have been impressed by Jesus' regal disposition and dignity, and to have sincerely asked, "Are you really the king of the Jews?"

replied,[1] "Are you saying this on your own initiative,[2] or have others told you about me?" 18:35 Pilate answered, "I am not a Jew, am I?[3] Your own people[4] and your chief priests handed you over[5] to me. What have you done?"

18:36 Jesus replied, "My kingdom is not from this world. If my kingdom were from this world, my servants would be fighting to keep me from being[6] handed over[7] to the Jewish authorities.[8] But as it is,[9] my kingdom is not from here." 18:37 Then Pilate said,[10] "So you are a king!" Jesus replied, "You say that I am a king. For this reason I was born, and for this reason I came into the world – to testify to the truth. Everyone who belongs to the truth listens to[11] my voice." 18:38 Pilate asked,[12] "What is truth?"[13]

When he had said this he went back outside to the Jewish leaders[14] and announced,[15] "I find no basis for an accusation[16] against him. 18:39 But it is your custom that I release one prisoner[17] for you at the Passover.[18] So do you want me to release for you the king of the Jews?" 18:40 Then they shouted back,[19] "Not this man,[20] but Barabbas!"[21] (Now Barabbas was a revolutionary.[22])[23]

Since it will later become apparent (v. 38) that Pilate considered Jesus innocent (and therefore probably also harmless) an attitude of incredulity is perhaps most likely, but this is far from certain in the absence of clear contextual clues.

[2] tn Grk "saying this from yourself."

[3] sn Many have seen in Pilate's reply "I am not a Jew, am I?" the Roman contempt for the Jewish people. Some of that may indeed be present, but strictly speaking, all Pilate affirms is that he, as a Roman, has no firsthand knowledge of Jewish custom or belief. What he knows of Jesus must have come from the Jewish authorities. They are the ones (your own people and your chief priests) who have handed Jesus over to Pilate.

[4] tn Or "your own nation."

[5] tn Or "delivered you over."

[6] tn Grk "so that I may not be."

[7] tn Or "delivered over."

[8] tn Or "the Jewish leaders"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin. See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 12. In the translation "authorities" was preferred over "leaders" for stylistic reasons.

[9] tn Grk "now."

[10] tn Grk "said to him."

[11] tn Or "obeys"; Grk "hears."

[12] tn Grk "Pilate said."

[13] sn With his reply "What is truth?" Pilate dismissed the matter. It is not clear what Pilate's attitude was at this point, as in 18:33. He may have been sarcastic, or perhaps somewhat reflective. The author has not given enough information in the narrative to be sure. Within the narrative, Pilate's question serves to make the reader reflect on what truth is, and that answer (in the narrative) has already been given (14:6).

[14] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin. See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 12. The term also occurs in v. 31, where it is clear the Jewish leaders are in view, because they state that they cannot legally carry out an execution. Although it is likely (in view of the synoptic parallels) that the crowd here in 18:38 was made up not just of the Jewish leaders, but of ordinary residents of Jerusalem and pilgrims who were in Jerusalem for the Passover, nevertheless in John's Gospel Pilate is primarily in dialogue with the leadership of the nation, who are expressly mentioned in 18:35 and 19:6.

[15] tn Grk "said to them."

[18] sn Pilate then offered to release Jesus, reminding the Jewish authorities that they had a custom that he release one prisoner for them at the Passover. There is no extra-biblical evidence alluding to the practice. It is, however, mentioned in Matthew and Mark, described either as a practice of Pilate (Mark 15:6) or of the Roman governor (Matt 27:15). These references may explain the lack of extra-biblical attestation: The custom to which Pilate refers here (18:39) is not a permanent one acknowledged by all the Roman governors, but one peculiar to Pilate as a means of appeasement, meant to better relations with his subjects. Such a limited meaning is certainly possible and consistent with the statement here.

[19] tn Or "they shouted again," or "they shouted in turn." On the difficulty of translating πάλιν (palin) see BDAG 753 s.v. 5. It is simplest in the context of John's Gospel to understand the phrase to mean "they shouted back" as a reply to Pilate's question.

[21] sn The name Barabbas in Aramaic means "son of abba," that is, "son of the father," and presumably the man in question had another name (it may also have been Jesus, according to the textual variant in Matt 27:16, although this is uncertain). For the author this name held ironic significance: The crowd was asking for the release of a man called Barabbas, "son of the father," while Jesus, who was truly the Son of the Father, was condemned to die instead.

[22] tn Or "robber." It is possible that Barabbas was merely a robber or highwayman, but more likely, given the use of the term λῃστής (lēstēs) in Josephus and other early sources, that he was a guerrilla warrior or revolutionary leader. See both R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:857) and K. H. Rengstorf (TDNT 4:258) for more information. The word λῃστής was used a number of times by Josephus (J. W. 2.13.2-3 [2.253-254]) to describe the revolutionaries or guerrilla fighters who, from mixed motives of nationalism and greed, kept the rural districts of Judea in constant turmoil.

Pilate Tries to Release Jesus

19:1 Then Pilate took Jesus and had him flogged severely.[1] 19:2 The soldiers[2] braided[3] a crown of thorns[4] and put it on his head, and they clothed him in a purple robe.[5] 19:3 They[6] came up to him again and again[7] and said, "Hail, king of the Jews!"[8] And they struck him repeatedly[9] in the face.

19:4 Again Pilate went out and said to the Jewish leaders,[10] "Look, I am bringing him out to you, so that you may know that I find no reason for an accusation[11] against him." 19:5 So Jesus came outside, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe.[12] Pilate[13] said to them, "Look, here is the man!"[14] 19:6 When the chief priests and their officers saw him, they shouted out, "Crucify[15] him! Crucify him!"[16] Pilate said,[17] "You take him and crucify him![18] Certainly[19] I find no reason for an accusation[20] against him!" 19:7 The Jewish leaders[21] replied,[22] "We have a law,[23] and according to our law he ought to die, because he claimed to be the Son of God!"[24]

1 tn Or "had him flogged," or (traditional), "scourged him." The verb should be read as causative. Pilate ordered Jesus to be flogged. A Roman governor would not carry out such a sentence in person. BDAG 620 s.v. μαστιγόω 1. states, "If J refers to the 'verberatio' given those condemned to death (TMommsen, Röm. Strafrecht 1899, 938f; Jos., Bell. 2, 308; 5, 449), it is odd that Pilate subsequently claims no cause for action (vs. 6); but if the latter statement refers only to the penalty of crucifixion, μ. vs. 1 may be equivalent to παιδεύω (q.v. 2by) in Lk 23:16, 22 (for μ. of a non-capital offense PFlor I, 61, 61 [85AD]=Mitt-Wilck. II/2, 80 II, 61)."

sn This severe flogging was not administered by Pilate himself but his officers, who took Jesus at Pilate's order and scourged him. The author's choice of wording here may constitute an allusion to Isa 50:6, "I gave my back to those who scourge me." Three forms of corporal punishment were employed by the Romans, in increasing degree of severity: (1) fustigatio (beating), (2) flagellatio (flogging), and (3) verberatio (severe flogging, scourging). The first could be on occasion a punishment in itself, but the more severe forms were part of the capital sentence as a prelude to crucifixion. The most severe, verberatio, is what is indicated here by the Greek verb translated flogged severely (μαστιγόω, mastigoō). People died on occasion while being flogged this way; frequently it was severe enough to rip a person's body open or cut muscle and sinew to the bone. It was carried out with a whip that had fragments of bone or pieces of metal bound into the tips.

2 tn Grk "And the soldiers." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

3 tn Or "wove."

4 sn The crown of thorns was a crown plaited of some thorny material, intended as a mockery of Jesus' "kingship." Traditionally it has been regarded as an additional instrument of torture, but it seems more probable the purpose of the thorns was not necessarily to inflict more physical suffering but to imitate the spikes of the "radiant corona," a type of crown portrayed on ruler's heads on many coins of the period; the spikes on this type of crown represented rays of light pointing outward (the best contemporary illustration is the crown on the head of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor).

5 sn The purple color of the robe indicated royal status. This was further mockery of Jesus, along with the crown of thorns.

6 tn Grk "And they." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

7 tn The words "again and again" are implied by the (iterative) imperfect verb ἤρχοντο (ērchonto).

8 tn Or "Long live the King of the Jews!"

sn The greeting used by the soldiers, "Hail, King of the Jews!", is a mockery based on the standard salutation for the Roman emperor, "Ave, Caesar!" ("Hail to Caesar!").

9 tn The word "repeatedly" is implied by the (iterative) imperfect verb ἐδίδοσαν (edidosan).

10 tn Grk "to them." The words "the Jewish leaders" are supplied from John 18:38 for clarity.

11 tn Or "find no basis for an accusation"; Grk "find no cause."

12 sn See the note on the purple robe in 19:2.

13 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Pilate) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 sn Look, here is the man! Pilate may have meant no more than something like "Here is the accused!" or in a contemptuous way, "Here is your king!" Others have taken Pilate's statement as intended to evoke pity from Jesus' accusers: "Look at this poor fellow!" (Jesus would certainly not have looked very impressive after the scourging). For the author, however, Pilate's words constituted an unconscious allusion to Zech 6:12, "Look, here is the man whose name is the Branch." In this case Pilate (unknowingly and ironically) presented Jesus to the nation under a messianic title.

15 sn Crucifixion was the cruelest form of punishment practiced by the Romans. Roman citizens could not normally undergo it. It was reserved for the worst crimes, like treason and evasion of due process in a capital case. The Roman statesman and orator Cicero (106-43 B.C.) called it "a cruel and disgusting penalty" (Against Verres 2.5.63-66 §§163-70); Josephus (J. W. 7.6.4 [7.203]) called it the worst of deaths.

16 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from context.

17 tn Grk "said to them." The words "to them" are not translated because they are unnecessary in contemporary English style.

18 sn How are Pilate's words "You take him and crucify him" to be understood? Was he offering a serious alternative to the priests who wanted Jesus crucified? Was he offering them an exception to the statement in 18:31 that the Jewish authorities did not have the power to carry out a death penalty? Although a few scholars have suggested that the situation was at this point so far out of Pilate's control that he really was telling the high priests they could go ahead and crucify a man he had found to be innocent, this seems unlikely. It is far more likely that Pilate's statement should be understood as one of frustration and perhaps sarcasm. This seems to be supported by the context, for the Jewish authorities make no attempt at this point to seize Jesus and crucify him. Rather they continue to pester Pilate to order the crucifixion.

19 tn On this use of γάρ (gar) used in exclamations and strong affirmations, see BDAG 190 s.v. γάρ 3.

20 tn Or "find no basis for an accusation"; Grk "find no cause."

21 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin, and their servants (mentioned specifically as "the chief priests and their servants" in John 19:6).

22 tn Grk "answered him."

23 sn This law is not the entire Pentateuch, but Lev 24:16.

24 tn Grk "because he made himself out to be the Son of God."

19:8 When Pilate heard what they said,[1] he was more afraid than ever,[2] 19:9 and he went back into the governor's residence[3] and said to Jesus, "Where do you come from?" But Jesus gave him no answer. 19:10 So Pilate said,[4] "Do you refuse to speak to me? Don't you know I have the authority[5] to release you, and to crucify you?"[6] 19:11 Jesus replied, "You would have no authority[7] over me at all, unless it was given to you from above. Therefore the one who handed me over to you[8] is guilty of greater sin."[9]

19:12 From this point on, Pilate tried[10] to release him. But the Jewish leaders[11] shouted out,[12] "If you release this man,[13] you are no friend of Caesar![14] Everyone who claims to be a king[15] opposes Caesar!" 19:13 When Pilate heard these words he brought Jesus outside and sat down on the judgment seat[16] in the place called "The Stone Pavement"[17] (Gabbatha in[18] Aramaic).[19] 19:14 (Now it was the day of preparation[20] for the Passover,

1 tn Grk "heard this word."

2 tn Grk "became more afraid."

3 tn Grk "into the praetorium."

4 tn Grk "said to him." The words "to him" are not translated because they are unnecessary in contemporary English style.

5 tn Or "the power."

6 tn Grk "know that I have the authority to release you and the authority to crucify you." Repetition of "the authority" is unnecessarily redundant English style.

sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

7 tn Or "power."

8 tn Or "who delivered me over to you."

sn The one who handed me over to you appears to be a reference to Judas at first; yet Judas did not deliver Jesus up to Pilate, but to the Jewish authorities. The singular may be a reference to Caiaphas, who as high priest was representative of all the Jewish authorities, or it may be a generic singular referring to all the Jewish authorities directly. In either case the end result is more or less the same.

9 tn Grk "has the greater sin" (an idiom).

sn Because Pilate had no authority over Jesus except what had been given to him from God, the one who handed Jesus over to Pilate was guilty of greater sin. This does not absolve Pilate of guilt; it simply means his guilt was less than those who handed Jesus over to him, because he was not acting against Jesus out of deliberate hatred or calculated malice, like the Jewish religious authorities. These were thereby guilty of greater sin.

10 tn Grk "sought."

11 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin, and their servants (mentioned specifically as "the chief priests and their servants" in John 19:6). See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 7.

12 tn Grk "shouted out, saying."

13 tn Grk "this one."

14 sn Is the author using the phrase Friend of Caesar in a technical sense, as a title bestowed on people for loyal service to the Emperor, or in a more general sense merely describing a person as loyal to the Emperor? L. Morris (John [NICNT], 798) thinks it is "unlikely" that the title is used in the technical sense, and J. H. Bernard (St. John [ICC], 2:621) argues that the technical sense of the phrase as an official title was not used before the time of Vespasian (A.D. 69-79). But there appears to be significant evidence for much earlier usage. Some of this is given in BDAG 498-99 s.v. Καῖσαρ. E. Bammel ("φίλος τοῦ καίσαρος (John 19:12)," TLZ 77 [1952]: 205-10) listed significant and convincing arguments that the official title was indeed in use at the time. Granting that the title was in use during this period, what is the likelihood that it had been bestowed on Pilate? Pilate was of the equestrian order, that is, of lower nobility as opposed to senatorial rank. As such he would have been eligible to receive such an honor. It also appears that the powerful Sejanus was his patron in Rome, and Sejanus held considerable influence with Tiberius. Tacitus (Annals 6.8) quotes Marcus Terentius in his defense before the Senate as saying that close friendship with Sejanus "was in every case a powerful recommendation to the Emperor's friendship." Thus it is possible that Pilate held this honor. Therefore it appears that the Jewish authorities were putting a good deal of psychological pressure on Pilate to convict Jesus. They had, in effect, finally specified the charge against Jesus as treason: "Everyone who makes himself to be king opposes Caesar." If Pilate now failed to convict Jesus the Jewish authorities could complain to Rome that Pilate had released a traitor. This possibility carried more weight with Pilate than might at first be evident: (1) Pilate's record as governor was not entirely above reproach; (2) Tiberius, who lived away from Rome as a virtual recluse on the island of Capri, was known for his suspicious nature, especially toward rivals or those who posed a political threat; and (3) worst of all, Pilate's patron in Rome, Sejanus, had recently come under suspicion of plotting to seize the imperial succession for himself. Sejanus was deposed in October of A.D. 31. It may have been to Sejanus that Pilate owed his appointment in Judea. Pilate was now in a very delicate position. The Jewish authorities may have known something of this and deliberately used it as leverage against him. Whether or not they knew just how potent their veiled threat was, it had the desired effect. Pilate went directly to the judgment seat to pronounce his judgment.

15 tn Grk "who makes himself out to be a king."

16 tn Or "the judge's seat."

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and usually furnished with a seat. It was used by officials in addressing an assembly or making official pronouncements, often of a judicial nature.

17 sn The precise location of the place called 'The Stone Pavement' is still uncertain, although a paved court on the lower level of the Fortress Antonia has been suggested. It is not certain whether it was laid prior to A.D. 135, however.

18 tn Grk "in Hebrew."

sn The author does not say that Gabbatha is the Aramaic (or Hebrew) translation for the Greek term Λιθόστρωτον (Lithostrōton). He simply points out that in Aramaic (or Hebrew) the place had another name. A number of meanings have been suggested, but the most likely appears to mean "elevated place." It is possible that this was a term used by the common people for the judgment seat itself, which always stood on a raised platform.

19 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

20 sn The term day of preparation (παρασκευή, paraskeuē) appears in all the gospels as a description of the day on which Jesus died. It could refer to any Friday as the day of preparation for the Sabbath (Saturday), and this is the way the synoptic gospels use the term (Matt 27:62, Mark 15:42, and Luke 23:54). John, however, specifies in addition that this was not only the day of preparation of the Sabbath, but also the day of preparation of the Passover, so that the Sabbath on the following day was the Passover (cf. 19:31).

about noon.[1])[2] Pilate[3] said to the Jewish leaders,[4] "Look, here is your king!"

19:15 Then they[5] shouted out, "Away with him! Away with him![6] Crucify[7] him!" Pilate asked,[8] "Shall I crucify your king?" The high priests replied, "We have no king except Caesar!" 19:16 Then Pilate[9] handed him over[10] to them to be crucified.

The Crucifixion

So they took Jesus, 19:17 and carrying his own cross[11] he went out to the place called "The Place of the Skull"[12] (called in Aramaic[13] Golgotha).[14] 19:18 There they[15] crucified[16] him along with two others,[17] one on each side, with Jesus in the middle. 19:19 Pilate also had a notice[18] written and fastened to the cross,[19] which read:[20] "Jesus the Nazarene, the king of the Jews." 19:20 Thus many of the Jewish residents of Jerusalem[21] read this notice,[22] because the place where Jesus was crucified was near the city, and the notice was written in Aramaic,[23] Latin, and Greek. 19:21 Then the chief priests of the Jews[24] said to Pilate, "Do not write, 'The king of the Jews,' but rather, 'This man said, I am king of the Jews.'" 19:22 Pilate answered, "What I have written, I have written."

19:23 Now when the soldiers crucified[25] Jesus,

1 tn Grk "about the sixth hour."

sn For John, the time was especially important. When the note concerning the hour, about noon, is connected with the day, the day of preparation for the Passover, it becomes apparent that Jesus was going to die on the cross at the very time that the Passover lambs were being slain in the temple courts. Exod 12:6 required that the Passover lamb be kept alive until the 14th Nisan, the eve of the Passover, and then slaughtered by the head of the household at twilight (Grk "between the two evenings"). By this time the slaughtering was no longer done by the heads of households, but by the priests in the temple courts. But so many lambs were needed for the tens of thousands of pilgrims who came to Jerusalem to celebrate the feast (some estimates run in excess of 100,000 pilgrims) that the slaughter could not be completed during the evening, and so the rabbis redefined "between the two evenings" as beginning at noon, when the sun began to decline toward the horizon. Thus the priests had the entire afternoon of 14th Nisan in which to complete the slaughter of the Passover lambs. According to the Fourth Gospel, this is the time Jesus was dying on the cross.

2 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

3 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Pilate) has been specified in the translation for clarity, and the conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

4 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially members of the Sanhedrin, and their servants (mentioned specifically as "the chief priests and their servants" in John 19:6). See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 7.

5 tn Grk "Then these."

6 tn The words "with him" (twice) are not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

7 sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

8 tn Grk "Pilate said to them." The words "to them" are not translated because it is clear in English who Pilate is addressing.

9 tn Grk "Then he"; the referent (Pilate) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn Or "delivered him over."

11 tn Or "carrying the cross by himself."

sn As was customary practice in a Roman crucifixion, the prisoner was made to carry his own cross. In all probability this was only the crossbeam, called in Latin the patibulum, since the upright beam usually remained in the ground at the place of execution. According to Matt 27:32 and Mark 15:21, the soldiers forced Simon to take the cross; Luke 23:26 states that the cross was placed on Simon so that it might be carried behind Jesus. A reasonable explanation of all this is that Jesus started out carrying the cross until he was no longer able to do so, at which point Simon was forced to take over.

12 sn Jesus was led out to the place called "The Place of the Skull" where he was to be crucified. It is clear from v. 20 that this was outside the city. The Latin word for the Greek κρανίον (kranion) is calvaria. Thus the English word "Calvary" is a transliteration of the Latin rather than a NT place name (cf. Luke 23:33 in the KJV).

13 tn Grk "in Hebrew."

14 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

15 tn Grk "where they." This is a continuation of the previous verse in Greek, but contemporary English style tends toward shorter sentences. A literal translation would result in a lengthy and awkward English sentence.

16 sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

17 tn Grk "and with him two others."

18 tn Or "an inscription."

sn Mention of the inscription is an important detail, because the inscription would normally give the reason for the execution. It shows that Jesus was executed for claiming to be a king. It was also probably written with irony from the executioners' point of view.

19 tn Grk "Pilate also wrote a notice and placed it on the cross." The two verbs should be read as causatives, since it is highly unlikely that the Roman governor would perform either of these actions himself. He ordered them to be done.

sn John says simply that the notice was fastened to the cross. Luke 23:38 says the inscription was placed "over him" (Jesus), and Matt 27:37 that it was placed over Jesus' head. On the basis of Matthew's statement Jesus' cross is usually depicted as the crux immissa, the cross which has the crossbeam set below the top of the upright beam. The other commonly used type of cross was the crux commissa, which had the crossbeam atop the upright beam. But Matthew's statement is not conclusive, since with the crux commissa the body would have sagged downward enough to allow the placard to be placed above Jesus' head. The placard with Pilate's inscription is mentioned in all the gospels, but for John it was certainly ironic. Jesus really was the King of the Jews, although he was a king rejected by his own people (cf. 1:11). Pilate's own motivation for placing the title over Jesus is considerably more obscure. He may have meant this as a final mockery of Jesus himself, but Pilate's earlier mockery of Jesus seemed to be motivated by a desire to gain pity from the Jewish authorities in order to have him released. More likely Pilate saw this as a subtle way of getting back at the Jewish authorities who had pressured him into the execution of one he considered to be an innocent man.

20 tn Grk "Now it was written."

21 tn Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the residents of Jerusalem in general. See also the note on the phrase Jewish religious leaders" in v. 7.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

22 tn Or "this inscription."

23 tn Grk "in Hebrew."

24 tn Or "the Jewish chief priests." Nowhere else in the Fourth Gospel are the two expressions οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς τῶν Ἰουδαίων (hoi archiereis tōn Ioudaiōn) combined. Earlier in 19:15 the chief priests were simply referred to as οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς. It seems likely that this is another example of Johannine irony, to be seen in contrast to the inscription on the cross which read ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων (ho basileus tōn Ioudaiōn). For this reason the phrase has been translated "the chief priests of the Jews" (which preserves in the translation the connection with "King of the Jews") rather than "the Jewish chief priests."

25 sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

they took his clothes and made four shares, one for each soldier,[1] and the tunic[2] remained. (Now the tunic[3] was seamless, woven from top to bottom as a single piece.)[4] 19:24 So the soldiers said to one another, "Let's not tear it, but throw dice[5] to see who will get it."[6] This took place[7] to fulfill the scripture that says, "They divided my garments among them, and for my clothing they threw dice."[8] So the soldiers did these things.

19:25 Now standing beside Jesus' cross were his mother, his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Clopas, and Mary Magdalene.[9] 19:26 So when Jesus saw his mother and the disciple whom he loved standing there, he said to his mother, "Woman,[10] look, here is your son!" 19:27 He then said to his disciple, "Look, here is your mother!" From that very time[11] the disciple took her into his own home.

Jesus' Death

19:28 After this Jesus, realizing that by this time[12] everything was completed,[13] said (in order to fulfill the scripture),[14] "I am thirsty!"[15] 19:29 A jar full of sour wine[16] was there, so they put a sponge soaked in sour wine on a branch of hyssop[17] and lifted it[18] to his mouth. 19:30 When[19] he had received the sour wine, Jesus said, "It is completed!"[20] Then he bowed his head and gave up his spirit.[21]

19:31 Then, because it was the day of preparation, so that the bodies should not stay on the crosses on the Sabbath[22] (for that Sabbath was

[1] sn Four shares, one for each soldier. The Gospel of John is the only one to specify the number of soldiers involved in the crucifixion. This was a quaternion, a squad of four soldiers. It was accepted Roman practice for the soldiers who performed a crucifixion to divide the possessions of the person executed among themselves.

[2] tn Or "shirt" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). The name for this garment (χιτών, chitōn) presents some difficulty in translation. Most modern readers would not understand what a 'tunic' was any more than they would be familiar with a 'chiton.' On the other hand, attempts to find a modern equivalent are also a problem: "Shirt" conveys the idea of a much shorter garment that covers only the upper body, and "undergarment" (given the styles of modern underwear) is more misleading still. "Tunic" was therefore employed, but with a note to explain its nature.

[3] tn Or "shirt" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). See the note on the same word earlier in this verse.

[4] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[5] tn Grk "but choose by lot" (probably by using marked pebbles or broken pieces of pottery). A modern equivalent, "throw dice," was chosen here because of its association with gambling.

[6] tn Grk "to see whose it will be."

[7] tn The words "This took place" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[8] tn Grk "cast lots." See the note on "throw dice" earlier in the verse.

sn A quotation from Ps 22:18.

[9] sn Several women are mentioned, but it is not easy to determine how many. It is not clear whether his mother's sister and Mary the wife of Clopas are to be understood as the same individual (in which case only three women are mentioned: Jesus' mother, her sister Mary, and Mary Magdalene) or as two different individuals (in which case four women are mentioned: Jesus' mother, her sister, Mary Clopas' wife, and Mary Magdalene). It is impossible to be certain, but when John's account is compared to the synoptics it is easier to reconcile the accounts if four women were present than if there were only three. It also seems that if there were four women present, this would have been seen by the author to be in juxtaposition to the four soldiers present who performed the crucifixion, and this may explain the transition from the one incident in 23-24 to the other in 25-27. Finally, if only three were present, this would mean that both Jesus' mother and her sister were named Mary, and this is highly improbable in a Jewish family of that time. If there were four women present, the name of the second, the sister of Jesus' mother, is not mentioned. It is entirely possible that the sister of Jesus' mother mentioned here is to be identified with the woman named Salome mentioned in Mark 15:40 and also with the woman identified as "the mother of the sons of Zebedee" mentioned in Matt 27:56. If so, and if John the Apostle is to be identified as the beloved disciple, then the reason for the omission of the second woman's name becomes clear; she would have been John's own mother, and he consistently omitted direct reference to himself or his brother James or any other members of his family in the Fourth Gospel.

[10] sn The term Woman is Jesus' normal, polite way of addressing women (Matt 15:28, Luke 13:12; John 4:21; 8:10; 19:26; 20:15; see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή 1). But it is unusual for a son to address his mother with this term. The custom in both Hebrew (or Aramaic) and Greek would be for a son to use a qualifying adjective or title. Is there significance in Jesus' use here? Jesus probably used the term here to help establish Mary and the beloved disciple in a new "mother-son" relationship. Someone would soon need to provide for Mary since Jesus, her oldest son, would no longer be alive. By using this term Jesus distanced himself from Mary so the beloved disciple could take his place as her earthly son (cf. John 2:4). See D. A. Carson, John, 617-18, for discussion about symbolic interpretations of this relationship between Mary and the beloved disciple.

[12] tn Or "that already."

[13] tn Or "finished," "accomplished"; Grk "fulfilled."

[14] sn A reference to Ps 69:21 or Ps 22:15.

[15] sn In order to fulfill (τελειωθῇ [teleiōthē], a wordplay on the previous statement that everything was completed [τετέλεσται, tetelestai]) the scripture, he said, "I am thirsty." The scripture referred to is probably Ps 69:21, "They also gave me gall for my food, and for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." Also suggested, however, is Ps 22:15, "My tongue cleaves to the roof of my mouth, and you [God] lay me in the dust of death." Ps 22:1 reads "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?," a statement Jesus makes from the cross in both Matt 27:46 and Mark 15:34. In light of the connection in the Fourth Gospel between thirst and the living water which Jesus offers, it is highly ironic that here Jesus himself, the source of that living water, expresses his thirst. And since 7:39 associates the living water with the Holy Spirit, Jesus' statement here in 19:28 amounts to an admission that at this point he has been forsaken by God (cf. Ps 22:1, Matt 27:46, and Mark 15:34).

[16] sn The cheap sour wine was called in Latin posca, and referred to a cheap vinegar wine diluted heavily with water. It was the drink of slaves and soldiers, and was probably there for the soldiers who had performed the crucifixion.

[17] sn Hyssop was a small aromatic bush; exact identification of the plant is uncertain. The hyssop used to lift the wet sponge may have been a form of reed (κάλαμος, kalamos, "reed," is used in Matt 27:48 and Mark 15:36); the biblical name can refer to several different species of plant (at least eighteen different plants have been suggested).

[19] tn Grk "Then when." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

[20] tn Or "It is accomplished," "It is finished," or "It is ended." See tn on John 13:1.

[21] tn Or "he bowed his head and died"; Grk "he bowed his head and gave over the spirit."

[22] sn The Jewish authorities, because this was the day of preparation for the Sabbath and the Passover (cf. 19:14), requested Pilate to order the legs of the three who had been an especially important one),[1] the Jewish leaders[2] asked Pilate to have the victims' legs[3] broken[4] and the bodies taken down.[5] 19:32 So the soldiers came and broke the legs of the two men who had been crucified[6] with Jesus,[7] first the one and then the other.[8] 19:33 But when they came to Jesus and saw that he was already dead, they did not break his legs. 19:34 But one of the soldiers pierced[9] his side with a spear, and blood and water[10] flowed out immediately. 19:35 And the person who saw it[11] has testified (and his testimony is true, and he[12] knows that he is telling the truth),[13] so that you also may believe. 19:36 For these things happened so that the scripture would be fulfilled, "Not a bone of his will be broken."[14] 19:37 And again another scripture says, "They will look on the one whom they have pierced."[15]

Jesus' Burial

19:38 After this, Joseph of Arimathea, a disciple of Jesus (but secretly, because he feared the Jewish leaders[16]),[17] asked Pilate if he could remove the body of Jesus. Pilate[18] gave him permission, so he went and took the body away.[19] 19:39 Nicodemus, the man who had previously come to Jesus[20] at night,[21] accompanied Joseph,[22] carrying a mixture of myrrh and aloes[23] weighing about seventy-five crucified to be broken. This would hasten their deaths, so that the bodies could be removed before the beginning of the Sabbath at 6 p.m. This was based on the law of Deut 21:22-23 and Josh 8:29 that specified the bodies of executed criminals who had been hanged on a tree should not remain there overnight. According to Josephus this law was interpreted in the 1st century to cover the bodies of those who had been crucified (J. W. 4.5.2 [4.317]). Philo of Alexandria also mentions that on occasion, especially at festivals, the bodies were taken down and given to relatives to bury (Flaccus 10 [83]). The normal Roman practice would have been to leave the bodies on the crosses, to serve as a warning to other would-be offenders.

[2] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders. See also the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 7.

[3] tn Grk "asked Pilate that the legs of them might be broken." The referent of "them" (the three individuals who were crucified, collectively referred to as "the victims") has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[4] sn To have the legs…broken. Breaking the legs of a crucified person was a way of speeding up his death, since the victim could no longer use his legs to push upward in order to be able to draw a breath. This breaking of the legs was called in Latin crurifragium, and was done with a heavy mallet.

[5] tn Grk "asked Pilate that their legs might be broken and they might be taken down." Here because of the numerous ambiguous third person references it is necessary to clarify that it was the crucified men whose legs were to be broken and whose corpses were to be removed from the crosses.

[6] sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

[7] tn Grk "with him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Grk "broke the legs of the first and of the other who had been crucified with him."

[9] sn If it was obvious to the soldiers that the victim was already dead it is difficult to see why one of them would try to inflict a wound. The Greek verb pierced (νύσσω, nussō) can indicate anything from a slight prod to a mortal wound. Probably one of the soldiers gave an exploratory stab to see if the body would jerk. If not, he was really dead. This thrust was hard enough to penetrate the side, since the author states that blood and water flowed out immediately.

[10] sn How is the reference to the blood and water that flowed out from Jesus' side to be understood? This is probably to be connected with the statements in 1 John 5:6-8. In both passages water, blood, and testimony are mentioned. The Spirit is also mentioned in 1 John 5:7 as the source of the testimony, while here the testimony comes from one of the disciples (19:35). The connection between the Spirit and the living water with Jesus' statement of thirst just before he died in the preceding context has already been noted (see 19:28). For the author, the water which flowed out of Jesus' side was a symbolic reference to the Holy Spirit who could now be given because Jesus was now glorified (cf. 7:39); Jesus had now departed and returned to that glory which he had with the Father before the creation of the world (cf. 17:5). The mention of blood recalls the motif of the Passover lamb as a sacrificial victim. Later references to sacrificial procedures in the Mishnah appear to support this: m. Pesahim 5:3 and 5:5 state that the blood of the sacrificial animal should not be allowed to congeal but should flow forth freely at the instant of death so that it could be used for sprinkling; m. Tamid 4:2 actually specifies that the priest is to pierce the heart of the sacrificial victim and cause the blood to come forth.

[11] tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[12] tn Grk "and that one."

[14] sn A quotation from Exod 12:46, Num 9:12, and Ps 34:20. A number of different OT passages lie behind this quotation: Exod 12:10 LXX, Exod 12:46, Num 9:12, or Ps 34:20. Of these, the first is the closest in form to the quotation here. The first three are all more likely candidates than the last, since the first three all deal with descriptions of the Passover lamb.

[15] sn A quotation from Zech 12:10. Here a single phrase is quoted from Zech 12, but the entire context is associated with the events surrounding the crucifixion. The "Spirit of grace and of supplication" is poured out on the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the first part of v. 10. A few verses later in 13:1 Yahweh (typically rendered as "LORD" in the OT) says "In that day a fountain will be opened for the house of David and for the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for impurity." The blood which flowed from Jesus' pierced side may well be what the author saw as the connection here, since as the shedding of the blood of the sacrificial victim it represents cleansing from sin. Although the Jewish authorities and Roman soldiers certainly "looked on the one whom they have pierced" as he hung on the cross, the author may also have in mind the parousia (second coming) here. The context in Zech 12-14 is certainly the second coming, so that these who crucified Jesus will look upon him in another sense when he returns in judgment.

[16] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders, especially the Pharisees (see John 12:42). See also the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 7.

[17] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[18] tn Grk "And Pilate." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[19] tn Grk "took away his body."

[20] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] sn See John 3:1-21.

[22] tn Grk "came"; the words "accompanied Joseph" are not in the Greek text but are supplied for clarity.

pounds.[1] 19:40 Then they took Jesus' body and wrapped it, with the aromatic spices,[2] in strips of linen cloth[3] according to Jewish burial customs.[4] 19:41 Now at the place where Jesus[5] was crucified[6] there was a garden,[7] and in the garden[8] was a new tomb where no one had yet been buried.[9] 19:42 And so, because it was the Jewish day of preparation[10] and the tomb was nearby,[11] they placed Jesus' body there.

The Resurrection

20:1 Now very early on the first day of the week,[12] while it was still dark, Mary Magdalene[13] came to the tomb and saw that the stone had been moved away from the entrance.[14] 20:2 So she went running[15] to Simon Peter and the other disciple whom Jesus loved and told them, "They have taken the Lord from the tomb, and we don't know where they have put him!" 20:3 Then Peter and the other disciple set out to go to the tomb.[16] 20:4 The two were running together, but the other disciple ran faster than Peter[17] and reached the tomb first.[18] 20:5 He bent down[19] and saw the strips of linen cloth lying there,[20] but he did not go in. 20:6 Then Simon Peter, who had been following him, arrived and went right into the tomb. He saw[21] the strips of linen cloth lying there, 20:7 and the face cloth,[22] which had been around Jesus' head, not lying with the strips of linen cloth but rolled up in a place by itself.[23] 20:8 Then the other disciple, who had

[1] sn The Roman pound (λίτρα, litra) weighed twelve ounces or 325 grams. Thus 100 Roman pounds would be about 32.5 kilograms or 75 pounds.

[2] tn On this term see BDAG 140-41 s.v. ἄρωμα. The Jews did not practice embalming, so these materials were used to cover the stench of decay and slow decomposition.

[3] tn The Fourth Gospel uses ὀθονίοις (othoniois) to describe the wrappings, and this has caused a good deal of debate, since it appears to contradict the synoptic accounts which mention a σινδών (sindōn), a large single piece of linen cloth. If one understands ὀθονίοις to refer to smaller strips of cloth, like bandages, there would be a difference, but diminutive forms have often lost their diminutive force in Koine Greek (BDF §111.3), so there may not be any difference.

[4] tn Grk "cloth as is the custom of the Jews to prepare for burial."

[5] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] sn See the note on Crucify in 19:6.

[7] tn Or "an orchard."

[8] tn Or "orchard."

[9] tn Grk "been placed."

[10] sn The day of preparation was the day before the Sabbath when everything had to be prepared for it, as no work could be done on the Sabbath.

[11] sn The tomb was nearby. The Passover and the Sabbath would begin at 6 p.m., so those who had come to prepare and bury the body could not afford to waste time.

[12] sn The first day of the week would be early Sunday morning. The Sabbath (and in this year the Passover) would have lasted from 6 p.m. Friday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Sunday would thus mark the first day of the following week.

[13] sn John does not mention that Mary Magdalene was accompanied by any of the other women who had been among Jesus' followers. The synoptic accounts all mention other women who accompanied her (although Mary Magdalene is always mentioned first). Why John does not mention the other women is not clear, but Mary probably becomes the focus of the author's attention because it was she who came and found Peter and the beloved disciple and informed them of the empty tomb (20:2). Mary's use of the plural in v. 2 indicates there were others present, in indirect agreement with the synoptic accounts.

[15] tn Grk "So she ran and came."

[16] tn Grk "went out and were coming to the tomb."

[17] sn The other disciple (the 'beloved disciple') ran on ahead more quickly than Peter, so he arrived at the tomb first. This verse has been a chief factor in depictions of John as a young man (especially combined with traditions that he wrote last of all the gospel authors and lived into the reign of Domitian). But the verse does not actually say anything about John's age, nor is age always directly correlated with running speed.

[20] sn Presumably by the time the beloved disciple reached the tomb there was enough light to penetrate the low opening and illuminate the interior of the tomb sufficiently for him to see the strips of linen cloth lying there. The author does not state exactly where the linen wrappings were lying. Sometimes the phrase has been translated "lying on the ground," but the implication is that the wrappings were lying where the body had been. The most probable configuration for a tomb of this sort would be to have a niche carved in the wall where the body would be laid lengthwise, or a low shelf like a bench running along one side of the tomb, across the back or around all three sides in a U-shape facing the entrance. Thus the graveclothes would have been lying on this shelf or in the niche where the body had been.

[21] tn Grk "And he saw." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[22] sn The word translated face cloth is a Latin loanword (sudarium). It was a small towel used to wipe off perspiration (the way a handkerchief would be used today). This particular item was not mentioned in connection with Jesus' burial in John 19:40, probably because this was only a brief summary account. A face cloth was mentioned in connection with Lazarus' burial (John 11:44) and was probably customary. R. E. Brown speculates that it was wrapped under the chin and tied on top of the head to prevent the mouth of the corpse from falling open (John [AB], 2:986), but this is not certain.

[23] sn Much dispute and difficulty surrounds the translation of the words not lying with the strips of linen cloth but rolled up in a place by itself. Basically the issue concerns the positioning of the graveclothes as seen by Peter and the other disciple when they entered the tomb. Some have sought to prove that when the disciples saw the graveclothes they were arranged just as they were when around the body, so that when the resurrection took place the resurrected body of Jesus passed through them without rearranging or disturbing them. In this case the reference to the face cloth being rolled up does not refer to its being folded, but collapsed in the shape it had when wrapped around the head. Sometimes in defense of this view the Greek preposition μετά (meta, which normally means "with") is said to mean "like" so that the comparison with the other graveclothes does not involve the location of the face cloth but rather its condition (rolled up rather than flattened). In spite of the intriguing nature of such speculations, it seems more probable that the phrase describing the face cloth should be understood to mean it was separated from the other graveclothes in a different place inside the tomb. This seems consistent with the different conclusions reached by Peter and the beloved disciple (vv. 8-10). All that the condition of the graveclothes indicated was that the body of Jesus had not been stolen by thieves. Anyone who had come to remove the body (whether the authorities or anyone else) would not have bothered to unwrap it before carrying it reached the tomb first, came in, and he saw and believed.[1] 20:9 (For they did not yet understand[2] the scripture that Jesus[3] must rise from the dead.)[4]

Jesus' Appearance to Mary Magdalene

20:10 So the disciples went back to their homes. 20:11 But Mary stood outside the tomb weeping. As she wept, she bent down and looked into the tomb. 20:12 And she saw two angels in white sitting where Jesus' body had been lying, one at the head and one at the feet. 20:13 They said[5] to her, "Woman,[6] why are you weeping?" Mary replied,[7] "They have taken my Lord away, and I do not know where they have put him!" 20:14 When she had said this, she turned around and saw Jesus standing there,[8] but she did not know that it was Jesus.

20:15 Jesus said to her, "Woman, why are you weeping? Who are you looking for?" Because she[9] thought he was the gardener, she said to him, "Sir, if you have carried him away, tell me where you have put him, and I will take him." 20:16 Jesus said to her, "Mary." She[10] turned and said to him in Aramaic,[11] "Rabboni"[12] (which means Teacher).[13] 20:17 Jesus replied,[14] "Do not touch me, for I have not yet ascended to my Father. Go to my brothers and tell them, 'I am ascending to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God.'" 20:18 Mary Magdalene came and informed the disciples, "I have seen the Lord!" And she told them[15] what[16] Jesus[17] had said to her.[18]

Jesus' Appearance to the Disciples

20:19 On the evening of that day, the first day of the week, the disciples had gathered together[19] and locked the doors[20] of the place[21] because they were afraid of the Jewish leaders.[22] Jesus came and stood among them and said to them, "Peace be with you." 20:20 When he had said this, he showed them his hands and his side. Then the disciples rejoiced when they saw the Lord.[23] 20:21 So Jesus said to them again, "Peace off. And even if one could imagine that they had (perhaps in search of valuables such as rings or jewelry still worn by the corpse) they would certainly not have bothered to take time to roll up the face cloth and leave the other wrappings in an orderly fashion.

[1] sn What was it that the beloved disciple believed (since v. 7 describes what he saw)? Sometimes it is suggested that what he believed was Mary Magdalene's report that the body had been stolen. But this could hardly be the case; the way the entire scene is narrated such a trivial conclusion would amount to an anticlimax. It is true that the use of the plural "they" in the following verse applied to both Peter and the beloved disciple, and this appears to be a difficulty if one understands that the beloved disciple believed at this point in Jesus' resurrection. But it is not an insuperable difficulty, since all it affirms is that at this time neither Peter nor the beloved disciple had understood the scripture concerning the resurrection. Thus it appears the author intends his reader to understand that when the beloved disciple entered the tomb after Peter and saw the state of the graveclothes, he believed in the resurrection, i.e., that Jesus had risen from the dead.

[3] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] sn Verse 9 is a parenthetical note by the author. The author does not explicitly mention what OT scripture is involved (neither does Paul in 1 Cor 15:4, for that matter). The resurrection of the Messiah in general terms may have been seen in Isa 53:10-12 and Ps 16:10. Specific references may have been understood in Jonah 1:17 and Hos 6:2 because of the mention of "the third day." Beyond this it is not possible to be more specific.

[5] tn The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here.

[6] sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή 1), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions. This occurs again in v. 15.

[7] tn Grk "She said to them."

[8] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[9] tn Grk "that one" (referring to Mary Magdalene).

[10] tn Grk "That one."

[11] tn Grk "in Hebrew."

[12] sn The Aramaic Rabboni means "my teacher" (a title of respect).

[13] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[14] tn Grk "Jesus said to her."

[15] tn The words "she told them" are repeated from the first part of the same verse to improve clarity.

[18] tn The first part of Mary's statement, introduced by ὅτι (hoti), is direct discourse (ἑώρακα τὸν κύριον, heōraka ton kurion), while the second clause switches to indirect discourse (καὶ ταῦτα εἶπεν αὐτῇ, kai tauta eipen autē). This has the effect of heightening the emphasis on the first part of the statement.

[19] tn Although the words "had gathered together" are omitted in some of the earliest and best MSS, they are nevertheless implied, and have thus been included in the translation.

[20] tn Grk "the doors were shut"; "locked" conveys a more appropriate idea for the modern English reader.

sn The fact that the disciples locked the doors is a perfectly understandable reaction to the events of the past few days. But what is the significance of the inclusion of this statement by the author? It is often taken to mean that Jesus, when he entered the room, passed through the closed doors. This may well be the case, but it may be assuming too much about our knowledge of the mode in which the resurrected body of Jesus exists. The text does not explicitly state how Jesus got through the closed doors. It is possible to assume that the doors opened of their own accord before him, or that he simply appeared in the middle of the room without passing through the doors at all. The point the author makes here is simply that the closed doors were no obstacle at all to the resurrected Jesus.

[22] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders.

[23] sn When the disciples recognized Jesus (now referred to as the Lord, cf. Mary's words in v. 18) they were suddenly overcome with joy. This was a fulfillment of Jesus' words to the disciples in the Farewell Discourse (16:20-22) that they would have sorrow while the world rejoiced, but that their sorrow would be turned to lasting joy when they saw him again.

be with you. Just as the Father has sent me, I also send you." 20:22 And after he said this, he breathed on them and said,[1] "Receive the Holy Spirit.[2] 20:23 If you forgive anyone's sins, they are forgiven;[3] if you retain anyone's sins, they are retained."[4]

The Response of Thomas

20:24 Now Thomas (called Didymus),[5] one of the twelve, was not with them when Jesus came. 20:25 The other disciples told him, "We have seen the Lord!" But he replied,[6] "Unless I see the wounds[7] from the nails in his hands, and put my finger into the wounds from the nails, and put my hand into his side, I will never believe it!"[8]

20:26 Eight days later the disciples were again together in the house,[9] and Thomas was with them. Although the doors were locked,[10] Jesus came and stood among them and said, "Peace be with you!" 20:27 Then he said to Thomas, "Put[11] your finger here, and examine[12] my hands. Extend[13] your hand and put it[14] into my side. Do not continue in your unbelief, but believe."[15] 20:28 Thomas replied to him,[16] "My Lord and my God!"[17] 20:29 Jesus said to him,

[1] tn Grk "said to them."

[2] sn He breathed on them and said, "Receive the Holy Spirit." The use of the Greek verb breathed on (ἐμφυσάω, emphusaō) to describe the action of Jesus here recalls Gen 2:7 in the LXX, where "the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being." This time, however, it is Jesus who is breathing the breath-Spirit of eternal life, life from above, into his disciples (cf. 3:3-10). Furthermore there is the imagery of Ezek 37:1-14, the prophecy concerning the resurrection of the dry bones: In 37:9 the Son of Man is told to prophesy to the "wind-breath-Spirit" to come and breathe on the corpses, so that they will live again. In 37:14 the Lord promised, "I will put my Spirit within you, and you will come to life, and I will place you in your own land." In terms of ultimate fulfillment the passage in Ezek 37 looks at the regeneration of Israel immediately prior to the establishment of the messianic kingdom. The author saw in what Jesus did for the disciples at this point a partial and symbolic fulfillment of Ezekiel's prophecy, much as Peter made use of the prophecy of Joel 2:28-32 in his sermon on the day of Pentecost as recorded in Acts 2:17-21. What then did Jesus do for the disciples in John 20:22? It appears that in light of the symbolism of the new creation present here, as well as the regeneration symbolism from the Ezek 37 passage, that Jesus at this point breathed into the disciples the breath of eternal life. This was in the form of the Holy Spirit, who was to indwell them. It is instructive to look again at 7:38-39, which states, "Just as the scripture says, 'Out from within him will flow rivers of living water.' (Now he said this about the Spirit whom those who believed in him were going to receive; for the Spirit had not yet been given, because Jesus was not yet glorified.") But now in 20:22 Jesus was glorified, so the Spirit could be given. Had the disciples not believed in Jesus before? It seems clear that they had, since their belief is repeatedly affirmed, beginning with 2:11. But it also seems clear that even on the eve of the crucifixion, they did not understand the necessity of the cross (16:31-33). And even after the crucifixion, the disciples had not realized that there was going to be a resurrection (20:9). Ultimate recognition of who Jesus was appears to have come to them only after the postresurrection appearances (note the response of Thomas, who was not present at this incident, in v. 28). Finally, what is the relation of this incident in 20:22 to the account of the coming of the Holy Spirit in Acts 2? It appears best to view these as two separate events which have two somewhat different purposes. This was the giving of life itself, which flowed out from within (cf. 7:38-39). The giving of power would occur later, on the day of Pentecost – power to witness and carry out the mission the disciples had been given. (It is important to remember that in the historical unfolding of God's program for the church, these events occurred in a chronological sequence which, after the church has been established, is not repeatable today.)

[3] tn Grk "they are forgiven to them." The words "to them" are unnecessary in English and somewhat redundant.

[4] sn The statement by Jesus about forgive or retaining anyone's sins finds its closest parallel in Matt 16:19 and 18:18. This is probably not referring to apostolic power to forgive or retain the sins of individuals (as it is sometimes understood), but to the "power" of proclaiming this forgiveness which was entrusted to the disciples. This is consistent with the idea that the disciples are to carry on the ministry of Jesus after he has departed from the world and returned to the Father, a theme which occurred in the Farewell Discourse (cf. 15:27, 16:1-4, and 17:18).

[5] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author; Didymus means "the twin" in Greek.

[6] tn Grk "but he said to them."

[7] tn Or "marks."

[8] tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context. The use of "it" here as direct object of the verb πιστεύσω (pisteusō) specifies exactly what Thomas was refusing to believe: that Jesus had risen from the dead, as reported by his fellow disciples. Otherwise the English reader may be left with the impression Thomas was refusing to "believe in" Jesus, or "believe Jesus to be the Christ." The dramatic tension in this narrative is heightened when Thomas, on seeing for himself the risen Christ, believes more than just the resurrection (see John 20:28).

[9] tn Grk "were inside"; the word "together" is implied.

[10] tn Grk "the doors were shut"; "locked" conveys a more appropriate idea for the modern English reader.

sn See the note on the phrase locked the doors in 20:19.

[11] tn Or "Extend" or "Reach out." The translation "put" or "reach out" for φέρω (pherō) here is given in BDAG 1052 s.v. 4.

[12] tn Grk "see." The Greek verb ἴδε (ide) is often used like its cognate ἰδού (idou) in Hellenistic Greek (which is "used to emphasize the ...importance of someth." [BDAG 468 s.v. ἰδού 1.b.ε]).

[13] tn Or "reach out" or "put."

[14] tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[15] tn Grk "and do not be unbelieving, but believing."

[17] sn Should Thomas' exclamation be understood as two subjects with the rest of the sentence omitted ("My Lord and my God has truly risen from the dead"), as predicate nominatives ("You are my Lord and my God"), or as vocatives ("My Lord and my God!")? Probably the most likely is something between the second and third alternatives. It seems that the second is slightly more likely here, because the context appears confessional. Thomas' statement, while it may have been an exclamation, does in fact confess the faith which he had previously lacked, and Jesus responds to Thomas' statement in the following verse as if it were a confession. With the proclamation by Thomas here, it is difficult to see how any more profound analysis of Jesus' person could be given. It echoes 1:1 and 1:14 together: The Word was God, and the Word became flesh (Jesus of Nazareth). The Fourth Gospel opened with many other titles for Jesus: the Lamb of God (1:29, 36); the Son of God (1:34, 49); Rabbi (1:38); Messiah (1:41); the King of Israel (1:49); the Son of Man (1:51). Now the climax is reached with the proclamation by Thomas, "My Lord and my God," and the reader has come full circle from 1:1, where the author had introduced him to who Jesus was, to 20:28, where the last of the disciples has come to the full realization of who "Have you believed because you have seen me? Blessed are the people[1] who have not seen and yet have believed."[2]

20:30 Now Jesus performed[3] many other miraculous signs in the presence of the[4] disciples, which are not recorded[5] in this book.[6] 20:31 But these[7] are recorded[8] so that you may believe[9] that Jesus is the Christ,[10] the Son of God, and that by believing you may have life in his name.[11]

Jesus was. What Jesus had predicted in John 8:28 had come to pass: "When you lift up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am he" (Grk "I am"). By being lifted up in crucifixion (which led in turn to his death, resurrection, and exaltation with the Father) Jesus has revealed his true identity as both Lord (κύριος [kurios], used by the LXX to translate Yahweh) and God (θεός [theos], used by the LXX to translate Elohim).

1 tn Grk "are those."

2 tn Some translations treat πιστεύσαντες (pisteusantes) as a gnomic aorist (timeless statement) and thus equivalent to an English present tense: "and yet believe" (RSV). This may create an effective application of the passage to the modern reader, but the author is probably thinking of those people who had already believed without the benefit of seeing the risen Jesus, on the basis of reports by others or because of circumstantial evidence (see John 20:8).

3 tn Or "did."

4 tc ‡ Although most MSS, including several important ones (𝔓66 ℵ C D L W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat), read αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after τῶν μαθητῶν (tōn mathētōn, "the disciples"), the pronoun is lacking in A B K Δ 0250 al. The weight of the witnesses for the inclusion is somewhat stronger than that for the exclusion. However, the addition of "his" to "disciples" is a frequent scribal emendation and as such is a predictable variant. It is thus most likely that the shorter reading is authentic. NA27 puts the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

5 tn Grk "are not written."

6 sn The author mentions many other miraculous signs performed by Jesus in the presence of the disciples, which are not written in the Gospel. What are these signs the author of the Gospel has in mind? One can only speculate. The author says they were performed in the presence of the disciples, which emphasizes again their role as witnesses (cf. 15:27). The point here is that the author has been selective in his use of material. He has chosen to record those incidents from the life and ministry of Jesus which supported his purpose in writing the Gospel. Much which might be of tremendous interest, but does not directly contribute to that purpose in writing, he has omitted. The author explains his purpose in writing in the following verse.

7 tn Grk "these things."

8 tn Grk "are written."

9 tc ‡ A difficult textual variant is present at this point in the Greek text. Some MSS (𝔓66vid ℵ* B Θ 0250 pc) read the present subjunctive πιστεύητε (pisteuētē) after ἵνα (hina; thus NEB text, "that you may hold the faith") while others (^{2}ℵ A C D L W Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐) read the aorist subjunctive πιστεύσητε (pisteusētē) after ἵνα (cf. NEB margin, "that you may come to believe"). As reflected by the renderings of the NEB text and margin, it is often assumed that the present tense would suggest ongoing belief (i.e., the Fourth Gospel primarily addressed those who already believed, and was intended to strengthen their faith), while the aorist tense would speak of coming to faith (i.e., John's Gospel was primarily evangelistic in nature). Both textual variants enjoy significant MS support, although the present subjunctive has somewhat superior witnesses on its behalf. On internal grounds it is hard to decide which is more likely the original. Many resolve this issue on the basis of a reconstruction of the overall purpose of the Gospel, viz., whether it is addressed to unbelievers or believers. However, since elsewhere in the Gospel of John (1) the present tense can refer to both initial faith and continuation in the faith and (2) the aorist tense simply refrains from commenting on the issue, it is highly unlikely that the distinction here would be determinative for the purpose of the Fourth Gospel. The question of purpose cannot be resolved by choosing one textual variant over the other in 20:31, but must be decided on other factors. Nevertheless, if a choice has to be made, the present subjunctive is the preferred reading. NA27 puts the aorist's sigma in brackets, thus representing both readings virtually equally (so TCGNT 220).

10 tn Or "Jesus is the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

11 sn John 20:31. A major question concerning this verse, the purpose statement of the Gospel of John, is whether the author is writing primarily for an audience of unbelievers, with purely evangelistic emphasis, or whether he envisions an audience of believers, whom he wants to strengthen in their faith. Several points are important in this discussion: (1) in the immediate context (20:30), the other signs spoken of by the author were performed in the presence of disciples; (2) in the case of the first of the signs, at Cana, the author makes a point of the effect the miracle had on the disciples (2:11); (3) if the primary thrust of the Gospel is toward unbelievers, it is difficult to see why so much material in chaps. 13-17 (the last meal and Farewell Discourse, concluding with Jesus' prayer for the disciples), which deals almost exclusively with the disciples, is included; (4) the disciples themselves were repeatedly said to have believed in Jesus throughout the Gospel, beginning with 2:11, yet they still needed to believe after the resurrection (if Thomas' experience in 20:27-28 is any indication); and (5) the Gospel appears to be written with the assumption that the readers are familiar with the basic story (or perhaps with one or more of the synoptic gospel accounts, although this is less clear). Thus no account of the birth of Jesus is given at all, and although he is identified as being from Nazareth, the words of the Pharisees and chief priests to Nicodemus (7:52) are almost certainly to be taken as ironic, assuming the reader knows where Jesus was really from. Likewise, when Mary is identified in 11:2 as the one who anointed Jesus' feet with oil, it is apparently assumed that the readers are familiar with the story, since the incident involved is not mentioned in the Fourth Gospel until 12:3. These observations must be set over against the clear statement of purpose in the present verse, 20:31, which seems to have significant evangelistic emphasis. In addition to this there is the repeated emphasis on witness throughout the Fourth Gospel (cf. the witness of John the Baptist in 1:7, 8, 15, 32, and 34, along with 5:33; the Samaritan woman in 4:39; Jesus' own witness, along with that of the Father who sent him, in 8:14, 18, and 18:37; the disciples themselves in 15:27; and finally the testimony of the author himself in 19:35 and 21:24). In light of all this evidence it seems best to say that the author wrote with a dual purpose: (1) to witness to unbelievers concerning Jesus, in order that they come to believe in him and have eternal life; and (2) to strengthen the faith of believers, by deepening and expanding their understanding of who Jesus is.

Jesus' Appearance to the Disciples in Galilee

21:1 After this[1] Jesus revealed himself again to the disciples by the Sea of Tiberias.[2] Now this is how he did so.[3] 21:2 Simon Peter, Thomas[4] (called Didymus),[5] Nathanael[6] (who was from Cana[7] in Galilee), the sons[8] of Zebedee,[9] and two other disciples[10] of his were together. 21:3 Simon Peter told them, "I am going fishing." "We will go with you," they replied.[11] They went out and got into the boat, but that night they caught nothing.

21:4 When it was already very early morning, Jesus stood on the beach, but the disciples did not know that it was Jesus. 21:5 So Jesus said to them, "Children, you don't have any fish,[12] do you?"[13] They replied,[14] "No." 21:6 He told them, "Throw your net on the right side of the boat, and you will find some."[15] So they threw the net,[16] and were not able to pull it in because of the large number of fish.

21:7 Then the disciple whom[17] Jesus loved[18] said to Peter, "It is the Lord!" So Simon Peter, when he heard that it was the Lord, tucked in his outer garment (for he had nothing on underneath it),[19] and plunged[20] into the sea. 21:8 Meanwhile the other disciples came with the boat, dragging the net full of fish, for they were not far from land, only about a hundred yards.[21]

21:9 When they got out on the beach,[22] they saw a charcoal fire ready[23] with a fish placed on it, and bread. 21:10 Jesus said,[24] "Bring some of the fish you have just now caught." 21:11 So Simon Peter went aboard and pulled the net to shore. It was[25] full of large fish, one hundred fifty-three,[26] but although there were so many,

1 tn The time reference indicated by μετὰ ταῦτα (meta tauta) is indefinite, in comparison with the specific "after eight days" (μεθ᾽ ἡμέρας ὀκτώ, meth᾽ hēmeras oktō) between the two postresurrection appearances of Jesus in 20:26.

2 sn The Sea of Tiberias is another name for the Sea of Galilee (see 6:1).

3 tn Grk "how he revealed himself."

4 tn Grk "and Thomas." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements of a series.

5 sn Didymus means "the twin" in Greek.

6 tn Grk "and Nathanael." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements of a series.

7 map For location see Map1-C3; Map2-D2; Map3-C5.

8 tn Grk "and the sons." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements of a series.

9 sn The sons of Zebedee were James and John.

10 sn The two other disciples who are not named may have been Andrew and Philip, who are mentioned together in John 6:7-8 and 12:22.

11 tn Grk "they said to him."

12 tn The word προσφάγιον (prosphagion) is unusual. According to BDAG 886 s.v. in Hellenistic Greek it described a side dish to be eaten with bread, and in some contexts was the equivalent of ὄψον (opson), "fish." Used in addressing a group of returning fishermen, however, it is quite clear that the speaker had fish in mind.

13 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "do you?").

14 tn Grk "They answered him."

15 tn The word "some" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 tn The words "the net" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

17 tn Grk "the disciple, that one whom."

18 sn On the disciple whom Jesus loved see 13:23-26.

19 tn Grk "for he was naked." Peter's behavior here has been puzzling to many interpreters. It is usually understood that the Greek word γυμνός (gumnos, usually translated "naked") does not refer to complete nudity (as it could), since this would have been offensive to Jewish sensibilities in this historical context. It is thus commonly understood to mean "stripped for work" here (cf. NASB, NLT), that is, with one's outer clothing removed, and Peter was wearing either a loincloth or a loose-fitting tunic (a long shirt-like garment worn under a cloak, cf. NAB, "for he was lightly clad"). Believing himself inadequately dressed to greet the Lord, Peter threw his outer garment around himself and dived into the sea. C. K. Barrett (St. John, 580-81) offered the explanation that a greeting was a religious act and thus could not be performed unless one was clothed. This still leaves the improbable picture of a person with much experience around the water putting on his outer garment before diving in. R. E. Brown's suggestion (John [AB], 2:1072) seems much more probable here: The Greek verb used (διαζώννυμι, diazōnnumi) does not necessarily mean putting clothing on, but rather tying the clothing around oneself (the same verb is used in 13:4-5 of Jesus tying the towel around himself). The statement that Peter was "naked" could just as well mean that he was naked underneath the outer garment, and thus could not take it off before jumping into the water. But he did pause to tuck it up and tie it with the girdle before jumping in, to allow himself more freedom of movement. Thus the clause that states Peter was naked is explanatory (note the use of for), explaining why Peter girded up his outer garment rather than taking it off – he had nothing on underneath it and so could not remove it.

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

20 tn Grk "threw himself."

21 tn Or "about a hundred meters"; Grk "about two hundred cubits." According to BDAG 812 s.v., a πῆχυς (pēchus) was about 18 inches or .462 meters, so two hundred πηχῶν (pēchōn) would be about 100 yards (92.4 meters).

22 tn The words "on the beach" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

23 tn Grk "placed," "laid."

24 tn Grk "said to them."

25 tn The words "It was" are not in the Greek text. Here a new sentence was begun in the translation in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences. For this reason the words "It was" had to be supplied.

26 sn Here the author makes two further points about the catch of fish: (1) there were one hundred fifty-three large fish in the net, and (2) even with so many, the net was not torn. Many symbolic interpretations have been proposed for both points (unity, especially, in the case of the second), but the reader is given no explicit clarification in the text itself. It seems better not to speculate here, but to see these details as indicative of an eyewitness account. Both are the sort of thing that would remain in the mind of a person who had witnessed them firsthand. For a summary of the symbolic interpretations proposed for the number of fish in the net, see R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:1074-75), where a number are discussed at length. Perhaps the reader is simply to understand this as the abundance which results from obedience to Jesus, much as with the amount of wine generated in the water jars in Cana at the beginning of Jesus' public ministry (2:6).

the net was not torn. 21:12 "Come, have breakfast," Jesus said.[1] But none of the disciples dared to ask him, "Who are you?" because they knew it was the Lord. 21:13 Jesus came and took the bread and gave it to them, and did the same with the fish. 21:14 This was now the third time Jesus was revealed to the disciples after he was raised from the dead.

Peter's Restoration

21:15 Then when they had finished breakfast, Jesus said to Simon Peter, "Simon, son of John,[2] do you love me more than these do?"[3] He replied,[4] "Yes, Lord, you know I love you."[5] Jesus[6] told him, "Feed my lambs." 21:16 Jesus[7] said[8] a second time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" He replied,[9] "Yes, Lord, you know I love you." Jesus[10] told him, "Shepherd my sheep." 21:17 Jesus[11] said[12] a third time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" Peter was distressed[13] that Jesus[14] asked[15] him a third time, "Do you love me?" and said,[16] "Lord, you know everything. You know that I love you." Jesus[17]

1 tn Grk "said to them." The words "to them" are omitted because it is clear in context to whom Jesus was speaking, and the words are slightly redundant in English.

2 tc The majority of MSS (A C^{2} Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 sy) read "Simon, the son of Jonah" here and in vv. 16 and 17, but these are perhaps assimilations to Matt 16:17. The reading "Simon, son of John" is better attested, being found in $\mathfrak{P}^{45}$ (א* only has "Simon" without mention of his father) B C* D L W lat co.

3 tn To whom (or what) does "these" (τούτων, toutōn) refer? Three possibilities are suggested: (1) τούτων should be understood as neuter, "these things," referring to the boats, nets, and fishing gear nearby. In light of Peter's statement in 21:3, "I am going fishing," some have understood Peter to have renounced his commission in light of his denials of Jesus. Jesus, as he restores Peter and forgives him for his denials, is asking Peter if he really loves his previous vocation more than he loves Jesus. Three things may be said in evaluation of this view: (a) it is not at all necessary to understand Peter's statement in 21:3 as a renouncement of his discipleship, as this view of the meaning of τούτων would imply; (b) it would probably be more likely that the verb would be repeated in such a construction (see 7:31 for an example where the verb is repeated); and (c) as R. E. Brown has observed (John [AB], 2:1103) by Johannine standards the choice being offered to Peter between material things and the risen Jesus would seem rather ridiculous, especially after the disciples had realized whom it was they were dealing with (the Lord, see v. 12). (2) τούτων refers to the other disciples, meaning "Do you love me more than you love these other disciples?" The same objection mentioned as (c) under (1) would apply here: Could the author, in light of the realization of who Jesus is which has come to the disciples after the resurrection, and which he has just mentioned in 21:12, seriously present Peter as being offered a choice between the other disciples and the risen Jesus? This leaves option (3), that τούτων refers to the other disciples, meaning "Do you love me more than these other disciples do?" It seems likely that there is some irony here: Peter had boasted in 13:37, "I will lay down my life for you," and the synoptics present Peter as boasting even more explicitly of his loyalty to Jesus ("Even if they all fall away, I will not," Matt 26:33; Mark 14:29). Thus the semantic force of what Jesus asks Peter here amounts to something like "Now, after you have denied me three times, as I told you you would, can you still affirm that you love me more than these other disciples do?" The addition of the auxiliary verb "do" in the translation is used to suggest to the English reader the third interpretation, which is the preferred one.

4 tn Grk "He said to him."

5 tn Is there a significant difference in meaning between the two words for love used in the passage, ἀγαπάω and φιλέω (agapaō and phileō)? Aside from Origen, who saw a distinction in the meaning of the two words, most of the Greek Fathers like Chrysostom and Cyril of Alexandria, saw no real difference of meaning. Neither did Augustine nor the translators of the Itala (Old Latin). This was also the view of the Reformation Greek scholars Erasmus and Grotius. The suggestion that a distinction in meaning should be seen comes primarily from a number of British scholars of the 19th century, especially Trench, Westcott, and Plummer. It has been picked up by others such as Spicq, Lenski, and Hendriksen. But most modern scholars decline to see a real difference in the meaning of the two words in this context, among them Bernard, Moffatt, Bonsirven, Bultmann, Barrett, Brown, Morris, Haenchen, and Beasley-Murray. There are three significant reasons for seeing no real difference in the meaning of ἀγαπάω and φιλέω in these verses: (1) the author has a habit of introducing slight stylistic variations in repeated material without any significant difference in meaning (compare, for example, 3:3 with 3:5, and 7:34 with 13:33). An examination of the uses of ἀγαπάω and φιλέω in the Fourth Gospel seems to indicate a general interchangeability between the two. Both terms are used of God's love for man (3:16, 16:27); of the Father's love for the Son (3:35, 5:20); of Jesus' love for men (11:5, 11:3); of the love of men for men (13:34, 15:19); and of the love of men for Jesus (8:42, 16:27). (2) If (as seems probable) the original conversation took place in Aramaic (or possibly Hebrew), there would not have been any difference expressed because both Aramaic and Hebrew have only one basic word for love. In the LXX both ἀγαπάω and φιλέω are used to translate the same Hebrew word for love, although ἀγαπάω is more frequent. It is significant that in the Syriac version of the NT only one verb is used to translate vv. 15-17 (Syriac is very similar linguistically to Palestinian Aramaic). (3) Peter's answers to the questions asked with ἀγαπάω are 'yes' even though he answers using the verb φιλέω. If he is being asked to love Jesus on a higher or more spiritual level his answers give no indication of this, and one would be forced to say (in order to maintain a consistent distinction between the two verbs) that Jesus finally concedes defeat and accepts only the lower form of love which is all that Peter is capable of offering. Thus it seems best to regard the interchange between ἀγαπάω and φιλέω in these verses as a minor stylistic variation of the author, consistent with his use of minor variations in repeated material elsewhere, and not indicative of any real difference in meaning. Thus no attempt has been made to distinguish between the two Greek words in the translation.

Because of the rapid verbal exchange in this pericope, "Jesus" is virtually required for clarity, providing a temptation to scribes to add the name. Further, the name normally occurs with the article. Although it is possible that B C accidentally omitted the article with the name, it is just as likely replied,[1] "Feed my sheep. 21:18 I tell you the solemn truth,[2] when you were young, you tied your clothes around you[3] and went wherever you wanted, but when you are old, you will stretch out your hands, and others will tie you up[4] and bring you where you do not want to go." 21:19 (Now Jesus[5] said this to indicate clearly by what kind of death Peter[6] was going to glorify God.)[7] After he said this, Jesus told Peter,[8] "Follow me."

Peter and the Disciple Jesus Loved

21:20 Peter turned around and saw the disciple whom Jesus loved following them.[9] (This was the disciple[10] who had leaned back against Jesus'[11] chest at the meal and asked,[12] "Lord, who is the one who is going to betray you?")[13] 21:21 So when Peter saw him,[14] he asked Jesus, "Lord, what about him?" 21:22 Jesus replied,[15] "If I want him to live[16] until I come back,[17] what concern is that of yours? You follow me!" 21:23 So the saying circulated[18] among the brothers and sisters[19] that this disciple was not going to die. But Jesus did not say to him that he was not going to die, but rather, "If I want him to live[20] until I come back,[21] what concern is that of yours?"

A Final Note

21:24 This is the disciple who testifies about these things and has written these things, and we know that his testimony is true. 21:25 There are many other things that Jesus did. If every one of them were written down,[22] I suppose the whole world[23] would not have room for the books that would be written.[24] that they added the simple name to the text for clarity's sake, while other witnesses added the article as well. The omission of ὁ Ἰησοῦς thus seems most likely to be authentic. NA[27] includes the words in brackets, indicating some doubts as to their authenticity.

tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[1] tn Grk "Jesus said to him."

[2] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[3] tn Or "you girded yourself."

[4] tn Grk "others will gird you."

[5] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. The phrase by what kind of death Peter was going to glorify God almost certainly indicates martyrdom (cf. 1 Pet 4:16), and it may not predict anything more than that. But the parallelism of this phrase to similar phrases in John 12:33 and 18:32 which describe Jesus' own death by crucifixion have led many to suggest that the picture Jesus is portraying for Peter looks not just at martyrdom but at death by crucifixion. This seems to be confirmed by the phrase you will stretch out your hands in the preceding verse. There is some evidence that the early church understood this and similar phrases (one of them in Isa 65:2) to refer to crucifixion (for a detailed discussion of the evidence see L. Morris, John [NICNT], 876, n. 52). Some have objected that if this phrase does indeed refer to crucifixion, the order within v. 18 is wrong, because the stretching out of the hands in crucifixion precedes the binding and leading where one does not wish to go. R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:1108) sees this as a deliberate reversal of the normal order (hysteron proteron) intended to emphasize the stretching out of the hands. Another possible explanation for the unusual order is the Roman practice in crucifixions of tying the condemned prisoner's arms to the crossbeam (patibulum) and forcing him to carry it to the place of execution (W. Bauer as cited by O. Cullmann in Peter: Disciple, Apostle, Martyr [LHD], 88).

[8] tn Grk "After he said this, he said to him"; the referents (first Jesus, second Peter) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[10] tn The words "This was the disciple" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied for clarity.

[11] tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "and said."

[13] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[14] tn Grk "saw this one."

[15] tn Grk "Jesus said to him."

[16] tn Grk "to stay" or "to remain," but since longevity is the issue in the context, "to live" conveys the idea more clearly.

[17] tn The word "back" is supplied to clarify the meaning.

[18] tn Grk "went out."

[19] tn Grk "the brothers," but here the term refers to more than just the immediate disciples of Jesus (as it does in 20:17). Here, as R. E. Brown notes (John [AB], 2:1110), it refers to Christians of the Johannine community (which would include both men and women).

[20] tn Grk "to stay" or "to remain," but since longevity is the issue in the context, "to live" conveys the idea more clearly.

[21] tn The word "back" is supplied to clarify the meaning.

[23] tn Grk "the world itself."

sn The author concludes the Gospel with a note concerning his selectivity of material. He makes it plain that he has not attempted to write an exhaustive account of the words and works of Jesus, for if one attempted to do so, "the whole world would not have room for the books that would be written." This is clearly hyperbole, and as such bears some similarity to the conclusion of the Book of Ecclesiastes (12:9-12). As it turns out, the statement seems more true of the Fourth Gospel itself, which is the subject of an ever-lengthening bibliography. The statement in v. 25 serves as a final reminder that knowledge of Jesus, no matter how well-attested it may be, is still partial. Everything that Jesus did during his three and one-half years of earthly ministry is not known. This supports the major theme of the Fourth Gospel: Jesus is repeatedly identified as God, and although he may be truly known on the basis of his self-disclosure, he can never be known exhaustively. There is far more to know about Jesus than could ever be written down, or even known. On this appropriate note the Gospel of John ends.

Acts

Jesus Ascends to Heaven

1:1 I wrote[1] the former[2] account,[3] Theophilus,[4] about all that Jesus began to do and teach 1:2 until the day he was taken up to heaven,[5] after he had given orders[6] by[7] the Holy Spirit to the apostles he had chosen. 1:3 To the same apostles[8] also, after his suffering,[9] he presented himself alive with many convincing proofs. He was seen by them over a forty-day period[10] and spoke about matters concerning the kingdom of God. 1:4 While he was with them,[11] he declared,[12] "Do not leave Jerusalem,[13] but wait there[14] for what my[15] Father promised,[16] which you heard about from me.[17] 1:5 For[18] John baptized with water, but you[19] will be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days from now."

1:6 So when they had gathered together, they began to ask him,[20] "Lord, is this the time when you are restoring the kingdom to Israel?" 1:7 He told them, "You are not permitted to know[21] the times or periods that the Father has set by his own authority. 1:8 But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you, and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the farthest parts[22] of the earth." 1:9 After[23] he had said this, while they were watching, he was lifted up and a cloud hid him from their sight. 1:10 As[24] they were still staring into the sky while he was going, suddenly[25] two men in white clothing stood near them 1:11 and said, "Men of Galilee, why do

1 tn Or "produced," Grk "made."

2 tn Or "first." The translation "former" is preferred because "first" could imply to the modern English reader that the author means that his previous account was the first one to be written down. The Greek term πρῶτος (prōtos) does not necessarily mean "first" in an absolute sense, but can refer to the first in a set or series. That is what is intended here – the first account (known as the Gospel of Luke) as compared to the second one (known as Acts).

3 tn The Greek word λόγος (logos) is sometimes translated "book" (NRSV, NIV) or "treatise" (KJV). A formal, systematic treatment of a subject is implied, but the word "book" may be too specific and slightly misleading to the modern reader, so "account" has been used.

sn The former account refers to the Gospel of Luke, which was "volume one" of the two-volume work Luke-Acts.

4 tn Grk "O Theophilus," but the usage of the vocative in Acts with ὦ (ō) is unemphatic, following more the classical idiom (see ExSyn 69).

5 tn The words "to heaven" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied from v. 11. Several modern translations (NIV, NRSV) supply the words "to heaven" after "taken up" to specify the destination explicitly mentioned later in 1:11.

6 tn Or "commands." Although some modern translations render ἐντειλάμενος (enteilamenos) as "instructions" (NIV, NRSV), the word implies authority or official sanction (G. Schrenk, TDNT 2:545), so that a word like "orders" conveys the idea more effectively. The action of the temporal participle is antecedent (prior) to the action of the verb it modifies ("taken up").

7 tn Or "through."

8 tn Grk "to them"; the referent (the apostles) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 sn After his suffering is a reference to Jesus' crucifixion and the abuse which preceded it.

10 tn Grk "during forty days." The phrase "over a forty-day period" is used rather than "during forty days" because (as the other NT accounts of Jesus' appearances make clear) Jesus was not continually visible to the apostles during the forty days, but appeared to them on various occasions.

11 tn Or "While he was assembling with them," or "while he was sharing a meal with them." There are three basic options for translating the verb συναλίζω (sunalizō): (1) "Eat (salt) with, share a meal with"; (2) "bring together, assemble"; (3) "spend the night with, stay with" (see BDAG 964 s.v.). The difficulty with the first option is that it does not fit the context, and this meaning is not found elsewhere. The second option is difficult because of the singular number and the present tense. The third option is based on a spelling variation of συναυλιζόμενος (sunaulizomenos), which some minuscules actually read here. The difference in meaning between (2) and (3) is not great, but (3) seems to fit the context somewhat better here.

12 tn Grk "ordered them"; the command "Do not leave" is not in Greek but is an indirect quotation in the original (see note at end of the verse for explanation).

13 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

14 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text (direct objects in Greek were frequently omitted when clear from the context).

15 tn Grk "the," with the article used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

16 tn Grk "for the promise of the Father." Jesus is referring to the promised gift of the Holy Spirit (see the following verse).

17 tn Grk "While he was with them, he ordered them not to leave Jerusalem, but to wait there for 'what my Father promised, which you heard about from me.'" This verse moves from indirect to direct discourse. This abrupt change is very awkward, so the entire quotation has been rendered as direct discourse in the translation.

18 tn In the Greek text v. 5 is a continuation of the previous sentence, which is long and complicated. In keeping with the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

19 tn The pronoun is plural in Greek.

20 tn Grk "they began to ask him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. The imperfect tense of the Greek verb ἠρώτων (ērōtōn) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

21 tn Grk "It is not for you to know."

22 tn Or "to the ends."

23 tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

24 tn Grk "And as." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

25 tn Grk "behold."

you stand here[1] looking up into the sky? This same Jesus who has been taken up from you into heaven[2] will come back in the same way you saw him go into heaven."

A Replacement for Judas is Chosen

1:12 Then they returned to Jerusalem[3] from the mountain[4] called the Mount of Olives[5] (which is near Jerusalem, a Sabbath day's journey[6] away). 1:13 When[7] they had entered Jerusalem,[8] they went to the upstairs room where they were staying. Peter[9] and John, and James, and Andrew, Philip and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew, James son of Alphaeus and Simon the Zealot, and Judas son of James were there.[10] 1:14 All these continued together in prayer with one mind, together with the women, along with Mary the mother of Jesus, and his brothers.[11] 1:15 In those days[12] Peter stood up among the believers[13] (a gathering of about one hundred and twenty people) and said, 1:16 "Brothers,[14] the scripture had to be fulfilled that the Holy Spirit foretold through[15] David concerning Judas – who became the guide for those who arrested Jesus – 1:17 for he was counted as one of us and received a share in this ministry."[16] 1:18 (Now this man Judas[17] acquired a field with the reward of his unjust deed,[18] and falling headfirst[19] he burst open in the middle and all his intestines[20] gushed out. 1:19 This[21] became known to all who lived in Jerusalem, so that in their own language[22] they called that field[23] Hakeldama, that is, "Field of Blood.") 1:20 "For it is written in the book of Psalms, 'Let his house become deserted,[24] and let there be no one to live in it,'[25] and 'Let another take his position of responsibility.'[26] 1:21 Thus one of the men[27] who have accompanied us during all the time the Lord Jesus associated with[28] us, 1:22 beginning from his baptism by John until the day he[29] was taken up from us – one of these must become a witness of his resurrection together with us."

[1] tn The word "here" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[2] tc Codex Bezae (D) and several other witnesses lack the words εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν (eis ton ouranon, "into heaven") here, most likely by way of accidental deletion. In any event, it is hardly correct to suppose that the Western text has intentionally suppressed references to the ascension of Christ here, for the phrase is solidly attested in the final clause of the verse.

tn Or "into the sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" (vv. 10, 11a) or "heaven" (twice in v. 11b) depending on the context.

[3] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[4] tn Or "from the hill." The Greek term ὄρος (oros) refers to a relatively high elevation of land in contrast with βουνός (bounos, "hill").

[5] sn The Mount of Olives is the traditional name for this mountain, also called Olivet. The Mount of Olives is really a ridge running north to south about 1.8 mi (3 km) long, east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley. Its central elevation is about 100 ft (30 m) higher than Jerusalem. It was named for the large number of olive trees which grew on it.

[6] sn The phrase a Sabbath day's journey refers to the distance the rabbis permitted a person to travel on the Sabbath without breaking the Sabbath, specified in tractate Sotah 5:3 of the Mishnah as 2,000 cubits (a cubit was about 18 inches). In this case the distance was about half a mile (1 km).

[7] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[8] tn The word "Jerusalem" is not in the Greek text but is implied (direct objects were often omitted when clear from the context).

[9] sn In the various lists of the twelve, Peter (also called Simon) is always mentioned first (see also Matt 10:1-4; Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:13-16) and the first four are always the same, though not in the same order after Peter.

[10] tn The words "were there" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[11] sn Jesus' brothers are mentioned in Matt 13:55 and John 7:3.

[12] tn Grk "And in those days." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[13] tn Or "brethren" (but the term includes both male and female believers present in this gathering, as indicated by those named in vv. 13-14).

[14] tn Grk "Men brothers." In light of the compound phrase ἄνδρες ἀδελφοί (andres adelphoi, "Men brothers") Peter's words are best understood as directly addressed to the males present, possibly referring specifically to the twelve (really ten at this point – eleven minus the speaker, Peter) mentioned by name in v. 13.

[15] tn Grk "foretold by the mouth of."

[16] tn Or "and was chosen to have a share in this ministry." The term λαγχάνω (lanchanō) here and in 2 Pet 1:1 can be understood as referring to the process of divine choice and thus be translated, "was chosen to have."

[17] tn The referent of "this man" (Judas) was specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn Traditionally, "with the reward of his wickedness."

[20] tn Or "all his bowels."

[21] tn Grk "And this." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[22] sn Their own language refers to Aramaic, the primary language spoken in Palestine in Jesus' day.

[23] tn Grk "that field was called." The passive voice has been converted to active in the translation in keeping with contemporary English style.

[24] tn Or "uninhabited" or "empty."

[25] sn A quotation from Ps 69:25.

[26] tn Or "Let another take his office."

sn A quotation from Ps 109:8.

[27] tn The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, where a successor to Judas is being chosen, only men were under consideration in the original historical context.

[28] tn Grk "the Lord Jesus went in and out among us." According to BDAG 294 s.v. εἰσέρχομαι 1.b.β, "ἐν παντὶ χρόνῳ ᾧ εἰσῆλθεν καὶ ἐξῆλθεν ἐφ᾽ ἡμᾶς went in and out among us = associated with us Ac 1:21."

[29] tn Here the pronoun "he" refers to Jesus.

1:23 So they[1] proposed two candidates:[2] Joseph called Barsabbas (also called Justus) and Matthias. 1:24 Then they prayed,[3] "Lord, you know the hearts of all. Show us which one of these two you have chosen 1:25 to assume the task[4] of this service[5] and apostleship from which Judas turned aside[6] to go to his own place."[7] 1:26 Then[8] they cast lots for them, and the one chosen was Matthias;[9] so he was counted with the eleven apostles.[10]

The Holy Spirit and the Day of Pentecost

2:1 Now[11] when the day of Pentecost had come, they were all together in one place. 2:2 Suddenly[12] a sound[13] like a violent wind blowing[14] came from heaven[15] and filled the entire house where they were sitting. 2:3 And tongues spreading out like a fire[16] appeared to them and came to rest on each one of them. 2:4 All[17] of them were filled with the Holy Spirit, and they began to speak in other languages[18] as the Spirit enabled them.[19]

2:5 Now there were devout Jews[20] from every nation under heaven residing in Jerusalem.[21] 2:6 When this sound[22] occurred, a crowd gathered and was in confusion,[23] because each one heard them speaking in his own language. 2:7 Completely baffled, they said,[24] "Aren't[25] all these who are speaking Galileans? 2:8 And how is it that each one of us hears them[26] in our own native language?[27] 2:9 Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and residents of Mesopotamia, Judea and Cappadocia, Pontus and the province of Asia,[28]

[1] tc Codex Bezae (D) and other Western witnesses have "he proposed," referring to Peter, thus emphasizing his role above the other apostles. The Western text displays a conscious pattern of elevating Peter in Acts, and thus the singular verb here is a palpably motivated reading.

[2] tn Grk "So they proposed two." The word "candidates" was supplied in the text for clarity.

[3] tn Grk "And praying, they said." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[4] tn Grk "to take the place."

[5] tn Or "of this ministry."

[6] tn Or "the task of this service and apostleship which Judas ceased to perform."

[7] sn To go to his own place. This may well be a euphemism for Judas' judged fate. He separated himself from them, and thus separated he would remain.

[8] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the continuity with the preceding verse. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style does not.

[9] tn Grk "and the lot fell on Matthias."

[11] tn Grk "And" Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style does not.

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated for stylistic reasons. It occurs as part of the formula καὶ ἐγένετο (kai egeneto) which is often left untranslated in Luke-Acts because it is redundant in contemporary English. Here it is possible (and indeed necessary) to translate ἐγένετο as "came" so that the initial clause of the English translation contains a verb; nevertheless the translation of the conjunction καί is not necessary.

[13] tn Or "a noise."

[14] tn While φέρω (pherō) generally refers to movement from one place to another with the possible implication of causing the movement of other objects, in Acts 2:2 φέρομαι (pheromai) should probably be understood in a more idiomatic sense of "blowing" since it is combined with the noun for wind (πνοή, pnoē).

[15] tn Or "from the sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven" depending on the context.

[16] tn Or "And divided tongues as of fire." The precise meaning of διαμερίζομαι (diamerizomai) in Acts 2:3 is difficult to determine. The meaning could be "tongues as of fire dividing up one to each person," but it is also possible that the individual tongues of fire were divided ("And divided tongues as of fire appeared"). The translation adopted in the text ("tongues spreading out like a fire") attempts to be somewhat ambiguous.

[17] tn Grk "And all." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[18] tn The Greek term is γλώσσαις (glōssais), the same word used for the tongues of fire.

sn Other languages. Acts 2:6-7 indicates that these were languages understandable to the hearers, a diverse group from "every nation under heaven."

[19] tn Grk "just as the spirit gave them to utter." The verb ἀποφθέγγομαι (apophthengomai) was used of special utterances in Classical Greek (BDAG 125 s.v.).

[20] tn Grk "Jews, devout men." It is possible that only men are in view here in light of OT commands for Jewish men to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem at various times during the year (cf. Exod 23:17, 34:23; Deut 16:16). However, other evidence seems to indicate that both men and women might be in view. Luke 2:41-52 shows that whole families would make the temporary trip to Jerusalem. In addition, it is probable that the audience consisted of families who had taken up permanent residence in Jerusalem. The verb κατοικέω (katoikeō) normally means "reside" or "dwell," and archaeological evidence from tombs in Jerusalem does indicate that many families immigrated to Jerusalem permanently (see B. Witherington, Acts, 135); this would naturally include women. Also, the word ἀνήρ (anēr), which usually does mean "male" or "man" (as opposed to woman), sometimes is used generically to mean "a person" (BDAG 79 s.v. 2; cf. Matt 12:41). Given this evidence, then, it is conceivable that the audience in view here is not individual male pilgrims but a mixed group of men and women.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[22] tn Or "this noise."

[23] tn Or "was bewildered."

[24] tn Grk "They were astounded and amazed, saying." The two imperfect verbs, ἐξίσταντο (existanto) and ἐθαύμαζον (ethaumazon), show both the surprise and the confusion on the part of the hearers. The verb ἐξίσταντο (from ἐξίστημι, existēmi) often implies an illogical perception or response (BDAG 350 s.v. ἐξίστημι): "to be so astonished as to almost fail to comprehend what one has experienced" (L&N 25.218).

[25] tn Grk "Behold, aren't all these." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[26] tn Grk "we hear them, each one of us."

[27] tn Grk "in our own language in which we were born."

2:10 Phrygia and Pamphylia, Egypt and the parts of Libya near Cyrene,[1] and visitors from Rome,[2] 2:11 both Jews and proselytes,[3] Cretans and Arabs – we hear them speaking in our own languages about the great deeds God has done!"[4] 2:12 All were astounded and greatly confused, saying to one another, "What does this mean?" 2:13 But others jeered at the speakers,[5] saying, "They are drunk on new wine!"[6]

Peter's Address on the Day of Pentecost

2:14 But Peter stood up[7] with the eleven, raised his voice, and addressed them: "You men of Judea[8] and all you who live in Jerusalem,[9] know this[10] and listen carefully to what I say. 2:15 In spite of what you think, these men are not drunk,[11] for it is only nine o'clock in the morning.[12] 2:16 But this is what was spoken about through the prophet Joel:[13]

> 2:17 'And in the last days[14] it will be, God says,
> 'that I will pour out my Spirit on all people,[15] > and your sons and your daughters will prophesy, > and your young men will see visions,
> and your old men will dream dreams.
> 2:18 Even on my servants,[16] both men and women,
> I will pour out my Spirit in those days, and they will prophesy.[17]
> 2:19 And I will perform wonders in the sky[18] above > and miraculous signs[19] on the earth below, > blood and fire and clouds of smoke.
> 2:20 The sun will be changed to darkness > and the moon to blood > before the great and glorious[20] day of the Lord comes.
> 2:21 And then[21] everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved.'[22]

2:22 "Men of Israel,[23] listen to these words: Jesus the Nazarene, a man clearly attested to you by God with powerful deeds,[24] wonders, and miraculous signs[25] that God performed among you through him, just as you yourselves know – 2:23 this man, who was handed over by the predetermined plan and foreknowledge of God, you executed[26] by nailing him to a cross at the hands of Gentiles.[27] 2:24 But God raised him up,[28] not refer to the continent of Asia.

[1] tn According to BDAG 595 s.v. Λιβύη, the western part of Libya, Libya Cyrenaica, is referred to here (see also Josephus, Ant. 16.6.1 [16.160] for a similar phrase).

[2] map For location see JP4-A1.

[3] sn Proselytes refers to Gentile (i.e., non-Jewish) converts to Judaism.

[4] tn Or "God's mighty works." Here the genitive τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) has been translated as a subjective genitive.

[5] tn The words "the speakers" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[6] tn Grk "They are full of new wine!"
sn New wine refers to a new, sweet wine in the process of fermentation.

[7] tn Grk "standing up." The participle σταθείς (statheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[8] tn Or "You Jewish men." "Judea" is preferred here because it is paired with "Jerusalem," a location. This suggests locality rather than ethnic background is the primary emphasis in the context. As for "men," the Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, where "all" who live in Jerusalem are addressed, it is conceivable that this is a generic usage, although it can also be argued that Peter's remarks were addressed primarily to the men present, even if women were there.

[9] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[10] tn Grk "let this be known to you." The passive construction has been translated as an active for stylistic reasons.

[11] tn Grk "These men are not drunk, as you suppose."

[12] tn Grk "only the third hour."

[13] sn Note how in the quotation that follows all genders, ages, and classes are included. The event is like a hope Moses expressed in Num 11:29.

[14] sn The phrase in the last days is not quoted from Joel, but represents Peter's interpretive explanation of the current events as falling "in the last days."

[15] tn Grk "on all flesh."

[16] tn Grk "slaves." Although this translation frequently renders δοῦλος (doulos) as "slave," the connotation is often of one who has sold himself into slavery; in a spiritual sense, the idea is that of becoming a slave of God or of Jesus Christ voluntarily. The voluntary notion is not conspicuous here; hence, the translation "servants." In any case, the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

[17] sn The words and they will prophesy in Acts 2:18 are not quoted from Joel 2:29 at this point but are repeated from earlier in the quotation (Acts 2:17) for emphasis. Tongues speaking is described as prophecy, just like intelligible tongues are described in 1 Cor 14:26-33.

[18] tn Or "in the heaven." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven" depending on the context. Here, in contrast to "the earth below," a reference to the sky is more likely.

[19] tn Here the context indicates the miraculous nature of the signs mentioned; this is made explicit in the translation.

[20] tn Or "and wonderful."

[21] tn Grk "And it will be that."

[22] sn A quotation from Joel 2:28-32.

[23] tn Or "Israelite men," although this is less natural English. The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, it is conceivable that this is a generic usage, although it can also be argued that Peter's remarks were addressed primarily to the men present, even if women were there.

[24] tn Or "miraculous deeds."

[25] tn Again, the context indicates the miraculous nature of these signs, and this is specified in the translation.

[26] tn Or "you killed."

[27] tn Grk "at the hands of lawless men." At this point the term ἄνομος (anomos) refers to non-Jews who live outside the Jewish (Mosaic) law, rather than people who broke any or all laws including secular laws. Specifically it is a reference to the Roman soldiers who carried out Jesus' crucifixion.

[28] tn Grk "Whom God raised up."

having released[1] him from the pains[2] of death, because it was not possible for him to be held in its power.[3] 2:25 For David says about him, > for he is at my right hand so that I will not be shaken.

> ‘I saw the Lord always in front of me,[4]
> 2:26 Therefore my heart was glad and my tongue rejoiced;
> my body[5] also will live in hope,
> 2:27 because you will not leave my soul in Hades,[6] > nor permit your Holy One to experience[7] decay.
> 2:28 You have made known to me the paths of life;
> you will make me full of joy with your presence.’[8]

2:29 “Brothers,[9] I can speak confidently[10] to you about our forefather[11] David, that he both died and was buried, and his tomb is with us to this day. 2:30 So then, because[12] he was a prophet and knew that God had sworn to him with an oath to seat one of his descendants[13] on his throne,[14] 2:31 David by foreseeing this[15] spoke about the resurrection of the Christ,[16] that he was neither abandoned to Hades,[17] nor did his body[18] experience[19] decay.[20] 2:32 This Jesus God raised up, and we are all witnesses of it.[21] 2:33 So then, exalted[22] to the right hand[23] of God, and having received[24] the promise of the Holy Spirit[25] from the Father, he has poured out[26] what you both see and hear. 2:34 For David did not ascend into heaven, but he himself says,

> ‘The Lord said to my lord,
> “Sit[27] at my right hand
> 2:35 until I make your enemies a footstool[28] for your feet.”’[29]

2:36 Therefore let all the house of Israel know beyond a doubt[30] that God has made this Jesus whom you crucified[31] both Lord[32] and Christ.”[33]

1 tn Or “having freed.”

2 sn The term translated pains is frequently used to describe pains associated with giving birth (see Rev 12:2). So there is irony here in the mixed metaphor.

3 tn Or “for him to be held by it” (in either case, “it” refers to death’s power).

4 tn Or “always before me.”

5 tn Grk “my flesh.”

6 tn Or “will not abandon my soul to Hades.” Often “Hades” is the equivalent of the Hebrew term Sheol, the place of the dead.

7 tn Grk “to see,” but the literal translation of the phrase “to see decay” could be misunderstood to mean simply “to look at decay,” while here “see decay” is really figurative for “experience decay.”

8 sn A quotation from Ps 16:8-11.

9 tn Since this represents a continuation of the address beginning in v. 14 and continued in v. 22, “brothers” has been used here rather than a generic expression like “brothers and sisters.”

10 sn Peter’s certainty is based on well-known facts.

11 tn Or “about our noted ancestor,” “about the patriarch.”

12 tn The participles ὑπάρχων (huparchōn) and εἰδώς (eidōs) are translated as causal adverbial participles.

14 sn An allusion to Ps 132:11 and 2 Sam 7:12-13, the promise in the Davidic covenant.

15 tn Grk “David foreseeing spoke.” The participle προϊδών (proidōn) is taken as indicating means. It could also be translated as a participle of attendant circumstance: “David foresaw [this] and spoke.” The word “this” is supplied in either case as an understood direct object (direct objects in Greek were often omitted, but must be supplied for the modern English reader).

16 tn Or “the Messiah”; both “Christ” (Greek) and “Messiah” (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean “one who has been anointed.”

sn The term χριστός (christos) was originally an adjective (“anointed”), developing in LXX into a substantive (“an anointed one”), then developing still further into a technical generic term (“the anointed one”). In the intertestamental period it developed further into a technical term referring to the hoped-for anointed one, that is, a specific individual. In the NT the development starts there (technical-specific), is so used in the gospels, and then develops in Paul’s letters to mean virtually Jesus’ last name.

17 tn Or “abandoned in the world of the dead.” The translation “world of the dead” for Hades is suggested by L&N 1.19. The phrase is an allusion to Ps 16:10.

18 tn Grk “flesh.” See vv. 26b-27. The reference to “body” in this verse picks up the reference to “body” in v. 26. The Greek term σάρξ (sarx) in both verses literally means “flesh”; however, the translation “body” stresses the lack of decay of his physical body. The point of the verse is not merely the lack of decay of his flesh alone, but the resurrection of his entire person, as indicated by the previous parallel line “he was not abandoned to Hades.”

19 tn Grk “see,” but the literal translation of the phrase “see decay” could be misunderstood to mean simply “look at decay,” while here “see decay” is really figurative for “experience decay.”

20 sn An allusion to Ps 16:10.

21 tn Or “of him”; Grk “of which [or whom] we are all witnesses” (Acts 1:8).

22 tn The aorist participle ὑψωθείς (hupsōtheis) could be taken temporally: “So then, after he was exalted…” In the translation the more neutral “exalted” (a shorter form of “having been exalted”) was used to preserve the ambiguity of the original Greek.

23 sn The expression the right hand of God represents supreme power and authority. Its use here sets up the quotation of Ps 110:1 in v. 34.

24 tn The aorist participle λαβών (labōn) could be taken temporally: “So then, after he was exalted…and received from the Father the promised Holy Spirit.” In the translation the more neutral “having received” was used to preserve the ambiguity of the original Greek.

25 tn Here the genitive τοῦ πνεύματος (tou pneumatos) is a genitive of apposition; the promise consists of the Holy Spirit.

26 sn The use of the verb poured out looks back to 2:17-18, where the same verb occurs twice.

27 sn Sit at my right hand. The word “sit” alludes back to the promise of “seating one on his throne” in v. 30.

28 sn The metaphor make your enemies a footstool portrays the complete subjugation of the enemies.

29 sn A quotation from Ps 110:1, one of the most often-cited OT passages in the NT, pointing to the exaltation of Jesus.

30 tn Or “know for certain.” This term is in an emphatic position in the clause.

31 tn Grk “has made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom you crucified.” The clause has been simplified in the translation by replacing the pronoun “him” with the explanatory clause “this Jesus whom you crucified” which comes at the end of the sentence.

32 sn Lord. This looks back to the quotation of Ps 110:1 and the mention of “calling on the Lord” in 2:21. Peter’s point is that the Lord on whom one calls for salvation is Jesus, because he is the one mediating God’s blessing of the Spirit as a sign of the presence of salvation and the last days.

33 tn Or “and Messiah”; both “Christ” (Greek) and “Messiah”

The Response to Peter's Address

2:37 Now when they heard this,[1] they were acutely distressed[2] and said to Peter and the rest of the apostles, "What should we do, brothers?" 2:38 Peter said to them, "Repent, and each one of you be baptized[3] in the name of Jesus Christ[4] for[5] the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.[6] 2:39 For the promise[7] is for you and your children, and for all who are far away, as many as the Lord our God will call to himself." 2:40 With many other words he testified[8] and exhorted them saying, "Save yourselves from this perverse[9] generation!" 2:41 So those who accepted[10] his message[11] were baptized, and that day about three thousand people[12] were added.[13]

The Fellowship of the Early Believers

2:42 They were devoting themselves to the apostles' teaching and to fellowship,[14] to the breaking of bread and to prayer.[15] 2:43 Reverential awe[16] came over everyone,[17] and many wonders and miraculous signs[18] came about by the apostles. 2:44 All who believed were together and held[19] everything in common, 2:45 and they began selling[20] their property[21] and possessions and distributing the proceeds[22] to everyone, as anyone had need. 2:46 Every day[23] they continued to gather together by common consent in the temple courts,[24] breaking bread from[25] house to house, sharing their food with glad[26] and humble hearts,[27] 2:47 praising God and having the good will[28] of all the people. And the Lord was adding sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

1 tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

2 tn Grk "they were pierced to the heart" (an idiom for acute emotional distress).

3 tn The verb is a third person imperative, but the common translation "let each of you be baptized" obscures the imperative force in English, since it sounds more like a permissive ("each of you may be baptized") to the average English reader.

sn In the name of Jesus Christ. Baptism in Messiah Jesus' name shows how much authority he possesses.

5 tn There is debate over the meaning of εἰς in the prepositional phrase εἰς ἄφεσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ὑμῶν (eis aphesin tōn hamartiōn humōn, "for/because of/with reference to the forgiveness of your sins"). Although a causal sense has been argued, it is difficult to maintain here. ExSyn 369-71 discusses at least four other ways of dealing with the passage: (1) The baptism referred to here is physical only, and εἰς has the meaning of "for" or "unto." Such a view suggests that salvation is based on works – an idea that runs counter to the theology of Acts, namely: (a) repentance often precedes baptism (cf. Acts 3:19; 26:20), and (b) salvation is entirely a gift of God, not procured via water baptism (Acts 10:43 [cf. v. 47]; 13:38-39, 48; 15:11; 16:30-31; 20:21; 26:18); (2) The baptism referred to here is spiritual only. Although such a view fits well with the theology of Acts, it does not fit well with the obvious meaning of "baptism" in Acts – especially in this text (cf. 2:41); (3) The text should be repunctuated in light of the shift from second person plural to third person singular back to second person plural again. The idea then would be, "Repent for/with reference to your sins, and let each one of you be baptized..." Such a view is an acceptable way of handling εἰς, but its subtlety and awkwardness count against it; (4) Finally, it is possible that to a first-century Jewish audience (as well as to Peter), the idea of baptism might incorporate both the spiritual reality and the physical symbol. That Peter connects both closely in his thinking is clear from other passages such as Acts 10:47 and 11:15-16. If this interpretation is correct, then Acts 2:38 is saying very little about the specific theological relationship between the symbol and the reality, only that historically they were viewed together. One must look in other places for a theological analysis. For further discussion see R. N. Longenecker, "Acts," EBC 9:283-85; B. Witherington, Acts, 154-55; F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles: The Greek Text with Introduction and Commentary, 129-30; BDAG 290 s.v. εἰς 4.f.

6 tn Here the genitive τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος (tou hagiou pneumatos) is a genitive of apposition; the gift consists of the Holy Spirit.

7 sn The promise refers to the promise of the Holy Spirit that Jesus received from the Father in 2:33 and which he now pours out on others. The promise consists of the Holy Spirit (see note in 2:33). Jesus is the active mediator of God's blessing.

8 tn Or "warned."

9 tn Or "crooked" (in a moral or ethical sense). See Luke 3:5.

10 tn Or "who acknowledged the truth of."

11 tn Grk "word."

12 tn Grk "souls" (here an idiom for the whole person).

13 tn Or "were won over."

14 sn Fellowship refers here to close association involving mutual involvement and relationships.

15 tn Grk "prayers." This word was translated as a collective singular in keeping with English style.

16 tn Or "Fear."

17 tn Grk "on every soul" (here "soul" is an idiom for the whole person).

18 tn In this context the miraculous nature of these signs is implied. Cf. BDAG 920 s.v. σημεῖον 2.a.

19 tn Grk "had."

20 tn The imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive ("began..."). Since in context this is a description of the beginning of the community of believers, it is more likely that these statements refer to the start of various activities and practices that the early church continued for some time.

21 tn It is possible that the first term for property (κτήματα, ktēmata) refers to real estate (as later usage seems to indicate) while the second term (ὑπάρξεις, huparxeis) refers to possessions in general, but it may also be that the two terms are used together for emphasis, simply indicating that all kinds of possessions were being sold. However, if the first term is more specifically a reference to real estate, it foreshadows the incident with Ananias and Sapphira in Acts 5:1-11.

22 tn Grk "distributing them" (αὐτά, auta). The referent (the proceeds of the sales) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase.

24 tn Grk "in the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

25 tn Here κατά (kata) is used as a distributive (BDAG 512 s.v. B.1.d).

26 sn The term glad (Grk "gladness") often refers to joy brought about by God's saving acts (Luke 1:14, 44; also the related verb in 1:47; 10:21).

27 tn Grk "with gladness and humbleness of hearts." It is best to understand καρδίας (kardias) as an attributed genitive, with the two nouns it modifies actually listing attributes of the genitive noun which is related to them.

28 tn Or "the favor."

to their number every day[1] those who were being saved.

Peter and John Heal a Lame Man at the Temple

3:1 Now Peter and John were going up to the temple at the time[2] for prayer,[3] at three o'clock in the afternoon.[4] 3:2 And a man lame[5] from birth[6] was being carried up, who was placed at the temple gate called "the Beautiful Gate" every day[7] so he could beg for money[8] from those going into the temple courts.[9] 3:3 When he saw Peter and John about to go into the temple courts,[10] he asked them for money.[11] 3:4 Peter looked directly[12] at him (as did John) and said, "Look at us!" 3:5 So the lame man[13] paid attention to them, expecting to receive something from them. 3:6 But Peter said, "I have no silver or gold,[14] but what I do have I give you. In the name[15] of Jesus Christ[16] the Nazarene, stand up and[17] walk!" 3:7 Then[18] Peter[19] took hold[20] of him by the right hand and raised him up, and at once the man's[21] feet and ankles were made strong.[22] 3:8 He[23] jumped up,[24] stood and began walking around, and he entered the temple courts[25] with them, walking and leaping and praising God. 3:9 All[26] the people saw him walking and praising God, 3:10 and they recognized him as the man who used to sit and ask for donations[27] at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, and they were filled with astonishment and amazement[28] at what had happened to him.

Peter Addresses the Crowd

3:11 While the man[29] was hanging on to Peter and John, all the people, completely as-

---

1 tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase.

2 tn Grk "hour."

3 sn Going up to the temple at the time for prayer. The earliest Christians, being of Jewish roots, were still participating in the institutions of Judaism at this point. Their faith in Christ did not make them non-Jewish in their practices.

4 tn Grk "at the ninth hour." This is calculated from sunrise (Josephus, Ant. 14.4.3 [14.65]; Dan 9:21).

5 tn Or "crippled."

6 tn Grk "from his mother's womb."

7 tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase.

8 tn Grk "alms." The term "alms" is not in common use today, so what the man expected, "money," is used in the translation instead. The idea is that of money given as a gift to someone who was poor. Giving alms was viewed as honorable in Judaism (Tob 1:3, 16; 12:8-9; m. Pe'ah 1:1). See also Luke 11:41; 12:33; Acts 9:36; 10:2, 4, 31; 24:17.

9 tn Grk "the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

sn Into the temple courts. The exact location of this incident is debated. The 'Beautiful Gate' referred either to the Nicanor Gate (which led from the Court of the Gentiles into the Court of Women) or the Shushan Gate at the eastern wall.

10 tn Grk "the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

sn See the note on the phrase the temple courts in the previous verse.

11 tn Grk "alms." See the note on the word "money" in the previous verse.

12 tn Grk "Peter, looking directly at him, as did John, said." The participle ἀτενίσας (atenisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

13 tn Grk "So he"; the referent (the lame man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Or "I have no money." L&N 6.69 classifies the expression ἀργύριον καὶ χρυσίον (argurion kai chrusion) as an idiom that is a generic expression for currency, thus "money."

15 sn In the name. Note the authority in the name of Jesus the Messiah. His presence and power are at work for the man. The reference to "the name" is not like a magical incantation, but is designed to indicate the agent who performs the healing. The theme is quite frequent in Acts (2:38 plus 21 other times).

16 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

17 tc The words "stand up and" (ἔγειρε καί, egeire kai) are not in a few MSS (א B D sa), but are included in A C E Ψ 095 33 1739 𝔐 lat sy mae bo. The external testimony is thus fairly evenly divided, with few but important representatives of the Alexandrian and Western texttypes supporting the shorter reading. Internally, the words look like a standard scribal emendation, and may have been motivated by other healing passages where Jesus gave a similar double command (cf. Matt 9:5; Mark 2:9, [11]; Luke 5:23; [6:8]; John 5:8). On the other hand, there is some motivation for deleting ἔγειρε καί here, namely, unlike Jesus' healing miracles, Peter raises (ἤγειρεν, ēgeiren) the man to his feet (v. 7) rather than the man rising on his own. In light of the scribal tendency to harmonize, especially in immediate context, the longer reading is slightly preferred.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to reflect the sequence of events.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "Peter taking hold of him...raised him up." The participle πιάσας (piasas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

21 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 sn At once the man's feet and ankles were made strong. Note that despite the past lameness, the man is immediately able to walk. The restoration of his ability to walk pictures the presence of a renewed walk, a fresh start at life; this was far more than money would have given him.

23 tn Grk "And he." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

24 tn Grk "Jumping up, he stood." The participle ἐξαλλόμενος (exallomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. It is possible that the paralyzed man actually jumped off the ground, but more probably this term simply refers to the speed with which he stood up. See L&N 15.240.

25 tn Grk "the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

26 tn Grk "And all." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

27 tn Grk "alms," but this term is not in common use today, so the closest modern equivalent, "donations," is used instead. The idea is that of a donation to charity.

28 sn Amazement is a frequent response to miracles of Jesus or the apostles. These took the ancients by as much surprise as they would people today. But in terms of response to what God is doing, amazement does not equal faith (Luke 4:36; 5:9, 26; 7:16).

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

tounded, ran together to them in the covered walkway[1] called Solomon's Portico.[2] 3:12 When Peter saw this, he declared to the people, "Men of Israel,[3] why are you amazed at this? Why[4] do you stare at us as if we had made this man[5] walk by our own power or piety? 3:13 The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,[6] the God of our forefathers,[7] has glorified[8] his servant[9] Jesus, whom you handed over and rejected[10] in the presence of Pilate after he had decided[11] to release him. 3:14 But you rejected[12] the Holy and Righteous One and asked that a man who was a murderer be released to you. 3:15 You killed[13] the Originator[14] of life, whom God raised[15] from the dead. To this fact we are witnesses![16] 3:16 And on the basis of faith in Jesus'[17] name,[18] his very name has made this man – whom you see and know – strong. The[19] faith that is through Jesus[20] has given him this complete health in the presence[21] of you all. 3:17 And now, brothers, I know you acted in ignorance,[22] as your rulers did too. 3:18 But the things God foretold[23] long ago through[24] all the prophets – that his Christ[25] would suffer – he has fulfilled in this way. 3:19 Therefore repent and turn back so that your sins may be wiped out, 3:20 so that times of refreshing[26] may come from the presence of the Lord,[27] and so that he may send the Messiah[28] appointed[29] for you – that is, Jesus. 3:21 This one[30] heaven must[31] receive until the time all things are [1] tn Or "portico," "colonnade"; Grk "stoa." The translation "covered walkway" (a descriptive translation) was used here because the architectural term "portico" or "colonnade" is less familiar. However, the more technical term "portico" was retained in the actual name that follows.

[2] sn Solomon's Portico was a covered walkway formed by rows of columns supporting a roof and open on the inner side facing the center of the temple complex. It was located on the east side of the temple (Josephus, Ant. 15.11.3-5 [15.391-420], 20.9.7 [20.221]) and was a place of commerce and conversation.

[3] tn Or perhaps "People of Israel," since this was taking place in Solomon's Portico and women may have been present. The Greek ἄνδρες Ἰσραηλῖται (andres Israēlitai) used in the plural would normally mean "men, gentlemen" (BDAG 79 s.v. ἀνήρ 1.a).

[5] tn Grk "him"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tc ‡ The repetition of ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God") before the names of Isaac and Jacob is found in 𝔓74 ℵ C (A D without article) 36 104 1175 pc lat. The omission of the second and third ὁ θεός is supported by B E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 pc. The other time that Exod 3:6 is quoted in Acts (7:32) the best witnesses also lack the repeated ὁ θεός, but the three other times this OT passage is quoted in the NT the full form, with the thrice-mentioned θεός, is used (Matt 22:32; Mark 12:26; Luke 20:37). Scribes would be prone to conform the wording here to the LXX; the longer reading is thus most likely not authentic. NA27 has the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

sn The reference to the God of the patriarchs is a reminder that God is the God of the nation and of promises. The phrase God of our forefathers is from the Hebrew scriptures (Exod 3:6, 15-16; 4:5; see also the Jewish prayer known as "The Eighteen Benedictions"). Once again, event has led to explanation, or what is called the "sign and speech" pattern.

[8] sn Has glorified. Jesus is alive, raised and active, as the healing illustrates so dramatically how God honors him.

[9] sn His servant. The term servant has messianic connotations given the context of the promise, the note of suffering, and the titles and functions noted in vv. 14-15.

[10] tn Or "denied," "disowned."

[11] tn This genitive absolute construction could be understood as temporal ("when he had decided") or concessive ("although he had decided").

[12] tn Or "denied," "disowned."

[13] tn Or "You put to death."

[14] tn Or "Founder," "founding Leader."

[15] sn Whom God raised. God is the main actor here, as he testifies to Jesus and vindicates him.

[16] tn Grk "whom God raised from the dead, of which we are witnesses." The two consecutive relative clauses make for awkward English style, so the second was begun as a new sentence with the words "to this fact" supplied in place of the Greek relative pronoun to make a complete sentence in English.

sn We are witnesses. Note the two witnesses here, Peter and John (Acts 5:32; Heb 2:3-4).

[17] tn Grk "in his name"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] sn Here is another example of appeal to the person by mentioning the name. See the note on the word name in 3:6.

[19] tn Grk "see and know, and the faith." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation and καί (kai, "and") has not been translated.

[20] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn The faith that is through Jesus. Note how this verse explains how the claim to "faith in Jesus' name" works and what it means. To appeal to the name is to point to the person. It is not clear that the man expressed faith before the miracle. This could well be a "grace-faith miracle" where God grants power through the apostles to picture how much a gift life is (Luke 17:11-19). Christology and grace are emphasized here.

[21] tn Or "in full view."

[22] sn The ignorance Peter mentions here does not excuse them from culpability. It was simply a way to say "you did not realize the great mistake you made."

[23] sn God foretold. Peter's topic is the working out of God's plan and promise through events the scriptures also note.

[24] tn Grk "by the mouth of" (an idiom).

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

[26] tn Or "relief."

sn Times of refreshing. The phrase implies relief from difficult, distressful or burdensome circumstances. It is generally regarded as a reference to the messianic age being ushered in.

[27] tn The words "so that...Lord" are traditionally placed in v. 19 by most English translations, but in the present translation the verse division follows the standard critical editions of the Greek text (NA27, UBS4).

[28] tn Or "the Christ"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn He may send the Messiah appointed for you – that is, Jesus. The language points to the expectation of Jesus' return to gather his people. It is a development of the question raised in Acts 1:6.

[29] tn Or "designated in advance."

[30] tn Grk "whom," continuing the sentence from v. 20.

[31] sn The term must used here (δεῖ, dei, "it is necessary") is a key Lukan term to point to the plan of God and what must occur.

restored,[1] which God declared[2] from times long ago[3] through his holy prophets. 3:22 Moses said, 'The Lord your God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among your brothers. You must obey[4] him in everything he tells you.[5] 3:23 Every person[6] who does not obey that prophet will be destroyed and thus removed[7] from the people.'[8] 3:24 And all the prophets, from Samuel and those who followed him, have spoken about and announced[9] these days. 3:25 You are the sons of the prophets and of the covenant that God made with your ancestors,[10] saying to Abraham, 'And in your descendants[11] all the nations[12] of the earth will be blessed.'[13] 3:26 God raised up[14] his servant and sent him first to you, to bless you by turning[15] each one of you from your iniquities."[16]

The Arrest and Trial of Peter and John

4:1 While Peter and John[17] were speaking to the people, the priests and the commander[18] of the temple guard[19] and the Sadducees[20] came up[21] to them, 4:2 angry[22] because they were teaching the people and announcing[23] in Jesus the resurrection of the dead. 4:3 So[24] they seized[25] them and put them in jail[26] until the next day (for it was already evening). 4:4 But many of those who had listened to[27] the message[28] believed, and the number of the men[29] came to about five thousand.

1 tn Grk "until the times of the restoration of all things." Because of the awkward English style of the extended genitive construction, and because the following relative clause has as its referent the "time of restoration" rather than "all things," the phrase was translated "until the time all things are restored."

sn The time all things are restored. What that restoration involves is already recorded in the scriptures of the nation of Israel.

2 tn Or "spoke."

3 tn Or "from all ages past."

sn From times long ago. Once again, God's plan is emphasized.

4 tn Grk "hear," but the idea of "hear and obey" or simply "obey" is frequently contained in the Greek verb ἀκούω (akouō; see L&N 36.14) and the following context (v. 23) makes it clear that failure to "obey" the words of this "prophet like Moses" will result in complete destruction.

5 sn A quotation from Deut 18:15. By quoting Deut 18:15 Peter declared that Jesus was the eschatological "prophet like [Moses]" mentioned in that passage, who reveals the plan of God and the way of God.

6 tn Grk "every soul" (here "soul" is an idiom for the whole person).

7 tn Or "will be completely destroyed." In Acts 3:23 the verb ἐξολεθρεύω (exolethreuō) is translated "destroy and remove" by L&N 20.35.

8 sn A quotation from Deut 18:19, also Lev 23:29. The OT context of Lev 23:29 discusses what happened when one failed to honor atonement. One ignored the required sacrifice of God at one's peril.

9 tn Or "proclaimed."

sn All the prophets...have spoken about and announced. What Peter preaches is rooted in basic biblical and Jewish hope as expressed in the OT scriptures.

10 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

11 tn Or "in your offspring"; Grk "in your seed."

sn In your descendants (Grk "in your seed"). Seed has an important ambiguity in this verse. The blessing comes from the servant (v. 26), who in turn blesses the responsive children of the covenant as the scripture promised. Jesus is the seed who blesses the seed.

12 tn Or "families." The Greek word πατριά (patria) can indicate persons of succeeding generations who are related by birth ("lineage," "family") but it can also indicate a relatively large unit of people who make up a sociopolitical group and who share a presumed biological descent. In many contexts πατριά is very similar to ἔθνος (ethnos) and λαός (laos). In light of the context of the OT quotation, it is better to translate πατριά as "nations" here.

13 sn A quotation from Gen 22:18.

14 tn Grk "God raising up his servant, sent him." The participle ἀναστήσας (anastēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Some translations (e.g., NIV, NRSV) render this participle as temporal ("when God raised up his servant").

15 sn The picture of turning is again seen as the appropriate response to the message. See v. 19 above. In v. 19 it was "turning to," here it is "turning away from." The direction of the two metaphors is important.

16 tn For the translation of plural πονηρία (ponēria) as "iniquities," see G. Harder, TDNT 6:565. The plural is important, since for Luke turning to Jesus means turning away from sins, not just the sin of rejecting Jesus.

17 tn Grk "While they"; the referents (Peter and John) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn Or "captain."

19 tn Grk "the official of the temple," a title for the commander of the Jewish soldiers guarding the temple (thus the translation, "the commander of the temple guard"). See L&N 37.91.

sn The commander of the temple guard was the title of the officer commanding the Jewish soldiers responsible for guarding and keeping order in the temple courts in Jerusalem.

20 sn The *Sadducee*s controlled the official political structures of Judaism at this time, being the majority members of the Sanhedrin. They were known as extremely strict on law and order issues (Josephus, J. W. 2.8.2 [2.119], 2.8.14 [2.164-166]; Ant. 13.5.9 [13.171-173], 13.10.6 [13.293-298], 18.1.2 [18.11], 18.1.4 [18.16-17], 20.9.1 [20.199]; Life 2 [10-11]). See also Matt 3:7; 16:1-12; 22:23-34; Mark 12:18-27; Luke 20:27-38; Acts 5:17; 23:6-8.

21 tn Or "approached." This verb often denotes a sudden appearing (BDAG 418 s.v. ἐφίστημι 1).

22 tn Or "greatly annoyed," "provoked."

23 tn Or "proclaiming."

24 tn Grk "And" Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the logical sequence of events.

25 tn Or "they arrested"; Grk "they laid hands on."

26 tn Or "prison," "custody."

27 tn Or "had heard."

28 tn Or "word."

29 tn In the historical setting it is likely that only men are referred to here. The Greek term ἀνήρ (anēr) usually refers to males or husbands rather than people in general. Thus to translate "of the people" would give a false impression of the number, since any women and children were apparently not included in the count.

4:5 On the next day,[1] their rulers, elders, and experts in the law[2] came together[3] in Jerusalem.[4] 4:6 Annas the high priest was there, and Caiaphas, John, Alexander, and others who were members of the high priest's family.[5] 4:7 After[6] making Peter and John[7] stand in their midst, they began to inquire, "By what power or by what name[8] did you do this?" 4:8 Then Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit,[9] replied,[10] "Rulers of the people and elders,[11] 4:9 if[12] we are being examined[13] today for a good deed[14] done to a sick man – by what means this man was healed[15] – 4:10 let it be known to all of you and to all the people of Israel that by the name of Jesus Christ[16] the Nazarene whom you crucified, whom God raised from the dead, this man stands before you healthy. 4:11 This Jesus[17] is the stone that was rejected by you,[18] the builders, that has become the cornerstone.[19] 4:12 And there is salvation in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given among people[20] by which we must[21] be saved."

4:13 When they saw the boldness[22] of Peter and John, and discovered[23] that they were uneducated[24] and ordinary[25] men, they were amazed and recognized these men had been with Jesus. 4:14 And because they saw the man who had been healed standing with them, they had nothing to say against this.[26] 4:15 But when they had ordered them to go outside the council,[27] they began to confer with one another, 4:16 saying, "What should we do with these men? For it is plain[28] to all who live in Jerusalem that a notable miraculous sign[29] has come about through them,[30] and we cannot deny it. 4:17 But to keep this matter from spreading any further among the people, let us warn them to speak no more[31] to anyone in this name." 4:18 And they called them in and ordered[32] them not to speak or teach at all in the name[33] of Jesus. 4:19 But Peter and

1 tn Grk "It happened that on the next day." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 tn Or "and scribes." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

sn Experts in the law would have been mostly like the Pharisees in approach. Thus various sects of Judaism were coming together against Jesus.

3 tn Or "law assembled," "law met together."

4 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

5 sn The high priest's family. This family controlled the high priesthood as far back as A.D. 6. Annas, Caiaphas, and Alexander were all high priests at one time (though Alexander held that office after this event).

6 tn Grk "And after." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new sentence is begun in the translation at the beginning of v. 7.

7 tn Grk "making them"; the referents (Peter and John) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 sn By what name. The issue of the "name" comes up again here. This question, meaning "by whose authority," surfaces an old dispute (see Luke 20:1-8). Who speaks for God about the ancient faith?

9 sn Filled with the Holy Spirit. The narrator's remark about the Holy Spirit indicates that Peter speaks as directed by God and for God. This fulfills Luke 12:11-12 (1 Pet 3:15).

10 tn Grk "Spirit, said to them."

11 tc The Western and Byzantine texts, as well as one or two Alexandrian witnesses, read τοῦ Ἰσραήλ (tou Israēl, "of Israel") after πρεσβύτεροι (presbuteroi, "elders"; so D E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 it), while most of the better witnesses, chiefly Alexandrian (𝔓74 ℵ A B 0165 1175 vg sa bo), lack this modifier. The longer reading was most likely added by scribes to give literary balance to the addressees in that "Rulers" already had an adjunct while "elders" was left absolute.

12 tn This clause is a first class condition. It assumes for the sake of argument that this is what they were being questioned about.

13 tn Or "questioned." The Greek term ἀνακρίνω (anakrinō) points to an examination similar to a legal one.

14 tn Or "for an act of kindness."

15 tn Or "delivered" (σέσωται [sesōtai], from σώζω [sōzō]). See 4:12.

16 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

17 tn Grk "This one"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn The word "you" is inserted into the quotation because Peter is making a direct application of Ps 118:22 to his hearers. Because it is not in the OT, it has been left as normal type (rather than bold italic). The remarks are like Acts 2:22-24 and 3:12-15.

19 sn A quotation from Ps 118:22 which combines the theme of rejection with the theme of God's vindication/exaltation.

20 tn Here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) has been translated as a generic noun ("people").

21 sn Must be saved. The term used here (δεῖ, dei, "it is necessary") reflects the necessity set up by God's directive plan.

22 tn Or "courage."

23 tn Or "and found out."

24 sn Uneducated does not mean "illiterate," that is, unable to read or write. Among Jews in NT times there was almost universal literacy, especially as the result of widespread synagogue schools. The term refers to the fact that Peter and John had no formal rabbinic training and thus, in the view of their accusers, were not qualified to expound the law or teach publicly. The objection is like Acts 2:7.

25 tn For the translation of ἰδιῶται (idiōtai) as "ordinary men" see L&N 27.26.

26 tn Or "nothing to say in opposition."

27 tn Or "the Sanhedrin" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

28 tn Or "evident."

29 tn Here σημεῖον (sēmeion) has been translated as "miraculous sign" rather than simply "sign" or "miracle" since both components appear to be present in the context. It is clear that the healing of the lame man was a miracle, but for the Sanhedrin it was the value of the miraculous healing as a sign that concerned them because it gave attestation to the message of Peter and John. The sign "speaks" as Peter claimed in 3:11-16.

30 tn Or "has been done by them."

31 tn Or "speak no longer."

32 tn Or "commanded."

33 sn In the name of Jesus. Once again, the "name" reflects the person. The person of Jesus and his authority is the "troubling" topic that, as far as the Jewish leadership is concerned, needs controlling.

John replied,[1] "Whether it is right before God to obey[2] you rather than God, you decide, 4:20 for it is impossible[3] for us not to speak about what we have seen and heard." 4:21 After threatening them further, they released them, for they could not find how to punish them on account of the people, because they were all praising[4] God for what had happened. 4:22 For the man, on whom this miraculous sign[5] of healing had been performed,[6] was over forty years old.

The Followers of Jesus Pray for Boldness

4:23 When they were released, Peter and John[7] went to their fellow believers[8] and reported everything the high priests and the elders had said to them. 4:24 When they heard this, they raised their voices to God with one mind[9] and said, "Master of all,[10] you who made the heaven, the earth,[11] the sea, and everything that is in them, 4:25 who said by the Holy Spirit through[12] your servant David our forefather,[13]

> 'Why do the nations[14] rage,[15]
> and the peoples plot foolish[16] things?
> 4:26 The kings of the earth stood together,[17] > and the rulers assembled together, > against the Lord and against his[18]
> Christ.'[19]

4:27 "For indeed both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, assembled together in this city against[20] your holy servant Jesus, whom you anointed,[21] 4:28 to do as much as your power[22] and your plan[23] had decided beforehand[24] would happen. 4:29 And now, Lord, pay attention to[25] their threats, and grant[26] to your servants[27] to speak your message[28] with great courage,[29] 4:30 while you extend your hand to heal, and to bring about miraculous signs[30] and wonders through the name of your holy servant Jesus." 4:31 When[31] they had prayed, the place where they were assembled together was shaken,[32] and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak[33] the word of God[34] courageously.[35]

Conditions Among the Early Believers

4:32 The group of those who believed were of one heart and mind,[36] and no one said that any of his possessions was his own, but everything

---

1 tn Grk "answered and said to them."

2 tn Grk "hear," but the idea of "hear and obey" or simply "obey" is frequently contained in the Greek verb ἀκούω (akouō; see L&N 36.14).

3 tn Grk "for we are not able not to speak about what we have seen and heard," but the double negative, which cancels out in English, is emphatic in Greek. The force is captured somewhat by the English translation "it is impossible for us not to speak..." although this is slightly awkward.

4 tn Or "glorifying."

5 tn Here σημεῖον (sēmeion) has been translated as "miraculous sign" rather than simply "sign" or "miracle" since both components appear to be present in the context. See also the note on this word in v. 16.

6 tn Or "had been done."

7 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Peter and John) have been specified in the translation for clarity, since a new topic begins in v. 23 and the last specific reference to Peter and John in the Greek text is in 4:19.

8 tn Grk "to their own [people]." In context this phrase is most likely a reference to other believers rather than simply their own families and/or homes, since the group appears to act with one accord in the prayer that follows in v. 24. At the literary level, this phrase suggests how Jews were now splitting into two camps, pro-Jesus and anti-Jesus.

9 sn With one mind. Compare Acts 1:14.

10 tn Or "Lord of all."

sn The use of the title Master of all (δεσπότης, despotēs) emphasizes that there is a sovereign God who is directing what is taking place.

11 tn Grk "and the earth, and the sea," but καί (kai) has not been translated before "the earth" and "the sea" since contemporary English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

12 tn Grk "by the mouth of" (an idiom).

13 tn Or "ancestor"; Grk "father."

14 tn Or "Gentiles."

15 sn The Greek word translated rage includes not only anger but opposition, both verbal and nonverbal. See L&N 88.185.

16 tn Or "futile"; traditionally, "vain."

17 tn Traditionally, "The kings of the earth took their stand."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

19 sn A quotation from Ps 2:1-2.

20 sn The application of Ps 2:1-2 is that Jews and Gentiles are opposing Jesus. The surprise of the application is that Jews are now found among the enemies of God's plan.

21 sn A wordplay on "Christ," v. 26, which means "one who has been anointed."

22 tn Grk "hand," here a metaphor for God's strength or power or authority.

23 tn Or "purpose," "will."

24 tn Or "had predestined." Since the term "predestine" is something of a technical theological term, not in wide usage in contemporary English, the translation "decide beforehand" was used instead (see L&N 30.84). God's direction remains as the major theme.

25 tn Or "Lord, take notice of."

26 sn Grant to your servants to speak your message with great courage. The request is not for a stop to persecution or revenge on the opponents, but for boldness (great courage) to carry out the mission of proclaiming the message of what God is doing through Jesus.

27 tn Grk "slaves." See the note on the word "servants" in 2:18.

28 tn Grk "word."

29 tn Or "with all boldness."

30 tn The miraculous nature of these signs is implied in the context.

31 tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

32 sn The place where they were assembled...was shaken. This signifies that God is in their midst. See Acts 16:26; Exod 19:18; Ps 114:7; Isa 6:4.

33 tn The imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive imperfect ("began to speak"). Logical sequencing suggests that their speaking began after they were filled with the Spirit. The prayer was answered immediately.

34 tn Or "speak God's message."

35 tn Or "with boldness."

36 tn Grk "soul."

was held in common.[1] 4:33 With[2] great power the apostles were giving testimony[3] to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was on them all. 4:34 For there was no one needy[4] among them, because those who were owners of land or houses were selling[5] them[6] and bringing the proceeds from the sales 4:35 and placing them at the apostles' feet. The proceeds[7] were distributed to each, as anyone had need. 4:36 So Joseph, a Levite who was a native of Cyprus, called by the apostles Barnabas (which is translated "son of encouragement"),[8] 4:37 sold[9] a field[10] that belonged to him and brought the money[11] and placed it at the apostles' feet.

The Judgment on Ananias and Sapphira

5:1 Now a man named Ananias, together with Sapphira his wife, sold a piece of property. 5:2 He[12] kept back for himself part of the proceeds with his wife's knowledge; he brought[13] only part of it and placed it at the apostles' feet. 5:3 But Peter said, "Ananias, why has Satan filled[14] your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit and keep back for yourself part of the proceeds from the sale of[15] the land? 5:4 Before it was sold,[16] did it not[17] belong to you? And when it was sold, was the money[18] not at your disposal? How have you thought up this deed in your heart?[19] You have not lied to people[20] but to God!"

5:5 When Ananias heard these words he collapsed and died, and great fear gripped[21] all who heard about it. 5:6 So the young men came,[22] wrapped him up,[23] carried him out, and buried[24] him. 5:7 After an interval of about three hours,[25] his wife came in, but she did not know[26] what had happened. 5:8 Peter said to her, "Tell me, were the two of you[27] paid this amount[28] for the land?" Sapphira[29] said, "Yes, that much." 5:9 Peter then told her, "Why have you agreed together to test the Spirit of the Lord? Look! The feet of those who have buried your husband are at the door, and they will carry you out!" 5:10 At once[30] she collapsed at his feet and died. So sn Everything was held in common. The remark is not a reflection of political philosophy, but of the extent of their spontaneous commitment to one another. Such a response does not have the function of a command, but is reflective of an attitude that Luke commends as evidence of their identification with one another.

2 tn Grk "And with." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

3 tn Or "were witnessing."

4 tn Or "poor."

5 tn Grk "houses, selling them were bringing." The participle πωλοῦντες (pōlountes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

6 tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

7 tn Grk "It" (or "They," plural). The referent of the understood pronoun subject, the proceeds from the sales, of the verb διεδίδετο (diedideto) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Note how the actions of Barnabas are in keeping with the meaning of his nickname. He stands in contrast to Ananias and Sapphira in 5:1-11.

9 tn Grk "selling a field that belonged to him, brought" The participle πωλήσας (pōlēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

10 tn Or "a farm."

11 tn Normally a reference to actual coins ("currency"). See L&N 6.68.

12 tn Grk "And he." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

13 tn The participle ἐνέγκας (enenkas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

14 sn This is a good example of the Greek verb fill (πληρόω, plēroō) meaning "to exercise control over someone's thought and action" (cf. Eph 5:18).

15 tn The words "from the sale of" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to clarify the meaning, since the phrase "proceeds from the land" could possibly be understood as crops rather than money from the sale.

16 tn Grk "Remaining to you."

17 tn The negative interrogative particle οὐχί (ouchi) expects a positive reply to this question and the following one ("And when it was sold, was it not at your disposal?").

18 tn Grk "it"; the referent of the pronoun (the money generated from the sale of the land) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "How is it that you have [or Why have you] placed this deed in your heart?" Both of these literal translations differ from the normal way of expressing the thought in English.

20 tn Grk "to men." If Peter's remark refers only to the apostles, the translation "to men" would be appropriate. But if (as is likely) the action was taken to impress the entire congregation (who would presumably have witnessed the donation or been aware of it) then the more general "to people" is more appropriate, since the audience would have included both men and women.

21 tn Or "fear came on," "fear seized"; Grk "fear happened to."

22 tn Or "arose."

23 tn The translation "wrapped up" for συνέστειλαν (sunesteilan) is suggested by L&N 79.119, but another interpretation is possible. The same verb could also be translated "removed" (see L&N 15.200), although that sense appears somewhat redundant and out of sequence with the following verb and participle ("carried him out and buried him").

24 sn Buried. Same day burial was a custom in the Jewish world of the first century (cf. also Deut 21:23).

25 tn Grk "It happened that after an interval of about three hours." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

26 tn Grk "came in, not knowing." The participle has been translated with concessive or adversative force: "although she did not know." In English, the adversative conjunction ("but") conveys this nuance more smoothly.

27 tn The words "the two of" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to indicate that the verb (ἀπέδοσθε, apedosthe) is plural and thus refers to both Ananias and Sapphira.

28 tn Grk "so much," "as much as this."

29 tn Grk "She"; the referent (Sapphira) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

30 tn Grk "And at once." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

when the young men came in, they found her dead, and they carried her out and buried her beside her husband. 5:11 Great[1] fear gripped[2] the whole church[3] and all who heard about these things.

The Apostles Perform Miraculous Signs and Wonders

5:12 Now many miraculous signs[4] and wonders came about among the people through the hands of the apostles. By[5] common consent[6] they were all meeting together in Solomon's Portico.[7] 5:13 None of the rest dared to join them,[8] but the people held them in high honor.[9] 5:14 More and more believers in the Lord were added to their number,[10] crowds of both men and women. 5:15 Thus[11] they even carried the sick out into the streets, and put them on cots and pallets, so that when Peter came by at least his shadow would fall on some of them. 5:16 A crowd of people from the towns around Jerusalem[12] also came together, bringing the sick and those troubled by unclean spirits.[13] They[14] were all[15] being healed.

Further Trouble for the Apostles

5:17 Now the high priest rose up, and all those with him (that is, the religious party of the Sadducees[16]),[17] and they were filled with jealousy.[18] 5:18 They[19] laid hands on[20] the apostles and put them in a public jail. 5:19 But during the night an angel of the Lord[21] opened[22] the doors of the prison,[23] led them out,[24] and said, 5:20 "Go and stand in the temple courts[25] and proclaim[26] to the people all the words of this life." 5:21 When they heard this, they entered the temple courts[27] at daybreak and began teaching.[28]

Now when the high priest and those who were with him arrived, they summoned the Sanhedrin[29] – that is, the whole high council[30] of the Israelites[31] – and sent to the jail to have the apostles[32] brought before them.[33] 5:22 But the

1 tn Grk "And great." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

2 tn Or "fear came on," "fear seized"; Grk "fear happened to."

3 sn This is the first occurrence of the term church (ἐκκλησία, ekklēsia) in Acts. It refers to an assembly of people.

4 tn The miraculous nature of these signs is implied in the context.

5 tn Grk "And by." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

6 tn Or "With one mind."

7 tn Or "colonnade"; Grk "stoa."

sn Solomon's Portico was a covered walkway formed by rows of columns supporting a roof and open on the inner side facing the center of the temple complex. Located beside the Court of the Gentiles, it was a very public area.

8 tn Or "to associate with them." The group was beginning to have a controversial separate identity. People were cautious about joining them. The next verse suggests that the phrase "none of the rest" in this verse is rhetorical hyperbole.

9 tn Or "the people thought very highly of them."

10 tn Or "More and more believers were added to the Lord."

11 tn This is a continuation of the preceding sentence in Greek, but because this would produce an awkward sentence in English, a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

12 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

13 sn Unclean spirits refers to evil spirits.

14 tn Literally a relative pronoun, "who." In English, however, a relative clause ("bringing the sick and those troubled by unclean spirits, who were all being healed") could be understood to refer only to the second group (meaning only those troubled by unclean spirits were being healed) or even that the unclean spirits were being healed. To avoid this ambiguity the pronoun "they" was used to begin a new English sentence.

15 sn They were all being healed. Note how the healings that the apostles provided were comprehensive in their consistency.

16 sn See the note on Sadducees in 4:1.

17 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

18 sn Filled with jealousy. In Acts, the term "jealousy" (ζήλος, zēlos) occurs only here and in Acts 13:45. It is a key term in Judaism for religiously motivated rage (1 Macc 2:24; 1QH 14:13-15; m. Sanhedrin 9:5). It was a zeal motivated by a desire to maintain the purity of the faith.

19 tn Grk "jealousy, and they." In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence, but a new sentence has been started here in the translation for stylistic reasons.

20 tn Or "they arrested."

21 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." Linguistically, "angel of the Lord" is the same in both testaments (and thus, he is either "an angel of the Lord" or "the angel of the Lord" in both testaments). For arguments and implications, see ExSyn 252; M. J. Davidson, "Angels," DJG, 9; W. G. MacDonald argues for "an angel" in both testaments: "Christology and 'The Angel of the Lord'," Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation, 324-35.

22 tn Grk "opening the doors of the prison." The participle ἀνοίξας (anoixas) has been translated as a finite verb due to the requirements of contemporary English style.

23 tn Greek φυλακῆς (phulakēs), a different word from the one in v. 18 (τήρησις, tērēsis, "jail").

24 tn Or "brought them out." Grk "and leading them out, said." The participle ἐξαγαγών (exagagōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

sn Led them out. The action by God served to vindicate the apostles. It showed that whatever court the Jewish leaders represented, they did not represent God.

25 tn Grk "the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

26 tn Or "speak."

27 tn Grk "the temple." See the note on the same phrase in the preceding verse.

28 tn The imperfect verb ἐδίδασκον (edidaskon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

29 tn Or "the council" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

30 tn A hendiadys (two different terms referring to a single thing) is likely here (a reference to a single legislative body rather than two separate ones) because the term γερουσίαν (gerousian) is used in both 1 Macc 12:6 and Josephus, Ant. 13.5.8 (13.166) to refer to the Sanhedrin.

31 tn Grk "sons of Israel."

32 tn Grk "have them"; the referent (the apostles) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn The words "before them" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

officers[1] who came for them[2] did not find them in the prison, so they returned and reported,[3] 5:23 "We found the jail locked securely and the guards standing at the doors, but when we opened them,[4] we found no one inside." 5:24 Now when the commander[5] of the temple guard[6] and the chief priests heard this report,[7] they were greatly puzzled concerning it,[8] wondering what this could[9] be. 5:25 But someone came and reported to them, "Look! The men you put in prison are standing in the temple courts[10] and teaching[11] the people!" 5:26 Then the commander[12] of the temple guard[13] went with the officers[14] and brought the apostles[15] without the use of force[16] (for they were afraid of being stoned by the people).[17]

5:27 When they had brought them, they stood them before the council,[18] and the high priest questioned[19] them, 5:28 saying, "We gave[20] you strict orders[21] not to teach in this name.[22] Look,[23] you have filled Jerusalem[24] with your teaching, and you intend to bring this man's blood[25] on us!" 5:29 But Peter and the apostles replied,[26] "We must obey[27] God rather than people.[28] 5:30 The God of our forefathers[29] raised up Jesus, whom you seized and killed by hanging him on a tree.[30] 5:31 God exalted him[31] to his right hand as Leader[32] and Savior, to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins.[33] 5:32 And we are witnesses of these events,[34] and so is the Holy Spirit whom God has given to those who obey[35] him."

5:33 Now when they heard this, they became furious[36] and wanted to execute them.[37]

1 tn The Greek term ὑπηρέτης (hupēretēs) generally means "servant," but in the NT is used for many different types of servants, like attendants to a king, the officers of the Sanhedrin (as here), assistants to magistrates, and (especially in the Gospel of John) Jewish guards in the Jerusalem temple (see L&N 35.20).

2 tn The words "for them" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

3 tn Grk "reported, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

4 tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

5 tn Or "captain."

6 tn Grk "the official of the temple," a title for the commander of the Jewish soldiers guarding the temple (thus the translation, "the commander of the temple guard"). See L&N 37.91.

7 tn Grk "heard these words."

8 tn Grk "concerning them," agreeing with the plural antecedent "these words." Since the phrase "these words" was translated as the singular "this report," the singular "concerning it" is used here.

9 tn The optative verb here expresses confused uncertainty.

10 tn Grk "the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

11 sn Obeying God (see v. 29), the apostles were teaching again (4:18-20; 5:20). They did so despite the risk.

12 tn Or "captain."

13 tn Grk "the official [of the temple]," a title for the commander of the Jewish soldiers guarding the temple (thus the translation, "the commander of the temple guard"). See L&N 37.91.

14 tn The Greek term ὑπηρέτης (hupēretēs) generally means "servant," but in the NT is used for many different types of servants. See the note on the word "officers" in v. 22.

15 tn Grk "brought them"; the referent (the apostles) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Or "without violence." It is clear, as well, that the apostles did not resist arrest.

17 tn Grk "for they feared lest they be stoned by the people." The translation uses a less awkward English equivalent. This is an explanatory note by the author.

18 tn Or "the Sanhedrin" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

19 tn Or "interrogated," "asked."

20 tc ‡ The majority of MSS, including a few important witnesses (𝔑² D E [Ψ] 1739 𝔐 sy sa), have the negative particle οὐ (ou) here, effectively turning the high priest's words into a question: "Did we not give you strict orders not to teach in this name?" But the earliest and most important MSS, along with some others (𝔓⁷⁴ 𝔑* A B 1175 lat bo), lack the particle, making this a strong statement rather than a question. Scribes may have been tempted to omit the particle to strengthen the contrast between official Judaism and the new faith, but the fact that v. 27 introduces the quotation with ἐπηρώτησεν (epērōtēsen, "he questioned") may well have prompted scribes to add οὐ to convert the rebuke into a question. Further, that excellent witnesses affirm the shorter reading is sufficient ground for accepting it as most probably authentic. NA²⁷ includes the particle in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

21 tn Grk "We commanded you with a commandment" (a Semitic idiom that is emphatic).

22 sn The name (i.e., person) of Jesus is the constant issue of debate.

23 tn Grk "And behold." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

24 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

25 sn To bring this man's blood on us is an idiom meaning "you intend to make us guilty of this man's death."

26 tn Grk "apostles answered and said."

27 sn Obey. See 4:19. This response has Jewish roots (Dan 3:16-18; 2 Macc 7:2; Josephus, Ant. 17.6.3 [17.159].

28 tn Here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) has been translated as a generic noun ("people").

29 tn Or "ancestors"; Grk "fathers."

30 tn Or "by crucifying him" ("hang on a tree" is by the time of the first century an idiom for crucifixion). The allusion is to the judgment against Jesus as a rebellious figure, appealing to the language of Deut 21:23. The Jewish leadership has badly "misjudged" Jesus.

31 tn Grk "This one God exalted" (emphatic).

32 tn Or "Founder" (of a movement).

33 tn Or "to give repentance and forgiveness of sins to Israel."

34 tn Or "things." They are preaching these things even to the hostile leadership.

35 sn Those who obey. The implication, of course, is that the leadership is disobeying God.

36 sn The only other use of this verb for anger (furious) is Acts 7:54 after Stephen's speech.

37 sn Wanted to execute them. The charge would surely be capital insubordination (Exod 22:28).

5:34 But a Pharisee[1] whose name was Gamaliel,[2] a teacher of the law who was respected by all the people, stood up[3] in the council[4] and ordered the men to be put outside for a short time. 5:35 Then he said to the council,[5] "Men of Israel,[6] pay close attention to[7] what you are about to do to these men. 5:36 For some time ago[8] Theudas rose up, claiming to be somebody, and about four hundred men joined him. He[9] was killed, and all who followed him were dispersed and nothing came of it.[10] 5:37 After him Judas the Galilean arose in the days of the census,[11] and incited people to follow him in revolt.[12] He too was killed, and all who followed him were scattered. 5:38 So in this case I say to you, stay away from these men and leave them alone, because if this plan or this undertaking originates with people,[13] it will come to nothing,[14] 5:39 but if[15] it is from God, you will not be able to stop them, or you may even be found[16] fighting against God." He convinced them,[17] 5:40 and they summoned the apostles and had them beaten.[18] Then[19] they ordered them not to speak in the name of Jesus and released them. 5:41 So they left the council rejoicing because they had been considered worthy[20] to suffer dishonor for the sake of the name.[21] 5:42 And every day both in the temple courts[22] and from house to house, they did not stop teaching and proclaiming the good news[23] that Jesus was the Christ.[24]

The Appointment of the First Seven Deacons

6:1 Now in those[25] days, when the disciples were growing in number,[26] a complaint arose on the part of the Greek-speaking Jews[27] against the native Hebraic Jews,[28] because their widows[29] were being overlooked[30] in the daily distribution

1 sn A Pharisee was a member of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

2 sn Gamaliel was a famous Jewish scholar and teacher mentioned here in v. 34 and in Acts 22:3. He had a grandson of the same name and is referred to as "Gamaliel the Elder" to avoid confusion. He is quoted a number of times in the Mishnah, was given the highest possible title for Jewish teachers, Rabba (cf. John 20:16), and was highly regarded in later rabbinic tradition.

3 tn Grk "standing up in the council, ordered." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

4 tn Or "the Sanhedrin" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

5 tn Grk "said to them"; the referent (the council) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Or "Israelite men," although this is less natural English. The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, it is highly unlikely that this is a generic usage, since Gamaliel was addressing the Sanhedrin, the Jewish high council, which would have been exclusively male.

7 tn Or "men, be careful."

8 tn Grk "For before these days."

9 tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "he," and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point.

10 tn Grk "and they came to nothing." Gamaliel's argument is that these two insurrectionists were taken care of by natural events.

11 tn Or "registration."

12 tn The verb ἀφίστημι (aphistēmi) as a transitive means "cause to revolt" as used in Josephus, Ant. 8.7.5 (8.198), 20.5.2 (20.102); see BDAG 157 s.v. 1.

13 tn Here ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) has been translated as a generic noun ("people").

14 tn Or "it will be put to an end."

15 tn This is expressed in a first class condition, in contrast to the condition in v. 38b, which is third class. As such, v. 39 is rhetorically presented as the more likely option.

16 tn According to L&N 39.32, the verb εὑρεθῆτε (heurethēte, an aorist passive subjunctive) may also be translated "find yourselves" – "lest you find yourselves fighting against God." The Jewish leader Gamaliel is shown contemplating the other possible alternative about what is occurring.

17 tn Grk "They were convinced by him." This passive construction was converted to an active one ("He convinced them") in keeping with contemporary English style. The phrase "He convinced them" is traditionally placed in Acts 5:40 by most English translations; the standard Greek critical text (represented by NA[27] and UBS[4]) places it at the end of v. 39.

18 sn Had them beaten. The punishment was the "forty lashes minus one," see also Acts 22:19; 2 Cor 11:24; Mark 13:9. The apostles had disobeyed the religious authorities and took their punishment for their "disobedience" (Deut 25:2-3; m. Makkot 3:10-14). In Acts 4:18 they were warned. Now they are beaten. The hostility is rising as the narrative unfolds.

19 tn The word "Then" is supplied as the beginning of a new sentence in the translation. The construction in Greek has so many clauses (most of them made up of participles) that a continuous English sentence would be very awkward.

20 sn That is, considered worthy by God. They "gloried in their shame" of honoring Jesus with their testimony (Luke 6:22-23; 2 Macc 6:30).

21 sn The name refers to the name of Jesus (cf. 3 John 7).

22 tn Grk "temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper and has been translated accordingly.

23 tn Grk "teaching and evangelizing." They were still obeying God, not men (see 4:18-20; 5:29).

24 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

25 tn Grk "these." The translation uses "those" for stylistic reasons.

26 tn Grk "were multiplying."

27 tn Grk "the Hellenists," but this descriptive term is largely unknown to the modern English reader. The translation "Greek-speaking Jews" attempts to convey something of who these were, but it was more than a matter of language spoken; it involved a degree of adoption of Greek culture as well.

sn The Greek-speaking Jews were the Hellenists, Jews who to a greater or lesser extent had adopted Greek thought, customs, and lifestyle, as well as the Greek language. The city of Alexandria in Egypt was a focal point for them, but they were scattered throughout the Roman Empire.

28 tn Grk "against the Hebrews," but as with "Hellenists" this needs further explanation for the modern reader.

29 sn The care of widows is a major biblical theme: Deut 10:18; 16:11, 14; 24:17, 19-21; 26:12-13; 27:19; Isa 1:17-23; Jer 7:6; Mal 3:5.

30 tn Or "neglected."

of food.[1] 6:2 So the twelve[2] called[3] the whole group[4] of the disciples together and said, "It is not right for us to neglect the word of God to wait on tables.[5] 6:3 But carefully select from among you, brothers,[6] seven[7] men who are well-attested,[8] full of the Spirit and of wisdom, whom we may put in charge[9] of this necessary task.[10] 6:4 But we will devote ourselves to prayer and to the ministry of the word." 6:5 The[11] proposal pleased the entire group, so[12] they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, with[13] Philip,[14] Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas, a Gentile convert to Judaism[15] from Antioch.[16] 6:6 They stood these men before the apostles, who prayed[17] and placed[18] their hands on them. 6:7 The word of God continued to spread,[19] the number of disciples in Jerusalem[20] increased greatly, and a large group[21] of priests became obedient to the faith.

Stephen is Arrested

6:8 Now Stephen, full of grace and power, was performing great wonders and miraculous signs[22] among the people. 6:9 But some men from the Synagogue[23] of the Freedmen (as it was called),[24] both Cyrenians and Alexandrians, as well as some from Cilicia and the province of Asia,[25] stood up and argued with Stephen. 6:10 Yet[26] they were not able to resist[27] the wisdom and the Spirit with which he spoke. 6:11 Then they secretly instigated[28] some men to say, "We have heard this man[29] speaking blasphemous words against Moses and God." 6:12 They incited the people, the[30] elders, and the experts in the law;[31] then they approached Stephen,[32] seized him, and brought him before the council.[33] 6:13 They brought forward false witnesses who said, "This man does not stop saying things sn The daily distribution of food. The early church saw it as a responsibility to meet the basic needs of people in their group.

[2] sn The twelve refers to the twelve apostles.

[3] tn Grk "calling the whole group...together, said." The participle προσκαλεσάμενοι (proskalesamenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[4] tn Or "the multitude."

[5] tn Grk "to serve tables."

[6] tn It is not clear from a historical standpoint (but it is unlikely) that women would have been involved in the selection process too. For this reason the translation "brothers" has been retained, rather than "brothers and sisters" (used in contexts where both male and female believers are clearly addressed).

[7] sn Seven. Jewish town councils often had seven members (Josephus, Ant. 4.18.14 [4.214]).

[8] tn Or "are of good reputation" (BDAG 618 s.v. μαρτυρέω 2.b).

[10] tn Grk "of this need"; translated "necessary work" or "needed task" by L&N 42.22.

[11] tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[12] tn The translation "so" has been used to indicate the logical sequence in English.

[13] tn "With" is smoother English style for an addition like this. Because of differences between Greek and English style, καί (kai), which occurs between each name in the list, has not been translated except preceding the last element.

[14] sn Philip. Note how many of the names in this list are Greek. This suggests that Hellenists were chosen to solve the problem they had been so sensitive about fixing (cf. 6:1).

[15] tn Or "a proselyte."

[16] map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

[17] tn Literally this is a participle in the Greek text (προσευξάμενοι, proseuxamenoi). It could be translated as a finite verb ("and they prayed and placed their hands on them") but much smoother English results if the entire coordinate clause is converted to a relative clause that refers back to the apostles.

sn Who prayed. The prayer indicates their acceptance and commissioning for ministry (cf. Deut 34:9).

[18] tn Or "laid."

[19] tn Grk "kept on spreading"; the verb has been translated as a progressive imperfect.

[20] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[21] tn Grk "a great multitude."

sn A large group. Many Jews, even some religious leaders, were responding.

[22] tn The miraculous nature of these signs is implied in the context. Here the work of miracles extends beyond the Twelve for the first time.

[23] sn A s*ynagogue* was a place for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (cf. Luke 8:41). Though the origin of the synagogue is not entirely clear, it seems to have arisen in the postexilic community during the intertestamental period. A town could establish a synagogue if there were at least ten men. In normative Judaism of the NT period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present (see the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2).

[24] tn Grk "the so-called Synagogue of the Freedmen." The translation of the participle λεγομένης (legomenēs) by the phrase "as it was called" is given by L&N 87.86. "Freedmen" would be slaves who had gained their freedom, or the descendants of such people (BDAG 594-95 s.v. Λιβερτῖνος).

[26] tn Grk "and." The context, however, indicates that the conjunction carries an adversative force.

[27] sn They were not able to resist. This represents another fulfillment of Luke 12:11-12; 21:15.

[28] tn Another translation would be "they suborned" (but this term is not in common usage). "Instigate (secretly), suborn" is given by BDAG 1036 s.v. ὑποβάλλω.

[29] tn Grk "heard him," but since this is direct discourse, it is more natural (and clearer) to specify the referent (Stephen) as "this man."

[30] tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[31] tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 4:5.

[32] tn Grk "approaching, they seized him"; the referent (Stephen) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[33] tn Or "the Sanhedrin" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews). Stephen suffers just as Peter and John did.

against this holy place[1] and the law.[2] 6:14 For we have heard him saying that Jesus the Nazarene will destroy this place and change the customs[3] that Moses handed down to us." 6:15 All[4] who were sitting in the council[5] looked intently at Stephen[6] and saw his face was like the face of an angel.[7]

Stephen's Defense Before the Council

7:1 Then the high priest said, "Are these things true?"[8] 7:2 So he replied,[9] "Brothers and fathers, listen to me. The God of glory appeared to our forefather[10] Abraham when he was in Mesopotamia, before he settled in Haran, 7:3 and said to him, 'Go out from your country and from your relatives, and come to the land I will show you.'[11] 7:4 Then he went out from the country of the Chaldeans and settled in Haran. After his father died, God[12] made him move[13] to this country where you now live. 7:5 He[14] did not give any of it to him for an inheritance,[15] not even a foot of ground,[16] yet God[17] promised to give it to him as his possession, and to his descendants after him,[18] even though Abraham[19] as yet had no child. 7:6 But God spoke as follows: 'Your[20] descendants will be foreigners[21] in a foreign country, whose citizens will enslave them and mistreat them for four hundred years.[22] 7:7 But I will punish[23] the nation they serve as slaves,' said God, 'and after these things they will come out of there[24] and worship[25] me in this place.'[26] 7:8 Then God[27] gave Abraham[28] the covenant[29] of circumcision, and so he became the father of Isaac and circumcised him when he was eight days old,[30] and Isaac became the father of[31] Jacob, and Jacob of the twelve patriarchs.[32] 7:9 The[33] patriarchs, because they were jealous of Joseph, sold[34] him into

1 sn This holy place is a reference to the temple.

2 sn The law refers to the law of Moses. It elaborates the nature of the blasphemy in v. 11. To speak against God's law in Torah was to blaspheme God (Deut 28:15-19). On the Jewish view of false witnesses, see Exod 19:16-18; 20:16; m. Sanhedrin 3.6; 5.1-5. Stephen's speech in Acts 7 may indicate why the temple was mentioned.

3 tn Or "practices."

sn Will destroy this place and change the customs. Stephen appears to view the temple as a less central place in light of Christ's work, an important challenge to Jewish religion, since it was at this time a temple-centered state and religion. Unlike Acts 3-4, the issue here is more than Jesus and his resurrection. Now the impact of his resurrection and the temple's centrality has also become an issue. The "falseness" of the charge may not be that the witnesses were lying, but that they falsely read the truth of Stephen's remarks.

4 tn Grk "And all." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kaí) has not been translated here.

5 tn Or "Sanhedrin" (the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

6 tn Grk "at him"; the referent (Stephen) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 sn His face was like the face of an angel. This narrative description of Stephen's face adds to the mood of the passage. He had the appearance of a supernatural, heavenly messenger.

8 tn Grk "If it is so concerning these things" (see BDAG 422 s.v. ἔχω 10.a for this use).

9 tn Grk "said."

10 tn Or "ancestor"; Grk "father."

11 sn A quotation from Gen 12:1.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn The translation "made him move" for the verb μετοικίζω (metoikizō) is given by L&N 85.83. The verb has the idea of "resettling" someone (BDAG 643 s.v.); see v. 43, where it reappears.

14 tn Grk "And he." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kaí) has not been translated here.

15 tn Grk "He did not give him an inheritance in it." This could be understood to mean that God did not give something else to Abraham as an inheritance while he was living there. The point of the text is that God did not give any of the land to him as an inheritance, and the translation makes this clear.

16 tn Grk "a step of a foot" (cf. Deut 2:5).

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn An allusion to Gen 12:7; 13:15; 15:2, 18; 17:8; 24:7; 48:4. On the theological importance of the promise and to his descendants after him, see Rom 4 and Gal 3.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Abraham) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "that his"; the discourse switches from indirect to direct with the following verbs. For consistency the entire quotation is treated as second person direct discourse in the translation.

21 tn Or "will be strangers," that is, one who lives as a noncitizen of a foreign country.

22 sn A quotation from Gen 15:13. Exod 12:40 specifies the sojourn as 430 years.

23 tn BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 5.b.α states, "Oft. the emphasis is unmistakably laid upon that which follows the Divine Judge's verdict, upon the condemnation or punishment: condemn, punish ...Ac 7:7 (Gen 15:14)."

24 tn The words "of there" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

sn A quotation from Gen 15:14.

25 tn Or "and serve," but with religious/cultic overtones (BDAG 587 s.v. λατρεύω).

26 sn An allusion to Exod 3:12.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Abraham) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 sn God gave...the covenant. Note how the covenant of promise came before Abraham's entry into the land and before the building of the temple.

30 tn Grk "circumcised him on the eighth day," but many modern readers will not understand that this procedure was done on the eighth day after birth. The temporal clause "when he was eight days old" conveys this idea more clearly. See Gen 17:11-12.

31 tn The words "became the father of" are not in the Greek text due to an ellipsis, but must be supplied for the English translation. The ellipsis picks up the verb from the previous clause describing how Abraham fathered Isaac.

32 sn The twelve patriarchs refers to the twelve sons of Jacob, the famous ancestors of the Jewish race (see Gen 35:23-26).

33 tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kaí) has not been translated here.

34 tn The meaning "sell" for the middle voice of ἀποδίδωμι (apodidōmi) is given by BDAG 110 s.v. 5.a. See Gen 37:12-36, esp. v. 28.

Egypt. But[1] God was with him, 7:10 and rescued him from all his troubles, and granted him favor and wisdom in the presence of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, who made[2] him ruler over Egypt and over all his household. 7:11 Then a famine occurred throughout[3] Egypt and Canaan, causing[4] great suffering, and our[5] ancestors[6] could not find food. 7:12 So when Jacob heard that there was grain[7] in Egypt, he sent our ancestors[8] there[9] the first time. 7:13 On their second visit Joseph made himself known to his brothers again, and Joseph's family[10] became known to Pharaoh. 7:14 So Joseph sent a message[11] and invited[12] his father Jacob and all his relatives to come, seventy-five people[13] in all. 7:15 So Jacob went down to Egypt and died there,[14] along with our ancestors,[15] 7:16 and their bones[16] were later moved to Shechem and placed in the tomb that Abraham had bought for a certain sum of money[17] from the sons of Hamor in Shechem.

7:17 "But as the time drew near for God to fulfill the promise he had declared to Abraham,[18] the people increased greatly in number[19] in Egypt, 7:18 until another king who did not know about[20] Joseph ruled[21] over Egypt.[22] 7:19 This was the one who exploited[23] our people[24] and was cruel to our ancestors,[25] forcing them to abandon[26] their infants so they would die.[27] 7:20 At that time Moses was born, and he was beautiful[28] to God. For[29] three months he was brought up in his father's house, 7:21 and when he had been abandoned,[30] Pharaoh's daughter adopted[31] him and brought him up[32] as her own son. 7:22 So Moses was trained[33] in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and was powerful[34] in his words and deeds. 7:23 But when he was about forty years old, it entered his mind[35] to visit his fellow countrymen[36] the Israelites.[37] 7:24 When[38] he saw one of them being hurt unfairly,[39] Moses[40] came to his defense[41] and avenged the person who was mistreated by striking down the Egyptian. 7:25 He thought his own people[42] would understand

[1] tn Though the Greek term here is καί (kai), in context this remark is clearly contrastive: Despite the malicious act, God was present and protected Joseph.

[2] tn Or "appointed." See Gen 41:41-43.

[3] tn Grk "came upon all Egypt."

[4] tn Grk "and," but logically causal.

[5] sn Our. Stephen spoke of "our" ancestors (Grk "fathers") in an inclusive sense throughout the speech until his rebuke in v. 51, where the nation does what "your" ancestors did, at which point an exclusive pronoun is used. This serves to emphasize the rebuke.

[6] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[7] tn Or possibly "food," since in a number of extrabiblical contexts the phrase σιτία καὶ ποτά (sitia kai pota) means "food and drink," where solid food is contrasted with liquid nourishment (L&N 3.42).

[8] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[9] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[10] tn BDAG 194 s.v. γένος 2. gives "family, relatives" here; another alternative is "race" (see v. 19).

[11] tn The words "a message" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[12] tn Or "Joseph had his father summoned" (BDAG 121 s.v. ἀποστέλλω 2.b).

[13] tn Grk "souls" (here an idiom for the whole person).

[14] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[15] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[16] tn "and they."

[17] sn See Gen 49:29-32.

[18] tn Grk "But as the time for the fulfillment of the promise drew near that God had declared to Abraham." The order of the clauses has been rearranged to improve English style. See vv. 6-7 above.

[19] tn Grk "the people increased and multiplied."

[20] tn Or simply "did not know." However, in this context the point is that the new king knew nothing about Joseph, not whether he had known him personally (which is the way "did not know Joseph" could be understood).

[21] tn Grk "arose," but in this context it clearly refers to a king assuming power.

[22] sn A quotation from Exod 1:8.

[23] tn According to L&N 88.147 it is also possible to translate κατασοφισάμενος (katasophisamenos) as "took advantage by clever words" or "persuaded by sweet talk."

[24] tn Or "race."

[26] tn Or "expose" (BDAG 303 s.v. ἔκθετος).

[27] tn Grk "so that they could not be kept alive," but in this context the phrase may be translated either "so that they would not continue to live," or "so that they would die" (L&N 23.89).

[28] tn Or "was well-formed before God," or "was well-pleasing to God" (BDAG 145 s.v. ἀστεῖος suggests the meaning is more like "well-bred" as far as God was concerned; see Exod 2:2).

[29] tn Grk "who was brought up for three months." The continuation of the sentence as a relative clause is awkward in English, so a new sentence was started in the translation by changing the relative pronoun to a regular pronoun ("he").

[30] tn Or "exposed" (see v. 19).

[31] tn Grk "Pharaoh's daughter took him up for herself." According to BDAG 64 s.v. ἀναιρέω, "The pap. exx. involve exposed children taken up and reared as slaves...The rendering 'adopt' lacks philological precision and can be used only in a loose sense (as NRSV), esp. when Gr-Rom. terminology relating to adoption procedures is taken into account." In this instance both the immediate context and the OT account (Exod 2:3-10) do support the normal sense of the English word "adopt," although it should not be understood to refer to a technical, legal event.

[32] tn Or "and reared him" (BDAG 74 s.v. ἀνατρέφω b).

[33] tn Or "instructed."

[34] tn Or "was able" (BDAG 264 s.v. δυνατός 1.b.α).

[35] tn Grk "heart."

[36] tn Grk "brothers." The translation "compatriot" is given by BDAG 18-19 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.b.

[37] tn Grk "the sons of Israel."

[38] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[39] tn "Hurt unfairly" conveys a better sense of the seriousness of the offense against the Israelite than "treated unfairly," which can sometimes refer to slight offenses, or "wronged," which can refer to offenses that do not involve personal violence, as this one probably did.

[40] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Moses) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[41] tn Or "he defended," "he retaliated" (BDAG 55 s.v. ἀμύνομαι).

that God was delivering them[1] through him,[2] but they did not understand.[3] 7:26 The next day Moses[4] saw two men[5] fighting, and tried to make peace between[6] them, saying, 'Men, you are brothers; why are you hurting one another?' 7:27 But the man who was unfairly hurting his neighbor pushed[7] Moses[8] aside, saying, 'Who made[9] you a ruler and judge over us? 7:28 You don't want to kill me the way you killed the Egyptian yesterday, do you?'[10] 7:29 When the man said this,[11] Moses fled and became a foreigner[12] in the land of Midian, where he became the father of two sons.

7:30 "After[13] forty years had passed, an angel appeared to him in the desert[14] of Mount Sinai, in the flame of a burning bush.[15] 7:31 When Moses saw it, he was amazed at the sight, and when he approached to investigate, there came the voice of the Lord, 7:32 'I am the God of your forefathers,[16] the God of Abraham, Isaac,[17] and Jacob.'[18] Moses began to tremble and did not dare to look more closely.[19] 7:33 But the Lord said to him, 'Take the sandals off your feet, for the place where you are standing is holy ground.[20] 7:34 I have certainly seen the suffering[21] of my people who are in Egypt and have heard their groaning, and I have come down to rescue them.[22] Now[23] come, I will send you to Egypt.'[24] 7:35 This same[25] Moses they had rejected, saying, 'Who made you a ruler and judge?'[26] God sent as both ruler and deliverer[27] through the hand of the angel[28] who appeared to him in the bush. 7:36 This man led them out, performing wonders and miraculous signs[29] in the land of Egypt,[30] at[31] the Red Sea, and in the wilderness[32] for forty years. 7:37 This is the Moses who said to the Israelites,[33] 'God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among your brothers.'[34] 7:38 This is the man

1 tn Grk "was granting them deliverance." The narrator explains that this act pictured what Moses could do for his people.

2 tn Grk "by his hand," where the hand is a metaphor for the entire person.

3 sn They did not understand. Here is the theme of the speech. The people did not understand what God was doing through those he chose. They made the same mistake with Joseph at first. See Acts 3:17; 13:27. There is good precedent for this kind of challenging review of history in the ancient scriptures: Ps 106:6-46; Ezek 20; and Neh 9:6-38.

4 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Moses) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn Grk "saw them"; the context makes clear that two individuals were involved (v. 27).

6 tn Or "tried to reconcile" (BDAG 964-65 s.v. συναλλάσσω).

7 tn Or "repudiated Moses," "rejected Moses" (BDAG 126-27 s.v. ἀπωθέω 2).

8 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Moses) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn Or "appointed."

10 tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' at the end, "do you?"

sn A quotation from Exod 2:14. Even though a negative reply was expected, the question still frightened Moses enough to flee, because he knew his deed had become known. This understanding is based on the Greek text, not the Hebrew of the original setting. Yet the negative here expresses the fact that Moses did not want to kill the other man. Once again the people have badly misunderstood the situation.

11 tn Grk "At this word," which could be translated either "when the man said this" or "when Moses heard this." Since λόγος (logos) refers to the remark made by the Israelite, this translation has followed the first option.

12 tn Or "resident alien." Traditionally πάροικος (paroikos) has been translated "stranger" or "alien," but the level of specificity employed with "foreigner" or "resident alien" is now necessary in contemporary English because a "stranger" is a person not acquainted with someone, while an "alien" can suggest science fiction imagery.

13 tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and contemporary English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

14 tn Or "wilderness."

15 sn An allusion to Exod 3:2.

16 tn Or "ancestors"; Grk "fathers."

17 tn Grk "and Isaac," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

18 sn A quotation from Exod 3:6. The phrase suggests the God of promise, the God of the nation.

19 tn Or "to investigate," "to contemplate" (BDAG 522 s.v. κατανοέω 2).

20 sn A quotation from Exod 3:5. The phrase holy ground points to the fact that God is not limited to a particular locale. The place where he is active in revealing himself is a holy place.

21 tn Or "mistreatment."

22 tn Or "to set them free."

23 tn Grk "And now." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

24 sn A quotation from Exod 3:7-8, 10.

25 sn This same. The reference to "this one" occurs five times in this speech. It is the way the other speeches in Acts refer to Jesus (e.g., Acts 2:23).

26 sn A quotation from Exod 2:14 (see Acts 7:27). God saw Moses very differently than the people of the nation did. The reference to a ruler and a judge suggests that Stephen set up a comparison between Moses and Jesus, but he never finished his speech to make the point. The reader of Acts, however, knowing the other sermons in the book, recognizes that the rejection of Jesus is the counterpoint.

27 tn Or "liberator." The meaning "liberator" for λυτρωτήν (lutrōtēn) is given in L&N 37.129: "a person who liberates or releases others."

28 tn Or simply "through the angel." Here the "hand" could be understood as a figure for the person or the power of the angel himself. The remark about the angel appearing fits the first century Jewish view that God appears to no one (John 1:14-18; Gal 3:19; Deut 33:2 LXX).

29 tn Here the context indicates the miraculous nature of the signs mentioned.

sn Performing wonders and miraculous signs. Again Moses acted like Jesus. The phrase appears 9 times in Acts (2:19, 22, 43; 4:30; 5:12; 6:8; 7:36; 14:3; 15:12).

30 tn Or simply "in Egypt." The phrase "the land of" could be omitted as unnecessary or redundant.

31 tn Grk "and at," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

32 tn Or "desert."

33 tn Grk "to the sons of Israel."

34 sn A quotation from Deut 18:15. This quotation sets up Jesus as the "leader-prophet" like Moses (Acts 3:22; Luke 9:35).

who was in the congregation[1] in the wilderness[2] with the angel who spoke to him at Mount Sinai, and with our ancestors,[3] and he[4] received living oracles[5] to give to you.[6] 7:39 Our[7] ancestors[8] were unwilling to obey[9] him, but pushed him aside[10] and turned back to Egypt in their hearts, 7:40 saying to Aaron, 'Make us gods who will go in front of us, for this Moses, who led us out of the land of Egypt[11] – we do not know what has happened to him!'[12] 7:41 At[13] that time[14] they made an idol in the form of a calf,[15] brought[16] a sacrifice to the idol, and began rejoicing[17] in the works of their hands.[18] 7:42 But God turned away from them and gave them over[19] to worship the host[20] of heaven, as it is written in the book of the prophets: 'It was not to me that you offered slain animals and sacrifices[21] forty years in the wilderness, was it,[22] house of Israel? 7:43 But you took along the tabernacle[23] of Moloch[24] and the star of the[25] god Rephan,[26] the images you made to worship, but I will deport[27] you beyond Babylon.'[28] 7:44 Our ancestors[29] had the tabernacle[30] of testimony in the wilderness,[31] just as God[32] who spoke to Moses ordered him[33] to make it according to the design he had seen. 7:45 Our[34] ancestors[35] received possession of it and brought it in with Joshua when they dispossessed the nations that God drove out before our ancestors,[36] until the [1] tn This term, ἐκκλησία (ekklēsia), is a secular use of the term that came to mean "church" in the epistles. Here a reference to an assembly is all that is intended.

[2] tn Or "desert."

[3] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[4] tn Grk "fathers, who." The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "he" and a new clause introduced by "and" was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style.

[5] tn Or "messages." This is an allusion to the law given to Moses.

[6] tc ‡ The first person pronoun ἡμῖν (hēmin, "to us") is read by A C D E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 lat sy, while the second person pronoun ὑμῖν (humin, "to you") is read by 𝔓^{74} ℵ B 36 453 al co. The second person pronoun thus has significantly better external support. As well, ὑμῖν is a harder reading in this context, both because it is surrounded by first person pronouns and because Stephen perhaps "does not wish to disassociate himself from those who received God's revelation in the past, but only from those who misinterpreted and disobeyed that revelation" (TCGNT 307). At the same time, Stephen does associate himself to some degree with his disobedient ancestors in v. 39, suggesting that the decisive break does not really come until v. 51 (where both his present audience and their ancestors are viewed as rebellious). Thus, both externally and internally ὑμῖν is the preferred reading.

[7] tn Grk "whom our." The continuation of the sentence as a relative clause is awkward in English, so a new sentence was started in the translation at this point.

[8] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[9] sn To obey. Again the theme of the speech is noted. The nation disobeyed the way of God and opted for Egypt over the promised land.

[10] sn Pushed him aside. This is the second time Moses is "pushed aside" in Stephen's account (see v. 27).

[11] tn Or simply "of Egypt." The phrase "the land of" could be omitted as unnecessary or redundant.

[12] sn A quotation from Exod 32:1, 23. Doubt (we do not know what has happened to him) expresses itself in unfaithful action. The act is in contrast to God's promise in Exod 23:20.

[13] tn Grk "And." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[14] tn Grk "In those days."

[15] tn Or "a bull calf" (see Exod 32:4-6). The term μοσχοποιέω (moschopoiēō) occurs only in Christian writings according to BDAG 660 s.v.

[16] tn Grk "and brought," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[18] tn Or "in what they had done."

[19] sn The expression and gave them over suggests similarities to the judgment on the nations described by Paul in Rom 1:18-32.

[20] tn Or "stars."

sn To worship the hosts of heaven. Their action violated Deut 4:19; 17:2-5. See Ps 106:36-43.

[21] tn The two terms for sacrifices "semantically reinforce one another and are here combined essentially for emphasis" (L&N 53.20).

[22] tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' question, "was it?"

[23] tn Or "tent."

sn A tabernacle was a tent used to house religious objects or a shrine (i.e., a portable sanctuary).

[24] sn Moloch was a Canaanite deity who was believed to be the god of the sky and the sun.

[25] tc ‡ Most mss, including several important ones (𝔓^{74} ℵ A C E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 h p vg sy^{h} mae bo Cyr), have ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") here, in conformity with the LXX of Amos 5:26. But other significant and diverse witnesses lack the pronoun: The lack of ὑμῶν in B D 36 453 gig sy^{p} sa Ir^{lat} Or is difficult to explain if it is not the original wording here. NA^{27} has the word in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

[26] sn Rephan (Ῥαιφάν, Rhaiphan) was a pagan deity. The term was a name for Saturn. It was variously spelled in the mss (BDAG 903 s.v. has Rompha as an alternate spelling). The references cover a range of deities and a history of unfaithfulness.

[27] tn Or "I will make you move."

[28] sn A quotation from Amos 5:25-27. This constituted a prediction of the exile.

[29] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[30] tn Or "tent."

sn The tabernacle was the tent used to house the ark of the covenant before the construction of Solomon's temple. This is where God was believed to reside, yet the people were still unfaithful.

[31] tn Or "desert."

[32] tn Grk "the one"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[33] tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[34] tn Grk "And." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[35] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

sn Before our ancestors. Stephen has backtracked here to point out how faithful God had been before the constant move to idolatry just noted.

time[1] of David. 7:46 He[2] found favor[3] with[4] God and asked that he could[5] find a dwelling place[6] for the house[7] of Jacob. 7:47 But Solomon built a house[8] for him. 7:48 Yet the Most High[9] does not live in houses made by human hands,[10] as the prophet says,

> 7:49 'Heaven is my throne, > and earth is the footstool for my feet.
> What kind of house will you build for me,
> says the Lord,
> or what is my resting place?[11] > 7:50 Did my hand[12] not make all these > things?'[13]

7:51 "You stubborn[14] people, with uncircumcised[15] hearts and ears![16] You are always resisting the Holy Spirit, like your ancestors[17] did! 7:52 Which of the prophets did your ancestors[18] not persecute?[19] They[20] killed those who foretold long ago the coming of the Righteous One,[21] whose betrayers and murderers you have now become![22] 7:53 You[23] received the law by decrees given by angels,[24] but you did not obey[25] it."[26]

Stephen is Killed

7:54 When they heard these things, they became furious[27] and ground their teeth[28] at him. 7:55 But Stephen,[29] full[30] of the Holy Spirit, looked intently[31] toward heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing[32] at the right

---

1 tn Grk "In those days."

2 tn Grk "David, who" The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "he" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style.

3 tn Or "grace."

4 tn Grk "before," "in the presence of."

5 tn The words "that he could" are not in the Greek text, but are implied as the (understood) subject of the infinitive εὑρεῖν (heurein). This understands David's request as asking that he might find the dwelling place. The other possibility would be to supply "that God" as the subject of the infinitive: "and asked that God find a dwelling place." Unfortunately this problem is complicated by the extremely difficult problem with the Greek text in the following phrase ("house of Jacob" vs. "God of Jacob").

6 tn On this term see BDAG 929 s.v. σκήνωμα a (Ps 132:5).

7 tc Some MSS read θεῷ (theō, "God") here, a variant much easier to understand in the context. The reading "God" is supported by ℵ² A C E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 lat sy co. The more difficult οἴκῳ (oikō, "house") is supported by 𝔓⁷⁴ ℵ* B D H 049 pc. Thus the second reading is preferred both externally because of better MS evidence and internally because it is hard to see how a copyist finding the reading "God" would change it to "house," while it is easy to see how (given the LXX of Ps 132:5) a copyist might assimilate the reading and change "house" to "God." However, some scholars think the reading "house" is so difficult as to be unacceptable. Others (like Lachmann and Hort) resorted to conjectural emendation at this point. Others (Ropes) sought an answer in an underlying Aramaic expression. Not everyone thinks the reading "house" is too difficult to be accepted as original (see Lake and Cadbury). A. F. J. Klijn, "Stephen's Speech – Acts vii.2-53," NTS 4 (1957): 25-31, compared the idea of a "house within the house of Israel" with the Manual of Discipline from Qumran, a possible parallel that seems to support the reading "house" as authentic. (For the more detailed discussion from which this note was derived, see TCGNT 308-9.)

8 sn See 1 Kgs 8:1-21.

9 sn The title the Most High points to God's majesty (Heb 7:1; Luke 1:32, 35; Acts 16:7).

10 sn The phrase made by human hands is negative in the NT: Mark 14:58; Acts 17:24; Eph 2:11; Heb 9:11, 24. It suggests "man-made" or "impermanent." The rebuke is like parts of the Hebrew scripture where the rebuke is not of the temple, but for making too much of it (1 Kgs 8:27; Isa 57:15; 1 Chr 6:8; Jer 7:1-34).

11 sn What kind...resting place? The rhetorical questions suggest mere human beings cannot build a house to contain God.

12 tn Or "Did I." The phrase "my hand" is ultimately a metaphor for God himself.

13 tn The question in Greek introduced with οὐχί (ouchi) expects a positive reply.

sn A quotation from Isa 66:1-2. If God made the heavens, how can a human building contain him?

14 sn Traditionally, "stiff-necked people." Now the critique begins in earnest.

15 tn The term ἀπερίτμητοι (aperitmētoi, "uncircumcised") is a NT hapax legomenon (occurs only once). See BDAG 101-2 s.v. ἀπερίτμητος and Isa 52:1.

16 tn Or "You stubborn and obstinate people!" (The phrase "uncircumcised hearts and ears" is another figure for stubbornness.)

17 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

18 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

19 sn Which...persecute. The rhetorical question suggests they persecuted them all.

20 tn Grk "And they." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

21 sn The Righteous One is a reference to Jesus Christ.

22 sn Whose betrayers and murderers you have now become. The harsh critique has OT precedent (1 Kgs 19:10-14; Neh 9:26; 2 Chr 36:16).

23 tn Grk "whose betrayers and murderers you have now become, who received the law" The two consecutive relative clauses make for awkward English style, so the second was begun as a new sentence with the pronoun "You" supplied in place of the Greek relative pronoun to make a complete sentence in English.

24 tn Traditionally, "as ordained by angels," but εἰς (eis) with the accusative here should be understood as instrumental (a substitute for ἐν [en]); so BDAG 291 s.v. εἰς 9, BDF §206. Thus the phrase literally means "received the law by the decrees [orders] of angels" with the genitive understood as a subjective genitive, that is, the angels gave the decrees.

sn Decrees given by angels. According to Jewish traditions in the first century, the law of Moses was mediated through angels. See also the note on "angel" in 7:35.

25 tn The Greek word φυλάσσω (phulassō, traditionally translated "keep") in this context connotes preservation of and devotion to an object as well as obedience.

26 tn Or "did not obey it."

27 tn This verb, which also occurs in Acts 5:33, means "cut to the quick" or "deeply infuriated" (BDAG 235 s.v. διαπρίω).

28 tn Or "they gnashed their teeth." This idiom is a picture of violent rage (BDAG 184 s.v. βρύχω). See also Ps 35:16.

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Stephen) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

30 tn Grk "being full," but the participle ὑπάρχων (huparchōn) has not been translated since it would be redundant in English.

31 tn Grk "looking intently toward heaven, saw." The participle ἀτενίσας (atenisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

32 sn The picture of Jesus standing (rather than seated) probably indicates his rising to receive his child. By announcing his vision, Stephen thoroughly offended his audience, who believed no one could share God's place in heaven. The hand of God. 7:56 "Look!" he said.[1] "I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God!" 7:57 But they covered their ears,[2] shouting out with a loud voice, and rushed at him with one intent. 7:58 When[3] they had driven him out of the city, they began to stone him,[4] and the witnesses laid their cloaks[5] at the feet of a young man named Saul. 7:59 They[6] continued to stone Stephen while he prayed, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!" 7:60 Then he fell[7] to his knees and cried out with a loud voice, "Lord, do not hold this sin against them!"[8] When[9] he had said this, he died.[10] 8:1 And Saul agreed completely with killing[11] him.

Saul Begins to Persecute the Church

Now on that day a great[12] persecution began[13] against the church in Jerusalem,[14] and all[15] except the apostles were forced to scatter throughout the regions[16] of Judea and Samaria. 8:2 Some[17] devout men buried Stephen and made loud lamentation[18] over him.[19] 8:3 But Saul was trying to destroy[20] the church; entering one house after another, he dragged off[21] both men and women and put them in prison.[22]

Philip Preaches in Samaria

8:4 Now those who had been forced to scatter went around proclaiming the good news of the word. 8:5 Philip went down to the main city of Samaria[23] and began proclaiming[24] the Christ[25] to them. 8:6 The crowds were paying attention with one mind to what Philip said,[26] as they heard and saw the miraculous signs[27] he was performing. 8:7 For unclean spirits,[28] crying with loud shrieks, were coming out of many who were possessed,[29] and many paralyzed and lame phrase is a variation on Ps 110:1.

[1] tn Grk "And he said, 'Look!'" Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here; a new sentence is begun instead.

[2] sn They covered their ears to avoid hearing what they considered to be blasphemy.

[3] tn Grk "And when." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here; a new sentence is begun instead.

[4] sn They began to stone him. The irony of the scene is that the people do exactly what the speech complains about in v. 52.

[5] tn Or "outer garments."

sn Laid their cloaks. The outer garment, or cloak, was taken off and laid aside to leave the arms free (in this case for throwing stones).

[6] tn Grk "And they." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here; a new sentence is begun instead.

[7] tn Grk "Then falling to his knees he cried out." The participle θείς (theis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[8] sn The remarks Lord Jesus, receive my spirit and Lord, do not hold this sin against them recall statements Jesus made on the cross (Luke 23:34, 46).

[9] tn Grk "And when." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, καί (kai) has not been translated here; a new sentence is begun instead.

[10] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

[11] tn The term ἀναίρεσις (anairesis) can refer to murder (BDAG 64 s.v.; 2 Macc 5:13; Josephus, Ant. 5.2.12 [5.165]).

[12] tn Or "severe."

[13] tn Grk "Now there happened on that day a great persecution." It is less awkward to say in English "Now on that day a great persecution began."

[14] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[15] sn All. Given that the Jerusalem church is still active after this and that the Hellenists are the focus of Acts 6-8, it is possible to argue that only the Hellenistic Christians were forced to scatter.

[17] tn "Some" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[18] sn Made loud lamentation. For someone who was stoned to death, lamentation was normally not allowed (m. Sanhedrin 6:6). The remark points to an unjust death.

[19] tn Or "mourned greatly for him."

[20] tn Or "began to harm [the church] severely." If the nuance of this verb is "destroy," then the imperfect verb ἐλυμαίνετο (elumaineto) is best translated as a conative imperfect as in the translation above. If instead the verb is taken to mean "injure severely" (as L&N 20.24), it should be translated in context as an ingressive imperfect ("began to harm the church severely"). Either option does not significantly alter the overall meaning, since it is clear from the stated actions of Saul in the second half of the verse that he intended to destroy or ravage the church.

[21] tn The participle σύρων (surōn) has been translated as an finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[22] tn BDAG 762 s.v. παραδίδωμι 1.b has "εἰς φυλακήν put in prison Ac 8:3."

[23] tn The word "main" is supplied in the translation to clarify that "Samaria" is not the name of the city (at least in NT times). See both BDAG 912 s.v. Σαμάρεια, and L&N 93.568.

sn The main city of Samaria most likely refers to the principal city of Samaria, rebuilt by Herod the Great as Sebaste in honor of Augustus (J. Boehmer, "Studien zur Geographie Palästinas bes. im Neuen Testament," ZNW 9 [1908]: 216-18; D. Gill and C. Gempf, eds., The Book of Acts in its Graeco-Roman Setting, 272). This is the best option if the article before "city" is taken as original. If the reading without the article is taken as original, then another city may be in view: Gitta, the hometown of Simon Magus according to Justin Martyr (cf. C. K. Barrett, Acts [ICC], 1:402-3; F. F. Bruce, Acts [NICNT], 165).

[24] tn The imperfect ἐκήρυσσεν (ekērussen) has been translated as an ingressive, since this is probably the first time such preaching took place.

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

[26] tn Grk "to what was being said by Philip," a passive construction that has been changed to active voice in the translation.

[27] tn Here the following context indicates the miraculous nature of the signs mentioned. This term appears 13 times in Acts, but only twice more after Acts 8:13 (i.e., 14:3; 15:12).

[28] sn The expression unclean spirits refers to evil supernatural spirits which were ceremonially unclean, and which caused the persons possessed by them to be ceremonially unclean.

people were healed. 8:8 So there was[1] great joy[2] in that city.

8:9 Now in that city was a man named Simon, who had been practicing magic[3] and amazing the people of Samaria, claiming to be someone great. 8:10 All the people,[4] from the least to the greatest, paid close attention to him, saying, "This man is the power of God that is called 'Great.'"[5] 8:11 And they paid close attention to him because he had amazed them for a long time with his magic. 8:12 But when they believed Philip as he was proclaiming the good news about the kingdom of God[6] and the name of Jesus Christ,[7] they began to be baptized,[8] both men and women. 8:13 Even Simon himself believed, and after he was baptized, he stayed close to[9] Philip constantly, and when he saw the signs and great miracles that were occurring, he was amazed.[10]

8:14 Now when the apostles in Jerusalem[11] heard that Samaria had accepted the word[12] of God, they sent[13] Peter and John to them. 8:15 These two[14] went down and prayed for them so that they would receive the Holy Spirit. 8:16 (For the Spirit[15] had not yet come upon[16] any of them, but they had only been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)[17] 8:17 Then Peter and John placed their hands on the Samaritans,[18] and they received the Holy Spirit.[19]

8:18 Now Simon, when he saw that the Spirit[20] was given through the laying on of the apostles' hands, offered them money, 8:19 saying, "Give me this power[21] too, so that everyone I place my hands on may receive the Holy Spirit." 8:20 But Peter said to him, "May your silver perish with you,[22] because you thought you could acquire[23] God's gift with money! 8:21 You have no share or part[24] in this matter[25] because your heart is not right before God! 8:22 Therefore repent of this wickedness of yours, and pray to the Lord[26] that he may perhaps forgive you for the intent of your heart.[27] 8:23 For I see that you are bitterly envious[28] and in bondage to sin." 8:24 But Simon replied,[29] "You pray to the Lord for me so that nothing of what you have said may happen to[30] me."

1 tn Grk "and there came about," but this is somewhat awkward in English.

2 sn Great joy. The reason for eschatological joy was that such events pointed to God's decisive deliverance (Luke 7:22-23). Note how the acts of healing extend beyond the Twelve here.

3 tn On the idiom προϋπῆρχεν μαγεύων (proupērchen mageuōn) meaning "had been practicing magic" see BDAG 889 s.v. προϋπάρχω.

4 tn Grk "all of them"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn Or "This man is what is called the Great Power of God." The translation "what is called the Great Power of God" is given by BDAG 263 s.v. δύναμις 5, but the repetition of the article before καλουμένη μεγάλη (kaloumenē megalē) suggests the translation "the power of God that is called 'Great.'"

6 sn The kingdom of God is also what Jesus preached: Acts 1:3. The term reappears in 14:22; 19:8; 28:23, 31.

7 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

8 tn The imperfect verb ἐβαπτίζοντο (ebaptizonto) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

9 tn Or "he kept close company with."

10 sn He was amazed. Now Simon, the one who amazed others, is himself amazed, showing the superiority of Philip's connection to God. Christ is better than anything the culture has to offer.

11 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

12 tn Or "message."

13 sn They sent. The Jerusalem church with the apostles was overseeing the expansion of the church, as the distribution of the Spirit indicates in vv. 15-17.

14 tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun was replaced by the phrase "these two" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style.

15 tn Grk "For he"; the referent (the Spirit) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Or "fallen on."

17 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

18 tn Grk "on them"; the referent (the Samaritans) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 sn They received the Holy Spirit. It is likely this special distribution of the Spirit took place because a key ethnic boundary was being crossed. Here are some of "those far off" of Acts 2:38-40.

20 tc Most witnesses (𝔓45.74 A* C D E Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 latt sy bo) here read "the Holy Spirit" (τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, to pneuma to hagion), while a few key mss have simply τὸ πνεῦμα (ℵ Ac B sa mae). Although it is possible that some scribes omitted τὸ ἅγιον because of its perceived superfluity (note vv. 15, 17, 19), it is far more likely that others added the adjective out of pious motives.

21 tn Or "ability"; Grk "authority."

22 tn Grk "May your silver together with you be sent into destruction." This is a strong curse. The gifts of God are sovereignly bestowed and cannot be purchased.

23 tn Or "obtain."

24 tn The translation "share or part" is given by L&N 63.13.

25 tn Since the semantic range for λόγος (logos) is so broad, a number of different translations could be given for the prepositional phrase here. Something along the lines of "in this thing" would work well, but is too colloquial for the present translation.

26 tn Or "and implore the Lord."

27 tn Grk "that if possible the intent of your heart may be forgiven you." The passive construction is somewhat awkward in contemporary English and has thus been converted to an active construction in the translation.

28 tn Grk "in the gall of bitterness," an idiom meaning to be particularly envious or resentful of someone. In this case Simon was jealous of the apostles' power to bestow the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands, and wanted that power for himself. The literal phrase does not convey this to the modern reader, and in fact some modern translations have simply rendered the phrase as involving bitterness, which misses the point of the envy on Simon's part. See L&N 88.166. The OT images come from Deut 29:17-18 and Isa 58:6.

29 tn Grk "Simon answered and said."

sn Given that Simon does not follow Peter's call for repentance, many interpreters read this reply as flippant rather than sincere. But the exact nature of Simon's reply is not entirely clear.

30 tn Grk "may come upon."

8:25 So after Peter and John[1] had solemnly testified[2] and spoken the word of the Lord,[3] they started back to Jerusalem, proclaiming[4] the good news to many Samaritan villages[5] as they went.[6]

Philip and the Ethiopian Eunuch

8:26 Then an angel of the Lord[7] said to Philip,[8] "Get up and go south[9] on the road that goes down from Jerusalem[10] to Gaza." (This is a desert[11] road.)[12] 8:27 So[13] he got up[14] and went. There[15] he met[16] an Ethiopian eunuch,[17] a court official of Candace,[18] queen of the Ethiopians, who was in charge of all her treasury. He[19] had come to Jerusalem to worship,[20] 8:28 and was returning home, sitting[21] in his chariot, reading[22] the prophet Isaiah. 8:29 Then the Spirit said to Philip, "Go over and join this chariot." 8:30 So Philip ran up[23] to it[24] and heard the man[25] reading Isaiah the prophet. He[26] asked him,[27] "Do you understand what you're reading?" 8:31 The man[28] replied, "How in the world can I,[29] unless

1 tn Grk "after they"; the referents (Peter and John) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn The verb διαμαρτύρομαι (diamarturomai) can mean "warn," and could be taken to refer specifically to the warning given to Simon in the preceding verses. However, a more general reference is more likely, referring to parting exhortations from Peter and John to the entire group of believers.

3 sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

4 tn Grk "they were returning to Jerusalem and were proclaiming." The first imperfect is taken ingressively and the second is viewed iteratively ("proclaiming...as they went").

5 sn By proclaiming the good news to many Samaritan villages, the apostles now actively share in the broader ministry the Hellenists had started.

6 tn "As they went" is not in the Greek text, but is implied by the imperfect tense (see tn above).

7 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 5:19.

8 tn Grk "Lord spoke to Philip, saying." The redundant participle λέγων (legōn) has not been translated.

9 tn Or "Get up and go about noon." The phrase κατὰ μεσημβρίαν (kata mesēmbrian) can be translated either "about noon" (L&N 67.74) or "toward the south" (L&N 82.4). Since the angel's command appears to call for immediate action ("Get up") and would not therefore need a time indicator, a directional reference ("toward the south") is more likely here.

11 tn Or "wilderness."

12 tn The words "This is a desert road" are probably best understood as a comment by the author of Acts, but it is possible they form part of the angel's speech to Philip, in which case the verse would read: "Get up and go south on the road that goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza – the desert road."

sn The concluding note about the road appears to be a parenthetical note by the author.

13 tn Grk "And," but καί (kai) carries something of a resultative force in this context because what follows describes Philip's response to the angel's command.

14 tn Grk "So getting up he went." The aorist participle ἀναστάς (anastas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

15 tn Grk "And there." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

16 tn Grk "and behold." This expression is used to portray Philip's encounter with the Ethiopian in a vivid way. In the English translation this vividness is difficult to convey; it is necessary to supply the words "he met."

17 sn The term eunuch normally referred to a man who had been castrated, but this was not always the case (see Gen 39:1 LXX, where Potiphar is called a eunuch). Such castrated individuals were preferred as court officials in the East, although Judaism opposed the practice. The Mosaic law excluded eunuchs from Israel (Deut 23:1), although God certainly accepted them (Isa 56:3-5; Wis 3:14). This individual was a high official, since he was said to be in charge of all her treasury. He may or may not have been a eunuch physically. He appears to be the first fully Gentile convert to Christianity, since the Samaritans mentioned previously (Acts 8:4-25) were regarded as half-breeds.

18 tn Or "the Candace" (the title of the queen of the Ethiopians). The term Κανδάκης (Kandakēs) is much more likely a title rather than a proper name (like Pharaoh, which is a title); see L&N 37.77. A few, however, still take the word to be the name of the queen (L&N 93.209). BDAG 507 s.v. Κανδάκη, treats the term as a title and lists classical usage by Strabo (Geography 17.1.54) and others.

sn Candace was the title of the queen of the Ethiopians. Ethiopia refers to the kingdom of Nubia in the northern Sudan, whose capital was Meroe (not to be confused with Abyssinia, which was later called Ethiopia and converted to Christianity in the 4th century A.D.). Classical writers refer to several queens of Meroe in the 1st century B.C. and 1st century A.D. who had the title Candace (Kandake). The Candace referred to here was probably Amantitere, who ruled A.D. 25-41.

19 tn Grk "who was over all her treasury, who." The two consecutive relative clauses make for awkward English style, so the second was begun as a new sentence with the pronoun "he" supplied in place of the Greek relative pronoun to make a complete sentence in English.

20 sn Since this man had come to Jerusalem to worship, he may have been a proselyte to Judaism. This event is a precursor to Acts 10.

21 tn Grk "and was sitting." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

22 tn Grk "and was reading." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

sn The fact that this man was reading from a scroll (an expensive item in the first century) indicates his connection to a wealthy house.

23 tn The participle προσδραμών (prosdramōn) is regarded as attendant circumstance.

24 tn The words "to it" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

25 tn Grk "heard him"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Grk "and he." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

27 tn Grk "he said," but since what follows is a question, it is better English style to translate the introduction to the question "he asked him."

28 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "How am I able, unless..." The translation is based on the force of the conjunction γάρ (gar) in this context. The translation "How in the world can I?" is given in BDAG 189 s.v. γάρ 1.f.

someone guides me?" So he invited Philip to come up and sit with him. 8:32 Now the passage of scripture the man[1] was reading was this:

> "He was led like a sheep to slaughter, > and like a lamb before its shearer is silent,
> so he did[2] not open his mouth.
> 8:33 In humiliation[3] justice was taken > from him.[4]
> Who can describe his posterity?[5]
> For his life was taken away[6] from the > earth."[7]

8:34 Then the eunuch said[8] to Philip, "Please tell me,[9] who is the prophet saying this about – himself or someone else?"[10] 8:35 So Philip started speaking,[11] and beginning with this scripture[12] proclaimed the good news about Jesus to him. 8:36 Now as they were going along the road, they came to some water, and the eunuch said, "Look, there is water! What is to stop me[13] from being baptized?"[14] 8:38 So he ordered the chariot to stop, and both Philip and the eunuch went down into the water,[15] and Philip baptized[16] him. 8:39 Now when they came up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord snatched Philip away, and the eunuch did not see him any more, but[17] went on his way rejoicing.[18] 8:40 Philip, however, found himself[19] at Azotus,[20] and as he passed through the area,[21] he proclaimed the good news[22] to all the towns[23] until he came to Caesarea.[24]

The Conversion of Saul

9:1 Meanwhile Saul, still breathing out threats[25] to murder[26] the Lord's disciples, went to the high priest 9:2 and requested letters from him to the synagogues[27] in Damascus, so that if he found any who belonged to the Way,[28] either men or women, he could bring them as prisoners[29] to Jerusalem.[30] 9:3 As he was going along,

---

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Grk "does." The present tense here was translated as a past tense to maintain consistency with the first line of the quotation ("he was led like a sheep to slaughter"), which has an aorist passive verb normally translated as a past tense in English.

3 tc ‡ Most later mss (C E Ψ 33^{vid} 𝔐 sy) read "In his humiliation," adding αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after ταπεινώσει (tapeinōsei, "humiliation"), while the earlier and better witnesses lack the pronoun (so 𝔓^{74} ℵ A B 1739 pc lat). However, the LXX of Isa 53:8 also lacks the pronoun, supplying motivation for scribes to omit it here. At the same time, scribes would also be motivated to add the pronoun both for clarity's sake (note the similar impulse that led to the addition of δέ [de] by many of the same mss at the beginning of the next line) and to give balance to the lines (the pronoun is indisputably used five other times in vv. 32-33 in quoting Isa 53). On balance, the shorter reading is preferred.

4 tn Or "justice was denied him"; Grk "his justice was taken away."

5 tn Or "family; or "origin." The meaning of γενεά (genea) in the quotation is uncertain; BDAG 192 s.v. γενεά 4 suggests "family history."

sn The rhetorical question suggests the insensitivity of this generation for its act against God's servant, who was slain unjustly as he was silent.

6 tn Grk "is taken away." The present tense here was translated as a past tense to maintain consistency with the rest of the quotation.

7 sn A quotation from Isa 53:7-8.

8 tn Grk "answered and said." The redundant participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) has not been translated.

9 tn Grk "I beg you," "I ask you."

10 sn About himself, or about someone else? It is likely in 1st century Judaism this would have been understood as either Israel or Isaiah.

11 tn Grk "opening his mouth" (a Semitic idiom for beginning to speak in a somewhat formal manner). The participle ἀνοίξας (anoixas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 sn Beginning with this scripture. The discussion likely included many of the scriptures Acts has already noted for the reader in earlier speeches. At the least, readers of Acts would know what other scriptures might be meant.

13 tn Or "What prevents me." The rhetorical question means, "I should get baptized, right?"

14 tc A few later mss (E 36 323 453 945 1739 1891 pc) add, with minor variations, 8:37 "He said to him, 'If you believe with your whole heart, you may.' He replied, 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.'" Verse 37 is lacking in {𝔓$^{45.74}$ ℵ A B C 33 614 vg sy^{p,h} co}. It is clearly not a part of the original text of Acts. The variant is significant in showing how some in the early church viewed a confession of faith. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

15 tn Grk "and they both went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch." Since this is somewhat redundant in English, it was simplified to "and both Philip and the eunuch went down into the water."

16 sn Philip baptized. Again, someone beyond the Twelve has ministered an ordinance of faith.

17 tn BDAG 189 s.v. γάρ 2 indicates that under certain circumstances γάρ (gar) has the same meaning as δέ (de).

18 sn Note that the response to the gospel is rejoicing (joy, cf. Acts 11:23; 13:48).

19 tn Or "appeared."

20 sn Azotus was a city on the coast of southern Palestine, known as Ashdod in OT times.

21 tn The words "the area" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

22 tn Or "he preached the gospel."

23 tn Or "cities."

24 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

25 tn Or "Saul, making dire threats."

26 tn The expression "breathing out threats and murder" is an idiomatic expression for "making threats to murder" (see L&N 33.293). Although the two terms "threats" and "murder" are syntactically coordinate, the second is semantically subordinate to the first. In other words, the content of the threats is to murder the disciples.

27 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

28 sn The expression "the way" in ancient religious literature refers at times to "the whole way of life fr. a moral and spiritual viewpoint" (BDAG 692 s.v. ὁδός 3.c), and it has been so used of Christianity and its teachings in the book of Acts (see also 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22). It is a variation of Judaism's idea of two ways, the true and the false, where "the Way" is the true one (1 En. 91:18; 2 En. 30:15).

29 tn Grk "bring them bound"; the translation "bring someone as prisoner" for δεδεμένον ἄγειν τινά (dedemenon agein tina) is given by BDAG 221 s.v. δέω 1.b.

30 sn From Damascus to Jerusalem was a six-day journey. Christianity had now expanded into Syria.

approaching[1] Damascus, suddenly a light from heaven flashed[2] around him. 9:4 He[3] fell to the ground and heard a voice saying to him, "Saul, Saul,[4] why are you persecuting me?"[5] 9:5 So he said, "Who are you, Lord?" He replied, "I am Jesus whom you are persecuting! 9:6 But stand up[6] and enter the city and you will be told[7] what you must do." 9:7 (Now the men[8] who were traveling with him stood there speechless,[9] because they heard the voice but saw no one.)[10] 9:8 So Saul got up from the ground, but although his eyes were open,[11] he could see nothing.[12] Leading him by the hand, his companions[13] brought him into Damascus. 9:9 For[14] three days he could not see, and he neither ate nor drank anything.[15]

9:10 Now there was a disciple in Damascus named Ananias. The[16] Lord[17] said to him in a vision, "Ananias," and he replied, "Here I am,[18] Lord." 9:11 Then the Lord told him, "Get up and go to the street called 'Straight,'[19] and at Judas' house look for a man from Tarsus named Saul. For he is praying, 9:12 and he has seen in a vision[20] a man named Ananias come in and place his hands on him so that he may see again." 9:13 But Ananias replied,[21] "Lord, I have heard from many people[22] about this man, how much harm he has done to your saints in Jerusalem, 9:14 and here he has authority from the chief priests to imprison[23] all who call on your name!"[24] 9:15 But the Lord said to him, "Go, because this man is my chosen instrument[25] to carry my name before Gentiles and kings and the people of Israel.[26] 9:16 For I will show him how much he must suffer for the sake of my name."[27] 9:17 So Ananias departed and entered

1 tn Grk "As he was going along, it happened that when he was approaching." The phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 tn Or "shone" (BDAG 799 s.v. περιαστράπτω). The light was more brilliant than the sun according to Acts 26:13.

3 tn Grk "and he." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

4 tn The double vocative suggests emotion.

5 sn Persecuting me. To persecute the church is to persecute Jesus.

6 tn Or "But arise."

7 tn Literally a passive construction, "it will be told to you." This has been converted to another form of passive construction in the translation.

8 tn The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which is used only rarely in a generic sense of both men and women. In the historical setting here, Paul's traveling companions were almost certainly all males.

9 tn That is, unable to speak because of fear or amazement. See BDAG 335 s.v. ἐνεός.

10 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Acts 22:9 appears to indicate that they saw the light but did not hear a voice. They were "witnesses" that something happened.

11 tn Grk "his eyes being open," a genitive absolute construction that has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

12 sn He could see nothing. This sign of blindness, which was temporary until v. 18, is like the sign of deafness experienced by Zechariah in Luke 1. It allowed some time for Saul (Paul) to reflect on what had happened without distractions.

13 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Saul's companions) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "And for." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

15 tn The word "anything" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader. The fasting might indicate an initial realization of Luke 5:33-39. Fasting was usually accompanied by reflective thought.

16 tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

17 sn The Lord is directing all the events leading to the expansion of the gospel as he works on both sides of the meeting between Paul and Ananias. "The Lord" here refers to Jesus (see v. 17).

18 tn Grk "behold, I," but this construction often means "here is/there is" (cf. BDAG 468 s.v. ἰδού 2).

19 sn The noting of the detail of the locale, ironically called 'Straight' Street, shows how directive and specific the Lord was.

20 tc ‡ The words ἐν ὁράματι (en oramati, "in a vision") are not found in some of the earliest and best MSS (𝔓[74] ℵ A 81 pc lat sa bo), but are implied from the context. The phrase is included, although sometimes in a different order with ἄνδρα (andra, "man") or omitting ἄνδρα altogether, by B C E Ψ 33 1175 1739 𝔐. The order of words in NA[27], ἄνδρα ἐν ὁράματι, is supported only by B C 1175. Generally speaking, when there are three or more variants, with one an omission and the others involving rearrangements, the longer readings are later scribal additions. Further, the reading looks like a clarifying note, for an earlier vision is explicitly mentioned in v. 10. On the other hand, it is possible that some scribes deleted the words because of perceived repetition, though this is unlikely since it is a different vision two verses back. It is also possible that some scribes could have confused ὁράματι with ὀνόματι (onomati, "name"); TCGNT 319 notes that several MSS place ονόματι before Ἀνανίαν (Ananian, "Ananias") while a few others drop ὀνόματι altogether. The Sahidic MSS are among those that drop the word, however, and they also lack ἐν ὁράματι; all that is left is one version and father that drops ὀνόματι. Perhaps the best argument for the authenticity of the phrase is that B C 1175 preserve a rare, distinctively Lukan word order, but this is not nearly as harsh or unusual as what Luke does elsewhere. A decision is difficult in this case, but on balance the omission of the phrase seems to be authentic. The words are nevertheless added in the translation because of contextual considerations. NA[27] places the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

sn Apparently while in Damascus Paul had a subsequent vision in the midst of his blindness, fulfilling the prediction in 9:6.

21 sn Ananias replied. Past events might have suggested to Ananias that this was not good counsel, but like Peter in Acts 10, Ananias' intuitions were wrong.

22 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

23 tn Grk "to bind."

24 sn The expression "those who call on your name" is a frequent description of believers (Acts 2:21; 1 Cor 1:2; Rom 10:13).

25 tn Or "tool."

26 tn Grk "the sons of Israel." In Acts, Paul is a minister to all nations, including Israel (Rom 1:16-17).

27 tn Or "because of my name." BDAG 1031 s.v. ὑπέρ 2 lists Acts 9:16 as an example of ὑπέρ (huper) used to indicate "the moving cause or reason, because of, for the sake of, for."

the house, placed[1] his hands on Saul[2] and said, "Brother Saul, the Lord Jesus, who appeared to you on the road as you came here,[3] has sent me so that you may see again and be filled with the Holy Spirit."[4] 9:18 Immediately[5] something like scales[6] fell from his eyes, and he could see again. He[7] got up and was baptized, 9:19 and after taking some food, his strength returned.

For several days[8] he was with the disciples in Damascus, 9:20 and immediately he began to proclaim Jesus in the synagogues,[9] saying, "This man is the Son of God."[10] 9:21 All[11] who heard him were amazed and were saying, "Is this not[12] the man who in Jerusalem was ravaging[13] those who call on this name, and who had come here to bring them as prisoners[14] to the chief priests?" 9:22 But Saul became more and more capable,[15] and was causing consternation[16] among the Jews who lived in Damascus by proving[17] that Jesus[18] is the Christ.[19]

Saul's Escape from Damascus

9:23 Now after some days had passed, the Jews plotted[20] together to kill him, 9:24 but Saul learned of their plot against him.[21] They were also watching[22] the city gates[23] day and night so that they could kill him. 9:25 But his disciples took him at night and let him down through an opening[24] in the wall by lowering him in a basket.[25]

Saul Returns to Jerusalem

9:26 When he arrived in Jerusalem,[26] he attempted to associate[27] with the disciples, and they were all afraid of him, because they did not believe[28] that he was a disciple. 9:27 But Barnabas took[29] Saul,[30] brought[31] him to the

[1] tn Grk "and placing his hands on Saul, he said." The participle ἐπιθείς (epitheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. For the same reason καί (kai) has not been translated before the participle.

[2] tn Grk "on him"; the referent (Saul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn Grk "on the road in which you came," but the relative clause makes for awkward English style, so it was translated as a temporal clause ("as you came here").

[4] sn Be filled with the Holy Spirit. Here someone who is not an apostle (Ananias) commissions another person with the Spirit.

[5] tn Grk "And immediately." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[6] tn The comparison to "scales" suggests a crusty covering which peeled away (cf. BDAG 592 s.v. λεπίς 2).

[7] tn Grk "and he." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence was started, with "and" placed before the final element of the previous clause as required by English style.

[8] tn Grk "It happened that for several days." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[9] sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

[10] tn The ὅτι (hoti) is understood to introduce direct ("This man is the Son of God") rather than indirect discourse ("that this man is the Son of God") because the pronoun οὗτος (houtos) combined with the present tense verb ἐστιν (estin) suggests the contents of what was proclaimed are a direct (albeit summarized) quotation.

sn This is the only use of the title Son of God in Acts. The book prefers to allow a variety of descriptions to present Jesus.

[11] tn Grk "And all." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[12] tn The Greek interrogative particle used in this verse (οὐχ, ouch) expects a positive reply. They all knew about Saul's persecutions.

[13] tn Normally, "destroying," but compare 4 Macc 4:23; 11:4 and MM 529 s.v. πορθέω for examples from Koine papyri. See also BDAG 853 s.v. πορθέω.

[14] tn Grk "bring them bound"; the translation "bring someone as prisoner" for δεδεμένον ἄγειν τινά (dedemenon agein tina) is given by BDAG 221 s.v. δέω 1.b.

[15] tn Grk "was becoming stronger," but this could be understood in a physical sense, while the text refers to Saul's growing ability to demonstrate to fellow Jews that Jesus was the Messiah. The translation "to become capable" for ἐνδυναμόω (endunamoō) is given in L&N 74.7, with this specific verse as an example.

[16] tn Or "was confounding." For the translation "to cause consternation" for συγχέω (suncheō) see L&N 25.221.

[17] tn Or "by showing for certain."

[18] tn Grk "that this one"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed." Note again the variation in the titles used.

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

[20] sn Fitting the pattern emphasized earlier with Stephen and his speech in Acts 7, some Jews plotted to kill God's messenger (cf. Luke 11:53-54).

[21] tn The words "against him" are implied, as suggested by L&N 30.71.

[22] tn Or "guarding." This is a negative term in Luke-Acts (Luke 6:7; 14:1; 20:20).

[23] tn The word πύλη (pulē) may refer to a house door or gate, or to the large gates used in a palace, temple, or city wall. Here the context clearly indicates a reference to the latter, so the translation "city gates" is used.

[24] tn The opening in the wall is not specifically mentioned here, but the parallel account in 2 Cor 11:33 mentions a "window" or "opening" (θυρίς, thuris) in the city wall through which Paul was lowered. One alternative to introducing mention of the opening is to translate Acts 9:25 "they let him down over the wall," as suggested in L&N 7.61. This option is not employed by many translations, however, because for the English reader it creates an (apparent) contradiction between Acts 9:25 and 2 Cor 11:33. In reality the account here is simply more general, omitting the detail about the window.

[27] tn Or "join."

[28] tn The participle πιστεύοντες (pisteuontes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[29] tn Grk "taking Saul, brought him." The participle ἐπιλαβόμενος (epilabomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[30] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Saul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

apostles, and related to them how he had seen the Lord on the road, that[1] the Lord had spoken to him, and how in Damascus he had spoken out boldly[2] in the name of Jesus. 9:28 So he was staying with them, associating openly with them[3] in Jerusalem, speaking out boldly in the name of the Lord. 9:29 He was speaking and debating[4] with the Greek-speaking Jews,[5] but they were trying to kill him. 9:30 When the brothers found out about this, they brought him down to Caesarea[6] and sent him away to Tarsus.

9:31 Then[7] the church throughout Judea, Galilee,[8] and Samaria experienced[9] peace and thus was strengthened.[10] Living[11] in the fear of the Lord and in the encouragement of the Holy Spirit, the church[12] increased in numbers.

Peter Heals Aeneas

9:32 Now[13] as Peter was traveling around from place to place,[14] he also came down to the saints who lived in Lydda.[15] 9:33 He found there a man named Aeneas who had been confined to a mattress for eight years because[16] he was paralyzed. 9:34 Peter[17] said to him, "Aeneas, Jesus the Christ[18] heals you. Get up and make your own bed!"[19] And immediately he got up.

1 tn Grk "and that," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

2 tn On this verb which is used 7 times in Acts, see BDAG 782 s.v. παρρησιάζομαι 1. See also v. 28.

3 tn Grk "he was with them going in and going out in Jerusalem." The expression "going in and going out" is probably best taken as an idiom for association without hindrance. Some modern translations (NASB, NIV) translate the phrase "moving about freely in Jerusalem," although the NRSV retains the literal "he went in and out among them in Jerusalem."

4 tn Or "arguing." BDAG 954 s.v. συζητέω 2 gives "dispute, debate, argue...τινί 'w. someone'" for συνεζήτει (sunezētei).

5 tn Grk "the Hellenists," but this descriptive term is largely unknown to the modern English reader. The translation "Greek-speaking Jews" attempts to convey something of who these were, but it was more than a matter of language spoken; it involved a degree of adoption of Greek culture as well.

6 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine, south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

7 tn Or "Therefore." This verse is another summary text in Acts (cf. 2:41-47; 4:32-37; 5:12-16; 6:7).

8 tn Grk "and Galilee," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

9 tn Grk "had."

10 tn Or "Built up." The participle οἰκοδομουμένη (oikodomoumenē) has been translated as a participle of result related to εἶχεν (eichen). It could also be understood as adverbial to ἐπληθύνετο (eplēthuneto): "Then the church throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria experienced peace. Strengthened and living in the fear of the Lord and in the encouragement of the Holy Spirit, it increased in numbers." Although some scholars do not regard the participle of result as a legitimate category, it is actually fairly common (see ExSyn 637-39).

11 tn Grk "And living." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

12 tn Grk "it"; the referent (the church) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Grk "Now it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "As Peter was going through all [the places]," which is somewhat awkward in English. The meaning is best expressed by a phrase like "going around from place to place" or "traveling around from place to place."

15 sn Lydda was a city northwest of Jerusalem on the way to Joppa. It was about 10.5 miles (17 km) southeast of Joppa.

16 tn Since the participle κατακείμενον (katakeimenon), an adjectival participle modifying Αἰνέαν (Ainean), has been translated into English as a relative clause ("who had been confined to a mattress"), it would be awkward to follow with a second relative clause (Grk "who was paralyzed"). Furthermore, the relative pronoun here has virtually a causal force, giving the reason for confinement to the mattress, so it is best translated "because."

17 tn Grk "And Peter." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

18 tc ‡ Several variants occur at this juncture. Some of the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓74 ℵ B* C Ψ 33vid Didpt) read "Jesus Christ" (Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, Iēsous Christos); others ([A] 36 1175 it) have "the Lord Jesus Christ" (ὁ κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, ho kurios Iēsous Christos); a few read simply ὁ Χριστός (614 1241 1505); the majority of Mss (B2 E 1739 𝔐 Didpt) have "Jesus the Christ" (Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός). Although the pedigree of this last reading is relatively weak, it draws strength from the fact that (a) the other readings are much more natural and thus more predictable, and (b) there are several variants for this text. It seems hardly likely that scribes would intentionally change a more common expression into a title that is used nowhere else in the NT (although 1 John 2:22; 5:1 come close with "Jesus is the Christ"), nor would they unintentionally change a frequently used designation into an unusual one. Thus, in spite of the external evidence (which is nevertheless sufficient to argue for authenticity), Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός is the reading that best explains the rise of the others.

tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

19 tn The translation "make your own bed" for στρῶσον σεαυτῷ (strōson seautō) is given by BDAG 949 s.v. στρωννύω 1. Naturally this involves some adaptation, since a pallet or mat would not be 'made up' in the sense that a modern bed would be. The idea may be closer to "straighten" or "rearrange," and the NIV's "take care of your mat" attempts to reflect this, although this too probably conveys a slightly different idea to the modern English reader.

9:35 All[1] those who lived in Lydda[2] and Sharon[3] saw him, and they[4] turned[5] to the Lord.

Peter Raises Dorcas

9:36 Now in Joppa[6] there was a disciple named Tabitha (which in translation means[7] Dorcas).[8] She was continually doing good deeds and acts of charity.[9] 9:37 At that time[10] she became sick[11] and died. When they had washed[12] her body,[13] they placed it in an upstairs room. 9:38 Because Lydda[14] was near Joppa, when the disciples heard that Peter was there, they sent two men to him and urged him, "Come to us without delay."[15] 9:39 So Peter got up and went with them, and[16] when he arrived[17] they brought him to the upper room. All[18] the widows stood beside him, crying and showing him[19] the tunics[20] and other clothing[21] Dorcas used to make[22] while she was with them. 9:40 But Peter sent them all outside,[23] knelt down,[24] and prayed. Turning[25] to the body, he said, "Tabitha, get up." Then she opened her eyes, and when she saw Peter, she sat up.[26] 9:41 He gave[27] her his hand and helped her get up. Then he called[28] the saints and widows and presented her alive. 9:42 This became known throughout all[29] Joppa, and many believed in the Lord.[30] 9:43 So[31] Peter[32] stayed many days in Joppa with a man named[33] Simon, a tanner.[34]

---

1 tn Grk "And all." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

2 sn Lydda was a city northwest of Jerusalem on the way to Joppa.

3 sn Sharon refers to the plain of Sharon, a region along the coast of Palestine.

4 tn Repetition of the pronoun "they" as subject of ἐπέστρεψαν (epestrepsan) is not strictly necessary in English, but emphasizes slightly the resultative nature of the final clause: They turned to the Lord as a result of seeing Aeneas after he was healed.

5 sn They turned. To "turn" is a good summary term for the response to the gospel.

6 sn Joppa was a seaport on the Philistine coast, in the same location as modern Jaffa. "Though Joppa never became a major seaport, it was of some importance as a logistical base and an outlet to the Mediterranean" (A. F. Rainey, ISBE 2:1118-19).

7 tn Grk "which being translated is called." In English this would normally be expressed "which is translated as" or "which in translation means." The second option is given by L&N 33.145.

8 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Dorcas is the Greek translation of the Aramaic name Tabitha. Dorcas in Greek means "gazelle" or "deer."

9 tn Or "and helping the poor." Grk "She was full of good deeds and acts of charity which she was continually doing." Since it is somewhat redundant in English to say "she was full of good deeds...which she was continually doing," the translation has been simplified to "she was continually doing good deeds and acts of charity." The imperfect verb ἐποίει (epoiei) has been translated as a progressive imperfect ("was continually doing").

10 tn Grk "It happened that in those days." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

11 tn Grk "becoming sick, she died." The participle ἀσθενήσασαν (asthenēsasan) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn The participle λούσαντες (lousantes) is taken temporally.

13 tn Grk "washed her," but the reference is to her corpse.

14 sn Lydda was a city northwest of Jerusalem on the way to Joppa.

15 tn Grk "Do not delay to come to us." It is somewhat smoother to say in English, "Come to us without delay."

16 tn Grk "who." The relative clause makes for awkward English style here, so the following clause was made coordinate with the conjunction "and" supplied in place of the Greek relative pronoun.

17 tn The participle παραγενόμενον (paragenomenon) is taken temporally.

18 tn Grk "and all." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

19 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

20 tn Or "shirts" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). The name for this garment (χιτών, chitōn) presents some difficulty in translation. Most modern readers would not understand what a 'tunic' was any more than they would be familiar with a 'chiton.' On the other hand attempts to find a modern equivalent are also a problem: "shirt" conveys the idea of a much shorter garment that covers only the upper body, and "undergarment" (given the styles of modern underwear) is more misleading still. "Tunic" was therefore employed, but with a note to explain its nature.

21 tn Grk "and garments," referring here to other types of clothing besides the tunics just mentioned.

22 tn The verb ἐποίει (epoiei) has been translated as a customary imperfect.

23 tn Grk "Peter, sending them all outside, knelt down." The participle ἐκβαλών (ekbalōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

24 tn Grk "and kneeling down," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more. Instead the "and" is placed before the verb προσηύξατο (prosēuxato, "and prayed"). The participle θείς (theis) is taken as a participle of attendant circumstance.

25 tn Grk "and turning." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

26 sn She sat up. This event is told much like Luke 8:49-56 and Mark 5:35-43. Peter's ministry mirrored that of Jesus.

27 tn Grk "Giving her his hand, he helped her." The participle δούς (dous) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

28 tn Grk "Then calling the saints...he presented her." The participle φωνήσας (phōnēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style; it could also be taken temporally ("After he called").

29 tn Or "known all over." BDAG 511 s.v. κατά A.1.c. has "became known throughout all Joppa" for γνωστὸν γενέσθαι καθ' ὅλης Ἰόππης (gnōston genesthai kath' holēs Ioppēs).

30 sn This became known...many believed in the Lord. This is a "sign" miracle that pictures how the Lord can give life.

31 tn Grk "So it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

32 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn Grk "with a certain Simon."

34 tn Or "with a certain Simon Berseus." Although most modern English translations treat βυρσεῖ (bursei) as Simon's profession ("Simon the tanner"), it is possible that the word is actually Simon's surname ("Simon Berseus" or "Simon Tan-

Peter Visits Cornelius

10:1 Now there was a man in Caesarea[1] named Cornelius, a centurion[2] of what was known as the Italian Cohort.[3] 10:2 He[4] was a devout, God-fearing man,[5] as was all his household; he did many acts of charity for the people[6] and prayed to God regularly. 10:3 About three o'clock one afternoon[7] he saw clearly in a vision an angel of God[8] who came in[9] and said to him, "Cornelius." 10:4 Staring at him and becoming greatly afraid, Cornelius[10] replied,[11] "What is it, Lord?" The angel[12] said to him, "Your prayers and your acts of charity[13] have gone up as a memorial[14] before God. 10:5 Now[15] send men to Joppa[16] and summon a man named Simon,[17] who is called Peter. 10:6 This man is staying as a guest with a man named Simon, a tanner,[18] whose house is by the sea." 10:7 When the angel who had spoken to him departed, Cornelius[19] called two of his personal servants[20] and a devout soldier from among those who served him,[21] 10:8 and when he had explained everything to them, he sent them to Joppa.

10:9 About noon[22] the next day, while they were on their way and approaching[23] the city, Peter went up on the roof[24] to pray. 10:10 He became hungry and wanted to eat, but while they were preparing the meal, a trance came over him.[25] 10:11 He[26] saw heaven[27] opened[28] and an ner"). BDAG 185 s.v. βυρσεύς regards it as a surname. See also MM 118.

1 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). It was known as "Caesarea by the sea" (BDAG 499 s.v. Καισάρεια 2). Largely Gentile, it was a center of Roman administration and the location of many of Herod the Great's building projects (Josephus, Ant. 15.9.6 [15.331-341]).

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

2 sn A centurion was a noncommissioned officer in the Roman army or one of the auxiliary territorial armies, commanding a centuria of (nominally) 100 men. The responsibilities of centurions were broadly similar to modern junior officers, but there was a wide gap in social status between them and officers, and relatively few were promoted beyond the rank of senior centurion. The Roman troops stationed in Judea were auxiliaries, who would normally be rewarded with Roman citizenship after 25 years of service. Some of the centurions may have served originally in the Roman legions (regular army) and thus gained their citizenship at enlistment. Others may have inherited it, like Paul.

3 sn A cohort was a Roman military unit of about 600 soldiers, one-tenth of a legion (BDAG 936 s.v. σπεῖρα). The Italian Cohort has been identified as cohors II Italica which is known to have been stationed in Syria in A.D. 88.

4 tn In the Greek text this represents a continuation of the previous sentence. Because of the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

5 sn The description of Cornelius as a devout, God-fearing man probably means that he belonged to the category called "God-fearers," Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 43-44, and Sir 11:17; 27:11; 39:27.

6 tn Or "gave many gifts to the poor." This was known as "giving alms," or acts of mercy (Sir 7:10; BDAG 315-16 s.v. ἐλεημοσύνη).

7 tn Grk "at about the ninth hour of the day." This would be the time for afternoon prayer.

8 tn Or "the angel of God." Linguistically, "angel of God" is the same in both testaments (and thus, he is either "an angel of God" or "the angel of God" in both testaments). For arguments and implications, see ExSyn 252; M. J. Davidson, "Angels," DJG, 9; W. G. MacDonald argues for "an angel" in both testaments: "Christology and 'The Angel of the Lord'," Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation, 324-35.

9 tn The participles εἰσελθόντα (eiselthonta) and εἰπόντα (eiponta) are accusative, and thus best taken as adjectival participles modifying ἄγγελον (angelon): "an angel who came in and said."

10 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Cornelius) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "said," but in response to the angel's address, "replied" is better English style.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Or "your gifts to the needy."

14 sn The language used in the expression gone up as a memorial before God parallels what one would say of acceptable sacrifices (Ps 141:2; Sir 35:6; 50:16).

15 tn Grk "And now." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

16 sn Joppa was a seaport on the Philistine coast, in the same location as modern Jaffa.

17 tn Grk "a certain Simon."

18 tn Or "with a certain Simon Berseus." Although most modern English translations treat βυρσεῖ (bursei) as Simon's profession ("Simon the tanner"), it is possible that the word is actually Simon's surname ("Simon Berseus" or "Simon Tanner"). BDAG 185 s.v. βυρσεύς regards it as a surname. See also MM 118.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Cornelius) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Or "domestic servants." The Greek word here is οἰκέτης (oiketēs), which technically refers to a member of the household, but usually means a household servant (slave) or personal servant rather than a field laborer.

21 tn The meaning of the genitive participle προσκαρτερούντων (proskarterountōn) could either be "a soldier from the ranks of those who served him" (referring to his entire command) or "a soldier from among his personal staff" (referring to a group of soldiers who were his personal attendants). The translation "from among those who served him" is general enough to cover either possibility.

22 tn Grk "about the sixth hour."

23 tn The participles ὁδοιπορούντων (hodoiporountōn, "while they were on their way") and ἐγγιζόντων (engizontōn, "approaching") have been translated as temporal participles.

24 sn Went up on the roof. Most of the roofs in the NT were flat roofs made of pounded dirt, sometimes mixed with lime or stones, supported by heavy wooden beams. They generally had an easy means of access, either a sturdy wooden ladder or stone stairway, sometimes on the outside of the house.

25 tn The traditional translation, "he fell into a trance," is somewhat idiomatic; it is based on the textual variant ἐπέπεσεν (epepesen, "he fell") found in the Byzantine text but almost certainly not original.

26 tn Grk "And he." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

27 tn Or "the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

object something like a large sheet[1] descending,[2] being let down to earth[3] by its four corners. 10:12 In it[4] were all kinds of four-footed animals and reptiles[5] of the earth and wild birds.[6] 10:13 Then[7] a voice said[8] to him, "Get up, Peter; slaughter[9] and eat!" 10:14 But Peter said, "Certainly not, Lord, for I have never eaten anything defiled and ritually unclean!"[10] 10:15 The voice[11] spoke to him again, a second time, "What God has made clean, you must not consider[12] ritually unclean!"[13] 10:16 This happened three times, and immediately the object was taken up into heaven.[14]

10:17 Now while Peter was puzzling over[15] what the vision he had seen could signify, the men sent by Cornelius had learned where Simon's house was[16] and approached[17] the gate. 10:18 They[18] called out to ask if Simon, known as Peter,[19] was staying there as a guest. 10:19 While Peter was still thinking seriously about[20] the vision, the Spirit said to him, "Look! Three men are looking for you. 10:20 But get up,[21] go down, and accompany them without hesitation,[22] because I have sent them." 10:21 So Peter went down[23] to the men and said, "Here I am,[24] the person you're looking for. Why have you come?" 10:22 They said, "Cornelius the centurion,[25] a righteous[26] and God-fearing man, well spoken of by the whole Jewish nation,[27] was directed by a holy angel to summon you to his house and to hear a message[28] from you." 10:23 So Peter[29] invited them in and entertained them as guests.

1 tn Or "a large linen cloth" (the term was used for the sail of a ship; BDAG 693 s.v. ὀθόνη).

2 tn Or "coming down."

3 tn Or "to the ground."

4 tn Grk "in which." The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "it," and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style.

5 tn Or "snakes." Grk "creeping things." According to L&N 4.51, in most biblical contexts the term (due to the influence of Hebrew classifications such as Gen 1:25-26, 30) included small four-footed animals like rats, mice, frogs, toads, salamanders, and lizards. In this context, however, where "creeping things" are contrasted with "four-footed animals," the English word "reptiles," which primarily but not exclusively designates snakes, is probably more appropriate. See also Gen 6:20, as well as the law making such creatures unclean food in Lev 11:2-47.

6 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

7 tn Grk "And there came." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

8 tn Grk "a voice to him"; the word "said" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

9 tn Or "kill." Traditionally θῦσον (thuson) is translated "kill," but in the case of animals intended for food, "slaughter" is more appropriate.

10 tn Possibly there is a subtle distinction in meaning between κοινός (koinos) and ἀκάθαρτος (akathartos) here, but according to L&N 53.39 it is difficult to determine precise differences in meaning based on existing contexts.

sn Peter insisted he would not violate the law by eating anything defiled and ritually unclean. These food laws were one of the practices that distinguished Jews from their Gentile neighbors. The practice made table fellowship with Gentiles awkward. For an example of Jewish attitudes to this, see Dan 1:8-16; 1 Macc 1:41-64; Letter of Aristeas 142; Tacitus, History 5.5.

11 tn Grk "And the voice." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

12 tn Or "declare."

13 sn For the significance of this vision see Mark 7:14-23; Rom 14:14; Eph 2:11-22. God directed this change in practice.

14 tn Or "into the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

15 tn Or "was greatly confused over." The term means to be perplexed or at a loss (BDAG 235 s.v. διαπορέω).

16 tn Grk "having learned." The participle διερωτήσαντες (dierōtēsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

17 tn BDAG 418 s.v. ἐφίστημι 1 has "ἐπί τι approach or stand by someth. (Sir 41:24) Ac 10:17."

sn As Peter puzzled over the meaning of the vision, the messengers from Cornelius approached the gate. God's direction here had a sense of explanatory timing.

18 tn Grk "and." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun by supplying the pronoun "they" as the subject of the following verb.

19 tn Grk "Simon, the one called Peter." This qualification was necessary because the owner of the house was also named Simon (Acts 9:43).

20 tn The translation "think seriously about" for διενθυμέομαι (dienthumeomai) is given in L&N 30.2. Peter was "pondering" the vision (BDAG 244 s.v.).

21 tn Grk "But getting up, go down." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

22 tn The term means "without doubting" or "without deliberation." It is a term of conscience and discernment. In effect, Peter is to listen to them rather than hesitate (BDAG 231 s.v. διακρίνω 6).

23 tn Grk "Peter going down to the men, said." The participle καταβάς (katabas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

24 tn Grk "Behold, it is I whom you seek," or "Behold, I am the one you seek." "Here I am" is used to translate ἰδοὺ ἐγώ εἰμι (idou egō eimi).

25 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

26 tn Or "just."

27 tn The phrase τοῦ ἔθνους τῶν Ἰουδαίων (tou ethnous tōn Ioudaiōn) is virtually a technical term for the Jewish nation (1 Macc 10:25; 11:30, 33; Josephus, Ant. 14.10.22 [14.248]). "All the Jewish people," while another possible translation of the Greek phrase, does not convey the technical sense of a reference to the nation in English.

sn The long introduction of Cornelius by his messengers is an attempt to commend this Gentile to his Jewish counterpart, which would normally be important to do in the culture of the time.

28 tn Grk "hear words."

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn When Peter entertained them as guests, he performed a culturally significant act denoting acceptance.

On the next day he got up and set out[1] with them, and some of the brothers from Joppa[2] accompanied him. 10:24 The following day[3] he entered Caesarea.[4] Now Cornelius was waiting anxiously[5] for them and had called together his relatives and close friends. 10:25 So when[6] Peter came in, Cornelius met[7] him, fell[8] at his feet, and worshiped[9] him. 10:26 But Peter helped him up,[10] saying, "Stand up. I too am a mere mortal."[11] 10:27 Peter[12] continued talking with him as he went in, and he found many people gathered together.[13] 10:28 He said to them, "You know that[14] it is unlawful[15] for a Jew[16] to associate with or visit a Gentile,[17] yet God has shown me that I should call no person[18] defiled or ritually unclean.[19] 10:29 Therefore when you sent for me,[20] I came without any objection. Now may I ask why[21] you sent for me?" 10:30 Cornelius[22] replied,[23] "Four days ago at this very hour, at three o'clock in the afternoon,[24] I was praying in my house, and suddenly[25] a man in shining clothing stood before me 10:31 and said, 'Cornelius, your prayer has been heard and your acts of charity[26] have been remembered before God.[27] 10:32 Therefore send to Joppa and summon Simon, who is called Peter. This man is staying as a guest in the house of Simon the tanner,[28] by the sea.' 10:33 Therefore I sent for you at once, and you were kind enough to come.[29] So now we are all here in the presence of God[30] to listen[31] to everything the Lord has commanded you to say to us."[32]

10:34 Then Peter started speaking:[33] "I now truly understand that God does not show favoritism in dealing with people,[34] 10:35 but in every

1 tn Or "went forth."

2 sn Some of the brothers from Joppa. As v. 45 makes clear, there were Jewish Christians in this group of witnesses.

3 tn Grk "On the next day," but since this phrase has already occurred in v. 23, it would be redundant in English to use it again here.

4 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi).

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

5 tn Normally προσδοκάω (prosdokaō) means "to wait with apprehension or anxiety for something," often with the implication of impending danger or trouble (L&N 25.228), but in this context the anxiety Cornelius would have felt came from the importance of the forthcoming message as announced by the angel.

6 tn Grk "So it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "meeting him." The participle συναντήσας (sunantēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

8 tn Grk "falling at his feet, worshiped." The participle πεσών (pesōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

9 sn When Cornelius worshiped Peter, it showed his piety and his respect for Peter, but it was an act based on ignorance, as Peter's remark in v. 26 indicates.

10 tn BDAG 271 s.v. ἐγείρω 3 has "raise, help to rise.... Stretched out Ac 10:26."

11 tn Although it is certainly true that Peter was a "man," here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) has been translated as "mere mortal" because the emphasis in context is not on Peter's maleness, but his humanity. Contrary to what Cornelius thought, Peter was not a god or an angelic being, but a mere mortal.

12 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

13 tn Or "many people assembled."

14 tn Here ὡς (hōs) is used like ὅτι (hoti) to introduce indirect discourse (cf. BDAG 1105 s.v. ὡς 5).

15 tn This term is used of wanton or callously lawless acts (BDAG 24 s.v. ἀθέμιτος).

16 tn Grk "a Jewish man" (ἀνδρὶ Ἰουδαίῳ, andri Ioudaiō).

17 tn Grk "a foreigner," but in this context, "a non-Jew," that is, a Gentile. This term speaks of intimate association (BDAG 556 s.v. κολλάω 2.b.α). On this Jewish view, see John 18:28, where a visit to a Gentile residence makes a Jewish person unclean.

18 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos).

19 tn Possibly there is a subtle distinction in meaning between κοινός (koinos) and ἀκάθαρτος (akathartos) here, but according to L&N 53.39 it is difficult to determine precise differences in meaning based on existing contexts.

sn God has shown me...unclean. Peter sees the significance of his vision as not about food, but about open fellowship between Jewish Christians and Gentiles.

20 tn Grk "Therefore when I was sent for." The passive participle μεταπεμφθείς (metapemphtheis) has been taken temporally and converted to an active construction which is less awkward in English.

21 tn Grk "ask for what reason."

22 tn Grk "And Cornelius." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

23 tn Grk "said."

24 tn Grk "at the ninth hour." Again, this is the hour of afternoon prayer.

25 tn Grk "and behold." The interjection ἰδού (idou) is difficult at times to translate into English. Here it has been translated as "suddenly" to convey the force of Cornelius' account of the angel's appearance.

26 tn Or "your gifts to the needy."

27 sn This statement is a paraphrase rather than an exact quotation of Acts 10:4.

28 tn Or "with a certain Simon Berseus." Although most modern English translations treat βυρσεῖ (bursei) as Simon's profession ("Simon the tanner"), it is possible that the word is actually Simon's surname ("Simon Berseus" or "Simon Tanner"). BDAG 185 s.v. βυρσεύς regards it as a surname.

29 tn Grk "you have done well by coming." The idiom καλῶς ποιεῖν (kalōs poiein) is translated "be kind enough to do someth." by BDAG 505-6 s.v. καλῶς 4.a. The participle παραγενόμενος (paragenomenos) has been translated as an English infinitive due to the nature of the English idiom ("kind enough to" + infinitive).

30 tn The translation "we are here in the presence of God" for ἐνώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ πάρεσμεν (enōpion tou theou paresmen) is given by BDAG 773 s.v. πάρειμι 1.a.

31 tn Or "to hear everything."

32 tn The words "to say to us" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Cornelius knows Peter is God's representative, bringing God's message.

33 tn Grk "Opening his mouth Peter said" (a Semitic idiom for beginning to speak in a somewhat formal manner). The participle ἀνοίξας (anoixas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

34 tn Grk "God is not one who is a respecter of persons," that is, "God is not one to show partiality" (cf. BDAG 887 s.v. προσωπολήμπτης). L&N 88.239 translates this verse "I realize that God does not show favoritism (in dealing with peo-nation[1] the person who fears him[2] and does what is right[3] is welcomed before him. 10:36 You know[4] the message[5] he sent to the people[6] of Israel, proclaiming the good news of peace[7] through[8] Jesus Christ[9] (he is Lord[10] of all) – 10:37 you know what happened throughout Judea, beginning from Galilee after the baptism that John announced:[11] 10:38 with respect to Jesus from Nazareth,[12] that[13] God anointed him with the Holy Spirit and with power. He[14] went around doing good and healing all who were oppressed by the devil,[15] because God was with him.[16] 10:39 We[17] are witnesses of all the things he did both in Judea[18] and in Jerusalem.[19] They[20] killed him by hanging him on a tree,[21] 10:40 but[22] God raised him up on the third day and caused him to be seen,[23] 10:41 not by all the people, but by us, the witnesses God had already chosen,[24] who ate and drank[25] with him after he rose from the dead. 10:42 He[26] commanded us to preach to the people and to warn[27] them[28] that he is the one[29] appointed[30] by God as judge[31] of the living and the dead. 10:43 About him all the prophets testify,[32] that everyone who believes in him receives forgiveness of sins[33] through his name."

The Gentiles Receive the Holy Spirit

10:44 While Peter was still speaking these words, the Holy Spirit fell on[34] all those who heard the message.[35] 10:45 The[36] circumcised ple)." The underlying Hebrew idiom includes the personal element ("respecter of persons") so the phrase "in dealing with people" is included in the present translation. It fits very well with the following context and serves to emphasize the relational component of God's lack of partiality. The latter is a major theme in the NT: Rom 2:11; Eph 2:11-22; Col 3:25; Jas 2:1; 1 Pet 1:17. This was the lesson of Peter's vision.

[1] sn See Luke 24:47.

[2] tn Or "shows reverence for him."

sn Note how faith and response are linked here by the phrase and does what is right.

[4] tn The subject and verb ("you know") do not actually occur until the following verse, but have been repeated here because of the requirements of English word order.

[5] tn Grk "the word."

[6] tn Grk "to the sons."

[7] sn Peace is a key OT concept: Isa 52:7; Nah 1:15; also for Luke: Luke 1:79; 2:14; Acts 9:31. See also the similar phrase in Eph 2:17.

[8] tn Or "by."

[10] sn He is Lord of all. Though a parenthetical remark, this is the theological key to the speech. Jesus is Lord of all, so the gospel can go to all. The rest of the speech proclaims Jesus' authority.

[11] tn Or "proclaimed."

[12] sn The somewhat awkward naming of Jesus as from Nazareth here is actually emphatic. He is the key subject of these key events.

[13] tn Or "how." The use of ὡς (hōs) as an equivalent to ὅτι (hoti) to introduce indirect or even direct discourse is well documented. BDAG 1105 s.v. ὡς 5 lists Acts 10:28 in this category.

[14] tn Grk "power, who." The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "he," and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

[15] tn The translation "healing all who were oppressed by the devil" is given in L&N 22.22.

sn All who were oppressed by the devil. Note how healing is tied to the cosmic battle present in creation. Christ's power overcomes the devil and his forces, which seek to destroy humanity.

[16] sn See Acts 7:9.

[17] tn Grk "And we." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[18] tn Grk "the land of the Jews," but this is similar to the phrase used as the name of the province of Judea in 1 Macc 8:3 (see BDAG 1093-94 s.v. χώρα 2.b).

[19] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[20] tn Grk "in Jerusalem, whom they killed." The relative pronoun was replaced by the pronoun "him" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

[21] tn Or "by crucifying him" ("hang on a tree" is by the time of the 1st century an idiom for crucifixion). The allusion is to the judgment against Jesus as a rebellious figure, appealing to the language of Deut 21:23. The Jewish leadership has badly "misjudged" Jesus.

[22] tn The conjunction "but" is not in the Greek text, but the contrast is clearly implied in the context. This is technically asyndeton, or lack of a connective, in Greek.

[23] tn Grk "and granted that he should become visible." The literal Greek idiom is somewhat awkward in English. L&N 24.22 offers the translation "caused him to be seen" for this verse.

[24] tn Or "the witnesses God had previously chosen." See Acts 1:8.

[25] sn Ate and drank. See Luke 24:35-49.

[26] tn Grk "and he." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[27] tn The verb διαμαρτύρομαι (diamarturomai) can mean "warn," and such a meaning is highly probable in this context where a reference to the judgment of both the living and the dead is present. The more general meaning "to testify solemnly" does not capture this nuance.

[28] tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[29] tn Grk "that this one is the one," but this is awkward in English and has been simplified to "that he is the one."

[30] tn Or "designated." BDAG 723 s.v. ὁρίζω 2.b has "the one appointed by God as judge" for this phrase.

[31] sn Jesus has divine authority as judge over the living and the dead: Acts 17:26-31; Rom 14:9; 1 Thess 5:9-10; 1 Tim 4:1; 1 Pet 4:5.

[32] tn Or "All the prophets testify about him." Although modern English translations tend to place "about him" after "testify" (so NIV, NRSV) the phrase "about him" has been left at the beginning of v. 43 for emphatic reasons.

[33] sn Forgiveness of sins. See Luke 24:47; also Acts 14:23; 19:4; 9:42; 11:17; 16:31. The gospel is present in the prophetic promise, Rom 1:1-7. The message is in continuity with the ancient hope.

[34] tn Or "came down on." God now acted to confirm the point of Peter's speech.

[35] tn Or "word."

believers[1] who had accompanied Peter were greatly astonished[2] that[3] the gift of the Holy Spirit[4] had been poured out[5] even on the Gentiles, 10:46 for they heard them speaking in tongues and praising[6] God. Then Peter said, 10:47 "No one can withhold the water for these people to be baptized, who have received the Holy Spirit just as we did,[7] can he?"[8] 10:48 So he gave orders to have them baptized[9] in the name of Jesus Christ.[10] Then they asked him to stay for several days.

Peter Defends His Actions to the Jerusalem Church

11:1 Now the apostles and the brothers who were throughout Judea heard that the Gentiles too had accepted[11] the word of God.[12] 11:2 So when Peter went up to Jerusalem,[13] the circumcised believers[14] took issue with[15] him, 11:3 saying, "You went to[16] uncircumcised men and shared a meal with[17] them." 11:4 But Peter began and explained it to them point by point,[18] saying, 11:5 "I was in the city of Joppa praying, and in a trance I saw a vision,[19] an object something like a large sheet descending,[20] being let down from heaven[21] by its four corners, and it came to me. 11:6 As I stared[22] I looked into it and saw four-footed animals of the earth, wild animals, reptiles,[23] and wild birds.[24] 11:7 I also heard a voice saying to me, 'Get up, Peter; slaughter[25] and eat!' 11:8 But I said, 'Certainly not, Lord, for nothing defiled or ritually unclean[26] has ever entered my mouth!' 11:9 But the voice replied a second time from heaven, 'What God has made clean, you must not consider[27] ritually unclean!' 11:10 This happened three times, and then everything was pulled up to heaven again.

1 tn Or "The Jewish Christians"; Grk "The believers from the circumcision."

2 sn The Jewish Christians who were with Peter were greatly astonished because they thought the promise of the Spirit would be limited only to those of Israel. God's plan was taking on fresh dimensions even as it was a reflection of what the prophets had promised.

3 tn Or "because."

4 tn That is, the gift consisting of the Holy Spirit. Here τοῦ πνεύματος (tou pneumatos) is a genitive of apposition; the gift consists of the Spirit.

5 sn The gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out. Compare the account in Acts 2, especially 2:33. Note also Joel 2:17-21 and Acts 11:15-18.

6 tn Or "extolling," "magnifying."

7 tn Grk "just as also we." The auxiliary verb in English must be supplied. This could be either "have" (NIV, NRSV) or "did" (NASB). "Did" is preferred here because the comparison Peter is making concerns not just the fact of the present possession of the Spirit ("they received the Spirit we now possess"), but the manner in which the Gentiles in Cornelius' house received the Spirit ("they received the Spirit in the same manner we did [on the day of Pentecost]").

8 tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' question, "can he?" The question is rhetorical. Peter was saying these Gentiles should be baptized since God had confirmed they were his.

9 tn The Greek construction (passive infinitive with accusative subject) could be translated either "he ordered them to be baptized" or "he ordered that they be baptized," but the implication in English in either case is that Peter was giving orders to the Gentiles in Cornelius' house, telling them to get baptized. It is much more likely in the context that Peter was ordering those Jewish Christians who accompanied him to baptize the new Gentile converts. They would doubtless have still had misgivings even after witnessing the outpouring of the Spirit and hearing the tongues. It took Peter's apostolic authority ("ordered") to convince them to perform the baptisms.

10 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed." Jesus' right to judge as the provider of forgiveness is highlighted here.

11 tn See BDAG 221 s.v. δέχομαι 5 for this translation of ἐδέξαντο (edexanto) here.

12 tn Here the phrase "word of God" is another way to describe the gospel (note the preceding verb ἐδέξαντο, edexanto, "accepted"). The phrase could also be translated "the word [message] from God."

13 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

14 tn Or "the Jewish Christians"; Grk "those of the circumcision." Within the larger group of Christians were some whose loyalties ran along ethnic-religious lines.

15 tn Or "believers disputed with," "believers criticized" (BDAG 231 s.v. διακρίνω 5.b).

16 tn Or "You were a guest in the home of" (according to L&N 23.12).

17 tn Or "and ate with." It was table fellowship and the possibility of eating unclean food that disturbed them.

18 tn Or "to them in logical sequence," "to them in order." BDAG 490 s.v. καθεξῆς has "explain to someone point by point" for this phrase. This is the same term used in Luke 1:3.

19 tn This term describes a supernatural vision and reflects a clear distinction from something imagined (BDAG 718 s.v. ὅραμα 1). Peter repeated the story virtually word for word through v. 13. The repetition with this degree of detail shows the event's importance.

20 tn Or "coming down."

21 tn Or "the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

22 tn Grk "Staring I looked into it." The participle ἀτενίσας (atenisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

23 tn Or "snakes." Grk "creeping things." According to L&N 4.51, in most biblical contexts the term (due to the influence of Hebrew classifications such as Gen 1:25-26, 30) included small four-footed animals like rats, mice, frogs, toads, salamanders, and lizards. In this context, however, where "creeping things" are contrasted with "four-footed animals," the English word "reptiles," which primarily but not exclusively designates snakes, is probably more appropriate.

24 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

25 tn Or "kill." Traditionally θῦσον (thuson) is translated "kill," but in the case of animals intended for food, "slaughter" is more appropriate.

26 tn Possibly there is a subtle distinction in meaning between κοινός (koinos) and ἀκάθαρτος (akathartos) here, but according to L&N 53.39 it is difficult to determine precise differences in meaning based on existing contexts. The sentiment Peter expressed is like Ezek 4:14.

27 tn Or "declare." The wording matches Acts 10:15.

11:11 At that very moment,[1] three men sent to me from Caesarea[2] approached[3] the house where we were staying.[4] 11:12 The Spirit told me to accompany them without hesitation. These six brothers[5] also went with me, and we entered the man's house. 11:13 He informed us how he had seen an angel standing in his house and saying, 'Send to Joppa and summon Simon, who is called Peter, 11:14 who will speak a message[6] to you by which you and your entire household will be saved.' 11:15 Then as I began to speak, the Holy Spirit fell on[7] them just as he did[8] on us at the beginning.[9] 11:16 And I remembered the word of the Lord,[10] as he used to say,[11] 'John baptized with water, but you will be baptized with the Holy Spirit.'[12] 11:17 Therefore if God[13] gave them the same gift[14] as he also gave us after believing[15] in the Lord Jesus Christ,[16] who was I to hinder[17] God?" 11:18 When they heard this,[18] they ceased their objections[19] and praised[20] God, saying, "So then, God has granted the repentance[21] that leads to life even to the Gentiles."[22]

Activity in the Church at Antioch

11:19 Now those who had been scattered because of the persecution that took place over Stephen[23] went as far as[24] Phoenicia,[25] Cyprus,[26]

[1] tn Grk "And behold."

[2] sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[3] tn See BDAG 418 s.v. ἐφίστημι 1 for this meaning for ἐπέστησαν (epestēsan) here.

[4] tn The word "staying" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

[5] sn Six witnesses is three times more than what would normally be required. They could confirm the events were not misrepresented by Peter.

[6] tn Grk "words" (ῥήματα, rhēmata), but in this context the overall message is meant rather than the individual words.

[8] tn The words "he did" are not in the Greek text but are implied. They form an ellipsis which must be supplied for the modern English reader. Some modern translations supply "it" rather than "he" because the gender of πνεῦμα (pneuma) in Greek is neuter, but there are sufficient NT contexts that use masculine pronouns to refer to the Spirit to justify the use of a masculine pronoun here in the translation.

[9] sn At the beginning is an allusion to Acts 2 and Pentecost. The beginning is a way to refer to the start of the period of the realization of Jesus' promise in Luke 24:49 and Acts 1:8. Peter was arguing that God gave Gentiles the same benefits he gave the Jews at the start of their mission.

[10] sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; here and in Luke 22:61, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

[11] tn The imperfect verb ἔλεγεν (elegen) is taken as a customary imperfect.

[12] sn John...Spirit. This remark repeats Acts 1:5.

[13] tc Codex Bezae (D) and {a few other Western witnesses} here lack ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God"), perhaps because these scribes considered the Holy Spirit to be the gift of Christ rather than the gift of God; thus leaving the subject implicit would naturally draw the reader back to v. 16 to see the Lord Jesus as the bestower of the Spirit.

[14] sn That is, the same gift of the Holy Spirit.

[15] tn Or "gave us when we believed"; or "gave us after we believed"; or "gave us who believed"; or "gave them when they believed the same gift as he also gave us." The aorist dative plural participle πιστεύσασιν (pisteusasin) can be understood in several different ways: (1) It could modify ἡμῖν (hēmin, "us") or αὐτοῖς (autois, "them"). Proximity (it immediately follows ἡμῖν) would suggest that it belongs with ἡμῖν, so the last option ("gave them when they believed the same gift he also gave us") is less likely. (2) The participle could be either adverbial or adjectival, modifying ἡμῖν. This decision is primarily a contextual one. The point Peter made is not whether or not the Gentiles believed, since both groups ("us" and "they") had believed in the Lord Jesus Christ. The point was whether or not the Gentiles received the Spirit when they believed, just as Jewish Christians had received the Spirit on the day of Pentecost when they believed. Translated as an adjectival participle, πιστεύσασιν only affirms the fact of belief, however, and raises somewhat of a theological problem if one realizes, "Would God have given the Gentiles the Spirit if they had not believed?" (In other words, belief in itself is a theological prerequisite for receiving the Spirit. As such, in the case of the Gentiles, it is assumed.) Thus in context it makes more sense to understand the participle πιστεύσασιν as adverbial, related to the time of belief in connection with the giving of the Spirit. (3) The participle πιστεύσασιν as a temporal participle can refer to action antecedent to the action of the main verb ἔδωκεν (edōken) or contemporaneous with it. Logically, at least, the gift of the Spirit followed belief in the case of the original Christians, who had believed before the day of Pentecost. In the case of Cornelius and his household, belief and the reception of the Spirit were virtually simultaneous. One can argue that Peter is "summarizing" the experience of Jewish Christians, and therefore the actions of belief and reception of the Spirit, while historically separate, have been "telescoped" into one ("gave them the same gift as he gave us when we believed"), but to be technically accurate the participle πιστεύσασιν should be translated "gave them the same gift as he also gave us after we believed." A number of these problems can be avoided, however, by using a translation in English that maintains some of the ambiguity of the Greek original. Thus "if God gave them the same gift as he also gave us after believing" is used, where the phrase "after believing" can refer either to "them" or to "us," or both.

[17] tn Or "prevent," "forbid" (BDAG 580 s.v. κωλύω 1.a). Peter's point is that he will not stand in the way of God.

[18] tn Grk "these things."

[19] tn Or "became silent," but this would create an apparent contradiction with the subsequent action of praising God. The point, in context, is that they ceased objecting to what Peter had done.

[20] tn Or "glorified."

[21] sn Here the summary phrase for responding to the gospel is the repentance that leads to life. Note how the presence of life is tied to the presence of the Spirit (cf. John 4:7-42; 7:37-39).

[22] sn In the Greek text the phrase even to the Gentiles is in an emphatic position.

[23] sn The phrase over Stephen means in connection with Stephen's death. See Acts 8:1b-3.

[24] tn Or "finally reached." The translations "went as far as" and "finally reached" for διῆλθον (diēlthon) in this verse are given in L&N 15.17.

[25] sn Phoenicia was an area along the Mediterranean coast north of Palestine.

[26] tn Grk "and Cyprus," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

sn Cyprus was a large island in the Mediterranean off the and Antioch,[1] speaking the message[2] to no one but Jews. 11:20 But there were some men from Cyprus[3] and Cyrene[4] among them who came[5] to Antioch[6] and began to speak to the Greeks[7] too, proclaiming the good news of the Lord Jesus. 11:21 The[8] hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number who believed[9] turned[10] to the Lord. 11:22 A report[11] about them came to the attention[12] of the church in Jerusalem,[13] and they sent Barnabas[14] to Antioch.[15] 11:23 When[16] he came and saw the grace of God, he rejoiced and encouraged them all to remain true[17] to the Lord with devoted hearts,[18] 11:24 because he was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and of faith, and a significant number of people[19] were brought to the Lord. 11:25 Then Barnabas departed for Tarsus to look for Saul, 11:26 and when he found him, he brought him to Antioch.[20] So[21] for a whole year Barnabas and Saul[22] met with the church and taught a significant number of people.[23] Now it was in Antioch[24] that the disciples were first called Christians.[25]

Famine Relief for Judea

11:27 At that time[26] some[27] prophets[28] came down[29] from Jerusalem[30] to Antioch.[31] 11:28 One of them, named Agabus, got up[32] and predicted[33] by the Spirit that a severe[34] famine[35] was about to come over the whole inhabited world.[36] south coast of Asia Minor.

[1] sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia). This was probably the third largest city in the Greco-Roman world (Alexandria in Egypt was the second largest, and Rome the largest) and was the seat of government in Syria. Five miles away was a major temple to Artemis, Apollo, and Astarte, major pagan deities.

map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

[2] tn Grk "word."

[3] sn Cyprus was a large island in the Mediterranean off the south coast of Asia Minor.

[4] sn Cyrene was a city on the northern African coast west of Egypt.

[5] tn Grk "among them, coming to Antioch began to speak." The participle ἐλθόντες (elthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[6] sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia). See the note in 11:19.

[7] sn The statement that some men from Cyprus and Cyrene…began to speak to the Greeks shows that Peter's experience of reaching out to the Gentiles was not unique.

[8] tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[9] tn The participle πιστεύσας (pisteusas) is articular and thus cannot be adverbial. It is adjectival, modifying ἀριθμός (arithmos), but has been translated into English as a relative clause ("who believed").

[10] sn Again, the expression turned is a summary term for responding to the gospel.

[11] tn Grk "Word."

[12] tn Grk "was heard in the ears," an idiom. L&N 24.67 states that the idiom means "to hear in secret" (which it certainly does in Matt 10:27), but secrecy does not seem to be part of the context here, and there is no particular reason to suggest the report was made in secret.

[13] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[14] tc ‡ Most MSS read the infinitive "to travel" after "Barnabas." διελθεῖν (dielthein) is found before ἕως (heōs) in D E Ψ 33 𝔐 and some versional MSS. It is lacking in 𝔓[74] ℵ A B 81 1739 pc and some versional MSS. Although the infinitive with ἕως fits Lukan style, it has the appearance of a scribal clarification. The infinitive has the earmarks of a Western expansion on the text and thus is unlikely to be original. NA[27] has the infinitive in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

[15] sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia). See the note in 11:19. Again the Jerusalem church exercised an oversight role.

[16] tn Grk "Antioch, who when." The relative pronoun was omitted and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

[17] tn BDAG 883 s.v. προσμένω 1.a.β has "remain true to the Lord" for προσμένειν (prosmenein) in this verse.

sn He…encouraged them all to remain true to the Lord. The call to faithfulness is frequent in Acts (2:40; 14:22; 15:32; 16:39; 20:1-2).

[18] tn Grk "with purpose of heart"; BDAG 869 s.v. πρόθεσις 2.a translates this phrase "purpose of heart, i.e. devotion" here.

[19] tn Grk "a significant crowd."

[20] sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia). See the note in 11:19.

[21] tn Grk "So it happened that" The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[22] tn Grk "year they"; the referents (Barnabas and Saul) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

[23] tn Grk "a significant crowd."

[24] sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia). See the note in 11:19.

[25] sn The term Christians appears only here, in Acts 26:28, and 1 Pet 4:16 in the NT.

[26] tn Grk "In these days," but the dative generally indicates a specific time.

[27] tn The word "some" is not in the Greek text, but is usually used in English when an unspecified number is mentioned.

[28] sn Prophets are mentioned only here and in 13:1 and 21:10 in Acts.

[29] sn Came down from Jerusalem. Antioch in Syria lies due north of Jerusalem. In Western languages it is common to speak of north as "up" and south as "down," but the NT maintains the Hebrew idiom which speaks of any direction away from Jerusalem as down (since Mount Zion was thought of in terms of altitude).

[32] tn Grk "getting up, predicted." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[33] tn Or "made clear"; Grk "indicated beforehand" (BDAG 920 s.v. σημαίνω 2).

[36] tn Or "whole Roman Empire." While the word οἰκουμένη (oikoumenē) does occasionally refer specifically to the Roman Empire, BDAG 699 s.v. οἰκουνένη 2 does not list this passage (only Acts 24:5 and 17:6).

(This[1] took place during the reign of Claudius.)[2] 11:29 So the disciples, each in accordance with his financial ability,[3] decided[4] to send relief[5] to the brothers living in Judea. 11:30 They did so,[6] sending their financial aid[7] to the elders by Barnabas and Saul.

James is Killed and Peter Imprisoned

12:1 About that time King Herod[8] laid hands on[9] some from the church to harm them.[10] 12:2 He had James, the brother of John, executed with a sword.[11] 12:3 When he saw that this pleased the Jews,[12] he proceeded to arrest Peter too. (This took place during the feast of Unleavened Bread.)[13] 12:4 When he had seized him, he put him in prison, handing him over to four squads[14] of soldiers to guard him. Herod[15] planned[16] to bring him out for public trial[17] after the Passover. 12:5 So Peter was kept in prison, but those in the church were earnestly[18] praying to God for him.[19] 12:6 On that very night before Herod was going to bring him out for trial,[20] Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains, while[21] guards in front of the door were keeping watch[22] over the prison. 12:7 Suddenly[23] an angel of the Lord[24] appeared, and a light shone in the prison cell. He struck[25] Peter on the side and woke him up, saying, "Get up quickly!" And the chains fell off Peter's[26] wrists.[27] 12:8 The angel said to him, "Fasten your belt[28] and put on your sandals." Peter[29] did so. Then the angel[30] said to him, "Put on your cloak[31] and follow me." 12:9 Peter[32] went out[33]

---

[1] tn Grk "world, which." The relative pronoun ("which") was replaced by the demonstrative pronoun "this" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

[2] sn This is best taken as a parenthetical note by the author. Claudius was the Roman emperor Tiberius Claudius Nero Germanicus, known as Claudius, who ruled from A.D. 41-54.

[3] tn So BDAG 410 s.v. εὐπορέω.

[4] tn Or "determined," "resolved."

[5] tn Grk "to send [something] for a ministry," but today it is common to speak of sending relief for victims of natural disasters.

sn The financial relief reflects the oneness of the church, meeting the needs of another (even racially distinct) community. Jerusalem, having ministered to them, now received ministry back. A later collection from Greece is noted in Rom 15:25-27, but it reflects the same spirit as this gift.

[6] tn Grk "Judea, which they did." The relative pronoun was omitted and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

[7] tn The words "their financial aid" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[8] sn King Herod was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod I (Herod the Great). His mediocre career is summarized in Josephus, Ant. 18-19. This event took place in A.D. 42 or 43.

[9] tn Or "King Herod had some from the church arrested."

[10] tn Or "to cause them injury."

[11] sn The expression executed with a sword probably refers to a beheading. James was the first known apostolic martyr (Eusebius, Eccl. Hist. 2.9.1-3). On James, not the Lord's brother, see Luke 5:10; 6:14. This death ended a short period of peace noted in Acts 9:31 after the persecution mentioned in 8:1-3.

[12] tn This could be a reference to the Jewish people (so CEV) or to the Jewish leaders (so NLT). The statement in v. 4 that Herod intended to bring Peter "out to the people" (i.e., for a public trial) may suggest the former is somewhat more likely.

[13] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[14] sn Four squads of soldiers. Each squad was a detachment of four soldiers.

[15] tn Grk "guard him, planning to bring him out." The Greek construction continues with a participle (βουλόμενος, boulomenos) and an infinitive (ἀναγαγεῖν, anagagein), but this creates an awkward and lengthy sentence in English. Thus a reference to Herod was introduced as subject and the participle translated as a finite verb ("Herod planned").

[16] tn Or "intended"; Grk "wanted."

[17] tn Grk "to bring him out to the people," but in this context a public trial (with certain condemnation as the result) is doubtless what Herod planned. L&N 15.176 translates this phrase "planning to bring him up for a public trial after the Passover."

[18] tn Or "constantly." This term also appears in Luke 22:14 and Acts 26:7.

[19] tn Grk "but earnest prayer was being made by the church to God for him." The order of the clauses has been rearranged to follow English style, and the somewhat awkward passive "prayer was being made" has been changed to the simpler active verb "were praying." Luke portrays what follows as an answer to prayer.

[20] tn Grk "was going to bring him out," but the upcoming trial is implied. See Acts 12:4.

[21] tn Grk "two chains, and." Logically it makes better sense to translate this as a temporal clause, although technically it is a coordinate clause in Greek.

[22] tn Or "were guarding."

[23] tn Grk "And behold." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here. The interjection ἰδού (idou), often difficult to translate into English, expresses the suddenness of the angel's appearance.

[24] tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 5:19.

[25] tn Grk "striking the side of Peter, he awoke him saying." The term refers to a push or a light tap (BDAG 786 s.v. πατάσσω 1.a). The participle πατάξας (pataxas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[26] tn Grk "his"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[27] tn Grk "the hands," but the wrist was considered a part of the hand.

[28] tn While ζώννυμι (zōnnumi) sometimes means "to dress," referring to the fastening of the belt or sash as the final act of getting dressed, in this context it probably does mean "put on your belt" since in the conditions of a prison Peter had probably not changed into a different set of clothes to sleep. More likely he had merely removed his belt or sash, which the angel now told him to replace. The translation "put on your belt" is given by L&N 49.14 for this verse. The archaic English "girdle" for the sash or belt has an entirely different meaning today.

[29] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[30] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn Or "outer garment."

and followed him;[1] he did not realize that what was happening through the angel was real,[2] but thought he was seeing a vision. 12:10 After they had passed the first and second guards,[3] they came to the iron[4] gate leading into the city. It[5] opened for them by itself,[6] and they went outside and walked down one narrow street,[7] when at once the angel left him. 12:11 When[8] Peter came to himself, he said, "Now I know for certain that the Lord has sent his angel and rescued[9] me from the hand[10] of Herod[11] and from everything the Jewish people[12] were expecting to happen."

12:12 When Peter[13] realized this, he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John Mark,[14] where many people had gathered together and were praying. 12:13 When he knocked at the door of the outer gate, a slave girl named Rhoda answered.[15] 12:14 When she recognized Peter's voice, she was so overjoyed she did not open the gate, but ran back in and told[16] them[17] that Peter was standing at the gate. 12:15 But they said to her, "You've lost your mind!"[18] But she kept insisting that it was Peter,[19] and they kept saying,[20] "It is his angel!"[21] 12:16 Now Peter continued knocking, and when they opened the door[22] and saw him, they were greatly astonished.[23] 12:17 He motioned to them[24] with his hand to be quiet and then related[25] how the Lord had brought[26] him out of the prison. He said, "Tell James and the brothers these things," and then he left and went to another place.[27]

12:18 At daybreak[28] there was great consternation[29] among the soldiers over what had become of Peter. 12:19 When Herod[30] had searched[31] for him and did not find him, he questioned[32] the guards and commanded that they be

1 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

2 tn Grk "what was done through the angel was a reality" (see BDAG 43 s.v. ἀληθής 3).

3 tn Or perhaps, "guard posts."

4 sn The iron gate shows how important security was here. This door was more secure than one made of wood (which would be usual).

5 tn Grk "which." The relative pronoun ("which") was replaced by the pronoun "it," and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek.

6 tn The Greek term here, αὐτομάτη (automatē), indicates something that happens without visible cause (BDAG 152 s.v. αὐτόματος).

7 tn Or "lane," "alley" (BDAG 907 s.v. ῥύμη).

8 tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

9 tn Or "delivered."

10 sn Here the hand of Herod is a metaphor for Herod's power or control.

11 sn King Herod was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod I (Herod the Great).

12 sn Luke characterizes the opposition here as the Jewish people, including their leadership (see 12:3).

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "John who was also called Mark."

sn John Mark becomes a key figure in Acts 12:25; 13:5, 13; 15:37-39.

15 tn Or "responded."

16 tn Or "informed."

17 tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

18 sn "You've lost your mind!" Such a response to the miraculous is not unusual in Luke-Acts. See Luke 24:11; Acts 26:25. The term μαίνομαι (mainomai) can have the idea of being "raving mad" or "totally irrational" (BDAG 610 s.v.). It is a strong expression.

19 tn Grk "she kept insisting that the situation was thus" (cf. BDAG 422 s.v. ἔχω 10.a). Most translations supply a less awkward English phrase like "it was so"; the force of her insistence, however, is that "it was Peter," which was the point under dispute.

20 tn The two imperfect tense verbs, διϊσχυρίζετο (diischurizeto) and ἔλεγον (elegon), are both taken iteratively. The picture is thus virtually a shouting match between Rhoda and the rest of the believers.

21 sn The assumption made by those inside, "It is his angel," seems to allude to the idea of an attending angel (cf. Gen 48:16 LXX; Matt 18:10; Test. Jacob 1:10).

22 tn The words "the door" are not in the Greek text, but are implied (see Acts 12:13).

23 sn That they were greatly astonished is a common response in Luke-Acts to God's work (Luke 8:56; Acts 2:7, 12; 8:13; 9:21; 10:45).

24 tn Or "He gave them a signal." Grk "Giving them a signal... he related to them." The participle κατασείσας (kataseisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tc ‡ Most MSS, including some of the most important ones (B D E Ψ 𝔐 sy), read αὐτοῖς (autois, "to them") here, while some excellent and early witnesses (𝔓[45vid,74vid] ℵ A 33 81 945 1739 pc) lack the pronoun. Although it is possible that the pronoun was deleted because it was seen as superfluous, it is also possible that it was added as a natural expansion on the text, strengthening the connection between Peter and his listeners. Although a decision is difficult, the shorter reading is slightly preferred. NA[27] puts the pronoun in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

26 tn Or "led."

27 sn He...went to another place. This is Peter's last appearance in Acts with the exception of the Jerusalem council in Acts 15.

28 tn BDAG 436 s.v. ἡμέρα 1.a has "day is breaking" for ἡμέρα γίνεται (hēmera ginetai) in this verse.

29 tn Grk "no little consternation." The translation given for τάραχος (tarachos) in this verse by BDAG 991 s.v. τάραχος 1 is "mental agitation." The situation indicated by the Greek word is described in L&N 25.243 as "a state of acute distress and great anxiety, with the additional possible implications of dismay and confusion – 'great distress, extreme anxiety.'" The English word "consternation" is preferred here because it conveys precisely such a situation of anxiety mixed with fear. The reason for this anxiety is explained in the following verse.

30 sn King Herod was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod I (Herod the Great).

31 tn Or "had instigated a search" (Herod would have ordered the search rather than conducting it himself).

32 tn "Questioned" is used to translate ἀνακρίνας (anakrinas) here because a possible translation offered by BDAG 66 s.v. ἀνακρίνω for this verse is "examined," which could be understood to mean Herod inspected the guards rather than questioned them. The translation used by the NIV, "cross-examined," also avoids this possible misunderstanding.

led away to execution.[1] Then[2] Herod[3] went down from Judea to Caesarea[4] and stayed there.

12:20 Now Herod[5] was having an angry quarrel[6] with the people of Tyre[7] and Sidon.[8] So they joined together[9] and presented themselves before him. And after convincing[10] Blastus, the king's personal assistant,[11] to help them,[12] they asked for peace,[13] because their country's food supply was provided by the king's country. 12:21 On a day determined in advance, Herod[14] put on his royal robes,[15] sat down on the judgment seat,[16] and made a speech[17] to them. 12:22 But the crowd[18] began to shout,[19] "The voice of a god,[20] and not of a man!" 12:23 Immediately an angel of the Lord[21] struck[22] Herod[23] down because he did not give the glory to God, and he was eaten by worms and died.[24] 12:24 But the word of God[25] kept on increasing[26] and multiplying.

1 tn The meaning "led away to execution" for ἀπαχθῆναι (apachthēnai) in this verse is given by BDAG 95 s.v. ἀπάγω 2.c. Although an explicit reference to execution is lacking here, it is what would usually occur in such a case (Acts 16:27; 27:42; Code of Justinian 9.4.4). "Led away to torture" is a less likely option (Pliny the Younger, Letters 10, 96, 8).

2 tn Grk "and," but the sequence of events is better expressed in English by "then." A new sentence is begun in the translation because of the length of the sentence in Greek, which exceeds normal English sentence length.

3 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Since Herod has been the subject of the preceding material, and the circumstances of his death are the subject of the following verses (20-23), it is best to understand Herod as the subject here. This is especially true since according to Josephus, Ant. 19.8.2 [19.343-352], Herod Agrippa I died at Caesarea in A.D. 44, and vv. 20-23 here describe his death. Thus the end of v. 19 provides Luke's transition to explain how Herod got from Jerusalem to Caesarea where he died. In spite of all this evidence, the NRSV translates this phrase "Then Peter went down from Judea to Caesarea and stayed there," understanding the referent to be Peter rather than Herod Agrippa I.

sn King Herod was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod I (Herod the Great), who died at Caesarea in A.D. 44 according to Josephus, Ant. 19.8.2 [19.343-352].

4 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn Herod was Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod I (Herod the Great).

6 tn Or "was extremely angry." L&N 33.453 gives the meaning "be angry and quarrel, quarrel angrily" here. However, in L&N 88.180 the alternative "to be violently angry, to be furious" is given. The term is used only once in the NT (BDAG 461 s.v. θυμομαχέω).

7 sn Tyre was a city and seaport on the coast of Phoenicia.

map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

8 sn Sidon was an ancient Phoenician royal city on the coast between Berytus (Beirut) and Tyre (BDAG 923 s.v. Σιδών).

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

9 tn Or "with one accord."

10 tn Or "persuading."

11 tn On the term translated "personal assistant" BDAG 554 s.v. κοιτῶν states, "used as part of a title: ὁ ἐπὶ τοῦ κοιτῶνος the one in charge of the bed-chamber, the chamberlain." This individual was not just a domestic servant or butler, but a highly respected person who had considerable responsibility for the king's living quarters and personal affairs. The English word "chamberlain" corresponds very closely to this meaning but is not in common use today. The term "personal assistant," while it might convey more business associations than management of personal affairs, nevertheless communicates the concept well in contemporary English.

12 tn The words "to help them" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

13 tn Or "for a reconciliation." There were grave political risks in having Herod angry at them. The detail shows the ruler's power.

14 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Or "apparel." On Herod's robes see Josephus, Ant. 19.8.2 (19.344), summarized in the note at the end of v. 23.

16 tn Although BDAG 175 s.v. βῆμα 3 gives the meaning "speaker's platform" for this verse, and a number of modern translations use similar terms ("rostrum," NASB; "platform," NRSV), since the bema was a standard feature in Greco-Roman cities of the time, there is no need for an alternative translation here.

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a familiar item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city.

17 tn Or "delivered a public address."

18 tn The translation "crowd" is given by BDAG 223 s.v. δῆμος; the word often means a gathering of citizens to conduct public business. Here it is simply the group of people gathered to hear the king's speech.

19 tn The imperfect verb ἐπεφώνει (epephōnei) is taken ingressively in the sequence of events. Presumably the king had started his speech when the crowd began shouting.

20 sn The voice of a god. Contrast the response of Paul and Barnabas in Acts 14:13-15.

21 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 5:19.

22 sn On being struck...down by an angel, see Acts 23:3; 1 Sam 25:28; 2 Sam 12:15; 2 Kgs 19:35; 2 Chr 13:20; 2 Macc 9:5.

23 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 sn He was eaten by worms and died. Josephus, Ant. 19.8.2 (19.343-352), states that Herod Agrippa I died at Caesarea in A.D. 44. The account by Josephus, while not identical to Luke's account, is similar in many respects: On the second day of a festival, Herod Agrippa appeared in the theater with a robe made of silver. When it sparkled in the sun, the people cried out flatteries and declared him to be a god. The king, carried away by the flattery, saw an owl (an omen of death) sitting on a nearby rope, and immediately was struck with severe stomach pains. He was carried off to his house and died five days later. The two accounts can be reconciled without difficulty, since while Luke states that Herod was immediately struck down by an angel, his death could have come several days later. The mention of worms with death adds a humiliating note to the scene. The formerly powerful ruler had been thoroughly reduced to nothing (cf. Jdt 16:17; 2 Macc 9:9; cf. also Josephus, Ant. 17.6.5 [17.168-170], which details the sickness which led to Herod the Great's death).

25 sn A metonymy for the number of adherents to God's word.

26 tn Or "spreading."

12:25 So Barnabas and Saul returned to[1] Jerusalem[2] when they had completed[3] their mission,[4] bringing along with them John Mark.[5]

The Church at Antioch Commissions Barnabas and Saul

13:1 Now there were these prophets and teachers in the church at Antioch:[6] Barnabas, Simeon called Niger,[7] Lucius the Cyrenian,[8] Manaen (a close friend of Herod[9] the tetrarch[10] from childhood[11]) and Saul. 13:2 While they were serving[12] the Lord and fasting, the Holy Spirit said, "Set apart[13] for me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them." 13:3 Then, after they had fasted[14] and[15] prayed and placed their hands[16] on them, they sent them off.

Paul and Barnabas Preach in Cyprus

13:4 So Barnabas and Saul,[17] sent out by the Holy Spirit, went down to Seleucia,[18] and from there they sailed to Cyprus.[19] 13:5 When[20] they arrived[21] in Salamis,[22] they began to proclaim[23] the word of God in the Jewish synagogues.[24]

1 tc There are a number of variants at this point in the text: εἰς (eis, "to") in ℵ B 𝔐 sa^{ms} sy^{hmg}; ἀπό (apo, "from") in D E Ψ 36 323 453 614 1175 al; ἐξ (ex, "from") in 𝔓^{74} A 33 945 1739 al; ἐξ Ἰερουσαλήμ εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν (ex Ierousalēm eis Antiocheian, "from Jerusalem to Antioch") in {a few later manuscripts and part of the Itala}. A decision on this problem is very difficult, but for several reasons εἰς can be preferred. It is the most difficult reading by far in light of the context, since Paul and Barnabas were going to Jerusalem in 11:30. It is found in better witnesses, ℵ and B being very strong evidence. The other readings, ἐξ and ἀπό, are different from εἰς yet bear essentially the same meaning as each other; this seems to suggest that scribes had problems with εἰς and tried to choose an acceptable revision. If εἰς is the earliest reading, ἀπό may be a clarification of ἐξ, and ἐξ could have arisen through confusion of letters. Or ἐξ and ἀπό could both have independently arisen from εἰς as a more acceptable preposition. Despite such arguments, however, the case for εἰς is not airtight: either ἐξ or ἀπό could be preferred on other lines of reasoning. The reading ἐξ enjoys the earliest support, and εἰς could have arisen through the same confusion of letters mentioned above. The immediate and wider context seems to mitigate against εἰς as the original reading: The aorist participle πληρώσαντες (plērōsantes, "when they had completed") seems to signal the end of the mission to Jerusalem with the famine relief, so it would make sense in the context for the team to be coming from Jerusalem (to Antioch) rather than to Jerusalem, and 13:1 certainly presents the scene at Antioch. The later addition εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν after Ἰερουσαλήμ in some MSS seems to be a clarification in light of 13:1 (notice that some of the MSS that read ἐξ add εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν [945 1739], and some that read ἀπό also add εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν [E 323 1175]). Thus, the idea of spatial separation from Jerusalem is strongly implied by the context. This problem is so difficult that some scholars resort to conjectural emendation to determine the original reading. All in all, the reading εἰς should be preferred as original, recognizing that there is a good measure of uncertainty with this solution. For additional discussion, see TCGNT 350-52.

2 sn That is, from Jerusalem to Antioch (see Acts 11:29-30).

3 tn Grk "fulfilled."

4 tn Grk "ministry" or "service."

5 tn Grk "John who was also called Mark."

6 sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia).

map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

7 sn Simeon may well have been from North Africa, since the Latin loanword Niger refers to someone as "dark-complexioned."

8 sn The Cyrenian refers to a native of the city of Cyrene, on the coast of northern Africa west of Egypt.

9 sn Herod is generally taken as a reference to Herod Antipas, who governed Galilee from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39, who had John the Baptist beheaded, and who is mentioned a number of times in the gospels.

10 tn Or "the governor."

sn A tetrarch was a ruler with rank and authority lower than a king, who ruled only with the approval of the Roman authorities. This was roughly equivalent to being governor of a region. Several times in the NT, Herod tetrarch of Galilee is called a king (Matt 14:9, Mark 6:14-29), reflecting popular usage.

11 tn Or "(a foster brother of Herod the tetrarch)." The meaning "close friend from childhood" is given by L&N 34.15, but the word can also mean "foster brother" (L&N 10.51). BDAG 976 s.v. σύντροφας states, "pert. to being brought up with someone, either as a foster-brother or as a companion/friend," which covers both alternatives. Context does not given enough information to be certain which is the case here, although many modern translations prefer the meaning "close friend from childhood."

12 tn This term is frequently used in the LXX of the service performed by priests and Levites in the tabernacle (Exod 28:35, 43; 29:30; 30:20; 35:19; 39:26; Num 1:50; 3:6, 31) and the temple (2 Chr 31:2; 35:3; Joel 1:9, 13; 2:17, and many more examples). According to BDAG 591 s.v. λειτουργέω 1.b it is used "of other expression of religious devotion." Since the previous verse described the prophets and teachers in the church at Antioch, it is probable that the term here describes two of them (Barnabas and Saul) as they were serving in that capacity. Since they were not in Jerusalem where the temple was located, general religious service is referred to here.

14 tn The three aorist participles νηστεύσαντες (nēsteusantes), προσευξάμενοι (proseuxamenoi), and ἐπιθέντες (epithentes) are translated as temporal participles. Although they could indicate contemporaneous time when used with an aorist main verb, logically here they are antecedent. On fasting and prayer, see Matt 6:5, 16; Luke 2:37; 5:33; Acts 14:23.

15 tn Normally English style, which uses a coordinating conjunction between only the last two elements of a series of three or more, would call for omission of "and" here. However, since the terms "fasting and prayer" are something of a unit, often linked together, the conjunction has been retained here.

16 sn The placing of hands on Barnabas and Saul (traditionally known as "the laying on of hands") refers to an act picturing the commission of God and the church for the task at hand.

17 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Barnabas and Saul) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn Seleucia was the port city of Antioch in Syria.

19 sn Cyprus was a large island in the Mediterranean off the south coast of Asia Minor.

20 tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

21 tn The participle γενόμενοι (genomenoi) is taken temporally.

22 sn Salamis was a city on the southeastern coast of the island of Cyprus. This was a commercial center and a center of Judaism.

23 tn The imperfect verb κατήγγελλον (katēngellon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

24 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

(Now they also had John[1] as their assistant.)[2] 13:6 When they had crossed over[3] the whole island as far as Paphos,[4] they found a magician, a Jewish false prophet named Bar-Jesus,[5] 13:7 who was with the proconsul[6] Sergius Paulus, an intelligent man. The proconsul[7] summoned[8] Barnabas and Saul and wanted to hear[9] the word of God. 13:8 But the magician Elymas[10] (for that is the way his name is translated)[11] opposed them, trying to turn the proconsul[12] away from the faith. 13:9 But Saul (also known as Paul),[13] filled with the Holy Spirit,[14] stared straight[15] at him 13:10 and said, "You who are full of all deceit and all wrongdoing,[16] you son of the devil, you enemy of all righteousness – will you not stop making crooked the straight paths of the Lord?[17] 13:11 Now[18] look, the hand of the Lord is against[19] you, and you will be blind, unable to see the sun for a time!" Immediately mistiness[20] and darkness came over[21] him, and he went around seeking people[22] to lead him by the hand. 13:12 Then when the proconsul[23] saw what had happened, he believed,[24] because he was greatly astounded[25] at the teaching about[26] the Lord.

Paul and Barnabas at Pisidian Antioch

13:13 Then Paul and his companions put out to sea[27] from Paphos[28] and came to Perga[29] in Pamphylia,[30] but John[31] left them and returned to Jerusalem.[32] 13:14 Moving on from[33] Perga,[34] they arrived at Pisidian Antioch,[35] and on the Sabbath day they went into[36] the synagogue[37] and sat down. 13:15 After the reading from the law and the prophets,[38] the

1 sn John refers here to John Mark (see Acts 12:25).

2 tn The word ὑπηρέτης (hupēretēs) usually has the meaning "servant," but it is doubtful John Mark fulfilled that capacity for Barnabas and Saul. He was more likely an apprentice or assistant to them.

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

3 tn Or "had passed through," "had traveled through."

4 sn Paphos. A city on the southwestern coast of the island of Cyprus. It was the seat of the Roman proconsul.

5 sn Named Bar-Jesus. "Jesus" is the Latin form of the name "Joshua." The Aramaic "bar" means "son of," so this man was surnamed "son of Joshua." The scene depicts the conflict between Judaism and the emerging new faith at a cosmic level, much like the Simon Magus incident in Acts 8:9-24. Paul's ministry looks like Philip's and Peter's here.

6 sn The proconsul was the Roman official who ruled over a province traditionally under the control of the Roman senate.

7 tn Grk "This one"; the referent (the proconsul) is specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "summoning Barnabas and Saul, wanted to hear." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

9 sn The proconsul...wanted to hear the word of God. This description of Sergius Paulus portrays him as a sensitive, secular Gentile leader.

10 tn On the debate over what the name "Elymas" means, see BDAG 320 s.v. Ἐλύμας. The magician's behavior is more directly opposed to the faith than Simon Magus' was.

11 sn A parenthetical note by the author.

12 sn The proconsul was the Roman official who ruled over a province traditionally under the control of the Roman senate.

13 sn A parenthetical note by the author.

14 sn This qualifying clause in the narrative indicates who represented God in the dispute.

15 tn Or "gazed intently."

16 tn Or "unscrupulousness."

17 sn "You who...paths of the Lord?" This rebuke is like ones from the OT prophets: Jer 5:27; Gen 32:11; Prov 10:7; Hos 14:9. Five separate remarks indicate the magician's failings. The closing rhetorical question of v. 10 ("will you not stop...?") shows how opposed he is to the way of God.

18 tn Grk "And now." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

19 tn Grk "upon," but in a negative sense.

20 sn The term translated mistiness here appears in the writings of the physician Galen as a medical technical description of a person who is blind. The picture of judgment to darkness is symbolic as well. Whatever power Elymas had, it represented darkness. Magic will again be an issue in Acts 19:18-19. This judgment is like that of Ananias and his wife in Acts 5:1-11.

21 tn Grk "fell on."

22 tn The noun χειραγωγός (cheiragōgos) is plural, so "people" is used rather than singular "someone."

23 sn See the note on proconsul in v. 8.

24 sn He believed. The faith of the proconsul in the face of Jewish opposition is a theme of the rest of Acts. Paul has indeed become "a light to the Gentiles" (Acts 13:47).

25 tn The translation "greatly astounded" for ἐκπλησσόμενος (ekplēssomenos) is given by L&N 25.219.

26 tn Grk "of," but this could give the impression the Lord himself had done the teaching (a subjective genitive) when actually the Lord was the object of the teaching (an objective genitive).

27 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

28 sn Paphos was a city on the southwestern coast of the island of Cyprus. See Acts 13:6.

29 sn Perga was a city in Pamphylia near the southern coast of Asia Minor. The journey from Paphos to Perga is about 105 mi (175 km).

30 sn Pamphylia was a province in the southern part of Asia Minor.

31 sn That is, John Mark.

32 sn Returned to Jerusalem. John Mark had originally accompanied them from Jerusalem (see Acts 12:25). John Mark's decision to leave became an issue later for Barnabas and Paul (Acts 15:36-39).

34 sn Perga was a city in Pamphylia near the southern coast of Asia Minor.

35 tn Or "at Antioch in Pisidia."

sn Pisidian Antioch was a city in Pisidia about 100 mi (160 km) north of Perga. It was both a Roman colony and the seat of military and civil authority in S. Galatia. One had to trek over the Taurus Mountains to get there, since the city was 3,600 ft (1,100 m) above sea level.

36 tn Grk "going into the synagogue they sat down." The participle εἰσελθόντες (eiselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

37 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

38 sn After the reading from the law and the prophets. In the 1st century Jewish synagogue, it was customary after the reading of the Torah (law) and prophets for men to give exhortation from the scriptures.

leaders of the synagogue[1] sent them a message,[2] saying, "Brothers,[3] if you have any message[4] of exhortation[5] for the people, speak it."[6] 13:16 So Paul stood up,[7] gestured[8] with his hand and said,

"Men of Israel,[9] and you Gentiles who fear God,[10] listen: 13:17 The God of this people Israel[11] chose our ancestors[12] and made the people great[13] during their stay as foreigners[14] in the country[15] of Egypt, and with uplifted arm[16] he led them out of it. 13:18 For[17] a period of about forty years he put up with[18] them in the wilderness.[19] 13:19 After[20] he had destroyed[21] seven nations[22] in the land of Canaan, he gave his people their land as an inheritance.[23] 13:20 All this took[24] about four hundred fifty years. After this[25] he gave them judges until the time of[26] Samuel the prophet. 13:21 Then they asked for a king, and God gave them Saul son of Kish, a man from the tribe of Benjamin, who ruled[27] forty years. 13:22 After removing him, God[28] raised up[29] David their king. He testified about him:[30] 'I have found David[31] the son of Jesse to be a man after my heart,[32] who will accomplish everything I want him to do.'[33] 13:23 From the descendants[34] of this man[35] God brought to Israel a Savior, Jesus, just as he promised.[36]

1 tn Normally ἀρχισυνάγωγος (archisunagōgos) refers to the "president of a synagogue" (so BDAG 139 s.v. and L&N 53.93). Since the term is plural here, however, and it would sound strange to the English reader to speak of "the presidents of the synagogue," the alternative translation "leaders" is used. "Rulers" would also be acceptable, but does not convey quite the same idea.

2 tn Grk "sent to them"; the word "message" is an understood direct object. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

3 tn Grk "Men brothers," but this is both awkward and unnecessary in English.

4 tn Or "word."

5 tn Or "encouragement."

6 tn Or "give it."

7 tn This participle, ἀναστάς (anastas), and the following one, κατασείσας (kataseisas), are both translated as adverbial participles of attendant circumstance.

8 tn Or "motioned."

9 tn Or "Israelite men," although this is less natural English. The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context involving an address to a synagogue gathering, it is conceivable that this is a generic usage, although it can also be argued that Paul's remarks were addressed primarily to the men present, even if women were there.

10 tn Grk "and those who fear God," but this is practically a technical term for the category called God-fearers, Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44.

11 tn Or "people of Israel."

12 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

sn Note how Paul identifies with his audience by referring to our ancestors. He speaks as a Jew. God's design in history is the theme of the speech. The speech is like Stephen's, only here the focus is on a promised Son of David.

13 tn That is, in both numbers and in power. The implication of greatness in both numbers and in power is found in BDAG 1046 s.v. ὑψόω 2.

14 tn Or "as resident aliens."

15 tn Or "land."

16 sn Here uplifted arm is a metaphor for God's power by which he delivered the Israelites from Egypt. See Exod 6:1, 6; 32:11; Deut 3:24; 4:34; Ps 136:11-12.

17 tn Grk "And for." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

18 tn For this verb, see BDAG 1017 s.v. τροποφορέω (cf. also Deut 1:31; Exod 16:35; Num 14:34).

19 tn Or "desert."

20 tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

21 tn The participle καθελών (kathelōn) is taken temporally.

22 sn Seven nations. See Deut 7:1.

23 tn Grk "he gave their land as an inheritance." The words "his people" are supplied to complete an ellipsis specifying the recipients of the land.

24 tn The words "all this took" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to make a complete statement in English. There is debate over where this period of 450 years fits and what it includes: (1) It could include the years in Egypt, the conquest of Canaan, and the distribution of the land; (2) some connect it with the following period of the judges. This latter approach seems to conflict with 1 Kgs 6:1; see also Josephus, Ant. 8.3.1 (8.61).

25 tn Grk "And after these things." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

26 tn The words "the time of" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

27 tn The words "who ruled" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. They have been supplied as a clarification for the English reader. See Josephus, Ant. 6.14.9 (6.378).

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 sn The expression raised up refers here to making someone king. There is a wordplay here: "raising up" refers to bringing someone onto the scene of history, but it echoes with the parallel to Jesus' resurrection.

30 tn Grk "about whom." The relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by the pronoun "him" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek. The verb εἶπεν (eipen) has not been translated (literally "he said testifying") because it is redundant when combined with the participle μαρτυρήσας (marturēsas, "testifying"). Instead the construction of verb plus participle has been translated as a single English verb ("testified").

31 sn A quotation from Ps 89:20.

32 sn A quotation from 1 Sam 13:14.

33 tn Or "who will perform all my will," "who will carry out all my wishes."

34 tn Or "From the offspring"; Grk "From the seed."

sn From the descendants (Grk "seed"). On the importance of the seed promise involving Abraham, see Gal 3:6-29.

35 sn The phrase this man is in emphatic position in the Greek text.

36 tn Grk "according to [his] promise." The comparative clause "just as he promised" is less awkward in English.

sn Just as he promised. Note how Paul describes Israel's history carefully to David and then leaps forward immediately to Jesus. Paul is expounding the initial realization of Davidic promise as it was delivered in Jesus.

13:24 Before[1] Jesus[2] arrived, John[3] had proclaimed a baptism for repentance[4] to all the people of Israel. 13:25 But while John was completing his mission,[5] he said repeatedly,[6] 'What do you think I am? I am not he. But look, one is coming after me. I am not worthy to untie the sandals on his feet!'[7] 13:26 Brothers,[8] descendants[9] of Abraham's family,[10] and those Gentiles among you who fear God,[11] the message[12] of this salvation has been sent to us. 13:27 For the people who live in Jerusalem and their rulers did not recognize[13] him,[14] and they fulfilled the sayings[15] of the prophets that are read every Sabbath by condemning[16] him.[17] 13:28 Though[18] they found[19] no basis[20] for a death sentence,[21] they asked Pilate to have him executed. 13:29 When they had accomplished[22] everything that was written[23] about him, they took him down[24] from the cross[25] and placed him[26] in a tomb. 13:30 But God raised[27] him from the dead, 13:31 and[28] for many days he appeared to those who had accompanied[29] him from Galilee to Jerusalem. These[30] are now his witnesses to the people. 13:32 And we proclaim to you the good news about the promise to our ancestors,[31] 13:33 that this promise[32] God has fulfilled to us, their children, by raising[33] Jesus, as also it is written in the second psalm, 'You are my Son;[34] today I have fathered you.'[35] 13:34 But regarding the fact that he has raised Jesus[36] from the dead,

1 tn Grk "John having already proclaimed before his coming a baptism...," a genitive absolute construction which is awkward in English. A new sentence was begun in the translation at this point.

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the context for clarity, since God is mentioned in the preceding context and John the Baptist in the following clause.

3 sn John refers here to John the Baptist.

4 tn Grk "a baptism of repentance"; the genitive has been translated as a genitive of purpose.

5 tn Or "task."

6 tn The verb ἔλεγεν (elegen) has been translated as an iterative imperfect, since John undoubtedly said this or something similar on numerous occasions.

7 tn Literally a relative clause, "of whom I am not worthy to untie the sandals of his feet." Because of the awkwardness of this construction in English, a new sentence was begun here.

8 tn Grk "Men brothers," but this is both awkward and unnecessary in English.

9 tn Grk "sons"

10 tn Or "race."

11 tn Grk "and those among you who fear God," but this is practically a technical term for the category called God-fearers, Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44. Note how Paul includes God-fearing Gentiles as recipients of this promise.

12 tn Grk "word."

13 tn BDAG 12-13 s.v. ἀγνοέω 1.b gives "not to know w. acc. of pers." as the meaning here, but "recognize" is a better translation in this context because recognition of the true identity of the one they condemned is the issue. See Acts 2:22-24; 4:26-28.

14 tn Grk "this one."

15 tn Usually φωνή (phōnē) means "voice," but BDAG 1071-72 s.v. φωνή 2.c has "Also of sayings in scripture...Ac 13:27."

sn They fulfilled the sayings. The people in Jerusalem and the Jewish rulers should have known better, because they had the story read to them weekly in the synagogue.

16 tn The participle κρίναντες (krinantes) is instrumental here.

17 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

18 tn Grk "And though." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

19 tn The participle εὑρόντες (heurontes) has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

20 sn No basis. Luke insists on Jesus' innocence again and again in Luke 23:1-25.

21 tn Grk "no basis for death," but in this context a sentence of death is clearly indicated.

22 tn Or "carried out."

23 sn That is, everything that was written in OT scripture.

24 tn Grk "taking him down from the cross, they placed him." The participle καθελόντες (kathelontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tn Grk "tree," but frequently figurative for a cross. The allusion is to Deut 21:23. See Acts 5:30; 10:39.

26 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

27 sn See the note on the phrase "raised up" in v. 22, which is the same Greek verb used here.

28 tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun ("who") was replaced by the conjunction "and" and the pronoun "he" at this point to improve the English style.

29 sn Those who had accompanied him refers to the disciples, who knew Jesus in ministry. Luke is aware of resurrection appearances in Galilee though he did not relate any of them in Luke 24.

30 tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun ("who") was replaced by the demonstrative pronoun "these" and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek and the awkwardness of two relative clauses ("who for many days appeared" and "who are now his witnesses") following one another.

31 tn Or "to our forefathers"; Grk "the fathers."

32 tn Grk "that this"; the referent (the promise mentioned in the previous verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn This promise refers to the promise of a Savior through the seed (descendants) of David that is proclaimed as fulfilled (Rom 1:1-7).

33 tn Or "by resurrecting." The participle ἀναστήσας (anastēsas) is taken as instrumental here.

sn By raising (i.e., by resurrection) tells how this promise came to be realized, though again the wordplay also points to his presence in history through this event (see the note on "raised up" in v. 22).

34 sn You are my Son. The key to how the quotation is used is the naming of Jesus as "Son" to the Father. The language is that of kingship, as Ps 2 indicates. Here is the promise about what the ultimate Davidic heir would be.

35 tn Grk "I have begotten you." The traditional translation for γεγέννηκα (gegennēka, "begotten") is misleading to the modern English reader because it is no longer in common use. Today one speaks of "fathering" a child in much the same way speakers of English formerly spoke of "begetting a child."

sn A quotation from Ps 2:7.

36 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

never[1] again to be[2] in a state of decay, God[3] has spoken in this way: 'I will give you[4] the holy and trustworthy promises[5] made to David.'[6] 13:35 Therefore he also says in another psalm,[7] 'You will not permit your Holy One[8] to experience[9] decay.'[10] 13:36 For David, after he had served[11] God's purpose in his own generation, died,[12] was buried with his ancestors,[13] and experienced[14] decay, 13:37 but the one[15] whom God raised up did not experience[16] decay. 13:38 Therefore let it be known to you, brothers, that through this one[17] forgiveness of sins is proclaimed to you, 13:39 and by this one[18] everyone who believes is justified[19] from everything from which the law of Moses could not justify[20] you.[21] 13:40 Watch out,[22] then, that what is spoken about by[23] the prophets does not happen to you:

> 13:41 'Look, you scoffers; be amazed and perish![24]
> For I am doing a work in your days, > a work you would never believe, even if > someone tells you.'"[25]

13:42 As Paul and Barnabas[26] were going out,[27] the people[28] were urging[29] them to speak about these things[30] on the next Sabbath. 13:43 When the meeting of the synagogue[31] had broken up,[32] many of the Jews and God-fearing proselytes[33] followed Paul and Barnabas, who

---

1 tn Although μηκέτι (mēketi) can mean "no longer" or "no more," the latter is more appropriate here, since to translate "no longer" in this context could give the reader the impression that Jesus did experience decay before his resurrection. Since the phrase "no more again to be" is somewhat awkward in English, the simpler phrase "never again to be" was used instead.

2 tn The translation "to be in again" for ὑποστρέφω (hupostrephō) is given in L&N 13.24.

3 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn The pronoun "you" is plural here. The promises of David are offered to the people.

5 tn Or "the trustworthy decrees made by God to David." The phrase τὰ ὅσια Δαυὶδ τὰ πιστά (ta hosia Dauid ta pista) is "compressed," that is, in a very compact or condensed form. It could be expanded in several different ways. BDAG 728 s.v. ὅσιος 3 understands it to refer to divine decrees: "I will grant you the sure decrees of God relating to David." BDAG then states that this quotation from Isa 55:3 is intended to show that the following quotation from Ps 16:10 could not refer to David himself, but must refer to his messianic descendant (Jesus). L&N 33.290 render the phrase "I will give to you the divine promises made to David, promises that can be trusted," although they also note that τὰ ὅσια in Acts 13:34 can mean "divine decrees" or "decrees made by God." In contemporary English it is less awkward to translate πιστά as an adjective ("trustworthy"). The concept of "divine decrees," not very understandable to the modern reader, has been replaced by "promises," and since God is the implied speaker in the context, it is clear that these promises were made by God.

6 sn A quotation from Isa 55:3. The point of this citation is to make clear that the promise of a Davidic line and blessings are made to the people as well.

7 tn Grk "Therefore he also says in another"; the word "psalm" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

8 tn The Greek word translated "Holy One" here (ὅσιόν, hosion) is related to the use of ὅσια (hosia) in v. 34. The link is a wordplay. The Holy One, who does not die, brings the faithful holy blessings of promise to the people.

9 tn Grk "to see," but the literal translation of the phrase "to see decay" could be misunderstood to mean simply "to look at decay," while here "see decay" is really figurative for "experience decay."

10 sn A quotation from Ps 16:10.

11 tn The participle ὑπηρετήσας (hupēretēsas) is taken temporally.

12 tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

13 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "was gathered to his fathers" (a Semitic idiom).

14 tn Grk "saw," but the literal translation of the phrase "saw decay" could be misunderstood to mean simply "looked at decay," while here "saw decay" is really figurative for "experienced decay." This remark explains why David cannot fulfill the promise.

15 sn The one whom God raised up refers to Jesus.

16 tn Grk "see," but the literal translation of the phrase "did not see decay" could be misunderstood to mean simply "did not look at decay," while here "did not see decay" is really figurative for "did not experience decay."

17 tn That is, Jesus. This pronoun is in emphatic position in the Greek text. Following this phrase in the Greek text is the pronoun ὑμῖν (humin, "to you"), so that the emphasis for the audience is that "through Jesus to you" these promises have come.

18 sn This one refers here to Jesus.

19 tn Or "is freed." The translation of δικαιωθῆναι (dikaiōthēnai) and δικαιοῦται (dikaioutai) in Acts 13:38-39 is difficult. BDAG 249 s.v. δικαιόω 3 categorizes δικαιωθῆναι in 13:38 (Greek text) under the meaning "make free/pure" but categorizes δικαιοῦται in Acts 13:39 as "be found in the right, be free of charges" (BDAG 249 s.v. δικαιόω 2.b.β). In the interest of consistency both verbs are rendered as "justified" in this translation.

20 tn Or "could not free."

21 tn Grk "from everything from which you could not be justified by the law of Moses." The passive construction has been converted to an active one in the translation, with "by the law of Moses" becoming the subject of the final clause. The words "from everything from which the law of Moses could not justify you" are part of v. 38 in the Greek text, but due to English style and word order must be placed in v. 39 in the translation.

22 sn The speech closes with a warning, "Watch out," that also stresses culpability.

23 tn Or "in."

24 tn Or "and die!"

25 sn A quotation from Hab 1:5. The irony in the phrase even if someone tells you, of course, is that Paul has now told them. So the call in the warning is to believe or else face the peril of being scoffers whom God will judge. The parallel from Habakkuk is that the nation failed to see how Babylon's rising to power meant perilous judgment for Israel.

26 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Paul and Barnabas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Or "were leaving." The participle ἐξιόντων (exiontōn) is taken temporally.

28 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Or "begging," "inviting."

30 tn Or "matters."

31 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

32 tn BDAG 607 s.v. λύω 3 has "λυθείσης τ. συναγωγῆς when the meeting of the synagogue had broken up Ac 13:43."

33 tn Normally the phrase σεβόμενοι τὸν θεόν (sebomenoi ton theon) refers to Gentiles ("God-fearers") who believed in God, attended the synagogue, and followed the Mosaic law to some extent, but stopped short of undergoing circumcision. BDAG 918 s.v. σέβω 1.b lists in this category references in Acts 16:14; 18:7; with σεβόμενοι alone, Acts 13:50; 17:4, 17; the phrase is also found in Josephus, Ant. 14.7.2 (14.110). Unique to this particular verse is the combination σεβόμενοι προσηλύτων (sebomenoi prosēlutōn). Later rabbinic discus-were speaking with them and were persuading[1] them[2] to continue[3] in the grace of God.

13:44 On the next Sabbath almost the whole city assembled together to hear the word of the Lord.[4] 13:45 But when the Jews saw the crowds, they were filled with jealousy,[5] and they began to contradict[6] what Paul was saying[7] by reviling him.[8] 13:46 Both Paul and Barnabas replied courageously,[9] "It was necessary to speak the word of God[10] to you first. Since you reject it and do not consider yourselves worthy[11] of eternal life, we[12] are turning to the Gentiles.[13] 13:47 For this[14] is what the Lord has commanded us: 'I have appointed[15] you to be a light[16] for the Gentiles, to bring salvation[17] to the ends of the earth.'"[18] 13:48 When the Gentiles heard this, they began to rejoice[19] and praise[20] the word of the Lord, and all who had been appointed for eternal life[21] believed. 13:49 So the word of the Lord was spreading[22] through the entire region. 13:50 But the Jews incited[23] the God-fearing women of high social standing and the prominent men of the city, stirred up persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and threw them out[24] of their region. 13:51 So after they shook[25] the dust off their feet[26] in protest against them, they went to sion suggests that to be regarded as a proper proselyte, a Gentile male had to submit to circumcision. If that is the case here, these Gentiles in the synagogue at Pisidian Antioch should be regarded as full proselytes who had converted completely to Judaism and undergone circumcision. It is probably more likely, however, that προσηλύτων is used here in a somewhat looser sense (note the use of σεβομένας [sebomenas] alone to refer to women in Acts 13:50) and that these Gentiles were still in the category commonly called "God-fearers" without being full, technical proselytes to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44. Regardless, the point is that many Gentiles, as well as Jews, came to faith.

[2] tn Grk "who, as they were speaking with them, were persuading them."

[3] tn The verb προμένειν (promenein) is similar in force to the use of μένω (menō, "to reside/remain") in the Gospel and Epistles of John.

[4] tc Most MSS (B* C E Ψ 𝔐 sy bo) read θεοῦ (theou, "of God") here instead of κυρίου (kuriou, "of the Lord"). Other MSS, among them some important early witnesses (𝔓⁷⁴ ℵ A B² 33 81 323 945 1175 1739 al sa), read κυρίου. The external evidence favors κυρίου, though not decisively. Internally, the mention of "God" in v. 43, and especially "the word of God" in v. 46, would provide some temptation for scribes to assimilate the wording in v. 44 to these texts.

sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in vv. 48 and 49; Acts 8:25; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

[5] sn They were filled with jealousy. Their foolish response to the gospel is noted again (see Acts 5:17). The same verb is used in Acts 7:9; 17:5.

[6] tn The imperfect verb ἀντέλεγον (antelegon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect in the logical sequence of events: After they were filled with jealousy, the Jewish opponents began to contradict what Paul said.

[7] tn Grk "the things being said by Paul." For smoothness and simplicity of English style, the passive construction has been converted to active voice in the translation.

[8] tn The participle βλασφημοῦντες (blasphēmountes) has been regarded as indicating the means of the action of the main verb. It could also be translated as a finite verb ("and reviled him") in keeping with contemporary English style. The direct object ("him") is implied rather than expressed and could be impersonal ("it," referring to what Paul was saying rather than Paul himself), but the verb occurs more often in contexts involving defamation or slander against personal beings (not always God). For a very similar context to this one, compare Acts 18:6. The translation "blaspheme" is not used because in contemporary English its meaning is more narrowly defined and normally refers to blasphemy against God (not what Paul's opponents were doing here). The modern term "slandering" comes close to what was being done to Paul here.

[9] tn Grk "Both Paul and Barnabas spoke out courageously and said." The redundancy is removed in the translation and the verb "replied" is used in keeping with the logical sequence of events. The theme of boldness reappears: Acts 4:24-30; 9:27-28.

[10] tn Grk "It was necessary that the word of God be spoken." For smoothness and simplicity of English style, the passive construction has been converted to active voice in the translation.

[11] tn Or "and consider yourselves unworthy."

[12] tn Grk "behold, we." In this context ἰδού (idou) is not easily translated into English.

[13] sn This turning to the Gentiles would be a shocking rebuke to 1st century Jews who thought they alone were the recipients of the promise.

[14] tn Here οὕτως (houtōs) is taken to refer to what follows, the content of the quotation, as given for this verse by BDAG 742 s.v. οὕτω/οὕτως 2.

[15] tn BDAG 1004 s.v. τίθημι 3.a has "τιθέναι τινὰ εἴς τι place/appoint someone to or for (to function as) someth.... Ac 13:47." This is a double accusative construction of object ("you") and complement ("a light").

[16] sn Paul alludes here to the language of the Servant in Isaiah, pointing to Isa 42:6; 49:6. He and Barnabas do the work of the Servant in Isaiah.

[17] tn Grk "that you should be for salvation," but more simply "to bring salvation."

[18] sn An allusion to Isa 42:6 and 49:6. The expression the ends of the earth recalls Luke 3:6 and Acts 1:8. Paul sees himself and Barnabas as carrying out the commission of Luke 24:27. (See 2 Cor 6:2, where servant imagery also appears concerning Paul's message.)

[19] tn The imperfect verb ἔχαιρον (echairon) and the following ἐδόξαζον (edoxazon) are translated as ingressive imperfects.

[20] tn Or "glorify." Although "honor" is given by BDAG 258 s.v. δοξάζω as a translation, it would be misleading here, because the meaning is "to honor in the sense of attributing worth to something," while in contemporary English usage one speaks of "honoring" a contract in the sense of keeping its stipulations. It is not a synonym for "obey" in this context ("obey the word of the Lord"), but that is how many English readers would understand it.

[22] tn BDAG 239 s.v. διαφέρω 1 has "spread" for διαφέρετο (diaphereto) in connection with a teaching. This is the first summary since Acts 9:31.

[23] tn For the translation of παρώτρυναν (parōtrunan) as "incited" see BDAG 780 s.v. παροτρύνω.

[24] tn BDAG 299 s.v. ἐκβάλλω 1 has "throw out." Once again, many Jews reacted to the message (Acts 5:17, 33; 6:11; 13:45).

[25] tn The participle ἐκτιναξάμενοι (ektinaxamenoi) is taken temporally. It could also be translated as a participle of attendant circumstance ("So they shook...and went").

[26] sn Shaking the dust off their feet was a symbolic gesture commanded by Jesus to his disciples, Matt 10:14; Mark 6:11; Luke 9:5. It shows a group of people as culpable before God.

Iconium.[1] 13:52 And the disciples were filled with joy[2] and with the Holy Spirit.

Paul and Barnabas at Iconium

14:1 The same thing happened in Iconium[3] when Paul and Barnabas[4] went into the Jewish synagogue[5] and spoke in such a way that a large group[6] of both Jews and Greeks believed. 14:2 But the Jews who refused to believe[7] stirred up the Gentiles and poisoned their minds[8] against the brothers. 14:3 So they stayed there[9] for a considerable time, speaking out courageously for the Lord, who testified[10] to the message[11] of his grace, granting miraculous signs[12] and wonders to be performed through their hands. 14:4 But the population[13] of the city was divided; some[14] sided with the Jews, and some with the apostles. 14:5 When both the Gentiles and the Jews (together with their rulers) made[15] an attempt to mistreat[16] them and stone them,[17] 14:6 Paul and Barnabas[18] learned about it[19] and fled to the Lycaonian cities of Lystra[20] and Derbe[21] and the surrounding region. 14:7 There[22] they continued to proclaim[23] the good news.

Paul and Barnabas at Lystra

14:8 In[24] Lystra[25] sat a man who could not use his feet,[26] lame from birth,[27] who had never walked. 14:9 This man was listening to Paul as he was speaking. When Paul[28] stared[29] intently at him and saw he had faith to be healed, 14:10 he said with a loud voice, "Stand upright on your feet."[30] And the man[31] leaped up and began walking.[32] 14:11 So when the crowds saw what Paul had done, they shouted[33] in the Lycaonian language,[34] "The gods have come down to us in human form!"[35] 14:12 They began to call[36]

1 sn Iconium was a city in Lycaonia about 90 mi (145 km) east southeast of Pisidian Antioch. It was the easternmost city of Phrygia.

2 sn The citizens of Pisidian Antioch were not discouraged by the persecution, but instead were filled with joy.

3 sn Iconium. See the note in 13:51.

4 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Paul and Barnabas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

6 tn Or "that a large crowd."

7 tn Or "who would not believe."

8 tn Or "embittered their minds" (Grk "their souls"). BDAG 502 s.v. κακόω 2 has "make angry, embitter τὰς ψυχάς τινων κατά τινος poison the minds of some persons against another Ac 14:2."

9 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

10 sn The Lord testified to the message by granting the signs described in the following clause.

11 tn Grk "word."

12 tn Here the context indicates the miraculous nature of the signs mentioned.

13 tn BDAG 825 s.v. πλῆθος 2.b.γ has this translation for πλῆθος (plēthos).

14 tn These clauses are a good example of the contrastive μὲν...δέ (men...de) construction: Some "on the one hand" sided with the Jews, but some "on the other hand" sided with the apostles.

15 tn Grk "So there came about an attempt" The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

16 tn On this verb see BDAG 1022 s.v. ὑβρίζω.

17 tn The direct object "them" is repeated after both verbs in the translation for stylistic reasons, although it occurs only after λιθοβολῆσαι (lithobolēsai) in the Greek text.

18 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Paul and Barnabas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "learning about it, fled." The participle συνιδόντες (sunidontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. It could also be taken temporally ("when they learned about it") as long as opening clause of v. 5 is not translated as a temporal clause too, which results in a redundancy.

20 sn Lystra was a city in Lycaonia about 18 mi (30 km) south of Iconium, a Roman colony that was not on the main roads of Lycaonia. Because of its relative isolation, its local character was able to be preserved.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

21 sn Derbe was a city in Lycaonia about 35 mi (60 km) southeast of Lystra.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

22 tn Grk "region, and there." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, καί (kai) has not been translated and a new sentence begun in the translation.

23 tn The periphrastic construction εὐαγγελιζόμενοι ἦσαν (euangelizomenoi ēsan) has been translated as a progressive imperfect.

24 tn Grk "And in." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

25 sn Lystra was a city in Lycaonia about 18 mi (30 km) south of Iconium.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

26 tn Grk "powerless in his feet," meaning he was unable to use his feet to walk.

27 tn Grk "lame from his mother's womb" (an idiom).

sn The description lame from birth makes clear how serious the condition was, and how real it was. This event is very similar to Acts 3:1-10, except here the lame man's faith is clear from the start.

28 tn Grk "speaking, who." The relative pronoun has been replaced by the noun "Paul," and a new sentence begun in the translation because an English relative clause would be very awkward here.

29 tn Or "looked."

30 tn BDAG 722 s.v. ὀρθός 1.a has "stand upright on your feet."

31 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

32 tn This verb is imperfect tense in contrast to the previous verb, which is aorist. It has been translated ingressively, since the start of a sequence is in view here.

33 tn Grk "they lifted up their voice" (an idiom).

34 tn Grk "in Lycaonian, saying." The word "language" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

35 tn So BDAG 707 s.v. ὁμοιόω 1. However, L&N 64.4 takes the participle ὁμοιωθέντες (homoiōthentes) as an adjectival participle modifying θεοί (theoi): "the gods resembling men have come down to us."

sn The gods have come down to us in human form. Greek culture spoke of "divine men." In this region there was a story of Zeus and Hermes visiting the area (Ovid, Metamorphoses 8.611-725). The locals failed to acknowledge them, so judgment followed. The present crowd was determined not to make the mistake a second time.

36 tn The imperfect verb ἐκάλουν (ekaloun) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

Barnabas Zeus[1] and Paul Hermes,[2] because he was the chief speaker. 14:13 The priest of the temple[3] of Zeus,[4] located just outside the city, brought bulls[5] and garlands[6] to the city gates; he and the crowds wanted to offer sacrifices to them.[7] 14:14 But when the apostles[8] Barnabas and Paul heard about[9] it, they tore[10] their clothes and rushed out[11] into the crowd, shouting,[12] 14:15 "Men, why are you doing these things? We too are men, with human natures[13] just like you! We are proclaiming the good news to you, so that you should turn[14] from these worthless[15] things to the living God, who made the heaven, the earth,[16] the sea, and everything that is in them. 14:16 In[17] past[18] generations he allowed all the nations[19] to go their own ways, 14:17 yet he did not leave himself without a witness by doing good,[20] by giving you rain from heaven[21] and fruitful seasons, satisfying you[22] with food and your hearts with joy."[23] 14:18 Even by saying[24] these things, they scarcely persuaded[25] the crowds not to offer sacrifice to them.

14:19 But Jews came from Antioch[26] and Iconium,[27] and after winning[28] the crowds over, they stoned[29] Paul and dragged him out of the 1 sn Zeus was the chief Greek deity, worshiped throughout the Greco-Roman world (known to the Romans as Jupiter).

2 sn Hermes was a Greek god who (according to Greek mythology) was the messenger of the gods and the god of oratory (equivalent to the Roman god Mercury).

3 tn The words "the temple of" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. The translation "the priest of (the temple/shrine of) Zeus located before the city" is given for this phrase by BDAG 426 s.v. Ζεύς.

4 sn See the note on Zeus in the previous verse.

5 tn Or "oxen."

6 tn Or "wreaths."

sn Garlands were commonly wreaths of wool with leaves and flowers woven in, worn on a person's head or woven around a staff. They were an important part of many rituals used to worship pagan gods. Although it was an erroneous reaction, the priest's reaction shows how all acknowledged their power and access to God.

7 tn The words "to them" are not in the Greek text, but are clearly implied by the response of Paul and Barnabas in the following verse.

8 sn The apostles Barnabas and Paul. This is one of only two places where Luke calls Paul an apostle, and the description here is shared with Barnabas. This is a nontechnical use here, referring to a commissioned messenger.

9 tn The participle ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) is taken temporally.

10 tn Grk "tearing their clothes they rushed out." The participle διαρρήξαντες (diarrēxantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. This action is a Jewish response to blasphemy (m. Sanhedrin 7.5; Jdt 14:16-17).

11 tn So BDAG 307 s.v. ἐκπηδάω 1, "rush (lit. 'leap') out... εἰς τὸν ὄχλον into the crowd Ac 14:14."

12 tn Grk "shouting and saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes, in v. 15) has not been translated because it is redundant.

sn What follows is one of two speeches in Acts to a purely pagan audience (Acts 17 in Athens is the other). So Paul focused on God as Creator, a common link.

13 tn Grk "with the same kinds of feelings," L&N 25.32. BDAG 706 s.v. ὁμοιοπαθής translates the phrase "with the same nature τινί as someone." In the immediate context, the contrast is between human and divine nature, and the point is that Paul and Barnabas are mere mortals, not gods.

14 tn Grk "in order that you should turn," with ἐπιστρέφειν (epistrephein) as an infinitive of purpose, but this is somewhat awkward contemporary English. To translate the infinitive construction "proclaim the good news, that you should turn," which is much smoother English, could give the impression that the infinitive clause is actually the content of the good news, which it is not. The somewhat less formal "to get you to turn" would work, but might convey to some readers manipulativeness on the part of the apostles. Thus "proclaim the good news, so that you should turn," is used, to convey that the purpose of the proclamation of good news is the response by the hearers. The emphasis here is like 1 Thess 1:9-10.

15 tn Or "useless," "futile." The reference is to idols and idolatry, worshiping the creation over the Creator (Rom 1:18-32). See also 1 Kgs 16:2, 13, 26; 2 Kgs 17:15; Jer 2:5; 8:19; 3 Macc 6:11.

16 tn Grk "and the earth, and the sea," but καί (kai) has not been translated before "the earth" and "the sea" since contemporary English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

17 tn Grk "them, who in." The relative pronoun ("who") was replaced by the pronoun "he" ("In past generations he") and a new sentence was begun in the translation at this point to improve the English style, due to the length of the sentence in Greek and the awkwardness of two relative clauses ("who made the heaven" and "who in past generations") following one another.

18 tn On this term see BDAG 780 s.v. παροίχομαι. The word is a NT hapax legomenon.

19 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (in Greek the word for "nation" and "Gentile" is the same). The plural here alludes to the variety of false religions in the pagan world.

20 tn The participle ἀγαθουργῶν (agathourgōn) is regarded as indicating means here, parallel to the following participles διδούς (didous) and ἐμπιπλῶν (empiplōn). This is the easiest way to understand the Greek structure. Semantically, the first participle is a general statement, followed by two participles giving specific examples of doing good.

21 tn Or "from the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

22 tn Grk "satisfying [filling] your hearts with food and joy." This is an idiomatic expression; it strikes the English reader as strange to speak of "filling one's heart with food." Thus the additional direct object "you" has been supplied, separating the two expressions somewhat: "satisfying you with food and your hearts with joy."

23 sn God's general sovereignty and gracious care in the creation are the way Paul introduces the theme of the goodness of God. He was trying to establish monotheism here. It is an OT theme (Gen 8:22; Ps 4:7; 145:15-16; 147:8-9; Isa 25:6; Jer 5:24) which also appears in the NT (Luke 12:22-34).

24 tn The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is regarded as indicating means.

25 tn BDAG 524 s.v. καταπαύω 2.b gives both "restrain" and "dissuade someone fr. someth.," but "they scarcely dissuaded the crowds from offering sacrifice," while accurate, is less common in contemporary English than saying "they scarcely persuaded the crowds not to offer sacrifice." Paganism is portrayed as a powerful reality that is hard to reverse.

26 sn Antioch was a city in Pisidia about 90 mi (145 km) west northwest of Lystra.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2; JP4-E2.

27 sn Iconium was a city in Lycaonia about 18 mi (30 km) north of Lystra. Note how Jews from other cities were chasing Paul (2 Cor 11:4-6; Gal 2:4-5; Acts 9:16).

28 tn The participle πείσαντες (peisantes) is taken temporally (BDAG 791 s.v. πείθω 1.c).

29 tn Grk "stoning Paul they dragged him." The participle λιθάσαντες (lithasantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

city, presuming him to be dead. 14:20 But after the disciples had surrounded him, he got up and went back[1] into the city. On[2] the next day he left with Barnabas for Derbe.[3]

Paul and Barnabas Return to Antioch in Syria

14:21 After they had proclaimed the good news in that city and made many disciples, they returned to Lystra,[4] to Iconium,[5] and to Antioch.[6] 14:22 They strengthened[7] the souls of the disciples and encouraged them to continue[8] in the faith, saying, "We must enter the kingdom[9] of God through many persecutions."[10] 14:23 When they had appointed elders[11] for them in the various churches,[12] with prayer and fasting[13] they entrusted them to the protection[14] of the Lord in whom they had believed. 14:24 Then they passed through[15] Pisidia and came into Pamphylia,[16] 14:25 and when they had spoken the word[17] in Perga,[18] they went down to Attalia.[19] 14:26 From there they sailed back to Antioch,[20] where they had been commended[21] to the grace of God for the work they had now completed.[22] 14:27 When they arrived and gathered the church together, they reported[23] all the things God[24] had done with them, and that he had opened a door[25] of faith for the Gentiles. 14:28 So they spent[26] considerable[27] time with the disciples.

The Jerusalem Council

15:1 Now some men came down from Judea[28] and began to teach the brothers, "Unless you are circumcised[29] according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved." 15:2 When Paul and Barnabas had a major argument and debate[30]

1 tn Grk "and entered"; the word "back" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

2 tn Grk "And on." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

3 sn Derbe was a city in Lycaonia about 35 mi (60 km) southeast of Lystra. This was the easternmost point of the journey.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

4 sn Lystra was a city in Lycaonia about 35 mi (60 km) northwest of Derbe.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

5 sn Iconium was a city in Lycaonia about 18 mi (30 km) north of Lystra.

6 sn Antioch was a city in Pisidia about 90 mi (145 km) west northwest of Lystra.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2; JP4-E2.

7 tn Grk "to Antioch, strengthening." Due to the length of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, a new sentence was started here. This participle (ἐπιστηρίζοντες, epistērizontes) and the following one (παρακαλοῦντες, parakalountes) have been translated as finite verbs connected by the coordinating conjunction "and."

8 sn And encouraged them to continue. The exhortations are like those noted in Acts 11:23; 13:43. An example of such a speech is found in Acts 20:18-35. Christianity is now characterized as "the faith."

9 sn This reference to the kingdom of God clearly refers to its future arrival.

10 tn Or "sufferings."

11 sn Appointed elders. See Acts 20:17.

12 tn The preposition κατά (kata) is used here in a distributive sense; see BDAG 512 s.v. κατά B.1.d.

13 tn Literally with a finite verb (προσευξάμενοι, proseuxamenoi) rather than a noun, "praying with fasting," but the combination "prayer and fasting" is so familiar in English that it is preferable to use it here.

14 tn BDAG 772 s.v. παρατίθημι 3.b has "entrust someone to the care or protection of someone" for this phrase. The reference to persecution or suffering in the context (v. 22) suggests "protection" is a better translation here. This looks at God's ultimate care for the church.

15 tn Grk "Then passing through Pisidia they came." The participle διελθόντες (dielthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 sn Pamphylia was a province along the southern coast of Asia Minor.

17 tn Or "message."

18 sn Perga was a city in Pamphylia near the southern coast of Asia Minor.

19 sn Attalia was a seaport in the province of Pamphylia on the southern coast of Asia Minor, about 12 mi (20 km) southwest of Perga.

20 sn Antioch was the city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia) from which Paul's first missionary journey began (see Acts 13:1-4). That first missionary journey ends here, after covering some 1,400 mi (2,240 km).

map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

21 tn Or "committed." BDAG 762 s.v. παραδίδωμι 2 gives "commended to the grace of God for the work 14:26" as the meaning for this phrase, although "give over" and "commit" are listed as alternative meanings for this category.

22 tn BDAG 829 s.v. πληρόω 5 has "to bring to completion an activity in which one has been involved from its beginning, complete, finish" as meanings for this category. The ministry to which they were commissioned ends with a note of success.

23 tn Or "announced."

24 sn Note that God is the subject of the activity. The outcome of this mission is seen as a confirmation of the mission to the Gentiles.

25 sn On the image of opening, or of the door, see 1 Cor 16:9; 2 Cor 2:12; Col 4:3.

26 tn BDAG 238 s.v. διατρίβω gives the meaning as "spend" when followed by an accusative τὸν χρόνον (ton chronon) which is the case here.

27 tn Grk "no little (time)" (an idiom).

28 sn That is, they came down from Judea to Antioch in Syria.

29 tc Codex Bezae (D) and a few other witnesses have "and walk" here (i.e., instead of τῷ ἔθει τῷ Μωϋσέως [tō ethei tō Mōuseōs] they read καὶ τῷ ἔθει τῷ Μωϋσέως περιπατῆτε [kai tō ethei tō Mōuseōs peripatēte]). This is a decidedly stronger focus on obedience to the Law. As well, D expands vv. 1-5 in various places with the overall effect of being "more sympathetic to the local tradition of the church at Jerusalem" while the Alexandrian witnesses are more sympathetic to Paul (TCGNT 377). Codex D is well known for having a significantly longer text in Acts, but modern scholarship is generally of the opinion that the text of D expands on the original wording of Acts, with a theological viewpoint that especially puts Peter in a more authoritarian light. The expansion in these five verses is in keeping with that motif even though Peter is not explicitly in view.

sn Unless you are circumcised. These teachers from Judea were teaching that Gentiles could not be saved unless they kept the law of Moses in regard to circumcision. Thus according to them a Gentile had first to become a proselyte to Judaism, including circumcision, before one could become a Christian. This party is sometimes known (collectively) as Judaizers. They did not question that Gentiles could come into the community, but disagreed with Paul and Barnabas on what basis they could do so.

with them, the church[1] appointed Paul and Barnabas and some others from among them to go up to meet with[2] the apostles and elders in Jerusalem[3] about this point of disagreement.[4] 15:3 So they were sent on their way by the church, and as they passed through both Phoenicia[5] and Samaria, they were relating at length[6] the conversion of the Gentiles and bringing great joy[7] to all the brothers. 15:4 When they arrived in Jerusalem, they were received[8] by the church and the apostles and the elders, and they reported[9] all the things God had done with them.[10] 15:5 But some from the religious party of the Pharisees[11] who had believed stood up and said, "It is necessary[12] to circumcise the Gentiles[13] and to order them to observe[14] the law of Moses."

15:6 Both the apostles and the elders met together to deliberate[15] about this matter. 15:7 After there had been much debate,[16] Peter stood up and said to them, "Brothers, you know that some time ago[17] God chose[18] me to preach to the Gentiles so they would hear the message[19] of the gospel[20] and believe.[21] 15:8 And God, who knows the heart,[22] has testified[23] to them by giving them the Holy Spirit just as he did to us,[24] 15:9 and he made no distinction[25] between them and us, cleansing[26] their hearts by faith. 15:10 So now why are you putting God to the test[27] by placing on the neck of the disciples a yoke[28] that neither our ancestors[29] nor we have been able to bear? 15:11 On the contrary, we believe that we are saved through[30] the grace of the Lord Jesus, in the same way as they are."[31]

15:12 The whole group kept quiet[32] and listened to Barnabas and Paul while they explained all the miraculous signs[33] and wonders God had done among the Gentiles through them. 15:13 After they stopped speaking,[34] James

1 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the church, or the rest of the believers at Antioch) has been specified to avoid confusion with the Judaizers mentioned in the preceding clause.

2 tn Grk "go up to," but in this context a meeting is implied.

3 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

4 tn Or "point of controversy." It is unclear whether this event parallels Gal 2:1-10 or that Gal 2 fits with Acts 11:30. More than likely Gal 2:1-10 is to be related to Acts 11:30.

5 sn Phoenicia was an area along the Mediterranean coast north of Palestine in ancient Syria.

6 tn L&N 33.201 indicates that ἐκδιηγέομαι (ekdiēgeomai) means to provide detailed information in a systematic manner, "to inform, to relate, to tell fully." "Relating at length" conveys this effectively in the present context.

7 tn For ἐποίουν (epoioun) in this verse BDAG 839 s.v. ποιέω 2.c has "they brought joy to the members."

8 tn BDAG 761 s.v. παραδέχομαι 2 has "receive, accept" for the meaning here.

9 tn Or "announced."

10 tn "They reported all the things God had done with them" – an identical phrase occurs in Acts 14:27. God is always the agent.

11 sn See the note on Pharisee in 5:34.

12 sn The Greek word used here (δεῖ, dei) is a strong term that expresses divine necessity. The claim is that God commanded the circumcision of Gentiles.

13 tn Grk "them"; the referent (the Gentiles) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Or "keep."

15 tn The translation for ἰδεῖν (idein) in this verse is given by BDAG 279-80 s.v. εἶδον 3 as "deliberate concerning this matter." A contemporary idiom would be to "look into" a matter.

16 tn Or "discussion." This term is repeated from v. 2.

17 tn Or "long ago" (an idiom, literally "from ancient days"). According to L&N 67.26, "this reference to Peter having been chosen by God sometime before to bring the gospel to the Gentiles can hardly be regarded as a reference to ancient times, though some persons understand this to mean that God's decision was made at the beginning of time. The usage of ἀφ᾽ ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων is probably designed to emphasize the established nature of God's decision for Peter to take the gospel to the Gentiles beginning with the centurion Cornelius. The fact that this was relatively early in the development of the church may also serve to explain the use of the idiom."

18 sn God chose. The theme of God's sovereign choice is an important point, because 1st century Jews believed Israel's unique position and customs were a reflection of God's choice.

19 tn Or "word."

20 tn Or "of the good news."

21 tn Grk "God chose among you from my mouth the Gentiles to hear the message of the gospel and to believe." The sense of this sentence in Greek is difficult to render in English. The Greek verb ἐκλέγομαι (eklegomai, "choose") normally takes a person or thing as a direct object; in this verse the verb has neither clearly stated. The translation understands the phrase "from my mouth," referring to Peter, as a description of both who God chose and the task to be done. This coupled with the following statement about Gentiles hearing the message of the gospel leads to the more dynamic rendering in the translation.

22 sn The expression who knows the heart means "who knows what people think."

23 tn Or "has borne witness."

24 sn By giving them...just as he did to us. The allusion is to the events of Acts 10-11, esp. 10:44-48 and Peter's remarks in 11:15-18.

25 tn BDAG 231 s.v. διακρίνω 1.b lists this passage under the meaning "to conclude that there is a difference, make a distinction, differentiate."

26 tn Or "purifying."

27 tn According to BDAG 793 s.v. πειράζω 2.c, "In Ac 15:10 the πειράζειν τὸν θεόν consists in the fact that after God's will has been clearly made known through granting of the Spirit to the Gentiles (v. 8), some doubt and make trial to see whether God's will really becomes operative." All testing of God in Luke is negative: Luke 4:2; 11:16.

28 sn A yoke is a wooden bar or frame that joins two animals like oxen or horses so that they can pull a wagon, plow, etc. together. Here it is used figuratively of the restriction that some in the early church wanted to place on Gentile converts to Christianity of observing the law of Moses and having males circumcised. The yoke is a decidedly negative image: Matt 23:4, but cf. Matt 11:29-30.

29 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

30 tn Or "by."

31 tn Or "Jesus, just as they are." BDAG 1016-17 s.v. τρόπος 1 translates καθ᾽ ὃν τρόπον (kath' hon tropon) here as "in the same way as."

sn In the same way as they are. Here is an interesting reversal of the argument. Jews are saved by grace (without law), as Gentiles are.

32 tn BDAG 922 s.v. σιγάω 1.a lists this passage under the meaning "say nothing, keep still, keep silent."

33 tn Here in connection with τέρατα (terata) the miraculous nature of these signs is indicated.

34 tn BDAG 922 s.v. σιγάω 1.b lists this passage under the meaning "stop speaking, become silent." replied,[1] "Brothers, listen to me. 15:14 Simeon[2] has explained[3] how God first concerned himself[4] to select[5] from among the Gentiles[6] a people for his name. 15:15 The[7] words of the prophets agree[8] with this, as it is written,

> 15:16 'After this[9] I[10] will return, > and I will rebuild the fallen tent[11] of David;
> I will rebuild its ruins and restore[12] it, > 15:17 so that the rest of humanity[13] may seek the Lord, > namely,[14] all the Gentiles[15] I have called to be my own,'[16] says the Lord,[17] who makes these things 15:18 known[18] from long ago.[19]

15:19 "Therefore I conclude[20] that we should not cause extra difficulty[21] for those among the Gentiles[22] who are turning to God, 15:20 but that we should write them a letter[23] telling them to abstain[24] from things defiled[25] by idols and from sexual immorality and from what has been strangled[26] and from blood. 15:21 For Moses has had those who proclaim him in every town from

1 tn Grk "answered, saying"; the redundant participle λέγων (legōn) has not been translated.

2 sn Simeon is a form of the apostle Peter's Aramaic name. James uses Peter's "Jewish" name here.

3 tn Or "reported," "described."

4 tn BDAG 378 s.v. ἐπισκέπτομαι 3 translates this phrase in Acts 15:14, "God concerned himself about winning a people fr. among the nations."

5 tn Grk "to take," but in the sense of selecting or choosing (accompanied by the preposition ἐκ [ek] plus a genitive specifying the group selected from) see Heb 5:1; also BDAG 584 s.v. λαμβάνω 6.

6 sn In the Greek text the expression "from among the Gentiles" is in emphatic position.

7 tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

8 sn The term agree means "match" or "harmonize with." James' point in the introduction argues that many of the OT prophets taught this. He gives one example (which follows).

9 tn Grk "After these things."

10 sn The first person pronoun I refers to God and his activity. It is God who is doing this.

11 tn Or more generally, "dwelling"; perhaps, "royal tent." According to BDAG 928 s.v. σκηνή the word can mean "tent" or "hut," or more generally "lodging" or "dwelling." In this verse (a quotation from Amos 9:11) BDAG refers this to David's ruined kingdom; it is possibly an allusion to a king's tent (a royal tent). God is at work to reestablish David's line (Acts 2:30-36; 13:32-39).

12 tn BDAG 86 s.v. ἀνορθόω places this verb under the meaning "to build someth. up again after it has fallen, rebuild, restore," but since ἀνοικοδομέω (anoikodomeō, "rebuild") has occurred twice in this verse already, "restore" is used here.

13 tn Or "so that all other people." The use of this term follows Amos 9:11 LXX.

14 tn Here καί (kai) introduces an explanatory clause that explains the preceding phrase "the rest of humanity." The clause introduced by καί (kai) could also be punctuated in English as a parenthesis.

15 tn Or "all the nations" (in Greek the word for "nation" and "Gentile" is the same).

sn Note the linkage back to v. 14 through the mention of Gentiles. What Simeon explained is what the OT text says would happen.

16 tn Grk "all the Gentiles on whom my name has been called." Based on well-attested OT usage, the passive of ἐπικαλέω (epikaleō) here indicates God's ownership ("all the Gentiles who belong to me") or calling ("all the Gentiles whom I have called to be my own"). See L&N 11.28.

17 sn A quotation from Amos 9:11-12 LXX. James demonstrated a high degree of cultural sensitivity when he cited a version of the text (the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Old Testament) that Gentiles would use.

18 sn Who makes these things known. The remark emphasizes how God's design of these things reaches back to the time he declared them.

19 sn An allusion to Isa 45:21.

20 tn Or "I have decided," "I think." The verb κρίνω (krinō) has a far broader range of meaning than the often-used English verb "judge." BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 3 places this use in Acts 15:19 in the category "judge, think, consider, look upon" followed by double accusative of object and predicate. However, many modern translations give the impression that a binding decision is being handed down by James: "it is my judgment" (NASB, NIV); "I have reached the decision" (NRSV). L&N 22.25, on the other hand, translate the phrase here "I think that we should not cause extra difficulty for those among the Gentiles." This gives more the impression of an opinion than a binding decision. The resolution of this lies not so much in the lexical data as in how one conceives James' role in the leadership of the Jerusalem church, plus the dynamics of the specific situation where the issue of Gentile inclusion in the church was being discussed. The major possibilities are: (1) James is handing down a binding decision to the rest of the church as the one who has ultimate authority to decide this matter; (2) James is offering his own personal opinion in the matter, which is not binding on the church; (3) James is voicing a consensus opinion of all the apostles and elders, although phrasing it as if it were his own; (4) James is making a suggestion to the rest of the leadership as to what course they should follow. In light of the difficulty in reconstructing the historical situation in detail, it is best to use a translation which maintains as many of the various options as possible. For this reason the translation "Therefore I conclude" has been used, leaving open the question whether in reaching this conclusion James is speaking only for himself or for the rest of the leadership.

21 tn Or "trouble." This term is a NT hapax legomenon (BDAG 775 s.v. παρενοχλέω).

22 tn Or "among the nations" (in Greek the word for "nation" and "Gentile" is the same).

23 tn The translation "to write a letter, to send a letter to" for ἐπιστέλλω (epistellō) is given in L&N 33.49.

24 tn Three of the four prohibitions deal with food (the first, third and fourth) while one prohibition deals with behavior (the second, refraining from sexual immorality). Since these occur in the order they do, the translation "abstain from" is used to cover both sorts of activity (eating food items, immoral behavior).

sn Telling them to abstain. These restrictions are not on matters of salvation, but are given as acts of sensitivity to their Jewish brethren, as v. 21 makes clear. Another example of such sensitivity is seen in 1 Cor 10:14-11:1.

25 tn Or "polluted."

26 sn What has been strangled. That is, to refrain from eating animals that had been killed without having the blood drained from them. According to the Mosaic law (Lev 17:13-14), Jews were forbidden to eat flesh with the blood still in it (note the following provision in Acts 15:20, and from blood).

ancient times,[1] because he is read aloud[2] in the synagogues[3] every Sabbath."

15:22 Then the apostles and elders, with the whole church, decided[4] to send men chosen from among them, Judas called Barsabbas and Silas,[5] leaders among the brothers, to Antioch[6] with Paul and Barnabas. 15:23 They sent this letter with them:[7]

> From the apostles[8] and elders, your brothers,[9] to the Gentile brothers and sisters[10] in Antioch,[11] Syria,[12] and Cilicia, greetings! 15:24 Since we have heard that some have gone out from among us with no orders from us and have confused[13] you, upsetting[14] your minds[15] by what they said,[16] 15:25 we have unanimously[17] decided[18] to choose men to send to you along with our dear friends Barnabas and Paul, 15:26 who[19] have risked their lives[20] for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.[21] 15:27 Therefore we are sending[22] Judas and Silas[23] who will tell you these things themselves in person.[24] 15:28 For it seemed best to the Holy Spirit and to us[25] not to place any greater burden on you than these necessary rules:[26] 15:29 that you abstain from meat that has been sacrificed to idols[27] and from blood and from what has been strangled[28] and from sexual immorality.[29] If you keep yourselves from doing these things,[30] you will do well. Farewell.[31]

1 tn Grk "from generations of old"; the translation "fr. ancient times" is given by BDAG 192 s.v. γενεά 3.b.

2 tn The translation "read aloud" is used to indicate the actual practice; translating as "read" could be misunderstood to mean private, silent reading.

3 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

4 tn BDAG 255 s.v. δοκέω 2.b.β lists this verse under the meaning "it seems best to me, I decide, I resolve."

5 sn Silas. See 2 Cor 1:19; 1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1 (= Silvanus).

6 sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia).

map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

7 tn Grk "writing by their hand" (an idiom for sending a letter).

8 tn Grk "The apostles." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

9 tn Grk "brothers," but "your" is supplied to specify the relationship, since without it "brothers" could be understood as vocative in English.

10 tn Grk "to the brothers who are from the Gentiles."

11 sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia).

12 tn Grk "and Syria," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

13 tn Here BDAG 990-91 s.v. ταράσσω 2 states, "Of mental confusion caused by false teachings ταρ. τινά Ac 15:24 (w. λόγοις foll.)."

14 tn BDAG 71 s.v. ἀνασκευάζω describes this verb with a figurative meaning: "to cause inward distress, upset, unsettle."

15 tn Grk "souls."

16 tn Grk "by words"; L&N 25.231 translates the phrase "they troubled and upset you by what they said."

17 tn Grk "having become of one mind, we have decided." This has been translated "we have unanimously decided" to reduce the awkwardness in English.

18 tn BDAG 255 s.v. δοκέω 2.b.β lists this verse under the meaning "it seems best to me, I decide, I resolve."

19 tn Grk "men who," but this can be misleading because in English the referent could be understood to be the men sent along with Barnabas and Paul rather than Barnabas and Paul themselves. This option does not exist in the Greek original, however, since ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is dative and must agree with "Barnabas and Paul," while ἄνδρας (andras) is accusative. By omitting the word "men" from the translation here, it is clear in English that the phrase refers to the immediately preceding nouns "Barnabas and Paul."

20 tn Grk "who have risked their souls"; the equivalent English idiom is "risk one's life." The descriptions commend Barnabas and Paul as thoroughly trustworthy.

21 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

22 tn This verb has been translated as an epistolary aorist.

23 sn Judas and Silas were the "two witnesses" who would vouch for the truth of the recommendation.

24 tn Grk "by means of word" (an idiom for a verbal report).

25 tn This is the same expression translated "decided" in Acts 15:22, 25. BDAG 255 s.v. δοκέω 2.b.β lists "decide" as a possible gloss for this verse, and this translation would be consistent with the translation of the same expression in Acts 15:22, 25. However, the unusually awkward "the Holy Spirit and we have decided" would result. Given this approach, it would be more natural in English to say "We and the Holy Spirit have decided," but changing the order removes the emphasis the Greek text gives to the Holy Spirit. Thus, although the similarity to the phrases in 15:22, 25 is obscured, it is better to use the alternate translation "it seems best to me" (also given by BDAG): "it seemed best to the Holy Spirit and to us." Again the scope of agreement is highlighted.

26 tn L&N 71.39 translates "indispensable (rules)" while BDAG 358 s.v. ἐπάναγκες has "the necessary things."

27 tn There is no specific semantic component in the Greek word εἰδωλόθυτος that means "meat" (see BDAG 280 s.v. εἰδωλόθυτος; L&N 5.15). The stem –θυτος means "sacrifice" (referring to an animal sacrificially killed) and thereby implies meat.

28 tc Codex Bezae (D) and a few other witnesses lack the restriction "and from what has been strangled" (καὶ πνικτῶν, kai pniktōn), though the words are supported by a wide variety of early and important witnesses otherwise and should be considered authentic.

sn What has been strangled. That is, to refrain from eating animals that had been killed without having the blood drained from them. According to the Mosaic law (Lev 17:13-14), Jews were forbidden to eat flesh with the blood still in it (note the preceding provision in this verse, and from blood).

29 tc Codex Bezae (D) as well as 323 614 945 1739 1891 sa and other witnesses have after "sexual immorality" the following statement: "And whatever you do not want to happen to yourselves, do not do to another/others." By adding this negative form of the Golden Rule, these witnesses effectively change the Apostolic Decree from what might be regarded as ceremonial restrictions into more ethical demands. The issues here are quite complicated, and beyond the scope of this brief note. Suffice it to say that D and its allies here are almost surely an expansion and alteration of the original text of Acts. For an excellent discussion of the exegetical and textual issues, see TCGNT 379-83.

30 tn Grk "from which things keeping yourselves." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun (ὧν, hōn) has been replaced by a pronoun ("these things") and a new English sentence begun. The participle διατηροῦντες (diatērountes) has been translated as a conditional adverbial participle ("if you keep yourselves"). See further L&N 13.153.

31 tn The phrase ἔρρωσθε (errōsthe) may be understood as a stock device indicating a letter is complete ("good-bye," L&N 33.24) or as a sincere wish that the persons involved may fare well ("may you fare well," L&N 23.133).

15:30 So when they were dismissed,[1] they went down to Antioch,[2] and after gathering the entire group[3] together, they delivered the letter. 15:31 When they read it aloud,[4] the people[5] rejoiced at its encouragement.[6] 15:32 Both Judas and Silas, who were prophets themselves, encouraged and strengthened the brothers with a long speech.[7] 15:33 After[8] they had spent some time there,[9] they were sent off in peace by the brothers to those who had sent them.[10] 15:35 But Paul and Barnabas remained in Antioch,[11] teaching and proclaiming (along with many others)[12] the word of the Lord.[13]

Paul and Barnabas Part Company

15:36 After some days Paul said to Barnabas, "Let's return[14] and visit the brothers in every town where we proclaimed the word of the Lord[15] to see how they are doing."[16] 15:37 Barnabas wanted to bring John called Mark along with them too, 15:38 but Paul insisted[17] that they should not take along this one who had left them in Pamphylia[18] and had not accompanied them in the work. 15:39 They had[19] a sharp disagreement,[20] so that they parted company. Barnabas took along[21] Mark and sailed away to Cyprus,[22] 15:40 but Paul chose Silas and set out, commended[23] to the grace of the Lord by the brothers and sisters.[24] 15:41 He passed through Syria and Cilicia, strengthening[25] the churches.

Timothy Joins Paul and Silas

16:1 He also came to Derbe[26] and to Lystra.[27] A disciple[28] named Timothy was there, the son of a Jewish woman who was a believer,[29] but whose father was a Greek.[30] 16:2 The brothers in Lystra[31] and Iconium[32] spoke well[33] of him.[34]

---

1 tn Or "sent away."

2 sn Antioch was a city in Syria (not Antioch in Pisidia).

3 tn Or "congregation" (referring to the group of believers).

4 tn Grk "read it." The translation "read aloud" is used to indicate the actual practice of public reading; translating as "read" could be misunderstood to mean private, silent, or individual reading.

5 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the people) is specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Or "at its encouraging message."

7 tn Here λόγου (logou) is singular. BDAG 599-600 s.v. λόγος 1.a.β has "in a long speech" for this phrase.

8 tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

9 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

10 tc A few MSS add 15:34 "But Silas decided to stay there." Verse 34 is lacking in 𝔓74 א A B E Ψ 𝔐 bo. It is included in a shorter form, with a few minor variations, by (C) 33 36 323 453 614 (945) 1175 1739 1891 al sa, and in a longer form ("But Silas decided to stay with them, and only Judas departed") by D l. The verse is almost certainly not a part of the original text of Acts, but was added to harmonize with the statement about Silas in v. 40. The present translation follows NA27 in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

12 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

13 sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in v. 36; Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

14 tn Grk "Returning let us visit." The participle ἐπιστρέψαντες (epistrepsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

15 tn See the note on the phrase "word of the Lord" in v. 35.

16 tn BDAG 422 s.v. ἔχω 10.b has "how they are" for this phrase.

17 tn BDAG 94 s.v. ἀξιόω 2.a has "he insisted (impf.) that they should not take him along" for this phrase.

18 sn Pamphylia was a province in the southern part of Asia Minor. See Acts 13:13, where it was mentioned previously.

19 tn Grk "There happened a sharp disagreement." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

20 tn BDAG 780 s.v. παροξυσμός 2 has "sharp disagreement" here; L&N 33.451 has "sharp argument, sharp difference of opinion."

21 tn Grk "taking along Mark sailed." The participle παραλαβόντα (paralabonta) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

22 sn Cyprus is a large island in the Mediterranean off the south coast of Asia Minor.

23 tn Or "committed." BDAG 762 s.v. παραδίδωμι 2 gives "be commended by someone to the grace of the Lord" as the meaning for this phrase, although "give over" and "commit" are listed as alternatives for this category.

24 tn Grk "by the brothers." Here it is highly probable that the entire congregation is in view, not just men, so the translation "brothers and sisters" has been used for the plural ἀδελφῶν (adelphōn),.

25 sn Strengthening. See Acts 14:22; 15:32; 18:23.

26 sn Derbe was a city in Lycaonia about 35 mi (60 km) southeast of Lystra. It was about 90 mi (145 km) from Tarsus.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

27 sn Lystra was a city in Lycaonia about 25 mi (40 km) south of Iconium.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

28 tn Grk "And behold, a disciple." Here ἰδού (idou) has not been translated.

29 tn L&N 31.103 translates this phrase "the son of a Jewish woman who was a believer."

30 sn His father was a Greek. Timothy was the offspring of a mixed marriage between a Jewish woman (see 2 Tim 1:5) and a Gentile man. On mixed marriages in Judaism, see Neh 13:23-27; Ezra 9:1-10:44; Mal 2:10-16; Jub. 30:7-17; m. Qiddushin 3.12; m. Yevamot 7.5.

31 sn Lystra was a city in Lycaonia about 25 mi (40 km) south of Iconium.

32 sn Iconium was a city in Lycaonia about 110 mi (175 km) east of Pisidian Antioch.

33 tn For this sense of μαρτυρέω (martureō), see BDAG 618 s.v. 2.b.

34 tn Grk "who was well spoken of by the brothers in Lystra and Iconium." Because of the awkwardness in English of having two relative clauses follow one another ("who was a believer...who was well spoken of") and the awkwardness of the passive verb ("was well spoken of"), the relative pronoun at the beginning of 16:2 ("who") has been translated as a pronoun ("him") and the construction converted from passive to active at the same time a new sentence was started in the translation.

16:3 Paul wanted Timothy[1] to accompany him, and he took[2] him and circumcised[3] him because of the Jews who were in those places,[4] for they all knew that his father was Greek.[5] 16:4 As they went through the towns,[6] they passed on[7] the decrees that had been decided on by the apostles and elders in Jerusalem[8] for the Gentile believers[9] to obey.[10] 16:5 So the churches were being strengthened in the faith and were increasing in number every day.[11]

Paul's Vision of the Macedonian Man

16:6 They went through the region of Phrygia[12] and Galatia,[13] having been prevented[14] by the Holy Spirit from speaking the message[15] in the province of Asia.[16] 16:7 When they came to[17] Mysia,[18] they attempted to go into Bithynia,[19] but the Spirit of Jesus did not allow[20] them to do this,[21] 16:8 so they passed through[22] Mysia[23] and went down to Troas.[24] 16:9 A[25] vision appeared to Paul during the night: A Macedonian man was standing there[26] urging him,[27] "Come over[28] to Macedonia[29] and help us!" 16:10 After Paul[30] saw the vision, we attempted[31] immediately to go over to Macedonia,[32] concluding that God had called[33] us to proclaim the good news to them.

Arrival at Philippi

16:11 We put out to sea[34] from Troas[35] and sailed a straight course[36] to Samothrace,[37] the next day to Neapolis,[38] 16:12 and from there to Philippi,[39] which is a leading city of that

[1] tn Grk "this one"; the referent (Timothy) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Grk "and taking him he circumcised him." The participle λαβών (labōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Paul's cultural sensitivity showed in his action here. He did not want Timothy's lack of circumcision to become an issue (1 Cor 9:15-23).

[3] tn The verb περιέτεμεν (perietemen) here may be understood as causative (cf. ExSyn 411-12) if Paul did not personally perform the circumcision.

[4] tn Or "who lived in the area."

[5] tn The anarthrous predicate nominative has been translated as qualitative ("Greek") rather than indefinite ("a Greek").

sn His father was Greek. Under Jewish law at least as early as the 2nd century, a person was considered Jewish if his or her mother was Jewish. It is not certain whether such a law was in effect in the 1st century, but even if it was, Timothy would not have been accepted as fully Jewish because he was not circumcised.

[6] tn Or "cities."

[7] tn BDAG 762-63 s.v. παραδίδωμι 3 has "they handed down to them the decisions to observe Ac 16:4."

[8] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[9] tn Grk "for them"; the referent (Gentile believers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[10] tn Or "observe" or "follow."

[11] tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase.

[12] sn Phrygia was a district in central Asia Minor west of Pisidia.

[13] sn Galatia refers to either (1) the region of the old kingdom of Galatia in the central part of Asia Minor (North Galatia), or (2) the Roman province of Galatia, whose principal cities in the 1st century were Ancyra and Pisidian Antioch (South Galatia). The exact extent and meaning of this area has been a subject of considerable controversy in modern NT studies.

[15] tn Or "word."

[16] tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

[17] tn BDAG 511 s.v. κατά B.1.b has "to Mysia" here.

[18] sn Mysia was a province in northwest Asia Minor.

[19] sn Bithynia was a province in northern Asia Minor northeast of Mysia.

[20] tn Or "permit"; see BDAG 269 s.v. ἐάω 1.

[21] tn The words "do this" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied for stylistic reasons, since English handles ellipses differently than Greek.

[22] tn Although the normal meaning for παρέρχομαι (parerchomai) is "pass by, go by," it would be difficult to get to Troas from where Paul and his companions were without going through rather than around Mysia. BDAG 776 s.v. παρέρχομαι 6 list some nonbiblical examples of the meaning "go through, pass through," and give that meaning for the usage here.

[23] sn Mysia was a province in northwest Asia Minor.

[24] sn Troas was a port city (and surrounding region) on the northwest coast of Asia Minor, near ancient Troy.

[25] tn Grk "And a." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[26] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[27] tn The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

[28] tn Grk "Coming over." The participle διαβάς (diabas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[29] sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

[30] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn Grk "sought."

[32] sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

[33] tn Or "summoned."

[34] tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

[35] sn Troas was a port city (and surrounding region) on the northwest coast of Asia Minor. See v. 8.

[36] tn BDAG 406 s.v. εὐθυδρομέω has "of a ship run a straight course" here; L&N 54.3 has "to sail a straight course, sail straight to."

[37] sn Samothrace is an island in the northern part of the Aegean Sea.

[38] sn Neapolis was a seaport on the southern coast of Macedonia. It was 10 mi (16 km) from Philippi.

district[1] of Macedonia,[2] a Roman colony.[3] We stayed in this city for some days. 16:13 On the Sabbath day we went outside the city gate to the side of the river, where we thought there would be a place of prayer, and we sat down[4] and began to speak[5] to the women[6] who had assembled there.[7] 16:14 A[8] woman named Lydia, a dealer in purple cloth[9] from the city of Thyatira,[10] a God-fearing woman, listened to us.[11] The Lord opened her heart to respond[12] to what Paul was saying. 16:15 After she and her household were baptized, she urged us,[13] "If[14] you consider me to be a believer in the Lord,[15] come and stay in my house." And she persuaded[16] us.

16:16 Now[17] as we were going to the place of prayer, a slave girl met us who had a spirit that enabled her to foretell the future by supernatural means.[18] She[19] brought her owners[20] a great profit by fortune-telling.[21] 16:17 She followed behind Paul and us and kept crying out,[22] "These men are servants[23] of the Most High God, who are proclaiming to you the way[24] of [1] tc ‡ Or perhaps, "a city in the first district" (there are a number of textual variants). L&N 1.85 follow the text of UBS[4] and NA[27] here: "In Ac 16:12...the Greek New Testament published by the United Bible Societies has adopted a conjectural emendation, since the more traditional text, πρώτη τῆς μερίδος, literally 'first of the district,' is not only misleading in meaning but does not reflect the historical fact that Philippi was a city in one of the four districts of Macedonia but was not a capital city." The original text is probably πρώτη τῆς μερίδος (prōtē tēs meridos, "first of the district") as found in 𝔓[74] ℵ A C Ψ 33[vid] 36 81 323 945 1175 1891 pc. This has traditionally been translated to give the impression that Philippi was the capital city of the district, but it does not necessarily have to be translated this way. The translation of the article before μερίδος as "that" acknowledges that there were other districts in the province of Macedonia.

[2] sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

[3] sn A Roman colony was a city whose residents were regarded as Roman citizens, since such cities were originally colonized by citizens of Rome. From Troas to Philippi was 130 mi (208 km).

[4] tn Grk "and sitting down we began to speak." The participle καθίσαντες (kathisantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[5] tn The imperfect verb ἐλαλοῦμεν (elaloumen) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

[6] sn To the women. Apparently there were not enough Jews present in Philippi to have a synagogue (ten men would have been required to have one).

[7] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[8] tn Grk "And a." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[9] tn On the term translated "a dealer in purple cloth" see BDAG 855 s.v. πορφυρόπωλις.

[10] sn Thyatira was a city in the province of Lydia in Asia Minor.

[11] tn The words "to us" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[12] tn Although BDAG 880 s.v. προσέχω 2.b gives the meaning "pay attention to" here, this could be misunderstood by the modern English reader to mean merely listening intently. The following context, however, indicates that Lydia responded positively to Paul's message, so the verb here was translated "to respond."

sn Lydia is one of several significant women in Acts (see 17:4, 12, 34; 18:20).

[13] tn Grk "urged us, saying." The participle λέγουσα (legousa) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

[14] tn This is a first class condition in Greek, with the statement presented as real or true for the sake of the argument.

[15] tn Or "faithful to the Lord." BDAG 821 s.v. πίστος 2 states concerning this verse, "Of one who confesses the Christian faith believing or a believer in the Lord, in Christ, in God πιστ. τῷ κυρίῳ Ac 16:15." L&N 11.17 has "one who is included among the faithful followers of Christ – 'believer, Christian, follower.'"

[16] tn Although BDAG 759 s.v. παραβιάζομαι has "urge strongly, prevail upon," in contemporary English "persuade" is a more frequently used synonym for "prevail upon."

[18] tn Or "who had a spirit of divination"; Grk "who had a spirit of Python." According to BDAG 896-97 s.v. πύθων, originally Πύθων (Puthōn) was the name of the serpent or dragon that guarded the Delphic oracle. According to Greek mythology, it lived at the foot of Mount Parnassus and was killed by Apollo. From this, the word came to designate a person who was thought to have a spirit of divination. Pagan generals, for example, might consult someone like this. So her presence here suggests a supernatural encounter involving Paul and her "spirit." W. Foerster, TDNT 6:920, connects the term with ventriloquism but states: "We must assume, however, that for this girl, as for those mentioned by Origen..., the art of ventriloquism was inseparably connected with a (supposed or authentic) gift of soothsaying." It should also be noted that if the girl in question here were only a ventriloquist, the exorcism performed by Paul in v. 18 would not have been effective.

[19] tn Grk "who." Because of the awkwardness in English of having two relative clauses follow one another ("who had a spirit...who brought her owners a great profit") the relative pronoun here ("who") has been translated as a pronoun ("she") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

[20] tn Or "masters."

[21] tn On this term see BDAG 616 s.v. μαντεύομαι. It was used of those who gave oracles.

[22] tn Grk "crying out, saying"; the participle λέγουσα (legousa) is redundant in English and has not been translated. The imperfect verb ἔκραζεν (ekrazen) has been translated as a progressive imperfect.

[23] tn Grk "slaves." See the note on the word "servants" in 2:18. The translation "servants" was used here because in this context there appears to be more emphasis on the activity of Paul and his companions ("proclaiming to you the way of salvation") than on their status as "slaves of the Most High God."

[24] tn Or "a way." The grammar of this phrase is a bit ambiguous. The phrase in Greek is ὁδὸν σωτηρίας (hodon sōtērias). Neither the head noun nor the genitive noun has the article; this is in keeping with Apollonius' Canon (see ExSyn 239-40). Since both nouns are anarthrous, this construction also fits Apollonius' Corollary (see ExSyn 250-54); since the genitive noun is abstract it is most naturally qualitative, so the head noun could either be definite or indefinite without being unusual as far as the grammar is concerned. Luke's usage of ὁδός elsewhere is indecisive as far as this passage is concerned. However, when one looks at the historical background it is clear that (1) the woman is shut up (via exorcism) not because her testimony is false but because of its source (analogous to Jesus' treatment of demons perhaps), and salvation."[1] 16:18 She continued to do this for many days. But Paul became greatly annoyed,[2] and turned[3] and said to the spirit, "I command you in the name of Jesus Christ[4] to come out of her!" And it came out of her at once.[5] 16:19 But when her owners[6] saw their hope of profit[7] was gone, they seized[8] Paul and Silas and dragged[9] them into the marketplace before the authorities. 16:20 When[10] they had brought them[11] before the magistrates, they said, "These men are throwing our city into confusion.[12] They are[13] Jews 16:21 and are advocating[14] customs that are not lawful for us to accept[15] or practice,[16] since we are[17] Romans."

16:22 The crowd joined the attack[18] against them, and the magistrates tore the clothes[19] off Paul and Silas[20] and ordered them to be beaten with rods.[21] 16:23 After they had beaten them severely,[22] they threw them into prison and commanded[23] the jailer to guard them securely. 16:24 Receiving such orders, he threw them in the inner cell[24] and fastened their feet in the stocks.[25]

16:25 About midnight Paul and Silas were praying[26] and singing hymns to God,[27] and the rest of[28] the prisoners were listening to them. 16:26 Suddenly a great earthquake occurred, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken. Immediately all the doors flew open, and the bonds[29] of all the prisoners came loose. 16:27 When the jailer woke up[30] and saw the

(b) "the way" is a par excellence description of the new faith throughout Acts. It thus seems that at least in Luke's presentation "the way of salvation" is the preferred translation.

[1] sn Proclaiming to you the way of salvation. The remarks were an ironic recognition of Paul's authority, but he did not desire such a witness, possibly for fear of confusion. Her expression the Most High God might have been understood as Zeus by the audience.

[2] tn Grk "becoming greatly annoyed." The participle διαπονηθείς (diaponētheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. The aorist has been translated as an ingressive aorist (entry into a state or condition). See BDAG 235 s.v. διαπονέομαι.

[3] tn Grk "and turning." The participle ἐπιστρέψας (epistrepsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[5] tn BDAG 1102-3 s.v. ὥρα 2.c has "at that very time, at once, instantly" for the usage in this verse.

[6] tn Or "masters."

[7] tn On this use of ἐργασία (ergasia), see BDAG 390 s.v. 4. It is often the case that destructive practices and commerce are closely tied together.

[8] tn Grk "was gone, seizing." The participle ἐπιλαβόμενοι (epilabomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[9] tn On the term ἕλκω (helkō) see BDAG 318 s.v. 1.

[10] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[11] tn Grk "having brought them." The participle ἐπιλαβόμενοι (epilabomenoi) has been taken temporally. It is also possible in English to translate this participle as a finite verb: "they brought them before the magistrates and said."

[12] tn BDAG 309 s.v. ἐκταράσσω has "agitate, cause trouble to, throw into confusion" for the meaning of this verb.

[13] tn Grk "being Jews, and they are proclaiming." The participle ὑπάρχοντες (huparchontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[14] tn Grk "proclaiming," but in relation to customs, "advocating" is a closer approximation to the meaning.

[15] tn Or "acknowledge."

[16] sn Customs that are not lawful for us to accept or practice. Ironically, the charges are similar to those made against Jesus in Luke 23:2, where Jews argued he was "twisting" their customs. The charge has three elements: (1) a racial element (Jewish); (2) a social element (unlawful); and (3) a traditional element (not their customs).

[17] tn Grk "we being Romans." The participle οὖσιν (ousin) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[18] tn L&N 39.50 has "the crowd joined the attack against them" for συνεπέστη (sunepestē) in this verse.

[19] tn Grk "tearing the clothes off them, the magistrates ordered." The participle περιρήξαντες (perirēxantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Although it may be possible to understand the aorist active participle περιρήξαντες in a causative sense ("the magistrates caused the clothes to be torn off Paul and Silas") in the mob scene that was taking place, it is also possible that the magistrates themselves actively participated. This act was done to prepare them for a public flogging (2 Cor 11:25; 1 Thess 2:2).

[20] tn Grk "off them"; the referents (Paul and Silas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn The infinitive ῥαβδίζειν (rhabdizein) means "to beat with rods or sticks" (as opposed to fists or clubs, BDAG 902 s.v. ῥαβδίζω).

[22] tn Grk "Having inflicted many blows on them." The participle ἐπιθέντες (epithentes) has been taken temporally. BDAG 384 s.v. ἐπιτίθημι 1.a.β has "inflict blows upon someone" for this expression, but in this context it is simpler to translate in English as "they had beaten them severely."

[23] tn Grk "commanding." The participle παραγγείλαντες (parangeilantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[24] tn Or "prison."

[25] tn L&N 6.21 has "stocks" for εἰς τὸ ξύλον (eis to xulon) here, as does BDAG 685 s.v. ξύλον 2.b. However, it is also possible (as mentioned in L&N 18.12) that this does not mean "stocks" but a block of wood (a log or wooden column) in the prison to which prisoners' feet were chained or tied. Such a possibility is suggested by v. 26, where the "bonds" ("chains"?) of the prisoners loosened.

[26] tn Grk "praying, were singing." The participle προσευχόμενοι (proseuchomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[27] sn Praying and singing hymns to God. Tertullian said, "The legs feel nothing in the stocks when the heart is in heaven" (To the Martyrs 2; cf. Rom 5:3; Jas 1:2; 1 Pet 5:6). The presence of God means the potential to be free (cf. v. 26).

[28] tn The words "the rest of" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[29] tn Or perhaps, "chains." The translation of τὰ δεσμά (ta desma) is to some extent affected by the understanding of ξύλον (xulon, "stocks") in v. 24. It is possible (as mentioned in L&N 18.12) that this does not mean "stocks" but a block of wood (a log or wooden column) in the prison to which prisoners' feet were chained or tied.

[30] tn L&N 23.75 has "had awakened" here. It is more in keeping with contemporary English style, however, to keep the two verbal ideas parallel in terms of tense ("when the jailer woke up and saw") although logically the second action is subsequent to the first.

doors of the prison standing open,[1] he drew his sword and was about to kill himself,[2] because he assumed[3] the prisoners had escaped. 16:28 But Paul called out loudly,[4] "Do not harm yourself,[5] for we are all here!" 16:29 Calling for lights, the jailer[6] rushed in and fell down[7] trembling at the feet of Paul and Silas. 16:30 Then he brought them outside[8] and asked, "Sirs, what must[9] I do to be saved?" 16:31 They replied,[10] "Believe[11] in the Lord Jesus[12] and you will be saved, you and your household." 16:32 Then[13] they spoke the word of the Lord[14] to him, along with all those who were in his house. 16:33 At[15] that hour of the night he took them[16] and washed their wounds;[17] then[18] he and all his family[19] were baptized right away.[20] 16:34 The jailer[21] brought them into his house and set food[22] before them, and he rejoiced greatly[23] that he had come to believe[24] in God, together with his entire household.[25] 16:35 At daybreak[26] the magistrates[27] sent their police officers,[28] saying, "Release those men." 16:36 The jailer reported these words to Paul, saying,[29] "The magistrates have sent orders[30] to release you. So come out now and go in peace."[31] 16:37 But Paul said to the police

[1] tn The additional semantic component "standing" is supplied ("standing open") to convey a stative nuance in English.

[2] sn Was about to kill himself. The jailer's penalty for failing to guard the prisoners would have been death, so he contemplated saving the leaders the trouble (see Acts 12:19; 27:42).

[3] tn Or "thought."

[4] tn Grk "But Paul called out with a loud voice, saying." The dative phrase μεγάλῃ φωνῇ (megalē phōnē) has been simplified as an English adverb ("loudly"), and the participle λέγων (legōn) has not been translated since it is redundant in English.

[5] sn Do not harm yourself. Again the irony is that Paul is the agent through whom the jailer is spared.

[6] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the jailer) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Or "and prostrated himself."

sn Fell down. The earthquake and the freeing of the prisoners showed that God's power was present. Such power could only be recognized. The open doors opened the jailer's heart.

[8] tn Grk "And bringing them outside, he asked." The participle προαγαγών (proagagōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun by supplying the conjunction "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

[9] tn The Greek term (δεῖ, dei) is used by Luke to represent divine necessity.

[10] tn Grk "said."

[11] sn Here the summary term of response is a call to believe. In this context it refers to trusting the sovereign God's power to deliver, which events had just pictured for the jailer.

[12] tc The majority of MSS add Χριστόν (Christon, "Christ") here (C D E Ψ 1739 𝔐 sy sa), but the best and earliest witnesses read simply τὸν κύριον Ἰησοῦν (ton kurion Iēsoun, "the Lord Jesus"; 𝔓[74vid] ℵ A B 33 81 pc bo). The addition of "Christ" to "Lord Jesus" is an obviously motivated reading. Thus on both external and internal grounds, the shorter reading is strongly preferred.

[13] tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the continuity with the preceding verse. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style does not.

[14] sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

[15] tn Grk "And at." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[16] tn Grk "taking them...he washed." The participle παραλαβών (paralabōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[17] tn On this phrase BDAG 603 s.v. λούω 1 gives a literal translation as "by washing he freed them from the effects of the blows."

[18] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

[19] sn All his family. It was often the case in the ancient world that conversion of the father led to the conversion of all those in the household.

[20] tn Or "immediately."

[21] tn Grk "He"; the referent (the jailer) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Grk "placed [food] on the table" (a figurative expression). Since the actual word for food is not specified, it would also be possible to translate "set a meal before them," but since this is taking place in the middle of the night, the preparations necessary for a full meal would probably not have been made. More likely Paul and Silas were given whatever was on hand that needed little or no preparation.

[24] tn The translation "come to believe" reflects more of the resultative nuance of the perfect tense here.

[25] tn The phrase "together with his entire household" is placed at the end of the English sentence so that it refers to both the rejoicing and the belief. A formal equivalence translation would have "and he rejoiced greatly with his entire household that he had come to believe in God," but the reference to the entire household being baptized in v. 33 presumes that all in the household believed.

[26] tn The translation "day is breaking" for ἡμέρα γίνεται (hēmera ginetai) in this verse is given by BDAG 436 s.v. ἡμέρα 1.a.

[27] tn On the term translated "magistrates," see BDAG 947-48 s.v. στρατηγός 1. These city leaders were properly called duoviri, but were popularly known as praetors (στρατηγοί, stratēgoi). They were the chief officials of Philippi. The text leaves the impression that they came to the decision to release Paul and Silas independently. God was at work everywhere.

[28] tn On the term ῥαβδοῦχος (rhabdouchos) see BDAG 902 s.v. The term was used of the Roman lictor and roughly corresponds to contemporary English "constable, policeman."

[29] tn The word "saying" is not in the Greek text, but is implied; it is necessary in English because the content of what the jailer said to Paul and Silas is not the exact message related to him by the police officers, but is a summary with his own additions.

[30] tn The word "orders" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

officers,[1] "They had us beaten in public[2] without a proper trial[3] – even though we are Roman citizens[4] – and they threw us[5] in prison. And now they want to send us away[6] secretly? Absolutely not! They[7] themselves must come and escort us out!"[8] 16:38 The police officers reported these words to the magistrates. They were frightened when they heard Paul and Silas[9] were Roman citizens[10] 16:39 and came[11] and apologized to them. After[12] they brought them out, they asked them repeatedly[13] to leave the city. 16:40 When they came out of the prison, they entered Lydia's house, and when they saw the brothers, they encouraged them and then[14] departed.

Paul and Silas at Thessalonica

17:1 After they traveled through[15] Amphipolis[16] and Apollonia,[17] they came to Thessalonica,[18] where there was a Jewish synagogue.[19] 17:2 Paul went to the Jews in the synagogue,[20] as he customarily did, and on three Sabbath days he addressed[21] them from the scriptures, 17:3 explaining and demonstrating[22] that the Christ[23] had to suffer and to rise from the dead,[24] saying,[25] "This Jesus I am proclaiming to you is the Christ."[26] 17:4 Some of them were persuaded[27] and joined Paul and Silas, along with a large group[28] of God-fearing Greeks[29] and quite a few[30] prominent women. 17:5 But the Jews became jealous,[31] and gathering together some worthless men from the rabble in the marketplace,[32] they formed a mob[33] and set the city in

1 tn Grk "to them"; the referent (the police officers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Grk "Having us beaten in public." The participle δείραντες (deirantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

3 tn Or "in public, uncondemned." BDAG 35 s.v. ἀκατάκριτος has "uncondemned, without due process" for this usage.

4 tn The participle ὑπάρχοντας (huparchontas) has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

5 tn The word "us" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

6 tn L&N 28.71 has "send us away secretly" for this verse.

7 tn Grk "But they."

8 sn They themselves must come and escort us out! Paul was asking for the injustice he and Silas suffered to be symbolically righted. It was a way of publicly taking their actions off the record and showing the apostles' innocence, a major public statement. Note the apology given in v. 39.

9 tn Grk "heard they"; the referents (Paul and Silas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 sn Roman citizens. This fact was disturbing to the officials because due process was a right for a Roman citizen, well established in Roman law. To flog a Roman citizen was considered an abomination. Such punishment was reserved for noncitizens.

11 tn Grk "and coming, they apologized." The participle ἐλθόντες (elthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn Grk "and after." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

13 tn The verb ἐρώτων (erōtōn) has been translated as an iterative imperfect; the English adverb "repeatedly" brings out the iterative force in the translation.

14 tn "Then" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to clarify the logical sequence in the translation.

15 tn BDAG 250 s.v. διοδεύω 1 has "go, travel through" for this verse.

16 sn Amphipolis. The capital city of the southeastern district of Macedonia (BDAG 55 s.v. Ἀμφίπολις). It was a military post. From Philippi this was about 33 mi (53 km).

17 sn Apollonia was a city in Macedonia about 27 mi (43 km) west southwest of Amphipolis.

18 sn Thessalonica (modern Salonica) was a city in Macedonia about 33 mi (53 km) west of Apollonia. It was the capital of Macedonia. The road they traveled over was called the Via Egnatia. It is likely they rode horses, given their condition in Philippi. The implication of v. 1 is that the two previously mentioned cities lacked a synagogue.

map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

19 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

20 tn Grk "he went in to them"; the referent (the Jews in the synagogue) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 17:2. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

22 tn BDAG 772 s.v. παρατίθημι 2.b has "demonstrate, point out" here.

23 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

24 sn The Christ had to suffer and to rise from the dead. These two points (suffering and resurrection) would have been among the more controversial aspects of Paul's messianic preaching. The term translated "had to" (δεῖ, dei) shows how divine design and scripture corresponded here.

25 tn The Greek words used here (καὶ ὅτι, kai hoti, "and that") mark the switch from indirect to direct discourse. Contemporary English requires the use of an introductory verb of speaking or saying to make this transition.

26 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31. The identification of the Messiah with Jesus indicates Paul was proclaiming the fulfillment of messianic promise.

27 tn Or "convinced."

28 tn Or "a large crowd."

29 tn Or "of devout Greeks," but this is practically a technical term for the category called God-fearers, Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44. Luke frequently mentions such people (Acts 13:43, 50; 16:14; 17:17; 18:7).

30 tn Grk "not a few"; this use of negation could be misleading to the modern English reader, however, and so has been translated as "quite a few" (which is the actual meaning of the expression).

31 tn Grk "becoming jealous." The participle ζηλώσαντες (zēlōsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. So elsewhere in Acts (5:17; 7:9; 13:45).

32 tn Literally ἀγοραῖος (agoraios) refers to the crowd in the marketplace, although BDAG 14-15 s.v. ἀγοραῖος 1 gives the meaning, by extension, as "rabble." Such a description is certainly appropriate in this context. L&N 15.127 translates the phrase "worthless men from the streets."

33 tn On this term, which is a NT hapax legomenon, see BDAG 745 s.v. ὀχλοποιέω.

an uproar.[1] They attacked Jason's house,[2] trying to find Paul and Silas[3] to bring them out to the assembly.[4] 17:6 When they did not find them, they dragged[5] Jason and some of the brothers before the city officials,[6] screaming, "These people who have stirred up trouble[7] throughout the world[8] have come here too, 17:7 and[9] Jason has welcomed them as guests! They[10] are all acting against Caesar's[11] decrees, saying there is another king named[12] Jesus!"[13] 17:8 They caused confusion among[14] the crowd and the city officials[15] who heard these things. 17:9 After[16] the city officials[17] had received bail[18] from Jason and the others, they released them.

Paul and Silas at Berea

17:10 The brothers sent Paul and Silas off to Berea[19] at once, during the night. When they arrived,[20] they went to the Jewish synagogue.[21] 17:11 These Jews[22] were more open-minded[23] than those in Thessalonica,[24] for they eagerly[25] received[26] the message, examining[27] the scriptures carefully every day[28] to see if these things were so. 17:12 Therefore many of them believed, along with quite a few[29] prominent[30] Greek women and men. 17:13 But when the Jews from Thessalonica[31] heard that Paul had also proclaimed the word of God[32] in Berea, they came there too, inciting[33] and disturbing[34] the crowds. 17:14 Then the brothers sent Paul away to the

[1] tn BDAG 458 s.v. θορυβέω 1 has "set the city in an uproar, start a riot in the city" for the meaning of ἐθορύβουν (ethoruboun) in this verse.

[2] sn The attack took place at Jason's house because this was probably the location of the new house church.

[3] tn Grk "them"; the referents (Paul and Silas) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn BDAG 223 s.v. δῆμος 2 has "in a Hellenistic city, a convocation of citizens called together for the purpose of transacting official business, popular assembly προάγειν εἰς τὸν δ. Ac 17:5."

[5] tn See BDAG 977-78 s.v. σύρω on this verb. It was used in everyday speech of dragging in fish by a net, or dragging away someone's (presumably) dead body (Paul in Acts 14:19).

[6] tn L&N 37.93 defines πολιτάρχης (politarchēs) as "a public official responsible for administrative matters within a town or city and a member of the ruling council of such a political unit – 'city official'" (see also BDAG 845 s.v.).

[7] tn Or "rebellion." BDAG 72 s.v. ἀναστατόω has "disturb, trouble, upset," but in light of the references in the following verse to political insurrection, "stirred up rebellion" would also be appropriate.

[8] tn Or "the empire." This was a way of referring to the Roman empire (BDAG 699 s.v. οἰκουμένη 2.b).

sn Throughout the world. Note how some of those present had knowledge of what had happened elsewhere. Word about Paul and his companions and their message was spreading.

[9] tn Grk "whom." Because of the awkwardness in English of having two relative clauses follow one another ("who have stirred up trouble…whom Jason has welcomed") the relative pronoun here ("whom") has been replaced by the conjunction "and," creating a clause that is grammatically coordinate but logically subordinate in the translation.

[10] tn Grk "and they." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

[11] tn Or "the emperor's" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

[12] tn The word "named" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity.

[13] sn Acting…saying…Jesus. The charges are serious, involving sedition (Luke 23:2). If the political charges were true, Rome would have to react.

[14] tn Grk "They troubled the crowd and the city officials," but this could be understood to mean "they bothered" or "they annoyed." In reality the Jewish instigators managed to instill doubt and confusion into both the mob and the officials by their false charges of treason. Verse 8 suggests the charges raised again Paul, Silas, Jason, and the others were false.

[15] tn L&N 37.93 defines πολιτάρχης (politarchēs) as "a public official responsible for administrative matters within a town or city and a member of the ruling council of such a political unit – 'city official.'"

[16] tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[17] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the city officials) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn That is, "a payment" or "a pledge of security" (BDAG 472 s.v. ἱκανός 1) for which "bail" is the most common contemporary English equivalent.

map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[20] tn Grk "who arriving there, went to." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun (οἵτινες, hoitines) has been left untranslated and a new English sentence begun. The participle παραγενόμενοι (paragenomenoi) has been taken temporally.

[21] sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

[22] tn Grk "These"; the referent (the Jews in the synagogue at Berea) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[23] tn Or "more willing to learn." L&N 27.48 and BDAG 404 s.v. εὐγενής 2 both use the term "open-minded" here. The point is that they were more receptive to Paul's message.

[24] sn Thessalonica was a city in Macedonia (modern Salonica).

map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[25] tn Or "willingly," "readily"; Grk "with all eagerness."

[26] tn Grk "who received." Here the relative pronoun ("who") has been translated as a pronoun ("they") preceded by a semicolon, which is less awkward in contemporary English than a relative clause at this point.

[27] tn This verb (BDAG 66 s.v. ἀνακρίνω 1) refers to careful examination.

[28] tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase in this verse.

[29] tn Grk "not a few"; this use of negation could be misleading to the modern English reader, however, and so has been translated as "quite a few" (which is the actual meaning of the expression).

[30] tn Or "respected."

[31] sn Thessalonica was a city in Macedonia (modern Salonica).

[32] tn Grk "that the word of God had also been proclaimed by Paul." This passive construction has been converted to an active one in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[33] tn BDAG 911 s.v. σαλεύω 2 has "incite" for σαλεύοντες (saleuontes) in Acts 17:13.

sn Inciting. Ironically, it was the Jews who were disturbing the peace, not the Christians.

[34] tn Or "stirring up" (BDAG 990-91 s.v. ταράσσω 2). The point is the agitation of the crowds.

coast[1] at once, but Silas and Timothy remained in Berea.[2] 17:15 Those who accompanied Paul escorted him as far as Athens,[3] and after receiving an order for Silas and Timothy to come to him as soon as possible, they left.[4]

Paul at Athens

17:16 While Paul was waiting for them in Athens,[5] his spirit was greatly upset[6] because he saw[7] the city was full of idols. 17:17 So he was addressing[8] the Jews and the God-fearing Gentiles[9] in the synagogue,[10] and in the marketplace every day[11] those who happened to be there. 17:18 Also some of the Epicurean[12] and Stoic[13] philosophers were conversing[14] with him, and some were asking,[15] "What does this foolish babbler[16] want to say?" Others said, "He seems to be a proclaimer of foreign gods."[17] (They said this because he was proclaiming the good news about Jesus and the resurrection.)[18] 17:19 So they took Paul and[19] brought him to the Areopagus,[20] saying, "May we know what this new teaching is that you are proclaiming? 17:20 For you are bringing some surprising things[21] to our ears, so we want to know what they[22] mean." 17:21 (All the Athenians and the foreigners who lived there used to spend their time[23] in nothing else than telling[24] or listening to something new.)[25]

1 tn Grk "to the sea." Here ἕως ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν (heōs epi tēn thalassan) must mean "to the edge of the sea," that is, "to the coast." Since there is no mention of Paul taking a ship to Athens, he presumably traveled overland. The journey would have been about 340 mi (550 km).

2 tn Grk "remained there"; the referent (Berea) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

4 sn They left. See 1 Thess 3:1-2, which shows they went from here to Thessalonica.

5 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

6 tn Grk "greatly upset within him," but the words "within him" were not included in the translation because they are redundant in English. See L&N 88.189. The term could also be rendered "infuriated."

sn His spirit was greatly upset. See Rom 1:18-32 for Paul's feelings about idolatry. Yet he addressed both Jews and Gentiles with tact and reserve.

7 tn Or "when he saw." The participle θεωροῦντος (theōrountos) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle; it could also be translated as temporal.

8 tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 17:17. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

9 tn Or "and the devout," but this is practically a technical term for the category called God-fearers, Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44, and the note on the phrase "God-fearing Greeks" in 17:4.

10 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

11 tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase in this verse.

12 sn An Epicurean was a follower of the philosophy of Epicurus, who founded a school in Athens about 300 B.C. Although the Epicureans saw the aim of life as pleasure, they were not strictly hedonists, because they defined pleasure as the absence of pain. Along with this, they desired the avoidance of trouble and freedom from annoyances. They saw organized religion as evil, especially the belief that the gods punished evildoers in an afterlife. In keeping with this, they were unable to accept Paul's teaching about the resurrection.

13 sn A Stoic was a follower of the philosophy founded by Zeno (342-270 B.C.), a Phoenician who came to Athens and modified the philosophical system of the Cynics he found there. The Stoics rejected the Epicurean ideal of pleasure, stressing virtue instead. The Stoics emphasized responsibility for voluntary actions and believed risks were worth taking, but thought the actual attainment of virtue was difficult. They also believed in providence.

14 tn BDAG 956 s.v. συμβάλλω 1 has "converse, confer" here.

15 tn Grk "saying."

16 tn Or "ignorant show-off." The traditional English translation of σπερμολόγος (spermologos) is given in L&N 33.381 as "foolish babbler." However, an alternate view is presented in L&N 27.19, "(a figurative extension of meaning of a term based on the practice of birds in picking up seeds) one who acquires bits and pieces of relatively extraneous information and proceeds to pass them off with pretense and show – 'ignorant show-off, charlatan.'" A similar view is given in BDAG 937 s.v. σπερμολόγος: "in pejorative imagery of persons whose communication lacks sophistication and seems to pick up scraps of information here and there scrapmonger, scavenger...Engl. synonyms include 'gossip', 'babbler', chatterer'; but these terms miss the imagery of unsystematic gathering."

17 tn The meaning of this phrase is not clear. Literally it reads "strange deities" (see BDAG 210 s.v. δαιμόνιον 1). The note of not being customary is important. In the ancient world what was new was suspicious. The plural δαιμονίων (daimoniōn, "deities") shows the audience grappling with Paul's teaching that God was working through Jesus.

18 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

19 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Or "to the council of the Areopagus." See also the term in v. 22.

sn The Areopagus has been traditionally understood as reference to a rocky hill near the Acropolis in Athens, although this place may well have been located in the marketplace at the foot of the hill (L&N 93.412; BDAG 129 s.v. Ἄρειος πάγος). This term does not refer so much to the place, however, as to the advisory council of Athens known as the Areopagus, which dealt with ethical, cultural, and religious matters, including the supervision of education and controlling the many visiting lecturers. Thus it could be translated the council of the Areopagus. See also the term in v. 22.

21 tn BDAG 684 s.v. ξενίζω 2 translates the substantival participle ξενίζοντα (xenizonta) as "astonishing things Ac 17:20."

22 tn Grk "these things," but since the referent ("surprising things") is so close, the repetition of "these things" sounds redundant in English, so the pronoun "they" was substituted in the translation.

23 tn The imperfect verb ηὐκαίρουν (ēukairoun) has been translated as a customary or habitual imperfect.

24 tn BDAG 406-7 s.v. εὐκαιρέω has "used to spend their time in nothing else than telling Ac 17:21."

25 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. The reference to newness may be pejorative.

17:22 So Paul stood[1] before the Areopagus and said, "Men of Athens, I see that you are very religious[2] in all respects.[3] 17:23 For as I went around and observed closely your objects of worship,[4] I even found an altar with this inscription:[5] 'To an unknown god.' Therefore what you worship without knowing it,[6] this I proclaim to you. 17:24 The God who made the world and everything in it,[7] who is[8] Lord of heaven and earth, does not live in temples made by human hands,[9] 17:25 nor is he served by human hands, as if he needed anything,[10] because he himself gives life and breath and everything to everyone.[11] 17:26 From one man[12] he made every nation of the human race[13] to inhabit the entire earth,[14] determining their set times[15] and the fixed limits of the places where they would live,[16] 17:27 so that they would search for God and perhaps grope around[17] for him and find him,[18] though he is[19] not far from each one of us. 17:28 For in him we live and move about[20] and exist, as even some of your own poets have said, 'For we too are his offspring.'[21] 17:29 So since we are God's offspring, we should not think the deity[22] is like gold or silver or stone, an image[23] made by human[24] skill[25] and imagination.[26] 17:30 Therefore, although God has overlooked[27] such times of ignorance,[28] he now commands all people[29] everywhere to repent,[30] 17:31 because he has set[31] a day on which he is going to judge the world[32] in righteousness, by a man whom he designated,[33] having provided proof to everyone by raising[34] him from the dead."

1 tn Grk "standing...said." The participle ζηλώσαντες (zēlōsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

2 tn The term δεισιδαιμονεστέρους (deisidaimonesterous) is difficult. On the one hand it can have the positive sense of "devout," but on the other hand it can have the negative sense of "superstitious" (BDAG 216 s.v. δεισιδαίμων). As part of a laudatory introduction (the technical rhetorical term for this introduction was captatio), the term is probably positive here. It may well be a "backhanded" compliment, playing on the ambiguity.

3 tn BDAG 513 s.v. κατά B.6 translates the phrase κατὰ πάντα (kata panta) as "in all respects."

4 tn Or "your sanctuaries." L&N 53.54 gives "sanctuary" (place of worship) as an alternate meaning for the word σεβάσματα (sebasmata).

5 tn Grk "on which was written," but since it would have been carved in stone, it is more common to speak of an "inscription" in English. To simplify the English the relative construction with a passive verb ("on which was inscribed") was translated as a prepositional phrase with a substantive ("inscription").

6 tn BDAG 13 s.v. ἀγνοέω 1.b has "Abs. ὅ ἀγνοοῦντες εὐσεβεῖτε what you worship without knowing it (on the subject matter Maximus Tyr. 11, 5e: all sorts of philosophers ἴσασιν οὐκ ἑκόντες καὶ λέγουσιν ἄκοντες sc. τὸ θεῖον = they know and name God without intending to do so) Ac 17:23." Paul, in typical Jewish Christian style, informs them of the true God, of whom their idols are an ignorant reflection.

7 tn Grk "all the things that are in it." The speech starts with God as Creator, like 14:15.

8 tn Or "because he is." The participle ὑπάρχων (huparchōn) could be either adjectival, modifying οὗτος (houtos, "who is Lord...") or adverbial of cause ("because he is Lord..."). Since the participle διδούς (didous) in v. 25 appears to be clearly causal in force, it is preferable to understand ὑπάρχων as adjectival in this context.

9 sn On the statement does not live in temples made by human hands compare Acts 7:48. This has implications for idols as well. God cannot be represented by them or, as the following clause also suggests, served by human hands.

10 tn L&N 57.45 has "nor does he need anything more that people can supply by working for him."

11 tn Grk "he himself gives to all [people] life and breath and all things."

12 sn The one man refers to Adam (the word "man" is understood).

13 tn Or "mankind." BDAG 276 s.v. ἔθνος 1 has "every nation of humankind Ac 17:26."

14 tn Grk "to live over all the face of the earth."

15 tn BDAG 884-85 s.v. προστάσσω has "(οἱ) προστεταγμένοι καιροί (the) fixed times Ac 17:26" here, but since the following phrase is also translated "fixed limits," this would seem redundant in English, so the word "set" has been used instead.

16 tn Grk "the boundaries of their habitation." L&N 80.5 has "fixed limits of the places where they would live" for this phrase.

17 tn See BDAG 1097-98 s.v. ψηλαφάω, which lists "touch, handle" and "to feel around for, grope for" as possible meanings.

18 sn Perhaps grope around for him and find him. The pagans' struggle to know God is the point here. Conscience alone is not good enough.

19 tn The participle ὑπάρχοντα (huparchonta) has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

20 tn According to L&N 15.1, "A strictly literal translation of κινέω in Ac 17:28 might imply merely moving from one place to another. The meaning, however, is generalized movement and activity; therefore, it may be possible to translate κινούμεθα as 'we come and go' or 'we move about'' or even 'we do what we do.'"

21 sn This quotation is from Aratus (ca. 310-245 B.C.), Phaenomena 5. Paul asserted a general relationship and accountability to God for all humanity.

22 tn Or "the divine being." BDAG 446 s.v. θεῖος 1.b has "divine being, divinity" here.

23 tn Or "a likeness." Again idolatry is directly attacked as an affront to God and a devaluation of him.

24 tn Grk "by the skill and imagination of man," but ἀνθρώπου (anthrōpou) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

25 tn Or "craftsmanship" (cf. BDAG 1001 s.v. τέχνη).

26 tn Or "thought." BDAG 336 s.v. ἐνθύμησις has "thought, reflection, idea" as the category of meaning here, but in terms of creativity (as in the context) the imaginative faculty is in view.

27 tn Or "has deliberately paid no attention to."

28 tn Or "times when people did not know."

29 tn Here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) has been translated as a generic noun ("people").

30 sn He now commands all people everywhere to repent. God was now asking all mankind to turn to him. No nation or race was excluded.

31 tn Or "fixed."

32 sn The world refers to the whole inhabited earth.

33 tn Or "appointed." BDAG 723 s.v. ὁρίζω 2.b has "of persons appoint, designate, declare: God judges the world ἐν ἀνδρὶ ᾧ ὥρισεν through a man whom he has appointed Ac 17:31."

sn A man whom he designated. Jesus is put in the position of eschatological judge. As judge of the living and the dead, he possesses divine authority (Acts 10:42).

34 tn The participle ἀναστήσας (anastēsas) indicates means here.

17:32 Now when they heard about[1] the resurrection from the dead, some began to scoff,[2] but others said, "We will hear you again about this." 17:33 So Paul left the Areopagus.[3] 17:34 But some people[4] joined him[5] and believed. Among them[6] were Dionysius, who was a member of the Areopagus,[7] a woman[8] named Damaris, and others with them.

Paul at Corinth

18:1 After this[9] Paul[10] departed from[11] Athens[12] and went to Corinth.[13] 18:2 There he[14] found[15] a Jew named Aquila,[16] a native of Pontus,[17] who had recently come from Italy with his wife Priscilla, because Claudius[18] had ordered all the Jews to depart from[19] Rome.[20] Paul approached[21] them, 18:3 and because he worked at the same trade, he stayed with them and worked with them[22] (for they were tentmakers[23] by trade).[24] 18:4 He addressed[25] both Jews and Greeks in the synagogue[26] every Sabbath, attempting to persuade[27] them.

18:5 Now when Silas and Timothy arrived[28] from Macedonia,[29] Paul became wholly absorbed with proclaiming[30] the word, testifying[31] to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ.[32] 18:6 When they opposed him[33] and reviled

1 tn The participle ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) has been taken temporally.

2 tn L&N 33.408 has "some scoffed (at him) Ac 17:32" for ἐχλεύαζον (echleuazon) here; the imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive imperfect ("began to scoff").

3 tn Grk "left out of their midst"; the referent (the Areopagus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Although the Greek word here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which normally refers to males, husbands, etc., in this particular context it must have a generic force similar to that of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), since "a woman named Damaris" is mentioned specifically as being part of this group (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. ἀνήρ 1.a).

5 tn Grk "joining him, believed." The participle κολληθέντες (kollēthentes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. On the use of this verb in Acts, see 5:13; 8:29; 9:26; 10:28.

6 tn Grk "among whom." Due to the length of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been translated as a third person plural pronoun ("them") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

7 tn Grk "the Areopagite" (a member of the council of the Areopagus). The noun "Areopagite" is not in common usage today in English. It is clearer to use a descriptive phrase "a member of the Areopagus" (L&N 11.82). However, this phrase alone can be misleading in English: "Dionysius, a member of the Areopagus, and a woman named Damaris" could be understood to refer to three people (Dionysius, an unnamed member of the Areopagus, and Damaris) rather than only two. Converting the descriptive phrase to a relative clause in English ("who was a member of the Areopagus") removes the ambiguity.

8 tn Grk "and a woman," but this καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

9 tn Grk "After these things."

10 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

13 sn Corinth was the capital city of the senatorial province of Achaia and the seat of the Roman proconsul. It was located 55 mi (88 km) west of Athens. Corinth was a major rival to Athens and was the largest city in Greece at the time.

map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

14 tn Grk "And he." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here. The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

15 tn Grk "finding." The participle εὑρών (heurōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 sn On Aquila and his wife Priscilla see also Acts 18:18, 26; Rom 16:3-4; 1 Cor 16:19; 2 Tim 4:19. In the NT "Priscilla" and "Prisca" are the same person. This author uses the full name Priscilla, while Paul uses the diminutive form Prisca.

17 sn Pontus was a region in the northeastern part of Asia Minor. It was a Roman province.

18 sn Claudius refers to the Roman emperor Tiberius Claudius Nero Germanicus, known as Claudius, who ruled from A.D. 41-54. The edict expelling the Jews from Rome was issued in A.D. 49 (Suetonius, Claudius 25.4).

19 tn Or "to leave."

20 map For location see JP4-A1.

21 tn Or "went to."

22 tn The prepositional phrase "with them" occurs only once in the Greek text, but since it occurs between the two finite verbs (ἔμενεν, emenen, and ἠργάζετο, ērgazeto) it relates (by implication) to both of them.

23 tn On the term translated "tentmakers," see BDAG 928-29 s.v. σκηνοποιός. Paul apparently manufactured tents. In contrast to the Cynic philosophers, Paul at times labored to support himself (see also v. 5).

24 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

25 tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 18:4. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

26 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

27 tn Grk "Addressing in the synagogue every Sabbath, he was attempting to persuade both Jews and Greeks." Because in English the verb "address" is not used absolutely but normally has an object specified, the direct objects of the verb ἔπειθεν (epeithen) have been moved forward as the objects of the English verb "addressed," and the pronoun "them" repeated in the translation as the object of ἔπειθεν. The verb ἔπειθεν has been translated as a conative imperfect.

28 tn Grk "came down."

29 sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

30 tn BDAG 971 s.v. συνέχω 6 states, "συνείχετο τῷ λόγῳ (Paul) was wholly absorbed in preaching Ac 18:5...in contrast to the activity cited in vs. 3." The imperfect συνείχετο (suneicheto) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect ("became wholly absorbed..."), stressing the change in Paul's activity once Silas and Timothy arrived. At this point Paul apparently began to work less and preach more.

31 tn BDAG 233 s.v. διαμαρτύρομαι 2 has "testify of, bear witness to solemnly (orig. under oath)...W. acc. and inf. foll. Ac 18:5."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

him,[1] he protested by shaking out his clothes[2] and said to them, "Your blood[3] be on your own heads! I am guiltless![4] From now on I will go to the Gentiles!" 18:7 Then Paul[5] left[6] the synagogue[7] and went to the house of a person named Titius Justus, a Gentile who worshiped God,[8] whose house was next door to the synagogue. 18:8 Crispus, the president of the synagogue,[9] believed in the Lord together with his entire household, and many of the Corinthians who heard about it[10] believed and were baptized. 18:9 The Lord said to Paul by a vision[11] in the night,[12] "Do not be afraid,[13] but speak and do not be silent, 18:10 because I am with you, and no one will assault[14] you to harm[15] you, because I have many people in this city." 18:11 So he stayed there[16] a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.[17]

Paul Before the Proconsul Gallio

18:12 Now while Gallio[18] was proconsul[19] of Achaia,[20] the Jews attacked Paul together[21] and brought him before the judgment seat,[22] 18:13 saying, "This man is persuading[23] people

[1] tn The participle βλασφημούντων (blasphēmountōn) has been taken temporally. The direct object ("him") is implied rather than expressed and could be impersonal ("it," referring to what Paul was saying rather than Paul himself), but the verb occurs more often in contexts involving defamation or slander against personal beings (not always God). For a very similar context to this one, compare Acts 13:45. The translation "blaspheme" is not used because in contemporary English its meaning is more narrowly defined and normally refers to blasphemy against God (not what Paul's opponents were doing here). What they were doing was more like slander or defamation of character.

[2] tn Grk "shaking out his clothes, he said to them." L&N 16:8 translates Acts 18:6 "when they opposed him and said evil things about him, he protested by shaking the dust from his clothes." The addition of the verb "protested by" in the translation is necessary to clarify for the modern reader that this is a symbolic action. It is similar but not identical to the phrase in Acts 13:51, where the dust from the feet is shaken off. The participle ἐκτιναξάμενος (ektinaxamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

sn He protested by shaking out his clothes. A symbolic action of protest, similar but not identical to the practice of shaking the dust off one's feet (see Acts 13:51). The two symbolic actions are related, however, since what is shaken off here is the dust raised by the feet and settling in the clothes. The meaning is, "I am done with you! You are accountable to God."

[3] sn Your blood be on your own heads! By invoking this epithet Paul declared himself not responsible for their actions in rejecting Jesus whom Paul preached (cf. Ezek 33:4; 3:6-21; Matt 23:35; 27:25).

[4] tn Or "innocent." BDAG 489 s.v. καθαρός 3.a has "guiltless Ac 18:6."

[5] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Grk "Then leaving from there he went." The participle μεταβάς (metabas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[7] tn Grk "from there"; the referent (the synagogue) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Grk "a worshiper of God." The clarifying phrase "a Gentile" has been supplied for clarity, and is indicated by the context, since Paul had parted company with the Jews in the previous verse. The participle σεβομένου (sebomenou) is practically a technical term for the category called God-fearers, Gentiles who worshiped the God of Israel and in many cases kept the Mosaic law, but did not take the final step of circumcision necessary to become a proselyte to Judaism. See further K. G. Kuhn, TDNT 6:732-34, 743-44.

sn Here yet another Gentile is presented as responsive to Paul's message in Acts.

[9] tn That is, "the official in charge of the synagogue"; ἀρχισυνάγωγος (archisunagōgos) refers to the "leader/president of a synagogue" (so BDAG 139 s.v. and L&N 53.93).

[10] tn Or "who heard him," or "who heard Paul." The ambiguity here results from the tendency of Greek to omit direct objects, which must be supplied from the context. The problem is that no less than three different ones may be supplied here: (1) "him," referring to Crispus, but this is not likely because there is no indication in the context that Crispus began to speak out about the Lord; this is certainly possible and even likely, but more than the text here affirms; (2) "Paul," who had been speaking in the synagogue and presumably, now that he had moved to Titius Justus' house, continued speaking to the Gentiles; or (3) "about it," that is, the Corinthians who heard about Crispus' conversion became believers. In the immediate context this last is most probable, since the two incidents are juxtaposed. Other, less obvious direct objects could also be supplied, such as "heard the word of God," "heard the word of the Lord," etc., but none of these are obvious in the immediate context.

[11] sn Frequently in Acts such a vision will tell the reader where events are headed. See Acts 10:9-16 and 16:9-10 for other accounts of visions.

[12] tn BDAG 682 s.v. νύξ 1.c has "W. prep. ἐν ν. at night, in the night...Ac 18:9."

[13] tn The present imperative here (with negation) is used (as it normally is) of a general condition (BDF §335).

[14] tn BDAG 384 s.v. ἐπιτίθημι 2 has "to set upon, attack, lay a hand on" here, but "assault" is a contemporary English equivalent very close to the meaning of the original.

[15] tn Or "injure."

[16] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[17] tn See BDAG 326-27 s.v. ἐν 1.d. However, it is also possible that ἐν (en) followed by the dative here stands for the ordinary dative ("to them").

[18] sn Gallio was proconsul of Achaia from A.D. 51-52. This date is one of the firmly established dates in Acts. Lucius Junius Gallio was the son of the rhetorician Seneca and the brother of Seneca the philosopher. The date of Gallio's rule is established from an inscription (W. Dittenberger, ed., Sylloge Inscriptionum Graecarum 2.3 no. 8). Thus the event mentioned here is probably to be dated July-October A.D. 51.

[19] sn The proconsul was the Roman official who ruled over a province traditionally under the control of the Roman senate.

[20] sn Achaia was a Roman province created in 146 B.C. that included the most important parts of Greece (Attica, Boeotia, and the Peloponnesus).

[22] tn Although BDAG 175 s.v. βῆμα 3 gives the meaning "tribunal" for this verse and a number of modern translations use similar terms ("court," NIV; "tribunal," NRSV), there is no need for an alternative translation here since the bema was a standard feature in Greco-Roman cities of the time.

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a familiar item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city. So this was a very public event.

[23] tn Or "inciting."

to worship God in a way contrary to[1] the law!" 18:14 But just as Paul was about to speak,[2] Gallio said to the Jews, "If it were a matter of some crime or serious piece of villainy,[3] I would have been justified in accepting the complaint[4] of you Jews,[5] 18:15 but since it concerns points of disagreement[6] about words and names and your own law, settle[7] it yourselves. I will not be[8] a judge of these things!" 18:16 Then he had them forced away[9] from the judgment seat.[10] 18:17 So they all seized Sosthenes, the president of the synagogue,[11] and began to beat[12] him in front of the judgment seat.[13] Yet none of these things were of any concern[14] to Gallio.

Paul Returns to Antioch in Syria

18:18 Paul, after staying[15] many more days in Corinth,[16] said farewell to[17] the brothers and sailed away to Syria accompanied by[18] Priscilla and Aquila.[19] He[20] had his hair cut off[21] at Cenchrea[22] because he had made a vow.[23] 18:19 When they reached Ephesus,[24] Paul[25] left Priscilla and Aquila[26] behind there, but he himself went[27] into the synagogue[28] and addressed[29] the Jews. 18:20 When they asked him to stay longer, he would not consent,[30] 18:21 but said

1 tn Grk "worship God contrary to." BDAG 758 s.v. παρά C.6 has "against, contrary to" for Acts 18:13. The words "in a way" are not in the Greek text, but are a necessary clarification to prevent the misunderstanding in the English translation that worshiping God was in itself contrary to the law. What is under dispute is the manner in which God was being worshiped, that is, whether Gentiles were being required to follow all aspects of the Mosaic law, including male circumcision. There is a hint of creating public chaos or disturbing Jewish custom here since Jews were the ones making the complaint. Luke often portrays the dispute between Christians and Jews as within Judaism.

2 tn Grk "about to open his mouth" (an idiom).

3 tn BDAG 902 s.v. ῥᾳδιούργημα states, "From the sense 'prank, knavery, roguish trick, slick deed' it is but a short step to that of a serious misdeed, crime, villainy…a serious piece of villainy Ac 18:14 (w. ἀδίκημα)."

4 tn According to BDAG 78 s.v. ἀνέχω 3 this is a legal technical term: "Legal t.t. κατὰ λόγον ἂν ἀνεσχόμην ὑμῶν I would have been justified in accepting your complaint Ac 18:14."

5 tn Grk "accepting your complaint, O Jews."

6 tn Or "dispute."

7 tn Grk "see to it" (an idiom).

8 tn Or "I am not willing to be." Gallio would not adjudicate their religious dispute.

9 tn Grk "driven away," but this could result in a misunderstanding in English ("driven" as in a cart or wagon?). "Forced away" conveys the idea; Gallio rejected their complaint. In contemporary English terminology the case was "thrown out of court." The verb ἀπήλασεν (apēlasen) has been translated as a causative since Gallio probably did not perform this action in person, but ordered his aides or officers to remove the plaintiffs.

10 sn See the note on the term judgment seat in 18:12.

11 tn That is, "the official in charge of the synagogue"; ἀρχισυνάγωγος (archisunagōgos) refers to the "leader/president of a synagogue" (so BDAG 139 s.v. and L&N 53.93).

sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

12 tn The imperfect verb ἔτυπτον (etupton) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

13 sn See the note on the term judgment seat in 18:12.

14 tn L&N 25.223 has "'none of these things were of any concern to Gallio' Ac 18:17."

sn Rome was officially indifferent to such disputes. Gallio understood how sensitive some Jews would be about his meddling in their affairs. This is similar to the way Pilate dealt with Jesus. In the end, he let the Jewish leadership and people make the judgment against Jesus.

15 tn The participle προσμείνας (prosmeinas) is taken temporally.

16 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

17 tn Or "Corinth, took leave of." Grk "saying farewell to"; the participle ἀποταξάμενος (apotaxamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

18 tn Grk "Syria, and with him."

19 sn See the note on Aquila in 18:2.

20 tn Or "Aquila, who." The relationship of the participle κειράμενος (keiramenos) is difficult to determine. Traditionally it is taken to refer to Paul, meaning that Paul had his hair cut off because of the vow. However, due to the proximity of the noun Ἀκύλας (Akulas) and the reversal of the normal order (Aquila and Priscilla, Acts 17:34), the participle is taken as adjectival referring to Aquila by H. Greeven, TDNT 2:777, n. 11. The later references to Paul in Jerusalem (Acts 21:23) do not resolve the problem, because the cutting of Paul's own hair, while it may be implied, is not specifically mentioned in connection with the completion of the vows made by the other four.

21 tn The word "off" is supplied in the translation to indicate that this was not a normal haircut, but the shaving of the head connected with taking the vow (see Acts 21:24).

22 tn That is, "before he sailed from Cenchrea."

sn Cenchrea was one of the seaports for the city of Corinth, on the eastern side of the Isthmus of Corinth, on the Aegean Sea. It was 7 mi (11 km) east of Corinth.

23 sn He had made a vow. It is debated whether this vow is a private vow of thanksgiving or the Nazirite vow, because it is not clear whether the Nazirite vow could be taken outside Jerusalem. Some have cited the Mishnah (m. Nazir 3:6, 5:4) to argue that the shaving of the hair can occur outside Jerusalem, and Josephus, J. W. 2.15.1 (2.313) is sometimes suggested as a parallel, but these references are not clear. H. Greeven, TDNT 2:777, is certain that this refers to the Nazirite vow. Regardless, it is clear that Paul reflected his pious dependence on God.

24 sn Ephesus was an influential city in Asia Minor. It was the location of the famous temple of Artemis. In 334 B.C. control of the city had passed to Alexander the Great, who contributed a large sum to the building of a new and more elaborate temple of Artemis, which became one of the seven wonders of the ancient world and lasted until destroyed by the Goths in A.D. 263. This major port city would be reached from Corinth by ship. It was 250 mi (400 km) east of Corinth by sea.

map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Grk "left them"; the referents (Priscilla and Aquila) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "going"; the participle εἰσελθών (eiselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

28 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

29 tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 18:19. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

30 sn He would not consent. Paul probably refused because he wanted to reach Jerusalem for the festival season before the seas became impassable during the winter.

farewell to[1] them and added,[2] "I will come back[3] to you again if God wills."[4] Then[5] he set sail from Ephesus, 18:22 and when he arrived[6] at Caesarea,[7] he went up and greeted[8] the church at Jerusalem[9] and then went down to Antioch.[10] 18:23 After he spent[11] some time there, Paul left and went through the region of Galatia[12] and Phrygia,[13] strengthening all the disciples.

Apollos Begins His Ministry

18:24 Now a Jew named Apollos, a native of Alexandria, arrived in Ephesus.[14] He was an eloquent speaker,[15] well-versed[16] in the scriptures. 18:25 He had been instructed in[17] the way of the Lord, and with great enthusiasm[18] he spoke and taught accurately the facts[19] about Jesus, although he knew[20] only the baptism of John. 18:26 He began to speak out fearlessly[21] in the synagogue,[22] but when Priscilla and Aquila[23] heard him, they took him aside[24] and explained the way of God to him more accurately. 18:27 When Apollos[25] wanted to cross over to Achaia,[26] the brothers encouraged[27] him[28] and wrote to the disciples to welcome him. When he arrived, he[29] assisted greatly those who

[1] tn Or "but took leave of."

[2] tn Grk "and saying"; the participle εἰπών (eipōn) has been translated as "added" rather than "said" to avoid redundancy with the previous "said farewell." The participle εἰπών has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[3] tn Or "will return."

[4] tn The participle θέλοντος (thelontos), a genitive absolute construction, has been translated as a conditional adverbial participle. Again Paul acts in dependence on God.

[5] tn A new sentence was begun here in the translation due to the length of the sentence in Greek and the requirements of contemporary English style, which generally uses shorter sentences.

[6] tn BDAG 531 s.v. κατέρχομαι 2 states, "arrive, put in, nautical t.t. of ships and those who sail in them, who 'come down' fr. the 'high seas'...εἴς τι at someth. a harbor Ac 18:22; 21:3; 27:5."

[7] sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1. This was a sea voyage of 620 mi (990 km).

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[8] tn Grk "going up and greeting." The participles ἀναβάς (anabas) and ἀσπασάμενος (aspasamenos) are translated as finite verbs due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[9] tn The words "at Jerusalem" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by the participle ἀναβάς (anabas). The expression "go up" refers almost exclusively to the direction of Jerusalem, while the corresponding "go down" (κατέβη, katebē) refers to directions away from Jerusalem. Both expressions are based on a Hebrew idiom. Assuming Jerusalem is meant, this is another indication of keeping that key church informed. If Jerusalem is not referred to here, then Caesarea is in view. Paul was trying to honor a vow, which also implies a visit to Jerusalem.

map For the location of Jerusalem see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[10] sn Went down to Antioch. The city of Antioch in Syria lies due north of Jerusalem. In Western languages it is common to speak of north as "up" and south as "down," but the NT maintains the Hebrew idiom which speaks of any direction away from Jerusalem as down (since Mount Zion was thought of in terms of altitude). This marks the end of the second missionary journey which began in Acts 15:36. From Caesarea to Antioch is a journey of 280 mi (450 km).

map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

[11] tn Grk "Having spent"; the participle ποιήσας (poiēsas) is taken temporally.

[12] sn Galatia refers to either (1) the region of the old kingdom of Galatia in the central part of Asia Minor, or (2) the Roman province of Galatia, whose principal cities in the 1st century were Ancyra and Pisidian Antioch. The exact extent and meaning of this area has been a subject of considerable controversy in modern NT studies.

[13] sn Phrygia was a district in central Asia Minor west of Pisidia. See Acts 16:6.

[14] map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

[15] tn Or "was a learned man." In this verse λόγιος (logios) can refer to someone who was an attractive and convincing speaker, a rhetorician (L&N 33.32), or it can refer to the person who has acquired a large part of the intellectual heritage of a given culture ("learned" or "cultured," L&N 27.20, see also BDAG 598 s.v. λόγιος which lists both meanings as possible here). The description of Apollos' fervent speaking in the following verses, as well as implications from 1 Cor 1-4, where Paul apparently compares his style and speaking ability with that of Apollos, suggests that eloquent speaking ability or formal rhetorical skill are in view here. This clause has been moved from its order in the Greek text (Grk "a certain Jew named Apollos, a native of Alexandria, an eloquent speaker, arrived in Ephesus, who was powerful in the scriptures") and paired with the last element ("powerful in the scriptures") due to the demands of clarity and contemporary English style.

[16] tn Grk "powerful." BDAG 264 s.v. δυνατός 1.b has "in the Scriptures = well-versed 18:24."

[17] tn Or "had been taught."

[18] tn Grk "and boiling in spirit" (an idiom for great eagerness or enthusiasm; BDAG 426 s.v. ζέω).

[19] tn Grk "the things."

[20] tn Grk "knowing"; the participle ἐπιστάμενος (epistamenos) has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

[21] tn Or "boldly." This is a frequent term in Acts (9:27-28; 13:46; 14:3; 19:8; 26:26).

[22] sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

[23] sn Priscilla and Aquila. This key couple, of which Priscilla was an important enough figure to be mentioned by name, instructed Apollos about the most recent work of God. See also the note on Aquila in 18:2.

[24] tn BDAG 883 s.v. προσλαμβάνω 3 has "take aside, mid. τινά someone...So prob. also Ac 18:26: Priscilla and Aquila take Apollos aside to teach him undisturbed."

[25] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Apollos) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[26] sn To cross over to Achaia. Achaia was organized by the Romans as a separate province in 27 B.C. and was located across the Aegean Sea from Ephesus. The city of Corinth was in Achaia.

[27] tn Grk "encouraging [him], the brothers wrote." The participle προτρεψάμενοι (protrepsamenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. This was the typical letter of commendation from the Ephesians to the Achaeans.

[28] tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[29] tn Grk "who, when he arrived." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("who") was replaced with the pronoun "he" and a new sentence begun in the translation.

had believed by grace, 18:28 for he refuted the Jews vigorously[1] in public debate,[2] demonstrating from the scriptures that the Christ[3] was Jesus.[4]

Disciples of John the Baptist at Ephesus

19:1 While[5] Apollos was in Corinth,[6] Paul went through the inland[7] regions[8] and came to Ephesus.[9] He[10] found some disciples there[11] 19:2 and said to them, "Did you receive the Holy Spirit when you believed?"[12] They replied,[13] "No, we have not even[14] heard that there is a Holy Spirit." 19:3 So Paul[15] said, "Into what then were you baptized?" "Into John's baptism," they replied.[16] 19:4 Paul said, "John baptized with a baptism of repentance, telling the people to believe in the one who was to come after him,[17] that is, in Jesus." 19:5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, 19:6 and when Paul placed[18] his hands on them, the Holy Spirit came[19] upon them, and they began to speak[20] in tongues and to prophesy.[21] 19:7 (Now there were about twelve men in all.)[22]

Paul Continues to Minister at Ephesus

19:8 So Paul[23] entered[24] the synagogue[25] and spoke out fearlessly[26] for three months, addressing[27] and convincing[28] them about the kingdom of God.[29] 19:9 But when[30] some were stubborn[31] and refused to believe, reviling[32] the Way[33] before the congregation, he left[34] them and took the

1 tn Or "vehemently." BDAG 414 s.v. εὐτόνως has "vigorously, vehemently...εὐ. διακατελέγχεσθαί τινι refute someone vigorously Ac 18:28."

2 tn L&N 33.442 translates the phrase τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις διακατηλέγχετο δημοσίᾳ (tois Ioudaiois diakatēlenchēto dēmosia) as "he defeated the Jews in public debate." On this use of the term δημόσιος (dēmosios) see BDAG 223 s.v. 2.

3 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed." Again the issue is identifying the Christ as Jesus (see 5:42; 8:5; 9:22; 18:5).

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

4 tn Although many English translations have here "that Jesus was the Christ," in the case of two accusatives following a copulative infinitive, the first would normally be the subject and the second the predicate nominative. Additionally, the first accusative here (τὸν χριστόν, ton christon) has the article, a further indication that it should be regarded as subject of the infinitive.

5 tn Grk "It happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

6 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

7 tn Or "interior."

8 tn BDAG 92 s.v. ἀνωτερικός has "upper τὰ ἀ. μέρη the upper (i.e. inland) country, the interior Ac 19:1."

9 map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

10 tn Grk "and found." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the sequencing with the following verse the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

11 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

12 tn The participle πιστεύσαντες (pisteusantes) is taken temporally.

13 tn Grk "they [said] to him" (the word "said" is implied in the Greek text).

14 tn This use of ἀλλά (alla) is ascensive and involves an ellipsis (BDAG 45 s.v. ἀλλά 3): "No, [not only did we not receive the Spirit,] but also we have not heard that there is a Holy Spirit." However, this is lengthy and somewhat awkward in English, and the ascensive meaning can be much more easily represented by including the word "even" after the negation. Apparently these disciples were unaware of the provision of the Spirit that is represented in baptism. The language sounds like they did not know about a Holy Spirit, but this seems to be only linguistic shorthand for not knowing about the Spirit's presence (Luke 3:15-18). The situation is parallel to that of Apollos. Apollos and these disciples represent those who "complete" their transition to messianic faith as Jews.

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "they said."

17 sn These disciples may have had their contact with John early on in the Baptist's ministry before Jesus had emerged. This is the fifth time Luke links John the Baptist and Jesus (Acts 1:5; 11:16; 13:25; 18:25).

18 tn Or "laid."

19 sn The coming of the Holy Spirit here is another case where the Spirit comes and prophecy results in Acts (see Acts 2). Paul's action parallels that of Peter (Acts 8) and not just with Gentiles.

20 tn The imperfect verb ἐλάλουν (elaloun) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

21 tn The imperfect verb ἐπροφήτευον (eprophēteuon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

22 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Grk "So entering the synagogue, he spoke out fearlessly." The participle εἰσελθών (eiselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

26 tn Or "boldly."

27 tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 19:8. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

28 tn Or "addressing them persuasively." The two participles διαλεγόμενος and πείθων (dialegomenos and peithōn) can be understood as a hendiadys (so NIV, NRSV), thus, "addressing them persuasively."

29 sn To talk about Jesus as the Christ who has come is to talk about the kingdom of God. This is yet another summary of the message like that in 18:28.

30 tn BDAG 1105-6 s.v. ὡς 8.b lists this use as a temporal conjunction.

31 tn Or "some became hardened." See BDAG 930 s.v. σκληρύνω b and Acts 7:51-53.

32 tn Or "speaking evil of." BDAG 500 s.v. κακολογέω has "speak evil of, revile, insult...τὴν ὁδόν the Way (i.e. Christian way of life) Ac 19:9."

33 sn The Way refers to the Christian movement (Christianity). Luke frequently refers to it as "the Way" (Acts 9:2; 18:25-26; 19:23; 22:4; 24:14, 22).

34 tn Grk "leaving them, he took." The participle ἀποστάς (apostas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

disciples with him,[1] addressing[2] them every day[3] in the lecture hall[4] of Tyrannus. 19:10 This went on for two years, so that all who lived in the province of Asia,[5] both Jews and Greeks, heard the word of the Lord.[6]

The Seven Sons of Sceva

19:11 God was performing extraordinary[7] miracles by Paul's hands, 19:12 so that when even handkerchiefs or aprons that had touched his body[8] were brought[9] to the sick, their diseases left them and the evil spirits went out of them.[10] 19:13 But some itinerant[11] Jewish exorcists tried to invoke the name[12] of the Lord Jesus over those who were possessed by[13] evil spirits, saying, "I sternly warn[14] you by Jesus whom Paul preaches." 19:14 (Now seven sons of a man named[15] Sceva, a Jewish high priest, were doing this.)[16] 19:15 But the evil spirit replied to them,[17] "I know about Jesus[18] and I am acquainted with[19] Paul, but who are you?"[20] 19:16 Then the man who was possessed by[21] the evil spirit jumped on[22] them and beat them all into submission.[23] He prevailed[24] against them so that they fled from that house naked and wounded. 19:17 This became known to all who lived in Ephesus,[25] both Jews and Greeks; fear came over[26] them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was praised.[27] 19:18 Many of those who had believed came forward,[28] confessing and making their deeds known.[29] 19:19 Large numbers[30] of those

[1] tn The words "with him" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[2] tn Although the word διελέξατο (dielexato; from διαλέγομαι, dialegomai) is frequently translated "reasoned," "disputed," or "argued," this sense comes from its classical meaning where it was used of philosophical disputation, including the Socratic method of questions and answers. However, there does not seem to be contextual evidence for this kind of debate in Acts 19:9. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21.

[3] tn BDAG 437 s.v. ἡμέρα 2.c has "every day" for this phrase in this verse.

[4] tn The "lecture hall" was a place where teachers and pupils met. The term is a NT hapax legomenon (BDAG 982 s.v. σχολή). L&N 7.14 notes, "it is better to use a translation such as 'lecture hall' rather than 'school,' since one does not wish to give the impression of the typical classroom situation characteristic of present-day schools."

sn The expression all who lived in the province of Asia is good Semitic hyperbole (see Col 1:7, "all the world"). The message was now available to the region.

[6] sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

[7] tn BDAG 1019 s.v. τυγχάνω 2.d states, "δυνάμεις οὐ τὰς τυχούσας extraordinary miracles Ac 19:11."

[8] tn Or "skin" (the outer surface of the body).

[9] tn Or "were taken." It might be that as word went out into the region that since the sick could not come to Paul, healing was brought to them this way. The "handkerchiefs" are probably face cloths for wiping perspiration (see BDAG 934 s.v. σουδάριον) while the "aprons" might be material worn by workmen (BDAG 923-24 s.v. σιμικίνθιον).

[10] tn The words "of them" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[11] tn Grk "some Jewish exorcists who traveled about." The adjectival participle περιερχομένων (perierchomenōn) has been translated as "itinerant."

[12] tn Grk "to name the name."

[13] tn Grk "who had." Here ἔχω (echō) is used of demon possession, a common usage according to BDAG 421 s.v. ἔχω 7.a.α.

[14] sn The expression I sternly warn you means "I charge you as under oath."

[15] tn Grk "a certain Sceva."

[16] sn Within the sequence of the narrative, this amounts to a parenthetical note by the author.

[17] tn Grk "answered and said to them." The expression, redundant in English, has been simplified to "replied."

[18] tn Grk "Jesus I know about." Here Ἰησοῦν (Iēsoun) is in emphatic position in Greek, but placing the object first is not normal in contemporary English style.

[19] tn BDAG 380 s.v. ἐπίσταμαι 2 has "know, be acquainted with τινά...τὸν Παῦλον Ac 19:15." Here the translation "be acquainted with" was used to differentiate from the previous phrase which has γινώσκω (ginōskō).

[20] sn But who are you? This account shows how the power of Paul was so distinct that parallel claims to access that power were denied. In fact, such manipulation, by those who did not know Jesus, was judged (v. 16). The indirect way in which the exorcists made the appeal shows their distance from Jesus.

[21] tn Grk "in whom the evil spirit was."

[22] tn Grk "the man in whom the evil spirit was, jumping on them." The participle ἐφαλόμενος (ephalomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. L&N 15.239 has "ἐφαλόμενος ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐπ' αὐτούς 'the man jumped on them' Ac 19:16."

[23] tn Grk "and beating them all into submission." The participle κατακυριεύσας (katakurieusas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. According to W. Foerster, TDNT 3:1098, the word means "the exercise of dominion against someone, i.e., to one's own advantage." These exorcists were shown to be powerless in comparison to Jesus who was working through Paul.

[24] tn BDAG 484 s.v. ἰσχύω 3 has "win out, prevail...κατά τινος over, against someone Ac 19:16."

[25] map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

[26] tn Grk "fell on." BDAG 377 s.v. ἐπιπίπτω 2 has "φόβος ἐ. ἐπί τινα fear came upon someone...Ac 19:17."

[27] tn Or "exalted."

[28] tn Grk "came"; the word "forward" is supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning and to conform to the contemporary English idiom.

[29] tn Or "confessing and disclosing their deeds." BDAG 59 s.v. ἀναγγέλλω 2 has "W. ἐξομολογεῖσθαι: ἀ. τὰς πράξεις αὐτόν make their deeds known Ac 19:18."

sn Making their deeds known. Ephesus was a major pagan religious center with much syncretistic "magical" practice. Coming to Jesus changed the lives and attitudes of these believers, creating a social impact.

[30] tn BDAG 472 s.v. ἱκανός 4.a has "many, quite a few" for ἱκανοί (hikanoi) in this verse.

who had practiced magic[1] collected their books[2] and burned them up in the presence of everyone.[3] When[4] the value of the books was added up, it was found to total fifty thousand silver coins.[5] 19:20 In this way the word of the Lord[6] continued to grow in power[7] and to prevail.[8]

A Riot in Ephesus

19:21 Now after all these things had taken place,[9] Paul resolved[10] to go to Jerusalem,[11] passing through Macedonia[12] and Achaia.[13] He said,[14] "After I have been there, I must also see Rome."[15] 19:22 So after sending[16] two of his assistants,[17] Timothy and Erastus, to Macedonia,[18] he himself stayed on for a while in the province of Asia.[19]

19:23 At[20] that time[21] a great disturbance[22] took place concerning the Way.[23] 19:24 For a man named Demetrius, a silversmith who made silver shrines[24] of Artemis,[25] brought a great deal[26] of business[27] to the craftsmen. 19:25 He gathered[28] these[29] together, along with the workmen in similar trades,[30] and said, "Men, you know that our prosperity[31] comes from this business. 19:26 And you see and hear that this Paul has persuaded[32] and turned away[33] a large crowd,[34] not only in Ephesus[35] but in practically

2 tn Or "scrolls."

3 tn Or "burned them up publicly." L&N 14.66 has "'they brought their books together and burned them up in the presence of everyone' Ac 19:19."

4 tn Grk "and when." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

5 tn Or "fifty thousand silver drachmas" (about $10,000 US dollars). BDAG 128 s.v. ἀργύριον 2.c states, "ἀργυρίου μυριάδας πέντε 50,000 (Attic silver) drachmas Ac 19:19." Another way to express the value would be in sheep: One drachma could buy one sheep. So this many drachmas could purchase a huge flock of sheep. A drachma also equals a denarius, or a day's wage for the average worker. So this amount would be equal to 50,000 work days or in excess of 8,300 weeks of labor (the weeks are calculated at six working days because of the Jewish cultural context). The impact of Christianity on the Ephesian economy was considerable (note in regard to this the concerns expressed in 19:26-27).

6 sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

7 tn The imperfect verb ηὔξανεν (ēuxanen) has been translated as a progressive imperfect, as has the following verb ἴσχυεν (ischuen).

8 sn The word of the Lord…to prevail. Luke portrays the impact of Christianity in terms of the Lord's transforming power in the lives of individuals.

9 tn Grk "all these things had been fulfilled."

10 tn Grk "Paul purposed in [his] spirit" (an idiom). According to BDAG 1003 s.v. τίθημι 1.b.ε the entire idiom means "to resolve" (or "decide"): "ἔθετο ὁ Παῦλος ἐν τῷ πνεύματι w. inf. foll. Paul resolved 19:21."

12 sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

13 sn Achaia was the Roman province of Achaia located across the Aegean Sea from Ephesus. Its principal city was Corinth.

14 tn Grk "Achaia, saying." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the awkwardness in English of having two participial clauses following one another ("passing through…saying"), the participle εἰπών (eipōn) has been translated as a finite verb and a new sentence begun here in the translation.

15 sn This is the first time Paul mentions Rome. He realized the message of Christianity could impact that society even at its heights.

map For location see JP4-A1.

16 tn The aorist participle ἀποστείλας (aposteilas) has been taken temporally reflecting action antecedent to that of the main verb (ἐπέσχεν, epeschen).

17 tn Grk "two of those who ministered to him."

18 sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

19 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

20 tn Grk "There happened at that time." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Instead the verb "took place" has been supplied in the translation.

21 tn BDAG 512 s.v. κατά B.2.a, "in definite indications of time…Of the past: κ. ἐκεῖνον τὸν καιρόν at that time, then…Ac 12:1; 19:23."

22 tn Grk "no little disturbance" (an idiom; see BDAG 991 s.v. τάραχος 2).

23 sn The Way refers to the Christian movement (Christianity).

24 tn BDAG 665 s.v. ναός 1.a states, "Specif. of temples: of replicas of the temple of Artemis at Ephesus 19:24…but here, near ἱερόν vs. 27…ναός can be understood in the more restricted sense shrine, where the image of the goddess stood."

25 sn Artemis was the name of a Greek goddess worshiped particularly in Asia Minor, whose temple, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, was located just outside the city of Ephesus.

26 tn Grk "brought not a little business" (an idiom).

27 sn A great deal of business. The charge that Christianity brought economic and/or social upheaval was made a number of times in Acts: 16:20-21; 17:6-7; 18:13.

28 tn Grk "gathering." The participle συναθροίσας (sunathroisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

29 tn Grk "whom"; because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been replaced with a pronoun ("these") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

30 sn Workmen in similar trades. In effect, Demetrius gathered the Ephesian chamber of commerce together to hear about the threat to their prosperity.

31 tn Another possible meaning is "that this business is an easy way for us to earn a living."

32 tn Grk "persuading." The participle πείσας (peisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

33 tn Or "misled."

34 tn BDAG 472 s.v. ἱκανός 3.a has "of pers. ὄχλος a large crowd…Ac 11:24, 26; 19:26."

all of the province of Asia,[1] by saying[2] that gods made by hands are not gods at all.[3] 19:27 There is danger not only that this business of ours will come into disrepute,[4] but also that the temple of the great goddess Artemis[5] will be regarded as nothing,[6] and she whom all the province of Asia[7] and the world worship will suffer the loss of her greatness."[8]

19:28 When[9] they heard[10] this they became enraged[11] and began to shout,[12] "Great is Artemis[13] of the Ephesians!" 19:29 The[14] city was filled with the uproar,[15] and the crowd[16] rushed to the theater[17] together,[18] dragging with them Gaius and Aristarchus, the Macedonians who were Paul's traveling companions. 19:30 But when Paul wanted to enter the public assembly,[19] the disciples would not let him. 19:31 Even some of the provincial authorities[20] who were his friends sent[21] a message[22] to him, urging him not to venture[23] into the theater. 19:32 So then some were shouting one thing, some another, for the assembly was in confusion, and most of them did not know why they had met together.[24] 19:33 Some of the crowd concluded[25] it was about[26] Alexander because the Jews had pushed him to the front.[27] Alexander, gesturing[28] with his hand, was wanting to make a defense[29] before the public assembly.[30] 19:34 But when they recognized[31] that he was a Jew, they all shouted in unison,[32] "Great is Artemis[33] of the Ephesians!" for about

[1] tn Grk "Asia"; see the note on this word in v. 22.

[2] tn The participle λέγων (legōn) has been regarded as indicating instrumentality.

[3] tn The words "at all" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

sn Gods made by hands are not gods at all. Paul preached against paganism's idolatry. Here is a one-line summary of a speech like that in Acts 17:22-31.

[4] tn Or "come under public criticism." BDAG 101 s.v. ἀπελεγμός has "come into disrepute Ac 19:27."

[5] sn Artemis was the name of a Greek goddess worshiped particularly in Asia Minor, whose temple, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, was located just outside the city of Ephesus.

[6] tn BDAG 597 s.v. λογίζομαι 1.b has "εἰς οὐθὲν λογισθῆναι be looked upon as nothing...Ac 19:27."

[7] tn Grk "Asia"; see the note on this word in v. 22.

[8] tn Or "her magnificence." BDAG 488 s.v. καθαιρέω 2.b has "καθαιρεῖσθαι τῆς μεγαλειότητος αὐτῆς suffer the loss of her magnificence Ac 19:27"; L&N 13.38 has "'and to have her greatness done away with' Ac 19:27."

sn Suffer the loss of her greatness. It is important to appreciate that money alone was not the issue, even for the pagan Ephesians. The issue was ultimately the dishonor of their goddess to whom they were devoted in worship. The battle was a "cosmic" one between deities.

[9] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[10] tn Grk "And hearing." The participle ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) has been taken temporally.

[11] tn Grk "they became filled with rage" (an idiom). The reaction of the Ephesians here is like that of the Jews earlier, though Luke referred to "zeal" or "jealousy" in the former case (Acts 7:54).

[12] tn Grk "and began shouting, saying." The imperfect verb ἔκραζον (ekrazon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect. The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

[13] sn Artemis was a Greek goddess worshiped particularly in Asia Minor, whose temple, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, was located just outside the city of Ephesus.

[14] tn Grk "And the." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[15] tn L&N 39.43 has "'the uproar spread throughout the whole city' (literally 'the city was filled with uproar') Ac 19:29." BDAG 954 s.v. σύγχυσις has "confusion, tumult."

[16] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] sn To the theater. This location made the event a public spectacle. The Grand Theater in Ephesus (still standing today) stood facing down the main thoroughfare of the city toward the docks. It had a seating capacity of 25,000.

[18] tn Grk "to the theater with one accord."

[19] tn Or "enter the crowd." According to BDAG 223 s.v. δῆμος 2, "in a Hellenistic city, a convocation of citizens called together for the purpose of transacting official business, popular assembly...εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὸν δ. go into the assembly 19:30."

[20] tn Grk "Asiarchs" (high-ranking officials of the province of Asia).

[21] tn Grk "sending"; the participle πέμψαντες (pempsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[22] tn The words "a message" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[23] tn BDAG 242-43 s.v. δίδωμι 11 has "to cause (oneself) to go, go, venture somewhere (cp. our older 'betake oneself')... Ac 19:31." The desire of these sympathetic authorities was surely to protect Paul's life. The detail indicates how dangerous things had become.

[24] tn Or "had assembled."

[25] tn Or "Some of the crowd gave instructions to."

[26] tn The words "it was about" are not in the Greek text but are implied; Ἀλέξανδρον (Alexandron) is taken to be an accusative of general reference.

[27] tn BDAG 865 s.v. προβάλλω 1 has "to cause to come forward, put forward...τινά someone...push someone forward to speak in the theater...Ac 19:33."

[28] tn Or "motioning."

[29] sn The nature of Alexander's defense is not clear. It appears he was going to explain, as a Jew, that the problem was not caused by Jews, but by those of "the Way." However, he never got a chance to speak.

[30] tn Or "before the crowd." According to BDAG 223 s.v. δῆμος 2, "in a Hellenistic city, a convocation of citizens called together for the purpose of transacting official business, popular assembly...ἀπολογεῖσθαι τῷ δ. make a defense before the assembly vs. 33."

[31] tn Grk "But recognizing." The participle ἐπιγνόντες (epignontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[32] tn Grk "[they shouted] with one voice from all of them" (an idiom).

two hours.[1] 19:35 After the city secretary[2] quieted the crowd, he said, "Men of Ephesus, what person[3] is there who does not know that the city of the Ephesians is the keeper[4] of the temple of the great Artemis[5] and of her image that fell from heaven?[6] 19:36 So because these facts[7] are indisputable,[8] you must keep quiet[9] and not do anything reckless.[10] 19:37 For you have brought these men here who are neither temple robbers[11] nor blasphemers of our goddess.[12] 19:38 If then Demetrius and the craftsmen who are with him have a complaint[13] against someone, the courts are open[14] and there are proconsuls; let them bring charges against one another there.[15] 19:39 But if you want anything in addition,[16] it will have to be settled[17] in a legal assembly.[18] 19:40 For[19] we are in danger of being charged with rioting[20] today, since there is no cause we can give to explain[21] this disorderly gathering."[22] 19:41 After[23] he had said[24] this,[25] he dismissed the assembly.[26]

Paul Travels Through Macedonia and Greece

20:1 After the disturbance had ended, Paul sent for the disciples, and after encouraging[27] them and saying farewell,[28] he left to go to Macedonia.[29] 20:2 After he had gone through those regions[30] and spoken many words of encouragement[31] to the believers there,[32] he came to Greece,[33] 20:3 where he stayed[34] for three months. Because the Jews had made[35] a plot[36] against him as he was intending[37] to sail[38] for

---

[1] sn They all shouted…for about two hours. The extent of the tumult shows the racial and social tensions of a cosmopolitan city like Ephesus, indicating what the Christians in such locations had to face.

[2] tn Or "clerk." The "scribe" (γραμματεύς, grammateus) was the keeper of the city's records.

[3] tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos).

[4] tn See BDAG 670 s.v. νεωκόρος. The city is described as the "warden" or "guardian" of the goddess and her temple.

[5] sn Artemis was a Greek goddess worshiped particularly in Asia Minor, whose temple, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, was located just outside the city of Ephesus.

[6] tn Or "from the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

sn The expression fell from heaven adds a note of apologetic about the heavenly origin of the goddess. The city's identity and well-being was wrapped up with this connection, in their view. Many interpreters view her image that fell from heaven as a stone meteorite regarded as a sacred object.

[7] tn Grk "these things."

[8] tn The genitive absolute construction with the participle ὄντων (ontōn) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle. On the term translated "indisputable" see BDAG 68-69 s.v. ἀναντίρρητος which has "not to be contradicted, undeniable."

[9] tn Grk "it is necessary that you be quiet."

[10] tn L&N 88.98 has "pertaining to impetuous and reckless behavior – 'reckless, impetuous.'…'so then, you must calm down and not do anything reckless' Ac 19:36." The city secretary was asking that order be restored.

[11] tn Or perhaps, "desecrators of temples."

[12] sn Nor blasphemers of our goddess. There was no formal crime with which Paul could be charged. He had the right to his religion as long as he did not act physically against the temple. Since no overt act had taken place, the official wanted the community to maintain the status quo on these religious matters. The remarks suggest Paul was innocent of any civil crime.

[13] tn BDAG 600 s.v. λόγος 1.a.ε has "ἔχειν πρός τινα λόγον have a complaint against someone…19:38."

[14] tn L&N 56.1 has 'if Demetrius and his workers have an accusation against someone, the courts are open' Ac 19:38."

[15] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The official's request is that the legal system be respected.

[16] tn Or "anything more than this."

[17] tn Or "resolved."

[18] tn Or "in a legal meeting of the citizens." L&N 30.81 has "ἐν τῇ ἐννόμῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἐπιλυθήσεται 'it will have to be settled in a legal meeting of the citizens' Ac 19:39." This meeting took place three times a year.

[19] tn Grk "For indeed." The ascensive force of καί (kai) would be awkward to translate here.

[20] tn The term translated "rioting" refers to a revolt or uprising (BDAG 940 s.v. στάσις 2, 3). This would threaten Roman rule and invite Roman intervention.

[21] tn Or "to account for." Grk "since there is no cause concerning which we can give account concerning this disorderly gathering." The complexity of the Greek relative clause ("which") and the multiple prepositions ("concerning") have been simplified in the translation consistent with contemporary English style.

[22] tn Or "commotion." BDAG 979 s.v. συστροφή 1 gives the meaning "a tumultuous gathering of people, disorderly/seditious gathering or commotion…Ac 19:40."

[23] tn Grk "And after." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[24] tn Grk "And saying." The participle εἰπών (eipōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[25] tn Grk "these things."

[26] sn Verse 41 in the English text is included as part of verse 40 in the standard critical editions of the Greek NT.

[27] tn Or "exhorting."

[28] tn Or "and taking leave of them."

[29] sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

[30] tn BDAG 633 s.v. μέρος 1.b.γ gives the meanings "the parts (of a geographical area), region, district," but the use of "district" in this context probably implies too much specificity.

[31] tn Grk "and encouraging them with many words." The participle παρακαλέσας (parakalesas, "encouraging") has been translated by the phrase "spoken…words of encouragement" because the formal equivalent is awkward in contemporary English.

[32] tn Grk "[to] them"; the referent (the believers there) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[33] tn In popular usage the term translated "Greece" here could also refer to the Roman province officially known as Achaia (BDAG 318 s.v. Ἑλλάς).

[34] tn BDAG 841 s.v. ποιέω 5.c, "w. an acc. of time spend, stay."

[35] tn The participle βενομένης (benomenēs) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle. L&N 30.71 has "ἐπιβουλῆς αὐτῷ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων 'because the Jews had made a plot against him' Ac 20:3."

[36] sn This plot is one of several noted by Luke (Acts 9:20; 20:19; 23:30).

[38] tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4 gives "put out to sea" here (as a nautical technical term). However, since the English expression "put out to sea" could be understood to mean Paul was Syria, he decided[1] to return through Macedonia.[2] 20:4 Paul[3] was accompanied by Sopater son of Pyrrhus from Berea,[4] Aristarchus and Secundus from Thessalonica,[5] Gaius[6] from Derbe,[7] and Timothy, as well as Tychicus and Trophimus from the province of Asia.[8] 20:5 These had gone on ahead[9] and were waiting for us in Troas.[10] 20:6 We[11] sailed away from Philippi[12] after the days of Unleavened Bread,[13] and within five days[14] we came to the others[15] in Troas,[16] where we stayed for seven days. 20:7 On the first day[17] of the week, when we met[18] to break bread, Paul began to speak[19] to the people, and because he intended[20] to leave the next day, he extended[21] his message until midnight. 20:8 (Now there were many lamps[22] in the upstairs room where we were meeting.)[23] 20:9 A young man named Eutychus, who was sitting in the window,[24] was sinking[25] into a deep sleep while Paul continued to speak[26] for a long time. Fast asleep,[27] he fell down from the third story and was picked up dead. 20:10 But Paul went down,[28] threw himself[29] on the young man,[30] put his arms around him,[31] and said, "Do not be distressed, for he is still alive!"[32] 20:11 Then Paul[33] went back upstairs,[34] and after he had broken bread and eaten, he talked with them[35] a long time, until dawn. Then he left. 20:12 They took the boy home alive and were greatly[36] comforted.

already aboard the ship (which is not clear from the context), the simpler expression "sail" is used at this point in the translation.

[1] tn BDAG 199 s.v. γίνομαι 7 has "ἐγένετο γνώμης he decided Ac 20:3."

[2] sn Macedonia was the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

[3] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] sn Berea (alternate spelling in NRSV Beroea; Greek Beroia) was a very old city in Macedonia on the river Astraeus about 45 mi (75 km) from Thessalonica.

map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[5] tn Grk "of the Thessalonians."

map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[6] tn Grk "and Gaius," but this καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[7] sn Derbe was a city in Lycaonia about 30 mi (50 km) southeast of Lystra.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2.

[8] tn Grk "the Asians Tychicus and Trophimus." In the NT "Asia" always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

[9] tn Grk "These, having gone on ahead, were waiting." The participle προελθόντες (proelthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[10] sn Troas was a port city (and surrounding region) on the northwest coast of Asia Minor.

[11] sn This marks the beginning of another "we" section in Acts. These have been traditionally understood to mean that Luke was in the company of Paul for this part of the journey.

[12] map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[13] sn The days of Unleavened Bread refer to the week following Passover. Originally an agricultural festival commemorating the beginning of harvest, it was celebrated for seven days beginning on the fifteenth day of the month Nisan (March-April). It was later combined with Passover (Exod 12:1-20; Ezek 45:21-24; Matt 26:17; Luke 22:1).

[14] tn BDAG 160 s.v. ἄχρι 1.a.α has "ἄ. ἡμερῶν πέντε within five days Ac 20:6."

[15] tn Grk "to them"; the referent (the others mentioned in v. 4) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] sn Troas was a port city (and surrounding region) on the northwest coast of Asia Minor. From Philippi to Troas was about 125 mi (200 km).

[17] sn On the first day. This is the first mention of a Sunday gathering (1 Cor 16:2).

[18] tn Or "assembled."

[19] tn The verb διαλέγομαι (dialegomai) is frequently used of Paul addressing Jews in the synagogue. As G. Schrenk (TDNT 2:94-95) points out, "What is at issue is the address which any qualified member of a synagogue might give." Other examples of this may be found in the NT in Matt 4:23 and Mark 1:21. In the context of a Christian gathering, it is preferable to translate διελέγετο (dielegeto) simply as "speak" here. The imperfect verb διελέγετο has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

[21] tn Or "prolonged."

[22] tn More commonly λαμπάς (lampas) means "torch," but here according to BDAG 585 s.v. λαμπάς 2, "lamp...w. a wick and space for oil."

[23] sn This is best taken as a parenthetical note by the author.

[24] tn This window was probably a simple opening in the wall (see also BDAG 462 s.v. θυρίς).

[25] tn Grk "sinking into a deep sleep." BDAG 529 s.v. καταφέρω 3 has "ὕπνῳ βαθεῖ sink into a deep sleep...Ac 20:9a." The participle καταφερόμενος (katapheromenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[26] tn The participle διαλεγομένου (dialegomenou) has been taken temporally.

[27] tn BDAG 529 s.v. καταφέρω 3 has "κατενεχθεὶς ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕπνου overwhelmed by sleep vs. 9b," but this expression is less common in contemporary English than phrases like "fast asleep" or "sound asleep."

[28] tn Grk "going down." The participle καταβάς (katabas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[29] tn BDAG 377 s.v. ἐπιπίπτω 1.b has "ἐπέπεσεν αὐτῷ he threw himself upon him Ac 20:10."

[30] tn Grk "on him"; the referent (the young man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn BDAG 959 s.v. συμπεριλαμβάνω has "to throw one's arms around, embrace w. acc. to be supplied Ac 20:10." However, "embraced the young man" might be taken (out of context) to have erotic implications, while "threw his arms around him" would be somewhat redundant since "threw" has been used in the previous phrase.

[32] tn Grk "for his life is in him" (an idiom).

[33] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[34] tn Grk "going back upstairs." The participle ἀναβάς (anabas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[35] tn Grk "talking with them." The participle ὁμιλήσας (homilēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[36] tn Grk "were not to a moderate degree" (an idiom). L&N 78.11 states: "μετρίως: a moderate degree of some activity or state – 'moderately, to a moderate extent.' ἤγαγον δὲ τὸν παῖδα ζῶντα, καὶ παρεκλήθησαν οὐ μετριῶς 'they took the young man home alive and were greatly comforted' Ac 20:12. In Ac 20:12 the phrase οὐ μετρίως, literally 'not to a moderate degree,' is equivalent to a strong positive statement, namely, 'greatly' or 'to a great extent.'"

The Voyage to Miletus

20:13 We went on ahead[1] to the ship and put out to sea[2] for Assos,[3] intending[4] to take Paul aboard there, for he had arranged it this way.[5] He[6] himself was intending[7] to go there by land.[8] 20:14 When he met us in Assos,[9] we took him aboard[10] and went to Mitylene.[11] 20:15 We set sail[12] from there, and on the following day we arrived off Chios.[13] The next day we approached[14] Samos,[15] and the day after that we arrived at Miletus.[16] 20:16 For Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus[17] so as not to spend time[18] in the province of Asia,[19] for he was hurrying[20] to arrive in Jerusalem,[21] if possible,[22] by the day of Pentecost. 20:17 From Miletus[23] he sent a message[24] to Ephesus, telling the elders of the church to come to him.[25]

20:18 When they arrived, he said to them, "You yourselves know how I lived[26] the whole time I was with you, from the first day I set foot[27] in the province of Asia,[28] 20:19 serving the Lord with all humility[29] and with tears, and with the trials that happened to me because of the plots[30] of the Jews. 20:20 You know that I did not hold back from proclaiming[31] to you anything that would be helpful,[32] and from teaching you publicly[33] and from house to house, 20:21 testifying[34] to both Jews and Greeks about repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus.[35] 20:22 And now,[36] compelled[37] by the

1 tn Grk "going on ahead." The participle προελθόντες (proelthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

2 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

3 sn Assos was a city of Mysia about 24 mi (40 km) southeast of Troas.

4 tn BDAG 628 s.v. μέλλω 1.c.γ has "denoting an intended action: intend, propose, have in mind...Ac 17:31; 20:3, 7, 13ab; 23:15; 26:2; 27:30."

5 tn Or "for he told us to do this." Grk "for having arranged it this way, he." The participle διατεταγμένος (diatetagmenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. BDAG 237 s.v. διατάσσω 1 has "οὕτως διατεταγμένος ἦν he had arranged it so Ac 20:13." L&N 15.224 has "'he told us to do this."

6 tn A new sentence was begun here in the translation because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence; in Greek this is part of the preceding sentence beginning "We went on ahead."

7 tn BDAG 628 s.v. μέλλω 1.c.γ has "denoting an intended action: intend, propose, have in mind...Ac 17:31; 20:3, 7, 13ab; 23:15; 26:2; 27:30."

8 tn Or "there on foot."

9 sn Assos was a city of Mysia about 24 mi (40 km) southeast of Troas.

10 tn Grk "taking him aboard, we." The participle ἀναλαβόντες (analabontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

11 sn Mitylene was the most important city on the island of Lesbos in the Aegean Sea. It was about 44 mi (70 km) from Assos.

12 tn Grk "setting sail from there." The participle ἀποπλεύσαντες (apopleusantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

13 tn Or "offshore from Chios."

sn Chios was an island in the Aegean Sea off the western coast of Asia Minor with a city of the same name.

14 tn Or "crossed over to," "arrived at." L&N 54.12 has "παραβάλλω: (a technical, nautical term) to sail up to or near – 'to approach, to arrive at, to sail to.' παρεβάλομεν εἰς Σάμον 'we approached Samos' or 'we arrived at Samos' Ac 20:15."

15 sn Samos is an island in the Aegean Sea off the western coast of Asia Minor.

16 sn Miletus was a seaport on the western coast of Asia Minor about 40 mi (70 km) south of Ephesus. From Mitylene to Miletus was about 125 mi (200 km).

17 map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

18 tn Grk "so that he might not have to spend time." L&N 67.79 has "ὅπως μὴ γένηται αὐτῷ χρονοτριβῆσαι ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ 'so as not to spend any time in the province of Asia' Ac 20:16."

19 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

20 tn Or "was eager."

21 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

22 tn Grk "if it could be to him" (an idiom).

23 sn Miletus was a seaport on the western coast of Asia Minor about 45 mi (72 km) south of Ephesus.

24 tn The words "a message" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

25 tn The words "to him" are not in the Greek text but are implied. L&N 33.311 has for the verb μετακαλέομαι (metakaleomai) "to summon someone, with considerable insistence and authority – 'to summon, to tell to come.'"

26 tn Grk "You yourselves know, from the first day I set foot in Asia, how I was with you the whole time." This could be understood to mean "how I stayed with you the whole time," but the following verses make it clear that Paul's lifestyle while with the Ephesians is in view here. Thus the translation "how I lived the whole time I was with you" makes this clear.

27 tn Or "I arrived." BDAG 367 s.v. ἐπιβαίνω 2, "set foot in...εἰς τ. Ἀσίαν set foot in Asia Ac 20:18." However, L&N 15.83 removes the idiom: "you know that since the first day that I came to Asia."

28 tn Grk "Asia"; see the note on this word in v. 16.

29 sn On humility see 2 Cor 10:1; 11:7; 1 Thess 2:6; Col 3:12; Eph 4:2; Phil 2:3-11.

30 sn These plots are mentioned in Acts 9:24; 20:13.

31 tn Or "declaring."

32 tn Or "profitable." BDAG 960 s.v. συμφέρω 2.b.α has "τὰ συμφέροντα what advances your best interests or what is good for you Ac 20:20," but the broader meaning (s.v. 2, "to be advantageous, help, confer a benefit, be profitable/useful") is equally possible in this context.

33 tn Or "openly."

34 tn BDAG 233 s.v. διαμαρτύρομαι 1 has "testify of, bear witness to (orig. under oath)...of repentance to Judeans and Hellenes Ac 20:21."

35 tc Several mss, including some of the more important ones (𝔓⁷⁴ ℵ A C [D] E 33 36 323 945 1175 1241 1505 1739 pm and a number of versions), read Χριστόν (Christon, "Christ") at the end of this verse. This word is lacking in B H L P Ψ 614 pm. Although the inclusion is supported by many earlier and better mss, internal evidence is on the side of the omission: In Acts, both "Lord Jesus" and "Lord Jesus Christ" occur, though between 16:31 and the end of the book "Lord Jesus Christ" appears only in 28:31, perhaps as a kind of climactic assertion. Thus, the shorter reading is to be preferred.

sn Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus. Note the twofold description of the message. It is a turning to God involving faith in Jesus Christ.

36 tn Grk "And now, behold." Here ἰδού (idou) has not been translated.

37 tn Grk "bound."

Spirit, I am going to Jerusalem[1] without knowing what will happen to me there,[2] 20:23 except[3] that the Holy Spirit warns[4] me in town after town[5] that[6] imprisonment[7] and persecutions[8] are waiting for me. 20:24 But I do not consider my life[9] worth anything[10] to myself, so that[11] I may finish my task[12] and the ministry that I received from the Lord Jesus, to testify to the good news[13] of God's grace.

20:25 "And now[14] I know that none[15] of you among whom I went around proclaiming the kingdom[16] will see me[17] again. 20:26 Therefore I declare[18] to you today that I am innocent[19] of the blood of you all.[20] 20:27 For I did not hold back from[21] announcing[22] to you the whole purpose[23] of God. 20:28 Watch out for[24] yourselves and for all the flock of which[25] the Holy Spirit has made you overseers,[26] to shepherd the church of God[27] that he obtained[28] with the blood of his own Son.[29] 20:29 I know that after I am gone[30] fierce wolves[31] will come in among you, not sparing the flock. 20:30 Even from among your own group[32] men[33] will arise, teaching perversions of

1 sn This journey to Jerusalem suggests a parallel between Paul and Jesus, since the "Jerusalem journey" motif figures so prominently in Luke's Gospel (9:51-19:44).

2 tn BDAG 965 s.v. συναντάω 2 has τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ συναντήσοντα ἐμοὶ μὴ εἰδώς without knowing what will happen to me there Ac 20:22."

3 tn BDAG 826 s.v. πλήν 1.d has "πλὴν ὅτι except that...Ac 20:23."

4 tn The verb διαμαρτύρομαι (diamarturomai) can mean "warn" (BDAG 233 s.v. διαμαρτύρομαι 2 has "solemnly urge, exhort, warn...w. dat. of pers. addressed"), and this meaning better fits the context here, although BDAG categorizes Acts 20:23 under the meaning "testify of, bear witness to" (s.v. 1).

5 tn The Greek text here reads κατὰ πόλιν (kata polin).

6 tn Grk "saying that," but the participle λέγον (legon) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "bonds."

8 tn Or "troubles," "suffering." See Acts 19:21; 21:4, 11.

9 tn Grk "soul."

10 tn Or "I do not consider my life worth a single word." According to BDAG 599 s.v. λόγος 1.a.α, "In the textually uncertain pass. Ac 20:24 the text as it stands in N., οὐδενὸς λόγου (v.l. λόγον) ποιοῦμαι τὴν ψυχὴν τιμίαν, may well mean: I do not consider my life worth a single word (cp. λόγου ἄξιον [ἄξιος 1a] and our 'worth mention')."

11 tn BDAG 1106 s.v. ὡς 9 describes this use as "a final particle, expressing intention/purpose, with a view to, in order to."

12 tn Grk "course." See L&N 42.26, "(a figurative extension of meaning of δρόμος 'race') a task or function involving continuity, serious, effort, and possibly obligation – 'task, mission'...Ac 20:24." On this Pauline theme see also Phil 1:19-26; Col 1:24; 2 Tim 4:6-7.

13 tn Or "to the gospel."

14 tn Grk "And now, behold." Here ἰδού (idou) has not been translated.

15 tn Grk "all of you...will not see." Greek handles its negation somewhat differently from English, and the translation follows English grammatical conventions.

16 sn Note how Paul's usage of the expression proclaiming the kingdom is associated with (and intertwined with) his testifying to the good news of God's grace in v. 24. For Paul the two concepts were interrelated.

17 tn Grk "will see my face" (an idiom for seeing someone in person).

18 tn Or "testify."

19 tn Grk "clean, pure," thus "guiltless" (BDAG 489 s.v. καθαρός 3.a).

sn I am innocent. Paul had a clear conscience, since he had faithfully carried out his responsibility of announcing to (the Ephesians) the whole purpose of God.

20 tn That is, "that if any of you should be lost, I am not responsible" (an idiom). According to L&N 33.223, the meaning of the phrase "that I am innocent of the blood of all of you" is "that if any of you should be lost, I am not responsible." However, due to the length of this phrase and its familiarity to many modern English readers, the translation was kept closer to formal equivalence in this case. The word "you" is not in the Greek text, but is implied; Paul is addressing the Ephesian congregation (in the person of its elders) in both v. 25 and 27.

21 tn Or "did not avoid." BDAG 1041 s.v. ὑποστέλλω 2.b has "shrink from, avoid implying fear...οὐ γὰρ ὑπεστειλάμην τοῦ μὴ ἀναγγεῖλαι I did not shrink from proclaiming Ac 20:27"; L&N 13.160 has "to hold oneself back from doing something, with the implication of some fearful concern – 'to hold back from, to shrink from, to avoid'...'for I have not held back from announcing to you the whole purpose of God' Ac 20:27."

22 tn Or "proclaiming," "declaring."

23 tn Or "plan."

24 tn Or "Be on your guard for" (cf. v. 29). Paul completed his responsibility to the Ephesians with this warning.

25 tn Grk "in which."

26 tn Or "guardians." BDAG 379-80 s.v. ἐπίσκοπος 2 states, "The term was taken over in Christian communities in ref. to one who served as overseer or supervisor, with special interest in guarding the apostolic tradition...Ac 20:28." This functional term describes the role of the elders (see v. 17). They were to guard and shepherd the congregation.

27 tc The reading "of God" (τοῦ θεοῦ, tou theou) is found in ℵ B 614 1175 1505 al vg sy; other witnesses have "of the Lord" (τοῦ κυρίου, tou kuriou) here (so 𝔓74 A C* D E Ψ 33 1739 al co), while the majority of the later minuscule MSS conflate these two into "of the Lord and God" (τοῦ κυρίου καὶ [τοῦ] θεοῦ, tou kuriou kai [tou] theou). Although the evidence is evenly balanced between the first two readings, τοῦ θεοῦ is decidedly superior on internal grounds. The final prepositional phrase of this verse, διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ ἰδίου (dia tou haimatos tou idiou), could be rendered "through his own blood" or "through the blood of his own." In the latter translation, the object that "own" modifies must be supplied (see tn below for discussion). But this would not be entirely clear to scribes; those who supposed that ἰδίου modified αἵματος would be prone to alter "God" to "Lord" to avoid the inference that God had blood. In a similar way, later scribes would be prone to conflate the two titles, thereby affirming the deity (with the construction τοῦ κυρίου καὶ θεοῦ following the Granville Sharp rule and referring to a single person [see ExSyn 272, 276-77, 290]) and substitutionary atonement of Christ. For these reasons, τοῦ θεοῦ best explains the rise of the other readings and should be considered authentic.

28 tn Or "acquired."

29 tn Or "with his own blood"; Grk "with the blood of his own." The genitive construction could be taken in two ways: (1) as an attributive genitive (second attributive position) meaning "his own blood"; or (2) as a possessive genitive, "with the blood of his own." In this case the referent is the Son, and the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity. See further C. F. DeVine, "The Blood of God," CBQ 9 (1947): 381-408.

sn That he obtained with the blood of his own Son. This is one of only two explicit statements in Luke-Acts highlighting the substitutionary nature of Christ's death (the other is in Luke 22:19).

30 tn Grk "after my departure."

31 tn That is, people like fierce wolves. See BDAG 167-68 s.v. βαρύς 4 on the term translated "fierce." The battle that will follow would be a savage one.

32 tn Grk "from among yourselves."

33 tn The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only rarely is used in a generic sense to refer to both males and females. Since Paul is speaking to the Ephesian elders at this point and there is nothing in the context to suggest women were included in that group ("from among your own group"), it is the truth[1] to draw the disciples away after them. 20:31 Therefore be alert,[2] remembering that night and day for three years I did not stop warning[3] each one of you with tears. 20:32 And now I entrust[4] you to God and to the message[5] of his grace. This message[6] is able to build you up and give you an inheritance among all those who are sanctified. 20:33 I have desired[7] no one's silver or gold or clothing. 20:34 You yourselves know that these hands of mine[8] provided for my needs and the needs of those who were with me. 20:35 By all these things,[9] I have shown you that by working in this way we must help[10] the weak,[11] and remember the words of the Lord Jesus that he himself said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"[12]

20:36 When[13] he had said these things, he knelt down[14] with them all and prayed. 20:37 They all began to weep loudly,[15] and hugged[16] Paul and kissed him,[17] 20:38 especially saddened[18] by what[19] he had said, that they were not going to see him[20] again. Then they accompanied[21] him to the ship.

Paul's Journey to Jerusalem

21:1 After[22] we[23] tore ourselves away[24] from them, we put out to sea,[25] and sailing a straight course,[26] we came to Cos,[27] on the next day to Rhodes,[28] and from there to Patara.[29] 21:2 We found[30] a ship crossing over to Phoenicia,[31] went aboard,[32] and put out to sea.[33] 21:3 After we sighted Cyprus[34] and left it behind on our port most likely Paul was not predicting that these false teachers would include women.

[1] tn Grk "speaking crooked things"; BDAG 237 s.v. διαστρέφω 2 has "λαλεῖν διεστραμμένα teach perversions (of the truth) Ac 20:30."

sn These perversions of the truth refer to the kinds of threats that would undermine repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (cf. v. 21). Instead these false teachers would arise from within the Ephesian congregation (cf. 1 John 2:18-19) and would seek to draw the disciples away after them.

[2] tn Or "be watchful."

[3] tn Or "admonishing."

[4] tn Or "commend." BDAG 772 s.v. παρατίθημι 3.b has "τινά τινι entrust someone to the care or protection of someone...Of divine protection παρέθεντο αὐτοὺς τῷ κυρίῳ Ac 14:23; cp. 20:32."

[5] tn Grk "word."

[6] tn Grk "the message of his grace, which." The phrase τῷ δυναμένῳ οἰκοδομῆσαι... (tō dunamenō oikodomēsai...) refers to τῷ λόγῳ (tō logō), not τῆς χάριτος (tēs charitos); in English it could refer to either "the message" or "grace," but in Greek, because of agreement in gender, the referent can only be "the message." To make this clear, a new sentence was begun in the translation and the referent "the message" was repeated at the beginning of this new sentence.

[7] tn Traditionally, "coveted." BDAG 371 s.v. ἐπιθυμέω 1 has "to have a strong desire to do or secure someth., desire, long for w. gen. of the thing desired...silver, gold, clothing Ac 20:33." The traditional term "covet" is not in common usage and difficult for many modern English readers to understand. The statement affirms Paul's integrity. He was not doing this for personal financial gain.

[8] tn The words "of mine" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to clarify whose hands Paul is referring to.

[9] sn The expression By all these things means "In everything I did."

[10] tn Or "must assist."

[11] tn Or "the sick." See Eph 4:28.

[12] sn The saying is similar to Matt 10:8. Service and generosity should be abundant. Interestingly, these exact words are not found in the gospels. Paul must have known of this saying from some other source.

[13] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[14] tn Grk "kneeling down...he prayed." The participle θείς (theis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[15] tn Grk "weeping a great deal," thus "loudly" (BDAG 472 s.v. ἱκανός and BDAG 546 s.v. κλαυθμός).

[16] tn Grk "fell on Paul's neck" (an idiom, see BDAG 1014 s.v. τράχηλος).

[17] sn The Ephesians elders kissed Paul as a sign of both affection and farewell. The entire scene shows how much interrelationship Paul had in his ministry and how much he and the Ephesians meant to each other.

[18] tn Or "pained."

[19] tn Grk "by the word that he had said."

[20] tn Grk "to see his face" (an idiom for seeing someone in person).

[21] tn BDAG 873 s.v. προπέμπω 1 has "they accompanied him to the ship Ac 20:38."

[22] tn Grk "It happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Since the action described by the participle ἀποσπασθέντας (apospasthentas, "tearing ourselves away") is prior to the departure of the ship, it has been translated as antecedent action ("after").

[23] sn This marks the beginning of another "we" section in Acts. These have been traditionally understood to mean that Luke was in the company of Paul for this part of the journey.

[24] tn BDAG 120 s.v. ἀποσπάω 2.b has "pass. in mid. sense ἀ. ἀπό τινος tear oneself away Ac 21:1"; LSJ 218 gives several illustrations of this verb meaning "to tear or drag away from."

[25] tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

[26] tn BDAG 406 s.v. εὐθυδρομέω has "of a ship run a straight course"; L&N 54.3 has "to sail a straight course, sail straight to."

[27] sn Cos was an island in the Aegean Sea.

[28] sn Rhodes was an island off the southwestern coast of Asia Minor.

[29] sn Patara was a city in Lycia on the southwestern coast of Asia Minor. The entire journey was about 185 mi (295 km).

[30] tn Grk "and finding." The participle εὑρόντες (heurontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun in the translation.

[31] sn Phoenicia was the name of an area along the Mediterranean coast north of Palestine.

[32] tn Grk "going aboard, we put out to sea." The participle ἐπιβάντες (epibantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[33] tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

side,[1] we sailed on to Syria and put in[2] at Tyre,[3] because the ship was to unload its cargo there. 21:4 After we located[4] the disciples, we stayed there[5] seven days. They repeatedly told[6] Paul through the Spirit[7] not to set foot[8] in Jerusalem.[9] 21:5 When[10] our time was over,[11] we left and went on our way. All of them, with their wives and children, accompanied[12] us outside of the city. After[13] kneeling down on the beach and praying,[14] 21:6 we said farewell[15] to one another.[16] Then[17] we went aboard the ship, and they returned to their own homes.[18] 21:7 We continued the voyage from Tyre[19] and arrived at Ptolemais,[20] and when we had greeted the brothers, we stayed with them for one day. 21:8 On the next day we left[21] and came to Caesarea,[22] and entered[23] the house of Philip the evangelist, who was one of the seven,[24] and stayed with him. 21:9 (He had four unmarried[25] daughters who prophesied.)[26]

21:10 While we remained there for a number of days,[27] a prophet named Agabus[28] came down from Judea. 21:11 He came[29] to us, took[30] Paul's belt,[31] tied[32] his own hands and feet with it,[33] and said, "The Holy Spirit says this: 'This is the way the Jews in Jerusalem will tie up the man whose belt this is, and will hand him over[34] to the

[1] sn The expression left it behind on our port side here means "sailed past to the south of it" since the ship was sailing east.

[2] tn BDAG 531 s.v. κατέρχομαι 2 states, "arrive, put in, nautical t.t. of ships and those who sail in them, who 'come down' fr. the 'high seas'...ἔις τι at someth. a harbor 18:22; 21:3; 27:5."

[3] sn Tyre was a city and seaport on the coast of Phoenicia. From Patara to Tyre was about 400 mi (640 km). It required a large cargo ship over 100 ft (30 m) long, and was a four to five day voyage.

map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

[4] tn BDAG 78 s.v. ἀνευρίσκω has "look/search for (w. finding presupposed) τινά...τοὺς μαθητάς Ac 21:4." The English verb "locate," when used in reference to persons, has the implication of both looking for and finding someone. The participle ἀνευρόντες (aneurontes) has been taken temporally.

[5] tn BDAG 154 s.v. αὐτοῦ states, "deictic adv. designating a position relatively near or far...there...Ac 21:4."

[6] tn The imperfect verb ἔλεγον (elegon) has been taken iteratively.

[7] sn Although they told this to Paul through the Spirit, it appears Paul had a choice here (see v. 14). Therefore this amounted to a warning: There was risk in going to Jerusalem, so he was urged not to go.

[8] tn BDAG 367 s.v. ἐπιβαίνω places Ac 21:4 under 1, "go up/upon, mount, board...πλοίῳ...Ac 27:2...Abs. go on board, embark...21:1 D, 2. – So perh. also ἐ. εἰς Ἰερουσόλυμα embark for Jerusalem (i.e. to the seaport of Caesarea) vs. 4." BDAG notes, however, "But this pass. may also belong to 2. to move to an area and be there, set foot in." Because the message from the disciples to Paul through the Holy Spirit has the character of a warning, the latter meaning has been adopted for this translation.

[9] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[10] tn Grk "It happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[11] tn Grk "When our days were over." L&N 67.71 has "ὅτε δὲ ἐγένετο ἡμᾶς ἐξαρτίσαι τὰς ἡμέρας 'when we brought that time to an end' or 'when our time with them was over' Ac 21:5."

[12] tn Grk "accompanying." Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation and the participle προπεμπόντων (propemponton) translated as a finite verb.

[13] tn Grk "city, and after." Because of the length of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

[14] sn On praying in Acts, see 1:14, 24; 2:47; 4:23; 6:6; 10:2; 12:5, 12; 13:3; 16:25.

[15] tn BDAG 98 s.v. ἀπασπάζομαι has "take leave of, say farewell to τινά someone...ἀπησπασάμεθα ἀλλήλους we said farewell to one another Ac 21:6."

[16] sn These words are part of v. 5 in the standard critical Greek text.

[17] tn Grk "and." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation, and καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

[18] tn Grk "to their own"; the word "homes" is implied.

[19] sn Tyre was a city and seaport on the coast of Phoenicia.

[20] sn Ptolemais was a seaport on the coast of Palestine about 30 mi (48 km) south of Tyre.

[21] tn Grk "On the next day leaving, we came." The participle ἐξελθόντες (exelthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[23] tn Grk "and entering...we stayed." The participle εἰσελθόντες (eiselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[24] sn Philip was one of the seven deacons appointed in the Jerusalem church (Acts 6:1-7).

[25] tn Grk "virgin." While the term παρθένος (parthenos) can refer to a woman who has never had sexual relations, the emphasis in this context seems to be on the fact that Philip's daughters were not married (L&N 9.39).

[26] sn This is best taken as a parenthetical note by the author. Luke again noted women who were gifted in the early church (see Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History 3.31; 3.39).

[27] tn BDAG 848 s.v. πολύς 1.b.α has "ἐπὶ ἡμέρας πλείους for a (large) number of days, for many days...Ac 13:31. – 21:10...24:17; 25:14; 27:20."

[28] sn Agabus also appeared in Acts 11:28. He was from Jerusalem, so the two churches were still in contact with one another.

[29] tn Grk "And coming." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here. The participle ἐλθών (elthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[30] tn Grk "and taking." This καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more. The participle ἄρας (aras) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[31] sn The belt was a band or sash used to keep money as well as to gird up the tunic (BDAG 431 s.v. ζώνη).

[32] tn The participle δήσας (dēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[33] tn The words "with it" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[34] tn Grk "and will deliver him over into the hands of" (a Semitic idiom).

sn The Jews...will tie up...and will hand him over. As later events will show, the Jews in Jerusalem did not personally tie Paul up and hand him over to the Gentiles, but their reaction to him was the cause of his arrest (Acts 21:27-36).

Gentiles.'" 21:12 When we heard this, both we and the local people[1] begged him not to go up to Jerusalem. 21:13 Then Paul replied, "What are you doing, weeping and breaking[2] my heart? For I am ready not only to be tied up,[3] but even to die in Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." 21:14 Because he could not be persuaded,[4] we said no more except,[5] "The Lord's will be done."[6] 21:15 After these days we got ready[7] and started up[8] to Jerusalem. 21:16 Some of the disciples from Caesarea[9] came along with us too, and brought us to the house[10] of Mnason of Cyprus, a disciple from the earliest times,[11] with whom we were to stay. 21:17 When we arrived in Jerusalem, the brothers welcomed us gladly.[12] 21:18 The next day Paul went in with us to see James, and all the elders were there.[13] 21:19 When Paul[14] had greeted them, he began to explain[15] in detail[16] what God[17] had done among the Gentiles through his ministry. 21:20 When they heard this, they praised[18] God. Then they said to him, "You see, brother, how many thousands of Jews[19] there are who have believed, and they are all ardent observers[20] of the law.[21] 21:21 They have been informed about you – that you teach all the Jews now living[22] among the Gentiles to abandon[23] Moses, telling them not to circumcise their children[24] or live[25] according to our customs. 21:22 What then should we do? They will no doubt[26] hear that you have come. 21:23 So do what[27] we tell you: We have four men[28] who have taken[29] a vow;[30] 21:24 take them and purify[31] yourself along with them and pay their expenses,[32] so that they may have their heads shaved.[33] Then[34] everyone will know there

1 tn Or "the people there."

2 tn The term translated "breaking" as used by Josephus (Ant. 10.10.4 [10.207]) means to break something into pieces, but in its only NT use (it is a hapax legomenon) it is used figuratively (BDAG 972 s.v. συνθρύπτω).

3 tn L&N 18.13 has "to tie objects together – 'to tie, to tie together, to tie up.'" The verb δέω (deō) is sometimes figurative for imprisonment (L&N 37.114), but it is preferable to translate it literally here in light of v. 11 where Agabus tied himself up with Paul's belt.

4 tn The participle πειθομένου (peithomenou) in this genitive absolute construction has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

5 tn Grk "we became silent, saying."

6 sn "The Lord's will be done." Since no one knew exactly what would happen, the matter was left in the Lord's hands.

7 tn Or "we made preparations."

8 tn Grk "were going up"; the imperfect verb ἀνεβαίνομεν (anebainomen) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

sn In colloquial speech Jerusalem was always said to be "up" from any other location in Palestine. The group probably covered the 65 mi (105 km) in two days using horses. Their arrival in Jerusalem marked the end of Paul's third missionary journey.

9 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

10 tn Grk "to Mnason..."; the words "the house of" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by the verb ξενισθῶμεν (xenisthōmen).

11 tn Or perhaps, "Mnason of Cyprus, one of the original disciples." BDAG 137 s.v. ἀρχαῖος 1 has "ἀ. μαθητής a disciple of long standing (perh. original disc.) Ac 21:16."

12 tn Or "warmly" (see BDAG 144 s.v. ἀσμένως).

13 tn BDAG 760 s.v. παραγίνομαι 1 has this use under the broad category of meaning "draw near, come, arrive, be present." sn All the elders were there. This meeting shows how the Jerusalem church still regarded Paul and his mission with favor, but also with some concerns because of the rumors circulating about his actions.

14 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Or "to report," "to describe." The imperfect verb ἐξηγεῖτο (exēgeito) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

16 tn BDAG 293 s.v. εἷς 5.e has "καθ' ἕν one after the other (hence τὸ καθ' ἕν 'a detailed list': PLille 11, 8 [III BC]; PTebt. 47, 34; 332, 16) J 21:25. Also καθ' ἕν ἕκαστον...Ac 21:19."

17 sn Note how Paul credited God with the success of his ministry.

18 tn Or "glorified."

19 tn Grk "how many thousands there are among the Jews."

sn How many thousands of Jews. See Acts 2-5 for the accounts of their conversion, esp. 2:41 and 4:4. Estimates of the total number of Jews living in Jerusalem at the time range from 20,000 to 50,000.

20 tn Or "are all zealous for the law." BDAG 427 s.v. ζηλωτής 1.a.β has "of thing...τοῦ νόμου an ardent observer of the law Ac 21:20."

21 sn That is, the law of Moses. These Jewish Christians had remained close to their Jewish practices after becoming believers (1 Cor 7:18-19; Acts 16:3).

22 tn BDAG 511 s.v. κατά B.1.a has "τοὺς κ. τὰ ἔθνη Ἰουδαίους the Judeans (dispersed) throughout the nations 21:21." The Jews in view are not those in Palestine, but those who are scattered throughout the Gentile world.

23 tn Or "to forsake," "to rebel against." BDAG 120 s.v. ἀποστασία has "ἀποστασίαν διδάσκεις ἀπὸ Μωϋσέως you teach (Judeans) to abandon Moses Ac 21:21."

sn The charge that Paul was teaching Jews in the Diaspora to abandon Moses was different from the issue faced in Acts 15, where the question was whether Gentiles needed to become like Jews first in order to become Christians. The issue also appears in Acts 24:5-6, 13-21; 25:8.

24 sn That is, not to circumcise their male children. Biblical references to circumcision always refer to male circumcision.

25 tn Grk "or walk."

26 tn L&N 71.16 has "pertaining to being in every respect certain – 'certainly, really, doubtless, no doubt.'...'they will no doubt hear that you have come' Ac 21:22."

27 tn Grk "do this that."

28 tn Grk "There are four men here."

29 tn L&N 33.469 has "'there are four men here who have taken a vow' or 'we have four men who...' Ac 21:23."

30 tn On the term for "vow," see BDAG 416 s.v. εὐχή 2.

31 sn That is, undergo ritual cleansing. Paul's cleansing would be necessary because of his travels in "unclean" Gentile territory. This act would represent a conciliatory gesture. Paul would have supported a "law-free" mission to the Gentiles as an option, but this gesture would represent an attempt to be sensitive to the Jews (1 Cor 9:15-22).

32 tn L&N 57.146 has "δαπάνησον ἐπ' αὐτοῖς 'pay their expenses' Ac 21:24."

33 tn The future middle indicative has causative force here. BDAG 686 s.v. ξυράω has "mid. have oneself shaved...τὴν κεφαλήν have one's head shaved...Ac 21:24."

sn Having their heads shaved probably involved ending a voluntary Nazirite vow (Num 6:14-15).

34 tn Grk "and." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translais nothing in what they have been told[1] about you, but that you yourself live in conformity with[2] the law.[3] 21:25 But regarding the Gentiles who have believed, we have written a letter, having decided[4] that they should avoid[5] meat that has been sacrificed to idols[6] and blood and what has been strangled[7] and sexual immorality.'' 21:26 Then Paul took the men the next day,[8] and after he had purified himself[9] along with them, he went to the temple and gave notice[10] of the completion of the days of purification,[11] when[12] the sacrifice would be offered for each[13] of them. 21:27 When the seven days were almost over,[14] the Jews from the province of Asia[15] who had seen him in the temple area[16] stirred up the whole crowd[17] and seized[18] him, 21:28 shouting, ''Men of Israel,[19] help! This is the man who teaches everyone everywhere against our people, our law,[20] and this sanctuary![21] Furthermore[22] he has brought Greeks into the inner courts of the temple[23] and made this holy place ritually unclean!''[24] 21:29 (For they had seen Trophimus the Ephesian in the city with him previously, and[25] they assumed Paul had brought him into the tion, and καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

1 tn The verb here describes a report or some type of information (BDAG 534 s.v. κατηχέω 1).

2 tn Grk "adhere to the keeping of the law." L&N 41.12 has "στοιχέω: to live in conformity with some presumed standard or set of customs – 'to live, to behave in accordance with.'"

3 sn The law refers to the law of Moses.

4 tn L&N 13.154 has "'having decided that they must keep themselves from food offered to idols, from blood, from an animal that has been strangled, and from sexual immorality' Ac 21:25."

sn Having decided refers here to the decision of the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:6-21). Mention of this previous decision reminds the reader that the issue here is somewhat different: It is not whether Gentiles must first become Jews before they can become Christians (as in Acts 15), but whether Jews who become Christians should retain their Jewish practices. Sensitivity to this issue would suggest that Jewish Christians and Gentile Christians might engage in different practices.

5 tn This is a different Greek word than the one used in Acts 15:20, 29. BDAG 1068 s.v. φυλάσσω 3 has "to be on one's guard against, look out for, avoid...w. acc. of pers. or thing avoided...Ac 21:25." The Greek word used in Acts 15:20, 29 is ἀπέχω (apechō). The difference in meaning, although slight, has been maintained in the translation.

6 tn There is no specific semantic component in the Greek word εἰδωλόθυτος that means "meat" (see BDAG 280 s.v. εἰδωλόθυτος; L&N 5.15). The stem –θυτος means "sacrifice" (referring to an animal sacrificially killed) and thereby implies meat.

7 sn What has been strangled. That is, to refrain from eating animals that had been killed without having the blood drained from them. According to the Mosaic law (Lev 17:13-14) Jews were forbidden to eat flesh with the blood still in it (note the preceding provision in this verse, and blood).

8 tn BDAG 422 s.v. ἔχω 11.b.β has "temporal, to be next, immediately following...τῇ ἐχομένῃ...on the next day Lk 13:33...Ac 20:15; w. ἡμέρᾳ added...21:26."

9 tn That is, after he had undergone ritual cleansing. The aorist passive participle ἁγνισθείς (hagnistheis) has been taken temporally of antecedent action.

10 tn Grk "entered the temple, giving notice." The participle διαγγέλλων (diangellōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

11 sn The days of purification refers to the days of ritual cleansing.

12 tn Grk "until" (BDAG 423 s.v. ἕως 1.b.β.ℵ), but since in English it is somewhat awkward to say "the completion of the days of purification, until the sacrifice would be offered," the temporal clause was translated "when the sacrifice would be offered." The point is that the sacrifice would be offered when the days were completed. Paul honored the request of the Jewish Christian leadership completely. As the following verse makes clear, the vow was made for seven days.

13 tn Grk "for each one."

14 tn BDAG 975 s.v. συντελέω 4 has "to come to an end of a duration, come to an end, be over...Ac 21:27."

15 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

sn Note how there is a sense of Paul being pursued from a distance. These Jews may well have been from Ephesus, since they recognized Trophimus the Ephesian (v. 29).

16 tn Grk "in the temple." See the note on the word "temple" in v. 28.

17 tn Or "threw the whole crowd into consternation." L&N 25.221 has "συνέχεον πάντα τὸν ὄχλον 'they threw the whole crowd into consternation' Ac 21:27. It is also possible to render the expression in Ac 21:27 as 'they stirred up the whole crowd.'"

18 tn Grk "and laid hands on."

19 tn Or "Israelite men," although this is less natural English. The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, it is conceivable that this is a generic usage since "the whole crowd" is mentioned in v. 27, although it can also be argued that these remarks were addressed primarily to the men present, even if women were there.

20 sn The law refers to the law of Moses.

21 tn Grk "this place."

sn This sanctuary refers to the temple. The charges were not new, but were similar to those made against Stephen (Acts 6:14) and Jesus (Luke 23:2).

22 tn BDAG 400 s.v. ἔτι 2.b has "ἔ. δὲ καί furthermore...al. ἔ. τε καί...Lk 14:26; Ac 21:28." This is a continuation of the same sentence in Greek, but due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

23 tn Grk "into the temple." The specific reference is to the Court of the Sons of Israel (see the note following the term "unclean" at the end of this verse). To avoid giving the modern reader the impression that they entered the temple building itself, the phrase "the inner courts of the temple" has been used in the translation.

24 tn Or "and has defiled this holy place."

sn Has brought Greeks...unclean. Note how the issue is both religious and ethnic, showing a different attitude by the Jews. A Gentile was not permitted to enter the inner temple precincts (contrast Eph 2:11-22). According to Josephus (Ant. 15.11.5 [15.417]; J. W. 5.5.2 [5.193], cf. 5.5.6 [5.227]), the inner temple courts (the Court of the Women, the Court of the Sons of Israel, and the Court of the Priests) were raised slightly above the level of the Court of the Gentiles and were surrounded by a wall about 5 ft (1.5 m) high. Notices in both Greek and Latin (two of which have been discovered) warned that any Gentiles who ventured into the inner courts would be responsible for their own deaths. See also Philo, Embassy 31 (212). In m. Middot 2:3 this wall was called "soreq" and according to m. Sanhedrin 9:6 the stranger who trespassed beyond the soreq would die by the hand of God.

25 tn Grk "whom."

inner temple courts.)[1] 21:30 The whole city was stirred up,[2] and the people rushed together.[3] They seized[4] Paul and dragged him out of the temple courts,[5] and immediately the doors were shut. 21:31 While they were trying[6] to kill him, a report[7] was sent up[8] to the commanding officer[9] of the cohort[10] that all Jerusalem was in confusion.[11] 21:32 He[12] immediately took[13] soldiers and centurions[14] and ran down to the crowd.[15] When they saw[16] the commanding officer[17] and the soldiers, they stopped beating[18] Paul. 21:33 Then the commanding officer[19] came up and arrested[20] him and ordered him to be tied up with two chains;[21] he[22] then asked who he was and what[23] he had done. 21:34 But some in the crowd shouted one thing, and others something else,[24] and when the commanding officer[25] was unable[26] to find out the truth[27] because of the disturbance,[28] he ordered Paul[29] to be brought into the barracks.[30] 21:35 When he came to the steps, Paul[31] had to be carried[32] by the soldiers because of the violence[33] of the mob, 21:36 for a crowd of people[34] followed them,[35] screaming, "Away with him!" 21:37 As Paul was about to be brought into the barracks,[36] he said[37] to the commanding officer,[38] "May I say[39] something to you?" The officer[40] replied,[41] "Do you know Greek?[42] 21:38 Then you're not that Egyptian sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. The note explains the cause of the charge and also notes that it was false.

[1] tn On the phrase "inner temple courts" see the note on the word "temple" in v. 28.

[2] tn On this term see BDAG 545 s.v. κινέω 2.b.

[3] tn Or "the people formed a mob." BDAG 967 s.v. συνδρομή has "formation of a mob by pers. running together, running together...ἐγένετο σ. τοῦ λαοῦ the people rushed together Ac 21:30."

[4] tn Grk "and seizing." The participle ἐπιλαβόμενοι (epilabomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation, and καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[5] tn Grk "out of the temple." See the note on the word "temple" in v. 28.

[6] tn Grk "seeking."

[7] tn Or "information" (originally concerning a crime; BDAG 1050 s.v. φάσις).

[8] tn Grk "went up"; this verb is used because the report went up to the Antonia Fortress where the Roman garrison was stationed.

[9] tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). In Greek the term χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos) literally described the "commander of a thousand," but it was used as the standard translation for the Latin tribunus militum or tribunus militare, the military tribune who commanded a cohort of 600 men.

[10] sn A cohort was a Roman military unit of about 600 soldiers, one-tenth of a legion.

[11] tn BDAG 953 s.v. συγχέω has "Pass. w. act.force be in confusion...ὅλη συγχύννεται Ἰερουσαλήμ 21:31."

[12] tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, the relative pronoun ("who") was translated as a pronoun ("he") and a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

[13] tn Grk "taking...ran down." The participle κατέδραμεν (katedramen) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[14] sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

[15] tn Grk "to them"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Grk "seeing." The participle ἰδόντες (idontes) has been taken temporally.

[17] tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 31.

[18] sn The mob stopped beating Paul because they feared the Romans would arrest them for disturbing the peace and for mob violence. They would let the Roman officials take care of the matter from this point on.

[19] tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 31.

[20] tn Grk "seized."

[21] tn The two chains would be something like handcuffs (BDAG 48 s.v. ἅλυσις and compare Acts 28:20).

[22] tn Grk "and he." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation, and καί (kai) has been replaced with a semicolon. "Then" has been supplied after "he" to clarify the logical sequence.

[23] tn Grk "and what it is"; this has been simplified to "what."

[24] tn L&N 33.77 has "ἄλλοι δὲ ἄλλο τι ἐπεφώνουν ἐν τῷ ὄχλῳ 'some in the crowd shouted one thing; others, something else' Ac 21:34."

[25] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the commanding officer) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[26] tn This genitive absolute construction has been translated temporally; it could also be taken causally: "and since the commanding officer was unable to find out the truth."

[27] tn Or "find out what had happened"; Grk "the certainty" (BDAG 147 s.v. ἀσφαλής 2).

[28] tn Or "clamor," "uproar" (BDAG 458 s.v. θόρυβος).

[29] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[30] tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

[31] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[32] sn Paul had to be carried. Note how the arrest really ended up protecting Paul. The crowd is portrayed as irrational at this point.

[33] tn This refers to mob violence (BDAG 175 s.v. βία b).

[34] tn Grk "the multitude of people." While πλῆθος (plēthos) is articular, it has been translated "a crowd" since it was probably a subset of the larger mob that gathered in v. 30.

[35] tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[36] tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

[37] tn Grk "says" (a historical present).

[38] tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers) See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 31.

[39] tn Grk "Is it permitted for me to say" (an idiom).

[40] tn Grk "He"; the referent (the officer) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[41] tn Grk "said."

[42] sn "Do you know Greek?" Paul as an educated rabbi was bilingual. Paul's request in Greek allowed the officer to recognize that Paul was not the violent insurrectionist he thought he had arrested (see following verse). The confusion of identities reveals the degree of confusion dominating these events.

who started a rebellion[1] and led the four thousand men of the 'Assassins'[2] into the wilderness[3] some time ago?"[4] 21:39 Paul answered,[5] "I am a Jew[6] from Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of an important city.[7] Please[8] allow me to speak to the people." 21:40 When the commanding officer[9] had given him permission,[10] Paul stood[11] on the steps and gestured[12] to the people with his hand. When they had become silent,[13] he addressed[14] them in Aramaic,[15]

Paul's Defense

22:1 "Brothers and fathers, listen to my defense[16] that I now[17] make to you." 22:2 (When they heard[18] that he was addressing[19] them in Aramaic,[20] they became even[21] quieter.)[22] Then[23] Paul said, 22:3 "I am a Jew,[24] born in Tarsus in Cilicia, but brought up[25] in this city, educated with strictness[26] under[27] Gamaliel[28] according to the law of our ancestors,[29] and was[30] zealous[31] for God just as all of you are today. 22:4 I[32] persecuted this Way[33] even to the point of death,[34] tying up[35] both men and women and putting[36] them in prison, 22:5 as both the high priest and the whole council of elders[37] can testify about

[1] tn L&N 39.41 has "οὐκ ἄρα σὺ εἶ ὁ Αἰγύπτιος ὁ πρὸ τούτων τῶν ἡμερῶν ἀναστατώσας 'then you are not that Egyptian who some time ago started a rebellion' Ac 21:38."

[2] tn Grk "of the Sicarii."

sn The term 'Assassins' is found several times in the writings of Josephus (J. W. 2.13.3 [2.254-257]; Ant. 20.8.10 [20.186]). It was the name of the most fanatical group among the Jewish nationalists, very hostile to Rome, who did not hesitate to assassinate their political opponents. They were named Sicarii in Latin after their weapon of choice, the short dagger or sicarius which could be easily hidden under one's clothing. In effect, the officer who arrested Paul had thought he was dealing with a terrorist.

[3] tn Or "desert."

[4] tn Grk "before these days."

[5] tn Grk "said."

[6] tn Grk "a Jewish man."

[7] tn Grk "of a not insignificant city." The double negative, common in Greek, is awkward in English and has been replaced by a corresponding positive expression (BDAG 142 s.v. ἄσημος 1).

[8] tn Grk "I beg you."

[9] tn The referent (the commanding officer) has been supplied here in the translation for clarity.

[10] tn Grk "Giving him permission." The participle ἐπιτρέψαντος (epitrepsantos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[11] tn Grk "standing." The participle ἑστώς (hestōs) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[12] tn Or "motioned."

[13] tn γενομένης (genomenēs) has been taken temporally. BDAG 922 s.v. σιγή has "πολλῆς σιγῆς γενομένης when a great silence had fallen = when they had become silent Ac 21:40."

[14] tn Or "spoke out to." L&N 33.27 has "to address an audience, with possible emphasis upon loudness – 'to address, to speak out to.' πολλῆς δὲ σιγῆς γενομένης προσεφώνησεν τῇ Ἑβραΐδι διαλέκτῳ 'when they were quiet, he addressed them in Hebrew' Ac 21:40."

[15] tn Grk "in the Hebrew dialect, saying." This refers to the Aramaic spoken in Palestine in the 1st century (BDAG 270 s.v. Ἑβραΐς). The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

[16] sn Listen to my defense. This is the first of several speeches Paul would make in his own defense: Acts 24:10ff.; 25:8, 16; and 26:1ff. For the use of such a speech ("apologia") in Greek, see Josephus, Ag. Ap. 2.15 [2.147]; Wis 6:10.

[17] tn The adverb νυνί (nuni, "now") is connected with the phrase τῆς πρὸς ὑμᾶς νυνὶ ἀπολογίας (tēs pros humas nuni apologias) rather than the verb ἀκούσατε (akousate), and the entire construction (prepositional phrase plus adverb) is in first attributive position and thus translated into English by a relative clause.

[18] tn ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) has been taken temporally.

[20] tn Grk "in the Hebrew language." See the note on "Aramaic" in 21:40.

[21] tn BDAG 613-14 s.v. μᾶλλον 1 "Abs. μ. can mean to a greater degree (than before), even more, now more than ever Lk 5:15; Jn 5:18; 19:8; Ac 5:14; 22:2; 2 Cor 7:7."

[22] tn BDAG 440 s.v. ἡσυχία 2 has "παρέχειν ἡσυχίαν quiet down, give a hearing...Ac 22:2."

sn This is best taken as a parenthetical note by the author.

[23] tn Grk "and." Since this represents a continuation of the speech begun in v. 1, καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

[24] tn Grk "a Jewish man."

[25] tn BDAG 74 s.v. ἀνατρέφω b has "of mental and spiritual nurture bring up, rear, train...ἀνατεθραμμένος ἐν τ. πόλει ταύτῃ 22:3."

[26] tn Or "with precision." Although often translated "strictly" this can be misunderstood for "solely" in English. BDAG 39 s.v. ἀκρίβεια gives the meaning as "exactness, precision." To avoid the potential misunderstanding the translation "with strictness" is used, although it is slightly more awkward than "strictly."

[27] tn Grk "strictly at the feet of" (an idiom).

[28] tn Or "brought up in this city under Gamaliel, educated with strictness..." The phrase παρὰ τοὺς πόδας Γαμαλιὴλ (para tous podas Gamaliēl) could be understood with what precedes or with what follows. The punctuation of NA[27] and UBS[4], which place a comma after ταύτῃ (tautē), has been followed in the translation.

sn Gamaliel was a famous Jewish scholar and teacher mentioned here and in Acts 5:34. He had a grandson of the same name and is referred to as "Gamaliel the Elder" to avoid confusion. He is quoted a number of times in the Mishnah, was given the highest possible title for Jewish teachers, Rabba (cf. John 20:16), and was highly regarded in later rabbinic tradition.

[29] tn Or "our forefathers."

[30] tn Grk "ancestors, being." The participle ὑπάρχων (huparchōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[31] tn BDAG 427 s.v. ζηλωτής 1.a.α has "of pers. ...ζ. τοῦ θεοῦ one who is loyal to God Ac 22:3."

[32] tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("who") was translated by the first person pronoun ("I") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

[33] sn That is, persecuted the Christian movement (Christianity). The Way is also used as a description of the Christian faith in Acts 9:2; 18:25-26; 19:9, 23; 24:14, 22).

[34] tn BDAG 442-43 s.v. θάνατος 1.a has "διώκειν ἄχρι θανάτου persecute even to death Ac 22:4."

[35] tn Grk "binding." See Acts 8:3.

[36] tn BDAG 762 s.v. παραδίδωμι 1.b has "W. local εἰς...εἰς φυλακήν put in prison Ac 8:3; cp. 22:4."

[37] tn That is, the whole Sanhedrin. BDAG 861 s.v. πρεσβυτέριον has "an administrative group concerned with me. From them[1] I also received[2] letters to the brothers in Damascus, and I was on my way[3] to make arrests there and bring[4] the prisoners[5] to Jerusalem[6] to be punished. 22:6 As[7] I was en route and near Damascus,[8] about noon a very bright[9] light from heaven[10] suddenly flashed[11] around me. 22:7 Then I[12] fell to the ground and heard a voice saying to me, 'Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me?' 22:8 I answered, 'Who are you, Lord?' He said to me, 'I am Jesus the Nazarene, whom you are persecuting.' 22:9 Those who were with me saw the light, but did not understand[13] the voice of the one who was speaking to me. 22:10 So I asked,[14] 'What should I do, Lord?' The Lord said to me, 'Get up[15] and go to Damascus; there you will be told about everything[16] that you have been designated[17] to do.' 22:11 Since I could not see because of[18] the brilliance[19] of that light, I came to Damascus led by the hand of[20] those who were with me. 22:12 A man named Ananias,[21] a devout man according to the law,[22] well spoken of by all the Jews who live there,[23] 22:13 came[24] to me and stood beside me[25] and said to me, 'Brother Saul, regain your sight!'[26] And at that very moment[27] I looked up and saw him.[28] 22:14 Then he said, 'The God of our ancestors[29] has already chosen[30] you to know his will, to see[31] the Righteous One,[32] and to hear a command[33] from his mouth, 22:15 because you will be his witness[34] to all the interests of a specific community, council of elders – a. of the highest Judean council in Jerusalem, in our lit. usu. called συνέδριον...ὁ ἀρχιερεύς καὶ πᾶν τὸ πρ. Ac 22:5."

1 tn Grk "from whom." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was translated by the third person plural pronoun ("them") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

2 tn Grk "receiving." The participle δεξάμενος (dexamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

3 tn Grk "letters to the brothers, [and] I was going to Damascus." Such a translation, however, might be confusing since the term "brother" is frequently used of a fellow Christian. In this context, Paul is speaking about fellow Jews.

4 tn Grk "even there and bring..." or "there and even bring..." The ascensive καί (kai) shows that Paul was fervent in his zeal against Christians, but it is difficult to translate for it really belongs with the entire idea of arresting and bringing back the prisoners.

5 tn BDAG 221 s.v. δέω 1.b has "δεδεμένον ἄγειν τινά bring someone as prisoner...Ac 9:2, 21; 22:5."

6 tn Grk "I was going...to bring even those who were there to Jerusalem as prisoners that they might be punished."

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

7 tn Grk "It happened that as." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

8 tn Grk "going and nearing Damascus."

sn En route and near Damascus. This is the first retelling of Paul's Damascus Road experience in Acts (cf. Acts 9:1-9; the second retelling is in Acts 26:9-20).

9 tn BDAG 472 s.v. ἱκανός 3.b has "φῶς a very bright light Ac 22:6."

10 tn Or "from the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

11 tn Or "shone."

12 tn This is a continuation of the same sentence in Greek using the connective τέ (te), but due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence a new sentence was begun in the translation here. To indicate the logical sequence for the modern English reader, τέ was translated as "then."

13 tn Grk "did not hear" (but see Acts 9:7). BDAG 38 s.v. ἀκούω 7 has "W. acc. τὸν νόμον understand the law Gal 4:21; perh. Ac 22:9; 26:14...belong here." If the word has this sense here, then a metonymy is present, since the lack of effect is put for a failure to appreciate what was heard.

14 tn Grk "So I said."

15 tn Grk "Getting up." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) is an adverbial participle of attendant circumstance and has been translated as a finite verb.

16 tn Grk "about all things."

17 tn Or "assigned," "ordered." BDAG 991 s.v. τάσσω 2.a has "act. and pass., foll. by acc. w. inf....περὶ πάντων ὧν τέτακταί σοι ποιῆσαι concerning everything that you have been ordered to do 22:10." There is an allusion to a divine call and commission here.

18 tn BDAG 106 s.v. ἀπό 5.a has "οὐκ ἐνέβλεπον ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τοῦ φωτός I could not see because of the brilliance of the light Ac 22:11."

19 tn Or "brightness"; Grk "glory."

20 tn Grk "by" (ὑπό, hupo), but this would be too awkward in English following the previous "by."

21 tn Grk "a certain Ananias."

22 sn The law refers to the law of Moses.

23 tn BDAG 534 s.v. κατοικέω 1.a translates this present participle "ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν (sc. ἐκεῖ) κατοικούντων Ἰουδαίων by all the Jews who live there Ac 22:12."

24 tn Grk "coming." The participle ἐλθών (elthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tn Grk "coming to me and standing beside [me] said to me." The participle ἐπιστάς (epistas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

26 tn Grk "Brother Saul, look up" (here an idiom for regaining one's sight). BDAG 59 s.v. ἀναβλέπω places this usage under 1, "look up Ac 22:13a. W. εἰς αὐτόν to show the direction of the glance...22:13b; but perh. this vs. belongs under 2a." BDAG 59 s.v. 2.a.α states, "of blind persons, who were formerly able to see, regain sight." The problem for the translator is deciding between the literal and the idiomatic usage and at the same time attempting to retain the wordplay in Acts 22:13: "[Ananias] said to me, 'Look up!' and at that very moment I looked up to him." The assumption of the command is that the effort to look up will be worth it (through the regaining of sight).

27 tn Grk "hour," but ὥρα (hōra) is often used for indefinite short periods of time (so BDAG 1102-3 s.v. ὥρα 2.c: "αὐτῇ τῇ ὥρᾳ at that very time, at once, instantly...Lk 2:38, 24:33; Ac 16:18; 22:13"). A comparison with the account in Acts 9:18 indicates that this is clearly the meaning here.

28 tn Grk "I looked up to him."

29 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

sn The expression God of our ancestors is a description of the God of Israel. The God of promise was at work again.

30 tn L&N 30.89 has "'to choose in advance, to select beforehand, to designate in advance'...'the God of our ancestors has already chosen you to know his will' Ac 22:14."

31 tn Grk "and to see." This καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

32 sn The Righteous One is a reference to Jesus Christ (Acts 3:14).

33 tn Or "a solemn declaration"; Grk "a voice." BDAG 1071-72 s.v. φωνή 2.c states, "that which the voice gives expression to: call, cry, outcry, loud or solemn declaration (... = order, command)...Cp. 22:14; 24:21."

34 tn Or "a witness to him."

sn You will be his witness. See Acts 1:8; 13:31. The following reference to all people stresses all nationalities (Eph 3:7-9; Acts 9:15). Note also v. 21.

people[1] of what you have seen and heard. 22:16 And now what are you waiting for?[2] Get up,[3] be baptized, and have your sins washed away,[4] calling on his name.'[5] 22:17 When[6] I returned to Jerusalem and was praying in the temple, I fell into a trance[7] 22:18 and saw the Lord[8] saying to me, 'Hurry and get out of Jerusalem quickly, because they will not accept your testimony about me.' 22:19 I replied,[9] 'Lord, they themselves know that I imprisoned and beat those in the various synagogues[10] who believed in you. 22:20 And when the blood of your witness[11] Stephen was shed,[12] I myself was standing nearby, approving,[13] and guarding the cloaks[14] of those who were killing him.'[15] 22:21 Then[16] he said to me, 'Go, because I will send you far away to the Gentiles.'"

The Roman Commander Questions Paul

22:22 The crowd[17] was listening to him until he said this.[18] Then[19] they raised their voices and shouted,[20] "Away with this man[21] from the earth! For he should not be allowed to live!"[22] 22:23 While they were screaming[23] and throwing off their cloaks[24] and tossing dust[25] in the air, 22:24 the commanding officer[26] ordered Paul[27] to be brought back into the barracks.[28] He told them[29] to interrogate Paul[30] by beating him with a lash[31] so that he could find out the reason the crowd[32] was shouting at Paul[33] in this way. 22:25 When they had stretched him out for the lash,[34]

---

[1] tn Grk "all men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos).

[2] tn L&N 67.121 has "to extend time unduly, with the implication of lack of decision – 'to wait, to delay.' νῦν τί μέλλεις... ἀναστὰς βάπτισαι 'what are you waiting for? Get up and be baptized' Ac 22:16."

[3] tn Grk "getting up." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) is an adverbial participle of attendant circumstance and has been translated as a finite verb.

[4] sn The expression have your sins washed away means "have your sins purified" (the washing is figurative).

[5] sn The expression calling on his name describes the confession of the believer: Acts 2:17-38, esp. v. 38; Rom 10:12-13; 1 Cor 1:2.

[6] tn Grk "It happened to me that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[7] tn BDAG 309 s.v. ἔκστασις 2 has "γενέσθαι ἐν ἐκστάσει fall into a trance Ac 22:17."

[8] tn Or "Jesus"; Grk "him." The referent (the Lord, cf. v. 19) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn Grk "And I said." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai, in καγώ [kagō]) has not been translated here.

[10] tn For the distributive sense of the expression κατὰ τὰς συναγωγάς (kata tas sunagōgas) BDAG 512 s.v. κατά B.1.d has "of places viewed serially, distributive use w. acc....κατ' οἶκαν from house to house...Ac 2:46b; 5:42...Likew. the pl.... κ. τὰς συναγωγάς 22:19." See also L&N 37.114.

sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

[11] sn Now Paul referred to Stephen as your witness, and he himself had also become a witness. The reversal was now complete; the opponent had now become a proponent.

[12] sn When the blood of your witness Stephen was shed means "when your witness Stephen was murdered."

[13] tn Grk "and approving." This καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[14] tn Or "outer garments."

sn The cloaks. The outer garment, or cloak, was taken off and laid aside to leave the arms free (in this case for throwing stones).

[15] tn Or "who were putting him to death." For the translation of ἀναιρούντων (anairountōn) as "putting to death" see BDAG 64 s.v. ἀναιρέω 2.

[16] tn Grk "And." Since this represents a response to Paul's reply in v. 19, καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the logical sequence.

[17] tn Grk "They were listening"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn Grk "until this word."

sn Until he said this. Note it is the mention of Paul's mission to the Gentiles with its implication of ethnic openness that is so disturbing to the audience.

[19] tn Grk "And." To indicate the logical sequence, καί (kai) has been translated as "then" here.

[20] tn Grk "and said."

[21] tn Grk "this one."

[22] tn BDAG 491 s.v. καθήκω has "to be appropriate, come/reach to, be proper/fitting...Usu. impers. καθήκει it comes (to someone)...foll. by acc. and inf....οὐ καθῆκεν αὐτὸν ζῆν he should not be allowed to live Ac 22:22."

[23] tn The participle κραυγαζόντων (kraugazontōn) has been translated temporally.

[24] tn Or "outer garments."

sn Their cloaks. The outer garment, or cloak, was taken off and laid aside to leave the arms free (perhaps in this case as preparation for throwing stones).

[25] sn The crowd's act of tossing dust in the air indicated they had heard something disturbing and offensive. This may have been a symbolic gesture, indicating Paul's words deserved to be thrown to the wind, or it may have simply resulted from the fact they had nothing else to throw at him at the moment.

[26] tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). In Greek the term χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos) literally described the "commander of a thousand," but it was used as the standard translation for the Latin tribunus militum or tribunus militare, the military tribune who commanded a cohort of 600 men.

[27] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

[29] tn Grk "into the barracks, saying." This is a continuation of the same sentence in Greek using the participle εἶπας (eipas), but due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence a new sentence was begun in the translation here. The direct object "them" has been supplied; it is understood in Greek.

[30] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] sn To interrogate Paul by beating him with a lash. Under the Roman legal system it was customary to use physical torture to extract confessions or other information from prisoners who were not Roman citizens and who were charged with various crimes, especially treason or sedition. The lashing would be done with a whip of leather thongs with pieces of metal or bone attached to the ends.

[32] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[33] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[34] tn Grk "for the thongs" (of which the lash was made). Although often translated as a dative of means ("with thongs"), referring to thongs used to tie the victim to the whipping post, BDAG 474-75 s.v. ἱμάς states that it "is better taken as a dat.

Paul said to the centurion[1] standing nearby, "Is it legal for you to lash a man who is a Roman citizen[2] without a proper trial?"[3] 22:26 When the centurion[4] heard this,[5] he went to the commanding officer[6] and reported it,[7] saying, "What are you about to do?[8] For this man is a Roman citizen."[9] 22:27 So the commanding officer[10] came and asked[11] Paul,[12] "Tell me, are you a Roman citizen?"[13] He replied,[14] "Yes." 22:28 The commanding officer[15] answered, "I acquired this citizenship with a large sum of money."[16] "But I was even[17] born a citizen,"[18] Paul replied.[19] 22:29 Then those who were about to interrogate him stayed away[20] from him, and the commanding officer[21] was frightened when he realized that Paul[22] was[23] a Roman citizen[24] and that he had had him tied up.[25]

Paul Before the Sanhedrin

22:30 The next day, because the commanding officer[26] wanted to know the true reason[27] Paul[28] was being accused by the Jews, he released him and ordered the chief priests and the whole council[29] to assemble. He then brought[30] Paul down and had him stand before them.

23:1 Paul looked directly[31] at the council[32] and said, "Brothers, I have lived my life with a clear conscience[33] before God to this day." 23:2 At that[34] the high priest Ananias ordered of purpose for the thongs, in which case οἱ ἱμάντες = whips (Posidonius: 87 fgm. 5 Jac.; POxy. 1186, 2 τὴν διὰ τῶν ἱμάντων αἰκείαν. – Antiphanes 74, 8, Demosth. 19, 197 and Artem. 1, 70 use the sing. in this way)."

1 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

2 tn The word "citizen" is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

3 tn Or "a Roman citizen and uncondemned." BDAG 35 s.v. ἀκατάκριτος has "uncondemned, without due process" for this usage.

sn The fact that Paul was a Roman citizen protected him from being tortured to extract information; such protections were guaranteed by the Porcian and Julian law codes. In addition, the fact Paul had not been tried exempted him from punishment.

4 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

5 tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

6 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 24.

7 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

8 tn Or perhaps, "What do you intend to do?" Although BDAG 627 s.v. μέλλω 1.c.α lists this phrase under the category "be about to, be on the point of," it is possible it belongs under 1.c.γ, "denoting an intended action: intend, propose, have in mind...τί μέλλεις ποιεῖν; what do you intend to do?"

9 tn The word "citizen" is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

10 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 24.

11 tn Grk "and said to."

12 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn The word "citizen" is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

14 tn Grk "He said."

15 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 24.

16 sn Sometimes Roman citizenship was purchased through a bribe (Dio Cassius, Roman History 60.17.4-9). That may well have been the case here.

17 tn BDAG 495-96 s.v. καί 2.b has "intensive: even...Ac 5:39; 22:28."

18 tn The word "citizen" is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

sn Paul's reference to being born a citizen suggests he inherited his Roman citizenship from his family.

19 tn Grk "Paul said." This phrase has been placed at the end of the sentence in the translation for stylistic reasons.

20 tn BDAG 158 s.v. ἀφίστημι 2.b has "keep away...ἀπό τινος... Lk 4:13; Ac 5:38; 2 Cor 12:8...cp. Ac 22:29." In context, the point would seem to be not that the interrogators departed or withdrew, but that they held back from continuing the flogging.

21 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 24.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn This is a present tense (ἐστιν, estin) retained in indirect discourse. It must be translated as a past tense in contemporary English.

24 tn The word "citizen" is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

25 sn Had him tied up. Perhaps a reference to the chains in Acts 21:33, or the preparations for the lashing in Acts 22:25. A trial would now be needed to resolve the matter. The Roman authorities' hesitation to render a judgment in the case occurs repeatedly: Acts 22:30; 23:28-29; 24:22; 25:20, 26-27. The legal process begun here would take the rest of Acts and will be unresolved at the end. The process itself took four years of Paul's life.

26 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the commanding officer) has been supplied here in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "the certainty, why." BDAG 147 s.v. ἀσφαλής 2 has "τὸ ἀ. the certainty = the truth (in ref. to ferreting out the facts...ἵνα τὸ ἀ. ἐπιγνῶ) γνῶναι 21:34; 22:30."

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "the whole Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

30 tn Grk "and bringing." The participle καταγαγών (katagagōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation, and καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to clarify the logical sequence.

31 tn Grk "Paul, looking directly at the council, said." The participle ἀτενίσας (atenisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

32 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

33 tn BDAG 846 s.v. πολιτεύομαι 3 has "W. a double dat. συνειδήσει ἀγαθῇ πεπολίτευμαι τῷ θεῷ I have lived my life with a clear conscience before God Ac 23:1."

34 tn Grk "and" (δέ, de); the phrase "at that" has been used in the translation to clarify the cause and effect relationship.

those standing near[1] Paul[2] to strike[3] him on the mouth. 23:3 Then Paul said to him, "God is going to strike you, you whitewashed wall![4] Do[5] you sit there judging me according to the law,[6] and in violation of the law[7] you order me to be struck?" 23:4 Those standing near him[8] said, "Do you dare insult[9] God's high priest?" 23:5 Paul replied,[10] "I did not realize,[11] brothers, that he was the high priest, for it is written, 'You must not speak evil about a ruler of your people.'"[12]

23:6 Then when Paul noticed[13] that part of them were Sadducees[14] and the others Pharisees,[15] he shouted out in the council,[16] "Brothers, I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees. I am on trial concerning the hope of the resurrection[17] of the dead!" 23:7 When he said this,[18] an argument[19] began[20] between the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and the assembly was divided. 23:8 (For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, or angel, or spirit, but the Pharisees acknowledge them all.)[21] 23:9 There was a great commotion,[22] and some experts in the law[23] from the party of the Pharisees stood up[24] and protested strongly,[25] "We find nothing wrong[26] with this man. What if a spirit or an angel has spoken to him?" 23:10 When the argument became[27] so great the commanding officer[28] feared that they would tear Paul to pieces,[29] he ordered the detachment[30] to go down, take him away from them by force,[31] and bring him into the barracks.[32]

23:11 The following night the Lord[33] stood near[34] Paul[35] and said, "Have courage,[36] for just

1 tn BDAG 778 s.v. παρίστημι/παριστάνω 2.b.α has "οἱ παρεστῶτες αὐτῷ those standing near him Ac 23:2."

2 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Or "hit" ("strike" maintains the wordplay with the following verse). The action was probably designed to indicate a rejection of Paul's claim to a clear conscience in the previous verse.

4 sn You whitewashed wall. This was an idiom for hypocrisy – just as the wall was painted on the outside but something different on the inside, so this person was not what he appeared or pretended to be (L&N 88.234; see also BDAG 1010 s.v. τοῖχος). Paul was claiming that the man's response was two-faced (Ezek 13:10-16; Matt 23:27-28). See also Deut 28:22.

5 tn Grk "And do." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

6 tn The law refers to the law of Moses.

7 tn BDAG 769 s.v. παρανομέω has "παρανομῶν κελεύεις in violation of the law you order Ac 23:3."

sn In violation of the law. Paul was claiming that punishment was given before the examination was complete (m. Sanhedrin 3:6-8). Luke's noting of this detail shows how quickly the leadership moved to react against Paul.

8 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

9 tn L&N 33.393 has for λοιδορέω (loidoreō) "to speak in a highly insulting manner – 'to slander, to insult strongly, slander, insult.'" sn Insult God's high priest. Paul was close to violation of the Mosaic law with his response, as the citation from Exod 22:28 in v. 5 makes clear.

10 tn Grk "said."

11 tn Or "know."

12 sn A quotation from Exod 22:28. This text defines a form of blasphemy. Paul, aware of the fact that he came close to crossing the line, backed off out of respect for the law.

13 tn BDAG 200 s.v. γινώσκω 4 has "to be aware of someth., perceive, notice, realize"; this is further clarified by section 4.c: "w. ὅτι foll....Ac 23:6."

14 sn See the note on Sadducees in 4:1.

15 sn See the note on Pharisee in 5:34.

16 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

17 tn That is, concerning the hope that the dead will be resurrected. Grk "concerning the hope and resurrection." BDAG 320 s.v. ἐλπίς 1.b.α states, "Of Israel's messianic hope Ac 23:6 (ἐ. καὶ ἀνάστασις for ἐ. τῆς ἀν. [obj. gen] as 2 Macc 3:29 ἐ. καὶ σωτηρία)." With an objective genitive construction, the resurrection of the dead would be the "object" of the hope.

18 tn The participle εἰπόντος (eipontos) has been translated temporally.

19 tn Or "a dispute" (BDAG 940 s.v. στάσις 3).

20 tn Grk "there came about an argument." This has been simplified to "an argument began"

21 tn BDAG 55 s.v. ἀμφότεροι 2 has "all, even when more than two are involved...Φαρισαῖοι ὁμολογοῦσιν τὰ ἀ. believe in them all 23:8." On this belief see Josephus, J. W. 2.8.14 (2.163); Ant. 18.1.3 (18.14).

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

22 tn Or "clamor" (cf. BDAG 565 s.v. κραυγή 1.a, which has "there arose a loud outcry" here, and Exod 12:30).

23 tn Or "and some scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 4:5.

24 tn Grk "standing up." The participle ἀναστάντες (anastantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tn Grk "protested strongly, saying." L&N 39.27 has "διαμάχομαι: to fight or contend with, involving severity and thoroughness – 'to protest strongly, to contend with.'...'some scribes from the party of the Pharisees protested strongly' Ac 23:9." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated.

26 sn "We find nothing wrong with this man." Here is another declaration of innocence. These leaders recognized the possibility that Paul might have the right to make his claim.

27 tn This genitive absolute construction with the participle γινομένης (ginomenēs) has been taken temporally (it could also be translated as causal).

28 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). In Greek the term χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos) literally described the "commander of a thousand," but it was used as the standard translation for the Latin tribunus militum or tribunus militare, the military tribune who commanded a cohort of 600 men.

29 tn Grk "that Paul would be torn to pieces by them." BDAG 236 s.v. διασπάω has "of an angry mob μὴ διασπασθῇ ὁ Παῦλος ὑπ' αὐτῶν that Paul would be torn in pieces by them Ac 23:10." The passive construction is somewhat awkward in English and has been converted to an equivalent active construction in the translation.

30 tn Normally this term means "army," but according to BDAG 947 s.v. στράτευμα, "Of a smaller detachment of soldiers, sing. Ac 23:10, 27." In the plural it can be translated "troops," but it is singular here.

31 tn Or "to go down, grab him out of their midst."

32 tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

33 sn The presence of the Lord indicated the vindicating presence and direction of God.

34 tn Grk "standing near Paul, said." The participle ἐπιστάς (epistas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

35 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

36 tn Or "Do not be afraid."

as you have testified about me in Jerusalem,[1] so you must also testify in Rome."[2]

The Plot to Kill Paul

23:12 When morning came,[3] the Jews formed[4] a conspiracy[5] and bound themselves with an oath[6] not to eat or drink anything[7] until they had killed Paul. 23:13 There were more than forty of them who formed this conspiracy.[8] 23:14 They[9] went[10] to the chief priests[11] and the elders and said, "We have bound ourselves with a solemn oath[12] not to partake[13] of anything until we have killed Paul. 23:15 So now you and the council[14] request the commanding officer[15] to bring him down to you, as if you were going to determine[16] his case[17] by conducting a more thorough inquiry.[18] We are ready to kill him[19] before he comes near this place."[20]

23:16 But when the son of Paul's sister heard about the ambush,[21] he came and entered[22] the barracks[23] and told Paul. 23:17 Paul called[24] one of the centurions[25] and said, "Take this young man to the commanding officer,[26] for he has something to report to him." 23:18 So the centurion[27] took him and brought him to the commanding officer[28] and said, "The prisoner Paul called[29] me and asked me to bring this young man to you because he has something to tell you." 23:19 The commanding officer[30] took him by the hand, withdrew privately, and asked, "What is it that you want[31] to report to me?" 23:20 He replied,[32] "The Jews have agreed to ask you to bring Paul down to the council[33] tomorrow, as if they were going to inquire more thoroughly about him. 23:21 So do not let them persuade you to do this,[34] because more than forty

3 tn Grk "when it was day."

4 tn Grk "forming a conspiracy, bound." The participle ποιήσαντες (poiēsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

5 tn L&N 30.72 has 'some Jews formed a conspiracy' Ac 23:12"; BDAG 979 s.v. συστροφή 1 has "Judeans came together in a mob 23:12. But in the last pass. the word may also mean – 2. the product of a clandestine gathering, plot, conspiracy" (see also Amos 7:10; Ps 63:3).

6 tn Or "bound themselves under a curse." BDAG 63 s.v. ἀναθεματίζω 1 has "trans. put under a curse τινά someone...pleonastically ἀναθέματι ἀ. ἑαυτόν Ac 23:14...ἀ. ἑαυτόν vss. 12, 21, 13 v.l." On such oaths see m. Shevi'it 3:1-5. The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

7 tn The word "anything" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

8 tn L&N 30.73 defines συνωμοσία (sunōmosia) as "a plan for taking secret action someone or some institution, with the implication of an oath binding the conspirators – 'conspiracy, plot.' ...'there were more than forty of them who formed this conspiracy' Ac 23:13."

9 tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was translated by the third person plural pronoun ("them") and a new sentence begun in the translation.

10 tn Grk "going." The participle προσελθόντες (proselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

11 sn They went to the chief priests. The fact that the high priest knew of this plot and did nothing shows the Jewish leadership would even become accomplices to murder to stop Paul. They would not allow Roman justice to take its course. Paul's charge in v. 3 of superficially following the law is thus shown to be true.

12 tn Or "bound ourselves under a curse." BDAG 63 s.v. ἀναθεματίζω 1 has "trans. put under a curse τινά someone...pleonastically ἀναθέματι ἀ. ἑαυτόν Ac 23:14...ἀ. ἑαυτόν vss. 12, 21, 13 v.l." The pleonastic use ἀναθέματι ἀνεθεματίσαμεν (literally "we have cursed ourselves with a curse") probably serves as an intensifier following Semitic usage, and is represented in the translation by the word "solemn." On such oaths see m. Nedarim 3:1, 3.

13 tn This included both food and drink (γεύομαι [geuomai] is used of water turned to wine in John 2:9).

14 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

15 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 10.

16 tn Or "decide." BDAG 227 s.v. διαγινώσκω has "ἀκριβέστερον τὰ περὶ αὐτοῦ to make a more thorough examination of his case Ac 23:15."

17 tn Grk "determine the things about him."

18 tn The expression "more thorough inquiry" reflects the comparative form of ἀκριβέστερον (akribesteron).

19 sn "We are ready to kill him." Now those Jews involved in the conspiracy, along with the leaders as accomplices, are going to break one of the ten commandments.

20 tn The words "this place" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

21 tn Or "plot" (BDAG 334 s.v. ἐνέδρα).

22 tn Grk "coming and entering..., he told." The participles παραγενόμενος (paragenomenos) and εἰσελθών (eiselthōn) have been translated as finite verbs due to requirements of contemporary English style.

23 tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

24 tn Grk "calling...Paul said." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

26 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 10.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the centurion) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 10.

29 tn Grk "calling." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

30 tn Grk "the chiliarch" (an officer in command of a thousand soldiers). See note on the term "commanding officer" in v. 10.

31 tn Grk "you have," but the expression "have to report" in English could be understood to mean "must report" rather than "possess to report." For this reason the nearly equivalent expression "want to report," which is not subject to misunderstanding, was used in the translation.

32 tn Grk "He said."

33 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

34 tn Grk "do not be persuaded by them." The passive construction μὴ πεισθῇς αὐτοῖς (mē peisthēs autois) has of them[1] are lying in ambush[2] for him. They[3] have bound themselves with an oath[4] not to eat or drink anything[5] until they have killed him, and now they are ready, waiting for you to agree to their request.”[6] 23:22 Then the commanding officer[7] sent the young man away, directing him,[8] “Tell no one that you have reported[9] these things to me.” 23:23 Then[10] he summoned[11] two of the centurions[12] and said, “Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea[13] along with seventy horsemen[14] and two hundred spearmen[15] by[16] nine o’clock tonight,[17] 23:24 and provide mounts for Paul to ride[18] so that he may be brought safely to Felix[19] the governor.”[20] 23:25 He wrote[21] a letter that went like this:[22]

> 23:26 Claudius Lysias to His Excellency Governor[23] Felix,[24] greetings. 23:27 This man was seized[25] by the Jews and they were about to kill him,[26] when I came up[27] with the detachment[28] and rescued him, because I had learned that he was[29] a Roman citizen.[30] 23:28 Since I wanted to know[31] what charge they were accusing been converted to an active construction in the translation, and the phrase “to do this” supplied to indicate more clearly the object of their persuasion.

[1] tn Grk “forty men of them.” In the expression ἐξ αὐτῶν ἄνδρες (ex autōn andres) “men” is somewhat redundant and has not been included in the English translation.

[2] tn Grk “are lying in wait for him” (BDAG 334 s.v. ἐνεδρεύω); see also v. 16.

[3] tn Grk “for him, who.” Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun (“who”) was translated by the third person plural pronoun (“they”) and a new sentence begun in the translation.

[4] tn Or “bound themselves under a curse.” BDAG 63 s.v. ἀναθεματίζω 1 has “trans. put under a curse τινά someone... ἀ. ἑαυτόν vss. 12, 21, 13 v.l.”

[5] tn The word “anything” is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[6] tn Grk “waiting for your approval,” “waiting for your agreement.” Since it would be possible to misunderstand the literal translation “waiting for your approval” to mean that the Jews were waiting for the commander’s approval to carry out their plot or to kill Paul (as if he were to be an accomplice to their plot), the object of the commander’s approval (their request to bring Paul to the council) has been specified in the translation as “their request.”

[8] tn BDAG 760 s.v. παραγγέλλω has “to make an announcement about someth. that must be done, give orders, command, instruct, direct of all kinds of persons in authority, worldly rulers, Jesus, the apostles...παραγγέλλειν w. an inf. and μή comes to mean forbid to do someth.: π. τινί w. aor. inf. Lk 5:14; 8:56; without the dat., which is easily supplied fr. the context Ac 23:22.” However, if the direct discourse which follows is to be retained in the translation, a different translation must be used since it is awkward to introduce direct discourse with the verb to forbid. Thus the alternative to direct was used.

[9] tn On this verb, see BDAG 325-26 s.v. ἐμφανίζω 2. The term was frequently used of an official report to authorities. In modern terms, this was a police tip.

[10] tn Grk “And.” Since this represents a response to the reported ambush, καί (kai) has been translated as “then” to indicate the logical sequence.

[11] tn Grk “summoning...he said.” The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[12] sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

[13] sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1. This was a journey of about 65 mi (just over 100 km).

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[14] tn Or “cavalrymen.”

[15] tn A military technical term of uncertain meaning. BDAG 217 s.v. δεξιολάβος states, “a word of uncertain mng., military t.t., acc. to Joannes Lydus...and Theophyl. Sim., Hist. 4, 1 a light-armed soldier, perh. bowman, slinger; acc. to a scholion in CMatthaei p. 342 body-guard....Spearman Goodspd., NRSV; ‘security officer’, GDKilpatrick, JTS 14, ’63, 393f.”

sn Two hundred soldiers...along with seventy horsemen and two hundred spearmen. The resulting force assembled to guard Paul was almost a full cohort. The Roman commander was taking no chances, but was sending the issue up the chain of command to the procurator to decide.

[16] tn Grk “from.”

[17] tn Grk “from the third hour of the night.”

sn Mounts for Paul to ride. The fact they were riding horses indicates they wanted everyone to move as quickly as possible.

[19] sn Felix the governor was Antonius Felix, a freedman of Antonia, mother of the Emperor Claudius. He was the brother of Pallas and became procurator of Palestine in A.D. 52/53. His administration was notorious for its corruption, cynicism, and cruelty. According to the historian Tacitus (History 5.9) Felix “reveled in cruelty and lust, and wielded the power of a king with the mind of a slave.”

[20] tn Grk “Felix the procurator.” The official Roman title has been translated as “governor” (BDAG 433 s.v. ἡγεμών 2).

[21] tn Grk “writing.” Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun here in the translation, supplying “he” (referring to the commanding officer, Claudius Lysias) as subject. The participle γράψας (grapsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[22] tn Grk “having this form,” “having this content.” L&N 33.48 has “γράψος ἐπιστολὴν ἔχουσαν τὸν τύπον τοῦτον ‘then he wrote a letter that went like this’ Ac 23:25. It is also possible to understand ἐπιστολή in Ac 23:25 not as a content or message, but as an object (see 6.63).”

[23] tn Grk “Procurator.” The official Roman title has been translated as “governor” (BDAG 433 s.v. ἡγεμών 2).

[24] sn Governor Felix. See the note on Felix in v. 24.

[25] tn The participle συλλημφθέντα (sullēmphthenta) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. The remark reviews events of Acts 21:27-40.

[26] tn Grk “and was about to be killed by them.” The passive construction has been converted to an active one in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[27] tn Or “approached.”

[28] tn Normally this term means “army,” but according to BDAG 947 s.v. στράτευμα, “Of a smaller detachment of soldiers, sing. Ac 23:10, 27.” In the plural it can be translated “troops,” but it is singular here.

[29] tn In Greek this is a present tense retained in indirect discourse.

[30] tn The word “citizen” is supplied here for emphasis and clarity.

sn The letter written by the Roman commander Claudius Lysias was somewhat self-serving. He made it sound as if the rescue of a Roman citizen had been a conscious act on his part. In fact, he had made the discovery of Paul’s Roman citizenship somewhat later. See Acts 21:37-39 and 22:24-29.

[31] tn Or “determine.”

him of,[1] I brought him down to their council.[2] 23:29 I found he[3] was accused with reference to controversial questions[4] about their law, but no charge against him deserved death or imprisonment.[5] 23:30 When I was informed[6] there would be a plot[7] against this man, I sent him to you at once, also ordering his accusers to state their charges[8] against him before you.

23:31 So the soldiers, in accordance with their orders,[9] took[10] Paul and brought him to Antipatris[11] during the night. 23:32 The next day they let[12] the horsemen[13] go on with him, and they returned to the barracks.[14] 23:33 When the horsemen[15] came to Caesarea[16] and delivered the letter to the governor, they also presented[17] Paul to him. 23:34 When the governor[18] had read[19] the letter,[20] he asked[21] what province he was from.[22] When he learned[23] that he was from Cilicia,[24] 23:35 he said, "I will give you a hearing[25] when your accusers arrive too." Then[26] he ordered that Paul[27] be kept under guard in Herod's palace.[28]

The Accusations Against Paul

24:1 After five days the high priest Ananias[29] came down with some elders and an attorney[30] named[31] Tertullus, and they[32] brought formal charges[33] against Paul to the governor. 24:2 When Paul[34] had been summoned, Tertullus

---

1 tn Grk "to know the charge on account of which they were accusing him." This has been simplified to eliminate the prepositional phrase and relative pronoun διʼ ἣν (diʼ hēn) similar to L&N 27.8 which has "'I wanted to find out what they were accusing him of, so I took him down to their Council' Ac 23:28."

2 tn Grk "their Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

3 tn Grk "whom I found." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been changed to a personal pronoun ("he") and a new sentence begun in the translation at this point.

4 tn BDAG 428 s.v. ζήτημα states, "in our lit. only in Ac, w. the mng. it still has in Mod. Gk. (controversial) question, issue, argument...Ac 15:2; 26:3. ζ. περί τινος questions about someth....18:15; 25:19. – In 23:29, since περί had already been used, the subj. of the discussion is added in the gen. ζ. τοῦ νόμου αὐτῶν."

sn With reference to controversial questions. Note how the "neutral" Roman authorities saw the issue. This was a religious rather than a civil dispute. See Acts 18:15.

5 tn Grk "but having no charge worthy of death or imprisonment." BDAG 273-74 s.v. ἔγκλημα 1 has "legal t.t....ἔ. ἄξιον θανάτου ἢ δεσμῶν a charge deserving death or imprisonment 23:29."

sn Despite the official assessment that no charge against him deserved death or imprisonment, there was no effort to release Paul.

6 tn Grk "It being revealed to me." The participle μηνυθείσης (mēnutheisēs) has been taken temporally.

7 tn The term translated "plot" here is a different one than the one in Acts 23:16 (see BDAG 368 s.v. ἐπιβουλή).

8 tn Grk "the things against him." This could be rendered as "accusations," "grievances," or "charges," but since "ordered his accusers to state their accusations" sounds redundant in English, "charges" was used instead.

9 tn BDAG 237-38 s.v. διατάσσω 2 has "κατὰ τὸ δ. αὐτοῖς in accordance w. their orders...Ac 23:31."

10 tn Grk "taking." The participle ἀναλαβόντες (analabontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

11 sn Antipatris was a city in Judea about 35 mi (55 km) northwest of Jerusalem (about halfway to Caesarea). It was mentioned several times by Josephus (Ant. 13.15.1 [13.390]; J. W. 1.4.7 [1.99]).

12 tn Grk "letting." The participle ἐάσαντες (easantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

13 tn Or "cavalrymen."

14 tn Or "the headquarters." BDAG 775 s.v. παρεμβολή 2 has "barracks/headquarters of the Roman troops in Jerusalem Ac 21:34, 37; 22:24; 23:10, 16, 32."

15 tn Grk "who, coming to Caesarea." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek construction, a new sentence was begun here in the translation. The relative pronoun ("who") has been replaced with the referent (the horsemen) in the translation for clarity.

16 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1. It was about 30 mi (50 km) from Antipatris.

17 tn BDAG 778 s.v. παρίστημι/παριστάνω 1.b has "present, represent – α. lit. τινά τινι someone to someone παρέστησαν τὸν Παῦλον αὐτῷ Ac 23:33."

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the governor) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "having read." The participle ἀναγνούς (anagnous) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

20 tn The words "the letter" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

21 tn Grk "and asking." The participle ἐπερωτήσας (eperōtēsas) has been translated as a finite verb and καί (kai) left untranslated due to requirements of contemporary English style.

22 sn Governor Felix asked what province he was from to determine whether he had legal jurisdiction over Paul. He could have sent him to his home province for trial, but decided to hear the case himself.

23 tn Grk "and learning." The participle πυθόμενος (puthomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

24 sn Cilicia was a province in northeastern Asia Minor.

25 tn Or "I will hear your case." BDAG 231 s.v. διακούω has "as legal t.t. give someone an opportunity to be heard in court, give someone (τινός) a hearing Ac 23:35"; L&N 56.13 has "to give a judicial hearing in a legal matter – 'to hear a case, to provide a legal hearing, to hear a case in court.'"

26 tn Grk "ordering." The participle κελεύσας (keleusas) has been translated as a finite verb and a new sentence begun here due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence. "Then" has also been supplied to indicate the logical and temporal sequence.

27 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 sn Herod's palace (Grk "Herod's praetorium") was the palace built in Caesarea by Herod the Great. See Josephus, Ant. 15.9.6 (15.331). These events belong to the period of A.D. 56-57.

29 sn Ananias was in office from A.D. 47-59.

30 tn The term refers to a professional advocate (BDAG 905 s.v. ῥήτωρ).

31 tn Grk "an attorney, a certain Tertullus."

32 tn Grk "who" (plural). Because in English the relative pronoun "who" could be understood to refer only to the attorney Tertullus and not to the entire group, it has been replaced with the third person plural pronoun "they." "And" has been supplied to provide the connection to the preceding clause.

33 tn BDAG 326 s.v. ἐμφανίζω 3 has "ἐ. τινὶ κατά τινος bring formal charges against someone...Ac 24:1; 25:2."

34 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

began to accuse him,[1] saying, "We have experienced a lengthy time[2] of peace through your rule,[3] and reforms[4] are being made in this nation[5] through your foresight.[6] 24:3 Most excellent Felix,[7] we acknowledge this everywhere and in every way[8] with all gratitude.[9] 24:4 But so that I may not delay[10] you any further, I beg[11] you to hear us briefly[12] with your customary graciousness.[13] 24:5 For we have found[14] this man to be a troublemaker,[15] one who stirs up riots[16] among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader[17] of the sect of the Nazarenes.[18] 24:6 He[19] even tried to desecrate[20] the temple, so we arrested[21] him.[22] 24:8 When you examine[23] him yourself, you will be able to learn from him[24] about all these things we are accusing him of doing."[25] 24:9 The Jews also joined in the verbal attack,[26] claiming[27] that these things were true.

Paul's Defense Before Felix

24:10 When the governor gestured for him to speak, Paul replied, "Because I know[28] that you have been a judge over this nation for many years, I confidently make my defense.[29] 24:11 As you can verify[30] for yourself, not more than twelve days ago[31] I went up to Jerusalem[32] to worship. 24:12 They did not find me arguing[33]

---

[1] tn Or "began to bring charges, saying."

[2] tn Grk "experienced much peace."

[3] tn Grk "through you" ("rule" is implied).

[4] tn This term is used only once in the NT (a hapax legomenon). It refers to improvements in internal administration (BDAG 251 s.v. διόρθωμα).

[5] tn Or "being made for this people."

[6] sn References to peaceful rule, reforms, and the governor's foresight in the opening address by Tertullus represent an attempt to praise the governor and thus make him favorable to the case. Actual descriptions of his rule portray him as inept (Tacitus, Annals 12.54; Josephus, J. W. 2.13.2-7 [2.253-270]).

[7] sn Most excellent Felix. See the note on Felix in 23:24.

[8] tn Grk "in every way and everywhere."

[9] tn Or "with complete thankfulness." BDAG 416 s.v. εὐχαριστία 1 has "μετὰ πάσης εὐ....with all gratitude Ac 24:3." L&N 31.26 has "'we acknowledge this anywhere and everywhere with complete thankfulness' Ac 24:3."

[10] tn Or "may not weary." BDAG 274 s.v. ἐγκόπτω states, "ἵνα μὴ ἐπὶ πλεῖόν σε ἐγκόπτω Ac 24:4 is understood by Syr. and Armen. versions to mean in order not to weary you any further; cp. ἔγκοπος weary Diog. L. 4, 50; LXX; and ἔγκοπον ποιεῖν to weary Job 19:2; Is 43:23. But impose on is also prob.; detain NRSV."

[11] tn Or "request."

[12] tn This term is another NT hapax legomenon (BDAG 976 s.v. συντόμως 2). Tertullus was asking for a brief hearing, and implying to the governor that he would speak briefly and to the point.

[13] tn BDAG 371 s.v. ἐπιείκεια has "τῇ σῇ ἐ. with your (customary) indulgence Ac 24:4."

[14] tn Grk "For having found." The participle εὑρόντες (heurontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[15] tn L&N 22.6 has "(a figurative extension of meaning of λοιμός 'plague,' 23.158) one who causes all sorts of trouble – 'troublemaker, pest.' ... 'for we have found this man to be a troublemaker" Ac 24:5."

[16] tn Or "dissensions." While BDAG 940 s.v. στάσις 3 translates this phrase "κινεῖν στάσεις (v.l. στάσιν) τισί create dissension among certain people Ac 24:5," it is better on the basis of the actual results of Paul's ministry to categorize this usage under section 2, "uprising, riot, revolt, rebellion" (cf. the use in Acts 19:40).

[17] tn This term is yet another NT hapax legomenon (BDAG 894 s.v. πρωτοστάτης).

sn A ringleader. Tertullus' basic argument was that Paul was a major disturber of the public peace. To ignore this the governor would be shunning his duty to preserve the peace and going against the pattern of his rule. In effect, Tertullus claimed that Paul was seditious (a claim the governor could not afford to ignore).

[18] sn The sect of the Nazarenes is a designation for followers of Jesus the Nazarene, that is, Christians.

[19] tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("who") was replaced by the third person singular pronoun ("he") and a new sentence begun here in the translation.

[20] tn Or "profane" (BDAG 173 s.v. βεβηλόω). The term was also used of profaning the Sabbath.

[21] tn Or "seized." Grk "whom also we arrested." Because of the awkwardness of a relative clause in English at this point, the relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by the pronoun "him" as object of the verb.

[22] tc Some later MSS include some material at the end of v. 6, all of 24:7, and some material at the beginning of v. 8: "and we wanted to judge him according to our law. 24:7 But Lysias the commanding officer came and took him out of our hands with a great deal of violence, 24:8 ordering those who accused him to come before you." Acts 24:6b, 7, and 8a are lacking in 𝔓74 ℵ A B H L P 049 81 1175 1241 pm and a few versional witnesses. They are included (with a few minor variations) in E Ψ 33 323 614 945 1505 1739 pm and a few versional witnesses. This verse (and parts of verses) is most likely not a part of the original text of Acts, for not only is it lacking from the better witnesses, there is no easy explanation as to how such could be missing from them. The present translation follows NA[27] in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

[23] tn Or "question."

[24] tn Grk "From whom when you examine him yourself, you will be able to learn..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by the third person singular pronoun ("him") and a new sentence begun at the beginning of v. 8 in the translation.

[25] tn Grk "about all these things of which we are accusing him." This has been simplified to eliminate the relative pronoun ("of which") in the translation.

[26] tn Grk "joined in the attack," but the adjective "verbal" has been supplied to clarify that this was not another physical assault on Paul. The verb is another NT hapax legomenon (BDAG 969 s.v. συνεπιτίθημι).

[27] tn Or "asserting" (BDAG 1050 s.v. φάσκω).

[28] tn Grk "knowing." The participle ἐπιστάμενος (epistamenos) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[29] sn "Because...defense." Paul also paid an indirect compliment to the governor, implying that he would be fair in his judgment.

[30] tn BDAG 369 s.v. ἐπιγινώσκω 2.c has "notice, perceive, learn of, ascertain...Also as legal t.t. ascertain (2 Macc 14:9) τὶ Ac 23:28; cp. 24:8. W. ὅτι foll. Ac 24:11." "Verify" is an English synonym for "ascertain."

[31] tn Grk "it is not more than twelve days from when." This has been simplified to "not more than twelve days ago."

sn Part of Paul's defense is that he would not have had time to organize a revolt, since he had arrived in Jerusalem not more than twelve days ago.

[32] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[33] tn Or "disputing," "conducting a heated discussion."

with anyone or stirring up a crowd[1] in the temple courts[2] or in the synagogues[3] or throughout the city,[4] 24:13 nor can they prove[5] to you the things[6] they are accusing me of doing.[7] 24:14 But I confess this to you, that I worship[8] the God of our ancestors[9] according to the Way (which they call a sect), believing everything that is according to the law[10] and that is written in the prophets. 24:15 I have[11] a hope in God (a hope[12] that[13] these men[14] themselves accept too) that there is going to be a resurrection of both the righteous and the unrighteous.[15] 24:16 This is the reason[16] I do my best to always[17] have a clear[18] conscience toward God and toward people.[19] 24:17 After several years[20] I came to bring to my people gifts for the poor[21] and to present offerings,[22] 24:18 which I was doing when they found me in the temple, ritually purified,[23] without a crowd or a disturbance.[24] 24:19 But there are some Jews from the province of Asia[25] who should be here before you and bring charges,[26] if they have anything against me. 24:20 Or these men here[27] should tell what crime[28] they found me guilty of[29] when I stood before the council,[30] 24:21 other than[31] this one thing[32] I shouted out while I

1 tn BDAG 381 s.v. ἐπίστασις 2 has "ἐ. ποιεῖν ὄχλου to cause a crowd to gather Ac 24:12." Roman authorities would not allow a mob to gather and threaten the peace, and anyone suspected of instigating a mob would certainly be arrested.

2 tn Grk "in the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

3 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

4 sn A second part of Paul's defense is that he did nothing while he was in Jerusalem to cause unrest, neither arguing nor stirring up a crowd in the temple courts or in the synagogues or throughout the city.

5 tn BDAG 778 s.v. παρίστημι/παριστάνω 1.f has "οὐδὲ παραστῆσαι δύνανταί σοι περὶ ὧν νυνὶ κατηγοροῦσίν μου nor can they prove to you the accusations they are now making against me Ac 24:13."

sn Nor can they prove. This is a formal legal claim that Paul's opponents lacked proof of any wrongdoing. They had no witness who could justify the arrest at the temple.

6 tn The words "the things" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

7 tn Grk "nor can they prove to you [the things] about which they are now accusing me." This has been simplified to eliminate the relative pronoun ("which") in the translation.

8 tn Or "serve."

9 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

10 sn That is, the law of Moses. Paul was claiming that he legitimately worshiped the God of Israel. He was arguing that this amounted to a religious dispute rather than a political one, so that the Roman authorities need not concern themselves with it.

11 tn Grk "having." The participle ἔχων (echōn) has been translated as a finite verb and a new sentence begun at this point in the translation because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence.

12 sn This mention of Paul's hope sets up his appeal to the resurrection of the dead. At this point Paul was ignoring the internal Jewish dispute between the Pharisees (to which he had belonged) and the Sadducees (who denied there would be a resurrection of the dead).

13 tn Grk "a hope in God (which these [men] themselves accept too)." Because the antecedent of the relative pronoun "which" is somewhat unclear in English, the words "a hope" have been repeated at the beginning of the parenthesis for clarity.

14 tn Grk "that they"; the referent (these men, Paul's accusers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Or "the unjust."

sn This is the only mention of the resurrection of the unrighteous in Acts. The idea parallels the idea of Jesus as the judge of both the living and the dead (Acts 10:42; 17:31).

16 tn BDAG 329 s.v. ἐν 9.a, "ἐν τούτῳ πιστεύομεν this is the reason why we believe Jn 16:30; cp. Ac 24:16."

17 tn BDAG 224 s.v. διά 2.a, "διὰ παντός...always, continually, constantly...Ac 2:25 (Ps 15:8); 10:2; 24:16." However, the positioning of the adverb "always" in the English translation is difficult; the position used is one of the least awkward.

18 tn BDAG 125 s.v. ἀπρόσκοπος 1 has "ἀ. συνείδησις a clear conscience Ac 24:16."

19 tn Grk "men," but this is a generic use (Paul does not have only males in view).

20 tn BDAG 401 s.v. ἔτος has "δι᾽ ἐ. πλειόνων after several years 24:17."

21 tn Grk "to bring alms," but the term "alms" is not in common use today, so the closest modern equivalent, "gifts for the poor," is used instead.

22 tn Or "sacrifices." BDAG 887 s.v. προσφορά 1 has "προσφορὰς ποιεῖν have sacrifices made Ac 24:17," but this may be overly specific. It is not clear from the immediate context whether the offering of sacrificial animals (so BDAG assumes) or offerings of some other sort (such as financial gifts) are in view. The combination with ἐλεημοσύνας (eleēmosunas) in the preceding clause may suggest monetary offerings. Some have suggested this is an allusion to the payments made by Paul on behalf of the four other men mentioned in Acts 21:23-26, but the text here seems to suggest something Paul had planned to do before he came, while the decision to pay for the expenses of the men in 21:23ff. was made at the suggestion of the Jerusalem leadership after he arrived. In either case, Paul was portraying himself as a pious worshiper of his God.

23 sn Ritually purified. Paul's claim here is that he was honoring the holiness of God by being sensitive to issues of ritual purity. Not only was he not guilty of the charges against him, but he was thoroughly devout.

24 tn BDAG 458 s.v. θόρυβος 3.b has "μετὰ θορύβου...with a disturbance Ac 24:18."

25 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

26 tn BDAG 533 s.v. κατηγορέω 1 states, "nearly always as legal t.t.: bring charges in court." L&N 33.427 states for κατηγορέω (katēgoreō), "to bring serious charges or accusations against someone, with the possible connotation of a legal or court context – 'to accuse, to bring charges.'" sn Who should be here...and bring charges. Paul was asking, where were those who brought about his arrest and claimed he broke the law? His accusers were not really present. This subtle point raised the issue of injustice.

27 tn Grk "these [men] themselves."

28 tn Or "unrighteous act."

29 tn The words "me guilty of" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. L&N 88.23 has "αὐτοὶ οὗτοι εἰπάτωσαν τί εὗρον ἀδίκημα στάντος μου 'let these men themselves tell what unrighteous act they found me guilty of' Ac 24:20."

30 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

31 tn BDAG 433 s.v. ἤ 2.c has "οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ nothing else than...Ac 17:21. τί...ἤ what other...than...24:21."

32 tn Grk "one utterance."

stood before[1] them: 'I am on trial before you today concerning the resurrection of the dead.'"[2]

24:22 Then Felix,[3] who understood the facts[4] concerning the Way[5] more accurately,[6] adjourned their hearing,[7] saying, "When Lysias the commanding officer comes down, I will decide your case."[8] 24:23 He ordered the centurion[9] to guard Paul,[10] but to let him have some freedom,[11] and not to prevent any of his friends[12] from meeting his needs.[13]

Paul Speaks Repeatedly to Felix

24:24 Some days later, when Felix[14] arrived with his wife Drusilla,[15] who was Jewish, he sent for Paul and heard him speak[16] about faith in Christ Jesus.[17] 24:25 While Paul[18] was discussing[19] righteousness, self-control,[20] and the coming judgment, Felix[21] became[22] frightened and said, "Go away for now, and when I have an opportunity,[23] I will send for you." 24:26 At the same time he was also hoping that Paul would give him money,[24] and for this reason he sent for Paul[25] as often as possible[26] and talked[27] with him. 24:27 After two years[28] had passed, Porcius Festus[29] succeeded Felix,[30] and because he wanted to do the Jews a favor, Felix left Paul in prison.[31]

Paul Appeals to Caesar

25:1 Now[32] three days after Festus[33] arrived in the province, he went up to Jerusalem[34] from Caesarea.[35] 25:2 So the chief priests and the most

---

1 tn Cf. BDAG 327 s.v. ἐν 1.e, which has "before, in the presence of, etc."

2 sn The resurrection of the dead. Paul's point was, what crime was there in holding this religious belief?

3 sn See the note on Antonius Felix in 23:24.

4 tn Grk "the things."

5 tn That is, concerning Christianity.

6 tn BDAG 39 s.v. ἀκριβῶς has "Comp. ἀκριβέστερον more exactly...ἀ. ἐκτίθεσθαι explain more exactly Ac 18:26, cp. 23:15, 20; also more accurately...24:22." Felix knew more about the Christian movement than what the Jewish leaders had told him.

7 tn L&N 56.18 s.v. ἀναβάλλω has "to adjourn a court proceeding until a later time – 'to adjourn a hearing, to stop a hearing and put it off until later.'...'then Felix, who was well informed about the Way, adjourned their hearing' Ac 24:22."

8 tn BDAG 227 s.v. διαγινώσκω 2 states, "to make a judicial decision, decide/hear (a case)...τὰ καθ' ὑμᾶς decide your case Ac 24:22."

9 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

10 tn Grk "that he was to be guarded." The passive construction (τηρεῖσθαι, tēreisthai) has been converted to an active one in parallel with the following clauses, and the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn BDAG 77 s.v. ἄνεσις 1 states, "lit. relaxation of custodial control, some liberty, ἀ. ἔχειν have some freedom Ac 24:23."

12 tn Grk "any of his own" (this could also refer to relatives).

13 tn Grk "from serving him."

14 sn See the note on Antonius Felix in 23:24.

15 sn It is possible that Drusilla, being Jewish, was the source of Felix's knowledge about the new movement called Christianity. The youngest daughter of Herod Agrippa I and sister of Agrippa II, she would have been close to 20 years old at the time. She had married the king of a small region in Syria but divorced him at the age of 16 to marry Felix. This was her second marriage and Felix's third (Josephus, Ant. 19.9.1 [19.354], 20.7.2 [20.141-144]). As a member of Herod's family, she probably knew about the Way.

16 tn The word "speak" is implied; BDAG 32 s.v. ἀκούω 1.c has "ἤκουσεν αὐτοῦ περὶ τῆς...πίστεως he heard him speak about faith Ac 24:24."

17 tn Or "Messiah Jesus"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Or "speaking about."

20 tn Grk "and self-control." This καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

sn The topic of self-control was appropriate in view of the personal history of both Felix and Drusilla (see the note on "Drusilla" in the previous verse), and might well account for Felix's anxiety.

21 sn See the note on Felix in 23:26.

22 tn Grk "becoming." The participle γενόμενος (genomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

23 tn Or "when I find time." BDAG 639 s.v. μεταλαμβάνω 2 has "καιρὸν μ. have an opportunity = find time...Ac 24:25."

24 tn Grk "he was hoping that money would be given to him by Paul." To simplify the translation, the passive construction has been converted to an active one.

sn Would give him money. That is, would offer him a bribe in exchange for his release. Such practices were fairly common among Roman officials of the period (Josephus, Ant. 2.12.3 [2.272-274]).

25 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn "As often as possible" reflects the comparative form of the adjective πυκνός (puknos); see BDAG 897 s.v. πυκνός, which has "Neut. of the comp. πυκνότερον as adv. more often, more frequently and in an elative sense very often, quite frequently...also as often as possible...Ac 24:26."

27 tn On this term, which could mean "conferred with him," see BDAG 705 s.v. ὁμιλέω.

28 tn Grk "After a two-year period."

29 sn Porcius Festus was the procurator of Palestine who succeeded Felix; neither the beginning nor the end of his rule (at his death) can be determined with certainty, although he appears to have died in office after about two years. Nero recalled Felix in A.D. 57 or 58, and Festus was appointed to his vacant office in A.D. 57, 58, or 59. According to Josephus (Ant. 20.8.9-10 [20.182-188]; J. W. 2.14.1 [2.271-272]), his administration was better than that of his predecessor Felix or his successor Albinus, but Luke in Acts portrays him in a less favorable light: He was willing to sacrifice Paul to court Jewish favor by taking him to Jerusalem for trial (v. 9), regardless of Paul's guilt or innocence. The one characteristic for which Festus was noted is that he dealt harshly with those who disturbed the peace.

30 tn Grk "Felix received as successor Porcius Festus."

sn See the note on Felix in 23:26.

31 tn Grk "left Paul imprisoned."

sn Felix left Paul in prison. Luke makes the point that politics got in the way of justice here; keeping Paul in prison was a political favor to the Jews.

32 tn BDAG 736-37 s.v. οὖν 2.b states, "οὖν serves to indicate a transition to someth. new...now, then, well...Ac 25:1."

prominent men[1] of the Jews brought formal charges[2] against Paul to him. 25:3 Requesting him to do them a favor against Paul,[3] they urged Festus[4] to summon him to Jerusalem, planning an ambush[5] to kill him along the way. 25:4 Then Festus[6] replied that Paul was being kept at Caesarea,[7] and he himself intended to go there[8] shortly. 25:5 "So," he said, "let your leaders[9] go down there[10] with me, and if this man has done anything wrong,[11] they may bring charges[12] against him."

25:6 After Festus[13] had stayed[14] not more than eight or ten days among them, he went down to Caesarea,[15] and the next day he sat[16] on the judgment seat[17] and ordered Paul to be brought. 25:7 When he arrived, the Jews who had come down from Jerusalem stood around him,[18] bringing many serious[19] charges that they were not able to prove.[20] 25:8 Paul said in his defense,[21] "I have committed no offense[22] against the Jewish law[23] or against the temple or against Caesar."[24] 25:9 But Festus,[25] wanting to do the Jews a favor, asked Paul, "Are you willing to go up to Jerusalem and be tried[26] before me there on these charges?"[27] 25:10 Paul replied,[28] "I am standing before Caesar's[29] judgment seat,[30] where I should be tried.[31] I have

1 tn BDAG 893-94 s.v. πρῶτος 2.a.β has "οἱ πρῶτοι the most prominent men, the leading men w. gen. of the place... or of a group...οἱ πρ. τοῦ λαοῦ...Lk 19:47; cp. Ac 25:2; 28:17."

2 tn BDAG 326 s.v. ἐμφανίζω 3 has "ἐ. τινὶ κατά τινος bring formal charges against someone...Ac 24:1; 25:2."

sn Note how quickly the Jewish leadership went after Paul: They brought formal charges against him within three days of Festus' arrival in the province.

3 tn Grk "Requesting a favor against him"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation, the understood direct object of "requesting" has been supplied, and the phrase "to do them" supplied for clarity.

4 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Festus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The words "they urged him" are in v. 2 in the Greek text.

5 sn Planning an ambush. The Jewish leadership had not forgotten the original plan of several years ago (see 23:16). They did not trust the Roman legal process, but preferred to take matters into their own hands.

6 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

7 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

8 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

9 tn Grk "let those who are influential among you" (i.e., the powerful).

10 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

11 tn Grk "and if there is anything wrong with this man," but this could be misunderstood in English to mean a moral or physical defect, while the issue in context is the commission of some crime, something legally improper (BDAG 149 s.v. ἄτοπος 2).

12 tn BDAG 533 s.v. κατηγορέω 1 states, "nearly always as legal t.t.: bring charges in court." L&N 33.427 states for κατηγορέω, "to bring serious charges or accusations against someone, with the possible connotation of a legal or court context – 'to accuse, to bring charges.'"

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Festus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "Having stayed." The participle διατρίψας (diatripsas) has been taken temporally.

15 sn Caesarea was a city on the coast of Palestine south of Mount Carmel (not Caesarea Philippi). See the note on Caesarea in Acts 10:1.

map For location see Map2-C1; Map4-B3; Map5-F2; Map7-A1; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

16 tn Grk "sitting down...he ordered." The participle καθίσας (kathisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

17 tn Although BDAG 175 s.v. βῆμα 3 gives the meaning "tribunal" for this verse, and a number of modern translations use similar terms ("court," NIV; "tribunal," NRSV), since the bēma was a standard feature in Greco-Roman cities of the time, there is no need for an alternative translation here.

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a familiar item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city.

18 tn BDAG 801 s.v. περιίστημι 1.a has "περιέστησαν αὐτὸν οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι the Judeans stood around him 25:7."

19 tn Grk "many and serious." The term βαρύς (barus) refers to weighty or serious charges (BDAG 167 s.v. 1).

20 tn The term ἀποδείκνυμι (apodeiknumi) in a legal context refers to legal proof (4 Macc 1:8; BDAG 108 s.v. 3).

21 tn Grk "Paul saying in his defense"; the participle ἀπολογουμένου (apologoumenou) could be taken temporally ("when Paul said..."), but due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the participle was translated as a finite verb and a new sentence begun here in the translation. BDAG 116-17 s.v. ἀπολογέομαι has "W. ὅτι foll. τοῦ Παύλου ἀπολογουμένου, ὅτι when Paul said in his defense (direct quot. foll.) Ac 25:8."

22 tn Grk "I have sinned...in nothing."

23 tn Grk "against the law of the Jews." Here τῶν Ἰουδαίων has been translated as an attributive genitive.

sn The Jewish law refers to the law of Moses.

24 tn Or "against the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

sn Paul's threefold claim to be innocent with respect to the law...the temple and Caesar argues that he has not disturbed the peace at any level. This was the standard charge made against early Christians (Luke 23:2; Acts 17:6-7). The charges here are emphatically denied, with the Greek conjunction oute repeated before each charge.

25 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

26 tn Or "stand trial."

27 tn Grk "concerning these things."

28 tn Grk "said."

29 tn Or "before the emperor's" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

30 tn Although BDAG 175 s.v. βῆμα 3 gives the meaning "tribunal" for this verse, and a number of modern translations use similar terms ("court," NIV; "tribunal," NRSV), since the bema was a standard feature in Greco-Roman cities of the time, there is no need for an alternative translation here. Here of course Paul's reference to "Caesar's judgment seat" is a form of metonymy; since Festus is Caesar's representative, Festus' judgment seat represents Caesar's own.

done nothing wrong[1] to the Jews, as you also know very well.[2] 25:11 If then I am in the wrong[3] and have done anything that deserves death, I am not trying to escape dying,[4] but if not one of their charges against me is true,[5] no one can hand me over to them.[6] I appeal to Caesar!"[7] 25:12 Then, after conferring with his council,[8] Festus[9] replied, "You have appealed to Caesar;[10] to Caesar[11] you will go!"[12]

Festus Asks King Agrippa for Advice

25:13 After several days had passed, King Agrippa[13] and Bernice arrived at Caesarea[14] to pay their respects[15] to Festus.[16] 25:14 While[17] they were staying there many days, Festus[18] explained Paul's case to the king to get his opinion,[19] saying, "There is a man left here as a prisoner by Felix. 25:15 When I was in Jerusalem,[20] the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed[21] me about him,[22] asking for a sentence of condemnation[23] against him. 25:16 I answered them[24] that it was not the custom of the Romans to hand over anyone[25] before the accused had met his accusers face to face[26] and had been given[27] an opportunity to make a defense against the accusation.[28] 25:17 So after they came back here with me,[29] I did not postpone the case,[30] but the next day I sat[31] on the judgment seat[32] and

1 sn "I have done nothing wrong." Here is yet another declaration of total innocence on Paul's part.

2 tn BDAG 506 s.v. καλῶς 7 states, "comp. κάλλιον (for the superl., as Galen, Protr. 8 p. 24, 19J.=p. 10, 31 Kaibel; s. B-D-F §244, 2) ὡς καί σὺ κ. ἐπιγινώσκεις as also you know very well Ac 25:10."

3 tn BDAG 20 s.v. ἀδικέω 1.b has "intr. be in the wrong (Ex 2:13) εἰ ἀδικῶ Ac 25:11."

4 tn BDAG 764 s.v. παραιτέομαι 2.b.β, "οὐ παραιτοῦμαι τὸ ἀποθανεῖν I am not trying to escape death Ac 25:11 (cp. Jos., Vi. 141)." To avoid redundancy in the translation, the English gerund "dying" is used to translate the Greek infinitive ἀποθανεῖν (apothanein).

5 tn Or "but if there is nothing to their charges against me." Both "if" clauses in this verse are first class conditions. Paul stated the options without prejudice, assuming in turn the reality of each for the sake of the argument.

6 sn That is, no one can hand me over to them lawfully. Paul was aware of the dangers of a return to Jerusalem.

7 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

sn The appeal to Caesar was known as the provocatio ad Caesarem. It was a Roman citizen's right to ask for a direct judgment by the emperor (Pliny the Younger, Letters 10.96). It was one of the oldest rights of Roman citizens.

8 tn That is, with his advisers.

9 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

10 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

11 tn Or "to the emperor."

12 sn "To Caesar you will go!" In all probability Festus was pleased to send Paul on to Rome and get this political problem out of his court.

13 sn King Agrippa was Herod Agrippa II (A.D. 27-92/93), son of Herod Agrippa I (see Acts 12:1). He ruled over parts of Palestine from A.D. 53 until his death. His sister Bernice was widowed when her second husband, Herod King of Chalcis, died in A.D. 48. From then she lived with her brother. In an attempt to quiet rumors of an incestuous relationship between them, she resolved to marry Polemo of Cilicia, but she soon left him and returned to Herod Agrippa II. Their incestuous relationship became the gossip of Rome according to Josephus (Ant. 20.7.3 [20.145-147]). The visit of Agrippa and Bernice gave Festus the opportunity to get some internal Jewish advice. Herod Agrippa II was a trusted adviser because he was known to be very loyal to Rome (Josephus, J. W. 2.16.4 [2.345-401]).

16 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

17 tn BDAG 1105-6 s.v. ὡς 8.b states, "w. pres. or impf. while, when, as long as...Ac 1:10; 7:23; 9:23; 10:17; 13:25; 19:9; 21:27; 25:14."

18 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

19 tn Grk "Festus laid Paul's case before the king for consideration." BDAG 74 s.v. ἀνατίθημι 2 states, "otherw. only mid. to lay someth. before someone for consideration, declare, communicate, refer w. the added idea that the pers. to whom a thing is ref. is asked for his opinion lay someth. before someone for consideration...Ac 25:14."

21 tn BDAG 326 s.v. ἐμφανίζω 3 has "to convey a formal report about a judicial matter, present evidence, bring charges...ἐ. περί τινος concerning someone 25:15."

22 tn Grk "about whom." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been replaced with a personal pronoun ("him") and a new sentence started in the translation at the beginning of v. 15 (where the phrase περὶ οὗ [peri hou] occurs in the Greek text).

23 tn BDAG 516 s.v. καταδίκη states, "condemnation, sentence of condemnation, conviction, guilty verdict...αἰτεῖσθαι κατά τινος κ. ask for a conviction of someone Ac 25:15."

24 tn Grk "to whom I answered." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been replaced with a personal pronoun ("them") and a new sentence started in the translation at the beginning of v. 16.

sn "I answered them." In the answer that follows, Festus is portrayed in a more positive light, being sensitive to justice and Roman law.

25 tn Grk "any man." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos).

26 tn Or "has met his accusers in person."

27 tn Grk "and receives."

28 tn Or "indictment" (a legal technical term). BDAG 273-74 s.v. ἔγκλημα 1 states, "legal t.t....ἀπολογία περὶ τοῦ ἐ. defense against the accusation Ac 25:16." L&N 56.6 defines ἔγκλημα (enklēma) as "(a technical, legal term) a formal indictment or accusation brought against someone – 'indictment, accusation, case.' ...'and might receive an opportunity for a defense against the indictment' Ac 25:16."

29 tn BDAG 969-70 s.v. συνέρχομαι 2 states, "συνελθόντων ἐνθάδε prob. means (because of συνκαταβάντες 25:5) they came back here with (me) 25:17."

30 tn BDAG 59 s.v. ἀναβολή states, "'delay'...legal t.t. postponement...ἀ. μηδεμίαν ποιησάμενος I did not postpone the matter Ac 25:17." "Case" has been supplied instead of "matter" since it is more specific to the context. The participle ποιησάμενος (poiēsamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

31 tn Grk "sitting...I ordered." The participle καθίσας (kathisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

32 tn Although BDAG 175 s.v. βῆμα 3 gives the meaning "tribunal" for this verse, and a number of modern translations use similar terms ("court," NIV; "tribunal," NRSV), since the bema was a standard feature in Greco-Roman cities of the time, there is no need for an alternative translation here.

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform ordered the man to be brought. 25:18 When his accusers stood up, they did not charge[1] him with any of the evil deeds I had suspected.[2] 25:19 Rather they had several points of disagreement[3] with him about their own religion[4] and about a man named Jesus[5] who was dead, whom Paul claimed[6] to be alive. 25:20 Because I was at a loss[7] how I could investigate these matters,[8] I asked if he were willing to go to Jerusalem and be tried[9] there on these charges.[10] 25:21 But when Paul appealed to be kept in custody for the decision of His Majesty the Emperor,[11] I ordered him to be kept under guard until I could send him to Caesar."[12] 25:22 Agrippa[13] said to Festus,[14] "I would also like to hear the man myself." "Tomorrow," he replied,[15] "you will hear him."

Paul Before King Agrippa and Bernice

25:23 So the next day Agrippa[16] and Bernice came with great pomp[17] and entered the audience hall,[18] along with the senior military officers[19] and the prominent men of the city. When Festus[20] gave the order,[21] Paul was brought in. 25:24 Then Festus[22] said, "King Agrippa,[23] and all you who are present here with us, you see this man about whom the entire Jewish populace[24] petitioned[25] me both in Jerusalem[26] and here,[27] shouting loudly[28] that he ought not to live any longer. 25:25 But I found that he had done nothing that deserved death,[29] and when he appealed[30] to His Majesty the Emperor,[31] I decided to send him.[32] 25:26 But I have nothing definite[33] to write to my lord[34] about him.[35] Therefore I have brought him before you all, and especially before you, King Agrippa,[36] so that after this mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a familiar item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city.

[1] tn Grk "they brought no charge of any of the evil deeds." BDAG 31 s.v. αἰτία 3.b has "αἰτίαν φέρειν...bring an accusation Ac 25:18." Since κατήγοροι (katēgoroi, "accusers") in the previous clause is somewhat redundant with this, "charge" was used instead.

[2] tn Or "I was expecting."

[3] tn Grk "several controversial issues." BDAG 428 s.v. ζήτημα states, "in our lit. only in Ac, w. the mng. it still has in Mod. Gk. (controversial) question, issue, argument...Ac 15:2; 26:3. ζ. περί τινος questions about someth....18:15; 25:19."

[4] tn On this term see BDAG 216 s.v. δεισιδαιμονία 2. It is a broad term for religion.

sn About their own religion. Festus made it clear that in his view as a neutral figure (and as one Luke had noted was disposed to help the Jews), he saw no guilt in Paul. The issue was a simple religious dispute.

[5] tn Grk "a certain Jesus."

[6] tn Or "asserted."

[7] tn Or "Because I was undecided." Grk "Being at a loss." The participle ἀπορούμενος (aporoumenos) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[8] tn L&N 27.34 states, "ἀπορούμενος δὲ ἐγὼ τὴν περὶ τούτων ζήτησιν 'I was undecided about how I could get information on these matters' Ac 25:20. The clause 'about how I could get information on these matters' may also be rendered as 'about how I should try to find out about these matters' or 'about how I could learn about these matters.'"

[9] tn Or "stand trial."

[10] tn Grk "on these things."

[11] tn A designation of the Roman emperor (in this case, Nero). BDAG 917 s.v. σεβαστός states, "ὁ Σεβαστός His Majesty the Emperor Ac 25:21, 25 (of Nero)." It was a translation into Greek of the Latin "Augustus."

[12] tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

[13] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

[14] sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

[15] tn Grk "said."

[16] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

[17] tn Or "great pageantry" (BDAG 1049 s.v. φαντασία; the term is a NT hapax legomenon).

sn Agrippa and Bernice came with great pomp. The "royals" were getting their look at Paul. Everyone who was anyone would have been there.

[18] tn Or "auditorium." "Auditorium" may suggest to the modern English reader a theater where performances are held. Here it is the large hall where a king or governor would hold audiences. Paul once spoke of himself as a "spectacle" to the world (1 Cor 4:8-13).

[19] tn Grk "the chiliarchs" (officers in command of a thousand soldiers). In Greek the term χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos) literally described the "commander of a thousand," but it was used as the standard translation for the Latin tribunus militum or tribunus militare, the military tribune who commanded a cohort of 600 men.

[20] sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

[21] tn Grk "and Festus ordering, Paul was brought in." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun in the translation, and καί (kai) has not been translated. The participle κελεύσαντος (keleusantos) has been taken temporally.

[22] sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

[23] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

[24] tn Probably best understood as rhetorical hyperbole. BDAG 825 s.v. πλῆθος 2.b.γ states, "people, populace, population...τὸ πλῆθος the populace...ἅπαν τὸ πλ. τῶν Ἰουδαίων Ac 25:24." However, the actions of the leadership are seen by Luke as representing the actions of the entire nation, so the remark is not inaccurate.

[25] tn Or "appealed to" (BDAG 341 s.v. ἐντυγχάνω 1.a).

[26] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[27] sn Here means "here in Caesarea."

[28] tn Or "screaming."

[29] sn He had done nothing that deserved death. Festus' opinion of Paul's guilt is like Pilate's of Jesus (Luke 23:4, 14, 22).

[30] tn The participle ἐπικαλεσαμένου (epikalesamenou) has been taken temporally. It could also be translated as causal: "and because he appealed..."

[31] tn A designation of the Roman emperor (in this case, Nero). BDAG 917 s.v. σεβαστός states, "ὁ Σεβαστός His Majesty the Emperor Ac 25:21, 25 (of Nero)."

[32] tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

[33] sn There is irony here. How can Festus write anything definite about Paul, if he is guilty of nothing.

[34] sn To my lord means "to His Majesty the Emperor."

[35] tn Grk "about whom I have nothing definite..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced with a personal pronoun ("him") and a new sentence begun in the translation at the beginning of v. 26.

[36] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

preliminary hearing[1] I may have something to write. 25:27 For it seems unreasonable to me to send a prisoner without clearly indicating[2] the charges against him."

Paul Offers His Defense

26:1 So Agrippa[3] said to Paul, "You have permission[4] to speak for yourself." Then Paul held out his hand[5] and began his defense:[6]

26:2 "Regarding all the things I have been accused of by the Jews, King Agrippa,[7] I consider myself fortunate that I am about to make my defense before you today, 26:3 because you are especially[8] familiar with all the customs and controversial issues[9] of the Jews. Therefore I ask[10] you to listen to me patiently. 26:4 Now all the Jews know the way I lived[11] from my youth, spending my life from the beginning among my own people[12] and in Jerusalem.[13] 26:5 They know,[14] because they have known[15] me from time past,[16] if they are willing to testify, that according to the strictest party[17] of our religion, I lived as a Pharisee.[18] 26:6 And now I stand here on trial[19] because of my hope in the promise made by God to our ancestors,[20] 26:7 a promise[21] that our twelve tribes hope to attain as they earnestly serve God[22] night and day. Concerning this hope the Jews are accusing me,[23] Your Majesty![24] 26:8 Why do you people[25] think[26] it is unbelievable[27] that[28] God raises the dead? 26:9 Of course,[29] I myself was convinced[30] that it was necessary to do many things hostile to the name of Jesus the Nazarene. 26:10 And that is what I did in Jerusalem: Not only did I lock up many of the saints in prisons by the authority I received[31] from the chief priests, but I also cast my vote[32] against them when they were sentenced to death.[33] 26:11 I punished[34] them often in all the

[1] tn Or "investigation." BDAG 66 s.v. ἀνάκρισις has "a judicial hearing, investigation, hearing, esp. preliminary hearing...τῆς ἀ. γενομένης Ac 25:26." This is technical legal language.

[2] tn L&N 33.153 s.v. σημαίνω, "to cause something to be both specific and clear – 'to indicate clearly, to make clear'... 'for it seems unreasonable to me to send a prisoner without clearly indicating the charges against him' Ac 25:27."

sn Without clearly indicating the charges against him. Again the point is made by Festus himself that there is difficulty even in articulating a charge against Paul.

[3] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

[4] tn Grk "It is permitted for you."

[5] tn Or "extended his hand" (a speaker's gesture).

[6] tn Or "and began to speak in his own defense."

[7] sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

[8] tn BDAG 613 s.v. μάλιστα 1 states, "μ. γνώστην ὄντα σε since you are outstandingly familiar Ac 26:3."

[9] tn Grk "several controversial issues." BDAG 428 s.v. ζήτημα states, "in our lit. only in Ac, w. the mng. it still has in Mod. Gk. (controversial) question, issue, argument...Ac 15:2; 26:3. ζ. περί τινος questions about someth....18:15; 25:19."

[10] tn BDAG 218 s.v. δέομαι states, "In our lit. only w. the mng. to ask for something pleadingly, ask, request," and then in section a.α states, "w. inf. foll....Ac 26:3."

[11] tn Grk "my manner of life."

[12] tn Or "nation."

[13] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[14] tn These words are repeated from v. 4 ("all the Jews know"). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, it was necessary to begin a new sentence at the beginning of v. 5 in the translation, but for this to make sense, the main verb ἴσασι (hisasi) has to be repeated to connect with the ὅτι (hoti) clause (indirect discourse) in v. 5.

[15] tn Grk "having known me from time past." The participle προγινώσκοντες (proginōskontes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[16] tn BDAG 866 s.v. προγινώσκω 2 has "Know from time past...προγινώσκοντές με ἄνωθεν Ac 26:5." L&N 28.6 states, "'they have already known me beforehand, if they are willing to testify' Ac 26:5."

[17] tn That is, strictest religious party. "Party" alone is used in the translation because "the strictest religious party of our religion" would be redundant.

[18] sn See the note on Pharisee in 5:34.

[19] tn BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 5.a.α has "κρίνεσθαι ἐπί τινι be on trial because of a thing Ac 26:6."

[20] tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

[21] tn Grk "to which [promise] our twelve tribes..." The antecedent of the relative pronoun (the promise in v. 6) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Or "earnestly worship." The object of this service, God, is omitted but implied: BDAG 587 s.v. λατρεύω states, "Without the dat. of the one to whom service is given: ἐν ἐκτενείᾳ νύκτα κ. ἡμέραν λ. serve (God) earnestly night and day Ac 26:7." Although clear from the context in Greek, "God" must be supplied as the recipient of the service for the modern English reader.

[23] tn Grk "I am being accused by the Jews." The passive construction was simplified by converting it to an active one in the translation.

[24] tn Grk "O King!"

[25] tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate that the second person pronoun ("you") is plural (others in addition to King Agrippa are being addressed).

[26] tn BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 3 states, "τί ἄπιστον κρίνεται παρ᾽ ὑμῖν; why do you think it is incredible? Ac 26:8." The passive construction ("why is it thought unbelievable...") has been converted to an active one to simplify the translation.

[27] tn Or "incredible." BDAG 103 s.v. ἄπιστος 1 states, "unbelievable, incredible...τί ἄπιστον κρίνεται παρ᾽ ὑμῖν...; why does it seem incredible to you? Ac 26:8."

[28] tn Grk "if." The first-class conditional construction, which assumes reality for the sake of argument, has been translated as indirect discourse.

[29] tn BDAG 737 s.v. οὖν 3 states, "It has been proposed that some traces of older Gk. usage in which οὖν is emphatic, = certainly, really, to be sure etc. (s. L-S-J-M s.v. 1) remain in the pap...and in the NT...indeed, of course Ac 26:9."

[30] tn Grk "I thought to myself." BDAG 255 s.v. δοκέω 2.a has "ἔδοξα ἐμαυτῷ δεῖν πρᾶξαι = Lat. mihi videbar I was convinced that it was necessary to do Ac 26:9."

[31] tn Grk "by receiving authority." The participle λαβών (labōn) has been taken instrumentally.

[32] tn Grk "cast down a pebble against them." L&N 30.103 states, "(an idiom, Grk 'to bring a pebble against someone,' a reference to a white or black pebble used in voting for or against someone) to make known one's choice against someone – 'to vote against.' ...'when they were sentenced to death, I also voted against them' Ac 26:10."

[33] tn Grk "when they were being executed," but the context supports the sentencing rather than the execution itself (cf. L&N 30.103).

[34] tn Grk "and punishing...I tried." The participle τιμωρῶν (timōrōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

synagogues[1] and tried to force[2] them to blaspheme. Because I was so furiously enraged[3] at them, I went to persecute[4] them even in foreign cities.

26:12 "While doing this very thing,[5] as I was going[6] to Damascus with authority and complete power[7] from the chief priests, 26:13 about noon along the road, Your Majesty,[8] I saw a light from heaven,[9] brighter than the sun, shining everywhere around[10] me and those traveling with me. 26:14 When we had all fallen to the ground, I heard a voice saying to me in Aramaic,[11] 'Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me? You are hurting yourself[12] by kicking against the goads.'[13] 26:15 So I said, 'Who are you, Lord?' And the Lord replied,[14] 'I am Jesus whom you are persecuting. 26:16 But get up and stand on your feet, for I have appeared to you for this reason, to designate you in advance[15] as a servant and witness[16] to the things[17] you have seen[18] and to the things in which I will appear to you. 26:17 I will rescue[19] you from your own people[20] and from the Gentiles, to whom[21] I am sending you 26:18 to open their eyes so that they turn[22] from darkness to light and from the power[23] of Satan to God, so that they may receive forgiveness of sins and a share[24] among those who are sanctified by faith in me.'

26:19 "Therefore, King Agrippa,[25] I was not disobedient[26] to the heavenly[27] vision, 26:20 but I declared to those in Damascus first, and then to those in Jerusalem and in all Judea,[28] and to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God,[29] performing deeds consistent with[30]

1 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:9.

2 tn The imperfect verb ἠνάγκαζον (ēnankazon) has been translated as a conative imperfect (so BDAG 60 s.v. ἀναγκάζω 1, which has "ἠνάγκαζον βλασφημεῖν I tried to force them to blaspheme Ac 26:11").

3 tn Or "was so insanely angry with them." BDAG 322 s.v. ἐμμαίνομαι states, "to be filled with such anger that one appears to be mad, be enraged...περισσῶς ἐμμαινόμενος αὐτοῖς being furiously enraged at them Ac 26:11"; L&N 88.182 s.v. ἐμμαίνομαι, "to be so furiously angry with someone as to be almost out of one's mind – 'to be enraged, to be infuriated, to be insanely angry' ...'I was so infuriated with them that I even went to foreign cities to persecute them' Ac 26:11."

4 tn Or "I pursued them even as far as foreign cities."

5 tn Grk "in which [activity]." Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 12 in the translation. The referent of the relative pronoun ("which") was specified as "this very thing" for clarity.

6 tn Grk "going." The participle πορευόμενος (poreuomenos) has been taken temporally.

7 tn L&N 37.40 s.v. ἐπιτροπή states, "the full authority to carry out an assignment or commission – 'authority, complete power.' πορευόμενος εἰς τὴν Δαμασκὸν μετ' ἐξουσίας καὶ ἐπιτροπῆς τῶν ἀρχιερέων 'going to Damascus with authority and complete power from the high priests' Ac 26:12. In Ac 26:12 the combination of ἐξουσία and ἐπιτροπή serves to reinforce the sense of complete authority."

8 tn Grk "O King."

9 tn Or "from the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

10 tn The word "everywhere" has been supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning of περιλάμψαν (perilampsan). Otherwise the modern reader might think that each of the individuals were encircled by lights or halos. See also Acts 9:7; 22:6, 9.

11 tn Grk "in the Hebrew language." See Acts 22:7 and 9:4.

12 tn Grk "It is hard for you."

13 tn "Goads" are pointed sticks used to direct a draft animal (an idiom for stubborn resistance). See BDAG 539-40 s.v. κέντρον 2.

sn Sayings which contain the imagery used here (kicking against the goads) were also found in Greek writings; see Pindar, Pythians 2.94-96; Euripides, Bacchae 795.

14 tn Grk "said."

15 tn L&N 30.89 has "'to choose in advance, to select beforehand, to designate in advance.'"

16 sn As a servant and witness. The commission is similar to Acts 1:8 and Luke 1:2. Paul was now an "eyewitness" of the Lord.

17 tn BDAG 719 s.v. ὁράω A.1.b states, "W. attraction of the relative ὧν = τούτων ἅ Lk 9:36; Ac 22:15. The attraction may be due to colloq. breviloquence in μάρτυρα ὧν τε εἶδες με ὧν τε ὀφθήσομαί σοι a witness to the things in which you saw me and to those in which I shall appear to you Ac 26:16b."

18 tc ‡ Some MSS read "of the things in which you have seen me." The accusative object με (me, "me") is found after εἶδές (eides) in B C*[vid] 614 945 1175 1505 1739 1891 2464 pc sy sa; it is lacking in 𝔓[74] ℵ A C[2] E Ψ 096 𝔐 latt bo. The external evidence is relatively evenly divided, though there is a slight preference for the omission. NA[27] includes the word in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

19 tn Grk "rescuing." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the participle ἐξαιρούμενος (exairoumenos) has been translated as a finite verb and a new sentence started in the translation at the beginning of v. 17.

20 tn That is, from the Jewish people. Grk "the people"; the words "your own" have been supplied to clarify the meaning.

21 tn The antecedent of the relative pronoun is probably both the Jews ("your own people") and the Gentiles, indicating the comprehensive commission Paul received.

22 sn To open their eyes so that they turn... Here is Luke's most comprehensive report of Paul's divine calling. His role was to call humanity to change their position before God and experience God's forgiveness as a part of God's family. The image of turning is a key one in the NT: Luke 1:79; Rom 2:19; 13:12; 2 Cor 4:6; 6:14; Eph 5:8; Col 1:12; 1 Thess 5:5. See also Luke 1:77-79; 3:3; 24:47.

23 tn BDAG 352-53 s.v. ἐξουσία 2 states, "Also of Satan's power Ac 26:18." It is also possible to translate this "the domain of Satan" (cf. BDAG 353 s.v. 6)

24 tn Or "and an inheritance."

25 sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

26 sn I was not disobedient. Paul's defense is that he merely obeyed the risen Jesus. He was arrested for obeying heavenly direction and preaching the opportunity to turn to God.

27 tn According to L&N 1.5, "In Ac 26:19 the adjective οὐράνιος could be interpreted as being related simply to the meaning of οὐρανός[a] 'sky,' but it seems preferable to regard οὐράνιος in this context as meaning simply 'from heaven' or 'heavenly.'"

28 tn BDAG 1093-94 s.v. χώρα 2.b states, "of the provincial name (1 Macc 8:3) ἡ χώρα τῆς Ἰουδαίας Ac 26:20."

29 sn That they should repent and turn to God. This is the shortest summary of Paul's message that he preached.

30 tn BDAG 93 s.v. ἄξιος 1.b, "καρποὶ ἄ. τῆς μετανοίας fruits in keeping with your repentance...Lk 3:8; Mt 3:8. For this ἄ. τῆς μετανοίας ἔργα Ac 26:20." Note how Paul preached the gospel offer and the issue of response together, side by side.

repentance. 26:21 For this reason the Jews seized me in the temple courts[1] and were trying to kill me. 26:22 I have experienced[2] help from God to this day, and so I stand testifying to both small and great, saying nothing except[3] what the prophets and Moses said[4] was going to happen: 26:23 that[5] the Christ[6] was to suffer and be the first to rise from the dead, to proclaim light both to our people[7] and to the Gentiles."[8]

26:24 As Paul[9] was saying these things in his defense, Festus[10] exclaimed loudly, "You have lost your mind,[11] Paul! Your great learning is driving you insane!" 26:25 But Paul replied,[12] "I have not lost my mind, most excellent Festus,[13] but am speaking[14] true and rational[15] words. 26:26 For the king knows about these things, and I am speaking freely[16] to him,[17] because I cannot believe[18] that any of these things has escaped his notice,[19] for this was not done in a corner.[20] 26:27 Do you believe the prophets,[21] King Agrippa?[22] I know that you believe." 26:28 Agrippa[23] said to Paul, "In such a short time are you persuading me to become a Christian?"[24] 26:29 Paul replied, "I pray to God that whether in a short or a long time[25] not only you but also all those who are listening to me today could become such as I am, except for these chains."[26]

26:30 So the king got up, and with him the governor and Bernice and those sitting with them, 26:31 and as they were leaving they said to one another,[27] "This man is not doing anything deserving[28] death or imprisonment." 26:32 Agrippa[29] said to Festus,[30] "This man could have been released[31] if he had not appealed to Caesar."[32]

1 tn Grk "in the temple." This is actually a reference to the courts surrounding the temple proper, and has been translated accordingly.

2 tn Grk "So experiencing...I stand." The participle τυχών (tuchōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

3 tn BDAG 311 s.v. ἐκτός 3.b, "functions as prep. w. gen. οὐδὲν ἐ. ὧν nothing except what (cf. 1 Ch 29:3; 2 Ch 17:19; TestNapht. 6:2) Ac 26:22."

4 sn What the prophets and Moses said. Paul argued that his message reflected the hope of the Jewish scriptures.

5 tn BDAG 277-78 s.v. εἰ 2 has "marker of an indirect question as content, that...Sim. also (Procop. Soph., Ep. 123 χάριν ἔχειν εἰ = that) μαρτυρόμενος...εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστός testifying...that the Christ was to suffer...Ac 26:23."

6 tn Or "the Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:31.

7 tn That is, to the Jewish people. Grk "the people"; the word "our" has been supplied to clarify the meaning.

8 sn Note how the context of Paul's gospel message about Jesus, resurrection, and light both to Jews and to the Gentiles is rooted in the prophetic message of the OT scriptures. Paul was guilty of following God's call and preaching the scriptural hope.

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

11 tn On the term translated "lost your mind" see BDAG 610 s.v. μαίνομαι, which has "you're out of your mind, you're raving, said to one whose enthusiasm seems to have outrun better judgment 26:24."

sn The expression "You have lost your mind" would be said to someone who speaks incredible things, in the opinion of the hearer. Paul's mention of the resurrection (v. 23) was probably what prompted Festus to say this.

12 tn Grk "said."

13 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

14 tn Or "declaring." BDAG 125 s.v. ἀποφθέγγομαι states, "speak out, declare boldly or loudly...τὴ: σωφροσύνης ῥήματα Ac 26:25."

15 tn BDAG 987 s.v. σωφροσύνη 1 has "gener. soundness of mind, reasonableness, rationality...ἀληθείας καὶ σωφροσύνης ῥήματα true and rational words (opp. μαίνομαι) Ac 26:25."

16 tn BDAG 782 s.v. παρρησιάζομαι 1 states, "speak freely, openly, fearlessly...likew. in the ptc. w. a verb of saying foll.... παρρησιασάμενοι εἶπαν 13:46. – 26:26." This could refer to boldness in speaking here.

17 tn Grk "to whom I am speaking freely." The relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by the personal pronoun ("him") to simplify the translation.

18 tn Grk "I cannot convince myself." BDAG 792 s.v. πείθω 3.a states, "οὐ πείθομαι w. acc. and inf. I cannot believe Ac 26:26" (see also BDAG 586 s.v. λανθάνω).

19 tn BDAG 586 s.v. λανθάνω states, "λανθάνειν αὐτὸν τούτων οὐ πείθομαι οὐθέν I cannot bring myself to believe that any of these things has escaped his notice Ac 26:26."

20 tn This term refers to a hidden corner (BDAG 209 s.v. γωνία). Paul's point is that these events to which he refers were not done in a secret, hidden place, tucked away outside of view. They were done in public for all the world to see.

21 sn "Do you believe the prophets?" Note how Paul made the issue believing the OT prophets and God's promise which God fulfilled in Christ. He was pushing King Agrippa toward a decision not for or against Paul's guilt of any crime, but concerning Paul's message.

22 sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

23 sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

24 tn Or "In a short time you will make me a Christian." On the difficulty of the precise nuances of Agrippa's reply in this passage, see BDAG 791 s.v. πείθω 1.b. The idiom is like 1 Kgs 21:7 LXX. The point is that Paul was trying to persuade Agrippa to accept his message. If Agrippa had let Paul persuade him, he would have converted to Christianity.

sn The question "In such a short time are you persuading me to become a Christian?" was probably a ploy on Agrippa's part to deflect Paul from his call for a decision. Note also how the tables have turned: Agrippa was brought in to hear Paul's defense, and now ends up defending himself. The questioner is now being questioned.

25 tn BDAG 703 s.v. ὀλίγος 2.b.β has "καὶ ἐν ὀλ. καὶ ἐν μεγάλῳ whether in a short or a long time vs. 29 (cf. B-D-F §195; GWhitaker, The Words of Agrippa to St. Paul: JTS 15, 1914, 82f; AFridrichsen, SymbOsl 14, '35, 50; Field, Notes 141-43; s. Rob. 653)."

26 sn Except for these chains. The chains represented Paul's unjust suffering for the sake of the message. His point was, in effect, "I do not care how long it takes. I only hope you and everyone else hearing this would become believers in Christ, but without my unjust suffering."

27 tn Grk "they spoke to one another saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

28 tn BDAG 93 s.v. ἄξιος 1.b has "θανάτου ἢ δεσμῶν ἄ. nothing deserving death or imprisonment 23:29; 26:31."

sn Not doing anything deserving death... Here is yet another declaration of Paul's innocence, but still no release. The portrayal shows how unjust Paul's confinement was.

29 sn See the note on King Agrippa in 25:13.

30 sn See the note on Porcius Festus in 24:27.

31 tn Or "set free."

32 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

sn If he had not appealed to Caesar. Ultimately Agrippa and Festus blamed what Paul himself had done in appealing to Caesar for his own continued custody. In terms of Luke's nar-

Paul and Company Sail for Rome

27:1 When it was decided we[1] would sail to Italy,[2] they handed over Paul and some other prisoners to a centurion[3] of the Augustan Cohort[4] named Julius. 27:2 We went on board[5] a ship from Adramyttium[6] that was about to sail to various ports[7] along the coast of the province of Asia[8] and put out to sea,[9] accompanied by Aristarchus, a Macedonian[10] from Thessalonica.[11] 27:3 The next day we put in[12] at Sidon,[13] and Julius, treating Paul kindly,[14] allowed him to go to his friends so they could provide him with what he needed.[15] 27:4 From there we put out to sea[16] and sailed under the lee[17] of Cyprus because the winds were against us. 27:5 After we had sailed across the open sea[18] off Cilicia and Pamphylia,[19] we put in[20] at Myra[21] in Lycia.[22] 27:6 There the centurion[23] found[24] a ship from Alexandria[25] sailing for Italy, and he put us aboard it. 27:7 We sailed slowly[26] for many days and arrived with difficulty off Cnidus.[27] Because the wind prevented us from going any farther,[28] we sailed under the lee[29] of Crete off Salmone.[30] 27:8 With difficulty we sailed along the coast[31] rative, this still appears unjust and a denial of responsibility.

1 sn The last "we" section in Acts begins here and extends to 28:16 (the previous one ended at 21:18).

2 sn Sail to Italy. This voyage with its difficulty serves to show how God protected Paul on his long journey to Rome. From the perspective of someone in Palestine, this may well picture "the end of the earth" quite literally (cf. Acts 1:8).

3 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

4 tn According to BDAG 917 s.v. σεβαστός, "In σπεῖρα Σεβαστή 27:1 (cp. OGI 421) Σεβαστή is likew. an exact transl. of Lat. Augusta, an honorary title freq. given to auxiliary troops (Ptolem. renders it Σεβαστή in connection w. three legions that bore it: 2, 3, 30; 2, 9, 18; 4, 3, 30) imperial cohort." According to W. Foerster (TDNT 7:175), "In Ac. 27:1 the σπεῖρα Σεβαστή is an expression also found elsewhere for 'auxiliary troops.'" In no case would this refer to a special imperial bodyguard, and to translate "imperial regiment" or "imperial cohort" might give this impression. There is some archaeological evidence for a Cohors Augusta I stationed in Syria during the time of Augustus, but whether this is the same unit is very debatable.

sn The Augustan Cohort. A cohort was a Roman military unit of about 600 soldiers, one-tenth of a legion. There is considerable debate over the identification of this particular cohort and the meaning of the title Augustan mentioned here. These may well have been auxiliary (provincial) troops given the honorary title.

5 tn Grk "Going on board." The participle ἐπιβάντες (epibantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

6 sn Adramyttium was a seaport in Mysia on the western coast of Asia Minor.

7 tn Grk "places."

8 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

9 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4 states, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

sn Although not explicitly stated, the ship put out to sea from the port of Caesarea (where the previous events had taken place (cf. 25:13) and then sailed along the Asiatic coast (the first stop was Sidon, v. 3).

10 sn A Macedonian. The city of Thessalonica (modern Salonica) was in the Roman province of Macedonia in Greece.

11 map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

12 tn BDAG 516 s.v. κατάγω states, "Hence the pass., in act. sense, of ships and seafarers put in εἴς τι at a harbor...εἰς Σιδῶνα Ac 27:3."

13 sn Sidon is another seaport 75 mi (120 km) north of Caesarea.

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

14 tn BDAG 1056 s.v. φιλανθρώπως states, "benevolently, kindly φιλανθρώπως χρῆσθαί (τινι) treat someone in kindly fashion...Ac 27:3."

sn Treating Paul kindly. Paul's treatment followed the pattern of the earlier imprisonment (cf. Acts 24:23).

15 tn Grk "to go to his friends to be cared for." The scene is an indication of Christian hospitality.

16 tn Grk "putting out to sea." The participle ἀναχθέντες (anachthentes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4 states, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

17 tn BDAG 1040 s.v. ὑποπλέω states, "sail under the lee of an island, i.e. in such a way that the island protects the ship fr. the wind Ac 27:4, 7." Thus they were east and north of the island.

18 tn Grk "the depths," the deep area of a sea far enough from land that it is not protected by the coast (L&N 1.73).

19 sn Pamphylia was a province in the southern part of Asia Minor; it was west of Cilicia (see BDAG 753 s.v. Παμφυλία).

20 tn BDAG 531 s.v. κατέρχομαι 2 states, "Of ships and those who sail in them, who 'come down' fr. the 'high seas': arrive, put in...εἰς τι at someth. a harbor 18:22; 21:3; 27:5."

21 sn Myra was a city on the southern coast of Lycia in Asia Minor. This journey from Sidon (v. 3) was 440 mi (700 km) and took about 15 days.

22 sn Lycia was the name of a peninsula on the southern coast of Asia Minor between Caria and Pamphylia.

23 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

24 tn Grk "finding." The participle εὑρών (heurōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 sn Alexandria (modern Alexandria) was a great city of northern Egypt which was a center for grain trade to Rome. Therefore this type of travel connection was common at the time. For a winter journey (considered hazardous) there were special bonuses and insurance provided (Suetonius, Life of Claudius 18.1-2).

26 tn The participle βραδυπλοοῦντες (braduploountes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

27 sn Cnidus was the name of a peninsula on the southwestern coast of Asia Minor. This was about 130 mi (210 km) from Myra.

28 tn This genitive absolute construction with προσεῶντος (proseōntos) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle. L&N 13.139 translates the phrase μὴ προσεῶντος ἡμᾶς τοῦ ἀνέμου (mē proseōntos hēmas tou anemou) as "the wind would not let us go any farther."

29 tn BDAG 1040 s.v. ὑποπλέω states, "sail under the lee of an island, i.e. in such a way that the island protects the ship fr. the wind Ac 27:4, 7."

30 sn Salmone was the name of a promontory on the northeastern corner of the island of Crete. This was about 100 mi (160 km) farther along.

31 tn Grk "sailing along the coast...we came." The participle παραλεγόμενοι (paralegomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. L&N 54.8, "παραλέγομαι: (a technical, nautical term) to sail along beside some object – 'to sail along the coast, to sail along the shore.' ...'they sailed along the coast of Crete' Ac 27:13."

of Crete[1] and came to a place called Fair Havens that was near the town of Lasea.[2]

Caught in a Violent Storm

27:9 Since considerable time had passed and the voyage was now dangerous[3] because the fast[4] was already over,[5] Paul advised them,[6] 27:10 "Men, I can see the voyage is going to end[7] in disaster[8] and great loss not only of the cargo and the ship, but also of our lives."[9] 27:11 But the centurion[10] was more convinced[11] by the captain[12] and the ship's owner than by what Paul said.[13] 27:12 Because the harbor was not suitable to spend the winter in, the majority decided[14] to put out to sea[15] from there. They hoped that[16] somehow they could reach[17] Phoenix,[18] a harbor of Crete facing[19] southwest and northwest, and spend the winter there. 27:13 When a gentle south wind sprang up, they thought[20] they could carry out[21] their purpose, so they weighed anchor[22] and sailed close along the coast[23] of Crete. 27:14 Not long after this, a hurricane-force[24] wind called the northeaster[25] blew down from the island.[26] 27:15 When the ship was caught in it[27] and could not head into[28] the wind, we gave way to it and were driven[29] along. 27:16 As we ran under the lee of[30] a small island called Cauda,[31] we were able with difficulty to get the ship's boat[32] under control. 27:17 After the

---

1 tn Grk "it"; the referent (Crete) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

2 sn Lasea was a city on the southern coast of the island of Crete. This was about 60 mi (96 km) farther.

3 tn Or "unsafe" (BDAG 383 s.v. ἐπισφαλής). The term is a NT hapax legomenon.

4 sn The fast refers to the Jewish Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur. It was now into October and the dangerous winter winds would soon occur (Suetonius, Life of Claudius 18; Josephus, J. W. 1.14.2-3 [1.279-281]).

5 tn The accusative articular infinitive παρεληλυθέναι (parelēluthenai) after the preposition διά (dia) is causal. BDAG 776 s.v. παρέρχομαι 2 has "διὰ τὸ τὴν νηστείαν ἤδη παρεληλυθέναι because the fast was already over Ac 27:9."

6 tn Grk "Paul advised, saying to them." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated. On the term translated "advised," see BDAG 764 s.v. παραινέω, which usually refers to recommendations.

sn Paul advised them. A literary theme surfaces here: Though Paul is under arrest, he will be the one to guide them all through the dangers of the storm and shipwreck, showing clearly God's presence and protection of him. The story is told in great detail. This literary effect of slowing down the passage of time and narrating with many details serves to add a sense of drama to the events described.

7 tn Grk "is going to be with disaster."

8 tn Or "hardship," "damage." BDAG 1022 s.v. ὕβρις 3 states, "fig. hardship, disaster, damage caused by the elements...w. ζημία Ac 27:10."

9 tn Grk "souls" (here, one's physical life).

10 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

11 tn Or "persuaded."

12 tn BDAG 456 s.v. κυβερνήτης 1 has "one who is responsible for the management of a ship, shipmaster...W. ναύκληρος, the 'shipowner'...Ac 27:11" See further L. Casson, Ships and Seamanship in the Ancient World, 316-18.

13 tn Grk "than by what was said by Paul." The passive construction has been converted to an active one to simplify the translation.

sn More convinced by the captain and the ship's owner than by what Paul said. The position taken by the centurion was logical, since he was following "professional" advice. But this was not a normal voyage.

14 tn BDAG 181-82 s.v. βουλή 2.a, "β. τίθεσθαι (Judg 19:30; Ps 12:3) decide 27:12 (w. inf. foll.)."

15 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

16 tn Grk "from there, if somehow" Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun here in the translation and the introductory phrase "They hoped that" supplied (with the subject, "they," repeated from the previous clause) to make a complete English sentence.

17 tn Grk "if somehow, reaching Phoenix, they could..." The participle καταντήσαντες (katantēsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

18 sn Phoenix was a seaport on the southern coast of the island of Crete. This was about 30 mi (48 km) further west.

19 tn Or "a harbor of Crete open to the southwest and northwest."

20 tn Grk "thinking." The participle δόξαντες (doxantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

21 tn Or "accomplish." L&N 68.29, for κρατέω, has "to be able to complete or finish, presumably despite difficulties – 'to accomplish, to do successfully, to carry out.' ...'thinking that they could carry out their purpose' Ac 27:13."

22 tn Or "departed."

23 tn L&N 54.8, "παραλέγομαι: (a technical, nautical term) to sail along beside some object – 'to sail along the coast, to sail along the shore.'...'they sailed along the coast of Crete' Ac 27:13." With the addition of the adverb ἆσσον (asson) this becomes "sailed close along the coast of Crete."

24 tn Grk "a wind like a typhoon." That is, a very violent wind like a typhoon or hurricane (BDAG 1021 s.v. τυφωνικός).

25 sn Or called Euraquilo (the actual name of the wind, a sailor's term which was a combination of Greek and Latin). According to Strabo (Geography 1.2.21), this was a violent northern wind.

26 tn Grk "from it"; the referent (the island) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Or "was forced off course." Grk "The ship being caught in it." The genitive absolute construction with the participle συναρπασθέντος (sunarpasthentos) has been taken temporally; it could also be translated as causal ("Because the ship was caught in it").

28 tn BDAG 91 s.v. ἀντοφθαλμέω states, "Metaph. of a ship τοῦ πλοίου μὴ δυναμένοι ἀ. τῷ ἀνέμῳ since the ship was not able to face the wind, i.e. with its bow headed against the forces of the waves Ac 27:15."

29 sn Caught in the violent wind, the ship was driven along. They were now out of control, at the mercy of the wind and sea.

30 tn BDAG 1042 s.v. ὑποτρέχω states, "run or sail under the lee of, nautical t.t....Ac 27:16." The participle ὑποδραμόντες (hupodramontes) has been taken temporally ("as we ran under the lee of"). While this could also be translated as a participle of means ("by running...") this might suggest the ship was still under a greater degree of control by its crew than it probably was.

31 sn Cauda. This island was located south of Crete, about 23 mi (36 km) from where they began. There are various ways to spell the island's name (e.g., Clauda, BDAG 546 s.v. Κλαῦδα).

32 sn The ship's boat was a small rowboat, normally towed behind a ship in good weather rather than stowed on board. It was used for landings, to maneuver the ship for tacking, and to lay anchors (not a lifeboat in the modern sense, although it could have served as a means of escape for some of the sailors; see v. 30). See L. Casson, Ships and Seamanship in the Ancient World, 248f.

crew[1] had hoisted it aboard,[2] they used supports[3] to undergird the ship. Fearing they would run aground[4] on the Syrtis,[5] they lowered the sea anchor,[6] thus letting themselves be driven along. 27:18 The next day, because we were violently battered by the storm,[7] they began throwing the cargo overboard,[8] 27:19 and on the third day they threw the ship's gear[9] overboard with their own hands. 27:20 When neither sun nor stars appeared for many days and a violent[10] storm continued to batter us,[11] we finally abandoned all hope of being saved.[12] 27:21 Since many of them had no desire to eat,[13] Paul[14] stood up[15] among them and said, "Men, you should have listened to me[16] and not put out to sea[17] from Crete, thus avoiding[18] this damage and loss. 27:22 And now I advise[19] you to keep up your courage, for there will be no loss of life among you, but only the ship will be lost.[20] 27:23 For last night an angel of the God to whom I belong[21] and whom I serve[22] came to me[23] 27:24 and said,[24] 'Do not be afraid, Paul!

1 tn Grk "After hoisting it up, they..."; the referent (the ship's crew) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn The participle ἄραντες (arantes) has been taken temporally.

3 tn Possibly "ropes" or "cables"; Grk "helps" (a word of uncertain meaning; probably a nautical technical term, BDAG 180 s.v. βοήθεια 2).

4 tn BDAG 308 s.v. ἐκπίπτω 2 states, "drift off course, run aground, nautical term εἴς τι on someth....on the Syrtis 27:17."

5 tn That is, on the sandbars and shallows of the Syrtis.

sn On the Syrtis. The Syrtis was the name of two gulfs on the North African coast (modern Libya), feared greatly by sailors because of their shifting sandbars and treacherous shallows. The Syrtis here is the so-called Great Syrtis, toward Cyrenaica. It had a horrible reputation as a sailors' graveyard (Pliny, Natural History 5.26). Josephus (J. W. 2.16.4 [2.381]) says the name alone struck terror in those who heard it. It was near the famous Scylla and Charybdis mentioned in Homer's Odyssey.

6 tn Or perhaps "mainsail." The meaning of this word is uncertain. BDAG 927 s.v. σκεῦος 1 has "τὸ σκεῦος Ac 27:17 seems to be the kedge or driving anchor" while C. Maurer (TDNT 7:362) notes, "The meaning in Ac. 27:17: χαλάσαντες τὸ σκεῦος, is uncertain. Prob. the ref. is not so much to taking down the sails as to throwing the draganchor overboard to lessen the speed of the ship." In spite of this L&N 6.1 states, "In Ac 27:17, for example, the reference of σκεῦος is generally understood to be the mainsail." A reference to the sail is highly unlikely because in a storm of the force described in Ac 27:14, the sail would have been taken down and reefed immediately, to prevent its being ripped to shreds or torn away by the gale.

7 tn BDAG 980 s.v. σφόδρῶς states, "very much, greatly, violently...σφ. χειμάζεσθαι be violently beaten by a storm Ac 27:18."

8 tn Or "jettisoning [the cargo]" (a nautical technical term). The words "the cargo" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

sn The desperation of the sailors in throwing the cargo overboard is reminiscent of Jonah 1:5. At this point they were only concerned with saving themselves.

9 tn Or "rigging," "tackle"; Grk "the ship's things." Here the more abstract "gear" is preferred to "rigging" or "tackle" as a translation for σκεῦος (skeuos) because in v. 40 the sailors are still able to raise the (fore)sail, which they could not have done if the ship's rigging or tackle had been jettisoned here.

10 tn Grk "no small storm" = a very great storm.

11 tn Grk "no small storm pressing on us." The genitive absolute construction with the participle ἐπικειμένου (epikeimenou) has been translated as parallel to the previous genitive absolute construction (which was translated as temporal). BDAG 373 s.v. ἐπίκειμαι 2.b states, "of impersonal force confront χειμῶνος ἐπικειμένου since a storm lay upon us Ac 27:20." L&N 14.2, "'the stormy weather did not abate in the least' or 'the violent storm continued' Ac 27:20." To this last was added the idea of "battering" from the notion of "pressing upon" inherent in ἐπίκειμαι (epikeimai).

12 tn Grk "finally all hope that we would be saved was abandoned." The passive construction has been converted to an active one to simplify the translation. This represents a clearly secular use of the term σῴζω (sōzō) in that it refers to deliverance from the storm. At this point those on board the ship gave up hope of survival.

13 tn Or "Since they had no desire to eat for a long time." The genitive absolute construction with the participle ὑπαρχούσης (huparchousēs) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle. It could also be translated temporally ("When many of them had no desire to eat"). The translation of πολλῆς (pollēs) as a substantized adjective referring to the people on board the ship ("many of them") rather than a period of time ("for a long time"; so most modern versions) follows BDAG 143 s.v. ἀσιτία, which has "πολλῆς ἀ. ὑπαρχούσης since almost nobody wanted to eat because of anxiety or seasickness...Ac 27:21." This detail indicates how turbulent things were on board the ship.

14 tn Here τότε (tote) is redundant (pleonastic) according to BDAG 1012-13 s.v. τότε 2; thus it has not been translated.

15 tn Grk "standing up...said." The participle σταθείς (statheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 tn L&N 36.12 has "πειθαρχήσαντάς μοι μὴ ἀνάγεσθαι ἀπὸ τῆς Κρήτης 'you should have listened to me and not have sailed from Crete' Ac 27:21."

sn By saying "you should have listened to me and not put out to sea from Crete" Paul was not "rubbing it in," but was reasserting his credibility before giving his next recommendation.

17 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

18 tn The infinitive κερδῆσαι (kerdēsai) has been translated as resultative.

19 tn The same verb is used for Paul's original recommendation in Ac 27:9.

20 tn Grk "except the ship." Here "but" is used to translate the improper preposition πλήν (plēn; see BDAG 826 s.v. πλήν 2) since an exception like this, where two different categories of objects are involved (people and a ship), is more naturally expressed in contemporary English with an adversative ("but"). The words "will be lost" are also supplied for clarity.

sn The "prophecy" about the ship serves to underscore Paul's credibility as an agent of God. Paul addressed his audience carefully and drew attention to the sovereign knowledge of God.

21 tn Grk "of whom I am." The relative clause with its possessive was translated following L&N 15.86 s.v. παρίσταμαι.

22 tn Or "worship."

23 tn Or "stood by me." BDAG 778 s.v. παρίστημι/παριστάνω 2.a.α states, "approach, come τινί (to) someone...Ac 9:39; 27:23."

24 tn Grk "came to me saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

You must stand before[1] Caesar,[2] and God has graciously granted you the safety[3] of all who are sailing with you.' 27:25 Therefore keep up your courage, men, for I have faith in God[4] that it will be just as I have been told. 27:26 But we must[5] run aground on some island."

27:27 When the fourteenth night had come, while we were being driven[6] across the Adriatic Sea,[7] about midnight the sailors suspected they were approaching some land.[8] 27:28 They took soundings[9] and found the water was twenty fathoms[10] deep; when they had sailed a little farther[11] they took soundings again and found it was fifteen fathoms[12] deep. 27:29 Because they were afraid[13] that we would run aground on the rocky coast,[14] they threw out[15] four anchors from the stern and wished[16] for day to appear.[17] 27:30 Then when the sailors tried to escape from the ship and were lowering the ship's boat into the sea, pretending[18] that they were going to put out anchors from the bow, 27:31 Paul said to the centurion[19] and the soldiers, "Unless these men stay with the ship, you[20] cannot be saved." 27:32 Then the soldiers cut the ropes[21] of the ship's boat and let it drift away.[22]

27:33 As day was about to dawn,[23] Paul urged them all to take some food, saying, "Today is the fourteenth day you have been in suspense[24] and have gone[25] without food; you have eaten nothing.[26] 27:34 Therefore I urge you to take some food, for this is important[27] for your survival.[28] For not one of you will lose a hair from his head." 27:35 After he said this, Paul[29]

1 tn BDAG 778 s.v. παρίστημι/παριστάνω 2.a.α states, "Also as a t.t. of legal usage appear before, come before... Καίσαρι σε δεῖ παραστῆναι you must stand before the Emperor (as judge) Ac 27:24." See Acts 23:11. Luke uses the verb δεῖ (dei) to describe what must occur.

2 tn Or "before the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

3 tn Grk "God has graciously granted you all who are sailing with you." The words "the safety of" have been supplied to clarify the meaning of the verb κεχάρισται (kecharistai) in this context.

sn The safety of all who are sailing with you. In a sense, Paul's presence protects them all. For Luke, it serves as a picture of what the gospel does through Christ and through the one who brings the message.

4 tn BDAG 817 s.v. πιστεύω 1.c states, "w. pers. and thing added π. τινί τι believe someone with regard to someth.... W. dat. of pers. and ὅτι foll.... πιστεύετέ μοι ὅτι ἐγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρί J 14:11a. Cp. 4:21; Ac 27:25."

5 tn This is another use of δεῖ (dei) to indicate necessity (see also v. 24). Acts 28:1 shows the fulfillment of this.

6 tn Here "being driven" has been used to translate διαφέρω (diapherō) rather than "drifting," because it is clear from the attempt to drop anchors in v. 29 that the ship is still being driven by the gale. "Drifting" implies lack of control, but not necessarily rapid movement.

7 sn The Adriatic Sea. They were now somewhere between Crete and Malta.

8 tn Grk "suspected that some land was approaching them." BDAG 876 s.v. προσάγω 2.a states, "lit. ὑπενόουν προσάγειν τινά αὐτοῖς χώραν they suspected that land was near (lit. 'approaching them') Ac 27:27." Current English idiom would speak of the ship approaching land rather than land approaching the ship.

9 tn Grk "Heaving the lead, they found." The participle βολίσαντες (bolisantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. See also BDAG 180 s.v. βολίζω. Although the term is used twice in this verse (and thus is technically not a NT hapax legomenon), it occurs nowhere else in the NT.

10 sn A fathom is about 6 feet or just under 2 meters (originally the length of a man's outstretched arms). This was a nautical technical term for measuring the depth of water. Here it was about 120 ft (36 m).

11 tn L&N 15.12, "βραχὺ δὲ διαστήσαντες 'when they had gone a little farther' Ac 27:28."

12 sn Here the depth was about 90 ft (27 m).

13 tn Grk "fearing." The participle φοβούμενοι (phoboumenoi) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

14 tn Grk "against a rough [rocky] place." L&N 79.84 has "φοβούμενοί τε μή που κατὰ τραχεῖς τόποις ἐκπέσωμεν 'we were afraid that we would run aground on the rocky coast' Ac 27:29."

15 tn Grk "throwing out...they." The participle ῥίψαντες (rhipsantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 tn BDAG 417 s.v. εὔχομαι 2 states, "wish...τὶ for someth....Foll. by acc. and inf....Ac 27:29." The other possible meaning for this term, "pray," is given in BDAG 417 s.v. 1 and employed by a number of translations (NAB, NRSV, NIV). If this meaning is adopted here, then "prayed for day to come" must be understood metaphorically to mean "prayed that they would live to see the day," or "prayed that it would soon be day."

17 tn Grk "and wished for day to come about."

sn And wished for day to appear. The sailors were hoping to hold the ship in place until morning, when they could see what was happening and where they were.

18 tn BDAG 889 s.v. πρόφασις 2 states, "προφάσει ὡς under the pretext that, pretending that...Ac 27:30." In other words, some of the sailors gave up hope that such efforts would work and instead attempted to escape while pretending to help.

19 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

20 sn The pronoun you is plural in Greek.

21 sn The soldiers cut the ropes. The centurion and the soldiers were now following Paul's advice by cutting the ropes to prevent the sailors from escaping.

22 tn Or "let it fall away." According to BDAG 308 s.v. ἐκπίπτω 1 and 2 the meaning of the verb in this verse could be either "fall away" or "drift away." Either meaning is acceptable, and the choice between them depends almost entirely on how one reconstructs the scene. Since cutting the boat loose would in any case result in it drifting away (whether capsized or not), the meaning "drift away" as a nautical technical term has been used here.

23 tn BDAG 160 s.v. ἄχρι 1.b.α has "ἄ. οὗ ἡμέρα ἤμελλεν γίνεσθαι until the day began to dawn 27:33."

24 tn Or "have waited anxiously." Grk "waiting anxiously." The participle προσδοκῶντες (prosdokōntes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tn Or "continued."

26 tn Grk "having eaten nothing." The participle προσλαβόμενοι (proslabomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb (with subject "you" supplied) due to requirements of contemporary English style.

27 tn Or "necessary." BDAG 873-74 s.v. πρός 1 has "πρ. τῆς σωτηρίας in the interest of safety Ac 27:34"; L&N 27.18 has "'therefore, I urge you to take some food, for this is important for your deliverance' or '...for your survival' Ac 27:34."

28 tn Or "deliverance" ('salvation' in a nontheological sense).

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

took bread[1] and gave thanks to God in front of them all,[2] broke[3] it, and began to eat. 27:36 So all of them were encouraged and took food themselves. 27:37 (We were in all two hundred seventy-six[4] persons on the ship.)[5] 27:38 When they had eaten enough to be satisfied,[6] they lightened the ship by throwing the wheat[7] into the sea.

Paul is Shipwrecked

27:39 When day came, they did not recognize the land, but they noticed[8] a bay[9] with a beach,[10] where they decided to run the ship aground if they could. 27:40 So they slipped[11] the anchors[12] and left them in the sea, at the same time loosening the linkage[13] that bound the steering oars[14] together. Then they hoisted[15] the foresail[16] to the wind and steered toward[17] the beach. 27:41 But they encountered a patch of crosscurrents[18] and ran the ship aground; the bow stuck fast and could not be moved, but the stern was being broken up by the force[19] of the waves. 27:42 Now the soldiers' plan was to kill the prisoners[20] so that none of them would escape by swimming away.[21] 27:43 But the centurion,[22] wanting to save Paul's life,[23] prevented them from carrying out their plan. He ordered those who could swim to jump overboard first and get to land,[24] 27:44 and the rest were to follow,[25] some on planks[26] and some on pieces of the ship.[27] And in this way[28] all were brought safely to land.

Paul on Malta

28:1 After we had safely reached shore,[29] we learned that the island was called Malta.[30] 28:2 The local inhabitants[31] showed us extraordinary[32] kindness, for they built a fire and welcomed us all because it had started to rain[33] and was cold. 28:3 When Paul had gathered a bundle of brushwood[34] and was putting it on the fire, a viper came out because of the heat and fastened

1 tn Grk "taking bread, gave thanks." The participle λαβών (labōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

2 tn Or "before them all," but here this could be misunderstood to indicate a temporal sequence.

3 tn Grk "and breaking it, he began." The participle κλάσας (klasas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

4 tc One early ms (B) and an early version (sa) read "about seventy-six." For discussion of how this variant probably arose, see F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 465.

5 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

6 tn Or "When they had eaten their fill."

7 tn Or "grain."

8 tn Or "observed," "saw."

9 tn Or "gulf" (BDAG 557 s.v. κόλπος 3).

10 sn A beach would refer to a smooth sandy beach suitable for landing.

11 tn That is, released. Grk "slipping...leaving." The participles περιελόντες (perielontes) and εἴων (eiōn) have been translated as finite verbs due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn The term is used of a ship's anchor. (BDAG 12 s.v. ἄγκυρα a).

13 tn Grk "bands"; possibly "ropes."

14 tn Or "rudders."

15 tn Grk "hoisting...they." The participle ἐπάραντες (eparantes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 tn Grk "sail"; probably a reference to the foresail.

17 tn BDAG 533 s.v. κατέχω 7 states, "hold course, nautical t.t., intr....κατεῖχον εἰς τὸν αἰγιαλόν they headed for the beach Ac 27:40."

18 tn Grk "fell upon a place of two seas." The most common explanation for this term is that it refers to a reef or sandbar with the sea on both sides, as noted in BDAG 245 s.v. διθάλασσος: the "τόπος δ. Ac 27:41 is a semantic unit signifying a point (of land jutting out with water on both sides)." However, Greek had terms for a "sandbank" (θῖς [this], ταινία [tainia]), a "reef" (ἕρμα [herma]), "strait" (στενόν [stenon]), "promontory" (ἀρωτήρον [arōtēron]), and other nautical hazards, none of which are used by the author here. NEB here translates τόπον διθάλασσον (topon dithalasson) as "cross-currents," a proposal close to that advanced by J. M. Gilchrist, "The Historicity of Paul's Shipwreck," JSNT 61 (1996): 29-51, who suggests the meaning is "a patch of cross-seas," where the waves are set at an angle to the wind, a particular hazard for sailors. Thus the term most likely refers to some sort of adverse sea conditions rather than a topographical feature like a reef or sandbar.

19 tn Or "violence" (BDAG 175 s.v. βία a).

20 sn The soldiers' plan was to kill the prisoners. The issue here was not cruelty, but that the soldiers would be legally responsible if any prisoners escaped and would suffer punishment themselves. So they were planning to do this as an act of self-preservation. See Acts 16:27 for a similar incident.

21 tn The participle ἐκκολυμβήσας (ekkolumbēsas) has been taken instrumentally.

22 sn See the note on the word centurion in 10:1.

23 tn Or "wanting to rescue Paul."

sn Thanks to the centurion who wanted to save Paul's life, Paul was once more rescued from a potential human threat.

24 tn BDAG 347 s.v. I. ἔξειμι has "ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν get to land Ac 27:43."

25 tn The words "were to follow" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. They must be supplied to clarify the sense in contemporary English.

26 tn Or "boards" according to BDAG 913 s.v. σανίς.

27 tn Grk "on pieces from the ship"; that is, pieces of wreckage from the ship.

sn Both the planks and pieces of the ship were for the weak or nonswimmers. The whole scene is a historical metaphor representing how listening to Paul and his message could save people.

28 tn Grk "And in this way it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

29 tn Grk "We having been brought safely through" [to land] (same verb as 27:44). The word "shore" is implied, and the slight variations in translation from 27:44 have been made to avoid redundancy in English. The participle διασωθέντες (diasōthentes) has been taken temporally.

30 sn Malta is an island (known by the same name today) in the Mediterranean Sea south of Sicily. The ship had traveled 625 mi (1,000 km) in the storm.

31 tn Although this is literally βάρβαροι (barbaroi; "foreigners, barbarians") used for non-Greek or non-Romans, as BDAG 166 s.v. βάρβαρος 2.b notes, "Of the inhabitants of Malta, who apparently spoke in their native language Ac 28:2, 4 (here β. certainly without derogatory tone...)."

32 tn BDAG 1019 s.v. τυγχάνω 2.d states, "δυνάμεις οὐ τὰς τυχούσας extraordinary miracles Ac 19:11. Cp. 28:2."

33 tn Or "because it was about to rain." BDAG 418 s.v. ἐφίστημι 4 states, "διὰ τ. ὑετὸν τὸν ἐφεστῶτα because it had begun to rain Ac 28:2...But the mng. here could also be because it threatened to rain (s. 6)."

34 tn Or "sticks."

itself on his hand. 28:4 When the local people[1] saw the creature hanging from Paul's[2] hand, they said to one another, "No doubt this man is a murderer! Although he has escaped from the sea, Justice herself[3] has not allowed him to live!"[4] 28:5 However,[5] Paul[6] shook[7] the creature off into the fire and suffered no harm. 28:6 But they were expecting that he was going to swell up[8] or suddenly drop dead. So after they had waited[9] a long time and had seen[10] nothing unusual happen[11] to him, they changed their minds[12] and said he was a god.[13]

28:7 Now in the region around that place[14] were fields belonging to the chief official[15] of the island, named Publius, who welcomed us and entertained us hospitably as guests for three days. 28:8 The father[16] of Publius lay sick in bed, suffering from fever and dysentery. Paul went in to see him[17] and after praying, placed[18] his hands on him and healed[19] him. 28:9 After this had happened, many of the people on the island who were sick[20] also came and were healed.[21] 28:10 They also bestowed many honors,[22] and when we were preparing to sail,[23] they gave[24] us all the supplies we needed.[25]

Paul Finally Reaches Rome

28:11 After three months we put out to sea[26] in an Alexandrian ship that had wintered at the island and had the "Heavenly Twins"[27] as its figurehead.[28] 28:12 We put in[29] at

1 tn Although this is literally βάρβαροι (barbaroi; "foreigners, barbarians") used for non-Greek or non-Romans, as BDAG 166 s.v. βάρβαρος 2.b notes, "Of the inhabitants of Malta, who apparently spoke in their native language Ac 28:2, 4 (here β. certainly without derogatory tone...)."

2 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn That is, the goddess Justice has not allowed him to live. BDAG 250 s.v. δίκη 2 states, "Justice personified as a deity Ac 28:4"; L&N 12.27, "a goddess who personifies justice in seeking out and punishing the guilty – 'the goddess Justice.' ἡ δίκη ζῆν οὐκ εἴασεν 'the goddess Justice would not let him live' Ac 28:4." Although a number of modern English translations have rendered δίκη (dikē) "justice," preferring to use an abstraction, in the original setting it is almost certainly a reference to a pagan deity. In the translation, the noun "justice" was capitalized and the reflexive pronoun "herself" was supplied to make the personification clear. This was considered preferable to supplying a word like 'goddess' in connection with δίκη.

4 sn The entire scene is played out initially as a kind of oracle from the gods resulting in the judgment of a guilty person (Justice herself has not allowed him to live). Paul's survival of this incident without ill effects thus spoke volumes about his innocence.

5 tn BDAG 737 s.v. οὖν 4 indicates the particle has an adversative sense here: "but, however."

6 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "shaking the creature off...he suffered no harm." The participle ἀποτινάξας (apotinaxas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

8 tn Or "going to burn with fever." According to BDAG 814 s.v. πίμπρημι, either meaning ("swell up" or "burn with fever") is possible for Acts 28:6.

9 tn The participle προσδοκώντων (prosdokōntōn) has been taken temporally.

10 tn The participle θεωρούντων (theōrountōn) has been taken temporally.

11 tn Grk "happening." The participle γινόμενον (ginomenon) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn Grk "changing their minds." The participle μεταβαλόμενοι (metabalomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

13 sn And said he was a god. The reaction is like Acts 14:11-19 where the crowd wanted to make Paul and Barnabas into gods. The providence of God had protected Paul again.

14 tn BDAG 798 s.v. περί 2.a.γ states, "of nearby places...τὰ περὶ τὸν τόπον the region around the place Ac 28:7." The presence of ἐκεῖνον (ekeinon) results in the translation "that place."

15 tn That is, the chief Roman official. Several inscriptions have confirmed the use of πρῶτος (prōtos) as an administrative title used on the island of Malta for the highest Roman official. See further BDAG 852 s.v. Πόπλιος.

16 tn Grk "It happened that the father." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

17 tn Grk "to whom Paul going in." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by a personal pronoun ("him") and a new sentence begun here in the translation. The participle εἰσελθών (eiselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

18 tn The participle ἐπιθείς (epitheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

19 sn And healed him. Here are healings like Luke 9:40; 10:30; 13:13; Acts 16:23.

20 tn BDAG 142 s.v. ἀσθένεια 1 states, "ἔχειν ἀ. be ill Ac 28:9."

21 sn Many...also came and were healed. Again, here is irony. Paul, though imprisoned, "frees" others of their diseases.

22 tn Or "they also honored us greatly"; Grk "they also honored us with many honors" (an idiom).

23 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea." In this case the simpler English "sail" is more appropriate. The English participle "preparing" has also been supplied, since the provisioning of the ship would take place some time before the actual departure.

24 tn BDAG 384 s.v. ἐπιτίθημι 1.b has "give τινί τι someth. to someone...ἀναγομένοις τὰ πρὸς τὰς χρείας when we sailed they gave us what we needed Ac 28:10."

25 sn They gave us all the supplies we needed. What they had lost in the storm and shipwreck was now replaced. Luke describes these pagans very positively.

26 tn BDAG 62 s.v. ἀνάγω 4, "as a nautical t.t. (ἀ. τὴν ναῦν put a ship to sea), mid. or pass. ἀνάγεσθαι to begin to go by boat, put out to sea."

27 tn Or "the 'Twin Gods'"; Grk "the Dioscuri" (a joint name for the pagan deities Castor and Pollux).

sn That had the 'Heavenly Twins' as its figurehead. The twin brothers Castor and Pollux, known collectively as the Dioscuri or 'Heavenly Twins,' were the twin sons of Zeus and Leda according to Greek mythology. The Alexandrian ship on which Paul and his companions sailed from Malta had a carved emblem or figurehead of these figures, and they would have been the patron deities of the vessel. Castor and Pollux were the "gods of navigation." To see their stars was considered a good omen (Epictetus, Discourses 2.18.29; Lucian of Samosata, The Ship 9).

28 tn Or "as its emblem."

29 tn Grk "And putting in." The participle καταχθέντες (katachthentes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. On the meaning of the participle, BDAG 516 s.v. κατάγω states, "Hence the pass., in act. sense, of ships and seafarers put in εἴς τι at a

Syracuse[1] and stayed there three days. 28:13 From there we cast off[2] and arrived at Rhegium,[3] and after one day a south wind sprang up[4] and on the second day we came to Puteoli.[5] 28:14 There[6] we found[7] some brothers[8] and were invited to stay with them seven days. And in this way we came to Rome.[9] 28:15 The brothers from there,[10] when they heard about us, came as far as the Forum of Appius[11] and Three Taverns[12] to meet us. When he saw them,[13] Paul thanked God and took courage. 28:16 When we entered Rome, Paul was allowed to live[14] by himself, with the soldier who was guarding him.

Paul Addresses the Jewish Community in Rome

28:17 After three days[15] Paul[16] called the local Jewish leaders[17] together. When they had assembled, he said to them, "Brothers,[18] although I had done[19] nothing against our people or the customs of our ancestors,[20] from Jerusalem[21] I was handed over as a prisoner to the Romans.[22] 28:18 When[23] they had heard my case,[24] they wanted to release me,[25] because there was no basis for a death sentence[26] against me. 28:19 But when the Jews objected,[27] I was forced to appeal to Caesar[28] – not that I had some charge to bring[29] against my own people.[30] 28:20 So for this reason I have asked to see you and speak with you, for I am bound with this chain because of the hope of Israel."[31] 28:21 They replied,[32] "We have received no letters from Judea about you, nor have any of the brothers come from there[33] and reported or said anything bad about you. 28:22 But we would like to hear from you what you think, for regarding harbor...εἰς Συρακούσας Ac 28:12." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

1 sn Syracuse was a city on the eastern coast of the island of Sicily. It was 75 mi (120 km) from Malta.

2 tc A few early MSS (𝔑* B Ψ [gig] {sa [bo]}) read περιελόντες (perielontes, "[From there we] cast off [and arrived at Rhegium]"; cf. Acts 27:40). The other major variant, περιελθόντες (perielthontes, "[we] sailed from place to place"), is found in 𝔓⁷⁴ 𝔑² A 066 1739 𝔐 lat sy. Although περιελόντες is minimally attested, it is found in the better witnesses. As well, it is a more difficult reading, for its meaning as a nautical term is uncertain, requiring something like "τὰς ἀγκύρας be supplied = 'we weighed anchor'" (BDAG 799 s.v. περιαιρέω 1). It thus best explains the rise of the other readings.

3 sn Rhegium was a city on the southern tip of Italy. It was 80 mi (130 km) from Syracuse.

4 tn Grk "after one day, a south wind springing up, on the second day." The genitive absolute construction with the participle ἐπιγενομένου (epigenomenou) has been translated as a clause with a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

5 sn Puteoli was a city on the western coast of Italy south of Rome. It was in the Bay of Naples some 220 mi (350 km) to the north of Rhegium. Here the voyage ended; the rest of the journey was by land.

6 tn Grk "where." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("where") has been replaced with the demonstrative pronoun ("there") and a new sentence begun here in the translation.

7 tn Grk "finding." The participle εὑρόντες (heurontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

8 sn That is, some fellow Christians.

9 map For location see JP4-A1.

10 sn Mention of Christian brothers from there (Rome) shows that God's message had already spread as far as Italy and the capital of the empire.

11 sn The Forum of Appius was a small traveler's stop on the Appian Way about 43 mi (71 km) south of Rome (BDAG 125 s.v. Ἄππίου φόρον). It was described by Horace as "crammed with boatmen and stingy tavernkeepers" (Satires 1.5.3).

12 sn Three Taverns was a stop on the Appian Way 33 mi (55 km) south of Rome.

13 tn Grk "whom, when he saw [them], Paul." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") was replaced by the personal pronoun ("them") and a new sentence begun here in the translation.

14 tn Or "to stay."

sn Allowed to live by himself. Paul continued to have a generous prison arrangement (cf. Acts 27:3).

15 tn Grk "It happened that after three days." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn L&N 33.309 has "'after three days, he called the local Jewish leaders together' Ac 28:17."

18 tn Grk "Men brothers," but this is both awkward and unnecessary in English.

19 tn The participle ποιήσας (poiēsas) has been translated as a concessive adverbial participle.

20 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

sn I had done nothing against our people or the customs of our ancestors. Once again Paul claimed to be faithful to the Jewish people and to the God of Israel.

21 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

22 tn Grk "into the hands of the Romans," but this is redundant when παρεδόθην (paredothēn) has been translated "handed over."

23 tn Grk "who when." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("who") has been replaced by the personal pronoun ("they") and a new sentence begun at this point in the translation.

24 tn Or "had questioned me"; or "had examined me." BDAG 66 s.v. ἀνακρίνω 2 states, "to conduct a judicial hearing, hear a case, question."

25 sn They wanted to release me. See Acts 25:23-27.

26 tn Grk "no basis for death," but in this context a sentence of death is clearly indicated.

27 tn That is, objected to my release.

28 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

29 tn BDAG 533 s.v. κατηγορέω 1 states, "nearly always as legal t.t.: bring charges in court." L&N 33.427 states for κατηγορέω, "to bring serious charges or accusations against someone, with the possible connotation of a legal or court context – 'to accuse, to bring charges.'"

30 tn Or "my own nation."

31 sn The hope of Israel. A reference to Israel's messianic hope. Paul's preaching was in continuity with this Jewish hope (Acts 1:3; 8:12; 14:22; 19:8; 20:25).

32 tn Grk "they said to him."

33 tn Or "arrived"; Grk "come" ("from there" is implied). Grk "coming." The participle παραγενόμενος (paragenomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

this sect we know[1] that people[2] everywhere speak against[3] it."

28:23 They set[4] a day to meet with him,[5] and they came to him where he was staying[6] in even greater numbers.[7] From morning until evening he explained things[8] to them,[9] testifying[10] about the kingdom of God[11] and trying to convince[12] them about Jesus from both the law of Moses and the prophets. 28:24 Some were convinced[13] by what he said,[14] but others refused[15] to believe. 28:25 So they began to leave,[16] unable to agree among themselves, after Paul made one last statement: "The Holy Spirit spoke rightly to your ancestors[17] through the prophet Isaiah 28:26 when he said,

> 'Go to this people and say,
> "You will keep on hearing,[18] but will never understand, > and you will keep on looking,[19] but will never perceive.
> 28:27 For the heart of this people has become dull,[20] > and their ears are hard of hearing,[21]
> and they have closed their eyes, > so that they would not see with their eyes > and hear with their ears > and understand with their heart > and turn,[22] and I would heal them."'[23]

28:28 "Therefore be advised[24] that this salvation from God[25] has been sent to the Gentiles;[26] they[27] will listen!"[28]

28:30 Paul[29] lived[30] there two whole years in his own rented quarters[31] and welcomed[32] all who came to him, 28:31 proclaiming the kingdom of God and teaching about the Lord Jesus Christ[33] with complete boldness[34] and without restriction.[35]

1 tn Grk "regarding this sect it is known to us." The passive construction "it is known to us" has been converted to an active one to simplify the translation.

2 tn Grk "that everywhere it is spoken against." To simplify the translation the passive construction "it is spoken against" has been converted to an active one with the subject "people" supplied.

3 tn On the term translated "speak against," see BDAG 89 s.v. ἀντιλέγω 1.

4 tn Grk "Having set." The participle ταξάμενοι (taxamenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

5 tn Grk "Having set a day with him"; the words "to meet" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

6 tn Or "came to him in his rented quarters."

7 tn BDAG 848 s.v. πολύς 1.b.β.ב states, "(even) more πλείονες in even greater numbers Ac 28:23."

8 tn The word "things" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the modern English reader.

9 tn Grk "to whom he explained." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun ("whom") has been replaced by the pronoun ("them") and a new sentence begun at this point in the translation.

10 tn BDAG 233 s.v. διαμαρτύρομαι 1 has "to make a solemn declaration about the truth of someth. testify of, bear witness to (orig. under oath)...God's kingdom 28:23."

11 sn Testifying about the kingdom of God. The topic is important. Paul's preaching was about the rule of God and his promise in Jesus. Paul's text was the Jewish scriptures.

12 tn Or "persuade."

13 tn Or "persuaded."

14 tn Grk "by the things spoken."

15 sn Some were convinced...but others refused to believe. Once again the gospel caused division among Jews, as in earlier chapters of Acts (13:46; 18:6).

16 tn The imperfect verb ἀπελύοντο (apeluonto) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

17 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

18 tn Grk "you will hear with hearing" (an idiom).

19 tn Or "seeing"; Grk "you will look by looking" (an idiom).

20 tn Or "insensitive."

sn The heart of this people has become dull. The charge from Isaiah is like Stephen's against the Jews of Jerusalem (Acts 7:51-53). They were a hard-hearted and disobedient people.

21 tn Grk "they hear heavily with their ears" (an idiom for slow comprehension).

22 sn Note how the failure to respond to the message of the gospel is seen as a failure to turn.

23 sn A quotation from Isa 6:9-10.

24 tn Grk "Therefore let it be known to you."

25 tn Or "of God."

26 sn The term Gentiles is in emphatic position in the Greek text of this clause. Once again there is the pattern: Jewish rejection of the gospel leads to an emphasis on Gentile inclusion (Acts 13:44-47).

27 tn Grk "they also."

28 tc Some later MSS include 28:29: "When he had said these things, the Jews departed, having a great dispute among themselves." Verse 29 is lacking in $\mathfrak{P}^{74vid}$ ℵ A B E Ψ 048 33 81 1175 1739 2464 pc and a number of versions. They are included (with a few minor variations) in 𝔐 it and some versions. This verse is almost certainly not a part of the original text of Acts, as it lacks the best credentials. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

29 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Paul) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

30 tn Or "stayed."

31 tn Or perhaps, "two whole years at his own expense." BDAG 654 s.v. μίσθωμα states, "the customary act. mng. 'contract price, rent'...is not found in our lit. (Ac) and the pass. what is rented, a rented house is a mng. not found outside it (even Ammonius Gramm. [100 AD] p. 93 Valck. knows nothing of it. Hence the transl. at his own expense [NRSV] merits attention) ἐν ἰδίῳ μισθώματι in his own rented lodgings Ac 28:30 (for the idea cp. Jos., Ant. 18, 235)."

32 tn Or "and received."

33 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

34 tn Or "openness."

35 sn Proclaiming...with complete boldness and without restriction. Once again Paul's imprisonment is on benevolent terms. The word of God is proclaimed triumphantly and boldly in Rome. Acts ends with this note: Despite all the attempts to stop it, the message goes forth.

Romans

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] a slave[2] of Christ Jesus,[3] called to be an apostle,[4] set apart for the gospel of God.[5] 1:2 This gospel[6] he promised beforehand through his prophets in the holy scriptures, 1:3 concerning his Son who was a descendant[7] of David with reference to the flesh,[8] 1:4 who was appointed the Son-of-God-in-power[9] according to the Holy Spirit[10] by the resurrection[11] from the dead, Jesus Christ our Lord. 1:5 Through him[12] we have received grace and our apostleship[13] to bring about the obedience[14] of faith[15] among all the Gentiles on behalf of his name. 1:6 You also are among them,[16] called to belong to Jesus Christ.[17] 1:7 To all those loved by God in Rome,[18] called to be saints:[19]

---

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Traditionally, "servant." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's "slave" or "servant" is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For someone who was Jewish this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

3 tc Many important mss, as well as several others (𝔓[26] ℵ A G Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐), have a reversed order of these words and read "Jesus Christ" rather than "Christ Jesus" (𝔓[10] B 81 pc). The meaning is not affected in either case, but the reading "Christ Jesus" is preferred as slightly more difficult and thus more likely the original (a scribe who found it would be prone to change it to the more common expression). At the same time, Paul is fond of the order "Christ Jesus," especially in certain letters such as Romans, Galatians, and Philippians. As well, the later Pauline letters almost uniformly use this order in the salutations. A decision is difficult, but "Christ Jesus" is slightly preferred.

4 tn Grk "a called apostle."

5 tn The genitive in the phrase εὐαγγέλιον θεοῦ (euangelion theou, "the gospel of God") could be translated as (1) a subjective genitive ("the gospel which God brings") or (2) an objective genitive ("the gospel about God"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, an interplay between the two concepts is intended: The gospel which God brings is in fact the gospel about himself. However, in view of God's action in v. 2 concerning this gospel, a subjective genitive notion ("the gospel which God brings") is slightly preferred.

6 tn Grk "the gospel of God, which he promised." Because of the length and complexity of this sentence in Greek, it was divided into shorter English sentences in keeping with contemporary English style. To indicate the referent of the relative pronoun ("which"), the word "gospel" was repeated at the beginning of v. 2.

7 tn Grk "born of the seed" (an idiom).

8 tn Grk "according to the flesh," indicating Jesus' earthly life, a reference to its weakness. This phrase implies that Jesus was more than human; otherwise it would have been sufficient to say that he was a descendant of David, cf. L. Morris, Romans, 44.

9 sn Appointed the Son-of-God-in-power. Most translations render the Greek participle ὁρισθέντος (horisthentos, from ὁρίζω, horizō) "declared" or "designated" in order to avoid the possible interpretation that Jesus was appointed the Son of God by the resurrection. However, the Greek term ὁρίζω is used eight times in the NT, and it always has the meaning "to determine, appoint." Paul is not saying that Jesus was appointed the "Son of God by the resurrection" but "Son-of-God-in-power by the resurrection," as indicated by the hyphenation. He was born in weakness in human flesh (with respect to the flesh, v. 3) and he was raised with power. This is similar to Matt 28:18 where Jesus told his disciples after the resurrection, "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me."

10 tn Grk "spirit of holiness." Some interpreters take the phrase to refer to Christ's own inner spirit, which was characterized by holiness.

11 tn Or "by his resurrection." Most interpreters see this as a reference to Jesus' own resurrection, although some take it to refer to the general resurrection at the end of the age, of which Jesus' resurrection is the first installment (cf. 1 Cor 15:23).

12 tn Grk "through whom."

13 tn Some interpreters understand the phrase "grace and apostleship" as a hendiadys, translating "grace [i.e., gift] of apostleship." The pronoun "our" is supplied in the translation to clarify the sense of the statement.

14 tn Grk "and apostleship for obedience."

15 tn The phrase ὑπακοὴν πίστεως has been variously understood as (1) an objective genitive (a reference to the Christian faith, "obedience to [the] faith"); (2) a subjective genitive ("the obedience faith produces [or requires]"); (3) an attributive genitive ("believing obedience"); or (4) as a genitive of apposition ("obedience, [namely] faith") in which "faith" further defines "obedience." These options are discussed by C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans (ICC), 1:66. Others take the phrase as deliberately ambiguous; see D. B. Garlington, "The Obedience of Faith in the Letter to the Romans: Part I: The Meaning of ὑπακοὴ πίστεως (Rom 1:5; 16:26)," WTJ 52 (1990): 201-24.

16 tn Grk "among whom you also are called." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. The NIV, with its translation "And you also are among those who are called," takes the phrase ἐν οἷς ἐστε to refer to the following clause rather than the preceding, so that the addressees of the letter ("you also") are not connected with "all the Gentiles" mentioned at the end of v. 5. It is more likely, however, that the relative pronoun οἷς has τοῖς ἔθνεσιν as its antecedent, which would indicate that the church at Rome was predominantly Gentile.

17 tn Grk "called of Jesus Christ."

18 map For location see JP4-A1.

19 tn Although the first part of v. 7 is not a complete English sentence, it maintains the "From...to" pattern used in all the Pauline letters to indicate the sender and the recipients. Here, however, there are several intervening verses (vv. 2-6),

Grace and peace to you[1] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Paul's Desire to Visit Rome

1:8 First of all,[2] I thank my God through Jesus Christ for all of you, because your faith is proclaimed throughout the whole world. 1:9 For God, whom I serve in my spirit by preaching the gospel[3] of his Son, is my witness that[4] I continually remember you 1:10 and I always ask[5] in my prayers, if perhaps now at last I may succeed in visiting you according to the will of God.[6] 1:11 For I long to see you, so that I may impart to you some spiritual gift[7] to strengthen you, 1:12 that is, that we may be mutually comforted by one another's faith,[8] both yours and mine. 1:13 I do not want you to be unaware,[9] brothers and sisters,[10] that I often intended to come to you (and was prevented until now), so that I may have some fruit even among you, just as I already have among the rest of the Gentiles.[11] 1:14 I am a debtor[12] both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish. 1:15 Thus I am eager[13] also to preach the gospel to you who are in Rome.[14]

The Power of the Gospel

1:16 For I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is God's power for salvation to everyone who believes, to the Jew first and also to the Greek.[15] 1:17 For the righteousness[16] of God is revealed in the gospel[17] from faith to faith,[18] just as it is written, "The righteous by faith will live."[19]

The Condemnation of the Unrighteous

1:18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of people[20] who suppress the truth by their[21] unrighteousness,[22] 1:19 because what can be known about God is plain to them,[23] because God has made it plain to them. 1:20 For since the creation of the world his invisible attributes – his eternal power and divine nature – have been clearly seen, because they are understood through what has been made. So people[24] are without excuse. 1:21 For although they knew God, they did not glorify him as God or give him thanks, but they became futile in their thoughts and their senseless hearts[25] were darkened. 1:22 Although they claimed[26] to be wise, they became fools 1:23 and exchanged the glory of the immortal God for an image resembling which makes the first half of v. 7 appear as an isolated sentence fragment.

[1] tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

[2] tn Grk "First." Paul never mentions a second point, so J. B. Phillips translated "I must begin by telling you...."

[3] tn Grk "whom I serve in my spirit in the gospel."

[4] tn Grk "as."

[5] tn Grk "remember you, always asking."

[6] tn Grk "succeed in coming to you in the will of God."

[7] sn Paul does not mean here that he is going to bestow upon the Roman believers what is commonly known as a "spiritual gift," that is, a special enabling for service given to believers by the Holy Spirit. Instead, this is either a metonymy of cause for effect (Paul will use his own spiritual gifts to edify the Romans), or it simply means something akin to a blessing or benefit in the spiritual realm. It is possible that Paul uses this phrase to connote specifically the broader purpose of his letter, which is for the Romans to understand his gospel, but this seems less likely.

[8] tn Grk "that is, to be comforted together with you through the faith in one another."

[9] sn The expression "I do not want you to be unaware [Grk ignorant]" also occurs in 1 Cor 10:1; 12:1; 1 Thess 4:13. Paul uses the phrase to signal that he is about to say something very important.

[10] tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited).

[11] tn Grk "in order that I might have some fruit also among you just as also among the rest of the Gentiles."

[12] tn Or "obligated."

[13] tn Or "willing, ready"; Grk "so my eagerness [is] to preach..." The word πρόθυμος (prothumos, "eager, willing") is used only elsewhere in the NT in Matt 26:41 = Mark 14:38: "the spirit indeed is willing (πρόθυμος), but the flesh is weak."

[14] map For location see JP4-A1.

[15] sn Here the Greek refers to anyone who is not Jewish.

[16] tn The nature of the "righteousness" described here and the force of the genitive θεοῦ ("of God") which follows have been much debated. (1) Some (e.g. C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:98) understand "righteousness" to refer to the righteous status given to believers as a result of God's justifying activity, and see the genitive "of God" as a genitive of source (= "from God"). (2) Others see the "righteousness" as God's act or declaration that makes righteous (i.e., justifies) those who turn to him in faith, taking the genitive "of God" as a subjective genitive (see E. Käsemann, Romans, 25-30). (3) Still others see the "righteousness of God" mentioned here as the attribute of God himself, understanding the genitive "of God" as a possessive genitive ("God's righteousness").

[17] tn Grk "in it"; the referent (the gospel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn Or "by faith for faith," or "by faith to faith." There are many interpretations of the phrase ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν (ek pisteōs eis pistin). It may have the idea that this righteousness is obtained by faith (ἐκ πίστεως) because it was designed for faith (εἰς πίστιν). For a summary see J. Murray, Romans (NICNT), 1:363-74.

[19] sn A quotation from Hab 2:4.

[20] tn The genitive ἀνθρώπων could be taken as an attributed genitive, in which case the phase should be translated "against all ungodly and unrighteous people" (cf. "the truth of God" in v. 25 which is also probably an attributed genitive). C. E. B. Cranfield takes the section 1:18-32 to refer to all people (not just Gentiles), while 2:1-3:20 points out that the Jew is no exception (Romans [ICC], 1:104-6; 1:137-38).

[21] tn "Their" is implied in the Greek, but is supplied because of English style.

[22] tn Or "by means of unrighteousness." Grk "in (by) unrighteousness."

[23] tn Grk "is manifest to/in them."

[24] tn Grk "they"; the referent (people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[25] tn Grk "heart."

[26] tn The participle φάσκοντες (phaskontes) is used concessively here.

mortal human beings[1] or birds or four-footed animals[2] or reptiles.

1:24 Therefore God gave them over[3] in the desires of their hearts to impurity, to dishonor[4] their bodies among themselves.[5] 1:25 They[6] exchanged the truth of God for a lie[7] and worshiped and served the creation[8] rather than the Creator, who is blessed forever! Amen.

1:26 For this reason God gave them over to dishonorable passions. For their women exchanged the natural sexual relations for unnatural ones,[9] 1:27 and likewise the men also abandoned natural relations with women[10] and were inflamed in their passions[11] for one another. Men[12] committed shameless acts with men and received in themselves the due penalty for their error.

1:28 And just as they did not see fit to acknowledge God,[13] God gave them over to a depraved mind, to do what should not be done.[14] 1:29 They are filled[15] with every kind of unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, malice. They are rife with[16] envy, murder, strife, deceit, hostility. They are gossips, 1:30 slanderers, haters of God, insolent, arrogant, boastful, contrivers of all sorts of evil, disobedient to parents, 1:31 senseless, covenant-breakers,[17] heartless, ruthless. 1:32 Although they fully know[18] God's righteous decree that those who practice such things deserve to die,[19] they not only do them but also approve of those who practice them.[20]

The Condemnation of the Moralist

2:1[21] Therefore[22] you are without excuse,[23] whoever you are,[24] when you judge someone else.[25] For on whatever grounds[26] you judge another, you condemn yourself, because you who judge practice the same things. 2:2 Now we know that God's judgment is in accordance with truth[27] against those who practice such things. 2:3 And do you think,[28] whoever you are, when you judge[29] those who practice such things and yet do them yourself,[30] that you will escape God's judgment? 2:4 Or do you have contempt for the wealth of his kindness, forbearance, and patience, and yet do not know[31] that God's kindness leads you to repentance? 2:5 But because of

[1] tn Grk "exchanged the glory of the incorruptible God in likeness of an image of corruptible man." Here there is a wordplay on the Greek terms ἄφθαρτος (aphthartos, "immortal, imperishable, incorruptible") and φθαρτός (phthartos, "mortal, corruptible, subject to decay").

[2] sn Possibly an allusion to Ps 106:19-20.

[3] sn Possibly an allusion to Ps 81:12.

[4] tn The genitive articular infinitive τοῦ ἀτιμάζεσθαι (tou atimazesthai, "to dishonor") has been taken as (1) an infinitive of purpose; (2) an infinitive of result; or (3) an epexegetical (i.e., explanatory) infinitive, expanding the previous clause.

[5] tn Grk "among them."

[6] tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun was converted to a personal pronoun and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[7] tn Grk "the lie."

[8] tn Or "creature, created things."

[9] tn Grk "for their females exchanged the natural function for that which is contrary to nature." The term χρῆσις (chrēsis) has the force of "sexual relations" here (L&N 23.65).

[10] tn Grk "likewise so also the males abandoning the natural function of the female."

[11] tn Grk "burned with intense desire" (L&N 25.16).

[12] tn Grk "another, men committing...and receiving," continuing the description of their deeds. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[13] tn Grk "and just as they did not approve to have God in knowledge."

[14] tn Grk "the things that are improper."

[15] tn Grk "being filled" or "having been filled," referring to those described in v. 28. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[16] tn Grk "malice, full of," continuing the description. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[17] tn Or "promise-breakers."

[18] tn Grk "who, knowing..., not only do them but also approve..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[19] tn Grk "are worthy of death."

[20] sn "Vice lists" like vv. 28-32 can be found elsewhere in the NT in Matt 15:19; Gal 5:19-21; 1 Tim 1:9-10; and 1 Pet 4:3. An example from the intertestamental period can be found in Wis 14:25-26.

[21] sn Rom 2:1-29 presents unusual difficulties for the interpreter. There have been several major approaches to the chapter and the group(s) it refers to: (1) Rom 2:14 refers to Gentile Christians, not Gentiles who obey the Jewish law. (2) Paul in Rom 2 is presenting a hypothetical viewpoint: If anyone could obey the law, that person would be justified, but no one can. (3) The reference to "the ones who do the law" in 2:13 are those who "do" the law in the right way, on the basis of faith, not according to Jewish legalism. (4) Rom 2:13 only speaks about Christians being judged in the future, along with such texts as Rom 14:10 and 2 Cor 5:10. (5) Paul's material in Rom 2 is drawn heavily from Diaspora Judaism, so that the treatment of the law presented here cannot be harmonized with other things Paul says about the law elsewhere (E. P. Sanders, Paul, the Law, and the Jewish People, 123); another who sees Rom 2 as an example of Paul's inconsistency in his treatment of the law is H. Räisänen, Paul and the Law [WUNT], 101-9. (6) The list of blessings and curses in Deut 27–30 provide the background for Rom 2; the Gentiles of 2:14 are Gentile Christians, but the condemnation of Jews in 2:17-24 addresses the failure of Jews as a nation to keep the law as a whole (A. Ito, "Romans 2: A Deuteronomistic Reading," JSNT 59 [1995]: 21-37).

[22] tn Some interpreters (e.g., C. K. Barrett, Romans [HNTC], 43) connect the inferential Διό (dio, "therefore") with 1:32a, treating 1:32b as a parenthetical comment by Paul.

[23] tn That is, "you have nothing to say in your own defense" (so translated by TCNT).

[24] tn Grk "O man."

[25] tn Grk "Therefore, you are without excuse, O man, everyone [of you] who judges."

[26] tn Grk "in/by (that) which."

[27] tn Or "based on truth."

[28] tn Grk "do you think this," referring to the clause in v. 3b.

[29] tn Grk "O man, the one who judges."

[30] tn Grk "and do them." The other words are supplied to bring out the contrast implied in this clause.

[31] tn Grk "being unaware."

your stubbornness[1] and your unrepentant heart, you are storing up wrath for yourselves in the day of wrath, when God's righteous judgment is revealed![2] 2:6 He[3] will reward[4] each one according to his works:[5] 2:7 eternal life to those who by perseverance in good works seek glory and honor and immortality, 2:8 but[6] wrath and anger to those who live in selfish ambition[7] and do not obey the truth but follow[8] unrighteousness. 2:9 There will be[9] affliction and distress on everyone[10] who does evil, on the Jew first and also the Greek,[11] 2:10 but[12] glory and honor and peace for everyone who does good, for the Jew first and also the Greek. 2:11 For there is no partiality with God. 2:12 For all who have sinned apart from the law[13] will also perish apart from the law, and all who have sinned under the law will be judged by the law. 2:13 For it is not those who hear the law who are righteous before God, but those who do the law will be declared righteous.[14] 2:14 For whenever the Gentiles,[15] who do not have the law, do by nature[16] the things required by the law,[17] these who do not have the law are a law to themselves. 2:15 They[18] show that the work of the law is written[19] in their hearts, as their conscience bears witness and their conflicting thoughts accuse or else defend[20] them,[21] 2:16 on the day when God will judge[22] the secrets of human hearts,[23] according to my gospel[24] through Christ Jesus.

The Condemnation of the Jew

2:17 But if you call yourself a Jew and rely on the law[25] and boast of your relationship to God[26] 2:18 and know his will[27] and approve the superior things because you receive instruction from the law,[28] 2:19 and if you are convinced[29] that you yourself are a guide to the blind, a light to those who are in darkness, 2:20 an educator of the senseless, a teacher of little children, because you have in the law the essential features of knowledge and of the truth – 2:21 therefore[30] you who teach someone else, do you not teach yourself? You who preach against stealing, do you steal? 2:22 You who tell others not to commit adultery, do you commit adultery? You who abhor[31] idols, do you rob temples? 2:23 You who boast in the law dishonor God by transgressing the law! 2:24 For just as it is written, "the name of God is being blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you."[32]

---

[1] tn Grk "hardness." Concerning this imagery, see Jer 4:4; Ezek 3:7; 1 En. 16:3.

[2] tn Grk "in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God."

[3] tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun was converted to a personal pronoun and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[4] tn Or "will render," "will recompense." In this context Paul is setting up a hypothetical situation, not stating that salvation is by works.

[5] sn A quotation from Ps 62:12; Prov 24:12; a close approximation to Matt 16:27.

[6] tn This contrast is clearer and stronger in Greek than can be easily expressed in English.

[7] tn Grk "those who [are] from selfish ambition."

[8] tn Grk "are persuaded by, obey."

[9] tn No verb is expressed in this verse, but the verb "to be" is implied by the Greek construction. Literally "suffering and distress on everyone..."

[10] tn Grk "every soul of man."

[11] sn Paul uses the term Greek here and in v. 10 to refer to non-Jews, i.e., Gentiles.

[12] tn Grk "but even," to emphasize the contrast. The second word has been omitted since it is somewhat redundant in English idiom.

[13] sn This is the first occurrence of law (nomos) in Romans. Exactly what Paul means by the term has been the subject of much scholarly debate. According to J. A. Fitzmyer (Romans [AB], 131-35; 305-6) there are at least four different senses: (1) figurative, as a "principle"; (2) generic, meaning "a law"; (3) as a reference to the OT or some part of the OT; and (4) as a reference to the Mosaic law. This last usage constitutes the majority of Paul's references to "law" in Romans.

[14] tn The Greek sentence expresses this contrast more succinctly than is possible in English. Grk "For not the hearers of the law are righteous before God, but the doers of the law will be declared righteous."

[15] sn Gentile is a NT term for a non-Jew.

[16] tn Some (e.g. C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:135-37) take the phrase φύσει (phusei, "by nature") to go with the preceding "do not have the law," thus: "the Gentiles who do not have the law by nature," that is, by virtue of not being born Jewish.

[17] tn Grk "do by nature the things of the law."

[18] tn Grk "who." The relative pronoun was converted to a personal pronoun and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[19] tn Grk "show the work of the law [to be] written," with the words in brackets implied by the Greek construction.

[20] tn Or "excuse."

[21] tn Grk "their conscience bearing witness and between the thoughts accusing or also defending one another."

[22] tn The form of the Greek word is either present or future, but it is best to translate in future because of the context of future judgment.

[23] tn Grk "of people."

[24] sn On my gospel cf. Rom 16:25; 2 Tim 2:8.

[25] sn The law refers to the Mosaic law, described mainly in the OT books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

[26] tn Grk "boast in God." This may be an allusion to Jer 9:24.

[27] tn Grk "the will."

[28] tn Grk "because of being instructed out of the law."

[29] tn This verb is parallel to the verbs in vv. 17-18a, so it shares the conditional meaning even though the word "if" is not repeated.

[30] tn The structure of vv. 21-24 is difficult. Some take these verses as the apodosis of the conditional clauses (protases) in vv. 17-20; others see vv. 17-20 as an instance of anacoluthon (a broken off or incomplete construction).

[31] tn Or "detest."

[32] sn A quotation from Isa 52:5.

2:25 For circumcision[1] has its value if you practice the law, but[2] if you break the law,[3] your circumcision has become uncircumcision. 2:26 Therefore if the uncircumcised man obeys[4] the righteous requirements of the law, will not his uncircumcision be regarded as circumcision? 2:27 And will not the physically uncircumcised man[5] who keeps the law judge you who, despite[6] the written code[7] and circumcision, transgress the law? 2:28 For a person is not a Jew who is one outwardly, nor is circumcision something that is outward in the flesh, 2:29 but someone is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumcision is of the heart[8] by the Spirit[9] and not by the written code.[10] This person's[11] praise is not from people but from God.

3:1 Therefore what advantage does the Jew have, or what is the value of circumcision? 3:2 Actually, there are many advantages.[12] First of all,[13] the Jews[14] were entrusted with the oracles of God.[15] 3:3 What then? If some did not believe, does their unbelief nullify the faithfulness of God? 3:4 Absolutely not! Let God be proven true, and every human being[16] shown up as a liar,[17] just as it is written: "so that you will be justified[18] in your words and will prevail when you are judged."[19]

3:5 But if our unrighteousness demonstrates[20] the righteousness of God, what shall we say? The God who inflicts wrath is not unrighteous, is he?[21] (I am speaking in human terms.)[22] 3:6 Absolutely not! For otherwise how could God judge the world? 3:7 For if by my lie the truth of God enhances[23] his glory, why am I still actually being judged as a sinner? 3:8 And why not say, "Let us do evil so that good may come of it"? – as some who slander us allege that we say.[24] (Their[25] condemnation is deserved!)

The Condemnation of the World

3:9 What then? Are we better off? Certainly not, for we have already charged that Jews and Greeks alike are all under sin, 3:10 just as it is written:

> "There is no one righteous, not even one,
> 3:11 there is no one who understands,
> there is no one who seeks God.
> 3:12 All have turned away, > together they have become worthless;
> there is no one who shows kindness, not even one."[26] > 3:13 "Their throats are open graves,[27] > they deceive with their tongues, > the poison of asps is under their lips."[28]
> 3:14 "Their mouths are[29] full of cursing and bitterness."[30]
> 3:15 "Their feet are swift to shed blood,
> 3:16 ruin and misery are in their paths,

1 sn Circumcision refers to male circumcision as prescribed in the OT, which was given as a covenant to Abraham in Gen 17:10-14. Its importance for Judaism can hardly be overstated: According to J. D. G. Dunn (Romans [WBC], 1:120) it was the "single clearest distinguishing feature of the covenant people." J. Marcus has suggested that the terms used for circumcision (περιτομή, peritomē) and uncircumcision (ἀκροβυστία, akrobustia) were probably derogatory slogans used by Jews and Gentiles to describe their opponents ("The Circumcision and the Uncircumcision in Rome," NTS 35 [1989]: 77-80).

2 tn This contrast is clearer and stronger in Greek than can be easily expressed in English.

3 tn Grk "if you should be a transgressor of the law."

4 tn The Greek word φυλάσσω (phulassō, traditionally translated "keep") in this context connotes preservation of and devotion to an object as well as obedience.

5 tn Grk "the uncircumcision by nature." The word "man" is supplied here to make clear that male circumcision (or uncircumcision) is in view.

6 tn Grk "through," but here the preposition seems to mean "(along) with," "though provided with," as BDAG 224 s.v. διά A.3.c indicates.

7 tn Grk "letter."

8 sn On circumcision is of the heart see Lev 26:41; Deut 10:16; Jer 4:4; Ezek 44:9.

9 tn Some have taken the phrase ἐν πνεύματι (en pneumati, "by/in [the] S/spirit") not as a reference to the Holy Spirit, but referring to circumcision as "spiritual and not literal" (RSV).

10 tn Grk "letter."

11 tn Grk "whose." The relative pronoun has been replaced by the phrase "this person's" and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation.

12 tn Grk "much in every way."

13 tc ‡ Most witnesses (ℵ A D² 33 𝔐) have γάρ (gar) after μέν (men), though some significant Alexandrian and Western witnesses lack the conjunction (B D* G Ψ 81 365 1506 2464* pc latt). A few mss have γάρ, but not μέν (6 1739 1881). γάρ was frequently added by scribes as a clarifying conjunction, making it suspect here. NA²⁷ has the γάρ in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "first indeed that."

14 tn Grk "they were."

15 tn The referent of λόγια (logia, "oracles") has been variously understood: (1) BDAG 598 s.v. λόγιον takes the term to refer here to "God's promises to the Jews"; (2) some have taken this to refer more narrowly to the national promises of messianic salvation given to Israel (so S. L. Johnson, Jr., "Studies in Romans: Part VII: The Jews and the Oracles of God," BSac 130 [1973]: 245); (3) perhaps the most widespread interpretation sees the term as referring to the entire OT generally.

16 tn Grk "every man," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here to stress humanity rather than masculinity.

17 tn Grk "Let God be true, and every man a liar." The words "proven" and "shown up" are supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning.

18 tn Grk "might be justified," a subjunctive verb, but in this type of clause it carries the same sense as the future indicative verb in the latter part. "Will" is more idiomatic in contemporary English.

19 tn Or "prevail when you judge." A quotation from Ps 51:4.

20 tn Or "shows clearly."

21 tn Grk "That God is not unjust to inflict wrath, is he?"

22 sn The same expression occurs in Gal 3:15, and similar phrases in Rom 6:19 and 1 Cor 9:8.

23 tn Grk "abounded unto."

24 tn Grk "(as we are slandered and some affirm that we say...)."

25 tn Grk "whose." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, this relative clause was rendered as a new sentence in the translation.

26 sn Verses 10-12 are a quotation from Ps 14:1-3.

27 tn Grk "their throat is an opened grave."

28 sn A quotation from Pss 5:9; 140:3.

29 tn Grk "whose mouth is." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

30 sn A quotation from Ps 10:7.

3:17 and the way of peace they have not known."[1]
3:18 "There is no fear of God before their eyes."[2]

3:19 Now we know that whatever the law says, it says to those who are under[3] the law, so that every mouth may be silenced and the whole world may be held accountable to God. 3:20 For no one is declared righteous before him[4] by the works of the law,[5] for through the law comes[6] the knowledge of sin. 3:21 But now[7] apart from the law the righteousness of God (which is attested by the law and the prophets)[8] has been disclosed – 3:22 namely, the righteousness of God through the faithfulness of Jesus Christ[9] for all who believe. For there is no distinction, 3:23 for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God. 3:24 But they are justified[10] freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. 3:25 God publicly displayed[11] him[12] at his death[13] as the mercy seat[14] accessible through

[1] sn Rom 3:15-17 is a quotation from Isa 59:7-8.

[2] sn A quotation from Ps 36:1.

[3] tn Grk "in," "in connection with."

[4] sn An allusion to Ps 143:2.

[5] tn Grk "because by the works of the law no flesh is justified before him." Some recent scholars have understood the phrase ἔργα νόμου (erga nomou, "works of the law") to refer not to obedience to the Mosaic law generally, but specifically to portions of the law that pertain to things like circumcision and dietary laws which set the Jewish people apart from the other nations (e.g., J. D. G. Dunn, Romans [WBC], 1:155). Other interpreters, like C. E. B. Cranfield ("'The Works of the Law' in the Epistle to the Romans," JSNT 43 [1991]: 89-101) reject this narrow interpretation for a number of reasons, among which the most important are: (1) The second half of v. 20, "for through the law comes the knowledge of sin," is hard to explain if the phrase "works of the law" is understood in a restricted sense; (2) the plural phrase "works of the law" would have to be understood in a different sense from the singular phrase "the work of the law" in 2:15; (3) similar phrases involving the law in Romans (2:13, 14; 2:25, 26, 27; 7:25; 8:4; and 13:8) which are naturally related to the phrase "works of the law" cannot be taken to refer to circumcision (in fact, in 2:25 circumcision is explicitly contrasted with keeping the law). Those interpreters who reject the "narrow" interpretation of "works of the law" understand the phrase to refer to obedience to the Mosaic law in general.

[6] tn Grk "is."

[7] tn Νυνὶ δέ (Nuni de, "But now") could be understood as either (1) logical or (2) temporal in force, but most recent interpreters take it as temporal, referring to a new phase in salvation history.

[8] tn Grk "being witnessed by the law and the prophets," a remark which is virtually parenthetical to Paul's argument.

[9] tn Or "faith in Christ." A decision is difficult here. Though traditionally translated "faith in Jesus Christ," an increasing number of NT scholars are arguing that πίστις Χριστοῦ (pistis Christou) and similar phrases in Paul (here and in v. 26; Gal 2:16, 20; 3:22; Eph 3:12; Phil 3:9) involve a subjective genitive and mean "Christ's faith" or "Christ's faithfulness" (cf., e.g., G. Howard, "The 'Faith of Christ'," ExpTim 85 [1974]: 212-15; R. B. Hays, The Faith of Jesus Christ [SBLDS]; Morna D. Hooker, "Πίστις Χριστοῦ," NTS 35 [1989]: 321-42). Noteworthy among the arguments for the subjective genitive view is that when πίστις takes a personal genitive it is almost never an objective genitive (cf. Matt 9:2, 22, 29; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:25, 48; 17:19; 18:42; 22:32; Rom 1:8; 12; 3:3; 4:5, 12, 16; 1 Cor 2:5; 15:14, 17; 2 Cor 10:15; Phil 2:17; Col 1:4; 2:5; 1 Thess 1:8; 3:2, 5, 10; 2 Thess 1:3; Titus 1:1; Phlm 6; 1 Pet 1:9, 21; 2 Pet 1:5). On the other hand, the objective genitive view has its adherents: A. Hultgren, "The Pistis Christou Formulations in Paul," NovT 22 (1980): 248-63; J. D. G. Dunn, "Once More, ΠΙΣΤΙΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ," SBL Seminar Papers, 1991, 730-44. Most commentaries on Romans and Galatians usually side with the objective view.

sn ExSyn 116, which notes that the grammar is not decisive, nevertheless suggests that "the faith/faithfulness of Christ is not a denial of faith in Christ as a Pauline concept (for the idea is expressed in many of the same contexts, only with the verb πιστεύω rather than the noun), but implies that the object of faith is a worthy object, for he himself is faithful." Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

[10] tn Or "declared righteous." Grk "being justified," as a continuation of the preceding clause. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[11] tn Or "purposed, intended."

[12] tn Grk "whom God publicly displayed." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[13] tn Grk "in his blood." The prepositional phrase ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι (en tō autou haimati) is difficult to interpret. It is traditionally understood to refer to the atoning sacrifice Jesus made when he shed his blood on the cross, and as a modifier of ἱλαστήριον (hilastērion). This interpretation fits if ἱλαστήριον is taken to refer to a sacrifice. But if ἱλαστήριον is taken to refer to the place where atonement is made as this translation has done (see note on the phrase "mercy seat"), this interpretation of ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι creates a violent mixed metaphor. Within a few words Paul would switch from referring to Jesus as the place where atonement was made to referring to Jesus as the atoning sacrifice itself. A viable option which resolves this problem is to see ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι as modifying the verb προέθετο (proetheto). If it modifies the verb, it would explain the time or place in which God publicly displayed Jesus as the mercy seat; the reference to blood would be a metaphorical way of speaking of Jesus' death. This is supported by the placement of ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι in the Greek text (it follows the noun, separated from it by another prepositional phrase) and by stylistic parallels with Rom 1:4. This is the interpretation the translation has followed, although it is recognized that many interpreters favor different options and translations. The prepositional phrase has been moved forward in the sentence to emphasize its connection with the verb, and the referent of the metaphorical language has been specified in the translation. For a detailed discussion of this interpretation, see D. P. Bailey, "Jesus As the Mercy Seat: The Semantics and Theology of Paul's Use of Hilasterion in Romans 3:25" (Ph.D. diss., University of Cambridge, 1999).

[14] tn The word ἱλαστήριον (hilastērion) may carry the general sense "place of satisfaction," referring to the place where God's wrath toward sin is satisfied. More likely, though, it refers specifically to the "mercy seat," i.e., the covering of the ark where the blood was sprinkled in the OT ritual on the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur). This term is used only one other time in the NT: Heb 9:5, where it is rendered "mercy seat." There it describes the altar in the most holy place (holy of holies). Thus Paul is saying that God displayed Jesus as the "mercy seat," the place where propitiation was accomplished. See N. S. L. Fryer, "The Meaning and Translation of Hilasterion in Romans 3:25," EvQ 59 (1987): 99-116, who concludes the term is a neuter accusative substantive best translated "mercy seat" or "propitiatory covering," and D. P. Bailey, "Jesus As the Mercy Seat: The Semantics and Theology of Paul's Use of Hilasterion in Romans 3:25" (Ph.D. diss., University of Cambridge, 1999), who argues that this is a direct reference to the mercy seat which covered the ark of the covenant.

faith.[1] This was to demonstrate[2] his righteousness, because God in his forbearance had passed over the sins previously committed.[3] 3:26 This was[4] also to demonstrate[5] his righteousness in the present time, so that he would be just[6] and the justifier of the one who lives because of Jesus' faithfulness.[7] 3:27 Where, then, is boasting?[8] It is excluded! By what principle?[9] Of works? No, but by the principle of faith! 3:28 For we consider that a person[10] is declared righteous by faith apart from the works of the law.[11] 3:29 Or is God the God of the Jews only? Is he not the God of the Gentiles too? Yes, of the Gentiles too! 3:30 Since God is one,[12] he will justify the circumcised by faith and the uncircumcised through faith. 3:31 Do we then nullify[13] the law through faith? Absolutely not! Instead[14] we uphold the law.

The Illustration of Justification

4:1 What then shall we say that Abraham, our ancestor according to the flesh,[15] has discovered regarding this matter?[16] 4:2 For if Abraham was declared righteous[17] by the works of the law, he has something to boast about – but not before God. 4:3 For what does the scripture say? "Abraham believed God, and it was credited[18] to him as righteousness."[19] 4:4 Now to the one who works, his pay is not credited due to grace but due to obligation.[20] 4:5 But to the one who does not work, but believes in the one who declares the ungodly righteous,[21] his faith is credited as righteousness.

4:6 So even David himself speaks regarding the blessedness of the man to whom God credits righteousness apart from works:

> 4:7 "Blessed[22] are those whose lawless deeds are forgiven, and whose sins are covered;
> 4:8 blessed is the one[23] against whom the Lord will never count[24] sin."[25]

4:9 Is this blessedness[26] then for[27] the circumcision[28] or also for[29] the uncircumcision? For we say, "faith was credited to Abraham as righteousness."[30] 4:10 How then was it credited to him? Was he circumcised at the time, or not? No, he was not circumcised but uncircumcised! 4:11 And he received the sign of circumcision as a seal of the righteousness that he had by faith while he was still uncircumcised,[31] so that he would become[32] the father of all those who believe but have never been circumcised,[33] that they too could have righteousness credited to them. 4:12 And he is also the father of the circumcised,[34] who are not only circumcised, but who also walk in the footsteps of the faith that

[1] tn The prepositional phrase διὰ πίστεως (dia pisteōs) here modifies the noun ἱλαστήριον (hilastērion). As such it forms a complete noun phrase and could be written as "mercy-seat-accessible-through-faith" to emphasize the singular idea. See Rom 1:4 for a similar construction. The word "accessible" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied to clarify the idea expressed by the prepositional phrase (cf. NRSV: "effective through faith").

[2] tn Grk "for a demonstration," giving the purpose of God's action in v. 25a. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[3] tn Grk "because of the passing over of sins previously committed in the forbearance of God."

[4] tn The words "This was" have been repeated from the previous verse to clarify that this is a continuation of that thought. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[5] tn Grk "toward a demonstration," repeating and expanding the purpose of God's action in v. 25a.

[6] tn Or "righteous."

[7] tn Or "of the one who has faith in Jesus." See note on "faithfulness of Jesus Christ" in v. 22 for the rationale behind the translation "Jesus' faithfulness."

[8] tn Although a number of interpreters understand the "boasting" here to refer to Jewish boasting, others (e.g. C. E. B. Cranfield, "'The Works of the Law' in the Epistle to the Romans," JSNT 43 [1991]: 96) take the phrase to refer to all human boasting before God.

[9] tn Grk "By what sort of law?"

[10] tn Here ἄνθρωπον (anthrōpon) is used in an indefinite and general sense (BDAG 81 s.v. ἄνθρωπος 4.a.γ).

[11] tn See the note on the phrase "works of the law" in Rom 3:20.

[12] tn Grk "but if indeed God is one."

[13] tn Grk "render inoperative."

[14] tn Grk "but" (Greek ἀλλά, alla).

[15] tn Or "according to natural descent" (BDAG 916 s.v. σάρξ 4).

[16] tn Grk "has found?"

[17] tn Or "was justified."

[18] tn The term λογίζομαι (logizomai) occurs 11 times in this chapter (vv. 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 22, 23, 24). In secular usage it could (a) refer to deliberations of some sort, or (b) in commercial dealings (as virtually a technical term) to "reckoning" or "charging up a debt." See H. W. Heidland, TDNT 4:284, 290-92.

[19] sn A quotation from Gen 15:6.

[20] tn Grk "not according to grace but according to obligation."

[21] tn Or "who justifies the ungodly."

[22] tn Or "Happy."

[23] tn The word for "man" or "individual" here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." However, as BDAG 79 s.v. 2 says, here it is "equivalent to τὶς someone, a person."

[24] tn The verb translated "count" here is λογίζομαι (logizomai). It occurs eight times in Rom 4:1-12, including here, each time with the sense of "place on someone's account." By itself the word is neutral, but in particular contexts it can take on a positive or negative connotation. The other occurrences of the verb have been translated using a form of the English verb "credit" because they refer to a positive event: the application of righteousness to the individual believer. The use here in v. 8 is negative: the application of sin. A form of the verb "credit" was not used here because of the positive connotations associated with that English word, but it is important to recognize that the same concept is used here as in the other occurrences.

[25] sn A quotation from Ps 32:1-2.

[26] tn Or "happiness."

[27] tn Grk "upon."

[28] sn See the note on "circumcision" in 2:25.

[29] tn Grk "upon."

[30] sn A quotation from Gen 15:6.

[31] tn Grk "of the faith, the one [existing] in uncircumcision."

[32] tn Grk "that he might be," giving the purpose of v. 11a.

[33] tn Grk "through uncircumcision."

[34] tn Grk "the father of circumcision."

our father Abraham possessed when he was still uncircumcised.[1]

4:13 For the promise[2] to Abraham or to his descendants that he would inherit the world was not fulfilled through the law, but through the righteousness that comes by faith. 4:14 For if they become heirs by the law, faith is empty and the promise is nullified.[3] 4:15 For the law brings wrath, because where there is no law there is no transgression[4] either. 4:16 For this reason it is by faith so that it may be by grace,[5] with the result that the promise may be certain to all the descendants – not only to those who are under the law, but also to those who have the faith of Abraham,[6] who is the father of us all 4:17 (as it is written, "I have made you the father of many nations").[7] He is our father[8] in the presence of God whom he believed – the God who[9] makes the dead alive and summons the things that do not yet exist as though they already do.[10] 4:18 Against hope Abraham[11] believed[12] in hope with the result that he became the father of many nations[13] according to the pronouncement,[14] "so will your descendants be."[15] 4:19 Without being weak in faith, he considered[16] his own body as dead[17] (because he was about one hundred years old) and the deadness of Sarah's womb. 4:20 He[18] did not waver in unbelief about the promise of God but was strengthened in faith, giving glory to God. 4:21 He was[19] fully convinced that what God[20] promised he was also able to do. 4:22 So indeed it was credited to Abraham[21] as righteousness.

4:23 But the statement it was credited to him[22] was not written only for Abraham's[23] sake, 4:24 but also for our sake, to whom it will be credited, those who believe in the one who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead. 4:25 He[24] was given over[25] because of our transgressions

1 tn Grk "the 'in-uncircumcision faith' of our father Abraham."

2 sn Although a singular noun, the promise is collective and does not refer only to Gen 12:7, but as D. Moo (Romans 1-8 [WEC], 279) points out, refers to multiple aspects of the promise to Abraham: multiplied descendants (Gen 12:2), possession of the land (Gen 13:15-17), and his becoming the vehicle of blessing to all people (Gen 12:3).

3 tn Grk "rendered inoperative."

4 tn Or "violation."

5 tn Grk "that it might be according to grace."

6 tn Grk "those who are of the faith of Abraham."

7 tn Verses 16-17 comprise one sentence in Greek, but this has been divided into two sentences due to English requirements.

sn A quotation from Gen 17:5. The quotation forms a parenthesis in Paul's argument.

8 tn The words "He is our father" are not in the Greek text but are supplied to show that they resume Paul's argument from 16b. (It is also possible to supply "Abraham had faith" here [so REB], taking the relative clause ["who is the father of us all"] as part of the parenthesis, and making the connection back to "the faith of Abraham," but such an option is not as likely [C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:243].)

9 tn "The God" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

10 tn Or "calls into existence the things that do not exist." The translation of ὡς ὄντα (hōs onta) allows for two different interpretations. If it has the force of result, then creatio ex nihilo is in view and the variant rendering is to be accepted (so C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:244). A problem with this view is the scarcity of ὡς plus participle to indicate result (though for the telic idea with ὡς plus participle, cf. Rom 15:15; 1 Thess 2:4). If it has a comparative force, then the translation given in the text is to be accepted: "this interpretation fits the immediate context better than a reference to God's creative power, for it explains the assurance with which God can speak of the 'many nations' that will be descended from Abraham" (D. Moo, Romans [NICNT], 282; so also W. Sanday and A. C. Headlam, Romans [ICC], 113). Further, this view is in line with a Pauline idiom, viz., verb followed by ὡς plus participle (of the same verb or, in certain contexts, its antonym) to compare present reality with what is not a present reality (cf. 1 Cor 4:7; 5:3; 7:29, 30 (three times), 31; Col 2:20 [similarly, 2 Cor 6:9, 10]).

11 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Abraham) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Grk "who against hope believed," referring to Abraham. The relative pronoun was converted to a personal pronoun and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

13 sn A quotation from Gen 17:5.

14 tn Grk "according to that which had been spoken."

15 sn A quotation from Gen 15:5.

16 tc Most MSS (D F G Ψ 33 1881 𝔐 it) read "he did not consider" by including the negative particle (οὐ, ou), but others (𝔓 A B C 6 81 365 1506 1739 pc co) lack οὐ. The reading which includes the negative particle probably represents a scribal attempt to exalt the faith of Abraham by making it appear that his faith was so strong that he did not even consider the physical facts. But "here Paul does not wish to imply that faith means closing one's eyes to reality, but that Abraham was so strong in faith as to be undaunted by every consideration" (TCGNT 451). Both on external and internal grounds, the reading without the negative particle is preferred.

17 tc ‡ Most witnesses (𝔓 A C D Ψ 33 𝔐 bo) have ἤδη (ēdē, "already") at this point in v. 19. But B F G 630 1739 1881 pc lat sa lack it. Since it appears to heighten the style of the narrative and since there is no easy accounting for an accidental omission, it is best to regard the shorter text as original. NA[27] includes the word in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

18 tn Grk "And he." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, δέ (de) has not been translated here.

19 tn Grk "and being." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

20 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Abraham) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn A quotation from Gen 15:6.

23 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Abraham) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Grk "who," referring to Jesus. The relative pronoun was converted to a personal pronoun and, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

25 tn Or "handed over."

sn The verb translated given over (παραδίδωμι, paradidōmi) is also used in Rom 1:24, 26, 28 to describe God giving people over to sin. But it is also used frequently in the gospels to describe Jesus being handed over (or delivered up, betrayed) by sinful men for crucifixion (cf., e.g., Matt 26:21; 27:4; Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:33; 15:15; Luke 20:20; 22:24; 24:7). It is probable that Paul has both ideas in mind: Jesus was handed over by sinners, but even this betrayal was directed by the Father for our sake (because of our transgressions).

and was raised for the sake of[1] our justification.[2]

The Expectation of Justification

5:1[3] Therefore, since we have been declared righteous by faith, we have[4] peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, 5:2 through whom we have also obtained access by faith into this grace in which we stand, and we rejoice[5] in the hope of God's glory. 5:3 Not[6] only this, but we also rejoice in sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance, 5:4 and endurance, character, and character, hope. 5:5 And hope does not disappoint, because the love of God[7] has been poured out[8] in our hearts through the Holy Spirit who was given to us.

5:6 For while we were still helpless, at the right time Christ died for the ungodly. 5:7 (For rarely will anyone die for a righteous person, though for a good person perhaps someone might possibly dare to die.)[9] 5:8 But God demonstrates his own love for us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us. 5:9 Much more then, because we have now been declared righteous[10] by his blood,[11] we will be saved through him from God's wrath.[12] 5:10 For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, how much more, since we have been reconciled, will we be saved by his life? 5:11 Not[13] only this, but we also rejoice[14] in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received this reconciliation.

[1] tn Grk "because of." However, in light of the unsatisfactory sense that a causal nuance would here suggest, it has been argued that the second διά (dia) is prospective rather than retrospective (D. Moo, Romans [NICNT], 288-89). The difficulty of this interpretation is the structural balance that both διά phrases provide ("given over because of our transgressions...raised because of our justification"). However the poetic structure of this verse strengthens the likelihood that the clauses each have a different force.

[2] sn Many scholars regard Rom 4:25 to be poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage.

[3] sn Many interpreters see Rom 5:1 as beginning the second major division of the letter.

[4] tc A number of important witnesses have the subjunctive ἔχωμεν (echōmen, "let us have") instead of ἔχομεν (echomen, "we have") in v. 1. Included in the subjunctive's support are ℵ* A B* C D K L 33 81 630 1175 1739* pm lat bo. But the indicative is not without its supporters: ℵ[1] B[2] F G P Ψ 0220[vid] 104 365 1241 1505 1506 1739[c] 1881 2464 pm. If the problem were to be solved on an external basis only, the subjunctive would be preferred. Because of this, the "A" rating on behalf of the indicative in the UBS[4] appears overly confident. Nevertheless, the indicative is probably correct. First, the earliest witness to Rom 5:1 has the indicative (0220[vid], third century). Second, the first set of correctors is sometimes, if not often, of equal importance with the original hand. Hence, ℵ[1] might be given equal value with ℵ*. Third, there is a good cross-section of witnesses for the indicative: Alexandrian (in 0220[vid], probably ℵ[1] 1241 1506 1881 al), Western (in F G), and Byzantine (noted in NA[27] as pm). Thus, although the external evidence is strongly in favor of the subjunctive, the indicative is represented well enough that its ancestry could easily go back to the original. Turning to the internal evidence, the indicative gains much ground. (1) The variant may have been produced via an error of hearing (since omicron and omega were pronounced alike in ancient Greek). This, of course, does not indicate which reading was original – just that an error of hearing may have produced one of them. In light of the indecisiveness of the transcriptional evidence, intrinsic evidence could play a much larger role. This is indeed the case here. (2) The indicative fits well with the overall argument of the book to this point. Up until now, Paul has been establishing the "indicatives of the faith." There is only one imperative (used rhetorically) and only one hortatory subjunctive (and this in a quotation within a diatribe) up till this point, while from ch. 6 on there are sixty-one imperatives and seven hortatory subjunctives. Clearly, an exhortation would be out of place in ch. 5. (3) Paul presupposes that the audience has peace with God (via reconciliation) in 5:10. This seems to assume the indicative in v. 1. (4) As C. E. B. Cranfield notes, "it would surely be strange for Paul, in such a carefully argued writing as this, to exhort his readers to enjoy or to guard a peace which he has not yet explicitly shown to be possessed by them" (Romans [ICC], 1:257). (5) The notion that εἰρήνην ἔχωμεν (eirēnēn echōmen) can even naturally mean "enjoy peace" is problematic (ExSyn 464), yet those who embrace the subjunctive have to give the verb some such force. Thus, although the external evidence is stronger in support of the subjunctive, the internal evidence points to the indicative. Although a decision is difficult, ἔχομεν appears to be the authentic reading.

[5] tn Or "exult, boast."

[6] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[7] tn The phrase ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ θεοῦ (hē agapē tou theou, "the love of God") could be interpreted as either an objective genitive ("our love for God"), subjective genitive ("God's love for us"), or both (M. Zerwick's "general" genitive [Biblical Greek, §§36-39]; D. B. Wallace's "plenary" genitive [ExSyn 119-21]). The immediate context, which discusses what God has done for believers, favors a subjective genitive, but the fact that this love is poured out within the hearts of believers implies that it may be the source for believers' love for God; consequently an objective genitive cannot be ruled out. It is possible that both these ideas are meant in the text and that this is a plenary genitive: "The love that comes from God and that produces our love for God has been poured out within our hearts through the Holy Spirit who was given to us" (ExSyn 121).

[8] sn On the OT background of the Spirit being poured out, see Isa 32:15; Joel 2:28-29.

[9] sn Verse 7 forms something of a parenthetical comment in Paul's argument.

[10] tn Grk "having now been declared righteous." The participle δικαιωθέντες (dikaiōthentes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[11] tn Or, according to BDF §219.3, "at the price of his blood."

[12] tn Grk "the wrath," referring to God's wrath as v. 10 shows.

[13] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[14] tn Or "exult, boast."

The Amplification of Justification

5:12 So then, just as sin entered the world through one man and death through sin, and so death spread to all people[1] because[2] all sinned – 5:13 for before the law was given,[3] sin was in the world, but there is no accounting for sin[4] when there is no law. 5:14 Yet death reigned from Adam until Moses even over those who did not sin in the same way that Adam (who is a type[5] of the coming one) transgressed.[6] 5:15 But the gracious gift is not like the transgression.[7] For if the many died through the transgression of the one man,[8] how much more did the grace of God and the gift by the grace of the one man Jesus Christ multiply to the many! 5:16 And the gift is not like the one who sinned.[9] For judgment, resulting from the one transgression,[10] led to condemnation, but[11] the gracious gift from the many failures[12] led to justification. 5:17 For if, by the transgression of the one man,[13] death reigned through the one, how much more will those who receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness reign in life through the one, Jesus Christ!

5:18 Consequently,[14] just as condemnation[15] for all people[16] came[17] through one transgression,[18] so too through the one righteous act[19] came righteousness leading to life[20] for all people. 5:19 For just as through the disobedience of the one man[21] many[22] were made sinners, so also through the obedience of one man[23] many[24] will be made righteous. 5:20 Now the law came in[25] so that the transgression[26] may increase, but where sin increased, grace multiplied all the more, 5:21 so that just as sin reigned in death, so also grace will reign through righteousness to eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Believer's Freedom from Sin's Domination

6:1 What shall we say then? Are we to remain in sin so that grace may increase? 6:2 Absolutely not! How can we who died to sin still live in it? 6:3 Or do you not know that as many as were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? 6:4 Therefore we have been buried with him through baptism into death, in order that just as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we too may live a new life.[27]

6:5 For if we have become united with him in the likeness of his death, we will certainly also be united in the likeness of his resurrection.[28] 6:6 We know that[29] our old man was crucified with him so that the body of sin would no longer dominate us,[30] so that we would no longer be enslaved to sin. 6:7 (For someone who has died has been freed from sin.)[31]

6:8 Now if we died with Christ, we believe that we will also live with him. 6:9 We know[32] that since Christ has been raised from the dead, he is never going to die[33] again; death no longer

[1] tn Here ἀνθρώπους (anthrōpous) has been translated as a generic ("people") since both men and women are clearly intended in this context.

[2] tn The translation of the phrase ἐφ᾽ ᾧ (eph hō) has been heavily debated. For a discussion of all the possibilities, see C. E. B. Cranfield, "On Some of the Problems in the Interpretation of Romans 5.12," SJT 22 (1969): 324-41. Only a few of the major options can be mentioned here: (1) the phrase can be taken as a relative clause in which the pronoun refers to Adam, "death spread to all people in whom [Adam] all sinned." (2) The phrase can be taken with consecutive (resultative) force, meaning "death spread to all people with the result that all sinned." (3) Others take the phrase as causal in force: "death spread to all people because all sinned."

[3] tn Grk "for before the law."

[4] tn Or "sin is not reckoned."

[5] tn Or "pattern."

[6] tn Or "disobeyed"; Grk "in the likeness of Adam's transgression."

[7] tn Grk "but not as the transgression, so also [is] the gracious gift."

[8] sn Here the one man refers to Adam (cf. 5:14).

[9] tn Grk "and not as through the one who sinned [is] the gift."

[10] tn The word "transgression" is not in the Greek text at this point, but has been supplied for clarity.

[11] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

[12] tn Or "falls, trespasses," the same word used in vv. 15, 17, 18, 20.

[13] sn Here the one man refers to Adam (cf. 5:14).

[14] tn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

[15] tn Grk "[it is] unto condemnation for all people."

[16] tn Here ἀνθρώπους (anthrōpous) has been translated as a generic ("people") since both men and women are clearly intended in this context.

[17] tn There are no verbs in the Greek text of v. 18, forcing translators to supply phrases like "came through one transgression," "resulted from one transgression," etc.

[18] sn One transgression refers to the sin of Adam in Gen 3:1-24.

[19] sn The one righteous act refers to Jesus' death on the cross.

[20] tn Grk "righteousness of life."

[21] sn Here the one man refers to Adam (cf. 5:14).

[22] tn Grk "the many."

[23] sn One man refers here to Jesus Christ.

[24] tn Grk "the many."

[25] tn Grk "slipped in."

[26] tn Or "trespass."

[27] tn Grk "may walk in newness of life," in which ζωῆς (zōēs) functions as an attributed genitive (see ExSyn 89-90, where this verse is given as a prime example).

[28] tn Grk "we will certainly also of his resurrection."

[29] tn Grk "knowing this, that." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[30] tn Grk "may be rendered ineffective, inoperative," or possibly "may be destroyed." The term καταργέω (katargeō) has various nuances. In Rom 7:2 the wife whose husband has died is freed from the law (i.e., the law of marriage no longer has any power over her, in spite of what she may feel). A similar point seems to be made here (note v. 7).

[31] sn Verse 7 forms something of a parenthetical comment in Paul's argument.

[32] tn Grk "knowing." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[33] tn The present tense here has been translated as a futuristic present (see ExSyn 536, where this verse is listed as an example).

has mastery over him. 6:10 For the death he died, he died to sin once for all, but the life he lives, he lives to God. 6:11 So you too consider yourselves[1] dead to sin, but[2] alive to God in Christ Jesus.

6:12 Therefore do not let sin reign in your mortal body so that you obey its desires, 6:13 and do not present your members to sin as instruments[3] to be used for unrighteousness,[4] but present yourselves to God as those who are alive from the dead and your members to God as instruments[5] to be used for righteousness. 6:14 For sin will have no mastery over you, because you are not under law but under grace.

The Believer's Enslavement to God's Righteousness

6:15 What then? Shall we sin because we are not under law but under grace? Absolutely not! 6:16 Do you not know that if you present yourselves[6] as obedient slaves,[7] you are slaves of the one you obey, either of sin resulting in death, or obedience resulting in righteousness?[8] 6:17 But thanks be to God that though you were slaves to sin, you obeyed[9] from the heart that pattern[10] of teaching you were entrusted to, 6:18 and having been freed from sin, you became enslaved to righteousness. 6:19 (I am speaking in human terms because of the weakness of your flesh.)[11] For just as you once presented your members as slaves to impurity and lawlessness leading to more lawlessness, so now present your members as slaves to righteousness leading to sanctification. 6:20 For when you were slaves of sin, you were free with regard to righteousness.

6:21 So what benefit[12] did you then reap[13] from those things that you are now ashamed of? For the end of those things is death. 6:22 But now, freed[14] from sin and enslaved to God, you have your benefit[15] leading to sanctification, and the end is eternal life. 6:23 For the payoff[16] of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The Believer's Relationship to the Law

7:1 Or do you not know, brothers and sisters[17] (for I am speaking to those who know the law), that the law is lord over a person[18] as long as he lives? 7:2 For a married woman is bound by law to her husband as long as he lives, but if her[19] husband dies, she is released from the law of the marriage.[20] 7:3 So then,[21] if she is joined to another man while her husband is alive, she will be called an adulteress. But if her[22] husband dies, she is free from that law, and if she is joined to another man, she is not an adulteress. 7:4 So, my brothers and sisters,[23] you also died to the law through the body of Christ, so that you could be joined to another, to the one who was raised from the dead, to bear fruit to God.[24] 7:5 For when we were in the flesh,[25] the sinful desires,[26] aroused by the law, were active in the members of our body[27] to bear fruit for death. 7:6 But now we have been released from the sn Verse 19 forms something of a parenthetical comment in Paul's argument.

[1] tc ‡ Some Alexandrian and Byzantine MSS (𝔓^{94vid} א* B C 81 365 1506 1739 1881 pc) have the infinitive "to be" (εἶναι, einai) following "yourselves". The infinitive is lacking from some MSS of the Alexandrian and Western texttypes (𝔓^{46vid} A D*.^{c} F G 33^{vid} pc). The infinitive is found elsewhere in the majority of Byzantine MSS, suggesting a scribal tendency toward clarification. The lack of infinitive best explains the rise of the other readings. The meaning of the passage is not significantly altered by inclusion or omission, but on internal grounds omission is more likely. NA^{27} includes the infinitive in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

[12] tn Grk "fruit."

[13] tn Grk "have," in a tense emphasizing their customary condition in the past.

[14] tn The two aorist participles translated "freed" and "enslaved" are causal in force; their full force is something like "But now, since you have become freed from sin and since you have become enslaved to God...."

[15] tn Grk "fruit."

[16] tn A figurative extension of ὀψώνιον (opsōnion), which refers to a soldier's pay or wages. Here it refers to the end result of an activity, seen as something one receives back in return. In this case the activity is sin, and the translation "payoff" captures this thought. See also L&N 89.42.

[17] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[18] sn Here person refers to a human being.

[19] tn Grk "the," with the article used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[20] tn Grk "husband."

sn Paul's example of the married woman and the law of the marriage illustrates that death frees a person from obligation to the law. Thus, in spiritual terms, a person who has died to what controlled us (v. 6) has been released from the law to serve God in the new life produced by the Spirit.

[21] tn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

[22] tn Grk "the," with the article used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[23] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[24] tn Grk "that we might bear fruit to God."

[25] tn That is, before we were in Christ.

law, because we have died[1] to what controlled us, so that we may serve in the new life of the Spirit and not under the old written code.[2]

7:7 What shall we say then? Is the law sin? Absolutely not! Certainly, I[3] would not have known sin except through the law. For indeed I would not have known what it means to desire something belonging to someone else[4] if the law had not said, "Do not covet."[5] 7:8 But sin, seizing the opportunity through the commandment, produced in me all kinds of wrong desires.[6] For apart from the law, sin is dead. 7:9 And I was once alive apart from the law, but with the coming of the commandment sin became alive 7:10 and I died. So[7] I found that the very commandment that was intended to bring life brought death![8] 7:11 For sin, seizing the opportunity through the commandment, deceived me and through it I died.[9] 7:12 So then, the law is holy, and the commandment is holy, righteous, and good.

7:13 Did that which is good, then, become death to me? Absolutely not! But sin, so that it would be shown to be sin, produced death in me through what is good, so that through the commandment sin would become utterly sinful. 7:14 For we know that the law is spiritual – but I am unspiritual, sold into slavery to sin.[10] 7:15 For I don't understand what I am doing. For I do not do what I want – instead, I do what I hate.[11] 7:16 But if I do what I don't want, I agree that the law is good.[12] 7:17 But now it is no longer me doing it, but sin that lives in me. 7:18 For I know that nothing good lives in me, that is, in my flesh. For I want to do the good, but I cannot do it.[13] 7:19 For I do not do the good I want, but I do the very evil I do not want! 7:20 Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer me doing it but sin that lives in me.

7:21 So, I find the law that when I want to do good, evil is present with me. 7:22 For I delight in the law of God in my inner being. 7:23 But I see a different law in my members waging war against the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin that is in my members. 7:24 Wretched man that I am! Who will rescue me from this body of death? 7:25 Thanks be[14] to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then,[15] I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but[16] with my flesh I serve[17] the law of sin.

The Believer's Relationship to the Holy Spirit

8:1 There is therefore now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus.[18] 8:2 For the law of the life-giving Spirit[19] in Christ Jesus has set you[20] free from the law of sin and death.

[2] tn Grk "in the newness of the Spirit and not in the oldness of the letter."

[3] sn Romans 7:7-25. There has been an enormous debate over the significance of the first person singular pronouns ("I") in this passage and how to understand their referent. Did Paul intend (1) a reference to himself and other Christians too; (2) a reference to his own pre-Christian experience as a Jew, struggling with the law and sin (and thus addressing his fellow countrymen as Jews); or (3) a reference to himself as a child of Adam, reflecting the experience of Adam that is shared by both Jews and Gentiles alike (i.e., all people everywhere)? Good arguments can be assembled for each of these views, and each has problems dealing with specific statements in the passage. The classic argument against an autobiographical interpretation was made by W. G. Kümmel, Römer 7 und die Bekehrung des Paulus. A good case for seeing at least an autobiographical element in the chapter has been made by G. Theissen, Psychologische Aspekte paulinischer Theologie [FRLANT], 181-268. One major point that seems to favor some sort of an autobiographical reading of these verses is the lack of any mention of the Holy Spirit for empowerment in the struggle described in Rom 7:7-25. The Spirit is mentioned beginning in 8:1 as the solution to the problem of the struggle with sin (8:4-6, 9).

[5] sn A quotation from Exod 20:17 and Deut 5:21.

[6] tn Or "covetousness."

[7] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate the result of the statement in the previous verse. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

[8] tn Grk "and there was found in/for me the commandment which was for life – this was for death."

[9] tn Or "and through it killed me."

[10] tn Grk "under sin."

[11] tn Grk "but what I hate, this I do."

[12] tn Grk "I agree with the law that it is good."

[13] tn Grk "For to wish is present in/with me, but not to do it."

[14] tc ‡ Most MSS (ℵ* A 1739 1881 𝔐 sy) read "I give thanks to God" rather than "Now thanks be to God" (ℵ[1] [B] Ψ 33 81 104 365 1506 pc), the reading of NA[27]. The reading with the verb (εὐχαριστῶ τῷ θεῷ, eucharistō tō theō) possibly arose from a transcriptional error in which several letters were doubled (TCGNT 455). The conjunction δέ (de, "now") is included in some MSS as well (ℵ[1] Ψ 33 81 104 365 1506 pc), but it should probably not be considered original. The MS support for the omission of δέ is both excellent and widespread (ℵ* A B D 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy), and its addition can be explained as an insertion to smooth out the transition between v. 24 and 25.

[15] tn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

[16] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

[17] tn The words "I serve" have been repeated here for clarity.

[18] tc The earliest and best witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western texts, as well as a few others (ℵ* B D* F G 6 1506 1739 1881 pc co), have no additional words for v. 1. Later scribes (A D[1] Ψ 81 365 629 pc vg) added the words μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν (mē kata sarka peripatousin, "who do not walk according to the flesh"), while even later ones (ℵ[2] D[2] 33[vid] 𝔐) added ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα (alla kata pneuma, "but [who do walk] according to the Spirit"). Both the external evidence and the internal evidence are compelling for the shortest reading. The scribes were evidently motivated to add such qualifications (interpolated from v. 4) to insulate Paul's gospel from charges that it was characterized too much by grace. The KJV follows the longest reading found in 𝔐.

[19] tn Grk "for the law of the Spirit of life."

[20] tc Most MSS read the first person singular pronoun με (me) here (A D 1739[c] 1881 𝔐 lat sa). The second person singular pronoun σε (se) is superior because of external support (ℵ B {F which reads σαι} G 1506* 1739*) and internal support (it is the harder reading since ch. 7 was narrated in the first person). At the same time, it could have arisen via dittography from the final syllable of the verb preceding it

8:3 For God achieved what the law could not do because[1] it was weakened through the flesh. By sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and concerning sin, he condemned sin in the flesh, 8:4 so that the righteous requirement of the law may be fulfilled in us, who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit.

8:5 For those who live according to the flesh have their outlook shaped by[2] the things of the flesh, but those who live according to the Spirit have their outlook shaped by the things of the Spirit. 8:6 For the outlook[3] of the flesh is death, but the outlook of the Spirit is life and peace, 8:7 because the outlook of the flesh is hostile to God, for it does not submit to the law of God, nor is it able to do so. 8:8 Those who are in the flesh cannot please God. 8:9 You, however, are not in[4] the flesh but in the Spirit, if indeed the Spirit of God lives in you. Now if anyone does not have the Spirit of Christ, this person does not belong to him. 8:10 But if Christ is in you, your body is dead because of sin, but[5] the Spirit is your life[6] because of righteousness. 8:11 Moreover if the Spirit of the one[7] who raised Jesus from the dead lives in you, the one who raised Christ[8] from the dead will also make your mortal bodies alive through his Spirit who lives in you.[9]

8:12 So then,[10] brothers and sisters,[11] we are under obligation, not to the flesh, to live according to the flesh 8:13 (for if you live according to the flesh, you will[12] die),[13] but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body you will live. 8:14 For all who are led by the Spirit of God are[14] the sons of God. 8:15 For you did not receive the spirit of slavery leading again to fear,[15] but you received the Spirit of adoption,[16] by whom[17] we cry, "Abba, Father." 8:16 The Spirit himself bears witness to[18] our spirit that we are God's children. 8:17 And if children, then heirs (namely, heirs of God and also fellow heirs with Christ)[19] – if indeed we suffer with him so we may also be glorified with him.

(ἠλευθέρωσεν, ēleutherōsen; "has set free"). But for this to happen in such early and diverse witnesses is unlikely, especially as it depends on various scribes repeatedly overlooking either the nu or the nu-bar at the end of the verb.

[1] tn Grk "in that."

[2] tn Grk "think on" or "are intent on" (twice in this verse). What is in view here is not primarily preoccupation, however, but worldview. Translations like "set their mind on" could be misunderstood by the typical English reader to refer exclusively to preoccupation.

[3] tn Or "mindset," "way of thinking" (twice in this verse and once in v. 7). The Greek term φρόνημα does not refer to one's mind, but to one's outlook or mindset.

[4] tn Or "are not controlled by the flesh but by the Spirit."

[5] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

[6] tn Or "life-giving." Grk "the Spirit is life."

[7] sn The one who raised Jesus from the dead refers to God (also in the following clause).

[8] tc Several MSS read Ἰησοῦν (Iēsoun, "Jesus") after Χριστόν (Christon, "Christ"; ℵ* A D* 630 1506 1739 1881 pc bo); C 81 104 lat have Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. The shorter reading is more likely to be original, though, both because of external evidence (ℵ² B D² F G Ψ 33 𝔐 sa) and internal evidence (scribes were much more likely to add the name "Jesus" if it were lacking than to remove it if it were already present in the text, especially to harmonize with the earlier mention of Jesus in the verse).

[9] tc Most MSS (B D F G Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat) have διά (dia) followed by the accusative: "because of his Spirit who lives in you." The genitive "through his Spirit" is supported by ℵ A C(*) 81 104 1505 1506 al, and is slightly preferred.

[10] tn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

[11] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[12] tn Grk "are about to, are certainly going to."

[13] sn This remark is parenthetical to Paul's argument.

[14] tn Grk "For as many as are being led by the Spirit of God, these are."

[15] tn Grk "slavery again to fear."

[16] tn The Greek term υἱοθεσία (huiothesia) was originally a legal technical term for adoption as a son with full rights of inheritance. BDAG 1024 s.v. notes, "a legal t.t. of 'adoption' of children, in our lit., i.e. in Paul, only in a transferred sense of a transcendent filial relationship between God and humans (with the legal aspect, not gender specificity, as major semantic component)."

[17] tn Or "in that."

[18] tn Or possibly "with." ExSyn 160-61, however, notes the following: "At issue, grammatically, is whether the Spirit testifies alongside of our spirit (dat. of association), or whether he testifies to our spirit (indirect object) that we are God's children. If the former, the one receiving this testimony is unstated (is it God? or believers?). If the latter, the believer receives the testimony and hence is assured of salvation via the inner witness of the Spirit. The first view has the advantage of a σύν- (sun-) prefixed verb, which might be expected to take an accompanying dat. of association (and is supported by NEB, JB, etc.). But there are three reasons why πνεύματι (pneumati) should not be taken as association: (1) Grammatically, a dat. with a σύν- prefixed verb does not necessarily indicate association. This, of course, does not preclude such here, but this fact at least opens up the alternatives in this text. (2) Lexically, though συμμαρτυρέω (summartureō) originally bore an associative idea, it developed in the direction of merely intensifying μαρτυρέω (martureō). This is surely the case in the only other NT text with a dat. (Rom 9:1). (3) Contextually, a dat. of association does not seem to support Paul's argument: 'What standing has our spirit in this matter? Of itself it surely has no right at all to testify to our being sons of God' [C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:403]. In sum, Rom 8:16 seems to be secure as a text in which the believer's assurance of salvation is based on the inner witness of the Spirit. The implications of this for one's soteriology are profound: The objective data, as helpful as they are, cannot by themselves provide assurance of salvation; the believer also needs (and receives) an existential, ongoing encounter with God's Spirit in order to gain that familial comfort."

[19] tn Grk "on the one hand, heirs of God; on the other hand, fellow heirs with Christ." Some prefer to render v. 17 as follows: "And if children, then heirs – that is, heirs of God. Also fellow heirs with Christ if indeed we suffer with him so we may also be glorified with him." Such a translation suggests two distinct inheritances, one coming to all of God's children, the other coming only to those who suffer with Christ. The difficulty of this view, however, is that it ignores the correlative conjunctions μέν...δέ (men...de, "on the one hand...on the other hand"): The construction strongly suggests that the inheritances cannot be separated since both explain "then heirs." For this reason, the preferred translation puts this explanation in parentheses.

8:18 For I consider that our present sufferings cannot even be compared[1] to the glory that will be revealed to us. 8:19 For the creation eagerly waits for the revelation of the sons of God. 8:20 For the creation was subjected to futility – not willingly but because of God[2] who subjected it – in hope 8:21 that the creation itself will also be set free from the bondage of decay into the glorious freedom of God's children. 8:22 For we know that the whole creation groans and suffers together until now. 8:23 Not only this, but we ourselves also, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit,[3] groan inwardly as we eagerly await our adoption,[4] the redemption of our bodies.[5] 8:24 For in hope we were saved. Now hope that is seen is not hope, because who hopes for what he sees? 8:25 But if we hope for what we do not see, we eagerly wait for it with endurance.[6]

8:26 In the same way, the Spirit helps us in our weakness, for we do not know how we should pray,[7] but the Spirit himself intercedes for us with inexpressible groanings. 8:27 And he[8] who searches our hearts knows the mind of the Spirit, because the Spirit[9] intercedes on behalf of the saints according to God's will. 8:28 And we know that all things work together[10] for good for those who love God, who are called according to his purpose, 8:29 because those whom he foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, that his Son[11] would be the firstborn among many brothers and sisters.[12] 8:30 And those he predestined, he also called; and those he called, he also justified; and those he justified, he also glorified.

8:31 What then shall we say about these things? If God is for us, who can be against us? 8:32 Indeed, he who[13] did not spare his own Son, but gave him up for us all – how will he not also, along with him, freely give us all things? 8:33 Who will bring any charge against God's elect?[14] It is God who justifies. 8:34 Who is the one who will condemn? Christ[15] is the one who died (and more than that, he was raised), who is at the right hand of God, and who also is interceding for us. 8:35 Who will separate us from the love of Christ? Will trouble, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or danger, or sword?[16] 8:36 As it is written, "For your sake we encounter death all day long; we were considered as sheep to be slaughtered."[17] 8:37 No, in all these things we have complete victory[18] through him[19] who loved us! 8:38 For I am convinced that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor heavenly rulers,[20] nor things that are present, nor things to come, nor powers, 8:39 nor height, nor depth, nor anything else in creation will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

1 tn Grk "are not worthy [to be compared]."

2 tn Grk "because of the one"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Or "who have the Spirit as firstfruits." The genitive πνεύματος (pneumatos) can be understood here as possessive ("the firstfruits belonging to the Spirit") although it is much more likely that this is a genitive of apposition ("the firstfruits, namely, the Spirit"); cf. TEV, NLT.

4 tn See the note on "adoption" in v. 15.

5 tn Grk "body."

6 tn Or "perseverance."

7 tn Or "for we do not know what we ought to pray for."

8 sn He refers to God here; Paul has not specifically identified him for the sake of rhetorical power (for by leaving the subject slightly ambiguous, he draws his audience into seeing God's hand in places where he is not explicitly mentioned).

9 tn Grk "he," or "it"; the referent (the Spirit) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tc ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God") is found after the verb συνεργεῖ (sunergei, "work") in v. 28 by 𝔓46 A B 81 sa; the shorter reading is found in ℵ C D F G Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 latt sy bo. Although the inclusion is supported by a significant early papyrus, the alliance of significant Alexandrian and Western witnesses favors the shorter reading. As well, the longer reading is evidently motivated by a need for clarification. Since ὁ θεός is textually suspect, it is better to read the text without it. This leaves two good translational options: either "he works all things together for good" or "all things work together for good." In the first instance the subject is embedded in the verb and "God" is clearly implied (as in v. 29). In the second instance, πάντα (panta) becomes the subject of an intransitive verb. In either case, "What is expressed is a truly biblical confidence in the sovereignty of God" (C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans [ICC], 1:427).

11 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God's Son) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

13 tn Grk "[he] who." The relative clause continues the question of v. 31 in a way that is awkward in English. The force of v. 32 is thus: "who indeed did not spare his own Son, but gave him up for us all – How will he not also with him give us all things?"

14 sn An allusion to Isa 50:8 where the reference is singular; Paul applies this to all believers ("God's elect" is plural here).

15 tc ‡ A number of significant and early witnesses, along with several others (𝔓46vid ℵ A C F G L Ψ 6 33 81 104 365 1505 al lat bo), read Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus") after Χριστός (Christos, "Christ") in v. 34. But the shorter reading is not unrepresented (B D 0289 1739 1881 𝔐 sa). Once Ἰησοῦς got into the text, what scribe would omit it? Although the external evidence is on the side of the longer reading, internally such an expansion seems suspect. The shorter reading is thus preferred. NA27 has the word in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "who also."

16 tn Here "sword" is a metonymy that includes both threats of violence and acts of violence, even including death (although death is not necessarily the only thing in view here).

17 sn A quotation from Ps 44:22.

18 tn BDAG 1034 s.v. ὑπερνικάω states, "as a heightened form of νικᾶν prevail completely ὑπερνικῶμεν we are winning a most glorious victory Ro 8:37."

19 tn Here the referent could be either God or Christ, but in v. 39 it is God's love that is mentioned.

20 tn BDAG 138 s.v. ἀρχή 6 takes this term as a reference to angelic or transcendent powers (as opposed to merely human rulers). To clarify this, the adjective "heavenly" has been supplied in the translation. Some interpreters see this as a reference to fallen angels or demonic powers, and this view is reflected in some recent translations (NIV, NLT).

Israel's Rejection Considered

9:1[1] I am telling the truth in Christ (I am not lying!), for my conscience assures me[2] in the Holy Spirit – 9:2 I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart.[3] 9:3 For I could wish[4] that I myself were accursed – cut off from Christ – for the sake of my people,[5] my fellow countrymen,[6] 9:4 who are Israelites. To them belong[7] the adoption as sons,[8] the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the temple worship,[9] and the promises. 9:5 To them belong the patriarchs,[10] and from them,[11] by human descent,[12] came the Christ,[13] who is God over all, blessed forever![14] Amen.

9:6 It is not as though the word of God had failed. For not all those who are descended from Israel are truly Israel,[15] 9:7 nor are all the children Abraham's true descendants; rather "through Isaac will your descendants be counted."[16] 9:8 This means[17] it is not the children of the flesh[18] who are the children of God; rather, the children of promise are counted as descendants. 9:9 For this is what the promise declared:[19] "About a year from now[20] I will return and Sarah will have a son."[21] 9:10 Not only that, but when Rebekah had conceived children by one man,[22] our ancestor Isaac – 9:11 even before they were born or had done anything good or bad (so that God's purpose in election[23] would stand, not by works but by[24] his calling)[25] – 9:12[26] it was said to her, "The older will serve the younger,"[27] 9:13 just as it is written: "Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated."[28]

9:14 What shall we say then? Is there injustice with God? Absolutely not! 9:15 For he says to Moses: "I will have mercy on whom I have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I have compassion."[29] 9:16 So then,[30] it does not

1 sn Rom 9:1–11:36. These three chapters are among the most difficult and disputed in Paul's Letter to the Romans. One area of difficulty is the relationship between Israel and the church, especially concerning the nature and extent of Israel's election. Many different models have been constructed to express this relationship. For a representative survey, see M. Barth, The People of God (JSNTSup), 22-27. The literary genre of these three chapters has been frequently identified as a diatribe, a philosophical discussion or conversation evolved by the Cynic and Stoic schools of philosophy as a means of popularizing their ideas (E. Käsemann, Romans, 261 and 267). But other recent scholars have challenged the idea that Rom 9–11 is characterized by diatribe. Scholars like R. Scroggs and E. E. Ellis have instead identified the material in question as midrash. For a summary and discussion of the rabbinic connections, see W. R. Stegner, "Romans 9.6-29 – A Midrash," JSNT 22 (1984): 37-52.

2 tn Or "my conscience bears witness to me."

3 tn Grk "my sorrow is great and the anguish in my heart is unceasing."

4 tn Or "For I would pray." The implied condition is "if this could save my fellow Jews."

5 tn Grk "brothers." See BDAG 18-19 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.b.

6 tn Grk "my kinsmen according to the flesh."

7 tn Grk "of whom." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

8 tn The Greek term υἱοθεσία (huiothesia) was originally a legal technical term for adoption as a son with full rights of inheritance. BDAG 1024 s.v. notes, "a legal t.t. of 'adoption' of children, in our lit., i.e. in Paul, only in a transferred sense of a transcendent filial relationship between God and humans (with the legal aspect, not gender specificity, as major semantic component)." Although some modern translations remove the filial sense completely and render the term merely "adoption" (cf. NAB, ESV), the retention of this component of meaning was accomplished in the present translation by the phrase "as sons."

9 tn Or "cultic service."

10 tn Grk "of whom are the fathers." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

11 tn Grk "from whom." Here the relative pronoun has been replaced by a personal pronoun.

12 tn Grk "according to the flesh."

13 tn Or "Messiah." (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed.")

14 tn Or "the Christ, who is over all, God blessed forever," or "the Messiah. God who is over all be blessed forever!" or "the Messiah who is over all. God be blessed forever!" The translational difficulty here is not text-critical in nature, but is a problem of punctuation. Since the genre of these opening verses of Romans 9 is a lament, it is probably best to take this as an affirmation of Christ's deity (as the text renders it). Although the other renderings are possible, to see a note of praise to God at the end of this section seems strangely out of place. But for Paul to bring his lament to a crescendo (that is to say, his kinsmen had rejected God come in the flesh), thereby deepening his anguish, is wholly appropriate. This is also supported grammatically and stylistically: The phrase ὁ ὢν (ho ōn, "the one who is") is most naturally taken as a phrase which modifies something in the preceding context, and Paul's doxologies are always closely tied to the preceding context. For a detailed examination of this verse, see B. M. Metzger, "The Punctuation of Rom. 9:5," Christ and the Spirit in the New Testament, 95-112; and M. J. Harris, Jesus as God, 144-72.

15 tn Grk "For not all those who are from Israel are Israel."

16 tn Grk "be called." The emphasis here is upon God's divine sovereignty in choosing Isaac as the child through whom Abraham's lineage would be counted as opposed to Ishmael.

sn A quotation from Gen 21:12.

17 tn Grk "That is," or "That is to say."

18 tn Because it forms the counterpoint to "the children of promise" the expression "children of the flesh" has been retained in the translation.

sn The expression the children of the flesh refers to the natural offspring.

19 tn Grk "For this is the word of promise."

20 tn Grk "About this time I will return." Since this refers to the time when the promised child would be born, it would be approximately a year later.

21 sn A quotation from Gen 18:10, 14.

22 tn Or possibly "by one act of sexual intercourse." See D. Moo, Romans (NICNT), 579.

23 tn Grk "God's purpose according to election."

24 tn Or "not based on works but based on..."

25 tn Grk "by the one who calls."

sn The entire clause is something of a parenthetical remark.

26 sn Many translations place this verse division before the phrase "not by works but by his calling" (NA[27]/UBS[4], NIV, NRSV, NLT, NAB). Other translations place this verse division in the same place that the translation above does (NASB, KJV, NKJV, ASV, RSV). The translation has followed the latter to avoid breaking the parenthetical statement.

27 sn A quotation from Gen 25:23.

28 sn A quotation from Mal 1:2-3.

29 sn A quotation from Exod 33:19.

30 sn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

depend on human desire or exertion,[1] but on God who shows mercy. 9:17 For the scripture says to Pharaoh:[2] "For this very purpose I have raised you up, that I may demonstrate my power in you, and that my name may be proclaimed in all the earth."[3] 9:18 So then,[4] God[5] has mercy on whom he chooses to have mercy, and he hardens whom he chooses to harden.[6]

9:19 You will say to me then, "Why does he still find fault? For who has ever resisted his will?" 9:20 But who indeed are you – a mere human being[7] – to talk back to God?[8] Does what is molded say to the molder, "Why have you made me like this?"[9] 9:21 Has the potter no right to make from the same lump of clay[10] one vessel for special use and another for ordinary use?[11] 9:22 But what if God, willing to demonstrate his wrath and to make known his power, has endured with much patience the objects[12] of wrath[13] prepared for destruction?[14] 9:23 And what if he is willing to make known the wealth of his glory on the objects[15] of mercy that he has prepared beforehand for glory – 9:24 even us, whom he has called, not only from the Jews but also from the Gentiles? 9:25 As he also says in Hosea:

> "I will call those who were not my people,
> 'My people,' and I will call her who was unloved,[16] 'My beloved.'"[17]
> 9:26 "And in the very place[18] where it was said to them, 'You are not my people,' there they will be called 'sons of the living God.'"[19]

9:27 And Isaiah cries out on behalf of Israel, "Though the number of the children[20] of Israel are as the sand of the sea, only the remnant will be saved, 9:28 for the Lord will execute his sentence on the earth completely and quickly."[21] 9:29 Just[22] as Isaiah predicted,

> "If the Lord of armies[23] had not left us descendants, > we would have become like Sodom,
> and we would have resembled Gomorrah."[24]

Israel's Rejection Culpable

9:30 What shall we say then? – that the Gentiles who did not pursue righteousness obtained it, that is, a righteousness that is by faith, 9:31 but Israel even though pursuing[25] a law of righteousness[26] did not attain it.[27] 9:32 Why not?

---

1 tn Grk "So then, [it does] not [depend] on the one who desires nor on the one who runs."

2 sn Paul uses a typical rabbinic formula here in which the OT scriptures are figuratively portrayed as speaking to Pharaoh. What he means is that the scripture he cites refers (or can be applied) to Pharaoh.

3 sn A quotation from Exod 9:16.

4 sn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what he has been arguing.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "So then, he has mercy on whom he desires, and he hardens whom he desires."

7 tn Grk "O man."

8 tn Grk "On the contrary, O man, who are you to talk back to God?"

9 sn A quotation from Isa 29:16; 45:9.

10 tn Grk "Or does not the potter have authority over the clay to make from the same lump."

11 tn Grk "one vessel for honor and another for dishonor."

12 tn Grk "vessels." This is the same Greek word used in v. 21.

13 tn Or "vessels destined for wrath." The genitive ὀργῆς (orgēs) could be taken as a genitive of destination.

14 tn Or possibly "objects of wrath that have fit themselves for destruction." The form of the participle could be taken either as a passive or middle (reflexive). ExSyn 417-18 argues strongly for the passive sense (which is followed in the translation), stating that "the middle view has little to commend it." First, καταρτίζω (katartizō) is nowhere else used in the NT as a direct or reflexive middle (a usage which, in any event, is quite rare in the NT). Second, the lexical force of this verb, coupled with the perfect tense, suggests something of a "done deal" (against some commentaries that see these vessels as ready for destruction yet still able to avert disaster). Third, the potter-clay motif seems to have one point: The potter prepares the clay.

15 tn Grk "vessels." This is the same Greek word used in v. 21.

16 tn Grk "and her who was not beloved, 'Beloved.'"

17 sn A quotation from Hos 2:23.

18 tn Grk "And it will be in the very place."

19 sn A quotation from Hos 1:10.

20 tn Grk "sons."

21 tc In light of the interpretive difficulty of this verse, a longer reading seems to have been added to clarify the meaning. The addition, in the middle of the sentence, makes the whole verse read as follows: "For he will execute his sentence completely and quickly in righteousness, because the Lord will do it quickly on the earth." The shorter reading is found largely in Alexandrian MSS (𝔓46 ℵ* A B 6 1506 1739 1881 pc co), while the longer reading is found principally in Western and Byzantine MSS (ℵ2 D F G Ψ 33 𝔐 lat). The longer reading follows Isa 10:22-23 (LXX) verbatim, while Paul in the previous verse quoted the LXX loosely. This suggests the addition was made by a copyist trying to make sense out of a difficult passage rather than by the author himself.

tn There is a wordplay in Greek (in both the LXX and here) on the phrase translated "completely and quickly" (συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων, suntelōn kai suntemnōn). These participles are translated as adverbs for smoothness; a more literal (and more cumbersome) rendering would be: "The Lord will act by closing the account [or completing the sentence], and by cutting short the time." The interpretation of this text is notoriously difficult. Cf. BDAG 975 s.v. συντέμνω.

sn A modified quotation from Isa 10:22-23. Since it is not exact, it has been printed as italics only.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn Traditionally, "Lord of hosts"; Grk "Lord Sabaoth," which means "Lord of the [heavenly] armies," sometimes translated more generally as "Lord Almighty."

24 sn A quotation from Isa 1:9.

25 tn Or "who pursued." The participle could be taken adverbially or adjectivally.

26 tn Or "a legal righteousness," that is, a righteousness based on law. This translation would treat the genitive δικαιοσύνης (dikaiosunēs) as an attributed genitive (see ExSyn 89-91).

27 tn Grk "has not attained unto the law."

Because they pursued[1] it not by faith but (as if it were possible) by works.[2] They stumbled over the stumbling stone,[3] 9:33 just as it is written,

> "Look, I am laying in Zion a stone that will cause people to stumble > and a rock that will make them fall,[4] > yet the one who believes in him will not be put to shame."[5]

10:1 Brothers and sisters,[6] my heart's desire and prayer to God on behalf of my fellow Israelites[7] is for their salvation. 10:2 For I can testify that they are zealous for God,[8] but their zeal is not in line with the truth.[9] 10:3 For ignoring the righteousness that comes from God, and seeking instead to establish their own righteousness, they did not submit to God's righteousness. 10:4 For Christ is the end of the law, with the result that there is righteousness for everyone who believes.

10:5 For Moses writes about the righteousness that is by the law: "The one who does these things will live by them."[10] 10:6 But the righteousness that is by faith says: "Do not say in your heart,[11] 'Who will ascend into heaven?'"[12] (that is, to bring Christ down) 10:7 or "Who will descend into the abyss?"[13] (that is, to bring Christ up from the dead). 10:8 But what does it say? "The word is near you, in your mouth and in your heart"[14] (that is, the word of faith that we preach), 10:9 because if you confess with your mouth that Jesus is Lord[15] and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. 10:10 For with the heart one believes and thus has righteousness[16] and with the mouth one confesses and thus has salvation.[17] 10:11 For the scripture says, "Everyone who believes in him will not be put to shame."[18] 10:12 For there is no distinction between the Jew and the Greek, for the same Lord is Lord of all, who richly blesses all who call on him. 10:13 For everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved.[19]

10:14 How are they to call on one they have not believed in? And how are they to believe in one they have not heard of? And how are they to hear without someone preaching to them?[20] 10:15 And how are they to preach unless they are sent? As it is written, "How timely[21] is the arrival[22] of those who proclaim the good news."[23] 10:16 But not all have obeyed the good news, for Isaiah says, "Lord, who has believed our report?"[24] 10:17 Consequently faith comes from what is heard, and what is heard comes through the preached word[25] of Christ.[26]

10:18 But I ask, have they[27] not heard?[28] Yes, they have:[29] Their voice has gone out to all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world.[30] 10:19 But again I ask, didn't Israel

1 tn Grk "Why? Because not by faith but as though by works." The verb ("they pursued [it]") is to be supplied from the preceding verse for the sake of English style; yet a certain literary power is seen in Paul's laconic style.

2 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (𝔓^{2} D Ψ 33 𝔐 sy), read νόμου (nomou, "of the law") here, echoing Paul's usage in Rom 3:20, 28 and elsewhere. The qualifying phrase is lacking in ℵ* A B F G 6 629 630 1739 1881 pc lat co. The longer reading thus is weaker externally and internally, being motivated apparently by a need to clarify.

tn Grk "but as by works."

3 tn Grk "the stone of stumbling."

4 tn Grk "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense."

5 sn A quotation from Isa 28:16; 8:14.

6 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

7 tn Grk "on behalf of them"; the referent (Paul's fellow Israelites) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "they have a zeal for God."

9 tn Grk "in accord with knowledge."

sn Their zeal is not in line with the truth means that the Jews' passion for God was strong, but it ignored the true righteousness of God (v. 3; cf. also 3:21).

10 sn A quotation from Lev 18:5.

11 sn A quotation from Deut 9:4.

12 sn A quotation from Deut 30:12.

13 sn A quotation from Deut 30:13.

14 sn A quotation from Deut 30:14.

15 tn Or "the Lord." The Greek construction, along with the quotation from Joel 2:32 in v. 13 (in which the same "Lord" seems to be in view) suggests that κύριον (kurion) is to be taken as "the Lord," that is, Yahweh. Cf. D. B. Wallace, "The Semantics and Exegetical Significance of the Object-Complement Construction in the New Testament," GTJ 6 (1985): 91-112.

16 tn Grk "believes to righteousness."

17 tn Grk "confesses to salvation."

18 sn A quotation from Isa 28:16.

19 sn A quotation from Joel 2:32.

20 tn Grk "preaching"; the words "to them" are supplied for clarification.

21 tn The word in this context seems to mean "coming at the right or opportune time" (see BDAG 1103 s.v. ὡραῖος 1); it may also mean "beautiful, attractive, welcome."

22 tn Grk "the feet." The metaphorical nuance of "beautiful feet" is that such represent timely news.

23 sn A quotation from Isa 52:7; Nah 1:15.

24 sn A quotation from Isa 53:1.

25 tn The Greek term here is ῥῆμα (rhēma), which often (but not exclusively) focuses on the spoken word.

26 tc Most MSS (ℵ^{1} A D^{1} Ψ 33 1881 𝔐 sy) have θεοῦ (theou) here rather than Χριστοῦ (Christou; found in 𝔓^{46vid} ℵ* B C D* 6 81 629 1506 1739 pc lat co). External evidence strongly favors the reading "Christ" here. Internal evidence is also on its side, for the expression ῥῆμα Χριστοῦ (rhēma Christou) occurs nowhere else in the NT; thus scribes would be prone to change it to a known expression.

tn The genitive could be understood as either subjective ("Christ does the speaking") or objective ("Christ is spoken about"), but the latter is more likely here.

27 tn That is, Israel (see the following verse).

28 tn Grk "they have not 'not heard,' have they?" This question is difficult to render in English. The basic question is a negative sentence ("Have they not heard?"), but it is preceded by the particle μή (mē) which expects a negative response. The end result in English is a double negative ("They have not 'not heard,' have they?"). This has been changed to a positive question in the translation for clarity. See BDAG 646 s.v. μή 3.a.; D. Moo, Romans (NICNT), 666, fn. 32; and C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans (ICC), 537, for discussion.

29 tn Here the particle μενοῦνγε (menounge) is correcting the negative response expected by the particle μή (mē) in the preceding question. Since the question has been translated positively, the translation was changed here to reflect that rendering.

30 sn A quotation from Ps 19:4.

understand?[1] First Moses says, "I will make you jealous by those who are not a nation; with a senseless nation I will provoke you to anger."[2] 10:20 And Isaiah is even bold enough to say, "I was found by those who did not seek me; I became well known to those who did not ask for me."[3] 10:21 But about Israel he says, "All day long I held out my hands to this disobedient and stubborn people!"[4]

Israel's Rejection not Complete nor Final

11:1 So I ask, God has not rejected his people, has he? Absolutely not! For I too am an Israelite, a descendant of Abraham, from the tribe of Benjamin. 11:2 God has not rejected his people whom he foreknew! Do you not know what the scripture says about Elijah, how he pleads with God against Israel? 11:3 "Lord, they have killed your prophets, they have demolished your altars; I alone am left and they are seeking my life!"[5] 11:4 But what was the divine response[6] to him? "I have kept for myself seven thousand people[7] who have not bent the knee to Baal."[8]

11:5 So in the same way at the present time there is a remnant chosen by grace. 11:6 And if it is by grace, it is no longer by works, otherwise grace would no longer be grace. 11:7 What then? Israel failed to obtain what it was diligently seeking, but the elect obtained it. The[9] rest were hardened, 11:8 as it is written,

> "God gave them a spirit of stupor, > eyes that would not see and ears that > would not hear, > to this very day."[10]
>
> 11:9 And David says,
>
> "Let their table become a snare and trap, > a stumbling block and a retribution for > them;
> 11:10 let their eyes be darkened so that they > may not see,
> and make their backs bend continually."[11]

11:11 I ask then, they did not stumble into an irrevocable fall,[12] did they? Absolutely not! But by their transgression salvation has come to the Gentiles, to make Israel[13] jealous. 11:12 Now if their transgression means riches for the world and their defeat means riches for the Gentiles, how much more will their full restoration[14] bring?

11:13 Now I am speaking to you Gentiles. Seeing that I am an apostle to the Gentiles, I magnify my ministry, 11:14 if somehow I could provoke my people to jealousy and save some of them. 11:15 For if their rejection is the reconciliation of the world, what will their acceptance be but life from the dead? 11:16 If the first portion[15] of the dough offered is holy, then the whole batch is holy, and if the root is holy, so too are the branches.[16]

11:17 Now if some of the branches were broken off, and you, a wild olive shoot, were grafted in among them and participated in[17] the richness of the olive root, 11:18 do not boast over the branches. But if you boast, remember that you do not support the root, but the root supports you. 11:19 Then you will say, "The branches were broken off so that I could be grafted in." 11:20 Granted![18] They were broken off because of their unbelief, but you stand by faith. Do not be arrogant, but fear! 11:21 For if God did not spare the natural branches, perhaps he will not spare you. 11:22 Notice therefore the kindness and harshness of God – harshness toward those who have fallen, but[19] God's kindness toward you, provided you continue in his kindness;[20] otherwise you also will be cut off. 11:23 And even they – if they do not continue in their unbelief – will be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again. 11:24 For if you were cut off from what is by nature a wild olive tree, and grafted, contrary to nature, into a cultivated olive tree, how much more will these natural branches be grafted back into their own olive tree?

---

[1] tn Grk "Israel did not 'not know,' did he?" The double negative in Greek has been translated as a positive affirmation for clarity (see v. 18 above for a similar situation).

[2] sn A quotation from Deut 32:21.

[3] sn A quotation from Isa 65:1.

[4] sn A quotation from Isa 65:2.

[5] sn A quotation from 1 Kgs 19:10, 14.

[6] tn Grk "the revelation," "the oracle."

[7] tn The Greek term here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which only exceptionally is used in a generic sense of both males and females. In this context, it appears to be a generic usage ("people") since when Paul speaks of a remnant of faithful Israelites ("the elect," v. 7), he is not referring to males only. It can also be argued, however, that it refers only to adult males here ("men"), perhaps as representative of all the faithful left in Israel.

[8] sn A quotation from 1 Kgs 19:18.

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[10] sn A quotation from Deut 29:4; Isa 29:10.

[11] sn A quotation from Ps 69:22-23.

[12] tn Grk "that they might fall."

[13] tn Grk "them"; the referent (Israel, cf. 11:7) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[14] tn Or "full inclusion"; Grk "their fullness."

[15] tn Grk "firstfruits," a term for the first part of something that has been set aside and offered to God before the remainder can be used.

[16] sn Most interpreters see Paul as making use of a long-standing metaphor of the olive tree (the root...the branches) as a symbol for Israel. See, in this regard, Jer 11:16, 19. A. T. Hanson, Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 121-24, cites rabbinic use of the figure of the olive tree, and goes so far as to argue that Rom 11:17-24 is a midrash on Jer 11:16-19.

[17] tn Grk "became a participant of."

[18] tn Grk "well!", an adverb used to affirm a statement. It means "very well," "you are correct."

[19] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

[20] tn Grk "if you continue in (the) kindness."

11:25 For I do not want you to be ignorant of this mystery, brothers and sisters,[1] so that you may not be conceited: A partial hardening has happened to Israel[2] until the full number[3] of the Gentiles has come in. 11:26 And so[4] all Israel will be saved, as it is written:

> "The Deliverer will come out of Zion;
> he will remove ungodliness from Jacob.
> 11:27 And this is my covenant with them,[5]
> when I take away their sins."[6]

11:28 In regard to the gospel they are enemies for your sake, but in regard to election they are dearly loved for the sake of the fathers. 11:29 For the gifts and the call of God are irrevocable. 11:30 Just as you were formerly disobedient to God, but have now received mercy due to their disobedience, 11:31 so they too have now been disobedient in order that, by the mercy shown to you, they too may now[7] receive mercy. 11:32 For God has consigned all people to disobedience so that he may show mercy to them all.[8]

11:33 Oh, the depth of the riches and wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and how fathomless his ways!

> 11:34 For who has known the mind of the Lord, > or who has been his counselor?[9] > 11:35 Or who has first given to God,[10] > that God[11] needs to repay him?[12]

11:36 For from him and through him and to him are all things. To him be glory forever! Amen.

Consecration of the Believer's Life

12:1 Therefore I exhort you, brothers and sisters,[13] by the mercies of God, to present your bodies as a sacrifice – alive, holy, and pleasing to God[14] – which is your reasonable service. 12:2 Do not be conformed[15] to this present world,[16] but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may test and approve[17] what is the will of God – what is good and well-pleasing and perfect.

Conduct in Humility

12:3 For by the grace given to me I say to every one of you not to think more highly of yourself than you ought to think, but to think with sober discernment, as God has distributed to each of you[18] a measure of faith.[19] 12:4 For just as in one body we have many members, and not all the members serve the same function, 12:5 so we who are many are one body in Christ, and individually we are members who belong to one another. 12:6 And we have different gifts[20] according to the grace given to us. If the gift is prophecy, that individual must use it in proportion to his faith. 12:7 If it is service, he must serve; if it is teaching, he must teach; 12:8 if it is exhortation, he must exhort; if it is contributing, he must do so with sincerity; if it is leadership, he must do so with diligence; if it is showing mercy, he must do so with cheerfulness.

---

1 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

2 tn Or "Israel has experienced a hardening in part until the full number of the Gentiles has come in."

3 tn Grk "fullness."

4 tn It is not clear whether the phrase καὶ οὕτως (kai houtōs, "and so") is to be understood in a modal sense ("and in this way") or in a temporal sense ("and in the end"). Neither interpretation is conclusive from a grammatical standpoint, and in fact the two may not be mutually exclusive. Some, like H. Hübner, who argue strongly against the temporal reading, nevertheless continue to give the phrase a temporal significance, saying that God will save all Israel in the end (Gottes Ich und Israel [FRLANT], 118).

5 sn A quotation from Isa 59:20-21.

6 sn A quotation from Isa 27:9; Jer 31:33-34.

7 tc Some important Alexandrian and Western MSS (ℵ B D*,c 1506 pc bo) read νῦν (nun, "now") here. A few other MSS (33 365 pc sa) have ὕστερον (husteron, "finally"). MSS that lack the word are 𝔓46 A D2 F G Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 latt. External evidence slightly favors omission with good representatives from the major texttypes, and because of the alliance of Alexandrian and Byzantine MSS (with the Byzantine going against its normal tendency to embrace the longer reading). Internally, scribes could have added νῦν here to give balance to the preceding clause (οὗτοι νῦν ἠπείθησαν...αὐτοὶ νῦν ἐλεηθῶσιν [houtoi nun ēpeithēsan...autoi nun eleēthōsin; "they have now been disobedient...they may now receive mercy"]). However, it seems much more likely that they would have deleted it because of its seeming inappropriateness in this context. That some witnesses have ὕστερον presupposes the presence of νῦν in their ancestors. A decision is difficult, but νῦν is slightly preferred, since it is the more difficult reading and is adequately represented in the MSS.

8 tn Grk "to all"; "them" has been supplied for stylistic reasons.

9 sn A quotation from Isa 40:13.

10 tn Grk "him"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 sn A quotation from Job 41:11.

13 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

14 tn The participle and two adjectives "alive, holy, and pleasing to God" are taken as predicates in relation to "sacrifice," making the exhortation more emphatic. See ExSyn 618-19.

sn Taken as predicate adjectives, the terms alive, holy, and pleasing are showing how unusual is the sacrifice that believers can now offer, for OT sacrifices were dead. As has often been quipped about this text, "The problem with living sacrifices is that they keep crawling off the altar."

15 tn Although συσχηματίζεσθε (suschēmatizesthe) could be either a passive or middle, the passive is more likely since it would otherwise have to be a direct middle ("conform yourselves") and, as such, would be quite rare for NT Greek. It is very telling that being "conformed" to the present world is viewed as a passive notion, for it may suggest that it happens, in part, subconsciously. At the same time, the passive could well be a "permissive passive," suggesting that there may be some consciousness of the conformity taking place. Most likely, it is a combination of both.

16 tn Grk "to this age."

17 sn The verb translated test and approve (δοκιμάζω, dokimazō) carries the sense of "test with a positive outcome," "test so as to approve."

18 tn The words "of you" have been supplied for clarity.

19 tn Or "to each as God has distributed a measure of faith."

20 tn This word comes from the same root as "grace" in the following clause; it means "things graciously given," "grace-gifts."

Conduct in Love

12:9 Love must be[1] without hypocrisy. Abhor what is evil, cling to what is good. 12:10 Be devoted to one another with mutual love, showing eagerness in honoring one another. 12:11 Do not lag in zeal, be enthusiastic in spirit, serve the Lord. 12:12 Rejoice in hope, endure in suffering, persist in prayer. 12:13 Contribute to the needs of the saints, pursue hospitality. 12:14 Bless those who persecute you, bless and do not curse. 12:15 Rejoice with those who rejoice, weep with those who weep. 12:16 Live in harmony with one another; do not be haughty but associate with the lowly.[2] Do not be conceited.[3] 12:17 Do not repay anyone evil for evil; consider what is good before all people.[4] 12:18 If possible, so far as it depends on you, live peaceably with all people.[5] 12:19 Do not avenge yourselves, dear friends, but give place to God's wrath,[6] for it is written, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay,"[7] says the Lord. 12:20 Rather, if your enemy is hungry, feed him; if he is thirsty, give him a drink; for in doing this you will be heaping burning coals on his head.[8] 12:21 Do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good.

Submission to Civil Government

13:1 Let every person be subject to the governing authorities. For there is no authority except by God's appointment,[9] and the authorities that exist have been instituted by God. 13:2 So the person who resists such authority[10] resists the ordinance of God, and those who resist will incur judgment 13:3 (for rulers cause no fear for good conduct but for bad). Do you desire not to fear authority? Do good and you will receive its commendation, 13:4 for it is God's servant for your good. But if you do wrong, be in fear, for it does not bear the sword in vain. It is God's servant to administer retribution on the wrongdoer. 13:5 Therefore it is necessary to be in subjection, not only because of the wrath of the authorities[11] but also because of your conscience.[12] 13:6 For this reason you also pay taxes, for the authorities[13] are God's servants devoted to governing.[14] 13:7 Pay everyone what is owed: taxes to whom taxes are due, revenue to whom revenue is due, respect to whom respect is due, honor to whom honor is due.

Exhortation to Love Neighbors

13:8 Owe no one anything, except to love one another, for the one who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law. 13:9 For the commandments,[15] "Do not commit adultery, do not murder, do not steal, do not covet,"[16] (and if there is any other commandment) are summed up in this, "Love your neighbor as yourself."[17] 13:10 Love does no wrong to a neighbor. Therefore love is the fulfillment of the law.

Motivation to Godly Conduct

13:11 And do this[18] because we know[19] the time, that it is already the hour for us to awake from sleep, for our salvation is now nearer than when we became believers. 13:12 The night has advanced toward dawn; the day is near. So then we must lay aside the works of darkness, and put on the weapons of light. 13:13 Let us live decently as in the daytime, not in carousing and drunkenness, not in sexual immorality and sensuality, not in discord and jealousy. 13:14 Instead, put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh to arouse its desires.[20]

Exhortation to Mutual Forbearance

14:1 Now receive the one who is weak in the faith, and do not have disputes over differing opinions.[21] 14:2 One person believes in eating everything, but the weak person eats only vegetables. 14:3 The one who eats everything must not despise the one who does not, and the one who abstains must not judge the one who eats everything, for God has accepted him. 14:4 Who are you to pass judgment on another's servant?

[1] tn The verb "must be" is understood in the Greek text.

[2] tn Or "but give yourselves to menial tasks." The translation depends on whether one takes the adjective "lowly" as masculine or neuter.

[8] sn A quotation from Prov 25:21-22.

[9] tn Grk "by God."

[10] tn Grk "the authority," referring to the authority just described.

[11] tn Grk "its wrath"; the referent (the governing authorities) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "because of (the) conscience," but the English possessive "your" helps to show whose conscience the context implies.

[13] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the governing authorities) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[14] tn Grk "devoted to this very thing."

[15] tn Grk "For the..." (with the word "commandments" supplied for clarity). The Greek article ("the") is used here as a substantiver to introduce the commands that are quoted from the second half of the Decalogue (ExSyn 238).

[16] sn A quotation from Exod 20:13-15, 17; Deut 5:17-19, 21.

[17] sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

[18] tn Grk "and this," probably referring to the command to love (13:8-10); hence, "do" is implied from the previous verses.

[19] tn The participle εἰδότες (eidotes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[20] tn Grk "make no provision for the flesh unto desires."

[21] tn Grk "over opinions." The qualifier "differing" has been supplied to clarify the meaning.

Before his own master he stands or falls. And he will stand, for the Lord[1] is able to make him stand.

14:5 One person regards one day holier than other days, and another regards them all alike.[2] Each must be fully convinced in his own mind. 14:6 The one who observes the day does it for the Lord. The[3] one who eats, eats for the Lord because he gives thanks to God, and the one who abstains from eating abstains for the Lord, and he gives thanks to God. 14:7 For none of us lives for himself and none dies for himself. 14:8 If we live, we live for the Lord; if we die, we die for the Lord. Therefore, whether we live or die, we are the Lord's. 14:9 For this reason Christ died and returned to life, so that he may be the Lord of both the dead and the living.

14:10 But you who eat vegetables only – why do you judge your brother or sister?[4] And you who eat everything – why do you despise your brother or sister?[5] For we will all stand before the judgment seat[6] of God. 14:11 For it is written, "As I live, says the Lord, every knee will bow to me, and every tongue will give praise to God."[7] 14:12 Therefore, each of us will give an account of himself to God.[8]

Exhortation for the Strong not to Destroy the Weak

14:13 Therefore we must not pass judgment on one another, but rather determine never to place an obstacle or a trap before a brother or sister.[9] 14:14 I know and am convinced in the Lord Jesus that there is nothing unclean in itself; still, it is unclean to the one who considers it unclean. 14:15 For if your brother or sister[10] is distressed because of what you eat,[11] you are no longer walking in love.[12] Do not destroy by your food someone for whom Christ died. 14:16 Therefore do not let what you consider good[13] be spoken of as evil. 14:17 For the kingdom of God does not consist of food and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. 14:18 For the one who serves Christ in this way is pleasing to God and approved by people.[14]

14:19 So then, let us pursue what makes for peace and for building up one another. 14:20 Do not destroy the work of God for the sake of food. For although all things are clean,[15] it is wrong to cause anyone to stumble by what you eat. 14:21 It is good not to eat meat or drink wine or to do anything that causes your brother to stumble.[16] 14:22 The faith[17] you have, keep to yourself before God. Blessed is the one who does not judge himself by what he approves. 14:23 But the man who doubts is condemned if he eats, because he does not do so from faith, and whatever is not from faith is sin.[18]

1 tc Most MSS, especially Western and Byzantine (D F G 048 33 1739 1881 𝔐 latt), read θεός (theos, "God") in place of κύριος (kurios, "Lord") here. However, κύριος is found in many of the most important MSS (𝔓46 ℵ A B C P Ψ pc co), and θεός looks to be an assimilation to θεός in v. 3.

2 tn Grk "For one judges day from day, and one judges all days."

3 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

4 tn Grk "But why do you judge your brother?" The introductory phrase has been supplied in the translation to clarify whom Paul is addressing, i.e., the "weak" Christian who eats only vegetables (see vv. 2-3). The author uses the singular pronoun here to rhetorically address one person, but the plural has been used in the translation for stylistic reasons.

5 tn Grk "Or again, why do you despise your brother?" The introductory phrase has been supplied in the translation to clarify whom Paul is addressing, i.e., the "strong" Christian who eats everything (see vv. 2-3). The author uses the singular pronoun here to rhetorically address one person, but the plural has been used in the translation for stylistic reasons.

6 sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a familiar item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city.

7 sn A quotation from Isa 45:23.

8 tc ‡ The words "to God" are absent from some MSS (B F G 6 630 1739 1881 pc) but are found in ℵ A C D Ψ 0209 33 𝔐 lat sy co. External evidence somewhat favors their inclusion since Alexandrian, Western, and Byzantine MSS are well represented. From an internal standpoint, however, it is easy to see the words as a scribal gloss intended to clarify the referent, especially as a reinforcement to the quotation of Isa 45:23 in v. 11. Not only that, but the abrupt ending of the verse without "to God" is harsh, both in Greek and in English. In this instance, the internal considerations seem overwhelming on the side of the omission. At the same time, English stylistic needs require the words and they have been put into the translation, even though they are most likely not original. NA27 places the words in brackets, indicating doubt as to their authenticity.

tn Or "each of us is accountable to God."

9 tn Grk "brother."

10 tn Grk "brother."

11 tn Grk "on account of food."

12 tn Grk "according to love."

13 tn Grk "do not let your good."

14 tn Grk "by men," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is generic here ("people") since the contrast in context is between God and humanity.

15 sn Here clean refers to food being ceremonially clean.

16 tc A large number of MSS, some of them quite important (𝔓46vid ℵ2 B D F G Ψ 0209 33 1881 𝔐 lat sa), read "or to be offended or to be made weak" after "to stumble." The shorter reading "to stumble" is found only in Alexandrian MSS (ℵ* A C 048 81 945 1506 1739 pc bo). Although external evidence favors inclusion, internal evidence points to a scribal expansion, perhaps reminiscent of 1 Cor 8:11-13. The shorter reading is therefore preferred.

17 tc ‡ Several important Alexandrian witnesses (ℵ A B C 048) have the relative pronoun ἥν (hēn, "the faith that you have") at this juncture, but D F G Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 lat co lack it. Without the pronoun, the clause is more ambiguous (either "Keep the faith [that] you have between yourself and God" or "Do you have faith? Keep it between yourself and God"). The pronoun thus looks to be a motivated reading, created to clarify the meaning of the text. Even though it is found in the better witnesses, in this instance internal evidence should be given preference. NA27 places the word in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

18 tc Some MSS insert 16:25-27 at this point. See the tc note at 16:25 for more information.

Exhortation for the Strong to Help the Weak

15:1 But we who are strong ought to bear with the failings of the weak, and not just please ourselves.[1] 15:2 Let each of us please his neighbor for his good to build him up. 15:3 For even Christ did not please himself, but just as it is written, "The insults of those who insult you have fallen on me."[2] 15:4 For everything that was written in former times was written for our instruction, so that through endurance and through encouragement of the scriptures we may have hope. 15:5 Now may the God of endurance and comfort give you unity with one another[3] in accordance with Christ Jesus, 15:6 so that together you may with one voice glorify the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Exhortation to Mutual Acceptance

15:7 Receive one another, then, just as Christ also received you, to God's glory. 15:8 For I tell you that Christ has become a servant of the circumcised[4] on behalf of God's truth to confirm the promises made to the fathers,[5] 15:9 and thus the Gentiles glorify God for his mercy.[6] As it is written, "Because of this I will confess you among the Gentiles, and I will sing praises to your name."[7] 15:10 And again it says: "Rejoice, O Gentiles, with his people."[8] 15:11 And again, "Praise the Lord all you Gentiles, and let all the peoples praise him."[9] 15:12 And again Isaiah says, "The root of Jesse will come, and the one who rises to rule over the Gentiles, in him will the Gentiles hope."[10] 15:13 Now may the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace as you believe in him,[11] so that you may abound in hope by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Paul's Motivation for Writing the Letter

15:14 But I myself am fully convinced about you, my brothers and sisters,[12] that you yourselves are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, and able to instruct one another. 15:15 But I have written more boldly to you on some points so as to remind you, because of the grace given to me by God 15:16 to be a minister of Christ Jesus to the Gentiles. I serve[13] the gospel of God[14] like a priest, so that the Gentiles may become an acceptable offering,[15] sanctified by the Holy Spirit.

15:17 So I boast[16] in Christ Jesus about the things that pertain to God. 15:18 For I will not dare to speak of anything except what Christ has accomplished through me in order to bring about the obedience[17] of the Gentiles, by word and deed, 15:19 in the power of signs and wonders, in the power of the Spirit of God. So from Jerusalem even as far as Illyricum I have fully preached the gospel of Christ. 15:20 And in this way I desire to preach where Christ has not been named, so as not to build on another person's foundation, 15:21 but as it is written: "Those who were not told about him will see, and those who have not heard will understand."[18]

---

[1] tn Grk "and not please ourselves." NT Greek negatives used in contrast like this are often not absolute, but relative: "not so much one as the other."

[2] sn A quotation from Ps 69:9.

[3] tn Grk "grant you to think the same among one another."

[4] tn Grk "of the circumcision"; that is, the Jews.

[5] tn Or "to the patriarchs."

[6] tn There are two major syntactical alternatives which are both awkward: (1) One could make "glorify" dependent on "Christ has become a minister" and coordinate with "to confirm" and the result would be rendered "Christ has become a minister of circumcision to confirm the promises...and so that the Gentiles might glorify God." (2) One could make "glorify" dependent on "I tell you" and coordinate with "Christ has become a minister" and the result would be rendered "I tell you that Christ has become a minister of circumcision...and that the Gentiles glorify God." The second rendering is preferred.

[7] sn A quotation from Ps 18:49.

[8] sn A quotation from Deut 32:43.

[9] sn A quotation from Ps 117:1.

[10] sn A quotation from Isa 11:10.

[11] tn Grk "in the believing" or "as [you] believe," with the object "him" supplied from the context. The referent could be God (15:13a) or Christ (15:12).

[12] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[13] tn Grk "serving." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text, but in keeping with contemporary English style, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[15] tn Grk "so that the offering of the Gentiles may become acceptable." This could be understood to refer to an offering belonging to the Gentiles (a possessive genitive) or made by the Gentiles (subjective genitive), but more likely the phrase should be understood as an appositive genitive, with the Gentiles themselves consisting of the offering (so J. D. G. Dunn, Romans [WBC 38], 2:860). The latter view is reflected in the translation "so that the Gentiles may become an acceptable offering."

[16] tc ‡ After οὖν (oun), several important Alexandrian and Western mss (B C D F G 81 365 pc) have τήν (tēn). The article is lacking in ℵ A Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 however. 𝔓[46] supplies a relative pronoun and has a different reading entirely ("which I have [as a] boast"). Articles were frequently introduced to clarify the meaning of the text. In this instance, since the word modified (καύχησιν, kauchēsin) is third declension, a visual oversight (resulting in omission) is less likely. Hence, the shorter reading is probably original. The difference in translation between these first two options is negligible ("I have the boast" or "I have a boast"). NA[27] puts the article in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "Therefore I have a boast."

[17] tn Grk "unto obedience."

[18] sn A quotation from Isa 52:15.

Paul's Intention of Visiting the Romans

15:22 This is the reason I was often hindered from coming to you. 15:23 But now there is nothing more to keep me[1] in these regions, and I have for many years desired[2] to come to you 15:24 when I go to Spain. For I hope to visit you when I pass through and that you will help me[3] on my journey there, after I have enjoyed your company for a while.

15:25 But now I go to Jerusalem to minister to the saints. 15:26 For Macedonia and Achaia are pleased to make some contribution for the poor among the saints in Jerusalem. 15:27 For they were pleased to do this, and indeed they are indebted to the Jerusalem saints.[4] For if the Gentiles have shared in their spiritual things, they are obligated also to minister to them in material things. 15:28 Therefore after I have completed this and have safely delivered this bounty to them,[5] I will set out for Spain by way of you, 15:29 and I know that when I come to you I will come in the fullness of Christ's blessing.

15:30 Now I urge you, brothers and sisters,[6] through our Lord Jesus Christ and through the love of the Spirit, to join fervently with me in prayer to God on my behalf. 15:31 Pray[7] that I may be rescued from those who are disobedient in Judea and that my ministry in Jerusalem may be acceptable to the saints, 15:32 so that by God's will I may come to you with joy and be refreshed in your company. 15:33 Now may the God of peace be with all of you. Amen.[8]

Personal Greetings

16:1 Now I commend to you our sister Phoebe, who is a servant[9] of the church in Cenchrea, 16:2 so that you may welcome her in the Lord in a way worthy of the saints and provide her with whatever help she may need from you, for she has been a great help to many, including me.

16:3 Greet Prisca and Aquila,[10] my fellow workers in Christ Jesus, 16:4 who risked their own necks for my life. Not only I, but all the churches of the Gentiles are grateful to them. 16:5 Also greet the church in their house. Greet my dear friend Epenetus,[11] who was the first convert[12] to Christ in the province of Asia.[13] 16:6 Greet Mary, who has worked very hard for you. 16:7 Greet Andronicus and Junia,[14] my compatriots[15] and my fellow prisoners. They are well known[16] to the apostles,[17]

---

1 tn Grk "now no longer having a place…I have."

2 tn Grk "but having a desire…for many years."

3 tn Grk "and to be helped by you." The passive construction was changed to an active one in the translation.

4 tn Grk "to them"; the referent (the Jerusalem saints) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn Grk "have sealed this fruit to them."

6 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

7 tn Verses 30-31 form one long sentence in the Greek but have been divided into two distinct sentences for clarity

8 tc Some MSS lack the word "Amen" here, one of them (𝔓[46]) also inserting 16:25-27 at this point. See the tc note at 16:25 for more information.

9 tn Or "deaconess." It is debated whether διάκονος (diakonos) here refers to a specific office within the church. One contextual argument used to support this view is that Phoebe is associated with a particular church, Cenchrea, and as such would therefore be a deacon of that church. In the NT some who are called διάκονος are related to a particular church, yet the scholarly consensus is that such individuals are not deacons, but "servants" or "ministers" (other viable translations for διάκονος). For example, Epaphras is associated with the church in Colossians and is called a διάκονος in Col 1:7, but no contemporary translation regards him as a deacon. In 1 Tim 4:6 Paul calls Timothy a διάκονος; Timothy was associated with the church in Ephesus, but he obviously was not a deacon. In addition, the lexical evidence leans away from this view: Within the NT, the διακον- word group rarely functions with a technical nuance. In any case, the evidence is not compelling either way. The view accepted in the translation above is that Phoebe was a servant of the church, not a deaconess, although this conclusion should be regarded as tentative.

10 sn On Prisca and Aquila see also Acts 18:2, 18, 26; 1 Cor 16:19; 2 Tim 4:19. In the NT "Priscilla" and "Prisca" are the same person. The author of Acts uses the full name Priscilla, while Paul uses the diminutive form Prisca.

11 sn The spelling Epenetus is also used by NIV, NLT; the name is alternately spelled Epaenetus (NASB, NKJV, NRSV).

12 tn Grk "first fruit." This is a figurative use referring to Epenetus as the first Christian convert in the region.

14 tn Or "Junias."

sn The feminine name Junia, though common in Latin, is quite rare in Greek (apparently only three instances of it occur in Greek literature outside Rom 16:7, according to the data in the TLG [D. Moo, Romans [NICNT], 922]). The masculine Junias (as a contraction for Junianas), however, is rarer still: Only one instance of the masculine name is known in extant Greek literature (Epiphanius mentions Junias in his Index discipulorum 125). Further, since there are apparently other husband-wife teams mentioned in this salutation (Prisca and Aquila [v. 3], Philologus and Julia [v. 15]), it might be natural to think of Junia as a feminine name. (This ought not be pressed too far, however, for in v. 12 all three individuals are women [though the first two are linked together], and in vv. 9-11 all the individuals are men.) In Greek only a difference of accent distinguishes between Junias (male) and Junia (female). If it refers to a woman, it is possible (1) that she had the gift of apostleship (not the office), or (2) that she was not an apostle but along with Andronicus was esteemed by (or among) the apostles. As well, the term "prominent" probably means "well known," suggesting that Andronicus and Junia(s) were well known to the apostles (see note on the phrase "well known" which follows).

15 tn Or "kinsmen," "relatives," "fellow countrymen."

16 tn Or "prominent, outstanding, famous." The term ἐπίσημος (episēmos) is used either in an implied comparative sense ("prominent, outstanding") or in an elative sense ("famous, well known"). The key to determining the meaning of the term in any given passage is both the general context and the specific collocation of this word with its adjuncts. When a comparative notion is seen, that to which ἐπίσημος is compared is frequently, if not usually, put in the genitive case (cf., e.g., 3 Macc 6:1 [Ἐλεαζαρος δέ τις ἀνὴρ ἐπίσημος τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς χώρας ἱερέων "Eleazar, a man prominent among the priests of the country"]; cf. also Pss. Sol. 17:30). When, however, an elative notion is found, ἐν (en) plus a personal plural dative is not uncommon (cf. Pss. Sol. 2:6). Although ἐν plus a personal dative does not indicate agency, in collocation with words of perception, (ἐν plus) dative personal nouns are often used to show the recipients. In this instance, the idea would then be "well known to the apostles." See M. H. Burer and D. B. Wallace, "Was Junia Really an Apostle? A Re-examination of Rom 16.7," NTS 47 (2001): 76-91, who argue for the elative notion here.

17 tn Or "among the apostles." See discussion in the note on and they were in Christ before me. 16:8 Greet Ampliatus, my dear friend in the Lord. 16:9 Greet Urbanus, our fellow worker in Christ, and my good friend Stachys. 16:10 Greet Apelles, who is approved in Christ. Greet those who belong to the household of Aristobulus. 16:11 Greet Herodion, my compatriot.[1] Greet those in the household of Narcissus who are in the Lord. 16:12 Greet Tryphena[2] and Tryphosa, laborers in the Lord. Greet my dear friend[3] Persis, who has worked hard in the Lord. 16:13 Greet Rufus, chosen in the Lord, and his mother who was also a mother to me.[4] 16:14 Greet Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermes, Patrobas, Hermas, and the brothers and sisters[5] with them. 16:15 Greet Philologus and Julia, Nereus and his sister, and Olympas, and all the believers[6] who are with them. 16:16 Greet one another with a holy kiss. All the churches of Christ greet you.

16:17 Now I urge you, brothers and sisters,[7] to watch out for those who create dissensions and obstacles contrary to the teaching that you learned. Avoid them! 16:18 For these are the kind who do not serve our Lord Christ, but their own appetites. By their smooth talk and flattery they deceive the minds[8] of the naive. 16:19 Your obedience is known to all and thus I rejoice over you. But I want you to be wise in what is good and innocent in what is evil. 16:20 The God of peace will quickly crush Satan under your feet. The grace of our Lord Jesus be with you.

16:21 Timothy, my fellow worker, greets you; so do Lucius, Jason, and Sosipater, my compatriots.[9] 16:22 I, Tertius, who am writing this letter, greet you in the Lord. 16:23 Gaius, who is host to me and to the whole church, greets you. Erastus the city treasurer and our brother Quartus greet you.[10]

16:25[11] Now to him who is able to strengthen you according to my gospel and the proclamation of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery that had been kept secret for long ages, 16:26 but now is disclosed, and through the prophetic scriptures has been made known to all the nations, according to the command of the eternal God, to bring about the obedience of faith – 16:27 to the only wise God, through Jesus Christ, be glory forever! Amen.

"well known" for these options.

[1] tn Or "kinsman," "relative," "fellow countryman."

[2] sn The spelling Tryphena is also used by NIV, NKJV, NLT; the name is alternately spelled Tryphaena (NASB, NRSV).

[3] tn Grk "Greet the beloved."

[4] tn Grk "and his mother and mine."

[5] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[6] tn Grk "saints."

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:13.

[8] tn Grk "hearts."

[9] tn Grk "kinsmen, relatives, fellow countrymen."

[10] tc Most MSS (D [F G 629 without "Jesus Christ"] Ψ [630] 1881 𝔐 al) include here 16:24 "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all of you. Amen." Other MSS (P 33 104 365 pc) include the verse after 16:27. The verse is entirely lacking in 𝔓46.61 (א A) B C 81 1739 2464 pc co. The strength of the external evidence, combined with uncertainty in other MSS over where the verse should be located and the fact that it is a repetition of v. 20b, strongly favors omission of the verse. The present translation follows NA27 in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

[11] tc There is a considerable degree of difference among the MSS regarding the presence and position of the doxology of 16:25-27. Five situations present themselves from the MS tradition. The doxology is found in the ancient witnesses in three separate locations: (1) here after 16:23 (𝔓61 א B C D 81 365 630 1739 2464 al co), (2) after 14:23 (Ψ 0209vid 𝔐), or (3) after 15:33 (𝔓46). The situation is further complicated in that some of the MSS have these verses in two places: (4) after 14:23 and after 16:23 (A P 33 104 2805 pc); or (5) after 14:23 and after 15:33 (1506). The uncertain position of the doxology might suggest that it was added by later scribes. But since the MSS containing the doxology are so early and widespread, it almost certainly belongs in Romans; it is only a question of where. Further, the witnesses that omit the doxology are few: F G 629 Hiermss. (And of these, G has a blank space of several lines large enough for the doxology to belong there.) Only two positions (after chapter 14 only and at the end of the letter only) deserve particular notice because the situation of the MSS showing the doxology in two places dates back to the 5th century. Later copyists, faced with the doxology in two different places in the MSS they knew, may have decided to copy the doxology in both places, since they were unwilling to consciously omit any text. Because the textual disruption of the doxology is so early, TCGNT 472 suggests two possibilities: either (1) that Paul may have sent two different copies of Romans – a copy lacking chapter 16 and a copy with the full text of the epistle as we now have it, or (2) Marcion or some of his followers circulated a shortened form of the epistle that lacked chapters 15 and 16. Those MSS that lacked chapters 15-16 would naturally conclude with some kind of doxology after chapter 14. On the other hand, H. Gamble (The Textual History of the Letter to the Romans [SD], 123-32) argues for the position of the doxology at 14:23, since to put the doxology at 16:25 would violate Paul's normal pattern of a grace-benediction at the close of the letter. Gamble further argues for the inclusion of 16:24, since the MSS that put the doxology after chapter 14 almost always present 16:24 as the letter's closing, whereas most of the MSS that put the doxology at its traditional position drop 16:24, perhaps because it would be redundant before 16:25-27. A decision is difficult, but the weight of external evidence, since it is both early and geographically widespread, suggests that the doxology belongs here after 16:23. For a full discussion, see TCGNT 470-73.

1 Corinthians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] called to be an apostle of Christ Jesus[2] by the will of God, and Sosthenes, our brother, 1:2 to the church of God that is in Corinth,[3] to those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus, and called to be saints, with all those in every place who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, their Lord and ours.[4] 1:3 Grace and peace to you[5] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Thanksgiving

1:4 I always thank my God for you because of the grace of God that was given to you in Christ Jesus. 1:5 For you were made rich[6] in every way in him, in all your speech and in every kind of knowledge[7] – 1:6 just as the testimony about Christ has been confirmed among you – 1:7 so that you do not lack any spiritual gift as you wait for the revelation[8] of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1:8 He[9] will also strengthen you to the end, so that you will be blameless on the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1:9 God is faithful, by whom you were called into fellowship with his son, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Divisions in the Church

1:10 I urge you, brothers and sisters,[10] by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to agree together,[11] to end your divisions,[12] and to be united by the same mind and purpose.[13] 1:11 For members of Chloe's household have made it clear to me, my brothers and sisters,[14] that there are quarrels[15] among you. 1:12 Now I mean this, that[16] each of you is saying, "I am with Paul," or "I am with Apollos," or "I am with Cephas," or "I am with Christ." 1:13 Is Christ divided? Paul wasn't crucified for you, was he?[17] Or were you in fact baptized in the name of Paul?[18] 1:14 I thank God[19] that I did not baptize any of you except Crispus and Gaius, 1:15 so that no one can say that you were baptized in my name! 1:16 (I also baptized the household of Stephanus. Otherwise, I do not remember whether I baptized anyone else.) 1:17 For Christ did not send me to baptize, but to preach the gospel – and not with clever speech, so that the cross of Christ would not become useless.[20]

---

[1] tn Grk "Paul." The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[2] tc Many important MSS, as well as several others (א A Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 sy), have a reversed order of these words and read "Jesus Christ" rather than "Christ Jesus" (𝔓[46] B D F G 33 it). The meaning is not affected in either case, but the reading "Christ Jesus" is preferred both because it has somewhat better attestation and because it is slightly more difficult and thus more likely the original (a scribe who found it would be prone to change it to the more common expression). At the same time, Paul is fond of the order "Christ Jesus." As well, the later Pauline letters almost uniformly use this order in the salutations. Thus, on both external and internal grounds, "Christ Jesus" is the preferred reading here.

[3] map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

[4] tn Grk "theirs and ours."

[5] tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

[6] sn Made rich refers to how God richly blessed the Corinthians with an abundance of spiritual gifts (cf. v. 7).

[7] sn Speech and knowledge refer to the spiritual gifts God had blessed them with (as v. 7 confirms). Paul will discuss certain abuses of their gifts in chapters 12-14, but he thanks God for their giftedness.

[8] sn The revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ refers to the Lord's return, when he will be revealed (cf. the reference to the day of our Lord Jesus Christ in v. 8).

[9] tn Grk "who," referring to Christ. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[11] tn Grk "that you all say the same thing."

[12] tn Grk "that there be no divisions among you."

[13] tn Grk "that you be united in/by the same mind and in/by the same purpose."

[14] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[15] tn Or "rivalries, disputes."

[16] tn Or "And I say this because."

[17] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "was he?").

[18] tn This third question marks a peak in which Paul's incredulity at the Corinthians' attitude is in focus. The words "in fact" have been supplied in the translation to make this rhetorical juncture clear.

[19] tc The oldest and most important witnesses to this text, as well as a few others (א* B 6 1739 sa[ms] bo[pt]), lack the words τῷ θεῷ (tō theō, "God"), while the rest have them. An accidental omission could well account for the shorter reading, especially since θεῷ would have been written as a nomen sacrum (ϵϒXΔPIC TѠTѠΘѠ). However, one might expect to see, in some MSS at least, a dropping of the article but not the divine name. Internally, the Pauline introductory thanksgivings elsewhere always include τῷ θεῷ after εὐχαριστῶ (eucharistō, "I thank"; cf. Rom 1:8; 1 Cor 1:4; Phil 1:3; Phlm 4; in the plural, note Col 1:3; 1 Thess 1:2). However, both the fact that this is already used in 1 Cor 1:4 (thus perhaps motivating scribes to add it ten verses later), and that in later portions of his letters Paul does not consistently use the collocation of εὐχαριστῶ with τῷ θεῷ (Rom 16:4; 1 Cor 10:30), might give one pause. Still, nowhere else in the corpus Paulinum do we see a sentence begin with εὐχαριστῶ without an accompanying τῷ θεῷ. A decision is difficult, but on balance it is probably best to retain the words.

[20] tn Grk "would not be emptied."

The Message of the Cross

1:18 For the message about the cross is foolishness to those who are perishing, but to us who are being saved it is the power of God. 1:19 For it is written, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and I will thwart the cleverness of the intelligent."[1] 1:20 Where is the wise man? Where is the expert in the Mosaic law?[2] Where is the debater of this age? Has God not made the wisdom of the world foolish? 1:21 For since in the wisdom of God the world by its wisdom did not know God, God was pleased to save those who believe by the foolishness of preaching. 1:22 For Jews demand miraculous signs and Greeks ask for wisdom, 1:23 but we preach about a crucified Christ,[3] a stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Gentiles. 1:24 But to those who are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God. 1:25 For the foolishness of God is wiser than human wisdom,[4] and the weakness of God is stronger than human strength.[5]

1:26 Think about the circumstances of your call,[6] brothers and sisters.[7] Not many were wise by human standards,[8] not many were powerful, not many were born to a privileged position.[9] 1:27 But God chose what the world thinks foolish to shame the wise, and God chose what the world thinks weak to shame the strong. 1:28 God chose[10] what is low and despised in the world, what is regarded as nothing, to set aside what is regarded as something, 1:29 so that no one can boast in his presence. 1:30 He is the reason you have a relationship with Christ Jesus,[11] who became for us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification and redemption, 1:31 so that, as it is written, "Let the one who boasts, boast in the Lord."[12]

2:1 When I came[13] to you, brothers and sisters,[14] I did not come with superior eloquence or wisdom as I proclaimed the testimony[15] of God. 2:2 For I decided to be concerned about nothing[16] among you except Jesus Christ, and him crucified. 2:3 And I was with you in weakness and in fear and with much trembling. 2:4 My conversation and my preaching were not with persuasive words of wisdom, but with a demonstration of the Spirit and of power, 2:5 so that your faith would not be based on human wisdom but on the power of God.

Wisdom from God

2:6 Now we do speak wisdom among the mature,[17] but not a wisdom of this age or of the rulers of this age, who are perishing. 2:7 Instead we speak the wisdom of God, hidden in a mystery, that God determined before the ages for our glory. 2:8 None of the rulers of this age understood it. If they had known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. 2:9 But just as it is written, "Things that no eye has seen, or ear heard, or mind imagined,[18] are the things God has prepared for those who love him."[19] 2:10 God has revealed these to us by the Spirit.

1 sn A quotation from Isa 29:14.

2 tn Grk "the scribe." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the Mosaic law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

3 tn Or "Messiah"; Grk "preach Christ [Messiah] crucified," giving the content of the message.

4 tn Grk "than men."

5 tn Grk "than men."

6 tn Grk "Think about your calling." "Calling" in Paul's writings usually refers to God's work of drawing people to faith in Christ. The following verses show that "calling" here stands by metonymy for their circumstances when they became Christians, leading to the translation "the circumstances of your call."

7 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

8 tn Grk "according to the flesh."

9 tn The Greek word εὐγενής (eugenēs) refers to the status of being born into nobility, wealth, or power with an emphasis on the privileges and benefits that come with that position.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn Grk "of him you are in Christ Jesus."

12 sn A quotation from Jer 9:24. The themes of Jer 9 have influenced Paul's presentation in vv. 26-31. Jeremiah calls upon the wise, the strong, and the wealthy not to trust in their resources but in their knowledge of the true God – and so to boast in the Lord. Paul addresses the same three areas of human pride.

13 tn Grk "and I, when I came." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, κἀγώ (kagō) has not been translated here.

14 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

15 tc ‡ A few important MSS (𝔓46vid ℵ* A C pc as well as some versions and fathers) read μυστήριον (mustērion, "mystery") instead of μαρτύριον (marturion, "testimony"). But the latter has wider MS support (ℵ2 B D F G Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 and some versions), though not quite as impressive. μαρτύριον may have been changed by scribes in anticipation of Paul's words in 2:7, or conversely, μυστήριον may have been changed to conform to 1:6. Transcriptionally, since "the mystery of God/Christ" is a well-worn expression in the corpus Paulinum (1 Cor 2:7; 4:1; Eph 3:4; Col 2:2; 4:3), while "testimony of Christ" occurs in Paul only once (1 Cor 1:6, though "testimony of the Lord" appears in 2 Tim 1:8), and "testimony of God" never, it is likely that scribes changed the text to the more usual expression. A decision is difficult in this instance, but a slight preference should be given to μαρτύριον.

16 tn Grk "to know nothing."

17 tn In extrabiblical literature this word was applied to an initiate of a mystery religion (BDAG 995 s.v. τέλειος 3, gives numerous examples and states this was a technical term of the mystery religions). It could here refer to those who believed Paul's message, the mystery of God (v. 1), and so be translated as "those who believe God's message."

18 tn Grk "entered the heart," an OT expression, in which the heart functions like the mind.

19 sn A quotation from Isa 64:4.

For the Spirit searches all things, even the deep things of God. 2:11 For who among men knows the things of a man except the man's spirit within him? So too, no one knows the things of God except the Spirit of God. 2:12 Now we have not received the spirit of the world, but the Spirit who is from God, so that we may know the things that are freely given to us by God. 2:13 And we speak about these things, not with words taught us by human wisdom, but with those taught by the Spirit, explaining spiritual things to spiritual people.[1] 2:14 The unbeliever[2] does not receive the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him. And he cannot understand them, because they are spiritually discerned. 2:15 The one who is spiritual discerns[3] all things, yet he himself is understood[4] by no one. 2:16 For who has known the mind of the Lord, so as to advise him?[5] But we have the mind of Christ.

Immaturity and Self-deception

3:1 So, brothers and sisters,[6] I could not speak to you as spiritual people, but instead as people of the flesh,[7] as infants in Christ. 3:2 I fed you milk,[8] not solid food, for you were not yet ready. In fact, you are still not ready, 3:3 for you are still influenced by the flesh.[9] For since there is still jealousy and dissension among you, are you not influenced by the flesh and behaving like unregenerate people?[10] 3:4 For whenever someone says, "I am with Paul," or "I am with Apollos," are you not merely human?[11]

3:5 What is Apollos, really? Or what is Paul? Servants through whom you came to believe, and each of us in the ministry the Lord gave us.[12] 3:6 I planted,[13] Apollos watered, but God caused it to grow. 3:7 So neither the one who plants counts for anything,[14] nor the one who waters, but God who causes the growth. 3:8 The one who plants and the one who waters work as one,[15] but each will receive his reward according to his work. 3:9 We are coworkers belonging to God.[16] You are God's field, God's building. 3:10 According to the grace of God given to me, like a skilled master-builder I laid a foundation, but someone else builds on it. And each one must be careful how he builds. 3:11 For no one can lay any foundation other than what is being laid, which is Jesus Christ. 3:12 If anyone builds on the foundation with gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, or straw,[17] 3:13 each builder's[18] work will be plainly seen, for the Day[19] will make it clear, because it will be revealed by fire. And the fire[20] will test what kind of work each has done.

1 tn Or "combining spiritual things with spiritual words" (i.e., words the Spirit gives, as just described).

2 tn Grk "natural person." Cf. BDAG 1100 s.v. ψυχικός a, "an unspiritual pers., one who merely functions bodily, without being touched by the Spirit of God."

3 tn Or "evaluates."

4 tn Or "is evaluated" (i.e., "is subject to evaluation"); Grk "he himself is discerned," that is, the person without the Spirit does not understand the person with the Spirit, particularly in relation to the life of faith.

5 sn A quotation from Isa 40:13.

6 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

7 tn Grk "fleshly [people]"; the Greek term here is σαρκινός (BDAG 914 s.v. 1).

8 sn Milk refers figuratively to basic or elementary Christian teaching. Paul's point was that the Corinthian believers he was writing to here were not mature enough to receive more advanced teaching. This was not a problem at the time, when they were recent converts, but the problem now is that they are still not ready.

9 tn Or "are still merely human"; Grk "fleshly." Cf. BDAG 914 s.v. σαρκικός 2, "pert. to being human at a disappointing level of behavior or characteristics, (merely) human." The same phrase occurs again later in this verse.

10 tn Grk "and walking in accordance with man," i.e., living like (fallen) humanity without the Spirit's influence; hence, "unregenerate people."

11 tn Grk "are you not men," i.e., (fallen) humanity without the Spirit's influence. Here Paul does not say "walking in accordance with" as in the previous verse; he actually states the Corinthians are this. However, this is almost certainly rhetorical hyperbole.

12 tn Grk "and to each as the Lord gave."

13 sn The expression I planted is generally taken to mean that Paul founded the church at Corinth. Later Apollos had a significant ministry there (watered). See also v. 10.

14 tn Grk "is anything."

15 tn Grk "are one." The purpose of this phrase is to portray unified action on the part of ministers underneath God's sovereign control. Although they are in fact individuals, they are used by God with a single purpose to accomplish his will in facilitating growth. This emphasis is brought out in the translation "work as one."

16 tn Although 1 Cor 3:9 is frequently understood to mean, "we are coworkers with God," such a view assumes that the genitive θεοῦ (theou) is associative because of its relationship to συνεργοί (sunergoi). However, not only is a genitive of association not required by the syntax (cf. ExSyn 130), but the context is decidedly against it: Paul and Apollos are insignificant compared to the God whom they serve (vv. 5-8).

17 sn The various materials described here, both valuable (gold, silver, precious stones) and worthless (wood, hay, or straw) refer to the quality of work built on the foundation, or possibly to the motivation of those doing the building. The materials themselves have been understood (1) as deeds or (2) as people (since ultimately the passage is addressing those who minister to others).

18 tn Grk "each one's." Here "builder's" is employed in the translation for clarity.

19 tn In an attempt to clarify the referent, some translations add "of Christ" after "Day" (so TEV); others specify this as "judgment day" (NLT) or "the day of judgment" (CEV).

sn The Day refers to the Day of the Lord Jesus Christ (cf. 1:8; 5:5) when each Christian worker will appear before Christ for evaluation of his ministry. Paul's constant motivation was to be pleasing to the Lord in that day (2 Cor 5:9-10) and receive his commendation (1 Cor 4:5).

20 tc ‡ αὐτό (auto) is found at this point in v. 13 in a number of significant witnesses, including A B C P 33 1739 al. But 𝔓46 ℵ D Ψ 0289 1881 𝔐 latt lack it. The pronoun could be a motivated reading, designed to intensify Paul's statement. On the other hand, it could have been deleted because the article alone made the reference already clear. In this instance, the possibility of scribal addition seems more likely than scribal deletion, although a decision is difficult. NA[27] includes the word in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

sn It is unclear whether the phrase it will be revealed by fire describes the Day (subject of the previous clause) or each one's work (subject of the clause before that).

3:14 If what someone has built survives, he will receive a reward. 3:15 If someone's work is burned up, he will suffer loss.[1] He himself will be saved, but only as through fire.

3:16 Do you not know that you are God's temple[2] and that God's Spirit lives in you? 3:17 If someone destroys God's temple, God will destroy him. For God's temple is holy, which is what you are.

3:18 Guard against self-deception, each of you.[3] If someone among you thinks he is wise in this age, let him become foolish so that he can become wise. 3:19 For the wisdom of this age is foolishness with God. As it is written, "He catches the wise in their craftiness."[4] 3:20 And again, "The Lord knows that the thoughts of the wise are futile."[5] 3:21 So then, no more boasting about mere mortals![6] For everything belongs to you, 3:22 whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas or the world or life or death or the present or the future. Everything belongs to you, 3:23 and you belong to Christ, and Christ belongs to God.

The Apostles' Ministry

4:1 One[7] should think about us this way – as servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God. 4:2 Now what is sought in stewards is that one be found faithful. 4:3 So for me, it is a minor matter that I am judged by you or by any human court. In fact, I do not even judge myself. 4:4 For I am not aware of anything against myself, but I am not acquitted because of this. The one who judges me is the Lord. 4:5 So then, do not judge anything before the time. Wait until the Lord comes. He will[8] bring to light the hidden things of darkness and reveal the motives of hearts. Then each will receive recognition[9] from God.

4:6 I have applied these things to myself and Apollos because of you, brothers and sisters,[10] so that through us you may learn "not to go beyond what is written," so that none of you will be puffed up in favor of the one against the other. 4:7 For who concedes you any superiority? What do you have that you did not receive? And if you received it, why do you boast as though you did not? 4:8 Already you are satisfied! Already you are rich! You have become kings without us! I wish you had become kings so that we could reign with you! 4:9 For, I think, God has exhibited us apostles last of all, as men condemned to die, because we have become a spectacle to the world, both to angels and to people. 4:10 We are fools for Christ, but you are wise in Christ! We are weak, but you are strong! You are distinguished, we are dishonored! 4:11 To the present hour we are hungry and thirsty, poorly clothed, brutally treated, and without a roof over our heads. 4:12 We do hard work, toiling with our own hands. When we are verbally abused, we respond with a blessing, when persecuted, we endure, 4:13 when people lie about us, we answer in a friendly manner. We are the world's dirt and scum, even now.

A Father's Warning

4:14 I am not writing these things to shame you, but to correct you as my dear children. 4:15 For though you may have ten thousand guardians in Christ, you do not have many fathers, because I became your father in Christ Jesus through the gospel. 4:16 I encourage you, then, be imitators of me. 4:17 For this reason, I have sent Timothy to you, who is my dear and faithful son in the Lord. He will remind you of my ways in Christ,[11] as I teach them everywhere in every church. 4:18 Some have become arrogant,[12] as if I were not coming to you. 4:19 But I will come to you soon, if the Lord is willing, and I will find out not only the talk of these arrogant people, but also their power. 4:20 For the kingdom of God is demonstrated not in idle talk but with power. 4:21 What do you want? Shall I come to you with a rod of discipline[13] or with love and a spirit of gentleness?

Church Discipline

5:1 It is actually reported that sexual immorality exists among you, the kind of immorality

---

[1] tn The translation "[will] be punished" is given here by BDAG 428 s.v. ζημιόω 2. But the next clause says "he will be delivered" and so "suffering loss" is more likely to refer to the destruction of the "work" by fire or the loss of the reward that could have been gained.

[2] sn You are God's temple refers here to the church, since the pronoun you is plural in the Greek text. (In 6:19 the same imagery is used in a different context to refer to the individual believer.)

[3] tn Grk "let no one deceive himself."

[4] sn A quotation from Job 5:13.

[5] sn A quotation from Ps 94:11.

[6] tn Grk "so then, let no one boast in men."

[7] tn Here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is both indefinite and general, "one"; "a person" (BDAG 81 s.v. 4.a.γ).

[8] tn Grk "time, until the Lord comes, who will bring to light."

[9] tn Or "praise."

[10] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[11] tc ‡ Several important MSS read Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou, "Jesus") after Χριστῷ (Christō, "Christ") in v. 17 (so 𝔓46 ℵ C D1 33 1739 al). Western MSS have κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ (kuriō Iēsou, "Lord Jesus"; D* F G), while several significant MSS, as well as the majority, have only Χριστῷ here (A B D2 Ψ 𝔐 sa). Once Ἰησοῦ got into the text, it would continue to be copied. There is however no easy explanation for the word lacking in so many witnesses. Thus the shorter reading appears to be original. NA27 includes Ἰησοῦ in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

[12] tn Grk "puffed up"; "inflated."

[13] tn Grk "rod." Context indicates that this rod will be used for disciplinary purposes.

sn Paul is using the term rod in this context to refer to his apostolic authority to discipline those who have become arrogant in the Corinthian church and have attempted to undermine his ministry (cf. 4:18-19).

that is not permitted even among the Gentiles, so that someone is cohabiting with[1] his father's wife. 5:2 And you are proud![2] Shouldn't you have been deeply sorrowful instead and removed the one who did this[3] from among you? 5:3 For even though I am absent physically,[4] I am present in spirit. And I have already judged the one who did this, just as though I were present.[5] 5:4 When you gather together in the name of our Lord Jesus,[6] and I am with you in spirit,[7] along with the power of our Lord Jesus, 5:5 turn this man over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, so that his spirit may be saved[8] in the day of the Lord.[9]

5:6 Your boasting is not good. Don't you know that a little yeast[10] affects[11] the whole batch of dough? 5:7 Clean out the old yeast so that you may be a new batch of dough – you are, in fact, without yeast. For Christ, our Passover lamb, has been sacrificed. 5:8 So then, let us celebrate the festival, not with the old yeast, the yeast of vice and evil, but with the bread without yeast, the bread of sincerity and truth.[12]

5:9 I wrote you in my letter not to associate with sexually immoral people. 5:10 In no way did I mean the immoral people of this world, or the greedy and swindlers and idolaters, since you would then have to go out of the world. 5:11 But now I am writing to you not to associate with anyone who calls himself a Christian[13] who is sexually immoral, or greedy, or an idolater, or verbally abusive,[14] or a drunkard, or a swindler. Do not even eat with such a person. 5:12 For what do I have to do with judging those outside? Are you not to judge those inside? 5:13 But God will judge those outside. Remove the evil person from among you.[15]

---

1 tn Or "someone has married"; Grk "someone has," but the verb ἔχω (echō) is routinely used of marital relationships (cf. BDAG 420 s.v. 2.a), including sexual relationships. The exact nature of the relationship is uncertain in this case; it is not clear, for example, whether the man had actually married the woman or was merely cohabiting with her.

2 tn Or "are puffed up/arrogant," the same verb occurring in 4:6, 18.

3 tn Grk "sorrowful, so that the one who did this might be removed."

4 tn Grk "in body."

5 tn Verse 3 is one sentence in Greek ("For – even though I am absent in body, yet present in spirit – I have already judged the one who did this, as though I were present") that has been broken up due to English stylistic considerations.

6 tc On the wording "our Lord Jesus" (τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ, tou kuriou hēmōn Iēsou) there is some variation in the extant witnesses: ἡμῶν is lacking in ℵ A Ψ 1505 pc; Χριστοῦ (Christou, "Christ") is found after Ἰησοῦ in 𝔓46 ℵ D2 F G 33 1881 𝔐 co and before Ἰησοῦ in 81. The wording τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ is read by B D* 1175 1739 pc. Concerning Χριστοῦ, even though the external evidence for this is quite good, it may well be a motivated reading. Elsewhere in Paul the expression "our Lord Jesus" is routinely followed by "Christ" (e.g., Rom 5:1, 11; 15:6, 30; 1 Cor 1:2, 7, 10; 15:57; 2 Cor 8:9; Gal 6:14, 18, Eph 1:3, 17; 5:20; 6:24; Col 1:3; 1 Thess 1:3; 5:9, 23, 28). Less commonly, the wording is simply "our Lord Jesus" (e.g., Rom 16:20; 2 Cor 1:14; 1 Thess 2:19; 3:11, 13; 2 Thess 1:8, 12). A preference should thus be given to the shorter reading. As for the ἡμῶν, it is very difficult to decide: "the Lord Jesus" occurs as often as "our Lord Jesus" (cf. 1 Cor 11:23; 16:23; 2 Cor 4:14; 11:31; Eph 1:15; 1 Thess 4:2; 2 Thess 1:7; Phlm 5). Although scribes would tend to expand on the text, the only witnesses that have "the Lord Jesus" (without "our" or "Christ") are A Ψ 1505 pc. On balance, then, "our Lord Jesus" is the best reading in this verse.

7 tn Verses 4b-5a are capable of various punctuations: (1) "and I am with you in spirit, through the power of our Lord Jesus turn this man over to Satan"; (2) "and I am with you in spirit with the power of our Lord Jesus, turn this man over to Satan"; (3) "and I am with you in spirit, along with the power of our Lord Jesus, turn this man over to Satan" (as adopted in the text). The first option suggests the Lord's power is needed when the church is to hand the man over to Satan; the second option suggests that the Lord's power is present when Paul is gathered with the Corinthians in spirit; the third option leaves the relation of the Lord's power to the surrounding phrases vague, perhaps implying that both are in view.

8 tn Or perhaps "turn this man over to Satan for the destruction of your fleshly works, so that your spirit may be saved..."; Grk "for the destruction of the flesh, so that the spirit may be saved." This is one of the most difficult passages in the NT, and there are many different interpretations regarding what is in view here. (1) Many interpreters see this as some sort of excommunication ("turn this man over to Satan") which in turn leads to the man's physical death ("the destruction of the flesh"), resulting in the man's ultimate salvation ("that [his] spirit may be saved..."). (2) Others see the phrase "destruction of the flesh" as referring to extreme physical suffering or illness that stops short of physical death, thus leading the offender to repentance and salvation. (3) A number of scholars (e.g. G. D. Fee, First Corinthians [NICNT], 212-13) take the reference to the "flesh" to refer to the offender's "sinful nature" or "carnal nature," which is "destroyed" by placing him outside the church, back in Satan's domain (exactly how this "destruction" is accomplished is not clear, and is one of the problems with this view). (4) More recently some have argued that neither the "flesh" nor the "spirit" belong to the offender, but to the church collectively; thus it is the "fleshly works" of the congregation which are being destroyed by the removal of the offender (cf. 5:13) so that the "spirit," the corporate life of the church lived in union with God through the Holy Spirit, may be preserved (cf. 5:7-8). See, e.g., B. Campbell, "Flesh and Spirit in 1 Cor 5:5: An Exercise in Rhetorical Criticism of the NT," JETS 36 (1993): 331-42. The alternate translation "for the destruction of your fleshly works, so that your spirit may be saved" reflects this latter view.

9 tc The shorter reading, κυρίου (kuriou, "Lord"), is found in 𝔓46 B 630 1739 pc; κυρίου Ἰησοῦ (kuriou Iēsou, "Lord Jesus") is read by 𝔓61vid ℵ Ψ 𝔐; κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (kuriou Iēsou Christou, "Lord Jesus Christ") by D pc; and κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (kuriou hēmōn Iēsou Christou, "our Lord Jesus Christ") by A F G P 33 al. The shorter reading is preferred as the reading that best explains the other readings, especially in view of the mention of "Jesus" twice in the previous verse.

10 sn In this passage (5:6-8) yeast represents the presence of evil within the church, specifically the immoral person described in 5:1-5 and mentioned again in 5:13.

11 tn Grk "a little yeast leavens."

12 tn Grk "with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth."

13 tn Grk "a brother," but the Greek word "brother" may be used for "brother or sister," "fellow Christian," or "fellow member of the church." Here the term "brother" broadly connotes familial relationships within the family of God (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a).

14 tn Or "a reviler"; BDAG 602 s.v. λοίδορος defines the term as "reviler, abusive person."

15 sn An allusion to Deut 17:7; 19:19; 22:21, 24; 24:7; cf. 1 Cor 5:2.

Lawsuits

6:1 When any of you has a legal dispute with another, does he dare go to court before the unrighteous rather than before the saints? 6:2 Or do you not know that the saints will judge the world? And if the world is to be judged by you, are you not competent to settle trivial suits? 6:3 Do you not know that we will judge angels? Why not ordinary matters! 6:4 So if you have ordinary lawsuits, do you appoint as judges those who have no standing in the church?[1] 6:5 I say this to your shame! Is there no one among you wise enough to settle disputes between fellow Christians?[2] 6:6 Instead, does a Christian sue a Christian,[3] and do this before unbelievers? 6:7 The fact that you have lawsuits among yourselves demonstrates that you have already been defeated. Why not rather be wronged? Why not rather be cheated? 6:8 But you yourselves wrong and cheat, and you do this to your brothers and sisters![4]

6:9 Do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived! The sexually immoral, idolaters, adulterers, passive homosexual partners,[5] practicing homosexuals,[6] 6:10 thieves, the greedy, drunkards, the verbally abusive,[7] and swindlers will not inherit the kingdom of God. 6:11 Some of you once lived this way.[8] But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ[9] and by the Spirit of our God.

Flee Sexual Immorality

6:12 "All things are lawful for me"[10] – but not everything is beneficial. "All things are lawful for me" – but I will not be controlled by anything. 6:13 "Food is for the stomach and the stomach is for food, but God will do away with both."[11] The body is not for sexual immorality, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. 6:14 Now God indeed raised the Lord and he will raise us by his power. 6:15 Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Should I take the members of Christ and make them members of a prostitute? Never! 6:16 Or do you not know that anyone who is united with[12] a prostitute is one body with her?[13] For it is said,

---

[1] tn Or "if you have ordinary lawsuits, appoint as judges those who have no standing in the church!" This alternative reading (cf. KJV, NIV) takes the Greek verb καθίζετε (kathizete) as an ironic imperative instead of a question. This verb comes, however, at the end of the sentence. It is not impossible that Paul meant for it to be understood this way, but its placement in the sentence does not make this probable.

[2] tn Grk "to decide between his brother (and his opponent)," but see the note on the word "Christian" in 5:11.

[3] tn Grk "does a brother sue a brother," but see the note on the word "Christian" in 5:11.

[4] tn Grk "brothers." The Greek term "brother" literally refers to family relationships, but here it is used in a broader sense to connote familial relationships within the family of God (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a). See also the note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[5] tn This term is sometimes rendered "effeminate," although in contemporary English usage such a translation could be taken to refer to demeanor rather than behavior. BDAG 613 s.v. μαλακός 2 has "pert. to being passive in a same-sex relationship, effeminate esp. of catamites, of men and boys who are sodomized by other males in such a relationship." L&N 88.281 states, "the passive male partner in homosexual intercourse – 'homosexual.' ...As in Greek, a number of other languages also have entirely distinct terms for the active and passive roles in homosexual intercourse." See also the discussion in G. D. Fee, First Corinthians (NICNT), 243-44. A number of modern translations have adopted the phrase "male prostitutes" for μαλακοί in 1 Cor 6:9 (NIV, NRSV, NLT) but this could be misunderstood by the modern reader to mean "males who sell their services to women," while the term in question appears, at least in context, to relate to homosexual activity between males. Furthermore, it is far from certain that prostitution as commonly understood (the selling of sexual favors) is specified here, as opposed to a consensual relationship. Thus the translation "passive homosexual partners" has been used here.

[6] tn On this term BDAG 135 s.v. ἀρσενοκοίτης states, "a male who engages in sexual activity w. a pers. of his own sex, pederast 1 Cor 6:9...of one who assumes the dominant role in same-sex activity, opp. μαλακός...1 Ti 1:10; Pol 5:3. Cp. Ro 1:27." L&N 88.280 states, "a male partner in homosexual intercourse – 'homosexual.'...It is possible that ἀρσενοκοίτης in certain contexts refers to the active male partner in homosexual intercourse in contrast with μαλακός, the passive male partner." Since there is a distinction in contemporary usage between sexual orientation and actual behavior, the qualification "practicing" was supplied in the translation, following the emphasis in BDAG.

[7] tn Or "revilers"; BDAG 602 s.v. λοίδορος defines the term as "reviler, abusive person." Because the term "abusive" without further qualification has become associated in contemporary English with both physical and sexual abuse, the qualifier "verbally" has been supplied in the translation.

[8] tn Grk "and some [of you] were these."

[9] tc The external evidence in support of the reading Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (Iēsou Christou, "Jesus Christ") is quite impressive: 𝔓[11vid.46] ℵ B C[vid] D* P 33 81 104 365 629 630 1739 1881 2464 al lat bo as well as several fathers, while the reading with merely Ἰησοῦ has significantly poorer support (A D[2] Ψ 𝔐 sa). Although the wording of the original could certainly have been expanded, it is also possible that Χριστοῦ as a nomen sacrum could have accidentally dropped out. Although the latter is not as likely under normal circumstances, in light of the early and widespread witnesses for the fuller expression, the original wording seems to have been Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

[10] sn All things are lawful for me. In the expressions in vv. 12-13 within quotation marks, Paul cites certain slogans the Corinthians apparently used to justify their behavior. Paul agrees with the slogans in part, but corrects them to show how the Corinthians have misused these ideas.

[11] tn Grk "both this [stomach] and these [foods]."

sn There is debate as to the extent of the Corinthian slogan which Paul quotes here. Some argue that the slogan is only the first sentence – "Food is for the stomach and the stomach is for food" – with the second statement forming Paul's rejoinder, while others argue that the slogan contains both sentences (as in the translation above). The argument which favors the latter is the tight conceptual and grammatical parallelism which occurs if Paul's response begins with "The body is not for sexual immorality" and then continues through the end of v. 14. For discussion and diagrams of this structure, see G. D. Fee, First Corinthians (NICNT), 253-57.

[12] tn Or "is in relationship with."

[13] tn Grk "is one body," implying the association "with her."

"The two will become one flesh."[1] 6:17 But the one united with[2] the Lord is one spirit with him.[3] 6:18 Flee sexual immorality! "Every sin a person commits is outside of the body"[4] – but the immoral person sins against his own body. 6:19 Or do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you,[5] whom you have from God, and you are not your own? 6:20 For you were bought at a price. Therefore glorify God with your body.

Celibacy and Marriage

7:1 Now with regard to the issues you wrote about: "It is good for a man not to have sexual relations with a woman."[6] 7:2 But because of immoralities, each man should have relations with[7] his own wife and each woman with[8] her own husband. 7:3 A husband should give to his wife her sexual rights,[9] and likewise a wife to her husband. 7:4 It is not the wife who has the rights to her own body, but the husband. In the same way, it is not the husband who has the rights to his own body, but the wife. 7:5 Do not deprive each other, except by mutual agreement for a specified time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer.[10] Then resume your relationship,[11] so that Satan may not tempt you because of your lack of self-control. 7:6 I say this as a concession, not as a command. 7:7 I wish that everyone was as I am. But each has his own gift from God, one this way, another that.

7:8 To the unmarried and widows I say that it is best for them to remain as I am. 7:9 But if they do not have self-control, let them get married. For it is better to marry than to burn with sexual desire.[12]

7:10 To the married I give this command – not I, but the Lord[13] – a wife should not divorce a husband 7:11 (but if she does, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband), and a husband should not divorce his wife.

7:12 To the rest I say – I, not the Lord[14] – if a brother has a wife who is not a believer and she is happy to live with him, he should not divorce her. 7:13 And if a woman has a husband who is not a believer and he is happy to live with her, she should not divorce him. 7:14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified because of the wife, and the unbelieving wife because of her husband.[15] Otherwise your children are unclean, but now they are holy. 7:15 But if the unbeliever wants a divorce, let it take place. In these circumstances the brother or sister is not bound.[16]

---

[1] sn A quotation from Gen 2:24.

[2] tn Grk "in relationship with."

[3] tn Grk "is one spirit," implying the association "with him."

[4] sn It is debated whether this is a Corinthian slogan. If it is not, then Paul is essentially arguing that there are two types of sin, nonsexual sins which take place outside the body and sexual sins which are against a person's very own body. If it is a Corinthian slogan, then it is a slogan used by the Corinthians to justify their immoral behavior. With it they are claiming that anything done in the body or through the body had no moral relevance. A decision here is very difficult, but the latter is to be preferred for two main reasons. (1) This is the most natural understanding of the statement as it is written. To construe it as a statement by Paul requires a substantial clarification in the sense (e.g., "All other sins..." [NIV]). (2) Theologically the former is more difficult: Why would Paul single out sexual sins as more intrinsically related to the body than other sins, such as gluttony or drunkenness? For these reasons, it is more likely that the phrase in quotation marks is indeed a Corinthian slogan which Paul turns against them in the course of his argument, although the decision must be regarded as tentative.

[5] tn Grk "the 'in you' Holy Spirit." The position of the prepositional phrase ἐν ὑμῖν (en humin, "in you") between the article and the adjective effectively places the prepositional phrase in first attributive position. Such constructions are generally translated into English as relative clauses.

[6] tn Grk "It is good for a man not to touch a woman," a euphemism for sexual relations. This idiom occurs ten times in Greek literature, and all of the references except one appear to refer to sexual relations (cf., e.g., Josephus, Ant. 1.8.1 [1.163]; Gen 20:6 [LXX]; Prov 6:29 [LXX]). For discussion see G. D. Fee, First Corinthians (NICNT), 275. Many recent interpreters believe that here again (as in 6:12-13) Paul cites a slogan the Corinthians apparently used to justify their actions. If this is so, Paul agrees with the slogan in part, but corrects it in the following verses to show how the Corinthians misused the idea to justify abstinence within marriage (cf. 8:1, 4; 10:23). See also G. D. Fee, "1 Corinthians 7:1 in the NIV," JETS 23 (1980): 307-14.

[7] tn Grk "each man should have his own wife." "Have" in this context means "have marital relations with" (see the following verse). The verb ἐχέτω (echetō, "have") occurs twice in the Greek text, but has not been repeated in the translation for stylistic reasons. This verb occurs 8 times in the LXX (Exod 2:1; Deut 28:30; 2 Chr 11:21; 1 Esd 9:12, 18; Tob 3:8; Isa 13:16; 54:1) with the meaning "have sexual relations with," and 9 times elsewhere in the NT with the same meaning (Matt 20:23; 22:28; Mark 6:18; 12:33; Luke 20:28; John 4:18 [twice]; 1 Cor 5:1; 7:29).

[8] tn Grk "should have." For explanation of the translation, see the note on "have relations with" earlier in this verse.

[9] tn Grk "fulfill the obligation" or "pay the debt," referring to the fulfillment of sexual needs within marriage.

[10] tc Most later witnesses (𝔑² 𝔐 sy) add "fasting and" (τῇ νηστείᾳ καί, tē nēsteia kai) before "prayer." But such an addition is motivated by ascetic concerns; further, its lack in 𝔓¹¹ᵛⁱᵈ·⁴⁶ 𝔑* A B C D F G P Ψ 33 1739 1881 2464 al latt co argues decisively against its authenticity.

[11] tn Grk "and be together again."

[12] tn Grk "than to burn," a figure of speech referring to unfulfilled sexual passion.

[13] sn Not I, but the Lord. Here and in v. 12 Paul distinguishes between his own apostolic instruction and Jesus' teaching during his earthly ministry. In vv. 10-11, Paul reports the Lord's own teaching about divorce (cf. Mark 10:5-12).

[14] sn I, not the Lord. Here and in v. 10 Paul distinguishes between his own apostolic instruction and Jesus' teaching during his earthly ministry. In vv. 12-16, Paul deals with a situation about which the Lord gave no instruction in his earthly ministry.

[15] tc Grk "the brother." Later witnesses (𝔑² D² 𝔐) have ἀνδρί (andri, "husband") here, apparently in conscious emulation of the earlier mention of ἀνήρ (anēr) in the verse. However, the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔑* A B C D* F G P Ψ 33 1739 al co) are decisively in favor of ἀδελφῷ (adelphō, "brother"), a word that because of the close association with "wife" here may have seemed inappropriate to many scribes. It is also for reasons of English style that "her husband" is used in the translation.

[16] sn Interpreters differ over the implication of the statement the brother or sister is not bound. One view is that the believer is "not bound to continue the marriage," i.e., not so slavishly tied to the instruction about not divorcing (cf. vv. 10-11) that he or she refuses to face reality when the unbelieving spouse is unwilling to continue the relationship. In this view divorce is allowable under these circumstances, but not

God has called you in peace. 7:16 For how do you know, wife, whether you will bring your husband to salvation?[1] Or how do you know, husband, whether you will bring your wife to salvation?[2]

The Circumstances of Your Calling

7:17 Nevertheless,[3] as the Lord has assigned to each one, as God has called each person, so must he live. I give this sort of direction in all the churches. 7:18 Was anyone called after he had been circumcised? He should not try to undo his circumcision.[4] Was anyone called who is uncircumcised? He should not get circumcised. 7:19 Circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing. Instead, keeping God's commandments is what counts. 7:20 Let each one remain in that situation in life[5] in which he was called. 7:21 Were you called as a slave?[6] Do not worry about it. But if indeed you are able to be free, make the most of the opportunity. 7:22 For the one who was called in the Lord as a slave is the Lord's freedman. In the same way, the one who was called as a free person is Christ's slave. 7:23 You were bought with a price. Do not become slaves of men. 7:24 In whatever situation someone was called, brothers and sisters,[7] let him remain in it with God.

Remaining Unmarried

7:25 With regard to the question about people who have never married,[8] I have no command from the Lord, but I give my opinion as one shown mercy by the Lord to be trustworthy. 7:26 Because of the impending crisis I think it best for you to remain as you are. 7:27 The one bound to a wife should not seek divorce. The one released from a wife should not seek marriage.[9] 7:28 But if you marry, you have not sinned. And if a virgin marries, she has not sinned. But those who marry will face difficult circumstances,[10] and I am trying to spare you such problems.[11] 7:29 And I say this, brothers and sisters:[12] The time is short. So then those who have wives should be as those who have none, 7:30 those with tears like those not weeping, those who rejoice like those not rejoicing, those who buy like those without possessions, 7:31 those who use the world as though they were not using it to the full. For the present shape of this world is passing away.

7:32 And I want you to be free from concern. An unmarried man is concerned about the things of the Lord, how to please the Lord. 7:33 But a married man is concerned about the things of the world, how to please his wife, 7:34 and he is divided. An unmarried woman[13] or a virgin[14] remarriage (v. 11 still applies: remain unmarried or be reconciled). The other view is that the believer is "not bound in regard to marriage," i.e., free to remain single or to remarry. The argument for this view is the conceptual parallel with vv. 39-40, where a wife is said to be "bound" (a different word in Greek, but the same concept) as long as her husband lives. But if the husband dies, she is "free" to marry as she wishes, only in the Lord. If the parallel holds, then not bound in v. 15 also means "free to marry another."

[1] tn Grk "will save your husband?" The meaning is obviously that the wife would be the human agent in leading her husband to salvation.

[2] tn Grk "will save your wife?" The meaning is obviously that the husband would be the human agent in leading his wife to salvation.

[3] tn Or "only"; Grk "if not."

[4] tn Grk "Let him not pull over the foreskin," that is, attempt to reverse the appearance of circumcision by a surgical procedure. This was sometimes done by Hellenistic Jews to hide the embarrassment of circumcision (1 Macc 1:15; Josephus, Ant. 12.5.1 [12.241]). Cf. BDAG 380 s.v. ἐπισπάω 3.

[5] tn Grk "in the calling." "Calling" in Paul is God's work of drawing people to faith in Christ. As in 1:26, calling here stands by metonymy for a person's circumstances when he becomes a Christian.

[6] tn Traditionally, "servant" (KJV), though almost all modern translations render the word as "slave" here.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[8] tn Grk "virgins." There are three main views as to which group of people is referred to by the word παρθένος (parthenos) here, and the stance taken here directly impacts one's understanding of vv. 36-38. (1) The term could refer to virgin women who were not married. The central issue would then be whether or not their fathers should give them in marriage to eligible men. (This is the view which has been widely held throughout the history of the Church.) (2) A minority understand the term to refer to men and women who are married but who have chosen to live together without sexual relations. This position might have been possible in the Corinthian church, but there is no solid evidence to support it. (3) The view adopted by many modern commentators (see, e.g., Fee, Conzelmann, Barrett) is that the term refers to young, engaged women who were under the influence of various groups within the Corinthian church not to go through with their marriages. The central issue would then be whether the young men and women should continue with their plans and finalize their marriages. For further discussion, see G. D. Fee, First Corinthians (NICNT), 325-28.

[9] tn Grk "should not seek a wife."

[10] tn Grk "these will have tribulation in the flesh."

[11] tn Grk "I am trying to spare you." Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context. "Such problems" has been supplied here to make the sense of the statement clear.

[12] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[13] sn In context the unmarried woman would probably refer specifically to a widow, who was no longer married, as opposed to the virgin, who had never been married.

[14] tc There are three viable variant readings at this point in the text. (1) The reading ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄγαμος καὶ ἡ παρθένος (hē gunē hē agamos kai hē parthenos, "the unmarried woman and the virgin") is represented by ancient and important MSS, as well as some significant versions (𝔓[15] B 104 365 1505 pc vg co). (2) The reading ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄγαμος καὶ ἡ παρθένος ἡ ἄγαμος ("the unmarried woman and the unmarried virgin") is also found in ancient and important MSS (𝔓[46] ℵ A 33 1739 1881 pc). (3) The reading ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ παρθένος ἡ ἄγαμος ("the woman and the unmarried virgin") is found in Western MSS (D F G) and the majority of Byzantine cursives. Based upon external evidence, the first and second readings are the strongest; the readings both reach deep into the second century with strong testimony from MSS of the Alexandrian texttype. Internal evidence seems equally balanced: Scribes may have wanted to add ἡ ἄγαμος to παρθένος for stylistic reasons, but they might also have wanted to remove it because it sounded redundant. Because Paul's meaning is not quite clear, a decision on the proper textual reading is difficult. On the whole scribes tended to add to the text, not take from it. Thus the first reading should be favored as original, but this decision should be regarded as less than certain.

tn Grk "The unmarried woman and the virgin." The identity of the "virgin" here is a matter of interpretation (see note is concerned about the things of the Lord, to be holy both in body and spirit. But a married woman is concerned about the things of the world, how to please her husband. 7:35 I am saying this for your benefit, not to place a limitation on you, but so that without distraction you may give notable and constant service to the Lord.

7:36 If anyone thinks he is acting inappropriately toward his virgin,[1] if she is past the bloom of youth[2] and it seems necessary, he should do what he wishes; he does not sin. Let them marry. 7:37 But the man who is firm in his commitment, and is under no necessity but has control over his will, and has decided in his own mind to keep his own virgin, does well. 7:38 So then, the one who marries[3] his own virgin does well, but the one who does not, does better.[4]

7:39 A wife is bound as long as her husband is living. But if her husband dies,[5] she is free to marry anyone she wishes (only someone in the Lord). 7:40 But in my opinion, she will be happier if she remains as she is – and I think that I too have the Spirit of God!

Food Sacrificed to Idols

8:1 With regard to food sacrificed to idols, we know that "we all have knowledge."[6] Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. 8:2 If someone thinks he knows something, he does not yet know to the degree that he needs to know. 8:3 But if someone loves God, he[7] is known by God.[8]

8:4 With regard then to eating food sacrificed to idols, we know that "an idol in this world is nothing," and that "there is no God but one."[9] 8:5 If after all there are so-called gods, whether in heaven or on earth (as there are many gods and many lords), 8:6 yet for us there is one God, the Father, from whom are all things and for whom we live, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, on "people who have never married" in v. 25 for discussion), which has in fact contributed to textual variation at this point in the text (see the text critical note above). As far as the translation is concerned, one must determine if one group of women or two are in view. It is possible that Paul means to refer to only one class of women here, namely unmarried virgins, but the use of the adjective ἡ ἄγαμος (hē agamos, "unmarried") with "woman" and not "virgin" precludes that interpretation; in addition, the use of the article with both "woman" and "virgin" implies that two distinct groups are in view. If two groups are in view, English would more naturally use the conjunction "or" to indicate the distinction. Thus the translation "An unmarried woman or a virgin" has been used to make clear that two groups are in view.

[1] tn Grk "virgin," either a fiancée, a daughter, or the ward of a guardian. For discussion see the note at the end of v. 38.

[2] tn Or referring to an engaged man: "if he is past the critical point," "if his passions are too strong." The word literally means "to be past the high point."

[3] tn Or "who gives his own virgin in marriage."

[4] sn 1 Cor 7:36-38. There are two common approaches to understanding the situation addressed in these verses. One view involves a father or male guardian deciding whether to give his daughter or female ward in marriage (cf. NASB, NIV margin). The evidence for this view is: (1) the phrase in v. 37 (Grk) "to keep his own virgin" fits this view well ("keep his own virgin [in his household]" rather than give her in marriage), but it does not fit the second view (there is little warrant for adding "her" in the way the second view translates it: "to keep her as a virgin"). (2) The verb used twice in v. 38 (γαμίζω, gamizō) normally means "to give in marriage" not "to get married." The latter is usually expressed by γαμέω (gameō), as in v. 36b. (3) The father deciding what is best regarding his daughter's marriage reflects the more likely cultural situation in ancient Corinth, though it does not fit modern Western customs. While Paul gives his advice in such a situation, he does not command that marriages be arranged in this way universally. If this view is taken, the translation will read as follows: "7:36 If anyone thinks he is acting inappropriately toward his unmarried daughter, if she is past the bloom of youth and it seems necessary, he should do what he wishes; he does not sin. Let them marry. 7:37 But the man who is firm in his commitment, and is under no necessity but has control over his will, and has decided in his own mind to keep his daughter unmarried, does well. 7:38 So then the one who gives his daughter in marriage does well, but the one who does not give her does better." The other view is taken by NRSV, NIV text, NJB, REB: a single man deciding whether to marry the woman to whom he is engaged. The evidence for this view is: (1) it seems odd to use the word "virgin" (vv. 36, 37, 38) if "daughter" or "ward" is intended. (2) The other view requires some difficult shifting of subjects in v. 36, whereas this view manages a more consistent subject for the various verbs used. (3) The phrases in these verses are used consistently elsewhere in this chapter to describe considerations appropriate to the engaged couple themselves (cf. vv. 9, 28, 39). It seems odd not to change the phrasing in speaking about a father or guardian. If this second view is taken, the translation will read as follows: "7:36 If anyone thinks he is acting inappropriately toward his fiancée, if his passions are too strong and it seems necessary, he should do what he wishes; he does not sin. Let them marry. 7:37 But the man who is firm in his commitment, and is under no necessity but has control over his will, and has decided in his own mind to keep her as his fiancée, does well. 7:38 So then, the one who marries his fiancée does well, but the one who does not marry her does better."

[5] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

[6] sn "We all have knowledge." Here and in v. 4 Paul cites certain slogans the Corinthians apparently used to justify their behavior (cf. 6:12-13; 7:1; 10:23). Paul agrees with the slogans in part, but corrects them to show how the Corinthians have misused these ideas.

[7] tn Grk "this one."

[8] tn Grk "him"; in the translation the most likely referent (God) has been specified for clarity.

[9] sn "An idol in this world is nothing" and "There is no God but one." Here and in v. 1 Paul cites certain slogans the Corinthians apparently used to justify their behavior (cf. 6:12-13; 7:1; 10:23). Paul agrees with the slogans in part, but corrects them to show how the Corinthians have misused these ideas.

through whom are all things and through whom we live.[1]

8:7 But this knowledge is not shared by all. And some, by being accustomed to idols in former times, eat this food as an idol sacrifice, and their conscience, because it is weak, is defiled. 8:8 Now food will not bring us close to God. We are no worse if we do not eat and no better if we do. 8:9 But be careful that this liberty of yours does not become a hindrance to the weak. 8:10 For if someone weak sees you who possess knowledge dining in an idol's temple, will not his conscience be "strengthened"[2] to eat food offered to idols? 8:11 So by your knowledge the weak brother or sister,[3] for whom Christ died, is destroyed.[4] 8:12 If you sin against your brothers or sisters[5] in this way and wound their weak conscience, you sin against Christ. 8:13 For this reason, if food causes my brother or sister to sin, I will never eat meat again, so that I may not cause one of them[6] to sin.

The Rights of an Apostle

9:1 Am I not free? Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus our Lord? Are you not my work in the Lord? 9:2 If I am not an apostle to others, at least I am to you, for you are the confirming sign[7] of my apostleship in the Lord. 9:3 This is my defense to those who examine me. 9:4 Do we not have the right to financial support?[8] 9:5 Do we not have the right to the company of a believing wife, like the other apostles and the Lord's brothers and Cephas? 9:6 Or do only Barnabas and I lack the right not to work? 9:7 Who ever serves in the army at his own expense? Who plants a vineyard and does not eat its fruit? Who tends a flock and does not consume its milk? 9:8 Am I saying these things only on the basis of common sense,[9] or does the law not say this as well? 9:9 For it is written in the law of Moses, "Do not muzzle an ox while it is treading out the grain."[10] God is not concerned here about oxen, is he? 9:10 Or is he not surely speaking for our benefit? It was written for us, because the one plowing and threshing ought to work in hope of enjoying the harvest. 9:11 If we sowed spiritual blessings among you, is it too much to reap material things from you? 9:12 If others receive this right from you, are we not more deserving?

But we have not made use of this right. Instead we endure everything so that we may not be a hindrance to the gospel of Christ. 9:13 Don't you know that those who serve in the temple[11] eat food from the temple, and those who serve at the altar receive a part of the offerings? 9:14 In the same way the Lord commanded those who proclaim the gospel to receive their living by the gospel. 9:15 But I have not used any of these rights. And I am not writing these things so that something will be done for me.[12] In fact, it would be better for me to die than – no one will deprive me of my reason for boasting![13] 9:16 For if I preach the gospel, I have no reason for boasting, because I am compelled to do this. Woe to me if I do not preach the gospel! 9:17 For if I do this voluntarily, I have a reward. But if I do it unwillingly, I am entrusted with a responsibility. 9:18 What then is my reward? That when I preach the gospel I may offer the gospel free of charge, and so not make full use of my rights in the gospel.

9:19 For since I am free from all I can make myself a slave to all, in order to gain even more people.[14] 9:20 To the Jews I became like a Jew to gain the Jews. To those under the law I became like one under the law (though I myself am not under the law)[15] to gain those under the law.

1 tn Grk "through whom [are] all things and we [are] through him."

2 tn Or "built up"; This is the same word used in v. 1b. It is used ironically here: The weak person is "built up" to commit what he regards as sin.

3 tn Grk "the one who is weak...the brother for whom Christ died," but see note on the word "Christian" in 5:11.

4 tn This may be an indirect middle, "destroys himself."

5 tn See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

6 tn Grk "my brother." Both "my brother or sister" earlier in the verse and "one of them" here translate the same Greek phrase. Since the same expression occurs in the previous line, a pronoun phrase is substituted here to suit English style, which is less tolerant of such repetition.

7 tn Grk "the seal."

8 tn Grk "the right to eat and drink." In the context this is a figurative reference to financial support.

9 tn Or "only according to human authority"; Grk "saying these things according to men."

10 sn A quotation from Deut 25:4.

11 tn Grk "working the sacred things."

12 tn Grk "so that it will happen in this way in my case."

13 tc The reading ἤ – τὸ καύχημά μου οὐδείς κενώσει (ē – to kauchēma mou oudeis kenōsei, "than – no one will deprive me of my reason for boasting!") is syntactically abrupt, but fully in keeping with Pauline style. It is supported by 𝔓46 ℵ* B D*,c 33 1739 1881 as well as early patristic authors. Most witnesses, especially the later ones (ℵ2 C D2 Ψ 𝔐 lat), have a significantly smoother reading than this: ἢ τὸ καύχημά μου ἵνα τις κενώσῃ (or κενώσει); ē to kauchēma mou hina tis kenōsē (or kenōsei), "than that anyone should deprive me of my boasting." The simple replacement of οὐδείς with ἵνα essentially accomplishes the smoothing out of the text, and as such the ἵνα reading is suspect. Not only is the harder reading in keeping with Pauline style, but it is also found in the earlier and better witnesses.

sn Paul breaks off his thought at mid-sentence (indicated by the dash in the translation) and it is somewhat difficult to determine his reason for boasting. Most likely Paul would rather die than be deprived of the boast that he had offered the gospel free of charge even though as an apostle he had the right to such support (9:14). Did he say this as a way of criticizing his opponents? Perhaps only indirectly. His focus has more to do with not hindering the gospel than what his opponents were doing (9:12).

14 tn Or "more converts." The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. It has been supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning.

15 tc The Byzantine text, as well as a few other witnesses (D2 [L] Ψ 1881 𝔐) lack this parenthetical material, while geographically widespread, early, and diverse witnesses have the words (so ℵ A B C D* F G P 33 104 365 1175 1505 1739 al latt). The phrase may have dropped out accidentally through homoioteleuton (note that both the preceding phrase and the parenthesis end in ὑπὸ νόμον [hupo nomon, "under the 9:21 To those free from the law I became like one free from the law (though I am not free from God's law but under the law of Christ) to gain those free from the law. 9:22 To the weak I became weak in order to gain the weak. I have become all things to all people, so that by all means I may save some.

9:23 I do all these things because of the gospel, so that I can be a participant in it.

9:24 Do you not know that all the runners in a stadium compete, but only one receives the prize? So run to win. 9:25 Each competitor must exercise self-control in everything. They do it to receive a perishable crown, but we an imperishable one.

9:26 So I do not run uncertainly or box like one who hits only air. 9:27 Instead I subdue my body and make it my slave, so that after preaching to others I myself will not be disqualified.

Learning from Israel's Failures

10:1 For I do not want you to be unaware,[1] brothers and sisters,[2] that our fathers were all under the cloud and all passed through the sea, 10:2 and all were baptized[3] into Moses in the cloud and in the sea, 10:3 and all ate the same spiritual food, 10:4 and all drank the same spiritual drink. For they were all drinking from the spiritual rock that followed them, and the rock was Christ. 10:5 But God was not pleased with most of them, for they were cut down in the wilderness. 10:6 These things happened as examples for us, so that we will not crave evil things as they did. 10:7 So do not be idolaters, as some of them were. As it is written, "The people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play."[4] 10:8 And let us not be immoral, as some of them were, and twenty-three thousand died in a single day.[5] 10:9 And let us not put Christ[6] to the test, as some of them did, and were destroyed by snakes.[7] 10:10 And do not complain, as some of them did, and were killed by the destroying angel.[8] 10:11 These things happened to them as examples and were written for our instruction, on whom the ends of the ages have come. 10:12 So let the one who thinks he is standing be careful that he does not fall. 10:13 No trial has over-law"]), or intentionally by overscrupulous scribes who felt that the statement "I myself am not under the law" could have led to license.

[1] tn Grk "ignorant."

[2] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[3] tc ‡ A number of witnesses, some of them important, have the passive ἐβαπτίσθησαν (ebaptisthēsan, "were baptized") instead of the middle ἐβαπτίσαντο (ebaptisanto, "baptized [themselves]") in v. 2 (so ℵ A C D F G Ψ 33 al latt). However, the middle is not without its representation (𝔓^{46c} B 1739 1881 𝔐 Or; the original hand of 𝔓^{46} read the imperfect middle ἐβαπτίζοντο [ebaptizonto]). The passive looks like a motivated reading in that it is clearer and conforms to typical Pauline usage (his thirteen instances of the verb are all either active or passive). B. M. Metzger, in representing a minority opinion of the UBS Committee, suggests that the middle would have been appropriate for Jewish baptism in which the convert baptizes himself (TCGNT 493). But this assumes that the middle is a direct middle, a rare occurrence in the NT (and never elsewhere with this verb). Further, it is not really baptism that is in view in v. 2, but passing through the Red Sea (thus, a metaphorical use). Although the present editors agree with the minority's resultant reading, it is better to take the middle as causative/permissive and the scribes as changing it to a passive for clarity's sake. Translational differences are minimal, though some exegetical implications are involved (see ExSyn 427).

[4] tn The term "play" may refer to idolatrous, sexual play here, although that is determined by the context rather than the meaning of the word itself (cf. BDAG 750 s.v. παίζω).

sn A quotation from Exod 32:6.

[5] sn This incident is recorded in Num 25:1-9.

[6] tc Χριστόν (Christon, "Christ") is attested in the majority of MSS, including many important witnesses of the Alexandrian (𝔓^{46} 1739 1881) and Western (D F G) texttypes, and other MSS and versions (Ψ latt sy co). On the other hand, some of the important Alexandrian witnesses have κύριον (kurion, "Lord"; ℵ B C P 33 104 1175 al). A few MSS (A 81 pc) have θεόν (theon, "God"). The nomina sacra for these readings are quite similar ($\overline{\text{ΧΝ}}$, $\overline{\text{ΚΝ}}$, and $\overline{\text{ΘΝ}}$ respectively), so one might be able to account for the different readings by way of confusion. On closer examination, the variants appear to be intentional changes. Alexandrian scribes replaced the highly specific term "Christ" with the less specific terms "Lord" and "God" because in the context it seems to be anachronistic to speak of the exodus generation putting Christ to the test. If the original had been "Lord," it seems unlikely that a scribe would have willingly created a difficulty by substituting the more specific "Christ." Moreover, even if not motivated by a tendency to overcorrect, a scribe might be likely to assimilate the word "Christ" to "Lord" in conformity with Deut 6:16 or other passages. The evidence from the early church regarding the reading of this verse is rather compelling in favor of "Christ." Marcion, a second-century, anti-Jewish heretic, would naturally have opposed any reference to Christ in historical involvement with Israel, because he thought of the Creator God of the OT as inherently evil. In spite of this strong prejudice, though, {Marcion} read a text with "Christ." Other early church writers attest to the presence of the word "Christ," including {Clement of Alexandria} and Origen. What is more, the synod of Antioch in A.D. 268 used the reading "Christ" as evidence of the preexistence of Christ when it condemned Paul of Samosata. (See G. Zuntz, The Text of the Epistles, 126-27; TCGNT 494; C. D. Osburn, "The Text of 1 Corinthians 10:9," New Testament Textual Criticism: Its Significance for Exegesis, 201-11; contra A. Robertson and A. Plummer, First Corinthians [ICC], 205-6.) Since "Christ" is the more difficult reading on all accounts, it is almost certainly original. In addition, "Christ" is consistent with Paul's style in this passage (cf. 10:4, a text in which {Marcion} also reads "Christ"). This text is also christologically significant, since the reading "Christ" makes an explicit claim to the preexistence of Christ. (The textual critic faces a similar dilemma in Jude 5. In a similar exodus context, some of the more important Alexandrian MSS [A B 33 81 pc] and the Vulgate read "Jesus" in place of "Lord." Two of those MSS [A 81] are the same MSS that have "God" instead of "Christ" in 1 Cor 10:9. See the tc notes on Jude 5 for more information.) In sum, "Christ" has all the earmarks of authenticity here and should be considered the original reading.

[7] sn This incident is recorded in Num 21:5-9.

[8] tn Grk "by the destroyer." BDAG 703 s.v. ὀλοθρευτής mentions the corresponding OT references and notes, "the one meant is the destroying angel as the one who carries out the divine sentence of punishment, or perh. Satan."

sn This incident is recorded in Num 16:41-50.

taken you that is not faced by others.[1] And God is faithful: He[2] will not let you be tried beyond what you are able to bear,[3] but with the trial will also provide a way out so that you may be able to endure it.

Avoid Idol Feasts

10:14 So then, my dear friends, flee from idolatry. 10:15 I am speaking to thoughtful people. Consider what I say. 10:16 Is not the cup of blessing that we bless a sharing in the blood of Christ? Is not the bread that we break a sharing in the body of Christ? 10:17 Because there is one bread, we who are many are one body, for we all share the one bread. 10:18 Look at the people of Israel.[4] Are not those who eat the sacrifices partners in the altar? 10:19 Am I saying that idols or food sacrificed to them amount to anything? 10:20 No, I mean that what the pagans sacrifice[5] is to demons and not to God. I do not want you to be partners with demons. 10:21 You cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons. You cannot take part in the table of the Lord and the table of demons. 10:22 Or are we trying to provoke the Lord to jealousy? Are we really stronger than he is?[6]

Live to Glorify God

10:23 "Everything is lawful," but not everything is beneficial. "Everything is lawful,"[7] but not everything builds others up.[8] 10:24 Do not seek your own good, but the good of the other person. 10:25 Eat anything that is sold in the marketplace without questions of conscience, 10:26 for the earth and its abundance are the Lord's.[9] 10:27 If an unbeliever invites you to dinner and you want to go, eat whatever is served without asking questions of conscience. 10:28 But if someone says to you, "This is from a sacrifice," do not eat, because of the one who told you and because of conscience[10] – 10:29 I do not mean yours but the other person's. For why is my freedom being judged by another's conscience? 10:30 If I partake with thankfulness, why am I blamed for the food[11] that I give thanks for? 10:31 So whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, do everything for the glory of God. 10:32 Do not give offense to Jews or Greeks or to the church of God, 10:33 just as I also try to please everyone in all things. I do not seek my own benefit, but the benefit[12] of many, so that they may be saved. 11:1 Be imitators of me, just as I also am of Christ.

Women's Head Coverings

11:2 I praise you[13] because you remember me in everything and maintain the traditions just as I passed them on to you. 11:3 But I want you to know that Christ is the head of every man, and the man is the head of a woman,[14] and God is the head of Christ. 11:4 Any man who prays or prophesies with his head covered disgraces his head. 11:5 But any woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered disgraces her head, for it is one and the same thing as having a shaved head. 11:6 For if a woman will not cover her head, she should cut off her hair. But if it is disgraceful for a woman to have her hair cut off or her head shaved, she should cover her head.

[1] tn Grk "except a human one" or "except one common to humanity."

[2] tn Grk "God is faithful who." The relative pronoun was changed to a personal pronoun in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn The words "to bear" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. They have been supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning.

[4] tn Grk "Israel according to (the) flesh."

[5] tn Grk "what they sacrifice"; the referent (the pagans) is clear from the context and has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn The question in Greek expects a negative answer ("We are not stronger than he is, are we?").

[7] sn "Everything is lawful." Here again Paul cites certain slogans the Corinthians used to justify their behavior (cf. 6:12-13; 7:1; 8:1, 4). Paul agrees with the slogans in part, but corrects them to show how the Corinthians have misused these ideas.

[8] tn Grk "builds up." The object "others" is not expressed but is implied, as v. 24 shows. Paul picks up a theme he introduced at the start of this section of the letter (8:1).

[9] sn A quotation from Ps 24:1; an allusion to Ps 50:12; 89:11.

[10] tc The Byzantine texttype and a few other witnesses (H^{c} Ψ 𝔐) essentially duplicate v. 26 at the end of this verse (with γάρ [gar, "for"] in second instead of third position), which itself is a quotation from Ps 24:1 (23:1 LXX). Not only is there a vast number of early, important, and diverse witnesses that lack this extra material (𝔓^{46} ℵ A B C* D F G H* P 33 81 365 630 1175 1739 1881 2464 latt co), but the quotation seems out of place at this point in the discourse for Paul is here discussing reasons not to partake of food that has been sacrificed to idols. Perhaps scribes felt that since food is from the Lord, to eat meat sacrificed to idols contradicts that belief. Either way, the better witnesses lack the clause which, had it been authentic to v. 28, would have not occasioned such a widespread excision. The evidence is thus compelling for the shorter reading.

[11] tn Grk "about that for which"; the referent (the food) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Although the Greek word translated "benefit" occurs only once in this verse, the Greek article occurs twice. This indicates an implied repetition of the term, which has been included twice in the translation for the sake of clarity and English style.

[13] tc The Western and Byzantine texts, as well as one or two Alexandrian mss (D F G Ψ 33 𝔐 latt sy), combine in reading ἀδελφοί (adelphoi, "brothers") here, while the Alexandrian witnesses (𝔓^{46} ℵ A B C P 81 630 1175 1739 1881 2464 co) largely lack the address. The addition of ἀδελφοί is apparently a motivated reading, however, for scribes would have naturally wanted to add it to ἐπαινῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς (epainō de humas, "now I praise you"), especially as this begins a new section. On the other hand, it is difficult to explain how the shorter reading could have arisen from the longer one. Thus, on both internal and external grounds, the shorter reading is strongly preferred.

[14] tn Or "the husband is the head of his wife." The same Greek words translated "man" and "woman" can mean, as determined by context, "husband" and "wife" respectively. Such an approach is followed by NAB, TEV, NRSV, and NLT (with some variations).

11:7 For a man should not have his head covered, since he is the image and glory of God. But the woman is the glory of the man. 11:8 For man did not come from woman, but woman from man. 11:9 Neither was man created for the sake of woman, but woman for man. 11:10 For this reason a woman should have a symbol of authority[1] on her head, because of the angels.[2] 11:11 In any case, in the Lord woman is not independent of man, nor is man independent of woman. 11:12 For just as woman came from man, so man comes through woman. But all things come from God. 11:13 Judge for yourselves: Is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered? 11:14 Does not nature[3] itself teach you that if a man has long hair, it is a disgrace for him, 11:15 but if a woman has long hair, it is her glory? For her hair is given to her for a covering.[4] 11:16 If anyone intends to quarrel about this, we have no other practice, nor do the churches of God.

The Lord's Supper

11:17 Now in giving the following instruction I do not praise you, because you come together not for the better but for the worse. 11:18 For in the first place, when you come together as a church I hear there are divisions among you, and in part I believe it. 11:19 For there must in fact be divisions among you, so that those of you who are approved may be evident.[5] 11:20 Now when you come together at the same place, you are not really eating the Lord's Supper. 11:21 For when it is time to eat, everyone proceeds with his own supper. One is hungry and another becomes drunk. 11:22 Do you not have houses so that you can eat and drink? Or are you trying to show contempt for the church of God by shaming those who have nothing? What should I say to you? Should I praise you? I will not praise you for this!

11:23 For I received from the Lord what I also passed on to you, that the Lord Jesus on the night in which he was betrayed took bread, 11:24 and after he had given thanks he broke it and said, "This is my body, which is for you. Do this in remembrance of me." 11:25 In the same way, he also took the cup after supper, saying, "This cup is the new covenant in my blood. Do this, every time you drink it, in remembrance of me." 11:26 For every time you eat this bread and drink the cup, you proclaim the Lord's death until he comes.

11:27 For this reason, whoever eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. 11:28 A person should examine himself first,[6] and in this way[7] let him eat the bread and drink of the cup. 11:29 For the one who eats and drinks without careful regard[8] for the body eats and drinks judgment against himself. 11:30 That is why many of you are weak and sick, and quite a few are dead.[9] 11:31 But if we examined ourselves, we would not be judged. 11:32 But when we are judged by the Lord, we are disciplined so that we may not be condemned with the world. 11:33 So then, my brothers and sisters,[10] when you come together to eat, wait for one another. 11:34 If anyone is hungry, let him eat at home, so that when you assemble it does not lead to judgment. I will give directions about other matters when I come.

Spiritual Gifts

12:1 With regard to spiritual gifts,[11] brothers and sisters,[12] I do not want you to be uninformed.[13] 12:2 You know that when you were pagans you were often led astray by speechless idols, however you were led. 12:3 So I want you to understand that no one speaking by the Spirit of God says, "Jesus is cursed," and no one can say, "Jesus is Lord," except by the Holy Spirit.

12:4 Now there are different gifts, but the same Spirit. 12:5 And there are different ministries, but the same Lord. 12:6 And there are

[1] sn Paul does not use a word specifying what type of "covering" is meant (veil, hat, etc.). The Greek word he uses here (ἐξουσία exousia; translated symbol of authority) could be (1) a figure of speech that may substitute the result (the right to participate in worship) for the appropriate appearance that makes it possible (the covered head). Or (2) it refers to the outward symbol (having the head covered) as representing the inward attitude the woman is to possess (deference to male leadership in the church).

[2] sn Paul does not explain this reference to the angels, and its point is not entirely clear. It seems to reflect an awareness that angels are witnesses to church life (cf. Eph 3:10) and would be particularly sensitive to resistance against God's created order.

[3] sn Paul does not mean nature in the sense of "the natural world" or "Mother Nature." It denotes "the way things are" because of God's design.

[4] sn No word for veil or head covering occurs in vv. 3-14 (see the note on authority in v. 10). That the hair is regarded by Paul as a covering in v. 15 is not necessarily an argument that the hair is the same as the head covering that he is describing in the earlier verses (esp. v. 10). Throughout this unit of material, Paul points out the similarities of long hair with a head covering. But his doing so seems to suggest that the two are not to be identified with each other. Precisely because they are similar they do not appear to be identical (cf. vv. 5, 6, 7, 10, 13). If head covering = long hair, then what does v. 6 mean ("For if a woman will not cover her head, she should cut off her hair")? This suggests that the covering is not the same as the hair itself.

[5] tn Grk "those approved may be evident among you."

[6] tn The word "first" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. It has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Grk "in this manner."

[8] tn The word more literally means, "judging between, recognizing, distinguishing."

[9] tn Grk "are asleep." The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

[10] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

different results, but the same God who produces all of them in everyone. 12:7 To each person the manifestation of the Spirit is given for the benefit of all. 12:8 For one person is given through the Spirit the message of wisdom, and another the message of knowledge according to the same Spirit, 12:9 to another faith by the same Spirit, and to another gifts of healing by the one Spirit, 12:10 to another performance of miracles, to another prophecy, and to another discernment of spirits, to another different kinds of tongues, and to another the interpretation of tongues. 12:11 It is one and the same Spirit, distributing as he decides to each person, who produces all these things.

Different Members in One Body

12:12 For just as the body is one and yet has many members, and all the members of the body – though many – are one body, so too is Christ. 12:13 For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body. Whether Jews or Greeks or slaves[1] or free, we were all made to drink of the one Spirit. 12:14 For in fact the body is not a single member, but many. 12:15 If the foot says, "Since I am not a hand, I am not part of the body," it does not lose its membership in the body because of that. 12:16 And if the ear says, "Since I am not an eye, I am not part of the body," it does not lose its membership in the body because of that. 12:17 If the whole body were an eye, what part would do the hearing? If the whole were an ear, what part would exercise the sense of smell? 12:18 But as a matter of fact, God has placed each of the members in the body just as he decided. 12:19 If they were all the same member, where would the body be? 12:20 So now there are many members, but one body. 12:21 The eye cannot say to the hand, "I do not need you," nor in turn can the head say to the foot, "I do not need you." 12:22 On the contrary, those members that seem to be weaker are essential, 12:23 and those members we consider less honorable we clothe with greater honor, and our unpresentable members are clothed with dignity,[2] 12:24 but our presentable members do not need this. Instead, God has blended together the body, giving greater honor to the lesser member, 12:25 so that there may be no division in the body, but the members may have mutual concern for one another. 12:26 If one member suffers, everyone suffers with it. If a[3] member is honored, all rejoice with it.

12:27 Now you are Christ's body, and each of you is a member of it. 12:28 And God has placed in the church first apostles, second prophets, third teachers, then miracles, gifts of healing, helps, gifts of leadership, different kinds of tongues. 12:29 Not all are apostles, are they? Not all are prophets, are they? Not all are teachers, are they? Not all perform miracles, do they? 12:30 Not all have gifts of healing, do they? Not all speak in tongues, do they? Not all interpret, do they?[4] 12:31 But you should be eager for the greater gifts.

And now I will show you a way that is beyond comparison.[5]

The Way of Love

13:1 If I speak in the tongues of men and of angels, but I do not have love, I am a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. 13:2 And if I have prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have all faith so that I can remove mountains, but do not have love, I am nothing. 13:3 If I give away everything I own, and if I give over my body in order to boast,[6] but do not have love, I receive no benefit.

[2] tn Grk "have greater propriety (or decorum, presentability)."

[3] tc ‡ Before μέλος (melos, "member") the great majority of witnesses read ἕν (hen, "one"; ℵ² C D F G Ψ 0285 33 1881 𝔐 latt sy), while the most important of the Alexandrian mss omit it (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ* A B 1739). The addition of ἕν appears to be motivated by its presence earlier in the verse with μέλος and the parallel structure of the two conditional clauses in this verse, while little reason can be given for its absence (although accidental oversight is of course possible, it is not likely that all these witnesses should have overlooked it). NA²⁷ has the word in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

[4] sn The questions in vv. 29-30 all expect a negative response.

[5] tn Grk "a still more excellent way." In this context the phrase has an elative rather than a comparative sense, however.

[6] tc The reading καυχήσωμαι (kauchēsōmai, "I might boast") is well supported by 𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ A B 048 33 1739* pc co Hier^{mss}. The competing reading, καυθήσομαι (kauthēsomai, "I will burn"), is found in C D F G L 81 1175 1881* al latt and a host of patristic writers. From this reading other variants were obviously derived: καυθήσωμαι (kauthēsōmai), a future subjunctive ("I might burn") read by the Byzantine text and a few others (Ψ 1739^{c} 1881^{c} 𝔐); and καυθῇ (kauthē, "it might be burned") read by 1505 pc. On an external level, the Alexandrian reading is obviously superior, though the Western and Byzantine readings need to be accounted for. (The following discussion is derived largely from TCGNT 497-98). Internally, καυχήσωμαι is superior for the following reasons: (1) Once the Church started suffering persecution and martyrdom by fire, the v.l. naturally arose. Once there, it is difficult to see why any scribe would intentionally change it to καυχήσωμαι. (2) Involving as it does the change of just two letters (χ to θ [ch to th], ω to ο [ō to o]), this reading could be accomplished without much fanfare. Yet, it appears cumbersome in the context, both because of the passive voice and especially the retention of the first person ("If I give up my body that I may be burned"). A more logical word would have been the third person passive, καυθῇ, as read in 1505 ("If I give up my body that it may be burned"). (3) Although the connection between giving up one's body and boasting is ambiguous, this very ambiguity has all the earmarks of being from Paul. It may have the force of giving up one's body into slavery. In any event, it looks to be the harder reading. Incidentally, the Byzantine reading is impossible because the future subjunctive did not occur in Koine Greek. As the reading of the majority of Byzantine minuscules, its roots are clearly post-Koine and as such is a "grammatical monstrosity that cannot be attributed to Paul" (TCGNT 498). Cf. also the notes in BDF §28; MHT 2:219.

13:4 Love is patient, love is kind, it is not envious. Love does not brag, it is not puffed up. 13:5 It is not rude, it is not self-serving, it is not easily angered or resentful. 13:6 It is not glad about injustice, but rejoices in the truth. 13:7 It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.

13:8 Love never ends. But if there are prophecies, they will be set aside; if there are tongues, they will cease; if there is knowledge, it will be set aside. 13:9 For we know in part, and we prophesy in part, 13:10 but when what is perfect[1] comes, the partial will be set aside. 13:11 When I was a child, I talked like a child, I thought like a child, I reasoned like a child. But when I became an adult,[2] I set aside childish ways. 13:12 For now we see in a mirror indirectly,[3] but then we will see face to face. Now I know in part, but then I will know fully, just as I have been fully known. 13:13 And now these three remain: faith, hope, and love. But the greatest of these is love.

Prophecy and Tongues

14:1 Pursue love and be eager for the spiritual gifts, especially that you may prophesy. 14:2 For the one speaking in a tongue does not speak to people but to God, for no one understands; he is speaking mysteries by the Spirit.[4] 14:3 But the one who prophesies speaks to people for their strengthening,[5] encouragement, and consolation. 14:4 The one who speaks in a tongue builds himself up,[6] but the one who prophesies builds up the church. 14:5 I wish you all spoke in tongues, but even more that you would prophesy. The one who prophesies is greater than the one who speaks in tongues, unless he interprets so that the church may be strengthened.

14:6 Now, brothers and sisters,[7] if I come to you speaking in tongues, how will I help you unless I speak to you with a revelation or with knowledge or prophecy or teaching? 14:7 It is similar for lifeless things that make a sound, like a flute or harp. Unless they make a distinction in the notes, how can what is played on the flute or harp be understood? 14:8 If, for example, the trumpet makes an unclear sound, who will get ready for battle? 14:9 It is the same for you. If you do not speak clearly with your tongue, how will anyone know what is being said? For you will be speaking into the air. 14:10 There are probably many kinds of languages in the world, and none is without meaning. 14:11 If then I do not know the meaning of a language, I will be a foreigner to the speaker and the speaker a foreigner to me. 14:12 It is the same with you. Since you are eager for manifestations of the Spirit,[8] seek to abound in order to strengthen the church.

14:13 So then, one who speaks in a tongue should pray that he may interpret. 14:14 If[9] I pray in a tongue, my spirit prays, but my mind is unproductive. 14:15 What should I do?[10] I will pray with my spirit, but I will also pray with my mind. I will sing praises with my spirit, but I will also sing praises with my mind. 14:16 Otherwise, if you are praising God with your spirit, how can someone without the gift[11] say "Amen" to your thanksgiving, since he does not know what you are saying? 14:17 For you are certainly giving thanks well, but the other person is not strengthened. 14:18 I thank God that I speak in tongues more than all of you, 14:19 but in the church I want to speak five words with my mind to instruct others, rather than ten thousand words in a tongue.

14:20 Brothers and sisters,[12] do not be children in your thinking. Instead, be infants in evil, but in your thinking be mature. 14:21 It is written in the law: "By people with strange tongues and

[1] tn Or "when completion."

[2] tn The Greek term translated "adult" here is ἀνήρ (anēr), a term which ordinarily refers to males, husbands, etc. In this context Paul contrasts the states of childhood and adulthood, so the term has been translated "adult"; cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 1.b.

[3] tn Grk "we are seeing through [= using] a mirror by means of a dark image." Corinth was well known in the ancient world for producing some of the finest bronze mirrors available. Paul's point in this analogy, then, is not that our current understanding and relationship with God is distorted (as if the mirror reflected poorly), but rather that it is "indirect," (i.e., the nature of looking in a mirror) compared to the relationship we will enjoy with him in the future when we see him "face to face" (cf. G. D. Fee, First Corinthians [NICNT], 648). The word "indirectly" translates the Greek phrase ἐν αἰνίγματι (en ainigmati, "in an obscure image") which itself may reflect an allusion to Num 12:8 (LXX οὐ δι᾽ αἰνιγμάτων), where God says that he speaks to Moses "mouth to mouth [= face to face]...and not in dark figures [of speech]." Though this allusion to the OT is not explicitly developed here, it probably did not go unnoticed by the Corinthians who were apparently familiar with OT traditions about Moses (cf. 1 Cor 10:2). Indeed, in 2 Cor 3:13-18 Paul had recourse with the Corinthians to contrast Moses' ministry under the old covenant with the hope afforded through apostolic ministry and the new covenant. Further, it is in this context, specifically in 2 Cor 3:18, that the apostle invokes the use of the mirror analogy again in order to unfold the nature of the Christian's progressive transformation by the Spirit.

[4] tn Or "with the spirit"; cf. vv. 14-16.

[5] tn Grk "edification."

[6] sn The Greek term builds (himself) up does not necessarily bear positive connotations in this context.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[8] tn Grk "eager for spirits." The plural is probably a shorthand for the Spirit's gifts, especially in this context, tongues.

[9] tc ‡ Most witnesses, including some important ones (ℵ A D^s Ψ 048 𝔐 lat sy bo), have γάρ (gar, "for") here, while an equally impressive array of witnesses lack the conjunction ($\mathfrak{P}^{46}$ B F G 0243 1739 1881 sa). This conjunction was frequently added by scribes in epistolary literature as a clarifying word, making the connection with the preceding more explicit. As such, it has the earmarks of being a motivated reading and thus should be rejected. NA^{27} places the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[10] tn Grk "what then is it?"

[11] tn Grk "how can someone who fills the place of the unlearned say 'Amen.'"

by the lips of strangers I will speak to this people, yet not even in this way will they listen to me,"[1] says the Lord. 14:22 So then, tongues are a sign not for believers but for unbelievers. Prophecy, however, is not for unbelievers but for believers. 14:23 So if the whole church comes together and all speak in tongues, and unbelievers or uninformed people enter, will they not say that you have lost your minds? 14:24 But if all prophesy, and an unbeliever or uninformed person enters, he will be convicted by all, he will be called to account by all. 14:25 The secrets of his heart are disclosed, and in this way he will fall down with his face to the ground and worship God, declaring, "God is really among you."

Church Order

14:26 What should you do then, brothers and sisters?[2] When you come together, each one has a song, has a lesson, has a revelation, has a tongue, has an interpretation. Let all these things be done for the strengthening of the church. 14:27 If someone speaks in a tongue, it should be two, or at the most three, one after the other, and someone must interpret. 14:28 But if there is no interpreter, he should be silent in the church. Let him speak to himself and to God. 14:29 Two or three prophets should speak and the others should evaluate what is said. 14:30 And if someone sitting down receives a revelation, the person who is speaking should conclude. 14:31 For you can all prophesy one after another, so all can learn and be encouraged. 14:32 Indeed, the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets, 14:33 for God is not characterized by disorder but by peace.

As in all the churches of the saints,[3] 14:34 the women[4] should be silent in the churches, for they are not permitted to speak.[5] Rather, let them be in submission, as in fact the law says. 14:35 If they want to find out about something, they should ask their husbands at home, because it is disgraceful for a woman to speak in church.[6]

[1] sn A quotation from Isa 28:11-12.

[2] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[3] sn This phrase may be taken with v. 33a.

[4] tn The word for "woman" and "wife" is the same in Greek. Because of the reference to husbands in v. 35, the word may be translated "wives" here. But in passages governing conduct in church meetings like this (cf. 11:2-16; 1 Tim 2:9-15) the general meaning "women" is more likely.

[5] sn For they are not permitted to speak. In light of 11:2-16, which gives permission for women to pray or prophesy in the church meetings, the silence commanded here seems not to involve the absolute prohibition of a woman addressing the assembly. Therefore (1) some take be silent to mean not taking an authoritative teaching role as 1 Tim 2 indicates, but (2) the better suggestion is to relate it to the preceding regulations about evaluating the prophets (v. 29). Here Paul would be indicating that the women should not speak up during such an evaluation, since such questioning would be in violation of the submission to male leadership that the OT calls for (the law, e.g., Gen 2:18).

[6] tc Some scholars have argued that vv. 34-35 should be excised from the text (principally G. D. Fee, First Corinthians [NICNT], 697-710; P. B. Payne, "Fuldensis, Sigla for Variants in Vaticanus, and 1 Cor 14.34-5," NTS 41 [1995]: 240-262). This is because the Western witnesses (D F G ar b vg^{ms} Ambst) have these verses after v. 40, while the rest of the tradition retains them here. There are no MSS that omit the verses. Why, then, would some scholars wish to excise the verses? Because they believe that this best explains how they could end up in two different locations, that is to say, that the verses got into the text by way of a very early gloss added in the margin. Most scribes put the gloss after v. 33; others, not knowing where they should go, put them at the end of the chapter. Fee points out that "Those who wish to maintain the authenticity of these verses must at least offer an adequate answer as to how this arrangement came into existence if Paul wrote them originally as our vv. 34-35" (First Corinthians [NICNT], 700). In a footnote he adds, "The point is that if it were already in the text after v. 33, there is no reason for a copyist to make such a radical transposition." Although it is not our intention to interact with proponents of the shorter text in any detail here, a couple of points ought to be made. (1) Since these verses occur in all witnesses to 1 Corinthians, to argue that they are not original means that they must have crept into the text at the earliest stage of transmission. How early? Earlier than when the pericope adulterae (John 7:53-8:11) made its way into the text (late 2nd, early 3rd century?), earlier than the longer ending of Mark (16:9-20) was produced (early 2nd century?), and earlier than even "in Ephesus" was added to Eph 1:1 (upon reception of the letter by the first church to which it came, the church at Ephesus) – because in these other, similar places, the earliest witnesses do not add the words. This text thus stands as remarkable, unique. Indeed, since all the witnesses have the words, the evidence points to them as having been inserted into the original document. Who would have done such a thing? And, further, why would scribes have regarded it as original since it was obviously added in the margin? This leads to our second point. (2) Following a suggestion made by E. E. Ellis ("The Silenced Wives of Corinth (I Cor. 14:34-5)," New Testament Textual Criticism: Its Significance for Exegesis, 213-20 [the suggestion comes at the end of the article, almost as an afterthought]), it is likely that Paul himself added the words in the margin. Since it was so much material to add, Paul could have squelched any suspicions by indicating that the words were his (e.g., by adding his name or some other means [cf. 2 Thess 3:17]). This way no scribe would think that the material was inauthentic. (Incidentally, this is unlike the textual problem at Rom 5:1, for there only one letter was at stake; hence, scribes would easily have thought that the "text" reading was original. And Paul would hardly be expected to add his signature for one letter.) (3) What then is to account for the uniform Western tradition of having the verses at the end of the chapter? Our conjecture (and that is all it is) is that the scribe of the Western Vorlage could no longer read where the verses were to be added (any marginal arrows or other directional device could have been smudged), but, recognizing that this was part of the original text, felt compelled to put it somewhere. The least offensive place would have been at the end of the material on church conduct (end of chapter 14), before the instructions about the resurrection began. Although there were no chapter divisions in the earliest period of copying, scribes could still detect thought breaks (note the usage in the earliest papyri). (4) The very location of the verses in the Western tradition argues strongly that Paul both authored vv. 34-35 and that they were originally part of the margin of the text. Otherwise, one has a difficulty explaining why no scribe seemed to have hinted that these verses might be inauthentic (the scribal sigla of codex B, as noticed by Payne, can be interpreted otherwise than as an indication of inauthenticity [cf. J. E. Miller, "Some Observations on the Text-Critical Function of the Umlauts in Vaticanus, with Special Attention to 1 Corinthians 14.34-35," JSNT 26

14:36 Did the word of God begin with you,[1] or did it come to you alone?

14:37 If anyone considers himself a prophet or spiritual person, he should acknowledge that what I write to you is the Lord's command. 14:38 If someone does not recognize this, he is not recognized. 14:39 So then, brothers and sisters,[2] be eager to prophesy, and do not forbid anyone from speaking in tongues.[3] 14:40 And do everything in a decent and orderly manner.

Christ's Resurrection

15:1 Now I want to make clear for you,[4] brothers and sisters,[5] the gospel that I preached to you, that you received and on which you stand, 15:2 and by which you are being saved, if you hold firmly to the message I preached to you – unless you believed in vain. 15:3 For I passed on to you as of first importance[6] what I also received – that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, 15:4 and that he was buried, and that he was raised[7] on the third day according to the scriptures, 15:5 and that he appeared to Cephas, then to the twelve. 15:6 Then he appeared to more than five hundred of the brothers and sisters[8] at one time, most of whom are still alive,[9] though some have fallen asleep.[10] 15:7 Then he appeared to James, then to all the apostles. 15:8 Last of all, as though to one born at the wrong time,[11] he appeared to me also. 15:9 For I am the least of the apostles, unworthy to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. 15:10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace to me has not been in vain. In fact, I worked harder than all of them – yet not I, but the grace of God with me. 15:11 Whether then it was I or they, this is the way we preach and this is the way you believed.

No Resurrection?

15:12 Now if Christ is being preached as raised from the dead,[12] how can some of you say there is no resurrection of the dead? 15:13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then not even Christ has been raised. 15:14 And if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is futile and your faith is empty. 15:15 Also, we are found to be false witnesses about God, because we have testified against God that he raised Christ from the dead, when in reality he did not raise him, if indeed the dead are not raised. 15:16 For if the dead are not raised, then not even Christ has been raised. 15:17 And if Christ has not been raised, your faith is useless; you are still in your sins. 15:18 Furthermore, those who have fallen asleep[13] in Christ have also perished. 15:19 For if only in this life we have hope in Christ, we should be pitied more than anyone.

15:20 But now Christ has been raised from the dead, the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep. 15:21 For since death came through a man,[14] the resurrection of the dead also came through a man.[15] 15:22 For just as in Adam all die, so also in Christ all will be made alive. 15:23 But each in his own order: Christ, the firstfruits; then when Christ comes, those who belong to him.[16] 15:24 Then[17] comes the end,[18] when he hands over the kingdom to God the Father, when he has brought to an end all rule and all authority and power. 15:25 For he must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet. 15:26 The last [2003]: 217-36.). There are apparently no MSS that have an asterisk or obelisk in the margin. Yet in other places in the NT where scribes doubted the authenticity of the clauses before them, they often noted their protest with an asterisk or obelisk. We are thus compelled to regard the words as original, and as belonging where they are in the text above.

[1] tn Grk "Did the word of God go out from you."

[2] tc ‡ μου (mou, "my") is found after ἀδελφοί (adelphoi) in a number of significant witnesses (ℵ A B* D[1] 048 326 1175 2464 al), but lacking in most other witnesses (𝔓[46] B[2] D* F G Ψ 0243 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat). Every other time Paul says "So then, brothers (and sisters)" he adds "my" (ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου; hōste, adelphoi mou). There is no good reason why scribes would intentionally omit "my" here but not elsewhere. Thus, the longer reading is in conformity with Paul's general style and as such seems to be scribally motivated. NA[27] has the word in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[3] tn Grk "do not forbid speaking in tongues." The words "anyone from" are supplied for the sake of clarity.

[4] tn Grk "Now I make known to you."

[5] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[6] tn Grk "among (the) first things."

[7] tn Grk "he has been raised/is raised," using a Greek tense that points to the present effect of the act of raising him. But in English idiom the temporal phrase "on the third day" requires a different translation of the verb.

[8] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[9] tn Grk "most of whom remain until now."

[10] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for death when speaking of believers. This metaphorical usage by its very nature emphasizes the hope of resurrection: Believers will one day "wake up" out of death. Here the term refers to death, but "sleep" was used in the translation to emphasize the metaphorical, rhetorical usage of the term.

[11] sn One born at the wrong time. The Greek word used here (ἔκτρωμα, ektrōma) refers to a premature birth, a miscarriage, or an aborted child. Paul uses it as a powerful figure of the unexpected, abnormal nature of his apostolic call.

[12] tn Grk "that he has been raised from the dead."

[13] tn See the note on the word "asleep" in 15:6. This term is also used in v. 20.

[14] tn Or "through a human being" (a reference to Adam).

[15] tn Or "through a human being" (a reference to Jesus Christ).

[16] tn Grk "then those who belong to Christ, at his coming."

[17] tn This is a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[18] tn Grk "then the end" or "then (is) the end." Paul explains how the "end" relates to resurrection in vv. 25-28.

enemy to be eliminated is death. 15:27 For he has put everything in subjection under his feet.[1] But when it says "everything" has been put in subjection, it is clear that this does not include the one who put everything in subjection to him. 15:28 And when all things are subjected to him, then the Son himself will be subjected to the one who subjected everything to him, so that God may be all in all.

15:29 Otherwise, what will those do who are baptized for the dead?[2] If the dead are not raised at all, then why are they baptized for them? 15:30 Why too are we in danger every hour? 15:31 Every day I am in danger of death! This is as sure as[3] my boasting in you,[4] which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord. 15:32 If from a human point of view I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus,[5] what did it benefit me? If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.[6] 15:33 Do not be deceived: "Bad company corrupts good morals."[7] 15:34 Sober up as you should, and stop sinning! For some have no knowledge of God – I say this to your shame!

The Resurrection Body

15:35 But someone will say, "How are the dead raised? With what kind of body will they come?" 15:36 Fool! What you sow will not come to life unless it dies. 15:37 And what you sow is not the body that is to be, but a bare seed[8] – perhaps of wheat or something else. 15:38 But God gives it a body just as he planned, and to each of the seeds a body of its own. 15:39 All flesh is not the same: People have one flesh, animals have another, birds and fish another.[9] 15:40 And there are heavenly bodies and earthly bodies. The glory of the heavenly body is one sort and the earthly another. 15:41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon and another glory of the stars, for star differs from star in glory.

15:42 It is the same with the resurrection of the dead. What is sown is perishable, what is raised is imperishable.[10] 15:43 It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; 15:44 it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body. 15:45 So also it is written, "The first man, Adam, became a living person";[11] the last Adam became a life-giving spirit. 15:46 However, the spiritual did not come first, but the natural, and then the spiritual. 15:47 The first man is from the earth, made of dust; the second man is from heaven. 15:48 Like the one made of dust, so too are those made of dust, and like the one from heaven, so too those who are heavenly. 15:49 And just as we have borne the image of the man of dust, let us also bear[12] the image of the man of heaven.

[1] sn A quotation from Ps 8:6.

[2] sn Many suggestions have been offered for the puzzling expression baptized for the dead. There are up to 200 different explanations for the passage; a summary is given by K. C. Thompson, "I Corinthians 15,29 and Baptism for the Dead," Studia Evangelica 2.1 (TU 87), 647-59. The most likely interpretation is that some Corinthians had undergone baptism to bear witness to the faith of fellow believers who had died without experiencing that rite themselves. Paul's reference to the practice here is neither a recommendation nor a condemnation. He simply uses it as evidence from the lives of the Corinthians themselves to bolster his larger argument, begun in 15:12, that resurrection from the dead is a present reality in Christ and a future reality for them. Whatever they may have proclaimed, the Corinthians' actions demonstrated that they had hope for a bodily resurrection.

[3] tn Or, more literally, "I swear by the boasting in you."

[4] tc ‡ Although the witnesses for the shorter reading (𝔓46 D F G Ψ 075 0243 1739 1881 𝔐) are not as strong as for the addition of ἀδελφοί (adelphoi, "brothers") at this juncture (ℵ A B K P 33 81 104 365 1175 2464 lat sy co), it is difficult to find a reason why scribes would either intentionally or unintentionally drop the address here. Thus, the shorter reading is slightly preferred.

[6] sn An allusion to Isa 22:13; 56:12.

[7] sn A quotation from the poet Menander, Thais 218, which Paul uses in a proverbial sense.

[8] tn Grk "and what you sow, you do not sow the body that will be, but a bare seed."

[9] tn Grk "all flesh is not the same flesh, but there is one (flesh) of people, but another flesh of animals and another flesh of birds and another of fish."

[10] tn Grk "it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." The "it" refers to the body, as v. 44 shows.

[11] tn Grk "living soul"; a quotation from Gen 2:7.

[12] tc ‡ A few significant witnesses have the future indicative φορέσομεν (phoresomen, "we will bear"; B I 6 630 1881 al sa) instead of the aorist subjunctive φορέσωμεν (phoresōmen, "let us bear"; 𝔓46 ℵ A C D F G Ψ 075 0243 33 1739 𝔐 latt bo). If the original reading is the future tense, then "we will bear" would be a guarantee that believers would be like Jesus (and unlike Adam) in the resurrection. If the aorist subjunctive is original, then "let us bear" would be a command to show forth the image of Jesus, i.e., to live as citizens of the kingdom that believers will one day inherit. The future indicative is not widespread geographically. At the same time, it fits the context well: Not only are there indicatives in this section (especially vv. 42-49), but the conjunction καί (kai) introducing the comparative καθώς (kathōs) seems best to connect to the preceding by furthering the same argument (what is, not what ought to be). For this reason, though, the future indicative could be a reading thus motivated by an early scribe. In light of the extremely weighty evidence for the aorist subjunctive, it is probably best to regard the aorist subjunctive as original. This connects well with v. 50, for there Paul makes a pronouncement that seems to presuppose some sort of exhortation. G. D. Fee (First Corinthians [NICNT], 795) argues for the originality of the subjunctive, stating that "it is nearly impossible to account for anyone's having changed a clearly understandable future to the hortatory subjunctive so early and so often that it made its way into every textual history as the predominant reading." The subjunctive makes a great deal of sense in view of the occasion of 1 Corinthians. Paul wrote to combat an over-realized eschatology in which some of the Corinthians evidently believed they were experiencing all the benefits of the resurrection body in the present, and thus that their behavior did not matter. If the subjunctive is the correct reading, it seems Paul makes two points: (1) that the resurrection is a bodily one, as distinct from an out-of-body experience, and (2) that one's behavior in the interim does make a difference (see 15:32-34, 58).

15:50 Now this is what I am saying, brothers and sisters:[1] Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable. 15:51 Listen,[2] I will tell you a mystery: We will not all sleep,[3] but we will all be changed – 15:52 in a moment, in the blinking[4] of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we will be changed. 15:53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality. 15:54 Now when this perishable puts on the imperishable, and this mortal puts on immortality, then the saying that is written will happen,

> "Death has been swallowed up in victory."[5]
> 15:55 "Where, O death, is your victory? Where, O death, is your sting?"[6]

15:56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. 15:57 But thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! 15:58 So then, dear brothers and sisters,[7] be firm. Do not be moved! Always be outstanding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.

A Collection to Aid Jewish Christians

16:1 With regard to the collection for the saints, please follow the directions that I gave to the churches of Galatia:[8] 16:2 On the first day of the week, each of you should set aside some income[9] and save[10] it to the extent that God has blessed you,[11] so that a collection will not have to be made[12] when I come. 16:3 Then, when I arrive, I will send those whom you approve with letters of explanation to carry your gift to Jerusalem.[13] 16:4 And if it seems advisable that I should go also, they will go with me.

Paul's Plans to Visit

16:5 But I will come to you after I have gone through Macedonia – for I will be going through Macedonia – 16:6 and perhaps I will stay with you, or even spend the winter, so that you can send me on my journey, wherever I go. 16:7 For I do not want to see you now in passing, since I hope to spend some time with you, if the Lord allows. 16:8 But I will stay in Ephesus[14] until Pentecost, 16:9 because a door of great opportunity stands wide open for me,[15] but there are many opponents.

16:10 Now if Timothy comes, see that he has nothing to fear among you, for he is doing the Lord's work, as I am too. 16:11 So then, let no one treat him with contempt. But send him on his way in peace so that he may come to me. For I am expecting him with the brothers.[16]

16:12 With regard to our brother Apollos: I strongly encouraged him to visit you with the other brothers,[17] but it was simply not his intention to come now.[18] He will come when he has the opportunity.

Final Challenge and Blessing

16:13 Stay alert, stand firm in the faith, show courage, be strong. 16:14 Everything you do should be done in love.

[1] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[2] tn Grk "Behold."

[3] tc The manuscripts are grouped into four basic readings here: (1) ℵ C 0243* 33 1739 have "we all will sleep, but we will not all be changed" (πάντες κοιμηθησόμεθα, οὐ πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα); (2) 𝔓46 A^{c} (F G) have "we will not all sleep, but we will not all be changed" (πάντες οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, οὐ πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα); (3) D* lat Tert Ambst Spec read "we will all rise, but we will not all be changed." (4) The wording πάντες οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα ("we will not all sleep, but we will all be changed") is found in B D^{2} Ψ 075 0243^{c} 1881 𝔐 sy co. How shall we interpret such data? In light of the fact that Paul and his generation did in fact die, early scribes may have felt some embarrassment over the bald statement, "We will not all sleep" (πάντες οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα). This could account for the first variant. Although the second variant could be viewed as a conflation of (1) and (4) (so TCGNT 502; G. D. Fee, First Corinthians [NICNT], 796), it could also have arisen consciously, to guard against the notion that all whom Paul was addressing should regard themselves as true believers. The third variant, prominent in the Western witnesses, may have arisen to counter those who would deny the final resurrection (so TCGNT 502). In any event, since the fourth reading has the best credentials externally and best explains the rise of the others it should be adopted as the authentic wording here.

tn See the note on the word "asleep" in 15:6.

[4] tn The Greek word ῥιπή (rhipē) refers to a very rapid movement (BDAG 906 s.v.). This has traditionally been translated as "twinkling," which implies an exceedingly fast – almost instantaneous – movement of the eyes, but this could be confusing to the modern reader since twinkling in modern English often suggests a faint, flashing light. In conjunction with the genitive ὀφθαλμοῦ (ophthalmou, "of an eye"), "blinking" is the best English equivalent (see, e.g., L&N 16.5), although it does not convey the exact speed implicit in the Greek term.

[5] sn A quotation from Isa 25:8.

[6] sn A quotation from Hos 13:14.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[9] tn Grk "set aside, storing whatever he has been blessed with."

[10] tn Grk "set aside, storing." The participle θησαυρίζων (thēsaurizōn) indicates the purpose or result of setting aside the extra income.

[11] tn "To the extent that God has blessed you" translates an awkward expression, "whatever has been prospered [to you]." This verb has been translated as an active with "God" as subject, taking it as a divine passive.

[12] tn Grk "so that collections will not be taking place."

[15] tn Grk "for a door has opened wide to me, great and effective."

[16] tn Since Paul appears to expect specific delegates here and they were most likely men, the Greek word ἀδελφοί (adelphoi) here has not been not translated as "brothers and sisters."

[17] tn Grk "with the brothers."

[18] tn Grk "it was simply not the will that he come now."

16:15 Now, brothers and sisters,[1] you know about the household of Stephanus, that as the first converts[2] of Achaia, they devoted themselves to ministry for the saints. I urge you 16:16 also to submit to people like this, and to everyone who cooperates in the work and labors hard. 16:17 I was glad about the arrival of Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus because they have supplied the fellowship with you that I lacked.[3] 16:18 For they refreshed my spirit and yours. So then, recognize people like this.

16:19 The churches in the province of Asia[4] send greetings to you. Aquila and Prisca[5] greet[6] you warmly in the Lord, with the church that meets in their house. 16:20 All the brothers and sisters[7] send greetings. Greet one another with a holy kiss.

16:21 I, Paul, send this greeting with my own hand.

16:22 Let anyone who has no love for the Lord be accursed. Our Lord, come![8]

16:23 The grace of the Lord Jesus be with you.

16:24 My love be with all of you in Christ Jesus.[9]

---

[1] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[2] tn Grk "firstfruits."

[3] tn Or "they have made up for your absence" (BDAG 70 s.v. ἀναπληρόω 3).

[4] tn Grk "the churches of Asia"; in the NT "Asia" always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

[5] sn On Aquila and Prisca see also Acts 18:2, 18, 26; Rom 16:3-4; 2 Tim 4:19. In the NT "Priscilla" and "Prisca" are the same person. The author of Acts uses the full name Priscilla, while Paul uses the diminutive form Prisca.

[6] tc The plural form of this verb, ἀσπάζονται (aspazontai, "[they] greet"), is found in several good MSS (B F G 075 0121 0243 33 1739 1881) as well as the Byzantine cursives. But the singular is read by an equally impressive group (א C D K P Ψ 104 2464 pc). This part of the verse is lacking in codex A. Deciding on the basis of external evidence is quite difficult. Internally, however, the singular appears to have given rise to the plural: (1) The rest of the greetings in this verse are in the plural; this one was probably made plural by some scribes for purposes of assimilation; and, more significantly, (2) since both Aquila and Prisca are mentioned as the ones who send the greeting, the plural is more natural. The singular is, of course, not impossible Greek; indeed, a singular verb with a compound subject is used with some frequency in the NT (cf. Matt 13:55; Mark 8:27; 14:1; John 2:2; 3:22; 4:36, 53; Acts 5:29; 16:31; 1 Tim 6:4). This is especially common when "Jesus and his disciples" is the subject. What is significant is that when such a construction is found the emphasis is placed on the first-named person (in this case, Aquila). Normally when these two are mentioned in the NT, Priscilla is mentioned first (Acts 18:18, 26; Rom 16:3; 2 Tim 4:19). Only here and in Acts 18:2 (the first mention of them) is Aquila mentioned before Priscilla. Many suggest that Priscilla is listed first due to prominence. Though that is possible, both the mention of Aquila first here and the singular verb give him special prominence (cf. ExSyn 401-2). What such prominence means in each instance is difficult to assess. Nevertheless, here is a Pauline instance in which Aquila is given prominence. Too much can be made of the word order argument in either direction.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:10.

[8] tn The Greek text has μαράνα θά (marana tha). These Aramaic words can also be read as maran atha, translated "Our Lord has come!"

[9] tc Although the majority of MSS (א A C D Ψ 075 𝔐 lat bo) conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"), such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Although far fewer witnesses lack the valedictory particle (B F 0121 0243 33 81 630 1739* 1881 sa), their collective testimony is difficult to explain if the omission is not authentic.

2 Corinthians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, to the church of God that is in Corinth,[2] with all the saints who are in all Achaia.[3] 1:2 Grace and peace to you[4] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Thanksgiving for God's Comfort

1:3 Blessed is[5] the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and God of all comfort, 1:4 who comforts us in all our troubles[6] so that we may be able to comfort those experiencing any trouble[7] with the comfort with which we ourselves are comforted by God. 1:5 For just as the sufferings[8] of Christ[9] overflow[10] toward us, so also our comfort through Christ overflows to you.[11] 1:6 But if we are afflicted,[12] it is for your comfort and salvation; if we are comforted, it is for your comfort that you experience in your patient endurance of the same sufferings that we also suffer. 1:7 And our hope for you is steadfast because we know that as you share in[13] our sufferings, so also you will share in[14] our comfort. 1:8 For we do not want you to be unaware, brothers and sisters,[15] regarding the affliction that happened to us in the province of Asia,[16] that we were burdened excessively, beyond our strength, so that we despaired even of living. 1:9 Indeed we felt as if the sentence of death had been passed against us,[17] so that we would not trust in ourselves[18] but in God who raises the dead. 1:10 He[19] delivered us from so great a risk of death, and he will deliver us. We have set our hope on him[20] that[21] he will deliver us yet again, 1:11 as you also join in helping us by prayer, so that many people may give thanks to God[22] on our behalf for the gracious gift given to us through the help of many.

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

3 tn Or "are throughout Achaia."

4 tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

5 tn There is no verb in the Greek text; either the optative ("be") or the indicative ("is") can be supplied. The meaning of the term εὐλογητός (eulogētos) and the author's intention at this point in the epistle must both come into play to determine which is the preferred nuance. εὐλογητός as an adjective can mean either that one is praised or that one is blessed, that is, in a place of favor and benefit. The meaning "blessed" would be more naturally paired with an indicative verb and would suggest that blessedness is an intrinsic part of God's character. The meaning "praised" would be more naturally paired with an optative verb and would suggest that God ought to be praised. Pauline style in the epistles generally moves from statements to obligations, expressing the reality first and then the believer's necessary response. When considered as a whole, although a decision is difficult, the general Pauline style of beginning with statements and moving to obligations argues for the indicative. Cf. also Eph 1:3; 1 Pet 1:3.

6 tn Or "our trials"; traditionally, "our affliction." The term θλῖψις (thlipsis) refers to trouble (including persecution) that involves direct suffering (L&N 22.2).

7 tn Or "any trials"; traditionally, "any affliction."

8 tn This Greek word translated "sufferings" here (πάθημα, pathēma) is a different one than the one Paul uses for his own afflictions/persecutions (θλῖψις, thlipsis) in v. 4.

9 tn I.e., suffering incurred by Paul as a consequence of his relationship to Christ. The genitive could be considered to have a causative nuance here.

10 tn Traditionally, "abound" (here and throughout this section).

11 tn The words "to you" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by the statements in the following verse.

12 tn Or "are troubled."

13 tn Grk "as you are sharers in."

14 tn Grk "will be sharers in."

16 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

17 tn Grk "we ourselves had the sentence of death within ourselves." Here ἀπόκριμα (apokrima) is being used figuratively; no actual official verdict had been given, but in light of all the difficulties that Paul and his colleagues had suffered, it seemed to them as though such an official verdict had been rendered against them (L&N 56.26).

18 tn Or "might not put confidence in ourselves."

19 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative clause "who delivered us..." was made a separate sentence in the translation.

20 tn Grk "deliver us, on whom we have set our hope."

21 tc Several important witnesses, especially Alexandrian (𝔓46 B D* 0121 0243 1739 1881 pc Did), lack ὅτι (hoti, "that") here, while others, most notably Western (D1 F G 104 630 1505 pc ar b syh Or Ambst), lack ἔτι (eti, "yet"). Most mss, including important Alexandrians (ℵ A C D2 Ψ 33 𝔐 f t vg), have the full expression ὅτι καὶ ἔτι (hoti kai eti). Although the predominantly Alexandrian reading has much to commend it, the fact that either ὅτι or ἔτι has been dropped, while the καί has been retained, suggests that the original wording had ὅτι καὶ ἔτι, and that either particle dropped out intentionally for stylistic reasons. (F and G have the order καί ὅτι, suggesting that in their archetype the ἔτι was unintentionally dropped due to homoioteleuton.) If, however, ὅτι is not authentic, v. 10b should be translated "We have set our hope on him, and he will deliver us again." Overall, a decision is difficult, but preference should be given to ὅτι καὶ ἔτι.

22 tn Grk "so that thanks may be given by many." The words "to God" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. The passive construction has been converted to an active one for clarity, in keeping with contemporary English style.

Paul Defends His Changed Plans

1:12 For our reason for confidence[1] is this: the testimony of our conscience, that with pure motives[2] and sincerity which are from God[3] – not by human wisdom[4] but by the grace of God – we conducted ourselves in the world, and all the more[5] toward you. 1:13 For we do not write you anything other than what[6] you can read and also understand. But I hope that you will understand completely[7] 1:14 just as also you have partly understood us, that we are your source of pride just as you also are ours[8] in the day of the Lord Jesus.[9] 1:15 And with this confidence I intended to come to you first so that you would get a second opportunity to see us,[10] 1:16 and through your help to go on into Macedonia and then from Macedonia to come back[11] to you and be helped on our way into Judea by you. 1:17 Therefore when I was planning to do this, I did not do so without thinking about what I was doing, did I?[12] Or do I make my plans[13] according to mere human standards[14] so that I would be saying[15] both "Yes, yes" and "No, no" at the same time? 1:18 But as God is faithful, our message to you is not "Yes" and "No." 1:19 For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, the one who was proclaimed among you by us – by me and Silvanus[16] and Timothy – was not "Yes" and "No," but it has always been "Yes" in him. 1:20 For every one of God's promises are "Yes" in him; therefore also through him the "Amen" is spoken, to the glory we give to God. 1:21 But it is God who establishes[17] us together with you in Christ and who anointed us,[18] 1:22 who also sealed us and gave us the Spirit in our hearts as a down payment.[19]

Why Paul Postponed His Visit

1:23 Now I appeal to God as my witness,[20] that to spare[21] you I did not come again to Corinth.[22] 1:24 I do not mean that we rule over your faith, but we are workers with you for your joy, because by faith you stand firm.[23] 2:1 So[24] I made up my own mind[25] not to pay you another painful visit.[26] 2:2 For if I make you sad, who

1 tn Or "for boasting."

2 tc Two viable variants exist at this place in the text: ἁγιότητι (hagiotēti, "holiness") vs. ἁπλότητι (haplotēti, "pure motives"). A confusion of letters could well have produced the variant (TCGNT 507): In uncial script the words would have been written ΑΓΙΟΤΗΤΙ and ΑΠΛΟΤΗΤΙ. This, however, does not explain which reading created the other. Overall ἁπλότητι, though largely a Western-Byzantine reading (ℵ² D F G 𝔐 lat sy), is better suited to the context; it is also a Pauline word while ἁγιότης (hagiotēs) is not. It also best explains the rise of the other variants, πραότητι (praotēti, "gentleness") and {σπλάγχνοις} (splanchnois, "compassion"). On the other hand, the external evidence in favor of ἁγιότητι is extremely strong (𝔓⁴⁶ℵ* A B C K P Ψ 0121 0243 33 81 1739 1881 al co). This diversity of mss provides excellent evidence for authenticity, but because of the internal evidence listed above, ἁπλότητι is to be preferred, albeit only slightly.

tn Or "sincerity." The two terms translated "pure motives" (ἁπλότης, haplotēs) and "sincerity" (εἰλικρίνεια, eilikrineia) are close synonyms.

3 tn Grk "pure motives and sincerity of God."

4 tn Or "not by worldly wisdom."

5 tn Or "and especially."

6 tn Grk "than the things."

7 tn Grk "to the end," a Greek idiom for "fully," "totally," "completely."

8 tn Grk "that we are your boast even as you are our boast."

9 tc ‡ On the wording "the Lord Jesus" (τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, tou kuriou Iēsou) there is some variation in the extant witnesses: ἡμῶν (hēmōn, "our") is found after κυρίου in several significant witnesses (ℵ B F G P 0121 0243 6 33 81 1739 1881 2464 al lat co); the pronoun is lacking from 𝔓⁴⁶ᵛⁱᵈ A C D Ψ 𝔐. Although in Paul "our Lord Jesus Christ" is a common expression, "our Lord Jesus" is relatively infrequent (cf., e.g., Rom 16:20; 2 Cor 1:14; 1 Thess 2:19; 3:11, 13; 2 Thess 1:8, 12). "The Lord Jesus" occurs about as often as "our Lord Jesus" (cf. 1 Cor 11:23; 16:23; 2 Cor 4:14; 11:31; Eph 1:15; 1 Thess 4:2; 2 Thess 1:7; Phlm 5). Thus, on balance, since scribes would tend to expand on the text, it is probably best to consider the shorter reading as authentic. NA²⁷ places the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

10 tn Grk "a second grace," "a second favor" (used figuratively of a second visit by Paul).

11 tn Grk "come again."

12 tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative answer. This is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' question "did I?" at the end of the sentence.

13 tn Grk "the things that I plan, do I plan (them)."

14 tn Grk "according to the flesh."

15 tn Grk "so that with me there should be."

16 sn Silvanus is usually considered to be the same person as Silas (L&N 93.340).

17 tn Or "strengthens."

18 tn Grk "But he who establishes us together with you in Christ and anointed us is God."

19 tn Or "first installment," "pledge," "deposit."

sn Down payment. The Greek word ἀρραβών (arrabōn) denotes the first payment or first installment of money or goods which serves as a guarantee or pledge for the completion of the transaction. In the NT the term is used only figuratively of the Holy Spirit as the down payment of the blessings promised by God (it occurs later in 2 Cor 5:5, and also in Eph 1:14). In the "already – not yet" scheme of the NT the possession of the Spirit now by believers ("already") can be viewed as a guarantee that God will give them the balance of the promised blessings in the future ("not yet").

20 tn Grk "I call upon God as witness against my soul." Normally this implies an appeal for help (L&N 33.176).

21 tn Here φειδόμενος (pheidomenos) has been translated as a telic participle.

22 sn Paul had promised to come again to visit (see 2 Cor 1:15, 24) but explains here why he had changed his plans.

map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

23 tn Or "because you stand firm in the faith."

24 tc Although usually δέ (de, "now"; found in ℵ A C D¹ F G Ψ 0285 𝔐 lat) should take precedent over γάρ (gar) in textually disputed places in the corpus Paulinum, the credentials for γάρ here are not easily dismissed (𝔓⁴⁶ B 0223 0243 33 1739 1881 al); here it is the preferred reading, albeit slightly.

25 tn Or "I decided this for myself."

26 tn Grk "not to come to you again in sorrow."

sn Paul was not speaking absolutely about not making another visit, but meant he did not want to come to the Corinthians again until the conflict he mentioned in 2 Cor 2:4-11 was settled.

would be left to make me glad[1] but the one I caused to be sad? 2:3 And I wrote this very thing to you,[2] so that when I came[3] I would not have sadness from those who ought to make me rejoice, since I am confident in you all that my joy would be yours. 2:4 For out of great distress and anguish of heart I wrote to you with many tears, not to make you sad, but to let you know the love that I have especially for you.[4] 2:5 But if anyone has caused sadness, he has not saddened me alone, but to some extent (not to exaggerate)[5] he has saddened all of you as well. 2:6 This punishment on such an individual by the majority is enough for him, 2:7 so that now instead[6] you should rather forgive and comfort him.[7] This will keep him from being overwhelmed by excessive grief to the point of despair.[8] 2:8 Therefore I urge you to reaffirm your love for him.[9] 2:9 For this reason also I wrote you:[10] to test you to see[11] if you are obedient in everything. 2:10 If you forgive anyone for anything, I also forgive him – for indeed what I have forgiven (if I have forgiven anything) I did so for you in the presence of Christ, 2:11 so that we may not be exploited[12] by Satan (for we are not ignorant of his schemes). 2:12 Now when I arrived in Troas[13] to proclaim the gospel of Christ, even though the Lord had opened[14] a door of opportunity[15] for me, 2:13 I had no relief in my spirit,[16] because I did not find my brother Titus there. So I said goodbye to them[17] and set out[18] for Macedonia.

Apostolic Ministry

2:14 But thanks be to God who always leads us in triumphal procession[19] in Christ[20] and who makes known[21] through us the fragrance that consists of the knowledge of him in every place. 2:15 For we are a sweet aroma of Christ to God among those who are being saved and among those who are perishing – 2:16 to the latter an odor[22] from death to death, but to the former a fragrance from life to life. And who is adequate for these things?[23] 2:17 For we are not like so many others, hucksters who peddle the word of God for profit,[24] but we are speaking in Christ before[25] God as persons of sincerity,[26] as persons sent from God.

A Living Letter

3:1 Are we beginning to commend ourselves again? We don't need letters of recommendation to you or from you as some other people do, do we?[27] 3:2 You yourselves are our letter,[28] written on our hearts, known and read by everyone, 3:3 revealing[29] that you are a letter of Christ, delivered by us,[30] written not with ink but by the Spirit of the living God, not on stone tablets[31] but on tablets of human hearts.

---

[1] tn Or "to cheer me up." L&N 25.131 translates this "For if I were to make you sad, who would be left to cheer me up?"

[2] tn The words "to you" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[3] sn So that when I came. Regarding this still future visit by Paul, see 2 Cor 12:14; 13:1.

[4] tn Or "the love that I have in great measure for you."

[5] tn Or "(not to say too much)"; Grk "(not to burden you [with words])."

[6] tn Grk "so that on the other hand."

[7] tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text but is supplied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted and must be supplied from the context.

[8] tn Grk "comfort him, lest somehow such a person be swallowed up by excessive grief," an idiom for a person being so overcome with grief as to despair or give up completely (L&N 25.285). In this context of excessive grief or regret for past sins, "overwhelmed" is a good translation since contemporary English idiom speaks of someone "overwhelmed by grief." Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the difficulty of expressing a negative purpose/result clause in English, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[9] tn Or "I urge you to show that your love for him is real."

[10] tn The word "you" is not in the Greek text, but is implied (as an understood direct object).

[11] tn Grk "to know the proof of you," that is, to know if the Corinthians' obedience to Paul as an apostle was genuine (L&N 72.7).

[12] tn Or "be taken advantage of."

[13] sn Troas was a city and region in the northwest corner of Asia Minor.

[14] tn This has been translated as a concessive participle ("even though"). The passive construction ("a door of opportunity had been opened for me by the Lord") has been converted to an active one in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Grk "a door"; the phrase ἀνοίγω θύραν (anoigō thuran, "to open a door") is an idiom meaning "to make possible some opportunity" (L&N 71.9).

[16] tn Or "I had no peace of mind."

[17] tn Or "I took my leave of them."

[18] tn Since this refers to the outset of a journey, the aorist ἐξῆλθον (exēlthon) is taken ingressively.

[19] tn Or "who always causes us to triumph."

[20] tn Or "in the Messiah."

[21] tn Or "who reveals."

[22] tn The same Greek word (ὀσμή, osmē) translated "odor" here (in relation to the stench of death) has been translated "fragrance" in 2:14 and in the next phrase of the present verse. The word itself can describe a smell or odor either agreeable or disagreeable depending on the context (L&N 79.45).

[23] sn These things refer to the things Paul is doing in his apostolic ministry.

[24] tn The participle καπηλεύοντες (kapēleuontes) refers to those engaged in retail business, but with the negative connotations of deceptiveness and greed – "to peddle for profit," "to huckster" (L&N 57.202). In the translation a noun form ("hucksters") has been used in combination with the English verb "peddle...for profit" to convey the negative connotations of this term.

[25] tn Or "in the presence of."

[26] tn Or "persons of pure motives."

[27] tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply ("No, we do not") which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' at the end, "do we?"

[28] tn That is, "letter of recommendation."

[29] tn Or "making plain."

[30] tn Grk "cared for by us," an expression that could refer either to the writing or the delivery of the letter (BDAG 229 s.v. διακονέω 1). Since the following phrase refers to the writing of the letter, and since the previous verse speaks of this "letter" being "written on our [Paul's and his companions'] hearts" it is more probable that the phrase "cared for by us" refers to the delivery of the letter (in the person of Paul and his companions).

[31] sn An allusion to Exod 24:12; 31:18; 34:1; Deut 9:10-11.

3:4 Now we have such confidence in God through Christ. 3:5 Not that we are adequate[1] in ourselves to consider anything as if it were coming from ourselves, but our adequacy[2] is from God, 3:6 who made us adequate[3] to be servants of a new covenant[4] not based on the letter but on the Spirit, for the letter kills, but the Spirit gives life.

The Greater Glory of the Spirit's Ministry

3:7 But if the ministry that produced death – carved in letters on stone tablets[5] – came with glory, so that the Israelites[6] could not keep their eyes fixed on the face of Moses because of the glory of his face[7] (a glory[8] which was made ineffective),[9] 3:8 how much more glorious will the ministry of the Spirit be?[10] 3:9 For if there was glory in the ministry that produced condemnation,[11] how much more does the ministry that produces righteousness[12] excel[13] in glory! 3:10 For indeed, what had been glorious now[14] has no glory because of the tremendously greater glory of what replaced it.[15] 3:11 For if what was made ineffective[16] came with[17] glory, how much more has what remains[18] come in glory! 3:12 Therefore, since we have such a hope, we behave with great boldness,[19] 3:13 and not like Moses who used to put a veil over his face to keep the Israelites[20] from staring[21] at the result[22] of the glory that was made ineffective.[23] 3:14 But their minds were closed.[24] For to this very day, the same veil remains when they hear the old covenant read.[25] It has not been removed because only in Christ is it taken away.[26] 3:15 But until this very day whenever Moses is read, a veil lies over their minds,[27] 3:16 but when one[28] turns to the Lord, the veil is removed.[29] 3:17 Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is present,[30] there is freedom. 3:18 And we all, with unveiled faces reflecting the glory of the Lord,[31] are being transformed into the same image from one degree of glory to another,[32] which is from[33] the Lord, who is the Spirit.[34]

Paul's Perseverance in Ministry

4:1 Therefore, since we have this ministry, just as God has shown us mercy,[35] we do not become discouraged.[36] 4:2 But we have

1 tn Or "competent."

2 tn Or "competence."

3 tn Or "competent."

4 sn This new covenant is promised in Jer 31:31-34; 32:40.

5 tn Grk "on stones," but since this is clearly an allusion to the tablets of the Decalogue (see 2 Cor 3:3) the word "tablets" was supplied in the translation to make the connection clear.

6 tn Grk "so that the sons of Israel."

7 sn The glory of his face. When Moses came down from Mt. Sinai with the tablets of the Decalogue, the people were afraid to approach him because his face was so radiant (Exod 34:29-30).

8 tn The words "a glory" are not in the Greek text, but the reference to "glory" has been repeated from the previous clause for clarity.

9 tn Or "which was transitory." Traditionally this phrase is translated as "which was fading away." The verb καταργέω in the corpus Paulinum uniformly has the meaning "to render inoperative, ineffective"; the same nuance is appropriate here. The glory of Moses' face was rendered ineffective by the veil Moses wore. For discussion of the meaning of this verb in this context, see S. J. Hafemann, Paul, Moses, and the History of Israel (WUNT 81), 301-13. A similar translation has been adopted in the two other occurrences of the verb in this paragraph in vv. 11 and 13.

10 tn Grk "how will not rather the ministry of the Spirit be with glory?"

11 tn Grk "the ministry of condemnation"; translated as an objective genitive, "the ministry that produced condemnation."

12 tn Grk "the ministry of righteousness"; translated as an objective genitive, "the ministry that produces righteousness."

13 tn Traditionally, "abound."

14 tn Grk "in this case."

15 tn The words "of what replaced it" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to clarify the meaning.

16 tn Or "what was fading away." See note on "which was made ineffective" in v. 7.

17 tn Or "through" (διά, dia).

18 tn Or "what is permanent."

19 tn Or "we employ great openness of speech."

20 tn Grk "the sons of Israel."

21 tn Or "from gazing intently."

22 tn Or "end." The word τέλος (telos) can mean both "a point of time marking the end of a duration, end, termination, cessation" and "the goal toward which a movement is being directed, end, goal, outcome" (see BDAG 998-999 s.v.). The translation accepts the interpretation that Moses covered the glory of his face with the veil to prevent Israel from being judged by the glory of God (see S. J. Hafemann, Paul, Moses, and the History of Israel [WUNT 81], 347-62); in this case the latter meaning for τέλος is more appropriate.

23 tn Or "was fading away"; Grk "on the result of what was made ineffective." The referent (glory) has been specified in the translation for clarity. See note on "which was made ineffective" in v. 7.

24 tn Grk "their minds were hardened."

25 tn Grk "the same veil remains at the reading of the old covenant"; the phrase "they hear" has been introduced ("when they hear the old covenant read") to make the link with the "Israelites" (v. 13) whose minds were closed (v. 14a) more obvious to the reader.

26 tn Or "only in Christ is it eliminated."

27 tn Grk "their heart."

28 tn Or perhaps "when(ever) he turns," referring to Moses.

29 sn An allusion to Exod 34:34. The entire verse may refer to Moses, viewing him as a type portraying the Jewish convert to Christianity in Paul's day.

30 tn Grk "where the Spirit of the Lord is"; the word "present" is supplied to specify that the presence of the Lord's Spirit is emphasized rather than the mere existence of the Lord's Spirit.

31 tn Or "we all with unveiled faces beholding the glory of the Lord as in a mirror."

32 tn Grk "from glory to glory."

33 tn Grk "just as from."

34 tn Grk "from the Lord, the Spirit"; the genitive πνεύματος (pneumatos) has been translated as a genitive of apposition.

35 tn Grk "just as we have been shown mercy"; ἠλεήθημεν (ēleēthēmen) has been translated as a "divine passive" which is a circumlocution for God as the active agent. For clarity this was converted to an active construction with God as subject in the translation.

36 tn Or "we do not lose heart."

rejected[1] shameful hidden deeds,[2] not behaving[3] with deceptiveness[4] or distorting the word of God, but by open proclamation of the truth we commend ourselves to everyone's conscience before God. 4:3 But even if our gospel is veiled, it is veiled only to those who are perishing, 4:4 among whom the god of this age has blinded the minds of those who do not believe[5] so they would not see the light of the glorious gospel[6] of Christ,[7] who is the image of God. 4:5 For we do not proclaim[8] ourselves, but Jesus Christ as Lord, and ourselves as your slaves[9] for Jesus' sake. 4:6 For God, who said "Let light shine out of darkness,"[10] is the one who shined in our hearts to give us the light of the glorious knowledge[11] of God in the face of Christ.[12]

An Eternal Weight of Glory

4:7 But we have this treasure in clay jars, so that the extraordinary power[13] belongs to God and does not come from us. 4:8 We are experiencing trouble on every side,[14] but are not crushed; we are perplexed,[15] but not driven to despair; 4:9 we are persecuted, but not abandoned;[16] we are knocked down,[17] but not destroyed, 4:10 always carrying around in our body the death of Jesus,[18] so that the life of Jesus may also be made visible[19] in our body. 4:11 For we who are alive are constantly being handed over to death for Jesus' sake, so that the life of Jesus may also be made visible[20] in our mortal body.[21] 4:12 As a result,[22] death is at work in us, but life is at work in you.[23] 4:13 But since we have the same spirit of faith as that shown in[24] what has been written, "I believed; therefore I spoke,"[25] we also believe, therefore we also speak. 4:14 We do so[26] because we know that the one who raised up Jesus[27] will also raise us up with Jesus and will bring us with you into his presence. 4:15 For all these things are for your sake, so that the grace that is including[28] more and more people may cause thanksgiving to increase[29] to the glory of God. 4:16 Therefore we do not despair,[30] but even if our physical body[31] is wearing away, our inner person[32] is being renewed day by day. 4:17 For our momentary, light suffering[33] is producing for us an eternal weight of glory far beyond all comparison 4:18 because we are not looking at what can be seen but at what cannot be seen. For what can be seen is temporary, but what cannot be seen is eternal.

1 tn L&N 13.156; the word can also mean "to assert opposition to," thus here "we have denounced" (L&N 33.220).

2 tn Grk "the hidden things [deeds] of shame"; here αἰσχύνης (aischunēs) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

3 tn Or "not conducting ourselves"; Grk "not walking" (a common NT idiom for conduct, way of life, or behavior).

4 tn Or "craftiness."

5 tn Or "of unbelievers."

6 tn Grk "the gospel of the glory"; δόξης (doxēs) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

7 tn Or "so that the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ would not be evident to them" (L&N 28.37).

8 tn Or "preach."

9 tn Traditionally, "servants." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

10 sn An allusion to Gen 1:3; see also Isa 9:2.

11 tn Grk "the light of the knowledge of the glory"; δόξης (doxēs) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

12 tc ‡ Most witnesses, including several early and important ones (𝔓46 ℵ C H Ψ 0209 1739ᶜ 𝔐 sy), read Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (Iēsou Christou, "Jesus Christ"), while other important witnesses, especially of the Western text (D F G 0243 630 1739* 1881 lat Ambst), have Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. The reading with just Χριστοῦ is found in A B 33 {sa} Tert {Or Ath Chr}. Even though the witnesses for the shorter reading are not numerous, they are weighty. And in light of the natural scribal proclivity to fill out the text, particularly with reference to divine names, as well as the discrepancy among the witnesses as to the order of the names, the simple reading Χριστοῦ seems to be the best candidate for authenticity. NA[27] reads Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ with Ἰησοῦ in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

13 tn Grk "the surpassingness of the power"; δυνάμεως (dunameōs) has been translated as an attributed genitive ("extraordinary power").

14 tn Grk "we are hard pressed [by crowds] on every side."

15 tn Or "at a loss."

16 tn Or "forsaken."

17 tn Or "badly hurt." It is possible to interpret καταβαλλόμενοι (kataballomenoi) here as "badly hurt": "[we are] badly hurt, but not destroyed" (L&N 20.21).

18 tn The first clause of 2 Cor 4:10 is elliptical and apparently refers to the fact that Paul was constantly in danger of dying in the same way Jesus died (by violence at least). According to L&N 23.99 it could be translated, "at all times we live in the constant threat of being killed as Jesus was."

19 tn Or "may also be revealed."

20 tn Or "may also be revealed."

21 tn Grk "mortal flesh."

22 tn Or "So then."

23 tn Grk "death is at work in us, but life in you"; the phrase "is at work in" is repeated in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Grk "spirit of faith according to."

25 sn A quotation from Ps 116:10.

26 tn Grk "speak, because." A new sentence was started here in the translation, with the words "We do so" supplied to preserve the connection with the preceding statement.

27 tc ‡ Several important witnesses (ℵ C D F G Ψ 1881), as well as the Byzantine text, add κύριον (kurion) here, changing the reading to "the Lord Jesus." Although the external evidence in favor of the shorter reading is slim, the witnesses are important, early, and diverse (𝔓46 B [0243 33] 629 [630] 1175* [1739] pc r sa). Very likely scribes with pietistic motives added the word κύριον, as they were prone to do, thus compounding this title for the Lord.

28 tn Or "that is abounding to."

29 tn Or "to abound."

30 tn Or "do not lose heart."

31 tn Grk "our outer man."

32 tn Grk "our inner [man]."

33 tn Grk "momentary lightness of affliction."

Living by Faith, Not by Sight

5:1 For we know that if our earthly house, the tent we live in,[1] is dismantled,[2] we have a building from God, a house not built by human hands, that is eternal in the heavens. 5:2 For in this earthly house[3] we groan, because we desire to put on[4] our heavenly dwelling, 5:3 if indeed, after we have put on[5] our heavenly house,[6] we will not be found naked. 5:4 For we groan while we are in this tent,[7] since we are weighed down,[8] because we do not want to be unclothed, but clothed, so that what is mortal may be swallowed up by life. 5:5 Now the one who prepared us for this very purpose[9] is God, who gave us the Spirit as a down payment.[10] 5:6 Therefore we are always full of courage, and we know that as long as we are alive here on earth[11] we are absent from the Lord – 5:7 for we live[12] by faith, not by sight. 5:8 Thus we are full of courage and would prefer to be away[13] from the body and at home with the Lord. 5:9 So then whether we are alive[14] or away, we make it our ambition to please him.[15] 5:10 For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ,[16] so that each one may be paid back according to what he has done while in the body, whether good or evil.[17]

The Message of Reconciliation

5:11 Therefore, because we know the fear of the Lord,[18] we try to persuade[19] people,[20] but we are well known[21] to God, and I hope we are well known to your consciences too. 5:12 We are not trying to commend[22] ourselves to you again, but are giving you an opportunity to be proud of us,[23] so that you may be able to answer those who take pride[24] in outward appearance[25] and not in what is in the heart. 5:13 For if we are out of our minds, it is for God; if we are of sound mind, it is for you. 5:14 For the love of Christ[26] controls us, since we have concluded this, that Christ[27] died for all; therefore all have died. 5:15 And he died for all so that those who live should no longer live for themselves but for him who died for them and was raised.[28] 5:16 So then from now on we acknowledge[29] no one from an outward human point of view.[30] Even though we have known Christ from such a human point of

[1] sn The expression the tent we live in refers to "our earthly house, our body." Paul uses the metaphor of the physical body as a house or tent, the residence of the immaterial part of a person.

[2] tn Or "destroyed."

[3] tn Or "dwelling place."

[4] tn Or "to be clothed with."

[5] tc ‡ Some mss read "taken off" (ἐκδυσάμενοι, ekdusamenoi) instead of "put on" (ἐνδυσάμενοι, endusamenoi). This alternative reading would change the emphasis of the verse from putting on "our heavenly house" to taking off "our earthly house" (see the following note regarding the specification of the referent). The difference between the two readings is one letter (ν or κ), either of which may be mistaken for the other especially when written in uncial script. ἐνδυσάμενοι enjoys strong support from the Alexandrian text (𝔓^{46} ℵ B C 33 1739 1881), Byzantine witnesses, versions (lat sy co), and Clement of Alexandria. The Western text is the only texttype to differ: D^{*,c} reads ἐκδυσάμενοι, as does ar f^{c} Mcion Tert Spec; F and G read εκλ for εκδ which indirectly aligns them with D (and was surely due to confusion of letters in uncial script). Thus "put on" has the oldest and best external attestation by far. Internal evidence also favors this reading. At first glance, it may seem that "after we have put on our heavenly house we will not be found naked" is an obvious statement; the scribe of D may have thought so and changed the participle. But v. 3 seems parenthetical (so A. Plummer, Second Corinthians [ICC], 147), and the idea that "we do not want to be unclothed but clothed" is repeated in v. 4 with an explanatory "for." This concept also shows up in v. 2 with the phrase "we desire to put on." So the context can be construed to argue for "put on" as the original reading. B. M. Metzger argues against the reading of NA^{27}, stating that ἐκδυσάμενοι is "an early alteration to avoid apparent tautology" (TCGNT 511; so also Plummer, 148). In addition, the reading ἐνδυσάμενοι fits the Pauline pattern of equivalence between apodosis and protasis that is found often enough in his conditional clauses. Thus, "put on" has the mark of authenticity and should be considered original.

[6] tn Grk "it"; the referent (the "heavenly dwelling" of the previous verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] sn See the note in 5:1 on the phrase the tent we live in.

[8] tn Or "we are burdened."

[9] tn Grk "for this very thing."

[10] tn Or "first installment," "pledge," "deposit" (see the note on the phrase "down payment" in 1:22).

[11] tn Grk "we know that being at home in the body"; an idiom for being alive (L&N 23.91).

[12] tn Grk "we walk."

[13] tn Or "be absent."

[14] tn Grk "whether we are at home" [in the body]; an idiom for being alive (L&N 23.91).

[15] tn Grk "to be pleasing to him."

[16] sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and sometimes furnished with a seat, used by officials in addressing an assembly or making pronouncements, often on judicial matters. The judgment seat was a common item in Greco-Roman culture, often located in the agora, the public square or marketplace in the center of a city. Use of the term in reference to Christ's judgment would be familiar to Paul's 1st century readers.

[17] tn Or "whether good or bad."

[18] tn Or "because we know what it means to fear the Lord."

[19] tn The present tense of πείθομεν (peithomen) has been translated as a conative present.

[20] tn Grk "men," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is generic here since clearly both men and women are in view (Paul did not attempt to win only men to the gospel he preached).

[21] tn Or "clearly evident." BDAG 1048 s.v. φανερόω 2.b.β has "θεῷ πεφανερώμεθα we are well known to God 2 Cor 5:11a, cp. 11b; 11:6 v.l."

[22] tn The present tense of συνιστάνομεν (sunistanomen) has been translated as a conative present.

[23] tn Or "to boast about us."

[24] tn Or "who boast."

[25] tn Or "in what is seen."

[26] tn The phrase ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Χριστοῦ (hē agapē tou Christou, "the love of Christ") could be translated as either objective genitive ("our love for Christ") or subjective genitive ("Christ's love for us"). Either is grammatically possible, but with the reference to Christ's death for all in the following clauses, a subjective genitive ("Christ's love for us") is more likely.

[27] tn Grk "one"; the referent (Christ) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tn Or "but for him who died and was raised for them."

view,[1] now we do not know him in that way any longer. 5:17 So then, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; what is old has passed away[2] – look, what is new[3] has come![4] 5:18 And all these things are from God who reconciled us to himself through Christ, and who has given us the ministry of reconciliation. 5:19 In other words, in Christ God was reconciling the world to himself, not counting people's trespasses against them, and he has given us[5] the message of reconciliation. 5:20 Therefore we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God were making His plea[6] through us. We plead with you[7] on Christ's behalf, "Be reconciled to God!" 5:21 God[8] made the one who did not know sin[9] to be sin for us, so that in him[10] we would become the righteousness of God.

God's Suffering Servants

6:1 Now because we are fellow workers, we also urge you not to receive the grace of God in vain.[11] 6:2 For he says, "I heard you at the acceptable time, and in the day of salvation I helped you."[12] Look, now is the acceptable time; look, now is the day of salvation! 6:3 We do not give anyone[13] an occasion for taking an offense in anything,[14] so that no fault may be found with our ministry. 6:4 But as God's servants,[15] we have commended ourselves in every way,[16] with great endurance, in persecutions,[17] in difficulties, in distresses, 6:5 in beatings, in imprisonments, in riots,[18] in troubles,[19] in sleepless nights, in hunger, 6:6 by purity, by knowledge, by patience, by benevolence, by the Holy Spirit,[20] by genuine[21] love, 6:7 by truthful[22] teaching,[23] by the power of God, with weapons of righteousness both for the right hand and for the left,[24] 6:8 through glory and dishonor, through slander and praise; regarded as impostors,[25] and yet true; 6:9 as unknown, and yet well-known; as dying and yet – see! – we continue to live; as those who are scourged[26] and yet not executed; 6:10 as sorrowful, but always rejoicing, as poor, but making many rich, as having nothing, and yet possessing everything.

6:11 We have spoken freely to you,[27] Corinthians; our heart has been opened wide to you. 6:12 Our affection for you is not restricted,[28] but you are restricted in your affections for us. 6:13 Now as a fair exchange – I speak as to my[29] children – open wide your hearts to us[30] also.

Unequal Partners

6:14 Do not become partners[31] with those who do not believe, for what partnership is there between righteousness and lawlessness, or what fellowship does light have with darkness? 6:15 And what agreement does Christ have with Beliar?[32] Or what does a believer share in common with an unbeliever? 6:16 And what mutual agreement does the temple of God have with

1 tn Grk "we have known Christ according to the flesh."

2 tn Grk "old things have passed away."

3 tc Most MSS have the words τὰ πάντα (ta panta, "all things"; cf. KJV "behold, all things are become new"), some after καίνα (kaina, "new"; D² K L P Ψ 104 326 945 2464 pm) and others before it (6 33 81 614 630 1241 1505 1881 pm). The reading without τὰ πάντα, however, has excellent support from both the Western and Alexandrian texttypes (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ B C D* F G 048 0243 365 629 1175 1739 pc co), and the different word order of the phrase which includes it ("all things new" or "new all things") in the MS tradition indicates its secondary character. This secondary addition may have taken place because of assimilation to τὰ δὲ πάντα (ta de panta, "and all [these] things") that begins the following verse.

4 tn Grk "new things have come [about]."

5 tn Or "he has entrusted to us."

6 tn Or "as though God were begging."

7 tn Or "we beg you."

8 tn Grk "He"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 sn The one who did not know sin is a reference to Jesus Christ.

10 sn That is, "in Christ."

11 tn Or "receive the grace of God uselessly."

12 sn A quotation from Isa 49:8.

13 tn The word "anyone" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

14 tn Other interpretations of the first part of 2 Cor 6:3 are possible. The phrase could also mean, "not putting an obstacle in the way of anyone" (L&N 22.14), or "giving no one in anything a cause to sin" (L&N 88.307).

15 tn Or "ministers."

16 tn Or "we have commended ourselves by all things."

17 tn Or "in trouble and suffering."

18 tn Or "rebellions" (uprisings in open defiance of civil authority).

19 tn Usually κόποις (kopois) has been translated as "labors" or "hard work," but see Matt 26:10 where it means "trouble"; "distress" (L&N 22.7). In this context with so many other terms denoting suffering and difficulty, such a meaning is preferable.

20 tn Or "by holiness of spirit."

21 tn Or "sincere."

22 tn Grk "by the word of truth"; understanding ἀληθείας (alētheias) as an attributive genitive ("truthful word").

23 tn Or "speech." In this context it is more likely that λόγος (logos) refers to Paul's message (thus "teaching") than to his speech in general.

24 tn The phrase "for the right hand and for the left" possibly refers to a combination of an offensive weapon (a sword for the right hand) and a defensive weapon (a shield for the left).

25 tn Or "regarded as deceivers."

26 tn Grk "disciplined," but in this context probably a reference to scourging prior to execution (yet the execution is not carried out).

27 tn Grk "our mouth has been open to you," an idiom for openness in communication.

28 tn Grk "You are not restricted by us."

29 tn The word "my" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

30 tn The words "to us" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

31 tn Or "Do not be mismatched."

32 sn The Greek term Βελιάρ (Beliar) is a spelling variant for Βελιάλ (Belial, see Judg 20:13 LXX). It occurs only here in the NT. Beliar is a reference to Satan.

idols? For we are[1] the temple of the living God, just as God said, "I will live in them[2] and will walk among them, and I will be their God, and they will be my people."[3] 6:17 Therefore "come out from their midst, and be separate," says the Lord, "and touch no unclean thing,[4] and I will welcome[5] you,[6] 6:18 and I will be a father to you, and you will be my sons and daughters,"[7] says the All-Powerful Lord.[8]

Self-Purification

7:1 Therefore, since we have these promises, dear friends, let us cleanse ourselves[9] from everything that could defile the body[10] and the spirit, and thus accomplish[11] holiness out of reverence for God.[12] 7:2 Make room for us in your hearts;[13] we have wronged no one, we have ruined no one,[14] we have exploited no one.[15] 7:3 I do not say this to condemn you, for I told you before[16] that you are in our hearts so that we die together and live together with you.[17]

A Letter That Caused Sadness

7:4 I have great confidence in you; I take great pride[18] on your behalf. I am filled with encouragement;[19] I am overflowing with joy in the midst of[20] all our suffering. 7:5 For even when we came into Macedonia, our body[21] had no rest at all, but we were troubled in every way – struggles from the outside, fears from within. 7:6 But God, who encourages[22] the downhearted, encouraged[23] us by the arrival of Titus. 7:7 We were encouraged[24] not only by his arrival, but also by the encouragement[25] you gave[26] him, as he reported to us your longing, your mourning,[27] your deep concern[28] for me, so that I rejoiced more than ever. 7:8 For even if I made you sad[29] by my letter,[30] I do not regret having written it[31] (even though I did regret it,[32] for[33] I see that my

1 tc Most witnesses, including some important ones (𝔓46 ℵ2 C D2 F G Ψ 0209 𝔐 lat sy Tert), read ὑμεῖς...ἐστε (humeis...este, "you are") instead of ἡμεῖς...ἐσμεν (hēmeis...esmen, "we are") here, but several other early and important mss (ℵ* B D* L P 0243 6 33 81 326 365 1175 1739 1881 2464 co Cl Or) have ἡμεῖς...ἐσμεν. The external evidence is somewhat in favor of the first person pronoun and verb; the internal evidence weighs in even stronger. In light of the parallel in 1 Cor 3:16, where Paul uses ἐστε ("you are the temple of God"), as well as the surrounding context here in which the second person verb or pronoun is used in vv. 14, 17, and 18, the second person reading seems obviously motivated. The first person reading can explain the rise of the other reading, but the reverse is not as easily done. Consequently, the first person reading of ἡμεῖς...ἐσμεν has all the credentials of authenticity.

2 tn Or "live among them," "live with them."

sn I will live in them. The OT text that lies behind this passage (Lev 26:11-12) speaks of God dwelling in the midst of his people. The Greek preposition en in the phrase en autois ("in them") can also have that meaning ("among" or "with"). However, Paul appears to be extending the imagery here to involve God (as the Spirit) dwelling in his people, since he calls believers "the temple of the living God" in the previous clause, imagery he uses elsewhere in his writings (1 Cor 3:16; Eph 2:21-22).

3 sn A quotation from Lev 26:12; also similar to Jer 32:38; Ezek 37:27.

4 sn A quotation from Isa 52:11.

5 tn Or "will receive."

6 sn A paraphrased quotation from Ezek 20:41.

7 sn A paraphrased quotation from 2 Sam 7:14 and Isa 43:6.

8 tn Traditionally, "the Lord Almighty." BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God...κύριος π. (oft. LXX) 2 Cor 6:18."

9 tn Or "purify ourselves."

10 tn Grk "from every defilement of the flesh."

11 tn Grk "accomplishing." The participle has been translated as a finite verb due to considerations of contemporary English style, and "thus" has been supplied to indicate that it represents a result of the previous cleansing.

12 tn Grk "in the fear of God."

13 tn The phrase "in your hearts" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

14 tn "We have ruined no one" may refer to financial loss ("we have caused no one to suffer financial loss") but it may also refer to the undermining of faith ("we have corrupted no one's faith,"). Both options are mentioned in L&N 20.23.

15 tn Or "we have taken advantage of no one."

16 sn See 2 Cor 1:4-7.

17 tn The words "with you" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

18 tn Grk "great is my boasting."

19 tn Or "comfort."

20 tn Grk "I am overflowing with joy in all our suffering"; the words "in the midst of" are not in the Greek text but are supplied to clarify that Paul is not rejoicing in the suffering itself, but in his relationship with the Corinthians in the midst of all his suffering.

21 tn Grk "our flesh."

22 tn Or "comforts," "consoles."

23 tn Or "comforted," "consoled."

24 tn Because of the length and complexity of this Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the phrase "We were encouraged."

25 tn Or "comfort," "consolation."

26 tn Grk "by the encouragement with which he was encouraged by you." The passive construction was translated as an active one in keeping with contemporary English style, and the repeated word "encouraged" was replaced in the translation by "gave" to avoid redundancy in the translation.

27 tn Or "your grieving," "your deep sorrow."

28 tn Or "your zeal."

29 tn Grk "if I grieved you."

30 sn My letter. Paul is referring to the "severe" letter mentioned in 2 Cor 2:4.

31 tn Grk "I do not regret"; direct objects in Greek must often be supplied from the context. Here one could simply supply "it," but since Paul is referring to the effects of his previous letter, clarity is improved if "having written it" is supplied.

32 tn Grk "I did regret"; the direct object "it" must be supplied from the context.

33 tc A few important mss (𝔓46c B D* it sa) lack γάρ (gar, "for"), while the majority of witnesses have it (ℵ C D1 F G Ψ 0243 33 1739 1881 𝔐 sy bo). Even though 𝔓46* omits γάρ, it has the same sense (viz., a subordinate clause) because it reads the participle βλέπων (blepōn, "seeing"; the Vulgate does the same). A decision is difficult because although the overwhelming external evidence is on the side of the conjunction, the lack of γάρ is a significantly harder reading, for the whole clause is something of an anacoluthon. Without the conjunction, the sentence reads more harshly. This would fit with Paul's "vehemence of spirit" (A. T. Robertson, A Grammar of the Greek New Testament, 435) that is found especially in 2 Corinthians and Galatians. However, the mss that omit the conjunction are prone to such tendencies at times. In this instance, the conjunction should probably stand.

letter made you sad,[1] though only for a short time). 7:9 Now I rejoice, not because you were made sad,[2] but because you were made sad to the point of repentance. For you were made sad as God intended,[3] so that you were not harmed[4] in any way by us. 7:10 For sadness as intended by God produces a repentance that leads to salvation, leaving no regret, but worldly sadness brings about death. 7:11 For see what this very thing, this sadness[5] as God intended, has produced in you: what eagerness, what defense of yourselves,[6] what indignation,[7] what alarm, what longing, what deep concern,[8] what punishment![9] In everything you have proved yourselves to be innocent in this matter. 7:12 So then, even though I wrote to you, it was not on account of the one who did wrong, or on account of the one who was wronged, but to reveal to you your eagerness on our behalf[10] before God. 7:13 Therefore we have been encouraged. And in addition to our own encouragement, we rejoiced even more at the joy of Titus, because all of you have refreshed his spirit.[11] 7:14 For if I have boasted to him about anything concerning you, I have not been embarrassed by you,[12] but just as everything we said to you was true,[13] so our boasting to Titus about you[14] has proved true as well. 7:15 And his affection for you is much greater[15] when he remembers the obedience of you all, how you welcomed him with fear and trembling. 7:16 I rejoice because in everything I am fully confident in you.

Completing the Collection for the Saints

8:1 Now we make known to you, brothers and sisters,[16] the grace of God given to the churches of Macedonia, 8:2 that during a severe ordeal of suffering, their abundant joy and their extreme poverty have overflowed in the wealth[17] of their generosity. 8:3 For I testify, they gave according to their means and beyond their means. They did so voluntarily,[18] 8:4 begging us with great earnestness for the blessing and fellowship of helping[19] the saints. 8:5 And they did this not just as we had hoped, but they gave themselves first to the Lord and to us by the will of God. 8:6 Thus[20] we urged[21] Titus that, just as he had previously begun this work,[22] so also he should complete this act of kindness[23] for you. 8:7 But as you excel[24] in everything – in faith, in speech, in knowledge, and in all eagerness and in the love from us that is in you[25] – make sure that you excel[26] in this act of kindness[27] too. 8:8 I am not saying this as a command, but I am testing the genuineness of your love by comparison with the eagerness of others.[28] 8:9 For you know the grace[29] of our Lord Jesus Christ, that although he was rich, he became poor for your sakes, so that you by his poverty could become rich. 8:10 So here is my opinion on this matter: It is to your advantage, since you[30] made a good start last year both in your giving and your desire to give, 8:11 to finish what you started,[31] so that just as you wanted to do it eagerly,[32] you can also complete it[33] according to your means.[34] 8:12 For if the eagerness is present, the gift itself[35] is acceptable according to whatever one

[1] tn Grk "my letter grieved you."

[2] tn Grk "were grieved" (so also twice later in the verse).

[3] tn Grk "corresponding to God," that is, corresponding to God's will (κατὰ θεόν, kata theon). The same phrase occurs in vv. 10 and 11.

[4] tn Grk "so that you did not suffer loss."

[5] tn Grk "this very thing, to be grieved."

[6] tn The words "of yourselves" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[7] sn What indignation refers to the Corinthians' indignation at the offender.

[8] tn Or "what zeal."

[9] sn That is, punishment for the offender.

[10] tn Grk "but in order that your eagerness on our behalf might be revealed to you."

[11] tn Or "all of you have put his mind at ease."

[12] tn Grk "I have not been put to shame"; the words "by you" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[13] tn Grk "just as we spoke everything to you in truth."

[14] tn The words "about you" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[15] tn Or "is all the more."

[16] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:8.

[17] tn Or "riches."

[18] tn Or "spontaneously."

[19] tn Or "of ministering to."

[20] tn A new sentence was started here in the translation and the word "thus" was supplied to indicate that it expresses the result of the previous clause.

[21] tn Or "we exhorted."

[22] tn The words "this work" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted and must be supplied from the context.

[23] tn Grk "this grace."

[24] tn Grk "as you abound."

[25] tc The reading "the love from us that is in you" is very difficult in this context, for Paul is here enumerating the Corinthians' attributes: How is it possible for them to excel "in the love from us that is in you"? Most likely, because of this difficulty, several early scribes, as well as most later ones (ℵ C D F G Ψ [33] 𝔐 lat), altered the text to read "your love for us" (so NIV; Grk ἐξ ὑμῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀγάπῃ [ex humōn en hēmin agapē]). The reading ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐν ὑμῖν ἀγάπῃ (ex hēmōn en humin agapē) is found, however, in excellent and early witnesses (𝔓[46] B 0243 6 104 630 1175 1739 1881 co). As the harder reading it explains the rise of the other reading. What, then, is the force of "in the love from us that is in you"? Most likely, Paul is commending the Corinthians for excelling in deriving some inspiration from the apostles' love for them.

[26] tn Grk "you abound."

[27] tn Grk "this grace."

[28] tn Grk "by means of the eagerness of others."

[29] tn Or "generosity."

[30] tn Grk "who."

[31] tn Grk "and now also complete the doing."

[32] tn Grk "just as the eagerness to want [it]."

[33] tn Grk "so also it might be completed." The passive construction was converted to an active one in the translation in keeping with contemporary English style.

[34] tn Grk "completed from what you have."

[35] tn The words "the gift itself" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Translators often supply an English phrase like "it is" (NASB) but in the context, Paul is clearly referring to the collection Titus was to oversee (2 Cor 8:4-7). Therefore there is no reason not to specify the referent (the gift) more narrowly for clarity.

has, not according to what he does not have. 8:13 For I do not say this so there would be relief for others and suffering for you, but as a matter of equality. 8:14 At the present time, your abundance will meet their need,[1] so that one day their abundance may also meet your need, and thus there may be equality, 8:15 as it is written: "The one who gathered[2] much did not have too much, and the one who gathered little did not have too little."[3]

The Mission of Titus

8:16 But thanks be to God who put in the heart of Titus the same devotion[4] I have for you, 8:17 because he not only accepted our request, but since he was very eager,[5] he is coming[6] to you of his own accord.[7] 8:18 And we are sending[8] along with him the brother who is praised by all the churches for his work in spreading the gospel.[9] 8:19 In addition,[10] this brother[11] has also been chosen by the churches as our traveling companion as we administer this generous gift[12] to the glory of the Lord himself and to show our readiness to help.[13] 8:20 We did this[14] as a precaution so that no one should blame us in regard to this generous gift we are administering. 8:21 For we are concerned about what is right not only before the Lord but also before men.[15] 8:22 And we are sending[16] with them our brother whom we have tested many times and found eager in many matters, but who now is much more eager than ever because of the great confidence he has in you. 8:23 If there is any question[17] about Titus, he is my partner and fellow worker among you; if there is any question about our brothers, they are messengers[18] of the churches, a glory to Christ. 8:24 Therefore show[19] them openly before the churches the proof of your love and of our pride in you.[20]

Preparing the Gift

9:1 For it is not necessary[21] for me to write you about this service[22] to the saints, 9:2 because I know your eagerness to help.[23] I keep boasting to the Macedonians about this eagerness of yours,[24] that Achaia has been ready to give[25] since last year, and your zeal to participate[26] has stirred up most of them.[27] 9:3 But I am sending[28] these brothers so that our boasting about you may not be empty in this case, so that you may be ready[29] just as I kept telling them. 9:4 For if any of the Macedonians should come with me and find that you are not ready to give, we would be humiliated[30] (not to mention you) by this confidence we had in you.[31] 9:5 Therefore I thought it necessary to urge these brothers to go to you in advance and to arrange ahead of time the generous contribution[32] you had promised, so this may be ready as a generous gift[33] and not as something you feel forced to do.[34] 9:6 My point is this: The person who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly,

[1] tn Or "their lack."

[2] tn The word "gathered" is not in the Greek text, but is implied (so also for the second occurrence of the word later in the verse).

[3] sn A quotation from Exod 16:18.

[4] tn Or "eagerness."

[5] tn The comparative form of this adjective is used here with elative meaning.

[6] tn This verb has been translated as an epistolary aorist.

[7] tn Or "of his own free will."

[8] tn This verb has been translated as an epistolary aorist.

[9] tn Grk "the brother of whom the praise in the gospel [is] throughout all the churches."

[10] tn Grk "gospel, and not only this, but." Here a new sentence was started in the translation.

[11] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the brother mentioned in v. 18) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn That is, the offering or collection being taken to assist impoverished Christians.

[13] tn The words "to help" are not in the Greek text but are implied (see L&N 25.68).

[14] tn "This" refers to sending the brother mentioned in 2 Cor 8:18 to Corinth along with Titus. The words "We did this" have no equivalent in the Greek text, but are necessary to maintain the thought flow in English. The Greek participle that begins v. 20 continues the sentence begun in v. 18 which concerns the sending of the other brother mentioned there.

[15] sn An allusion to Prov 3:4.

[16] tn This verb has been translated as an epistolary aorist.

[17] tn Grk "If concerning Titus" (εἴτε ὑπὲρ Τίτου, eite huper Titou); the Greek sentence opens with an ellipsis which must be supplied: If [there is any question] about Titus."

[18] tn Grk "apostles."

[19] tc The sense of this translation is attested by the fact that most of the later mss, along with several early and important ones (ℵ C D² Ψ 0225 0243 1739 1881 𝔐 lat), have the imperative verb ἐνδείξασθε (endeixasthe) in place of the participle ἐνδεικνύμενοι (endeiknumenoi), which is found in B D* F G 33 pc. Since an imperatival participle is more Hebraic in style, many scribes would not have understood the idiom as easily and would have been likely to change the participle to an imperative (so TCGNT 513-14). But there is no good reason why scribes would change the imperative into a participle. Thus, ἐνδεικνύμενοι is almost surely the wording of the original text.

tn In the Greek text ἐνδεικνύμενοι (endeiknumenoi) is a present participle which is translated as an imperative verb (see BDF §468; ExSyn 650-52).

[20] tn Or "our boasting about you."

[21] tn Or "it is superfluous."

[22] tn Or "this ministry," "this contribution."

[23] tn The words "to help" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[24] tn Grk "concerning which I keep boasting to the Macedonians about you." A new sentence was started here and the translation was simplified by removing the relative clause and repeating the antecedent "this eagerness of yours."

[25] tn The words "to give" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[26] tn The words "to participate" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

[27] sn Most of them is a reference to the Macedonians (cf. v. 4).

[28] tn This verb has been translated as an epistolary aorist.

[29] tn That is, ready with the collection for the saints.

[30] tn Or "be disgraced"; Grk "be put to shame."

[31] tn Grk "by this confidence"; the words "we had in you" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied as a necessary clarification for the English reader.

[32] tn Grk "the blessing."

[33] tn Grk "a blessing."

[34] tn Grk "as a covetousness"; that is, a gift given grudgingly or under compulsion.

and the person who sows generously[1] will also reap generously. 9:7 Each one of you should give[2] just as he has decided in his heart,[3] not reluctantly[4] or under compulsion,[5] because God loves a cheerful giver. 9:8 And God is able to make all grace overflow[6] to you so that because you have enough[7] of everything in every way at all times, you will overflow[8] in every good work. 9:9 Just as it is written, "He[9] has scattered widely, he has given to the poor; his righteousness remains forever."[10] 9:10 Now God[11] who provides seed for the sower and bread for food will provide and multiply your supply of seed and will cause the harvest of your righteousness to grow. 9:11 You will be enriched in every way so that you may be generous on every occasion,[12] which is producing through us thanksgiving to God, 9:12 because the service of this ministry is not only providing for[13] the needs of the saints but is also overflowing with many thanks to God. 9:13 Through the evidence[14] of this service[15] they will glorify God because of your obedience to your confession in the gospel of Christ and the generosity of your sharing[16] with them and with everyone. 9:14 And in their prayers on your behalf they long for you because of the extraordinary grace God has shown to you.[17] 9:15 Thanks be to God for his indescribable gift![18]

Paul's Authority from the Lord

10:1 Now I, Paul, appeal to you[19] personally[20] by the meekness and gentleness[21] of Christ (I who am meek[22] when present among[23] you, but am full of courage[24] toward you when away!) – 10:2 now I ask that when I am present I may not have to be bold with the confidence that (I expect) I will dare to use against some who consider us to be behaving[25] according to human standards.[26] 10:3 For though we live[27] as human beings,[28] we do not wage war according to human standards,[29] 10:4 for the weapons of our warfare are not human weapons,[30] but are made powerful by God[31] for tearing down strongholds.[32] We tear down arguments[33] 10:5 and every arrogant obstacle[34] that is raised up against the knowledge of God, and we take every thought captive to make it obey[35] Christ. 10:6 We are also ready to punish every act of disobedience,[36] whenever your obedience is complete. 10:7 You are looking at outward appearances.[37] If anyone is confident that he belongs to Christ, he should reflect on this again: Just as he himself belongs to Christ, so too do we. 10:8 For if I boast somewhat more about our authority that the Lord gave us[38] for building you up and not for tearing you down, I will not be ashamed of [1] tn Or "bountifully"; so also in the next occurrence in the verse.

[2] tn Or "must do." The words "of you" and "should give" are not in the Greek text, which literally reads, "Each one just as he has decided in his heart." The missing words are an ellipsis; these or similar phrases must be supplied for the English reader.

[3] tn Or "in his mind."

[4] tn Or "not from regret"; Grk "not out of grief."

[5] tn Or "not out of a sense of duty"; Grk "from necessity."

[6] tn Or "abound."

[7] tn Or "so that by having enough." The Greek participle can be translated as a participle of cause ("because you have enough") or means ("by having enough").

[8] tn Or "abound."

[9] sn He in the quotation refers to the righteous person.

[10] sn A quotation from Ps 112:9.

[11] tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "in every way for every generosity," or "he will always make you rich enough to be generous at all times" (L&N 57.29).

[13] tn Or "not only supplying."

[14] tn Or "proof," or perhaps "testing" (NRSV).

[15] tn Or "ministry."

[16] tn Or "your partnership"; Grk "your fellowship."

[17] tn Grk "the extraordinary grace of God to you"; the point is that God has given or shown grace to the Corinthians.

[18] tn "Let us thank God for his gift which cannot be described with words" (L&N 33.202).

[19] tn The Greek pronoun ("you") is plural.

[20] tn The word "personally" is supplied to reflect the force of the Greek intensive pronoun αὐτός (autos) at the beginning of the verse.

[21] tn Or "leniency and clemency." D. Walker, "Paul's Offer of Leniency of Christ (2 Corinthians 10:1): Populist Ideology and Rhetoric in a Pauline Letter Fragment (2 Cor 10:1-13:10)" (Ph.D. diss., University of Chicago, 1998), argues for this alternative translation for three main reasons: (1) When the two Greek nouns πραΰτης and ἐπιείκεια (prautēs and epieikeia) are used together, 90% of the time the nuance is "leniency and clemency." (2) "Leniency and clemency" has a military connotation, which is precisely what appears in the following verses. (3) 2 Cor 10-13 speaks of Paul's sparing use of his authority, which points to the nuance of "leniency and clemency."

[22] tn Or "who lack confidence."

[23] tn Or "when face to face with."

[24] tn Or "but bold."

[25] tn Grk "consider us as walking."

[26] tn Grk "according to the flesh."

[27] tn Grk "we walk."

[28] tn Grk "in the flesh."

[29] tn Grk "according to the flesh."

[30] tn Grk "are not fleshly [weapons]." The repetition of the word "warfare" does not occur in the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity.

[31] tn Or "but (are) divinely powerful," "but they have divine power," or "but are powerful for God's [service]"; Grk "but are powerful to God."

[32] sn Ultimately Paul is referring here to the false arguments of his opponents, calling them figuratively "strongholds." This Greek word (ὀχύρωμα, ochurōma) is used only here in the NT.

[33] tn Or "speculations."

[34] tn The phrase "every arrogant obstacle" could be translated simply "all arrogance" (so L&N 88.207).

[35] tn Grk "to the obedience of Christ," but since Χριστοῦ (Christou) is clearly an objective genitive here, it is better to translate "to make it obey Christ."

[36] tn Or "punish all disobedience."

[37] tn The phrase is close to a recognized idiom for judging based on outward appearances (L&N 30.120). Some translators see a distinction, however, and translate 2 Cor 10:7a as "Look at what is in front of your eyes," that is, the obvious facts of the case (so NRSV).

[38] tn The word "us" is not in the Greek text but is supplied. Indirect objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, and must be supplied for the modern English reader.

doing so.[1] 10:9 I do not want to seem as though I am trying to terrify you with my letters, 10:10 because some say, "His letters are weighty and forceful, but his physical presence is weak[2] and his speech is of no account."[3] 10:11 Let such a person consider this: What we say[4] by letters when we are absent, we also are in actions when we are present.

Paul's Mission

10:12 For we would not dare to classify or compare ourselves with some of those who recommend themselves. But when they measure themselves by themselves and compare themselves with themselves, they are without understanding.[5] 10:13 But we will not boast beyond certain limits,[6] but will confine our boasting[7] according to the limits of the work to which God has appointed us,[8] that reaches even as far as you. 10:14 For we were not overextending ourselves, as though we did not reach as far as you, because we were the first to reach as far as you with the gospel about Christ.[9] 10:15 Nor do we boast beyond certain limits[10] in the work[11] done by others, but we hope[12] that as your faith continues to grow, our work may be greatly expanded[13] among you according to our limits,[14] 10:16 so that we may preach the gospel in the regions that lie beyond you, and not boast of work already done in another person's area. 10:17 But the one who boasts must boast in the Lord.[15] 10:18 For it is not the person who commends himself who is approved, but the person the Lord commends.

Paul and His Opponents

11:1 I wish that you would be patient with me in a little foolishness, but indeed you are being patient with me! 11:2 For I am jealous for you with godly jealousy, because I promised you in marriage to one husband,[16] to present you as a pure[17] virgin to Christ. 11:3 But I am afraid that[18] just as the serpent[19] deceived Eve by his treachery,[20] your minds may be led astray[21] from a sincere and pure[22] devotion to Christ. 11:4 For if someone comes and proclaims[23] another Jesus different from the one we proclaimed,[24] or if you receive a different spirit than the one you received,[25] or a different gospel than the one you accepted,[26] you put up with it well enough![27] 11:5 For I consider myself not at all inferior to those "super-apostles."[28] 11:6 And even if I am unskilled[29] in speaking, yet I am certainly not so in knowledge. Indeed, we have made this plain to you in everything in every way. 11:7 Or did I commit a sin by humbling myself[30] so that you could be exalted, because I proclaimed[31] the gospel of God to you free of charge? 11:8 I robbed other churches by receiving support from them so that I could serve you![32]

---

[1] tn Grk "I will not be put to shame," "I will not be ashamed." The words "of doing so" are supplied to clarify for the reader that Paul will not be ashamed of boasting somewhat more about the authority the Lord gave him (beginning of v. 8).

[2] tn Or "unimpressive."

[3] tn Or "is contemptible"; Grk "is despised."

[4] tn Grk "what we are in word."

[5] tn Or "they are unintelligent."

[6] tn Or "boast excessively." The phrase εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα (eis ta ametra) is an idiom; literally it means "into that which is not measured," that is, a point on a scale that goes beyond what might be expected (L&N 78.27).

[7] tn The words "will confine our boasting" are not in the Greek text, but the reference to boasting must be repeated from the previous clause to clarify for the modern reader what is being limited.

[8] tn Grk "according to the measure of the rule which God has apportioned to us as a measure"; for the translation used in the text see L&N 37.100.

[9] tn Grk "with the gospel of Christ," but since Χριστοῦ (Christou) is clearly an objective genitive here, it is better to translate "with the gospel about Christ."

[10] tn Or "boast excessively." The phrase εἰς τὰ ἄμετρα (eis ta ametra) is an idiom; literally it means "into that which is not measured," that is, a point on a scale that goes beyond what might be expected (L&N 78.27).

[11] tn Or "in the labors."

[12] tn Grk "but we have the hope."

[13] tn Or "greatly enlarged."

[14] tn That is, Paul's work might be greatly expanded within the area of activity assigned to him by God.

[15] tn The traditional translation ("let the one who boasts boast in the Lord") can be understood as merely permissive by the English reader, but the Greek verb καυχάσθω (kauchasthō) is a third person imperative.

sn A quotation from Jer 9:24 (also quoted in 1 Cor 1:31).

[16] tn That is, to Christ.

[17] tn Or "chaste."

[18] tn Grk "I fear lest somehow."

[19] tn Or "the snake."

[20] tn Or "craftiness."

[21] tn Or "corrupted," "seduced."

[22] tc Although most MSS (𝔎² H Ψ 0121 0243 1739 1881 𝔐) lack "and pure" (καὶ τῆς ἁγνότητος, kai tēs hagnotētos; Grk "and purity") several important and early witnesses (𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔎* B D[2] F G 33 81 104 pc ar r co) retain these words. Their presence in such MSS across such a wide geographical distribution argues for their authenticity. The omission from the majority of MSS can be explained by haplography, since the -τητος ending of ἁγνότητος is identical to the ending of ἁπλότητος (haplotētos, "sincerity") three words back (ἁπλότητος καὶ τῆς ἁγνότητος); further, since the meanings of "sincerity" and "purity" are similar they might seem redundant. A copyist would scarcely notice the omission because Paul's statement still makes sense without "and from purity."

[23] tn Or "preaches."

[24] tn Grk "another Jesus whom we have not proclaimed."

[25] tn Grk "a different spirit which you did not receive."

[26] tn Grk "a different gospel which you did not accept."

[27] tn Or "you endure it very well."

[28] tn The implicit irony in Paul's remark is brought out well by the TEV: "I do not think that I am the least bit inferior to those very special so-called 'apostles' of yours!"

sn The 'super-apostles' refers either (1) to the original apostles (the older interpretation) or (2) more probably, to Paul's opponents in Corinth, in which case the designation is ironic.

[29] sn Unskilled in speaking means not professionally trained as a rhetorician.

[30] sn Paul is referring to humbling himself to the point of doing manual labor to support himself.

[31] tn Or "preached."

[32] sn That is, serve them free of charge (cf. the end of v. 7).

11:9 When[1] I was with you and was in need, I was not a burden to anyone, for the brothers who came from Macedonia fully supplied my needs.[2] I[3] kept myself from being a burden to you in any way, and will continue to do so. 11:10 As the truth of Christ is in me, this boasting of mine[4] will not be stopped[5] in the regions of Achaia. 11:11 Why? Because I do not love you? God knows I do![6] 11:12 And what I am doing I will continue to do, so that I may eliminate any opportunity for those who want a chance to be regarded as our equals[7] in the things they boast about. 11:13 For such people are false apostles, deceitful[8] workers, disguising themselves[9] as apostles of Christ. 11:14 And no wonder, for even Satan disguises himself[10] as an angel of light. 11:15 Therefore it is not surprising his servants also disguise themselves[11] as servants of righteousness, whose end will correspond to their actions.[12]

Paul's Sufferings for Christ

11:16 I say again, let no one think that I am a fool.[13] But if you do, then at least accept me as a fool, so that I too may boast a little. 11:17 What I am saying with this boastful confidence[14] I do not say the way the Lord would.[15] Instead it is, as it were, foolishness. 11:18 Since many[16] are boasting according to human standards,[17] I too will boast. 11:19 For since you are so wise, you put up with[18] fools gladly. 11:20 For you put up with[19] it if someone makes slaves of you, if someone exploits you, if someone takes advantage of you, if someone behaves arrogantly[20] toward you, if someone strikes you in the face. 11:21 (To my disgrace[21] I must say that we were too weak for that!)[22] But whatever anyone else dares to boast about[23] (I am speaking foolishly), I also dare to boast about the same thing.[24] 11:22 Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they descendants of Abraham? So am I. 11:23 Are they servants of Christ? (I am talking like I am out of my mind!) I am even more so: with much greater labors, with far more imprisonments, with more severe beatings, facing death many times. 11:24 Five times I received from the Jews forty lashes less one.[25] 11:25 Three times I was beaten with a rod.[26] Once I received a stoning.[27] Three times I suffered shipwreck. A night and a day I spent adrift in the open sea. 11:26 I have been on journeys many times, in dangers from rivers, in dangers from robbers,[28] in dangers from my own countrymen, in dangers from Gentiles, in dangers in the city, in dangers in the wilderness,[29] in dangers at sea, in dangers from false brothers, 11:27 in hard work and toil,[30] through many sleepless nights, in hunger and thirst, many times without food, in cold and without enough clothing.[31] 11:28 Apart from other things,[32] there is the daily pressure on me of my anxious concern[33] for all the churches. 11:29 Who is weak, and I am not

1 tn Grk "you, and when." A new sentence was started here in the translation.

2 tn If the participle ἐλθόντες (elthontes) is taken as temporal rather than adjectival, the translation would be, "for the brothers, when they came from Macedonia, fully supplied my needs" (similar to NASB).

3 tn Grk "needs, and I kept." A new sentence was started here in the translation.

4 tn That is, that Paul offers the gospel free of charge to the Corinthians (see 2 Cor 11:7).

5 tn Or "silenced."

6 tn Grk "God knows!" The words "I do" are supplied for clarity. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

7 tn Grk "an opportunity, so that they may be found just like us."

8 tn Or "dishonest."

9 tn Or "workers, masquerading."

10 tn Or "Satan himself masquerades."

11 tn Or "also masquerade."

12 tn Or "their works."

13 tn Or "am foolish."

14 tn Grk "with this confidence of boasting." The genitive καυχήσεως (kauchēsēos) has been translated as an attributed genitive (the noun in the genitive gives an attribute of the noun modified).

15 tn Or "say with the Lord's authority."

16 sn Many is a reference to Paul's opponents.

17 tn Grk "according to the flesh."

18 tn Or "you tolerate."

19 tn Or "you tolerate."

20 tn See L&N 88.212.

21 tn Or "my shame."

22 sn It seems best, in context, to see the statement we were too weak for that as a parenthetical and ironic comment by Paul on his physical condition (weakness or sickness) while he was with the Corinthians (cf. 2 Cor 12:7-10; Gal 4:15).

23 tn The words "to boast about" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, and this phrase serves as the direct object of the preceding verb.

24 tn Grk "I also dare"; the words "to boast about the same thing" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, and this phrase serves as the direct object of the preceding verb.

25 tn Grk "forty less one"; this was a standard sentence. "Lashes" is supplied to clarify for the modern reader what is meant.

26 sn Beaten with a rod refers to the Roman punishment of admonitio according to BDAG 902 s.v. ῥαβδίζω. Acts 16:22 describes one of these occasions in Philippi; in this case it was administered by the city magistrates, who had wide powers in a military colony.

27 sn Received a stoning. See Acts 14:19, where this incident is described.

28 tn Or "bandits." The word normally refers more to highwaymen ("robbers") but can also refer to insurrectionists or revolutionaries ("bandits").

29 tn Or "desert."

30 tn The two different words for labor are translated "in hard work and toil" by L&N 42.48.

31 tn Grk "in cold and nakedness." Paul does not mean complete nakedness, however, which would have been repugnant to a Jew; he refers instead to the lack of sufficient clothing, especially in cold weather. A related word is used to 1 Cor 4:11, also in combination with experiencing hunger and thirst.

32 sn Apart from other things. Paul refers here either (1) to the external sufferings just mentioned, or (2) he refers to other things he has left unmentioned.

33 tn "Anxious concern," so translated in L&N 25.224.

weak? Who is led into sin,[1] and I do not burn with indignation? 11:30 If I must boast,[2] I will boast about the things that show my weakness.[3] 11:31 The God and Father of the Lord Jesus, who is blessed forever, knows I am not lying. 11:32 In Damascus, the governor[4] under King Aretas was guarding the city of Damascus[5] in order to arrest[6] me, 11:33 but I was let down in a rope-basket[7] through a window in the city wall, and escaped his hands.

Paul's Thorn in the Flesh

12:1 It is necessary to go on boasting.[8] Though it is not profitable, I will go on to visions and revelations from the Lord. 12:2 I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago (whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows) was caught up to the third heaven. 12:3 And I know that this man (whether in the body or apart from the body I do not know, God knows) 12:4 was caught up into paradise[9] and heard things too sacred to be put into words,[10] things that a person[11] is not permitted to speak. 12:5 On behalf of such an individual I will boast, but on my own behalf I will not boast, except about my weaknesses. 12:6 For even if I wish to boast, I will not be a fool, for I would be telling[12] the truth, but I refrain from this so that no one may regard[13] me beyond what he sees in me or what he hears from me, 12:7 even because of the extraordinary character of the revelations. Therefore,[14] so that I would not become arrogant, a thorn in the flesh was given to me, a messenger of Satan to trouble[15] me – so that I would not become arrogant.[16] 12:8 I asked the Lord three times about this, that it would depart from me. 12:9 But[17] he said to me, "My grace is enough[18] for you, for my[19] power is made perfect[20] in weakness." So then, I will boast most gladly[21] about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may reside in[22] me. 12:10 Therefore I am content with[23] weaknesses, with insults, with troubles, with persecutions and difficulties[24] for the sake of Christ, for whenever I am weak, then I am strong.

The Signs of an Apostle

12:11 I have become a fool. You yourselves forced me to do it, for I should have been commended by you. For I lack nothing in comparison[25] to those "super-apostles," even though I am nothing. 12:12 Indeed, the signs of an apostle were performed among you with great perseverance[26] by signs and wonders and powerful deeds.[27] 12:13 For how[28] were you treated worse than the other churches, except that I myself was not a burden to you? Forgive me this injustice! 12:14 Look, for the third time I am ready to come to you, and I will not be a burden to you, because I do not want your possessions, but you. For children should not have[29] to save up for their parents, but parents for their children. 12:15 Now I will most gladly spend and be spent for

1 tn Or "who is caused to stumble."

2 tn Grk "If boasting is necessary."

3 tn Or "about the things related to my weakness."

4 tn Grk "ethnarch."

sn The governor was an official called an "ethnarch" who was appointed to rule on behalf of a king over a certain region.

5 tn Grk "the city of the Damascenes."

6 tn Or "to seize," "to catch."

7 tn In Acts 9:25 the same basket used in Paul's escape is called a σπυρίς (spuris), a basket larger than a κόφινος (kophinos). It was very likely made out of rope, so the translation "rope-basket" is used.

8 tn Grk "Boasting is necessary."

9 sn In the NT, paradise is mentioned three times. In Luke 23:43 it refers to the abode of the righteous dead. In Rev 2:7 it refers to the restoration of Edenic paradise predicted in Isa 51:3 and Ezek 36:35. The reference here in 2 Cor 12:4 is probably to be translated as parallel to the mention of the "third heaven" in v. 2. Assuming that the "first heaven" would be atmospheric heaven (the sky) and "second heaven" the more distant stars and planets, "third heaven" would refer to the place where God dwells. This is much more likely than some variation on the seven heavens mentioned in the pseudepigraphic book 2 Enoch and in other nonbiblical and rabbinic works.

10 tn Or "things that cannot be put into words."

11 tn Grk "a man."

12 tn Or "speaking."

13 tn Or "may think of."

14 tc Most MSS (𝔓46 D Ψ 1881 𝔐) lack διό (dio, "Therefore"), but the widespread distribution and quality of MSS which include it (ℵ A B F G 0243 33 81 1175 1739 pc) argues for its authenticity. Internally, its case is equally strong in that its inclusion is grammatically rough (διό is hardly necessary to convey purpose, especially since Paul uses ἵνα [hina, "so that"] next).

15 tn Or "to harass."

16 tn The phrase "so that I might not become arrogant" is repeated here because it occurs in the Greek text two times in the verse. Although redundant, it is repeated because of the emphatic nature of its affirmation.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" because of the contrast implicit in the context.

18 tn Or "is sufficient."

19 tc The majority of later MSS (ℵ² A^{c} D^{1} Ψ 0243 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐) as well as some versional witnesses include the pronoun "my" here, but the omission of the pronoun has excellent external support (𝔓^{46vid} ℵ* A* B D* F G latt). Scribes probably added the pronoun for clarity, making the obvious referent explicit. This would also make "power" more parallel with "my grace." Though the original text probably did not include "my," scribes who added the word were following the sense of Paul's statement.

tn The pronoun "my" was supplied in the translation to clarify the sense of Paul's expression.

20 tn Or "my power comes to full strength."

21 tn "Most gladly," a comparative form used with superlative meaning and translated as such.

22 tn Or "may rest on."

23 tn Or "I take delight in."

24 tn Or "calamities."

25 tn Or "I am in no way inferior."

26 tn Or "patience," "endurance."

27 tn Or "and miracles."

28 tn Grk "For in what respect."

29 tn Grk "children ought not," but this might give the impression that children are not supposed to support sick or aging parents in need of help. That is not what Paul is saying. His point is that children should not have to pay their parent's way.

your lives![1] If I love you more, am I to be loved less? 12:16 But be that as it may, I have not burdened you. Yet because I was a crafty person, I took you in by deceit! 12:17 I have not taken advantage of you through anyone I have sent to you, have I?[2] 12:18 I urged Titus to visit you[3] and I sent our[4] brother along with him. Titus did not take advantage of you, did he?[5] Did we not conduct ourselves in the same spirit? Did we not behave in the same way?[6] 12:19 Have you been thinking all this time[7] that we have been defending ourselves to you? We are speaking in Christ before God, and everything we do, dear friends, is to build you up.[8] 12:20 For I am afraid that somehow when I come I will not find you what I wish, and you will find me[9] not what you wish. I am afraid that[10] somehow there may be quarreling, jealousy, intense anger, selfish ambition,[11] slander, gossip, arrogance, and disorder. 12:21 I am afraid that[12] when I come again, my God may humiliate me before you, and I will grieve for[13] many of those who previously sinned and have not repented of the impurity, sexual immorality, and licentiousness that they have practiced.

Paul's Third Visit to Corinth

13:1 This is the third time I am coming to visit[14] you. By the testimony[15] of two or three witnesses every matter will be established.[16] 13:2 I said before when I was present the second time and now, though absent, I say again to those who sinned previously and to all the rest, that if I come again, I will not spare anyone,[17] 13:3 since you are demanding proof that Christ is speaking through me. He[18] is not weak toward you but is powerful among you. 13:4 For indeed he was crucified by reason of weakness, but he lives because of God's power. For we also are weak in him, but we will live together with him, because of God's power toward you. 13:5 Put yourselves to the test to see if you are in the faith; examine yourselves! Or do you not recognize regarding yourselves that Jesus Christ is in you – unless, indeed, you fail the test![19] 13:6 And I hope that you will realize that we have not failed the test![20] 13:7 Now we pray to God that you may not do anything wrong, not so that we may appear to have passed the test,[21] but so that you may do what is right[22] even if we may appear to have failed the test.[23] 13:8 For we cannot do anything against the truth, but only for the sake of the truth. 13:9 For we rejoice whenever we are weak, but you are strong. And we pray for this: that you may become fully qualified.[24] 13:10 Because of this I am writing these things while absent, so that when I arrive[25] I may not have to deal harshly with you[26] by using my authority – the Lord gave it to me for building up, not for tearing down!

[1] tn Grk "souls."

[2] tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative answer, indicated by the 'tag' question "have I?" at the end of the clause. The question is rhetorical.

[3] tn The words "to visit you" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context, and must be supplied for the modern reader.

[4] tn Grk "the."

[5] tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative answer, indicated by the 'tag' question "did he?" at the end of the clause.

[6] tn Grk "[Did we not walk] in the same tracks?" This is an idiom that means to imitate someone else or to behave as they do. Paul's point is that he and Titus have conducted themselves in the same way toward the Corinthians. If Titus did not take advantage of the Corinthians, then neither did Paul.

[7] tc The reading "all this time" (πάλαι, palai) is found in several early and important Alexandrian and Western witnesses including ℵ* A B F G 0243 6 33 81 365 1175 1739 1881 lat; the reading πάλιν (palin, "again") is read by ℵ² D Ψ 0278 𝔐 sy bo; the reading οὐ πάλαι (ou palai) is read by 𝔓⁴⁶, making the question even more emphatic. The reading of 𝔓⁴⁶ could only have arisen from πάλαι. The reading πάλιν is significantly easier ("are you once again thinking that we are defending ourselves?"), for it softens Paul's tone considerably. It thus seems to be a motivated reading and cannot easily explain the rise of πάλαι. Further, πάλαι has considerable support in the Alexandrian and Western witnesses, rendering it virtually certain as the original wording here.

[8] tn Or "for your strengthening"; Grk "for your edification."

[9] tn Grk "and I will be found by you." The passive construction has been converted to an active one in the translation.

[10] tn The words "I am afraid that" are not repeated in the Greek text, but are needed for clarity.

[11] tn Or "intense anger, hostility."

[12] tn The words "I am afraid that" are not repeated in the Greek text from v. 20, but are needed for clarity.

[13] tn Or "I will mourn over."

[14] tn The word "visit" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[15] tn Grk "By the mouth."

[16] sn A quotation from Deut 19:15 (also quoted in Matt 18:16; 1 Tim 5:19).

[17] tn The word "anyone" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

[18] tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[19] tn Or "unless indeed you are disqualified."

[20] tn Or "that we are not disqualified."

[21] tn Or "that we may appear to be approved."

[22] tn Or "what is good."

[23] tn Or "even if we appear disapproved."

[24] tn Or "fully equipped."

[25] tn Grk "when I am present," but in the context of Paul's third (upcoming) visit to Corinth, this is better translated as "when I arrive."

[26] tn The words "with you" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

Final Exhortations and Greetings

13:11 Finally, brothers and sisters,[1] rejoice, set things right, be encouraged, agree with one another, live in peace, and the God of love and peace will be with you. 13:12[2] Greet one another with a holy kiss. All the saints greet you. 13:13 The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship[3] of the Holy Spirit be with you all.[4]

[1] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:8.

[2] sn The versification of vv. 12 and 13 in the NET BIBLE (so also NRSV, NLT) is according to the versification in the NA[27] and UBS[4] editions of the Greek text. Some translations, however, break the material up into three verses, i.e., 12-14 (NKJV, NASB, NIV). The same material has been translated in each case; the only difference is the versification of that material.

[3] tn Or "communion."

[4] tc Most witnesses, especially later ones (ℵ[2] D Ψ 𝔐 lat sy bo), conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"), while several early and important MSS (𝔓[46] ℵ* A B F G 0243 6 33 630 1175 1739 1881 pc sa) lack the particle. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. That so many diverse witnesses lacked the word here is strong testimony to its absence for the original text of 2 Corinthians.

Galatians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle (not from men, nor by human agency, but by Jesus Christ and God the Father who raised him from the dead) 1:2 and all the brothers with me, to the churches of Galatia. 1:3 Grace and peace to you[2] from God the Father and our[3] Lord Jesus Christ, 1:4 who gave himself for our sins to rescue us from this present evil age according to the will of our God and Father, 1:5 to whom be glory forever and ever! Amen.

Occasion of the Letter

1:6 I am astonished that you are so quickly deserting the one[4] who called you by the grace of Christ[5] and are following[6] a different[7] gospel – 1:7 not that there really is another gospel,[8] but[9] there are some who are disturbing you and wanting[10] to distort the gospel of Christ. 1:8 But even if we (or an angel from heaven) should preach[11] a gospel contrary to the one we preached to you,[12] let him be condemned to hell![13] 1:9 As we have said before, and now I say again, if any one is preaching to you a gospel contrary to what you received, let him be condemned to hell![14] 1:10 Am I now trying to

[1] tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[2] tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

[3] tc ‡ The unusual order καὶ κυρίου ἡμῶν (kai kuriou hēmōn), which produces the reading "our Lord Jesus Christ" instead of "God our Father," is read by 𝔓46,51vid B D F G H 1739 1881 𝔐 sy sa, while the more normal ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου (hēmōn kai kuriou) is found in ℵ A P Ψ 33 81 326 365 2464 pc. Thus, the reading adopted in the translation is more widespread geographically and is found in the two earliest witnesses, along with several good representatives of the Alexandrian, Western, and Byzantine texttypes. Internally, there would be a strong motivation for scribes to change the order: "from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" is Paul's normal greeting; here alone is the pronoun attached to "Jesus Christ" (except in the pastorals, though the greeting in these letters is nevertheless unlike the rest of the corpus Paulinum). Intrinsically, the chosen reading is superior as well: Scribes would be prone to emulate Paul's regular style, while in an early letter such as this one his regular style was yet to be established (for a similar situation, cf. the text-critical discussion at 1 Thess 1:1). Hence, there is a strong probability that the reading in the translation is authentic. Although B. M. Metzger argues that "the apostle's stereotyped formula was altered by copyists who, apparently in the interest of Christian piety, transferred the possessive pronoun so it would be more closely associated with 'Lord Jesus Christ'" (TCGNT 520), one might expect to see the same alterations in other Pauline letters. That this is not the case argues for "our Lord Jesus Christ" as the authentic reading here.

[4] sn The one who called you is a reference to God the Father (note the mention of Christ in the following prepositional phrase and the mention of God the Father in 1:1).

[5] tc Although the majority of witnesses, including some of the most important ones (𝔓51 ℵ A B Fc Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 f vg syp bo), read "by the grace of Christ" (χάριτι Χριστοῦ, chariti Christou) here, this reading is not without variables. Besides alternate readings such as χάριτι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (chariti Iēsou Christou, "by the grace of Jesus Christ"; D 326 1241s pc syh) and χάριτι θεοῦ (chariti theou, "by the grace of God"; 327 pc Thretlem), a few mss (𝔓46vid F* G Hvid ar b Tert Cyp Ambst Pel) have simply χάριτι with no modifier. Internally, the reading that seems best to explain the rise of the others is the shortest reading, χάριτι. Indeed, the fact that three different adjuncts are found in the mss seems to be a natural expansion on the simple "grace." At the same time, the witnesses for the shortest reading are not particularly impressive, being that they largely represent one textual strand (Western), and a less-than-reliable one at that. Further, nowhere else in the corpus Paulinum do we see the construction χάρις (charis, "grace") followed by Χριστοῦ without some other name (such as κυρίου [kuriou, "Lord"] or Ἰησοῦ). The construction χάρις θεοῦ is likewise frequent in Paul. Thus, upon closer inspection it seems that the original wording here was χάριτι Χριστοῦ (for it is difficult to explain how this particular reading could have arisen from the simple χάριτι, in light of Paul's normal idioms), with the other readings intentionally or accidentally arising from it.

[6] tn Grk "deserting [turning away] to" a different gospel, implying the idea of "following."

[7] tn Grk "another."

[8] tn Grk "which is not another," but this could be misunderstood to mean "which is not really different." In fact, as Paul goes on to make clear, there is no other gospel than the one he preaches.

[9] tn Grk "except."

[10] tn Or "trying."

[11] tc ‡ Most witnesses have ὑμῖν (humin, "to you") either after (ℵ2 A [D* ὑμᾶς] 6 33 326 614 945 1881 𝔐 Tertpt Ambst) or before (𝔓51vid B H 0278 630 1175 [1739* ἡμῖν]) εὐαγγελίζηται (euaggelizētai, "should preach" [or some variation on the form of this verb]). But the fact that it floats suggests its inauthenticity, especially since it appears to be a motivated reading for purposes of clarification. The following witnesses lack the pronoun: ℵ* F G Ψ ar b g Cyp Mciont Tertpt Lcf. The external evidence admittedly is not as weighty as evidence for the pronoun, but coupled with strong internal evidence the shorter reading should be considered original. Although it is possible that scribes may have deleted the pronoun to make Paul's statement seem more universal, the fact that the pronoun floats suggests otherwise. NA27 has the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

[12] tn Or "other than the one we preached to you."

[13] tn Grk "let him be accursed" (ἀνάθεμα, anathema). The translation gives the outcome which is implied by this dreadful curse.

[14] tn See the note on this phrase in the previous verse.

gain the approval of people,[1] or of God? Or am I trying to please people?[2] If I were still trying to please[3] people,[4] I would not be a slave[5] of Christ!

Paul's Vindication of His Apostleship

1:11 Now[6] I want you to know, brothers and sisters,[7] that the gospel I preached is not of human origin.[8] 1:12 For I did not receive it or learn it from any human source;[9] instead I received it[10] by a revelation of Jesus Christ.[11]

1:13 For you have heard of my former way of life[12] in Judaism, how I was savagely persecuting the church of God and trying to destroy it. 1:14 I[13] was advancing in Judaism beyond many of my contemporaries in my nation,[14] and was[15] extremely zealous for the traditions of my ancestors.[16] 1:15 But when the one[17] who set me apart from birth[18] and called me by his grace was pleased 1:16 to reveal his Son in[19] me so that I could preach him[20] among the Gentiles, I did not go to ask advice from[21] any human being,[22] 1:17 nor did I go up to Jerusalem[23] to see those who were apostles before me, but right away I departed to Arabia,[24] and then returned to Damascus.

1:18 Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem[25] to visit Cephas[26] and get information from him,[27] and I stayed with him fifteen days. 1:19 But I saw none of the other apostles[28] except James the Lord's brother. 1:20 I assure you[29] that, before God, I am not lying about 1 tn Grk "of men"; but here ἀνθρώπους (anthrōpous) is used in a generic sense of both men and women.

2 tn Grk "men"; but here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is used in a generic sense of both men and women.

3 tn The imperfect verb has been translated conatively (ExSyn 550).

4 tn Grk "men"; but here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is used in a generic sense of both men and women.

5 tn Traditionally, "servant" or "bondservant." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

6 tc ‡ The conjunction δέ (de) is found in 𝔓46 ℵ*,2 A D1 Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 sy bo, while γάρ (gar) is the conjunction of choice in ℵ1 B D*,c F G 33 pc lat sa. There are thus good representatives on each side. Scribes generally tended to prefer γάρ in such instances, most likely because it was more forceful and explicit. γάρ is thus seen as a motivated reading. For this reason, δέ is preferred.

7 tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited).

8 tn Grk "is not according to man."

9 tn Or "I did not receive it from a human source, nor was I taught it."

10 tn The words "I received it" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

11 tn It is difficult to determine what kind of genitive Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (Iēsou Christou) is. If it is a subjective genitive, the meaning is "a revelation from Jesus Christ" but if objective genitive, it is "a revelation about Jesus Christ." Most likely this is objective since the explanation in vv. 15-16 mentions God revealing the Son to Paul so that he might preach, although the idea of a direct revelation to Paul at some point cannot be ruled out.

12 tn Or "lifestyle," "behavior."

13 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

14 tn Or "among my race."

15 tn Grk "was advancing beyond...nation, being." The participle ὑπάρχων (huparchōn) was translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 sn The traditions of my ancestors refers to both Pharisaic and popular teachings of this time which eventually were codified in Jewish literature such as the Mishnah, Midrashim, and Targums.

17 tc ‡ Several important witnesses have ὁ θεός (ho theos) after εὐδόκησεν (eudokēsen; so ℵ A D Ψ 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 co) while the shorter reading is supported by 𝔓46 B F G 629 1505 pc lat. There is hardly any reason why scribes would omit the words (although the Beatty papyrus and the Western text do at times omit words and phrases), but several reasons why scribes would add the words (especially the need to clarify). The confluence of witnesses for the shorter reading (including a few fathers and versions) adds strong support for its authenticity. It is also in keeping with Paul's style to refrain from mentioning God by name as a rhetorical device (cf. ExSyn 437 [although this section deals with passive constructions, the principle is the same]). NA27 includes the words in brackets, indicating some doubts as to their authenticity.

18 tn Grk "from my mother's womb."

19 tn Or "to me"; the Greek preposition ἐν (en) can mean either, depending on the context.

20 tn This pronoun refers to "his Son," mentioned earlier in the verse.

21 tn Or "I did not consult with." For the translation "I did not go to ask advice from" see L&N 33.175.

22 tn Grk "from flesh and blood."

23 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

24 sn As a geographical region Arabia included the territory west of Mesopotamia, east and south of Syria and Palestine, extending to the isthmus of Suez. During the Roman occupation, some independent kingdoms arose like that of the Nabateans south of Damascus, and these could be called simply Arabia. In light of the proximity to Damascus, this may well be the territory Paul says he visited here. See also C. W. Briggs, "The Apostle Paul in Arabia," Biblical World 41 (1913): 255-59.

25 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

26 sn Cephas. This individual is generally identified with the Apostle Peter (L&N 93.211).

27 tn Although often translated "to get acquainted with Cephas," this could give the impression of merely a social call. L&N 34.52 has "to visit, with the purpose of obtaining information" for the meaning of ἱστορέω (historeō), particularly in this verse.

28 tn Grk "But another of the apostles I did not see, except..." with "another" in emphatic position in the Greek text. Paul is determined to make the point that his contacts with the original twelve apostles and other leaders of the Jerusalem church were limited, thus asserting his independence from them.

29 tn Grk "behold."

what I am writing to you![1] 1:21 Afterward I went to the regions of Syria and Cilicia. 1:22 But I was personally[2] unknown to the churches of Judea that are in Christ. 1:23 They were only hearing, "The one who once persecuted us is now proclaiming the good news[3] of the faith he once tried to destroy." 1:24 So[4] they glorified God because of me.[5]

Confirmation from the Jerusalem Apostles

2:1 Then after fourteen years I went up to Jerusalem[6] again with Barnabas, taking Titus along too. 2:2 I went there[7] because of[8] a revelation and presented[9] to them the gospel that I preach among the Gentiles. But I did so[10] only in a private meeting with the influential people,[11] to make sure that I was not running – or had not run[12] – in vain. 2:3 Yet[13] not even Titus, who was with me, was compelled to be circumcised, although he was a Greek. 2:4 Now this matter arose[14] because of the false brothers with false pretenses[15] who slipped in unnoticed to spy on[16] our freedom that we have in Christ Jesus, to make us slaves.[17] 2:5 But[18] we did not surrender to them[19] even for a moment,[20] in order that the truth of the gospel would remain with you.[21]

2:6 But from those who were influential[22] (whatever they were makes no difference to me; God shows no favoritism between people[23]) – those influential leaders[24] added[25] nothing to my message.[26] 2:7 On the contrary, when they saw[27] that I was entrusted with the gospel to the uncircumcised[28] just as Peter was to the circumcised[29] 2:8 (for he who empowered[30] Peter for his apostleship[31] to the circumcised[32] also empowered me for my apostleship to the Gentiles)[33] 2:9 and when James, Cephas,[34] and John, who had a

1 tn Grk "What things I am writing to you, behold, before God [that] I am not lying."

2 tn Or "by sight"; Grk "by face."

3 tn The Greek verb here is εὐαγγελίζεται (euangelizetai).

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the report about Paul's conversion.

5 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν εμοί (en emoi) has been translated with a causal force.

6 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

7 tn Grk "I went up"; one always spoke idiomatically of going "up" to Jerusalem.

8 tn Or "in accordance with." According to BDAG 512 s.v. κατά B.5.a.δ, "Oft. the norm is at the same time the reason, so that in accordance with and because of are merged...Instead of 'in accordance w.' κ. can mean simply because of, as a result of, on the basis of...κ. ἀποκάλυψιν Gal 2:2."

9 tn Or "set before them."

10 tn Grk "Gentiles, but only privately...to make sure." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started with "But" and the words "I did so," an implied repetition from the previous clause, were supplied to make a complete English sentence.

11 tn L&N 87.42 has "important persons, influential persons, prominent persons" for οἱ δοκοῦντες and translates this phrase in Gal 2:2 as "in a private meeting with the prominent persons." The "prominent people" referred to here are the leaders of the Jerusalem church.

12 tn Here the first verb (τρέχω, trechō, "was not running") is present subjunctive, while the second (ἔδραμον, edramon, "had not run") is aorist indicative.

13 tn Grk "But," translated here as "Yet" for stylistic reasons (note the use of "but" in v. 2).

14 tn No subject and verb are expressed in vv. 4-5, but the phrase "Now this matter arose," implied from v. 3, was supplied to make a complete English sentence.

15 tn The adjective παρεισάκτους (pareisaktous), which relates to someone joining a group with false motives or false pretenses, applies to the "false brothers." Although the expression "false brothers with false pretenses" is somewhat redundant, it captures the emphatic force of Paul's expression, which labels both these "brothers" as false (ψευδαδέλφους, pseudadelphous) as well as their motives. See L&N 34.29 for more information.

16 tn The verb translated here as "spy on" (κατασκοπέω, kataskopeō) can have a neutral nuance, but here the connotation is certainly negative (so F. F. Bruce, Galatians [NIGTC], 112-13, and E. Burton, Galatians [ICC], 83).

17 tn Grk "in order that they might enslave us." The ἵνα (hina) clause with the subjunctive verb καταδουλώσουσιν (katadoulōsousin) has been translated as an English infinitival clause.

18 tn Grk "slaves, nor did we..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, οὐδέ (oude) was translated as "But...even" and a new sentence started in the translation at the beginning of v. 5.

19 tn Or "we did not cave in to their demands."

20 tn Grk "even for an hour" (an idiom for a very short period of time).

21 sn In order that the truth of the gospel would remain with you. Paul evidently viewed the demands of the so-called "false brothers" as a departure from the truth contained in the gospel he preached. This was a very serious charge (see Gal 1:8).

22 tn Or "influential leaders." BDAG 255 s.v. δοκέω 2.a.β has "the influential men Gal 2:2, 6b. A fuller expr. w. the same mng., w. inf. added...vss. 6a, 9." This refers to the leadership of the Jerusalem church.

23 tn Grk "God does not receive the face of man," an idiom for showing favoritism or partiality (BDAG 887-88 s.v. πρόσωπον 1.b.α; L&N 88.238).

24 tn Or "influential people"; here "leaders" was used rather than "people" for stylistic reasons, to avoid redundancy with the word "people" in the previous parenthetical remark. See also the note on the word "influential" at the beginning of this verse.

25 tn Or "contributed." This is the same word translated "go to ask advice from" in 1:16, but it has a different meaning here; see L&N 59.72.

26 tn Or "added nothing to my authority." Grk "added nothing to me," with what was added ("message," etc.) implied.

27 tn The participle ἰδόντες (idontes) has been taken temporally to retain the structure of the passage. Many modern translations, because of the length of the sentence here, translate this participle as a finite verb and break the Greek sentences into several English sentences (NIV, for example, begins new sentences at the beginning of both vv. 8 and 9).

28 tn Grk "to the uncircumcision," that is, to the Gentiles.

29 tn Grk "to the circumcision," a collective reference to the Jewish people.

30 tn Or "worked through"; the same word is also used in relation to Paul later in this verse.

31 tn Or "his ministry as an apostle."

32 tn Grk "to the circumcision," i.e., the Jewish people.

33 tn Grk "also empowered me to the Gentiles."

34 sn Cephas. This individual is generally identified with the Apostle Peter (L&N 93.211).

reputation as[1] pillars,[2] recognized[3] the grace that had been given to me, they gave to Barnabas and me[4] the right hand of fellowship, agreeing[5] that we would go to the Gentiles and they to the circumcised.[6] 2:10 They requested[7] only that we remember the poor, the very thing I also was eager to do.

Paul Rebukes Peter

2:11 But when Cephas[8] came to Antioch,[9] I opposed him to his face, because he had clearly done wrong.[10] 2:12 Until[11] certain people came from James, he had been eating with the Gentiles. But when they arrived, he stopped doing this[12] and separated himself[13] because he was afraid of those who were pro-circumcision.[14] 2:13 And the rest of the Jews also joined with him in this hypocrisy, so that even Barnabas was led astray with them[15] by their hypocrisy. 2:14 But when I saw that they were not behaving consistently with the truth of the gospel, I said to Cephas[16] in front of them all, "If you, although you are a Jew, live like a Gentile and not like a Jew, how can you try to force[17] the Gentiles to live like Jews?"

Jews and Gentiles Are Justified by Faith

2:15 We are Jews by birth[18] and not Gentile sinners,[19] 2:16 yet we know[20] that no one[21] is justified by the works of the law[22] but by the faithfulness of Jesus Christ.[23] And[24] we have come to believe in Christ Jesus, so that we may be justified by the faithfulness of Christ[25] and not by the works of the law, because by the works of the law no one[26] will be justified. 2:17 But if while seeking to be justified in Christ we ourselves have also been found to be sinners, is Christ then one who encourages[27] sin? Absolutely not! 2:18 But if I build up again those things I once destroyed,[28] I demonstrate that I am one who breaks God's law.[29] 2:19 For through the law I died to the law so that I may live to God. 2:20 I have been crucified with Christ,[30] and it is no longer I who live, but Christ

1 tn Or "who were influential as," or "who were reputed to be." See also the note on the word "influential" in 2:6.

2 sn Pillars is figurative here for those like James, Peter, and John who were leaders in the Jerusalem church.

3 tn The participle γνόντες (gnontes) has been taken temporally. It is structurally parallel to the participle translated "when they saw" in v. 7.

4 tn Grk "me and Barnabas."

5 tn Grk "so," with the ἵνα (hina) indicating the result of the "pillars" extending the "right hand of fellowship," but the translation "they gave...the right hand of fellowship so that we would go" could be misunderstood as purpose here. The implication of the scene is that an agreement, outlined at the end of v. 10, was reached between Paul and Barnabas on the one hand and the "pillars" of the Jerusalem church on the other.

6 tn Grk "to the circumcision," a collective reference to the Jewish people.

7 tn Grk "only that we remember the poor"; the words "They requested" have been supplied from the context to make a complete English sentence.

8 sn Cephas. This individual is generally identified with the Apostle Peter (L&N 93.211).

9 map For location see JP1-F2; JP2-F2; JP3-F2; JP4-F2.

10 tn Grk "because he stood condemned."

11 tn The conjunction γάρ has not been translated here.

12 tn Grk "he drew back." If ἑαυτόν (heauton) goes with both ὑπέστελλεν (hupestellen) and ἀφώριζεν (aphōrizen) rather than only the latter, the meaning would be "he drew himself back" (see BDAG 1041 s.v. ὑποστέλλω 1.a).

13 tn Or "and held himself aloof."

14 tn Grk "the [ones] of the circumcision," that is, the group of Jewish Christians who insisted on circumcision of Gentiles before they could become Christians.

15 tn The words "with them" are a reflection of the σύν- (sun-) prefix on the verb συναπήχθη (sunapēchthē; see L&N 31.76).

16 sn Cephas. This individual is generally identified with the Apostle Peter (L&N 93.211).

17 tn Here ἀναγκάζεις (anankazeis) has been translated as a conative present (see ExSyn 534).

18 tn Grk "by nature."

19 tn Grk "and not sinners from among the Gentiles."

20 tn Grk "yet knowing"; the participle εἰδότες (eidotes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

21 tn Grk "no man," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women.

22 sn The law is a reference to the law of Moses.

23 tn Or "faith in Jesus Christ." A decision is difficult here. Though traditionally translated "faith in Jesus Christ," an increasing number of NT scholars are arguing that πίστις Χριστοῦ (pistis Christou) and similar phrases in Paul (here and in v. 20; Rom 3:22, 26; Gal 3:22; Eph 3:12; Phil 3:9) involve a subjective genitive and mean "Christ's faith" or "Christ's faithfulness" (cf., e.g., G. Howard, "The 'Faith of Christ'," ExpTim 85 [1974]: 212-15; R. B. Hays, The Faith of Jesus Christ [SBLDS]; Morna D. Hooker, "Πίστις Χριστοῦ," NTS 35 [1989]: 321-42). Noteworthy among the arguments for the subjective genitive view is that when πίστις takes a personal genitive it is almost never an objective genitive (cf. Matt 9:2, 22, 29; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:25, 48; 17:19; 18:42; 22:32; Rom 1:8; 12; 3:3; 4:5, 12, 16; 1 Cor 2:5; 15:14, 17; 2 Cor 10:15; Phil 2:17; Col 1:4; 2:5; 1 Thess 1:8; 3:2, 5, 10; 2 Thess 1:3; Titus 1:1; Phlm 6; 1 Pet 1:9, 21; 2 Pet 1:5). On the other hand, the objective genitive view has its adherents: A. Hultgren, "The Pistis Christou Formulations in Paul," NovT 22 (1980): 248-63; J. D. G. Dunn, "Once More, ΠΙΣΤΙΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ," SBL Seminar Papers, 1991, 730-44. Most commentaries on Romans and Galatians usually side with the objective view.

sn On the phrase translated the faithfulness of Christ, ExSyn 116, which notes that the grammar is not decisive, nevertheless suggests that "the faith/faithfulness of Christ is not a denial of faith in Christ as a Pauline concept (for the idea is expressed in many of the same contexts, only with the verb πιστεύω rather than the noun), but implies that the object of faith is a worthy object, for he himself is faithful." Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

24 tn In Greek this is a continuation of the preceding sentence, but the construction is too long and complex for contemporary English style, so a new sentence was started here in the translation.

25 tn Or "by faith in Christ." See comment above on "the faithfulness of Jesus Christ."

26 tn Or "no human being"; Grk "flesh."

27 tn Or "does Christ serve the interests of sin?"; or "is Christ an agent for sin?" See BDAG 230-31 s.v. διάκονος 2.

28 tn Or "once tore down."

29 tn Traditionally, "that I am a transgressor."

30 tn Both the NA[27]/UBS[4] Greek text and the NRSV place the phrase "I have been crucified with Christ" at the end of v. 19, but most English translations place these words at the beginning of v. 20.

lives in me. So[1] the life I now live in the body,[2] I live because of the faithfulness of the Son of God,[3] who loved me and gave himself for me. 2:21 I do not set aside[4] God's grace, because if righteousness[5] could come through the law, then Christ died for nothing![6]

Justification by Law or by Faith?

3:1 You[7] foolish Galatians! Who has cast a spell[8] on you? Before your eyes Jesus Christ was vividly portrayed[9] as crucified! 3:2 The only thing I want to learn from you is this: Did you receive the Spirit by doing the works of the law[10] or by believing what you heard?[11] 3:3 Are you so foolish? Although you began[12] with[13] the Spirit, are you now trying to finish[14] by human effort?[15] 3:4 Have you suffered so many things for nothing? – if indeed it was for nothing. 3:5 Does God then give[16] you the Spirit and work miracles among you by your doing the works of the law[17] or by your believing what you heard?[18]

3:6 Just as Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness,[19] 3:7 so then, understand[20] that those who believe are the sons of Abraham.[21] 3:8 And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles by faith, proclaimed the gospel to Abraham ahead of time,[22] saying, "All the nations[23] will be blessed in you."[24] 3:9 So then those who believe[25] are blessed along with Abraham the believer. 3:10 For all who[26] rely on doing the works of the law are under a curse, because it is written, "Cursed is everyone who does not keep on doing everything written in the book of the law."[27] 3:11 Now it is clear no one is justified before God by the law, because the righteous one will live by faith.[28] 3:12 But the law is not based on faith,[29] but the one who does the works of the law[30] will live by them.[31] 3:13 Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law by becoming[32] a curse for us (because it is written,

1 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "So" to bring out the connection of the following clauses with the preceding ones. What Paul says here amounts to a result or inference drawn from his co-crucifixion with Christ and the fact that Christ now lives in him. In Greek this is a continuation of the preceding sentence, but the construction is too long and complex for contemporary English style, so a new sentence was started here in the translation.

2 tn Grk "flesh."

3 tc A number of important witnesses (𝔓46 B D* F G) have θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ (theou kai Christou, "of God and Christ") instead of υἱοῦ τοῦ θεοῦ (huiou tou theou, "the Son of God"), found in the majority of mss, including several important ones (ℵ A C D1 Ψ 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy co). The construction "of God and Christ" appears to be motivated as a more explicit affirmation of the deity of Christ (following as it apparently does the Granville Sharp rule). Although Paul certainly has an elevated Christology, explicit "God-talk" with reference to Jesus does not normally appear until the later books (cf., e.g., Titus 2:13, Phil 2:10-11, and probably Rom 9:5). For different arguments but the same textual conclusions, see TCGNT 524.

tn Or "I live by faith in the Son of God." See note on "faithfulness of Jesus Christ" in v. 16 for the rationale behind the translation "the faithfulness of the Son of God."

sn On the phrase because of the faithfulness of the Son of God, ExSyn 116, which notes that the grammar is not decisive, nevertheless suggests that "the faith/faithfulness of Christ is not a denial of faith in Christ as a Pauline concept (for the idea is expressed in many of the same contexts, only with the verb πιστεύω rather than the noun), but implies that the object of faith is a worthy object, for he himself is faithful." Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

4 tn Or "I do not declare invalid," "I do not nullify."

5 tn Or "justification."

6 tn Or "without cause," "for no purpose."

7 tn Grk "O" (an interjection used both in address and emotion). In context the following section is highly charged emotionally.

8 tn Or "deceived"; the verb βασκαίνω (baskainō) can be understood literally here in the sense of bewitching by black magic, but could also be understood figuratively to refer to an act of deception (see L&N 53.98 and 88.159).

9 tn Or "publicly placarded," "set forth in a public proclamation" (BDAG 867 s.v. προγράφω 2).

10 tn Grk "by [the] works of [the] law," a reference to observing the Mosaic law.

11 tn Grk "by [the] hearing of faith."

12 tn Grk "Having begun"; the participle ἐναρξάμενοι (enarxamenoi) has been translated concessively.

13 tn Or "by the Spirit."

14 tn The verb ἐπιτελεῖσθε (epiteleisthe) has been translated as a conative present (see ExSyn 534). This is something the Galatians were attempting to do, but could not accomplish successfully.

15 tn Grk "in/by [the] flesh."

16 tn Or "provide."

17 tn Grk "by [the] works of [the] law" (the same phrase as in v. 2).

18 tn Grk "by [the] hearing of faith" (the same phrase as in v. 2).

19 sn A quotation from Gen 15:6.

20 tn Grk "know."

21 tn The phrase "sons of Abraham" is used here in a figurative sense to describe people who are connected to a personality, Abraham, by close nonmaterial ties. It is this personality that has defined the relationship and its characteristics (BDAG 1024-25 s.v. υἱός 2.c.α).

22 tn For the Greek verb προευαγγελίζομαι (proeuangelizomai) translated as "proclaim the gospel ahead of time," compare L&N 33.216.

23 tn The same plural Greek word, τὰ ἔθνη (ta ethnē), can be translated as "nations" or "Gentiles."

24 sn A quotation from Gen 12:3; 18:18.

25 tn Grk "those who are by faith," with the Greek expression "by faith" (ἐκ πίστεως, ek pisteōs) the same as the expression in v. 8.

26 tn Grk "For as many as."

27 tn Grk "Cursed is everyone who does not continue in all the things written in the book of the law, to do them."

sn A quotation from Deut 27:26.

28 tn Or "The one who is righteous by faith will live" (a quotation from Hab 2:4).

29 tn Grk "is not from faith."

30 tn Grk "who does these things"; the referent (the works of the law, see 3:5) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

31 sn A quotation from Lev 18:5. The phrase the works of the law is an editorial expansion on the Greek text (see previous note); it has been left as normal typeface to indicate it is not part of the OT text.

32 tn Grk "having become"; the participle γενόμενος (genomenos) has been taken instrumentally.

"Cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree")[1] 3:14 in order that in Christ Jesus the blessing of Abraham would come to the Gentiles,[2] so that we could receive the promise of the Spirit by faith.

Inheritance Comes from Promises and not Law

3:15 Brothers and sisters,[3] I offer an example from everyday life:[4] When a covenant[5] has been ratified,[6] even though it is only a human contract, no one can set it aside or add anything to it. 3:16 Now the promises were spoken to Abraham and to his descendant.[7] Scripture[8] does not say, "and to the descendants,"[9] referring to many, but "and to your descendant,"[10] referring to one, who is Christ. 3:17 What I am saying is this: The law that came four hundred thirty years later does not cancel a covenant previously ratified by God,[11] so as to invalidate the promise. 3:18 For if the inheritance is based on the law, it is no longer based on the promise, but God graciously gave[12] it to Abraham through the promise.

3:19 Why then was the law given?[13] It was added[14] because of transgressions,[15] until the arrival of the descendant[16] to whom the promise had been made. It was administered[17] through angels by an intermediary.[18] 3:20 Now an intermediary is not for one party alone, but God is one.[19] 3:21 Is the law therefore opposed to the promises of God?[20] Absolutely not! For if a law had been given that was able to give life, then righteousness would certainly have come by the

[1] sn A quotation from Deut 21:23. By figurative extension the Greek word translated tree (ζύλον, zulon) can also be used to refer to a cross (L&N 6.28), the Roman instrument of execution.

[2] tn Or "so that the blessing of Abraham might come to the Gentiles in Christ Jesus."

[3] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

[4] tn Grk "I speak according to man," referring to the illustration that follows.

[5] tn The same Greek word, διαθήκη (diathēkē), can mean either "covenant" or "will," but in this context the former is preferred here because Paul is discussing in vv. 16-18 the Abrahamic covenant.

[6] tn Or "has been put into effect."

[7] tn Grk "his seed," a figurative extension of the meaning of σπέρμα (sperma) to refer to descendants (L&N 10.29).

[8] tn Grk "It"; the referent (the scripture) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The understood subject of the verb λέγει (legei) could also be "He" (referring to God) as the one who spoke the promise to Abraham.

[9] tn Grk "to seeds." See the note on "descendant" earlier in this verse. Here the term is plural; the use of the singular in the OT text cited later in this verse is crucial to Paul's argument.

[10] tn See the note on "descendant" earlier in this verse.

sn A quotation from Gen 12:7; 13:15; 17:7; 24:7.

[11] tc Most MSS (D F G I 0176 0278 𝔐 it sy) read "ratified by God in Christ" whereas the omission of "in Christ" is the reading in 𝔓[46] ℵ A B C P Ψ 6 33 81 1175 1739 1881 2464 pc co. The shorter reading is strongly supported by the MS evidence, and it is probable that a copyist inserted the words as an interpretive gloss. However, this form of the "in Christ" expression is somewhat atypical in the corpus Paulinum (εἰς Χριστόν [eis Christon] rather than ἐν Χριστῷ [en Christō]), a fact which tempers one's certainty about the shorter reading. Nevertheless, the expression is used more in Galatians than in any other of Paul's letters (Gal 2:16; 3:24, 27), and may have been suggested by such texts to early copyists.

[12] tn On the translation "graciously gave" for χαρίζομαι (charizomai) see L&N 57.102.

[13] tn Grk "Why then the law?"

[14] tc For προσετέθη (prosetethē) several Western MSS have ἐτέθη (etethē, "it was established"; so D* F G it Ir[lat] Ambst Spec). The net effect of this reading, in conjunction with the largely Western reading of πράξεων (praxeōn) for παραβάσεων (parabaseōn), seems to be a very positive assessment of the law. But there are compelling reasons for rejecting this reading: (1) externally, it is provincial and relatively late; (2) internally: (a) transcriptionally, there seems to be a much higher transcriptional probability that a scribe would try to smooth over Paul's harsh saying here about the law than vice versa; (b) intrinsically: [1] Paul has already argued that the law came after the promise (vv. 15-18), indicating, more than likely, its temporary nature; [2] the verb "was added" in v. 19 (προσετέθη) is different from the verb in v. 15 (ἐπιδιατάσσεται, epidiatassetai); virtually all exegetes recognize this as an intentional linguistic shift on Paul's part in order not to contradict his statement in v. 15; [3] the temper of 3:1–4:7 is decidedly against a positive statement about the Torah's role in Heilsgeschichte.

[15] tc παραδόσεων (paradoseōn; "traditions, commandments") is read by D*, while the vast majority of witnesses read παραβάσεων (parabaseōn, "transgressions"). D's reading makes little sense in this context. πράξεων (praxeōn, "of deeds") replaces παραβάσεων in 𝔓[46] F G it Ir[lat] Ambst Spec. The wording is best taken as going with νόμος (nomos; "Why then the law of deeds?"), as is evident by the consistent punctuation in the later witnesses. But such an expression is unpauline and superfluous; it was almost certainly added by some early scribe(s) to soften the blow of Paul's statement.

[16] tn Grk "the seed." See the note on the first occurrence of the word "descendant" in 3:16.

[17] tn Or "was ordered." L&N 31.22 has "was put into effect" here.

[18] tn Many modern translations (NASB, NIV, NRSV) render this word (μεσίτης, mesitēs; here and in v. 20) as "mediator," but this conveys a wrong impression in contemporary English. If this is referring to Moses, he certainly did not "mediate" between God and Israel but was an intermediary on God's behalf. Moses was not a mediator, for example, who worked for compromise between opposing parties. He instead was God's representative to his people who enabled them to have a relationship, but entirely on God's terms.

[19] tn The meaning of this verse is disputed. According to BDAG 634 s.v. μεσίτης, "It prob. means that the activity of an intermediary implies the existence of more than one party, and hence may be unsatisfactory because it must result in a compromise. The presence of an intermediary would prevent attainment, without any impediment, of the purpose of the εἷς θεός in giving the law." See also A. Oepke, TDNT 4:598-624, esp. 618-19.

[20] tc The reading τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou, "of God") is well attested in ℵ A C D (F G read θεοῦ without the article) Ψ 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy co. However, 𝔓[46] B d Ambst lack the words. 𝔓[46] and B perhaps should not to be given as much weight as they normally are, since the combination of these two witnesses often produces a secondary shorter reading against all others. In addition, one might expect that if the shorter reading were original other variants would have crept into the textual tradition early on. But 104 (A.D. 1087) virtually stands alone with the variant τοῦ Χριστοῦ (tou Christou, "of Christ"). Nevertheless, if τοῦ θεοῦ were not part of the original text, it is the kind of variant that would be expected to show up early and often, especially in light of Paul's usage elsewhere (Rom 4:20; 2 Cor 1:20). A slight preference should be given to the τοῦ θεοῦ over the omission. NA[27] rightly places the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

law.[1] 3:22 But the scripture imprisoned[2] everything and everyone[3] under sin so that the promise could be given – because of the faithfulness[4] of Jesus Christ – to those who believe.

Sons of God Are Heirs of Promise

3:23 Now before faith[5] came we were held in custody under the law, being kept as prisoners[6] until the coming faith would be revealed. 3:24 Thus the law had become our guardian[7] until Christ, so that we could be declared righteous[8] by faith. 3:25 But now that faith has come, we are no longer under a guardian.[9] 3:26 For in Christ Jesus you are all sons of God through faith.[10] 3:27 For all of you who[11] were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. 3:28 There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave[12] nor free, there is neither male nor female[13] – for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. 3:29 And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham's descendants,[14] heirs according to the promise.

4:1 Now I mean that the heir, as long as he is a minor,[15] is no different from a slave, though he is the owner[16] of everything. 4:2 But he is under guardians[17] and managers until the date set by his[18] father. 4:3 So also we, when we were minors,[19] were enslaved under the basic forces[20] of the world. 4:4 But when the appropriate time[21] had come, God sent out his Son, born of a

[1] tn Or "have been based on the law."

[2] tn Or "locked up."

[3] tn Grk "imprisoned all things" but τὰ πάντα (ta panta) includes people as part of the created order. Because people are the emphasis of Paul's argument ("given to those who believe" at the end of this verse.), "everything and everyone" was used here.

[4] tn Or "so that the promise could be given by faith in Jesus Christ to those who believe." A decision is difficult here. Though traditionally translated "faith in Jesus Christ," an increasing number of NT scholars are arguing that πίστις Χριστοῦ (pistis Christou) and similar phrases in Paul (here and in Rom 3:22, 26; Gal 2:16, 20; Eph 3:12; Phil 3:9) involve a subjective genitive and mean "Christ's faith" or "Christ's faithfulness" (cf., e.g., G. Howard, "The 'Faith of Christ'," ExpTim 85 [1974]: 212-15; R. B. Hays, The Faith of Jesus Christ [SBLDS]; Morna D. Hooker, "Πίστις Χριστοῦ," NTS 35 [1989]: 321-42). Noteworthy among the arguments for the subjective genitive view is that when πίστις takes a personal genitive it is almost never an objective genitive (cf. Matt 9:2, 22, 29; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:25, 48; 17:19; 18:42; 22:32; Rom 1:8; 12; 3:3; 4:5, 12, 16; 1 Cor 2:5; 15:14, 17; 2 Cor 10:15; Phil 2:17; Col 1:4; 2:5; 1 Thess 1:8; 3:2, 5, 10; 2 Thess 1:3; Titus 1:1; Phlm 6; 1 Pet 1:9, 21; 2 Pet 1:5). On the other hand, the objective genitive view has its adherents: A. Hultgren, "The Pistis Christou Formulations in Paul," NovT 22 (1980): 248-63; J. D. G. Dunn, "Once More, ΠΙΣΤΙΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ," SBL Seminar Papers, 1991, 730-44. Most commentaries on Romans and Galatians usually side with the objective view.

sn On the phrase because of the faithfulness of Jesus Christ, ExSyn 116, which notes that the grammar is not decisive, nevertheless suggests that "the faith/faithfulness of Christ is not a denial of faith in Christ as a Pauline concept (for the idea is expressed in many of the same contexts, only with the verb πιστεύω rather than the noun), but implies that the object of faith is a worthy object, for he himself is faithful." Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

[6] tc Instead of the present participle συγκλειόμενοι (sunkleiomenoi; found in 𝔓46 ℵ A B D* F G P Ψ 33 1739 al), C D1 0176 0278 𝔐 have the perfect συγκεκλεισμένοι (sunkekleismenoi). The syntactical implication of the perfect is that the cause or the means of being held in custody was confinement ("we were held in custody [by/because of] being confined"). The present participle of course allows for such options, but also allows for contemporaneous time ("while being confined") and result ("with the result that we were confined"). Externally, the perfect participle has little to commend it, being restricted for the most part to later and Byzantine witnesses.

tn Grk "being confined."

[7] tn Or "disciplinarian," "custodian," or "guide." According to BDAG 748 s.v. παιδαγωγός, "the man, usu. a slave...whose duty it was to conduct a boy or youth...to and from school and to superintend his conduct gener.; he was not a 'teacher' (despite the present mng. of the derivative 'pedagogue'...When the young man became of age, the π. was no longer needed." L&N 36.5 gives "guardian, leader, guide" here.

[8] tn Or "be justified."

[9] tn See the note on the word "guardian" in v. 24. The punctuation of vv. 25, 26, and 27 is difficult to represent because of the causal connections between each verse. English style would normally require a comma either at the end of v. 25 or v. 26, but in so doing the translation would then link v. 26 almost exclusively with either v. 25 or v. 27; this would be problematic as scholars debate which two verses are to be linked. Because of this, the translation instead places a period at the end of each verse. This preserves some of the ambiguity inherent in the Greek and does not exclude any particular causal connection.

[10] tn Or "For you are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus."

[11] tn Grk "For as many of you as."

[12] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 1:10.

[13] tn Grk "male and female."

[14] tn Grk "seed." See the note on the first occurrence of the word "descendant" in 3:16.

[15] tn Grk "a small child." The Greek term νήπιος (nēpios) refers to a young child, no longer a helpless infant but probably not more than three or four years old (L&N 9.43). The point in context, though, is that this child is too young to take any responsibility for the management of his assets.

[16] tn Grk "master" or "lord" (κύριος, kurios).

[17] tn The Greek term translated "guardians" here is ἐπίτροπος (epitropos), whose semantic domain overlaps with that of παιδαγωγός (paidagōgos) according to L&N 36.5.

[18] tn Grk "the," but the Greek article is used here as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[19] tn See the note on the word "minor" in 4:1.

[20] tn Or "basic principles," "elemental things," or "elemental spirits." Some interpreters take this as a reference to supernatural powers who controlled nature and/or human fate.

[21] tn Grk "the fullness of time" (an idiom for the totality of a period of time, with the implication of proper completion; see L&N 67.69).

woman, born under the law, 4:5 to redeem those who were under the law, so that we may be adopted as sons with full rights.[1] 4:6 And because you are sons, God sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, who calls[2] "Abba![3] Father!" 4:7 So you are no longer a slave but a son, and if you are[4] a son, then you are also an heir through God.[5]

Heirs of Promise Are Not to Return to Law

4:8 Formerly when you did not know God, you were enslaved to beings that by nature are not gods at all.[6] 4:9 But now that you have come to know God (or rather to be known by God), how can you turn back again to the weak and worthless[7] basic forces?[8] Do you want to be enslaved to them all over again?[9] 4:10 You are observing religious[10] days and months and seasons and years. 4:11 I fear for you that my work for you may have been in vain. 4:12 I beg you, brothers and sisters,[11] become like me, because I have become like you. You have done me no wrong!

Personal Appeal of Paul

4:13 But you know it was because of a physical illness that I first proclaimed the gospel to you, 4:14 and though my physical condition put you to the test, you did not despise or reject me.[12] Instead, you welcomed me as though I were an angel of God,[13] as though I were Christ Jesus himself![14] 4:15 Where then is your sense of happiness[15] now? For I testify about you that if it were possible, you would have pulled out your eyes and given them to me! 4:16 So then, have I become your enemy by telling you the truth?[16]

4:17 They court you eagerly,[17] but for no good purpose;[18] they want to exclude you, so that you would seek them eagerly.[19] 4:18 However, it is good[20] to be sought eagerly[21] for a good purpose[22] at all times, and not only when I

[1] tn The Greek term υἱοθεσία (huiothesia) was originally a legal technical term for adoption as a son with full rights of inheritance. BDAG 1024 s.v. notes, "a legal t.t. of 'adoption' of children, in our lit., i.e. in Paul, only in a transferred sense of a transcendent filial relationship between God and humans (with the legal aspect, not gender specificity, as major semantic component)." Although some modern translations remove the filial sense completely and render the term merely "adoption" (cf. NAB), the retention of this component of meaning was accomplished in the present translation by the phrase "as sons."

[2] tn Grk "calling." The participle is neuter indicating that the Spirit is the one who calls.

[3] tn The term "Abba" is the Greek transliteration of the Aramaic אַבָּא ('abba'), literally meaning "my father" but taken over simply as "father," used in prayer and in the family circle, and later taken over by the early Greek-speaking Christians (BDAG 1 s.v. ἀββα).

[4] tn Grk "and if a son, then also an heir." The words "you are" have been supplied twice to clarify the statement.

[5] tc The unusual expression διὰ θεοῦ (dia theou, "through God") certainly prompted scribes to alter it to more customary or theologically acceptable ones such as διὰ θεόν (dia theon, "because of God"; F G 1881 pc), διὰ Χριστοῦ (dia Christou, "through Christ"; 81 630 pc sa), διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (dia Iēsou Christou, "through Jesus Christ"; 1739ᶜ), θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ ("[an heir] of God through Christ"; ℵ² C³ D [P] 0278 [6 326 1505] 𝔐 ar sy), or κληρονόμος μὲν θεοῦ, συγκληρονόμος δὲ Χριστοῦ (klēronomos men theou, sugklēronomos de Christou, "an heir of God, and fellow-heir with Christ"; Ψ pc [cf. Rom 8:17]). Although it is unusual for Paul to speak of God as an intermediate agent, it is not unprecedented (cf. Gal 1:1; 1 Cor 1:9). Nevertheless, Gal 4:7 is the most direct statement to this effect. Further testimony on behalf of διὰ θεοῦ is to be found in external evidence: The witnesses with this phrase are among the most important in the NT (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ* A B C* 33 1739*ᵛⁱᵈ lat bo Cl).

[6] tn Grk "those that by nature…" with the word "beings" implied. BDAG 1070 s.v. φύσις 2 sees this as referring to pagan worship: "Polytheists worship…beings that are by nature no gods at all Gal 4:8."

[7] tn Or "useless." See L&N 65.16.

[8] tn See the note on the phrase "basic forces" in 4:3.

[9] tn Grk "basic forces, to which you want to be enslaved…" Verse 9 is a single sentence in the Greek text, but has been divided into two in the translation because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence.

[10] tn The adjective "religious" has been supplied in the translation to make clear that the problem concerns observing certain days, etc. in a religious sense (cf. NIV, NRSV "special days"). In light of the polemic in this letter against the Judaizers (those who tried to force observance of the Mosaic law on Gentile converts to Christianity) this may well be a reference to the observance of Jewish Sabbaths, feasts, and other religious days.

[12] tn Grk "your trial in my flesh you did not despise or reject."

[13] tn Or "the angel of God." Linguistically, "angel of God" is the same in both testaments (and thus, he is either "an angel of God" or "the angel of God" in both testaments). For arguments and implications, see ExSyn 252; M. J. Davidson, "Angels," DJG, 9; W. G. MacDonald argues for "an angel" in both testaments: "Christology and 'The Angel of the Lord'," Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation, 324-35.

[14] tn Grk "as an angel of God…as Christ Jesus." This could be understood to mean either "you welcomed me like an angel of God would," or "you welcomed me as though I were an angel of God." In context only the second is accurate, so the translation has been phrased to indicate this.

[15] tn Or "blessedness."

[16] tn Or "have I become your enemy because I am telling you the truth?" The participle ἀληθεύων (alētheuōn) can be translated as a causal adverbial participle or as a participle of means (as in the translation).

[17] tn Or "They are zealous for you."

[18] tn Or "but not commendably" (BDAG 505 s.v. καλῶς 2).

[19] tn Or "so that you would be zealous."

[20] tn Or "commendable."

[21] tn Or "to be zealous."

am present with you. 4:19 My children – I am again undergoing birth pains until Christ is formed in you![1] 4:20 I wish I could be with you now and change my tone of voice,[2] because I am perplexed about you.

An Appeal from Allegory

4:21 Tell me, you who want to be under the law, do you not understand the law?[3] 4:22 For it is written that Abraham had two sons, one by the[4] slave woman and the other by the free woman. 4:23 But one, the son by the slave woman, was born by natural descent,[5] while the other, the son by the free woman, was born through the promise. 4:24 These things may be treated as an allegory,[6] for these women represent two covenants. One is from Mount Sinai bearing children for slavery; this is Hagar. 4:25 Now Hagar represents Mount Sinai in Arabia and corresponds to the present Jerusalem, for she is in slavery with her children. 4:26 But the Jerusalem above is free,[7] and she is our mother. 4:27 For it is written:

> "Rejoice, O barren woman who does not bear children;[8] > break forth and shout, you who have no birth pains, > because the children of the desolate woman are more numerous > than those of the woman who has a husband."[9]

4:28 But you,[10] brothers and sisters,[11] are children of the promise like Isaac. 4:29 But just as at that time the one born by natural descent[12] persecuted the one born according to the Spirit,[13] so it is now. 4:30 But what does the scripture say? "Throw out the slave woman and her son, for the son of the slave woman will not share the inheritance with the son"[14] of the free woman. 4:31 Therefore, brothers and sisters,[15] we are not children of the slave woman but of the free woman.

Freedom of the Believer

5:1 For freedom[16] Christ has set us free. Stand firm, then, and do not be subject again to the yoke[17] of slavery. 5:2 Listen! I, Paul, tell you that if you let yourselves be circumcised, Christ will be of no benefit to you at all! 5:3 And I testify again to every man who lets himself be circumcised that he is obligated to obey[18] the whole law. 5:4 You who are trying to be declared righteous[19] by the law have been alienated[20] from Christ; you have fallen away from grace! 5:5 For through the Spirit, by faith, we wait expectantly for the hope of righteousness. 5:6 For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision carries any weight – the only thing that matters is faith working through love.[21]

---

[1] tn Grk "My children, for whom I am again undergoing birth pains until Christ is formed in you." The relative clauses in English do not pick up the emotional force of Paul's language here (note "tone of voice" in v. 20, indicating that he is passionately concerned for them); hence, the translation has been altered slightly to capture the connotative power of Paul's plea.

sn That is, until Christ's nature or character is formed in them (see L&N 58.4).

[2] tn Grk "voice" or "tone." The contemporary English expression "tone of voice" is a good approximation to the meaning here.

[3] tn Or "will you not hear what the law says?" The Greek verb ἀκούω (akouō) means "hear, listen to," but by figurative extension it can also mean "obey." It can also refer to the process of comprehension that follows hearing, and that sense fits the context well here.

[4] tn Paul's use of the Greek article here and before the phrase "free woman" presumes that both these characters are well known to the recipients of his letter. This verse is given as an example of the category called "well-known ('celebrity' or 'familiar') article" by ExSyn 225.

[5] tn Grk "born according to the flesh"; BDAG 916 s.v. σάρξ 4 has "Of natural descent τὰ τέκνα τῆς σαρκός children by natural descent Ro 9:8 (opp. τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας). ὁ μὲν ἐκ τῆς παιδίσκης κατὰ σάρκα γεγέννηται Gal 4:23; cp. vs. 29."

[6] tn Grk "which things are spoken about allegorically." Paul is not saying the OT account is an allegory, but rather that he is constructing an allegory based on the OT account.

[7] sn The meaning of the statement the Jerusalem above is free is that the other woman represents the second covenant (cf. v. 24); she corresponds to the Jerusalem above that is free. Paul's argument is very condensed at this point.

[8] tn The direct object "children" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied for clarity. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[9] tn Grk "because more are the children of the barren one than of the one having a husband."

sn A quotation from Isa 54:1.

[10] tc Most MSS (א A C D² Ψ 062 𝔐 lat sy bo) read "we" here, while "you" is found in 𝔓⁴⁶ B D* F G 0261ᵛⁱᵈ 0278 33 1739 al sa. It is more likely that a copyist, noticing the first person pronouns in vv. 26 and 31, changed a second person pronoun here to first person for consistency.

[11] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

[12] tn Grk "according to the flesh"; see the note on the phrase "by natural descent" in 4:23.

[13] tn Or "the one born by the Spirit's [power]."

[14] sn A quotation from Gen 21:10. The phrase of the free woman does not occur in Gen 21:10.

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

[16] tn Translating the dative as "For freedom" shows the purpose for Christ setting us free; however, it is also possible to take the phrase in the sense of means or instrument ("with [or by] freedom"), referring to the freedom mentioned in 4:31 and implied throughout the letter.

[17] sn Here the yoke figuratively represents the burdensome nature of slavery.

[18] tn Or "keep"; or "carry out"; Grk "do."

[19] tn Or "trying to be justified." The verb δικαιοῦσθε (dikaiousthe) has been translated as a conative present (see ExSyn 534).

[20] tn Or "estranged"; BDAG 526 s.v. καταργέω 4 states, "Of those who aspire to righteousness through the law κ. ἀπὸ Χριστοῦ be estranged from Christ Gal 5:4."

[21] tn Grk "but faith working through love."

5:7 You were running well; who prevented you from obeying[1] the truth? 5:8 This persuasion[2] does not come from the one who calls you! 5:9 A little yeast makes the whole batch of dough rise![3] 5:10 I am confident[4] in the Lord that you will accept no other view.[5] But the one who is confusing[6] you will pay the penalty,[7] whoever he may be. 5:11 Now, brothers and sisters,[8] if I am still preaching circumcision, why am I still being persecuted?[9] In that case the offense of the cross[10] has been removed.[11] 5:12 I wish those agitators[12] would go so far as to[13] castrate themselves![14]

Practice Love

5:13 For you were called to freedom, brothers and sisters;[15] only do not use your freedom as an opportunity to indulge your flesh,[16] but through love serve one another.[17] 5:14 For the whole law can be summed up in a single commandment,[18] namely, "You must love your neighbor as yourself."[19] 5:15 However, if you continually bite and devour one another,[20] beware that you are not consumed[21] by one another. 5:16 But I say, live[22] by the Spirit and you will not carry out the desires of the flesh.[23] 5:17 For the flesh has desires that are opposed to the Spirit, and the Spirit has desires[24] that are opposed to the flesh, for these are in opposition to[25] each other, so that you cannot do what you want. 5:18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the law. 5:19 Now the works of the flesh[26] are obvious:[27] sexual immorality, impurity, depravity, 5:20 idolatry, sorcery,[28] hostilities,[29] strife,[30] jealousy, outbursts of anger, selfish rivalries, dissensions,[31] factions, 5:21 envying,[32] murder,[33] drunkenness, carousing,[34] and similar things. I am warning you, as I had warned you before: Those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God!

---

1 tn Or "following." BDAG 792 s.v. πείθω 3.b states, "obey, follow w. dat. of the pers. or thing...Gal 3:1 v.l.; 5:7."

2 tn Grk "The persuasion," referring to their being led away from the truth (v. 7). There is a play on words here that is not easily reproducible in the English translation: The words translated "obey" (πείθεσθαι, peithesthai) in v. 7 and "persuasion" (πεισμονή, peismonē) in v. 8 come from the same root in Greek.

3 tn Grk "A little leaven leavens the whole lump."

4 tn The verb translated "I am confident" (πέποιθα, pepoitha) comes from the same root in Greek as the words translated "obey" (πείθεσθαι, peithesthai) in v. 7 and "persuasion" (πεισμονή, peismonē) in v. 8.

5 tn Grk "that you will think nothing otherwise."

6 tn Or "is stirring you up"; Grk "is troubling you." In context Paul is referring to the confusion and turmoil caused by those who insist that Gentile converts to Christianity must observe the Mosaic law.

7 tn Or "will suffer condemnation" (L&N 90.80); Grk "will bear his judgment." The translation "must pay the penalty" is given as an explanatory gloss on the phrase by BDAG 171 s.v. βαστάζω 2.b.β.

8 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

9 sn That is, if Paul still teaches observance of the Mosaic law (preaches circumcision), why is he still being persecuted by his opponents, who insist that Gentile converts to Christianity must observe the Mosaic law?

10 sn The offense of the cross refers to the offense to Jews caused by preaching Christ crucified.

11 tn Or "nullified."

12 tn Grk "the ones who are upsetting you." The same verb is used in Acts 21:38 to refer to a person who incited a revolt. Paul could be alluding indirectly to the fact that his opponents are inciting the Galatians to rebel against his teaching with regard to circumcision and the law.

13 tn Grk "would even."

14 tn Or "make eunuchs of themselves"; Grk "cut themselves off." This statement is rhetorical hyperbole on Paul's part. It does strongly suggest, however, that Paul's adversaries in this case ("those agitators") were men. Some interpreters (notably Erasmus and the Reformers) have attempted to soften the meaning to a figurative "separate themselves" (meaning the opponents would withdraw from fellowship) but such an understanding dramatically weakens the rhetorical force of Paul's argument. Although it has been argued that such an act of emasculation would be unthinkable for Paul, it must be noted that Paul's statement is one of biting sarcasm, obviously not meant to be taken literally. See further G. Stählin, TDNT 3:853-55.

15 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

16 tn Grk "as an opportunity for the flesh"; BDAG 915 s.v. σάρξ 2.c.α states: "In Paul's thought esp., all parts of the body constitute a totality known as σ. or flesh, which is dominated by sin to such a degree that wherever flesh is, all forms of sin are likew. present, and no good thing can live in the σάρξ...Gal 5:13, 24;...Opp. τὸ πνεῦμα...Gal 3:3; 5:16, 17ab; 6:8ab."

17 tn It is possible that the verb δουλεύετε (douleuete) should be translated "serve one another in a humble manner" here, referring to the way in which slaves serve their masters (see L&N 35.27).

18 tn Or "can be fulfilled in one commandment."

19 sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

20 tn That is, "if you are harming and exploiting one another." Paul's metaphors are retained in most modern translations, but it is possible to see the meanings of δάκνω and κατεσθίω (daknō and katesthiō, L&N 20.26 and 88.145) as figurative extensions of the literal meanings of these terms and to translate them accordingly. The present tenses here are translated as customary presents ("continually...").

21 tn Or "destroyed."

22 tn Grk "walk" (a common NT idiom for how one conducts one's life or how one behaves).

23 tn On the term "flesh" (once in this verse and twice in v. 17) see the note on the same word in Gal 5:13.

24 tn The words "has desires" do not occur in the Greek text a second time, but are repeated in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Or "are hostile toward" (L&N 39.1).

26 tn See the note on the word "flesh" in Gal 5:13.

27 tn Or "clear," "evident."

28 tn Or "witchcraft."

29 tn Or "enmities," "[acts of] hatred."

30 tn Or "discord" (L&N 39.22).

31 tn Or "discord(s)" (L&N 39.13).

32 tn This term is plural in Greek (as is "murder" and "carousing"), but for clarity these abstract nouns have been translated as singular.

33 tc ‡ φόνοι (phonoi, "murders") is absent in such important MSS as 𝔓46 ℵ B 33 81 323 945 pc sa, while the majority of MSS (A C D F G Ψ 0122 0278 1739 1881 𝔐 lat) have the word. Although the pedigree of the MSS which lack the term is of the highest degree, homoioteleuton may well explain the shorter reading. The preceding word has merely one letter difference, making it quite possible to overlook this term (φθόνοι φόνοι, phthonoi phonoi).

34 tn Or "revelings," "orgies" (L&N 88.287).

5:22 But the fruit of the Spirit[1] is love,[2] joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness,[3] 5:23 gentleness, and[4] self-control. Against such things there is no law. 5:24 Now those who belong to Christ[5] have crucified the flesh[6] with its passions[7] and desires. 5:25 If we live by the Spirit, let us also behave in accordance with[8] the Spirit. 5:26 Let us not become conceited,[9] provoking[10] one another, being jealous[11] of one another.

Support One Another

6:1 Brothers and sisters,[12] if a person[13] is discovered in some sin,[14] you who are spiritual[15] restore such a person in a spirit of gentleness.[16] Pay close attention[17] to yourselves, so that you are not tempted too. 6:2 Carry one another's burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ. 6:3 For if anyone thinks he is something when he is nothing, he deceives himself. 6:4 Let each one examine[18] his own work. Then he can take pride[19] in himself and not compare himself with[20] someone else. 6:5 For each one will carry[21] his own load.

6:6 Now the one who receives instruction in the word must share all good things with the one who teaches[22] it. 6:7 Do not be deceived. God will not be made a fool.[23] For a person[24] will reap what he sows, 6:8 because the person who sows to his own flesh[25] will reap corruption[26] from the flesh,[27] but the one who sows to the Spirit will reap eternal life from the Spirit. 6:9 So we must not grow weary[28] in doing good, for in due time we will reap, if we do not give up.[29] 6:10 So then,[30] whenever we have an opportunity, let us do good to all people, and especially to those who belong to the family of faith.[31]

Final Instructions and Benediction

6:11 See what big letters I make as I write to you with my own hand!

6:12 Those who want to make a good showing in external matters[32] are trying to force you to be circumcised. They do so[33] only to avoid being persecuted[34] for the cross of Christ.

1 tn That is, the fruit the Spirit produces.

2 sn Another way to punctuate this is "love" followed by a colon (love: joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control). It is thus possible to read the eight characteristics following "love" as defining love.

3 tn Or "reliability"; see BDAG 818 s.v. πίστις 1.a.

4 tn "And" is supplied here as a matter of English style, which normally inserts "and" between the last two elements of a list or series.

5 tc ‡ Some mss (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ A B C P Ψ 0122[1] 0278 33 1175 1739 pc co) read "Christ Jesus" here, while many significant ones (𝔓⁴⁶ D F G 0122*·² latt sy), as well as the Byzantine text, lack "Jesus." The Byzantine text is especially not prone to omit the name "Jesus"; that it does so here argues for the authenticity of the shorter reading (for similar instances of probably authentic Byzantine shorter readings, see Matt 24:36 and Phil 1:14; cf. also W.-H. J. Wu, "A Systematic Analysis of the Shorter Readings in the Byzantine Text of the Synoptic Gospels" [Ph. D. diss., Dallas Theological Seminary, 2002]). On the strength of the alignment of 𝔓⁴⁶ with the Western and Byzantine texttypes, the shorter reading is preferred. NA²⁷ includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

6 tn See the note on the word "flesh" in Gal 5:13.

7 tn The Greek term παθήμασιν (pathēmasin, translated "passions") refers to strong physical desires, especially of a sexual nature (L&N 25.30).

8 tn Or "let us also follow," "let us also walk by."

9 tn Or "falsely proud."

10 tn Or "irritating." BDAG 871 s.v. προκαλέω has "provoke, challenge τινά someone."

11 tn Or "another, envying one another."

12 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

13 tn Here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense, referring to both men and women.

14 tn Or "some transgression" (L&N 88.297).

15 sn Who are spiritual refers to people who are controlled and directed by God's Spirit.

16 tn Or "with a gentle spirit" or "gently."

17 tn Grk "taking careful notice."

18 tn Or "determine the genuineness of."

19 tn Grk "he will have a reason for boasting."

20 tn Or "and not in regard to." The idea of comparison is implied in the context.

21 tn Or perhaps, "each one must carry." A number of modern translations treat βαστάσει (bastasei) as an imperatival future.

22 tn Or "instructs," "imparts."

23 tn Or "is not mocked," "will not be ridiculed" (L&N 33.409). BDAG 660 s.v. μυκτηρίζω has "of God οὐ μ. he is not to be mocked, treated w. contempt, perh. outwitted Gal 6:7."

24 tn Here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense, referring to both men and women.

25 tn BDAG 915 s.v. σάρξ 2.c.α states: "In Paul's thought esp., all parts of the body constitute a totality known as σ. or flesh, which is dominated by sin to such a degree that wherever flesh is, all forms of sin are likew. present, and no good thing can live in the σάρξ...Gal 5:13, 24;...Opp. τὸ πνεῦμα... Gal 3:3; 5:16, 17ab; 6:8ab."

26 tn Or "destruction."

27 tn See the note on the previous occurrence of the word "flesh" in this verse.

28 tn Or "not become discouraged," "not lose heart" (L&N 25.288).

29 tn Or "if we do not become extremely weary," "if we do not give out," "if we do not faint from exhaustion" (L&N 23.79).

30 tn There is a double connective here that cannot be easily preserved in English: "consequently therefore," emphasizing the conclusion of what Paul has been arguing.

31 tn Grk "to those who are members of the family of [the] faith."

32 tn Grk "in the flesh." L&N 88.236 translates the phrase "those who force you to be circumcised are those who wish to make a good showing in external matters."

33 tn Grk "to be circumcised, only." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started with the words "They do so," which were supplied to make a complete English sentence.

34 tc ‡ Grk "so that they will not be persecuted." The indicative after ἵνα μή (hina mē) is unusual (though not unexampled elsewhere in the NT), making it the harder reading. The evidence is fairly evenly split between the indicative διώκονται (diōkontai; 𝔓⁴⁶ A C F G K L P 0278 6 81 104 326 629 1175 1505 pm) and the subjunctive διώκωνται (diōkōntai; ℵ B D Ψ 33 365 1739 pm), with a slight preference for the subjunctive. However, since scribes would tend to change the indicative to a subjunctive due to syntactical requirements, the internal evidence is decidedly on the side of the indicative, suggesting that it is original.

6:13 For those who are circumcised do not obey the law themselves, but they want you to be circumcised so that they can boast about your flesh.[1] 6:14 But may I never boast except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which[2] the world has been crucified to me, and I to the world. 6:15 For[3] neither circumcision nor uncircumcision counts for[4] anything; the only thing that matters is a new creation![5] 6:16 And all who will behave[6] in accordance with this rule, peace and mercy be on them, and on the Israel of God.[7]

6:17 From now on let no one cause me trouble, for I bear the marks of Jesus on my body.[8]

6:18 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be[9] with your spirit, brothers and sisters.[10] Amen.

[1] tn Or "boast about you in external matters," "in the outward rite" (cf. v. 12).

[2] tn Or perhaps, "through whom," referring to the Lord Jesus Christ rather than the cross.

[3] tc The phrase "in Christ Jesus" is found after "For" in some MSS (ℵ A C D F G 0278 1881 𝔐 lat bo), but lacking in 𝔓46 B Ψ 33 1175 1505 1739* and several fathers. The longer reading probably represents a harmonization to Gal 5:6.

[4] tn Grk "is."

[5] tn Grk "but a new creation"; the words "the only thing that matters" have been supplied to reflect the implied contrast with the previous clause (see also Gal 5:6).

[6] tn The same Greek verb, στοιχέω (stoicheō), occurs in Gal 5:25.

[7] tn The word "and" (καί) can be interpreted in two ways: (1) It could be rendered as "also" which would indicate that two distinct groups are in view, namely "all who will behave in accordance with this rule" and "the Israel of God." Or (2) it could be rendered "even," which would indicate that "all who behave in accordance with this rule" are "the Israel of God." In other words, in this latter view, "even" = "that is."

[8] tn Paul is probably referring to scars from wounds received in the service of Jesus, although the term στίγμα (stigma) may imply ownership and suggest these scars served as brands (L&N 8.55; 33.481; 90.84).

[9] tn Or "is." No verb is stated, but a wish ("be") rather than a declarative statement ("is") is most likely in a concluding greeting such as this.

[10] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:11.

Ephesians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, to the saints [in Ephesus],[2] the faithful[3] in Christ Jesus. 1:2 Grace and peace to you[4] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Spiritual Blessings in Christ

1:3 Blessed[5] is[6] the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed[7] us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly realms in Christ. 1:4 For[8] he chose us in Christ[9] before the foundation of the world that we may be holy and unblemished[10] in his sight[11] in love.[12]

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tc The earliest and most important MSS omit "in Ephesus" (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ* B* 6 1739 [Mcion^{T,E}]), yet the opening line of this epistle makes little sense without the phrase ("to the saints who are and are faithful..."? or perhaps "to the saints who are also faithful," though with this sense the οὖσιν [ousin] is redundant and the καί [kai] is treated somewhat unnaturally). What is interesting is Marcion's canon list which speaks of the letter to the Laodiceans among Paul's authentic epistles. This, coupled with some internal evidence that the writer did not know his audience personally (cf. 1:15; 3:2; absence of personal names throughout), suggests that Ephesians was an encyclical letter, intended for more than one audience. Does this mean that the shorter reading is to be preferred? Yes and no. A plausible scenario is as follows, assuming Pauline authorship (though this is strongly contested today; for arguments on behalf of Pauline authorship, see M. Barth, Ephesians [AB 34], 1:36-50; P. T. O'Brien, Ephesians, 4-47; and H. W. Hoehner, Ephesians, 2-61): Paul sent the letter from Rome, intending it first to go to Ephesus. At the same time, Colossians was dispatched. Going counterclockwise through Asia Minor, this letter would first come to Ephesus, the port of entry, then to Laodicea, then Colossae. Tychicus' instructions may well have been for each church to "fill in the blank" on the address line. The church at Ephesus would have certainly made the most copies, being Paul's home base for nearly three years. Hence, most of the surviving copies have "in Ephesus" in v. 1 (so ℵ² A B² D F G Ψ 0278 33 1881 𝔐 latt sy co). But one might expect a hint of evidence that Laodicea also made a few copies: Both Marcion's list and Col 4:16 may well imply this. What is to account for the early Alexandrian evidence, then? These MSS were perhaps made from a very early copy, one reflecting the blank line before each church filled it in. Although it is of course only speculation (as is necessary in a historical investigation lacking some of the pieces to the puzzle), this scenario accounts for all of the data: (1) "in Ephesus" in most MSS; (2) Laodicea in Marcion's list and Col 4:16; (3) the lack of an addressee in the earliest witnesses; (4) why the earliest witnesses' reading must be rejected as too hard; and (5) why the author seems not to know the readership. In sum, is "in Ephesus" original? Yes and no. Some address belongs there; ἐν Ἐφέσῳ (en Ephesō) is the predominant address, but several other churches also received this circular letter as their own. For this reason the phrase has been placed in single brackets in the translation. NA^{27} also lists the words in brackets, indicating doubt as to their authenticity.

map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

3 tn Grk "and faithful." The construction in Greek (as well as Paul's style [and even if this letter is not by Paul it follows the general style of Paul's letters, with some modifications]) suggests that the saints are identical to the faithful; hence, the καί (kai) is best left untranslated. See M. Barth, Ephesians (AB 34), 1:68 and ExSyn 282.

4 tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

5 sn Eph 1:3-14 comprises one long sentence in Greek, with three major sections. Each section ends with a note of praise for God (vv. 6, 12, 14), focusing on a different member of the Trinity. After an opening summary of all the saints' spiritual blessings (v. 3), the first section (vv. 4-6) offers up praise that the Father has chosen us in eternity past; the second section (vv. 7-12) offers up praise that the Son has redeemed us in the historical past (i.e., at the cross); the third section (vv. 13-14) offers up praise that the Holy Spirit has sealed us in our personal past, at the point of conversion.

6 tn There is no verb in the Greek text; either the optative ("be") or the indicative ("is") can be supplied. The meaning of the term εὐλογητός (eulogētos), the author's intention at this point in the epistle, and the literary genre of this material must all come into play to determine which is the preferred nuance. εὐλογητός as an adjective can mean either that one is praised or that one is blessed, that is, in a place of favor and benefit. The meaning "blessed" would be more naturally paired with an indicative verb here and would suggest that blessedness is an intrinsic part of God's character. The meaning "praised" would be more naturally paired with an optative verb here and would suggest that God ought to be praised. Pauline style in the epistles generally moves from statements to obligations, expressing the reality first and then the believer's necessary response, which would favor the indicative. However, many scholars regard Eph 1:3-14 as a berakah psalm (cf. A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians [WBC], 10-11). Rooted in the OT and Jewish worship, berakah psalms were songs of praise in which the worshiper gave praise to God; this would favor the optative (although not all scholars are agreed on this genre classification here; see H. W. Hoehner, Ephesians, 153-59, for discussion and an alternate conclusion). When considered as a whole, although a decision is difficult, the indicative seems to fit all the factors better. The author seems to be pointing to who God is and what he has done for believers in this section; the indicative more naturally fits that emphasis. Cf. also 2 Cor 1:3; 1 Pet 1:3.

7 tn Or "enriched," "conferred blessing."

8 tn Grk "just as." Eph 1:3-14 are one long sentence in Greek that must be broken up in English translation. Verse 4 expresses the reason why God the Father is blessed (cf. BDAG 494 s.v. καθώς 3).

9 tn Grk "in him."

10 sn The Greek word translated unblemished (ἀμώμους, amōmous) is often used of an acceptable paschal lamb. Christ, as our paschal lamb, is also said to be unblemished (Heb 9:14; 1 Pet 1:19). Since believers are in Christ, God views them positionally and will make them ultimately without blemish as well (Jude 24; Eph 5:27; Col 1:22).

11 tn Grk "before him."

12 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν ἀγάπῃ (en agapē, "in love") may modify one of three words or phrases: (1) "chose," (2) "holy and unblemished," both in v. 4, or (3) "by predestining" in v. 5. If it modifies "chose," it refers to God's motivation in that election, but this option is unlikely because of the placement of the prepositional phrase far away from the verb. The other two options are more likely. If it modifies "holy and unblemished," it specifies that our holiness cannot be

1:5 He did this by predestining[1] us to adoption as his[2] sons[3] through Jesus Christ, according to the pleasure[4] of his will – 1:6 to the praise of the glory of his grace[5] that he has freely bestowed on us in his dearly loved Son.[6] 1:7 In him[7] we have redemption through his blood,[8] the forgiveness of our trespasses, according to the riches of his grace 1:8 that he lavished on us in all wisdom and insight. 1:9 He did this when he revealed[9] to us the secret[10] of his will, according to his good pleasure that he set forth[11] in Christ,[12] 1:10 toward the administration of the fullness of the times, to head up[13] all things in Christ – the things in heaven[14] and the things on earth.[15] 1:11 In Christ[16] we too have been claimed as God's own possession,[17] since divorced from love. This view is in keeping with the author's use of ἀγάπη to refer often to human love in Ephesians, but the placement of the prepositional phrase not immediately following the words it modifies would be slightly awkward. If it modifies "by predestining" (v. 5), again the motivation of God's choice is love. This would fit the focus of the passage on God's gracious actions toward believers, but it could be considered slightly redundant in that God's predestination itself proves his love.

[1] tn Grk "by predestining." Verse 5 begins with an aorist participle dependent on the main verb in v. 4 ("chose").

sn By predestining. The aorist participle may be translated either causally ("because he predestined," "having predestined") or instrumentally ("by predestining"). A causal nuance would suggest that God's predestination of certain individuals prompted his choice of them. An instrumental nuance would suggest that the means by which God's choice was accomplished was by predestination. The instrumental view is somewhat more likely in light of normal Greek syntax (i.e., an aorist participle following an aorist main verb is more likely to be instrumental than causal).

[3] tn The Greek term υἱοθεσία (huiothesia) was originally a legal technical term for adoption as a son with full rights of inheritance. BDAG 1024 s.v. notes, "a legal t.t. of 'adoption' of children, in our lit., i.e. in Paul, only in a transferred sense of a transcendent filial relationship between God and humans (with the legal aspect, not gender specificity, as major semantic component)." Although some modern translations remove the filial sense completely and render the term merely "adoption" (cf. NAB, ESV), the retention of this component of meaning was accomplished in the present translation by the phrase "as...sons."

sn Adoption as his sons is different from spiritual birth as children. All true believers have been born as children of God and will be adopted as sons of God. The adoption is both a future reality, and in some sense, already true. To be adopted as a son means to have the full rights of an heir. Thus, although in the ancient world, only boys could be adopted as sons, in God's family all children – both male and female – are adopted.

[4] tn Or "good pleasure."

[5] tn Or "to the praise of his glorious grace." Many translations translate δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ (doxēs tēs charitos autou, literally "of the glory of his grace") with τῆς χάριτος as an attributed genitive (cf., e.g., NIV, NRSV, ESV). The translation above has retained a literal rendering in order to make clear the relationship of this phrase to the other two similar phrases in v. 12 and 14, which affect the way one divides the material in the passage.

[6] tn Grk "the beloved." The term ἠγαπημένῳ (ēgapēmenō) means "beloved," but often bears connotations of "only beloved" in an exclusive sense. "His dearly loved Son" picks up this connotation.

sn God's grace can be poured out on believers only because of what Christ has done for them. Hence, he bestows his grace on us because we are in his dearly loved Son.

[7] tn Grk "in whom" (the relative clause of v. 7 is subordinate to v. 6). The "him" refers to Christ.

[8] sn In this context his blood, the blood of Jesus Christ, refers to the price paid for believers' redemption, which is the sacrificial death of Christ on the cross.

[9] tn Or "He did this by revealing"; Grk "making known, revealing." Verse 9 begins with a participle dependent on "lavished" in v. 8; the adverbial participle could be understood as temporal ("when he revealed"), which would be contemporaneous to the action of the finite verb "lavished," or as means ("by revealing"). The participle has been translated here with the temporal nuance to allow for means to also be a possible interpretation. If the translation focused instead upon means, the temporal nuance would be lost as the time frame for the action of the participle would become indistinct.

[10] tn Or "mystery." In the NT μυστήριον (mustērion) refers to a divine secret previously undisclosed.

[11] tn Or "purposed," "publicly displayed." Cf. Rom 3:25.

[12] tn Grk "in him"; the referent (Christ) has been specified in the translation for the sake of clarity.

sn In Christ. KJV has "in himself" as though the antecedent were God the Father. Although possible, the notion of the verb set forth (Greek προτίθημι, protithēmi) implies a plan that is carried out in history (cf. Rom 1:13; 3:25) and thus more likely refers to Christ.

[13] tn The precise meaning of the infinitive ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι (anakephalaiōsasthai) in v. 10 is difficult to determine since it was used relatively infrequently in Greek literature and only twice in the NT (here and Rom 13:9). While there have been several suggestions, three deserve mention: (1) "To sum up." In Rom 13:9, using the same term, the author there says that the law may be "s*ummarized* in one command, to love your neighbor as yourself." The idea then in Eph 1:10 would be that all things in heaven and on earth can be summed up and made sense out of in relation to Christ. (2) "To renew." If this is the nuance of the verb then all things in heaven and earth, after their plunge into sin and ruin, are renewed by the coming of Christ and his redemption. (3) "To head up." In this translation the idea is that Christ, in the fullness of the times, has been exalted so as to be appointed as the ruler (i.e., "head") over all things in heaven and earth (including the church). That this is perhaps the best understanding of the verb is evidenced by the repeated theme of Christ's exaltation and reign in Ephesians and by the connection to the κεφαλή- (kephalē-) language of 1:22 (cf. Schlier, TDNT 3:682; L&N 63.8; M. Barth, Ephesians [AB 34], 1:89-92; contra A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians [WBC], 32-33).

[15] sn And the things on earth. Verse 10 ends with "in him." The redundancy keeps the focus on Christ at the expense of good Greek style. Verse 11 repeats the reference with a relative pronoun ("in whom") – again, at the expense of good Greek style. Although the syntax is awkward, the theology is rich. This is not the first time that a NT writer was so overcome with awe for his Lord that he seems to have lost control of his pen. Indeed, it happened frequently enough that some have labeled their christologically motivated solecisms an "apostolic disease."

[16] tn Grk "in whom," as a continuation of the previous verse.

[17] tn Grk "we were appointed by lot." The notion of the verb κληρόω (klēroō) in the OT was to "appoint a portion by lot" (the more frequent cognate verb κληρονομέω [klēronomeō] meant "obtain a portion by lot"). In the passive, as here, the idea is that "we were appointed [as a portion] by lot" (BDAG 548 s.v. κληρόω 1). The words "God's own" have been supplied in the translation to clarify this sense of the verb. An alternative interpretation is that believers receive a portion as an inheritance: "In Christ we too have been appointed a portion of the inheritance." See H. W. Hoehner, Ephesians, 226-27, for discussion on this interpretive issue.

sn God's own possession. Although God is not mentioned we were predestined according to the one purpose of him who accomplishes all things according to the counsel of his will 1:12 so that we, who were the first to set our hope[1] on Christ,[2] would be to the praise of his glory. 1:13 And when[3] you heard the word of truth (the gospel of your salvation) – when you believed in Christ[4] – you were marked with the seal[5] of the promised Holy Spirit,[6] 1:14 who is the down payment[7] of our inheritance, until the redemption of God's own possession,[8] to the praise of his glory.

Prayer for Wisdom and Revelation

1:15 For this reason,[9] because I[10] have heard[11] of your faith in the Lord Jesus and your love[12] for all the saints, 1:16 I do not cease to give thanks for you when I remember you[13] in my prayers. 1:17 I pray that[14] the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory,[15] may give you spiritual wisdom and revelation[16] in your growing knowledge of him,[17] 1:18 – since the eyes of your[18] heart have been explicitly in the Greek text, it is clear from the context that he has chosen believers for himself. Just as with the nation Israel, the church is God's chosen portion or possession (cf. Deut 32:8-9).

1 tn Or "who had already hoped."

2 tn Or "the Messiah."

3 tn Grk "in whom you also, when..." (continuing the sentence from v. 12).

4 tn Grk "in whom also having believed." The relative pronoun "whom" has been replaced in the translation with its antecedent ("Christ") to improve the clarity.

5 tn Or "you were sealed."

6 tn Grk "the Holy Spirit of promise." Here ἐπαγγελίας (epangelias, "of promise") has been translated as an attributive genitive.

7 tn Or "first installment," "pledge," "deposit."

sn Down payment. The Greek word ἀρραβών (arrabōn) denotes the first payment or first installment of money or goods which serves as a guarantee or pledge for the completion of the transaction. In the NT the term is used only figuratively of the Holy Spirit as the down payment of the blessings promised by God (it is used also in 2 Cor 1:22 and 5:5). In the "already – not yet" scheme of the NT the possession of the Spirit now by believers ("already") can be viewed as a guarantee that God will give them the balance of the promised blessings in the future ("not yet").

8 tn Grk "the possession."

9 sn The conjunctive phrase For this reason points back to the preceding section, vv. 3-14, which is also summed up in this verse in the expression because I have heard of your faith. In other words, the author's prayer can be made for his audience because he knows that they are true believers.

10 tn Grk "even I."

11 tn Grk "having also heard."

12 tc 𝔓46 ℵ* A B P 33 1739 1881 2464 Hier lack "your love" (τὴν ἀγάπην, tēn agapēn), while various other groups of MSS have different arrangements of the phrase "your love toward all the saints" (τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, tēn agapēn tēn eis pantas tous hagious). Most witnesses, especially the later ones (ℵ2 D1 Ψ 𝔐 latt sa), read τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους. Externally, the shorter reading is superior. Internally, the omission of τὴν ἀγάπην is a significantly harder reading, for the saints become an object of faith on par with the Lord Jesus. If this reading is authentic, however, the force of πίστις (pistis) is probably closer to "faithfulness," a meaning that could perhaps be suitable toward both the Lord and the saints. Nevertheless, if the shorter reading is authentic, later scribes would no doubt have been tempted to alter it. With the parallel in Col 1:4 at hand, τὴν ἀγάπην would have been the most obvious phrase to add. (TCGNT 533 suggests that ἣν ἔχετε would have been added instead of the second τήν if the shorter reading were original, in conformity with Col 1:4, but this is not necessarily so: Scribes often altered the text as minimally as possible, and since the second τήν was already present, replacing it with ἣν ἔχετε, when the meaning was not significantly different from the second τήν, seems unlikely.) Further, ἀγάπην comes after "saints" (thus, τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους ἀγάπην) in some witnesses (81 104 326 365 1175), and the second τήν is lacking (thus, τὴν ἀγάπην εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους) in others (D* F G). Such a floating text normally indicates inauthenticity. On the other hand, τὴν ἀγάπην could easily have dropped out of the text by way of haplography, the Alexandrian scribes' eyes skipping from τήν to τήν. The weak first declension feminine article-noun-article construction is common enough in the NT, occurring over 40 times, yet in four of these texts there is some MS evidence for an omission similar to Eph 1:15 (Rom 11:17; 2 Tim 3:10; Rev 11:2; 21:9). But in none of these places is the Alexandrian testimony united in the omission as it is here. Further, a wholesale Alexandrian omission of τὴν ἀγάπην presupposes a much stronger genealogical relation among the Alexandrian MSS than many scholars would embrace. What seems to tip the scales in favor of the longer reading, however, is the intrinsic evidence: The question of whether πίστις could be used to mean faithfulness in the general sense toward both the Lord and the saints is quite problematic. All in all, a decision is difficult, but the longer reading is, with hesitation, preferred.

13 tn Grk "making mention [of you]."

14 tn The words "I pray" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to clarify the meaning; v. 17 is a subordinate clause to v. 16 ("I pray" in v. 17 is implied from v. 16). Eph 1:15-23 constitutes one sentence in Greek, but a new sentence was started here in the translation in light of contemporary English usage.

15 tn Or "glorious Father." The genitive phrase "of glory" is most likely an attributive genitive. The literal translation "Father of glory" has been retained because of the parallelism with the first line of the verse: "the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory."

16 tn Or "the Spirit of wisdom and revelation," or "a spirit of wisdom and revelation." Verse 17 involves a complex exegetical problem revolving around the Greek term πνεῦμα (pneuma). Some take it to mean "the Spirit," others "a spirit," and still others "spiritual." (1) If "the Spirit" is meant, the idea must be a metonymy of cause for effect, because the author had just indicated in vv. 13-14 that the Spirit was already given (hence, there is no need for him to pray that he be given again). But the effect of the Spirit is wisdom and revelation. (2) If "a spirit" is meant, the idea may be that the readers will have the ability to gain wisdom and insight as they read Paul's letters, but the exact meaning of "a spirit" remains ambiguous. (3) To take the genitives following πνεῦμα as attributed genitives (see ExSyn 89-91), in which the head noun ("S/spirit") functions semantically like an adjective ("spiritual") is both grammatically probable and exegetically consistent.

17 tn Grk "in the knowledge of him."

sn The point of the knowledge of him has nothing to do with what God knows, but with what believers are to know (hence, "your...knowledge*"). Further, the author's prayer is that this knowledge of God would increase, not simply be initiated, since he is writing to believers who already know God (hence, "your growing knowledge of him").

18 tc ‡ Most witnesses, especially of the Byzantine and Western texttypes, though with a few important Alexandrian witnesses (ℵ A D F G Ψ 0278 𝔐 latt sy), add ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") after καρδίας (kardias, "heart"), though it is clearly implied in the shorter (Alexandrian) reading (found in 𝔓46 B 6 33 1175 1739 1881 pc). The longer reading thus looks to be a clarifying gloss, as is frequently found in the Byzantine and Western traditions. The translation above also uses "your" because of English requirements, not because of textual basis.

tn Grk "the."

enlightened[1] – so that you may know what is the hope of his calling,[2] what is the wealth of his glorious[3] inheritance in the saints, 1:19 and what is the incomparable[4] greatness of his power toward[5] us who believe, as displayed in[6] the exercise of his immense strength.[7] 1:20 This power[8] he exercised[9] in Christ when he raised him[10] from the dead and seated him[11] at his right hand in the heavenly realms[12] 1:21 far above every rule and authority and power and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this age but also in the one to come. 1:22 And God[13] put[14] all things under Christ's[15] feet,[16] and he gave him to the church as head over all things.[17] 1:23 Now the church is[18] his body, the fullness of him who fills all in all.[19]

New Life Individually

2:1 And although you were[20] dead[21] in your transgressions and sins, 2:2 in which[22] you formerly lived[23] according to this world's present path,[24] according to the ruler of the kingdom[25] of the air, the ruler of[26] the spirit[27] that is now

---

1 tn The perfect participle πεφωτισμένους (pephōtismenous) may either be part of the prayer ("that the eyes of your heart may be enlightened") or part of the basis of the prayer ("since the eyes of your heart have been enlightened"). Although the participle follows the ἵνα (hina) of v. 17, it is awkward grammatically in the clause. Further, perfect adverbial participles are usually causal in NT Greek. Finally, the context both here and throughout Ephesians seems to emphasize the motif of light as a property belonging to believers. Thus, it seems that the author is saying, "I know that you are saved, that you have had the blinders of the devil removed; because of this, I can now pray that you will fully understand and see the light of God's glorious revelation." Hence, the translation takes the participle to form a part of the basis for the prayer.

2 tn Or "the hope to which he has called you."

sn The hope of his calling. The translation is more formally equivalent for this and the following two phrases, because of the apparently intentional literary force of the original. There is a natural cadence to the three genitive expressions (hope of his calling, wealth of his glorious inheritance, and extraordinary greatness of his power). The essence of the prayer is seen here. Paraphrased it reads as follows: "Since you are enlightened by God's Spirit, I pray that you may comprehend the hope to which he has called you, the spiritual riches that await the saints in glory, and the spiritual power that is available to the saints now." Thus, the prayer focuses on all three temporal aspects of our salvation as these are embedded in the genitives – the past (calling), the future (inheritance), and the present (power toward us who believe).

3 tn Grk "of the glory of his inheritance." Here "inheritance" is taken as an attributed genitive and the head noun, "glory," is thus translated as an adjective, "glorious inheritance."

4 tn Or "immeasurable, surpassing"

5 tn Or "for, to"

6 tn Grk "according to."

7 tn Grk "according to the exercise of the might of his strength."

sn What has been translated as exercise is a term used only of supernatural power in the NT, ἐνέργεια (energeia).

8 tn Grk "which" (v. 20 is a subordinate clause to v. 19).

9 tn The verb "exercised" (the aorist of ἐνεργέω, energeō) has its nominal cognate in "exercise" in v. 19 (ἐνέργεια, energeia).

10 tn Or "This power he exercised in Christ by raising him"; Grk "raising him." The adverbial participle ἐγείρας (egeiras) could be understood as temporal ("when he raised [him]"), which would be contemporaneous to the action of the finite verb "he exercised" earlier in the verse, or as means ("by raising [him]"). The participle has been translated here with the temporal nuance to allow for means to also be a possible interpretation. If the translation focused instead upon means, the temporal nuance would be lost as the time frame for the action of the participle would become indistinct.

11 tc The majority of MSS, especially the Western and Byzantine MSS (D F G Ψ 𝔐 b r Ambst), have the indicative ἐκάθισεν (ekathisen, "he seated") for καθίσας (kathisas, "when he seated, by seating"). The indicative is thus coordinate with ἐνήργησεν (enērgēsen, "he exercised") and provides an additional statement to "he exercised his power." The participle (found in 𝔓[92vid] ℵ A B 0278 33 81 1175 1505 1739 1881 2464 al), on the other hand, is coordinate with ἐγείρας (egeiras) and as such provides evidence of God's power: He exercised his power by raising Christ from the dead and by seating him at his right hand. As intriguing as the indicative reading is, it is most likely an intentional alteration of the original wording, accomplished by an early "Western" scribe, which made its way in the Byzantine text.

12 sn Eph 1:19-20. The point made in these verses is that the power required to live a life pleasing to God is the same power that raised Christ from the dead. For a similar thought, cf. John 15:1-11.

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "subjected."

15 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Christ) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 sn An allusion to Ps 8:6.

17 tn Grk "and he gave him as head over all things to the church."

18 tn Grk "which is." The antecedent of "which" is easily lost in English, though in Greek it is quite clear. In the translation "church" is repeated to clarify the referent.

19 tn Or perhaps, "who is filled entirely."

sn The idea of all in all is either related to the universe (hence, he fills the whole universe entirely) or the church universal (hence, Christ fills the church entirely with his presence and power).

20 tn The adverbial participle "being" (ὄντας, ontas) is taken concessively.

21 sn Chapter 2 starts off with a participle, although you were dead, that is left dangling. The syntax in Greek for vv. 1-3 constitutes one incomplete sentence, though it seems to have been done intentionally. The dangling participle leaves the readers in suspense while they wait for the solution (in v. 4) to their spiritual dilemma.

22 sn The relative pronoun which is feminine as is sins, indicating that sins is the antecedent.

23 tn Grk "walked."

sn The Greek verb translated lived (περιπατέω, peripateō) in the NT letters refers to the conduct of one's life, not to physical walking.

24 tn Or possibly "Aeon."

sn The word translated present path is the same as that which has been translated [this] age in 1:21 (αἰών, aiōn).

25 tn Grk "domain, [place of] authority."

26 tn Grk "of" (but see the note on the word "spirit" later in this verse).

27 sn The ruler of the kingdom of the air is also the ruler of the spirit that is now energizing the sons of disobedience. Although several translations regard the ruler to be the same as the spirit, this is unlikely since the cases in Greek are different (ruler is accusative and spirit is genitive). To get around this, some have suggested that the genitive for spirit is a genitive of apposition. However, the semantics of the genitive of apposition are against such an interpretation (cf. ExSyn 100).

energizing[1] the sons of disobedience,[2] 2:3 among whom[3] all of us[4] also[5] formerly lived out our lives in the cravings of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and the mind, and were by nature children of wrath[6] even as the rest…[7]

2:4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of his great love with which he loved us, 2:5 even though we were dead in transgressions, made us alive together with Christ – by grace you are saved![8] – 2:6 and he raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenly realms in Christ Jesus, 2:7 to demonstrate in the coming ages[9] the surpassing wealth of his grace in kindness toward[10] us in Christ Jesus. 2:8 For by grace you are saved[11] through faith,[12] and this is not from yourselves, it is the gift of God; 2:9 it is not from[13] works, so that no one can boast.[14] 2:10 For we are his workmanship, having been created in Christ Jesus for good works that God prepared beforehand so we may do them.[15]

New Life Corporately

2:11 Therefore remember that formerly you, the Gentiles in the flesh – who are called "uncircumcision" by the so-called "circumcision" that is performed on the body[16] by human hands – 2:12 that you were at that time without the Messiah,[17] alienated from the citizenship of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise,[18] having no hope and without God in the world. 2:13 But now in Christ Jesus you who used to be far away have been brought near by the blood of Christ.[19] 2:14 For he is our peace, the one who made both groups into one[20] and who destroyed the middle wall of partition, the hostility, 2:15 when he nullified[21] in his flesh the law of commandments in decrees. He did this to create in himself one new man[22] out of two,[23] thus making peace, 2:16 and to reconcile them both in one body to God through the cross, by which the hostility has been killed.[24] 2:17 And he came and preached peace to you who were far off and peace to those who were near, 2:18 so that[25] through him we both have access in one Spirit to the Father. 2:19 So then you are no longer

1 tn Grk "working in."

2 sn Sons of disobedience is a Semitic idiom that means "people characterized by disobedience." However, it also contains a subtle allusion to vv. 4-10: Some of those sons of disobedience have become sons of God.

3 sn Among whom. The relative pronoun phrase that begins v. 3 is identical, except for gender, to the one that begins v. 2 (ἐν αἷς [en hais], ἐν οἷς [en hois]). By the structure, the author is building an argument for our hopeless condition: We lived in sin and we lived among sinful people. Our doom looked to be sealed as well in v. 2: Both the external environment (kingdom of the air) and our internal motivation and attitude (the spirit that is now energizing) were under the devil's thumb (cf. 2 Cor 4:4).

4 tn Grk "we all."

5 tn Or "even."

6 sn Children of wrath is a Semitic idiom which may mean either "people characterized by wrath" or "people destined for wrath."

7 sn Eph 2:1-3. The translation of vv. 1-3 is very literal, even to the point of retaining the awkward syntax of the original. See note on the word dead in 2:1.

8 tn Or "by grace you have been saved." The perfect tense in Greek connotes both completed action ("you have been saved") and continuing results ("you are saved").

9 tn Or possibly "to the Aeons who are about to come."

10 tn Or "upon."

11 tn See note on the same expression in v. 5.

12 tc The feminine article is found before πίστεως (pisteōs, "faith") in the Byzantine text as well as in A Ψ 1881 pc. Perhaps for some scribes the article was intended to imply creedal fidelity as a necessary condition of salvation ("you are saved through the faith"), although elsewhere in the corpus Paulinum the phrase διὰ τῆς πίστεως (dia tēs pisteōs) is used for the act of believing rather than the content of faith (cf. Rom 3:30, 31; Gal 3:14; Eph 3:17; Col 2:12). On the other side, strong representatives of the Alexandrian and Western texts (ℵ B D* F G P 0278 6 33 1739 al bo) lack the article. Hence, both text-critically and exegetically, the meaning of the text here is most likely "saved through faith" as opposed to "saved through the faith." Regarding the textual problem, the lack of the article is the preferred reading.

13 tn Or "not as a result of."

14 tn Grk "lest anyone should boast."

15 tn Grk "so that we might walk in them" (or "by them").

sn So that we may do them. Before the devil began to control our walk in sin and among sinful people, God had already planned good works for us to do.

16 tn Grk "in the flesh."

17 tn Or "without Christ." Both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed." Because the context refers to ancient Israel's messianic expectation, "Messiah" was employed in the translation at this point rather than "Christ."

18 tn Or "covenants of the promise."

19 tn Or "have come near in the blood of Christ."

sn See the note on "his blood" in 1:7.

20 tn Grk "who made the both one."

21 tn Or "rendered inoperative." This is a difficult text to translate because it is not easy to find an English term which communicates well the essence of the author's meaning, especially since legal terminology is involved. Many other translations use the term "abolish" (so NRSV, NASB, NIV), but this term implies complete destruction which is not the author's meaning here. The verb καταργέω (katargeō) can readily have the meaning "to cause someth. to lose its power or effectiveness" (BDAG 525 s.v. 2, where this passage is listed), and this meaning fits quite naturally here within the author's legal mindset. A proper English term which communicates this well is "nullify" since this word carries the denotation of "making something legally null and void." This is not, however, a common English word. An alternate term like "rendered inoperative [or ineffective]" is also accurate but fairly inelegant. For this reason, the translation retains the term "nullify"; it is the best choice of the available options, despite its problems.

22 tn In this context the author is not referring to a new individual, but instead to a new corporate entity united in Christ (cf. BDAG 497 s.v. καινός 3.b: "All the Christians together appear as κ. ἄνθρωπος Eph 2:15"). This is clear from the comparison made between the Gentiles and Israel in the immediately preceding verses and the assertion in v. 14 that Christ "made both groups into one." This is a different metaphor than the "new man" of Eph 4:24; in that passage the "new man" refers to the new life a believer has through a relationship to Christ.

23 tn Grk "in order to create the two into one new man." Eph 2:14-16 is one sentence in Greek. A new sentence was started here in the translation for clarity since contemporary English is less tolerant of extended sentences.

24 tn Grk "by killing the hostility in himself."

25 tn Or "for." BDAG gives the consecutive ὅτι (hoti) as a possible category of NT usage (BDAG 732 s.v. 5.c).

foreigners and noncitizens, but you are fellow citizens with the saints and members of God's household, 2:20 because you have been built[1] on the foundation of the apostles and prophets,[2] with Christ Jesus himself as[3] the cornerstone.[4] 2:21 In him[5] the whole building,[6] being joined together, grows into a holy temple in the Lord, 2:22 in whom you also are being built together into a dwelling place of God in the Spirit.

Paul's Relationship to the Divine Mystery

3:1 For this reason I, Paul, the prisoner of Christ Jesus[7] for the sake of you Gentiles – 3:2 if indeed[8] you have heard of the stewardship[9] of God's grace that was given to me for you, 3:3 that[10] by revelation the divine secret[11] was made known to me, as I wrote before briefly.[12] 3:4 When reading this,[13] you will be able to[14] understand my insight into this secret[15] of Christ. 3:5 Now this secret[16] was not disclosed to people[17] in former[18] generations as it has now been revealed to his holy apostles and prophets by[19] the Spirit, 3:6 namely, that through the gospel[20] the Gentiles are fellow heirs, fellow members[21] of the body, and fellow partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus. 3:7 I became a servant of this gospel[22] according to the gift of God's grace that was given to me by[23] the exercise of his power.[24] 3:8 To me – less than the least of all the saints[25] – this grace was given,[26] to proclaim to the Gentiles the unfathomable riches of Christ 3:9 and to enlighten[27] everyone about God's secret plan[28] – a secret that has been hidden for ages[29] in God[30] who has created all things. 3:10 The purpose of this enlightenment is that[31] through the church the multifaceted wisdom[32] of God should now be disclosed to the rulers and the authorities in the heavenly realms. 3:11 This was according

1 tn Grk "having been built."

2 sn Apostles and prophets. Because the prophets appear after the mention of the apostles and because they are linked together in 3:5 as recipients of revelation about the church, they are to be regarded not as Old Testament prophets, but as New Testament prophets.

3 tn Grk "while Christ Jesus himself is" or "Christ Jesus himself being."

4 tn Or perhaps "capstone" (NAB). The meaning of ἀκρογωνιαῖος (akrogōniaios) is greatly debated. The meaning "capstone" is proposed by J. Jeremias (TDNT 1:792), but the most important text for this meaning (T. Sol. 22:7-23:4) is late and possibly not even an appropriate parallel. The only place ἀκρογωνιαῖος is used in the LXX is Isa 28:16, and there it clearly refers to a cornerstone that is part of a foundation. Furthermore, the imagery in this context has the building growing off the cornerstone upward, whereas if Christ were the capstone, he would not assume his position until the building was finished, which vv. 21-22 argue against.

5 tn Grk "in whom" (v. 21 is a relative clause, subordinate to v. 20).

6 tc Although several important witnesses (𝔓[1] A C P 6 81 326 1739[c] 1881) have πᾶσα ἡ οἰκοδομή (pasa hē oikodomē), instead of πᾶσα οἰκοδομή (the reading of ℵ* B D F G Ψ 33 1739* 𝔐), the article is almost surely a scribal addition intended to clarify the meaning of the text, for with the article the meaning is unambiguously "the whole building."

tn Or "every building." Although "every building" is a more natural translation of the Greek, it does not fit as naturally into the context, which (with its emphasis on corporate unity) seems to stress the idea of one building.

7 tc Several early and important witnesses, chiefly of the Western text (ℵ* D* F G [365]), lack Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou, "Jesus") here, while most Alexandrian and Byzantine mss (𝔓[46] ℵ[1] A B [C] D[1] Ψ 33 1739 [1881] 𝔐 lat sy bo) have the word. However, because of the Western text's proclivities to add or delete to the text, seemingly at whim, serious doubts should be attached to the shorter reading. It is strengthened, however, by ℵ's support. Nevertheless, since both ℵ and D were corrected with the addition of Ἰησοῦ, their testimony might be questioned. Further, in uncial script the nomina sacra here could have led to missing a word by way of homoioteleuton (ΧΥΙΥ). At the same time, in light of the rarity of scribal omission of nomina sacra (see TCGNT 582, n. 1), a decision for inclusion of the word here must be tentative. NA[27] rightly places Ἰησοῦ in brackets.

8 sn If indeed. The author is not doubting whether his audience has heard, but is rather using provocative language (if indeed) to engage his audience in thinking about the magnificence of God's grace. However, in English translation, the apodosis ("then"-clause) does not come until v. 13, leaving the protasis ("if"-clause) dangling. Eph 3:2-7 constitute one sentence in Greek.

9 tn Or "administration," "dispensation," "commission."

10 tn Or "namely, that is."

11 tn Or "mystery."

12 tn Or "as I wrote above briefly."

sn As I wrote briefly may refer to the author's brief discussion of the divine secret in 1:9.

13 tn Grk "which, when reading."

14 tn Grk "you are able to."

15 tn Or "mystery."

16 tn Grk "which." Verse 5 is technically a relative clause, subordinate to the thought of v. 4.

17 tn Grk "the sons of men" (a Semitic idiom referring to human beings, hence, "people").

18 tn Grk "other."

19 tn Or "in."

20 sn The phrase through the gospel is placed last in the sentence in Greek for emphasis. It has been moved forward for clarity.

21 tn Grk "and fellow members."

22 tn Grk "of which I was made a minister," "of which I became a servant."

23 tn Grk "according to."

24 sn On the exercise of his power see 1:19-20.

25 sn In Pauline writings saints means any true believer. Thus for Paul to view himself as less than the least of all the saints is to view himself as the most unworthy object of Christ's redemption.

26 sn The parallel phrases to proclaim and to enlighten which follow indicate why God's grace was manifested to Paul. Grace was not something just to be received, but to be shared with others (cf. Acts 13:47).

27 tn There is a possible causative nuance in the Greek verb, but this is difficult to convey in the translation.

28 tn Grk "what is the plan of the divine secret." Earlier the author had used οἰκονομία (oikonomia; here "plan") to refer to his own "stewardship" (v. 2). But now he is speaking about the content of this secret, not his own activity in relation to it.

29 tn Or "for eternity," or perhaps "from the Aeons." Cf. 2:2, 7.

30 tn Or "by God." It is possible that ἐν (en) plus the dative here indicates agency, that is, that God has performed the action of hiding the secret. However, this usage of the preposition ἐν is quite rare in the NT, and even though here it does follow a perfect passive verb as in the Classical idiom, it is more likely that a different nuance is intended.

31 tn Grk "that." Verse 10 is a subordinate clause to the verb "enlighten" in v. 9.

32 tn Or "manifold wisdom," "wisdom in its rich variety."

to[1] the eternal purpose that he accomplished in Christ Jesus our Lord, 3:12 in whom we have boldness and confident access[2] to God[3] because of[4] Christ's[5] faithfulness.[6] 3:13 For this reason I ask you[7] not to lose heart because of what I am suffering for you,[8] which[9] is your glory.[10]

Prayer for Strengthened Love

3:14 For this reason[11] I kneel[12] before the Father,[13] 3:15 from[14] whom every family[15] in heaven and on the earth is named. 3:16 I pray that[16] according to the wealth of his glory he may grant you to be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inner person, 3:17 that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith, so that, because you have been rooted and grounded in love, 3:18 you may be able to comprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth,[17] 3:19 and thus to know the love of Christ that surpasses knowledge, so that you may be filled up to[18] all the fullness of God.

3:20 Now to him who by the power that is working within us[19] is able to do far beyond[20] all that we ask or think, 3:21 to him be the glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen.

Live in Unity

4:1 I, therefore, the prisoner for the Lord,[21] urge you to live[22] worthily of the calling with which you have been called,[23] 4:2 with all humility and gentleness,[24] with patience, bearing with[25] one another in love, 4:3 making every effort to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. 4:4 There is one body and one Spirit, just as you too were called to the one hope of your calling, 4:5 one Lord, one faith, one baptism, 4:6 one God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all.

---

1 tn Grk "according to." The verse is a prepositional phrase subordinate to v. 10.

2 tn Grk "access in confidence."

3 tn The phrase "to God" is not in the text, but is clearly implied by the preceding, "access."

4 tn Grk "through," "by way of."

5 tn Grk "his."

6 tn Or "faith in him." A decision is difficult here. Though traditionally translated "faith in Jesus Christ," an increasing number of NT scholars are arguing that πίστις Χριστοῦ (pistis Christou) and similar phrases in Paul (here and in Rom 3:22, 26; Gal 2:16, 20; 3:22; Phil 3:9) involve a subjective genitive and mean "Christ's faith" or "Christ's faithfulness" (cf., e.g., G. Howard, "The 'Faith of Christ'," ExpTim 85 [1974]: 212-15; R. B. Hays, The Faith of Jesus Christ [SBLDS]; Morna D. Hooker, "Πίστις Χριστοῦ," NTS 35 [1989]: 321-42). Noteworthy among the arguments for the subjective genitive view is that when πίστις takes a personal genitive it is almost never an objective genitive (cf. Matt 9:2, 22, 29; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:25, 48; 17:19; 18:42; 22:32; Rom 1:8; 12; 3:3; 4:5, 12, 16; 1 Cor 2:5; 15:14, 17; 2 Cor 10:15; Phil 2:17; Col 1:4; 2:5; 1 Thess 1:8; 3:2, 5, 10; 2 Thess 1:3; Titus 1:1; Phlm 6; 1 Pet 1:9, 21; 2 Pet 1:5). On the other hand, the objective genitive view has its adherents: A. Hultgren, "The Pistis Christou Formulations in Paul," NovT 22 (1980): 248-63; J. D. G. Dunn, "Once More, ΠΙΣΤΙΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ," SBL Seminar Papers, 1991, 730-44. Most commentaries on Romans and Galatians usually side with the objective view.

sn Because of Christ's faithfulness. Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

7 tn Grk "I ask." No direct object is given in Greek, leaving room for the possibility that either "God" (since the verb is often associated with prayer) or "you" is in view.

8 tn Grk "my trials on your behalf."

9 sn Which. The antecedent (i.e., the word or concept to which this clause refers back) may be either "what I am suffering for you" or the larger concept of the recipients not losing heart over Paul's suffering for them. The relative pronoun "which" is attracted to the predicate nominative "glory" in its gender and number (feminine singular), making the antecedent ambiguous. Paul's suffering for them could be viewed as their glory (cf. Col 1:24 for a parallel) in that his suffering has brought about their salvation, but if so his suffering must be viewed as more than his present imprisonment in Rome; it would be a general description of his ministry overall (cf. 2 Cor 11:23-27). The other option is that the author is implicitly arguing that the believers have continued to have courage in the midst of his trials (as not to lose heart suggests) and that this is their glory. Philippians 1:27-28 offers an interesting parallel: The believers' courage in the face of adversity is a sign of their salvation.

10 tn Or "Or who is your glory?" The relative pronoun ἥτις (hētis), if divided differently, would become ἤ τίς (ē tis). Since there were no word breaks in the original mss, either word division is possible. The force of the question would be that for the readers to become discouraged over Paul's imprisonment would mean that they were no longer trusting in God's sovereignty.

11 sn For this reason resumes the point begun in v. 1, after a long parenthesis.

12 tn Grk "I bend my knees."

13 tc Most Western and Byzantine witnesses, along with a few others (𝔑² D F G Ψ 0278 1881 𝔐 lat sy), have "of our Lord Jesus Christ" after "Father," but such an edifying phrase cannot explain the rise of the reading that lacks it, especially when the shorter reading is attested by early and important witnesses such as 𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔑* A B C P 6 33 81 365 1175 1739 co Or Hier.

14 tn Or "by."

15 tn Or "the whole family."

16 tn Grk "that." In Greek v. 16 is a subordinate clause to vv. 14-15.

17 sn The object of these dimensions is not stated in the text. Interpreters have suggested a variety of referents for this unstated object, including the cross of Christ, the heavenly Jerusalem (which is then sometimes linked to the Church), God's power, the fullness of salvation given in Christ, the Wisdom of God, and the love of Christ. Of these interpretations, the last two are the most plausible. Associations from Wisdom literature favor the Wisdom of God, but the immediate context favors the love of Christ. For detailed discussion of these interpretive options, see A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC), 207-13, who ultimately favors the love of Christ.

18 tn Or "with."

19 sn On the power that is working within us see 1:19-20.

20 tn Or "infinitely beyond," "far more abundantly than."

21 tn Grk "prisoner in the Lord."

22 tn Grk "walk." The verb "walk" in the NT letters refers to the conduct of one's life, not to physical walking.

23 sn With which you have been called. The calling refers to the Holy Spirit's prompting that caused them to believe. The author is thus urging his readers to live a life that conforms to their saved status before God.

24 tn Or "meekness." The word is often used in Hellenistic Greek of the merciful execution of justice on behalf of those who have no voice by those who are in a position of authority (Matt 11:29; 21:5).

25 tn Or "putting up with"; or "forbearing."

4:7 But to each one of us grace was given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. 4:8 Therefore it says, "When he ascended on high he captured*[1] *captives; he gave gifts to men."[2] 4:9 Now what is the meaning of "he ascended," except that he also descended[3] to the lower regions,[4] namely, the earth?[5] 4:10 He, the very one[6] who descended, is also the one who ascended above all the heavens, in order to fill all things. 4:11 It was he[7] who gave some as apostles, some as prophets, some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers,[8] 4:12 to equip[9] the saints for the work of ministry, that is,[10] to build up the body of Christ, 4:13 until we all attain to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God – a mature person, attaining to[11] the measure of Christ's full stature.[12] 4:14 So[13] we are no longer to be children, tossed back and forth by waves and carried about by every wind of teaching by the trickery of people who craftily carry out their deceitful schemes.[14] 4:15 But practicing the truth in love,[15] we will in all things

[1] tn Grk "he led captive captivity."

[2] sn A quotation which is perhaps ultimately derived from Ps 68:18. However, the wording here differs from that of Ps 68 in both the Hebrew text and the LXX in a few places, the most significant of which is reading "gave gifts to" in place of "received gifts from" as in HT and LXX. It has sometimes been suggested that the author of Ephesians modified the text he was citing in order to better support what he wanted to say here. Such modifications are sometimes found in rabbinic exegesis from this and later periods, but it is also possible that the author was simply citing a variant of Ps 68 known to him but which has not survived outside its quotation here (W. H. Harris, The Descent of Christ [AGJU 32], 104). Another possibility is that the words here, which strongly resemble Ps 68:19 HT and LXX (68:18 ET), are actually part of an early Christian hymn quoted by the author.

[3] tc The majority of mss (𝔑² B C³ Ψ 𝔐) read πρῶτον (prōton, "first") here in conjunction with this verb: "he first descended." The shorter reading, which lacks πρῶτον, should be considered original on the basis of both external and internal evidence: It has strong external support from the Alexandrian and Western texttypes (𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔑* A C* D F G l^vid 082 6 33 81 1739 1881 pc); internally, the inclusion of πρῶτον is most likely an addition to clarify the sense of the passage.

[4] tc The Western texttype (D* F G it) lacks the plural noun μέρη (merē, "regions"); the shorter reading cannot be dismissed out of hand since it is also supported by 𝔓⁴⁶ (which often has strong affinities, however, with the Western text). The inclusion of the word has strong external support from important, early mss as well as the majority of Byzantine cursives (𝔑 A B C D² l Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐). Certain scribes may have deleted the word, thinking it superfluous; in addition, if the shorter reading were original one would expect to see at least a little variation in clarifying additions to the text. For these reasons the inclusion of μέρη should be regarded as original.

[5] tn Grk "to the lower parts of the earth." This phrase has been variously interpreted: (1) The traditional view understands it as a reference to the underworld (hell), where Jesus is thought to have descended in the three days between his death and resurrection. In this case, "of the earth" would be a partitive genitive. (2) A second option is to translate the phrase "of the earth" as a genitive of apposition: "to the lower parts, namely, the earth" (as in the present translation). Many recent scholars hold this view and argue that it is a reference to the incarnation. (3) A third option, which also sees the phrase "of the earth" as a genitive of apposition, is that the descent in the passage occurs after the ascent rather than before it, and refers to the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost (cf. Acts 4:11-16). Support for this latter view is found in the intertestamental and rabbinic use of Ps 68:18 (quoted in v. 8), which is consistently and solely interpreted as a reference to Moses' ascent of Mt. Sinai to "capture" the words of the law. The probability, therefore, is that the comments here in v. 9 reflect a polemic against the interpretation of Ps 68:18 in certain circles as a reference to Moses. See W. H. Harris, The Descent of Christ (AGJU 32), 46-54; 171-204.

[6] tn The Greek text lays specific emphasis on "He" through the use of the intensive pronoun, αὐτός (autos). This is reflected in the English translation through the use of "the very one."

[7] tn The emphasis on Christ is continued through the use of the intensive pronoun, αὐτός (autos), and is rendered in English as "it was he" as this seems to lay emphasis on the "he."

[8] sn Some interpreters have understood the phrase pastors and teachers to refer to one and the same group. This would mean that all pastors are teachers and that all teachers are pastors. This position is often taken because it is recognized that both nouns (i.e., pastors and teachers) are governed by one article in Greek. But because the nouns are plural, it is extremely unlikely that they refer to the same group, but only that the author is linking them closely together. It is better to regard the pastors as a subset of teachers. In other words, all pastors are teachers, but not all teachers are pastors. See ExSyn 284.

[9] tn On the translation of πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων (pros ton katartismon tōn hagiōn) as "to equip the saints" see BDAG 526 s.v. καταρτισμός. In this case the genitive is taken as objective and the direct object of the verbal idea implied in καταρτισμός (katartismos).

[10] tn The εἰς (eis) clause is taken as epexegetical to the previous εἰς clause, namely, εἰς ἔργον διακονίας (eis ergon diakonias).

[11] tn The words "attaining to" were supplied in the translation to pick up the καταντήσωμεν (katantēsōmen) mentioned earlier in the sentence and the εἰς (eis) which heads up this clause.

[12] tn Grk "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." On this translation of ἡλικία (hēlikia, "stature") see BDAG 436 s.v. 3.

[13] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[14] tn While the sense of the passage is clear enough, translation in English is somewhat difficult. The Greek says: "by the trickery of men, by craftiness with the scheme of deceit." The point is that the author is concerned about Christians growing into maturity. He is fearful that certain kinds of very cunning people, who are skilled at deceitful scheming, should come in and teach false doctrines which would in turn stunt the growth of the believers.

[15] tn The meaning of the participle ἀληθεύοντες (alētheuontes; from the verb ἀληθεύω [alētheuō]) is debated. In classical times the verb could mean "to speak the truth," or "to be true, to prove true." In the LXX it appears five times (Gen 20:16; 42:16; Prov 21:3; Isa 44:26; Sir 34:4) and translates four different Hebrew words; there it is an ethical term used of proving or being true, not with the idea of speaking the truth. In the NT the only other place the verb appears is in Gal 4:16 where it means "to speak the truth." However, in Ephesians the concept of "being truthful" is the best sense of the word. In contrast to the preceding verse, where there are three prepositional phrases to denote falsehood and deceit, the present word speaks of being real or truthful in both conduct and speech. Their deceit was not only in their words but also in their conduct. In other words, the believers' conduct should be transparent, revealing the real state of affairs, as opposed to hiding or suppressing the truth through cunning and deceit. See H. W. Hoehner, Ephesians, 564-65, and R. Bultmann, TDNT 1:251.

grow up into Christ, who is the head. 4:16 From him the whole body grows, fitted and held together[1] through every supporting ligament.[2] As each one does its part, the body grows in love.

Live in Holiness

4:17 So I say this, and insist[3] in the Lord, that you no longer live as the Gentiles do, in the futility[4] of their thinking.[5] 4:18 They are darkened in their understanding,[6] being alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them due to the hardness of their hearts. 4:19 Because they are callous, they have given themselves over to indecency for the practice of every kind of impurity with greediness.[7] 4:20 But you did not learn about Christ like this, 4:21 if indeed you heard about him and were taught in him, just as the truth is in Jesus. 4:22 You were taught with reference to your former way of life to lay aside[8] the old man who is being corrupted in accordance with deceitful desires, 4:23 to be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 4:24 and to put on the new man who has been created in God's image[9] – in righteousness and holiness that comes from truth.[10]

4:25 Therefore, having laid aside falsehood, each one of you speak the truth with his neighbor,[11] for we are members of one another. 4:26 Be angry and do not sin*;*[12] do not let the sun go down on the cause of your anger.[13] 4:27 Do not give the devil an opportunity. 4:28 The one who steals must steal no longer; rather he must labor, doing good with his own hands, so that he may have something to share with the one who has need. 4:29 You must let no unwholesome word come out of your mouth, but only what is beneficial for the building up of the one in need,[14] that it may give grace to those who hear. 4:30 And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption. 4:31 You must put away every kind of bitterness, anger, wrath, quarreling, and evil, slanderous talk. 4:32 Instead,[15] be kind to one

---

1 tn The Greek participle συμβιβαζόμενον (sumbibazomenon) translated "held together" also has in different contexts, the idea of teaching implied in it.

2 tn Grk "joint of supply."

3 tn On the translation of μαρτύρομαι (marturomai) as "insist" see BDAG 619 s.v. 2.

4 tn On the translation of ματαιότης (mataiotēs) as "futility" see BDAG 621 s.v.

5 tn Or "thoughts," "mind."

6 tn In the Greek text this clause is actually subordinate to περιπατεῖ (peripatei) in v. 17. It was broken up in the English translation so as to avoid an unnecessarily long and cumbersome statement.

7 sn Greediness refers to an increasing desire for more and more. The point is that sinful passions and desires are never satisfied.

8 tn An alternative rendering for the infinitives in vv. 22-24 ("to lay aside... to be renewed... to put on") is "that you have laid aside... that you are being renewed... that you have put on." The three infinitives of vv. 22 (ἀποθέσθαι, apothesthai), 23 (ἀνανεοῦσθαι, ananeousthai), and 24 (ἐνδύσασθαι, endusasthai), form part of an indirect discourse clause; they constitute the teaching given to the believers addressed in the letter. The problem in translation is that one cannot be absolutely certain whether they go back to indicatives in the original statement (i.e., "you have put off") or imperatives (i.e., "put off!"). Every other occurrence of an aorist infinitive in indirect discourse in the NT goes back to an imperative, but in all of these examples the indirect discourse is introduced by a verb that implies a command. The verb διδάσκω (didaskō) in the corpus Paulinum may be used to relate the indicatives of the faith as well as the imperatives. This translation implies that the infinitives go back to imperatives, though the alternate view that they refer back to indicatives is also a plausible interpretation. For further discussion, see ExSyn 605.

9 tn Or "in God's likeness." Grk "according to God." The preposition κατά used here denotes a measure of similarity or equality (BDAG 513 s.v. B.5.b.α).

10 tn Or "in righteousness and holiness which is based on truth" or "originated from truth."

11 sn A quotation from Zech 8:16.

12 sn A quotation from Ps 4:4. Although several translations render the phrase Be angry and do not sin as "If you are angry, do not sin" such is unlikely on a grammatical, lexical, and historical level (see D. B. Wallace, "Ὀργίζεσθε in Ephesians 4:26: Command or Condition?" CTR 3 [1989]: 352-72). The idea of vv. 26-27 is as follows: Christians are to exercise a righteous indignation over sin in the midst of the believing community (v. 26a; note that v. 25 is restricting the discussion to those in the body of Christ). When other believers sin, such people should be gently and quickly confronted (v. 26b), for if the body of Christ does not address sin in its midst, the devil gains a foothold (v. 27). "Entirely opposite of the 'introspective conscience' view, this text seems to be a shorthand expression for church discipline, suggesting that there is a biblical warrant for δικαία ὀργή [dikaia orgē] (as the Greeks put it) – righteous indignation" (ExSyn 492).

13 tn The word παροργισμός (parorgismos), typically translated "anger" in most versions is used almost exclusively of the source of anger rather than the results in Greek literature (thus, it refers to an external cause or provocation rather than an internal reaction). The notion of "cause of your anger" is both lexically and historically justified. The apparently proverbial nature of the statement ("Do not let the sun go down on the cause of your anger") finds several remarkable parallels in Pss. Sol. 8:8-9: "(8) God laid bare their sins in the full light of day; All the earth came to know the righteous judgments of God. (9) In secret places underground their iniquities (were committed) to provoke (Him) to anger" (R. H. Charles' translation). Not only is παροργισμός used, but righteous indignation against God's own people and the laying bare of their sins in broad daylight are also seen.

14 tn Grk "but if something good for the building up of the need." The final genitive τῆς χρείας (tēs chreias) may refer to "the need of the moment" or it may refer to the need of a particular person or group of people as the next phrase "give grace to those who hear" indicates.

15 tc ‡ Although most witnesses have either δέ (de; 𝔓⁴⁹ 𝔑 A D² Ψ 33 1739ᵐᵉ 𝔐 lat) or οὖν (oun; D* F G 1175) here, a few important ᴍss lack a conjunction (𝔓⁴⁶ B 0278 6 1739* 1881). If either conjunction were originally in the text, it is difficult to explain how the asyndetic construction could have arisen (although the dropping of δέ could have occurred via homoioteleuton). Further, although Hellenistic Greek rarely joined sentences without a conjunction, such does occur in the corpus Paulinum on occasion, especially to underscore a somber point. "Instead" has been supplied in the translation because of stylistic requirements, not textual basis. NA²⁷ places δέ in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

another, compassionate, forgiving one another, just as God in Christ also forgave you.[1]

Live in Love

5:1 Therefore, be[2] imitators of God as dearly loved children 5:2 and live[3] in love, just as Christ also loved us[4] and gave himself for us, a sacrificial and fragrant offering[5] to God. 5:3 But[6] among you there must not be either sexual immorality, impurity of any kind,[7] or greed, as these are not fitting for the saints.[8] 5:4 Neither should there be vulgar speech, foolish talk, or coarse jesting – all of which are out of character – but rather thanksgiving. 5:5 For you can be confident of this one thing:[9] that no person who is immoral, impure, or greedy (such a person is an idolater) has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God.

Live in the Light

5:6 Let nobody deceive you with empty words, for because of these things God's wrath comes on the sons of disobedience.[10] 5:7 Therefore do not be partakers with them,[11] 5:8 for you were at one time darkness, but now you are[12] light in the Lord. Walk as children of the light – 5:9 for the fruit of the light[13] consists in[14] all goodness, righteousness, and truth – 5:10 trying to learn[15] what is pleasing to the Lord. 5:11 Do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but rather[16] expose them.[17] 5:12 For the things they do[18] in secret are shameful even to mention. 5:13 But all things being exposed by the light are made evident. 5:14 For everything made evident is light, and for this reason it says:[19]

---

[1] tn Or "forgiving."

[2] tn Or "become."

[3] tn Grk "walk." The NT writers often used the verb "walk" (περιπατέω, peripateō) to refer to ethical conduct (cf. Rom 8:4; Gal 5:16; Col 4:5).

[4] tc A number of important witnesses have ὑμᾶς (humas, "you"; e.g., ℵ* A B P 0159 81 1175 al it co as well as several fathers). Other, equally important witnesses read ἡμᾶς (hēmas, "us"; 𝔓[46] ℵ[2] D F G Ψ 0278 33 1739 1881 al lat sy). It is possible that ἡμᾶς was accidentally introduced via homoioarcton with the previous word (ἠγάπησεν, ēgapēsen). On the other hand, ὑμᾶς may have been motivated by the preceding ὑμῖν (humin) in 4:32 and second person verbs in 5:1, 2. Further, the flow of argument seems to require the first person pronoun. A decision is difficult to make, but the first person pronoun has a slightly greater probability of being original.

[5] tn Grk "an offering and sacrifice to God as a smell of fragrance." The first expression, προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν (prosphoran kai thusian), is probably a hendiadys and has been translated such that "sacrificial" modifies "offering." The second expression, εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας (eis osmēn euōdias, "as a smell of fragrance") has been translated as "a fragrant offering"; see BDAG 728-29 s.v. ὀσμή 2. Putting these two together in a clear fashion in English yields the translation: "a sacrificial and fragrant offering to God."

[6] tn The term "But" translates the δέ (de) in a contrastive way in light of the perfect obedience of Jesus in vv. 1-2 and the vices mentioned in v. 3.

[7] tn Grk "all impurity."

[8] tn Grk "just as is fitting for saints." The καθώς (kathōs) was rendered with "as" and the sense is causal, i.e., "for" or "because." The negative particle "not" ("for these are not proper for the saints") in this clause was supplied in English so as to make the sense very clear, i.e., that these vices are not befitting of those who name the name of Christ.

[9] tn Grk "be knowing this." See also 2 Pet 1:20 for a similar phrase: τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες (touto prōton ginōskontes).

[10] sn The expression sons of disobedience is a Semitic idiom that means "people characterized by disobedience." In this context it refers to "all those who are disobedient." Cf. Eph 2:2-3.

[11] tn The genitive αὐτῶν (autōn) has been translated as a genitive of association because of its use with συμμέτοχοι (summetochoi) – a verb which implies association in the σύν- (sun-) prefix.

[12] tn The verb "you are" is implied in the Greek text, but is supplied in the English translation to make it clear.

[13] tc Several mss (𝔓[46] D[2] Ψ 𝔐) have πνεύματος (pneumatos, "Spirit") instead of φωτός (phōtos, "light"). Although most today regard φωτός as obviously original (UBS[4] gives it an "A" rating), a case could be made that πνεύματος is what the author wrote. First, although this is largely a Byzantine reading (D[2] often, if not normally, assimilates to the Byzantine text), 𝔓[46] gives the reading much greater credibility. Internally, the φωτός at the end of v. 8 could have lined up above the πνεύματος in v. 9 in a scribe's exemplar, thus occasioning dittography. (It is interesting to note that in both 𝔓[49] and ℵ the two instances of φωτός line up.) However, written in a contracted form, as a nomen sacrum (ΠΝC) – a practice found even in the earliest mss – πνεύματος would not have been easily confused with ΦΩΤΟC (there being only the last letter to occasion homoioteleuton rather than the last three). Further, the external evidence for φωτός is quite compelling (𝔓[49] ℵ A B D* F G P 33 81 1739 1881 2464 pc latt co); it is rather doubtful that the early and widespread witnesses all mistook πνεύματος for φωτός. In addition, πνεύματος can be readily explained as harking back to Gal 5:22 ("the fruit of the Spirit"). Thus, on balance, φωτός appears to be original, giving rise to the reading πνεύματος.

[14] tn Grk "in." The idea is that the fruit of the light is "expressed in" or "consists of."

[15] tn BDAG 255 s.v. δοκιμάζω 1 translates δοκιμάζοντες (dokimazontes) in Eph 5:10 as "try to learn."

[16] tn The Greek conjunction καὶ (kai) seems to be functioning here ascensively, (i.e., "even"), but is difficult to render in this context using good English. It may read something like: "but rather even expose them!"

[17] tn Grk "rather even expose."

[18] tn The participle τὰ...γινόμενα (ta...ginomena) usually refers to "things happening" or "things which are," but with the following genitive phrase ὑπ᾽ αὐτῶν (hup' autōn), which indicates agency, the idea seems to be "things being done." This passive construction was translated as an active one to simplify the English style.

[19] sn The following passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

"Awake,[1] O sleeper![2]
Rise from the dead, and Christ will shine on you!"[3]

Live Wisely

5:15 Therefore be very careful how you live – not as unwise but as wise, 5:16 taking advantage of every opportunity, because the days are evil. 5:17 For this reason do not be foolish, but be wise[4] by understanding[5] what the Lord's will is. 5:18 And do not get drunk with wine, which[6] is debauchery,[7] but be filled by the Spirit,[8] 5:19 speaking to one another in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making music[9] in[10] your hearts to the Lord, 5:20 always giving thanks to God the Father for each other[11] in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, 5:21 and submitting to one another out of reverence for Christ.[12]

Exhortations to Households

5:22[13] Wives, submit[14] to your husbands as to the Lord, 5:23 because the husband is the head of the wife as also Christ is the head of the church – he himself being the savior of the body. 5:24 But as the church submits to Christ, so also wives should submit to their husbands in everything. 5:25 Husbands, love your[15] wives just as Christ loved the church and gave himself for her 5:26 to sanctify her by cleansing her[16] with the washing of the water by the word, 5:27 so that

---

1 tn Grk "Rise up."

2 tn The articular nominative participle ὁ καθεύδων (ho katheudōn) is probably functioning as a nominative for vocative. Thus, it has been translated as "O sleeper."

3 sn A composite quotation, possibly from Isa 26:19; 51:17; 52:1; and 60:1.

4 tn "become wise by understanding"; Grk "understanding." The imperative "be wise" is apparently implied by the construction of vv. 15-21. See the following text-critical note for discussion.

5 tc ‡ The best witnesses read the imperative here (so 𝔓46 ℵ A B P 0278 33 81 1739 pc). The participle is found primarily in the Western and Byzantine texttypes (D2 Ψ 1881 𝔐 latt [D* F G are slightly different, but support the participial reading]). But the participle is superior on internal grounds: The structure of v. 17 almost requires an imperative after ἀλλά (alla), for this gives balance to the clause: "Do not become foolish, but understand..." If the participle is original, it may be imperatival (and thus should be translated just like an imperative), but such is quite rare in the NT. More likely, there is an implied imperative as follows: "Do not become foolish, but become wise, understanding what the will of the Lord is." Either way, the participle is the harder reading and ought therefore to be considered original. It is significant that seeing an implied imperative in this verse affords a certain symmetry to the author's thought in vv. 15-21: There are three main sections (vv. 15-16, v. 17, vv. 18-21), each of which provides a negative injunction, followed by a positive injunction, followed by a present adverbial participle. If συνίετε (suniete) is original, this symmetry is lost. Thus, even though the external evidence for συνιέντες (sunientes) is not nearly as weighty as for the imperative, both the transcriptional and intrinsic evidence support it.

6 tn Grk "in which."

7 tn Or "dissipation." See BDAG 148 s.v. ἀσωτία.

8 tn Many have taken ἐν πνεύματι (en pneumati) as indicating content, i.e., one is to be filled with the Spirit. ExSyn 375 states, "There are no other examples in biblical Greek in which ἐν + the dative after πληρόω indicates content. Further, the parallel with οἴνῳ as well as the common grammatical category of means suggest that the idea intended is that believers are to be filled by means of the [Holy] Spirit. If so there seems to be an unnamed agent. The meaning of this text can only be fully appreciated in light of the πληρόω language in Ephesians. Always the term is used in connection with a member of the Trinity. Three considerations seem to be key: (1) In Eph 3:19 the 'hinge' prayer introducing the last half of the letter makes a request that the believers 'be filled with all the fullness of God' (πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν πλήρωμα τοῦ θεοῦ). The explicit content of πληρόω is thus God's fullness (probably a reference to his moral attributes). (2) In 4:10 Christ is said to be the agent of filling (with v. 11 adding the specifics of his giving spiritual gifts). (3) The author then brings his argument to a crescendo in 5:18: Believers are to be filled by Christ by means of the Spirit with the content of the fullness of God."

9 tn See BDAG 1096 s.v. ψάλλω.

10 tn Or "with."

11 tn Grk "for all." The form "all" can be either neuter or masculine.

12 sn Eph 5:19-21. In Eph 5:18 the author gives the command to be filled by means of the Holy Spirit. In 5:19-21 there follows five participles: (1) speaking; (2) singing; (3) making music; (4) giving thanks; (5) submitting. These participles have been variously interpreted, but perhaps the two most likely interpretations are (1) the participles indicate the means by which one is filled by the Spirit; (2) the participles indicate the result of being filled by the Spirit. The fact that the participles are present tense and follow the command (i.e., "be filled") would tend to support both of these options. But it seems out of Paul's character to reduce the filling of the Spirit to a formula of some kind. To the extent that this is true, it is unlikely then that the author is here stating the means for being filled by the Spirit. Because it is in keeping with Pauline theology and has good grammatical support, it is better to take the participles as indicating certain results of being filled by the Spirit. See ExSyn 639.

13 tn Many scholars regard Eph 5:21 as the verse which introduces this section, rather than 5:22. This is due in part to the lack of a main verb in this verse (see tc note which follows). This connection is not likely, however, because it requires the participle ὑποτασσόμενοι (hupotassomenoi, "submitting") in 5:21 to act as the main verb of the section, and this participle more likely is linked to the command "be filled by the Spirit" in 5:18 as a participle of result (see sn above). In any case, 5:21 does form a strong link between 5:18-21 and what follows, so the paragraph division which has been placed between 5:21 and 22 should not be viewed as a complete break in the author's thought.

14 tc The witnesses for the shorter reading (in which the verb "submit" is only implied) are minimal (𝔓46 B Cl Hier^{mss}), but significant and early. The rest of the witnesses add one of two verb forms as required by the sense of the passage (picking up the verb from v. 21). Several of these witnesses have ὑποτασσέσθωσαν (hupotassesthōsan), the third person imperative (so ℵ A I P Ψ 0278 33 81 1175 1739 1881 al lat co), while other witnesses, especially the later Byzantine cursives, read ὑποτάσσεσθε (hupotassesthe), the second person imperative (D F G 𝔐 sy). The text virtually begs for one of these two verb forms, but the often cryptic style of Paul's letters argues for the shorter reading. The chronology of development seems to have been no verb – third person imperative – second person imperative. It is not insignificant that early lectionaries began a new day's reading with v. 22; these most likely caused copyists to add the verb at this juncture.

15 tn The Greek article has been translated as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

16 tn The direct object "her" is implied, but not found in the Greek text. It has been supplied in the English translation to clarify the sense of the passage.

he[1] may present the church to himself as glorious – not having a stain or wrinkle, or any such blemish, but holy and blameless.[2] 5:28 In the same way[3] husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. 5:29 For no one has ever hated his own body[4] but he feeds it and takes care of it, just as Christ also does the church, 5:30 for we are members of his body.[5] 5:31 For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and will be joined to his wife, and the two will become[6] one flesh.[7] 5:32 This mystery is great – but I am actually[8] speaking with reference to Christ and the church. 5:33 Nevertheless,[9] each one of you must also love his own wife as he loves himself,[10] and the wife must[11] respect[12] her husband.

6:1 Children,[13] obey your parents in the Lord[14] for this is right. 6:2 "Honor your father and mother,"[15] which is the first commandment accompanied by a promise, namely, 6:3 "that it may go[16] well with you and that you will live[17] a long time on the earth."[18]

6:4 Fathers,[19] do not provoke your children to anger,[20] but raise them up in the discipline and instruction of the Lord.

6:5 Slaves,[21] obey your human masters[22] with fear and trembling, in the sincerity of your heart as to Christ, 6:6 not like those who do their work only when someone is watching[23] – as people-pleasers – but as slaves of Christ doing the will of God from the heart.[24] 6:7 Obey[25] with enthusiasm, as though serving the Lord[26] and not people, 6:8 because you know that each person, whether slave or free, if he does something good, this[27] will be rewarded by the Lord.

1 tn The use of the pronoun αὐτός (autos) is intensive and focuses attention on Christ as the one who has made the church glorious.

2 tn Grk "but in order that it may be holy and blameless."

3 tn Grk "So also."

4 tn Grk "flesh."

5 tc Most Western witnesses, as well as the majority of Byzantine mss and a few others (𝔑² D F G Ψ 0278 0285ᵛⁱᵈ 𝔐 lat), add the following words to the end of the verse: ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ (ek tēs sarkos autou kai ek tōn osteōn autou, "of his flesh and of his bones"). This is a (slightly modified) quotation from Gen 2:23a (LXX). The Alexandrian text is solidly behind the shorter reading (𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔑* A B 048 33 81 1739* 1881 pc). Although it is possible that an early scribe's eye skipped over the final αὐτοῦ, there is a much greater likelihood that a scribe added the Genesis quotation in order to fill out and make explicit the author's incomplete reference to Gen 2:23. Further, on intrinsic grounds, it seems unlikely that the author would refer to the physical nature of creation when speaking of the "body of Christ" which is spiritual or mystical. Hence, as is often the case with OT quotations, the scribal clarification missed the point the author was making; the shorter reading stands as original.

6 tn Grk "the two shall be as one flesh."

7 sn A quotation from Gen 2:24.

8 tn The term "actually" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied in the English translation to bring out the heightened sense of the statement.

9 tn The translation of πλήν (plēn) is somewhat difficult in this context, though the overall thrust of the argument is clear. It could be an adversative idea such as "but," "nevertheless," or "however" (see NIV, NASB, NRSV), or it could simply be intended to round out and bring to conclusion the author's discussion. In this latter case it could be translated with the use of "now" (so A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians [WBC], 384).

10 tn Grk "Nevertheless, you also, one by one, each his own wife so let him love as himself." This statement is cumbersome and was cleaned up to reflect better English style.

11 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause was taken as imperatival, i.e., "let the wife respect...."

12 tn The Greek verb φοβέομαι (phobeomai) here has been translated "respect" and the noun form of the word, i.e., φόβος (phobos), has been translated as "reverence" in 5:21.

13 tn The use of the article τά (ta) with τέκνα (tekna) functions in a generic way to distinguish this group from husbands, wives, fathers and slaves and is left, therefore, untranslated. The generic article is used with γύναῖκες (gunaikes) in 5:22, ἄνδρες (andres) in 5:25, δοῦλοι (douloi) in 6:5, and κύριοι (kurioi) in 6:9.

14 tc B D* F G as well as a few versional and patristic representatives lack "in the Lord" (ἐν κυρίῳ, en kuriō), while the phrase is well represented in 𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔑 A D¹ Iᵛⁱᵈ Ψ 0278 0285 33 1739 1881 𝔐 sy co. Scribes may have thought that the phrase could be regarded a qualifier on the kind of parents a child should obey (viz., only Christian parents), and would thus be tempted to delete the phrase to counter such an interpretation. It is unlikely that the phrase would have been added, since the form used to express such sentiment in this Haustafel is ὡς τῷ κυρίῳ/Χριστῷ (hōs tō kuriō/Christō, "as to the Lord/Christ"; see 5:22; 6:5). Even though the witnesses for the omission are impressive, it is more likely that the phrase was deleted than added by scribal activity.

15 sn A quotation from Exod 20:12 and Deut 5:16.

16 tn Grk "be."

17 tn Grk "will be."

18 sn A quotation from Deut 5:16.

19 tn Or perhaps "Parents" (so TEV, CEV). The plural οἱ πατέρες (hoi pateres, "fathers") can be used to refer to both the male and female parent (BDAG 786 s.v. πατήρ 1.b).

20 tn Or "do not make your children angry." BDAG 780 s.v. παροργίζω states "make angry." The Greek verb in Col 3:21 is a different one with a slightly different nuance.

21 tn Traditionally, "Servants" (KJV). Though δοῦλος (doulos) is often translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

22 tn Grk "the masters according to the flesh." In the translation above, the article τοῖς (tois) governing κυρίοις (kuriois) is rendered in English as a possessive pronoun (i.e., "your") and the prepositional phrase κατὰ σάρκα (kata sarka) is taken as modifying κυρίοις (indicating that the author is referring to human masters) and not modifying the imperative ὑπακούετε (hupakouete, which would indicate that obedience was according to a human standard or limitation).

23 tn Grk "not according to eye-service."

24 tn Grk "from the soul."

25 tn Though the verb does not appear again at this point in the passage, it is nonetheless implied and supplied in the English translation for the sake of clarity.

26 tn Grk "serving as to the Lord."

27 sn The pronoun "this" (τοῦτο, touto) stands first in its clause for emphasis, and stresses the fact that God will reward those, who in seeking him, do good.

6:9 Masters,[1] treat your slaves[2] the same way,[3] giving up the use of threats,[4] because you know that both you and they have the same master in heaven,[5] and there is no favoritism with him.

Exhortations for Spiritual Warfare

6:10 Finally, be strengthened in the Lord and in the strength of his power. 6:11 Clothe yourselves with the full armor of God so that you may be able to stand against the schemes[6] of the devil. 6:12 For our struggle[7] is not against flesh and blood,[8] but against the rulers, against the powers, against the world rulers of this darkness,[9] against the spiritual forces[10] of evil in the heavens.[11] 6:13 For this reason, take up the full armor of God so that you may be able to stand your ground[12] on the evil day, and having done everything, to stand. 6:14 Stand firm therefore, by fastening[13] the belt of truth around your waist,[14] by putting on the breastplate of righteousness, 6:15 by fitting your[15] feet with the preparation that comes from the good news[16] of peace,[17] 6:16 and in all of this,[18] by taking up the shield[19] of faith with which you can extinguish all the flaming arrows of the evil one. 6:17 And take the helmet of salvation[20] and the sword[21] of the Spirit, which is the word of God. 6:18 With every prayer and petition, pray[22] at all times in the Spirit, and to this end[23] be alert, with all perseverance and requests for all the saints. 6:19 Pray[24] for me also, that I may be given the message when I begin to speak[25] – that I may confidently make known[26] the mystery of the gospel, 6:20 for which I am an ambassador in chains. Pray that I may be able to speak boldly as I ought to speak.

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn Though the Greek text only has αὐτούς (autous, "them"), the antecedent is the slaves of the masters. Therefore, it was translated this way to make it explicit in English.

3 tn Grk "do the same things to them."

4 tn Grk "giving up the threat."

5 tn Grk "because of both they and you, the Lord is, in heaven..."

6 tn Or "craftiness." See BDAG 625 s.v. μεθοδεία.

7 tn BDAG 752 s.v. πάλη says, "struggle against...the opponent is introduced by πρός w. the acc."

8 tn Grk "blood and flesh."

9 tn BDAG 561 s.v. κοσμοκράτωρ suggests "the rulers of this sinful world" as a gloss.

sn The phrase world-rulers of this darkness does not refer to human rulers but the evil spirits that rule over the world. The phrase thus stands in apposition to what follows (the spiritual forces of evil in the heavens); see note on heavens at the end of this verse.

10 tn BDAG 837 s.v. πνευματικός 3 suggests "the spirit-forces of evil" in Ephesians 6:12.

11 sn The phrase spiritual forces of evil in the heavens serves to emphasize the nature of the forces which oppose believers as well as to indicate the locality from which they originate.

12 tn The term ἀνθίστημι (anthistēmi) carries the idea of resisting or opposing something or someone (BDAG 80 s.v.). In Eph 6:13, when used in combination with στῆναι (stēnai; cf. also στῆτε [stēte] in v. 14) and in a context of battle imagery, it seems to have the idea of resisting, standing firm, and being able to stand your ground.

13 sn The four participles fastening... putting on...fitting...taking up... indicate the means by which believers can take their stand against the devil and his schemes. The imperative take in v. 17 communicates another means by which to accomplish the standing, i.e., by the word of God.

14 tn Grk "girding your waist with truth." In this entire section the author is painting a metaphor for his readers based on the attire of a Roman soldier prepared for battle and its similarity to the Christian prepared to do battle against spiritually evil forces. Behind the expression "with truth" is probably the genitive idea "belt of truth." Since this is an appositional genitive (i.e., belt which is truth), the author simply left unsaid the idea of the belt and mentioned only his real focus, namely, the truth. (The analogy would have been completely understandable to his 1st century readers.) The idea of the belt is supplied in the translation to clarify the sense in English.

15 tn The definite article τοῖς (tois) was taken as a possessive pronoun, i.e., "your," since it refers to a part of the physical body.

16 tn Grk "gospel." However, this is not a technical term here.

17 tn Grk "in preparation of the gospel of peace." The genitive τοῦ εὐαγγελίου (tou euangeliou) was taken as a genitive of source, i.e., "that comes from...."

18 tn Grk "in everything."

19 sn The Greek word translated shield (θυρεός, thureos) refers to the Roman soldier's large rectangular wooden shield, called in Latin scutum, about 4 ft (1.2 m) high, covered with leather on the outside. Before a battle in which flaming arrows might be shot at them, the soldiers wet the leather covering with water to extinguish the arrows. The Roman legionaries could close ranks with these shields, the first row holding theirs edge to edge in front, and the rows behind holding the shields above their heads. In this formation they were practically invulnerable to arrows, rocks, and even spears.

20 sn An allusion to Isa 59:17.

21 sn The Greek term translated sword (μάχαιρα, machaira) refers to the Roman gladius, a short sword about 2 ft (60 cm) long, used for close hand-to-hand combat. This is the only clearly offensive weapon in the list of armor mentioned by the author (he does not, for example, mention the lance [Latin pilum]).

22 tn Both "pray" and "be alert" are participles in the Greek text ("praying...being alert"). Both are probably instrumental, loosely connected with all of the preceding instructions. As such, they are not additional commands to do but instead are the means through which the prior instructions are accomplished.

23 tn Grk "and toward it."

24 tn To avoid a lengthy, convoluted sentence in English, the Greek sentence was broken up at this point and the verb "pray" was inserted in the English translation to pick up the participle προσευχόμενοι (proseuxomenoi, "praying") in v. 18.

25 tn Grk "that a word may be given to me in the opening of my mouth." Here "word" (λόγος, logos) is used in the sense of "message."

26 tn The infinitive γνωρίσαι (gnōrisai, "to make known") is functioning epexegetically to further explain what the author means by the preceding phrase "that I may be given the message when I begin to speak."

Farewell Comments

6:21 Tychicus, my[1] dear brother and faithful servant in the Lord, will make everything known to you, so that you too may know about my circumstances,[2] how I am doing. 6:22 I have sent him to you for this very purpose, that you may know our circumstances[3] and that he may encourage your hearts.

6:23 Peace to the brothers and sisters,[4] and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. 6:24 Grace be[5] with all of those who love our Lord Jesus Christ with an undying love.[6]

---

[1] tn Grk "the." The Greek article ὁ (ho) was translated with the possessive pronoun, "my." See ExSyn 215.

[2] tn Grk "the things according to me."

[3] tn Grk "the things concerning us."

[5] tn Or "is."

[6] tc Most witnesses (ℵ² D Ψ 𝔐 it sy) have ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of the letter. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. The earliest and best witnesses (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ* A B F G 0278 6 33 81 1175 1241 1739* 1881 sa) lack the particle, giving firm evidence that Ephesians did not originally conclude with ἀμήν.

tn Grk "without corruption." The term "love" is not found at the end of the sentence, but is supplied to clarify the sense in English. The term "undying" which modifies it captures the sense of the kind of love the author is referring to here. He is saying that God's grace will be with those whose love for Jesus never ceases.

Philippians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul[1] and Timothy, slaves[2] of Christ Jesus, to all the saints in Christ Jesus who are in Philippi,[3] with the overseers[4] and deacons. 1:2 Grace and peace to you[5] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Prayer for the Church

1:3 I thank my God every time I remember you.[6] 1:4 I always pray with joy in my every prayer for all of you 1:5 because of your participation[7] in the gospel from the first day until now.[8] 1:6 For I am sure of this very thing,[9] that the one[10] who began a good work in[11] you will perfect it[12] until the day of Christ Jesus. 1:7 For[13] it is right for me to think this about all of you, because I have you in my heart,[14] since both in my imprisonment[15] and in the defense and confirmation of the gospel all of you became partners in God's grace[16] together with me. 1:8 For God is my witness that I long for all of you with the affection of Christ Jesus. 1:9 And I pray this, that your love may abound even more and more in knowledge and every kind of insight 1:10 so that you can decide what is best, and thus be sincere and blameless for the day of Christ, 1:11 filled with the fruit of righteousness that comes through Jesus Christ to the glory and praise of God.

Ministry as a Prisoner

1:12 I want you to know, brothers and sisters,[17] that my situation has actually turned out to advance the gospel:[18] 1:13 The[19] whole imperial guard[20] and everyone else knows[21]

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Traditionally, "servants" or "bondservants." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

3 map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

4 sn The overseers (or "church leaders," L&N 53.71) is another term for the same official position of leadership as the "elder." This is seen in the interchange of the two terms in Titus 1:6-7 and in Acts 20:17, 28, as well as in the parallels between Titus 1:6-7 and 1 Tim 3:1-7.

5 tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

6 tn This could also be translated "for your every remembrance of me." See discussion below.

7 sn Your participation (Grk "fellowship") could refer to Paul rejoicing because of the Philippian converts' "fellowship" in the gospel along with him, but it is more likely that this refers to their active "participation" with him in the gospel by means of the financial support they sent to Paul on more than one occasion, discussed later in this letter (4:10-19, esp. 4:15-16).

8 tn Several alternatives for translating vv. 3-5 are possible: (1) "I thank my God every time I remember you, yes, always in my every prayer for all of you. I pray with joy because of your participation..." (see NAB; also M. Silva, Philippians [BECNT], 43-44; G. D. Fee, Philippians [NICNT], 76-80); (2) "I thank my God because of your every remembrance of me. Always in my every prayer for all of you I pray with joy. [I am grateful] for your participation..." (see Moffatt; also P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 58-61). Option (1) is quite similar to the translation above, but sees v. 4a as more or less parenthetical. Option (2) is significantly different in that Paul thanks God because the Philippians remember him rather than when he remembers them.

9 tn Grk "since I am sure of this very thing." The verse begins with an adverbial participle that is dependent on the main verb in v. 3 ("I thank"). Paul here gives one reason for his thankfulness.

10 tn The referent is clearly God from the overall context of the paragraph and the mention of "the day of Christ Jesus" at the end, which would be redundant if Christ were referred to here.

11 tn Or "among."

12 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

13 tn Grk "Just as." The sense here is probably, "So I give thanks (v. 3) just as it is right for me..."

14 tn Or possibly "because you have me in your heart."

15 tn Grk "in my bonds." The meaning "imprisonment" derives from a figurative extension of the literal meaning ("bonds," "fetters," "chains"), L&N 37.115.

16 tn The word "God's" is supplied from the context (v. 2) to clarify the meaning.

18 tn Grk "for the advance of the gospel." The genitive εὐαγγελίου (euangeliou) is taken as objective.

19 tn Grk "so that the whole imperial guard." The ὥστε (hōste) clause that begins v. 13 indicates two results of the spread of the gospel: Outsiders know why Paul is imprisoned (v. 13) and believers are emboldened by his imprisonment (v. 14).

20 sn The whole imperial guard (Grk "praetorium") can refer to the elite troops stationed in Rome or the headquarters of administrators in the provinces (cf. Matt 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:28, 33; 19:9; Acts 23:35). In either case a metonymy is involved, with the place (the praetorium) put for those (soldiers or government officials) who were connected with it or stationed in it.

21 tn Grk "it has become known by the whole imperial guard and all the rest."

that I am in prison[1] for the sake of Christ, 1:14 and most of the brothers and sisters,[2] having confidence in the Lord[3] because of my imprisonment, now more than ever[4] dare to speak the word[5] fearlessly.

1:15 Some, to be sure, are preaching Christ from envy and rivalry, but others from goodwill. 1:16 The latter do so from love because they know that I am placed here for the defense of the gospel. 1:17 The former proclaim Christ from selfish ambition, not sincerely, because they think they can cause trouble for me in my imprisonment.[6] 1:18 What is the result? Only that in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is being proclaimed, and in this I rejoice.

Yes,[7] and I will continue to rejoice, 1:19 for I know that this will turn out for my deliverance[8] through your prayers and the help of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. 1:20 My confident hope[9] is that I will in no way be ashamed[10] but that with complete boldness, even now as always, Christ will be exalted in my body, whether I live or die.[11] 1:21 For to me, living is Christ and dying is gain. 1:22 Now if I am to go on living in the body,[12] this will mean productive work[13] for me, yet I don't know which I prefer:[14] 1:23 I feel torn between the two,[15] because I have a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is better by far, 1:24 but it is more vital for your sake that I remain[16] in the body.[17] 1:25 And since I am sure of this, I know that I will remain and continue with all of you for the sake of your progress[18] and joy in the faith,[19] 1:26 so that what you can be proud of may increase[20] because of me in Christ Jesus, when I come back to you.[21]

1:27 Only conduct yourselves[22] in a manner worthy of the gospel of Christ so that – whether I come and see you or whether I remain absent – I should hear that[23] you are standing firm in one spirit, with one mind, by contending side by side for the faith of the gospel,[24] 1:28 and by not being intimidated in any way by your opponents.

[1] tn Grk "my bonds [are]."

[2] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[3] tn Or "most of the brothers and sisters in the Lord, having confidence."

[4] tn Grk "even more so."

[5] tc A number of significant MSS have "of God" after "word." Although τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) is amply supported in the Alexandrian and Western texts (ℵ A B [D*] P Ψ 048^{vid} 075 0278 33 81 1175 al lat co), the omission is difficult to explain as either an intentional deletion or unintentional oversight. To be sure, the pedigree of the witnesses is not nearly as great for the shorter reading (𝔓^{46} D^{2} 1739 1881 𝔐), but it explains well the rise of the other reading. Further, it explains the rise of κυρίου (kuriou, "of the Lord"), the reading of F and G (for if these MSS had followed a Vorlage with τοῦ θεοῦ, κυρίου would not have been expected). Further, τοῦ θεοῦ is in different locations among the MSS; such dislocations are usually signs of scribal additions to the text. Thus, the Byzantine text and a few other witnesses here have the superior reading, and it should be accepted as the original.

[6] tn Grk "thinking to cause trouble to my bonds."

[7] tn Or "But." The conjunction ἀλλά (alla) may be emphatic or contrastive. If the former, the idea may be that Paul will continue rejoicing because of the proclamation of the gospel or because of his imminent release from prison (v. 19); if the latter, Paul is now turning his attention solely to this second reason to rejoice, viz., that he will soon be released from prison. In this latter view the clause should be translated, "But I will also rejoice since I know..."

[8] tn Or "salvation." Deliverance from prison (i.e., release) is probably what Paul has in view here, although some take this as a reference to his ultimate release from the body, i.e., dying and being with Christ (v. 23).

sn The phrase this will turn out for my deliverance may be an echo of Job 13:16 (LXX).

[9] tn Grk "according to my eager expectation and hope." The κατά (kata) phrase is taken as governing the following ὅτι (hoti) clause ("that I will not be ashamed..."); the idea could be expressed more verbally as "I confidently hope that I will not be ashamed..."

[10] tn Or possibly, "be intimidated, be put to shame."

[11] tn Grk "whether by life or by death."

[12] tn Grk "flesh."

[13] tn Grk "fruit of work"; the genitive ἔργου (ergou) is taken as an attributed genitive in which the head noun, καρπός (karpos), functions attributively (cf. ExSyn 89-91).

[14] tn Grk "what I shall prefer." The Greek verb αἱρέω (haireō) could also mean "choose," but in this context such a translation is problematic for it suggests that Paul could perhaps choose suicide (cf. L&N 30.86).

sn I don't know what I prefer. Paul is here struggling with what would be most beneficial for both him and the church. He resolves this issue in vv. 24-25.

[15] tn Grk "I am hard-pressed between the two." Cf. L&N 30.18.

[16] tn Grk "But to remain in the flesh is more necessary for you."

[17] tn Grk "the flesh."

[18] tn Grk "for your progress."

[19] sn Paul's confidence in his release from prison (I know that I will remain and continue with all of you) implies that this Roman imprisonment did not end in his death. Hence, there is the likelihood that he experienced a second Roman imprisonment later on (since the belief of the early church was that Paul died under Nero in Rome). If so, then the pastoral letters (1-2 Tim, Titus) could well fit into a life of Paul that goes beyond any descriptions in the book of Acts (which ends with Paul's first Roman imprisonment). Some have argued that the pastorals cannot be genuine because they cannot fit into the history of Acts. But this view presupposes that Paul's first Roman imprisonment was also his last.

[20] tn Grk "your boasting may overflow in Christ Jesus because of me," or possibly, "your boasting in me may overflow in Christ Jesus." BDAG 536 s.v. καύχημα 1 translates the phrase τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν (to kauchēma humōn) in Phil 1:26 as "what you can be proud of."

[21] tn Grk "through my coming again to you."

[22] tn Grk "live as citizens." The verb πολιτεύεσθε (politeuesthe) connotes the life of a freeman in a free Roman colony.

sn Conduct yourselves (Grk "live your lives as citizens"). The Philippians lived in a free Roman city, and thus understood from their own experience what it meant to live as citizens. Paul is here picking up on that motif and elevating it to the citizenship of heaven. Cf. 3:20 (our citizenship is in heaven).

[23] tn Grk "the things concerning you, [namely,] that." The ὅτι (hoti) clause is appositional to τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν (ta peri humōn) and therefore "the things concerning you" was not translated.

[24] tn The phrase "the faith of the gospel" could mean one of three things: "the faith that is the gospel" (genitive of apposition), "the faith that originates from the gospel" (genitive of source), or "faith in the gospel" (objective genitive).

This is[1] a sign of their[2] destruction, but of your salvation – a sign which[3] is from God. 1:29 For it has been granted to you[4] not only to believe in Christ but also to suffer for him, 1:30 since you are encountering[5] the same conflict that you saw me face and now hear that I am facing.[6]

Christian Unity and Christ's Humility

2:1 Therefore, if there is any encouragement in Christ, any comfort provided by love, any fellowship in the Spirit,[7] any affection or mercy,[8] 2:2 complete my joy and be of the same mind,[9] by having the same love, being united in spirit,[10] and having one purpose. 2:3 Instead of being motivated by selfish ambition[11] or vanity, each of you should, in humility, be moved to treat one another as more important than yourself. 2:4 Each of you should be concerned[12] not only[13] about your own interests, but about the interests of others as well.[14] 2:5 You should have the same attitude toward one another that Christ Jesus had,[15]

> 2:6[16] who though he existed in the form of God[17] > did not regard equality with God > as something to be grasped,
> 2:7 but emptied himself > by taking on the form of a slave,[18] > by looking like other men,[19] > and by sharing in human nature.[20]

[1] tn Grk "which is," continuing the sentence begun in v. 27.

sn The antecedent of the pronoun This is conceptual, most likely referring to the Philippian Christians standing firm for the gospel. Thus, their stand for the gospel is the dual sign of their opponents' destruction and of their own salvation.

[2] tn Grk "to them."

sn Paul uses the dative "to them" (translated here as their) to describe the coming destruction of the gospel's enemies, but the genitive "your" to describe the believers' coming salvation. The dative accents what will happen to the enemies (called a dative of disadvantage [see ExSyn 143-44]), while the genitive accents what the believers will possess (and, in fact, do already possess, as v. 29 makes clear).

[3] tn Grk "this." The pronoun refers back to "a sign"; thus these words have been repeated for clarity.

[4] tn Grk "For that which is on behalf of Christ has been granted to you – namely, not only to believe in him but also to suffer for him." The infinitive phrases are epexegetical to the subject, τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ (to huper Christou), which has the force of "the on-behalf-of-Christ thing," or "the thing on behalf of Christ." To translate this in English requires a different idiom.

[5] tn Grk "having," most likely as an instrumental participle. Thus their present struggle is evidence that they have received the gift of suffering.

[6] tn Grk "that you saw in me and now hear [to be] in me."

[7] tn Or "spiritual fellowship" if πνεύματος (pneumatos) is an attributive genitive; or "fellowship brought about by the Spirit" if πνεύματος is a genitive of source or production.

[8] tn Grk "and any affection and mercy." The Greek idea, however, is best expressed by "or" in English.

[9] tn Or "and feel the same way," "and think the same thoughts." The ἵνα (hina) clause has been translated "and be of the same mind" to reflect its epexegetical force to the imperative "complete my joy."

[10] tn The Greek word here is σύμψυχοι (sumpsuchoi, literally "fellow souled").

[11] tn Grk "not according to selfish ambition." There is no main verb in this verse; the subjunctive φρονῆτε (phronēte, "be of the same mind") is implied here as well. Thus, although most translations supply the verb "do" at the beginning of v. 3 (e.g., "do nothing from selfish ambition"), the idea is even stronger than that: "Don't even think any thoughts motivated by selfish ambition."

[12] tn On the meaning "be concerned about" for σκοπέω (skopeō), see L&N 27.36.

[13] tn The word "only" is not in the Greek text, but is implied by the ἀλλὰ καί (alla kai) in the second clause ("but...as well"). The bulk of the Western text dropped the καί, motivated most likely by ascetic concerns.

[14] tc The bulk of the Western text (D*,c F G K it) dropped καί (kai) here, most likely due to ascetic concerns. Strong external attestation for its inclusion from excellent witnesses as well as the majority (𝔓46 ℵ A B C D2 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐) also marks it as original.

tn Verses 1-4 constitute one long conditional sentence in Greek. The protasis is in verse 1, while vv. 2-4 constitute the apodosis. There is but one verb not in a subordinate clause in vv. 2-4, the imperative "complete" in v. 2. This is followed by a subjunctive after ἵνα (hina, translated as an epexegetical clause, "and be of the same mind") and three instrumental participles. Thus the focus of these four verses is to "be of the same mind" and all that follows this instruction is the means for accomplishing that.

[15] tn Grk "Have this attitude in/among yourselves which also [was] in Christ Jesus," or "Have this attitude in/among yourselves which [you] also [have] in Christ Jesus."

[16] sn This passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

[17] sn The Greek term translated form indicates a correspondence with reality. Thus the meaning of this phrase is that Christ was truly God.

[18] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 1:1.

sn The Greek expression underlying by looking like other men is similar to Paul's wording in Rom 8:3 ("in the likeness of sinful flesh"). The same word "likeness" is used in both passages. It implies that there is a form that does not necessarily correspond to reality. In Rom 8:3, the meaning is that Christ looked like sinful humanity. Here the meaning is similar: Jesus looked like other men (note anthrōpoi), but was in fact different from them in that he did not have a sin nature.

[20] tn Grk "and by being found in form as a man." The versification of vv. 7 and 8 (so also NRSV) is according to the versification in the NA27 and UBS4 editions of the Greek text. Some translations, however, break the verses in front of this phrase (NKJV, NASB, NIV, NLT). The same material has been translated in each case; the only difference is the versification of that material.

sn By sharing in human nature. This last line of v. 7 (line d) stands in tension with the previous line, line c ("by looking like other men"). Both lines have a word indicating form or likeness. Line c, as noted above, implies that Christ only appeared to be like other people. Line d, however, uses a different term that implies a correspondence between form and reality. Further, line c uses the plural "men" while line d uses the singular "man." The theological point being made is that Christ looked just like other men, but he was not like other

2:8 He humbled himself, by becoming obedient to the point of death
– even death on a cross!
2:9 As a result God exalted him and gave him the name that is above every name,
2:10 so that at the name of Jesus every knee will bow
– in heaven and on earth and under the earth –
2:11 and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.

Lights in the World

2:12 So then, my dear friends, just as you have always obeyed, not only in my presence but even more in my absence, continue working out your salvation with awe and reverence,[1] 2:13 for the one bringing forth in you both the desire and the effort – for the sake of his good pleasure – is God. 2:14 Do everything without grumbling or arguing, 2:15 so that you may be blameless and pure, children of God without blemish though you live in a crooked and perverse society, in which you shine as lights in the world[2] 2:16 by holding on to[3] the word of life so that on the day of Christ I will have a reason to boast that I did not run in vain nor labor in vain. 2:17 But even if I am being poured out like a drink offering on the sacrifice and service of your faith, I am glad and rejoice together with all of you. 2:18 And in the same way you also should be glad and rejoice together with me.

Models for Ministry

2:19 Now I hope in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy to you soon, so that I too may be encouraged by hearing news about you. 2:20 For there is no one here like him who will readily demonstrate his deep concern for you.[4] 2:21 Others are busy with their own concerns, not those of Jesus Christ. 2:22 But you know his qualifications, that like a son working with his father, he served with me in advancing the gospel. 2:23 So I hope to send him as soon as I know more about my situation, 2:24 though I am confident in the Lord that I too will be coming to see you[5] soon.

2:25 But for now[6] I have considered it necessary to send Epaphroditus to you. For he is my brother,[7] coworker and fellow soldier, and your messenger[8] and minister[9] to me in my need.[10] 2:26 Indeed, he greatly missed all of you and was distressed because you heard that he had been ill. 2:27 In fact he became so ill that he nearly died.[11] But God showed mercy to him – and not to him only, but also to me – so that I would not have grief on top of grief. 2:28 Therefore I am all the more eager to send him,[12] so that when you see him again you can rejoice[13] and I can be free from anxiety. 2:29 So welcome him in the Lord with great joy, and honor people like him, 2:30 since it was because of the work of Christ that he almost died. He risked his life so that he could make up for your inability to serve me.[14]

True and False Righteousness

3:1 Finally, my brothers and sisters,[15] rejoice in the Lord! To write this again is no trouble to me, and it is a safeguard for you.

3:2 Beware of the dogs,[16] beware of the evil workers, beware of those who mutilate the flesh![17] 3:3 For we are the circumcision,[18] men (in that he was not sinful), though he was fully human.

[1] tn Grk "with fear and trembling." The Greek words φόβος and τρόμος both imply fear in a negative sense (L&N 25.251 and 16.6 respectively) while the former can also refer to respect and awe for deity (L&N 53.59). Paul's use of the terms in other contexts refers to "awe and reverence in the presence of God" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 284; see discussion on 282-84). The translation "awe and reverence" was chosen to portray the attitude the believer should have toward God as they consider their behavior in light of God working through Jesus Christ (2:6-11) and in the believer's life (2:13) to accomplish their salvation.

[2] tn Or "as stars in the universe."

[3] tn Or "holding out, holding forth."

[4] tn Grk "For I have no one who is like-minded who will genuinely be concerned for your welfare."

[5] tn The words "to see you" are not in the Greek text, but are implied, and are supplied in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Grk "But." The temporal notion ("for now") is implied in the epistolary aorist ("I have considered"), for Epaphroditus was dispatched with this letter to the Philippians.

[7] tn Grk "my brother" instead of "For he is my brother." Verse 25 constitutes one sentence in Greek, with "my brother..." functioning appositionally to "Epaphroditus."

sn The reason why Paul refers to Epaphroditus as his brother, coworker, fellow soldier, etc., is because he wants to build up Epaphroditus in the eyes of the Philippians, since Paul is sending him back instead of Timothy. This accent on Epaphroditus' character and service is implied in the translation "For he is..."

[8] tn Grk "apostle."

[9] tn The Greek word translated "minister" here is λειτουργός (leitourgos).

[10] tn Grk "servant of my need."

[11] tn Grk "For he became ill to the point of death."

[12] tn Grk "I have sent him to you with earnestness." But the epistolary aorist needs to be translated as a present tense with this adverb due to English stylistic considerations.

[13] tn Or "when you see him you can rejoice again."

[14] tn Grk "make up for your lack of service to me."

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[16] sn Dogs is a figurative reference to false teachers whom Paul regards as just as filthy as dogs.

[17] tn Grk "beware of the mutilation."

[18] tn There is a significant wordplay here in the Greek text. In v. 2 a rare, strong word is used to describe those who were pro-circumcision (κατατομή, katatomē, "mutilation"; see BDAG 528 s.v.), while in v. 3 the normal word for circumcision is used (περιτομή, peritomē; see BDAG 807 s.v.). Both have τομή (the feminine form of the adjective τομός [tomos], meaning "cutting, sharp") as their root; the direction of the action of the former is down or off (from κατά, kata), hence the implication of mutilation or emasculation, while the direction of the action of the latter is around (from περί, peri). The similarity in sound yet wide divergence of meaning between the two words highlights in no uncertain terms the differences between Paul and his opponents.

the ones who worship by the Spirit of God,[1] exult in Christ Jesus, and do not rely on human credentials[2] 3:4 – though mine too are significant.[3] If someone thinks he has good reasons to put confidence in human credentials,[4] I have more: 3:5 I was circumcised on the eighth day, from the people of Israel and the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of Hebrews. I lived according to the law as a Pharisee.[5] 3:6 In my zeal for God I persecuted the church. According to the righteousness stipulated in the law I was blameless. 3:7 But these assets I have come to regard as liabilities because of Christ. 3:8 More than that, I now regard all things as liabilities compared to the far greater value of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things – indeed, I regard them as dung![6] – that I may gain Christ, 3:9 and be found in him, not because I have my own righteousness derived from the law, but because I have the righteousness that comes by way of Christ's faithfulness[7] – a righteousness from God that is in fact[8] based on Christ's[9] faithfulness.[10] 3:10 My aim is to know him,[11] to experience the power of his resurrection, to share in his sufferings,[12] and to be like him in his death, 3:11 and so, somehow,[13] to attain to the resurrection from the dead.

Keep Going Forward

3:12 Not that I have already attained this – that is, I have not already been perfected – but I strive to lay hold of that for which Christ Jesus also laid hold of me.[14] 3:13 Brothers and sisters,[15] I do not consider myself to have attained this. Instead I am single-minded:[16] Forgetting the things that are behind and reaching out for the things that are ahead, 3:14 with this goal in mind,[17] I strive toward the prize of the upward call of God[18] in Christ Jesus. 3:15 Therefore let those of us who are "perfect" embrace this point

[1] tc The verb λατρεύω (latreuō; here the participial form, λατρεύοντες [latreuontes]) either takes a dative direct object or no object at all, bearing virtually a technical nuance of "worshiping God" (see BDAG 587 s.v.). In this text, πνεύματι (pneumati) takes an instrumental force ("by the Spirit") rather than functioning as object of λατρεύοντες. However, the word after πνεύματι is in question, no doubt because of the collocation with λατρεύοντες. Most witnesses, including some of the earliest and best representatives of the Alexandrian, Western, and Byzantine texts (ℵ* A B C D² F G 0278^{vid} 33 1739 1881 𝔐 co Ambr), read θεοῦ (theou; thus, "worship by the Spirit of God"). But several other important witnesses (ℵ² D* P Ψ 075 365 1175 lat sy Chr) have the dative θεῷ (theō) here ("worship God by the Spirit"). 𝔓^{46} is virtually alone in its omission of the divine name, probably due to an unintentional oversight. The dative θεῷ was most likely a scribal emendation intended to give the participle its proper object, and thus avoid confusion about the force of πνεύματι. Although the Church came to embrace the full deity of the Spirit, the NT does not seem to speak of worshiping the Spirit explicitly. The reading θεῷ thus appears to be a clarifying reading. On external and internal grounds, then, θεοῦ is the preferred reading.

[2] tn Grk "have no confidence in the flesh."

[3] tn Grk "though I have reason for confidence even in the flesh."

[4] tn Grk "flesh."

[5] sn A Pharisee was a member of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

[6] tn The word here translated "dung" was often used in Greek as a vulgar term for fecal matter. As such it would most likely have had a certain shock value for the readers. This may well be Paul's meaning here, especially since the context is about what the flesh produces.

[7] tn Or "faith in Christ." A decision is difficult here. Though traditionally translated "faith in Jesus Christ," an increasing number of NT scholars are arguing that πίστις Χριστοῦ (pistis Christou) and similar phrases in Paul (here and in Rom 3:22, 26; Gal 2:16, 20; 3:22; Eph 3:12) involve a subjective genitive and mean "Christ's faith" or "Christ's faithfulness" (cf., e.g., G. Howard, "The 'Faith of Christ'," ExpTim 85 [1974]: 212-15; R. B. Hays, The Faith of Jesus Christ [SBLDS]; Morna D. Hooker, "Πίστις Χριστοῦ," NTS 35 [1989]: 321-42). Noteworthy among the arguments for the subjective genitive view is that when πίστις takes a personal genitive it is almost never an objective genitive (cf. Matt 9:2, 22, 29; Mark 2:5; 5:34; 10:52; Luke 5:20; 7:50; 8:25, 48; 17:19; 18:42; 22:32; Rom 1:8; 12; 3:3; 4:5, 12, 16; 1 Cor 2:5; 15:14, 17; 2 Cor 10:15; Phil 2:17; Col 1:4; 2:5; 1 Thess 1:8; 3:2, 5, 10; 2 Thess 1:3; Titus 1:1; Phlm 6; 1 Pet 1:9, 21; 2 Pet 1:5). On the other hand, the objective genitive view has its adherents: A. Hultgren, "The Pistis Christou Formulations in Paul," NovT 22 (1980): 248-63; J. D. G. Dunn, "Once More, ΠΙΣΤΙΣ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ," SBL Seminar Papers, 1991, 730-44. Most commentaries on Romans and Galatians usually side with the objective view.

sn ExSyn 116, which notes that the grammar is not decisive, nevertheless suggests that "the faith/faithfulness of Christ is not a denial of faith in Christ as a Pauline concept (for the idea is expressed in many of the same contexts, only with the verb πιστεύω rather than the noun), but implies that the object of faith is a worthy object, for he himself is faithful." Though Paul elsewhere teaches justification by faith, this presupposes that the object of our faith is reliable and worthy of such faith.

[8] tn The words "in fact" are supplied because of English style, picking up the force of the Greek article with πίστει (pistei). See also the following note on the word "Christ's."

[9] tn Grk "based on the faithfulness." The article before πίστει (pistei) is taken as anaphoric, looking back to διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ (dia pisteōs Christou); hence, "Christ's" is implied.

[10] tn Or "based on faith."

[11] tn The articular infinitive τοῦ γνῶναι (tou gnōnai, "to know") here expresses purpose. The words "My aim is" have been supplied in the translation to emphasize this nuance and to begin a new sentence (shorter sentences are more appropriate for English style).

[12] tn Grk "to know him, the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings."

[13] tn On εἰ πῶς (ei pōs) as "so, somehow" see BDAG 279, s.v. εἰ 6.n.

[14] tn Grk "that for which I also was laid hold of by Christ Jesus." The passive has been translated as active in keeping with contemporary English style.

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[16] tn Grk "But this one thing (I do)."

[17] tn Grk "according to the goal."

of view.[1] If you think otherwise, God will reveal to you the error of your ways.[2] 3:16 Nevertheless, let us live up to the standard[3] that we have already attained.[4]

3:17 Be imitators of me,[5] brothers and sisters,[6] and watch carefully those who are living this way, just as you have us as an example. 3:18 For many live, about whom I have often told you, and now, with tears, I tell you that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ. 3:19 Their end is destruction, their god is the belly, they exult in their shame, and they think about earthly things.[7] 3:20 But our citizenship is in heaven – and we also await a savior from there, the Lord Jesus Christ, 3:21 who will transform these humble bodies of ours[8] into the likeness of his glorious body by means of that power by which he is able to subject all things to himself.

Christian Practices

4:1 So then, my brothers and sisters,[9] dear friends whom I long to see, my joy and crown, stand in the Lord in this way, my dear friends!

4:2 I appeal to Euodia and to Syntyche to agree in the Lord. 4:3 Yes, I say also to you, true companion,[10] help them. They have struggled together in the gospel ministry[11] along with me and Clement and my other coworkers, whose names are in the book of life. 4:4 Rejoice in the Lord always. Again I say, rejoice! 4:5 Let everyone see your gentleness.[12] The Lord is near! 4:6 Do not be anxious about anything. Instead, in every situation, through prayer and petition with thanksgiving, tell your requests to God. 4:7 And the peace of God that surpasses all understanding will guard your hearts and minds[13] in Christ Jesus.

4:8 Finally, brothers and sisters,[14] whatever is true, whatever is worthy of respect, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is commendable, if something is excellent or praiseworthy, think about these things. 4:9 And what you learned and received and heard and saw in me, do these things. And the God of peace will be with you.

Appreciation for Support

4:10 I have great joy in the Lord because now at last you have again expressed your concern for me. (Now I know you were concerned before but had no opportunity to do anything.)[15] 4:11 I am not saying this because I am in need, for I have learned to be content in any circumstance. 4:12 I have experienced times of need and times of abundance. In any and every circumstance I have learned the secret of contentment,[16] whether I go satisfied or hungry, have plenty or nothing. 4:13 I am able to do all things[17] through the one[18] who strengthens me. 4:14 Nevertheless, you did well to share with me in my trouble.

[1] tn Grk "those of us who are 'perfect' should think this," or possibly "those of us who are mature should think this."

sn The adjective perfect comes from the same root as the verb perfected in v. 12; Paul may well be employing a wordplay to draw in his opponents. Thus, perfect would then be in quotation marks and Paul would then argue that no one – neither they nor he – is in fact perfect. The thrust of vv. 1-16 is that human credentials can produce nothing that is pleasing to God (vv. 1-8). Instead of relying on such, Paul urges his readers to trust God for their righteousness (v. 9) rather than their own efforts, and at the same time to press on for the prize that awaits them (vv. 12-14). He argues further that perfection is unattainable in this life (v. 15), yet the level of maturity that one has reached should not for this reason be abandoned (v. 16).

[2] tn Grk "reveal this to you." The referent of the pronoun "this" is the fact that the person is thinking differently than Paul does. This has been specified in the translation with the phrase "the error of your ways"; Paul is stating that God will make it known to these believers when they are not in agreement with Paul.

[3] tc Although κανόνι (kanoni, "standard, rule") is found in most witnesses, though in various locations in this verse (𝔓[46] ℵ[2] D[2] Ψ 075 𝔐), it is almost surely a motivated reading, for it clarifies the cryptic τῷ αὐτῷ (tō autō, "the same"). Both the fact that the word floats, and that there are other variants which accomplish greater clarity by other means, strongly suggests the secondary nature of any of the longer readings here. Further, the shortest text has excellent and early support in 𝔓[16.46] ℵ* A B I[vid] 6 33 1739 co, rendering it decidedly the preferred reading. The translation adds "standard" because of English requirements, not because of textual basis.

[4] tn Grk "Nevertheless, to what we have attained, to the same hold fast."

[5] tn Or "become fellow imitators with me [of Christ]."

[6] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[7] tn Grk "whose end is destruction, whose god is the belly and glory is their shame, these who think of earthly things."

[8] tn Grk "transform the body of our humility."

[9] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[10] tn Or "faithful fellow worker." This is more likely a descriptive noun, although some scholars interpret the word σύζυγος (suzugos) here as a proper name ("Syzygos"), L&N 42.45.

[11] tn Grk "in the gospel," a metonymy in which the gospel itself is substituted for the ministry of making the gospel known.

[12] tn Grk "let your gentleness be seen by all." The passive voice construction has been converted to active voice in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[13] tn Grk "will guard the hearts of you and the minds of you." To improve the English style, the second occurrence of ὑμῶν (humōn, "of you") has not been translated, since it is somewhat redundant in English.

[14] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:12.

[15] tn Grk "for you were even concerned, but you lacked opportunity."

[16] tn The words "of contentment" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by Paul's remarks at the end of v. 11.

[17] tn The Greek word translated "all things" is in emphatic position at the beginning of the Greek sentence.

[18] tc Although some excellent witnesses lack explicit reference to the one strengthening Paul (so ℵ* A B D* I 33 1739 lat co Cl), the majority of witnesses (ℵ[2] D[2] [F G] Ψ 075 1881 𝔐 sy) add Χριστῷ (Christō) here (thus, "through Christ who strengthens me"). But this kind of reading is patently secondary, and is a predictable variant. Further, the shorter reading is much harder, for it leaves the agent unspecified.

4:15 And as you Philippians know, at the beginning of my gospel ministry, when I left Macedonia, no church shared with me in this matter of giving and receiving except you alone. 4:16 For even in Thessalonica[1] on more than one occasion[2] you sent something for my need. 4:17 I do not say this because I am seeking a gift.[3] Rather, I seek the credit that abounds to your account. 4:18 For I have received everything, and I have plenty. I have all I need because I received from Epaphroditus what you sent – a fragrant offering, an acceptable sacrifice, very pleasing to God. 4:19 And my God will supply your every need according to his glorious riches[4] in Christ Jesus. 4:20 May glory be given to God our Father forever and ever. Amen.

Final Greetings

4:21 Give greetings to all the saints in Christ Jesus. The brothers[5] with me here send greetings. 4:22 All the saints greet you, especially those who belong to Caesar's household. 4:23 The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.[6]

[1] map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

[2] tn Or "several times"; Grk, "both once and twice." The literal expression "once and twice" is frequently used as a Greek idiom referring to an indefinite low number, but more than once ("several times"); see L&N 60.70.

[3] tn Grk "Not that I am seeking the gift." The phrase "I do not say this..." has been supplied in the translation to complete the thought for the modern reader.

[4] tn Or "according to the riches of his glory." The phrase "of his glory" is treated as an attributive genitive in the translation.

[5] tn Or perhaps, "The brothers and sisters" (so TEV, TNIV; cf. NRSV "The friends"; CEV "The Lord's followers") If "brothers" refers to Paul's traveling companions, it is probably that only men are in view (cf. NAB, NLT). Since v. 22 mentions "all the saints," which presumably includes everyone, it is more probable here that only Paul's traveling companions are in view.

[6] tc Most witnesses, including several important ones (𝔓^{46} ℵ A D Ψ 33 𝔐 lat sy bo), have ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of this letter, while an impressive combination of Alexandrian and Western MSS (B F G 075 6 1739* 1881 sa) lack the valedictory particle. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Thus, on internal grounds, with sufficient support from external evidence, the preferred reading is the omission of ἀμήν.

Colossians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, 1:2 to the saints, the faithful[2] brothers and sisters[3] in Christ, at Colossae. Grace and peace to you[4] from God our Father![5]

Paul's Thanksgiving and Prayer for the Church

1:3 We always[6] give thanks to God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, when we pray for you, 1:4 since[7] we heard about your faith in Christ Jesus and the love that you have for all the saints. 1:5 Your faith and love have arisen[8] from the hope laid up[9] for you in heaven, which you have heard about in the message of truth, the gospel[10] 1:6 that has come to you. Just as in the entire world this gospel[11] is bearing fruit and growing, so it has also been bearing fruit and growing[12] among you from the first day you heard it and understood the grace of God in truth. 1:7 You learned the gospel[13] from Epaphras, our dear fellow slave[14] – a[15] faithful minister of Christ on our[16] behalf – 1:8 who also told us of your love in the Spirit.

---

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Grk "and faithful." The construction in Greek (as well as Paul's style) suggests that the saints are identical to the faithful; hence, the καί (kai) is best left untranslated (cf. Eph 1:1). See ExSyn 281-82.

3 tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited).

4 tn Or "Grace to you and peace."

5 tc Most witnesses, including some important ones (ℵ A C F G I [P] 075 𝔐 it bo), read "and the Lord Jesus Christ" at the end of this verse, no doubt to conform the wording to the typical Pauline salutation. However, excellent and early witnesses (B D K L Ψ 33 81 1175 1505 1739 1881 al sa) lack this phrase. Since the omission is inexplicable as arising from the longer reading (otherwise, these MSS would surely have deleted the phrase in the rest of the corpus Paulinum), it is surely authentic.

6 tn The adverb πάντοτε (pantote) is understood to modify the indicative εὐχαριστοῦμεν (eucharistoumen) because it precedes περὶ ὑμῶν (peri humōn) which probably modifies the indicative and not the participle προσευχόμενοι (proseuchomenoi). But see 1:9 where the same expression occurs and περὶ ὑμῶν modifies the participle "praying" (προσευχόμενοι).

7 tn The adverbial participle ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) is understood to be temporal and translated with "since." A causal idea may also be in the apostle's mind, but the context emphasizes temporal ideas, e.g., "from the day" (v. 6).

8 tn Col 1:3-8 form one long sentence in the Greek text and have been divided at the end of v. 4 and v. 6 and within v. 6 for clarity, in keeping with the tendency in contemporary English toward shorter sentences. Thus the phrase "Your faith and love have arisen from the hope" is literally "because of the hope." The perfect tense "have arisen" was chosen in the English to reflect the fact that the recipients of the letter had acquired this hope at conversion in the past, but that it still remains and motivates them to trust in Christ and to love one another.

9 tn BDAG 113 s.v. ἀπόκειμαι 2 renders ἀποκειμένην (apokeimenēn) with the expression "reserved" in this verse.

10 tn The term "the gospel" (τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, tou euangeliou) is in apposition to "the word of truth" (τῷ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας, tō logō tēs alētheias) as indicated in the translation.

11 tn Grk "just as in the entire world it is bearing fruit." The antecedent ("the gospel") of the implied subject ("it") of ἐστιν (estin) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Though the participles are periphrastic with the present tense verb ἐστίν (estin), the presence of the temporal indicator "from the day" in the next clause indicates that this is a present tense that reaches into the past and should be translated as "has been bearing fruit and growing." For a discussion of this use of the present tense, see ExSyn 519-20.

13 tn Or "learned it." The Greek text simply has "you learned" without the reference to "the gospel," but "the gospel" is supplied to clarify the sense of the clause. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

14 tn The Greek word translated "fellow slave" is σύνδουλος (sundoulos); the σύν- prefix here denotes association. Though δοῦλος is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

15 tn The Greek text has "who (ὅς, hos) is a faithful minister." The above translation conveys the antecedent of the relative pronoun quite well and avoids the redundancy with the following substantival participle of v. 8, namely, "who told" (ὁ δηλώσας, ho dēlōsas).

16 tc ‡ Judging by the superior witnesses for the first person pronoun ἡμῶν (hēmōn, "us"; 𝔓[46] ℵ* A B D* F G 326* 1505 al) vs. the second person pronoun ὑμῶν (humōn, "you"; found in ℵ[2] C D[1] Ψ 075 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy co), ἡμῶν should be regarded as original. Although it is possible that ἡμῶν was an early alteration of ὑμῶν (either unintentionally, as dittography, since it comes seventeen letters after the previous ἡμῶν; or intentionally, to conform to the surrounding first person pronouns), this supposition is difficult to maintain in light of the varied and valuable witnesses for this reading. Further, the second person is both embedded in the verb ἐμάθετε (emathete) and is explicit in v. 8 (ὑμῶν). Hence, the motivation to change to the first person pronoun is counterbalanced by such evidence. The second person pronoun may have been introduced unintentionally via homoioarcton with the ὑπέρ (huper) that immediately precedes it. As well, the second person reading is somewhat harder for it seems to address Epaphras' role only in relation to Paul and his colleagues, rather than in relation to the Colossians. Nevertheless, the decision must be based ultimately on external evidence (because the internal evidence can be variously interpreted), and this strongly supports ἡμῶν.

Paul's Prayer for the Growth of the Church

1:9 For this reason we also, from the day we heard about you,[1] have not ceased praying for you and asking God[2] to fill[3] you with the knowledge of his will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding, 1:10 so that you may live[4] worthily of the Lord and please him in all respects[5] – bearing fruit in every good deed, growing in the knowledge of God, 1:11 being strengthened with all power according to his glorious might for the display of[6] all patience and steadfastness, joyfully 1:12 giving thanks to the Father who has qualified you to share[7] in the saints'[8] inheritance in the light. 1:13 He delivered us from the power of darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of the Son he loves,[9] 1:14 in whom we have redemption,[10] the forgiveness of sins.

The Supremacy of Christ

1:15[11] He is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn[12] over all creation,[13]
1:16 for all things in heaven and on earth were created by him – all things, whether visible or invisible, whether thrones or dominions,[14] whether principalities or powers – all things were created through him and for him.
1:17 He himself is before all things and all things are held together[15] in him.
1:18 He is the head of the body, the church, as well as the beginning, the firstborn[16] from among the dead, so that he himself may become first in all things.[17]

1 tn Or "heard about it"; Grk "heard." There is no direct object stated in the Greek (direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context). A direct object is expected by an English reader, however, so most translations supply one. Here, however, it is not entirely clear what the author "heard": a number of translations supply "it" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV; NAB "this"), but this could refer back either to (1) "your love in the Spirit" at the end of v. 8, or (2) "your faith in Christ Jesus and the love that you have for all the saints" (v. 4). In light of this uncertainty, other translations supply "about you" (TEV, NIV, CEV, NLT). This is preferred by the present translation since, while it does not resolve the ambiguity entirely, it does make it less easy for the English reader to limit the reference only to "your love in the Spirit" at the end of v. 8.

2 tn The term "God" does not appear in the Greek text, but the following reference to "the knowledge of his will" makes it clear that "God" is in view as the object of the "praying and asking," and should therefore be included in the English translation for clarity.

3 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause has been translated as substantival, indicating the content of the prayer and asking. The idea of purpose may also be present in this clause.

4 tn The infinitive περιπατῆσαι (peripatēsai, "to walk, to live, to live one's life") is best taken as an infinitive of purpose related to "praying" (προσευχόμενοι, proseuchomenoi) and "asking" (αἰτούμενοι, aitoumenoi) in v. 9 and is thus translated as "that you may live."

5 tn BDAG 129 s.v. ἀρεσκεία states that ἀρεσκείαν (areskeian) refers to a "desire to please εἰς πᾶσαν ἀ. to please (the Lord) in all respects Col 1:10."

6 tn The expression "for the display of" is an attempt to convey in English the force of the Greek preposition εἰς (eis) in this context.

7 tn BDAG 473 s.v. ἱκανόω states, "τινὰ εἴς τι someone for someth. Col 1:12." The point of the text is that God has qualified the saints for a "share" or "portion" in the inheritance of the saints.

8 tn Grk "the inheritance of the saints." The genitive noun τῶν ἁγίων (tōn hagiōn) is a possessive genitive: "the saints' inheritance."

9 tn Here αὐτοῦ (autou) has been translated as a subjective genitive ("he loves").

11 sn This passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

12 tn The Greek term πρωτότοκος (prōtotokos) could refer either to first in order of time, such as a first born child, or it could refer to one who is preeminent in rank. M. J. Harris, Colossians and Philemon (EGGNT), 43, expresses the meaning of the word well: "The 'firstborn' was either the eldest child in a family or a person of preeminent rank. The use of this term to describe the Davidic king in Ps 88:28 LXX (=Ps 89:27 EVV), 'I will also appoint him my firstborn (πρωτότοκον), the most exalted of the kings of the earth,' indicates that it can denote supremacy in rank as well as priority in time. But whether the πρωτό- element in the word denotes time, rank, or both, the significance of the -τοκος element as indicating birth or origin (from τίκτω, give birth to) has been virtually lost except in ref. to lit. birth." In Col 1:15 the emphasis is on the priority of Jesus' rank as over and above creation (cf. 1:16 and the "for" clause referring to Jesus as Creator).

13 tn The genitive construction πάσης κτίσεως (pasēs ktiseōs) is a genitive of subordination and is therefore translated as "over all creation." See ExSyn 103-4.

14 tn BDAG 579 s.v. κυριότης 3 suggests "bearers of the ruling powers, dominions" here.

15 tn BDAG 973 s.v. συνίστημι B.3 suggests "continue, endure, exist, hold together" here.

16 tn See the note on the term "firstborn" in 1:15. Here the reference to Jesus as the "firstborn from among the dead" seems to be arguing for a chronological priority, i.e., Jesus was the first to rise from the dead.

17 tn Grk "in order that he may become in all things, himself, first."

1:19 For God[1] was pleased to have all his[2] fullness dwell[3] in the Son[4]
1:20 and through him to reconcile all things to himself by making peace through the blood of his cross – through him,[5] whether things on earth or things in heaven.

Paul's Goal in Ministry

1:21 And you were at one time strangers and enemies in your[6] minds[7] as expressed through[8] your evil deeds, 1:22 but now he has reconciled you[9] by his physical body through death to present you holy, without blemish, and blameless before him – 1:23 if indeed you remain in the faith, established and firm,[10] without shifting[11] from the hope of the gospel that you heard. This gospel has also been preached in all creation under heaven, and I, Paul, have become its servant.

1:24 Now I rejoice in my sufferings for you, and I fill up in my physical body – for the sake of his body, the church – what is lacking in the sufferings of Christ. 1:25 I became a servant of the church according to the stewardship[12] from God – given to me for you – in order to complete[13] the word of God, 1:26 that is, the mystery that has been kept hidden from ages and generations, but has now been revealed to his saints. 1:27 God wanted to make known to them the glorious[14] riches of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. 1:28 We proclaim him by instructing[15] and

[1] tn The noun "God" does not appear in the Greek text, but since God is the one who reconciles the world to himself (cf. 2 Cor 5:19), he is clearly the subject of εὐδόκησεν (eudokēsen).

[2] tn The Greek article τό (to), insofar as it relates to God, may be translated as a possessive pronoun, i.e., "his." BDAG 404 s.v. εὐδοκέω 1 translates the phrase as "all the fullness willed to dwell in him" thus leaving the referent as impersonal. Insofar as Paul is alluding to the so-called emanations from God this is acceptable. But the fact that "the fullness" dwells in a person (i.e., "in him") seems to argue for the translation "his fullness" where "his" refers to God.

[3] tn The aorist verb κατοικῆσαι (katoikēsai) could be taken as an ingressive, in which case it refers to the incarnation and may be translated as "begin to dwell, to take up residence." It is perhaps better, though, to take it as a constative aorist and simply a reference to the fact that the fullness of God dwells in Jesus Christ. This is a permanent dwelling, though, not a temporary one, as the present tense in 2:9 makes clear.

[4] tn Grk "him"; the referent (the Son; see v. 13) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tc The presence or absence of the second occurrence of the phrase δι᾽ αὐτοῦ (di᾽ autou, "through him") is a difficult textual problem to solve. External evidence is fairly evenly divided. Many ancient and excellent witnesses lack the phrase (B D* F G I 0278 81 1175 1739 1881 2464 al latt sa), but equally important witnesses have it (𝔓[46] ℵ A C D[1] Ψ 048[vid] 33 𝔐). Both readings have strong Alexandrian support, which makes the problem difficult to decide on external evidence alone. Internal evidence points to the inclusion of the phrase as original. The word immediately preceding the phrase is the masculine pronoun αὐτοῦ (autou); thus the possibility of omission through homoioteleuton in various witnesses is likely. Scribes might have deleted the phrase because of perceived redundancy or awkwardness in the sense: The shorter reading is smoother and more elegant, so scribes would be prone to correct the text in that direction. As far as style is concerned, repetition of key words and phrases for emphasis is not foreign to the corpus Paulinum (see, e.g., Rom 8:23, Eph 1:13, 2 Cor 12:7). In short, it is easier to account for the shorter reading arising from the longer reading than vice versa, so the longer reading is more likely original.

[6] tn The article τῇ (tē) has been translated as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[7] tn Although διανοία (dianoia) is singular in Greek, the previous plural noun ἐχθρούς (echthrous) indicates that all those from Colossae are in view here.

[8] tn The dative ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς πονηροῖς (en tois ergois tois ponērois) is taken as means, indicating the avenue through which hostility in the mind is revealed and made known.

[9] tc Some of the better representatives of the Alexandrian and Western texts have a passive verb here instead of the active ἀποκατήλλαξεν (apokatēllaxen, "he has reconciled"): ἀποκατηλλάγητε (apokatēllagēte) in (𝔓[46]) B, ἀποκατήλλακται [sic] (apokatēllaktai) in 33, and ἀποκαταλλαγέντες (apokatallagentes) in D* F G. Yet the active verb is strongly supported by ℵ A C D[2] Ψ 048 075 [0278] 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy. Internally, the passive creates an anacoluthon in that it looks back to the accusative ὑμᾶς (humas, "you") of v. 21 and leaves the following παραστῆσαι (parastēsai) dangling ("you were reconciled...to present you"). The passive reading is certainly the harder reading. As such, it may well explain the rise of the other readings. At the same time, it is possible that the passive was produced by scribes who wanted some symmetry between the ποτε (pote, "at one time") of v. 21 and the νυνὶ δέ (nuni de, "but now") of v. 22: Since a passive periphrastic participle is used in v. 21, there may have a temptation to produce a corresponding passive form in v. 22, handling the ὑμᾶς of v. 21 by way of constructio ad sensum. Since παραστῆσαι occurs ten words later, it may not have been considered in this scribal modification. Further, the Western reading (ἀποκαταλλαγέντες) hardly seems to have arisen from ἀποκατηλλάγητε (contra TCGNT 555). As difficult as this decision is, the preferred reading is the active form because it is superior externally and seems to explain the rise of all forms of the passive readings.

tn The direct object is omitted in the Greek text, but it is clear from context that "you" (ὑμᾶς, humas) is implied.

[10] tn BDAG 276 s.v. ἑδραῖος suggests "firm, steadfast."

[11] tn BDAG 639 s.v. μετακινέω suggests "without shifting from the hope" here.

[12] tn BDAG 697 s.v. οἰκονομία 1.b renders the term here as "divine office."

[13] tn See BDAG 828 s.v. πληρόω 3. The idea here seems to be that the apostle wants to "complete the word of God" in that he wants to preach it to every person in the known world (cf. Rom 15:19). See P. T. O'Brien, Colossians, Philemon (WBC), 82.

[14] tn The genitive noun τῆς δόξης (tēs doxēs) is an attributive genitive and has therefore been translated as "glorious riches."

[15] tn Or "admonishing," or "warning." BDAG 679 s.v. νουθετέω states, "to counsel about avoidance or cessation of an improper course of conduct,, admonish, warn, instruct." After the participle νουθετοῦντες (nouthetountes, "instructing") the words πάντα ἄνθρωπον (panta anthrōpon, "all men") occur in the Greek text, but since the same phrase appears again after διδάσκοντες (didaskontes) it was omitted in translation to avoid redundancy in English.

teaching[1] all people[2] with all wisdom so that we may present every person mature[3] in Christ. 1:29 Toward this goal[4] I also labor, struggling according to his power that powerfully[5] works in me.

2:1 For I want you to know how great a struggle I have for you,[6] and for those in Laodicea, and for those who have not met me face to face.[7] 2:2 My goal is that[8] their hearts, having been knit together[9] in love, may be encouraged, and that[10] they may have all the riches that assurance brings in their understanding of the knowledge of the mystery of God, namely, Christ,[11] 2:3 in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. 2:4 I say this so that no one will deceive you through arguments[12] that sound reasonable.[13] 2:5 For though[14] I am absent from you in body, I am present with you in spirit, rejoicing to see[15] your morale[16] and the firmness of your faith in Christ.

Warnings Against the Adoption of False Philosophies

2:6 Therefore, just as you received Christ Jesus as Lord,[17] continue to live your lives[18] in him, 2:7 rooted[19] and built up in him and firm[20] in your[21] faith just as you were taught, and overflowing with thankfulness. 2:8 Be careful not to allow anyone to captivate you[22] through an empty, deceitful philosophy[23] that is according to human traditions and the elemental spirits[24]

---

1 tn The two participles "instructing" (νουθετοῦντες, nouthetountes) and "teaching" (διδάσκοντες, didaskontes) are translated as participles of means ("by") related to the finite verb "we proclaim" (καταγγέλλομεν, katangellomen).

2 tn Here ἄνθρωπον (anthrōpon) is twice translated as a generic ("people" and "person") since both men and women are clearly intended in this context.

3 tn Since Paul's focus is on the present experience of the Colossians, "mature" is a better translation of τέλειον (teleion) than "perfect," since the latter implies a future, eschatological focus.

4 tn The Greek phrase εἰς ὅ (eis ho, "toward which") implies "movement toward a goal" and has been rendered by the English phrase "Toward this goal."

5 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν δυνάμει (en dunamei) seems to be functioning adverbially, related to the participle, and has therefore been translated "powerfully."

6 tn Or "I want you to know how hard I am working for you..."

7 tn Grk "as many as have not seen my face in the flesh."

8 tn Verse two begins a subordinate ἵνα (hina) clause which was divided up into two sentences for the sake of clarity in English. Thus the phrase "My goal is that" is an attempt to reflect in the translation the purpose expressed through the ἵνα clauses.

9 tn BDAG 956 s.v. συμβιβάζω 1.b reads "unite, knit together." Some commentators take the verb as a reference to instruction, "instructed in love." See P. T. O'Brien, Colossians, Philemon (WBC), 93.

10 tn The phrase "and that" translates the first εἰς (eis) clause of v. 2 and reflects the second goal of Paul's striving and struggle for the Colossians – the first is "encouragement" and the second is "full assurance."

11 tc There are at least a dozen variants here, almost surely generated by the unusual wording τοῦ θεοῦ, Χριστοῦ (tou theou, Christou, "of God, Christ"; so 𝔓46 B Hil). Scribes would be prone to conform this to more common Pauline expressions such as "of God, who is in Christ" (33), "of God, the Father of Christ" (𝔑* A C 048vid 1175 bo), and "of the God and Father of Christ" (𝔑2 Ψ 075 0278 365 1505 pc). Even though the external support for the wording τοῦ θεοῦ, Χριστοῦ is hardly overwhelming, it clearly best explains the rise of the other readings and should thus be regarded as authentic.

12 tn BDAG 812 s.v. πιθανολογία states, "persuasive speech, art of persuasion (so Pla., Theaet. 162e) in an unfavorable sense in its only occurrence in our lit. ἐν πιθανολογίᾳ by specious arguments Col 2:4 (cp. PLips 40 III, 7 διὰ πιθανολογίας)."

13 sn Paul's point is that even though the arguments seem to make sense (sound reasonable), they are in the end false. Paul is not here arguing against the study of philosophy or serious thinking per se, but is arguing against the uncritical adoption of a philosophy that is at odds with a proper view of Christ and the ethics of the Christian life.

14 tn The conditional particle εἰ (ei) together with καί (kai) here indicates a first class condition in Greek and carries a concessive force, especially when seen in contrast to the following phrase which begins with ἀλλά (alla).

15 tn Grk "rejoicing and seeing."

16 tn The Greek word τάξις can mean "order," "discipline," or even "unbroken ranks" (REB).

17 tn Though the verb παρελάβετε (parelabete) does not often take a double accusative, here it seems to do so. Both τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν (ton Christon Iēsoun) and τὸν κύριον (ton kurion) are equally definite insofar as they both have an article, but both the word order and the use of "Christ Jesus" as a proper name suggest that it is the object (cf. Rom 10:9, 10). Thus Paul is affirming that the tradition that was delivered to the Colossians by Epaphras was Christ-centered and focused on him as Lord.

18 tn The present imperative περιπατεῖτε (peripateite) implies, in this context, a continuation of something already begun. This is evidenced by the fact that Paul has already referred to their faith as "orderly" and "firm" (2:5), despite the struggles of some of them with this deceptive heresy (cf. 2:16-23). The verb is used literally to refer to a person "walking" and is thus used metaphorically (i.e., ethically) to refer to the way a person lives his or her life.

19 tn Or "having been rooted."

20 sn The three participles rooted, built up, and firm belong together and reflect three different metaphors. The first participle "rooted" (perfect tense) indicates a settled condition on the part of the Colossian believers and refers to horticulture. The second participle "built up" (present passive) comes from the world of architecture. The third participle "firm [established]" (present passive) comes from the law courts. With these three metaphors (as well as the following comment on thankfulness) Paul explains what he means when he commands them to continue to live their lives in Christ. The use of the passive probably reflects God's activity among them. It was he who had rooted them, had been building them up, and had established them in the faith (cf. 1 Cor 3:5-15 for the use of mixed metaphors).

21 tn The Greek text has the article τῇ (tē), not the possessive pronoun ὑμῶν (humōn), but the article often functions as a possessive pronoun and was translated as such here (ExSyn 215).

22 tn The Greek construction here is somewhat difficult and can be literally rendered "Be careful, lest someone shall be the one who takes you captive."

23 tn The Greek reads τῆς φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενῆς ἀπάτης (tēs philosophias kai kenēs apatēs). The two nouns φιλοσοφίας and κενῆς are joined by one article and probably form a hendiadys. Thus the second noun was taken as modifying the first, as the translation shows.

24 tn The phrase κατὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου (kata ta stoicheia tou kosmou) is difficult to translate because of problems surrounding the precise meaning of στοιχεῖα in this context. Originally it referred to the letters of the alphabet, with the idea at its root of "things in a row"; see C. Vaughn, "Colossians," EBC 11:198. M. J. Harris (Colossians and Philemon [EGGNT], 93) outlines three probable options: (1) the material elements which comprise the physical world; (2) the elementary teachings of the world (so NEB, NASB, NIV); (3) of the world, and not according to Christ. 2:9 For in him all the fullness of deity lives[1] in bodily form, 2:10 and you have been filled in him, who is the head over every ruler and authority. 2:11 In him you also were circumcised – not, however,[2] with a circumcision performed by human hands, but by the removal[3] of the fleshly body,[4] that is,[5] through the circumcision done by Christ. 2:12 Having been buried with him in baptism, you also have been raised with him through your[6] faith in the power[7] of God who raised him from the dead. 2:13 And even though you were dead in your[8] transgressions and in the uncircumcision of your flesh, he nevertheless[9] made you alive with him, having forgiven all your transgressions. 2:14 He has destroyed[10] what was against us, a certificate of indebtedness[11] expressed in decrees opposed to us. He has taken it away by nailing it to the cross. 2:15 Disarming[12] the rulers and authorities, he has made a public disgrace of them, triumphing over them by the cross.[13]

2:16 Therefore do not let anyone judge you with respect to food or drink, or in the matter of a feast, new moon, or Sabbath days – 2:17 these are only[14] the shadow of the things to come, but the reality[15] is Christ![16] 2:18 Let no one who delights in humility and the worship of angels pass judgment on you. That person goes on at great lengths[17] about what he has supposedly seen, but he is puffed up with empty notions by his fleshly mind.[18] 2:19 He has not held fast[19] to the head from whom the whole body, supported[20] and knit together through its ligaments and sinews, grows with a growth that is from God.[21]

2:20 If you have died with Christ to the elemental spirits[22] of the world, why do you submit to them as though you lived in the world? 2:21 "Do not handle! Do not taste! Do not the elemental spirits of the world (so NEB, RSV). The first option is highly unlikely because Paul is not concerned here with the physical elements, e.g., carbon or nitrogen. The last two options are both possible. Though the Gnostic-like heresy at Colossae would undoubtedly have been regarded by Paul as an "elementary teaching" at best, because the idea of "spirits" played such a role in Gnostic thought, he may very well have had in mind elemental spirits that operated in the world or controlled the world (i.e., under God's authority and permission).

[1] sn In him all the fullness of deity lives. The present tense in this verse ("lives") is significant. Again, as was stated in the note on 1:19, this is not a temporary dwelling, but a permanent one. Paul's point is polemical against the idea that the fullness of God dwells anywhere else, as the Gnostics believed, except in Christ alone. At the incarnation, the second person of the Trinity assumed humanity, and is forever the God-man.

[2] tn The terms "however" and "but" in this sentence were supplied in order to emphasize the contrast.

[3] tn The articular noun τῇ ἀπεκδύσει (tē apekdusei) is a noun which ends in -σις (-sis) and therefore denotes action, i.e., "removal." Since the head noun is a verbal noun, the following genitive τοῦ σώματος (tou sōmatos) is understood as an objective genitive, receiving the action of the head noun.

[4] tn Grk "in the removal of the body of flesh." The genitive τῆς σαρκός (tēs sarkos) has been translated as an attributive genitive, "fleshly body."

[5] tn The second prepositional phrase beginning with ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ (en tē peritomē) is parallel to the prepositional phrase ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει (en tē apekdusei) and gives a further explanation of it. The words "that is" were supplied to bring out this force in the translation.

[6] tn The article with the genitive modifier τῆς πίστεως (tēs pisteōs) is functioning as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[7] tn The genitive τῆς ἐνεργείας (tēs energeias) has been translated as an objective genitive, "faith in the power."

[8] tn The article τοῖς (tois) with παραπτώμασιν (paraptōmasin) is functioning as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[9] tn The word "nevertheless," though not in the Greek text, was supplied in the translation to bring out the force of the concessive participle ὄντας (ontas).

[10] tn The participle ἐξαλείψας (exaleipsas) is a temporal adverbial participle of contemporaneous time related to the previous verb συνεζωοποίησεν (sunezōopoiēsen), but has been translated as a finite verb because of the complexity of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences. For the meaning "destroy" see BDAG 344-45 s.v. ἐξαλείφω 2.

[11] tn On the translation of χειρόγραφον (cheirographon), see BDAG 1083 s.v. which refers to it as "a certificate of indebtedness."

[12] tn See BDAG 100 s.v. ἀπεκδύομαι 2.

[13] tn The antecedent of the Greek pronoun αὐτῷ (autō) could either be "Christ" or the "cross." There are several reasons for choosing "the cross" as the antecedent for αὐτῷ in verse 15: (1) The nearest antecedent is τῷ σταυρῷ (tō staurō) in v. 14; (2) the idea of ἐδειγμάτισεν ἐν παρρησίᾳ (edeigmatisen en parrēsia, "made a public disgrace") seems to be more in keeping with the idea of the cross; (3) a reference to Christ seems to miss the irony involved in the idea of triumph – the whole point is that where one would expect defeat, there came the victory; (4) if Christ is the subject of the participles in v. 15 then almost certainly the cross is the referent for αὐτῷ. Thus the best solution is to see αὐτῷ as a reference to the cross and the preposition ἐν (en) indicating "means" (i.e., by means of the cross) or possibly (though less likely) location (on the cross).

[14] tn The word "only," though not in the Greek text, is supplied in the English translation to bring out the force of the Greek phrase.

[15] tn Grk "but the body of Christ." The term body here, when used in contrast to shadow (σκιά, skia) indicates the opposite meaning, i.e., the reality or substance itself.

[16] tn The genitive τοῦ Χριστοῦ (tou Christou) is appositional and translated as such: "the reality is Christ."

[17] tn For the various views on the translation of ἐμβατεύων (embateuōn), see BDAG 321 s.v. ἐμβατεύω 4. The idea in this context seems to be that the individual in question loves to talk on and on about his spiritual experiences, but in reality they are only coming out of his own sinful flesh.

[18] tn Grk "by the mind of his flesh." In the translation above, σαρκός (sarkos) is taken as an attributive genitive. The phrase could also be translated "by his sinful thoughts," since it appears that Paul is using σάρξ (sarx, "flesh") here in a morally negative way.

[19] tn The Greek participle κρατῶν (kratōn) was translated as a finite verb to avoid an unusually long and pedantic sentence structure in English.

[20] tn See BDAG 387 s.v. ἐπιχορηγέω 3.

[21] tn The genitive τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) has been translated as a genitive of source, "from God."

[22] tn See the note on the phrase "elemental spirits" in 2:8.

touch!" 2:22 These are all destined to perish with use, founded as they are[1] on human commands and teachings.[2] 2:23 Even though they have the appearance of wisdom[3] with their self-imposed worship and false humility[4] achieved by an[5] unsparing treatment of the body – a wisdom with no true value – they in reality result in fleshly indulgence.[6]

Exhortations to Seek the Things Above

3:1 Therefore, if you have been raised with Christ, keep seeking the things above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. 3:2 Keep thinking about things above, not things on the earth, 3:3 for you have died and your life is hidden with Christ in God. 3:4 When Christ (who is your[7] life) appears, then you too will be revealed in glory with him. 3:5 So put to death whatever in your nature belongs to the earth:[8] sexual immorality, impurity, shameful passion,[9] evil desire, and greed which is idolatry. 3:6 Because of these things the wrath of God is coming on the sons of disobedience.[10] 3:7 You also lived your lives[11] in this way at one time, when you used to live among them. 3:8 But now, put off all such things[12] as anger, rage, malice, slander, abusive language from your mouth. 3:9 Do not lie to one another since you have put off the old man with its practices 3:10 and have been clothed with the new man[13] that is being renewed in knowledge according to the image of the one who created it. 3:11 Here there is neither

1 tn The expression "founded as they are" brings out the force of the Greek preposition κατά (kata).

2 tn Grk "The commands and teachings of men."

3 tn Grk "having a word of wisdom."

4 tn Though the apostle uses the term ταπεινοφροσύνῃ (tapeinophrosunē) elsewhere in a positive sense (cf. 3:12), here the sense is negative and reflects the misguided thinking of Paul's opponents.

5 tc ‡ The vast bulk of witnesses, including some important ones (ℵ A C D F G H Ψ 075 0278 33 1881 𝔐 lat sy), have καί (kai) here, but the shorter reading is supported by some early and important witnesses (𝔓46 B 1739 b m Hil Ambst Spec). The καί looks to be a motivated reading in that it makes ἀφειδία (apheidia) "the third in a series of datives after ἐν, rather than an instrumental dative qualifying the previous prepositional phrase" (TCGNT 556). At the same time, the omission of καί could possibly have been unintentional. A decision is difficult, but the shorter reading is slightly preferred. NA27 puts καί in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

6 tn The translation understands this verse to contain a concessive subordinate clause within the main clause. The Greek particle μέν (men) is the second word of the embedded subordinate clause. The phrase οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ τινι (ouk en timē tini) modifies the subordinate clause, and the main clause resumes with the preposition πρός (pros). The translation has placed the subordinate clause first in order for clarity instead of retaining its embedded location. For a detailed discussion of this grammatical construction, see B. Hollenbach, "Col 2:23: Which Things Lead to the Fulfillment of the Flesh," NTS 25 (1979): 254-61.

7 tc Certain MSS (B[*] D[1] H 0278 1739 𝔐 sy sa) read ἡμῶν (hēmōn, "our"), while others (𝔓46 ℵ C D* F G P Ψ 075 33 81 1881 al latt bo) read ὑμῶν (humōn, "your"). Internally, it is possible that the second person pronoun arose through scribal conformity to the second person pronoun used previously in v. 3 (i.e., ὑμῶν) and following in v. 4 (ὑμεῖς, humeis). But in terms of external criteria, the second person pronoun has superior MS support (though there is an Alexandrian split) and ἡμῶν may have arisen through accident (error of sight) or scribal attempt to universalize the statement since all Christians have Jesus as their life. See TCGNT 557.

8 tn Grk "the members which are on the earth." See BDAG 628 s.v. μέλος 1, "put to death whatever in you is worldly."

9 tn Or "lust."

10 tc The words ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας (epi tous huious tēs apeitheias, "on the sons of disobedience") are lacking in 𝔓46 B b sa, but are found in ℵ A C D F G H I Ψ 075 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy bo. The words are omitted by several English translations (NASB, NIV, ESV, TNIV). This textual problem is quite difficult to resolve. On the one hand, the parallel account in Eph 5:6 has these words, thus providing scribes a motive for adding them here. On the other hand, the reading without the words may be too hard: The ἐν οἷς (en hois) of v. 7 seems to have no antecedent without υἱούς already in the text, although it could possibly be construed as neuter referring to the vice list in v. 5. Further, although the witness of B is especially important, there are other places in which B and 𝔓46 share errant readings of omission. Nevertheless, the strength of the internal evidence against the longer reading is at least sufficient to cause doubt here. The decision to retain the words in the text is less than certain.

sn The expression sons of disobedience is a Semitic idiom that means "people characterized by disobedience." In this context it refers to "all those who are disobedient." Cf. Eph 5:6.

11 tn Grk "you also walked." The verb περιπατέω (peripateō) is commonly used in the NT to refer to behavior or conduct of one's life (L&N 41.11).

12 tn The Greek article with τὰ πάντα (ta panta) is anaphoric, referring to the previous list of vices, and has been translated here as "all such things."

13 sn Put off all such things. The commands in vv. 8-9 are based on two reasons given in vv. 9-10 – reasons which are expressed in terms of a metaphor about clothing oneself. Paul says that they have put off the old man and have put on the new man. Two things need to be discussed in reference to Paul's statement. (1) What is the meaning of the clothing imagery (i.e., the "have put off" and "have been clothed")? (2) What is the meaning of the old man and the new man? Though some commentators understand the participles "have put off" (v. 9) and "have been clothed" (v. 10) as imperatives (i.e., "put off!" and "put on!"), this use of participles is extremely rare in the NT and thus unlikely here. It is better to take them as having the semantic force of indicatives, and thus they give an explanation of what had happened to the Colossians at the time of their conversion – they had taken off the old man and put on the new when they trusted in Christ (cf. 1:4). While it is difficult to say for certain what the background to Paul's "clothing" metaphor might be (whether it is primarily Jewish and comes from the OT, or primarily Gentile and comes from some facet of the Greco-Roman religious milieu), it is nonetheless clear, on the basis of Paul's usage of the expression, that the old man refers to man as he is in Adam and dominated by sin (cf. Rom 6:6; Eph 4:22), while the new man refers to the Christian whose new sphere of existence is in Christ. Though the metaphor of clothing oneself primarily reflects outward actions, there is a distinct inward aspect to it, as the rest of v. 10 indicates: being renewed in knowledge according to the image of the one who created it. Paul's point, then, is that Christians should take off their dirty clothing (inappropriate behavior) and put on clean clothing (behavior consistent with knowing Christ) because this has already been accomplished in a positional sense at the time of their conversion (cf. Gal 3:27 with Rom 13:14).

Greek nor Jew, circumcised or uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave[1] or free, but Christ is all and in all.

Exhortation to Unity and Love

3:12 Therefore, as the elect of God, holy and dearly loved, clothe yourselves with a heart of mercy,[2] kindness, humility, gentleness, and patience, 3:13 bearing with one another and forgiving[3] one another, if someone happens to have[4] a complaint against anyone else. Just as the Lord has forgiven you, so you also forgive others.[5] 3:14 And to all these[6] virtues[7] add[8] love, which is the perfect bond.[9] 3:15 Let the peace of Christ be in control in your heart (for you were in fact called as one body[10] to this peace), and be thankful. 3:16 Let the word of Christ[11] dwell in you richly, teaching and exhorting one another with all wisdom, singing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, all with grace[12] in your hearts to God. 3:17 And whatever you do in word or deed, do it all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him.

Exhortation to Households

3:18 Wives, submit to your[13] husbands, as is fitting in the Lord. 3:19 Husbands, love your wives and do not be embittered against them. 3:20 Children, obey your parents in everything, for this is pleasing in the Lord. 3:21 Fathers,[14] do not provoke[15] your children, so they will not become disheartened. 3:22 Slaves,[16] obey your earthly[17] masters in every respect, not only when they are watching – like those who are strictly people-pleasers – but with a sincere heart, fearing the Lord. 3:23 Whatever you are doing,[18] work at it with enthusiasm,[19] as to the Lord and not for people,[20] 3:24 because you know that you will receive your[21] inheritance[22] from the Lord as the reward. Serve[23] the Lord Christ.

1 tn See the note on "fellow slave" in 1:7.

2 tn If the genitive construct σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρμοῦ (splanchna oiktirmou) is a hendiadys then it would be "compassion" or "tenderheartedness." See M. J. Harris, Colossians and Philemon (EGGNT), 161.

3 tn For the translation of χαριζόμενοι (charizomenoi) as "forgiving," see BDAG 1078 s.v. χαρίζομαι 3. The two participles "bearing" (ἀνεχόμενοι, anechomenoi) and "forgiving" (χαριζόμενοι) express the means by which the action of the finite verb "clothe yourselves" is to be carried out.

4 tn Grk "if someone has"; the term "happens," though not in the Greek text, is inserted to bring out the force of the third class condition.

5 tn The expression "forgive others" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. It is included in the translation to make the sentence complete and more comprehensible to the English reader.

6 tn BDAG 365 s.v. ἐπί 7 suggests "to all these" as a translation for ἐπὶ πᾶσιν δὲ τούτοις (epi pasin de toutois).

7 tn The term "virtues" is not in the Greek text, but is included in the translation to specify the antecedent and to make clear the sense of the pronoun "these."

8 tn The verb "add," though not in the Greek text, is implied, picking up the initial imperative "clothe yourselves."

9 tn The genitive τῆς τελειότητος (tēs teleiotētos) has been translated as an attributive genitive, "the perfect bond."

10 tn Grk "in one body." This phrase emphasizes the manner in which the believers were called, not the goal of their calling, and focuses upon their unity.

11 tc Since "the word of Christ" occurs nowhere else in the NT, two predictable variants arose: "word of God" and "word of the Lord." Even though some of the witnesses for these variants are impressive (κυρίου [kuriou, "of the Lord"] in ℵ* I 1175 pc bo; θεοῦ [theou, "of God"] in A C* 33 104 323 945 al), the reading Χριστοῦ (Christou, "of Christ") is read by an excellent cross-section of witnesses (𝔓[46] ℵ[2] B C[2] D F G Ψ 075 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sa). On both internal and external grounds, Χριστοῦ is strongly preferred.

12 tn Grk "with grace"; "all" is supplied as it is implicitly related to all the previous instructions in the verse.

13 tn The article τοῖς (tois) with ἀνδράσιν (andrasin, "husbands") has been translated as a possessive pronoun ("your"); see ExSyn 215.

14 tn Or perhaps "Parents." The plural οἱ πατέρες (hoi pateres, "fathers") can be used to refer to both the male and female parent (BDAG 786 s.v. πατήρ 1.a).

15 tn Or "do not cause your children to become resentful" (L&N 88.168). BDAG 391 s.v. ἐρεθίζω states, "to cause someone to react in a way that suggests acceptance of a challenge, arouse, provoke mostly in bad sense irritate, embitter."

16 tn On this word here and in 4:1, see the note on "fellow slave" in 1:7.

17 tn The prepositional phrase κατὰ σάρκα (kata sarka) does not necessarily qualify the masters as earthly or human (as opposed to the Master in heaven, the Lord), but could also refer to the sphere in which "the service-relation holds true." See BDAG 577 s.v. κύριος 1.b.

18 tn The present progressive "are doing" was used in the translation of ποιῆτε (poiēte) to bring out the idea that Paul is probably referring to what they already do for work.

19 tn Grk "from the soul."

20 tn Grk "men"; here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is used in a generic sense and refers to people in general.

21 tn The article τῆς (tēs) has been translated as a possessive pronoun, "your" (ExSyn 215). It may also be functioning to indicate a well-known concept (inheritance as eternal life). See BDAG 548 s.v. κληρονομία 3: "common in Christian usage (corresp. to the LXX) (the possession of) transcendent salvation (as the inheritance of God's children)."

22 tn The genitive τῆς κληρονομίας (tēs klēronomias) is a genitive of apposition: The reward consists of the inheritance.

23 tn The form of the term δουλεύετε (douleuete) is ambiguous; it can be read as either indicative or imperative. In favor of the indicative: (1) it seems to explain better the first part of v. 24, esp. "from the Lord" which would then read as: "because you know that you will receive your inheritance from the Lord as a reward for it is the Lord you are serving." The "for" is supplied to make the relation explicit (it is actually added in many MSS – D[1] Ψ 075 𝔐 – but the best MS evidence is against its inclusion). (2) With the imperative, one might expect ὡς τῷ κυρίῳ (hōs tō kuriō), as for example in Eph 6:7. In favor of the imperative: (1) an imperative resumes the ἐργάζεσθε (ergazesthe) in v. 23a and forms a chiasm with it; (2) an imperative makes more sense of the γάρ (gar) in v. 25a; (3) an imperative relates equally well to the preceding statement; (4) a parallel can be found in Rom 12:11 which uses an imperatival participle δουλεύοντες (douleuontes) with the dative τῷ κυρίῳ. For an elaboration of these points see M. J. Harris, Colossians and Philemon (EGGNT), 185-86.

3:25 For the one who does wrong will be repaid for his wrong,[1] and there are no exceptions.[2] 4:1 Masters, treat your slaves with justice and fairness, because you know that you also have a master in heaven.

Exhortation to Pray for the Success of Paul's Mission

4:2 Be devoted to prayer, keeping alert in it with thanksgiving. 4:3 At the same time pray[3] for us too, that[4] God may open a door for the message[5] so that we may proclaim[6] the mystery of Christ, for which I am in chains.[7] 4:4 Pray that I may make it known as I should.[8] 4:5 Conduct yourselves[9] with wisdom toward outsiders, making the most of the opportunities. 4:6 Let your speech always be gracious, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how you should answer everyone.

Personal Greetings and Instructions

4:7 Tychicus, a dear brother, faithful minister, and fellow slave[10] in the Lord, will tell you all the news about me.[11] 4:8 I sent him to you for this very purpose, that you may know how we are doing[12] and that he may encourage your hearts. 4:9 I sent him[13] with Onesimus, the faithful and dear brother, who is one of you.[14] They will tell[15] you about everything here.

4:10 Aristarchus, my fellow prisoner, sends you greetings, as does Mark, the cousin of Barnabas (about whom you received instructions; if he comes to you, welcome him). 4:11 And Jesus who is called Justus also sends greetings. In terms of Jewish converts,[16] these are the only fellow workers for the kingdom of God, and they have been a comfort to me. 4:12 Epaphras, who is one of you and a slave[17] of Christ,[18] greets you. He is always struggling in prayer on your behalf, so that you may stand mature and fully assured[19] in all the will of God. 4:13 For I can testify that he has worked hard[20] for you and for those in Laodicea and Hierapolis. 4:14 Our dear friend Luke the physician and Demas greet you. 4:15 Give my greetings to the brothers and sisters[21] who are in Laodicea and to sn It is a common theme in biblical thought that punishment for sin involves being fully given over to its consequences (cf. Rom 1), and this is also true of believers. Here Paul's implication is that believers who sin and disobey the Lord whom they serve will receive the consequences of their actions, which is a fitting discipline.

1 tn Grk "that which he did wrong."

2 tn The Greek word used here is προσωπολημψία (prosōpolēmpsia) and is usually translated "partiality." It is used to describe unjust or unrighteous favoritism (Rom 2:11, Eph 6:9, Jas 2:1). When it comes to disciplining his children for their sins, God will treat all equally with no partiality.

3 tn Though προσευχόμενοι (proseuchomenoi) is an adverbial participle related to the previous imperative, προσκαρτερεῖτε (proskartereite), it is here translated as an independent clause due to requirements of contemporary English style.

4 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause has been rendered as substantival here, indicating the content of the prayer rather than the purpose for it. These two ideas are very similar and difficult to differentiate in this passage, but the conjunction ἵνα following a verb of praying is generally regarded as giving the content of the prayer.

5 tn Grk "that God may open for us a door of the word to speak the mystery of Christ." The construction in Greek is somewhat awkward in this clause. The translation attempts to simplify this structure somewhat and yet communicate exactly what Paul is asking for.

6 tn Or "so that we may speak."

7 tn Or "in prison."

8 tn The phrase begins with the ἵνα (hina) clause and is subordinate to the imperative προσκαρτερεῖτε (proskartereite) in v. 2. The reference to the idea that Paul must make it known indicates that this clause is probably best viewed as purpose and not content, like the ἵνα of v. 3. It is the second purpose stated in the context; the first is expressed through the infinitive λαλῆσαι (lalēsai) in v. 3. The term "pray" at the beginning of the sentence is intended to pick up the imperative of v. 3.

9 tn Grk "walk." The verb περιπατέω (peripateō) is a common NT idiom for one's lifestyle, behavior, or manner of conduct (L&N 41.11).

10 tn See the note on "fellow slave" in 1:7.

11 tn Grk "all things according to me."

12 tn Grk "the things concerning us."

13 tn The Greek sentence continues v. 9 with the phrase "with Onesimus," but this is awkward in English, so the verb "I sent" was inserted and a new sentence started at the beginning of v. 9 in the translation.

14 tn Grk "is of you."

15 tn Grk "will make known to you." This has been simplified in the translation to "will tell."

16 tn Grk "those of the circumcision." The verse as a whole is difficult to translate because it is unclear whether Paul is saying (1) that the only people working with him are Jewish converts at the time the letter is being written or previously, or (2) that Aristarchus, Mark, and Jesus Justus were the only Jewish Christians who ever worked with him. Verses 12-14 appear to indicate that Luke and Demas, who were Gentiles, were also working currently with Paul. This is the view adopted in the translation. See M. J. Harris, Colossians and Philemon (EGGNT), 207-8.

17 tn See the note on "fellow slave" in 1:7.

18 tc ‡ Strong Alexandrian testimony, along with some other witnesses, suggests that Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou, "Jesus") follows Χριστοῦ (Christou, "Christ"; so ℵ A B C I L 0278 33 81 365 629 1175 2464 al lat), but the evidence for the shorter reading (𝔓[46] D F G Ψ 075 1739 1881 𝔐 it sy Hier), cutting across all major texttypes. There can be little motivation for omitting the name of Jesus; hence, the shorter reading is judged to be original. NA[27] has Ἰησοῦ in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

19 tn Or "filled."

20 tn Grk "pain." This word appears only three times in the NT outside of this verse (Rev 16:10, 11; 21:4) where the translation "pain" makes sense. For the present verse it has been translated "worked hard." See BDAG 852 s.v. πόνος 1.

21 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

Nympha and the church that meets in her[1] house.[2] 4:16 And after[3] you have read this letter, have it read[4] to the church of Laodicea. In turn, read the letter from Laodicea[5] as well. 4:17 And tell Archippus, "See to it that you complete the ministry you received in the Lord."

4:18 I, Paul, write this greeting by my own hand.[6] Remember my chains.[7] Grace be with you.[8]

[1] tc If the name Nympha is accented with a circumflex on the ultima (Νυμφᾶν, Numphan), then it refers to a man; if it receives an acute accent on the penult (Νύμφαν), the reference is to a woman. Scribes that considered Nympha to be a man's name had the corresponding masculine pronoun αὐτοῦ here (autou, "his"; so D [F G] Ψ 𝔐), while those who saw Nympha as a woman read the feminine αὐτῆς here (autēs, "her"; B 0278 6 1739[*] 1881 sa). Several MSS (א A C P 075 33 81 104 326 1175 2464 bo) have αὐτῶν (autōn, "their"), perhaps because of indecisiveness on the gender of Nympha, perhaps because they included ἀδελφούς (adelphous, here translated "brothers and sisters") as part of the referent. (Perhaps because accents were not part of the original text, scribes were particularly confused here.) The harder reading is certainly αὐτῆς, and thus Nympha should be considered a woman.

[2] tn Grk "the church in her house." The meaning is that Paul sends greetings to the church that meets at Nympha's house.

[3] tn Grk "when."

[4] tn The construction beginning with the imperative ποιήσατε ἵνα...ἀναγνωσθῇ (poiēsate hina...anagnōsthē) should be translated as "have it read" where the conjunction ἵνα functions to mark off its clause as the direct object of the imperative ποιήσατε. The content of the clause ("reading the letter") is what Paul commands with the imperative ποιήσατε. Thus the translation "have it read" has been used here.

[5] sn This letter is otherwise unknown, but some have suggested that it is the letter known today as Ephesians.

[6] tn Grk "the greeting by my hand, of Paul."

[7] tn Or "my imprisonment."

[8] tc Most witnesses, including a few important ones (א[2] D Ψ 075 0278 𝔐 lat sy), conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the external evidence for the omission is quite compelling (א* A B C F G 048 6 33 81 1739* 1881 sa). The strongly preferred reading is therefore the omission of ἀμήν.

1 Thessalonians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul[1] and Silvanus and Timothy, to the church of the Thessalonians[2] in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace and peace to you![3]

Thanksgiving for Response to the Gospel

1:2 We thank God always for all of you as we mention you constantly[4] in our prayers, 1:3 because we recall[5] in the presence of our God and Father[6] your work of faith and labor of love and endurance of hope[7] in our Lord Jesus Christ. 1:4 We know,[8] brothers and sisters[9] loved by God, that he has chosen you,[10] 1:5 in that[11] our gospel did not come to you merely in words,[12] but in power and in the Holy Spirit and with deep conviction (surely you recall the character we displayed when we came among you to help you).[13]

1:6 And you became imitators of us and of the Lord, when you received[14] the message with joy that comes from the Holy Spirit, despite great affliction. 1:7 As a result you became an example[15] to all the believers in Macedonia and in Achaia. 1:8 For from you the message of the Lord[16] has echoed forth not just in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place reports of your faith in God have spread,[17] so that we do not need to say anything. 1:9 For people everywhere[18] report how you welcomed us[19] and how you turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God 1:10 and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, Jesus our deliverer from the coming wrath.[20]

---

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 map For the location of Thessalonica see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

3 tc The majority of witnesses, including several early and important ones (ℵ A [D] I 33 𝔐 bo), have ἀπὸ θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ κυριοῦ Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ (apo theou patros hēmōn kai kuriou Iēsou Christou, "from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ") at the end of v. 1. The more abrupt reading ("Grace and peace to you") without this addition is supported by B F G Ψ 0278 629 1739 1881 pc lat sa. Apart from a desire to omit the redundancy of the mention of God and Christ in this verse, there is no good reason why scribes would have omitted the characteristically Pauline greeting. (Further, if this were the case, why did these same scribes overlook such an opportunity in 2 Thess 1:1-2?) On the other hand, since 1 Thessalonians is one of Paul's earliest letters, what would become characteristic of his greetings seems to have been still in embryonic form (e.g., he does not yet call his audience "saints" [which will first be used in his address to the Corinthians], nor does he use ἐν (en) plus the dative to refer to the location of the church). Thus, the internal evidence is overwhelming in support of the shorter reading, for scribes would have been strongly motivated to rework this salutation in light of Paul's style elsewhere. And the external evidence, though not overwhelming, is supportive of this shorter reading, found as it is in some of the best witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western texttypes.

tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

4 tn Or "mention you in our prayers, because we recall constantly..."

5 tn Grk "making mention...recalling." The participle ποιούμενοι (poioumenoi) in v. 2 has been translated as temporal, and μνημονεύοντες (mnēmoneuontes) in v. 3 has been translated as causal.

6 tn Or the phrase may connect at the end of the verse: "hope...in the presence of our God and Father."

7 tn These phrases denote Christian virtues in action: the work produced by faith, labor motivated by love, and endurance that stems from hope in Christ.

8 tn Grk "knowing." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the participle εἰδότες (eidotes) has been translated as a finite verb and a new sentence started here in the translation.

10 tn Grk "your election."

11 tn Or "because."

12 tn Or "speech," or "an act of speaking."

13 tn Grk "just as you know what sort of people we were among you for your sakes." Verse 5 reflects on the experience of Paul and his fellow preachers; v. 6 begins to describe the Thessalonians' response.

14 tn Or "after you received."

15 tc Most mss (ℵ A C D² F G Ψ 0278 𝔐) have the plural τύπους (tupous, "examples") here, while a few important witnesses have the singular τύπον (tupon, "example"; B D*,c 6 33 81 104 1739 1881 pc lat). With ὑμᾶς (humas, "you") immediately preceding, the plural form looks motivated: Scribes would be expected to change the singular to the plural here. Although the external evidence for the singular reading is not overwhelming, the internal evidence for it is compelling.

16 tn Or "the word of the Lord."

sn "The word of the Lord" is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said. Here the phrase has been translated "the message of the Lord" because of the focus upon the spread of the gospel evident in the passage.

17 tn Grk "your faith in God has gone out."

18 tn Grk "they themselves," referring to people in the places just mentioned.

19 tn Grk "what sort of entrance we had to you" (an idiom for how someone is received).

20 sn The coming wrath. This wrath is an important theme in 1 Thess 5.

Paul's Ministry in Thessalonica

2:1 For you yourselves know, brothers and sisters,[1] about our coming to you – it has not proven to be purposeless.[2] 2:2 But although we suffered earlier and were mistreated in Philippi,[3] as you know, we had the courage in our God to declare to you the gospel of God[4] in spite of much opposition. 2:3 For the appeal we make[5] does not come[6] from error or impurity or with deceit, 2:4 but just as we have been approved by God to be entrusted with the gospel, so we declare it, not to please people but God, who examines our hearts. 2:5 For we never appeared[7] with flattering speech, as you know, nor with a pretext for greed – God is our witness – 2:6 nor to seek glory from people, either from you or from others, 2:7[8] although we could have imposed our weight as apostles of Christ; instead we became[9] little children[10] among you. Like a nursing mother caring for her own children, 2:8 with such affection for you[11] we were happy[12] to share with you not only the gospel of God but also our own lives, because you had become dear to us. 2:9 For you recall, brothers and sisters,[13] our toil and drudgery: By working night and day so as not to impose a burden on any of you, we preached to you the gospel of God. 2:10 You are witnesses, and so is God, as to how holy and righteous and blameless our conduct was toward you who believe. 2:11 As you know, we treated each one of you as a father treats his own children, 2:12 exhorting and encouraging you and insisting that you live in a way worthy of God who calls you to his own kingdom and his glory. 2:13 And so[14] we too constantly thank God that when you received God's message that you heard from us,[15] you accepted it not as a human message,[16] but as it truly is, God's message, which is at work among you who believe. 2:14 For you became imitators, brothers and sisters,[17] of God's churches in Christ Jesus that are in Judea, because you too suffered the same things from your own countrymen as they in fact did from the Jews, 2:15 who killed both the Lord Jesus and the prophets[18] and persecuted us severely.[19] They

1 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

2 tn Grk "has not become empty." Paul is defending himself against the charge that he lacked earnestness and personal concern for them, but appeared in their city out of greed or egotism. In his defense he appeals to what they recall of his ministry and what has become of it since he left, all of which demonstrates his God-given earnestness and effectiveness.

3 map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

4 tn The genitive in the phrase τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ θεοῦ (to euangelion tou theou, "the gospel of God") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("the gospel which God brings") or an objective genitive ("the gospel about God"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, an interplay between the two concepts is intended: The gospel which God brings is in fact the gospel about himself. This same phrase occurs in vv. 8 and 9 as well.

5 tn Grk "For our exhortation." Paul here uses παράκλησις (paraklēsis) to speak in broad terms about his preaching of the gospel, in which he urges or appeals to people to respond to God's salvation (cf. the verb form παρακαλοῦντος [parakalountos] in 2 Cor 5:20).

6 tn Grk "[is] not" (the verb "to be" is implied in the Greek construction).

7 tn Or "came on the scene," "came."

8 tn Punctuating vv. 6 and 7 is difficult. One must consider the difficult textual problem of v. 7 (see tc note on the word "children" in that verse) as well as the grammar of the verse. In the translation above, "little children" is understood to be a predicate nominative connected to the verb "became." This allows a full stop to be placed at the end of v. 6 and before the phrase "like a nursing mother" in v. 7. This separates the two metaphors which impact the textual problem and allows for greater clarity in the way the sentence is read.

9 tn Or "were," "proved to be."

10 tc The variant ἤπιοι (ēpioi, "gentle") has fair support (𝔑² A C² D² Ψ^c 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐), but νήπιοι (nēpioi, "little children") has significantly stronger backing (𝔓⁶⁵ 𝔑* B C* D* F G I Ψ* pc it bo). It is not insignificant that the earliest Alexandrian and Western witnesses in support of ἤπιοι are actually not Alexandrian or Western; they are the second correctors of Alexandrian and Western mss. Such correctors generally follow a Byzantine Vorlage. The reading νήπιοι is thus superior externally. Further, νήπιοι is much harder in this context, for Paul mixes his metaphors ("we became little children in your midst...Like a nursing mother..."). Thus, the scribes would naturally alter this reading to the softer ἤπιοι ("we became gentle..."). Paul is not known for his consistency of figures, however (cf., e.g., Gal 4:19); hence, the intrinsic evidence points to νήπιοι as original. On the other hand, it is possible that νήπιοι was caused by dittography with the preceding -μεν (-men). It is even possible that νήπιοι was caused by an error of hearing right from the beginning: The amanuensis could have heard the apostle incorrectly. But such a supposition cuts both ways; further, Paul would no doubt have corrected the reading in the ms before it was sent out. If so, one would surely have expected both earlier witnesses on the side of ἤπιοι and perhaps a few first correctors to have this reading. The reading "little children" thus stands as most probably original. (For an extended discussion of this problem, see J. A. D. Weima, "'But We Became Infants Among You': The Case for NHPIOI in 1 Thess 2.7," NTS 46 [2000]: 547-64; T. B. Sailors, "Wedding Textual and Rhetorical Criticism to Understand the Text of 1 Thessalonians 2.7," JSNT 80 [2000]: 81-98.)

11 tn Grk "longing for you in this way."

12 tn Or "we are happy." This verb may be past or present tense, but the context favors the past.

13 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

14 tn Grk "for this reason," which seems to look back to Paul's behavior just described. But it may look forward to v. 13b and mean: "and here is another reason that we constantly thank God: that..."

15 tn Grk "God's word of hearing from us."

16 tn Paul's focus is their attitude toward the message he preached: They received it not as a human message but a message from God.

17 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

18 tc ἰδίους (idious, "their own prophets") is found in D¹ Ψ 𝔐 sy Mion^T. This is obviously a secondary reading. Marcion's influence may stand behind part of the tradition, but the Byzantine text probably added the adjective in light of its mention in v. 14 and as a clarification or interpretation of which prophets were in view.

19 tn Or "and drove us out" (cf. Acts 17:5-10).

are displeasing to God and are opposed to all people, 2:16 because they hinder us from speaking to the Gentiles so that they may be saved. Thus they constantly fill up their measure of sins,[1] but wrath[2] has come upon them completely.[3]

Forced Absence from Thessalonica

2:17 But when we were separated from you, brothers and sisters,[4] for a short time (in presence, not in affection)[5] we became all the more fervent in our great desire[6] to see you in person.[7] 2:18 For we wanted to come to you (I, Paul, in fact tried again and again)[8] but Satan thwarted us. 2:19 For who is our hope or joy or crown to boast of[9] before our Lord Jesus at his coming? Is it not of course you? 2:20 For you are our glory and joy!

3:1 So when we could bear it no longer, we decided to stay on in Athens[10] alone. 3:2 We[11] sent Timothy, our brother and fellow worker for God[12] in the gospel of Christ, to strengthen you and encourage you about your faith, 3:3 so that no one would be shaken by these afflictions. For you yourselves know that we are destined for this. 3:4 For in fact when we were with you, we were telling you in advance that we would suffer affliction, and so it has happened, as you well know.[13] 3:5 So[14] when I could bear it no longer, I sent to find out about your faith, for fear that the tempter somehow tempted you and our toil had proven useless.

3:6 But now Timothy has come[15] to us from you and given us the good news of your faith and love and that you always think of us with affection[16] and long to see us just as we also long to see you![17] 3:7 So[18] in all our distress and affliction, we were reassured about you, brothers and sisters,[19] through your faith. 3:8 For now we are alive again,[20] if you stand firm in the Lord. 3:9 For how can we thank God enough for you,[21] for all the joy we feel[22] because of you before our God? 3:10 We pray earnestly night and day to see you in person[23] and make up what may be lacking in your faith.

3:11 Now may God our Father himself and our Lord Jesus direct our way to you. 3:12 And may the Lord cause you to increase and abound in love for one another and for all, just as we do for you, 3:13 so that your hearts are strengthened in holiness to be blameless before our God and Father at the coming of our Lord Jesus with all his saints.[24]

---

[1] tn Grk "to fill up their sins always."

[2] tc The Western text (D F G latt) adds τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) to ὀργή (orgē) to read "the wrath of God," in emulation of the normal Pauline idiom (cf., e.g., Rom 1:18; Eph 5:6; Col 3:6) and, most likely, to clarify which wrath is in view (since ὀργή is articular).

tn Or "the wrath," possibly referring back to the mention of wrath in 1:10.

[3] tn Or "at last."

[4] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[5] tn Grk "in face, not in heart."

[6] tn Grk "with great desire."

[7] tn Grk "to see your face."

[8] tn Or "several times"; Grk, "both once and twice." The literal expression "once and twice" is frequently used as a Greek idiom referring to an indefinite low number, but more than once ("several times"); see L&N 60.70.

[9] sn Crown to boast of (Grk "crown of boasting"). Paul uses boasting or exultation to describe the Christian's delight in being commended for faithful service by the Lord at his return (1 Cor 9:15-16; 2 Cor 1:12-14; 10:13-18; Phil 2:16; and 1 Cor 3:14; 4:5).

[10] map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

[11] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[12] tc A variety of readings occurs in this verse. Instead of "and fellow worker for God" (καὶ συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, kai sunergon tou theou), B has "and fellow worker" (καὶ συνεργόν); ℵ A P Ψ 0278 6 81 629* 1241 1739 1881 2464 lat co read "and servant of God" (καὶ διάκονον τοῦ θεοῦ, kai diakonon tou theou); D² 𝔐 and a few versional witnesses read "and a servant of God and our fellow worker" (καὶ διάκονον τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν); and F G have "servant and fellow worker for God" (διακονον καὶ συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ). The reading of the text (καὶ συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ) is found in D* 33 b {d m o} Ambst {Pel}. It may be argued that all readings that do not collocate συνεργόν with θεοῦ are secondary, as this is certainly the harder reading. Indeed, in only one other place in the NT are human beings said to be συνεργοὶ θεοῦ (sunergoi theou; 1 Cor 3:9), and the simplest (though by no means the only) interpretation is that the genitive should be taken associatively ("a fellow worker in association with God"). It is difficult to account for συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ here unless it is authentic because of the theological difficulty that would be easily seen in this wording. A genealogy of the readings suggests that various scribes may have deleted τοῦ θεοῦ or swapped διάκονον for συνεργόν to remove the offense. The readings of the Byzantine text and two Western MSS (F G) appear to be conflations of earlier readings, but the reading of F G nevertheless indirectly supports καὶ συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ since it does not remove the offense. Although the witnesses for καὶ συνεργὸν τοῦ θεοῦ are minimal, the internal evidence is quite strong in favor of this reading. With hesitation, it is adopted as authentic.

tn Although 1 Thess 3:2 is frequently understood to mean that Timothy is "God's fellow worker," such a view assumes that the genitive θεοῦ (theou) is associative for it is related to συνεργόν (sunergon). However, a genitive of association is not required by the syntax (cf. ExSyn 130).

[13] tn Grk "just as it also occurred and you know."

[14] tn Or "for this reason."

[15] tn Grk "but now Timothy having come," a subordinate clause leading to the main clause of v. 7.

[16] tn Grk "you have a good remembrance of us always."

[17] tn Grk "just as also we you."

[18] tn Or "for this reason."

[19] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[20] tn Grk "because now we live," in comparison with his feelings of dread in not knowing how they were doing (cf. 2:17-3:5).

[21] tn Grk "what thanks can we render to God about you."

[22] tn Grk "all the joy with which we rejoice."

[23] tn Grk "to see your face."

[24] tc ‡ Important and early witnesses (ℵ* A D* 81 629 lat) have ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of this benediction, while the majority of MSS, including several excellent witnesses (ℵ² B D² F G Ψ 0278 1739 1881 𝔐 it sy sa), lack the particle. A decision is difficult, but in light of Paul's habit of adding the ἀμήν to his notes of praise, even in the middle of his letters (cf. Rom 9:5; 11:36; 15:33; Gal 1:5), one might expect scribes to emulate this practice. Although a decision is difficult, it is probably best to follow the shorter reading. NA²⁷ has the particle in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

A Life Pleasing to God

4:1 Finally then, brothers and sisters,[1] we ask you and urge you in the Lord Jesus, that as you received instruction from us about how[2] you must live and please God (as you are in fact living)[3] that you do so more and more. 4:2 For you know what commands we gave you through the Lord Jesus. 4:3 For this is God's will: that you become holy,[4] that you keep away from sexual immorality, 4:4 that each of you know how to possess his own body[5] in holiness and honor, 4:5 not in lustful passion like the Gentiles who do not know God. 4:6 In this matter no one should violate the rights of his brother or take advantage of him,[6] because the Lord is the avenger in all these cases,[7] as we also told you earlier and warned you solemnly. 4:7 For God did not call us to impurity but in holiness. 4:8 Consequently the one who rejects this is not rejecting human authority[8] but God, who gives his Holy Spirit to you.

4:9 Now on the topic of brotherly love[9] you have no need for anyone to write you, for you yourselves are taught by God to love one another. 4:10 And indeed you are practicing it toward all the brothers and sisters[10] in all of Macedonia. But we urge you, brothers and sisters, to do so more and more,[11] 4:11 to aspire to lead a quiet life, to attend to your own business, and to work with your hands, as we commanded you. 4:12 In this way you will live[12] a decent life before outsiders and not be in need.[13]

The Lord Returns for Believers

4:13 Now we do not want you to be uninformed,[14] brothers and sisters,[15] about those who are asleep,[16] so that you will not grieve like the rest who have no hope. 4:14 For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, so also we believe that[17] God will bring with him those who have fallen asleep as Christians.[18] 4:15 For we tell you this by the word of the Lord,[19] that we who are alive, who are left until the coming of the Lord, will surely not go ahead of those who have fallen asleep. 4:16 For the Lord himself will come down from heaven with a shout of command, with the voice of the archangel,[20] and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ

[1] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[2] sn As you received instruction from us about how (Grk "as you received from us how"). The Greek word translated received is used for accepting instructions passed on as fixed traditions from teacher to follower. Paul speaks in these terms about doctrinal traditions as well as ethical instruction that he passes on to his converts and expects them to keep (cf. 1 Cor 11:2, 23; 15:1-3; Gal 1:9; Phil 4:9; 2 Thess 2:15; 3:6).

[3] tc This parenthetical clause is absent in several later witnesses (D^2 Ψ 𝔐), but it may have been expunged for sounding redundant. The longer text, in this instance, is solidly supported by ℵ A B D* F G 0183^{vid} 0278 33 81 104 326 365 629 al co and should be unquestionably preferred.

[4] tn Or "your sanctification."

[5] tn Grk "to gain [or possess] his own vessel." "Vessel" is most likely used figuratively for "body" (cf. 2 Cor 4:7). Some take it to mean "wife" (thus, "to take a wife for himself" or "to live with his wife"), but this is less likely. See J. Smith, "1 Thess 4:4 – Breaking the Impasse," BBR 10 (Fall 2000), who argues that "vessel" in this context is very likely a euphemism for the sexual organs.

[6] tn Grk "not to transgress against or defraud his brother in the matter," continuing the sentence of vv. 3-5.

[7] tn Grk "concerning all these things."

[8] tn Grk "rejecting man."

[9] tn Grk "concerning brotherly love."

[10] tn Grk "brothers"; this applies to the second occurrence as well. See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[11] sn To do so more and more. See 1 Thess 4:1.

[12] tn Grk "that you may live," continuing the sentence of 4:10b-11.

[13] tn Or "not be dependent on anyone"; Grk "and have need of nothing," "of no one."

[14] tn Grk "ignorant."

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[16] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for death when speaking of believers. This metaphorical usage by its very nature emphasizes the hope of resurrection: Believers will one day "wake up" out of death. Here the term refers to death, but "sleep" was used in the translation to emphasize the metaphorical, rhetorical usage of the term. This word also occurs in vv. 14 and 15.

[17] tn "we believe that" is understood from the first clause of the verse, which is parallel. Grk "so also God will bring."

[18] tn Grk "those who have fallen asleep through Jesus." It is possible that "through Jesus" describes "bring," but this gives the unlikely double reference, "through Jesus God will bring them with Jesus." Instead it describes their "falling sleep," since through him their death is only sleep and not the threat it once was. Also Christians are those whose total existence – life and death – is in and through and for Christ (1 Cor 8:6).

[19] sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

[20] tn Neither noun in this phrase (ἐν φωνῇ ἀρχαγγέλου, en phōnē archangelou, "with the voice of the archangel") has the article in keeping with Apollonius' Canon. Since ἀρχάγγελος (archangelos) is most likely monadic, both nouns are translated as definite in keeping with Apollonius' Corollary (see ExSyn 250-51).

will rise first. 4:17 Then we who are alive, who are left,[1] will be suddenly caught up[2] together[3] with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And so we will always be with the Lord. 4:18 Therefore encourage one another with these words.

The Day of the Lord

5:1 Now on the topic of times and seasons,[4] brothers and sisters,[5] you have no need for anything to be written to you. 5:2 For you know quite well that the day of the Lord[6] will come in the same way as a thief in the night.[7] 5:3 Now when[8] they are saying, "There is peace and security,"[9] then sudden destruction comes on them, like labor pains[10] on a pregnant woman, and they will surely not escape. 5:4 But you, brothers and sisters,[11] are not in the darkness for the day to overtake you like a thief would. 5:5 For you all are sons of the light and sons of the day. We are not of the night nor of the darkness. 5:6 So then we must not sleep as the rest, but must stay alert and sober. 5:7 For those who sleep, sleep at night and those who get drunk are drunk at night. 5:8 But since we are of the day, we must stay sober by putting on the breastplate[12] of faith and love and as a helmet our hope for salvation.[13] 5:9 For God did not destine us for wrath[14] but for gaining salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. 5:10 He died[15] for us so that whether we are alert or asleep[16] we will come to life together with him. 5:11 Therefore encourage one another and build up each other, just as you are in fact doing.

Final Instructions

5:12 Now we ask you, brothers and sisters,[17] to acknowledge those who labor among you and preside over you in the Lord and admonish you, 5:13 and to esteem them most highly in love because of their work. Be at peace among yourselves. 5:14 And we urge you, brothers and sisters,[18] admonish the undisciplined, comfort the discouraged, help the weak, be patient toward all. 5:15 See that no one pays back evil for evil to anyone, but always pursue what is good for one another and for all. 5:16 Always rejoice, 5:17 constantly pray, 5:18 in everything give thanks. For this is God's will for you in Christ Jesus. 5:19 Do not extinguish the Spirit. 5:20 Do not treat prophecies with contempt. 5:21 But examine all things; hold fast to what is good. 5:22 Stay away from every form of evil.

1 tc The words οἱ περιλειπόμενοι (hoi perileipomenoi, "[the ones] who are left") are lacking in F G {0226^{vid}} ar b as well as a few fathers, but the rest of the textual tradition has the words. Most likely, the Western mss omitted the words because of perceived redundancy with οἱ ζῶντες (hoi zōntes, "[the ones] who are alive").

2 tn Or "snatched up." The Greek verb ἁρπάζω implies that the action is quick or forceful, so the translation supplied the adverb "suddenly" to make this implicit notion clear.

3 tn Or "simultaneously," but this meaning does not fit as well in the parallel in 5:10.

4 tn Grk "concerning the times and the seasons," a reference to future periods of eschatological fulfillment (cf. Acts 1:7).

5 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

6 sn The day of the Lord is the period of time in the future when the Lord will intervene in the events of this earth to consummate his redemption and his judgment (Isa 2:11-12; 13:6-13; Ezek 30:3; Joel 1:15; 2:32; 3:18; Amos 5:18-20; Obad 15-17; Zeph 1:7-18; 2:2-3; Zech 14:1, 13, 20-21; Mal 4:1, 5; 1 Cor 1:8; 5:5; 2 Cor 1:14; 2 Thess 2:2; 2 Pet 3:10). It includes both blessings and curses, though the latter is emphasized here.

7 sn Jesus used a thief coming at night as an illustration of the unexpected and hostile nature of the coming of God's judgment in the future. This is repeated in various ways in v. 4; 2 Pet 3:10; Rev 3:3; 16:15.

8 tc ‡ δέ (de, "now") is found in ℵ^2 B D 0226 6 1505 1739 1881 al, but lacking in ℵ* A F G 33 it. γάρ (gar, "for") is the reading of the Byzantine text and a few other witnesses (Ψ 0278 𝔐). Although normally the shorter reading is to be preferred, the external evidence is superior for δέ (being found in the somewhat better Alexandrian and Western witnesses). What, then, is to explain the γάρ? Scribes were prone to replace δέ with γάρ, especially in sentences suggesting a causal or explanatory idea, thus making the point more explicit. Internally, the omission of δέ looks unintentional, a case of homoioarcton (ΟΤΔΝΔΕΛΕΓΩϹΙΝ). Although a decision is difficult, in this instance δέ has the best credentials for authenticity.

9 tn Grk "peace and security," with "there is" understood in the Greek construction.

10 tn Grk a singular "birth pain."

11 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

12 sn An allusion to Isa 59:17.

13 tn Grk "hope of salvation" ("a helmet...for salvation" is an allusion to Isa 59:17).

14 sn God did not destine us for wrath. In context this refers to the outpouring of God's wrath on the earth in the day of the Lord (1 Thess 5:2-4).

15 tn Grk "the one who died," describing Jesus Christ (1 Thess 5:9). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 10 in the translation.

16 sn The phrases alert or asleep may be understood (1) of moral alertness (living in faith, love, and hope as vv. 6, 8 call for, versus being unresponsive to God) or (2) of physical life and death (whether alive or dead). The first fits better with the context of 5:1-9, while the second returns to the point Paul started with in 4:13-18 (no disadvantage for the believing dead).

17 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

18 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

Conclusion

5:23 Now may the God of peace himself make you completely holy and may your spirit and soul and body be kept entirely blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 5:24 He who calls you is trustworthy, and he will in fact do this.[1] 5:25 Brothers and sisters,[2] pray for us too. 5:26 Greet all the brothers and sisters[3] with a holy kiss. 5:27 I call on you solemnly in the Lord[4] to have this letter read to all the brothers and sisters.[5] 5:28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.[6]

[2] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[3] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[4] tn Grk "I adjure you by the Lord," "I put you under oath before the Lord."

[5] tc Most witnesses, including some important ones (𝔓^{2} A Ψ [33] 1739 1881 𝔐 ar vg sy bo), read "holy" before "brothers [and sisters]" (ἁγίοις ἀδελφοῖς, hagiois adelphois). It is possible that ἁγίοις dropped out by way of homoioteleuton (in uncial script the words would be written ΑΓΙΟΙϹΑΔΕΛ ΦΟΙϹ), but it is equally possible that the adjective was added because of the influence of ἁγίῳ (hagiō) in v. 26. Another internal consideration is that the expression ἅγιοι ἀδελφοί (hagioi adelphoi, "holy brothers") is not found elsewhere in the corpus Paulinum, though Col 1:2 comes close. But this fact could be argued either way: It may suggest that such an expression is not Pauline; on the other hand, the unusualness of the expression could have resulted in an alteration by some scribes. At the same time, since 1 Thessalonians is one of the earliest of Paul's letters, and written well before he addresses Christians as saints (ἅγιοι) in 1 Corinthians for the first time, one might argue that Paul's own forms of expression were going through something of a metamorphosis. Scribes insensitive to this fact could well impute later Pauline collocations onto his earlier letters. The internal evidence seems to support, albeit slightly, the omission of ἁγίοις here. Externally, most of the better witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western texts (א* B D F G 0278 it sa) combine in having the shorter reading. Although the rating of "A" in UBS^{4} for the omission seems too generous, this reading is still to be preferred.

tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:4.

[6] tc Most witnesses, including a few important ones (א A D^{1} Ψ 1739^{c} 𝔐 lat sy bo), conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the witnesses for the omission are sufficiently early and diffuse (B D* F G 0278 6 33 1739* 1881 it sa) to render the verdict against the particle here.

2 Thessalonians

Salutation

1:1 From Paul[1] and Silvanus and Timothy, to the church of the Thessalonians[2] in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. 1:2 Grace and peace to you[3] from God the[4] Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Thanksgiving

1:3 We ought to thank God always for you, brothers and sisters,[5] and rightly so,[6] because your faith flourishes more and more and the love of each one of you all for one another is ever greater. 1:4 As a result we ourselves boast about you in the churches of God for your perseverance and faith in all the persecutions and afflictions you are enduring.

Encouragement in Persecution

1:5 This is evidence of God's righteous judgment, to make you worthy[7] of the kingdom of God, for which in fact you are suffering. 1:6 For it is right[8] for God to repay with affliction those who afflict you, 1:7 and to you who are being afflicted to give rest together with us when the Lord Jesus is revealed[9] from heaven with his mighty angels.[10] 1:8 With flaming fire he will mete out[11] punishment on those who do not know God[12] and do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus. 1:9 They[13] will undergo the penalty of eternal destruction, away from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his strength,[14] 1:10 when he comes to be glorified among his saints and admired[15] on that day among all who have believed – and you did in fact believe our testimony.[16] 1:11 And in this regard we pray for you always, that our God will make you worthy of his calling[17] and fulfill by his power your every desire for goodness and every work of faith, 1:12 that the name of our Lord Jesus may be glorified in you, and you in him, according to[18] the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Day of the Lord

2:1 Now regarding the arrival[19] of our Lord Jesus Christ and our being gathered to be with him,[20] we ask you, brothers and sisters,[21] 2:2 not to be easily[22] shaken from your composure or disturbed by any kind of spirit or message or letter allegedly from us,[23] to the effect that the day of the Lord is already here. 2:3 Let no one deceive you in any way. For that day will not arrive until the rebellion comes[24] and the man of

3 tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

4 tc ‡ Most witnesses (ℵ A F G I 0278 𝔐 lat sy sa) have ἡμῶν (hēmōn) after πατρός (patros), reading "God our Father," in apparent emulation of Paul's almost universal style. The omission of the pronoun (the reading of B D P 0111^{vid} 33 1739 1881 pc) seems to be the original wording of this salutation. As well, the intrinsic evidence also supports the shorter reading: If 2 Thessalonians is authentic, it was one of Paul's earliest letters, and, if so, his stereotyped salutation was still in embryonic form (see discussion at 1 Thess 1:1). NA^{27} places the word in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

6 tn Grk "as is worthy."

7 tn Grk "so that you may be made worthy." The passive infinitive καταξιωθῆναι (kataxiōthēnai) has been translated as an active construction in English for stylistic reasons.

8 tn Grk "if in fact/since," as a continuation of the preceding.

9 tn Grk "at the revelation of the Lord Jesus."

10 tn Grk "angels of power," translated as an attributive genitive.

11 tn Grk "meting out," as a description of Jesus Christ in v. 7. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 8 in the translation.

12 sn An allusion to Jer 10:25, possibly also to Ps 79:6 and Isa 66:15.

13 tn Grk "who," describing the people mentioned in v. 8. A new sentence was started here in the translation by replacing the relative pronoun with a personal pronoun.

14 tn Or "power," or "might." The construction can also be translated as an attributed genitive: "from his glorious strength" (cf. TEV "glorious might"; CEV "glorious strength"; NLT "glorious power").

sn An allusion to Isa 2:10, 19, 21.

15 tn Or "marveled at."

16 tn Grk "because our testimony to you was believed."

17 tn Or "your calling."

18 tn Or "by means of."

19 tn Or perhaps "return" (cf. CEV).

20 tn Grk "our gathering with him."

21 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

22 tn Or "quickly, soon."

23 tn Grk "as through us."

24 tn Grk "for unless the rebellion comes first." The clause about "the day" is understood from v. 2.

lawlessness[1] is revealed, the son of destruction.[2] 2:4 He[3] opposes and exalts himself above every so-called god or object of worship, and as a result he takes his seat[4] in God's temple, displaying himself as God.[5] 2:5 Surely you recall[6] that I used to tell you these things while I was still with you. 2:6 And so[7] you know what holds him back,[8] so that he will be revealed in his own time. 2:7 For the hidden power of lawlessness[9] is already at work. However, the one who holds him back[10] will do so until he is taken out of the way, 2:8 and then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord[11] will destroy by the breath of his mouth and wipe out by the manifestation of his arrival. 2:9 The arrival of the lawless one[12] will be by Satan's working with all kinds of miracles[13] and signs and false wonders, 2:10 and with every kind of evil deception directed against[14] those who are perishing, because they found no place in their hearts for the truth[15] so as to be saved. 2:11 Consequently[16] God sends on them a deluding influence[17] so that they will believe what is false. 2:12 And so[18] all of them who have not believed the truth but have delighted in evil will be condemned.[19]

Call to Stand Firm

2:13 But we ought to thank God always for you, brothers and sisters[20] loved by the Lord, because God chose you from the beginning[21] for salvation through sanctification by the Spirit and faith in the truth. 2:14 He called you to this salvation[22] through our gospel, so that you may possess the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.[23]

1 tc Most MSS (A D F G Ψ 𝔐 lat sy) read ἁμαρτίας (hamartias, "of sin") here, but several important MSS (ℵ B 0278 6 81 1739 1881 al co) read ἀνομίας (anomias, "of lawlessness"). Although external support for ἁμαρτίας is broader, the generally earlier and better witnesses are on the side of ἀνομίας. Internally, since ἁμαρτία (hamartia, "sin") occurs nearly ten times as often as ἀνομία (anomia, "lawlessness") in the corpus Paulinum, scribes would be expected to change the text to the more familiar term. At the same time, the mention of ἀνομία in v. 7 and ὁ ἄνομος (ho anomos, "the lawless one") in v. 8, both of which look back to v. 3, may have prompted scribes to change the text toward ἀνομίας. The internal evidence is thus fairly evenly balanced. Although a decision is difficult, ἀνομίας has slightly greater probability of authenticity than ἁμαρτίας.

2 tn Or "the one destined for destruction."

3 tn Grk "the one who opposes," describing the figure in v. 3. A new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the personal pronoun ("he") and translating the participle ἀντικείμενος (antikeimenos) as a finite verb.

4 sn Allusions to Isa 14:13-14; Dan 11:36; Ezek 28:2-9 respectively.

5 tn Grk "that he is God."

6 tn Grk "You do remember, don't you?"

7 tn Grk "and now," but this shows the logical result of his previous teaching.

8 tn Grk "the thing that restrains."

9 tn Grk "the mystery of lawlessness." In Paul "mystery" often means "revealed truth, something formerly hidden but now made widely known," but that does not make sense with the verb of this clause ("to be at work, to be active").

10 tn Grk "the one who restrains." This gives a puzzling contrast to the impersonal phrase in v. 6 ("the thing that restrains"). The restraint can be spoken of as a force or as a person. Some have taken this to mean the Roman Empire in particular or human government in general, since these are forces that can also be seen embodied in a person, the emperor or governing head. But apocalyptic texts like Revelation and Daniel portray human government of the end times as under Satanic control, not holding back his influence. Also the power to hold back Satanic forces can only come from God. So others understand this restraint to be some force from God: the preaching of the gospel or the working of the Holy Spirit through God's people.

11 tc ‡ Several important witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western traditions, as well as many other witnesses, read Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus") after κύριος (kurios, "Lord"; so ℵ A D* F G L^{c} P Ψ 0278 33 81 104 365 1241 2464 pc latt sy co). But there is sufficient evidence in the Alexandrian tradition for the shorter reading (B 1739 1881), supported by the Byzantine text as well as Irenaeus. Although it is possible that scribes overlooked Ἰησοῦς if the two nomina sacra occurred together (ΚΥΣ), since "the Lord Jesus" is a frequent enough appellation, it looks to be a motivated reading. NA^{27} places Ἰησοῦς in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

12 tn Grk "whose coming," referring to the lawless one. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek construction, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

13 tn Grk "every miracle."

14 tn Grk "deception for/toward."

15 tn Grk "they did not accept the love of the truth."

16 tn Grk "and for this reason."

17 tn Grk "a working of error."

18 tn Grk "that." A new sentence was started here in the translation for stylistic reasons.

19 tn Grk "be judged," but in this context the term clearly refers to a judgment of condemnation (BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 5.b.α; cf. KJV "that they all might be damned"). CEV views the condemnation as punishment ("will be punished").

20 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

21 tc ‡ Several MSS (B F G P 0278 33 81 323 1739 1881 al bo) read ἀπαρχήν (aparchēn, "as a first fruit"; i.e., as the first converts) instead of ἀπ' ἀρχῆς (ap' archēs, "from the beginning," found in ℵ D Ψ 𝔐 it sa), but this seems more likely to be a change by scribes who thought of the early churches in general in this way. But Paul would not be likely to call the Thessalonians "the first fruits" among his converts. Further, ἀπαρχή (aparchē, "first fruit") is a well-worn term in Paul's letters (Rom 8:23; 11:16; 16:5; 1 Cor 15:20, 23; 16:15), while ἀπ' ἀρχῆς occurs nowhere else in Paul. Scribes might be expected to change the text to the more familiar term. Nevertheless, a decision is difficult (see arguments for ἀπαρχήν in TCGNT 568), and ἀπ' ἀρχῆς must be preferred only slightly.

22 tn Grk "to which," referring to the main idea of v. 13.

23 sn That you may possess the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. For Paul the ultimate stage of salvation is glorification (Rom 8:30).

2:15 Therefore, brothers and sisters,[1] stand firm and hold on to the traditions that we taught you, whether by speech or by letter.[2] 2:16 Now may our Lord Jesus Christ himself and God our Father, who loved us and by grace gave us eternal comfort and good hope, 2:17 encourage your hearts and strengthen you[3] in every good thing you do or say.[4]

Request for Prayer

3:1 Finally, pray for us, brothers and sisters,[5] that the Lord's message[6] may spread quickly and be honored[7] as in fact it was among you, 3:2 and that we may be delivered from perverse and evil people. For not all have faith. 3:3 But the Lord is faithful, and he[8] will strengthen you and protect you from the evil one. 3:4 And we are confident about you in the Lord that you are both doing – and will do – what we are commanding. 3:5 Now may the Lord direct your hearts toward the love of God[9] and the endurance of Christ.[10]

Response to the Undisciplined

3:6 But we command you, brothers and sisters,[11] in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to keep away from any brother who lives an undisciplined[12] life[13] and not according to the tradition they[14] received from us. 3:7 For you know yourselves how you must imitate us, because we did not behave without discipline[15] among you, 3:8 and we did not eat anyone's food without paying.[16] Instead, in toil and drudgery we worked[17] night and day in order not to burden any of you. 3:9 It was not because we do not have that right, but to give ourselves as an example for you to imitate.[18] 3:10 For even when we were with you, we used to give you this command: "If anyone is not willing to work, neither should he eat." 3:11 For we hear that some among you are living an undisciplined life,[19] not doing their own work but meddling in the work of others.[20] 3:12 Now such people we command and urge in the Lord Jesus Christ to work quietly and so provide their own food to eat.[21] 3:13 But you, brothers and sisters,[22] do not grow weary in doing what is

1 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

2 tn Grk "that you were taught whether by word or by letter of ours."

3 tn Grk simply "strengthen," with the object understood from the preceding.

4 tn Grk "every good work and word."

5 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

6 tn Or "the word of the Lord."

sn "The word of the Lord" is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; here and in Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said. Here the phrase has been translated "the Lord's message" because of the focus upon the spread of the gospel evident in the passage.

7 tn Grk "may run and be glorified."

8 tn Grk "who."

9 tn The genitive in the phrase τὴν ἀγάπην τοῦ θεοῦ (tēn agapēn tou theou, "the love of God") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("God's love") or an objective genitive ("your love for God"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, the emphasis would be on believers being directed toward the love God gives which in turn produces increased love in them for him.

10 tn The genitive in the phrase τὴν ὑπομονὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ (tēn hupomonēn tou Christou, "the endurance of Christ") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("Christ's endurance") or an objective genitive ("endurance for Christ"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, the emphasis would be on believers being directed toward the endurance Christ showed which in turn produces endurance in them for him.

11 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

12 tn Or "unruly, out of line." The particular violation Paul has in mind is idleness (as described in vv. 8-11), so this could be translated to reflect that.

13 tn Grk "walking in an undisciplined way" ("walking" is a common NT idiom for one's way of life or conduct).

14 tc The reading "you received" (παρελάβετε, parelabete) is found predominately in Western witnesses (F G 1505 2464 pc), although the support of B and the Sahidic version strengthens the reading considerably. The reading "they received" is found in two different forms: παρελάβοσαν (parelabosan; in ℵ* A [D*] 0278 33 pc) and παρέλαβον (parelabon; in ℵ² D² Ψ 1739 1881 ℳ). (παρέλαβον is evidently a correction of παρελάβοσαν to the more common spelling for the third person aorist form). The external evidence is divided fairly evenly, with παρελάβετε and παρελάβοσαν each having adequate support. Internal evidence leans toward "they received": Given the second person reading, there is little reason why scribes would intentionally change it to a third person plural, and especially an archaic form at that. There is ample reason, however, for scribes to change the third person form to the second person form given that in the prior context παράδοσις (paradosis, "tradition") is used with a relative clause (as here) with a second person verb (see 2:15). The third person form should be regarded as original.

15 tn This is the verbal form of the words occurring in vv. 6 and 11, meaning "to act out of line, in an unruly way."

16 tn Grk "we did not eat bread freely from anyone."

17 tn Grk "but working," as a continuation of the previous sentence. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started with the word "Instead" in the translation.

18 tn Grk "an example for you to imitate us."

19 tn Grk "walking in an undisciplined way" ("walking" is a common NT idiom for one's way of life or conduct).

20 tn There is a play on words in the Greek: "working at nothing, but working around," "not keeping busy but being busybodies."

21 tn Grk "that by working quietly they may eat their own bread."

22 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:3.

right. 3:14 But if anyone does not obey our message through this letter, take note of him and do not associate closely with him, so that he may be ashamed. 3:15 Yet do not regard him as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.[1]

Conclusion

3:16 Now may the Lord of peace himself give you peace at all times and in every way. The Lord be with you all. 3:17 I, Paul, write this greeting with my own hand, which is how I write in every letter.[2] 3:18 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.[3]

---

[1] tn That is, as a fellow believer.

[2] tn Grk "The greeting in my hand, Paul, which is a sign in every letter, thus I write."

sn Up to 3:17 the letter was dictated by Paul but written down by a secretary or amanuensis. But Paul took up the pen and wrote vv. 17-18 personally to authenticate that it was his (how I write in every letter). See similar indications in 1 Cor 16:21; Gal 6:11; and Col 4:18.

[3] tc Most witnesses, including some early and important ones (𝔓^{2} A D F G Ψ 𝔐 lat sy), conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the witnesses for the omission are among the best MSS (𝔓* B 0278 6 33 1739 1881* 2464 sa), giving sufficient base to prefer the shorter reading.

1 Timothy

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle of Christ Jesus by the command of God our Savior[2] and of Christ Jesus our hope, 1:2 to Timothy, my genuine child in the faith. Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord!

Timothy's Task in Ephesus

1:3 As I urged you when I was leaving for Macedonia, stay on in Ephesus[3] to instruct[4] certain people not to spread false teachings,[5] 1:4 nor to occupy themselves with myths and interminable genealogies.[6] Such things promote useless speculations rather than God's redemptive plan[7] that operates by faith. 1:5 But the aim of our instruction[8] is love that comes from a pure heart, a good conscience, and a sincere faith.[9] 1:6 Some have strayed from these and turned away to empty discussion. 1:7 They want to be teachers of the law, but they do not understand what they are saying or the things they insist on so confidently.[10]

1:8 But we know that the law is good if someone uses it legitimately, 1:9 realizing that law[11] is not intended for a righteous person, but for lawless and rebellious people, for the ungodly and sinners, for the unholy and profane, for those who kill their fathers or mothers, for murderers, 1:10 sexually immoral people, practicing homosexuals,[12] kidnappers, liars, perjurers – in fact, for any who live contrary to sound teaching. 1:11 This[13] accords with the glorious gospel of the blessed God[14] that was entrusted to me.[15]

1:12 I am grateful to the one who has strengthened me, Christ Jesus our Lord, because he considered me faithful in putting me into ministry, 1:13 even though I was formerly a blasphemer and a persecutor, and an arrogant[16] man. But I was treated with mercy because I acted ignorantly in unbelief, 1:14 and our Lord's grace was abundant, bringing faith and love in Christ Jesus.[17] 1:15 This saying[18] is trustworthy and deserves full acceptance: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" – and I am the

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 sn God our Savior. Use of the title "Savior" for God the Father is characteristic of 1 Timothy, 2 Timothy, and Titus. It occurs six times in these letters, but only twice elsewhere in the NT. However, it occurs commonly in the OT, especially in Isaiah. It emphasizes the Father as the initiator and source of salvation.

3 map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

4 tn This word implies authoritative instruction: "direct, command, give orders" (cf. 1 Tim 4:11; 5:7; 6:13, 17). See BDAG 760 s.v. παραγγέλλω.

5 tn Grk "to teach other doctrines," different from apostolic teaching (cf. 1 Tim 6:3).

6 sn Myths and interminable genealogies. These myths were legendary tales characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus and Crete. See parallels in 1 Tim 4:7; 2 Tim 4:4; and Titus 1:14. They were perhaps built by speculation from the patriarchal narratives in the OT; hence the connection with genealogies and with wanting to be teachers of the law (v. 7).

7 tc A few Western mss (D* latt Ir) read οἰκοδομήν (oikodomēn, "[God's] edification") rather than οἰκονομίαν (oikonomian, "[God's] redemptive plan"), which is read by the earliest and best witnesses.

tn More literally, "the administration of God that is by faith."

sn God's redemptive plan. The basic word (οἰκονομία, oikonomia) denotes the work of a household steward or manager or the arrangement under which he works: "household management." As a theological term it is used of the order or arrangement by which God brings redemption through Christ (God's "dispensation, plan of salvation" [Eph 1:10; 3:9]) or of human responsibility to pass on the message of that salvation ("stewardship, commission" [1 Cor 9:17; Eph 3:2; Col 1:25]). Here the former is in view (see the summary of God's plan in 1 Tim 2:3-6; 2 Tim 1:9-10; Titus 3:4-7), and Paul notes the response people must make to God's arrangement: It is "in faith" or "by faith."

8 tn Grk "the instruction," referring to orthodox Christian teaching and ministry in general, in contrast to that of the false teachers mentioned in 1:3-4.

9 tn Grk "love from a pure heart and a good conscience and a sincere faith."

10 tn The Greek reinforces this negation: "understand neither what they are saying nor the things they insist on..."

11 sn Law. There is no definite article ("the") with this word in Greek and so the inherent quality of the OT law as such is in view. But the OT law is still in mind, since the types of sinful people surveyed in vv. 9b-11a follow the general outline of sins prohibited in the Decalogue.

12 tn On this term BDAG 135 s.v. ἀρσενοκοίτης states, "a male who engages in sexual activity w. a pers. of his own sex, pederast 1 Cor 6:9...of one who assumes the dominant role in same-sex activity, opp. μαλακός...1 Ti 1:10; Pol 5:3. Cp. Ro 1:27." L&N 88.280 states, "a male partner in homosexual intercourse – 'homosexual.'...It is possible that ἀρσενοκοίτης in certain contexts refers to the active male partner in homosexual intercourse in contrast with μαλακός, the passive male partner" (cf. 1 Cor 6:9). Since there is a distinction in contemporary usage between sexual orientation and actual behavior, the qualification "practicing" was supplied in the translation, following the emphasis in BDAG.

13 tn A continuation of the preceding idea: Grk "teaching, according to the gospel." This use of the law is in accord with the gospel entrusted to Paul (cf. Rom 7:7-16; Gal 3:23-26). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

14 tn Grk "the gospel of the glory of the blessed God."

15 tn Grk "with which I was entrusted." The translation is more in line with contemporary English style.

16 tn Or "violent," "cruel."

17 tn Grk "with faith and love in Christ Jesus."

18 tn Grk "the saying," referring to the following citation (see 1 Tim 3:1; 4:9; 2 Tim 2:11; Titus 3:8 for other occurrences of this phrase).

worst of them![1] 1:16 But here is why I was treated with mercy: so that[2] in me as the worst,[3] Christ Jesus could demonstrate his utmost patience, as an example for those who are going to believe in him for eternal life. 1:17 Now to the eternal king,[4] immortal, invisible, the only[5] God, be honor and glory forever and ever![6] Amen.

1:18 I put this charge[7] before you, Timothy my child, in keeping with the prophecies once spoken about you,[8] in order that with such encouragement[9] you may fight the good fight. 1:19 To do this[10] you must hold firmly to faith and a good conscience, which some have rejected and so have suffered shipwreck in regard to the faith. 1:20 Among these are Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I handed over to Satan[11] to be taught not to blaspheme.

Prayer for All People

2:1 First of all, then, I urge that requests,[12] prayers, intercessions, and thanks be offered on behalf of all people,[13] 2:2 even for kings[14] and all who are in authority, that we may lead a peaceful and quiet life in all godliness and dignity. 2:3 Such prayer for all[15] is good and welcomed before God our Savior, 2:4 since he wants[16] all people[17] to be saved and to come to a knowledge of the truth. 2:5 For there is one God and one intermediary[18] between God and humanity, Christ Jesus, himself human,[19] 2:6 who gave himself as a ransom for all, revealing God's purpose at his appointed time.[20] 2:7 For this I was appointed a preacher and apostle – I am telling the truth;[21] I am not lying – and a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and truth. 2:8 So I want the men[22] to pray[23] in every place, lifting up holy hands[24] without anger or dispute.

Conduct of Women

2:9 Likewise[25] the women are to dress[26] in

[1] tn Grk "of whom I am the first."

[2] tn Grk "but because of this I was treated with mercy, so that..."

[3] tn Grk "in me first," making the connection with the last phrase of v. 15.

[4] tn Or more literally, "king of the ages."

[5] tc Most later witnesses (ℵ² D¹ Hᶜ Ψ 1881 𝔐) have "wise" (σόφῳ, sōphō) here (thus, "the only wise God"), while the earlier and better witnesses (ℵ* A D* F G H* 33 1739 lat co) lack this adjective. Although it could be argued that the longer reading is harder since it does not as emphatically affirm monotheism, it is more likely that scribes borrowed σόφῳ from Rom 16:27 where μόνῳ σόφῳ θεῷ (monō sophō theō, "the only wise God") is textually solid.

[6] tn Grk "unto the ages of the ages," an emphatic way of speaking about eternity in Greek.

[7] sn This charge refers to the task Paul described to Timothy in vv. 3-7 above.

[8] sn The prophecies once spoken about you were apparently spoken at Timothy's ordination (cf. 1 Tim 4:14) and perhaps spoke of what God would do through him. Thus they can encourage him in his work, as the next clause says.

[9] tn Grk "that by them you might fight..." (a reference to the prophecies which can encourage him in his work).

[10] tn In Greek this continues the same sentence from v. 18, a participle showing the means by which Timothy will accomplish his task: Grk "fight the good fight, holding firmly..."

[11] sn The expression handed over to Satan refers to an act of discipline mentioned by Paul here and in 1 Cor 5:5, with a remedial goal, not a punitive one. The Greek word translated taught in this verse is used of "discipline, training of children" to lead them to correct behavior.

[12] tn Or "petitions."

[13] tn Grk "all men," but here ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is used generically, referring to both men and women.

[14] tn For "even for kings" the Greek says simply "for kings."

[15] tn Grk "this"; the referent (such prayer for all, referring to vv. 1-2) is specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Grk "who wants..." (but showing why such prayer is pleasing to God).

[17] tn Grk "all men," but here ἀνθρώπους (anthrōpous) is used generically, referring to both men and women.

[18] tn Traditionally this word (μεσίτης, mesitēs) is rendered "mediator," but this conveys a wrong impression in contemporary English. Jesus was not a mediator, for example, who worked for compromise between opposing parties. Instead he was the only one able to go between man and God to enable them to have a relationship, but entirely on God's terms.

[19] tn Grk "one mediator between God and mankind, the human, Christ Jesus."

[20] sn Revealing God's purpose at his appointed time is a difficult expression without clear connection to the preceding, literally "a testimony at the proper time." This may allude to testimony about Christ's atoning work given by Paul and others (as v. 7 mentions). But it seems more likely to identify Christ's death itself as a testimony to God's gracious character (as vv. 3-4 describe). This testimony was planned from all eternity, but now has come to light at the time God intended, in the work of Christ. See 2 Tim 1:9-10; Titus 2:11-14; 3:4-7 for similar ideas.

[21] tc Most mss (ℵ* D² H 33^vid 𝔐) have ἐν Χριστῷ (en Christō) after λέγω (legō) to read "I am telling the truth in Christ," but this is probably an assimilation to Rom 9:1. Further, the witnesses that lack this phrase are early, important, and well distributed (ℵ² A D* F G P Ψ 6 81 1175 1739 1881 al sy co). It is difficult to explain the shorter reading if it is not original.

[22] tn The word translated "men" here (ἀνήρ, anēr) refers to adult males, not people in general. Note the command given to "the women" in v. 9.

[23] sn To pray. In this verse Paul resumes and concludes the section about prayer begun in 2:1-2. 1 Tim 2:3-7 described God's concern for all people as the motive for such prayer.

[24] sn Paul uses a common ancient posture in prayer (lifting up holy hands) as a figure of speech for offering requests from a holy life (without anger or dispute).

[25] tc ‡ Most witnesses have καὶ τάς (kai tas; so D¹ Ψ 1881 𝔐) or simply καί (ℵ² D* F G 6 365 1739 pc) after ὡσαύτως (hōsautōs). A few important witnesses lack such words (ℵ* A H P 33 81 1175 pc). The evidence is for the most part along "party" lines, with the shortest reading being found in the Alexandrian text, the conjunction in the Western, and the longest reading in the Byzantine tradition. Externally, the shortest reading is preferred. However, there is a good chance of homoiomeson or homoioteleuton in which case καί or καὶ τάς could have accidentally been omitted (note the αι [ai] and αι ας [ai as] in the word that follows, written here in uncial script): ωCΔΥΤΩCΚΔΙΓΥΝΑΙΚΑC/ ωCΔΥΤΩCΚΔΙ ΤΑCΓΥΝΑΙΚΑC. Nevertheless, since both the καί and καὶ τάς are predictable variants, intended to fill out the meaning of the text, the shortest reading seems best able to explain the rise of the others. NA²⁷ has the καί in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[26] tn Grk "to adorn themselves." Grammatically the phrase "to adorn themselves" continues the author's words in v. 8: "I want...likewise the women to adorn themselves."

suitable apparel, with modesty and self-control.[1] Their adornment must not be[2] with braided hair and gold or pearls or expensive clothing, 2:10 but with good deeds, as is proper for women who profess reverence for God. 2:11 A woman must learn[3] quietly with all submissiveness. 2:12 But I do not allow[4] a woman to teach or exercise authority[5] over a man. She must remain quiet.[6] 2:13 For Adam was formed first and then Eve. 2:14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman, because she was fully deceived,[7] fell into transgression.[8] 2:15 But she will be delivered through childbearing,[9] if she[10] continues in faith and love and holiness with self-control.

Qualifications for Overseers and Deacons

3:1 This saying[11] is trustworthy: "If someone aspires to the office of overseer,[12] he desires a good work." 3:2 The overseer[13] then must be above reproach, the husband of one wife,[14] temperate, self-controlled, respectable, hospitable, an able teacher, 3:3 not a drunkard, not violent, but gentle, not contentious, free from the love of money. 3:4 He must manage his own household well and keep his children in control without losing his dignity.[15] 3:5 But if someone does not know how to manage his own household, how will he care for the church of God? 3:6 He must not be a recent convert or he may become

[1] tn This word and its cognates are used frequently in the Pastoral Epistles. It means "moderation," "sobriety," "decency," "sensibleness," or "sound judgment."

[2] tn Literally a continuation of v. 9a, "not with braided hair..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[3] tn Or "receive instruction."

[4] sn But I do not allow. Although the Greek conjunction δέ (de) can have a simple connective force ("and"), it is best to take it as contrastive here: Verse 11 gives a positive statement (that is to say, that a woman should learn). This was a radical and liberating departure from the Jewish view that women were not to learn the law.

[5] tn According to BDAG 150 s.v. αὐθεντέω this Greek verb means "to assume a stance of independent authority, give orders to, dictate to" (cf. JB "tell a man what to do").

[6] tn Grk "but to be in quietness." The phrase ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ (en hēsuchia) is used in Greek literature either of absolute silence or of a quiet demeanor.

[7] tn This phrase uses a compound form of the same verb as in v. 14a: "deceived" vs. "deceived out, completely deceived." The two verbs could be synonymous, but because of the close contrast in this context, it seems that a stronger meaning is intended for the second verb.

[8] tn Grk "has come to be in transgression" (with an emphasis on the continuing consequences of that fall).

[9] tn Or "But she will be preserved through childbearing," or "But she will be saved in spite of childbearing." This verse is notoriously difficult to interpret, though there is general agreement about one point: Verse 15 is intended to lessen the impact of vv. 13-14. There are several interpretive possibilities here, though the first three can be readily dismissed (cf. D. Moo, "1 Timothy 2:11-15: Meaning and Significance," TJ 1 [1980]: 70-73). (1) Christian women will be saved, but only if they bear children. This view is entirely unlikely for it lays a condition on Christian women that goes beyond grace, is unsupported elsewhere in scripture, and is explicitly against Paul's and Jesus' teaching on both marriage and salvation (cf. Matt 19:12; 1 Cor 7:8-9, 26-27, 34-35; 1 Tim 5:3-10). (2) Despite the curse, Christian women will be kept safe when bearing children. This view also is unlikely, both because it has little to do with the context and because it is not true to life (especially life in the ancient world with its high infant mortality rate). (3) Despite the sin of Eve and the results to her progeny, she would be saved through the childbirth – that is, through the birth of the Messiah, as promised in the protevangelium (Gen 3:15). This view sees the singular "she" as referring first to Eve and then to all women (note the change from singular to plural in this verse). Further, it works well in the context. However, there are several problems with it: [a] The future tense (σωθήσηται, sōthēsētai) is unnatural if referring to the protevangelium or even to the historical fact of the Messiah's birth; [b] that only women are singled out as recipients of salvation seems odd since the birth of the Messiah was necessary for the salvation of both women and men; [c] as ingenious as this view is, its very ingenuity is its downfall, for it is overly subtle; and [d] the term τεκνογονία (teknogonia) refers to the process of childbirth rather than the product. And since it is the person of the Messiah (the product of the birth) that saves us, the term is unlikely to be used in the sense given it by those who hold this view. There are three other views that have greater plausibility: (4) This may be a somewhat veiled reference to the curse of Gen 3:16 in order to clarify that though the woman led the man into transgression (v. 14b), she will be saved spiritually despite this physical reminder of her sin. The phrase is literally "through childbearing," but this does not necessarily denote means or instrument here. Instead it may show attendant circumstance (probably with a concessive force): "with, though accompanied by" (cf. BDAG 224 s.v. δία A.3.c; Rom 2:27; 2 Cor 2:4; 1 Tim 4:14). (5) "It is not through active teaching and ruling activities that Christian women will be saved, but through faithfulness to their proper role, exemplified in motherhood" (Moo, 71). In this view τεκνογονία is seen as a synecdoche in which child-rearing and other activities of motherhood are involved. Thus, one evidence (though clearly not an essential evidence) of a woman's salvation may be seen in her decision to function in this role. (6) The verse may point to some sort of proverbial expression now lost, in which "saved" means "delivered" and in which this deliverance was from some of the devastating effects of the role reversal that took place in Eden. The idea of childbearing, then, is a metonymy of part for the whole that encompasses the woman's submission again to the leadership of the man, though it has no specific soteriological import (but it certainly would have to do with the outworking of redemption).

[10] tn There is a shift to the plural here (Grk "if they continue"), but it still refers to the woman in a simple shift from generic singular to generic plural.

[11] tn Grk "the saying," referring to the following citation (see 1 Tim 1:15; 4:9; 2 Tim 2:11; Titus 3:8 for other occurrences of this phrase).

[12] tn Grk "aspires to oversight."

[13] tn Or "bishop."

sn Although some see the article with overseer as indicating a single leader at the top of the ecclesiastical structure (thus taking the article as monadic), this is hardly necessary. It is naturally taken generically (referring to the class of leaders known as overseers) and, in fact, finds precedent in 2:11-12 ("a woman," "a man"), 2:15 ("she"). Paul almost casually changes between singular and plural in both chapters.

[14] tn Or "a man married only once," "devoted solely to his wife" (see 1 Tim 3:12; 5:9; Titus 1:6). The meaning of this phrase is disputed. It is frequently understood to refer to the marital status of the church leader, excluding from leadership those who are (1) unmarried, (2) polygamous, (3) divorced, or (4) remarried after being widowed. A different interpretation is reflected in the NEB's translation "faithful to his one wife."

arrogant[1] and fall into the punishment that the devil will exact.[2] 3:7 And he must be well thought of by[3] those outside the faith,[4] so that he may not fall into disgrace and be caught by the devil's trap.[5]

3:8 Deacons likewise must be dignified,[6] not two-faced,[7] not given to excessive drinking,[8] not greedy for gain, 3:9 holding to the mystery of the faith[9] with a clear conscience. 3:10 And these also must be tested first and then let them serve as deacons if they are found blameless. 3:11 Likewise also their wives[10] must be dignified, not slanderous, temperate, faithful in every respect. 3:12 Deacons must be husbands of one wife[11] and good managers of their children and their own households. 3:13 For those who have served well as deacons gain a good standing for themselves[12] and great boldness in the faith that is in Christ Jesus.[13]

Conduct in God's Church

3:14 I hope to come to you soon, but I am writing these instructions[14] to you 3:15 in case I am delayed, to let you know how people ought to conduct themselves[15] in the household of God, because it is[16] the church of the living God, the support and bulwark of the truth. 3:16 And we all agree,[17] our religion contains amazing revelation:[18]

He[19] was revealed in the flesh,

[1] tn Grk "that he may not become arrogant."

[2] tn Grk "the judgment of the devil," which could also mean "the judgment that the devil incurred." But see 1 Tim 1:20 for examples of the danger Paul seems to have in mind.

[3] tn Or "have a good reputation with"; Grk "have a good testimony from."

[4] tn Grk "the ones outside."

[5] tn Or "be trapped like the devil was"; Grk "fall into the trap of the devil." The parallel in 2 Tim 2:26 supports the rendering given in the text.

[6] tn Or "respectable, honorable, of serious demeanor."

[7] tn Or "insincere," "deceitful"; Grk "speaking double."

[8] tn Grk "not devoted to much wine."

[9] sn The mystery of the faith is a reference to the revealed truths of the Christian faith.

[10] tn Or "also deaconesses." The Greek word here is γυναῖκας (gunaikas) which literally means "women" or "wives." It is possible that this refers to women who serve as deacons, "deaconesses." The evidence is as follows: (1) The immediate context refers to deacons; (2) the author mentions nothing about wives in his section on elder qualifications (1 Tim 3:1-7); (3) it would seem strange to have requirements placed on deacons' wives without corresponding requirements placed on elders' wives; and (4) elsewhere in the NT, there seems to be room for seeing women in this role (cf. Rom 16:1 and the comments there). The translation "wives" – referring to the wives of the deacons – is probably to be preferred, though, for the following reasons: (1) It would be strange for the author to discuss women deacons right in the middle of the qualifications for male deacons; more naturally they would be addressed by themselves. (2) The author seems to indicate clearly in the next verse that women are not deacons: "Deacons must be husbands of one wife." (3) Most of the qualifications given for deacons elsewhere do not appear here. Either the author has truncated the requirements for women deacons, or he is not actually referring to women deacons; the latter seems to be the more natural understanding. (4) The principle given in 1 Tim 2:12 appears to be an overarching principle for church life which seems implicitly to limit the role of deacon to men. Nevertheless, a decision in this matter is difficult, and our conclusions must be regarded as tentative.

[11] tn Or "men married only once," "devoted solely to their wives" (see the note on "wife" in 1 Tim 3:2; also 1 Tim 5:9; Titus 1:6).

[12] sn The statement those who have served well as deacons gain a good standing for themselves is reminiscent of Jesus' teaching (Matt 20:26-28; Mark 10:43-45) that the one who wishes to be great must be a servant (διάκονος [diakonos], used here of deacons) of all, just as the Son of Man came not to be served but to serve (διακονέω [diakonеō], as in 1 Tim 3:10, 13).

[13] sn In the phrase the faith that is in Christ Jesus, the term faith seems to mean "what Christians believe, Christian truth," rather than personal trust in Christ. So the whole phrase could mean that others will come to place greater confidence in them regarding Christian truth, but the word "confidence" is much more likely to refer to their own boldness to act on the truth of their convictions.

[14] tn Grk "these things."

sn These instructions refer to the instructions about local church life, given in 1 Tim 2:1–3:13.

[15] tn Grk "how it is necessary to behave."

[16] tn Grk "which is" (but the relative clause shows the reason for such conduct).

[17] tn Grk "confessedly, admittedly, most certainly."

[18] tn Grk "great is the mystery of [our] religion," or "great is the mystery of godliness." The word "mystery" denotes a secret previously hidden in God, but now revealed and made widely known (cf. Rom 16:25; 1 Cor 2:7; 4:1; Eph 1:9; 3:3, 4, 9; 6:19; Col 1:26-27; 4:3). "Religion" (εὐσέβεια, eusebeia) is a word used frequently in the pastorals with a range of meanings: (1) a certain attitude toward God – "devotion, reverence"; (2) the conduct that befits that attitude – "godliness, piety"; and (3) the whole system of belief and approach to God that forms the basis for such attitude and conduct – "religion, creed." See BDAG 412-13 s.v.; 2 Tim 3:5; 4 Macc 9:6-7, 29-30; 15:1-3; 17:7. So the following creedal statements are illustrations of the great truths that the church is charged with protecting (v. 15).

[19] tc The Byzantine text along with a few other witnesses (ℵ^{c} A^{c} C^{2} D^{2} Ψ [88 pc] 1739 1881 𝔐 vg^{ms}) read θεός (theos, "God") for ὅς (hos, "who"). Most significant among these witnesses is 1739; the second correctors of some of the other MSS tend to conform to the medieval standard, the Byzantine text, and add no independent voice to the discussion. A few MSS have ὁ θεός (so 88 pc), a reading that is a correction on the anarthrous θεός. On the other side, the masculine relative pronoun ὅς is strongly supported by ℵ* A* C* F G 33 365 pc Did Epiph. Significantly, D* and virtually the entire Latin tradition read the neuter relative pronoun, ὅ (ho, "which"), a reading that indirectly supports ὅς since it could not easily have been generated if θεός had been in the text. Thus, externally, there is no question as to what should be considered original: The Alexandrian and Western traditions are decidedly in favor of ὅς. Internally, the evidence is even stronger. What scribe would change θεός to ὅς intentionally? "Who" is not only a theologically pale reading by comparison; it also is much harder (since the relative pronoun has no obvious antecedent, probably the reason for the neuter pronoun of the Western tradition). Intrinsically, the rest of 3:16, beginning with ὅς, appears to form a six-strophed hymn. As such, it is a text that is seemingly incorporated into the letter without syntactical connection. Hence, not only should we not look for an antecedent for ὅς (as is often done by commentators), but the relative pronoun thus is not too hard a reading (or impossible, as Dean Burgon believed). Once the genre is taken into account, the relative pronoun fits neatly into the author's style (cf. also Col 1:15; Phil 2:6 for other places in which the relative pronoun begins a hymn, as was often the case in poetry of the day). On the other hand, with θεός written as a nomen sacrum, it would have looked very much like the relative pronoun: ΘC̄ vs. OC. Thus, it may have been easy to confuse one for the other. This, of course, does not solve which direction the scribes would go, although given their generally high Christology and the bland and ambiguous relative pronoun, it is doubtful that they would have replaced θεός with ὅς. How then should we account for θεός? It appears that sometime after the 2nd century the θεός reading came into existence, vindicated by the Spirit,[1]

seen by angels, proclaimed among Gentiles, believed on in the world,
taken up in glory.

Timothy's Ministry in the Later Times

4:1 Now the Spirit explicitly says that in the later times some will desert the faith and occupy themselves[2] with deceiving spirits and demonic teachings,[3] 4:2 influenced by the hypocrisy of liars[4] whose consciences are seared.[5] 4:3 They will prohibit marriage and require abstinence from foods that God created to be received with thanksgiving by those who believe and know the truth. 4:4 For every creation of God is good and no food[6] is to be rejected if it is received with thanksgiving. 4:5 For it is sanctified by God's word and by prayer.

4:6 By pointing out such things to the brothers and sisters,[7] you will be a good servant of Christ Jesus, having nourished yourself on the words of the faith and of the good teaching that you have followed.[8] 4:7 But reject those myths[9] fit only for the godless and gullible,[10] and train yourself for godliness. 4:8 For "physical exercise[11] has some value, but godliness is valuable in every way. It holds promise for the present life and for the life to come." 4:9 This saying[12] is trustworthy and deserves full acceptance. 4:10 In fact this is why[13] we work hard and struggle,[14] either via confusion with ὅς or as an intentional alteration to magnify Christ and clear up the syntax at the same time. Once it got in, this theologically rich reading was easily able to influence all the rest of the MSS it came in contact with (including MSS already written, such as ℵ A C D). That this reading did not arise until after the 2nd century is evident from the Western reading, ὅ. The neuter relative pronoun is certainly a "correction" of ὅς, conforming the gender to that of the neuter μυστήριον (mustērion, "mystery"). What is significant in this reading is (1) since virtually all the Western witnesses have either the masculine or neuter relative pronoun, the θεός reading was apparently unknown to them in the 2nd century (when the "Western" text seems to have originated, though its place of origination was most likely in the east); they thus supply strong indirect evidence of ὅς outside of Egypt in the 2nd century; (2) even 2nd century scribes were liable to misunderstand the genre, feeling compelled to alter the masculine relative pronoun because it appeared to them to be too harsh. The evidence, therefore, for ὅς is quite compelling, both externally and internally. As TCGNT 574 notes, "no uncial (in the first hand) earlier than the eighth or ninth century (Ψ) supports θεός; all ancient versions presuppose ὅς or ὅ; and no patristic writer prior to the last third of the fourth century testifies to the reading θεός." Thus, the cries of certain groups that θεός has to be original must be seen as special pleading in this case. To argue that heretics tampered with the text here is self-defeating, for most of the Western fathers who quoted the verse with the relative pronoun were quite orthodox, strongly affirming the deity of Christ. They would have dearly loved such a reading as θεός. Further, had heretics introduced a variant to θεός, a far more natural choice would have been Χριστός (Christos, "Christ") or κύριος (kurios, "Lord"), since the text is self-evidently about Christ, but it is not self-evidently a proclamation of his deity. (See ExSyn 341-42, for a summary discussion on this issue and additional bibliographic references.)

tn Grk "who."

sn This passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

[1] tn Or "in spirit."

[2] tn Or "desert the faith by occupying themselves."

[3] tn Grk "teachings of demons" (speaking of the source of these doctrines).

[4] tn Grk "in the hypocrisy of liars."

[5] tn Or "branded." The Greek verb καυστηριάζω (kaustēriazō) can be used to refer either to the cause ("brand") or the effect ("seared").

sn Consciences are seared. The precise meaning of this phrase is somewhat debated. Three primary interpretations are (1) the consciences of these false teachers are "branded" with Satan's mark to indicate ownership, (2) their consciences are "branded" with a penal mark to show they are lawbreakers, or (3) their consciences have been "seared" (i.e., totally burnt and desensitized) so that they are unable to notice the difference between right and wrong. See G. W. Knight, Pastoral Epistles (NIGTC), 189.

[6] tn Grk "nothing."

[8] sn By pointing out...you have followed. This verse gives a theme statement for what follows in the chapter about Timothy's ministry. The situation in Ephesus requires him to be a good servant of Christ, and he will do that by sound teaching and by living an exemplary life himself.

[9] sn Those myths refer to legendary tales characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus and Crete. See parallels in 1 Tim 1:4; 2 Tim 4:4; and Titus 1:14.

[10] tn Grk "the godless and old-wifely myths."

[11] tn Grk "bodily training" (using the noun form of the verb "train" in v. 7b).

[12] tn Grk "the saying."

sn This saying. The literal phrase "the saying" refers to the preceding citation. See 1 Tim 1:15; 3:1; 2 Tim 2:11; Titus 3:8 for other occurrences of this phrase.

[13] tn Grk "for toward this," denoting purpose. The conjunction "for" gives confirmation or emphasis to 1 Tim 4:8-9.

[14] tc A number of MSS (ℵ² D 0241ᵛⁱᵈ 1739 1881 𝔐 latt sy co) read ὀνειδιζόμεθα (oneidizometha, "suffer reproach"), while the reading behind the translation (ἀγωνιζόμεθα, agōnizometha) is supported by ℵ* A C F G K Ψ 33 1175 al. The reading from the verb ἀγωνίζομαι (agōnizomai) has slightly better external credentials, but this verb is found in the corpus Paulinum five other times, twice in the Pastorals (1 Tim 6:12; 2 Tim 4:7). The verb ὀνειδίζω (oneidizō) occurs only once in Paul (Rom 15:3), not at all in the Pastorals. In this instance, transcriptional and intrinsic evidence might seem to be opposed to each other. In such cases, the external evibecause we have set our hope on the living God, who is the Savior of all people,[1] especially of believers.

4:11 Command and teach these things. 4:12 Let no one look down on you because you are young, but set an example for the believers in your speech, conduct, love, faithfulness,[2] and purity. 4:13 Until I come, give attention to the public reading of scripture,[3] to exhortation, to teaching. 4:14 Do not neglect the spiritual gift you have,[4] given to you and confirmed by prophetic words[5] when the elders laid hands on you.[6] 4:15 Take pains with these things; be absorbed in them, so that everyone will see your progress.[7] 4:16 Be conscientious about how you live and what you teach.[8] Persevere in this, because by doing so you will save both yourself and those who listen to you.

Instructions about Specific Groups

5:1 Do not address an older man harshly[9] but appeal to him as a father. Speak to younger men as brothers,[10] 5:2 older women as mothers, and younger women as sisters – with complete purity.

5:3 Honor[11] widows who are truly in need.[12] 5:4 But if a widow has children or grandchildren, they should first learn to fulfill their duty[13] toward their own household and so repay their parents what is owed them.[14] For this is what pleases God.[15] 5:5 But the widow who is truly in need, and completely on her own,[16] has set her hope on God and continues in her pleas and prayers night and day. 5:6 But the one who lives for pleasure is dead even[17] while she lives. 5:7 Reinforce[18] these commands,[19] so that they will be beyond reproach. 5:8 But if someone does not provide for his own,[20] especially his own family, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

5:9 No widow should be put on the list[21] unless[22] she is at least sixty years old, was the wife of one husband,[23] 5:10 and has a reputation for good works: as one who has raised children,[24] practiced hospitality, washed the feet of the saints, helped those in distress – as one who has exhibited all kinds of good works.[25] 5:11 But do not accept younger widows on the list,[26] because their passions may lead them away from Christ[27] and they will desire to marry, 5:12 and so incur judgment for breaking their former pledge.[28] 5:13 And besides that, going around[29] from house to house they learn to be lazy,[30] and they are not only lazy, but also gossips and busybodies, talking about things they should not.[31] 5:14 So I want younger women to marry, raise children, and manage a household, in order dence should be given more weight. With some hesitation, ἀγωνιζόμεθα is preferred.

[1] tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, and is thus translated "people."

[2] tn Or "faith."

[3] tn Grk "reading."

sn The public reading of scripture refers to reading the scripture out loud in the church services. In a context where many were illiterate and few could afford private copies of scripture, such public reading was especially important.

[4] tn Grk "in you."

[5] tn Grk "which was given to you through prophecy." Here as in 2:15 the preposition "through" denotes not "means" but accompanying circumstances: "accompanied by prophecy."

sn These prophetic words perhaps spoke of what God would do through Timothy in his ministry (cf. 1 Tim 1:18).

[6] tn Grk "with the imposition of the hands of the presbytery" (i.e., the council of elders).

[7] tn Grk "that your progress may be evident to all."

[8] tn Grk "about yourself and your teaching."

[9] tn Or "Do not speak harshly to an older man."

[10] tn No verb "speak" is stated in this clause, but it continues the sense of the preceding.

[11] sn The word honor here carries the double meaning of respect and financial support. This Greek word can imply both senses, and both are intended in this context.

[12] tn Grk "the real widows," "those who are really widows."

[13] tn Or "to practice their religion."

[14] tn Or "and so make some repayment to their parents"; Grk "and to give back recompense to their parents."

[15] tn Grk "for this is pleasing in the sight of God."

[16] tn Or "left all alone."

[17] tn For "is dead even" the Greek text reads "has died."

[18] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[19] tn Grk "and command these things."

[20] tn That is, "his own relatives."

[21] sn This list was an official enrollment, apparently with a formal pledge to continue as a widow and serve the Lord in that way (cf. v. 12). It was either (1) the list of "true widows" who were given support by the church or (2) a smaller group of older women among the supported widows who were qualified for special service (perhaps to orphans, other widows, the sick, etc.). Most commentators understand it to be the former, since a special group is not indicated clearly. See G. W. Knight, Pastoral Epistles, 222-23 for discussion.

[22] tn Grk "let a widow be enrolled if she has reached not less than sixty years."

[23] tn Or "a woman married only once," "was devoted solely to her husband" (see the note on "wife" in 1 Tim 3:2; also 1 Tim 3:12; Titus 1:6).

[24] tn Grk "if she raised children." The phrase "if she raised children" begins a series of conditional clauses running to the end of the verse. These provide specific examples of her good works (v. 10a).

[25] tn Grk "followed after every good work."

[26] tn Grk "refuse younger widows."

[27] tn With a single verb and object, this clause means "pursue sensuous desires in opposition to Christ."

[28] tn Grk "incurring judgment because they reject their first faith."

sn The pledge refers most likely to a vow not to remarry undertaken when a widow is put on the list (cf. 1 Tim 5:9).

[29] tn L&N 15.23 suggests the meaning, "to move about from place to place, with significant changes in direction – 'to travel about, to wander about.'"

[30] tn Or "idle." The whole clause ("going around from house to house, they learn to be lazy") reverses the order of the Greek. The present participle περιερχόμεναι (perierchomenai) may be taken as temporal ("while going around"), instrumental ("by going around") or result ("with the result that they go around").

[31] tn Grk "saying the things that are unnecessary." Or perhaps "talking about things that are none of their business."

to give the adversary no opportunity to vilify us.[1] 5:15 For some have already wandered away to follow Satan.[2] 5:16 If a believing woman[3] has widows in her family,[4] let her help them. The church should not be burdened, so that it may help the widows who are truly in need.[5]

5:17 Elders who provide effective leadership[6] must be counted worthy[7] of double honor,[8] especially those who work hard in speaking[9] and teaching. 5:18 For the scripture says, "Do not muzzle an ox while it is treading out the grain,"[10] and, "The worker deserves his pay."[11] 5:19 Do not accept an accusation against an elder unless it can be confirmed by two or three witnesses.[12] 5:20 Those guilty of sin[13] must be rebuked[14] before all,[15] as a warning to the rest.[16] 5:21 Before God and Christ Jesus and the elect angels, I solemnly charge you to carry out these commands without prejudice or favoritism of any kind.[17] 5:22 Do not lay hands on anyone[18] hastily and so identify with the sins of others.[19] Keep yourself pure. 5:23 (Stop drinking just water, but use a little wine for your digestion[20] and your frequent illnesses.)[21] 5:24 The sins of some people are obvious, going before them into judgment, but for others, they show up later.[22] 5:25 Similarly good works are also obvious, and the ones that are not cannot remain hidden.

6:1 Those who are under the yoke as slaves[23] must regard their own masters as deserving of full respect. This will prevent[24] the name of God and Christian teaching[25] from being discredited.[26] 6:2 But those who have believing masters must not show them less respect[27] because they are brothers. Instead they are to serve all the more, because those who benefit from their service are believers and dearly loved.[28]

Summary of Timothy's Duties

Teach them and exhort them about these things.[29] 6:3 If someone spreads false teachings[30] and does not agree with sound words (that is, those of our Lord Jesus Christ) and with the teaching that accords with godliness, 6:4 he is conceited and understands nothing, but has an unhealthy interest in controversies and verbal disputes. This gives rise to envy, dissension, slanders, evil suspicions, 6:5 and constant bickering by people corrupted in their minds and deprived of the truth, who suppose that godliness[31] is a way of making a profit. 6:6 Now godliness combined with contentment brings great profit. 6:7 For we have brought nothing into this world and so[32] we cannot take a single thing out

---

1 tn Grk "for the sake of reviling."

2 tn Grk "wandered away after Satan."

3 tc Most witnesses (D Ψ 𝔐 sy) have πιστὸς ἤ (pistos ē) before πιστή (pistē), with the resultant meaning "if a believing man or woman." But such looks to be a motivated reading, perhaps to bring some parity to the responsibilities of men and women listed here, and as a way of harmonizing with v. 4. Further, most of the earliest and best witnesses (ℵ A C F G P 048 33 81 1175 1739 1881 co) lack the πιστὸς ἤ, strengthening the preference for the shorter reading.

4 tn Grk "has widows."

5 tn Grk "the real widows," "those who are really widows."

6 tn Grk "who lead well."

7 tn Or "deserving."

8 tn Like the similar use of "honor" in v. 3, this phrase denotes both respect and remuneration: "honor plus honorarium."

9 tn Or "in preaching"; Grk "in word."

10 sn A quotation from Deut 25:4.

11 sn A quotation from Luke 10:7.

12 sn An allusion to Deut 17:6, 19:15.

13 sn As a continuation of v. 19, this refers to elders who sin, not to sinning believers more generally.

14 tn Or "censured." The Greek word implies exposing someone's sin in order to bring correction.

15 tn "Before all" probably refers to the whole congregation, not just all the elders; "the rest" is more likely to denote the remaining elders.

16 tn Grk "that the rest may have fear."

17 tn Grk "doing nothing according to partiality."

18 tn In context "laying hands on anyone" refers to ordination or official installation of someone as an elder.

19 tn Grk "and do not share in the sins of others."

20 tn Grk "for the sake of your stomach."

21 sn This verse gives parenthetical advice to Timothy, to clarify what it means to keep pure (5:22c). Verse 24 resumes the instructions about elders.

22 tn Grk "they [the sins] follow after others."

23 tn Traditionally, "servants." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

24 tn Grk "that the name...may not be slandered" (a continuation of the preceding sentence).

25 tn Grk "the teaching."

26 tn Or "slandered."

27 tn Or "think the less of them"; Grk "despise them," "look down on them."

28 tn Or "those who devote themselves to service are faithful and dearly loved" (referring to slaves who serve them).

29 tn Grk "these things teach and exhort."

30 tn Grk "teaches other doctrines," (different from apostolic teaching, cf. 1 Tim 1:3).

31 tc Although most witnesses, including some early versions and fathers (D² Ψ 𝔐 sy Cyp Lcf Ambst), have ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων (aphistaso apo' tōn toioutōn, "stay away from such things!") after εὐσεβείαν (eusebeian, "godliness"; thus, "who suppose that godliness is a way of making a profit; stay away from such things!"), there seems to be little good reason for this clause's omission in some of the oldest and best witnesses (ℵ A D* F G 048 6 33 81 1175 1739 1881 lat co). It is likely that it crept into the text early, perhaps as a marginal comment, but it should not be considered authentic in light of the strong external evidence against it.

either. 6:8 But if we have food and shelter, we will be satisfied with that.[1] 6:9 Those who long to be rich, however, stumble into temptation and a trap and many senseless and harmful desires that plunge people into ruin and destruction. 6:10 For the love of money is the root[2] of all evils.[3] Some people in reaching for it have strayed from the faith and stabbed themselves with many pains.

6:11 But you, as a person dedicated to God,[4] keep away from all that.[5] Instead pursue righteousness, godliness, faithfulness, love, endurance, and gentleness. 6:12 Compete well[6] for the faith and lay hold of that eternal life you were called for and made your good confession[7] for[8] in the presence of many witnesses. 6:13 I charge you[9] before God who gives life to all things and Christ Jesus who made his good confession[10] before Pontius Pilate, 6:14 to obey[11] this command[12] without fault or failure until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ 6:15 – whose appearing[13] the blessed and only Sovereign, the King of kings and Lord of lords, will reveal at the right time. 6:16 He alone possesses immortality and lives in unapproachable light, whom no human has ever seen or is able to see. To him be honor and eternal power! Amen.

6:17 Command those who are rich in this world's goods[14] not to be haughty or to set their hope on riches, which are uncertain,[15] but on God who richly provides us with all things for our enjoyment. 6:18 Tell them to do good,[16] to be rich in good deeds, to be generous givers, sharing with others.[17] 6:19 In this way they will save up[18] a treasure for themselves as a firm foundation[19] for the future and so lay hold of[20] what is truly life.

Conclusion

6:20 O Timothy, protect what has been entrusted to you. Avoid[21] the profane chatter and absurdities[22] of so-called "knowledge."[23] 6:21 By professing it, some have strayed from the faith.[24] Grace be with you all.[25]

---

1 tn Grk "with these."

2 tn This could be taken to mean "a root," but the phrase "of all evils" clearly makes it definite. This seems to be not entirely true to life (some evils are unrelated to love of money), but it should be read as a case of hyperbole (exaggeration to make a point more strongly).

3 tn Many translations render this "of all kinds of evil," especially to allow for the translation "a root" along with it. But there is no parallel for taking a construction like this to mean "all kinds of" or "every kind of." The normal sense is "all evils."

4 tn Grk "O man of God."

5 tn Grk "flee these things."

6 tn This phrase literally means "compete in the good competition of the faith," using words that may refer to a race or to a boxing or wrestling match: "run the good race" or "fight the good fight." The similar phrase in 1 Tim 1:18 uses a military picture and is more literally "war the good warfare."

7 sn At some point in Timothy's life, he publicly acknowledged Jesus as the resurrected Lord, perhaps either at his baptism or his ordination as a minister of the gospel. With this reminder of the historical moment of his good confession, Timothy is encouraged to remain steadfast in his faith and to finish his life as a minister in the same way it began (see G. W. Knight, Pastoral Epistles [NIGTC], 264-65).

8 tn Grk "confessed the good confession."

9 tc ‡ Most witnesses, some of them important (𝔓[2] A D H 1881 𝔐 lat sy bo), have σοι (soi, "you") after παραγγέλλω (parangellō, "I charge [you]"), a predictable variant because the personal pronoun is demanded by the sense of the passage (and was added in the translation because of English requirements). Hence, the omission is the harder reading, and the addition of σοι is one of clarification. Further, the shorter reading is found in several important witnesses, such as 𝔓* F G Ψ 6 33 1739 pc. Thus, both internally and externally the shorter reading is preferred. NA[27] places σοι in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "I charge."

10 tn Grk "testified the good confession."

sn Jesus' good confession was his affirmative answer to Pilate's question "Are you the king of the Jews?" (see Matt 27:11, Mark 15:2, Luke 23:3, John 18:33-37).

11 tn The Greek word τηρέω (tēreō, traditionally translated "keep") in this context connotes preservation of and devotion to an object as well as obedience.

12 tn Grk "the command."

sn The command refers to the duties laid upon Timothy for his ministry in Ephesus (1 Tim 1:3-20; 6:2c-5).

13 tn Grk "which." All of 1 Tim 6:15 is a relative clause which refers back to "appearing" in v.14. The phrase "whose appearing" was supplied to clarify this connection.

14 tn Grk "in the present age."

15 tn Grk "in uncertainty."

16 tn Grk "to do good" (the continuation of 6:17). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 18.

17 tn Grk "to be generous," "sharing."

18 tn Grk "saving up" (the continuation of 6:18). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 19.

19 tn Grk "treasuring up a good foundation."

20 tn Grk "that they may lay hold of."

21 tn Grk "avoiding." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

22 tn Or "contradictions."

23 tn Grk "the falsely named knowledge."

24 tn Grk "have deviated concerning the faith."

25 tc Most witnesses (𝔓[2] D[1] Ψ 𝔐 sy) conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓* A D* F G 33 81 1739* 1881 it sa) lack the particle, indicating that the letter concluded with "Grace be with you all."

tn Grk "with you" (but the Greek pronoun indicates the meaning is plural here).

2 Timothy

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, to further the promise[2] of life in Christ Jesus, 1:2 to Timothy, my dear child. Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord!

Thanksgiving and Charge to Timothy

1:3 I am thankful to God, whom I have served with a clear conscience as my ancestors did,[3] when I remember you in my prayers as I do constantly night and day.[4] 1:4 As I remember your tears, I long to see you,[5] so that I may be filled with joy.
1:5 I recall[6] your sincere faith[7] that was alive first in your grandmother Lois and in your mother Eunice, and I am sure[8] is in you.

1:6 Because of this I remind you to rekindle God's gift that you possess[9] through the laying on of my hands. 1:7 For God did not give us a Spirit[10] of fear but of power and love and self-control. 1:8 So do not be ashamed of the testimony about our Lord[11] or of me, a prisoner for his sake, but by[12] God's power accept your share of suffering[13] for the gospel. 1:9 He is the one who saved us[14] and called us with a holy calling, not based on[15] our works but on his own purpose and grace, granted to us in Christ Jesus before time began,[16] 1:10 but now made visible through the appearing of our Savior Christ Jesus. He[17] has broken the power of death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel! 1:11 For this gospel[18] I was appointed a preacher and apostle and teacher.[19] 1:12 Because of this, in fact, I suffer as I do.[20] But I am not ashamed, because I know the one in whom my faith is set[21] and I am convinced that he is able to protect what has been entrusted to me[22] until that day.[23] 1:13 Hold to the standard[24] of sound words that you heard from me and do so with the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus.[25] 1:14 Protect that good thing[26] entrusted to you, through the Holy Spirit who lives within us.

1:15 You know that everyone in the province of Asia[27] deserted me, including Phygelus and Hermogenes. 1:16 May the Lord grant mercy to the family of Onesiphorus, because he often refreshed me and was not ashamed of my imprisonment.[28] 1:17 But when he arrived in

---

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Grk "for the promise..." or possibly "in accordance with the promise..."

3 tn Grk "from my ancestors."

4 tn Or "as I do constantly. By night and day I long to see you..."

5 tn Grk "longing to see you, remembering your tears" (as a continuation of the preceding clause). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

6 tn Grk "recalling" (as a continuation of the preceding clause). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

7 tn Grk "the sincere faith in you."

8 tn Or "convinced."

9 tn Grk "that is in you."

10 tn Or "a spirit," denoting the human personality under the Spirit's influence as in 1 Cor 4:21; Gal 6:1; 1 Pet 3:4. But the reference to the Holy Spirit at the end of this section (1:14) makes it likely that it begins this way also, so that the Holy Spirit is the referent.

11 tn Grk "the testimony of our Lord."

12 tn Or "according to."

13 tn Grk "suffer hardship together," implying "join with me in suffering."

14 tn More literally, "who saved us," as a description of God in v. 8. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

15 tn Or "according to," or "by."

16 tn Grk "before eternal times."

17 tn Grk "having broken...and having brought..." (describing Christ). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here (and at the beginning of v. 11) in the translation.

18 tn Grk "for which."

19 tc Most MSS (𝔓[2] C D F G Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 latt sy co) have ἐθνῶν (ethnōn, "of the Gentiles") after "teacher." The shorter reading has poorer external credentials (א* A I 1175 pc), but is preferred because ἐθνῶν probably represents a gloss added by copyists familiar with 1 Tim 2:7. There is no easy explanation for the omission of the word if it were original here.

20 tn Grk "suffer these things."

21 tn Or "in whom I have believed."

22 sn What has been entrusted to me (Grk "my entrustment," meaning either (1) "what I have entrusted to him" [his life, destiny, etc.] or (2) "what he has entrusted to me" [the truth of the gospel]). The parallel with v. 14 and use of similar words in the pastorals (1 Tim 6:20; 2 Tim 2:2) argue for the latter sense.

23 sn That day is a reference to the day when Paul would stand before Christ to give account for his service (cf. 2 Tim 1:18; 1 Cor 3:13; 2 Cor 5:9-10).

24 tn Or "pattern."

25 tn Grk "in faith and love in Christ Jesus."

sn With the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. This describes the manner in which Timothy must hold to the standard (similar to Paul's call for him to give attention to his life and his teaching in 1 Tim 4:11-16).

26 sn That good thing (Grk "the good deposit") refers to the truth of the gospel committed to Timothy (cf. 1 Tim 6:20).

27 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

28 tn Grk "my chain."

Rome,[1] he eagerly searched for me and found me.
1:18 May the Lord grant him to find mercy from the Lord on that day![2] And you know very well all the ways he served me in Ephesus.[3]

Serving Faithfully Despite Hardship

2:1 So you, my child, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. 2:2 And entrust what you heard me say[4] in the presence of many others as witnesses[5] to faithful people[6] who will be competent[7] to teach others as well. 2:3 Take your share of suffering[8] as a good soldier of Christ Jesus. 2:4 No one in military service gets entangled in matters of everyday life; otherwise he will not please[9] the one who recruited him. 2:5 Also, if anyone competes as an athlete, he will not be crowned as the winner[10] unless he competes according to the rules.[11] 2:6 The farmer who works hard ought to have the first share of the crops. 2:7 Think about what I am saying and[12] the Lord will give you understanding of all this.[13]

2:8 Remember Jesus Christ, raised from the dead, a descendant of David;[14] such is my gospel,[15] 2:9 for which I suffer hardship to the point of imprisonment[16] as a criminal, but God's message[17] is not imprisoned![18] 2:10 So I endure all things for the sake of those chosen by God,[19] that they too may obtain salvation in Christ Jesus and its eternal glory.[20] 2:11 This saying[21] is trustworthy:[22]

If we died with him, we will also live with him.
2:12 If we endure, we will also reign with him.[23]
If we deny[24] him,[25] he will also deny us.
2:13 If we are unfaithful, he remains faithful, since he cannot deny himself.[26]

Dealing with False Teachers

2:14 Remind people[27] of these things and solemnly charge them[28] before the Lord[29] not to [2] sn That day is a reference to the day when Onesiphorus (v. 16) stands before Christ to give account for his service (cf. v. 12; 1 Cor 3:13; 2 Cor 5:9-10).

[3] tn Grk "all the ways he served in Ephesus."
map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

[4] tn Grk "what you heard from me" (cf. 1:13).

[5] tn Grk "through many witnesses." The "through" is used here to show attendant circumstances: "accompanied by," "in the presence of."

[6] tn Grk "faithful men," but here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is generic, referring to both men and women.

[7] tn Or "able" (see Paul's use of this word in regard to ministry in 2 Cor 2:16; 3:5-6).

[8] tn Grk "suffer hardship together," implying "join with me and others in suffering" (cf. 1:8).

[9] tn Grk "that he may please."

[10] tn Grk "will not be crowned," speaking of the wreath awarded to the victor.

[11] sn According to the rules (Grk "lawfully, by law") referring to the rules of competition. In the ancient world these included requirements for training as well as rules for the competition itself.

[12] tn The Greek word here usually means "for," but is used in this verse for a milder continuation of thought.

[13] tn Grk "in all things."

[14] tn Grk "of David's seed" (an idiom for physical descent).

[15] tn Grk "according to my gospel."

[16] tn Or "chains," "bonds."

[17] tn Or "word."

[18] tn Or "chained," "bound."

[19] tn Grk "the elect."

[20] tn Grk "with eternal glory."

[21] sn This saying (Grk "the saying") refers to the following citation. See 1 Tim 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; Titus 3:8 for other occurrences of this phrase.

[22] sn The following passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

[23] tn Grk "died together...will live together...will reign together," without "him" stated explicitly. But "him" is implied by the parallel ideas in Rom 6:8; 8:17 and by the reference to Christ in vv. 12b-13.

[24] tn Or "renounce," "disown," "repudiate." It is important to note that the object of Christ's denial is "us." The text does not contain an implied object complement ("he will deny us [x]"), which would mean that Christ was withholding something from us (for example, "The owner denied his pets water"), since the verb ἀρνέομαι (arneomai) is not one of the category of verbs that normally occurs in these constructions (see ExSyn 182-89).

[25] tn Grk "if we renounce," but the "him" is implied by the parallel clauses.

[26] sn If we are unfaithful...he cannot deny himself. This could be (1) a word of warning (The Lord will exact punishment; he cannot deny his holiness) or (2) a word of hope (Because of who he is, he remains faithful to us despite our lapses). The latter is more likely, since Paul consistently cites God's faithfulness as a reassurance, not as a warning (cf. especially Rom 3:3; also 1 Cor 1:9; 10:13; 2 Cor 1:18; 1 Thess 5:24; 2 Thess 3:3).

[27] tn Grk "remind of these things," implying "them" or "people" as the object.

[28] tn Grk "solemnly charging." The participle διαμαρτυρόμενος (diamarturomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[29] tc ‡ Most witnesses (A D Ψ 048 1739 1881 𝔐 sy) have κυρίου (kuriou, "Lord") instead of θεοῦ (theou, "God") here, while a few have Χριστοῦ (Christou, "Christ"; 206 {429 1758}). θεοῦ, however, is well supported by ℵ C F G I 614 629 630 1175 al. Internally, the Pastorals never elsewhere use the expression ἐνώπιον κυρίου (enōpion kuriou, "before the Lord"), but consistently use ἐνώπιον θεοῦ ("before God"; cf. 1 Tim 2:3; 5:4, 21; 6:13; 2 Tim 4:1). But this fact could be argued both ways: The author's style may be in view, or scribes may have adjusted the wording to conform it to the Pastorals' universal expression. Further, only twice in the NT (Jas 4:10 [v.l. θεοῦ]; Rev 11:4 [v.l. θεοῦ]) is the expression ἐνώπιον κυρίου found. That such an expression is not found in the corpus Paulinum seems to be sufficient impetus for scribes to change the wording here. Thus, although the external evidence is somewhat on the side of θεοῦ, the internal evidence is on the side of κυρίου. A decision is difficult, but κυρίου is the preferred reading.

wrangle over words. This is of no benefit; it just brings ruin on those who listen.[1] 2:15 Make every effort to present yourself before God as a proven worker who does not need to be ashamed, teaching the message of truth accurately.[2] 2:16 But avoid profane chatter,[3] because those occupied with it will stray further and further into ungodliness,[4] 2:17 and their message will spread its infection[5] like gangrene. Hymenaeus and Philetus are in this group.[6] 2:18 They have strayed from the truth[7] by saying that the resurrection has already occurred, and they are undermining some people's faith. 2:19 However, God's solid foundation remains standing, bearing this seal: "The Lord knows those who are his,"[8] and "Everyone who confesses the name of the Lord[9] must turn away from evil."

2:20 Now in a wealthy home[10] there are not only gold and silver vessels, but also ones made of wood and of clay, and some are for honorable use, but others for ignoble use.[11] 2:21 So if someone cleanses himself of such behavior,[12] he will be a vessel for honorable use, set apart, useful for the Master, prepared for every good work. 2:22 But keep away from youthful passions, and pursue righteousness, faithfulness, love, and peace, in company with others[13] who call on the Lord from a pure heart.[14] 2:23 But reject foolish and ignorant[15] controversies, because you know they breed infighting.[16] 2:24 And the Lord's slave[17] must not engage in heated disputes[18] but be kind toward all, an apt teacher, patient, 2:25 correcting[19] opponents with gentleness. Perhaps God will grant them repentance and then knowledge of the truth[20] 2:26 and they will come to their senses and escape the devil's trap where they are held captive[21] to do his will.[22]

Ministry in the Last Days

3:1 But understand this, that in the last days difficult[23] times will come. 3:2 For people[24] will be lovers of themselves,[25] lovers of money, boastful, arrogant, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, 3:3 unloving, irreconcilable, slanderers, without self-control, savage, opposed to what is good, 3:4 treacherous, reckless, conceited, loving pleasure rather than loving God. 3:5 They will maintain the outward appearance[26] of religion but will have repudiated

[1] tn Grk "[it is] beneficial for nothing, for the ruin of those who listen."

[2] sn Accurately is a figure of speech that literally means something like "cutting a straight road." In regard to the message of truth, it means "correctly handling" or "imparting it without deviation."

[3] sn Profane chatter was apparently a characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus (cf. 1 Tim 1:3-4; 4:7; 6:20).

[4] tn Grk "they [who engage in it] will progress even more in ungodliness."

[5] tn Or "eat away."

[6] tn Grk "of whom are Hymenaeus and Philetus." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, this last clause has been made a new sentence in the translation.

[7] tn Grk "have deviated concerning the truth."

[8] sn A quotation from Num 16:5.

[9] tn Grk "names the name of the Lord."

[10] tn Grk "a great house."

[11] tn Grk "for dishonor," probably referring to vessels used for refuse or excrement.

[12] tn Grk "from these," alluding to the errors and deeds of the false teachers described in vv. 14-19.

[13] tn Grk "and peace, with those."

[14] sn In company with others who call on the Lord from a pure heart alludes to the value of the community of believers for the development of Christian virtues.

[15] tn Or "uninstructed," "silly."

[16] tn Or "fights," although this could suggest weapons and blows, whereas in the present context this is not the primary focus. Although "quarrel" is frequently used here (NAB, NIV, NRSV) it may be understood to refer to a relatively minor disagreement.

[17] tn Traditionally, "servant" or "bondservant." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

[18] tn Grk "must not fight" or "must not quarrel." The Greek verb is related to the noun translated "infighting" in v. 23.

[19] sn Correcting is the word for "child-training" or "discipline." It is often positive (training, educating) but here denotes the negative side (correcting, disciplining).

[20] tn Grk "repentance unto knowledge of the truth."

[21] tn Grk "having been captured by him."

[22] tn Grk "for that one's will," referring to the devil, but with a different pronoun than in the previous phrase "by him." Some have construed "for his will" with the earlier verb and referred the pronoun to God: "come to their senses and escape the devil's trap (though they have been captured by him) in order to do His will." In Classical Greek the shift in pronouns would suggest this, but in Koine Greek this change is not significant. The more natural sense is a reference to the devil's will.

[23] tn Or perhaps, "dangerous," "fierce."

[24] tn Grk "men," but here ἄνθρωποι (anthrōpoi) is generic, referring to both men and women.

[25] tn Or "self-centered." The first two traits in 2 Tim 3:2 and the last two in 3:4 are Greek words beginning with the root "lovers of," and so bracket the list at beginning and end.

[26] tn Or "form."

sn Outward appearance. Paul's contrast with power in 3:5b shows that he regards this "form" to be outward, one of appearance rather than reality (cf. 1 Cor 4:19-20; 1 Thess 1:5).

its power. So avoid people like these.[1] 3:6 For some of these insinuate themselves[2] into households and captivate weak women[3] who are overwhelmed with sins and led along by various passions. 3:7 Such women are always seeking instruction,[4] yet never able to arrive at a knowledge of the truth. 3:8 And just as Jannes and Jambres[5] opposed Moses, so these people – who have warped minds and are disqualified in the faith[6] – also oppose the truth. 3:9 But they will not go much further,[7] for their foolishness will be obvious to everyone, just like it was with Jannes and Jambres.[8]

Continue in What You Have Learned

3:10 You, however,[9] have followed my teaching, my[10] way of life, my purpose, my faith, my patience, my love, my endurance, 3:11 as well as the persecutions and sufferings[11] that happened to me in Antioch,[12] in Iconium, and in Lystra.[13] I endured these persecutions and the Lord delivered me from them all. 3:12 Now in fact all who want to live godly lives in Christ Jesus will be persecuted. 3:13 But evil people and charlatans will go from bad to worse,[14] deceiving others and being deceived themselves.[15] 3:14 You, however, must continue[16] in the things you have learned and are confident about. You know[17] who taught you[18] 3:15 and how from infancy you have known the holy writings, which are able to give you wisdom for salvation through faith in Christ Jesus. 3:16 Every scripture[19] is inspired by God[20] and useful for teaching, for reproof,[21] for correction, and for training in righteousness, 3:17 that the person dedicated to God[22] may be capable[23] and equipped for every good work.

Charge to Timothy Repeated

4:1 I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus, who is going to judge the living and the dead, and by his appearing and his kingdom: 4:2 Preach the message,[24] be ready[25] whether it is convenient or not,[26] reprove, rebuke, exhort[27] with complete patience and instruction. 4:3 For there will be a time when people[28] will not tolerate sound teaching. Instead, following their own desires,[29] they will accumulate teachers for themselves, because they have an insatiable curiosity to hear new things.[30] 4:4 And they will turn away from hearing the truth, but on the other hand they will turn aside to myths.[31] 4:5 You, however, be self-controlled[32] in all things, endure hardship, do an evangelist's work, fulfill your ministry. 4:6 For I am already being poured out as an offering, and the time for me to depart[33] is at hand. 4:7 I have competed

[1] tn Grk "and avoid these," with the word "people" implied.

[2] tn Grk "For from these are those who sneak."

[3] tn Or "silly women."

[4] tn Grk "always learning," continuing the description of the women from v. 6. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[5] sn Jannes and Jambres were the traditional names of two of Pharaoh's magicians who opposed Moses at the time of the Exodus.

[6] tn Grk "disapproved concerning the faith."

[7] tn Grk "for they will not progress any more."

[8] tn Grk "as theirs came to be," referring to the foolishness of Jannes and Jambres. The referent of "theirs" (Jannes and Jambres) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] sn There is a strong emphasis on the pronoun you in contrast to the people described in vv. 2-9.

[10] tn The possessive "my" occurs only at the beginning of the list but is positioned in Greek to apply to each of the words in the series.

[11] tn Grk "persecutions, sufferings," as a continuation of the series from v. 10.

[12] map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2; JP4-E2.

[13] sn In Antioch, in Iconium, and in Lystra. See Acts 13-14 for the account of these persecutions.

map For location see JP1-E2; JP2-E2; JP3-E2

[14] tn Grk "will advance to the worse."

[15] tn Grk "deceiving and being deceived."

[16] tn Grk "but you, continue," a command.

[17] tn Grk "knowing," giving the reasons for continuing as v. 14 calls for.

[18] tn Grk "those from whom you learned."

[19] tn Or "All scripture."

sn There is very little difference in sense between every scripture (emphasizing the individual portions) and "all scripture" (emphasizing the composite whole). The former option is preferred, because it fits the normal use of the word "all/every" in Greek (πᾶς, pas) as well as Paul's normal sense for the word "scripture" in the singular without the article, as here. So every scripture means "every individual portion of scripture."

[20] sn Inspired by God. Some have connected this adjective in a different way and translated it as "every inspired scripture is also useful." But this violates the parallelism of the two adjectives in the sentence, and the arrangement of words makes clear that both should be taken as predicate adjectives: "every scripture is inspired...and useful."

[21] tn Or "rebuke," "censure." The Greek word implies exposing someone's sin in order to bring correction.

[22] tn Grk "the man of God," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is most likely used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women.

[23] tn This word is positioned for special emphasis; it carries the sense of "complete, competent, able to meet all demands."

[24] tn Or "the word."

[25] tn Or "be persistent."

[26] tn Grk "in season, out of season."

[27] tn Or "encourage."

[28] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the people in that future time) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[29] tn Grk "in accord with."

[30] tn Grk "having an itching in regard to hearing," "having itching ears."

[31] sn These myths were legendary tales characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus and Crete. See parallels in 1 Tim 1:4; 4:7; and Titus 1:14.

[32] tn Or "sober," "temperate."

[33] tn Grk "of my departure."

well;[1] I have finished the race; I have kept the faith! 4:8 Finally the crown of righteousness is reserved for me. The Lord, the righteous Judge, will award it to me in that day – and not to me only, but also to all who have set their affection on[2] his appearing.

Travel Plans and Concluding Greetings

4:9 Make every effort to come to me soon. 4:10 For Demas deserted me, since he loved[3] the present age, and he went to Thessalonica.[4] Crescens went to Galatia and Titus to Dalmatia. 4:11 Only Luke is with me. Get Mark and bring him with you, because he is a great help[5] to me in ministry.[6] 4:12 Now I have sent Tychicus to Ephesus.[7] 4:13 When you come, bring with you the cloak I left in Troas with Carpas and the scrolls, especially the parchments. 4:14 Alexander the coppersmith did me a great deal of harm.[8] The Lord will repay him in keeping with his deeds.[9] 4:15 You be on guard against him[10] too, because he vehemently opposed our words. 4:16 At my first defense no one appeared in my support; instead they all deserted me – may they not be held accountable for it. 4:17 But the Lord stood by me and strengthened me, so that through me the message[11] would be fully proclaimed[12] for all the Gentiles to hear. And so I was delivered from the lion's mouth! 4:18 The Lord will deliver me from every evil deed and will bring me safely[13] into his heavenly kingdom. To him[14] be glory for ever and ever![15] Amen.

4:19 Greetings to[16] Prisca and Aquila[17] and the family of Onesiphorus. 4:20 Erastus stayed in Corinth.[18] Trophimus I left ill in Miletus. 4:21 Make every effort to come before winter. Greetings to you from Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia, and all the brothers and sisters.[19] 4:22 The Lord[20] be with your spirit. Grace be with you.[21]

1 sn The expression I have competed well (Grk "I have competed the good competition") uses words that may refer to a race or to a boxing or wrestling match: "run the good race" or "fight the good fight." The similar phrase in 1 Tim 1:18 uses a military picture and is more literally "war the good warfare."

2 tn Grk "all who have loved."

3 tn Grk "having loved."

4 map For location see JP1-C1; JP2-C1; JP3-C1; JP4-C1.

5 tn Grk "useful."

6 tn Or "in serving me."

7 map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

8 tn Grk "showed me much evil."

9 sn An allusion to Ps 28:4.

10 tn Grk "against whom," as a continuation of the previous clause. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

11 tn Or "the preaching."

12 tn Grk "might be completely fulfilled."

13 tn Grk "save me."

14 tn Grk "to whom." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

15 tn Grk "unto the ages of the ages," an emphatic way of speaking about eternity in Greek.

16 tn Grk "greet."

17 sn On Prisca and Aquila see also Acts 18:2, 18, 26; Rom 16:3-4; 1 Cor 16:19. In the NT "Priscilla" and "Prisca" are the same person. The author of Acts uses the full name Priscilla, while Paul uses the diminutive form Prisca.

18 map For location see JP1-C2; JP2-C2; JP3-C2; JP4-C2.

20 tc The reading ὁ κύριος (ho kurios, "the Lord") is well supported by ℵ* F G 33 1739 1881 sa, but predictable expansions on the text have occurred at this point: A 104 614 pc read ὁ κύριος Ἰησοῦς (ho kurios Iēsous, "the Lord Jesus"), while ℵ² C D Ψ 𝔐 sy bo have ὁ κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός (ho kurios Iēsous Christos, "the Lord Jesus Christ"). As B. M. Metzger notes, although in a late book such as 2 Timothy, one might expect the fuller title for the Lord, accidental omission of nomina sacra is rare (TCGNT 582). The shorter reading is thus preferred on both external and internal grounds.

21 tc Most witnesses (ℵ² D Ψ 𝔐 lat sy) conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, there are several excellent witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western texts (ℵ* A C F G 6 33 81 1739* 1881 sa) that lack the particle, rendering the omission the preferred reading.

Titus

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] a slave[2] of God and apostle of Jesus Christ, to further the faith[3] of God's chosen ones and the knowledge of the truth that is in keeping with godliness, 1:2 in hope of eternal life, which God, who does not lie, promised before the ages began.[4] 1:3 But now in his own time[5] he has made his message evident through the preaching I was entrusted with according to the command of God our Savior. 1:4 To Titus, my genuine son in a common faith. Grace and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Savior!

Titus' Task on Crete

1:5 The reason I left you in Crete was to set in order the remaining matters and to appoint elders in every town, as I directed you. 1:6 An elder must be blameless,[6] the husband of one wife,[7] with faithful children[8] who cannot be charged with dissipation or rebellion. 1:7 For the overseer[9] must be blameless as one entrusted with God's work,[10] not arrogant, not prone to anger, not a drunkard, not violent, not greedy for gain. 1:8 Instead he must be hospitable, devoted to what is good, sensible, upright, devout, and self-controlled. 1:9 He must hold firmly to the faithful message as it has been taught,[11] so that he will be able to give exhortation in such healthy teaching[12] and correct those who speak against it.

1:10 For there are many[13] rebellious people, idle talkers, and deceivers, especially those with Jewish connections,[14] 1:11 who must be silenced because they mislead whole families by teaching for dishonest gain what ought not to be taught. 1:12 A certain one of them, in fact, one of their own prophets, said, "Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons."[15] 1:13 Such testimony is true. For this reason rebuke them sharply that they may be healthy in the faith 1:14 and not pay attention to Jewish myths[16] and commands of people who reject the truth. 1:15 All is pure to those who are pure. But to those who are corrupt and unbelieving, nothing is pure, but both their minds and consciences are corrupted. 1:16 They profess to know God but with their deeds they deny him, since they are detestable, disobedient, and unfit for any good deed.

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Traditionally, "servant" or "bondservant." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

3 tn Grk "for the faith," possibly, "in accordance with the faith."

4 tn Grk "before eternal ages."

5 tn The Greek text emphasizes the contrast between vv. 2b and 3a: God promised this long ago but now has revealed it in his own time.

6 tn Grk "if anyone is blameless..." as a continuation of v. 5b, beginning to describe the elder's character.

7 tn Or "married only once," "devoted solely to his wife." See the note on "wife" in 1 Tim 3:2; also 1 Tim 3:12; 5:9.

8 tn Or "believing children." The phrase could be translated "believing children," but the parallel with 1 Tim 3:4 ("keeping his children in control") argues for the sense given in the translation.

9 sn The overseer is another term for the same official position of leadership as the "elder." This is seen in the interchange of the two terms in this passage and in Acts 20:17, 28, as well as in the parallels between these verses and 1 Tim 3:1-7.

10 tn Grk "as God's steward."

11 tn Grk "the faithful message in accordance with the teaching" (referring to apostolic teaching).

12 tn Grk "the healthy teaching" (referring to what was just mentioned).

13 tc ‡ The earliest and best MSS lack καί (kai) after πολλοί (polloi; so ℵ A C P 088 81 104 365 614 629 630 al sy co), though the conjunction is found in several significant witnesses, chiefly of the Western and Byzantine texts (D F G I Ψ 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat). Although it is possible that some scribes omitted the word, thinking it was superfluous, it is also possible that others added the conjunction for clarification. Judging by the pedigree of the witnesses and the inconclusiveness of the internal evidence, the shorter reading is considered to be most likely original. NA[27] puts the conjunction in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

14 tn Grk "those of the circumcision." Some translations take this to refer to Jewish converts to Christianity (cf. NAB "Jewish Christians"; TEV "converts from Judaism"; CEV "Jewish followers") while others are less clear (cf. NLT "those who insist on circumcision for salvation").

15 sn A saying attributed to the poet Epimenides of Crete (6th century B.C.).

16 sn Jewish myths were legendary tales characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus and Crete. See parallels in 1 Tim 1:4; 4:7; and 2 Tim 4:4.

Conduct Consistent with Sound Teaching

2:1 But as for you, communicate the behavior that goes with[1] sound teaching. 2:2 Older men are to be temperate, dignified, self-controlled,[2] sound in faith, in love, and in endurance.[3] 2:3 Older women likewise are to exhibit behavior fitting for those who are holy, not slandering, not slaves to excessive drinking, but teaching what is good. 2:4 In this way[4] they will train[5] the younger women to love their husbands, to love their children, 2:5 to be self-controlled,[6] pure, fulfilling their duties at home,[7] kind, being subject to their own husbands, so that the message[8] of God may not be discredited.[9] 2:6 Encourage younger men likewise to be self-controlled,[10] 2:7 showing yourself to be an example of good works in every way. In your teaching show integrity, dignity, 2:8 and a sound message that cannot be criticized, so that any opponent will be at a loss,[11] because he has nothing evil to say about us. 2:9 Slaves[12] are to be subject to their own masters in everything,[13] to do what is wanted and not talk back, 2:10 not pilfering, but showing all good faith,[14] in order to bring credit to[15] the teaching of God our Savior in everything.

2:11 For the grace of God has appeared, bringing salvation to all people.[16] 2:12 It trains us[17] to reject godless ways[18] and worldly desires and to live self-controlled, upright, and godly lives in the present age, 2:13 as we wait for the happy fulfillment of our hope in the glorious appearing[19] of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ.[20] 2:14 He[21] gave himself for us to set us free from every kind of lawlessness and to purify for himself a people who are truly his,[22] who are eager to do good.[23] 2:15 So communicate these things with the sort of exhortation or rebuke[24] that carries full authority.[25] Don't let anyone look down[26] on you.

Conduct Toward Those Outside the Church

3:1 Remind them to be subject to rulers and[27] authorities, to be obedient, to be ready for every good work. 3:2 They must not slander[28] anyone, but be peaceable, gentle, showing complete

1 tn Grk "say what is fitting for sound teaching" (introducing the behavior called for in this chapter.).

2 tn Or "sensible."

3 sn Temperate…in endurance. See the same cluster of virtues in 1 Thess 1:3 and 1 Cor 13:13.

4 tn Grk "that they may train" (continuing the sentence of 2:3).

5 tn This verb, σωφρονίζω (sōphronizō), denotes teaching in the sense of bringing people to their senses, showing what sound thinking is.

6 tn Or "sensible."

7 tn Grk "domestic," "keeping house."

8 tn Or "word."

9 tn Or "slandered."

10 tn Or "sensible."

11 tn Or "put to shame."

12 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 1:1.

13 tn Or "to be subject to their own masters, to do what is wanted in everything."

14 tn Or "showing that genuine faith is productive." At issue between these two translations is the force of ἀγαθήν (agathēn): Is it attributive (as the text has it) or predicate (as in this note)? A number of considerations point in the direction of a predicate ἀγαθήν (e.g., separation from the noun πίστιν (pistin) by the verb, the possibility that the construction is an object-complement, etc.), though is not usually seen as an option in either translations or commentaries. Cf. ExSyn 188-89, 312-13, for a discussion. Contextually, it makes an intriguing statement, for it suggests a synthetic or synonymous parallel: "'Slaves should be wholly subject to their masters…demonstrating that all [genuine] faith is productive, with the result [ecbatic ἵνα] that they will completely adorn the doctrine of God.' The point of the text, then, if this understanding is correct, is an exhortation to slaves to demonstrate that their faith is sincere and results in holy behavior. If taken this way, the text seems to support the idea that saving faith does not fail, but even results in good works" (ExSyn 312-13). The translation of ἀγαθήν as an attributive adjective, however, also makes good sense.

15 tn Or "adorn," "show the beauty of."

16 tn Grk "all men"; but ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is generic here, referring to both men and women.

17 tn Grk "training us" (as a continuation of the previous clause). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started at the beginning of v. 12 by translating the participle παιδεύουσα (paideuousa) as a finite verb and supplying the pronoun "it" as subject.

18 tn Grk "ungodliness."

19 tn Grk "the blessed hope and glorious appearing."

20 tn The terms "God and Savior" both refer to the same person, Jesus Christ. This is one of the clearest statements in the NT concerning the deity of Christ. The construction in Greek is known as the Granville Sharp rule, named after the English philanthropist-linguist who first clearly articulated the rule in 1798. Sharp pointed out that in the construction article-noun-καί-noun (where καί [kai] = "and"), when two nouns are singular, personal, and common (i.e., not proper names), they always had the same referent. Illustrations such as "the friend and brother," "the God and Father," etc. abound in the NT to prove Sharp's point. The only issue is whether terms such as "God" and "Savior" could be considered common nouns as opposed to proper names. Sharp and others who followed (such as T. F. Middleton in his masterful The Doctrine of the Greek Article) demonstrated that a proper name in Greek was one that could not be pluralized. Since both "God" (θεός, theos) and "savior" (σωτήρ, sōtēr) were occasionally found in the plural, they did not constitute proper names, and hence, do fit Sharp's rule. Although there have been 200 years of attempts to dislodge Sharp's rule, all attempts have been futile. Sharp's rule stands vindicated after all the dust has settled. For more information on Sharp's rule see ExSyn 270-78, esp. 276. See also 2 Pet 1:1 and Jude 4.

21 tn Grk "who" (as a continuation of the previous clause).

22 tn Or "a people who are his very own."

23 tn Grk "for good works."

24 tn Or "reproof," "censure." The Greek word ἐλέγχω (elenchō) implies exposing someone's sin in order to bring correction.

25 tn Grk "speak these things and exhort and rebuke with all authority."

26 tn Or "let anyone despise you"; or "let anyone disregard you."

27 tc Most later witnesses (D^2 0278 𝔐 lat sy) have καί (kai, "and") after ἀρχαῖς (archais, "rulers"), though the earliest and best witnesses (ℵ A C D* F G Ψ 33 104 1739 1881) lack the conjunction. Although the καί is most likely not authentic, it has been added in translation due to the requirements of English style. For more discussion, see TCGNT 586.

28 tn Or "discredit," "damage the reputation of."

courtesy to all people. 3:3 For we too were once foolish, disobedient, misled, enslaved to various passions and desires, spending our lives in evil and envy, hateful and hating one another. 3:4[1] But "when the kindness of God our Savior and his love for mankind appeared, 3:5 he saved us not by works of righteousness that we have done but on the basis of his mercy, through the washing of the new birth and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, 3:6 whom he poured out on us in full measure[2] through Jesus Christ our Savior. 3:7 And so,[3] since we have been justified by his grace, we become heirs with the confident expectation of eternal life."[4]

Summary of the Letter

3:8 This saying[5] is trustworthy, and I want you to insist on such truths,[6] so that those who have placed their faith in God may be intent on engaging in good works. These things are good and beneficial for all people. 3:9 But avoid foolish controversies, genealogies,[7] quarrels, and fights about the law,[8] because they are useless and empty. 3:10 Reject a divisive person after one or two warnings. 3:11 You know[9] that such a person is twisted by sin[10] and is conscious of it himself.[11]

Final Instructions and Greeting

3:12 When I send Artemas or Tychicus to you, do your best to come to me at Nicopolis, for I have decided to spend the winter there. 3:13 Make every effort to help[12] Zenas the lawyer[13] and Apollos on their way; make sure they have what they need.[14] 3:14 Here is another way that our people[15] can learn[16] to engage in good works to meet pressing needs and so not be unfruitful. 3:15 Everyone with me greets you. Greet those who love us in the faith.[17] Grace be with you all.[18]

---

1 tn Verses 4-7 are set as poetry in NA[26]/NA[27]. These verses probably constitute the referent of the expression "this saying" in v. 8.

2 tn Or "on us richly."

3 tn This is the conclusion of a single, skillfully composed sentence in Greek encompassing Titus 3:4-7. Showing the goal of God's merciful salvation, v. 7 begins literally, "in order that, being justified…we might become heirs…"

4 tn Grk "heirs according to the hope of eternal life."

5 sn This saying (Grk "the saying") refers to the preceding citation (Titus 3:4-7). See 1 Tim 1:15; 3:1; 4:9; 2 Tim 2:11 for other occurrences of this phrase.

6 tn Grk "concerning these things."

7 tn Cf. 1 Tim 1:4.

8 sn Fights about the law were characteristic of the false teachers in Ephesus as well as in Crete (cf. 1 Tim 1:3-7; Titus 1:10, 14).

9 tn Grk "knowing" (as a continuation of the previous clause).

10 tn Grk "is perverted and is sinning."

11 tn Grk "is sinning, being self-condemned."

12 tn Grk "Eagerly help."

13 tn Although it is possible the term νομικός (nomikos) indicates an expert in Jewish religious law here, according to L&N 33.338 and 56.37 it is more probable that Zenas was a specialist in civil law.

14 tn Grk "that nothing may be lacking for them."

15 tn Grk "that those who are ours" (referring to the Christians).

16 tn Grk "and also let our people learn."

17 tn Or "faithfully."

18 tc Most witnesses (𝔓[2] D[1] F G H Ψ 0278 𝔐 lat sy bo) conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, early and excellent witnesses (𝔓* A C D* 048 33 81 1739 1881 sa) lack the particle, rendering the omission the preferred reading.

Philemon

Salutation

1:1 From Paul,[1] a prisoner of Christ Jesus,[2] and Timothy our[3] brother, to Philemon, our dear friend[4] and colaborer, 1:2 to Apphia[5] our sister,[6] to Archippus our[7] fellow soldier, and to the church that meets in your house. 1:3 Grace and peace to you[8] from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ!

Thanks for Philemon's Love and Faith

1:4 I always thank my God[9] as I remember you in my prayers,[10] 1:5 because I hear[11] of your faith in the Lord Jesus and your love[12] for all the saints.[13]

1:6 I pray[14] that the faith you share with us may deepen your understanding of every blessing[15] that belongs to you[16] in Christ.[17]

---

1 tn Grk "Paul." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 sn The phrase a prisoner of Christ Jesus implies that Paul was being held prisoner because of his testimony for Christ Jesus. Paul's imprisonment was due to his service to Christ, in the same manner as John was exiled to the Isle of Patmos because of his testimony (Rev 1:9).

3 tn "our" is not present in the Greek text, but was supplied to bring out the sense in English.

4 tn Grk "dear." The adjective is functioning as a substantive; i.e., "dear one" or "dear friend."

5 sn Apphia is thought to be the wife of Philemon.

6 tc Most witnesses (D^{2} Ψ 𝔐) here read τῇ ἀγαπητῇ (tē agapētē, "beloved, dear"), a reading that appears to have been motivated by the masculine form of the same adjective in v. 1. Further, the earliest and best witnesses, along with a few others (א A D* F G I P 048 0278 33 81 104 1739 1881 pc), have ἀδελφῇ (adelphē, "sister"). Thus on internal and external grounds, ἀδελφῇ is the strongly preferred reading.

7 tn Though the term "our" does not appear in the Greek text it is inserted to bring out the sense of the passage.

8 tn Grk "Grace to you and peace."

9 sn I always thank my God. An offer of thanksgiving (εὐχαριστῶ, eucharistō) to God is a customary formula for Paul in many of his epistles (cf. Rom 1:8, 1 Cor 1:4, Eph 1:16, Col 1:3, 1 Thess 1:2, 2 Thess 1:3). The content of the thanksgiving typically points to the work of God in the salvation of the believers to whom he [Paul] writes.

10 tn Grk "making remembrance (or "mention") of you in my prayers."

11 tn The Greek present participle ἀκούων (akouōn, "hearing") is an adverbial participle of cause relating to εὐχαριστῶ (eucharistō, "I give thanks").

12 sn Your faith in the Lord Jesus and your love for all the saints. In accord with Paul, John also advocates this combination of "faith in Christ and love for the saints." The believers' invisible faith becomes visible in the demonstration of love for others. This, of course, is not only desired, but commanded (1 John 3:23). Although Paul's comment here may appear as a stock expression to the casual reader, praising Philemon for his track record of faithfulness to Christ demonstrated in love for the saints is actually integral to the author's argument in this short but pithy letter. Paul will soon ask Philemon to demonstrate this love toward Onesimus, his runaway slave.

13 tn The Greek is somewhat awkward here. It appears as though the text reads "...the love and faith which you have for the Lord Jesus and for all the saints." In other Pauline letters the emphasis seems to be "faith in Christ Jesus and love for all of the saints." Some ancient MSS have altered the wording to produce a smoother reading; scribes changed the wording to resemble the more readable versions in Eph 1:15 and Col 1:4, "your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which you have to all the saints."

14 tn The term ὅπως (hopōs) refers back to the idea of prayer (μνείαν σου ποιούμενος ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου, mneian sou poioumenos epi tōn proseuchōn mou) in 1:4. See BDAG 718 s.v. 2.b; P. T. O'Brien, Colossians, Philemon (WBC), 279. The indicative "I pray that" was supplied in the English in order to make this connection clear.

15 tn Grk "everything good."

16 tc ‡ ὑμῖν (humin, "you") is found in many valuable witnesses (𝔓^{61} א F G P 0278 33 1739 1881 al sy co). The witnesses for ἡμῖν (hēmin, "us") are not as strong (A C D Ψ 048^{vid} 𝔐), but nevertheless represent a broad base. Internally, ἡμῖν could be favored because of second person pronouns surrounding it, making it the harder reading. On the other hand, the last second person plural pronoun was in v. 3, and the next one will not show up until v. 22, a fact which tends to counter the internal argument on behalf of ἡμῖν. Although a decision is difficult, with the internal evidence being capable of favoring either reading, our preference is based on the external evidence; ὑμῖν is thus slightly preferred.

17 tn Grk "that the fellowship of your faith might become effective in the knowledge of everything good that is in us in Christ." There are numerous difficulties with the translation and interpretation of this verse: (1) What is the meaning of ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεως σου (hē koinōnia tēs pisteōs sou, "the fellowship of your faith")? Several suggestions are noted: (a) taking κοινωνία as a reference to "monetary support" and τῆς πίστεως as a genitive of source, the phrase could refer to Philemon's financial giving which he has done according to his faith; (b) taking κοινωνία as a reference to "sharing" or "communicating" and the genitive τῆς πίστεως as an objective genitive, then the meaning would be "sharing the faith" as a reference to evangelistic activity; (c) taking κοινωνία in a distributive sense referring to fellowship with other believers, and τῆς πίστεως as a reference to the common trust all Christians have in Jesus, then the meaning is Christian fellowship centered on faith in Jesus; (d) taking κοινωνία as a reference to "participation" and the genitive τῆς πίστεως as a reference to the thing participated in, the meaning would then be Philemon's "participation in the faith"; (2) what is the meaning of ἐνεργής (energēs; Does it mean "active" or "effective"?) and ἐπιγνώσει (epignōsei; Does it refer to simply understanding? Or "experiencing" as well?); (3) what is the meaning of the phrase παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ (pantos agathou)? and (4) what is the force of εἰς Χριστόν (eis Christon)? It is difficult to arrive at an interpretation that deals adequately with all these questions, but given the fact that Paul stresses what Philemon has done for the brothers (cf. the γάρ [gar] in v. 7), it seems that his concern in v. 6 is on Philemon's fellowship with other believers and how he has worked hard to refresh them. In this interpretation: (1) the phrase ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεως σου is taken to refer to fellowship with other believers; (2) ἐνεργής is taken to mean "effective" (i.e., more effective) and ἐπιγνώσει involves both understanding and experience; (3) the phrase παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ refers to every spiritual blessing and (4) εἰς Χριστόν carries a locative idea meaning "in Christ." The result is that Paul prays for Philemon that he will be equipped to encourage and love the saints more as he himself is brought to a place of deeper understanding of every spiritual blessing he has in Christ; out of the overflow of his own life, he will minister to others.

1:7 I[1] have had great joy and encouragement because[2] of your love, for the hearts[3] of the saints have been refreshed through you, brother.

Paul's Request for Onesimus

1:8 So, although I have quite a lot of confidence in Christ and could command you to do what is proper, 1:9 I would rather appeal[4] to you on the basis of love – I, Paul, an old man[5] and even now a prisoner for the sake of Christ Jesus[6] – 1:10 I am appealing[7] to you concerning my child, whose spiritual father I have become[8] during my imprisonment,[9] that is, Onesimus, 1:11 who was formerly useless to you, but is now useful to you[10] and me. 1:12 I have sent[11] him (who is my very heart)[12] back to you. 1:13 I wanted to keep him so that he could serve me in your place[13] during[14] my imprisonment for the sake of the gospel.[15] 1:14 However,[16] without your consent I did not want to do anything, so that your good deed would not be out of compulsion, but from your own willingness. 1:15 For perhaps it was for this reason that he was separated from you for a little while, so that you would have him back eternally,[17] 1:16 no longer as a slave,[18] but more than a slave, as a dear brother. He is especially so to me, and even more so to you now, both humanly speaking[19] and in the Lord. 1:17 Therefore if you regard me as a partner, accept him as you would me. 1:18 Now if he has defrauded you of anything or

---

1 tn Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and contemporary English style.

2 tn The Greek preposition ἐπί (epi) is understood here in a causal sense, i.e., "because."

3 tn The word translated "hearts" here is σπλάγχνα (splanchna). Literally the term refers to one's "inward parts," but it is commonly used figuratively for "heart" as the seat of the emotions. See BDAG 938 s.v. σπλάγχνον 2 (cf. Col 3:12, Phil 2:1).

4 tn Or "encourage."

5 tn Or perhaps "an ambassador" (so RSV, TEV), reading πρεσβευτής for πρεσβύτης (a conjecture proposed by Bentley, cf. BDAG 863 s.v. πρεσβύτης). NRSV reads "old man" and places "ambassador" in a note.

6 tn Grk "a prisoner of Christ Jesus."

7 tn Or "I am encouraging..."

8 tn Grk "my child whom I have begotten." The adjective "spiritual" has been supplied before "father" in the translation to clarify for the modern reader that Paul did not literally father a child during his imprisonment. Paul's point is that he was instrumental in Onesimus' conversion while in prison.

9 sn During my imprisonment. Apparently Onesimus became a believer under Paul's shepherding while he [Paul] was a prisoner in Rome.

10 tc ‡ A correlative καί (kai, "both you") is found in a few witnesses (𝔓[46] ℵ*.c F G 33 104 pc), perhaps either to underscore the value of Onesimus or in imitation of the νυνὶ δὲ καί (nuni de kai) in v. 9. The lack of καί is read by most witnesses, including ℵ[2] A C D 0278 1739 1881 𝔐 it. Although a decision is difficult, the shorter reading has a slight edge in both internal and external evidence. NA[27] places the καί in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

11 tc There are several variants at this point in the text, most of them involving the addition of προσλαβοῦ (proslabou, "receive, accept") at various locations in the verse. But all such variants seem to be motivated by the harsh syntax of the verse without this verb. Without the verb, the meaning is that Onesimus is Paul's "very heart," though this is an awkward expression especially because of τουτ' ἔστιν (tout' estin, "this is, who is") in the middle cluttering the construction. Nowhere else in the NT is σπλάγχνα (splanchna, here translated "heart") used in apposition to people. It is thus natural that scribes would want to fill out the text here, and they did so apparently with a verb that was ready at hand (borrowed from v. 17). With the verb the sentence is converted into an object-complement construction: "I have sent him back to you; accept him, that is, as my very heart." But both the fact that some important witnesses (ℵ* A F G 33 pc) lack the verb, and that its location floats in the various constructions that have it, suggest that the original text did not have προσλαβοῦ.

tn Grk "whom I have sent." The Greek sentence was broken up in the English translation for the sake of clarity. Although the tense of the Greek verb here is past (an aorist tense) the reader should understand that Onesimus may well have been standing in the very presence of Paul as he wrote this letter.

12 tn That is, "who means a great deal to me"; Grk "whom I have sent to you, him, this one is my heart."

13 tn This is one of the clearest texts in the NT in which ὑπέρ is used for substitution. Cf. ExSyn 387.

14 tn Grk "in my imprisonment." Paul seems to expect release from his imprisonment after some time (cf. v. 22), but in the meantime the assistance that Onesimus could provide would be valuable to the apostle.

15 tn Grk "in the chains of the gospel." On the translation "imprisonment for the sake of the gospel," cf. BDAG 219 s.v. δεσμός 1.a where it says: "Oft. simply in ref. to the locale where bonds or fetters are worn imprisonment, prison (Diod. S. 14, 103, 3; Lucian, Tox. 29; Jos., Ant. 13, 294; 302, Vi. 241; Just., A I, 67, 6 al.) Phil 1:7, 13f, 17; Col 4:18; Phlm 10. μέχρι δεσμῶν 2 Ti 2:9. ἐν τοῖς δ. τοῦ εὐαγγελίου in imprisonment for the gospel Phlm 13; cf. ISm 11:1; Pol 1:1."

16 tn Though the Greek text does not read the term "however," it is clearly implied and thus supplied in the English translation to accent the contrastive nature of Paul's statement.

17 sn So that you would have him back eternally. The notion here is not that Onesimus was to be the slave of Philemon eternally, but that their new relationship as brothers in Christ would transcend the societal structures of this age. The occasion of Onesimus' flight to Rome would ultimately be a catalyst in the formation of a new and stronger bond between these two men.

18 tn Although the Greek word δοῦλος (doulos) is sometimes translated "servant" here (so KJV), the word "slave" is a much more candid and realistic picture of the relationship between Philemon and Onesimus. In the Greco-Roman world of the 1st century the slave was considered a "living tool" of the master. The slave was "property" in every sense of the word. This understanding heightens the tense scenario that is in view here. It is likely that Onesimus may have even feared for his life upon returning to Colossae. Undoubtedly Paul has asked this runaway slave to return to what could amount to a potentially severe and life-endangering situation.

owes you anything, charge what he owes[1] to me. 1:19 I, Paul, have written[2] this letter[3] with my own hand:[4] I will repay it. I could also mention that you owe[5] me your very self. 1:20 Yes, brother, let me have some benefit from you in the Lord. Refresh my heart in Christ.[6] 1:21 Since I was confident that you would obey, I wrote to you, because I knew that you would do even more than[7] what I am asking you to do. 1:22 At the same time also, prepare a place for me to stay, for I hope that through your prayers I will be given back to you.

Concluding Greetings

1:23 Epaphras,[8] my fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus, greets you. 1:24 Mark, Aristarchus,[9] Demas[10] and Luke, my colaborers, greet you too. 1:25 May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be[11] with your spirit.[12]

[1] tn Grk "charge it to me."

[2] tn Grk "I wrote" Here ἔγραψα (egrapsa) is functioning as an epistolary aorist. Paul puts it in the past tense because from Philemon's perspective when he reads the letter it will, of course, already have been written.

[3] tn The phrase "this letter" does not appear in the Greek text, but is supplied in the English translation to clarify the meaning.

[4] sn With my own hand. Paul may have considered this letter so delicate that he wrote the letter himself as opposed to using an amanuensis or secretary.

[5] sn The statement you owe me your very self means that Paul was responsible for some sort of blessing in the life of Philemon; though a monetary idea may be in mind, it is perhaps better to understand Paul as referring to the spiritual truth (i.e., the gospel) he had taught Philemon.

[6] sn Refresh my heart in Christ. Paul desired that Philemon refresh his heart in the same way that he [Philemon] had refreshed the hearts of other believers (cf. Phlm 7), that is, by forgiving and accepting Onesimus. In this way the presence and character of Jesus Christ would be vividly seen in Philemon's attitude toward his runaway slave.

[7] tn Grk "that you would even go beyond."

[8] sn Epaphras is probably a shortened form of the name Epaphroditus. This is probably the same individual whom Paul spoke of as "my brother, coworker, and fellow soldier" in Phil 2:25 (see also Phil 4:18). He is also mentioned in Col 1:7 and 4:12, where he is a founder of the church in Colossae (BDAG 360 s.v. Ἐπαφρᾶς).

[9] sn Aristarchus accompanied Paul on his collection-journey when Paul left for Rome in Acts 27:2. He is also mentioned as a fellow prisoner in Col 4:10.

[10] sn Demas is most likely the same individual mentioned by the Apostle Paul in 2 Tim 4:10. Apparently, he later on abandoned the faith because of his love of the world.

[11] tn Grk "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ with your spirit." The elided verb, normally an optative, has been rendered as "be."

[12] tc Most witnesses, including several excellent ones (א C D^{1} Ψ 0278 𝔐 lat sy), conclude this letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, several good witnesses ($\mathfrak{P}^{87}$ A D* 048^{vid} 6 33 81 1739* 1881 sa) lack the ἀμήν, rendering the omission the preferred reading.

Hebrews

Introduction: God Has Spoken Fully and Finally in His Son

1:1 After God spoke long ago[1] in various portions[2] and in various ways[3] to our ancestors[4] through the prophets, 1:2 in these last days he has spoken to us in a son,[5] whom he appointed heir of all things, and through whom he created the world.[6] 1:3 The Son is[7] the radiance of his glory and the representation of his essence, and he sustains all things by his powerful word,[8] and so when he had accomplished cleansing for sins, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high.[9] 1:4 Thus he became[10] so far better than the angels as[11] he has inherited a name superior to theirs.

The Son Is Superior to Angels

1:5 For to which of the angels did God[12] ever say, "You are my son! Today I have fathered you"?[13] And in another place[14] he says,[15] "I will be his father and he will be my son."[16] 1:6 But when he again brings[17] his firstborn into the world, he says, "Let all the angels of God worship him!"[18] 1:7 And he says[19] of the angels, "He makes[20] his angels spirits and his ministers a flame of fire,"[21] 1:8 but of[22] the Son he says,[23]

"Your throne, O God, is forever and ever,[24]

[1] tn Or "spoke formerly."

[2] tn Or "parts." The idea is that God's previous revelation came in many parts and was therefore fragmentary or partial (L&N 63.19), in comparison with the final and complete revelation contained in God's Son. However, some interpret πολυμερῶς (polumerōs) in Heb 1:1 to mean "on many different occasions" and would thus translate "many times" (L&N 67.11). This is the option followed by the NIV: "at many times and in various ways." Finally, this word is also understood to refer to the different manners in which something may be done, and would then be translated "in many different ways" (L&N 89.81). In this last case, the two words πολυμερῶς and πολυτρόπως (polutropōs) mutually reinforce one another ("in many and various ways," NRSV).

[3] tn These two phrases are emphasized in Greek by being placed at the beginning of the sentence and by alliteration.

[4] tn Grk "to the fathers."

[5] tn The Greek puts an emphasis on the quality of God's final revelation. As such, it is more than an indefinite notion ("a son") though less than a definite one ("the son"), for this final revelation is not just through any son of God, nor is the emphasis specifically on the person himself. Rather, the focus here is on the nature of the vehicle of God's revelation: He is no mere spokesman (or prophet) for God, nor is he merely a heavenly messenger (or angel); instead, this final revelation comes through one who is intimately acquainted with the heavenly Father in a way that only a family member could be. There is, however, no exact equivalent in English ("in son" is hardly good English style).

sn The phrase in a son is the fulcrum of Heb 1:1-4. It concludes the contrast of God's old and new revelation and introduces a series of seven descriptions of the Son. These descriptions show why he is the ultimate revelation of God.

[6] tn Grk "the ages." The temporal (ages) came to be used of the spatial (what exists in those time periods). See Heb 11:3 for the same usage.

[7] tn Grk "who being…and sustaining." Heb 1:1-4 form one skillfully composed sentence in Greek, but it must be broken into shorter segments to correspond to contemporary English usage, which does not allow for sentences of this length and complexity.

[8] tn Grk "by the word of his power."

[9] sn An allusion to Ps 110:1, quoted often in Hebrews.

[10] tn Grk "having become." This is part of the same sentence that extends from v. 1 through v. 4 in the Greek text.

[11] tn Most modern English translations attempt to make the comparison somewhat smoother by treating "name" as if it were the subject of the second element: "as the name he has inherited is superior to theirs" (cf. NAB, NIV, NRSV, CEV). However, the Son is the subject of both the first and second elements: "he became so far better"; "he has inherited a name." The present translation maintains this parallelism even though it results in a somewhat more awkward rendering.

sn This comparison is somewhat awkward to express in English, but it reflects an important element in the argument of Hebrews: the superiority of Jesus Christ.

[12] tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tn Grk "I have begotten you."

sn A quotation from Ps 2:7.

[14] tn Grk "And again," quoting another OT passage.

[15] tn The words "he says" are not in the Greek text but are supplied to make a complete English sentence. In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence, but English does not normally employ such long and complex sentences.

[16] tn Grk "I will be a father to him and he will be a son to me."

sn A quotation from 2 Sam 7:14 (cf. 1 Chr 17:13).

[17] tn Or "And again when he brings." The translation adopted in the text looks forward to Christ's second coming to earth. Some take "again" to introduce the quotation (as in 1:5) and understand this as Christ's first coming, but this view does not fit well with Heb 2:7. Others understand it as his exaltation/ascension to heaven, but this takes the phrase "into the world" in an unlikely way.

[18] sn A quotation combining themes from Deut 32:43 and Ps 97:7.

[19] sn The Greek correlative conjunctions μέν and δέ (men and de) emphasize the contrastive parallelism of vs. 7 (what God says about the angels) over against vv. 8-9 and vv. 10-12 (what God says about the son).

[20] tn Grk "He who makes."

[21] sn A quotation from Ps 104:4.

[22] tn Or "to."

[23] tn The verb "he says" (λέγει, legei) is implied from the λέγει of v. 7.

[24] tn Or possibly, "Your throne is God forever and ever." This translation is quite doubtful, however, since (1) in the context the Son is being contrasted to the angels and is presented as far better than they. The imagery of God being the Son's throne would seem to be of God being his authority. If so, in what sense could this not be said of the angels? In what sense is the Son thus contrasted with the angels? (2) The μέν…δέ (men…de) construction that connects v. 7 with v. 8 clearly lays out this contrast: "On the one hand, he says of the angels…on the other hand, he says of the Son." Thus, although it is grammatically possible that θεός (theos) in v. 8 should be taken as a predicate nominative, the context and the correlative conjunctions are decidedly against it. Hebrews and a righteous scepter[1] is the scepter of your kingdom.

1:9 You have loved righteousness and hated lawlessness.
So God, your God, has anointed you over your companions[2] with the oil of rejoicing."[3]

1:10 And,

"You founded the earth in the beginning, Lord,[4]
and the heavens are the works of your hands.
1:11 They will perish, but you continue.
And they will all grow old like a garment,
1:12 and like a robe you will fold them up and like a garment[5] they will be changed, but you are the same and your years will never run out."[6]

1:13 But to which of the angels[7] has he ever said, "Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet"?[8] 1:14 Are they not all ministering spirits, sent out to serve those[9] who will inherit salvation?

Warning Against Drifting Away

2:1 Therefore we must pay closer attention to what we have heard, so that we do not drift away. 2:2 For if the message spoken through angels[10] proved to be so firm that every violation[11] or disobedience received its just penalty, 2:3 how will we escape if we neglect such a great salvation? It was first communicated through the Lord and was confirmed to us by those who heard him, 2:4 while God confirmed their witness[12] with signs and wonders and various miracles and gifts of the Holy Spirit distributed[13] according to his will.

Exposition of Psalm 8: Jesus and the Destiny of Humanity

2:5 For he did not put the world to come,[14] about which we are speaking,[15] under the control of angels. 2:6 Instead someone testified somewhere:

"What is man that you think of him[16] or the son of man that you care for him?
2:7 You made him lower than the angels for a little while.
You crowned him with glory and honor.[17]
2:8 You put all things under his control."[18]

For when he put all things under his control, he left nothing outside of his control. At present we do not yet see all things under his control,[19] 2:9 but we see Jesus, who was made lower than the angels for a little while,[20] now crowned with glory and honor because he suffered death,[21] so that by God's grace he would experience[22] death on behalf of everyone. 2:10 For it was fitting for him, for whom and through whom all things exist,[23] in bringing many sons to 1:8 is thus a strong affirmation of the deity of Christ.

1 tn Grk "the righteous scepter," but used generically.

2 sn God...has anointed you over your companions. God's anointing gives the son a superior position and authority over his fellows.

3 sn A quotation from Ps 45:6-7.

4 sn You founded the earth...your years will never run out. In its original setting Ps 102:25-27 refers to the work of God in creation, but here in Hebrews 1:10-12 the writer employs it in reference to Christ, the Lord, making a strong argument for the essential deity of the Son.

5 tc The words "like a garment" (ὡς ἱμάτιον, hōs himation) are found in excellent and early MSS (𝔓46 ℵ A B D* 1739) though absent in a majority of witnesses (D1 Ψ 0243 0278 33 1881 𝔐 lat sy bo). Although it is possible that longer reading was produced by overzealous scribes who wanted to underscore the frailty of creation, it is much more likely that the shorter reading was produced by scribes who wanted to conform the wording to that of Ps 102:26 (101:27 LXX), which here lacks the second "like a garment." Both external and internal considerations decidedly favor the longer reading, and point to the author of Hebrews as the one underscoring the difference between the Son and creation.

sn The phrase like a garment here is not part of the original OT text (see tc note above); for this reason it has been printed in normal type.

6 sn A quotation from Ps 102:25-27.

7 sn The parallel phrases to which of the angels in vv. 5 and 13 show the unity of this series of quotations (vv. 5-14) in revealing the superiority of the Son over angels (v. 4).

8 sn A quotation from Ps 110:1.

9 tn Grk "sent for service for the sake of those."

10 sn The message spoken through angels refers to the OT law, which according to Jewish tradition was mediated to Moses through angels (cf. Deut 33:2; Ps 68:17-18; Acts 7:38, 53; Gal 3:19; and Jub. 1:27, 29; Josephus, Ant. 15.5.3 [15.136]).

11 tn Grk "through angels became valid and every violation."

12 tn Grk "God bearing witness together" (the phrase "with them" is implied).

13 tn Grk "and distributions of the Holy Spirit."

14 sn The phrase the world to come means "the coming inhabited earth," using the Greek term which describes the world of people and their civilizations.

15 sn See the previous reference to the world in Heb 1:6.

16 tn Grk "remember him."

17 tc Several witnesses, many of them early and important (ℵ A C D* P Ψ 0243 0278 33 1739 1881 al lat co), have at the end of v 7, "You have given him dominion over the works of your hands." Other MSS, not quite as impressive in weight, lack the words (𝔓46 B D2 𝔐). In spite of the impressive external evidence for the longer reading, it is most likely a scribal addition to conform the text of Hebrews to Ps 8:6 (8:7 LXX). Conformity of a NT quotation of the OT to the LXX was a routine scribal activity, and can hardly be in doubt here as to the cause of the longer reading.

18 tn Grk "you subjected all things under his feet."

sn A quotation from Ps 8:4-6.

19 sn The expression all things under his control occurs three times in 2:8. The latter two occurrences are not exactly identical to the Greek text of Ps 8:6 quoted at the beginning of the verse, but have been adapted by the writer of Hebrews to fit his argument.

20 tn Or "who was made a little lower than the angels."

21 tn Grk "because of the suffering of death."

22 tn Grk "would taste." Here the Greek verb does not mean "sample a small amount" (as a typical English reader might infer from the word "taste"), but "experience something cognitively or emotionally; come to know something" (cf. BDAG 195 s.v. γεύομαι 2).

23 tn Grk "for whom are all things and through whom are all things."

glory, to make the pioneer[1] of their salvation perfect through sufferings. 2:11 For indeed he who makes holy and those being made holy all have the same origin,[2] and so[3] he is not ashamed to call them brothers and sisters,[4] 2:12 saying, "I will proclaim your name to my brothers;[5] in the midst of the assembly I will praise you."[6] 2:13 Again he says,[7] "I will be confident in him," and again, "Here I am,[8] with[9] the children God has given me."[10] 2:14 Therefore, since the children share in flesh and blood, he likewise shared in[11] their humanity,[12] so that through death he could destroy[13] the one who holds the power of death (that is, the devil), 2:15 and set free those who were held in slavery all their lives by their fear of death. 2:16 For surely his concern is not for angels, but he is concerned for Abraham's descendants. 2:17 Therefore he had[14] to be made like his brothers and sisters[15] in every respect, so that he could become a merciful and faithful high priest in things relating to God, to make atonement[16] for the sins of the people. 2:18 For since he himself suffered when he was tempted, he is able to help those who are tempted.

Jesus and Moses

3:1 Therefore, holy brothers and sisters,[17] partners in a heavenly calling, take note of Jesus, the apostle and high priest whom we confess,[18] 3:2 who is faithful to the one who appointed him, as Moses was also in God's[19] house.[20] 3:3 For he has come to deserve greater glory than Moses, just as the builder of a house deserves greater honor than the house itself! 3:4 For every house is built by someone, but the builder of all things is God. 3:5 Now Moses was faithful in all God's[21] house[22] as a servant, to testify to the things that would be spoken. 3:6 But Christ[23] is faithful as a son over God's[24] house. We are of his house,[25] if in fact we hold firmly[26] to our confidence and the hope we take pride in.[27]

Exposition of Psalm 95: Hearing God's Word in Faith

3:7 Therefore, as the Holy Spirit says,[28]

"Oh, that today you would listen as he speaks![29]

3:8 "Do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion, in the day of testing in the wilderness.

3:9 "There your fathers tested me and tried me,[30] and they saw my works for forty years.

3:10 "Therefore, I became provoked at that generation and said, 'Their hearts are always wandering[31] and they have not known my ways.'

---

[1] sn The Greek word translated pioneer is used of a "prince" or leader, the representative head of a family. It also carries nuances of "trailblazer," one who breaks through to new ground for those who follow him. It is used some thirty-five times in the Greek OT and four times in the NT, always of Christ (Acts 3:15; 5:31; Heb 2:10; 12:2).

[2] tn Grk "are all from one."

[3] tn Grk "for which reason."

[4] tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited). The context here also indicates both men and women are in view; note especially the collective τὰ παιδία (ta paidia) in v. 14.

[5] tn Here, because of its occurrence in an OT quotation, τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς (tois adelphois) has been translated simply as "brothers" rather than "brothers and sisters" (see the note on the latter phrase in the previous verse).

[6] sn A quotation from Ps 22:22.

[7] tn Grk "and again," as a continuation of the preceding.

[8] tn Grk "behold, I," but this construction often means "here is/there is" (cf. BDAG 468 s.v. ἰδού 2).

[9] tn Grk "and."

[10] sn A quotation from Isa 8:17-18.

[11] tn Or "partook of" (this is a different word than the one in v. 14a).

[12] tn Grk "the same."

[13] tn Or "break the power of," "reduce to nothing."

[14] tn Or "he was obligated."

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 2:11.

[16] tn Or "propitiation."

[17] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 2:11.

[18] tn Grk "of our confession."

[19] tn Grk "his"; in the translation the referent (God) has been specified for clarity.

[20] tc ‡ The reading adopted by the translation follows a few early MSS and some versions (𝔓13.46vid B vgms co Ambr). The majority of MSS (א A C D Ψ 0243 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy) insert "all" ("in all his house"), apparently in anticipation of Heb 3:5 which quotes directly from Num 12:7. On balance, the omission better explains the rise of ὅλῳ (holō, "all") than vice versa. NA27 puts ὅλῳ in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[21] tn Grk "his"; in the translation the referent (God) has been specified for clarity.

[22] sn A quotation from Num 12:7.

[23] sn The Greek makes the contrast between v. 5 and v. 6a more emphatic and explicit than is easily done in English.

[24] tn Grk "his"; in the translation the referent (God) has been specified for clarity.

[25] tn Grk "whose house we are," continuing the previous sentence.

[26] tc The reading adopted by the translation is found in 𝔓13.46 B sa, while the vast majority of MSS (א A C D Ψ 0243 0278 33 1739 1881 𝔐 latt) add μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν (mechri telous bebaian, "secure until the end"). The external evidence for the omission, though minimal, has excellent credentials. Considering the internal factors, B. M. Metzger (TCGNT 595) finds it surprising that the feminine adjective βεβαίαν should modify the neuter noun καύχημα (kauchēma, here translated "we take pride"), a fact that suggests that even the form of the word was borrowed from another place. Since the same phrase occurs at Heb 3:14, it is likely that later scribes added it here at Heb 3:6 in anticipation of Heb 3:14. While these words belong at 3:14, they seem foreign to 3:6.

[27] tn Grk "the pride of our hope."

[28] sn The following quotation is from Ps 95:7b-11.

[29] tn Grk "today if you hear his voice."

[30] tn Grk "tested me by trial."

[31] tn Grk "they are wandering in the heart."

3:11 "As I swore in my anger, 'They will never enter my rest!'"[1]

3:12 See to it,[2] brothers and sisters,[3] that none of you has[4] an evil, unbelieving heart that forsakes[5] the living God.[6] 3:13 But exhort one another each day, as long as it is called "Today," that none of you may become hardened by sin's deception. 3:14 For we have become partners with Christ, if in fact we hold our initial confidence[7] firm until the end. 3:15 As it says,[8] "Oh, that today you would listen as he speaks![9] Do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion."[10] 3:16 For which ones heard and rebelled? Was it not all who came out of Egypt under Moses' leadership?[11] 3:17 And against whom was God[12] provoked for forty years? Was it not those who sinned, whose dead bodies fell in the wilderness?[13] 3:18 And to whom did he swear they would never enter into his rest, except those who were disobedient? 3:19 So[14] we see that they could not enter because of unbelief.

God's Promised Rest

4:1 Therefore we must be wary[15] that, while the promise of entering his rest remains open, none of you may seem to have come short of it. 4:2 For we had good news proclaimed to us just as they did. But the message they heard did them no good, since they did not join in[16] with those who heard it in faith.[17] 4:3 For we who have believed enter that rest, as he has said, "As I swore in my anger, 'They will never enter my rest!'"[18] And yet God's works[19] were accomplished from the foundation of the world. 4:4 For he has spoken somewhere about the seventh day in this way: "And God rested on the seventh day from all his works,"[20] 4:5 but to repeat the text cited earlier:[21] "They will never enter my rest!" 4:6 Therefore it remains for some to enter it, yet those to whom it was previously proclaimed did not enter because of disobedience. 4:7 So God[22] again ordains a certain day, "Today," speaking through David[23] after so long a time, as in the words quoted before,[24] "O, that today you would listen as he speaks![25] Do not harden your hearts." 4:8 For if Joshua had given them rest, God[26] would not have spoken afterward about another day. 4:9 Consequently a Sabbath rest remains for the people of God. 4:10 For the one who enters God's[27] rest has also rested from his works, just as God did from his own works. 4:11 Thus we must make every effort to enter that rest, so that no one may fall by following the same pattern of disobedience. 4:12 For the word of God is living and active and sharper than any double-edged sword, piercing even to the point of dividing soul from spirit, and joints from marrow; it is able to judge the desires and thoughts of the heart. 4:13 And no creature is hidden from God,[28] but everything is naked and exposed to the eyes of him to whom we must render an account.

Jesus Our Compassionate High Priest

4:14 Therefore since we have a great high priest who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast to our confession. 4:15 For we do not have a high priest incapable of sympathizing with our weaknesses, but one who has been tempted in every way just as we are, yet without sin. 4:16 Therefore let us confidently approach the throne of grace to receive mercy and find grace whenever we need help.[29]

[17] tc A few MSS (ℵ and a few versional witnesses) have the nominative singular participle συγκεκερασμένος (sunkekerasmenos, "since it [the message] was not combined with faith by those who heard it"), a reading that refers back to the ὁ λόγος (ho logos, "the message"). There are a few other variants here (e.g., συγκεκεραμμένοι [sunkekerammenoi] in 104, συγκεκεραμένους [sunkekeramenous] in 1881 𝔐), but the accusative plural participle συγκεκερασμένους (sunkekerasmenous), found in 𝔓13vid,46 A B C D* Ψ 0243 0278 33 81 1739 2464 pc, has by far the best external credentials. This participle agrees with the previous ἐκείνους (ekeinous, "those"), a more difficult construction grammatically than the nominative singular. Thus, both on external and internal grounds, συγκεκερασμένους is preferred.

5:1 For every high priest is taken from among the people[1] and appointed[2] to represent them before God,[3] to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins. 5:2 He is able to deal compassionately with those who are ignorant and erring, since he also is subject to weakness, 5:3 and for this reason he is obligated to make sin offerings for himself as well as for the people. 5:4 And no one assumes this honor[4] on his own initiative,[5] but only when called to it by God,[6] as in fact Aaron was. 5:5 So also Christ did not glorify himself in becoming high priest, but the one who glorified him was God,[7] who said to him, "You are my Son! Today I have fathered you,"[8] 5:6 as also in another place God[9] says, "You are a priest forever in the order of Melchizedek."[10] 5:7 During his earthly life[11] Christ[12] offered[13] both requests and supplications, with loud cries and tears, to the one who was able to save him from death and he was heard because of his devotion. 5:8 Although he was a son, he learned obedience through the things he suffered.[14] 5:9 And by being perfected in this way, he became the source of eternal salvation to all who obey him, 5:10 and he was designated[15] by God as high priest in the order of Melchizedek.[16]

The Need to Move on to Maturity

5:11 On this topic we have much to say[17] and it is difficult to explain, since you have become sluggish[18] in hearing. 5:12 For though you should in fact be teachers by this time,[19] you need someone to teach you the beginning elements of God's utterances.[20] You have gone back to needing[21] milk, not[22] solid food. 5:13 For everyone who lives on milk is inexperienced in the message of righteousness, because he is an infant. 5:14 But solid food is for the mature, whose perceptions are trained by practice to discern both good and evil.

6:1 Therefore we must progress beyond[23] the elementary[24] instructions about Christ[25] and move on[26] to maturity, not laying this foundation again: repentance from dead works and faith in God, 6:2 teaching about baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. 6:3 And this is what we intend to do,[27] if God permits. 6:4 For it is impossible in the case of those who have once been enlightened, tasted the heavenly gift, become partakers of the Holy Spirit, 6:5 tasted the good word of God and the miracles of the coming age, 6:6 and then have committed apostasy,[28] to renew them again to repentance, since[29] they are crucifying the Son of God for themselves all over again[30] and holding him up to contempt. 6:7 For the ground that has soaked up the rain that frequently falls on[31] it and yields useful vegetation for those who tend it receives a blessing from God. 6:8 But if it produces thorns and thistles, it is useless and about to be cursed;[32] its fate is to be burned. 6:9 But in your case, dear friends, even though we speak like this, we are convinced of better things relating to salvation. 6:10 For God is not unjust so as to forget your work and the love you have demonstrated for his name, in having served and continuing to serve the saints. 6:11 But we passionately want each of you to demonstrate the same eagerness for the fulfillment of your hope until the end, 6:12 so that you may not be sluggish,[33] but imitators of those who through faith and perseverance inherit the promises.

As it was a natural tendency for scribes to add a coordinating conjunction, the καί appears to be a motivated reading. On balance, it is probably best to regard the shorter reading as authentic. NA²⁷ has καί in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[23] tn Grk "Therefore leaving behind." The implication is not of abandoning this elementary information, but of building on it.

6:13 Now when God made his promise to Abraham, since he could swear by no one greater, he swore by himself, 6:14 saying, "Surely I will bless you greatly and multiply your descendants abundantly."[1] 6:15 And so by persevering, Abraham[2] inherited the promise. 6:16 For people[3] swear by something greater than themselves,[4] and the oath serves as a confirmation to end all dispute.[5] 6:17 In the same way[6] God wanted to demonstrate more clearly to the heirs of the promise that his purpose was unchangeable,[7] and so he intervened with an oath, 6:18 so that we who have found refuge in him[8] may find strong encouragement to hold fast to the hope set before us through two unchangeable things, since it is impossible for God to lie. 6:19 We have this hope as an anchor for the soul, sure and steadfast, which reaches inside behind the curtain,[9] 6:20 where Jesus our forerunner entered on our behalf, since he became a priest forever in the order of Melchizedek.[10]

The Nature of Melchizedek's Priesthood

7:1 Now this Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, met Abraham as he was returning from defeating the kings and blessed him.[11] 7:2 To him[12] also Abraham apportioned a tithe[13] of everything.[14] His name first means[15] king of righteousness, then king of Salem, that is, king of peace. 7:3 Without father, without mother, without genealogy, he has neither beginning of days nor end of life but is like the son of God, and he remains a priest for all time. 7:4 But see how great he must be, if[16] Abraham the patriarch gave him a tithe[17] of his plunder. 7:5 And those of the sons of Levi who receive the priestly office[18] have authorization according to the law to collect a tithe from the people, that is, from their fellow countrymen,[19] although they too are descendants of Abraham.[20] 7:6 But Melchizedek[21] who does not share their ancestry[22] collected a tithe[23] from Abraham and blessed[24] the one who possessed the promise. 7:7 Now without dispute the inferior is blessed by the superior, 7:8 and in one case tithes are received by mortal men, while in the other by him who is affirmed to be alive. 7:9 And it could be said that Levi himself, who receives tithes, paid a tithe through Abraham. 7:10 For he was still in his ancestor Abraham's loins[25] when Melchizedek met him.

Jesus and the Priesthood of Melchizedek

7:11 So if perfection had in fact been possible through the Levitical priesthood – for on that basis[26] the people received the law – what further need would there have been for another priest to arise, said to be in the order of Melchizedek and not in Aaron's order? 7:12 For when the priesthood changes, a change in the law must come[27] as well. 7:13 Yet the one these things are spoken about belongs to[28] a different tribe, and no one from that tribe[29] has ever officiated at the altar. 7:14 For it is clear that our Lord is descended from Judah, yet Moses said nothing about priests in connection with that tribe. 7:15 And this is even clearer if another priest arises in the likeness of Melchizedek, 7:16 who has become a priest not by a legal regulation about physical descent[30] but by the power of an indestructible life. 7:17 For here is the testimony about him:[31] "You are a priest forever in the order of Melchizedek."[32] 7:18 On the one

[23] tn Or "a tenth part."

[24] sn The verbs "collected...and blessed" emphasize the continuing effect of the past actions, i.e., Melchizedek's importance.

[25] tn Grk "in the loins of his father" (a reference to Abraham). The name "Abraham" has been repeated in the translation at this point (cf. v. 9) in order to clarify the referent (i.e., what ancestor was in view).

sn The point of the phrase still in his ancestor's loins is that Levi was as yet unborn, still in his ancestor Abraham's body. Thus Levi participated in Abraham's action when Abraham paid tithes to Melchizedek.

[26] tn Grk "based on it."

[31] tn Grk "for he/it is witnessed that."

[32] sn A quotation from Ps 110:4 (see Heb 5:6 and 6:20).

hand a former command is set aside[1] because it is weak and useless,[2] 7:19 for the law made nothing perfect. On the other hand a better hope is introduced, through which we draw near to God. 7:20 And since[3] this was not done without a sworn affirmation – for the others have become priests without a sworn affirmation, 7:21 but Jesus[4] did so[5] with a sworn affirmation by the one who said to him, "The Lord has sworn and will not change his mind, 'You are a priest forever'"[6] – 7:22 accordingly Jesus has become the guarantee[7] of a better covenant. 7:23 And the others[8] who became priests were numerous, because death prevented them[9] from continuing in office,[10] 7:24 but he holds his priesthood permanently since he lives forever. 7:25 So he is able to save completely those who come to God through him, because he always lives to intercede for them. 7:26 For it is indeed fitting for us to have such a high priest: holy, innocent, undefiled, separate from sinners, and exalted above the heavens. 7:27 He has no need to do every day what those priests do, to offer sacrifices first for their own sins and then for the sins of the people, since he did this in offering himself once for all. 7:28 For the law appoints as high priests men subject to weakness,[11] but the word of solemn affirmation that came after the law appoints a son made perfect forever.

The High Priest of a Better Covenant

8:1 Now the main point of what we are saying is this:[12] We have such a high priest, one who sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven,[13] 8:2 a minister in the sanctuary and the true tabernacle that the Lord, not man, set up. 8:3 For every high priest is appointed to offer both gifts and sacrifices. So this one too had to have something to offer. 8:4 Now if he were on earth, he would not be a priest, since there are already priests who offer[14] the gifts prescribed by the law. 8:5 The place where they serve is[15] a sketch[16] and shadow of the heavenly sanctuary, just as Moses was warned by God as he was about to complete the tabernacle. For he says, "See that you make everything according to the design[17] shown to you on the mountain."[18] 8:6 But[19] now Jesus[20] has obtained a superior ministry, since[21] the covenant that he mediates is also better and is enacted[22] on better promises.[23]

8:7 For if that first covenant had been faultless, no one would have looked for a second one.[24] 8:8 But[25] showing its fault,[26] God[27] says to them,[28]

[1] tn Grk "the setting aside of a former command comes to pass."

[2] tn Grk "because of its weakness and uselessness."

[3] sn The Greek text contains an elaborate comparison between v. 20a and v. 22, with a parenthesis (vv. 20b-21) in between; the comparison is literally, "by as much as...by so much" or "to the degree that...to that same degree."

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn The words "did so" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[6] sn A quotation from Ps 110:4 (see Heb 5:6, 6:20, and 7:17).

[7] tn Or "surety."

[8] tn Grk "they on the one hand" in contrast with "he on the other hand" in v. 24.

[9] tn Grk "they were prevented by death."

[10] tn Grk "from continuing" (the words "in office" are supplied for clarity).

[11] sn See Heb 5:2 where this concept was introduced.

[12] tn Grk "the main point of the things being said."

[13] sn An allusion to Ps 110:1; see Heb 1:3, 13.

[14] tn Grk "there are those who offer."

[15] tn Grk "who serve in," referring to the Levitical priests, but focusing on the provisional and typological nature of the tabernacle in which they served.

[16] tn Or "prototype," "outline." The Greek word ὑπόδειγμα (hupodeigma) does not mean "copy," as it is often translated; it means "something to be copied," a basis for imitation. BDAG 1037 s.v. 2 lists both Heb 8:5 and 9:23 under the second category of usage, "an indication of someth. that appears at a subsequent time," emphasizing the temporal progression between the earthly and heavenly sanctuaries.

sn There are two main options for understanding the conceptual background of the heavenly sanctuary imagery. The first is to understand the imagery to be functioning on a vertical plane. This background is Hellenistic, philosophical, and spatial in orientation and sees the earthly sanctuary as a copy of the heavenly reality. The other option is to see the imagery functioning on a horizontal plane. This background is Jewish, eschatological, and temporal and sees the heavenly sanctuary as the fulfillment and true form of the earthly sanctuary which preceded it. The second option is preferred, both for lexical reasons (see tn above) and because it fits the Jewish context of the book (although many scholars prefer to emphasize the relationship the book has to Hellenistic thought).

[17] tn The word τύπος (tupos) here has the meaning "an archetype serving as a model, type, pattern, model" (BDAG 1020 s.v. 6.a). This is in keeping with the horizontal imagery accepted for this verse (see sn on "sketch" earlier in the verse). Here Moses was shown the future heavenly sanctuary which, though it did not yet exist, became the outline for the earthly sanctuary.

[18] sn A quotation from Exod 25:40.

[19] sn The Greek text indicates a contrast between vv. 4-5 and v. 6 that is difficult to render in English: Jesus' status in the old order of priests (vv. 4-5) versus his superior ministry (v. 6).

[20] tn Grk "he"; in the translation the referent (Jesus) has been specified for clarity.

[21] tn Grk "to the degree that."

[22] tn Grk "which is enacted."

[23] sn This linkage of the change in priesthood with a change in the law or the covenant goes back to Heb 7:12, 22 and is picked up again in Heb 9:6-15 and 10:1-18.

[24] tn Grk "no occasion for a second one would have been sought."

[25] tn Grk "for," but providing an explanation of the God-intended limitation of the first covenant from v. 7.

[26] sn The "fault" or limitation in the first covenant was not in its inherent righteousness, but in its design from God himself. It was never intended to be his final revelation or provision for mankind; it was provisional, always pointing toward the fulfillment to come in Christ.

[27] tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tc ‡ Several witnesses (𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ* A D* I K P Ψ 33 81 326 365 1505 2464 al latt co Cyr) have αὐτούς (autous) here, "[in finding fault with] them, [he says]," alluding to Israel's failings mentioned in v. 9b. (The verb μέμφομαι [memphomai, "to find fault with"] can take an accusative or dative direct object.) The reading behind the text above (αὐτοίς, autois), supported by 𝔓⁴⁶ ℵ² B D² 0278 1739 1881 𝔐, is perhaps a harder reading theologically, and is more ambiguous in meaning. If αὐτοίς goes with μεμφόμενος (memphomenos, here translated "showing its fault"), the clause could be trans-

"Look, the days are coming, says the Lord, when I will complete a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the 8:12 "For I will be merciful toward their ber no longer."[7]

8:13 When he speaks of a new covenant,[8] he makes the first obsolete. Now what is growing obsolete and aging is about to disappear.[9]

The Arrangement and Ritual of the Earthly Sanctuary

9:1 Now the first covenant,[10] in fact, had regulations for worship and its earthly sanctuary. 9:2 For a tent was prepared, the outer one,[11] which contained[12] the lampstand, the table, and the presentation of the loaves; this[13] is called the holy place. 9:3 And after the second curtain there was a tent called the holy of holies. 9:4 It contained the golden altar of incense and the ark of the covenant covered entirely with gold. In this ark[14] were the golden urn containing the manna, Aaron's rod that budded, and the stone tablets of the covenant. 9:5 And above the ark[15] were the cherubim[16] of glory overshadowing the mercy seat. Now is not the time to speak of these things in detail. 9:6 So with these things prepared like this, the priests enter continually into the outer tent[17] as they perform their duties. 9:7 But only the high priest enters once a year into the inner tent,[18] and not without blood that he offers for himself and for the sins of the people committed in ignorance.[19] 9:8 The Holy Spirit is making clear that the way into the holy place had not yet appeared as long as the old tabernacle[20] was standing. 9:9 This was a symbol for the time then present, when gifts and sacrifices were offered that could not perfect the conscience of the worshiper. 9:10 They served only for matters of food and drink[21] and various washings; they are external regulations[22] imposed until the new order came.[23] lated "in finding fault with them" or "in showing [its] faults to them." If αὐτοίς goes with the following λέγει (legei, "he says"), the clause is best translated, "in finding/showing [its] faults, he says to them." The accusative pronoun suffers no such ambiguity, for it must be the object of μεμφόμενος rather than λέγει. Although a decision is difficult, the dative form of the pronoun best explains the rise of the other reading and is thus more likely to be original.

1 tn Grk "not like the covenant," continuing the description of v. 8b.

2 tn Grk "putting...I will inscribe."

3 tn Grk "mind."

4 tn Grk "I will be to them for a God and they will be to me for a people," following the Hebrew constructions of Jer 31.

5 tn Grk "they will not teach, each one his fellow citizen..." The Greek makes this negation emphatic: "they will certainly not teach."

6 tn Grk "from the small to the great."

7 sn A quotation from Jer 31:31-34.

8 tn Grk "when he says, 'new,'" (referring to the covenant).

9 tn Grk "near to disappearing."

10 tn Grk "the first" (referring to the covenant described in Heb 8:7, 13). In the translation the referent (covenant) has been specified for clarity.

11 tn Grk "the first," in order of approach in the ritual.

12 tn Grk "in which [were]."

13 tn Grk "which," describing the outer tent.

14 tn Grk "in which"; in the translation the referent (the ark) has been specified for clarity.

15 tn Grk "above it"; in the translation the referent (the ark) has been specified for clarity.

16 sn The cherubim (pl.) were an order of angels mentioned repeatedly in the OT but only here in the NT. They were associated with God's presence, glory, and holiness. Their images that sat on top of the ark of the covenant are described in Exod 25:18-20.

17 tn Grk "the first tent."

18 tn Grk "the second tent."

19 tn Or perhaps "the unintentional sins of the people"; Grk "the ignorances of the people." Cf. BDAG 13 s.v. ἀγνόημα, "sin committed in ignorance/unintentionally." This term seems to be simply a synonym for "sins" (cf. Heb 5:2) and does not pick up the distinction made in Num 15:22-31 between unwitting sin and "high-handed" sin. The Day of Atonement ritual in Lev 16 covered all the sins of the people, not just the unwitting ones.

20 tn Grk "the first tent." The literal phrase "the first tent" refers to either (1) the outer chamber of the tabernacle in the wilderness (as in vv. 2, 6) or (2) the entire tabernacle as a symbol of the OT system of approaching God. The second is more likely given the contrast that follows in vv. 11-12.

21 tn Grk "only for foods and drinks."

22 tc Most witnesses (D^1 𝔐) have "various washings, and external regulations" (βαπτισμοῖς καὶ δικαιώμασιν, baptismois kai dikaiōmasin), with both nouns in the dative. The translation "washings; they are... regulations" renders βαπτισμοῖς, δικαιώματα (baptismois, dikaiōmata; found in such important mss as $\mathfrak{P}^{46}$ ℵ* A I P 0278 33 1739 1881 al sa) in which case δικαιώματα is taken as the nominative subject of the participle ἐπικείμενα (epikeimena). It seems far more likely that scribes would conform δικαιώματα to the immediately preceding datives and join it to them by καί than they would to the following nominative participle. Both on external and internal evidence the text is thus secure as reading βαπτισμοῖς, δικαιώματα.

23 tn Grk "until the time of setting things right."

Christ's Service in the Heavenly Sanctuary

9:11 But now Christ has come[1] as the high priest of the good things to come. He passed through the greater and more perfect tent not made with hands, that is, not of this creation, 9:12 and he entered once for all into the most holy place not by the blood of goats and calves but by his own blood, and so he himself secured[2] eternal redemption. 9:13 For if the blood of goats and bulls and the ashes of a young cow sprinkled on those who are defiled consecrated them and provided ritual purity,[3] 9:14 how much more will the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without blemish to God, purify our[4] consciences from dead works to worship the living God.

9:15 And so he is the mediator[5] of a new covenant, so that those who are called may receive the eternal inheritance he has promised,[6] since he died[7] to set them free from the violations committed under the first covenant. 9:16 For where there is a will, the death of the one who made it must be proven.[8] 9:17 For a will takes effect only at death, since it carries no force while the one who made it is alive. 9:18 So even the first covenant was inaugurated with blood.[9] 9:19 For when Moses had spoken every command to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and goats with water and scarlet wool and hyssop and sprinkled both the book itself and all the people, 9:20 and said, "This is the blood of the covenant that God has commanded you to keep."[10] 9:21 And both the tabernacle and all the utensils of worship he likewise sprinkled with blood. 9:22 Indeed according to the law almost everything was purified with blood, and without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness. 9:23 So it was necessary for the sketches[11] of the things in heaven to be purified with these sacrifices,[12] but the heavenly things themselves required[13] better sacrifices than these. 9:24 For Christ did not enter a sanctuary made with hands – the representation[14] of the true sanctuary[15] – but into heaven itself, and he appears now in God's presence for us. 9:25 And he did not enter to offer[16] himself again and again, the way the high priest enters the sanctuary year after year with blood that is not his own, 9:26 for then he would have had to suffer again and again since the foundation of the world. But now he has appeared once for all at the consummation of the ages to put away sin by his sacrifice. 9:27 And just as people[17] are appointed to die once, and then to face judgment,[18] 9:28 so also, after Christ was offered once to bear the sins of many,[19] to those who eagerly await him he will appear a second time, not to bear sin[20] but to bring salvation.[21]

---

[1] tn Grk "But Christ, when he came," introducing a sentence that includes all of Heb 9:11-12. The main construction is "Christ, having come..., entered..., having secured...," and everything else describes his entrance.

[2] tn This verb occurs in the Greek middle voice, which here intensifies the role of the subject, Christ, in accomplishing the action: "he alone secured"; "he and no other secured."

[3] tn Grk "for the purifying of the flesh." The "flesh" here is symbolic of outward or ritual purity in contrast to inner purity, that of the conscience (cf. Heb 9:9).

[4] tc The reading adopted by the translation is attested by many authorities (A D* K P 365 1739* al). But many others (𝔓 D² 0278 33 1739ᶜ 1881 𝔐 lat sa) read "your" instead of "our." The diversity of evidence makes this a difficult case to decide from external evidence alone. The first and second person pronouns differ by only one letter in Greek, as in English, also making this problem difficult to decide based on internal evidence and transcriptional probability. In the context, the author's description of sacrificial activities seems to invite the reader to compare his own possible participation in OT liturgy as over against the completed work of Christ, so the second person pronoun "your" might make more sense. On the other hand, TCGNT 599 argues that "our" is preferable because the author of Hebrews uses direct address (i.e., the second person) only in the hortatory sections. What is more, the author seems to prefer the first person in explanatory remarks or when giving the logical grounds for an assertion (cf. Heb 4:15; 7:14). It is hard to reach a definitive conclusion in this case, but the data lean slightly in favor of the first person pronoun.

[5] tn The Greek word μεσίτης (mesitēs, "mediator") in this context does not imply that Jesus was a mediator in the contemporary sense of the word, i.e., he worked for compromise between opposing parties. Here the term describes his function as the one who was used by God to enact a new covenant which established a new relationship between God and his people, but entirely on God's terms.

[6] tn Grk "the promise of the eternal inheritance."

[7] tn Grk "a death having occurred."

[8] tn Grk "there is a necessity for the death of the one who made it to be proven."

[9] sn The Greek text reinforces this by negating the opposite ("not even the first covenant was inaugurated without blood"), but this double negation is not used in contemporary English.

[10] tn Grk "which God commanded for you (or in your case)."
sn A quotation from Exod 24:8.

[11] tn Or "prototypes," "outlines," referring to the earthly sanctuary. See Heb 8:5 above for the prior use of this term.

[12] tn Grk "with these"; in the translation the referent (sacrifices) has been specified for clarity.

[13] tn Grk "the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these."

[14] tn Or "prefiguration."

[15] tn The word "sanctuary" is not in the Greek text at this point, but has been supplied for clarity.

[16] tn Grk "and not that he might offer," continuing the previous construction.

[17] tn Here ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) has been translated as a generic noun ("people").

[18] tn Grk "and after this – judgment."

[19] sn An allusion to Isa 53:12.

[20] tn Grk "without sin," but in context this does not refer to Christ's sinlessness (as in Heb 4:15) but to the fact that sin is already dealt with by his first coming.

[21] tn Grk "for salvation." This may be construed with the verb "await" (those who wait for him to bring them salvation), but the connection with "appear" (as in the translation) is more likely.

Concluding Exposition: Old and New Sacrifices Contrasted

10:1 For the law possesses a shadow of the good things to come but not the reality itself, and is therefore completely unable, by the same sacrifices offered continually, year after year, to perfect those who come to worship.[1] 10:2 For otherwise would they not have ceased to be offered, since the worshipers would have been purified once for all and so have[2] no further consciousness of sin?
10:3 But in those sacrifices[3] there is a reminder of sins year after year. 10:4 For the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sins.[4] 10:5 So when he came into the world, he said,

> "Sacrifice and offering you did not desire,
> but a body you prepared for me.
> 10:6 "Whole burnt offerings and sin-offer- > ings you took no delight in.
> 10:7 "Then I said, 'Here I am:[5] I have > come – it is written of me in the scroll of > the book – to do your will, O God.'"[6]

10:8 When he says above, "Sacrifices and offerings and whole burnt offerings and sin-of- ferings you did not desire nor did you take delight in them"[7] (which are offered according to the law), 10:9 then he says, "Here I am: I have come to do your will."[8] He does away with[9] the first to establish the second. 10:10 By his will[10] we have been made holy through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.
10:11 And every priest stands day after day[11] serving and offering the same sacrifices again and again – sacrifices that can never take away sins.
10:12 But when this priest[12] had offered one sacrifice for sins for all time, he sat down at the right hand[13] of God, 10:13 where he is now waiting[14] until his enemies are made a footstool for his feet.[15] 10:14 For by one offering he has perfected for all time those who are made holy. 10:15 And the Holy Spirit also witnesses to us, for after saying,[16] 10:16 "This is the covenant that I will es- tablish with them after those days, says the Lord.
I will put[17] my laws on their hearts and I will inscribe them on their minds,"[18] 10:17 then he says,[19] "Their sins and their lawless deeds I will remember no longer."[20] 10:18 Now where there is forgiveness of these, there is no longer any offering for sin.

Drawing Near to God in Enduring Faith

10:19 Therefore, brothers and sisters,[21] since we have confidence to enter the sanctuary by the blood of Jesus, 10:20 by the fresh and living way that he inaugurated for us[22] through the curtain, that is, through his flesh,[23] 10:21 and since we have a great priest[24] over the house of God, 10:22 let us draw near with a sincere heart in the assurance that faith brings,[25] because we have had our hearts sprinkled clean from an evil conscience[26] and our bodies washed in pure water. 10:23 And let us hold unwaveringly to the hope that we confess, for the one who made the promise is trustworthy. 10:24 And let us take thought of how to spur one another on to love and good works,[27] 10:25 not abandoning our own meetings, as some are in the habit of doing, but

---

1 tn Grk "those who approach."

2 tn Grk "the worshipers, having been purified once for all, would have."

3 tn Grk "in them"; the referent (those sacrifices) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Grk "for it is impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins."

5 tn Grk "behold," but this construction often means "here is/there is" (cf. BDAG 468 s.v. ἰδού 2).

6 sn A quotation from Ps 40:6-8 (LXX). The phrase a body you prepared for me (in v. 5) is apparently an interpretive expansion of the HT reading "ears you have dug out for me."

7 sn Various phrases from the quotation of Ps 40:6 in Heb 10:5-6 are repeated in Heb 10:8.

8 tc The majority of MSS, especially the later ones (𝔎² 0278ᵛⁱᵈ 1739 𝔐 lat), have ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God") at this point, while most of the earliest and best witnesses lack such an explicit addressee (so 𝔓⁴⁶ 𝔎* A C D K P Ψ 33 1175 1881 2464 al). The longer reading is a palpable corruption, apparently motivated in part by the wording of Ps 40:8 (39:9 LXX) and by the word order of this same verse as quoted in Heb 10:7.

9 tn Or "abolishes."

10 tn Grk "by which will." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

11 tn Or "daily," "every day."

12 tn Grk "this one." This pronoun refers to Jesus, but "this priest" was used in the translation to make the contrast between the Jewish priests in v. 11 and Jesus as a priest clearer in English.

13 sn An allusion to Ps 110:1.

14 tn Grk "from then on waiting."

15 sn An allusion to Ps 110:1.

16 tn Grk "after having said," emphasizing the present impact of this utterance.

17 tn Grk "putting...I will inscribe."

18 sn A quotation from Jer 31:33.

19 tn Grk "and."

20 sn A quotation from Jer 31:34.

21 tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 2:11.

22 tn Grk "that he inaugurated for us as a fresh and living way," referring to the entrance mentioned in v. 19.

23 sn Through his flesh. In a bold shift the writer changes from a spatial phrase (Christ opened the way through the curtain into the inner sanctuary) to an instrumental phrase (he did this through [by means of] his flesh in his sacrifice of himself), associating the two in an allusion to the splitting of the curtain in the temple from top to bottom (Matt 27:51; Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45). Just as the curtain was split, so Christ's body was broken for us, to give us access into God's presence.

24 tn Grk "and a great priest," continuing the construction begun in v. 19.

25 tn Grk "in assurance of faith."

26 sn The phrase our hearts sprinkled clean from an evil conscience combines the OT imagery of the sprinkling with blood to give ritual purity with the emphasis on the interior cleansing provided by the new covenant: It is the heart that is cleansed and the conscience made perfect (cf. Heb 8:10; 9:9, 14; 10:2, 16).

27 tn Grk "let us consider one another for provoking of love and good deeds."

encouraging each other, and even more so because you see the day[1] drawing near.[2]

10:26 For if we deliberately keep on sinning after receiving the knowledge of the truth, no further sacrifice for sins is left for us,[3] 10:27 but only a certain fearful expectation of judgment and a fury[4] of fire that will consume God's enemies.[5] 10:28 Someone who rejected the law of Moses was put to death[6] without mercy on the testimony of two or three witnesses.[7] 10:29 How much greater punishment do you think that person deserves who has contempt for[8] the Son of God, and profanes[9] the blood of the covenant that made him holy,[10] and insults the Spirit of grace? 10:30 For we know the one who said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay,"[11] and again, "The Lord will judge his people."[12] 10:31 It is a terrifying thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

10:32 But remember the former days when you endured a harsh conflict of suffering after you were enlightened. 10:33 At times you were publicly exposed to abuse and afflictions, and at other times you came to share with others who were treated in that way. 10:34 For in fact you shared the sufferings of those in prison,[13] and you accepted the confiscation of your belongings with joy, because you knew that you certainly[14] had a better and lasting possession. 10:35 So do not throw away your confidence, because it[15] has great reward. 10:36 For you need endurance in order to do God's will and so receive what is promised.[16] 10:37 For just a little longer[17] and he who is coming will arrive and not delay.[18] 10:38 But my righteous one will live by faith, and if he shrinks back, I[19] take no pleasure in him.[20] 10:39 But we are not among those who shrink back and thus perish, but are among those who have faith and preserve their souls.[21]

People Commended for Their Faith

11:1 Now faith is being sure of what we hope for, being convinced of what we do not see. 11:2 For by it the people of old[22] received God's commendation.[23] 11:3 By faith we understand that the worlds[24] were set in order at God's command,[25] so that the visible has its origin in the invisible.[26] 11:4 By faith Abel offered God a greater sacrifice than Cain, and through his faith[27] he was commended as righteous, because God commended him for his offerings. And through his faith[28] he still speaks, though he is dead. 11:5 By faith Enoch was taken up so that he did not see death, and he was not to be found because God took him up. For before his removal he had been commended as having pleased God. 11:6 Now without faith it is impossible to please him, for the one who approaches God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who seek him. 11:7 By faith Noah, when he was warned about things not yet seen, with reverent regard[29] constructed an ark for the deliverance of his family. Through faith he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness that comes by faith.

11:8 By faith Abraham obeyed when he was called to go out to a place he would later receive as an inheritance, and he went out without

[1] sn The day refers to that well-known time of Christ's coming and judgment in the future; see a similar use of "day" in 1 Cor 3:13.

[2] tn This paragraph (vv. 19-25) is actually a single, skillfully composed sentence in Greek, but it must be broken into shorter segments for English idiom. It begins with several subordinate phrases (since we have confidence and a great priest), has three parallel exhortations as its main verbs (let us draw near, hold, and take thought), and concludes with several subordinate phrases related to the final exhortation (not abandoning but encouraging).

[3] tn Grk "is left," with "for us" implied by the first half of the verse.

[4] tn Grk "zeal," recalling God's jealous protection of his holiness and honor (cf. Exod 20:5).

sn An allusion to Zeph 1:18.

[5] tn Grk "the enemies."

sn An allusion to Isa 26:11.

[6] tn Grk "dies."

[7] sn An allusion to Deut 17:6.

[8] tn Grk "tramples under foot."

[9] tn Grk "regarded as common."

[10] tn Grk "by which he was made holy."

[11] sn A quotation from Deut 32:35.

[12] sn A quotation from Deut 32:36.

[13] tc Most witnesses, including some important ones (א D^2 1881 𝔐), read δεσμοῖς μου (desmois mou, "my imprisonment") here, a reading that is probably due to the widespread belief in the early Christian centuries that Paul was the author of Hebrews (cf. Phil 1:7; Col 4:18). It may have been generated by the reading δεσμοῖς without the μου (so 𝔓^{46} Ψ 104 pc), the force of which is so ambiguous (lit., "you shared the sufferings with the bonds") as to be virtually nonsensical. Most likely, δεσμοῖς resulted when a scribe made an error in copying δεσμίοις (desmiois), a reading which makes excellent sense ("[of] those in prison") and is strongly supported by early and significant witnesses of the Alexandrian and Western texttypes (A D* H 6 33 81 1739 lat sy co). Thus, δεσμίοις best explains the rise of the other readings on both internal and external grounds and is strongly preferred.

[14] tn Grk "you yourselves."

[15] tn Grk "which," but showing the reason.

[16] tn Grk "the promise," referring to the thing God promised, not to the pledge itself.

[17] sn A quotation from Isa 26:20.

[18] sn A quotation from Hab 2:3.

[19] tn Grk "my soul."

[20] sn A quotation from Hab 2:4.

[21] tn Grk "not...of shrinking back to perdition but of faith to the preservation of the soul."

[22] tn Or "the elders," "the ancients."

[23] tn Grk "were attested," "received commendation"; and Heb 11:4-6 shows this to be from God.

[24] tn Grk "ages." The temporal (ages) came to be used of the spatial (what exists in those time periods). See Heb 1:2 for same usage.

[25] tn Grk "by God's word."

[26] sn The Greek phrasing emphasizes this point by negating the opposite: "so that what is seen did not come into being from things that are visible."

[27] tn Or "through his sacrifice"; Grk "through which."

[28] tn Or "through his sacrifice"; Grk "through it."

understanding where he was going. 11:9 By faith he lived as a foreigner[1] in the promised land as though it were a foreign country, living in tents with Isaac and Jacob, who were fellow heirs[2] of the same promise. 11:10 For he was looking forward to the city with firm foundations,[3] whose architect and builder is God. 11:11 By faith, even though Sarah herself was barren and he was too old,[4] he received the ability to procreate,[5] because he regarded the one who had given the promise to be trustworthy. 11:12 So in fact children[6] were fathered by one man – and this one as good as dead – like the number of stars in the sky and like the innumerable grains of sand[7] on the seashore.[8] 11:13 These all died in faith without receiving the things promised,[9] but they saw them in the distance and welcomed them and acknowledged that they were strangers and foreigners[10] on the earth. 11:14 For those who speak in such a way make it clear that they are seeking a homeland. 11:15 In fact, if they had been thinking of the land that they had left, they would have had opportunity to return. 11:16 But as it is,[11] they aspire to a better land, that is, a heavenly one. Therefore, God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he has prepared a city for them. 11:17 By faith Abraham, when he was tested, offered up Isaac. He had received the promises,[12] yet he was ready to offer up[13] his only son. 11:18 God had told him, "Through Isaac descendants will carry on your name,"[14] 11:19 and he reasoned[15] that God could even raise him from the dead, and in a sense[16] he received him back from there. 11:20 By faith also Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning the future. 11:21 By faith Jacob, as he was dying, blessed each of the sons of Joseph and worshiped as he leaned on his staff.[17] 11:22 By faith Joseph, at the end of his life,[18] mentioned the exodus of the sons of Israel[19] and gave instructions about his burial.[20] 11:23 By faith, when Moses was born, his parents hid him[21] for three months, because they saw the child was beautiful and they were not afraid of the king's edict. 11:24 By faith, when he grew up, Moses refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, 11:25 choosing rather to be ill-treated with the people of God than to enjoy sin's fleeting pleasure. 11:26 He regarded abuse suffered for Christ[22] to be greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt, for his eyes were fixed on[23] the reward. 11:27 By faith he left Egypt without fearing the king's anger, for he persevered as though he could see the one who is invisible. 11:28 By faith he kept the Passover and the sprinkling of the blood,[24] so that the one who destroyed the firstborn would not touch them. 11:29 By faith they crossed the Red Sea as if on dry ground, but when the Egyptians tried it, they were swallowed up. 11:30 By faith the walls of Jericho[25] fell after the people marched around them[26] for seven days. 11:31 By faith Rahab the prostitute escaped the destruction of[27] the disobedient, because she welcomed the spies in peace.

11:32 And what more shall I say? For time will fail me if I tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, of David and Samuel and the prophets. 11:33 Through faith they conquered kingdoms, administered justice,[28] gained what was promised,[29] shut the mouths of lions, 11:34 quenched raging fire,[30] escaped the edge of the sword, gained strength in weakness,[31] became mighty in

Though it is not as likely, some construe this phrase to mean "power to conceive seed," making the whole verse about Sarah: "by faith, even though Sarah herself was barren and too old, she received ability to conceive, because she regarded the one who had given the promise to be trustworthy."

battle, put foreign armies to flight, 11:35 and women received back their dead raised to life.[1] But others were tortured, not accepting release, to obtain resurrection to a better life.[2] 11:36 And others experienced mocking and flogging, and even chains and imprisonment. 11:37 They were stoned, sawed apart,[3] murdered with the sword; they went about in sheepskins and goatskins; they were destitute, afflicted, ill-treated 11:38 (the world was not worthy of them); they wandered in deserts and mountains and caves and openings in the earth. 11:39 And these all were commended[4] for their faith, yet they did not receive what was promised.[5] 11:40 For God had provided something better for us, so that they would be made perfect together with us.[6]

The Lord's Discipline

12:1 Therefore, since we are surrounded by such a great cloud of witnesses,[7] we must get rid of every weight and the sin that clings so closely, and run with endurance the race set out for us, 12:2 keeping our eyes fixed on Jesus, the pioneer and perfecter of our faith. For the joy set out for him he endured the cross, disregarding its shame, and has taken his seat at the right hand of the throne of God.[8] 12:3 Think of him who endured such opposition against himself by sinners, so that you may not grow weary in your souls and give up. 12:4 You have not yet resisted to the point of bloodshed[9] in your struggle against sin. 12:5 And have you forgotten the exhortation addressed to you as sons?

"My son, do not scorn[10] the Lord's discipline or give up when he corrects[11] you.
12:6 "For the Lord disciplines the one he loves and chastises every son he accepts."[12]

12:7 Endure your suffering[13] as discipline;[14] God is treating you as sons. For what son is there that a father does not discipline? 12:8 But if you do not experience discipline,[15] something all sons[16] have shared in, then you are illegitimate and are not sons. 12:9 Besides, we have experienced discipline from[17] our earthly fathers[18] and we respected them; shall we not submit ourselves all the more to the Father of spirits and receive life?[19] 12:10 For they disciplined us for a little while as seemed good to them, but he does so for our benefit, that we may share his holiness. 12:11 Now all discipline seems painful at the time, not joyful.[20] But later it produces the fruit of peace and righteousness[21] for those trained by it. 12:12 Therefore, strengthen[22] your listless hands and your weak knees,[23] 12:13 and make straight paths for your feet,[24] so that what is lame may not be put out of joint but be healed.

Do Not Reject God's Warning

3 tc The reading ἐπρίσθησαν (epristhēsan, "they were sawed apart") is found in some important witnesses (𝔓46 [D* twice reads ἐπίρσθησαν, "they were burned"?] pc sy^{p} sa Or^{pt} Eus). Other MSS have ἐπειράσθησαν (epeirasthēsan, "they were tempted"), either before "sawed apart" ([ℵ] L P [048] 33 81 326 1505 pc sy^{h}), after "sawed apart" (𝔓^{13vid} A D^{1} Ψ 1739 1881 𝔐 lat bo Or^{pt}), or altogether in place of "sawed apart" (0150 vg^{mss} Cl). Since the two words ἐπρίσθησαν and ἐπειράσθησαν are so much alike in sight and sound, and since the position of "they were tempted" varies in the MSS, it seems best to say that ἐπειράσθησαν is an accidental corruption of ἐπρίσθησαν or an intentional change to a more common word (the root of ἐπρίσθησαν [πρίζω, prizō] occurs only here in the NT, while the root of ἐπειράσθησαν [πειράζω, peirazō] occurs 38 times). The best reading here seems to be "sawed apart" without any addition before or after. (See TCGNT 603-4, for a discussion of emendations that scholars have proposed for this difficult problem.)

4 sn The expression these all were commended forms an inclusio with Heb 11:2: The chapter begins and ends with references to commendation for faith.

5 tn Grk "the promise," referring to the thing God promised, not to the pledge itself.

6 tn The Greek phrasing emphasizes this point by negating the opposite: "so that they would not be made perfect without us."

7 tn Grk "having such a great cloud of witnesses surrounding us."

8 sn An allusion to Ps 110:1.

9 tn Grk "until blood."

10 tn Or "disregard," "think little of."

11 tn Or "reproves," "rebukes." The Greek verb ἐλέγχω (elenchō) implies exposing someone's sin in order to bring correction.

12 sn A quotation from Prov 3:11-12.

13 tn Grk "endure," with the object ("your suffering") understood from the context.

14 tn Or "in order to become disciplined."

15 tn Grk "you are without discipline."

16 tn Grk "all"; "sons" is implied by the context.

17 tn Grk "we had our earthly fathers as discipliners."

18 tn Grk "the fathers of our flesh." In Hebrews, "flesh" is a characteristic way of speaking about outward, physical, earthly life (cf. Heb 5:7; 9:10, 13), as opposed to the inward or spiritual dimensions of life.

19 tn Grk "and live."

sn Submit ourselves…to the Father of spirits and receive life. This idea is drawn from Proverbs, where the Lord's discipline brings life, while resistance to it leads to death (cf. Prov 4:13; 6:23; 10:17; 16:17).

20 tn Grk "all discipline at the time does not seem to be of joy, but of sorrow."

21 tn Grk "the peaceful fruit of righteousness."

22 tn Or "straighten."

23 sn A quotation from Isa 35:3. Strengthen your listless hands and your weak knees refers to the readers' need for renewed resolve and fresh strength in their struggles (cf. Heb 10:36-39; 12:1-3).

24 sn A quotation from Prov 4:26. The phrase make straight paths for your feet is figurative for "stay on God's paths."

25 sn The references to peace and holiness show the close connection between this paragraph and the previous one. The pathway toward "holiness" and the need for it is cited in Heb 12:10 and 14. More importantly Prov 4:26-27 sets up the transition from one paragraph to the next: It urges people to stay on godly paths (Prov 4:26, quoted here in v. 13) and promises that God will lead them in peace if they do so (Prov 4:27 [LXX], quoted in v. 14).

grace of God, that no one be like a bitter root springing up[1] and causing trouble, and through him many become defiled. 12:16 And see to it that no one becomes[2] an immoral or godless person like Esau, who sold his own birthright for a single meal.[3] 12:17 For you know that[4] later when he wanted to inherit the blessing, he was rejected, for he found no opportunity for repentance, although he sought the blessing[5] with tears. 12:18 For you have not come to something that can be touched,[6] to a burning fire and darkness and gloom and a whirlwind 12:19 and the blast of a trumpet and a voice uttering words[7] such that those who heard begged to hear no more.[8] 12:20 For they could not bear what was commanded: "If even an animal touches the mountain, it must be stoned."[9] 12:21 In fact, the scene[10] was so terrifying that Moses said, "I shudder with fear."[11] 12:22 But you have come to Mount Zion, the city[12] of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to myriads of angels, to the assembly 12:23 and congregation of the firstborn, who are enrolled in heaven, and to God, the judge of all, and to the spirits of the righteous, who have been made perfect, 12:24 and to Jesus, the mediator[13] of a new covenant, and to the sprinkled blood that speaks of something better than Abel's does.[14]

12:25 Take care not to refuse the one who is speaking! For if they did not escape when they refused the one who warned them on earth, how much less shall we, if we reject the one who warns from heaven? 12:26 Then his voice shook the earth, but now he has promised, "I will once more shake not only the earth but heaven too."[15] 12:27 Now this phrase "once more" indicates the removal of what is shaken, that is, of created things, so that what is unshaken may remain. 12:28 So since we are receiving an unshakable kingdom, let us give thanks, and through this let us offer worship pleasing to God in devotion and awe. 12:29 For our God is indeed a devouring fire.[16]

Final Exhortations

13:1 Brotherly love must continue. 13:2 Do not neglect hospitality, because through it some have entertained angels without knowing it.[17] 13:3 Remember those in prison as though you were in prison with them,[18] and those ill-treated as though you too felt their torment.[19] 13:4 Marriage must be honored among all and the marriage bed kept undefiled, for God will judge sexually immoral people and adulterers. 13:5 Your conduct must be free from the love of money and you must be content with what you have, for he has said, "I will never leave you and I will never abandon you."[20] 13:6 So we can say with confidence, "The Lord is my helper, and[21] I will not be afraid. What can man do to me?"[22] 13:7 Remember your leaders, who spoke God's message to you; reflect on the outcome of their lives and imitate their faith. 13:8 Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today and forever! 13:9 Do not be carried away by all sorts of strange teachings.[23] For it is good for the heart to be strengthened by grace, not ritual meals,[24] which have never benefited those who participated in them. 13:10 We have an altar that those who serve in the tabernacle have no right to eat from. 13:11 For the bodies of those animals whose blood the high priest brings[25] into the sanctuary as an offering for sin are burned outside the camp. 13:12 Therefore, to sanctify

[1] tn Grk "that there not be any root of bitterness," but referring figuratively to a person who causes trouble (as in Deut 29:17 [LXX] from which this is quoted).

sn An allusion to Deut 29:18.

[2] tn Grk "that there not be any," continuing from v. 15.

[3] sn An allusion to Gen 27:34-41.

[4] tn Or a command: "for understand that."

[5] tn Grk "it," referring either to the repentance or the blessing. But the account in Gen 27:34-41 (which the author appeals to here) makes it clear that the blessing is what Esau sought. Thus in the translation the referent (the blessing) is specified for clarity.

[6] tn This describes the nation of Israel approaching God on Mt. Sinai (Exod 19). There is a clear contrast with the reference to Mount Zion in v. 22, so this could be translated "a mountain that can be touched." But the word "mountain" does not occur here and the more vague description seems to be deliberate.

[7] tn Grk "a voice of words."

[8] tn Grk "a voice…from which those who heard begged that a word not be added to them."

[9] sn A quotation from Exod 19:12-13.

[10] tn Grk "that which appeared."

[11] tn Grk "I am terrified and trembling."

sn A quotation from Deut 9:19.

[12] tn Grk "and the city"; the conjunction is omitted in translation since it seems to be functioning epexegetically – that is, explaining further what is meant by "Mount Zion."

[13] tn The Greek word μεσίτης (mesitēs, "mediator") in this context does not imply that Jesus was a mediator in the contemporary sense of the word, i.e., he worked for compromise between opposing parties. Here the term describes his function as the one who was used by God to enact a new covenant which established a new relationship between God and his people, but entirely on God's terms.

[14] sn Abel's shed blood cried out to the Lord for justice and judgment, but Jesus' blood speaks of redemption and forgiveness, something better than Abel's does (Gen 4:10; Heb 9:11-14; 11:4).

[15] sn A quotation from Hag 2:6.

[16] sn A quotation from Deut 4:24; 9:3.

[17] sn This is a vague allusion to people described in scripture and extra-biblical literature and may include Abraham and Sarah (Gen 18:2-15), Lot (Gen 19:1-14), Gideon (Judg 6:11-18), Manoah (Judg 13:3-22), and possibly Tobit (Tob 12:1-20).

[18] tn Grk "as being imprisoned together."

[19] tn Or "since you too are vulnerable"; Grk "you also being in the body."

[20] sn A quotation from Deut 31:6, 8.

[21] tc Some important MSS (א* C* P 0285^{vid} 33 1175 1739 pc lat) lack καί (kai), but because the omission conforms to the wording of Ps 118:6 (117:6 LXX), it is suspect.

[22] sn A quotation from Ps 118:6.

[23] tn Grk "by diverse and strange teachings."

[24] tn Grk "foods," referring to the meals associated with the OT sacrifices (see the contrast with the next verse; also 9:9-10; 10:1, 4, 11).

[25] tn Grk "whose blood is brought by the high priest."

the people by his own blood, Jesus also suffered outside the camp. 13:13 We must go out to him, then, outside the camp, bearing the abuse he experienced.[1] 13:14 For here we have no lasting city, but we seek the city that is to come. 13:15 Through him then let us continually offer up a sacrifice of praise to God, that is, the fruit of our lips, acknowledging his name. 13:16 And do not neglect to do good and to share what you have,[2] for God is pleased with such sacrifices.

13:17 Obey your leaders and submit to them, for they keep watch over your souls and will give an account for their work.[3] Let them do this[4] with joy and not with complaints, for this would be no advantage for you. 13:18 Pray for us, for we are sure that we have a clear conscience and desire to conduct ourselves rightly in every respect. 13:19 I especially ask you to pray[5] that I may be restored to you very soon.

Benediction and Conclusion

13:20 Now may the God of peace who by the blood of the eternal covenant brought back from the dead the great shepherd of the sheep, our Lord Jesus Christ, 13:21 equip you with every good thing to do his will, working in us[6] what is pleasing before him through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever.[7] Amen.

13:22 Now I urge you, brothers and sisters,[8] bear with my message of exhortation, for in fact I have written to you briefly. 13:23 You should know that[9] our brother Timothy has been released. If he comes soon, he will be with me when I see you.[10] 13:24 Greetings to all your leaders and all the saints. Those from Italy send you greetings. 13:25 Grace be with you all.[11]

[2] tn Grk "neglect doing good and fellowship."

[3] tn Or "as ones who will give an account"; Grk "as giving an account."

[4] tn Grk "that they may do this."

[5] tn Grk "I urge you to do this all the more."

[6] tc Some MSS (C P Ψ 6 629* 630 1505 pm latt sy^{h}) read ὑμῖν (humin, "in you") here, but ἡμῖν (hēmin) has stronger external support (𝔓^{46} ℵ A D^{vid} K 0243 0285 33 81 104 326 365 629^{c} 1175 1739 1881 pm sy^{p} co). It is also more likely that ἡμῖν would have been changed to ὑμῖν in light of the "you" which occurs at the beginning of the verse than vice versa.

[7] tc ‡ Most MSS (ℵ A [C*] 0243 0285 33 1739 1881 𝔐 latt) include the words "and ever" here, but the shorter reading (supported by 𝔓^{46} C^{3} D Ψ 6 104 365 1505 al) is preferred on internal grounds. It seemed more likely that scribes would assimilate the wording to the common NT doxological expression "for ever and ever," found especially in the Apocalypse (cf., e.g., 1 Tim 1:17; 2 Tim 4:18; Rev 4:9; 22:5) than to the "forever" of Heb 13:8. Nevertheless, a decision is difficult here. NA^{27} places the phrase in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[8] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 2:11.

[9] tn Grk "Know that" (an imperative).

[10] tn Grk "has been released, with whom, if he comes soon, I will see you."

[11] tc Most witnesses, including several important ones (ℵ^{2} A C D H Ψ 0243 1739 1881 𝔐 lat sy bo), conclude the letter with ἀμήν (amēn, "amen"). Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, there is sufficient testimony (𝔓^{46} ℵ* I^{vid} 6 33 sa) for the lack of the particle, rendering its omission the preferred reading.

James

Salutation

1:1 From James,[1] a slave[2] of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes dispersed abroad.[3] Greetings!

Joy in Trials

1:2 My brothers and sisters,[4] consider it nothing but joy[5] when you fall into all sorts of trials, 1:3 because you know that the testing of your faith produces endurance. 1:4 And let endurance have its perfect effect, so that you will be perfect and complete, not deficient in anything. 1:5 But if anyone is deficient in wisdom, he should ask God, who gives to all generously and without reprimand, and it will be given to him. 1:6 But he must ask in faith without doubting, for the one who doubts is like a wave of the sea, blown and tossed around by the wind. 1:7 For that person must not suppose that he will receive anything from the Lord, 1:8 since he is a double-minded individual,[6] unstable in all his ways.

1:9 Now the believer[7] of humble means[8] should take pride[9] in his high position.[10] 1:10 But the rich person's pride should be in his humiliation, because he will pass away like a wildflower in the meadow.[11] 1:11 For the sun rises with its heat and dries up the meadow; the petal of the flower falls off and its beauty is lost forever.[12] So also the rich person in the midst of his pursuits will wither away. 1:12 Happy is the one[13] who endures testing, because when he has proven to be genuine, he will receive the crown of life that God[14] promised to those who love him. 1:13 Let no one say when he is tempted, "I am tempted by God," for God cannot be tempted by evil,[15] and he himself tempts no one. 1:14 But each one is tempted when he is lured and enticed by his own desires. 1:15 Then when desire conceives, it gives birth to sin, and when sin is full grown, it gives birth to death. 1:16 Do not be led astray, my dear brothers and sisters.[16] 1:17 All generous giving and every perfect gift[17] is from above, coming down[18] from the Father of lights, with whom there is no variation or the slightest

[1] tn Grk "James." The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[2] tn Traditionally, "servant" or "bondservant." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

[3] tn Grk "to the twelve tribes in the Diaspora." The Greek term διασπορά (diaspora, "dispersion") refers to Jews not living in Palestine but "dispersed" or scattered among the Gentiles.

[4] tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited). Where the plural term is used in direct address, as here, "brothers and sisters" is used; where the term is singular and not direct address (as in v. 9), "believer" is preferred.

[5] tn Grk "all joy," "full joy," or "greatest joy."

[6] tn Grk "a man of two minds," continuing the description of the person in v. 7, giving the reason that he cannot expect to receive anything. The word for "man" or "individual" is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." But it sometimes is used generically to mean "anyone," "a person," as here (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 2).

sn A double-minded man is one whose devotion to God is less than total. His attention is divided between God and other things, and as a consequence he is unstable and therefore unable to receive from God.

[7] tn Grk "brother." Here the term "brother" means "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. TEV, NLT "Christians"; CEV "God's people"). The term broadly connotes familial relationships within the family of God (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a).

[8] tn Grk "the lowly brother," but "lowly/humble" is clarified in context by the contrast with "wealthy" in v. 10.

[9] tn Grk "let him boast."

[10] tn Grk "his height," "his exaltation."

[11] tn Grk "a flower of grass."

[12] tn Or "perishes," "is destroyed."

[13] tn The word for "man" or "individual" here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." However, as BDAG 79 s.v. 2 says, here it is "equivalent to τὶς someone, a person."

[14] tc Most MSS ([C] P 0246 𝔐) read ὁ κύριος (ho kurios, "the Lord") here, while others have ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God"; 4 33^{vid} 323 945 1739 al). However, several important and early witnesses (𝔓^{23} ℵ A B Ψ 81 co) have no explicit subject. In light of the scribal tendency toward clarification, and the fact that both κύριος and θεός are well represented, there can be no doubt that the original text had no explicit subject. The referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity, not because of textual basis.

[15] tn Or "God must not be tested by evil people."

[16] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[17] tn The first phrase refers to the action of giving and the second to what is given.

[18] tn Or "All generous giving and every perfect gift from above is coming down."

hint of change.[1] 1:18 By his sovereign plan he gave us birth[2] through the message of truth, that we would be a kind of firstfruits of all he created.

Living Out the Message

1:19 Understand this, my dear brothers and sisters![3] Let every person be quick to listen, slow to speak, slow to anger. 1:20 For human[4] anger does not accomplish God's righteousness.[5] 1:21 So put away all filth and evil excess and humbly[6] welcome the message implanted within you, which is able to save your souls. 1:22 But be sure you live out the message and do not merely listen to it and so deceive yourselves. 1:23 For if someone merely listens to the message and does not live it out, he is like someone[7] who gazes at his own face[8] in a mirror. 1:24 For he gazes at himself and then goes out and immediately forgets[9] what sort of person he was. 1:25 But the one who peers into the perfect law of liberty and fixes his attention there,[10] and does not become a forgetful listener but one who lives it out – he[11] will be blessed in what he does.[12] 1:26 If someone thinks he is religious yet does not bridle his tongue, and so deceives his heart, his religion is futile. 1:27 Pure and undefiled religion before[13] God the Father[14] is this: to care for orphans and widows in their misfortune and to keep oneself unstained by the world.

Prejudice and the Law of Love

2:1 My brothers and sisters,[15] do not show prejudice[16] if you possess faith[17] in our glorious Lord Jesus Christ.[18] 2:2 For if someone[19] comes into your assembly[20] wearing a gold ring and fine clothing, and a poor person enters in filthy clothes, 2:3 do you pay attention to the one who is finely dressed and say,[21] "You sit here in a good place,"[22] and to the poor person, "You stand over there," or "Sit on the floor"?[23] 2:4 If so, have you not made distinctions[24] among yourselves and become judges with evil motives?[25] 2:5 Listen, my dear brothers and sisters![26] Did not God choose the poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom that he promised to those who love him? 2:6 But you have dishonored the poor![27] Are not the rich oppressing you and dragging you into the courts? 2:7 Do they not blaspheme the good name of the one you belong to?[28] 2:8 But if you fulfill the royal law as expressed in this scripture,[29] "You shall love your neighbor as yourself,"[30] you are doing well. 2:9 But if you show prejudice, you are committing sin and are convicted by the law as violators.[31] 2:10 For the one who obeys the whole law but fails[32] in one point has become guilty of all of it.[33] 2:11 For he who said, "Do not commit adultery,"[34] also said, "Do

[1] tn Grk "variation or shadow of turning" (referring to the motions of heavenly bodies causing variations of light and darkness).

[2] tn Grk "Having willed, he gave us birth."

[3] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[4] tn The word translated "human" here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." But it sometimes is used generically to mean "anyone," "a person" (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 2), and in this context, contrasted with "God's righteousness," the point is "human" anger (not exclusively "male" anger).

[5] sn God's righteousness could refer to (1) God's righteous standard, (2) the righteousness God gives, (3) righteousness before God, or (4) God's eschatological righteousness (see P. H. Davids, James [NIGTC], 93, for discussion).

[6] tn Or "with meekness."

[7] tn The word for "man" or "individual" is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." However, as BDAG 79 s.v. 2 says, here it is "equivalent to τις someone, a person."

[8] tn Grk "the face of his beginning [or origin]."

[9] tn Grk "and he has gone out and immediately has forgotten."

[10] tn Grk "continues."

[11] tn Grk "this one."

[12] tn Grk "in his doing."

[13] tn Or "in the sight of"; Grk "with."

[14] tn Grk "the God and Father."

[15] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[16] tn Or "partiality."

[17] tn Grk "do not have faith with personal prejudice," with emphasis on the last phrase.

[18] tn Grk "our Lord Jesus Christ of glory." Here δόξης (doxēs) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

[19] tn The word for "man" or "individual" here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means "male" or "man (as opposed to woman)." But as BDAG 79 s.v. 2 says, "equivalent to τις someone."

[20] tn Grk "synagogue." Usually συναγωγή refers to Jewish places of worship (e.g., Matt 4:23, Mark 1:21, Luke 4:15, John 6:59). The word can be used generally to refer to a place of assembly, and here it refers specifically to a Christian assembly (BDAG 963 s.v. 2.b.).

[21] tn Grk "and you pay attention...and say," continuing the "if" clauses from v. 2. In the Greek text, vv. 2-4 form one long sentence.

[22] tn Or "sit here, please."

[23] tn Grk "sit under my footstool." The words "on the floor" have been supplied in the translation to clarify for the modern reader the undesirability of this seating arrangement (so also TEV, NIV, CEV, NLT). Another option followed by a number of translations is to replace "under my footstool" with "at my feet" (NAB, NIV, NRSV).

[24] tn Grk "have you not made distinctions" (as the conclusion to the series of "if" clauses in vv. 2-3).

[25] tn Grk "judges of evil reasonings."

[26] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[27] tn This is singular: "the poor person," perhaps referring to the hypothetical one described in vv. 2-3.

[28] tn Grk "that was invoked over you," referring to their baptism in which they confessed their faith in Christ and were pronounced to be his own. To have the Lord's name "named over them" is OT imagery for the Lord's ownership of his people (cf. 2 Chr 7:14; Amos 9:12; Isa 63:19; Jer 14:9; 15:16; Dan 9:19; Acts 15:17).

[29] tn Grk "according to the scripture."

[30] sn A quotation from Lev 19:18 (also quoted in Matt 19:19; 22:39; Mark 12:31; Luke 10:27; Rom 13:9; Gal 5:14).

[31] tn Or "transgressors."

[32] tn Or "stumbles."

[33] tn Grk "guilty of all."

[34] sn A quotation from Exod 20:14 and Deut 5:18.

not murder.”[1] Now if you do not commit adultery but do commit murder, you have become a violator of the law. 2:12 Speak and act as those who will be judged by a law that gives freedom.[2] 2:13 For judgment is merciless for the one who has shown no mercy. But mercy triumphs over[3] judgment.

Faith and Works Together

2:14 What good is it, my brothers and sisters,[4] if someone claims to have faith but does not have works? Can this kind of faith[5] save him?[6] 2:15 If a brother or sister[7] is poorly clothed and lacks daily food, 2:16 and one of you says to them, “Go in peace, keep warm and eat well,” but you do not give them what the body needs,[8] what good is it? 2:17 So also faith, if it does not have works, is dead being by itself. 2:18 But someone will say, “You have faith and I have works.”[9] Show me your faith without works and I will show you faith by[10] my works. 2:19 You believe that God is one; well and good.[11] Even the demons believe that – and tremble with fear.[12]

2:20 But would you like evidence,[13] you empty fellow,[14] that faith without works is useless?[15] 2:21 Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he offered Isaac his son on the altar? 2:22 You see that his faith was working together with his works and his faith was perfected by works. 2:23 And the scripture was fulfilled that says, “Now Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness,”[16] and he was called God’s friend.[17] 2:24 You see that a person is justified by works and not by faith alone. 2:25 And similarly, was not Rahab the prostitute also justified by works when she welcomed the messengers and sent them out by another way? 2:26 For just as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead.

The Power of the Tongue

3:1 Not many of you should become teachers, my brothers and sisters,[18] because you know that we will be judged more strictly.[19] 3:2 For we all stumble[20] in many ways. If someone does not stumble[21] in what he says,[22] he is a perfect individual,[23] able to control the entire body as well. 3:3 And if we put bits into the mouths of horses to get them to obey us, then we guide their entire bodies.[24] 3:4 Look at ships too: Though they are so large and driven by harsh winds, they are steered by a tiny rudder wherever the pilot’s inclination directs. 3:5 So too the tongue is a small part of the body,[25] yet it has great pretensions.[26] Think[27] how small a flame sets a huge forest ablaze. 3:6 And the tongue is a fire! The tongue represents[28] the world of wrongdoing among the parts of our bodies. It[29] pollutes the entire body and sets fire to the course of human existence – and is set on fire by hell.[30]

[1] sn A quotation from Exod 20:13 and Deut 5:17.

[2] tn Grk “a law of freedom.”

[3] tn Grk “boasts against, exults over,” in victory.

[4] tn Grk “brothers.” See note on the phrase “brothers and sisters” in 1:2.

[5] tn Grk “the faith,” referring to the kind of faith just described: faith without works. The article here is anaphoric, referring to the previous mention of the noun πίστις (pistis) in the verse. See ExSyn 219.

[6] sn The form of the question in Greek expects a negative answer.

[7] tn It is important to note that the words ἀδελφός (adelphos) and ἀδελφή (adelphē) both occur in the Greek text at this point, confirming that the author intended to refer to both men and women. See the note on “someone” in 2:2.

[8] tn Grk “what is necessary for the body.”

[9] tn There is considerable doubt about where the words of the “someone” end and where James’ reply begins. Some see the quotation running to the end of v. 18; others to the end of v. 19. But most punctuate as shown above. The “someone” is then an objector, and the sense of his words is something like, “Some have faith; others have works; don’t expect everyone to have both.” James’ reply is that faith cannot exist or be seen without works.

[10] tn Or “from.”

[11] tn Grk “you do well.”

[12] tn Grk “believe and tremble.” The words “with fear” are implied.

[13] tn Grk “do you want to know.”

[14] tn Grk “O empty man.” Here the singular vocative ἄνθρωπε (anthrōpe, “man”) means “person” or even “fellow.” Cf. BDAG 82 s.v. ἄνθρωπος 8 which views this as an instance of rhetorical address in a letter; the pejorative sense is also discussed under the previous heading (7).

[15] tc Most witnesses, including several important ones (𝔎 A C^2 P Ψ 33 𝔐 sy bo), have νεκρά (nekra, “dead”) here, while $𝔓^{74}$ reads κενή (kenē, “empty”). Both variants are most likely secondary, derived from ἀργή (argē, “useless”). The reading of the majority is probably an assimilation to the statements in vv. 17 and 26, while $𝔓^{74}$’s reading picks up on κενέ (kene) earlier in the verse. The external evidence (B C* 323 945 1739 sa) for ἀργή is sufficient for authenticity; coupled with the strong internal evidence for the reading (if νεκρά were original, how would ἀργή have arisen here and not in vv. 17 or 26?), it is strongly preferred.

[16] sn A quotation from Gen 15:6.

[17] sn An allusion to 2 Chr 20:7; Isa 41:8; 51:2; Dan 3:35 (LXX), in which Abraham is called God’s “beloved.”

[18] tn Grk “brothers.” See note on the phrase “brothers and sisters” in 1:2.

[19] tn Grk “will receive a greater judgment.”

[20] tn Or “fail.”

[21] tn Or “fail.”

[22] tn Grk “in speech.”

[23] tn The word for “man” or “individual” is ἀνήρ (anēr), which often means “male” or “man (as opposed to woman).” But it sometimes is used generically to mean “anyone,” “a person,” as here (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 2).

[24] tn Grk “their entire body.”

[25] tn Grk “a small member.”

[26] tn Grk “boasts of great things.”

[27] tn Grk “Behold.”

[28] tn Grk “makes itself,” “is made.”

[29] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[30] sn The word translated hell is “Gehenna” (γέεννα, geenna), a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew words ge hinnom (“Valley of Hinnom”). This was the valley along the south side of Jerusalem. In OT times it was used for human sacrifices to the pagan god Molech (cf. Jer 7:31; 19:5-6; 32:35), and it came to be used as a place where human excrement and rubbish were disposed of and burned. In the intertestamental period, it came to be used symbolically as the place of divine punishment (cf. 1 En. 27:2, 90:26; 4 Ezra 7:36).

3:7 For every kind of animal, bird, reptile, and sea creature[1] is subdued and has been subdued by humankind.[2] 3:8 But no human being can subdue the tongue; it is a restless[3] evil, full of deadly poison. 3:9 With it we bless the Lord[4] and Father, and with it we curse people[5] made in God's image. 3:10 From the same mouth come blessing and cursing. These things should not be so, my brothers and sisters.[6] 3:11 A spring does not pour out fresh water and bitter water from the same opening, does it? 3:12 Can a fig tree produce olives, my brothers and sisters,[7] or a vine produce figs? Neither can a salt water spring produce fresh water.

True Wisdom

3:13 Who is wise and understanding among you? By his good conduct he should show his works done in the gentleness that wisdom brings.[8] 3:14 But if you have bitter jealousy and selfishness in your hearts, do not boast and tell lies against the truth. 3:15 Such[9] wisdom does not come[10] from above but is earthly, natural,[11] demonic. 3:16 For where there is jealousy and selfishness, there is disorder and every evil practice. 3:17 But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, accommodating,[12] full of mercy and good fruit,[13] impartial, and not hypocritical.[14] 3:18 And the fruit that consists of righteousness[15] is planted[16] in peace among[17] those who make peace.

Passions and Pride

4:1 Where do the conflicts and where[18] do the quarrels among you come from? Is it not from this,[19] from your passions that battle inside you?[20] 4:2 You desire and you do not have; you murder and envy and you cannot obtain; you quarrel and fight. You do not have because you do not ask; 4:3 you ask and do not receive because you ask wrongly, so you can spend it on your passions.

4:4 Adulterers, do you not know that friendship with the world means hostility toward God?[21] So whoever decides to be the world's friend makes himself God's enemy. 4:5 Or do you think the scripture means nothing when it says,[22] "The spirit that God[23] caused[24] to live within us has an envious yearning"?[25] 4:6 But he

---

[1] tn Grk (plurals), "every kind of animals and birds, of reptiles and sea creatures."

[2] tn Grk "the human species."

[3] tc Most MSS (C Ψ 1739^{c} 𝔐 as well as a few versions and fathers) read "uncontrollable" (ἀκατασχετόν, akatascheton), while the most important witnesses (𝔓^{74} ℵ A B K P 1739* latt) have "restless" (ἀκατάστατον, akatastaton). Externally, the latter reading should be preferred. Internally, however, things get a bit more complex. The notion of being uncontrollable is well suited to the context, especially as a counterbalance to v. 8a, though for this very reason scribes may have been tempted to replace ἀκατάστατον with ἀκατασχετόν. However, in a semantically parallel early Christian text, ἀκατάστατος (akatastatos) was considered strong enough of a term to denounce slander as "a restless demon" (Herm. 27:3). On the other hand, ἀκατάστατον may have been substituted for ἀκατασχετόν by way of assimilation to 1:8 (especially since both words were relatively rare, scribes may have replaced the less familiar with one that was already used in this letter). On internal evidence, it is difficult to decide, though ἀκατασχετόν is slightly preferred. However, in light of the strong support for ἀκατάστατον, and the less-than-decisive internal evidence, ἀκατάστατον is preferred instead.

[4] tc Most later MSS (𝔐), along with several versional witnesses, have θεόν (theon, "God") here instead of κύριον (kurion, "Lord"). Such is a predictable variant since nowhere else in the NT is God described as "Lord and Father," but he is called "God and Father" on several occasions. Further, the reading κύριον is well supported by early and diversified witnesses (𝔓^{20} ℵ A B C P Ψ 33 81 945 1241 1739), rendering it as the overwhelmingly preferred reading.

[5] tn Grk "men"; but here ἀνθρώπους (anthrōpous) has generic force, referring to both men and women.

[6] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[8] tn Grk "works in the gentleness of wisdom."

[9] tn Grk "This."

[10] tn Grk "come down"; "descend."

[11] tn Grk "soulish," which describes life apart from God, characteristic of earthly human life as opposed to what is spiritual. Cf. 1 Cor 2:14; 15:44-46; Jude 19.

[12] tn Or "willing to yield," "open to persuasion."

[13] tn Grk "fruits." The plural Greek term καρπούς has been translated with the collective singular "fruit."

[14] tn Or "sincere."

[15] tn Grk "the fruit of righteousness," meaning righteous living as a fruit, as the thing produced.

[16] tn Grk "is sown."

[17] tn Or "for," or possibly "by."

[18] tn The word "where" is repeated in Greek for emphasis.

[19] tn Grk "from here."

[20] tn Grk "in your members [i.e., parts of the body]."

[21] tn Grk "is hostility toward God."

[22] tn Grk "vainly says."

[23] tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] tc The Byzantine text and a few other MSS (P 33 𝔐) have the intransitive κατῴκησεν (katōkēsen) here, which turns τὸ πνεῦμα (to pneuma) into the subject of the verb: "The spirit which lives within us." But the more reliable and older witnesses (𝔓^{74} ℵ B Ψ 049 1241 1739 al) have the causative verb, κατῴκισεν (katōkisen), which implies a different subject and τὸ πνεῦμα as the object: "The spirit that he causes to live within us." Both because of the absence of an explicit subject and the relative scarcity of the causative κατοικίζω (katoikizō, "cause to dwell") compared to the intransitive κατοικέω (katoikeō, "live, dwell") in biblical Greek (κατοικίζω does not occur in the NT at all, and occurs one twelfth as frequently as κατοικέω in the LXX), it is easy to see why scribes would replace κατῴκισεν with κατῴκησεν. Thus, on internal and external grounds, κατῴκισεν is the preferred reading.

[25] tn Interpreters debate the referent of the word "spirit" in this verse: (1) The translation takes "spirit" to be the lustful capacity within people that produces a divided mind (1:8, 14) and inward conflicts regarding God (4:1-4). God has allowed it to be in man since the fall, and he provides his grace (v. 6) and the new birth through the gospel message (1:18-25) to counteract its evil effects. (2) On the other hand the word "spirit" may be taken positively as the Holy Spirit and the sense would be, "God yearns jealously for the Spirit he caused to live within us." But the word for "envious" or "jealous" is generally negative in biblical usage and the context before and after seems to favor the negative interpretation.

sn No OT verse is worded exactly this way. This is either a statement about the general teaching of scripture or a quota-gives greater grace. Therefore it says, "God opposes the proud, but he gives grace to the humble."[1] 4:7 So submit to God. But resist the devil and he will flee from you. 4:8 Draw near to God and he will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, you sinners, and make your hearts pure, you double-minded.[2] 4:9 Grieve, mourn,[3] and weep. Turn your laughter[4] into mourning and your joy into despair. 4:10 Humble yourselves before the Lord and he will exalt you.

4:11 Do not speak against one another, brothers and sisters.[5] He who speaks against a fellow believer[6] or judges a fellow believer speaks against the law and judges the law. But if you judge the law, you are not a doer of the law but its judge.[7] 4:12 But there is only one who is lawgiver and judge – the one who is able to save and destroy. On the other hand, who are you to judge your neighbor?[8]

4:13 Come now, you who say, "Today or tomorrow we will go into this or that town[9] and spend a year there and do business and make a profit." 4:14 You[10] do not know about tomorrow. What is your life like?[11] For you are a puff of smoke[12] that appears for a short time and then vanishes. 4:15 You ought to say instead,[13] "If the Lord is willing, then we will live and do this or that." 4:16 But as it is,[14] you boast in your arrogance. All such boasting is evil. 4:17 So whoever knows what is good to do[15] and does not do it is guilty of sin.[16]

Warning to the Rich

5:1 Come now, you rich! Weep and cry aloud[17] over the miseries that are coming on you. 5:2 Your riches have rotted and your clothing has become moth-eaten. 5:3 Your gold and silver have rusted and their rust will be a witness against you. It will consume your flesh like fire. It is in the last days that you have hoarded treasure![18] 5:4 Look, the pay you have held back from the workers who mowed your fields cries out against you, and the cries of the reapers have reached the ears of the Lord of hosts. 5:5 You have lived indulgently and luxuriously on the earth. You have fattened your hearts in a day of slaughter.[19] 5:6 You have condemned and murdered the righteous person, although he does not resist you.[20]

Patience in Suffering

5:7 So be patient, brothers and sisters,[21] until the Lord's return.[22] Think of how the farmer waits[23] for the precious fruit of the ground and is patient[24] for it until it receives the early and late rains. 5:8 You also be patient and strengthen your hearts, for the Lord's return is near. 5:9 Do not grumble against one another, brothers and sisters,[25] so that you may not be judged. See, the judge stands before the gates![26] 5:10 As an example of suffering and patience, brothers and sisters,[27] take the prophets who spoke in the Lord's name. 5:11 Think of how we regard[28] as blessed those who have endured. You have heard of Job's endurance and you have seen the Lord's purpose, that the Lord is full of compassion and mercy.[29] 5:12 And above all, my brothers and sisters,[30] do not swear, either by heaven or by earth or by any other oath. But let your "Yes" be yes and your "No" be no, so that you may not fall into judgment.

[1] sn A quotation from Prov 3:34.

[2] tn Or "two-minded" (the same description used in 1:8).

[3] tn This term and the following one are preceded by καί (kai) in the Greek text, but contemporary English generally uses connectives only between the last two items in such a series.

[4] tn Grk "let your laughter be turned."

[5] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[8] tn Grk "who judges your neighbor."

[9] tn Or "city."

[10] tn Grk "who" (continuing the description of the people of v. 13). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[11] tn Or "you do not know what your life will be like tomorrow."

[12] tn Or "a vapor." The Greek word ἀτμίς (atmis) denotes a swirl of smoke arising from a fire (cf. Gen 19:28; Lev 16:13; Joel 2:30 [Acts 2:19]; Ezek 8:11).

[13] tn Grk "instead of your saying."

[14] tn Grk "but now."

[17] tn Or "wail"; Grk "crying aloud."

[18] tn Or "hoarded up treasure for the last days"; Grk "in the last days."

[19] sn James' point seems to be that instead of seeking deliverance from condemnation, they have defied God's law (fattened your hearts) and made themselves more likely objects of his judgment (in a day of slaughter).

[20] tn Literally a series of verbs without connectives, "you have condemned, you have murdered...he does not resist."

[21] tn Grk "brothers"; this phrase occurs again three times in the paragraph. See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[22] tn Or "advent"; or "coming" (also in v. 8).

[23] tn Grk "Behold! The farmer waits."

[24] tn Grk "being patient."

[25] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[26] sn The term gates is used metaphorically here. The physical referent would be the entrances to the city, but the author uses the term to emphasize the imminence of the judge's approach.

[27] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[28] tn Grk "Behold! We regard..."

[29] sn An allusion to Exod 34:6; Neh 9:17; Ps 86:15; 102:13; Joel 2:13; Jonah 4:2.

[30] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

Prayer for the Sick

5:13 Is anyone among you suffering? He should pray. Is anyone in good spirits? He should sing praises. 5:14 Is anyone among you ill? He should summon the elders of the church, and they should pray for him and anoint[1] him with oil in the name of the Lord. 5:15 And the prayer of faith will save the one who is sick and the Lord will raise him up – and if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven.[2] 5:16 So confess your sins to one another and pray for one another so that you may be healed. The prayer of a righteous person has great effectiveness.[3] 5:17 Elijah was a human being[4] like us, and he prayed earnestly[5] that it would not rain and there was no rain on the land for three years and six months! 5:18 Then[6] he prayed again, and the sky gave rain and the land sprouted with a harvest.

5:19 My brothers and sisters,[7] if anyone among you wanders from the truth and someone turns him back, 5:20 he should know that the one who turns a sinner back from his wandering path[8] will save that person's[9] soul from death and will cover a multitude of sins.

[1] tn Grk "anointing."

[2] tn Grk "it will be forgiven him."

[3] tn Or "the fervent prayer of a righteous person is very powerful"; Grk "is very powerful in its working."

[4] tn Although it is certainly true that Elijah was a "man," here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) has been translated as "human being" because the emphasis in context is not on Elijah's masculine gender, but on the common humanity he shared with the author and the readers.

[5] tn Grk "he prayed with prayer" (using a Hebrew idiom to show intensity).

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events.

[7] tn Grk "brothers." See note on the phrase "brothers and sisters" in 1:2.

[8] tn Grk "from the error of his way" (using the same root as the verb "to wander, to err" in the first part of the verse).

[9] tn Grk "his soul"; the referent (the sinner mentioned at the beginning of the verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

1 Peter

Salutation

1:1 From Peter,[1] an apostle of Jesus Christ, to those temporarily residing[2] abroad[3] (in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, the province of Asia,[4] and Bithynia) who are chosen[5] 1:2 according to the foreknowledge of God the Father by being set apart by the Spirit for obedience and for sprinkling[6] with Jesus Christ's blood. May grace and peace be yours in full measure![7]

New Birth to Joy and Holiness

1:3 Blessed be[8] the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! By his great mercy he gave us new birth into a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, 1:4 that is,[9] into[10] an inheritance imperishable, undefiled, and unfading. It is reserved in heaven for you, 1:5 who by God's power are protected through faith for a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.
1:6 This brings you great joy,[11] although you may have to suffer[12] for a short time in various trials.
1:7 Such trials show the proven character of your faith,[13] which is much more valuable than gold – gold that is tested by fire, even though it is passing away[14] – and will bring praise[15] and glory and honor when Jesus Christ is revealed.[16] 1:8 You[17] have not seen him, but you love him. You[18] do not see him now but you believe in him, and so you rejoice[19] with an indescribable and glorious[20] joy, 1:9 because you are attaining the goal of your faith
– the salvation of your souls.

1:10 Concerning this salvation,[21] the prophets[22] who predicted the grace that would come to you[23] searched and investigated carefully.

---

1 tn Grk "Peter." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Or "to those living as resident foreigners," "to the exiles." This term is used metaphorically of Christians who live in this world as foreigners, since their homeland is heaven.

3 tn Grk "in the Diaspora." The Greek term διασπορά (diaspora, "dispersion") refers to Jews not living in Palestine but "dispersed" or scattered among the Gentiles. But here it is probably metaphorical, used of Gentile Christians spread out as God's people in the midst of a godless world.

4 tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

5 tn Or "to the chosen sojourners..." On this reading the phrases in v. 2 describe their entire existence as sojourners, etc., not just their election.

6 sn For obedience and for sprinkling indicates the purpose of their choice or election by God.

7 tn Grk "be multiplied to you."

8 tn There is no verb in the Greek text; either the optative ("be") or the indicative ("is") can be supplied. The meaning of the term εὐλογητός (eulogētos) and the author's intention at this point in the epistle must both come into play to determine which is the preferred nuance. εὐλογητός as an adjective can mean either that one is praised or that one is blessed, that is, in a place of favor and benefit. Two factors of the author's style come into play. At this point the author is describing the reality of believers' salvation and will soon explain believers' necessary response; this is in emulation of Pauline style which generally follows the same logical order (although the author here discusses the reality in a much more compressed fashion). On the other hand, when imitating the Pauline greeting, which is normally verbless, the author inserts the optative (see v. 2 above). When considered as a whole, although a decision is difficult, the fact that the author in the immediate context has used the optative when imitating a Pauline stylized statement would argue for the optative here. The translation uses the term "blessed" in the sense "worthy of praise" as this is in keeping with the traditional translation of berakah psalms. Cf. also 2 Cor 1:3; Eph 1:3.

9 tn The phrase "that is" is supplied in the translation to indicate that the imperishable inheritance is in apposition to the living hope of v. 3.

10 tn Grk "into," continuing the description of v. 3 without an "and."

11 tn Grk "in which you exult."

12 tc ‡ The oldest and best witnesses lack the verb (א* B, along with 1505 pc), but most MSS (𝔓72 א2 A C P Ψ 048 33 1739 𝔐) have ἐστίν here (estin, "[if] it is [necessary]"). The verb looks to be an explanatory gloss. But if no verb is present, this opens up the time frame in the author's mind even more, since the conditional particle for both the first class condition and the fourth class condition is εἰ (ei). That may well be what was on the author's mind, as evidenced by some of his other allusions to suffering in this little letter (3:14, 17). NA27 has the verb in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "Though now, for a little while if necessary, you may have to suffer."

13 tn Or "genuineness," the result of testing. On the other hand it may denote the process of testing: "that the proving of your faith...may bring praise."

sn The author is not asserting that the quality of the readers' faith is in doubt and will be proven by future trials. He declares their faith to be a present reality in v. 5 and 9, so in context v. 8 affirms that their faith is indeed genuine.

14 tn Grk "which is passing away but is tested by fire," describing gold in a lesser-to-greater comparison with faith's proven character.

15 tn Grk "that the testing of your faith...may be found unto praise," showing the result of the trials mentioned in v. 6.

16 tn Grk "at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (cf. v. 13).

17 tn Grk "whom not having seen, you love." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

18 tn Grk "in whom not now seeing..." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

19 tn Grk "in whom not now seeing but believing, you exult." The participles have been translated as finite verbs due to requirements of contemporary English style.

20 tn Grk "glorified."

21 tn Grk "about which salvation."

22 sn Prophets refers to the OT prophets.

23 tn Grk "who prophesied about the grace that is to/for you."

1:11 They probed[1] into what person or time[2] the Spirit of Christ within them was indicating when he testified beforehand about the sufferings appointed for Christ[3] and his subsequent glory.[4] 1:12 They were shown[5] that they were serving not themselves but you, in regard to the things now announced to you through those who proclaimed the gospel to you by the Holy Spirit sent from heaven – things angels long to catch a glimpse of.

1:13 Therefore, get your minds ready for action[6] by being fully sober, and set your hope[7] completely on the grace that will be brought to you when Jesus Christ is revealed.[8] 1:14 Like obedient children, do not comply with[9] the evil urges you used to follow in your ignorance,[10] 1:15 but, like the Holy One who called you, become holy yourselves in all of your conduct, 1:16 for it is written, "You shall be holy, because I am holy."[11] 1:17 And if you address as Father the one who impartially judges according to each one's work, live out the time of your temporary residence here[12] in reverence. 1:18 You know that from your empty way of life inherited from your ancestors you were ransomed – not by perishable things like silver or gold, 1:19 but by precious blood like that of an unblemished and spotless lamb, namely Christ. 1:20 He was foreknown[13] before the foundation of the world but[14] was manifested in these last times[15] for your sake. 1:21 Through him you now trust[16] in God, who raised him from the dead and gave him glory, so that your faith and hope are in God.

1:22 You have purified[17] your souls by obeying the truth[18] in order to show sincere mutual love.[19] So[20] love one another earnestly from a pure heart.[21] 1:23 You have been born anew, not from perishable but from imperishable seed, through the living and enduring word of God. 1:24 For > all flesh[22] is like grass > and all its glory like the flower of the grass;[23]

> the grass withers and the flower falls off,
> 1:25 but the word of the Lord[24] endures forever.[25]

And this is the word that was proclaimed to you.

---

1 tn Grk "probing." The participle continues the sentence from v. 10 but has been translated as an indicative for English style.

2 tn Or "time or circumstances," focusing not on the person but on the timing and circumstances of the fulfillment.

sn The OT prophets wondered about the person and the surrounding circumstances (time) through which God would fulfill his promised salvation.

3 tn Grk "the sufferings unto Christ," i.e., sufferings directed toward him, what he was destined to suffer.

4 tn Grk "the glories after these things."

5 tn Grk "to whom [pl.] it was revealed."

6 tn Grk "binding up the loins of your mind," a figure of speech drawn from the Middle Eastern practice of gathering up long robes around the waist to prepare for work or action.

7 tn Grk "having bound up..., being sober, set your hope..."

8 tn Grk "at the revelation of Jesus Christ" (cf. v. 7).

9 tn Or "do not be conformed to"; Grk "not being conformed to."

10 tn Grk "the former lusts in your ignorance."

11 sn A quotation from Lev 19:2.

12 tn Grk "the time of your sojourn," picturing the Christian's life in this world as a temporary stay in a foreign country (cf. 1:1).

13 tn Grk "who was foreknown," describing Christ in v. 19. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

14 tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

15 tn Grk "at the last of the times."

16 tc Although there may be only a slight difference in translation, the term translated as "trust" is the adjective πιστούς (pistous). This is neither as common nor as clear as the verb πιστεύω (pisteuō, "believe, trust"). Consequently, most MSS have the present participle πιστεύοντας (pisteuontas; 𝔓72 ℵ C P Ψ 1739 𝔐), or the aorist participle πιστεύσαντες (pisteusantes; 33 pc), while A B pc vg have the adjective. Thus, πιστούς is to be preferred. In the NT the adjective is routinely taken passively in the sense of "faithful" (BDAG 820 s.v. πιστός 1). That may be part of the force here as well: "you are now faithful to God," although the primary force in this context seems to be that of trusting. Nevertheless, it is difficult to separate faith from faithfulness in NT descriptions of Christians' dependence on God.

tn Grk "who through him [are] trusting," describing the "you" of v. 20. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

17 tn Grk "having purified," as the preparation for the love described in the second half of the verse.

18 tc Most later MSS (P 𝔐) have διὰ πνεύματος (dia pneumatos, "through the spirit") after ἀληθείας (alētheias, "truth"), while the words are lacking in a broad spectrum of early and important witnesses (𝔓72 ℵ A B C Ψ 33 81 323 945 1241 1739 al vg sy co). On external grounds, the shorter reading cannot be easily explained if it were not original. The longer reading is clearly secondary, added to show more strongly God's part in man's obedience to the truth. But the addition ignores the force that the author gives to "purified" and ruins the balance between v. 22 and v. 23 (for in v. 23 the emphasis is on God's part; here, on man's part).

19 tn Grk "for sincere brotherly love."

20 tn Verses 22-23 are a single sentence in the Greek text. To improve clarity (and because contemporary English tends to use shorter sentences) these verses have been divided into three sentences in the translation. In addition, "So" has been supplied at the beginning of the second English sentence (v. 22b) to indicate the relationship with the preceding statement.

21 tc A few MSS (A B 1852 pc) lack καθαρᾶς (katharas, "pure") and read simply καρδίας (kardias, "from the heart"), but there is excellent MS support (𝔓72 ℵ* C P Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 co) for the word. The omission may have been accidental. In the uncial script (ΚΑΘΑΡΑC ΚΑΡΔΙΑC) an accidental omission could have happened via homoioteleuton or homoioarcton. καθαρᾶς should be considered original.

22 sn Here all flesh is a metaphor for humanity – human beings as both frail and temporary.

23 tn Or "a wildflower."

24 sn The word of the Lord is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; here and in Luke 22:61, Acts 11:16) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said.

25 sn A quotation from Isa 40:6, 8.

2:1 So get rid of[1] all evil and all deceit and hypocrisy and envy and all slander. 2:2 And[2] yearn[3] like newborn infants for pure, spiritual milk,[4] so that by it you may grow up to[5] salvation,[6] 2:3 if you have experienced[7] the Lord's kindness.[8]

A Living Stone, a Chosen People

2:4 So as you come to him,[9] a living stone rejected by men but[10] chosen and priceless[11] in God's sight, 2:5 you yourselves, as living stones, are built up as a spiritual house to be a holy priesthood and to offer[12] spiritual sacrifices that are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. 2:6 For it says[13] in scripture, "Look, I lay in Zion a stone, a chosen and priceless cornerstone,[14] and whoever believes[15] in him[16] will never[17] be put to shame."[18] 2:7 So you who believe see[19] his value,[20] but for those who do not believe, the stone that the builders rejected has become the[21] cornerstone,[22] 2:8 and a stumbling-stone[23] and a rock to trip over.[24] They stumble[25] because they disobey the word, as they were destined to do.[26] 2:9 But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people of his own, so that you may proclaim the virtues[27] of the one who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. 2:10 You[28] once were not a people, but now you are God's people. You were shown no mercy,[29] but now you have received mercy.

2:11 Dear friends, I urge you as foreigners and exiles to keep away from fleshly desires that do battle against the soul, 2:12 and maintain good conduct[30] among the non-Christians,[31] so that though[32] they now malign you as wrongdoers, they may see your good deeds and glorify God when he appears.[33]

Submission to Authorities

2:13 Be subject to every human institution[34] for the Lord's sake, whether to a king as supreme 2:14 or to governors as those he commissions[35] to punish wrongdoers and praise[36] those who do good. 2:15 For God wants you[37] to silence the ignorance of foolish people by doing good. 2:16 Live[38] as free people, not using your freedom as a pretext for evil, but as God's

---

[1] tn Or "put away."

[2] tn Here "And" has been supplied in the translation to show clearly the connection between vv. 1 and 2.

[3] tn Grk "getting rid of…yearn for."

[4] tn The word for spiritual in Greek is λογικός (logikos), which is a play on words with the reference in 1:23-25 to the living and enduring word (λόγος, logos) of God, through which they were born anew. This is a subtle indication that the nourishment for their growth must be the word of God.

[5] tn Or "in, in regard to." But the focus of "salvation" here, as in 1:5, 9, is the future deliverance of these who have been born anew and protected by God's power.

[6] tc The Byzantine text lacks εἰς σωτηρίαν (eis sōtērian, "to salvation"), while the words are found in the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓^{72} ℵ A B C K P Ψ 33 81 630 1241 1505 1739 al latt sy co). Not only is the longer reading superior externally, but since the notion of growing up [in]to salvation would have seemed theologically objectionable, it is easy to see why some scribes would omit it.

[7] tn Grk "have tasted that the Lord is kind."

[8] sn A quotation from Ps 34:8.

[9] tn Grk "to whom coming…you are built up…" as a continuation of the reference to the Lord in v. 3.

[10] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two phrases more than can be easily expressed in English.

[11] tn Grk "chosen, priceless."

[12] tn Grk "unto a holy priesthood to offer."

[13] tn Grk "it contains," "it stands."

[14] tn Grk "chosen, priceless."

[15] tn Grk "the one who believes."

[16] tn Grk either "in him" or "in it," but the OT and NT uses personify the stone as the King, the Messiah whom God will establish in Jerusalem.

[17] tn The negative (οὐ μή, ou mē) is emphatic: "will certainly not."

[18] sn A quotation from Isa 28:16.

[19] tn Grk "to you who believe is the value," referring to their perception of the stone in contrast to those who reject (vv. 7b-8). But the expression may also be translated as "to you who believe is this honor," referring to the lack of shame cited in v. 6b.

[20] tn Grk "the value" or "the honor," but the former is preferred since it comes from the same root as "priceless" in vv. 4, 6, and it is in contrast to the negative estimate of the stone by those who reject (vv. 7b-8).

[21] tn Grk "the head of the corner."

[22] sn A quotation from Ps 118:22 (cf. Matt 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11).

[23] tn Grk "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense." The latter phrase uses the term σκάνδαλον (skandalon), denoting an obstacle to faith, something that arouses anger and rejection.

[24] sn A quotation from Isa 8:14.

[25] tn Grk "who stumble," referring to "those who do not believe" in vs. 7. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[26] tn Grk "to which they were also destined."

[27] sn This verse contains various allusions and quotations from Exod 19:5-6; 23:22 (LXX); Isa 43:20-21; and Mal 3:17.

[28] tn Grk "who," continuing the description of the readers from vs. 9. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[29] sn The quotations in v. 10 are from Hos 1:6, 9; 2:23.

[30] tn Grk "keeping your conduct good."

[31] tn Grk "the Gentiles," used here of those who are not God's people.

[32] tn Grk "in order that in what they malign you."

[33] tn Or "when he visits." Grk "in the day of visitation," denoting a time when God intervenes directly in human affairs, either for blessing (Luke 1:68, 78; 7:16; 19:44) or for judgment (Isa 10:3; Jer 6:15). This phrase may be a quotation from Isa 10:3, in which case judgment is in view here. But blessing seems to be the point, since part of the motive for good behavior is winning the non-Christian over to the faith (as in 3:1; also apparently in 3:15; cf. Matt 5:16).

[34] tn Or "every human being"; Grk "every human creation," denoting either everything created for mankind (NRSV mg: "every institution ordained for human beings") or every creature who is human. The meaning of the verb "be subject" and the following context supports the rendering adopted in the text.

[35] tn Grk "those sent by him."

[36] tn Grk "for the punishment…and the praise."

[37] tn Grk "because thus it is God's will."

[38] tn There is no main verb in this verse, but it continues the sense of command from v. 13, "be subject…, as free people… not using…but as slaves of God."

slaves.[1] 2:17 Honor all people, love the family of believers,[2] fear God, honor the king.

2:18 Slaves,[3] be subject[4] to your masters with all reverence, not only to those who are good and gentle, but also to those who are perverse. 2:19 For this finds God's favor,[5] if because of conscience toward God[6] someone endures hardships in suffering unjustly. 2:20 For what credit is it if you sin and are mistreated and endure it? But if you do good and suffer and so endure, this finds favor with God.[7] 2:21 For to this you were called, since Christ also suffered for you, leaving an example for you to follow in his steps. 2:22 He[8] committed no sin nor was deceit found in his mouth.[9] 2:23 When he was maligned, he[10] did not answer back; when he suffered, he threatened[11] no retaliation,[12] but committed himself to God[13] who judges justly. 2:24 He[14] himself bore our sins[15] in his body on the tree, that we may cease from sinning[16] and live for righteousness. By his[17] wounds[18] you were healed.[19] 2:25 For you were going astray like sheep[20] but now you have turned back to the shepherd and guardian of your souls.

Wives and Husbands

3:1 In the same way, wives, be subject to your own husbands. Then,[21] even if some are disobedient to the word, they will be won over without a word by the way you live,[22] 3:2 when they see your pure and reverent conduct.[23] 3:3 Let your[24] beauty[25] not be external – the braiding of hair and wearing of gold jewelry[26] or fine

---

[1] tn Traditionally, "servants" or "bondservants." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

[2] tn Grk "love the brotherhood." The Greek term "brotherhood" is used in a broad sense to connote familial relationships within the family of God. BDAG 19 s.v. ἀδελφότης 1 suggests "a fellowship," but in the present context "love the fellowship of believers" could be taken to mean "love to participate in fellowship with believers," whereas the present verse suggests the Christian community as a whole, in familial terms, is in view. This same word occurs in 5:9; there it has been translated "brothers and sisters."

[3] tn The Greek term here is οἰκέτης (oiketēs), often used of a servant in a household (who would have been a slave).

[4] tn Grk "being subject," but continuing the sense of command from vs. 13.

[5] tn Grk "For this [is] favor/grace," used as a metonymy of that which pleases him, which he looks on with favor (cf. BDAG 1079 s.v. χάρις 2). Cf. 1 Pet 2:20.

[6] tc The expression "consciousness/conscience of God" (συνείδησιν θεοῦ; suneidēsin theou) is unusual, occurring only here in the NT. Because θεοῦ was liable to misinterpretation, several witnesses altered the text, either replacing it with ἀγαθήν (agathēn; C Ψ 323 614 630 945 1241 1505 1739 al sy) or expanding the expression by adding ἀγαθήν before θεοῦ (𝔓^{72} [A* 33] 81). Replacing θεοῦ with ἀγαθήν conforms to other NT phrases, notably in this same letter (Acts 23:1; 1 Tim 1:5, 19; 1 Pet 3:16, 21), suggesting that such a reading is motivated. The reading θεοῦ, however, has superior support (ℵ A^{c} B P 049 𝔐 lat co), and best explains the rise of the other readings.

tn Grk "conscious(ness) of God," an awareness of God and allegiance to him.

[7] tn Grk "For this [is] favor/grace with God," used as a metonymy as in vs. 19 of that which pleases him, which he looks on with favor (cf. BDAG 1079 s.v. χάρις 2).

[8] tn Grk "who," referring to Christ and applying the quotations from Isa 53 to him. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[9] sn A quotation from Isa 53:9.

[10] tn Grk "who being maligned," continuing the reference to Christ. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[11] tn Grk "he did not threaten, but."

[12] sn An allusion to Isa 53:7.

[13] tn Grk "to the one"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[14] tn Grk "who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[15] sn A quotation from Isa 53:4, 12.

[16] tn The verb ἀπογίνομαι (apoginomai) occurs only here in the NT. It can have a literal meaning ("to die"; L&N 74.27) and a figurative meaning ("to cease"; L&N 68.40). Because it is opposite the verb ζάω (zaō, "to live"), many argue that the meaning of the verb here must be "die" (so BDAG 108 s.v.), but even so literal death would not be in view. "In place of ἀποθνησκιεν, the common verb for 'die,' ἀπογινεθαι serves Peter as a euphemism, with the meaning 'to be away' or 'to depart'" (J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter [WBC 49], 148). It is a metaphorical way to refer to the decisive separation from sin Jesus accomplished for believers through his death; the result is that believers "may cease from sinning."

[17] tn Grk "whose." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[18] tn Grk the singular: "wound"; "injury."

[19] sn A quotation from Isa 53:5.

[20] sn A quotation from Isa 53:6.

[21] tn Grk "that...they may be won over," showing the purpose of "being subject" (vs. 1b). Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[22] tn Grk "by the wives' behavior."

[23] tn Grk "behavior," the same word translated "the way you live" in vs. 1.

[24] tn Grk "whose," referring to the wives.

[25] tn Or "adornment."

[26] tn The word "jewelry" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate that gold ornaments or jewelry is intended; otherwise the reader might assume wearing gold-colored clothing was forbidden.

clothes – 3:4 but the inner person[1] of the heart, the lasting beauty of a gentle and tranquil spirit, which is precious in God's sight. 3:5 For in the same way the holy women who hoped in God long ago adorned themselves by being subject to their husbands, 3:6 like Sarah who obeyed[2] Abraham, calling him lord. You become her children[3] when you do what is good and have no fear in doing so.[4] 3:7 Husbands, in the same way, treat your wives with consideration as the weaker partners[5] and show them honor as fellow heirs of the grace of life. In this way nothing will hinder your prayers.[6]

Suffering for Doing Good

3:8 Finally, all of you be harmonious,[7] sympathetic, affectionate, compassionate, and humble. 3:9 Do not return evil for evil or insult for insult, but instead bless[8] others[9] because you were called to inherit a blessing. 3:10 For > the one who wants to love life and see good days must keep[10] his tongue from evil and his lips from uttering deceit.

> 3:11 And he must turn away from evil and do good;
> he must seek peace and pursue it.
> 3:12 For the eyes of the Lord are[11] upon the righteous and his ears are open to their prayer.
> But the Lord's face is against those who do evil.[12]

3:13 For[13] who is going to harm you if you are devoted to what is good? 3:14 But in fact, if you happen to suffer[14] for doing what is right,[15] you are blessed. But do not be terrified of them[16] or be shaken.[17] 3:15 But set Christ[18] apart[19] as Lord in your hearts and always be ready to give an answer to anyone who asks about the hope you possess.[20] 3:16 Yet do it with courtesy and respect,[21] keeping a good conscience, so that those who slander your good conduct in Christ may be put to shame when they accuse you.[22] 3:17 For it is better to suffer for doing good, if God wills it,[23] than for doing evil.

3:18[24] Because Christ also suffered[25] once for sins,

[1] tn Grk "the hidden man." KJV's "the hidden man of the heart," referring to a wife, could be seriously misunderstood by the modern English reader.

[2] tn Grk "as Sarah obeyed."

[3] tn Grk "whose children you become."

[4] tn Grk "doing good and not fearing any intimidation."

[5] tn Grk "living together according to knowledge, as to the weaker, female vessel." The primary verbs of vs. 7 are participles ("living together…showing honor") but they continue the sense of command from the previous paragraphs.

[6] tn Grk "so that your prayers may not be hindered." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek, this clause was translated as a separate sentence.

[7] tn There is no main verb in this verse (Grk "Finally, all [ ] harmonious"), but it continues the sense of command from the previous paragraphs.

[8] tn Grk "not returning…but blessing," continuing the sense of command from the preceding.

[9] tn The direct object "others" is omitted but implied in Greek, and must be supplied to suit English style.

[10] tn Grk "stop."

[11] tn The verbs are implied but not expressed in this verse: "the Lord's eyes [ ] on the righteous and his ears [ ] to their prayer, but his face [ ] against those who do evil."

[12] sn Verses 10-12 are a quotation from Ps 34:12-16.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "For" to indicate that what follows gives an explanation.

[14] sn The Greek construction here implies that such suffering was not the norm, even though it could happen, and in fact may well have happened to some of the readers (cf. 4:4, 12-19).

[15] tn Grk "because of righteousness."

[16] tn Grk "do not fear their fear," referring to those who cause their suffering. The phrase "their fear" may mean "what they fear" (subjective genitive), but in a situation of persecution it more likely means "fear of them" (objective genitive).

[17] sn A quotation from Isa 8:12.

[18] tc Most later mss (P 𝔐) have θεόν (theon, "God") instead of Χριστόν (Christon; "Christ") here. But Χριστόν is widely supported by excellent and early witnesses (𝔓72 ℵ A B C Ψ 33 1739 al latt sy co), and as a less common idiom better explains the rise of the other reading.

[19] tn Or "sanctify Christ as Lord."

[20] tn Grk "the hope in you."

[21] tn Grk "but with courtesy and respect," continuing the command of v. 15. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[22] tn Grk "when you are spoken against."

[23] tn Grk "if the will of God should will it." As in 3:14 the Greek construction here implies that suffering for doing good was not what God normally willed, even though it could happen, and in fact may have happened to some of the readers (cf. 4:4, 12-19).

[24] sn This passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

[25] tc The variants here are legion (B. M. Metzger produces eight variants in a nice layout of the evidence [TCGNT 622]). Most of these variants involve pronouns, prepositions, or word order changes, but the major problem involves whether Christ "suffered" (ἔπαθεν, epathen) or "died" (ἀπέθανεν, apethanen). The witnesses that read ἀπέθανεν are 𝔓72 ℵ A C*vid* Ψ 0285 33 614 630 945 1241 1505 1739; the witnesses that read ἔπαθεν are B L P 81 𝔐. Although the external evidence slightly favors ἀπέθανεν, such may be a secondary reading. Intrinsically, ἔπαθεν both fits the context better, especially the verbal link between v. 17 and v. 18 (note in particular the introductory causal ὅτι [hoti, "because"] and the emphatic καί [kai, "also"]), and fits the author's style (1 Peter never uses ἀποθνήσκω [apothnēskō], but uses πάσχω [paschō] 11 other times, more than any other NT book). However, scribes would most likely realize this, and might conform the verb in v. 18 to the author's typical usage. It may be argued, however, that scribes tended to alter the text in light of more common NT idioms, and did not have as much sensitivity to the literary features in the immediate context. In this instance, it may not be insignificant that the NT collocates ἀποθνήσκω with ἁμαρτία (hamartia, "sin") seven other times, though only once (1 Cor 15:3) with a meaning similar to what would be dethe just for the unjust,[1] to bring you to God, by being put to death in the flesh

but[2] by being made alive in the spirit.[3] 3:19 In it[4] he went and preached to the spirits in prison,[5]

3:20 after they were disobedient long ago[6] when God patiently waited[7] in the days of Noah as an ark was being constructed. In the ark[8] a few, that is eight souls, were delivered through water. 3:21 And this prefigured baptism, which now saves you[9] – not the washing off of physical dirt[10] but the pledge[11] of a good conscience to God – through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, 3:22 who went into heaven and is at the right hand of God[12] with angels and authorities and powers subject to him.[13]

4:1 So, since Christ suffered[14] in the flesh, you also arm yourselves with the same attitude, because the one who has suffered in the flesh has finished with sin,[15] 4:2 in that he spends the rest of his time[16] on earth concerned about the will of God and not human desires. 4:3 For the time that has passed was sufficient for you to do what the non-Christians[17] desire.[18] You lived then[19] in debauchery, evil desires, drunkenness, carousing, drinking bouts,[20] and wanton manded here, but collocates πάσχω with ἁμαρτία in only one other place, 1 Pet 4:1, where the meaning also detours from what is seen here. All in all, a decision is difficult, but ἔπαθεν is to be preferred slightly.

[1] sn The reference to the just suffering for the unjust is an allusion to Isa 53:11-12.

[2] tn Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two phrases more than can be easily expressed in English.

[3] sn Put to death in the flesh...made alive in the spirit. The contrast of flesh and spirit is not between two parts of Christ's person (material versus immaterial) but between two broader modes of existence: the realm of unregenerate earthly life versus eternal heavenly life. The reference may not be to the Holy Spirit directly, but indirectly, since the Spirit permeates and characterizes the spiritual mode of existence. However, ExSyn 343 (n. 76) states "It is often objected that the Holy Spirit cannot be in view because the two datives of v 18 (σαρκί, πνεύματι [sarkiì, pneumati]) would then have a different syntactical force (sphere, means). But if 1 Pet 3:18 is a hymnic or liturgical fragment, this can be no objection because of 'poetic license': poetry is replete with examples of grammatical and lexical license, not the least of which is the use of the same morpho-syntactic categories, in parallel lines, with entirely different senses (note, e.g., the dat. expressions in 1 Tim 3:16)."

[4] tn Grk "in which." ExSyn 343 notes: "The antecedent of the RP [relative pronoun] is by no means certain. Some take it to refer to πνεύματι immediately preceding, the meaning of which might be either the Holy Spirit or the spiritual state. Others see the phrase as causal ('for which reason,' 'because of this'), referring back to the entire clause, while still other scholars read the phrase as temporal (if so, it could be with or without an antecedent: 'on which occasion' or 'meanwhile'). None of these options is excluded by syntax. It may be significant, however, that every other time ἐν ᾧ is used in 1 Peter it bears an adverbial/conjunctive force (cf. 1:6; 2:12; 3:16 [here, temporal]; 4:4)." Also, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[5] sn And preached to the spirits in prison. The meaning of this preaching and the spirits to whom he preached are much debated. It is commonly understood to be: (1) Christ's announcement of his victory over evil to the fallen angels who await judgment for their role in leading the Noahic generation into sin; this proclamation occurred sometime between Christ's death and ascension; or (2) Christ's preaching of repentance through Noah to the unrighteous humans, now dead and confined in hell, who lived in the days of Noah. The latter is preferred because of the temporal indications in v. 20a and the wider argument of the book. These verses encourage Christians to stand for righteousness and try to influence their contemporaries for the gospel in spite of the suffering that may come to them. All who identify with them and their Savior will be saved from the coming judgment, just as in Noah's day.

[6] tn This reflects a Greek participle, literally "having been disobedient formerly," that refers to the "spirits" in v. 19. Many translations take this as adjectival describing the spirits ("who had once been disobedient"; cf. NASB, NIV, NKJV, NLT, NRSV, TEV), but the grammatical construction strongly favors an adverbial interpretation describing the time of the preaching, as reflected above.

[7] tn Grk "the patience of God waited."

[8] tn Grk "in which," referring to the ark; the referent (the ark) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[9] tn Grk "which also, [as] an antitype, now saves you, [that is] baptism." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[10] tn Grk "the removal of the dirt of the flesh," where flesh refers to the physical make-up of the body with no moral connotations.

[11] tn Or "response"; "answer."

[12] tn Grk "who is at the right hand...having gone into heaven."

[13] tn Grk "angels...having been subjected to him."

[14] tc Most MSS (𝔎² A P 𝔐) add ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν (huper hēmōn, "for us"); others (𝔎* 69 1505 pc) add ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν (huper humōn, "for you"), the first hand of 𝔎 also has ἀποθανόντος (apothanontos, "since he died") instead of παθόντος (pathontos, "since he suffered"). But the reading without ὑπὲρ ἡ/ὑμῶν best explains the rise of the other readings, for not only is there confusion as to which pronoun belongs here, but the longer readings, being clarifications, are evidently motivated readings. The shortest reading is found in important and early Alexandrian and Western witnesses (𝔓⁷² B C Ψ 0285 323 1739) and is strongly preferred.

[15] sn Has finished with sin. The last sentence in v. 1 may refer to Christ as the one who suffered in the flesh (cf. 2:21, 23; 3:18; 4:1a) and the latter part would then mean, "he has finished dealing with sin." But it is more likely that it refers to the Christian who suffers unjustly (cf. 2:19-20; 3:14, 17). This shows that he has made a break with sin as vs. 2 describes.

[16] tn This verse may give the purpose or result of their "arming" themselves as called for in v. 1b and then the translation would be: "so that you may spend the rest of your time..." But it is better to take it as explanatory of the last phrase in v. 1: what it means to be finished with sin.

[17] tn Grk "the Gentiles," used here of those who are not God's people.

[18] tn Grk "to accomplish the desire of the Gentiles."

[19] tn Grk "having gone along," referring to the readers' behavior in time past.

[20] tn According to BDAG 857 s.v. πότος the term refers to a social gathering at which wine is served, hence "drinking parties" (cf. TEV, NASB). However, the collocation with the other terms in v. 4 suggests something less sophisticated and more along the lines of wild and frenzied drinking bouts.

idolatries.[1] 4:4 So[2] they are astonished[3] when you do not rush with them into the same flood of wickedness, and they vilify you.[4] 4:5 They will face a reckoning before[5] Jesus Christ[6] who stands ready to judge the living and the dead. 4:6 Now it was for this very purpose[7] that the gospel was preached to those who are now dead,[8] so that though[9] they were judged in the flesh[10] by human standards[11] they may live spiritually[12] by God's standards.[13]

Service, Suffering, and Judgment

4:7 For the culmination of all things is near. So be self-controlled and sober-minded for the sake of prayer.[14] 4:8 Above all keep[15] your love for one another fervent,[16] because love covers a multitude of sins.[17] 4:9 Show hospitality[18] to one another without complaining. 4:10 Just as each one has received a gift, use it to serve one another[19] as good stewards of the varied grace of God. 4:11 Whoever speaks, let it be with[20] God's words.[21] Whoever serves, do so with the strength[22] that God supplies, so that in everything God will be glorified through Jesus Christ. To him belong[23] the glory and the power forever and ever. Amen.

4:12 Dear friends, do not be astonished[24] that a trial by fire is occurring among you,[25] as though something strange were happening to you. 4:13 But rejoice in the degree that you have shared in the sufferings of Christ, so that when his glory is revealed[26] you may also rejoice and be glad.[27] 4:14 If you are insulted for the name of Christ, you are blessed, because the Spirit of glory,[28] who is the Spirit of God,[29] rests[30] on you. 4:15 But let none of you suffer as a murderer or thief or criminal or as a troublemaker.[31] 4:16 But if you suffer as a Christian,[32] do not be ashamed, but glorify[33] God that you bear such a name.[34] 4:17 For it is time for judgment to begin, starting with the house[35] of God. And if it starts with us, what will be the fate[36] of those who are disobedient to the gospel of God? 4:18 And if the righteous are barely saved, what will become of[37] the ungodly and sinners?[38]

1 tn The Greek words here all occur in the plural to describe their common practice in the past.

2 tn Grk "in/by which," referring to the change of behavior described in v. 3. The unbelievers are astonished by the readers' moral transformation. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

3 tn Or "are surprised, are taken aback." The same verb occurs in 4:12.

4 tn Grk "blaspheming," giving the result of their astonishment. Here the target of their "blasphemy/vilification" is not God but the Christian.

5 tn Grk "give an account to."

6 tn Grk "the one"; the referent (Jesus Christ) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "since for this purpose the gospel was preached even to the dead," referring to the purpose described in the clause to follow in v. 6b.

8 sn In context the phrase those who are dead refers to those now dead who had accepted the gospel while they were still living and had suffered persecution for their faith. Though they "suffered judgment" in this earthly life (i.e., they died, in the midst of physical abuse from the ungodly), they will enjoy life from God in the spiritual, heavenly realm because of the gospel (v. 6b). It clearly does not assume a second chance for conversion offered to unbelievers who had died; why would Peter urge people to suffer in this life for the sake of the gospel if he believed that mercy would be extended to all the dead in the hereafter (cf. 2:7-8; 4:1-5, 12-19)?

9 tn Grk "so that they may be judged...but may live." Greek emphasizes the contrast between these two clauses more than can be easily expressed in English.

10 tn Or "in their earthly lives," since "flesh" here denotes the physical, earthly life. The phrase "in the flesh" is retained to preserve the links with 3:18 and 4:1 which use the same wording.

11 tn Grk "according to men."

12 tn Grk "in spirit," referring to the heavenly, eternal realm of existence (cf. 3:18).

13 tn Grk "according to God."

14 tn Grk "for prayers."

15 tn The primary verb of v. 8 is a participle ("having") but it continues the sense of command from v. 7.

16 tn Or "constant."

17 sn The statement of v. 8b, love covers a multitude of sins, is proverbial: It is quoted from Prov 10:12 (cf. Jas 5:20). It speaks of the forbearance that comes with love: Christian love is patient and forgiving toward the offenses of a fellow Christian (Matt 18:21-22; 1 Cor 13:4-7).

18 tn There is no main verb in this verse ("showing hospitality" translates the adjective φιλόξενοι [philoxenoi]), but it continues the sense of command from v. 7.

19 tn Grk "serving it to one another." The primary verb is a participle but it continues the sense of command from v. 7.

20 tn Grk "if anyone speaks – as God's words."

21 tn Or "oracles."

22 tn Grk "if anyone serves – with strength..."

23 tn Grk "is/are."

24 tn Or "do not be surprised, taken aback." The same verb occurs in 4:4.

25 tn Grk "at the burning among you, occurring to you for testing."

26 tn Grk "in the revelation of his glory."

27 tn The verb "be glad" is used also in 1:6 and 1:8. The verbs of v. 13b are used together in Matt 5:12 and Rev 19:7.

28 tc Many MSS, some of them important and early ([א] A P 33 81 323 945 1241 1739 pm bo), add καὶ δυνάμεως (kai dunameōs; "and of power") here. The shorter reading is supported by 𝔓72 B K L Ψ 049 pm). Although the evidence is evenly divided, the longer reading looks to be an explanatory or liturgical expansion on the text and for this reason should be considered secondary.

29 tn Grk "the Spirit of glory and of God."

30 sn A quotation taken from Isa 11:2.

31 tn The meaning of the Greek word used here is uncertain. It may mean "spy, informer," "revolutionary," or "defrauder, embezzler." But the most likely meaning is "busybody, one who meddles in the affairs of others, troublesome meddler." The translation given in the text is intended to suggest this general idea.

32 tn The verb is implied by the context but not expressed; Grk "but if as a Christian."

33 tn These are third-person imperatives in Greek ("if [one of you suffers] as a Christian, let him not be ashamed...let him glorify"), but have been translated as second-person verbs since this is smoother English idiom.

34 tn Grk "in this name."

35 tn Grk "to begin from the house."

36 tn Or "the end."

37 tn Grk "where will he appear."

38 tn The personal references in v. 18 are generic singulars, but they have been changed to the plural in English to maintain consistency with the plurals of v. 17.

sn A quotation from Prov 11:31 (LXX).

4:19 So then let those who suffer according to the will of God entrust their souls to a faithful Creator as they do good.[1]

Leading and Living in God's Flock

5:1 So as your fellow elder and a witness of Christ's sufferings and as one who shares in the glory that will be revealed, I urge the elders among you: 5:2 Give a shepherd's care to[2] God's flock among you, exercising oversight[3] not merely as a duty[4] but willingly under God's direction,[5] not for shameful profit but eagerly. 5:3 And do not lord it over[6] those entrusted to you,[7] but be examples to the flock. 5:4 Then[8] when the Chief Shepherd appears, you will receive the crown of glory that never fades away.

5:5 In the same way, you who are younger,[9] be subject to the elders. And all of you, clothe yourselves with humility toward one another, because God opposes the proud but gives grace to the humble.[10] 5:6 And God will exalt you in due time,[11] if you humble yourselves under his mighty hand[12] 5:7 by casting[13] all your cares[14] on him because he cares for you. 5:8 Be sober and alert. Your enemy the devil, like a roaring lion,[15] is on the prowl looking for someone[16] to devour. 5:9 Resist him,[17] strong in your faith, because you know[18] that your brothers and sisters[19] throughout the world[20] are enduring[21] the same kinds of suffering.[22] 5:10 And, after you have suffered for a little while, the God of all grace who called you to his eternal glory in Christ[23] will himself restore, confirm, strengthen, and establish you.[24] 5:11 To him belongs[25] the power forever. Amen.

2 tn Grk "shepherd," "tend," "pastor."

3 tc A few important MSS (𝔓⁷² ℵ* B sa) lack ἐπισκοποῦντες (episkopountes, "exercising oversight"), but the participle enjoys otherwise good MS support (𝔓⁷² ℵ² A P Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 lat). A decision is difficult because normally the shorter reading is preferred, especially when found in excellent witnesses. However, in this instance the omission may be due to a hesitation among some scribes to associate oversight with elders, since the later church viewed overseer/bishop as a separate office from elder.

4 tn Or "not under compulsion/coercion."

5 tn Grk "according to God."

6 tn Grk "not as lording it over…but being examples." The participles continue the command of v. 2 by describing how the shepherding should be carried out.

7 tn Grk "the ones allotted," referring to those God has given over to their care.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to reflect the logical sequence of events.

9 sn In this context younger and elder are terms that combine two meanings: relative age and an official structure of leadership in the church. As in v. 1, elder here denotes those who exercise spiritual leadership, who for the most part are older in years. Likewise younger means the rest of the community, who for the most part are younger in age, who are urged to accept the authority of their leaders.

10 sn A quotation from Prov 3:34 (cf. Jas 4:6).

11 tn Grk "in time," but connoting "the proper time, when the time is right" as in Matt 24:45; Luke 12:42.

12 tn Grk "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, so that in due time he may exalt you." The sentence was rearranged so that the English reader could more clearly see the connection between "casting" (v. 7) and "humble" (v. 6).

13 tn Or "throwing on"; "loading." Some scholars take the participle to function imperatively, or as attendant circumstance – thus, "cast." See below for discussion.

sn Casting. According to ExSyn 630, "Although treated as an independent command in several modern translations (e.g., RSV, NRSV, NIV), the participle [casting] should be connected with the verb of v 6, ταπεινώθητε [tapeinōthēte, Humble yourselves]. As such, it is not offering a new command, but is defining how believers are to humble themselves. Taking the participle as means enriches the understanding of both verbs: Humbling oneself is not a negative act of self-denial per se, but a positive one of active dependence on God for help."

14 tn Or "anxiety, burden," but using a word from the same root as the verb "cares" in the last part of the verse.

15 sn This phrase may be an allusion to Ps 22:13.

16 tc A few MSS (B Ψ 0206ᵛⁱᵈ pc) lack the pronoun τινα (tina), while others have it. Those that have it either put the acute accent over the penult, making this an interrogative pronoun ("whom"; L P 322 323 614 630 945 1243 1739 2298 al), or leave off any accent, making this an indefinite pronoun ("someone"; 𝔐), or are too early to employ accents but nevertheless have the pronoun τινα (𝔓⁷² ℵ A). Generally speaking, the shorter and harder reading is to be preferred. In this instance, the omission of the pronoun would obviously be accommodated for by scribes, since both ζητέω (zēteō, "look, seek") and καταπίνω (katapinō, "devour") are transitive verbs. However, if the omission were original, one might expect the position of the pronoun to float in the MSS – both before and after the infinitive καταπιεῖν (katapiein, "to devour"). Further, other terms might be expected as well, such as ἕνα ἐξ ὑμῶν (hena ex humōn, "one of you") or τινα ἐξ ὑμῶν (tina ex humōn, "a certain one/someone of you"). The uniformity of both the word and its location suggests that the shorter reading (found in but a few Greek MSS) in this instance was a scribal mistake. As to whether the pronoun is interrogative or indefinite, since accents were not a part of the earliest MSS, such Greek witnesses are of no help to us in this kind of problem. There would be little difference in meaning between the two in this context.

17 tn Grk "whom," referring to the devil in v. 8. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

18 tn Grk "knowing," a participle that usually denotes a reason for the related action.

19 tn Grk "your brotherhood." The Greek term "brotherhood" is used in a broad sense to connote familial relationships within the family of God (cf. BDAG 19 s.v. ἀδελφότης 1). Another alternative translation would be "your fellow believers," though this would weaken the familial connotations. This same word occurs in 2:17; there it has been translated "family of believers."

20 tn Grk "your brotherhood in the world," referring to the Christian community worldwide.

21 tn This verb carries the nuance "to accomplish, complete," emphasizing their faithful endurance in suffering. The verb is passive in Greek ("suffering is being endured by your brotherhood"), but has been translated as an active to give a smoother English style.

22 tn Grk "the same things of sufferings."

23 tc ‡ A few important MSS (ℵ B 614 630 1505 pc) lack "Jesus" after "Christ," while the majority include the name (𝔓⁷² A P Ψ 33 1739 𝔐 latt). However, the inclusion is a natural and predictable expansion on the text. NA²⁷ includes Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou, "Jesus") in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity. .

24 tn The pronoun "you" is not used explicitly but is clearly implied by the Greek.

25 tn No verb is expressed here but the verb "is" or "belongs" is clearly implied. This doxology expresses a fact for which God should be glorified (as in 4:11), rather than a wish or prayer ("may power be to him").

Final Greetings

5:12 Through Silvanus,[1] whom I know to be a faithful brother,[2] I have written to you briefly, in order to encourage you and testify[3] that this is the true grace of God. Stand fast in it.[4] 5:13 The church[5] in Babylon,[6] chosen together with you,[7] greets you, and so does Mark, my son. 5:14 Greet one another with a loving kiss.[8] Peace to all of you who are in Christ.[9]

---

[1] sn The phrase Through Silvanus means either that Silvanus was the secretary (amanuensis) who assisted Peter in writing or composing the letter (cf. Rom 16:22) or that he carried the letter to the churches. The latter sense is more likely since this is the meaning of the Greek wording when it is used elsewhere (cf. Acts 15:23; Ignatius, Letter to the Romans 10:1; Letter to the Philadelphians 11:2; Letter to the Smyrnaeans 12:1; Polycarp, Letter to the Philippians 14), though it is perhaps possible that both ideas could be incorporated by this expression. For a detailed argument regarding this issue, see E. R. Richards, "Silvanus Was Not Peter's Secretary: Theological Bias in Interpreting διὰ Σιλουανοῦ...ἔγραψα," JETS 43 (September 2000): 417-32.

[2] tn Grk "the faithful brother, as I think."

[3] tn These are participles ("encouraging and testifying") showing purpose. The pronoun object "you" is omitted in Greek but implied by the context.

[4] tn Grk "in which stand fast." For emphasis, and due to constraints of contemporary English, this was made a separate sentence in the translation.

[5] tn Grk "the one in Babylon," which could refer to some individual woman ("she who is in Babylon") since the Greek article (here "the one") is feminine. But it is much more likely to be a veiled reference to a church (the Greek word "church" is also feminine in gender).

[6] sn Most scholars understand Babylon here to be a figurative reference to Rome. Although in the OT the city of Babylon in Mesopotamia was the seat of tremendous power (2 Kgs 24-25; Isa 39; Jer 25), by the time of the NT what was left was an insignificant town, and there is no tradition in Christian history that Peter ever visited there. On the other hand, Christian tradition connects Peter with the church in Rome, and many interpreters think other references to Babylon in the NT refer to Rome as well (Rev 14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2, 10, 21). Thus it is likely Peter was referring to Rome here.

[7] tn Grk "chosen together," implying the connection "with you" in context.

[8] tn Grk "a kiss of love."

[9] tc Most MSS (א P 1739^{c} 𝔐) have ἀμήν (amen, "amen") at the end of 1 Peter. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the absence of such a conclusion to the epistle in such witnesses as A B Ψ 81 323 945 1241 1739* co seems inexplicable unless the word here is not authentic.

2 Peter

Salutation

1:1 From Simeon[1] Peter,[2] a slave[3] and apostle of Jesus Christ, to those who through the righteousness of our God[4] and Savior,[5] Jesus Christ, have been granted[6] a faith just as precious[7] as ours. 1:2 May grace and peace be lavished on you[8] as you grow[9] in the rich knowledge[10] of God and of Jesus our Lord![11]

Believers' Salvation and the Work of God

1:3 I can pray this because his divine power[12]

---

[1] tc Several witnesses, a few of them very important (𝔓[72] B Ψ 69 81 614 623 630 1241 1243 2464 al vg co), read Σίμων (Simōn, "Simon") for Συμεών (Sumeōn, "Simeon"). However, this appears to be a motivated reading as it is the more common spelling. Συμεών occurs only here and in Acts 15:14 as a spelling for the apostle's name. The reading Συμεών enjoys ample and widespread support among the mss, strongly suggesting its authenticity. Further, this Hebraic spelling is a subtle argument for the authenticity of this letter, since a forger would almost surely follow the normal spelling of the name (1 Peter begins only with "Peter" giving no help either way).

[2] tn Grk "Simeon Peter." The word "from" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[3] tn Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times…in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). At the same time, perhaps "servant" is apt in that the δοῦλος of Jesus Christ took on that role voluntarily, unlike a slave. The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

[4] tc A few mss (ℵ Ψ pc vg[mss] sy[ph] sa) read κυρίου (kuriou, "Lord") for θεοῦ (theou, "God") in v. 1, perhaps due to confusion of letters (since both words were nomina sacra), or perhaps because "our God and Savior, Jesus Christ" is an unusual expression (though hardly because of theological objections to θεοῦ).

[5] tn The terms "God and Savior" both refer to the same person, Jesus Christ. This is one of the clearest statements in the NT concerning the deity of Christ. The construction in Greek is known as the Granville Sharp rule, named after the English philanthropist-linguist who first clearly articulated the rule in 1798. Sharp pointed out that in the construction article-noun-καί-noun (where καί [kai] = "and"), when two nouns are singular, personal, and common (i.e., not proper names), they always had the same referent. Illustrations such as "the friend and brother," "the God and Father," etc. abound in the NT to prove Sharp's point. In fact, the construction occurs elsewhere in 2 Peter, strongly suggesting that the author's idiom was the same as the rest of the NT authors' (cf., e.g., 1:11 ["the Lord and Savior"], 2:20 ["the Lord and Savior"]). The only issue is whether terms such as "God" and "Savior" could be considered common nouns as opposed to proper names. Sharp and others who followed (such as T. F. Middleton in his masterful The Doctrine of the Greek Article) demonstrated that a proper name in Greek was one that could not be pluralized. Since both "God" (θεός, theos) and "savior" (σωτήρ, sōtēr) were occasionally found in the plural, they did not constitute proper names, and hence, do fit Sharp's rule. Although there have been 200 years of attempts to dislodge Sharp's rule, all attempts have been futile. Sharp's rule stands vindicated after all the dust has settled. For more information on the application of Sharp's rule to 2 Pet 1:1, see ExSyn 272, 276-77, 290. See also Titus 2:13 and Jude 4.

[6] tn The verb λαγχάνω (lanchanō) means "obtain by lot," "receive." A literal translation would put it in the active, but some of the richness of the term would thereby be lost. It is used in collocation with κλῆρος (klēros, "lot") frequently enough in the LXX to suggest the connotation of reception of a gift, or in the least reception of something that one does not deserve. H. Hanse's statement (TDNT 4:1) that "Even where there is no casting of lots, the attainment is not by one's own effort or as a result of one's own exertions, but is like ripe fruit falling into one's lap" is apt for this passage. The author's opening line is a reminder that our position in Christ is not due to merit, but grace.

[7] tn Grk "equal in value/honor."

sn A faith just as precious. The author's point is that the Gentile audience has been blessed with a salvation that is in no way inferior to that of the Jews.

[8] tn Grk "May grace and peace be multiplied to you."

[9] tn The words "as you grow" are not in the Greek text, but seem to be implied.

[10] tn The word ἐπίγνωσις (epignōsis) could simply mean knowledge, but J. B. Mayor (Jude and Second Peter, 171-74) has suggested that it is often a fuller knowledge, especially in reference to things pertaining to spiritual truth. R. Bauckham (Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 169-70) argues that it refers to the knowledge of God that is borne of conversion, but this is probably saying too much and is asking questions of the author that are foreign to his way of thinking. The term is used in 1:2, 3, 8; 2:20 (the verb form occurs twice, both in 2:21). In every instance it evidently involves being in the inner circle of those who connect to God, though it does not necessarily imply such a direct and relational knowledge of God for each individual within that circle. An analogy would be Judas Iscariot: Even though he was a disciple of the Lord, he was not converted.

[11] tn A comma properly belongs at the end of v. 2 instead of a period, since v. 3 is a continuation of the same sentence. With the optative in v. 2, the author has departed from Paul's normal greeting (in which no verb is used), rendering the greeting a full-blown sentence. Nevertheless, this translation divides the verses up along thematic lines in spite of breaking up the sentence structure. For more explanation, see note on "power" in v. 3.

[12] tn The verse in Greek starts out with ὡς (hōs) followed by a genitive absolute construction, dependent on the main verb in v. 2. Together, they form a subordinate causal clause. A more literal rendering would be "because his divine power…" The idea is that the basis or authority for the author's prayer in v. 2 (that grace and peace would abound to the readers) was that God's power was manifested in their midst. The author's sentence structure is cumbersome even in Greek; hence, the translation has broken this up into two sentences.

has bestowed on us everything necessary[1] for life and godliness through the rich knowledge[2] of the one who called[3] us by[4] his own glory and excellence. 1:4 Through these things[5] he has bestowed on us his precious and most magnificent promises, so that by means of what was promised[6] you may become partakers of the divine nature,[7] after escaping[8] the worldly corruption that is produced by evil desire.[9] 1:5 For this very reason,[10] make every effort[11] to add to your faith excellence,[12] to excellence, knowledge; 1:6 to knowledge, self-control; to self-control, perseverance;[13] to perseverance, godliness; 1:7 to godliness, brotherly affection; to brotherly affection, unselfish[14] love.[15] 1:8 For if[16] these things are really yours[17] and are continually increasing,[18] they will keep you from becoming[19] ineffective and unproductive in your pursuit of[20] knowing our Lord Jesus Christ more intimately.[21] 1:9 But[22] concerning the one who lacks such things[23] – he is blind. That is to say, he is[24] nearsighted, since he has forgotten about 1 tn The word "necessary" is not in the Greek, but is implied by the preposition πρός (pros).

2 tn See the note on "rich knowledge" in v. 2.

3 sn Called. The term καλέω (kaleō), used here in its participial form, in soteriological contexts when God is the subject, always carries the nuance of effectual calling. That is, the one who is called is not just invited to be saved – he is also and always saved (cf. Rom 8:30). Calling takes place at the moment of conversion, while election takes place in eternity past (cf. Eph 1:4).

4 tn The datives ἰδίᾳ δόξῃ καὶ ἀρετῇ (idia doxē kai aretē) could be taken either instrumentally ("by [means of] his own glory and excellence") or advantage ("for [the benefit of] his own glory and excellence"). Both the connection with divine power and the textual variant found in several early and important witnesses (διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς in 𝔓^{72} B 0209^{vid}) argues for an instrumental meaning. The instrumental notion is also affirmed by the meaning of ἀρετῇ ("excellence") in contexts that speak of God's attributes (BDAG 130 s.v. ἀρετή 2 in fact defines it as "manifestation of divine power" in this verse).

5 tn Verse 4 is in Greek a continuation of v. 3, "through which things."

sn The phrase these things refers to God's glory and excellence.

6 tn Grk "through them." The implication is that through inheriting and acting on these promises the believers will increasingly become partakers of the divine nature.

7 sn Although the author has borrowed the expression partakers of the divine nature from paganism, his meaning is clearly Christian. He does not mean apotheosis (man becoming a god) in the pagan sense, but rather that believers have an organic connection with God. Because of such a connection, God can truly be called our Father. Conceptually, this bears the same meaning as Paul's "in Christ" formula. The author's statement, though startling at first, is hardly different from Paul's prayer for the Ephesians that they "may be filled up to all the fullness of God" (3:19).

8 tn The aorist participle ἀποφυγόντες (apophugontes) is often taken as attendant circumstance to the preceding verb γένησθε (genēsthe). As such, the sense is "that you might become partakers...and might escape..." However, it does not follow the contours of the vast majority of attendant circumstance participles (in which the participle precedes the main verb, among other things). Further, attendant circumstance participles are frequently confused with result participles (which do follow the verb). Many who take this as attendant circumstance are probably viewing it semantically as result ("that you might become partakers...and [thereby] escape..."). But this is next to impossible since the participle is aorist: Result participles are categorically present tense.

9 tn Grk "the corruption in the world (in/because of) lust."

10 tn The Greek text begins with "and," a typical Semitism.

sn The reason given is all the provisions God has made for the believer, mentioned in vv. 3-4.

11 tn The participle is either means ("by making every effort") or attendant circumstance ("make every effort"). Although it fits the normal contours of attendant circumstance participles, the semantics are different. Normally, attendant circumstance is used of an action that is a necessary prelude to the action of the main verb. But "making every effort" is what energizes the main verb here. Hence it is best taken as means. However, for the sake of smoothness the translation has rendered it as a command with the main verb translated as an infinitive. This is in accord with English idiom.

12 tn Or "moral excellence," "virtue"; this is the same word used in v. 3 ("the one who has called us by his own glory and excellence").

13 tn Perhaps "steadfastness," though that is somewhat archaic. A contemporary colloquial rendering would be "stick-to-it-iveness."

14 sn The final virtue or character quality in this list is "love" (ἀγάπη, agapē). The word was not used exclusively of Christian or unselfish love in the NT (e.g., the cognate, ἀγαπάω [agapaō], is used in John 3:19 of the love of darkness), but in a list such as this in which ἀγάπη is obviously the crescendo, unselfish love is evidently in view. R. Bauckham (Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 187) notes that as the crowning virtue, ἀγάπη encompasses all the previous virtues.

15 tn Each item in Greek begins with "and." The conjunction is omitted for the sake of good English style, with no change in meaning.

sn Add to your faith excellence...love. The list of virtues found in vv. 5-7 stands in tension to the promises given in vv. 2-4. What appears to be a synergism of effort or even a contradiction (God supplies the basis, the promises, the grace, the power, etc., while believers must also provide the faith, excellence, etc.) in reality encapsulates the mystery of sanctification. Each believer is responsible before God for his conduct and spiritual growth, yet that growth could not take place without God's prior work and constant enabling. We must not neglect our responsibility, yet the enabling and the credit is God's. Paul says the same thing: "Continue working out your salvation with humility and dependence, for the one bringing forth in you both the desire and the effort...is God" (Phil 2:12-13).

16 tn The participles are evidently conditional, as most translations render them.

17 tn The participle ὑπάρχοντα (huparchonta) is stronger than the verb εἰμί (eimi), usually implying a permanent state. Hence, the addition of "really" is implied.

18 sn Continually increasing. There are evidently degrees of ownership of these qualities, implying degrees of productivity in one's intimacy with Christ. An idiomatic rendering of the first part of v. 8 would be "For if you can claim ownership of these virtues in progressively increasing amounts..."

19 tn Grk "cause [you] not to become."

20 tn Grk "unto," "toward"; although it is possible to translate the preposition εἰς (eis) as simply "in."

21 tn Grk "the [rich] knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." Verse 8 in Greek does not make a full stop (period), for v. 9 begins with a subordinate relative pronoun. Contemporary English convention requires a full stop in translation, however.

22 tn Grk "for." The connection, though causal, is also adversative.

23 tn Grk "to the one for whom these things are not present."

24 tn The words "that is to say, he is" are not in Greek. The word order is unusual. One might expect the author to have said "he is nearsighted and blind" (as the NIV has so construed it), but this is not the word order in Greek. Perhaps the author begins with a strong statement followed by a clarification, i.e., that being nearsighted in regard to these virtues is as good as being blind.

the cleansing of his past sins. 1:10 Therefore, brothers and sisters,[1] make every effort to be sure of your calling and election.[2] For by doing this[3] you will never[4] stumble into sin.[5] 1:11 For thus an entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, will be richly provided for you.

Salvation Based on the Word of God

1:12 Therefore, I intend to remind you constantly[6] of these things even though you know them and are well established in the truth that you now have. 1:13 Indeed, as long as I am in this tabernacle,[7] I consider it right to stir you up by way of a reminder, 1:14 since I know that my tabernacle will soon be removed,[8] because[9] our Lord Jesus Christ revealed this to me.[10] 1:15 Indeed, I will also make every effort that, after my departure, you have a testimony of these things.[11]

1:16 For we did not follow cleverly concocted fables when we made known to you the power and return[12] of our Lord Jesus Christ;[13] no,[14] we were[15] eyewitnesses of his[16] grandeur.[17] 1:17 For he received honor and glory from God the Father, when that[18] voice was conveyed to him by the Majestic Glory: "This is my dear Son, in whom I am delighted."[19] 1:18 When this

---

1 tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1., where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited).

2 tn Grk "make your calling and election sure."

sn Make sure of your calling and election. The author is not saying that virtue and holiness produce salvation, but that virtue and holiness are the evidence of salvation.

3 tn Grk "these things."

4 tn In Greek οὐ μή (ou mē) followed by the subjunctive is normally the strongest way to negate an action. Coupled with πότε (pote, "ever"), the statement is even more emphatic. The author is offering sage advice on how to grow in grace.

5 tn The words "into sin" are not in the Greek text, but the Greek word πταίω (ptaiō) is used in soteriological contexts for more than a mere hesitation or stumbling. BDAG 894 s.v. 2 suggests that here it means "be ruined, be lost," referring to loss of salvation, while also acknowledging that the meaning "to make a mistake, go astray, sin" is plausible in this context. Alternatively, the idea of πταίω here could be that of "suffer misfortune" (so K. L. Schmidt, TDNT 6:884), as a result of sinning.

6 tn Grk "always."

7 tn Or "tent." The author uses this as a metaphor for his physical body.

sn The use of the term tabernacle for the human body is reminiscent both of John's statements about Jesus ("he tabernacled among us" in John 1:14; "the temple of his body" in John 2:21) and Paul's statements about believers (e.g., "you are God's building" in 1 Cor 3:9; "you are God's temple" in 1 Cor 3:16; "your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit" in 1 Cor 6:19; "holy temple" in Eph 2:21). It is precisely because the Shekinah glory has been transferred from the OT temple to the person of Jesus Christ and, because he inhabits believers, to them, that the author can speak this way. His life on earth, his physical existence, is a walking tabernacle, a manifestation of the glory of God.

8 tn Grk "since I know that the removal of my tabernacle is [coming] soon."

9 tn Grk "just as."

10 sn When the author says our Lord Jesus Christ revealed this to me, he is no doubt referring to the prophecy that is partially recorded in John 21:18-19.

11 sn There are various interpretations of v. 15. For example, the author could be saying simply, "I will make every effort that you remember these things." But the collocation of σπουδάζω (spoudazō) with μνήνη (mnēnē) suggests a more specific image. R. Bauckham (Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 201-2) is right when he notes that these two words together suggest a desire to write some sort of letter or testament. Most commentators recognize the difficulty in seeing the future verb σπουδάσω (spoudasō) as referring to 2 Peter itself (the present or aorist would have been expected, i.e., "I have made every effort," or "I am making every effort"). Some have suggested that Mark's Gospel is in view. The difficulty with this is threefold: (1) Mark is probably to be dated before 2 Peter, (2) early patristic testimony seems to imply that Peter was the unwitting source behind Mark's Gospel; and (3) "these things" would seem to refer, in the least, to the prophecy about Peter's death (absent in Mark). A more plausible suggestion might be that the author was thinking of the ending of John's Gospel. This is possible because (1) John 21:18-19 is the only other place in the NT that refers to Peter's death; indeed, it fleshes out the cryptic statement in v. 14 a bit more; (2) both 2 Peter and John were apparently written to Gentiles in and around Asia Minor; (3) both books were probably written after Paul's death and perhaps even to Paul's churches (cf. 2 Pet 3:1-2, 15-16); and (4) John 21 gives the appearance of being added to the end of a finished work. There is thus some possibility that this final chapter was added at the author's request, in part to encourage Gentile Christians to face impending persecution, knowing that the martyrdom of even (Paul and) Peter was within the purview of God's sovereignty. That 2 Pet 1:15 alludes to John 21 is of course by no means certain, but remains at least the most plausible of the suggestions put forth thus far.

12 tn Grk "coming."

13 tn Grk "for we did not make known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ by following cleverly concocted fables."

14 tn Grk "but, instead."

15 tn Grk "became."

16 tn Grk "that one's." That is, "eyewitnesses of the grandeur of that one." The remote demonstrative pronoun is used perhaps to indicate esteem for Jesus. Along these lines it is interesting to note that "the Pythagoreans called their master after his death simply ἐκεῖνος" as a term of reverence and endearment (BDAG 302 s.v. ἐκεῖνος a.γ).

17 sn The term grandeur was used most frequently of God's majesty. In the 1st century, it was occasionally used of the divine majesty of the emperor. 2 Pet 1:1 and 1:11 already include hints of a polemic against emperor-worship (in that "God and Savior" and "Lord and Savior" were used of the emperor).

18 tn Grk "such a." The pronoun τοιᾶσδε (toiasde) most likely refers to what follows, connoting something of the uniqueness of the proclamation.

19 tn The verb εὐδόκησα (eudokēsa) in collocation with εἰς ὅν (eis hon) could either mean "in whom I am well-pleased, delighted" (in which case the preposition functions like ἐν [en]), or "on whom I have set my favor."

sn This is my beloved Son, in whom I am delighted alludes to the Transfiguration. However, the author's version is markedly different from the synoptic accounts (in particular his introductory phrase, "when that voice was conveyed to him," an unusual expression [perhaps used to avoid naming God directly as the one who spoke from heaven]). The most natural explanation for such differences is that he was unaware of the exact wording of the Gospels. This is, of course, easier to explain if 2 Peter is authentic than if it is a late document, written in the 2nd century.

voice was conveyed from heaven, we ourselves[1] heard it, for we were with him on the holy mountain.[2] 1:19 Moreover,[3] we[4] possess the prophetic word as an altogether reliable thing.[5] You do well if you pay attention[6] to this[7] as you would[8] to a light shining in a murky place, until the day dawns and the morning star[9] rises in your hearts.[10] 1:20 Above all, you do well if you recognize[11] this:[12] No prophecy of scripture ever comes about by the prophet's own imagination,[13] 1:21 for no prophecy was ever borne of [1] tn The "we" in v. 18 is evidently exclusive, that is, it refers to Peter and the other apostles.

[2] tn 2 Pet 1:17-18 comprise one sentence in Greek, with the main verb "heard" in v. 18. All else is temporally subordinate to that statement. Hence, more literally these verses read as follows: "For when he received honor and glory from God the Father, when that voice was conveyed to him by the Majestic Glory: 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am delighted,' we ourselves heard this voice when it was conveyed from heaven, when we were with him on the holy mountain."

[3] tn Grk "and." The use of καί (kai) is of course quite elastic. Only the context can determine if it is adversative, continuative, transitional, etc.

[4] sn We in v. 19 is apparently an inclusive "we" (the author and his audience). Such shifts in the first person plural are quite common in epistolary literature (cf., e.g., 2 Cor 10-13, passim).

[5] tn The comparative adjective βεβαιότερον (bebaioteron) is the complement to the object τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον (ton prophētikon logon). As such, the construction almost surely has the force "The prophetic word is (more certain/altogether certain) – and this is something that we all have." Many scholars prefer to read the construction as saying "we have the prophetic word made more sure," but such a nuance is unparalleled in object-complement constructions (when the construction has this force, ποιέω [poieō] is present [as in 2 Pet 1:10]). The meaning, as construed in the translation, is that the Bible (in this case, the OT) that these believers had in their hands was a thoroughly reliable guide. Whether it was more certain than was even Peter's experience on the Mount of Transfiguration depends on whether the adjective should be taken as a true comparative ("more certain") or as an elative ("very certain, altogether certain"). Some would categorically object to any experience functioning as a confirmation of the scriptures and hence would tend to give the adjective a comparative force. Yet the author labors to show that his gospel is trustworthy precisely because he was an eyewitness of this great event. Further, to say that the OT scriptures (the most likely meaning of "the prophetic word") were more trustworthy an authority than an apostle's own experience of Christ is both to misconstrue how prophecy took place in the OT (did not the prophets have visions or other experiences?) and to deny the final revelation of God in Christ (cf. Heb 1:2). In sum, since syntactically the meaning that "we have confirmed the prophetic word by our experience" is improbable, and since contextually the meaning that "we have something that is a more reliable authority than experience, namely, the Bible" is unlikely, we are left with the meaning "we have a very reliable authority, the Old Testament, as a witness to Christ's return." No comparison is thus explicitly made. This fits both the context and normal syntax quite well. The introductory καί (kai) suggests that the author is adding to his argument. He makes the statement that Christ will return, and backs it up with two points: (1) Peter himself (as well as the other apostles) was an eyewitness to the Transfiguration, which is a precursor to the Parousia; and (2) the Gentile believers, who were not on the Mount of Transfiguration, nevertheless have the Old Testament, a wholly reliable authority that also promises the return of Christ.

[6] tn Grk "paying attention" (the adverbial participle is either conditional ["if you pay attention"] or instrumental ["by paying attention"]; though there is difference in translation, there is virtually no difference in application). On a lexical level, "pay attention to" (προσέχω [prosechō]) does not, in a context such as this, mean merely observe or notice, but follow, give heed to, obey.

[7] tn "To this" is a relative pronoun in Greek. The second half of v. 19 is thus a relative clause. Literally it reads "to which you do well if you pay attention."

[8] tn Grk "as"; ὡς (hōs) clauses after imperatives or implied commands (as here) make a comparison of what should be true (imperative) to what is true (indicative). This is the case even when the verb of the ὡς clause is only implied. Cf. Matt 6:10 ("may your will be done on earth as [it is] in heaven"); 10:16 ("be wise as serpents [are], and be as gentle as doves [are]"); 22:39 ("love your neighbor as [you already do] love yourself").

[9] sn The reference to the morning star constitutes a double entendre. First, the term was normally used to refer to Venus. But the author of course has a metaphorical meaning in mind, as is obvious from the place where the morning star is to rise – "in your hearts." Most commentators see an allusion to Num 24:17 ("a star shall rise out of Jacob") in Peter's words. Early Christian exegesis saw in that passage a prophecy about Christ's coming. Hence, in this verse Peter tells his audience to heed the OT scriptures which predict the return of Christ, then alludes to one of the passages that does this very thing, all the while running the theme of light on a parallel track. In addition, it may be significant that Peter's choice of terms here is not the same as is found in the LXX. He has used a Hellenistic word that was sometimes used of emperors and deities, perhaps as a further polemic against the paganism of his day.

[10] sn The phrase in your hearts is sometimes considered an inappropriate image for the parousia, since the coming of Christ will be visible to all. But Peter's point has to do with full comprehension of the revelation of Christ, something only believers will experience. Further, his use of light imagery is doing double-duty, suggesting two things at once (i.e., internal guidance to truth or illumination, and OT prophecy about Christ's return) and hence can not be expected to be consistent with every point he wishes to make.

[11] tn Grk "knowing this [to be] foremost." Τοῦτο πρῶτον (touto prōton) constitute the object and complement of γινώσκοντες (ginōskontes). The participle is dependent on the main verb in v. 19 ("you do well [if you pay attention]"), probably in a conditional usage. An alternative is to take it imperatively: "Above all, know this." In this rendering, πρῶτον is functioning adverbially. Only here and 2 Pet 3:3 is τοῦτο πρῶτον found in the NT, making a decision more difficult.

[12] tn The ὅτι (hoti) clause is appositional ("know this, that"). English usage can use the colon with the same force.

[13] tn Verse 20 is variously interpreted. There are three key terms here that help decide both the interpretation and the translation. As well, the relation to v. 21 informs the meaning of this verse. (1) The term "comes about" (γίνεται [ginetai]) is often translated "is a matter" as in "is a matter of one's own interpretation." But the progressive force for this verb is far more common. (2) The adjective ἰδίας (idias) has been understood to mean (a) one's own (i.e., the reader's own), (b) its own (i.e., the particular prophecy's own), or (c) the prophet's own. Catholic scholarship has tended to see the reference to the reader (in the sense that no individual reader can understand scripture, but needs the interpretations handed down by the Church), while older Protestant scholarship has tended to see the reference to the individual passage being prophesied (and hence the Reformation doctrine of analogia fidei [analogy of faith], or scripture interpreting scripture). But neither of these views satisfactorily addresses the relationship of v. 20 to v. 21, nor do they do full justice to the meaning of γίνεται. (3) The meaning of ἐπίλυσις (epilusis) is difficult to determine, since it is a biblical hapax legomenon. Though it is sometimes used in the sense of interpretation in extra-biblical Greek, this is by no means a necessary sense. The basic idea of the word is unfolding, which can either indicate an explanation or a creation. It sometimes has the force of solution or even spell, both of which meanings could easily accommodate a prophetic utterance of some sort. Further, even the human impulse; rather, men[1] carried along by the Holy Spirit spoke from God.

The False Teachers' Ungodly Lifestyle

2:1 But false prophets arose among the people, just as there will be false teachers among you.[2] These false teachers[3] will[4] infiltrate your midst[5] with destructive heresies,[6] even to the point of[7] denying the Master who bought them. As a result, they will bring[8] swift destruction on themselves. 2:2 And many will follow their debauched lifestyles.[9] Because of these false teachers,[10] the way of truth will be slandered.[11] 2:3 And in their greed they will exploit you with deceptive words. Their[12] condemnation pronounced long ago[13] is not sitting idly by;[14] their[15] destruction is not asleep.

2:4 For if God did not spare the angels who sinned,[16] but threw them into hell[17] and locked them up[18] in chains[19] in utter darkness,[20] to be meaning explanation or interpretation easily fits a prophetic utterance, for prophets often, if not usually, explained visions and dreams. There is no instance of this word referring to the interpretation of scripture, however, suggesting that if interpretation is the meaning, it is the prophet's interpretation of his own vision. (4) The γάρ (gar) at the beginning of v. 21 gives the basis for the truth of the proposition in v. 20. The connection that makes the most satisfactory sense is that prophets did not invent their own prophecies (v. 20), for their impulse for prophesying came from God (v. 21).

sn No prophecy of scripture ever comes about by the prophet's own imagination. 2 Pet 1:20-21, then, form an inclusio with v. 16: The Christian's faith and hope are not based on cleverly concocted fables but on the sure Word of God – one which the prophets, prompted by the Spirit of God, spoke. Peter's point is the same as is found elsewhere in the NT, i.e., that human prophets did not originate the message, but they did convey it, using their own personalities in the process.

1 tn If, as seems probable, the "prophecy" mentioned here is to be identified with the "prophecy of scripture" mentioned in the previous verse, then the Greek term ἄνθρωποι (anthrōpoi, "men") would refer specifically to the human authors of scripture, who (as far as we know) were all men. Thus "men" has been used here in the translation. If, on the other hand, the "prophecy" mentioned in the present verse is not limited to scripture but refers to oral prophecy as well, then women would be included, since Joel 2:20 specifically mentions "sons and daughters" as having the ability to prophesy, and the NT clearly mentions prophetesses (Luke 2:36; Acts 21:9).

2 sn There will be false teachers among you. Peter uses the same verb, γίνομαι (ginomai), in 2 Pet 2:1 as he had used in 1:20 to describe the process of inspiration. He may well be contrasting, by way of a catchword, the two kinds of prophets.

3 tn Grk "who"; verse 1 is one sentence in Greek, the second half constituting a relative clause.

4 sn By the use of the future tense (will infiltrate), Peter is boldly prophesying the role that false teachers will have before these Gentile believers. It was necessary for him to establish both his own credentials and to anchor his audience's faith in the written Word before he could get to this point, for these false teachers will question both.

5 tn Grk "will bring in," often with the connotation of secretiveness; "your midst" is implied.

6 tn Or "destructive opinions," "destructive viewpoints." The genitive ἀπωλείας (apōleias) could be taken either attributively ("destructive") or as a genitive of destination ("leading to destruction"). Although the preferable interpretation is a genitive of destination, especially because of the elaboration given at the end of the verse ("bringing swift destruction on themselves"), translating it attributively is less cumbersome in English. Either way, the net result is the same.

7 tn Grk "even." The καί (kai) is ascensive, suggesting that the worst heresy is mentioned in the words that follow.

8 tn Grk "bringing." The present participle ἐπάγοντες (epagontes) indicates the result of the preceding clause.

9 tn "Debauched lifestyles" is literally "licentiousnesses," "sensualities," "debaucheries."

10 tn Grk "because of whom," introducing a subordinate clause to the first part of the verse.

11 tn Or "blasphemed," "reviled," "treated with contempt."

12 tn Grk "to whom," introducing a subordinate relative clause.

13 tn Grk "the ancient judgment."

14 tn Grk "is not idle."

15 tn Greek has "and their." As introducing a synonymous parallel, it is superfluous in English.

16 tn The participle ἁμαρτησάντων (hamartēsantōn) could either be attributive ("who sinned") or adverbial ("when they sinned"). The relation to the judgment of the false teachers in v. 3 suggests that the objects of God's judgment are not in question, but the time frame for the execution of justice is. If the participle is taken temporally, the point of comparison is not as acute. The objection that the illustrations following (the flood, Sodom and Gomorrah) are viewed temporally does not mitigate this translation, for in both instances only the time of executing judgment is in view. Further, in both instances the OT notes that God withheld punishment for a long time.

17 tn Grk "casting them into Tartarus" or "holding them captive in Tartarus." This verb, ταρταρόω (tartaroō), occurs only here in the NT, but its meaning is clearly established in both Hellenistic and Jewish literature. "Tartarus [was] thought of by the Greeks as a subterranean place lower than Hades where divine punishment was meted out, and so regarded in Israelite apocalyptic as well" (BDAG 991 s.v.). Grammatically, it has been translated as an indicative because it is an attendant circumstance participle.

18 tn Grk "handed them over."

19 tc The reading σειραῖς (seirais, "chains") is found in $\mathfrak{P}^{72}$ P Ψ 33 1739 $\mathfrak{M}$ vg sy, while σιροῖς (sirois [or σειροῖς, seirois], "pits") is found in ℵ A B C 81 pc. The evidence is thus fairly evenly divided. Internally, the reading adopted here (σειραῖς) is a rarer term, perhaps prompting some scribes to replace it with the more common word. However, this more common term is not a synonym and hence does not follow the normal pattern of scribes. As well, the use of the genitive ζόφου (zophou) in "chains of darkness" is a bit awkward (a rare genitive of place), perhaps prompting some scribes to change the imagery to "pits of darkness" (in which case ζόφου is an attributive genitive). A further point that complicates the issue is the relationship of 2 Peter to Jude. Jude's parallel (v. 6) has δεσμοῖς (desmois, "chains"). Apart from the issue of whether 2 Peter used Jude or Jude used 2 Peter, this parallel suggests one of two possibilities: either (1) since these two books obviously have a literary relationship, σειραῖς is original, or (2) early scribes, recognizing that these two books shared their material, changed σειροῖς to σειραῖς to conform the wording, at least conceptually, to Jude 6. On balance, σειραῖς looks to be original because scribes were not prone to harmonize extensively between books other than the Gospels (although 2 Peter and Jude do display some of this harmonizing). Further, such harmonization is often, if not usually, verbally exact, but δεσμοῖς is not a variant here.

20 tn The genitive ζόφου (zophou) is taken as a genitive of place. See previous note for discussion.

kept until the judgment, 2:5 and if he did not spare the ancient world, but did protect Noah, a herald of righteousness, along with seven others,[1] when God[2] brought a flood on an ungodly world,[3] 2:6 and if he turned to ashes the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah when he condemned them to destruction,[4] having appointed[5] them to serve as an example[6] to future generations of the ungodly,[7] 2:7 and if he rescued Lot, a righteous man in anguish over the debauched lifestyle of lawless[8] men,[9] 2:8 (for while he lived among them day after day, that righteous man was tormented in his righteous soul[10] by the lawless deeds he saw and heard[11]) 2:9 – if so,[12] then the Lord knows how to rescue the godly from their trials,[13] and to reserve the unrighteous for punishment[14] at the day of judgment, 2:10 especially those who indulge their fleshly desires[15] and who despise authority.

Brazen and insolent,[16] they are not afraid to insult[17] the glorious ones,[18] 2:11 yet even[19] angels, who are much more powerful,[20] do not bring a slanderous[21] judgment against them before the Lord.[22] 2:12 But[23] these men,[24] like

[1] tn "Along with seven others" is implied in the cryptic, "the eighth, Noah." A more literal translation thus would be, "he did protect Noah [as] the eighth..."

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been repeated here for clarity, although this is somewhat redundant with the beginning of v. 4.

[3] tn Grk "a world of the ungodly."

[4] tc Several important witnesses omit καταστροφῇ (katastrophē, "destruction"; such as 𝔓72* B C* 1241 1739 1881 pc), but this is probably best explained as an accidental omission due to homoioarcton (the word following is κατέκρινεν [katekrinen, "he condemned"]).

tn Or "ruin," or "extinction." The first part of this verse more literally reads "And [if] he condemned to annihilation the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, by turning them to ashes."

sn The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah is detailed in Gen 18:16–19:29.

[5] tn The perfect participle τεθεικώς (tetheikōs) suggests an antecedent act. More idiomatically, the idea seems to be, "because he had already appointed them to serve as an example."

[6] tn "To serve as" is not in Greek but is implied in the object-complement construction.

[7] tn Grk "an example of the things coming to the ungodly," or perhaps "an example to the ungodly of coming [ages]."

[8] tn Or "unprincipled."

[9] tn This verse more literally reads "And [if] he rescued righteous Lot, who was deeply distressed by the lifestyle of the lawless in [their] debauchery."

[10] tn Grk "that righteous man tormented his righteous soul."

[11] tn Grk "by lawless deeds, in seeing and hearing [them]."

[12] tn The Greek is one long conditional sentence, from v. 4 to v. 10a. 2 Pet 2:4-8 constitute the protasis; vv. 9 and 10a, the apodosis. In order to show this connection more clearly, a resumptive summary protasis – "if so," or "if God did these things" – is needed in English translation.

[13] tn Grk "from trial," or possibly "from temptation" (though this second meaning for πειρασμός (peirasmos) does not fit the context in which Noah and Lot are seen as in the midst of trials, not temptation).

[14] tn The adverbial participle κολαζομένους (kolazomenous) can refer either to contemporaneous time or subsequent time. At stake is the meaning of the following prepositional phrase (at the day of judgment or until the day of judgment). If the participle is contemporaneous, the idea is "to keep the ungodly in a state of punishment until the day of judgment." If subsequent, the meaning is "to keep the ungodly to be punished at the day of judgment." Many commentators/translations opt for the first view, assuming that the present participle cannot be used of subsequent time. However, the present participle is the normal one used for result, and is often used of purpose (cf., e.g., for present participles suggesting result, Mark 9:7; Luke 4:15; John 5:18; Eph 2:15; 2 Pet 2:1, mentioned above; for present participles indicating purpose, note Luke 10:25; John 12:33; Acts 3:26; 2 Pet 2:10 [as even most translations render it]). Further, the context supports this: 2:1-10 forms something of an inclusio, in which the final end of the false teachers is mentioned specifically in v. 1, then as a general principle in v. 9. The point of v. 3 – that the punishment of the false teachers is certain, even though the sentence has not yet been carried out, is underscored by a participle of purpose in v. 9.

[15] tn Grk "those who go after the flesh in [its] lust."

[16] tn There is no "and" in Greek; it is supplied for the sake of English convention.

[17] tn The translation takes βλασφημοῦντες (blasphēmountes) as an adverbial participle of purpose, as most translations do. However, it is also possible to see this temporally (thus, "they do not tremble when they blaspheme").

[18] tn Δόξας (doxas) almost certainly refers to angelic beings rather than mere human authorities, though it is difficult to tell whether good or bad angels are in view. Verse 11 seems to suggest that wicked angels is what the author intends.

[19] tn Grk "whereas."

[20] tn Grk "who are greater in strength and power." What is being compared, however, could either be the false teachers or "the glorious ones," in which case "angels" would refer to good angels and "the glorious ones" to evil angels.

[21] tn Or "insulting." The word comes from the same root as the term found in v. 10 ("insult"), v. 12 ("insulting"), and v. 2 ("will be slandered"). The author is fond of building his case by the repetition of a word in a slightly different context so that the readers make the necessary connection. English usage cannot always convey this connection because a given word in one language cannot always be translated the same way in another.

[22] tc ‡ Some witnesses lack παρὰ κυρίῳ (para kuriō; so A Ψ 33 81 1505 1881 2464 al vg co), while others have the genitive παρὰ κυρίου (para kuriou; so 𝔓72 1241 al sy^{ph,h}). The majority of witnesses (including ℵ B C P 1739 𝔐) read the dative παρὰ κυρίῳ. The genitive expression suggests that angels would not pronounce a judgment on "the glorious ones" from the Lord, while the dative indicates that angels would not pronounce a judgment on "the glorious ones" in the presence of the Lord. The parallel in Jude 9 speaks of a reviling judgment against the devil in which the prepositional phrase is entirely absent. At the same time, in that parallel Michael does say, "The Lord rebuke you." (Hence, he is offering something of a judgment from the Lord.) The best options externally are the dative or the omission of the phrase, but a decision is difficult. Internally, the omission may possibly be a motivated reading in that it finds a parallel in Jude 9 (where no prepositional phrase is used). All things considered, the dative is to be preferred, though with much reservation.

[23] tn 2 Pet 2:12 through 16 constitute one cumbersome sentence in Greek. It is difficult to tell whether a hard break belongs in the middle of v. 13, as the translation has it, or whether the compounding of participles is meant in a loosely descriptive sort of way, without strong grammatical connection. Either way, the sentence rambles in a way that often betrays a great "vehemence of spirit" (A. T. Robertson, Grammar, 435). The author is obviously agitated at these false teachers who are to come.

[24] tn The false teachers could conceivably be men or women, but in v. 14 they are said to have eyes "full of an adulteress." This can only refer to men. Hence, both here and in v. 17 the false teachers are described as "men."

irrational animals – creatures of instinct, born to be caught and destroyed[1] – do not understand whom[2] they are insulting, and consequently[3] in their destruction they will be destroyed,[4] 2:13 suffering harm as the wages for their harmful ways.[5] By considering it a pleasure to carouse in broad daylight,[6] they are stains and blemishes, indulging[7] in their deceitful pleasures when they feast together with you. 2:14 Their eyes,[8] full of adultery,[9] never stop sinning;[10] they entice[11] unstable people.[12] They have trained their hearts for greed, these cursed children![13] 2:15 By forsaking the right path they have gone astray, because they followed the way of Balaam son of Bosor,[14] who loved the wages of unrighteousness,[15] 2:16 yet was rebuked[16] for his own transgression (a dumb donkey,[17] speaking with a human voice,[18] restrained the prophet's madness).[19]

2:17 These men[20] are waterless springs and mists driven by a storm, for whom the utter depths of darkness[21] have been reserved. 2:18 For by speaking high-sounding but empty words[22] they are able to entice,[23] with fleshly desires and with debauchery,[24] people[25] who have just escaped[26] from those who reside in error.[27] 2:19 Although these false teachers promise[28] such people[29] freedom, they themselves are enslaved to[30] immorality.[31] For whatever a person succumbs to, to that he is enslaved.[32] 2:20 For if after they have escaped the filthy things[33] of the world through the rich knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,[34] they[35] again get entangled in them and succumb to

[1] tn Grk "born for capture and destruction."

[2] tn Grk "with [reference to] whom."

[3] tn There is no conjunction joining this last clause of v. 12 to the preceding (i.e., no "and consequently"). The argument builds asyndetically (a powerful rhetorical device in Greek), but cannot be naturally expressed in English as such.

[4] tn This cryptic expression has been variously interpreted. (1) It could involve a simple cognate dative in which case the idea is "they will be utterly destroyed." But the presence of αὐτῶν (autōn; their, of them) is problematic for this view. Other, more plausible views are: (2) the false teachers will be destroyed at the same time as the irrational beasts, or (3) in the same manner as these creatures (i.e., by being caught); or (4) the false teachers will be destroyed together with the evil angels whom they insult. Because of the difficulties of the text, it was thought best to leave it ambiguous, as the Greek has it.

[5] tn There is a play on words in Greek, but this is difficult to express adequately in English. The verb ἀδικέω (adikeō) as a passive means "to suffer harm," or "to suffer an injustice." The noun ἀδικία (adikia) means "unrighteousness." Since the Greek verb has a wider field of meaning than the English, to translate it as suffer an injustice is unwarranted, for it implicitly attributes evil to God. As R. Bauckham notes, "in English it is impossible to translate ἀδικούμενοι as a morally neutral term and ἀδικίας with a morally pejorative term, while retaining the play on words" (Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 265).

[6] tn Grk "considering carousing in the daytime a pleasure."

[7] tn Or "carousing," "reveling." The participle ἐντρυφῶντες (entruphōntes) is a cognate to the noun τρυφή (truphē, "carousing") used earlier in the verse.

[8] tn Grk "having eyes." See note on "men" at the beginning of v. 12.

[9] tn Grk "full of an adulteress."

[10] tn Grk "and unceasing from sin." Some translate this "insatiable for sin," but such a translation is based on a textual variant with inadequate support.

[11] tn Grk "enticing." See note on "men" at the beginning of v. 12.

[12] tn "People" is literally "souls." The term ψυχή (psuchē) can refer to one's soul, one's life, or oneself.

[13] tn Grk "having hearts trained in greediness, children of cursing." The participles continue the general description of the false teachers, without strong grammatical connection. The genitive κατάρας (kataras, "of cursing") is taken attributively here.

[14] tn Although many modern translations (e.g., NASB, TEV, NIV, CEV, NLT) read "Beor" here, this is due to harmonization with the OT rather than following a variant textual reading. The Greek text of NA^{27} reads "Bosor," an otherwise unattested form of the name of Balaam's father.

[15] tn "Wages of unrighteousness" in Greek is the same expression found in v. 13, "wages for harmful ways." The repetition makes the link between the false teachers and Balaam more concrete.

[16] tn Grk "but he had a rebuke."

[17] tn The Greek word ἄφωνος (aphōnos) means "mute, silent" or "incapable of speech." For reasons of English style the word "dumb" was used in the translation. Despite the potential for misunderstanding (since "dumb" can refer to a lack of intellectual capability) more dynamic glosses were judged to be inelegant.

[18] tn Grk "a voice of a (man/person)."

[19] sn Balaam's activities are detailed in Num 22–24 (see also Num 31:8, 16).

[20] tn Although some translations have simply "these" or "these people," since in v. 14 they are described as having eyes "full of an adulteress," men are in view.

[21] tn Grk "utter darkness of darkness." Verse 4 speaks of wicked angels presently in "chains of utter darkness," while the final fate of the false teachers is a darker place still.

[22] tn Grk "high-sounding words of futility."

[23] tn Grk "they entice."

[24] tn Grk "with the lusts of the flesh, with debauchery."

[25] tn Grk "those."

[26] tn Or "those who are barely escaping."

[27] tn Or "deceit."

[28] tn Verse 19 is a subordinate clause in Greek. The masculine nominative participle "promising" (ἐπαγγελλόμενοι, epangellomenoi) refers back to the subject of vv. 17-18. At the same time, it functions subordinately to the following participle, ὑπάρχοντες (huparchontes, "while being").

[29] tn Grk "them."

[30] tn Grk "slaves of." See the note on the word "slave" in 1:1.

[31] tn Or "corruption," "depravity." Verse 19 constitutes a subordinate clause to v. 18 in Greek. The main verbal components of these two verses are: "uttering…they entice…promising…being (enslaved)." The main verb is (they) entice. The three participles are adverbial and seem to indicate an instrumental relation (by uttering), a concessive relation (although promising), and a temporal relation (while being [enslaved]). For the sake of English usage, in the translation of the text this is broken down into two sentences.

[32] tn Grk "for by what someone is overcome, to this he is enslaved."

[33] tn Grk "defilements"; "contaminations"; "pollutions."

[34] sn Through the rich knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The implication is not that these people necessarily knew the Lord (in the sense of being saved), but that they were in the circle of those who had embraced Christ as Lord and Savior.

[35] tn Grk "(and/but) they."

them,[1] their last state has become worse for them than their first. 2:21 For it would have been better for them never to have known the way of righteousness than, having known it, to turn back from the holy commandment that had been delivered to them. 2:22 They are illustrations of this true proverb:[2] "A dog returns to its own vomit,"[3] and "A sow, after washing herself,[4] wallows in the mire."[5]

The False Teachers' Denial of the Lord's Return

3:1 Dear friends, this is already the second letter I have written[6] you, in which[7] I am trying to stir up[8] your pure mind by way of reminder: 3:2 I want you to recall[9] both[10] the predictions[11] foretold by the holy prophets and the commandment of the Lord and Savior through your apostles.[12] 3:3 Above all, understand this:[13] In the last days blatant scoffers[14] will come, being propelled by their own evil urges[15] 3:4 and saying,[16] "Where is his promised return?[17] For ever since[18] our ancestors[19] died,[20] all things have continued as they were[21] from the beginning of creation." 3:5 For they deliberately suppress this fact,[22] that by the word of God[23] heavens existed long ago and an earth[24] was formed out of water and by means of water. 3:6 Through these things[25] the world existing at that time was destroyed when it was deluged with water. 3:7 But by the same word the present heavens and earth have been reserved for fire, by being kept

[1] tn Grk "they again, after becoming entangled in them, are overcome by them."

[2] tn Grk "the [statement] of the true proverb has happened to them." The idiom in Greek cannot be translated easily in English.

[3] tn The quotation is a loose rendering of Prov 26:11. This proverb involves a participle that is translated like a finite verb ("returns"). In the LXX this line constitutes a subordinate and dependent clause. But since the line has been lifted from its original context, it has been translated as an independent statement.

[4] tn Or "after being washed." The middle verb may be direct ("wash oneself") or permissive ("allow oneself to be washed").

[5] tn The source of this quotation is uncertain. Heraclitus has often been mentioned as a possible source, but this is doubtful. Other options on the translation of the second line include a sow, having (once) bathed herself (in mud), (returns) to wallowing in the mire, or a sow that washes herself by wallowing in the mire (BDAG 181 s.v. βόρβορος). The advantage of this last translation is that no verbs need to be supplied for it to make sense. The disadvantage is that in this context it does not make any contribution to the argument. Since the source of the quotation is not known, there is some guesswork involved in the reconstruction. Most commentators prefer a translation similar to the one in the text above.

[6] tn Grk "I am already writing this [as] a second letter." The object-complement construction is more smoothly rendered in English a bit differently. Further, although the present tense γράφω (graphō) is used here, English convention employs an epistolary past tense. (The Greek epistolary aorist might have been expected here, but it also occurs in situations unlike its English counterparts.)

[7] tn The relative pronoun is plural, indicating that the following statement is true about both letters.

[8] tn Or "I have stirred up, aroused." The translation treats the present tense verb as a conative present.

[9] tn Grk "to remember." "I want you" is supplied to smooth out the English. The Greek infinitive is subordinate to the previous clause.

[10] tn "Both" is not in Greek; it is supplied to show more clearly that there are two objects of the infinitive "to remember" – predictions and commandment.

[11] tn Grk "words." In conjunction with πρόειπον (proeipon), however, the meaning of the construction is that the prophets uttered prophecies.

[12] sn Holy prophets...apostles. The first chapter demonstrated that the OT prophets were trustworthy guides (1:19-21) and that the NT apostles were also authoritative (1:16-18). Now, using the same catch phrase found in the Greek text of 1:20 (τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες, touto prōton ginōskontes), Peter points to specific prophecies of the prophets as an argument against the false teachers.

[13] tn Grk "knowing this [to be] foremost." Τοῦτο πρῶτον (touto prōton) constitute the object and complement of γινώσκοντες (ginōskontes). The participle is loosely dependent on the infinitive in v. 2 ("[I want you] to recall"), perhaps in a telic sense (thus, "[I want you] to recall...[and especially] to understand this as foremost"). The following statement then would constitute the main predictions with which the author was presently concerned. An alternative is to take it imperatival: "Above all, know this." In this instance, however, there is little semantic difference (since a telic participle and imperatival participle end up urging an action). Cf. also 2 Pet 1:20.

[14] tn The Greek reads "scoffers in their scoffing" for "blatant scoffers." The use of the cognate dative is a Semitism designed to intensify the word it is related to. The idiom is foreign to English. As a Semitism, it is further incidental evidence of the authenticity of the letter (see the note on "Simeon" in 1:1 for other evidence).

[15] tn Grk "going according to their own evil urges."

[16] tn The present participle λέγοντες (legontes, "saying") most likely indicates result. Thus, their denial of the Lord's return is the result of their lifestyle. The connection to the false teachers of chapter 2 is thus made clear.

[17] tn Grk "Where is the promise of his coming?" The genitive παρουσίας (parousias, "coming, advent, return") is best taken as an attributed genitive (in which the head noun, promise, functions semantically as an adjective; see ExSyn 89-91).

[18] tn The prepositional phrase with the relative pronoun, ἀφ' ἧς (aph' hēs), is used adverbially or conjunctively without antecedent (see BDAG 727 s.v. ὅς 1.k.).

[19] tn Grk "fathers." The reference could be either to the OT patriarchs or first generation Christians. This latter meaning, however, is unattested in any other early Christian literature.

[20] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

[21] tn Grk "thus," "in the same manner."

[22] tn The Greek is difficult at this point. An alternative is "Even though they maintain this, it escapes them that..." Literally the idea seems to be: "For this escapes these [men] who wish [it to be so]."

[23] tn The word order in Greek places "the word of God" at the end of the sentence. See discussion in the note on "these things" in v. 6.

[24] tn Or "land," "the earth."

[25] tn The antecedent is ambiguous. It could refer to the heavens, the heavens and earth, or the water and the word. If the reference is to the heavens, the author is reflecting on the Genesis account about "the floodgates of the heavens" being opened (Gen 7:11). If the reference is to the heavens and earth, he is also thinking about the cosmic upheaval that helped to produce the flood (Gen 6:11). If the reference is to the water and the word, he is indicating both the means (water) and the cause (word of God). This last interpretation is the most likely since the final nouns of v. 5 are "water" and "word of God," making them the nearest antecedents.

for the day of judgment and destruction of the ungodly.[1]

3:8 Now, dear friends, do not let this one thing escape your notice,[2] that a single day is like a thousand years with the Lord and a thousand years are like a single day. 3:9 The Lord is not slow concerning his promise,[3] as some regard slowness, but is being patient toward you, because he does not wish[4] for any[5] to perish but for all to come to repentance.[6] 3:10 But the day of the Lord will come like a thief; when it comes,[7] the heavens will disappear[8] with a horrific noise,[9] and the celestial bodies[10] will melt away[11] in a blaze,[12] and the earth and every deed done on it[13] will be laid bare.[14] 3:11 Since all these things are to melt away[15] in this manner,[16] what sort of people must we[17] be,

[1] tn Grk "the ungodly people."

[2] tn The same verb, λανθάνω (lanthanō, "escape") used in v. 5 is found here (there, translated "suppress").

[3] tn Or perhaps, "the Lord is not delaying [the fulfillment of] his promise," or perhaps "the Lord of the promise is not delaying." The verb can mean "to delay," "to be slow," or "to be hesitant."

[4] tn Grk "not wishing." The participle most likely has a causal force, explaining why the Lord is patient.

[5] sn He does not wish for any to perish. This verse has been a battleground between Arminians and Calvinists. The former argue that God wants all people to be saved, but either through inability or restriction of his own sovereignty does not interfere with peoples' wills. Some of the latter argue that the "any" here means "any of you" and that all the elect will repent before the return of Christ, because this is God's will. Both of these positions have problems. The "any" in this context means "any of you." (This can be seen by the dependent participle which gives the reason why the Lord is patient "toward you.") There are hints throughout this letter that the readership may be mixed, including both true believers and others who are "sitting on the fence" as it were. But to make the equation of this readership with the elect is unlikely. This would seem to require, in its historical context, that all of these readers would be saved. But not all who attend church know the Lord or will know the Lord. Simon the Magician, whom Peter had confronted in Acts 8, is a case in point. This is evident in contemporary churches when a pastor addresses the congregation as "brothers, sisters, saints, etc.," yet concludes the message with an evangelistic appeal. When an apostle or pastor addresses a group as "Christian" he does not necessarily think that every individual in the congregation is truly a Christian. Thus, the literary context seems to be against the Arminian view, while the historical context seems to be against (one representation of) the Calvinist view. The answer to this conundrum is found in the term "wish" (a participle in Greek from the verb boulomai). It often represents a mere wish, or one's desiderative will, rather than one's resolve. Unless God's will is viewed on the two planes of his desiderative and decretive will (what he desires and what he decrees), hopeless confusion will result. The scriptures amply illustrate both that God sometimes decrees things that he does not desire and desires things that he does not decree. It is not that his will can be thwarted, nor that he has limited his sovereignty. But the mystery of God's dealings with humanity is best seen if this tension is preserved. Otherwise, either God will be perceived as good but impotent or as a sovereign taskmaster. Here the idea that God does not wish for any to perish speaks only of God's desiderative will, without comment on his decretive will.

[6] tn Grk "reach to repentance." Repentance thus seems to be a quantifiable state, or turning point. The verb χωρέω (chōreō, "reach") typically involves the connotation of "obtain the full measure of" something. It is thus most appropriate as referring to the repentance that accompanies conversion.

[7] tn Grk "in which."

[8] tn Or "pass away."

[9] tn Or "hissing sound," "whirring sound," "rushing sound," or "loud noise." The word occurs only here in the NT. It was often used of the crackle of a fire, as would appear appropriate in this context.

[10] tn Grk "elements." Most commentators are agreed that "celestial bodies" is meant, in light of this well-worn usage of στοιχεῖα (stoicheia) in the 2nd century and the probable allusion to Isa 34:4 (text of Vaticanus). See R. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 315-16 for discussion.

[11] tn Grk "be dissolved."

[12] tn Grk "being burned up."

[13] tn Grk "the works in it."

[14] tc One of the most difficult textual problems in the NT is found in v. 10. The reading εὑρεθήσεται (heurethēsetai), which enjoys by far the best support (ℵ B K P 0156^{vid} 323 1241 1739^{txt} pc) is nevertheless so difficult a reading that many scholars regard it as nonsensical. (NA^{27} lists five conjectures by scholars, from Hort to Mayor, in this text.) As R. Bauckham has pointed out, solutions to the problem are of three sorts: (1) conjectural emendation (which normally speaks more of the ingenuity of the scholar who makes the proposal than of the truth of the conjecture, e.g., changing one letter in the previous word, ἔργα [erga] becomes ἄργα [arga] with the meaning, "the earth and the things in it will be found useless"); (2) adoption of one of several variant readings (all of which, however, are easier than this one and simply cannot explain how this reading arose, e.g., the reading of 𝔓^{72} which adds λυόμενα [luomena] to the verb – a reading suggested no doubt by the threefold occurrence of this verb in the surrounding verses: "the earth and its works will be found dissolved"; or the simplest variant, the reading of the Sahidic mss, οὐχ [ouch] preceding εὑρεθήσεται – "will not be found"); or (3) interpretive gymnastics which regards the text as settled but has to do some manipulation to its normal meaning. Bauckham puts forth an excellent case that the third option is to be preferred and that the meaning of the term is virtually the equivalent of "will be disclosed," "will be manifested." (That this meaning is not readily apparent may in fact have been the reason for so many variants and conjectures.) Thus, the force of the clause is that "the earth and the works [done by men] in it will be stripped bare [before God]." In addition, the unusualness of the expression is certainly in keeping with the author's style throughout this little book. Hence, what looks to be suspect because of its abnormalities, upon closer inspection is actually in keeping with the author's stylistic idiosyncrasies. The meaning of the text then is that all but the earth and men's works will be destroyed. Everything will be removed so that humanity will stand naked before God. Textually, then, on both external and internal grounds, εὑρεθήσεται commends itself as the preferred reading.

[15] tn Grk "all these things thus being dissolved."

[16] tn Or "thus."

[17] tc ‡ Most mss have a pronoun with the infinitive – either ὑμᾶς (humas, "you"; found in A C$^{[*]}$ P Ψ 048^{vid} 33 1739 𝔐, as well as the corrector of 𝔓^{72} and second corrector of ℵ), ἡμᾶς (hēmas, "we"; read by ℵ 630 2464 al), or ἑαυτούς (heautous, "[you your]selves/[we our]selves," read by 1243). But the shorter reading (with no pronoun) has the support of 𝔓^{72*,74vid} B pc. Though slim, the evidence for the omission is nevertheless the earliest. Further, the addition of some pronoun, especially the second person pronoun, seems to be a clarifying variant. It would be difficult to explain the pronoun's absence in some witnesses if the pronoun were original. That three different pronouns have shown up in the mss is testimony for the omission. Thus, on external and internal grounds, the omission is preferred. For English style requirements, however, some pronoun has to be added. NA^{27} has ὑμᾶς in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

tn Or "you."

conducting our lives in holiness and godliness,[1] 3:12 while waiting for and hastening[2] the coming of the day of God?[3] Because of this day,[4] the heavens will be burned up and[5] dissolve, and the celestial bodies[6] will melt away in a blaze![7] 3:13 But, according to his promise, we are waiting for[8] new heavens and a new earth, in which[9] righteousness truly resides.[10]

Exhortation to the Faithful

3:14 Therefore, dear friends, since you are waiting for[11] these things, strive to be found[12] at peace, without spot or blemish, when you come into his presence.[13] 3:15 And regard the patience of our Lord as salvation,[14] just as also our dear brother Paul[15] wrote to you,[16] according to the wisdom given to him, 3:16 speaking of these things in all his letters.[17] Some things in these letters[18] are hard to understand, things[19] the ignorant and unstable twist[20] to their own destruction, as they also do to the rest of the scriptures.[21] 3:17 Therefore, dear friends, since you have been forewarned,[22] be on your guard that you do not get led astray by the error of these unprincipled men[23] and fall from your firm grasp on the truth.[24] 3:18 But grow in the grace and knowledge[25] of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be the honor both now and on[26] that eternal day.[27]

1 tn Grk "in holy conduct and godliness."

2 tn Or possibly, "striving for," but the meaning "hasten" for σπουδάζω (spoudazō) is normative in Jewish apocalyptic literature (in which the coming of the Messiah/the end is anticipated). Such a hastening is not an arm-twisting of the divine volition, but a response by believers that has been decreed by God.

3 sn The coming of the day of God. Peter elsewhere describes the coming or parousia as the coming of Christ (cf. 2 Pet 1:16; 3:4). The almost casual exchange between "God" and "Christ" in this little book, and elsewhere in the NT, argues strongly for the deity of Christ (see esp. 1:1).

4 tn Grk "on account of which" (a subordinate relative clause in Greek).

5 tn Grk "being burned up, will dissolve."

6 tn See note in v. 10 on "celestial bodies."

7 tn Grk "being burned up" (see v. 10).

8 tn Or possibly, "let us wait for." The form in Greek (προσδόκωμεν, prosdokōmen) could be either indicative or subjunctive. The present participle in v. 14, however, is best taken causally ("since you are waiting for"), suggesting that the indicative is to be read here.

9 tn The relative pronoun is plural, indicating that the sphere in which righteousness dwells is both the new heavens and the new earth.

10 tn Grk "dwells." The verb κατοικέω (katoikeō) is an intensive cognate of οἰκέω (oikeō), often with the connotation of "taking up residence," "settling down," being at home," etc. Cf., e.g., Matt 2:23; Acts 17:26; 22:12; Eph 3:17; Col 1:19; 2:9. Hence, the addition of the adverb "truly" is implicit in the connotation of the verb in a context such as this.

11 tn Grk "dear friends, waiting for." See note in v. 13 on "waiting for."

12 sn The Greek verb used in the phrase strive to be found is the same as is found in v. 10, translated "laid bare." In typical Petrine fashion, a conceptual link is made by the same linkage of terms. The point of these two verses thus becomes clear: When the heavens disappear and the earth and its inhabitants are stripped bare before the throne of God, they should strive to make sure that their lives are pure and that they have nothing to hide.

13 tn "When you come into" is not in Greek. However, the dative pronoun αὐτῷ (autō) does not indicate agency ("by him"), but presence or sphere. The idea is "strive to found {before him/in his presence}."

14 tn The language here is cryptic. It probably means "regard the patience of our Lord as an opportunity for salvation." In the least, Peter is urging his audience to take a different view of the delay of the parousia than that of the false teachers.

15 sn Critics generally assume that 2 Peter is not authentic, partially because in vv. 15-16 Paul is said to have written scripture. It is assumed that a recognition of Paul's writings as scripture could not have happened until early in the 2nd century. However, in the same breath that Paul is canonized, Peter also calls him "brother." This is unparalleled in the 2nd century apocryphal works, as well as early patristic writings, in which the apostles are universally elevated above the author and readers; here, Peter simply says "he's one of us."

16 sn Paul wrote to you. That Paul had written to these people indicates that they are most likely Gentiles. Further, that Peter is now writing to them suggests that Paul had already died, for Peter was the apostle to the circumcised. Peter apparently decided to write his two letters to Paul's churches shortly after Paul's death, both to connect with them personally and theologically (Paul's gospel is Peter's gospel) and to warn them of the wolves in sheep's clothing that would come in to destroy the flock. Thus, part of Peter's purpose seems to be to anchor his readership on the written documents of the Christian community (both the Old Testament and Paul's letters) as a safeguard against heretics.

17 tn Grk "as also in all his letters speaking in them of these things."

18 tn Grk "in which are some things hard to understand."

19 tn Grk "which." The antecedent is the "things hard to understand," not the entirety of Paul's letters. A significant principle is seen here: The primary proof texts used for faith and practice ought to be the clear passages that are undisputed in their meaning. Heresy today is still largely built on obscure texts.

20 tn Or "distort," "wrench," "torture" (all are apt descriptions of what heretics do to scripture).

21 sn This one incidental line, the rest of the scriptures, links Paul's writings with scripture. This is thus one of the earliest affirmations of any part of the NT as scripture. Peter's words were prophetic and were intended as a preemptive strike against the heretics to come.

22 tn Grk "knowing beforehand."

23 tn Or "lawless ones."

sn These unprincipled men. The same word is used in 2:7, suggesting further that the heretics in view in chapter 3 are the false teachers of chapter 2.

24 tn Grk "fall from your firmness."

25 tn The term "knowledge" (γνῶσις, gnōsis) used here is not the same as is found in 2 Pet 1:2, 3, 8; 2:20. This term is found in 1:5 and 1:6.

26 tn Or "until."

27 tc ‡ The vast bulk of MSS add ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of this letter, as they do almost all the rest of the NT books (only Acts, James, and 3 John lack a majority of witnesses supporting a concluding ἀμήν). The omission in B 1241 1243 1739* 1881 2298 appears to be original, although the fact that some of the best and earliest Alexandrian witnesses (𝔓72 ℵ A C P Ψ 33 co), along with the Byzantine text and early versions (vg sy), add the particle renders such a judgment less than iron-clad. NA27 places the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "day of eternity."

1 John

The Prologue to the Letter

1:1 This is what we proclaim to you:[1] what was from the beginning,[2] what we have heard, what we have seen with our eyes, what we have looked at and our hands have touched (concerning the word of life – 1:2 and the life was revealed, and we have seen and testify and announce[3] to you the eternal life that was with the Father and was revealed to us).[4] 1:3 What we have seen and heard we announce[5] to you too, so that[6] you may have fellowship[7] with us (and indeed our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ). 1:4 Thus[8] we are writing these things so that[9] our[10] joy may be complete.[11]

God Is Light, So We Must Walk in the Light

1:5 Now[12] this is the gospel[13] message[14] we

---

1 tn The phrase "This is what we proclaim to you" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to clarify the English. The main verb which governs all of these relative clauses is ἀπαγγέλλομεν (apangellomen) in v. 3. This is important for the proper understanding of the relative clauses in v. 1, because the main verb ἀπαγγέλλομεν in v. 3 makes it clear that all of the relative clauses in vv. 1 and 3 are the objects of the author's proclamation to the readers rather than the subjects. To indicate this the phrase "This is what we proclaim to you" has been supplied at the beginning of v. 1.

2 tn Grk "That which was from the beginning, that which we have heard..."

3 tn Or "proclaim."

4 tn In the Greek text the prologue to 1 John (vv. 1-4) makes up a single sentence. This is awkward in Greek, and a literal translation produces almost impossible English. For this reason the present translation places a period at the end of v. 2 and another at the end of v. 3. The material in parentheses in v. 1 begins the first of three parenthetical interruptions in the grammatical sequence of the prologue (the second is the entirety of v. 2 and the third is the latter part of v. 3). This is because of the awkwardness of connecting the prepositional phrase with what precedes, an awkwardness not immediately obvious in most English translations: "what we beheld and our hands handled concerning the word of life..." As J. Bonsirven (Épîtres de Saint Jean [CNT], 67) noted, while one may hear about the word of life, it is more difficult to see about the word of life, and impossible to feel with one's hands about the word of life. Rather than being the object of any of the verbs in v. 1, the prepositional phrase at the end of v. 1 ("concerning the word of life...") is more likely a parenthetical clarification intended to specify the subject of the eyewitness testimony which the verbs in v. 1 describe. A parallel for such parenthetical explanation may be found in John 1:12 (τοῖς πιστεύουσιν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, tois pisteuousin eis to onoma autou).

5 tn Or "proclaim."

6 tn The ἵνα (hina) here indicates purpose.

7 tn Or "communion"; or "association" (a reality shared in common, so in this case, "genuine association"). This term also occurs in vv. 6, 7.

8 tn "Thus" is supplied to indicated the resultative nature of the Greek conjunction καί (kai) at the beginning of v. 4.

9 tn The ἵνα (hina) here indicates purpose.

10 tc A number of mss, some of them important (A C K P 33 81 1505 1739 pm sy^{h} bo), read ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") rather than ἡμῶν (hēmōn, "our"), which is found in somewhat better witnesses (ℵ B L Ψ 049 1241 pm sy^{p} sa). Although the majority of Byzantine minuscules are split between the two readings, the Textus Receptus reads ὑμῶν. It is possible that ὑμῶν represents a scribal assimilation to John 16:24. As far as the immediate context is concerned, either reading could possibly be original, since the recipients have already been mentioned in 1:2 (ὑμῖν, humin) and 1:3 (ὑμῖν), while it might seem more natural for the author to be concerned about the fulfillment of his own joy than his readers' (cf. 2 John 4, 12; 3 John 3). Overall, the first person pronoun is preferred on both external and internal grounds.

11 tn Grk "be fulfilled."

sn This is what we proclaim to you...so that our joy may be complete. The prologue to 1 John (1:1-4) has many similarities to the prologue to the Gospel of John (1:1-18). Like the prologue to the Fourth Gospel, the prologue to 1 John introduces the reader to important themes which will be more fully developed later in the body of the work. In the case of 1 John, three of these are: (1) the importance of eyewitness testimony to who Jesus is (cf. 4:14, 5:6-12), (2) the importance of the earthly ministry of Jesus as a part of God's revelation of himself in Jesus Christ (cf. 4:2, 5:6), and (3) the eternal life available to believers in Jesus Christ (5:11-12, 5:20). Like the rest of the letter, the prologue to 1 John does not contain any of the usual features associated with a letter in NT times, such as an opening formula, the name of the author or sender, the name(s) of the addressee(s), a formal greeting, or a health wish or expression of remembrance. The author of 1 John begins the prologue with an emphasis on the eyewitness nature of his testimony. He then transitions to a focus on the readers of the letter by emphasizing the proclamation of this eyewitness (apostolic) testimony to them. The purpose of this proclamation is so that the readers might share in fellowship with the author, a true fellowship which is with the Father and the Son as well. To guarantee this maintenance of fellowship the author is writing the letter itself (line 4a). Thus, in spite of the convoluted structure of the prologue in which the author's thought turns back on itself several times, there is a discernible progression in his thought which ultimately expresses itself in the reason for the writing of the letter (later expressed again in slightly different form in the purpose statement of 5:13).

12 tn The καί (kai) at the beginning of 1:5 takes on a resumptive force, indicated by the phrase "heard from him and announce to you," which echoes similar phrases in 1:2 and 1:3.

13 tn The word "gospel" is not in the Greek text but is supplied to clarify the meaning. See the note on the following word "message."

14 tn The word ἀγγελία (angelia) occurs only twice in the NT, here and in 1 John 3:11. It is a cognate of ἐπαγγελία (epangelia) which occurs much more frequently (some 52 times in the NT) including 1 John 2:25. BDAG 8 s.v. ἀγγελία 1 offers the meaning "message" which suggests some overlap with the semantic range of λόγος (logos), although in the specific context of 1:5 BDAG suggests a reference to the gospel. (The precise "content" of this "good news' is given by the ὅτι [hoti] clause which follows in 1:5b.) The word ἀγγελία here is closely equivalent to εὐαγγέλιον (euangelion): (1) it refers to the proclamation of the eyewitness testimony about the life and ministry of Jesus Christ as proclaimed by the author and the rest of the apostolic witnesses (prologue, esp. 1:3-4), and (2) it relates to the salvation of the hearers/readers, since the purpose of this proclamation is to bring them into fellowship with God and with the apostolic witnesses (1:3). Because of this the adjective "gospel" is included in the English translation.

have heard from him[1] and announce to you: God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all.[2] 1:6 If we say we have fellowship with him and yet keep on walking[3] in the darkness, we are lying and not practicing[4] the truth. 1:7 But if we walk in the light as he himself is in the light, we have fellowship with one another and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanses[5] us from all sin.[6] 1:8 If we say we do not bear the guilt of sin,[7] we are deceiving ourselves and the truth is not in us. 1:9 But if we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous,[8] forgiving[9] us our sins and cleansing[10] us from all unrighteousness. 1:10 If we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar and his word is not in us. 2:1 (My little children,[11] I am writing these things to you so that you may not sin.[12]) But if anyone does sin, we have an

[1] tn The referent of the pronoun "him" is not entirely clear in the Greek text; it could be either (1) God the Father, or (2) Jesus Christ, both of whom are mentioned at the end of v. 3. A reference to Jesus Christ is more likely because this is the nearest possible antecedent, and because God (the Father) is specifically mentioned in the following clause in v. 5.

[2] tn The key to understanding the first major section of 1 John, 1:5-3:10, is found in the statement in v. 5: "God is light and in him there is no darkness at all." The idea of "proclamation" – the apostolic proclamation of eyewitness testimony which the prologue introduces (1:2, 3) – is picked up in 1:5 by the use of the noun ἀγγελία (angelia) and the verb ἀναγγέλλομεν (anangellomen), cognate to the verb in 1:3. The content of this proclamation is given by the ὅτι (hoti) clause in 1:5 as the assertion that God is light, so this statement should be understood as the author's formulation of the apostolic eyewitness testimony introduced in the prologue. (This corresponds to the apostolic preaching elsewhere referred to as κήρυγμα [kērugma], although the term the Apostle John uses here is ἀγγελία.)

sn Following the theme statement in 1:5, God is light and in him there is no darkness at all, the author presents a series of three claims and counterclaims that make up the first unit of 1 John (1:5-2:2). The three claims begin with "if" (1:6, 8, 10) and the three counterclaims begin with "but if" (1:7, 9; 2:1).

[3] tn The context of this statement in 1:6 indicates clearly that the progressive (continuative or durative) aspect of the present tense must be in view here.

sn The relationship of the phrase keep on walking to if we say is very important for understanding the problem expressed in 1:6. If one should say (εἴπωμεν, eipōmen) that he has fellowship with God, and yet continues walking (περιπατῶμεν, peripatōmen) in the darkness, then it follows (in the apodosis, the "then" clause) that he is lying and not practicing the truth.

[4] tn Or "living according to…"

[5] tn Or "purifies."

[6] tn BDAG 50 s.v. ἁμαρτία 1 defines this term as "a departure fr. either human or divine standards of uprightness" (see 1 John 5:17 where ἁμαρτία [hamartia] and ἀδικία [adikia] are related). This word occurs 17 times in 1 John, of which 11 are singular and 6 are plural.

sn From all sin. Sometimes a distinction between singular "sin" and plural "sins" has been suggested: Some would see the singular all sin of 1:7 as a reference to sinfulness before conversion and the plural sins of 1:9 as a reference to sins committed after one became a Christian. This amounts to making 1:7 refer to initial justification and 1:9 to sanctification. But the phrase all sin in 1:7 is so comprehensive that it can hardly be limited to preconversion sins, and the emphasis on "walking" in 1:7 strongly suggests that the Christian life is in view (not one's life before conversion). In 1 John 1:8 sin appears as a condition or characteristic quality, which in 1:10 is regarded as universal. Apart from forgiveness in Christ it results in alienation from God (2:15) and spiritual death (3:14). But according to 1 John 1:7, cleansing from sin is possible by the blood (representing the sacrificial death) of Jesus.

[7] tn Grk "say we do not have sin." The use of ἔχω + ἁμαρτία (echō + hamartia) is an expression limited to John and 1 John in the NT. On the analogy with other constructions where ἔχω governs an abstract noun (e.g., 1 John 1:3, 6, 7; 2:28; 3:3, 15, 21; 4:16, 17; 5:12-13), it indicates that a state is involved, which in the case of ἁμαρτία would refer to a state of sin. The four times the expression ἔχω + ἁμαρτία occurs in the Gospel of John (9:41; 15:22, 24; 19:11) all refer to situations where a wrong action has been committed or a wrong attitude has already existed, resulting in a state of sin, and then something else happens which further emphasizes the evil of that action or attitude. Here in 1 John 1:8 the sense is the same. The author is addressing people who have sinned (resulting in a state of sin), warning them that they cannot claim to be free from the guilt of that sin. The context of 1 John does not imply libertinism (where sins are flaunted as a way of demonstrating one's "liberty") on the part of the opponents, since the author makes no explicit charges of immoral behavior against his opponents. The worst the author explicitly says is that they have failed to love the brethren (1 John 3:17). It seems more likely that the opponents were saying that things a believer did after conversion were not significant enough to be "sins" that could challenge one's intimate relationship with God (a relationship the author denies that the opponents have to begin with).

[8] tn Or "just."

[9] tn The ἵνα (hina) followed by the subjunctive is here equivalent to the infinitive of result, an "ecbatic" or consecutive use of ἵνα according to BDAG 477 s.v. 3 where 1 John 1:9 is listed as a specific example. The translation with participles ("forgiving, …cleansing") conveys this idea of result.

[10] tn Or "purifying."

[11] sn My little children. The direct address by the author to his readers at the beginning of 2:1 marks a break in the pattern of the opponents' claims (indicated by the phrase if we say followed by a negative statement in the apodosis, the "then" clause) and the author's counterclaims (represented by if with a positive statement in the apodosis) made so far in 1:6-10. The seriousness of this last claim (in 1:10) causes the author to interrupt himself to address the readers as his faithful children and to explain to them that while he wants them not to sin, they may be assured that if they do, they can look to Jesus Christ, as their advocate with the Father, to intercede for them. After this, the last of the author's three counter-claims in 1:5-2:2 is found in the if clause in 2:1b.

[12] tn There is some dispute over the significance of the aorist tense of ἁμάρτητε (hamartēte): (1) F. Stagg ("Orthodoxy and Orthopraxy in the Johannine Epistles," RevExp 67 [1970]:423-32, esp. 428) holds that the aorist is nondescriptive, saying nothing about the nature of the action itself, but only that the action has happened. This is indeed the normal aspectual value of the aorist tense in general, but there is some disagreement over whether with this particular verb there are more specific nuances of meaning. (2) M. Zerwick (Biblical Greek §251) and N. Turner (MHT 3:72) agree that the present tense of ἁμαρτάνω (hamartanō) means "to be in a state of sin" (i.e., a sinner) while the aorist refers to specific acts of sin. Without attempting to sort out this particular dispute, it should be noted that certain verbs do have different nuances of meaning in different tenses, nuances which do not derive solely from the aspectual value of the tense per se, but from a combination of semantic factors which vary from word to word.

sn So that you may not sin. It is clear the author is not simply exhorting the readers not to be habitual or repetitive sinners, as if to imply that occasional acts of sin would be acceptable.

advocate[1] with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous One,[2] 2:2 and he himself is the atoning sacrifice[3] for our sins, and not only for our sins but also for the whole world.[4]

Keeping God's Commandments

2:3 Now[5] by this we know that we have come to know God:[6] if we keep his commandments. 2:4 The one who says "I have come to know God"[7] and yet does not keep his commandments is a liar, and the truth is not in such a person. 2:5 But whoever obeys his[8] word, truly in this person[9] the love of God has been perfected. By this we know that we are in him. 2:6 The one who says he resides[10] in

---

The purpose of the author here is that the readers not sin at all, just as Jesus told the man he healed in John 5:14 "Don't sin any more."

[1] tn The description of the Holy Spirit as "Paraclete" is unique to the Gospel of John (14:16, 26; 15:26; and 16:7). Here, in the only other use of the word in the NT, it is Jesus, not the Spirit, who is described as παράκλητος (paraklētos). The reader should have been prepared for this interchangeability of terminology, however, by John 14:16, where Jesus told the disciples that he would ask the Father to send them 'another' paraclete (ἄλλος, allos, "another of the same kind"). This implies that Jesus himself had been a paraclete in his earthly ministry to the disciples. This does not answer all the questions about the meaning of the word here, though, since it is not Jesus' role as an advocate during his earthly ministry which is in view, but his role as an advocate in heaven before the Father. The context suggests intercession in the sense of legal advocacy, as stress is placed upon the righteousness of Jesus (Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν δίκαιον, Iēsoun Christon dikaion). The concept of Jesus' intercession on behalf of believers does occur elsewhere in the NT, notably in Rom 8:34 and Heb 7:25. Something similar is taking place here, and is the best explanation of 1 John 2:1. An English translation like "advocate" or "intercessor" conveys this.

[2] tn Or "Jesus Christ the righteous."

[3] tn A suitable English translation for this word (ἱλασμός, hilasmos) is a difficult and even controversial problem. "Expiation," "propitiation," and "atonement" have all been suggested. L. Morris, in a study that has become central to discussions of this topic (The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross, 140), sees as an integral part of the meaning of the word (as in the other words in the ἱλάσκομαι [hilaskomai] group) the idea of turning away the divine wrath, suggesting that "propitiation" is the closest English equivalent. It is certainly possible to see an averting of divine wrath in this context, where the sins of believers are in view and Jesus is said to be acting as Advocate on behalf of believers. R. E. Brown's point (Epistles of John [AB], 220-21), that it is essentially cleansing from sin which is in view here and in the other use of the word in 4:10, is well taken, but the two connotations (averting wrath and cleansing) are not mutually exclusive and it is unlikely that the propitiatory aspect of Jesus' work should be ruled out entirely in the usage in 2:2. Nevertheless, the English word "propitiation" is too technical to communicate to many modern readers, and a term like "atoning sacrifice" (given by Webster's New International Dictionary as a definition of "propitiation") is more appropriate here. Another term, "satisfaction," might also convey the idea, but "satisfaction" in Roman Catholic theology is a technical term for the performance of the penance imposed by the priest on a penitent.

sn The Greek word (ἱλασμός, hilasmos) behind the phrase atoning sacrifice conveys both the idea of "turning aside divine wrath" and the idea of "cleansing from sin."

[4] tn Many translations supply an understood repetition of the word "sins" here, thus: "but also for the sins of the whole world."

[5] tn The translation of καί (kai) at the beginning of 2:3 is important for understanding the argument, because a similar καί occurs at the beginning of 1:5. The use here is not just a simple continuative or connective use, but has more of a resumptive force, pointing back to the previous use in 1:5.

sn Now. The author, after discussing three claims of the opponents in 1:6, 8, and 10 and putting forward three counterclaims of his own in 1:7, 1:9, and 2:1, now returns to the theme of "God as light" introduced in 1:5. The author will now discuss how a Christian may have assurance that he or she has come to know the God who is light, again by contrast with the opponents who make the same profession of knowing God, but lack the reality of such knowledge, as their behavior makes clear.

[6] tn Grk "know him." (1) Many take the third person pronoun αὐτον (auton) to refer to Jesus Christ, since he is mentioned in 2:1 and the pronoun αὐτός (autos) at the beginning of 2:2 clearly refers to him. But (2) it is more likely that God is the referent here, since (a) the assurance the author is discussing here is assurance that one has come to know God (all the claims of the opponents in 1:5-2:11 concern knowing and having fellowship with the God who is light); (b) when Jesus Christ is explicitly mentioned as an example to follow in 1 John 2:6, the pronoun ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) is used to distinguish this from previous references with αὐτός; (c) the καί (kai) which begins 2:3 is parallel to the καί which begins 1:5, suggesting that the author is now returning to the discussion of God who is light, a theme introduced in 1:5. The author will now discuss how a Christian may have assurance that he or she has come to know the God who is light.

[7] tn Grk "know him." See the note on the phrase "know God" in 1 John 2:3 for explanation.

[8] tn The referent of this pronoun is probably to be understood as God, since God is the nearest previous antecedent.

[9] tn Grk "in him."

[10] tn The Greek verb μένω (menō) is commonly translated into contemporary English as "remain" or "abide," but both of these translations have some problems: (1) "Abide" has become in some circles almost a "technical term" for some sort of special intimate fellowship or close relationship between the Christian and God, so that one may speak of Christians who are "abiding" and Christians who are not. It is accurate to say the word indicates a close, intimate (and permanent) relationship between the believer and God. However, it is very important to note that for the author of the Gospel of John and the Johannine Epistles every genuine Christian has this type of relationship with God, and the person who does not have this type of relationship (cf. 2 John 9) is not a believer at all (in spite of what he or she may claim). (2) On the other hand, to translate μένω as "remain" removes some of these problems, but creates others: In certain contexts, such a translation can give the impression that those who currently "remain" in this relationship with God can at some point choose not to "remain", that is, to abandon their faith and return to an unsaved condition. While one may easily think in terms of the author's opponents in 1 John as not "remaining," the author makes it inescapably clear in 2:19 that these people, in spite of their claims to know God and be in fellowship with God, never really were genuine believers. (3) In an attempt to avoid both these misconceptions, this translation renders μένω as "reside" except in cases where the context indicates that "remain" is a more accurate nuance, that is, in contexts where a specific change of status or movement from one position to another is in view.

sn The Greek word μένω (menō) translated resides indicates a close, intimate (and permanent) relationship between the believer and God. It is very important to note that for the author of the Gospel of John and the Johannine Epistles every genuine Christian has this type of relationship with God, and the person who does not have this type of relationship (cf. 2 John 9) is not a believer at all (in spite of what he or she may claim).

God[1] ought himself to walk[2] just as Jesus[3] walked.

2:7 Dear friends, I am not writing a new commandment to you, but an old commandment which you have had from the beginning.[4] The old commandment is the word that you have already[5] heard. 2:8 On the other hand, I am writing a new commandment to you which is true in him[6] and in you, because[7] the darkness is passing away and the true light is already shining.[8] 2:9 The one who says he is in the light but still hates[9] his fellow Christian[10] is still in the darkness. 2:10 The one who loves his fellow Christian[11] resides in the light, and there is no cause for stumbling in him.[12] 2:11 But the one who hates his fellow Christian[13] is in the darkness, walks in the darkness, and does not know where he is going, because the darkness has blinded his eyes.[14]

Words of Reassurance

2:12 I am writing to you,[15] little children, that[16] your sins have been forgiven because of

[1] tn Grk "in him." Context indicates a reference to God since a different pronoun, ἐκεινος (ekeinos), is used later in the same verse to indicate a reference to Jesus. See the note on "Jesus" later in this verse.

[2] tn That is, ought to behave in the same way Jesus did. "Walking" is a common NT idiom for one's behavior or conduct.

[3] tn Grk "that one." Context indicates a reference to Jesus here. It is clear that ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) here does not refer to the same person as αὐτῷ (autō) in 2:6a. The switch to ἐκεῖνος indicates a change in the referent, and a reference to Jesus Christ is confirmed by the verb περιεπάτησεν (periepatēsen), an activity which can only describe Jesus' earthly life and ministry, the significance of which is one of the points of contention the author has with the opponents. In fact, ἐκεῖνος occurs 6 times in 1 John (2:6; 3:3, 5, 7, 16; and 4:17), and each one refers to Jesus Christ.

[4] sn See John 13:34-35.

[5] tn "Already" is not is the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity.

[6] tn "In him" probably refers to Jesus Christ since the last third person pronoun in 2:6 referred to Jesus Christ and there is no indication in the context of a change in referent.

[7] tn The clause beginning with ὅτι (hoti) is often taken as (1) epexegetical or (2) appositional to the commandment (ἐντολήν, entolēn) giving a further explanation or clarification of it. But the statement following the ὅτι is about light and darkness, and it is difficult to see how this has anything to do with the commandment, especially as the commandment is related to the "new commandment" of John 13:34 for believers to love one another. It is far more likely that (3) the ὅτι clause should be understood as causal, but this still does not answer the question of whether it offers the reason for writing the "new commandment" itself or the reason for the relative clause ("that is true in him and in you"). It probably gives the reason for the writing of the commandment, although R. E. Brown (Epistles of John [AB], 268) thinks it refers to both.

[8] sn The reference to the darkness...passing away and the true light...already shining is an allusion to John 1:5, 1:9, and 8:12. Because the author sees the victory of light over darkness as something already begun, he is writing Jesus' commandment to love one another to the readers as a reminder to (1) hold fast to what they have already heard (see 1 John 2:7) and (2) not be influenced by the teaching of the opponents.

[9] tn Grk "the one saying he is in the light and hating his brother." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" because of the contrast present in the two clauses.

[10] tn Grk "his brother." Here the term "brother" means "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a). In the repeated uses of this form of address throughout the letter, it is important to remember that sometimes it refers (1) to genuine Christians (those who have remained faithful to the apostolic eyewitness testimony about who Jesus is, as outlined in the Prologue to the letter, 1:1-4; an example of this usage is 2:10; 3:14, 16), but often it refers (2) to the secessionist opponents whose views the author rejects (examples are found here at 2:9, as well as 2:11; 3:10; 3:15; 3:17; 4:20). Of course, to be technically accurate, in the latter case the reference is really to a "fellow member of the community"; the use of the term "fellow Christian" in the translation no more implies that such an individual is genuinely saved than the literal term "brother" which the author uses for such people. But a translation like "fellow member of the community" or "fellow member of the congregation" is extremely awkward and simply cannot be employed consistently throughout.

[11] tn See note on the term "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

[12] tn The third person pronoun αὐτῷ (autō) could refer either (1) to the person who loves his brother or (2) to the light itself which has no cause for stumbling "in it." The following verse (2:11) views darkness as operative within a person, and the analogy with Ps 119:165, which says that the person who loves God's law does not stumble, expresses a similar concept in relation to an individual. This evidence suggests that the person is the referent here.

[13] sn The one who hates his fellow Christian. The author's paradigm for the opponents portrays them as those who show hatred for fellow Christians (Grk "brothers," but not referring to one's physical siblings). This charge will be much more fully developed in chap. 3, where the author will compare the opponents to Cain (who is the model for one who hates a brother, since he ultimately murdered his own brother). In 1 John 3:17 the specific charge against the opponents will be failing to give material aid to a brother in need.

[14] sn 1 John 2:3-11. The section 2:3-11 contains three claims to intimate knowledge of God, each introduced by the phrase the one who says (participles in the Greek text) in 2:4, 6, and 9. As with the three claims beginning with "if" in the previous section (1:6, 8, 10), these indirectly reflect the claims of the opponents. Each claim is followed by the author's evaluation and its implications.

[15] sn I am writing to you. The author appears to have been concerned that some of his readers, at least, would accept the claims of the opponents as voiced in 1:6, 8, and 10. The counterclaims the author has made in 1:7, 9, and 2:1 seem intended to strengthen the readers and reassure them (among other things) that their sins are forgiven. Further assurances of their position here is in keeping with such a theme, and indeed, the topic of reassurance runs throughout the entire letter (see the purpose statement in 5:13). Finally, in such a context the warning which follows in 2:15-17 is not out of place because the author is dealing with a community that is discouraged by the controversy which has arisen within it and that is in need of exhortation.

[16] tn The ὅτι (hoti) that follows all six occurrences of γράφω/ἔγραψα (graphō/egrapsa) in 2:12-14 can be understood as introducing either (1) a causal clause or (2) a content clause (if content, it could be said to introduce a direct object clause or an indirect discourse clause). Many interpreters have favored a causal translation, so that in each of the six cases what follows the ὅτι gives the reason why the author is writing to the recipients. Usage in similar constructions is not decisive because only one other instance of γράφω followed by ὅτι occurs in 1 John (2:21), and that context is just as ambiguous as this one. On other occasions γράφω does tend to be followed by a noun or pronoun functioning as direct object. This might argue for the content usage here, but it could also be argued that the direct object in the six instances in these verses is understood, namely, the content of the entire letter itself. Thus the following ὅτι clause could still be causal. Grammatical considerations aside, these uses of ὅτι are more likely introducing content clauses here rather than causal clauses because such a meaning better fits the context. If the uses of ὅτι are understood as causal, it is difficult to see why the author immediately gives a warning in the

I am writing to you, young people, that[3] you have conquered the evil one.[4] 2:14 I have written to you, children, that[5] you have known the Father.[6] I have written to you, fathers, that[7] you have known him who has been from the beginning. I have written to you, young people, that[8] you are strong, and the word of God resides in you, and you have conquered the evil one.

2:15 Do not love the world or the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him, 2:16 because all that is in the world (the desire of the flesh and the desire of the eyes and the arrogance produced by material possessions)[9] is not from the Father, but is from the world. 2:17 And the world is passing away with all its desires, but the person who does the will of God remains[10] forever.

Warning About False Teachers

2:18 Children, it is the last hour, and just as you heard that the antichrist is coming, so now many antichrists[11] have appeared. We know from this that it is the last hour. 2:19 They went out from us, but they did not really belong to us, because if they had belonged to us, they would have remained[12] with us. But[13] they went out from us[14] to demonstrate[15] that all of them do not belong to us.[16]

2:20 Nevertheless you have an anointing from the Holy One, and you all know.[17] section that follows about loving the world. The confidence he has expressed in his readers (if the ὅτι clauses are understood as causal) would appear to be ill-founded if he is so concerned about their relationship to the world as 2:15-17 seems to indicate. On the other hand, understanding the ὅτι clauses as content clauses fits very well the context of reassurance which runs throughout the letter.

[1] tn "His" probably refers to Jesus Christ. Note the last reference was to Jesus in 2:8 and before that in 2:6; also the mention of sins being forgiven suggests Jesus' work on the cross.

[2] tn See the note on "that" in v. 12.

[3] tn See the note on "that" in v. 12.

[4] sn The phrase the evil one is used in John 17:15 as a reference to Satan. Satan is also the referent here and in the four other occurrences in 1 John (2:14; 3:12; 5:18, 19).

[5] tn See the note on "that" in v. 12.

[6] sn The versification of vv. 13 and 14 (so also NAB, NRSV, NLT) follows that of the NA[27] and UBS[4] editions of the Greek text. Some English translations, however, break the verses between the sentence addressed to children and the sentence addressed to fathers (KJV, NKJV, NASB, NIV). The same material has been translated in each case; the only difference is the versification of that material.

[7] tn See the note on "that" in v. 12.

[8] tn See the note on "that" in v. 12.

[9] tn The genitive βίου (biou) is difficult to translate: (1) Many understand it as objective, so that βίος (bios, "material life") becomes the object of one's ἀλαζονεία (alazoneia; "pride" or "boastfulness"). Various interpretations along these lines refer to boasting about one's wealth, showing off one's possessions, boasting of one's social status or lifestyle. (2) It is also possible to understand the genitive as subjective, however, in which case the βίος itself produces the ἀλαζονεία. In this case, the material security of one's life and possessions produces a boastful overconfidence. This understanding better fits the context here: The focus is on people who operate purely on a human level and have no spiritual dimension to their existence. This is the person who loves the world, whose affections are all centered on the world, who has no love for God or spiritual things ("the love of the Father is not in him," 2:15).

sn The arrogance produced by material possessions. The person who thinks he has enough wealth and property to protect himself and insure his security has no need for God (or anything outside himself).

[10] tn See note on the translation of the Greek verb μένω (menō) in 2:6. The translation "remain" is used for μένω (menō) here because the context contrasts the transience of the world and its desires with the permanence of the person who does God's will.

[11] sn Antichrists are John's description for the opponents and their false teaching, which is at variance with the apostolic eyewitness testimony about who Jesus is (cf. 1:1-4). The identity of these opponents has been variously debated by scholars, with some contending (1) that these false teachers originally belonged to the group of apostolic leaders, but departed from it ("went out from us," v. 19). It is much more likely (2) that they arose from within the Christian communities to which John is writing, however, and with which he identifies himself. This identification can be seen in the interchange of the pronouns "we" and "you" between 1:10 and 2:1, for example, where "we" does not refer only to John and the other apostles, but is inclusive, referring to both himself and the Christians he is writing to (2:1, "you").

[12] tn See note on the translation of the Greek verb μένω (menō) in 2:6. Here μένω has been translated as "remained" since it is clear that a change of status or position is involved. The opponents departed from the author's congregation(s) and showed by this departure that they never really belonged. Had they really belonged, they would have stayed ("remained").

[13] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[14] tn The phrase "they went out from us" is not repeated a second time in the Greek text, but constitutes an ellipsis. For clarity it is necessary to repeat it in the English translation.

[15] tn Grk "in order that it may be demonstrated." The passive infinitive has been translated as active and the purpose clause translated by an infinitive in keeping with contemporary English style.

[16] sn All of them do not belong to us. The opponents chose to depart rather than remain in fellowship with the community to which the author writes and with which he associates himself. This demonstrates conclusively to the author that they never really belonged to that community at all (in spite of what they were claiming). 1 John 2:19 indicates that the departure was apparently the opponents' own decision rather than being thrown out or excommunicated. But for John, if they had been genuine believers, they would have remained in fellowship. Now they have gone out into the world, where they belong (compare 1 John 4:5).

[17] tc πάντες (pantes, nominative plural in "you all know") is read by ℵ B P Ψ sa. A C 049 33 1739 𝔐 latt sy bo have the accusative πάντα (panta, "you know all things"). The evidence favors the nominative reading, but it is not overwhelming. At the same time, the internal evidence supports the nominative for a variety of reasons. A scribe would naturally tend to give the transitive verb a direct object, especially because of the parallel in the first half of the verse. And intrinsically, the argument seems to be in balance with v. 19: The "all" who have gone out and are not "in the know" with the "all" who have an anointing and know that they are true believers. Further, as R. E. Brown points out, "the fact of their knowledge (pantes), not the extent of its object (panta), seems best to fit the reassurance" (Epistles of John [AB], 349). Brown further points out the connection with the new covenant in Jer 31 with this section of 1 John, esp. Jer 31:34 – "they all [pantes] shall know me." Since 1 John alludes to Jer 31, without directly quoting it, this is all the more reason to see the nominative as original: Allusions are often overlooked by scribes (transcriptional evidence), but support the intrinsic evidence. Thus, the evidence

2:21 I have not written to you that[1] you do not know the truth, but that[2] you do know it, and that[3] no lie is of the truth. 2:22 Who is the liar but the person who denies that Jesus is the Christ[4]? This one is the antichrist: the person who denies the Father and the Son. 2:23 Everyone who denies the Son does not have the Father either. The person who confesses the Son has the Father also.[5]

2:24 As for you, what you have heard from the beginning must remain[6] in you. If what you heard from the beginning remains in you, you also will remain in the Son and in the Father. 2:25 Now this[7] is the promise that he[8] himself made to[9] us: eternal life.[10] 2:26 These things I have written to you about those who are trying to deceive you.[11]

2:27 Now as for you, the anointing[12] that you received from him[13] resides[14] in you, and you have no need for anyone to teach you. But as his[15] anointing teaches you about all things, it is true and is not a lie. Just as[16] it[17] has taught you, you reside[18] in him.

Children of God

2:28 And now, little children, remain[19] in is solidly (though not overwhelmingly) behind the nominative reading.

sn The statement you all know probably constitutes an indirect allusion to the provisions of the new covenant mentioned in Jer 31 (see especially Jer 31:34). See also R. E. Brown, The Epistles of John [AB], 349.

1 tn The interpretation of the three ὅτι clauses in v. 21 is very difficult: (1) All three instances of ὅτι (hoti) may be causal (so NASB, NIV, NEB). (2) The first two may be causal while the third indicates content (declarative or recitative ὅτι, so KJV, RSV, TEV, NRSV). (3) However, it is best to take all three instances as indicating content because this allows all three to be subordinate to the verb ἔγραψα (egrapsa) as compound direct objects. The author writes to reassure his readers (a) that they do indeed know the truth (first two uses of ὅτι) and (b) that no lie is of the truth (third use).

2 tn See the note on the first occurrence of "that" in v. 21.

3 tn See the note on the first occurrence of "that" in v. 21.

4 tn Or "the Messiah"

5 tc The Byzantine text, almost alone, lacks the last eight words of this verse, "The person who confesses the Son has the Father also" (ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει, ho homologōn ton huion kai ton patera echei). Although shorter readings are often preferred (since scribes would tend to add material rather than delete it), if an unintentional error is likely, shorter readings are generally considered secondary. This is a classic example of such an unintentional omission: The τὸν πατέρα ἔχει of the preceding clause occasioned the haplography, with the scribe's eye skipping from one τὸν πατέρα ἔχει to the other. (Readings such as this also suggest that the Byzantine text may have originated [at least for 1 John and probably the general epistles] in a single archetype.)

6 tn The word translated "remain" may also be translated "reside" (3 times in 2:24). See also the notes on the translation of the Greek verb μένω (menō) in 2:6 and in 2:19. Here the word can really have both nuances of "residing" and "remaining" and it is impossible for the English reader to catch both nuances if the translation provides only one. This occurs three times in 2:24.

7 tn It is difficult to know whether the phrase καὶ αὕτη ἐστιν (kai hautē estin) refers (1) to the preceding or (2) to the following material, or (3) to both. The same phrase occurs at the beginning of 1:5, where it serves as a transitional link between the prologue (1:1-4) and the first major section of the letter (1:5-3:10). It is probably best to see the phrase here as transitional as well; thus καί (kai) has been translated "now" rather than "and." The accusative phrase at the end of v. 25, τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον (tēn zōēn tēn aiōnion), stands in apposition to the relative pronoun ἥν (hēn), whose antecedent is ἡ ἐπαγγελία (hē epangelia; see BDF §295). Thus the "promise" consists of "eternal life."

8 tn The pronoun could refer to God or Jesus Christ, but a reference to Jesus Christ is more likely here.

9 tn Grk "he himself promised." The repetition of the cognate verb "promised" after the noun "promise" is redundant in English.

10 sn The promise consists of eternal life, but it is also related to the concept of "remaining" in 2:24. The person who "remains in the Son and in the Father" thus has this promise of eternal life from Jesus himself. Consistent with this, 1 John 5:12 implies that the believer has this eternal life now, not just in the future, and this in turn agrees with John 5:24.

11 sn The phrase those who are trying to deceive you in 1 John 2:26 is a clear reference to the secessionist opponents mentioned earlier in 1 John 2:19, who are attempting to deceive the people the author is writing to.

12 sn The anointing. The "anointing" (χρῖσμα, chrisma) which believers have received refers to the indwelling Holy Spirit which has been given to them at their conversion.

13 sn The pronoun could refer to God or Jesus Christ, but a reference to Jesus Christ is more likely here.

14 tn This use of μένω (menō) has been translated "reside" both times in 2:27 because it refers to the current status of believers.

15 sn The pronoun could refer (1) to God or (2) to Jesus Christ, but a reference to Jesus Christ is more likely here.

16 tn Grk "and is not a lie, and just as." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

17 tn Or "he."

18 tn The verb may be read as either (1) indicative or (2) imperative mood. The same verb is found in the following verse, 2:28, but the address to the readers there seems clearly to indicate an imperative. On analogy some have called for an imperative here, but others have seen this as suggesting an indicative here, so that the author is not repeating himself. An indicative is slightly more likely here. Up to this point the thrust of the author has been reassurance rather than exhortation, and an indicative here ("...you reside in him") balances the indicative in the first part of 2:27 ("the anointing which you received from him resides in you..."). With the following verse the author switches from reassurance (the readers at the time he is writing still 'remain'; they have not yet adopted the teaching of the opponents) to exhortation (he is writing so that they will 'remain' and not succumb to the deception of the opponents).

19 tn Again, as at the end of 2:27, the verb μένετε (menete) may be read as either (1) indicative or (2) imperative mood. At the end of 2:27 the translation opted for an indicative because the author had been attempting to reassure his readers that they did indeed possess eternal life, and also because an indicative at the end of 2:27 balances the indicative reference to the "anointing" residing in the readers at the beginning of the verse. With the return in 2:28 to the eschatological note introduced in 2:18, however, it appears that the author switches from reassurance to exhortation. At the time he is writing them, the readers do still "remain" since they have not yet adopted the heretical teaching of the opponents. But now the author wants to forestall the possibility that they might do so at some point, and so he begins this section with an exhortation to the readers to "reside/remain" in Christ. This suggests that μένετε in the present verse should be read as imperative rather than indicative, a view made even more probable by the following ἵνα (hina) clause which states the him,[1] so that when[2] he appears we may have confidence and not shrink away from him in shame when he comes back.[3] 2:29 If you know that he is righteous, you also know[4] that everyone who practices righteousness has been fathered[5] by him.

3:1 (See what sort of love the Father has given to us: that[6] we should be called God's children – and indeed[7] we are![8] For this reason[9] the world does not know us: because it did not know him.[10] 3:2 Dear friends, we are God's children now, and what we will be[11] has not yet been revealed. We[12] know that[13] whenever[14] purpose for the exhortation: in order that at the parousia (second advent) when Jesus Christ is revealed, the readers may have confidence and not shrink back from him in shame when he appears.

[1] sn A reference to Jesus Christ is more likely here. Note the mention of the second coming (second advent) at the end of this verse.

[2] tn In this context ἐάν (ean) does not indicate uncertainty about whether or not Christ will return, but rather uncertainty about the exact time when the event will take place. In the Koine period ἐάν could mean "when" or "whenever" and was virtually the equivalent of ὅταν (hotan; see BDAG 268 s.v. ἐάν 2). It has this meaning in John 12:32 and 14:3.

[3] tn Grk "at his coming."

sn Have confidence…shrink away from him in shame when he comes back. Once again in the antithetical framework of Johannine thought (that is, the author's tendency to think in terms of polar opposites), there are only two alternatives, just as there are only two alternatives in John 3:18-21, a key section for the understanding of the present passage in 1 John. Anyone who does not 'remain' demonstrates (just as the opponents demonstrated by their departure from the community in 2:19) that whatever profession he has made is false and he is not truly a believer.

[4] tn The mood of γινώσκετε (ginōskete) may be understood as (1) indicative or (2) imperative. It is better to understand the verb here as indicative, because in 1 John "knowledge" is something one has as a result of being a believer (2:3, 5, 20, 21; 3:16, 19, 24; 4:2, 13; 5:2) rather than something one has to be exhorted about. The change in verbs from οἶδα (oida) to γινώσκω (ginōskō) is another example of Johannine stylistic variation.

[5] tn The verb γεννάω (gennaō) presents a translation problem: (1) should the passive be translated archaically "be begotten" (the action of the male parent; see BDAG 193 s.v. 1.a) or (2) should it be translated "be born" (as from a female parent; see BDAG 194 s.v. 2)? A number of modern translations (RSV, NASB, NIV) have opted for the latter, but (3) the imagery expressed in 1 John 3:9 clearly refers to the action of the male parent in procreating a child, as does 5:1 ("everyone who loves the father loves the child fathered by him"), and so a word reflecting the action of the male parent is called for here. The contemporary expression "fathered by" captures this idea.

[6] tn The ἵνα (hina) clause is best understood (1) as epexegetical (or explanatory), clarifying the love (ἀγάπην, agapēn) that the Father has given to believers. Although it is possible (2) to regard the ἵνα as indicating result, the use of ποταπήν (potapēn, "what sort of") to modify ἀγάπην suggests that the idea of "love" will be qualified further in the following context, and this qualification is provided by the epexegetical ἵνα clause.

[7] tn "Indeed" is not in the Greek text but is supplied to indicate emphasis.

[8] tc The phrase καὶ ἐσμεν (kai esmen, "and we are") is omitted in 049 69 𝔐. There seems to be no theological reason to omit the words. This has all the earmarks of a classic case of homoioteleuton, for the preceding word (κληθῶμεν, klēthōmen, "we should be called") ends in -μεν (-men).

tn The indicative mood indicates that the verb ἐσμέν (esmen) at the end of 3:1a is not governed by the ἵνα (hina) and does not belong with the ἵνα clause, since this would have required a subjunctive. If the verb ἐσμέν were subjunctive, the force of the clause would be "that we should be called children of God, and be (children of God)." With ἐσμέν as indicative, the clause reads "that we should be called children of God, and indeed we are (children of God)."

[9] tn Lexically it is clear that this phrase indicates reason, but what is not clear is whether (1) τοῦτο (touto) refers to what follows, (2) to what precedes, or (3) to both (as with the ἐν τοῦτο [en touto] phrases throughout 1 John). Διὰ τοῦτο (dia touto) occurs 15 times in the Gospel of John, and a pattern emerges which is so consistent that it appears to be the key to the usage here. Six times in the Gospel of John (5:16, 18; 8:47; 10:17; 12:18, 39) the phrase refers to what follows, and in each of these instances an epexegetical ὅτι (hoti) clause follows. Nine times in John (1:31, 6:65, 7:21-22, 9:23, 12:27, 13:11, 15:19, 16:15, 19:11) the phrase refers to what precedes, and in none of these instances is it followed by a ὅτι clause. The phrase διὰ τοῦτο is used three times in the Johannine Epistles. In two of these (1 John 4:5, 3 John 10) there is no ὅτι clause following, and so the διὰ τοῦτο should refer to preceding material. Here in 3:1 there is an epexegetical ὅτι clause following, so the διὰ τοῦτο should (unless it is the only exception in the Gospel of John and the Johannine Epistles) refer to what follows, that is, to the ὅτι clause itself. This is indicated by the colon in the translation.

[10] sn The pronoun him is a clear reference to Jesus Christ (compare John 1:10).

[11] tn The subject of the third person singular passive verb ἐφανερώθη (ephanerōthē) in 3:2 is the following clause τί ἐσόμεθα (ti esometha): "Beloved, now we are children of God, and what we shall be has not yet been revealed."

sn What we will be. The opponents have been revealed as antichrists now (2:19). What believers will be is to be revealed later. In light of the mention of the parousia in 2:28, it seems likely that an eschatological revelation of the true character of believers is in view here.

[12] tc The Byzantine text, the Syriac Peshitta, the Bohairic Coptic, and one MS of the Sahidic Coptic supply δέ (de) after οἴδαμεν (oidamen) in 3:2b. Additions of coordinating conjunctions such as δέ are predictable variants; this coupled with the poor external credentials suggests that this addition is not likely to be original.

tn The relationship of 3:2b to 3:2a is difficult. It seems best to regard this as a case of asyndeton, although the Byzantine text, the Syriac Peshitta, the Bohairic Coptic, and some MSS of the Sahidic Coptic supply δέ (de) after οἴδαμεν (oidamen) in 3:2b. This addition is not likely to be original, but it does reflect a tendency among scribes to see an adversative (contrastive) relationship between 3:2a and 3:2b. This seems to be an accurate understanding of the relationship between the clauses from a logical standpoint: "and what we shall be has not yet been revealed, but we know that whenever he should be revealed, we shall be like him."

[13] tn The first ὅτι (hoti) in 3:2 follows οἴδαμεν (oidamen), a verb of perception, and introduces an indirect discourse clause which specifies the content of what believers know: "that whenever it should be revealed, we shall be like him."

[14] tn In this context ἐάν (ean) does not indicate (1) uncertainty about whether or not what believers will be shall be revealed, but rather (2) uncertainty about the exact time the event will take place. In the Koine period ἐάν can mean "when" or "whenever" and is virtually the equivalent of ὅταν (hotan; see BDAG 268 s.v. ἐάν 2). It has this meaning in John 12:32 and 14:3. Thus the phrase here should be translated, "we know that whenever it is revealed."

it[1] is revealed[2] we will be like him, because[3] we will see him just as he is.[4] 3:3 And everyone who has this hope focused[5] on him purifies[6] himself, just as Jesus[7] is pure).[8]

3:4 Everyone who practices sin[9] also practices lawlessness;[10] indeed,[11] sin is lawlessness. 3:5 And you know that Jesus[12] was revealed to take away[13] sins, and in him there is no sin. 3:6 Everyone who resides[14] in him does not sin;[15]

1 tn Many take the understood subject ("he") of φανερωθῇ (phanerōthē) as a reference to Jesus Christ, because the same verb was used in 2:28 in reference to the parousia (second advent). In the immediate context, however, a better analogy is ἐφανερώθη τί ἐσόμεθα (ephanerōthē ti esometha) in 3:2a. There the clause τί ἐσόμεθα is the subject of the passive verb: "what we shall be has not yet been revealed." From a grammatical standpoint it makes better sense to see the understood subject of φανερωθῇ as "it" rather than "he" and as referring back to the clause τί ἐσόμεθα in 3:2a. In the context this makes good sense: "Beloved, now we are children of God, and what we shall be has not yet been revealed. We know that whenever it shall be revealed, we shall be like him, because we shall see him just as he is." This emphasizes the contrast in the verse between the present state ("not yet been revealed") and the future state ("shall be revealed") of believers, and this will of course take place at the parousia.

2 sn Is revealed. It may well be that the use of the same passive verb here (from φανερόω, phanerоō) is intended to suggest to the reader the mention of the parousia (Christ's second coming) in 2:28.

3 tn The second ὅτι (hoti) in 3:2 is best understood as causal, giving the reason why believers will be like God: "we shall be like him, because we shall see him just as he is."

4 sn The phrase we will be like him, because we will see him just as he is has been explained two ways: (1) believers will really become more like God than they now are, and will do this through seeing God as he really is; or (2) believers will realize that they are already like God, but did not realize it until they see him as he is. One who sees a strong emphasis on realized eschatology in the Gospel of John and the Epistles might opt for the second view, since it downplays the difference between what believers already are in the present age and what they will become in the next. It seems better, though, in light of the statement in 3:2a that "what we will be has not yet been revealed" and because of the reference to Christ's parousia in 2:28, that the author intends to distinguish between the present state of believers and what they will be like in the future. Thus the first view is better, that believers really will become more like God than they are now, as a result of seeing him as he really is.

5 tn "Focused" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity.

6 sn The verb translated purifies (ἁγνίζω, hagnizō) is somewhat unusual here, since it is not common in the NT, and occurs only once in the Gospel of John (11:55). One might wonder why the author did not use the more common verb ἁγιάζω (hagiazō), as in John 17:19, where Jesus prays, "On their behalf I consecrate myself, so that they may also be consecrated in the truth." It is possible that there is some overlap between the two verbs and thus this is another example of Johannine stylistic variation, but the verb ἁγνίζω is used in the context of John 11:55, which describes ritual purification for the Passover, a usage also found in the LXX (Exod 19:10-11, Num 8:21). In this context the use of ἁγνίζω would remind the readers that, if they have the future hope of entering the Father's presence ("seeing him as he is" in 3:2), they need to prepare themselves by living a purified lifestyle now, just as Jesus lived during his earthly life and ministry (cf. 2:6 again). This serves to rebut the opponents' claims to moral indifference, that what the Christian does in the present life is of no consequence.

7 tn Grk "that one." Context indicates a reference to Jesus here. The switch from αὐτός (autos) to ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) parallels 1 John 2:6 (see note there). Since purity of life is mentioned in the context, this almost certainly refers to Jesus in his earthly life and ministry as the example believers should imitate (a major theme of the author throughout 1 John).

8 sn 1 John 3:1-3. All of 3:1-3 is a parenthesis within the present section in which the author reflects on what it means to be fathered by God, a subject he has mentioned at the end of 2:29. The sequence of the argument is then resumed by 3:4, which is in opposition to 2:29.

9 sn Everyone who practices sin. In contrast to the πᾶς ὁ (pas ho) + participle construction in 3:3 (everyone who has, πᾶς ὁ ἔχων [pas ho echōn]) which referred to believers, the use of everyone who practices sin (πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν [pas ho poiōn tēn hamartian]) here refers to the author's opponents. A similar use, referring to the opponents' denial of the Son, is found in 2:23.

10 sn The Greek word ἀνομία (anomia) is often translated "iniquity" or "lawlessness" and in the LXX refers particularly to transgression of the law of Moses. In Jewish thought the ideas of sin (ἁμαρτία, hamartia) and lawlessness or iniquity (ἀνομία) were often equated because sin involved a violation of the Mosaic law and hence lawlessness. For example, Ps 51:5 LXX sets the two in parallel, and Paul in Rom 4:7 (quoting Ps 32:1) does the same. For the author, it is not violation of the Mosaic law that results in lawlessness, since he is writing to Christians. The 'law' for the author is the law of love, as given by Jesus in the new commandment of John 13:34-35. This is the command to love one's brother, a major theme of 1 John and the one specific sin in the entire letter which the opponents are charged with (3:17). Since the author has already labeled the opponents "antichrists" in 2:18, it may well be that he sees in their iniquitous behavior of withdrawing from the community and refusing to love the brethren a foreshadowing of the apocalyptic iniquity of the end times (cf. 2 Thess 2:3-8). In Matt 24:11-12 Jesus foretold that false prophets would arise in the end times (cf. 1 John 4:1), that lawlessness (anomia) would increase, and that "the love of many will grow cold" (which would certainly fit the author's portrait of the opponents here).

11 tn Grk "and."

12 tn Grk "that one." The context makes it clear that this is a reference to Jesus, because the reader is told "he was revealed in order that he might take away sins." The connection with Jesus as the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world in John 1:29 provides additional confirmation that the previous use of ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) in 3:3b should also be understood as a reference to Jesus, as 2:6 was.

sn In Johannine thought it is Jesus, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world (John 1:29).

13 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause gives the purpose of Jesus' self-revelation as he manifested himself to the disciples and to the world during his earthly life and ministry: It was "to take away sins."

14 tn Here the verb μένω (menō) refers to the permanence of relationship between Jesus and the believer, as in 2:27 and 2:28. It is clear that Jesus is the referent of the phrase ἐν αὐτῷ (en autō) because he is the subject of the discussion in v. 5.

15 tn The interpretive problem raised by the use of the present tense ἁμαρτάνει (hamartanei) in this verse (and ποιεῖ [poiei] in 3:9 as well) is that (a) it appears to teach a sinless state of perfection for the true Christian, and (b) it appears to contradict the author's own statements in 2:1-2 where he acknowledged that Christians do indeed sin. (1) One widely used method of reconciling the acknowledgment in 2:1-2 that Christians do sin with the statements in 3:6 and 3:9 that they do not is expressed by M. Zerwick (Biblical Greek §251). He understands the aorist to mean "commit sin in the concrete, commit some sin or other" while the present means "be a sinner, as a characteristic «state»." N. Turner (Grammatical Insights, 151) argues essentially the same as Zerwick, stating that the present tense ἁμαρτάνει is stative (be a sinner) while the aorist is ingressive (begin to be a sinner, as the initial step of committing this or that sin). Similar interpretations can be found in a number of grammatical works and commentaries. (2) Others, however, have questioned the view that the distinction in tenses alone can convey a "habitual" everyone who sins has neither seen him nor known him. 3:7 Little children, let no one deceive you: The one who practices righteousness[1] is righteous, just as Jesus[2] is righteous. 3:8 The one who practices sin is of the devil,[3] because the devil has been sinning[4] from the beginning. For this purpose[5] the Son of God was revealed: to destroy[6] the works of the devil. 3:9 Everyone who has been fathered[7] by God does not practice sin,[8] meaning without further contextual clarification, including C. H. Dodd (The Johannine Epistles [MNTC], 79) and Z. C. Hodges ("1 John," BKCNT, 894). B. Fanning (Verbal Aspect [OTM], 215-17) has concluded that the habitual meaning for the present tense cannot be ruled out, because there are clear instances of habitual presents in the NT where other clarifying words are not present and the habitual sense is derived from the context alone. This means that from a grammatical standpoint alone, the habitual present cannot be ruled out in 1 John 3:6 and 9. It is still true, however, that it would have been much clearer if the author had reinforced the habitual sense with clarifying words or phrases in 1 John 3:6 and 9 if that is what he had intended. Dodd's point, that reliance on the distinction in tenses alone is quite a subtle way of communicating such a vital point in the author's argument, is still valid. It may also be added that the author of 1 John has demonstrated a propensity for alternating between present and aorist tenses for purely stylistic reasons (see 2:12).

sn Does not sin. It is best to view the distinction between "everyone who practices sin" in 3:4 and "everyone who resides in him" in 3:6 as absolute and sharply in contrast. The author is here making a clear distinction between the opponents, who as moral indifferentists downplay the significance of sin in the life of the Christian, and the readers, who as true Christians recognize the significance of sin because Jesus came to take it away (3:5) and to destroy it as a work of the devil (3:8). This argument is developed more fully by S. Kubo ("I John 3:9: Absolute or Habitual?" AUSS 7 [1969]: 47-56), who takes the opponents as Gnostics who define sin as ignorance. The opponents were probably not adherents of fully developed gnosticism, but Kubo is right that the distinction between their position and that of the true Christian is intentionally portrayed by the author here as a sharp antithesis. This explanation still has to deal with the contradiction between 2:1-2 and 3:6-9, but this does not present an insuperable difficulty. The author of 1 John has repeatedly demonstrated a tendency to present his ideas antithetically, in "either/or" terms, in order to bring out for the readers the drastic contrast between themselves as true believers and the opponents as false believers. In 2:1-2 the author can acknowledge the possibility that a true Christian might on occasion sin, because in this context he wishes to reassure his readers that the statements he has made about the opponents in the preceding context do not apply to them. But in 3:4-10, his concern is to bring out the absolute difference between the opponents and his readers, so he speaks in theoretical rather than practical terms which do not discuss the possible occasional exception, because to do so would weaken his argument.

[1] sn The one who practices righteousness. The participle (ὁ ποιῶν, ho poiōn) + noun constructions in 3:7 and in 3:8a, the first positive and the second negative, serve to emphasize the contrast between the true Christians ("the one who practices righteousness") and the opponents ("the one who practices sin," 3:8a).

[2] tn Grk "that one." Context indicates a reference to Jesus here. As with the previous uses of ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) by the author of 1 John (2:6; 3:3, 5), this one refers to Jesus, as the reference to "the Son of God" in the following verse (3:8) makes clear.

[3] sn The person who practices sin is of the devil. 1 John 3:10 and John 8:44 might be cited as parallels, because these speak of opponents as the devil's "children." However, it is significant that the author of 1 John never speaks of the opponents as "fathered by the devil" in the same sense as Christians are "fathered by God" (3:9). A concept of evildoers as "fathered" by the devil in the same sense as Christians are fathered by God would imply a much more fully developed Gnosticism with its dualistic approach to humanity. The author of 1 John carefully avoids saying that the opponents are "fathered by the devil," because in Johannine theology not to be fathered by God is to be fathered only by the flesh (John 1:13). This is a significant piece of evidence that 1 John predates the more fully developed Gnosticism of the 2nd century. What the author does say is that the opponents ("the one who practices sin") are from the devil, in the sense that they belong to him and have given him their allegiance.

[4] tn The present tense verb has been translated as an extending-from-past present (a present of past action still in progress). See ExSyn 520.

[5] tn Here εἰς τοῦτο (eis touto) states the purpose for the revelation of God's Son. However, the phrase offers the same difficulty as all the ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) phrases in 1 John: Does it refer to what precedes or to what follows? By analogy with the ἐν τούτῳ construction it is probable that the phrase εἰς τοῦτο here refers to what follows: There is a ἵνα (hina) clause following which appears to be related to the εἰς τοῦτο, and in fact is resumptive (that is, it restates the idea of "purpose" already expressed by the εἰς τοῦτο). Thus the meaning is: "For this purpose the Son of God was revealed: to destroy the works of the devil."

[6] tn In the Gospel of John λύσῃ (lusē) is used both literally and figuratively. In John 1:27 it refers to a literal loosing of one's sandal-thong, and in John 2:19 to a destruction of Jesus' physical body which was understood by the hearers to refer to physical destruction of the Jerusalem temple. In John 5:18 it refers to the breaking of the Sabbath, in John 7:23 to the breaking of the law of Moses, and in John 10:35 to the breaking of the scriptures. The verb is again used literally in John 11:44 at the resurrection of Lazarus when Jesus commands that he be released from the graveclothes with which he was bound. Here in 1 John 3:8 the verb means, with reference to "the works of the devil," to "destroy, bring to an end, abolish." See BDAG 607 s.v. λύω 4 and F. Büchsel, TDNT 4:336.

[7] tn The imagery expressed here (σπέρμα αὐτοῦ, sperma autou, "his seed") clearly refers to the action of the male parent in procreation, and so "fathered" is the best choice for translating γεννάω (gennaō; see 2:29).

[8] tn The problem of the present tense of ποιεῖ (poiei) here is exactly that of the present tense of ἁμαρτάνει (hamartanei) in 3:6. Here in 3:9 the distinction is sharply drawn between "the one who practices sin" in 3:8, who is of the devil, and "the one who is fathered by God" in 3:9, who "does not practice sin." See S. Kubo ("I John 3:9: Absolute or Habitual?" AUSS 7 [1969]: 47-56) for a fuller discussion of the author's argument as based on a sharp antithesis between the recipients (true Christians) and the opponents (heretics).

sn Does not practice sin. Again, as in 3:6, the author is making a clear distinction between the opponents, who as moral indifferentists downplay the significance of sin in the life of the Christian, and the recipients, who as true Christians recognize the significance of sin because Jesus came to take it away (3:5) and to destroy it as a work of the devil (3:8). This explanation still has to deal with the apparent contradiction between the author's statements in 2:1-2 and those here in 3:9, but this is best explained in terms of the author's tendency to present issues in "either/or" terms to bring out the drastic contrast between his readers, whom he regards as true believers, and the opponents, whom he regards as false. In 2:1-2 the author because[1] God's[2] seed[3] resides in him, and thus[4] he is not able to sin, because he has been fathered by God. 3:10 By this[5] the children of God and the children of the devil are revealed: Everyone who does not practice righteousness – the one who does not love his fellow Christian[6] – is not of God.

God Is Love, So We Must Love One Another

3:11 For[7] this is the gospel[8] message[9] that you have heard from the beginning: that we should love one another,[10] 3:12 not like Cain[11] who was of the evil one and brutally[12] murdered his brother. And why did he murder him? Because his deeds were evil, but his brother's were righteous.

3:13 Therefore do not be surprised, brothers and sisters,[13] if the world hates you.[14] 3:14 We know that[15] we have crossed over[16] from death to life[17] because[18] we love our fellow Christians.[19] can acknowledge the possibility that a true Christian might on occasion sin, because in this context he wishes to reassure his readers that the statements he has made about the opponents in the preceding context do not apply to them. But in 3:4-10, his concern is to bring out the absolute difference between the opponents and his readers, so he speaks in theoretical terms which do not discuss the possible occasional exception, because to do so would weaken his argument.

[1] tn Both the first and second ὅτι (hoti) in 3:9 are causal. The first gives the reason why the person who is begotten by God does not practice sin ("because his seed resides in him)." The second gives the reason why the person who is begotten by God is not able to sin ("because he has been begotten by God)."

[2] tn Grk "his"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn The closest meaning for σπέρμα (sperma) in this context is "male generating seed" (cf. BDAG 937 s.v. 1.b), although this is a figurative rather than a literal sense. Such imagery is bold and has seemed crudely anthropomorphic to some interpreters, but it poses no more difficulty than the image of God as a male parent fathering Christians that appears in John 1:13 and is behind the use of γεννάω (gennaō) with reference to Christians in 1 John 2:29; 3:9; 4:7; 5:1, 4, and 18.

[4] tn "Thus" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to bring out the resultative force of the clause in English.

[5] tn Once again there is the problem (by now familiar to the interpreter of 1 John) of determining whether the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) in 3:10 refers (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. If it refers to what precedes, it serves to conclude the unit which began with 2:28. The remainder of 3:10 would then form a transition to the following material (another "hinge" passage). On the other hand, if the phrase ἐν τούτῳ refers to what follows, then the entirety of 3:10 is a summary statement at the end of 2:28-3:10 which recapitulates the section's major theme (conduct is the clue to paternity), and provides at the same time a transition to the theme of loving one's brother which will dominate the following section (3:11-24). Although R. E. Brown (Epistles of John [AB], 416) prefers to see the phrase as referring to the preceding material, it makes better sense to refer it to the remainder of 3:10 that follows, and see the entirety of 3:10 as both a summary of the theme of the preceding section 2:28-3:10 and a transition to the following section 3:11-24.

[6] tn See note on the term "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

sn Does not love his fellow Christian. The theme of loving one's fellow Christian appears in the final clause of 3:10 because it provides the transition to the second major section of 1 John, 3:11-5:12, and specifically to the following section 3:11-24. The theme of love will dominate the second major section of the letter (see 1 John 4:8).

[7] tn It could be argued (1) that the ὅτι (hoti) at the beginning of 3:11 is grammatically subordinate to the preceding statement at the end of 3:10. As BDF §456.1 points out, however, "Subordination with ὅτι and διότι is often very loose... and must be translated 'for.'" Thus (2) ὅτι assumes an inferential sense, standing at the beginning of a new sentence and drawing an inference based upon all that has preceded. This is confirmed by the structural parallel between the present verse and 1:5.

[8] tn The word "gospel" is not in the Greek text but is supplied to clarify the meaning. See the notes on the words "gospel" and "message" in 1 John 1:5.

[9] tn See the note on the word "message" in 1 John 1:5, where this same phrase occurs.

[10] sn For this is the gospel message...that we should love one another. The structure of this verse is parallel to 1:5, indicating the beginning of a second major section of the letter.

[11] sn Since the author states that Cain...was of the evil one (ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ, ek tou ponērou), in the immediate context this imagery serves as an illustration of 3:8a: The person who practices sin is of the devil (ἐκ τοῦ διαβόλου, ek tou diabolou). This is similar to John 8:44, where Jesus told his opponents "you people are from your father the devil...[who] was a murderer from the beginning." In both Jewish and early Christian writings Cain is a model for those who deliberately disbelieve; Testament of Benjamin 7:5 looks forward to the punishment of those who "are like Cain in the envy and hatred of brothers." It is not difficult to see why the author of 1 John used Cain here as a model for the opponents in light of their failure to "love the brothers" (see 1 John 3:17).

[12] tn For the Greek verb σφάζω (sphazō) L&N 20.72 states, "to slaughter, either animals or persons; in contexts referring to persons, the implication is of violence and mercilessness – 'to slaughter, to kill.'" As a reflection of this nuance, the translation "brutally murdered" has been used.

[13] tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" as here (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited). Since the author is addressing his readers directly at this point, "brothers and sisters" (suggesting a degree of familial endearment) has been employed in the translation at this point, while elsewhere the less direct "fellow Christians" has been used (cf. v. 14).

[14] sn Cf. John 15:18, where this phrase also occurs.

[15] tn The first ὅτι (hoti) clause, following a verb of perception, introduces an indirect discourse clause giving the content of what the readers are assumed to know: that they have passed over from death to life, that is, that they possess eternal life. The author gives a similar reassurance to his readers in 5:13. Alternation between the verbs οἶδα (oida) and γινώσκω (ginōskō) in 1 John is probably a matter of stylistic variation (of which the writer is extremely fond) rather than indicative of a subtle difference in meaning.

[16] tn This verb essentially means "to transfer from one place to another, go/pass over," according to BDAG 638 s.v. μεταβαίνω 1.

sn In John 13:1 the same Greek verb translated crossed over here is used to refer to Jesus' departure from this world as he returns to the Father. Here it is used figuratively to refer to the believer's transfer from the state of (spiritual) death to the state of (spiritual) life. This use is paralleled in John 5:24, where Jesus states, "the person who hears my message and believes the one who sent me has eternal life and will not be condemned, but has crossed over (same verb) from death to life."

[17] sn Cf. John 5:24, where this phrase also occurs.

[18] tn The second ὅτι (hoti) clause in 3:14 is also related to οἴδαμεν (oidamen), but in this case the ὅτι is causal, giving the reason why the readers know that they have passed from death to life: because they love the brothers.

[19] tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

sn Because we love our fellow Christians. This echoes Jesus' words in John 13:35, where he states, "by this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another." As in 1 John 2:3 and 5, obedience becomes the basis for assurance. But the relationship between loving one's fellow Christian (Grk "brother") and possessing eternal life

The one who does not love remains in death.[1] 3:15 Everyone who hates his fellow Christian[2] is a murderer,[3] and you know that no murderer has eternal life residing[4] in him. 3:16 We have come to know love by this:[5] that Jesus[6] laid down[7] his life for us; thus we ought to lay down our lives for our fellow Christians. 3:17 But whoever has the world's possessions[8] and sees his fellow Christian[9] in need and shuts off his compassion against him, how can the love of God[10] reside[11] in such a person?[12]

3:18 Little children, let us not love with word or with tongue but in deed and truth.[13] 3:19 And goes beyond a proof or external test. Our love for our fellow Christians is in fact a form of God's love for us because as far as the author of 1 John is concerned, all love comes from God (cf. 4:7-11). Therefore he can add the next line of 3:14, "the one who does not love remains in death." Why? Because such a person does not have God's love residing in them at all. Rather, this person can be described as a "murderer" – as the following verse goes on to do. Note also that the author's description here of the person who does not love as remaining in death is another way of describing a person who remains in darkness, which is a description of unbelievers in John 12:46. This provides further confirmation of the spiritual state of the author's opponents in 2:9-11.

[1] sn The one who does not love remains in death. Again, the author has the secessionist opponents in view. Their refusal to show love for the brothers demonstrates that they have not made the transition from (spiritual) death to (spiritual) life, but instead have remained in a state of (spiritual) death.

[2] tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

[3] sn Everyone who hates his fellow Christian is a murderer. On one level it is easy to see how the author could say this; the person who hates his brother is one and the same with the person who murders his brother. Behind the usage here, however, is John 8:44, the only other occurrence of the Greek word translated murderer (ἀνθρωποκτόνος, anthrōpoktonos) in the NT, where the devil is described as a "murderer from the beginning." John 8:44 refers to the devil's role in bringing death to Adam and Eve, but even more to his involvement (not directly mentioned in the Genesis account, but elaborated in the intertestamental literature, especially the writings of Philo) in Cain's murder of his brother Abel. This was the first incident of murder in human history and also the first outward demonstration of the full implications of sin's entry into the world. Ultimately, then, the devil is behind murder, just as he was behind Cain's murder of Abel. When the hater kills, he shows himself to be a child of the devil (cf. 1 John 3:10). Once again, conduct is the clue to paternity.

[4] tn The verb μένω (menō) in 3:15 refers to a spiritual reality (eternal life) which in this case does not reside in the person in question. To speak in terms of eternal life not "residing" in such an individual is not to imply that at some time in the past this person did possess eternal life and subsequently lost it, however. The previous verse (3:14) makes it clear that the individual under discussion here has "remained" in death (the realm of spiritual death) and so has never possessed eternal life to begin with, no matter what he may have claimed. Taken together with the use of μένω in 3:14, the use here implies that the opponents have "remained" in death all along, and have not ever been genuine believers. Thus "residing" rather than "remaining" is used as the translation for μένουσαν (menousan) here.

[5] tn Here the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) is followed by a ὅτι (hoti) clause which is epexegetical (or explanatory), and thus ἐν τούτῳ refers to what follows.

[6] tn Grk "that one." Context indicates a reference to Jesus. The mention of the sacrificial death in 3:16 (ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἔθηκεν, huper ēmōn tēn psuchēn autou ethēken) points to Jesus as the referent here. (This provides further confirmation that ἐκεῖνος [ekeinos] in 2:6; 3:3, 5, and 7 refers to Jesus.)

[7] sn References to the fact that Jesus laid down his life using the verb τίθημι (tithēmi) are unique to the Gospel of John (10:11, 15, 17, 18; 13:37, 38; 15:13) and 1 John (only here). From John's perspective Jesus' act in giving up his life sacrificially was a voluntary one; Jesus was always completely in control of the situation surrounding his arrest, trials, and crucifixion (see John 10:18). There is a parallel with 1 John 2:6 – there, as here, the life of Jesus (during his earthly ministry) becomes the example for believers to follow. This in turn underscores the importance of Jesus' earthly life and ministry (especially his sacrificial death on the cross), a point of contention between the author and his opponents in 1 John. See 1 John 4:10 for a further parallel.

[8] tn Here βίος (bios) refers to one's means of subsistence – material goods or property (BDAG 177 s.v. 2).

sn Note the vivid contrast with Jesus' example in the preceding verse: He was willing to lay down his very life, but the person in view in 3:17 is not even willing to lay down part of his material possessions for the sake of his brother.

[9] tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

[10] tn Here a subjective genitive, indicating God's love for us – the love which comes from God – appears more likely because of the parallelism with "eternal life" (ζωὴν αἰώνιον, zōēn aiōnion) in 3:15, which also comes from God.

sn The love of God. The author is not saying that the person who does not love his brother cannot love God either (although this may be true enough), but rather that the person who does not love his brother shows by this failure to love that he does not have any of the love which comes from God 'residing' in him (the Greek verb used is μένω [menō]). Once again, conduct is the clue to paternity.

[11] sn Once again the verb μένω (menō) is used of a spiritual reality (in this case the love of God) which does or does not reside in a person. Although the author uses the indefinite relative whoever (Grk ὃς δ' ἄν, hos d' an), it is clear that he has the opponents in view here. This is the only specific moral fault he ever charges the opponents with in the entire letter. It is also clear that the author sees it as impossible that such a person, who refuses to offer help in his brother's time of need (and thus 'hates' his brother rather than 'loving' him, cf. 3:15) can have any of the love which comes from God residing in him. This person, from the author's dualistic 'either/or' perspective, cannot be a believer. The semantic force of the deliberative rhetorical question, "How can the love of God reside in such a person?", is therefore a declarative statement about the spiritual condition of the opponents: "The love of God cannot possibly reside in such a person."

[12] sn How can the love of God reside in such a person? is a rhetorical question which clearly anticipates a negative answer: The love of God cannot reside in such a person.

[13] sn The noun truth here has been interpreted in various ways: (1) There are a number of interpreters who understand the final noun in this series, truth (ἀληθείᾳ, alētheia) in an adverbial sense ("truly" or "in sincerity"), describing the way in which believers are to love. If the two pairs of nouns are compared, however, it is hard to see how the second noun with tongue (γλώσσῃ, glōssē) in the first pair can have an adverbial sense. (2) It seems better to understand the first noun in each pair as produced by the second noun: Words are produced by the tongue, and the (righteous) deeds with which believers are to love one another are produced by the truth.

by this[1] we will know that we are of the truth and will convince[2] our conscience[3] in his presence,[4] 3:20 that[5] if our conscience condemns[6] us, that[7] God is greater than our conscience and knows all things. 3:21 Dear friends, if our conscience does not condemn us, we have confidence in the presence of God, 3:22 and[8] whatever we ask we receive from him, because[9] we keep his commandments and do the things that

[1] tn Once again there is the problem of deciding whether the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) refers (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. When an explanatory or epexegetical ὅτι (hoti) clause follows, and the ὅτι clause is not grammatically unrelated to the phrase ἐν τούτῳ, then the ἐν τούτῳ is best understood as referring to what follows. Here in 3:19-20 there are no less than three ὅτι clauses that follow, one in 3:19 and two in 3:20, and thus there is the difficulty of trying to determine whether any one of them is related to the ἐν τούτῳ phrase in 3:19. It is relatively easy to eliminate the first ὅτι clause (in 3:19) from consideration, because it is related not to ἐν τούτῳ but to the verb γνωσόμεθα (gnōsometha) as an indirect discourse clause giving the content of what believers know ("that we are of the truth"). As far as the two ὅτι clauses in 3:20 are concerned, it is difficult to see how believers could know that they belong to the truth (19a) by means of either, since the first speaks of a situation where they are under self-condemnation ("if our heart condemns us…") and the second ὅτι clause seems to give a further explanation related to the first ("that God is greater than our heart…"). Therefore it seems better to understand the phrase ἐν τούτῳ in 3:19 as referring to the preceding context, and this makes perfectly good sense, because 3:18 concludes with a reference to the righteous deeds with which believers are to love one another, which are produced by the truth.

sn By this refers to the righteous deeds mentioned at the end of 3:18, the expressions of love. It is by doing these deeds that believers assure themselves that they belong to the truth, because the outward action reflects the inward reality of their relationship with God. Put another way, 'conduct is the clue to paternity.'

[2] tn The verb πείθω (peithō) in the active voice (with the exception of the second perfect and pluperfect) means (a) "to convince"; (b) "to persuade, appeal to"; (c) "to win over, strive to please"; or (d) "to conciliate, pacify, set at ease or rest" (see BDAG 791 s.v. πείθω). Interpreters are generally divided between meaning (a) and meaning (d) for the verb in the present context, with BDAG opting for the latter (although it is pointed out that "the text is not in good order"). In any case the object of the verb πείθω in this context is καρδία (kardia), and this leads to further problems because the meaning of καρδία will affect one's understanding of πείσομεν (peisomen) here.

[3] tn Further difficulties are created by the meaning of καρδία (kardia) in 3:19. Although it may be agreed that the term generally refers to the "center and source of the whole inner life, w. its thinking, feeling, and volition" (BDAG 508 s.v. l.b), this may be further subdivided into references to (a) "the faculty of thought…as the organ of natural and spiritual enlightenment," that is, the mind; (b) "the will and its decisions"; (c) "the emotions, wishes, desires," i.e., the emotions or feelings; or (d) "moral decisions, the moral life," that is, the part of the individual where moral decisions are made, which is commonly called the conscience. Thus καρδία in 3:19 could refer to either the mind, the will, the emotions, or the conscience, and it is not transparently clear which concept the author has primarily in view. In light of the overall context, which seems to discuss the believer's assurance of his or her standing before God (ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ [emprosthen autou] in 3:19 and the mention of παρρησία [parrēsia, "boldness" or "confidence"] in 3:21) it seems probable that the conscience, that aspect of one's καρδία which involves moral choices and the guilt or approval for having made them, is primarily in view here. Thus the meaning "convince" is preferred for the verb πείθω (peithō), since the overall subject seems to be the believer's assurance of his or her standing before God, especially in the case when (v. 20) the believer's conscience attempts to condemn him on account of sin.

[4] tn Both ἔμπροσθεν (emprosthen) in 3:19 and ἐνώπιον (enōpion) in 3:22 are improper prepositions and both express the meaning "before" in the sense of "in the presence of." (1) Some interpreters have tried to see a subtle distinction in meaning between the two in 3:19 and 22, but (2) as BDF §214.6 points out, ἔμπροσθεν and ἐνώπιον, along with a third classical expression ἐναντίον (enantion), all refer to being in someone's presence and are essentially interchangeable. There can be little doubt that once more the author's fondness for stylistic variation in terminology is at work here.

[5] tn The first ὅτι (hoti) in 3:20 may be understood either (1) as causal, "because if our heart condemns us," or (2) as epexegetical (explanatory), "that if our heart condemns us." There are two other instances of the combination ὅτι ἐάν (hoti ean) in 1 John, 3:2 and 5:14. In 3:14 the ὅτι clearly introduces an indirect discourse (content) clause following οἴδαμεν (oidamen). In 5:14 the ὅτι is epexegetical to a preceding statement ("and this is the confidence [ἡ παρρησία, hē parrēsia] which we have before him, that if we ask anything according to his will he hears us"). This is analogous to the present situation, and the subject under discussion (the believer's confidence before God) is also similar (cf. 3:21-22). It is thus more likely, by analogy, that the first ὅτι clause in 3:20, ὅτι ἐὰν καταγινώσκῃ ἡμῶν ἡ καρδία (hoti ean kataginōskē hēmōn hē kardia), should also be understood as epexegetical to the preceding clause, ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πείσομεν τὴν καρδίαν (emprosthen autou peisomen tēn kardian, "and we convince our heart before him").

[6] tn In Deut 25:1 LXX καταγινώσκω (kataginōskō) means "to condemn" in a context where it is in opposition to δικαιοῦν (dikaioun, "to acquit"). In Job 42:6 LXX (Symmachus) and Ezek 16:61 LXX (Symmachus) it is used of self-judgment or self-condemnation, and this usage is also found in the intertestamental literature (Sir 14:2). Testament of Gad 5:3 describes a person οὐχ ὑπ᾽ ἄλλου καταγινωσκόμενος ἀλλ᾽ ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδίας καρδίας (ouch hup' allou kataginōskomenos all' hupo tēs idias kardias, "condemned not by another but by his own heart"). Thus the word has legal or forensic connotations, and in this context refers to the believer's self-condemnation resulting from a guilty conscience concerning sin.

[7] tn The use of two ὅτι (hoti) clauses in close succession is somewhat awkward, but this is nothing new for the author; and indeed he has twice previously used two ὅτι clauses in close proximity in 3:2 and 14. In both those instances the second ὅτι was understood as causal, and (1) some interpreters would do the same here. Unless one understands both of the ὅτι clauses in 3:20 as causal, however (an option rejected based on the analogy with 5:14, see the discussion in the note on "that" at the beginning of the present verse), the first ὅτι clause must be understood as parenthetical in order for the second to be causal. This results in an even more awkward construction. It seems most probable that (2) the second ὅτι clause in 3:20 should also be understood as epexegetical (explanatory), and resumptive to the first. The resultant meaning is as follows: "and we convince our heart before him, that if our heart condemns us, that God is greater than our heart and knows all things."

[8] tn The conjunction καί (kai) which begins 3:22 is epexegetical (explanatory), relating a further implication of the "confidence" (παρρησίαν, parrēsian) which believers have before God when their heart (conscience) does not condemn them. They can ask things of God with the expectation of receiving their requests.

[9] tn The ὅτι (hoti) is clearly causal, giving the reason why believers receive what they ask.

are pleasing to him. 3:23 Now[1] this is his commandment:[2] that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love one another, just as he gave[3] us the commandment. 3:24 And the person who keeps his commandments resides[4] in God,[5] and God[6] in him. Now by this[7] we know that God[8] resides in us: by the Spirit he has given us.

Testing the Spirits

4:1 Dear friends, do not believe every spirit,[9] but test[10] the spirits[11] to determine[12] if they are from God, because many false prophets[13] have gone out into the world. 4:2 By this[14] you know the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesses[15] Jesus as the Christ[16] who has come in the flesh is

[1] tn The καί (kai) is epexegetical/explanatory (or perhaps resumptive) of the commandment(s) mentioned in the preceding verse.

[2] tn This verse begins with the phrase καὶ αὕτη ἐστίν (kai hautē estin; cf. the similar phrase in 3:11 and 1:5), which is explained by the following ἵνα (hina) clause, "that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ." The ἵνα thus introduces a clause which is (1) epexegetical (explanatory) or (2) appositional. By analogy the similar phrase in 3:11 is also followed by an epexegetical ἵνα clause and the phrase in 1:5 by an epexegetical ὅτι (hoti) clause.

sn His commandment refers to what follows – the commandment from God is to believe in his Son, Jesus Christ, and to love one another.

[3] sn The author of 1 John repeatedly attributes the commandments given to believers as given by God the Father, even though in John 13:34-35 it was Jesus who gave the commandment to love one another. 2 John 4-5 also attributes the commandment to love one another directly to the Father. Thus it is clear that God the Father is the subject of the verb gave here in 3:23.

[4] tn The verb μένω (menō) has been translated "resides" here because this verse refers to the mutual and reciprocal relationship between God and the believer.

sn The verb resides (μένω, menō) here and again in the second clause of 3:24 refers to the permanence of relationship between God and the believer, as also in 2:6; 4:12, 13, 15, and 16 (3x).

[5] tn Grk "in him." In context this is almost certainly a reference to God (note the phrase "his Son Jesus Christ" in 3:23).

[6] tn Grk "he." In context this is almost certainly a reference to God (note the phrase "his Son Jesus Christ" in 3:23).

[7] tn Once again there is the (by now familiar) question of whether the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) refers to what precedes or to what follows. In this case, the following phrase ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος (ek tou pneumatos) explains the ἐν τούτῳ phrase, and so it refers to what follows.

[8] tn Grk "he." In context this is almost certainly a reference to God (note the phrase "his Son Jesus Christ" in 3:23).

[9] sn 1 John 4:1-6. These verses form one of three units within 1 John that almost all interpreters consider a single unit and do not divide up (the other two are 2:12-14 and 15-17). The subject matter is so clearly different from the surrounding context that these clearly constitute separate units of thought. Since the Holy Spirit is not the only spirit active in the world, the author needs to qualify for the recipients how to tell if a spirit comes from God. The "test" is the confession in 4:2.

[10] tn According to BDAG 255 s.v. δοκιμάζω 1 the verb means "to make a critical examination of someth. to determine genuineness, put to the test, examine."

[11] sn Test the spirits. Since in the second half of the present verse the author mentions "false prophets" who have "gone out into the world," it appears highly probable that his concept of testing the spirits is drawn from the OT concept of testing a prophet to see whether he is a false prophet or a true one. The procedure for testing a prophet is found in Deut 13:2-6 and 18:15-22. An OT prophet was to be tested on the basis of (a) whether or not his predictive prophecies came true (Deut 18:22) and (b) whether or not he advocated idolatry (Deut 13:1-3). In the latter case the people of Israel are warned that even if the prophet should perform an authenticating sign or wonder, his truth or falsity is still to be judged on the basis of his claims, that is, whether or not he advocates idolatry. Here in 1 John the idea of "testing the spirits" comes closer to the second OT example of "testing the prophets" mentioned above. According to 1 John 4:2-3, the spirits are to be tested on the basis of their christological confession: The person motivated by the Spirit of God will confess Jesus as the Christ who has come in the flesh, while the person motivated by the spirit of deceit will not confess Jesus and is therefore not from God. This comes close to the idea expressed by Paul in 1 Cor 12:3 where the person speaking charismatic utterances is also to be judged on the basis of his christological confession: "So I want you to understand that no one speaking by the Spirit of God says, 'Jesus is cursed,' and no one can say 'Jesus is Lord,' except by the Holy Spirit."

[12] tn The phrase "to determine" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity.

[13] tn "False prophets" refers to the secessionist opponents (compare 2:19).

[14] tn There is no subordinating conjunction following the ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) here in 4:2, so the phrase could refer either (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. Contextually the phrase refers to what follows, because the following clause in 4:2b-3a (πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ ὁμολογεῖ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν...ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐστιν, καὶ πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ τὸν Ἰησοῦν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἔστιν), while not introduced by a subordinating conjunction, does explain the preceding clause beginning with ἐν τούτῳ. In other words, the following clause in 4:2b-3a is analogous to a subordinate clause introduced by an epexegetical ἵνα (hina) or ὅτι (hoti), and the relationship can be represented in the English translation by a colon, "By this you know the Spirit of God: Every Spirit that confesses Jesus as the Christ who has come in the flesh is from God, but every Spirit that does not confess Jesus is not from God."

[15] tn Or "acknowledges."

[16] tn This forms part of the author's christological confession which serves as a test of the spirits. Many interpreters have speculated that the author of 1 John is here correcting or adapting a slogan of the secessionist opponents, but there is no concrete evidence for this in the text. Such a possibility is mere conjecture (see R. E. Brown, Epistles of John [AB], 492). The phrase may be understood in a number of different ways, however: (1) the entire phrase "Jesus Christ come in the flesh" may be considered the single object of the verb ὁμολογεῖ (homologei; so B. F. Westcott, A. Brooke, J. Bonsirven, R. E. Brown, S. Smalley, and others); (2) the verb ὁμολογεῖ may be followed by a double accusative, so that both "Jesus Christ" and "come in the flesh" are objects of the verb; the meaning would be "confess Jesus Christ as come in the flesh" (so B. Weiss, J. Chaine, and others). (3) Another possibility is to see the verb as followed by a double accusative as in (2), but in this case the first object is "Jesus" and the second is "the Christ come in the flesh," so that what is being confessed is "Jesus as the Christ come in the flesh" (so N. Alexander, J. Stott, J. Houlden, and others). All three options are grammatically possible, although not equally probable. Option (1) has a number of points in its favor: (a) the parallel in 2 John 7 suggests to some that the phrase should be understood as a single object; (b) option (2) makes "Jesus Christ" the name of the preincarnate second Person of the Trinity, and this would be the only place in the Johannine literature where such a designation for the preincarnate Λόγος (Logos) occurs; and (c) option (3) would have been much clearer if Χριστόν (Christon) were accompanied by the article (ὁμολογεῖ Ἰησοῦν τὸν Χριστόν, homologei Iēsoun ton Christon). Nevertheless option (3) is preferred on the basis of the overall context involving the secessionist opponents: Their christological views would allow the confession of the Christ come in the flesh (perhaps in the sense of the Spirit indwelling believers, although this is hard to prove), but they would have trouble confessing that Jesus was (exclusively) from God, 4:3 but[1] every spirit that does not confess[2] Jesus[3] is not from God, and this is the spirit[4] of the antichrist, which you have heard is coming, and now is already in the world.

4:4 You are from God, little children, and have conquered them,[5] because the one who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world. 4:5 They are from the world; therefore they speak from the world's perspective and the world listens to them. 4:6 We are from God; the person who knows God listens to us, but[6] whoever is not from God does not listen to us. By this[7] we know the Spirit of truth and the spirit of deceit.[8]

God is Love

4:7 Dear friends, let us love one another, because[9] love is from God, and everyone who loves[10] has been fathered[11] by God and knows God. 4:8 The person who does not love does not know God, because God is love.[12] 4:9 By this[13]

the Christ incarnate. The author's failure to repeat the qualifying phrases (Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, Christon en sarki elēluthota) in the negative repetition in 4:3a actually suggests that the stress is on Jesus as the confession the opponents could not or would not make. It is difficult to see how the parallel in 2 John 7 favors option (1), although R. E. Brown (Epistles of John [AB], 492) thinks it does. The related or parallel construction in John 9:22 (ἐάν τις αὐτὸν ὁμολογήσῃ Χριστόν, ean tis auton homologēsē Christon) provides further support for option (3). This is discounted by R. E. Brown because the verb in John 9:22 occurs between the two accusative objects rather than preceding both as here (Epistles of John [AB], 493 – although Brown does mention Rom 10:9 as another parallel closer in grammatical structure to 1 John 4:2). Brown does not mention the textual variants in John 9:22, however: Both 𝔓66 and 𝔓75 (along with K, f^{13} and others) read ὁμολογήσῃ αὐτὸν Χριστόν (homologēsē auton Christon). This structure exactly parallels 1 John 4:2, and a case can be made that this is actually the preferred reading in John 9:22; furthermore, it is clear from the context in John 9:22 that Χριστόν is the complement (what is predicated of the first accusative) since the object (the first accusative) is αὐτόν rather than the proper name Ἰησοῦν. The parallel in John 9:22 thus appears to be clearer than either 1 John 4:2 or 2 John 7, and thus to prove useful in understanding both the latter constructions.

1 tn The καί (kai) which begins 4:3 introduces the "negative side" of the test by which the spirits might be known in 4:2-3. Thus it is adversative in force: "every spirit that confesses Jesus as Christ who has come in the flesh is from God, but every Spirit that does not confess Jesus is not from God."

2 tn Or "does not acknowledge."

3 tc A number of variants are generated from the simple τὸν Ἰησοῦν (ton Iēsoun), some of which turn the expression into an explicit object-complement construction. Ἰησοῦν κύριον (Iēsoun kurion, "Jesus as Lord") is found in ℵ, τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν (ton Iēsoun Christon, "Jesus as Christ") is read by the Byzantine minuscules, τὸν Χριστόν ("the Christ") is the reading of 1846, and Ἰησοῦν without the article is found in 1881 2464. But τὸν Ἰησοῦν is well supported by A B Ψ 33 81 1739 al, and internally best explains the rise of the others. It is thus preferred on both external and internal grounds.

4 tn "Spirit" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

5 sn Them refers to the secessionist opponents, called "false prophets" in 4:1 (compare 2:19).

6 tn "But" supplied here to bring out the context. The conjunction is omitted in the Greek text (asyndeton).

7 tn The phrase ἐκ τούτου (ek toutou) in 4:6, which bears obvious similarity to the much more common phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō), must refer to what precedes, since there is nothing in the following context for it to relate to, and 4:1-6 is recognized by almost everyone as a discrete unit. There is still a question, however, of what in the preceding context the phrase refers to. Interpreters have suggested a reference (1) only to 4:6; (2) to 4:4-6; or (3) to all of 4:1-6. The last is most likely, because the present phrase forms an inclusion with the phrase ἐν τούτῳ in 3:24 which introduces the present section. Thus "by this we know the Spirit of truth and the spirit of deceit" refers to all of 4:1-6 with its "test" of the spirits by the christological confession made by their adherents in 4:1-3 and with its emphasis on the authoritative (apostolic) eyewitness testimony to the significance of Jesus' earthly life and ministry in 4:4-6.

8 sn Who or what is the Spirit of truth and the spirit of deceit in 1 John 4:6? (1) Some interpreters regard the "spirits" in 4:6 as human spirits. Although 4:1a is ambiguous and might refer either to human spirits or spiritual beings who influence people, it is clear in the context that (2) the author sees behind the secessionist opponents with their false Christology the spirit of the Antichrist, that is, Satan (4:3b), and behind the true believers of the community to which he is writing, the Spirit of God (4:2). This is made clear in 4:4 by the reference to the respective spirits as the One who is in you and the one who is in the world.

9 tn This ὅτι (hoti) is causal, giving the reason why the readers, as believers, ought to love one another: because love comes from God. The next clause, introduced by καί (kai), does not give a second reason (i.e., is not related to the ὅτι clause), but introduces a second and additional thought: Everyone who loves is fathered by God and knows God.

10 tn As in 2:23 and 3:4, the author uses πᾶς (pas) with the present articular participle as a generalization to describe a category of people.

sn From the author's "either/or" perspective (which tends to see things in terms of polar opposites) the use of a generalization like everyone who presents a way of categorizing the opponents on the one hand and the recipients, whom the author regards as genuine Christians, on the other. Thus everyone who loves refers to all true Christians, who give evidence by their love for one another that they have indeed been begotten by God and are thus God's children. The opposite situation is described in the following verse, 4:8, where (although everyone [πᾶς, pas] is omitted) it is clear that a contrast is intended.

11 tn The verb γεννάω (gennaō) in this context means to be fathered by God and thus a child of God. The imagery in 1 John is that of the male parent who fathers children (see especially 3:9 and 5:1).

12 tn The author proclaims in 4:8 ὁ θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστίν (ho theos agapē estin), but from a grammatical standpoint this is not a proposition in which subject and predicate nominative are interchangeable ("God is love" does not equal "love is God"). The predicate noun is anarthrous, as it is in two other Johannine formulas describing God, "God is light" in 1 John 1:5 and "God is Spirit" in John 4:24. The anarthrous predicate suggests a qualitative force, not a mere abstraction, so that a quality of God's character is what is described here.

13 tn Once again there is the problem of determining whether the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) refers (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. This is the first of 5 uses of the phrase in the present section (4:9, 10, 13, 17; 5:2). In this case (as also in the next two instances) there is a ὅτι (hoti) clause following which is related and which explains (i.e., which is epexegetical to) the phrase ἐν τούτῳ. Thus the meaning here is, "By this the love of God is revealed in us: that God has sent his only Son into the world in order that we might live through him."

the love of God[1] is revealed in us:[2] that God has sent his one and only[3] Son into the world so that we may live through him. 4:10 In this[4] is love: not that[5] we have loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the atoning sacrifice[6] for our sins.

4:11 Dear friends, if God so loved us, then[7] we also ought to love one another.[8] 4:12 No one has seen God at any time.[9] If we love one another, God resides[10] in us, and his love is perfected in us.[11] 4:13 By this[12] we know that we reside in God[13] and he in us: in that he has given us of his Spirit.[14] 4:14 And we have seen and testify that the Father has sent the Son to be the Savior[15] of the world.

[1] tn In terms of syntax the force of the genitive τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) may be (1) objective, (2) subjective, or (3) both. The phrase occurs for the first time in the letter in 2:5. Here in 4:9 the epexegetical ὅτι (hoti) clause which follows makes it clear that this is a subjective genitive, emphasizing God's love for us rather than our love for God, because it describes God's action in sending his Son into the world.

[2] tn This phrase is best understood as the equivalent of a dative of sphere, but this description does not specify where the love of God is revealed with regard to believers: "in our midst" (i.e., among us) or "within us" (i.e., internally within believers). The latter is probable, because in the context the concept of God's indwelling of the believer is mentioned in 4:12: "God resides (μένει, menei) in us."

[3] sn Although the word translated one and only (μονογενής, monogenēs) is often rendered "only begotten," such a translation is misleading, since in English it appears to express a metaphysical relationship. The word in Greek was used of an only child (a son [Luke 7:12, 9:38] or a daughter [Luke 8:42]). It was also used of something unique (only one of its kind) such as the mythological bird called the Phoenix (1 Clement 25:2). From here it passes easily to a description of Isaac (Heb 11:17 and Josephus, Ant. 1.13.1 [1.222]) who was not Abraham's only son, but was one-of-a-kind because he was the child of the promise. Thus the word means "one-of-a-kind" and is reserved for Jesus alone in the Johannine literature of the NT. While all Christians are children of God (τέκνα θεοῦ, tekna theou), Jesus is God's Son in a unique, one-of-a-kind sense. The word is used in this way in all its uses in the Gospel of John (1:14, 18; 3:16, 18).

[4] tn Once again there is the (by now familiar) problem of determining whether the referent of this phrase (1) precedes or (2) follows. Here there are two ὅτι (hoti) clauses which follow, both of which are epexegetical to the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) and explain what the love of God consists of: first, stated negatively, "not that we have loved God," and then positively, "but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the atoning sacrifice for our sins."

[5] tn The two ὅτι (hoti) clauses are epexegetical to the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) which begins the verse.

sn What is important (as far as the author is concerned) is not whether we love God (or say that we love God – a claim of the opponents is probably behind this), but that God has loved us and sent his Son to be the atoning sacrifice which removes believers' sins. This latter point is similar to the point made in 2:2 and is at the heart of the author's dispute with the opponents, because they were denying any salvific value to Jesus' earthly life and ministry, including his death on the cross.

[6] sn As explained at 2:2, inherent in the meaning of the word translated atoning sacrifice (ἱλασμός, hilasmos) is the idea of turning away the divine wrath, so that "propitiation" is the closest English equivalent. God's love for us is expressed in his sending his Son to be the propitiation (the propitiatory sacrifice) for our sins on the cross. This is an indirect way for the author to allude to one of the main points of his controversy with the opponents: the significance for believers' salvation of Jesus' earthly life and ministry, including especially his sacrificial death on the cross. The contemporary English "atoning sacrifice" communicates this idea more effectively.

[7] tn Grk "and." The Greek conjunction καί (kai) introduces the apodosis of the conditional sentence.

[8] tn This is a first-class conditional sentence with εἰ (ei) + aorist indicative in the protasis. Reality is assumed for the sake of argument with a first-class condition.

sn The author here assumes the reality of the protasis (the "if" clause), which his recipients, as believers, would also be expected to agree with: Assuming that God has loved us in this way, then it follows that we also ought to love one another. God's act of love in sending his Son into the world to be the atoning sacrifice for our sins (v. 10) ought to motivate us as believers to love one another in a similar sacrificial fashion. The author made the same point already in 1 John 3:16. But this failure to show love for fellow believers is just what the opponents are doing: In 1 John 3:17 the author charged them with refusing to love their brothers by withholding needed material assistance. By their failure to love the brothers sacrificially according to the example Jesus set for believers, the opponents have demonstrated again the falsity of their claims to love God and know God (see 1 John 2:9).

[9] sn An allusion to John 1:18.

[10] tn The phrase "God resides in us" (ὁ θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν μένει, ho theos en hēmin menei) in 4:12 is a reference to the permanent relationship which God has with the believer. Here it refers specifically to God's indwelling of the believer in the person of the Holy Spirit, as indicated by 4:13b. Since it refers to state and not to change of status it is here translated "resides" (see 2:6).

[11] tn The phrase "his [God's] love is perfected (τετελειωμένη ἐστίν, teteleiōmenē estin) in us" in 4:12 is difficult. First it is necessary to decide whether αὐτοῦ (autou), which refers to God, is (1) subjective (God's love for us) or (2) objective (our love for God). It is clear that a subjective genitive, stressing God's love for us, is in view here, because the immediate context, 4:11a, has believers as the objects of God's love (ὁ θεὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, ho theos ēgapēsen hēmas). The entire phrase ἡ ἀγάπη αὐτοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν τετελειωμένη ἐστίν (hē agapē autou en hēmin teteleiōmenē estin) then refers to what happens when believers love one another (note the protasis of the conditional sentence in 4:12, ἐὰν ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους [ean agapōmen allēlous]). The love that comes from God, the love that he has for us, reaches perfection in our love for others, which is what God wants and what believers are commanded to do (see 3:23b).

[12] tn Again whether the referent of the phrase ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) (1) precedes or (2) follows is a problem. This time there are two ὅτι (hoti) clauses which follow. The first is an indirect discourse clause related to γινώσκομεν (ginōskomen) and giving the content of what believers know: "that we reside in him and he in us." The second ὅτι clause is epexegetical (or explanatory) to the ἐν τούτῳ phrase, explaining how believers know that they reside in God and God remains in them: "in that he has given us of his Spirit."

sn By this we know. According to the author of 1 John, the Father's giving of the indwelling Holy Spirit to the believer is one means of providing assurance to the believer of his relationship to God. This is what was also stated in 1 John 3:24b in essentially identical terms.

[13] tn Grk "in him." Context indicates that the pronoun refers to God (see 4:12).

[14] sn The genitive of his Spirit here, like the phrase in 3:24, probably reflects a partitive nuance, so that the author portrays God as 'apportioning' his Spirit to individual believers. This leads to the important observation that the author is not particularly interested in emphasizing (1) the ongoing interior witness of the Holy Spirit (which is what the passage is often understood to mean) but is emphasizing (2) the fact that God has given the Spirit to believers, and it is this fact that gives believers assurance of their relationship to God. In other words, it is the fact that the Holy Spirit has been given to believers, rather than the ongoing interior testimony of the Holy Spirit within the believer, which is the primary source of the believer's assurance.

[15] tn Because σωτῆρα (sōtēra) is the object complement of υἱόν (huion) in a double accusative construction in 4:14,

4:15 If anyone[1] confesses that Jesus is the Son of God, God resides[2] in him and he in God. 4:16 And we have come to know and to believe[3] the love that God has in us.[4] God is love, and the one who resides[5] in love resides in God, and God resides in him. 4:17 By this[6] love is perfected with[7] us, so that we may have confidence in the day of judgment, because just as Jesus[8] is, so also are we in this world. 4:18 There is no fear in love, but perfect love drives out fear, because fear has to do with punishment.[9] The[10] one who fears punishment[11] has not been perfected in love.

there is an understood equative verb joining the two, with the resultant meaning "the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world."

[1] tn Grk "Whoever."

[2] tn Here μένει (menei, from μένω [menō]) has been translated as "resides" because the confession is constitutive of the relationship, and the resulting state ("God resides in him") is in view.

[3] tn Both ἐγνώκαμεν (egnōkamen) and πεπιστεύκαμεν (pepisteukamen) in 4:16 are perfect tenses, implying past actions with existing results. In this case the past action is specified as the recognition of (ἐγνώκαμεν) and belief in (πεπιστεύκαμεν) "the love which God has in us." But what is the relationship between the two verbs γινώσκω (ginōskō) and πιστεύω (pisteuō)? (1) Some interpreters would see a different nuance in each. (2) But in the Gospel of John the two verbs frequently occur together in the same context, often in the same tense; examples may be found in John 6:69, 8:31-32, 10:38, 14:7-10, and 17:8. They also occur together in one other context in 1 John, 4:1-2. Of these John 6:69, Peter's confession, is the closest parallel to the usage here: "We have come to believe [πεπιστεύκαμεν] and to know [ἐγνώκαμεν] that you are the holy One of God." Here the order between "knowing" and "believing" is reversed from 1 John 4:16, but an examination of the other examples from the Gospel of John should make it clear that there is no difference in meaning when the order of the terms is reversed. It appears that the author considered both terms to describe a single composite action. Thus they represent a hendiadys which describes an act of faith/belief/trust on the part of the individual; knowledge (true knowledge) is an inseparable part of this act of faith.

[4] tn The force of the preposition ἐν (en) in the phrase ἐν ἡμῖν (en hēmin) in 4:16a is disputed: Although (1) "for" (in the sense of "on behalf of") is possible and is a common English translation, the other uses of the same phrase in 4:9 (where it refers to God's love for us) and 4:12 (where it refers to God's indwelling of the believer) suggest that (2) the author intends to emphasize interiority here – a reference to God's love expressed in believers. This is confirmed by the only other uses in 1 John of the verb ἔχω (echō) with the preposition ἐν (3:15 and 5:10) both of which literally mean something in someone.

[5] tn Once again μένω (menō) in its three occurrences in 4:16 looks at the mutual state of believers and God. No change of status or position is in view in the context, so the participle and both finite verbs are translated as "resides."

[6] tn The referent of ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) here is more difficult to determine than most, because while there are both ἵνα (hina) and ὅτι (hoti) clauses following, it is not clear whether or not they are related to the ἐν τούτῳ. There are actually three possibilities for the referent of ἐν τούτῳ in 4:17: (1) it may refer to the ἵνα clause which immediately follows, so that the love of believers is brought to perfection in that they have confidence in the day of judgment. The main problem with this interpretation is that since the day of judgment is still future, it necessitates understanding the second use of the preposition "in" (second ἐν [en]) to mean "about" or "concerning" with reference to the day of judgment in order to make logical sense. (2) The ἐν τούτῳ may refer to the ὅτι clause in 4:17b, meaning "love is perfected with us...in that just as he [Christ] is, so also are we in this world." This makes logical sense, and there are numerous cases where ἐν τούτῳ is explained by a ὅτι clause that follows. However, according to this understanding the intervening ἵνα clause is awkward, and there is no other instance of the phrase ἐν τούτῳ explained by a following ὅτι clause where a ἵνα clause intervenes between the two in this way. (3) Thus, the third possibility is that ἐν τούτῳ refers to what precedes in 4:16b, and this also would make logical sense: "By this – by our residing in love so that we reside in God and he resides in us – is love brought to perfection with us." This has the additional advantage of agreeing precisely with what the author has already said in 4:12: "If we love one another, God remains in us and his love is brought to perfection in us." Thus option (3) is best, with the phrase ἐν τούτῳ referring to what precedes in 4:16b, and the ἵνα clause which follows indicates the result of this perfection of love in believers: In the future day of judgment they will have confidence. The ὅτι clause would then give the reason for such confidence in the day of judgment: because just as Jesus is, so also are believers in this world – they are already currently in relationship with God just as Jesus is.

[7] tn The preposition μετά (meta) means "with" and modifies the verb τετελείωται (teteleiōtai). If the prepositional phrase modified the noun ἡ ἀγάπη which immediately precedes it, it would almost certainly have the Greek article, thus: ἡ ἀγάπη ἡ μεθ᾽ ἡμῶν (hē agapē hē meth᾽ hēmōn).

sn To say love is perfected with us means "with regard to our actions in loving our brothers."

[8] tn Grk "that one" (a reference to Jesus is indicated in the context). Once more the author uses the pronoun ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) to refer to Jesus Christ, as he did in 2:6; 3:3, 5, 7, and 16. A reference to Christ is confirmed in this context because the author says that "just as he is, so also are we [believers] in this world" and since 3:2 indicated that believers are to be like God in the future (but are not yet), the only one believers can be like already in the present age is Jesus Christ.

[9] sn The entire phrase fear has to do with punishment may be understood in two slightly different ways: (1) "fear has its own punishment" or (2) "fear has to do with [includes] punishment." These are not far apart, however, and the real key to understanding the expression lies in the meaning of the word "punishment" (κόλασις, kolasis). While it may refer to torture or torment (BDAG 555 s.v. 1) there are numerous Koine references involving eternal punishment (2 Macc 4:38; T. Reu. 5:5; T. Gad 7:5) and this is also the use in the only other NT reference, Matt 25:46. In the present context, where the author has mentioned having confidence in the day of judgment (4:17), it seems virtually certain that eternal punishment (or fear of it) is what is meant here. The (only) alternative to perfected love, which results in confidence at the day of judgment, is fear, which has to do with the punishment one is afraid of receiving at the judgment. As 4:18b states, "the one who fears [punishment] has not been perfected in love." It is often assumed by interpreters that the opposite to perfected love (which casts out fear) is imperfect love (which still has fear and therefore no assurance). This is possible, but it is not likely, because the author nowhere mentions 'imperfect' love, and for him the opposite of 'perfected' love appears to be not imperfect love but hate (cf. 4:20). In other words, in the antithetical ('either/or') categories in which the author presents his arguments, one is either a genuine believer, who becomes 'perfected' in love as he resides in love and in a mutually indwelling relationship with God (cf. 4:16b), or one is not a genuine believer at all, but one who (like the opponents) hates his brother, is a liar, and does not know God at all. This individual should well fear judgment and eternal punishment because in the author's view that is precisely where such a person is headed.

[10] tn Grk "punishment, and the person who fears."

[11] tn "Punishment" is not repeated in the Greek text at this point but is implied.

4:19 We love[1] because he loved us first.

4:20 If anyone says[2] "I love God" and yet[3] hates his fellow Christian,[4] he is a liar, because the one who does not love his fellow Christian[5] whom he has seen cannot love God whom he has not seen.[6] 4:21 And the commandment we have from him is this: that[7] the one who loves God should love his fellow Christian[8] too. 5:1 Everyone who believes that Jesus is the Christ[9] has been fathered[10] by God, and everyone who loves the father[11] loves the child fathered by him.[12]

5:2 By this[13] we know that we love the children of God: whenever we love God and obey his commandments. 5:3 For[14] this is the love of God:[15] that we keep his commandments.[16] And his commandments do not weigh us down, 5:4 because[17] everyone[18] who has been fathered by God[19] conquers[20] the world.[21]

---

1 sn No object is supplied for the verb love (the author with his propensity for obscurity has left it to the readers to supply the object). The obvious objects that could be supplied from the context are either God himself or other believers (the brethren). It may well be that the author has both in mind at this point; the statement is general enough to cover both alternatives, although the following verse puts more emphasis on love for the brethren.

2 tn Grk "if anyone should say…"

3 tn "Yet" is supplied to bring out the contrast.

4 tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

5 tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

6 sn In 4:20 the author again describes the opponents, who claim to love God. Their failure to show love for their fellow Christians proves their claim to know God to be false: The one who does not love his fellow Christian whom he has seen cannot love God whom he has not seen.

7 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause in 4:21 could be giving (1) the purpose or (2) the result of the commandment mentioned in the first half of the verse, but if it does, the author nowhere specifies what the commandment consists of. It makes better sense to understand this ἵνα clause as (3) epexegetical to the pronoun ταύτην (tautēn) at the beginning of 4:21 and thus explaining what the commandment consists of: "that the one who loves God should love his brother also."

8 tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

9 tn Or "the Messiah."

10 tn The verb γεννάω (gennaō) here means to be fathered by God and thus a child of God. The imagery in 1 John is that of the male parent who fathers children. See the note on "fathered" in 2:29 for further discussion of this imagery.

11 tc ‡ Most witnesses ([א] A P 1739 𝔐 sy) have καί (kai, "also") before the article τόν (ton). But the external evidence for the shorter reading is significant (B Ψ 048^{vid} 33 pc sa), and the conjunction looks to be a motivated reading in which scribes emulated the wording of 4:21 (ἀγαπᾷ καὶ τόν, agapa kai ton). NA^{27} places the conjunction in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

12 sn Also loves the child fathered by him. Is the meaning of 5:1b a general observation or a specific statement about God and Christians? There are three ways in which the second half of 5:1 has been understood: (1) as a general statement, proverbial in nature, applying to any parent: "everyone who loves the father also loves the child fathered by him." (2) This has also been understood as a statement that is particularly true of one's own parent: "everyone who loves his own father also loves the (other) children fathered by him (i.e., one's own brothers and sisters)." (3) This could be understood as a statement which refers particularly to God, in light of the context (5:1a): "everyone who loves God who fathered Christians also loves the Christians who are fathered by God." Without doubt options (2) and (3) are implications of the statement in its present context, but it seems most probable that the meaning of the statement is more general and proverbial in nature (option 1). This is likely because of the way in which it is introduced by the author with πᾶς ὁ (pas ho) + participle. The author could have been more explicit and said something like, "everyone who loves God also loves God's children" had he intended option (3) without ambiguity. Yet that, in context, is the ultimate application of the statement, because it ultimately refers to the true Christian who, because he loves God, also loves the brethren, those who are God's offspring. This is the opposite of 4:20, where the author asserted that the opponents, who profess to love God but do not love the brethren, cannot really love God because they do not love the brethren.

13 tn Once more there is the familiar difficulty of determining whether the phrase refers (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. Here, because ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) is followed by a clause introduced by ὅταν (hotan) which appears to be related, it is best to understand ἐν τούτῳ as referring to what follows. The following ὅταν clause is epexegetical to ἐν τούτῳ, explaining how we know that we love God's children: "by this we know that we love God's children, whenever we love God and keep his commandments."

14 tn The force of the γάρ (gar) at the beginning of 5:3 is similar to another introductory formula used by the author of 1 John, καὶ αὕτη ἐστίν (kai hautē estin; used in 1:5; 5:4, 11, and 14). The γάρ draws an inference based on the preceding statements, particularly the one in 5:2b, regarding the love of God. If in 5:2 loving God and keeping his commandments is the key to knowing that we love God's children, it is important to define what the love of God involves, and this is what the author is doing in 5:3. In fact, as the following ἵνα (hina) clause makes clear, loving God consists in keeping his commandments.

15 tn Once again the genitive could be understood as (1) objective, (2) subjective, or (3) both. Here an objective sense is more likely (believers' love for God) because in the previous verse it is clear that God is the object of believers' love.

16 tn Contrary to the punctuation of NA^{27} and UBS^{4}, it is best to place a full stop (period) following τηρῶμεν (tērōmen) in 5:3. The subordinate clause introduced by ὅτι (hoti) at the beginning of 5:4 is related to the second half of 5:3 which begins with καί (kai). Καί is commonly used by the author to begin a new sentence, probably by analogy with the Hebrew vav consecutive.

17 tn The explicit reason the commandments of God are not burdensome to the believer is given by the ὅτι (hoti) clause at the beginning of 5:4. It is because "everyone who is begotten by God conquers the world."

18 tn The masculine might have been expected here rather than the neuter πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ (pan to gegennēmenon ek tou theou) to refer to the person who is fathered by God. However, BDF §138.1 explains that "the neuter is sometimes used with respect to persons if it is not the individuals but a generic quality that is to be emphasized"; this seems to be the case here, where a collective aspect is in view: As a group, all those who have been begotten by God, that is, all true believers, overcome the world.

19 sn The author is once more looking at the situation antithetically (in 'either/or' terms) as he sees the readers on the one hand as true believers (everyone who is fathered by God) who have overcome the world through their faith, and the opponents on the other as those who have claimed to have a relationship with God but really do not; they belong to the world in spite of their claims.

20 tn Or "overcomes."

21 sn Conquers the world. Once again, the author's language is far from clear at this point, and so is his meaning, but the author has used the verb conquers (νικάω, nikaō) previously to describe the believer's victory over the enemy, the evil one himself, in 2:13-14, and over the secessionist opponents, described as "false prophets" in 4:4. This suggests that what the author has in mind here is a victory over the opponents, who now belong to the world and speak its language (cf. 4:5). In the face of the opponents' attempts through their false teaching to confuse the readers (true believers) about who it is they are supposed to love, the author assures the readers that loving God and keeping his commandments assures us

Testimony About the Son

This[1] is the conquering power[2] that has conquered[3] the world: our faith. 5:5 Now who is the person who has conquered the world except the one who believes that[4] Jesus is the Son of God? 5:6 Jesus Christ is the one who came by water and blood – not by the water only, but by the water and the blood. And the Spirit is the one who testifies, because[5] the Spirit is the truth. 5:7 For[6] there are three that testify,[7] 5:8 the Spirit that we really do love God's children, and because we have already achieved victory over the world through our faith, keeping God's commandments is not a difficult matter.

[1] tn Grk "And this."

[2] tn The standard English translation for ἡ νίκη (hē nikē) is "victory" (BDAG 673 s.v.) but this does not preserve the relationship with the cognate verb νικάω (nikaō; used in 2:13,14 and present in this context in participial form in 5:4b and 5:5). One alternative would be "conquest," although R. E. Brown (Epistles of John [AB], 570) suggests "conquering power" as a translation for ἡ νίκη since here it is a metonymy for the means of victory or the power that gives victory, referring to believers' faith.

[3] tn The use of the aorist participle (ἡ νικήσασα, hē nikēsasa) to refer to faith as the conquering power that "has conquered the world" in 5:4b is problematic. Debate here centers over the temporal value of the aorist participle: (1) It may indicate an action contemporaneous with the (present tense) main verb, in which case the alternation between aorist participle in 5:4b and present participle in 5:5 is one more example of the author's love of stylistic variation with no difference in meaning. (2) Nevertheless, an aorist participle with a present tense main verb would normally indicate an action antecedent to that of the main verb, so that the aorist participle would describe a past action. That is the most probable here. Thus the aorist participle stresses that the conquest of the world is something that has already been accomplished.

[4] tn After a verb of perception (the participle ὁ πιστεύων [ho pisteuōn]) the ὅτι (hoti) in 5:5 introduces indirect discourse, a declarative or recitative clause giving the content of what the person named by the participle (ὁ πιστεύων) believes: "that Jesus is the Son of God." As in 4:15, such a confession constitutes a problem for the author's opponents but not for his readers who are genuine believers.

[5] tn This ὅτι (hoti) is best understood (1) as causal. Some have taken it (2) as declarative, giving the content of the Spirit's testimony: "and the Spirit is the One who testifies that the Spirit is the truth." This is certainly possible, since a ὅτι clause following the cognate verb μαρτυρέω (martureō) often gives the content of the testimony (cf. John 1:34; 3:28; 4:39, 44). But in the Gospel of John the Spirit never bears witness on his own behalf, but always on behalf of Jesus (John 15:26, 16:13). There are, in fact, some instances in the Gospel of John where a ὅτι clause following μαρτυρέω is causal (8:14, 15:27), and that is more likely here: "and the Spirit is the One who testifies, because the Spirit is the truth."

[6] tn A second causal ὅτι (hoti) clause (after the one at the end of the preceding verse) is somewhat awkward, especially since the reasons offered in each are somewhat different. The content of the second ὅτι clause (the one in question here) goes somewhat beyond the content of the first. The first ὅτι clause, the one at the end of 5:6, stated the reason why the Spirit is the witness: because the Spirit is the truth. The second ὅτι clause, here, states that there are three witnesses, of which the Spirit is one. It is probably best, therefore, to understand this second ὅτι as indicating a somewhat looser connection than the first, not strictly causal but inferential in sense (the English translation "for" captures this inferential sense). See BDF §456.1 for a discussion of this 'looser' use of ὅτι.

[7] tc Before τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ καὶ τὸ αἷμα (to pneuma kai to hudōr kai to haima), the Textus Receptus (TR) reads ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, ὁ πατήρ, ὁ λόγος, καὶ τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, καὶ οὗτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἕν εἰσι. 5:8 καὶ τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῇ γῇ ("in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one. 5:8 And there are three that testify on earth"). This reading, the infamous Comma Johanneum, has been known in the English-speaking world through the King James translation. However, the evidence – both external and internal – is decidedly against its authenticity. For a detailed discussion, see TCGNT 647-49. Our discussion will briefly address the external evidence. This longer reading is found only in nine late MSS, four of which have the words in a marginal note. Most of these MSS (221 2318 [18th century] {2473 [dated 1634]} and [with minor variations] 61 88 429 629 636 918) originate from the 16th century; the earliest MS, codex 221 (10th century) includes the reading in a marginal note, added sometime after the original composition. The oldest MS with the Comma in its text is from the 14th century (629), but the wording here departs from all the other MSS in several places. The next oldest MSS on behalf of the Comma, 88 (12th century) 429 (14th) 636 (15th), also have the reading only as a marginal note (v.l.). The remaining MSS are from the 16th to 18th centuries. Thus, there is no sure evidence of this reading in any Greek MS until the 14th century (629), and that MS deviates from all others in its wording; the wording that matches what is found in the TR was apparently composed after Erasmus' Greek NT was published in 1516. Indeed, the Comma appears in no Greek witness of any kind (either MS, patristic, or Greek translation of some other version) until A.D. 1215 (in a Greek translation of the Acts of the Lateran Council, a work originally written in Latin). This is all the more significant since many a Greek Father would have loved such a reading, for it so succinctly affirms the doctrine of the Trinity. The reading seems to have arisen in a 4th century Latin homily in which the text was allegorized to refer to members of the Trinity. From there, it made its way into copies of the Latin Vulgate, the text used by the Roman Catholic Church. The Trinitarian formula (known as the Comma Johanneum) made its way into the third edition of Erasmus' Greek NT (1522) because of pressure from the Catholic Church. After his first edition appeared, there arose such a furor over the absence of the Comma that Erasmus needed to defend himself. He argued that he did not put in the Comma because he found no Greek MSS that included it. Once one was produced (codex 61, written in ca. 1520), Erasmus apparently felt obliged to include the reading. He became aware of this MS sometime between May of 1520 and September of 1521. In his annotations to his third edition he does not protest the rendering now in his text, as though it were made to order, but he does defend himself from the charge of indolence, noting that he had taken care to find whatever MSS he could for the production of his text. In the final analysis, Erasmus probably altered the text because of politico-theologico-economic concerns: He did not want his reputation ruined, nor his Novum Instrumentum to go unsold. Modern advocates of the TR and KJV generally argue for the inclusion of the Comma Johanneum on the basis of heretical motivation by scribes who did not include it. But these same scribes elsewhere include thoroughly orthodox readings – even in places where the TR/Byzantine MSS lack and the water and the blood, and these three are in agreement.

5:9 If we accept the testimony of men, the testimony of God is greater, because[1] this[2] is the testimony of God that[3] he has testified concerning his Son. 5:10 (The one who believes in the Son of God has the testimony in himself; the one who does not believe God has made him a liar, because he has not believed in the testimony that God has testified concerning his Son.)[4] 5:11 And this is the testimony: God[5] has given us eternal life,[6] and this life is in his Son. 5:12 The one who has the Son[7] has this[8] eternal[9] life; the one who does not have the Son of God does not have this[10] eternal[11] life.

them. Further, these advocates argue theologically from the position of divine preservation: Since this verse is in the TR, it must be original. (Of course, this approach is circular, presupposing as it does that the TR = the original text.) In reality, the issue is history, not heresy: How can one argue that the Comma Johanneum goes back to the original text yet does not appear until the 14th century in any Greek MSS (and that form is significantly different from what is printed in the TR; the wording of the TR is not found in any Greek MSS until the 16th century)? Such a stance does not do justice to the gospel: Faith must be rooted in history. Significantly, the German translation of Luther was based on Erasmus' second edition (1519) and lacked the Comma. But the KJV translators, basing their work principally on Theodore Beza's 10th edition of the Greek NT (1598), a work which itself was fundamentally based on Erasmus' third and later editions (and Stephanus' editions), popularized the Comma for the English-speaking world. Thus, the Comma Johanneum has been a battleground for English-speaking Christians more than for others.

[1] tn This ὅτι (hoti) almost certainly introduces a causal clause, giving the reason why the "testimony of God" is greater than the "testimony of men": "because this is God's testimony that he has testified concerning his Son."

[2] tn The problem with αὕτη (hautē) in 5:9 lies in determining whether it refers (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. A few interpreters would see this as referring to the preceding verses (5:7-8), but the analogy with the author's other uses of αὕτη (1:5; 3:11, 23) suggests a reference to what follows. In all of the other instances of αὕτη ἐστιν (hautē estin, 1:5; 3:11, 23) the phrase is followed by an epexegetical (explanatory) clause giving the referent (ὅτι [hoti] in 1:5, ἵνα [hina] in 3:11 and 23). The ὅτι clause which follows the αὕτη in 5:9 does not explain the testimony, but should be understood as an adjectival relative clause which qualifies the testimony further. The ὅτι clause which explains the testimony of 5:9 (to which the αὕτη in 5:9 refers) is found in 5:11, where the phrase αὕτη ἐστιν is repeated. Thus the second use of αὕτη ἐστιν in 5:11 is resumptive, and the ὅτι clause which follows the αὕτη in 5:11 is the epexegetical (explanatory) clause which explains both it and the αὕτη in 5:9 which it resumes.

[3] tn The second ὅτι (hoti) in 5:9 may be understood in three different ways. (1) It may be causal, in which case it gives the reason why the testimony just mentioned is God's testimony: "because he has testified concerning his Son." This is extremely awkward because of the preceding ὅτι clause which is almost certainly causal (although the second ὅτι could perhaps be resumptive in force, continuing the first). (2) The second ὅτι could be understood as epexegetical (explanatory), in which case it explains what the testimony of God mentioned in the preceding clause consists of: "because this is the testimony of God, [namely,] that he has testified concerning his Son." This is much smoother grammatically, but encounters the logical problem that "the testimony of God" is defined in 5:11 ("And this is the testimony: that God has given us eternal life") and the two definitions of what the testimony of God consists of are not identical (some would say that they are not even close). Thus (3) the smoothest way to understand the second ὅτι logically is to read it as a relative pronoun: "because this is the testimony of God that he has testified concerning his Son." In this case it is exactly parallel to the relative clause which occurs in 5:10b: "because he has not believed the testimony that (ἣν, hēn) God has testified concerning his Son." (There is in fact a textual problem with the second ὅτι in 5:9: The Byzantine tradition, along with MS P, reads a relative pronoun [ἣν] in place of the second ὅτι in 5:9 identical to the relative pronoun in 5:10b. This represents an obvious effort on the part of scribes to smooth out the reading of the text.) In an effort to derive a similar sense from the second ὅτι in 5:9 it has been suggested that the conjunction ὅτι should be read as an indefinite relative pronoun ὅτι (sometimes written ὅ τι). The problem with this suggestion is the use of the neuter relative pronoun to refer to a feminine antecedent (ἡ μαρτυρία, hē marturia). It is not without precedent for a neuter relative pronoun to refer to an antecedent of differing gender, especially as some forms tended to become fixed in usage and were used without regard to agreement. But in this particular context it is difficult to see why the author would use a neuter indefinite relative pronoun here in 5:9b and then use the normal feminine relative pronoun (ἣν) in the next verse. (Perhaps this strains at the limits of even the notorious Johannine preference for stylistic variation, although it is impossible to say what the author might or might not have been capable of doing.) Because of the simplicity and logical smoothness which results from reading ὅτι as equivalent to a relative pronoun, the third option is preferred, although it is not without its difficulties (as are all three options).

[4] sn This verse is a parenthesis in John's argument.

[5] tn The ὅτι (hoti) clause in 5:11 is epexegetical (explanatory) to the phrase καὶ αὕτη ἐστίν (kai hautē estin) at the beginning of the verse and gives the content of the testimony for the first time: "And this is the testimony: that God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

[6] sn In understanding how "God's testimony" (added to the three witnesses of 5:8) can consist of eternal life it is important to remember the debate between the author and the opponents. It is not the reality of eternal life (whether it exists at all or not) that is being debated here, but rather which side in the debate (the author and his readers or the opponents) possesses it (this is a key point). The letter began with a testimony that "the eternal life" has been revealed (1:2), and it is consummated here with the reception or acknowledgment of that eternal life as the final testimony. This testimony (which is God's testimony) consists in eternal life itself, which the author and the readers possess, but the opponents do not. This, for the author, constitutes the final apologetic in his case against the opponents.

[7] sn The one who has the Son. The expression "to have the Son" in 5:12 means to "possess" him in the sense that he is present in the individual's life (see 1 John 2:23 for the use of the Greek verb "to have" to indicate possession of a divine reality). From the parallel statement in 5:10a it is clear that believing in the Son and thus having God's testimony in one's self is the same as "having" the Son here in 5:12a. This is essentially identical to John 3:16: "that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life." In contrast, the negative statement in 5:12b reflects the author's evaluation of the opponents: "the one who does not have the Son does not have (eternal) life." The opponents, in spite of their claims to know God, do not possess (nor have they at any time possessed, cf. 2:19) eternal life.

[8] tn "This" is a translation of the Greek anaphoric article.

Assurance of Eternal Life

5:13 I have written these things[1] to you who believe[2] in the name of the Son of God so that[3] you may know that you have eternal life.

5:14 And this is the confidence that we have before him: that[4] whenever[5] we ask anything according to his will, he hears us. 5:15 And if we know[6] that he hears us in regard to whatever we ask, then we know that we have the requests that we have asked from him. 5:16 If[7] anyone sees his fellow Christian[8] committing a sin not resulting in death,[9] he should ask, and God[10] will grant[11] life to the person who commits a sin not resulting in death.[12] There is a sin resulting in

[1] tn Theoretically the pronoun ταῦτα (tauta) could refer (1) to what precedes or (2) to what follows. Since it is followed by a ἵνα (hina) clause which gives the purpose for the writing, and a new subject is introduced in 5:14 (ἡ παρρησία, hē parrēsia), it seems almost certain that the ταῦτα in 5:13 refers to preceding material. Even at this, some would limit the referent of ταῦτα (1) only to 5:1-12 or even 5:12, but more likely ταῦτα in 5:13 refers (2) to the entirety of the letter, for two reasons: (a) based on the structural analogy with the Gospel of John, where the conclusion refers to all that has preceded, it is probable that the conclusion to 1 John refers likewise to all that has preceded; and (b) the statement ταῦτα ἔγραψα ὑμῖν (tauta egrapsa humin) in 5:13 forms an inclusion with the statement καὶ ταῦτα γράφομεν ἡμεῖς (kai tauta graphomen hēmeis) at the end of the prologue (1:4) and encompasses the entire body of the letter.

[2] tn The dative participle πιστεύουσιν (pisteuousin) in 5:13 is in simple apposition to the indirect object of ἔγραψα (egrapsa), ὑμῖν (humin), and could be translated, "These things I have written to you, namely, to the ones who believe in the name of the Son of God, in order that you may know." There is an exact parallel to this structure in John 1:12, where the pronoun is αὐτοῖς (autois) and the participle is τοῖς πιστεύουσιν (tois pisteuousin) as here.

[3] tn This ἵνα (hina) introduces a clause giving the author's purpose for writing "these things" (ταῦτα, tauta), which refers to the entirety of the preceding material. The two other Johannine statements about writing, 1 John 1:4 and John 20:31, are both followed by purpose clauses introduced by ἵνα, as here.

[4] tn For the third time in 5:9-14 the author uses the construction αὕτη ἐστίν (hautē estin; 5:9, 11, 14). As in the previous instance (5:11) the ὅτι (hoti) clause which follows is epexegetical (explanatory) to the pronoun αὕτη and explains what the "confidence" (παρρησία, parrēsia) consists of (technically the subject is ἡ παρρησία, the predicate nominative is the pronoun αὕτη, and the ὅτι clause explains the predicate nominative): "And the confidence which we have before him is this, namely, that if we ask anything according to his will he hears us."

[5] tn A third-class condition is introduced by ἐάν (ean) + present subjunctive. Because the apodosis also contains a present tense verb (ἀκούει, akouei) this belongs in a subcategory of third-class conditional sentences known as present general. In the Koine period ἐάν can mean "when" or "whenever" and is virtually the equivalent of ὅταν (hotan; see BDAG 268 s.v. ἐάν 2). Thus the meaning here is, "whenever (i.e., if) we ask anything according to his will, then he hears us."

[6] tn This use of ἐάν (ean) with the indicative mood rather than the subjunctive constitutes an anomalous usage. Here ἐάν is used instead of εἰ (ei) to introduce a first-class condition: "if we know (οἴδαμεν, oidamen) that he hears us in regard to whatever we ask, then we know that we have the requests which we have asked from him." The reality of the condition (protasis) is assumed for the sake of argument; given the protasis, the apodosis follows. The use of ἐάν for εἰ is rare but not without precedent; see M. Zerwick (Biblical Greek §§330-31).

[7] tn Again ἐάν (ean) in 5:16 introduces (as in 5:14) a third-class condition, but this time, with the future indicative (αἰτήσει, aitēsei) in the apodosis, the condition is known as "more probable future." As BDF §371.4 points out, such a condition describes what is to be expected under certain circumstances. If a person sees his Christian brother committing a sin not to death, it is expected that he will make intercession for the sinning brother ("he should ask..."), and that life will be granted to the sinner in answer to the request. The author has already pointed out in 5:14-15 that if believers make requests of God in accordance with his will they may have confidence that they will receive the requests they have asked for, and this is a specific instance.

[8] tn See note on the phrase "fellow Christian" in 2:9.

[9] tn Grk "a sin not to death."

[10] tn Grk "he" (see the note on the word "grant" later in this verse for discussion).

[11] tn The referent of the (understood) third person subject of δώσει (dōsei) in 5:16 is difficult to determine. Once again the author's meaning is obscure. Several possibilities have been suggested for the referent of the subject of this verb: (1) From a grammatical and syntactical standpoint, it would be easiest to understand the subject of δώσει in 5:16 as the person who makes the request, since this person is the subject of the preceding verb αἰτήσει (aitēsei) and the following verb ἐρωτήσῃ (erōtēsē). From a theological standpoint this is extremely difficult, however, since it would make the person who prays for the sinner the giver of life, and it is questionable whether the author (for whom God is the ultimate source of life) would say that one believer could 'give' life to another. In this case the meaning would be: "he [the petitioner] should ask, and he [the petitioner] will grant life to him [the sinner], namely, to those who sin not to death." (2) Another option is to see God as the subject of δώσει in 5:16 and the Giver of life to the sinner. This is far more consistent theologically with the author's perspective on God as the Giver of life everywhere else, but it is awkward grammatically (as explained in reference to the previous position above) because it involves a shift in subjects for the three third-person verbs in the context from the person who makes the request (αἰτήσει) to God (δώσει) and back to the person who makes the request (ἐρωτήσῃ). In this case the meaning would be: "he [the petitioner] should ask, and he [God] will grant life to him [the sinner], namely, to those who sin not to death." (3) A third possibility is to see God as the subject of δώσει in 5:16, but the person who makes the request (rather than the sinner) as the referent of the indirect object αὐτῷ (autō) in 5:16. This is possible because the indirect object αὐτῷ is singular, while the dative substantival participle τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσιν (tois hamartanousin) which follows (which clearly refers to those who sin) is plural. Thus the meaning would be: "he [the petitioner] should ask, and he [God] will grant life to him [the petitioner], with reference to [his praying for] those who sin not to death." Although this is a difficult and awkward construction no matter what solution one takes, on the whole the second alternative seems most probable. Even if option (1) is preferred it must be acknowledged that God is ultimately the source of life, although it is given as a result of the petitioner's intercessory prayer and the petitioner becomes, in a sense, the intermediate agent. But in the preceding context (5:11) the author has emphasized that God is the Giver of life, and in spite of the awkwardness in the change of subjects, that would seem to be the most likely meaning here, so option (2) is preferred. Option (3) is improbable because it seems clear that it should be the sinner for whom intercession is made, rather than the petitioner, who is the recipient of life. The petitioner would be assumed to possess life already or he could not be making a request which God would hear. In this case the change from the singular dative indirect object (αὐτῷ) to the plural dative substantival participle (τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσιν) is merely a loose construction (which by this time should come as no surprise from the author).

[12] tn Grk "a sin not to death."

[1] tn Grk "a sin to death."

[2] tn The meaning of ἀδικία (adikia) here is "unrighteousness" (BDAG 20 s.v. 2). It refers to the opposite of that which is δίκαιος (dikaios, "right, just, righteous") which is used by the author to describe both God and Jesus Christ (1 John 1:9; 2:2, 29). Here, having implied that sins committed by believers (sins "not to death") may be prayed for and forgiven, the author does not want to leave the impression that such sin is insignificant, because this could be viewed as a concession to the views of the opponents (who as moral indifferentists have downplayed the significance of sin in the Christian's life).

[3] tn Grk "a sin not to death."

[4] tn The concept represented by the verb γεννάω (gennaō) here means to be fathered by God and thus a child of God. The imagery in 1 John is that of the male parent who fathers children (see 2:29).

[5] tn Grk "he"; see the note on the following word "protects."

[6] tn The meaning of the phrase ὁ γεννηθεὶς ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ τηρεῖ αὐτόν (ho gennētheis ek tou theou tērei auton) in 5:18 is extraordinarily difficult. Again the author's capacity for making obscure statements results in several possible meanings for this phrase: (1) "The fathering by God protects him [the Christian]." Here a textual variant for ὁ γεννηθείς (ἡ γέννησις, hē gennēsis) has suggested to some that the passive participle should be understood as a noun ("fathering" or perhaps "birth"), but the MS evidence is extremely slight (1505 1852 2138 latt [sy^{h}] bo). This almost certainly represents a scribal attempt to clarify an obscure phrase. (2) "The One fathered by God [Jesus] protects him [the Christian]." This is a popular interpretation, and is certainly possible grammatically. Yet the introduction of a reference to Jesus in this context is sudden; to be unambiguous the author could have mentioned the "Son of God" here, or used the pronoun ἐκεῖνος (ekeinos) as a reference to Jesus as he consistently does elsewhere in 1 John. This interpretation, while possible, seems in context highly unlikely. (3) "The one fathered by God [the Christian] protects himself." Again a textual problem is behind this alternative, since a number of MSS (א A^{c} P Ψ 33 1739 𝔐) supply the reflexive pronoun ἑαυτόν (heauton) in place of αὐτόν in 5:18. On the basis of the external evidence this has a good possibility of being the original reading, but internal evidence favors αὐτόν as the more difficult reading, since ἑαυτόν may be explained as a scribal attempt at grammatical smoothness. From a logical standpoint, however, it is difficult to make much more sense out of ἑαυτόν; to say what "the Christian protects himself" means in the context is far from clear. (4) "The one fathered by God [the Christian] holds on to him [God]." This results in further awkwardness, because the third person pronoun (αὐτοῦ, autou) in the following clause must refer to the Christian, not God. Furthermore, although τηρέω (tēreō) can mean "hold on to" (BDAG 1002 s.v. 2.c), this is not a common meaning for the verb in Johannine usage, occurring elsewhere only in Rev 3:3. (5) "The one fathered by God [the Christian], he [God] protects him [the Christian]." This involves a pendant nominative construction (ὁ γεννηθεὶς ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ) where a description of something within the clause is placed in the nominative case and moved forward ahead of the clause for emphatic reasons. This may be influenced by Semitic style; such a construction is also present in John 17:2 ("in order that everyone whom You have given to him, he may give to them eternal life"). This view is defended by K. Beyer (Semitische Syntax im Neuen Testament [SUNT], 1:216ff.) and appears to be the most probable in terms both of syntax and of sense. It makes God the protector of the Christian (rather than the Christian himself), which fits the context much better, and there is precedent in Johannine literature for such syntactical structure.

[7] tn The preposition ἐκ (ek) here indicates both source and possession: Christians are "from" God in the sense that they are begotten by him, and they belong to him. For a similar use of the preposition compare the phrases ἐκ τοῦ πατρός (ek tou patros) and ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου (ek tou kosmou) in 1 John 2:16.

[8] tn The ἵνα (hina) introduces a purpose clause which gives the purpose of the preceding affirmation: "we know that the Son of God has come and has given us insight (so that we may) know him who is true."

[9] sn The pronoun This one (οὗτος, houtos) refers to a person, but it is far from clear whether it should be understood as a reference (1) to God the Father or (2) to Jesus Christ. R. E. Brown (Epistles of John [AB], 625) comments, "I John, which began with an example of stunning grammatical obscurity in the prologue, continues to the end to offer us examples of unclear grammar." The nearest previous antecedent is Jesus Christ, immediately preceding, but on some occasions when this has been true the pronoun still refers to God (see 1 John 2:3). The first predicate which follows This one in 5:20, the true God, is a description of God the Father used by Jesus in John 17:3, and was used in the preceding clause of the present verse to refer to God the Father (him who is true). Yet the second predicate of This one in 5:20, eternal life, appears to refer to Jesus, because although the Father possesses "life" (John 5:26, 6:57) just as Jesus does (John 1:4, 6:57, 1 John 5:11), "life" is never predicated of the Father elsewhere, while it is predicated of Jesus in John 11:25 and 14:6 (a self-predication by Jesus). If This one in 5:20 is understood as referring to Jesus, it forms an inclusion with the prologue, which introduced the reader to "the eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested to us." Thus it appears best to understand the pronoun This one in 5:20 as a reference to Jesus Christ. The christological affirmation which results is striking, but certainly not beyond the capabilities of the author (see John 1:1 and 20:28): This One [Jesus Christ] is the true God and eternal life.

[10] tc Most later MSS (P 𝔐) have ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of this letter. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the earliest and best witnesses, along with several others (א A B Ψ 33 323 630 1505 1739 al sy co), lack the inoffensive particle, rendering its omission as the authentic reading.

sn The modern reader may wonder what all this has to do with idolatry. In the author's mind, to follow the secessionist opponents with their false Christology would amount to idolatry, since it would involve worshiping a false god instead of the true God, Jesus Christ. Thus guard yourselves from idols means for the readers to guard themselves against the opponents and their teaching.

1 tn The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Or "presbyter."

sn The author's self-designation, the elder, is in keeping with the reticence of the author of the Gospel of John to identify himself. This is the same self-designation used by the author of 3 John.

3 tn This phrase may refer to an individual or to a church (or the church at large). Some have suggested that the addressee is a Christian lady named "Electa," but the same word in v. 13 is clearly an adjective, not a proper name. Others see the letter addressed to a Christian lady named "Kyria" (first proposed by Athanasius) or to an unnamed Christian lady. The internal evidence of 2 John clearly supports a collective reference, however. In v. 6 the addressee is mentioned using second person plural, and this is repeated in vv. 8, 10, and 12. Only in v. 13 does the singular reappear. The uses in vv. 1 and 13 are most likely collective. Some have seen a reference to the church at large, but v. 13, referring to "the children of your elect sister" is hard to understand if the universal church is in view. Thus the most probable explanation is that the "elect lady" is a particular local church at some distance from where the author is located.

sn 2 John is being written to warn a "sister" church some distance away, referred to as an elect lady, of the missionary efforts of the secessionist false teachers (discussed in 1 John) and the dangers of welcoming them whenever they arrive.

4 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν ἀληθείᾳ (en alētheia) in 2 John 1 is similar to 3 John 1, although it is not qualified there as it is here (see 3 John 1). This is not merely the equivalent of an adverb ("truly"), but is a theological statement affirming the orthodoxy of Gaius, to whom the letter is addressed. "Truth" is the author's way of alluding to theological orthodoxy in the face of the challenge by the opponents (see 1 John 3:19).

5 sn All those who know the truth refers to true Christians who are holding fast to the apostolic Christology in the face of the secessionist opponents described in 1 John.

6 tc The prepositional phrase that begins v. 2, διὰ τὴν ἀλήθειαν (dia tēn alētheian, "because of the truth"), is missing in a number of significant MSS, among them Ψ 614 1241 1505 1739 al. However, it looks to be a simple case of homoioteleuton, for v. 1 ends with τὴν ἀλήθειαν. For some of these MSS it could be an intentional omission, for the sense of the passage is largely the same without the prepositional phrase (the following adjectival participle, in this case, would simply attach itself to the previous τὴν ἀλήθειαν). The phrase could thus have been viewed as redundant and for this reason expunged from the text.

sn While truth certainly has a doctrinal aspect in this context, the following phrase that resides in us and will be with us forever suggests more than doctrine is involved. A close parallel is John 14:16-17 where Jesus promised his disciples that the Spirit (Paraclete) would be with them forever: "He remains with you and will be in you." The "truth" the author speaks of here is a manifestation of the Spirit of Truth who is permanently with the believer.

7 tn "And" is not in the Greek text. It is supplied for smoothness in English.

8 tc Most witnesses, including some early and important ones (א P 33 𝔐 sy), have κυρίου (kuriou, "Lord") before Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (Iēsou Christou, "Jesus Christ"), but this is a typical scribal addition, motivated by pietistic and liturgical concerns. Further, early and excellent MSS (A B Ψ 048 0232 81 323 1739 al) lack κυρίου. Thus, both internally and externally, the shorter reading is strongly preferred.

9 tn "Some" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied because the prepositional phrase beginning with ἐκ (ek) has partitive force. The partitive force of the prepositional phrase here has been taken by some interpreters to mean that the author has found some of the elect lady's children who are living according to the truth and some who are not. This is grammatically possible, but the author has merely stated that he knows of some Christians in the church addressed who are "walking in the truth." He does not know for certain that all of them are, and concern over this is probably part of the motivation for writing the letter.

10 sn Living according to the truth (Grk "walking in [the] truth"). The use of the Greek verb περιπατέω (peripatēō) to refer to conduct or lifestyle is common in the NT (see 1 John 1:6, 3 John 3-4, as well as numerous times in Paul. Here the phrase refers to conduct that results when a person has "truth" residing within, and possibly alludes to the indwelling Spirit of Truth (see 2 John 2). In the specific context of 2 John the phrase refers to true Christians who are holding fast to an apostolic Christology in the face of the secessionist opponents' challenge to orthodoxy.

11 tn Grk "just as we received commandment from the Father." The idiom "we received commandment from the Father" means the Father gave (a) commandment to them (the author plus the recipients).

12 tn The introductory καὶ νῦν (kai nun) has some adversative (contrastive) force: The addressees are already "living according to the truth" (v. 4) but in the face of the threat posed by the opponents, the author has to stress obedience all the more.

13 tn The words "if I were" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied for clarity in English.

14 sn An allusion to John 13:34-35, 1 John 2:7-8.

15 tn "The one" is not in the Greek text. It is supplied for clarity in English.

16 sn See 1 John 2:7.

17 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause indicates content.

18 tn Or "that we live."

heard from the beginning; thus[1] you should walk in it.[2] 1:7 For[3] many deceivers have gone out into the world, people who do not confess Jesus as[4] Christ[5] coming in the flesh.[6] This person is the deceiver and the antichrist![7] 1:8 Watch out, so that you do not lose the things we have worked for,[8] but receive a full reward.[9]

1:9 Everyone[10] who goes on ahead and does not remain[11] in the teaching of Christ[12] does not have God.[13] The one who remains in this teaching has both the Father and the Son. 1:10 If anyone comes to you and does not bring this teaching, do not receive him into your house and do not give him any greeting,[14] 1:11 because the person who gives him a greeting shares in his evil deeds.[15]

Conclusion

1:12 Though I have many other[16] things to write to you, I do not want to do so with[17] paper and ink,[18] but I hope to come visit you and speak face to face,[19] so that our joy may be complete.[20]

1:13 The children of your elect sister greet you.[21]

1 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause indicates result, parallel to John 13:34 where the final ἵνα clause also indicates result.

2 tn Or "should live in obedience to it."

3 tn Technically this ὅτι (hoti) clause is subordinate to the verb περιπατῆτε (peripatēte) at the end of v. 6, giving the reason why the readers should walk in the commandment to love one another. But BDF §456.1 notes that subordination "is often very loose" in such cases and can be translated "for." Thus the ὅτι assumes something of an inferential sense, drawing an inference based on what has preceded.

4 tn "As" is not in the Greek text. It is supplied for clarity in English, since (like in the same confession in 1 John 4:2) Ἰησοῦν (Iēsoun) should be understood as object and Χριστόν (Christon) as complement of an object-complement double accusative construction.

5 tn Or "Messiah."

6 tn This is the same confession as in 1 John 4:2 except the perfect participle used there is replaced by a present participle (ἐρχόμενον, erchomenon) here. It is not clear why the author changed from a perfect participle in 1 John 4:2 to a present participle here. The perfect participle suggests a reference to the incarnation (past). The present participle could suggest a reference to the (future) second advent, but based on the similarity to 1 John 4:2 it is probably best to take it as referring to the incarnation.

7 sn The statement This person is the Deceiver and the Antichrist! is a metaphor (metonymy). The author does not mean that each individual is to be identified as the Antichrist. The opponents are compared to the Deceiver (Satan) and the Antichrist since they are accomplishing Satan's work and preparing the way for the Antichrist.

8 sn The things we have worked for probably refers to the pastoral and missionary efforts undertaken by the recipients of the letter in their own community and surrounding communities. This work would be "lost" if the opponents with their false teaching are allowed to proselytize unopposed.

9 sn The idea of a reward for Christians who serve faithfully is not common in the Johannine writings, but can be found in Rev 11:18 and 22:12.

10 tn The construction πᾶς ὁ (pas ho) + participle occur frequently in 1 John (13 times) where it is used by the author to divide people into categories: "everyone who does this" as opposed to "everyone who does the opposite."

11 tn Here μένω (menō) has been translated "remain" rather than "reside" since a change in status or position is present in the context: The opponents did not "remain" but "ran on ahead." The verb μένω is used only here (twice in this verse) in the Johannine letters in connection with "teaching" but in the Gospel of John it is used three times with reference to the teaching of Jesus himself (7:16, 17; 18:19).

12 tn The genitive τοῦ Χριστοῦ (tou Christou, "of Christ") is difficult because it may be understood as objective (the teaching about Christ), subjective (Christ's own teaching), or both (M. Zerwick's "general" genitive [Biblical Greek §§36-39]; D. B. Wallace's "plenary" genitive [ExSyn 119-21]). An objective genitive (with Christ as the object of the "apostolic" teaching) might seem to be the obvious reading in context, especially since verse 7 makes reference to what a person "confesses" about Jesus Christ. A good case can also be made for a subjective genitive, however, since other Johannine uses of the genitive following the noun διδαχή (didachē, "teaching") favor a subjective sense here. In John 7:16, 17 Jesus himself refers to "my teaching" and "teaching from me," and 18:19 refers to "his (Jesus') teaching." Rev 2:14, 15 refers to the "teaching of Balaam" and "the teaching of the Nicolaitans," both of which are clearly subjective in context. In the present context, to speak of "Christ's teaching" as a subjective genitive would make Christ himself (in the person of the indwelling Spirit) the teacher, and this is consistent with the author's position in 1 John 2:27 that the community does not need other teachers. In 1 John 2:27 it is the Paraclete, referred to as "his anointing," who does the teaching. Since the dispute with the opponents concerns the salvific significance of the earthly life and ministry of Jesus, the "teaching" here would refer to Jesus' own teaching (reflected in the Gospel of John) concerning his person and work. Since this is ultimately one with the apostolic eyewitness testimony about Jesus, it is perhaps best to view the genitive here as both objective and subjective (perhaps the author deliberately intended not to be specific).

13 sn The idiom translated have God means to have a relationship to God as a genuine believer. The phrase has both the Father and the Son later in this verse should be understood the same way.

14 sn Do not give him any greeting does not mean to insult the person. It means "do not greet the person as a fellow Christian" (which is impossible anyway since the opponents are not genuine believers in the author's opinion).

15 sn Shares in his evil deeds. Giving a public greeting could be understood by an onlooker to suggest agreement with the (false) teaching of the opponents and is thus prohibited by John.

16 tn "Other" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity in English.

17 tn Grk "by means of."

18 sn Presumably the author means he would rather say the additional things he wants to say to the recipients in person rather than by letter (with paper and ink).

19 tn Grk "speak mouth to mouth," an idiom for which the English equivalent is "speak face to face."

20 tn Grk "be fulfilled."

21 tc The Byzantine text has ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the conclusion of this letter. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, the particle is lacking in excellent, early, and diffuse witnesses (ℵ A B P Ψ 33 81 323 1739 1881 al co), rendering its omission the strongly preferred reading.

3 John

Introduction and Thanksgiving

1:1 From[1] the elder,[2] to Gaius[3] my dear brother, whom I love in truth.[4] 1:2 Dear friend, I pray that all may go well with you and that you may be in good health, just as it is well with your soul.[5] 1:3 For I rejoiced greatly when the brothers came and testified to your truth, just as you are living according to the truth.[6]

1:4 I have no greater joy than this: to hear[7] that my children are living according to the truth.[8]

The Charge to Gaius

1:5 Dear friend,[9] you demonstrate faithfulness[10] by whatever you do for the brothers (even though they are strangers). 1:6 They[11] have testified to your love before the church.[12] You will do well to send them on their way in a manner worthy of God.[13] 1:7 For they have gone

---

1 tn The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

2 tn Or "presbyter."

sn The author's self-designation, the elder, is in keeping with the reticence of the author of the Gospel of John to identify himself. This is the same self-designation used by the author of 2 John.

3 sn Little reliable information is available concerning the identity of the person to whom 3 John is addressed. Because the name Gaius was very common in the Roman Empire, it is highly unlikely that the person named here is to be identified with any of the others of the same name associated with Paul (1 Cor 1:14, Rom 16:23 [these two references are probably to the same person]; Acts 19:29, Acts 20:4). A 4th century tradition recorded in the Apostolic Constitutions 7.46.9 (ca. A.D. 370) states that John the Apostle ordained Gaius as bishop of Pergamum, but this is questionable because of the relatively late date. The only certain information about this individual must be obtained from 3 John itself, and there is not a great deal there. It is obvious that this person is well known to the author, but it is not so certain whether they had met personally or not, because the report of Gaius' conduct toward the brothers is received secondhand by the author (v. 3). Nor can it be determined with certainty whether Gaius belonged to the same local church as Diotrephes (v. 9), or was himself the leader of another local congregation. It is clear that the author regarded him as orthodox (v. 3) and a valuable ally in the controversy with the secessionist opponents and their false Christology discussed at length in 1 John.

4 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν ἀληθείᾳ (en alētheia) in 3 John 1 is similar to 2 John 1, although it is not qualified here as it is there (see 2 John 1). This is not merely the equivalent of an adverb ("truly"), but is a theological statement affirming the orthodoxy of Gaius, to whom the letter is addressed. "Truth" is the author's way of alluding to theological orthodoxy in the face of the challenge by the opponents (see 1 John 3:19).

5 tn The noun ψυχή (psuchē) is used 10 times in the Gospel of John and 2 times in 1 John; of these 6 of the uses in John and both in 1 John refer to a person's "life" (as something that can be laid down). In John 10:24 and 12:27 the ψυχή is that part of a person where emotions are experienced; one's ψυχή is held in suspense or deeply troubled. This is, in other words, the immaterial part of a person as opposed to his physical existence. A close parallel is found in Philo, Heir 58 (285): "nourished with peace, he will depart, having gained a calm, unclouded life...welfare in the body, welfare in the soul (ψυχή)...health and strength...delight in virtues."

sn Just as it is well with your soul. The equivalent contemporary idiom would be to speak of 'spiritual' health as opposed to physical health. The author affirms that Gaius is indeed well off spiritually, and he prays that Gaius' physical health would match his spiritual health, i.e., that Gaius would be as well off physically as he is spiritually. It is the spiritual health which is to be the standard by which one's physical health is measured, not the other way round.

6 sn Living according to the truth (Grk "walking in [the truth"). The use of the Greek verb περιπατέω (peripateō) to refer to conduct or lifestyle is common in the NT (see 1 John 1:6, 2 John 4, as well as numerous times in Paul. Here the phrase refers to conduct that results when a person has "truth" residing within, and possibly alludes to the indwelling Spirit of Truth (see 2 John 2). In the specific context of 3 John the phrase refers to true Christians who are holding fast to an apostolic Christology in the face of the secessionist opponents' challenge to orthodoxy.

7 tn Grk "that I hear"; the ἵνα (hina) clause indicates content. This is more smoothly expressed as an English infinitive.

8 tn Grk "walking in (the) truth" (see the note on the phrase "living according to the truth" in 3 John 3).

9 tn The author has already described Gaius as "dear friend" or "beloved" (τῷ ἀγαπητῷ, tō agapētō) in v. 1; he will address Gaius in the same way in vv. 5 and 11 (Ἀγαπητέ, Agapēte). This is a term of endearment and personal warmth, much as it is when used by the author as an address in 1 John 2:7.

10 tn BDAG 821 s.v. πιστός 1.b offers the translation "act loyally" for this context, a usage which is not common but does fit well here. Since the author is going to ask Gaius for additional help for these missionaries in the following verse, he begins here by commending Gaius for all that he has already done in this regard.

sn When the author tells Gaius "you demonstrate faithfulness by whatever you do" he is commending him for his faithful service to the traveling missionaries (the brothers). Gaius has assisted them, and they have now returned with a report of this to the author (3 John 3).

11 tn Grk "who" (a relative pronoun that continues the sentence begun in 3 John 5).

12 sn Which church does the author refer to here? The church where Gaius is, the church where the author is, a different local church where the "brothers" are, or the 'universal' church, the church at large? Since the suggestion in 3 John 3 is that the "brothers" have come and testified in the author's church about what Gaius has done for them, it seems most likely that the "church" mentioned here is also the author's church, where he is currently located. Other possibilities cannot be ruled out, but seem unnecessarily complicated.

13 sn Now the author, after commending Gaius for his faithful service to the traveling missionaries in the past (see 3 John 5), now requests additional assistance at the present time (send them on their way in a manner worthy of God). Apparently the missionaries are on their way to visit the area where Gaius' church is located a second time. They had been there once already and had returned with a good report of how Gaius had assisted them. It is entirely possible that they themselves carry with them the present letter as a letter of introduction. Along these lines it has been suggested that Demetrius (see 3 John 12) is one of these traveling missionaries, perhaps the leader of the delegation, and the author is formally introducing him to Gaius, since when he was there forth[1] on behalf of "The Name,"[2] accepting nothing from the pagans.[3] 1:8 Therefore we[4] ought to support such people, so that we become coworkers in cooperation with the truth.[5]

Diotrephes the Troublemaker

1:9 I wrote something to the church,[6] but Diotrephes,[7] who loves to be first among them, does not acknowledge us.[8] 1:10 Therefore, if I come,[9] I will call attention to the deeds he is doing[10] – the bringing of unjustified charges against us with evil words! And not being content with that, he not only refuses to welcome the brothers himself, but hinders the people who the last time he was a stranger (v. 5) but Gaius assisted him anyway.

[1] sn The verb gone forth (ἐξέρχομαι, exerchomai) almost certainly refers to some form of missionary activity. This verb is used of Paul's travels in Acts 14:20, and of his setting out on his second missionary journey in Acts 15:40.

[2] sn Three possibilities for the identification of 'The Name' have been suggested: (1) the name of God, suggested by the unqualified noun with the Greek article. In Rabbinic literature "the Name" is a frequent substitute for the Tetragrammaton YHWH, the name of God, which was too sacred to be pronounced. This would make good logical sense in 3 John, because in the previous verse the author has instructed Gaius to send the missionaries on their way "in a manner worthy of God." (2) Some have understood "the Name" as the self-designation of the Johannine community, or as a reference to the Christian cause at large, or as a way of designating Christians before the title "Christian" came into common usage. (3) The interpretation favored by most commentators is that this is a reference to Jesus' name. Paul uses a similar phrase in Rom 1:5, and in 1 John 2:12 the author wrote, "your sins are forgiven on account of His (Christ's) name." John's Gospel also makes reference to believing "in the name of Jesus" (John 1:12, 3:18).

[3] tn The word ἐθνικός (ethnikos) occurs only 4 times in the NT (the other three are in Matt 5:47; 6:7; and 18:17). It is virtually synonymous here with the far more common ἔθνος (ethnos, used some 162 times in the NT). Both refer to the Gentiles (that is, pagans).

sn Since the issue here is support for the traveling missionaries, and there is no indication that the author would want to forbid receiving support from Gentile converts to Christianity, the word pagans must refer to Gentile unbelievers, i.e., pagans. The traveling missionaries sent out to combat the false teaching of the secessionist opponents have been accepting nothing by way of support from non-Christians.

[4] sn Clearly the author does not refer to himself alone by the use of the first person plural pronoun we here, since the issue is support for the traveling missionaries. It stands in contrast to the pagans mentioned in the previous verse, and is thus to be understood as inclusive of all true Christians: the author, Gaius, and all true Christians. All true Christians ought to support the endeavors of these traveling missionaries in their efforts to counteract the heretical teaching of the opponents.

[5] tn The ἵνα (hina) clause indicates the result of such support for the traveling missionaries: The Christian who helps to support them in their efforts thus becomes a coworker in cooperation with the truth. Although the dative τῇ ἀληθείᾳ (tē alētheia) is somewhat difficult to specify, it would appear (corresponding to the σύν- [sun-] prefix of the noun modified) to indicate a sense of cooperation with "the truth" which is at work through the missionaries. There is precedent in the Johannine literature for understanding "truth" as personified (John 8:32, "the truth will make you free"; possibly also 1 John 3:19). More explicitly, 1 John 4:6 identifies the Holy Spirit as "the Spirit of Truth," a characterization repeated in 1 John 5:6. Thus it seems likely that the "truth" at work through the missionaries here is ultimately the Holy Spirit, who works through their efforts. The Christian who supports them thus becomes a coworker with the Spirit of God himself.

[6] sn The church mentioned here, which the author says he may visit (3 John 10) is not the same as the one mentioned in 3 John 6, to which the author apparently belongs (or of which he is in charge). But what is the relationship of this church in v. 9 to Gaius, to whom the letter is addressed? It is sometimes suggested that Gaius belongs to this church, but that seems unlikely, because the author uses a third-person pronoun to refer to the other members of the church (among them). If Gaius were one of these it would have been much more natural to use a second-person pronoun: "Diotrephes, who loves to be first among you." Thus it seems probable that Gaius belongs to (or is in charge of) one local church while Diotrephes is in another, a church known to Gaius but to which he does not belong.

[7] sn Diotrephes appears to be an influential person (perhaps the leader) in a local church known to Gaius, but to which Gaius himself does not belong. The description of Diotrephes as one who loves to be first suggests he is arrogant, and his behavior displays this: He refuses to acknowledge the written communication mentioned by the author at the beginning of v. 9 (and thus did not recognize the author's apostolic authority), and furthermore (v. 10) refuses to show any hospitality to the traveling missionaries (welcome the brothers) already mentioned by the author. It has been suggested that the description "loves to be first" only indicates that Diotrephes sought prominence or position in this church, and had not yet attained any real authority. But his actions here suggest otherwise: He is able to refuse or ignore the author's previous written instructions (v. 9), and he is able to have other people put out of the church for showing hospitality to the traveling missionaries (v. 10).

[8] tn Since the verb ἐπιδέχομαι (epidechomai) can mean "receive into one's presence" (BDAG 370 s.v. 1; it is used with this meaning in the next verse) it has been suggested that the author himself attempted a previous visit to Diotrephes' church but was turned away. There is nothing in the context to suggest an unsuccessful prior visit by the author, however; in 3 John 9 he explicitly indicates a prior written communication which Diotrephes apparently ignored or suppressed. The verb ἐπιδέχομαι can also mean "accept" in the sense of "acknowledge someone's authority" (BDAG 370 s.v. 2) and such a meaning better fits the context here: Diotrephes has not accepted but instead rejected the authority of the author to intervene in the situation of the traveling missionaries (perhaps because Diotrephes believed the author had no local jurisdiction in the matter).

[9] tn The third-class condition (ἐὰν ἔλθω, ean elthō) seems to be used by the author to indicate real uncertainty on his part as to whether he will visit Diotrephes' church or not.

[10] sn Because Diotrephes did not recognize the authority of the author, the author will expose his behavior for what it is (call attention to the deeds he is doing) if he comes for a visit. These are the charges the author will make against Diotrephes before the church: (1) Diotrephes is engaged in spreading unjustified charges against the author with evil words; (2) Diotrephes refuses to welcome the brothers (the traveling missionaries) himself; (3) Diotrephes hinders the others in the church who wish to help the missionaries; and (4) Diotrephes expels from the church (throws them out) people who aid the missionaries. (Diotrephes himself may not have had supreme authority in the local church to expel these people, but may have been responsible for instigating collective action against them.)

want to do so and throws them out of the church!
1:11 Dear friend, do not imitate what is bad but what is good.[1] The one who does good is of God; the one who does what is bad has not seen God.[2]

Worthy Demetrius

1:12 Demetrius[3] has been testified to by all, even by the truth itself. We also testify to him,[4] and you know that our testimony is true.

Conclusion

1:13 I have many things to write to you, but I do not wish to write to you with[5] pen and ink.[6]
1:14 But I hope to see you right away, and we will speak face to face.[7] 1:15 Peace be with you.[8] The friends here[9] greet you. Greet the friends[10] there[11] by name.

[1] sn The exhortation do not imitate what is bad but what is good is clearly a reference to Diotrephes' evil behavior. The author exhorts Gaius (whom he wishes to continue assisting the missionaries) not to follow the negative example of Diotrephes, but to do what is right. Implicitly there may be a contrast between the bad behavior of Diotrephes and the good reputation of Demetrius (mentioned in the following verse), but it seems more likely that Demetrius is himself one of the traveling missionaries (perhaps their leader), rather than the leader of a local congregation who, unlike Diotrephes, has supported the missionaries himself.

[2] sn The statement The one who does what is bad has not seen God is asyndetic; its abrupt introduction adds emphasis. The statement reiterates the common Johannine theme of behavior as an indication of genuine faith, found in 1 John in 3:6, 10; 4:7, 20; and in the Gospel of John in 3:17-21. By implication, the genuineness of Diotrephes' faith is called into question, because he has obviously done what is bad (v. 11b; cf. vv. 9-10). In John's terminology it is clear that the phrase has not seen God is equivalent to "is not a genuine Christian" (see John 3:17-21 and 1 John 3:6, 10; 4:7, 20).

[3] sn Demetrius is apparently someone Gaius would have heard about, but whose character was not known to him. Thus the author is writing to Gaius to attest to Demetrius' good character. It appears that Demetrius is coming to Gaius' church and needs hospitality and assistance, so the author is writing to commend him to Gaius and vouch for him. It is difficult to know more about Demetrius with any certainty, but the author is willing to give him a powerful personal endorsement (We testify to him too). Demetrius may well have been the leader of a delegation of traveling missionaries, and may even have been the bearer of this letter to Gaius. The writing of letters of introduction to be carried along by representatives or missionaries in NT times is also attested in Paul's writings (1 Cor 16:3).

[4] tn The words "to him" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[5] tn Grk "by means of."

[6] tn Grk "ink and pen." The more normal order in contemporary English is "pen and ink."

sn The figurative phrase with pen and ink is parallel to 2 John 12, suggesting that both letters may well have been written at approximately the same time and in similar situations. The author tells Gaius that he has more to say, but does not wish to do so in writing; he would rather talk in person (3 John 14). It appears that the author anticipates a personal visit to Gaius' church in the very near future. This may be the same visit mentioned in connection with Diotrephes in v. 10. Gaius' church and Diotrephes' church may have been in the same city, or in neighboring towns, so that the author anticipates visiting both on the same journey.

[7] tn Grk "speak mouth to mouth," an idiom for which the contemporary English equivalent is "speak face to face."

[8] tn Grk "peace to you."

[9] tn The word "here" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

[10] sn It is possible that the designation friends (φίλοι, philoi) indicates that these are personal friends of Gaius who send their greetings, but if this is the case it is somewhat surprising that their names are not mentioned, especially when the author instructs Gaius, Greet the friends there by name. More likely this is an alternative to "brothers" (ἀδελφοί, adelphoi) as an early Christian self-designation, especially within the Johannine community. It may have arisen in the Johannine community from Jesus' teaching in John 15:13-15, "you are my friends if you do what I command you."

[11] tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

Jude

Salutation

1:1 From Jude,[1] a slave[2] of Jesus Christ and brother of James,[3] to those who are called, wrapped in the love of[4] God the Father and kept for[5] Jesus Christ. 1:2 May mercy, peace, and love be lavished on you![6]

Condemnation of the False Teachers

1:3 Dear friends, although I have been eager to write to you[7] about our common salvation, I now feel compelled[8] instead to write to encourage[9] you to contend earnestly[10] for the faith[11] that was once for all[12] entrusted to the saints.[13]

[1] tn Grk "Judas," traditionally "Jude" in English versions to distinguish him from the one who betrayed Jesus. The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[2] tn Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). At the same time, perhaps "servant" is apt in that the δοῦλος of Jesus Christ took on that role voluntarily, unlike a slave. The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

[3] sn Although Jude was half-brother of Jesus, he humbly associates himself with James, his full brother. By first calling himself a slave of Jesus Christ, it is evident that he wants no one to place stock in his physical connections. At the same time, he must identify himself further: Since Jude was a common name in the 1st century (two of Jesus' disciples were so named, including his betrayer), more information was needed, that is to say, brother of James.

[4] tn Grk "loved in." The perfect passive participle suggests that the audience's relationship to God is not recent; the preposition ἐν (en) before πατρί (patri) could be taken as sphere or instrument (agency is unlikely, however). Another possible translation would be "dear to God."

[5] tn Or "by." Datives of agency are quite rare in the NT (and other ancient Greek), almost always found with a perfect verb. Although this text qualifies, in light of the well-worn idiom of τηρέω (tēreō) in eschatological contexts, in which God or Christ keeps the believer safe until the parousia (cf. 1 Thess 5:23; 1 Pet 1:4; Rev 3:10; other terms meaning "to guard," "to keep" are also found in similar eschatological contexts [cf. 2 Thess 3:3; 2 Tim 1:12; 1 Pet 1:5; Jude 24]), it is probably better to understand this verse as having such an eschatological tinge. It is at the same time possible that Jude's language was intentionally ambiguous, implying both ideas ("kept by Jesus Christ [so that they might be] kept for Jesus Christ"). Elsewhere he displays a certain fondness for wordplays; this may be a hint of things to come.

[6] tn Grk "may mercy and peace and love be multiplied to you."

[7] tn Grk "while being quite diligent to write to you," or "while making all haste to write to you." Two issues are at stake: (1) whether σπουδή (spoudē) here means diligence, eagerness, or haste; (2) whether ποιούμενος γράφειν (poioumenos graphein) is to be taken conatively ("I was about to write") or progressively ("I was writing"). Without knowing more of the background, it is difficult to tell which option is to be preferred.

[8] tn Grk "I had the necessity." The term ἀνάγκη (anankē, "necessity") often connotes urgency or distress. In this context, Jude is indicating that the more comprehensive treatment about the faith shared between himself and his readers was not nearly as urgent as the letter he found it now necessary to write.

[9] tn Grk "encouraging." Παρακαλῶν (parakalōn) is most likely a telic participle. In keeping with other participles of purpose, it is present tense and occurs after the main verb.

[10] tn the verb ἐπαγωνίζομαι (epagōnizomai) is an intensive form of ἀγωνίζομαι (agōnizomai). As such, the notion of struggling, fighting, contending, etc. is heightened.

[11] tn Τῇ πίστει (tē pistei) here is taken as a dative of advantage ("on behalf of the faith"). Though rare (see BDAG 820 s.v. 3), it is not unexampled and must have this meaning here.

sn The term "faith" has a variety of meanings in the NT. Here, the faith refers to the doctrinal content embraced by believers rather than the act of believing. Rather than discuss the points of agreement that Jude would have with these believers, because of the urgency of the present situation he must assume that these believers were well grounded and press on to encourage them to fight for this common belief.

[12] sn The adverb once for all (ἅπαξ, hapax) seems to indicate that the doctrinal convictions of the early church had been substantially codified. That is to say, Jude could appeal to written documents of the Christian faith in his arguments with the false teachers. Most likely, these documents were the letters of Paul and perhaps one or more gospels. First and Second Peter may also have been among the documents Jude has in mind (see also the note on the phrase entrusted to the saints in this verse).

[13] sn I now feel compelled instead...saints. Apparently news of some crisis has reached Jude, prompting him to write a different letter than what he had originally planned. A plausible scenario (assuming authenticity of 2 Peter or at least that there are authentic Petrine snippets in it) is that after Peter's death, Jude intended to write to the same Gentile readers that Peter had written to (essentially, Paul's churches). Jude starts by affirming that the gospel the Gentiles had received from Paul was the same as the one the Jewish Christians had received from the other apostles (our common salvation). But in the midst of writing this letter, Jude felt that the present crisis deserved another, shorter piece. The crisis, as the letter reveals, is that the false teachers whom Peter prophesied have now infiltrated the church. The letter of Jude is thus an ad hoc letter, intended to confirm the truth of Peter's letter and encourage the saints to ground their faith in the written documents of the nascent church, rather than listen to the twisted gospel of the false teachers. In large measure, the letter of Jude illustrates the necessity of clinging to the authority of scripture as opposed to those who claim to be prophets.

1:4 For certain men[1] have secretly slipped in among you[2] – men who long ago[3] were marked out[4] for the condemnation I am about to describe[5] – ungodly men who have turned the grace of our God into a license for evil[6] and who deny our only Master[7] and Lord,[8] Jesus Christ.

1:5 Now I desire to remind you (even though you have been fully informed of these facts[9] once for all[10]) that Jesus,[11] having saved the[12] people out of the land of Egypt, later[13] destroyed those who did not believe. 1:6 You also know that[14] the angels who did not keep within their

---

1 tn Grk "people." However, if Jude is indeed arguing that Peter's prophecy about false teachers has come true, these are most likely men in the original historical and cultural setting. See discussion of this point in the note on the phrase "these men" in 2 Pet 2:12.

2 tn "Among you" is not in the Greek text, but is obviously implied.

sn The infiltration referred to by the phrase slipped in among you was predicted by Peter (2 Pet 2:1), Paul (e.g., Acts 20:29-30), and OT prophets.

3 tn Or "in the past." The adverb πάλαι (palai) can refer to either, though the meaning "long ago" is more common.

4 tn Grk "written about."

5 tn Grk "for this condemnation." τοῦτο (touto) is almost surely a kataphoric demonstrative pronoun, pointing to what follows in vv. 5-18. Otherwise, the condemnation is only implied (in v. 3b) or is merely a statement of their sinfulness ("ungodly" in v. 4b), not a judgment of it.

6 tn Grk "debauchery." This is the same word Peter uses to predict what the false teachers will be like (2 Pet 2:2, 7, 18).

sn Turned the grace of our God into a license for evil. One of the implications that the gospel in the apostolic period was truly a gospel of grace was the fact that the enemies of the gospel could pervert it into license. If it were a gospel of works, no such abuse could be imagined. Along these lines, note Rom 6:1 – "Are we to remain in sin so that grace may increase?" This question could not have even been asked had the gospel been one of works. But grace is easily misunderstood by those who would abuse it.

7 tc Most later witnesses (P Ψ 𝔐 sy) have θεόν (theon, "God") after δεσπότην (despotēn, "master"), which appears to be a motivated reading in that it explicitly links "Master" to "God" in keeping with the normal NT pattern (see Luke 2:29; Acts 4:24; 2 Tim 2:21; Rev 6:10). In patristic Greek, δεσπότης (despotēs) was used especially of God (cf. BDAG 220 s.v. 1.b.). The earlier and better witnesses (𝔓^{72,78} ℵ A B C 0251 33 81 323 1241 1739 al co) lack θεόν; the shorter reading is thus preferred on both internal and external grounds.

sn The Greek term for Master (δεσπότης, despotēs) is the same term the author of 2 Peter used (2 Pet 2:1) to describe his Lord when he prophesied about these false teachers. Since δεσπότης is used only ten times in the NT, the verbal connection between these two books at this juncture is striking. This is especially so since both Peter and Jude speak of these false teachers as denying the Master (both using the same verb). The basic difference is that Peter is looking to the future, while Jude is arguing that these false teachers are here now.

8 tn The terms "Master and Lord" both refer to the same person. The construction in Greek is known as the Granville Sharp rule, named after the English philanthropist-linguist who first clearly articulated the rule in 1798. Sharp pointed out that in the construction article-noun-καί-noun (where καί [kai] = "and"), when two nouns are singular, personal, and common (i.e., not proper names), they always had the same referent. Illustrations such as "the friend and brother," "the God and Father," etc. abound in the NT to prove Sharp's point. For more discussion see ExSyn 270-78. See also Titus 2:13 and 2 Pet 1:1

sn That Jude comments on his audience's prior knowledge of what he is about to tell them (you have been fully informed of these facts) may imply that they were familiar with 2 Peter. In 2 Pet 2:4ff., the same illustrations from the OT are drawn. See the note on the following phrase once for all.

10 tc ‡ Some translations take ἅπαξ (hapax) with the following clause (thus, "[Jesus,] having saved the people once for all"). Such a translation presupposes that ἅπαξ is a part of the ὅτι (hoti) clause. The reading of NA^{27}, πάντα ὅτι [ὁ] κύριος ἅπαξ (panta hoti [ho] kurios hapax), suggests this interpretation (though with "Lord" instead of "Jesus"). This particle is found before λαόν (laon) in the ὅτι clause in ℵ C* Ψ 630 1241 1243 1505 1739 1846 1881 pc co. But ἅπαξ is found before the ὅτι clause in most witnesses, including several important ones (𝔓^{72} A B C^{2} 33 81 623 2344 𝔐 vg). What seems best able to explain the various placements of the adverb is that scribes were uncomfortable with ἅπαξ referring to the readers' knowledge, feeling it was more appropriate to the theological significance of "saved" (σώσας, sōsas).

sn In this translation, Jude is stressing that the readers have been informed once for all of the OT illustrations he is about to mention. Where would they get this information? Most likely from having read 2 Peter. Earlier Jude used the same adverb to indicate that these believers had a written record of the faith. This seems to be his implication here, too. Thus, for the second time Jude is appealing to the written documents of the early church as authoritative as opposed to the messages of the false teachers. As the 1st century began to draw to a close, the early church found itself increasingly dependent on the letters and gospels of the apostles and their associates. Once those apostles died, false apostles and false teachers sprang up, like wolves in sheep's clothing (cf. Acts 20:29-30). To combat this, some of the latest books of the NT stressed the authority of what had been written (so Hebrews, Jude, Ephesians, 1 John). Although these writers anticipated the return of the Lord, they also braced their audiences for a delay of the parousia (the second coming of Christ) by suggesting that when they were gone the NT documents should guide them.

11 tc ‡ The reading Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus") is deemed too hard by several scholars, since it involves the notion of Jesus acting in the early history of the nation Israel. However, not only does this reading enjoy the strongest support from a variety of early witnesses (e.g., A B 33 81 1241 1739 1881 2344 pc vg co Or^{1739mg}), but the plethora of variants demonstrate that scribes were uncomfortable with it, for they seemed to exchange κύριος (kurios, "Lord") or θεός (theos, "God") for Ἰησοῦς (though 𝔓^{72} has the intriguing reading θεὸς Χριστός [theos Christos, "God Christ"] for Ἰησοῦς). In addition to the evidence supplied in NA^{27} for this reading, note also {88 322 323 424^{c} 665 915 2298 eth Cyr Hier Bede}. As difficult as the reading Ἰησοῦς is, in light of v. 4 and in light of the progress of revelation (Jude being one of the last books in the NT to be composed), it is wholly appropriate.

sn The construction our Master and Lord, Jesus Christ in v. 4 follows Granville Sharp's rule (see note on Lord). The construction strongly implies the deity of Christ. This is followed by a statement that Jesus was involved in the salvation (and later judgment) of the Hebrews. He is thus to be identified with the Lord God, Yahweh. Verse 5, then, simply fleshes out what is implicit in v. 4.

12 tn Or perhaps "a," though this is less likely.

13 tn Grk "the second time."

14 tn Grk "and." Verse 6 is a continuation of the same sentence begun in v. 5. Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

proper domain[1] but abandoned their own place of residence, he has kept[2] in eternal chains[3] in utter[4] darkness, locked up[5] for the judgment of the great Day. 1:7 So also[6] Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighboring towns,[7] since they indulged in sexual immorality and pursued unnatural desire[8] in a way similar to[9] these angels,[10] are now displayed as an example by suffering the punishment of eternal fire.

1:8 Yet these men,[11] as a result of their dreams,[12] defile the flesh, reject authority,[13] and insult[14] the glorious ones.[15] 1:9 But even[16] when Michael the archangel[17] was arguing with the devil and debating with him[18] concerning Moses' body, he did not dare to bring a slanderous judgment, but said, "May the Lord rebuke you!" 1:10 But these men do not understand the things they slander, and they are being destroyed by the very things that, like irrational animals, they instinctively comprehend.[19] 1:11 Woe to them! For they have traveled down Cain's path,[20] and because of greed[21] have abandoned themselves[22] to[23] Balaam's error; hence,[24] they will certainly perish[25] in Korah's rebellion.

[1] tn Grk "who did not keep their own domain."

sn The idea is that certain angels acted improperly, going outside the bounds prescribed by God (their proper domain).

[2] sn There is an interesting play on words used in this verse. Because the angels did not keep their proper place, Jesus has kept them chained up in another place. The same verb keep is used in v. 1 to describe believers' status before God and Christ.

[3] sn In 2 Pet 2:4 a less common word for chains is used.

[4] tn The word ζόφος (zophos, "utter, deepest darkness") is used only five times in the NT: two in 2 Peter, two in Jude, and one in Hebrews. Jude 6 parallels 2 Pet 2:4; Jude 13 parallels 2 Pet 2:17.

[5] tn The words "locked up" are not in Greek, but is expressed in English as a resumptive point after the double prepositional phrase ("in eternal chains in utter darkness").

[6] tn Grk "as."

[7] tn Grk "the towns [or cities] surrounding them."

[8] tn Grk "strange flesh." This phrase has been variously interpreted. It could refer to flesh of another species (such as angels lusting after human flesh). This would aptly describe the sin of the angels, but not easily explain the sin of Sodom and Gomorrah. It could refer to the homosexual practices of the Sodomites, but a difficulty arises from the use of ἕτερος (heteros; "strange," "other"). When this is to be distinguished from ἄλλος (allos, "another") it suggests "another of a different kind." If so, would that properly describe *homo*sexual behavior? In response, the language could easily be compact: "pursued flesh other than what was normally pursued." However, would this find an analogy in the lust of angels (such would imply that angels normally had sexual relations of some sort, but cf. Matt 22:30)? Another alternative is that the focus of the parallel is on the activity of the surrounding cities and the activity of the angels. This is especially plausible since the participles ἐκπορνεύσασαι (ekporneusasai, "having indulged in sexual immorality") and ἀπελθοῦσαι (apelthousai, "having pursued") have concord with "cities" (πόλεις, poleis), a feminine plural noun, rather than with Sodom and Gomorrah (both masculine nouns). If so, then their sin would not necessarily have to be homosexuality. However, most likely the feminine participles are used because of constructio ad sensum (construction according to sense). That is, since both Sodom and Gomorrah are cities, the feminine is used to imply that all the cities are involved. The connection with angels thus seems to be somewhat loose: Both angels and Sodom and Gomorrah indulged in heinous sexual immorality. Thus, whether the false teachers indulge in homosexual activity is not the point; mere sexual immorality is enough to condemn them.

[9] tn Or "in the same way as."

[10] tn "Angels" is not in the Greek text, but the masculine demonstrative pronoun most likely refers back to the angels of v. 6.

[11] tn The reference is now to the false teachers.

[12] tn Grk "dreaming." The participle ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι (enupniazomenoi, "dreaming") is adverbial to the pronoun οὗτοι (houtoi, "these"), though the particular relationship is not clear. It could mean, "while dreaming," "by dreaming," or "because of dreaming." This translation has adopted the last option as Jude's meaning, partially for syntactical reasons (the causal participle usually precedes the main verb) and partially for contextual reasons (these false teachers must derive their authority from some source, and the dreams provide the most obvious base). The participle ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι was sometimes used of apocalyptic visions, both of true and false prophets. This seems to be the meaning here.

[13] tn Most likely, the authority of the Lord is in view. This verse, then, echoes the indictment of v. 4: "they deny our Master and Lord, Jesus Christ."

[14] tn The construction with the three verbs ("defile, "reject," and "insult") involves the particles μέν, δέ, δέ (men, de, de). A more literal (and pedantic) translation would be: "on the one hand, they defile the flesh, on the other hand, they reject authority, and on another hand, they insult the glorious ones."

[15] sn The glorious ones refers to angelic beings rather than mere human beings, just as in 2 Pet 2:10 (on which this passage apparently depends). Whether the angelic beings are good or evil, however, is difficult to tell (hence, the translation is left ambiguous). However, both in 2 Pet 2:11 and here, in Jude 9, the wicked angels seem to be in view (for not even Michael insults them).

[16] tn The word "even" is not in Greek; it is implied by the height of the contrast.

[17] sn According to Jewish intertestamental literature (such as 1 En. 20), Michael was one of seven archangels.

[18] tn The sentence structure is a bit different in Greek. Literally it reads: "But Michael the archangel, when arguing with the devil and disputing."

[19] tn Or "they should naturally comprehend." The present tense in this context may have a conative force.

sn They instinctively comprehend. Like irrational animals, these false teachers do grasp one thing – the instinctive behavior of animals in heat. R. Bauckham (Jude, 2 Peter [WBC], 63) notes that "Though they claim to be guided by special spiritual insight gained in heavenly revelations, they are in fact following the sexual instincts which they share with the animals." Jude's focus is somewhat different from Peter's: Peter argued that, like irrational animals who are born to be caught and killed, these men will be destroyed when destroying others (2 Pet 2:12). Jude, however, does not mention the destruction of animals, just that these false teachers will be destroyed for mimicking them.

[20] tn Or "they have gone the way of Cain."

[21] tn Grk "for wages."

[22] tn The verb ἐκχέω (ekcheō) normally means "pour out." Here, in the passive, it occasionally has a reflexive idea, as BDAG 312 s.v. 3. suggests (with extra-biblical examples).

[23] tn Or "in."

[24] tn Grk "and." See note on "perish" later in this verse.

[25] tn The three verbs in this verse are all aorist indicative ("have gone down," "have abandoned," "have perished"). Although the first and second could be considered constative or ingressive, the last is almost surely proleptic (referring to the certainty of their future judgment). Although it may seem odd that a proleptic aorist is so casually connected to other aorists with a different syntactical force, it is not unparalleled (cf. Rom 8:30).

1:12 These men are[1] dangerous reefs[2] at your love feasts,[3] feasting without reverence,[4] feeding only themselves.[5] They are[6] waterless[7] clouds, carried along by the winds; autumn trees without fruit[8] – twice dead,[9] uprooted; 1:13 wild sea waves,[10] spewing out the foam of[11] their shame;[12] wayward stars[13] for whom the utter depths of eternal darkness[14] have been reserved.

1:14 Now Enoch, the seventh in descent beginning with Adam,[15] even prophesied of them,[16] saying, "Look! The Lord is coming[17] with thousands and thousands[18] of his holy ones, 1:15 to execute judgment on[19] all, and to convict every person[20] of all their thoroughly ungodly deeds[21] that they have committed,[22] and of all the harsh words that ungodly sinners have spoken against him."[23]

1:16 These people are grumblers and[24] fault-find-

[1] tn Grk "these are the men who are."

[2] tn Though σπιλάδες (spilades) is frequently translated "blemishes" or "stains," such is actually a translation of the Greek word σπίλοι (spiloi). The two words are quite similar, especially in their root or lexical forms (σπιλάς [spilas] and σπίλος [spilos] respectively). Some scholars have suggested that σπιλάδες in this context means the same thing as σπίλοι. But such could be the case only by a stretch of the imagination (see BDAG 938 s.v. σπιλάς for discussion). Others suggest that Jude's spelling was in error (which also is doubtful). One reason for the tension is that in the parallel passage, 2 Pet 2:13, the term used is indeed σπίλος. And if either Jude used 2 Peter or 2 Peter used Jude, one would expect to see the same word. Jude, however, may have changed the wording for the sake of a subtle wordplay. The word σπιλάς was often used of a mere rock, though it normally was associated with a rock along the shore or one jutting out in the water. Thus, the false teachers would appear as "rocks" – as pillars in the community (cf. Matt 16:18; Gal 2:9), when in reality if a believer got too close to them his faith would get shipwrecked. Some suggest that σπιλάδες here means "hidden rocks." Though this meaning is attested for the word, it is inappropriate in this context, since these false teachers are anything but hidden. They are dangerous because undiscerning folks get close to them, thinking they are rocks and pillars, when they are really dangerous reefs.

[3] tc Several witnesses (A C^{vid} 1243 1846 al), influenced by the parallel in 2 Pet 2:13, read ἀπάταις (apatais, "deceptions") for ἀγάπαις (agapais, "love-feasts") in v. 12. However, ἀγάπαις has much stronger and earlier support and should therefore be considered original.

sn The danger of the false teachers at the love feasts would be especially pernicious, for the love feasts of the early church involved the Lord's Supper, worship, and instruction.

[4] tn Or "fearlessly." The term in this context, however, is decidedly negative. The implication is that these false teachers ate the Lord's Supper without regarding the sanctity of the meal. Cf. 1 Cor 11:17-22.

[5] tn Grk "shepherding themselves." The verb ποιμαίνω (poimainō) means "shepherd, nurture [the flock]." But these men, rather than tending to the flock of God, nurture only themselves. They thus fall under the condemnation Paul uttered when writing to the Corinthians: "For when it comes time to eat [the Lord's Supper,] each one goes ahead with his own meal" (1 Cor 11:21). Above all, the love-feast was intended to be a shared meal in which all ate and all felt welcome.

[6] tn "They are" is not in Greek, but resumes the thought begun at the front of v. 12. There is no period before "They are." English usage requires breaking this into more than one sentence.

[7] tn Cf. 2 Pet 2:17. Jude's emphasis is slightly different (instead of waterless springs, they are waterless clouds).

[8] sn The imagery portraying the false teachers as autumn trees without fruit has to do with their lack of productivity. Recall the statement to the same effect by Jesus in Matt 7:16-20, in which false prophets will be known by their fruits. Like waterless clouds full of false hope, these trees do not yield any harvest even though it is expected.

[9] tn Grk "having died twice."

sn Twice dead probably has no relevance to the tree metaphor, but has great applicability to these false teachers. As in Rev 20:6, those who die twice are those who die physically and spiritually. The aphorism is true: "born once, die twice; born twice, die once" (cf. Rev 20:5; John 3, 11).

[10] tn Grk "wild waves of the sea."

[11] tn Grk "foaming, causing to foam." The verb form is intensive and causative. BDAG 360 s.v. ἐπαφρίζω suggests the meaning "to cause to splash up like froth, cause to foam," or, in this context, "waves casting up their own shameless deeds like (dirty) foam."

[12] tn Grk "shames, shameful things." It is uncertain whether shameful deeds or shameful words are in view. Either way, the picture has taken a decided turn: Though waterless clouds and fruitless trees may promise good things, but deliver nothing, wild sea-waves are portents of filth spewed forth from the belly of the sea.

[13] sn The imagery of a star seems to fit the nautical theme that Jude is developing. Stars were of course the guides to sailors at night, just as teachers are responsible to lead the flock through a benighted world. But false teachers, as wayward stars, are not fixed and hence offer unreliable, even disastrous guidance. They are thus both the dangerous reefs on which the ships could be destroyed and the false guides, leading them into these rocks. There is a special irony that these lights will be snuffed out, reserved for the darkest depths of eternal darkness.

[14] tn Grk "utter darkness of darkness for eternity." See note on the word "utter" in v. 6.

[15] tn Grk "the seventh from Adam."

sn The genealogical count is inclusive, counting Adam as the first, for Enoch is really the sixth in descent from Adam (Adam, Seth, Enosh, Cainan, Mahalalel, Jared, Enoch). In this way, the picture of perfection/completion was retained (for the number seven is often used for perfection or completion in the Bible) starting with Adam and concluding with Enoch.

[16] tn Grk "against them." The dative τούτοις (toutois) is a dativus incommodi (dative of disadvantage).

[17] tn Grk "has come," a proleptic aorist.

[18] tn Grk "ten thousands." The word μυριάς (murias), from which the English myriad is derived, means "ten thousand." In the plural it means "ten thousands." This would mean, minimally, 20,000 (a multiple of ten thousand). At the same time, the term was often used in apocalyptic literature to represent simply a rather large number, without any attempt to be specific.

[19] tn Grk "against" (κατά [kata] + genitive). English usage is satisfied with "on" at this point, but the parallel is lost in the translation to some degree, for the end of v. 15 says that this judgment is meted out on these sinners because they spoke against him (κατά + genitive).

[20] tn Or "soul."

[21] tn Grk "of all their works of ungodliness." The adverb "thoroughly" is part of the following verb "have committed." See note on verb "committed" later in this verse.

[22] tn The verb in Greek does not simply mean "have committed," but "have committed in an ungodly way." The verb ἀσεβέω (asebeō) is cognate to the noun ἀσέβεια (asebeia, "ungodliness"). There is no easy way to express this in English, since English does not have a single word that means the same thing. Nevertheless, the tenor of v. 15 is plainly seen, regardless of the translation.

[23] sn An apparent quotation from 1 En. 1:9. There is some doubt as to whether Jude is actually quoting from the text of 1 Enoch; the text here in Jude differs in some respects from the extant text of this pseudepigraphic book. It is sometimes suggested that Jude may instead have been quoting from oral tradition which had roots older than the written text.

[24] tn "And" is not in Greek, but is supplied for the sake of English style.

Exhortation to the Faithful

---

[1] tn Or "going." Though the participle is anarthrous, so also is the subject. Thus, the participle could be either adverbial or adjectival.

[2] tn Grk "(who go/going) according to their own lusts."

[3] tn Grk "and their mouth speaks bombastic things."

sn They give bombastic speeches. The idiom of opening one's mouth in the NT often implied a public oration from a teacher or one in authority. Cf. Matt 5:2; Luke 4:22; Acts 1:16; 3:18; 10:34; Eph 6:19; Rev 13:5-6.

[4] sn Enchanting folks (Grk "awing faces") refers to the fact that the speeches of these false teachers are powerful and seductive.

[5] tn Or "to their own advantage."

[6] tn Grk "words." In conjunction with προεῖπον (proeipon), however, the meaning of the construction is that the apostles uttered prophecies.

[7] sn This verse parallels 2 Pet 3:2 both conceptually and in much of the verbiage. There is one important difference, however: In 2 Pet 3:2 the prophets and apostles speak; here, just the apostles speak. This makes good sense if Jude is using 2 Peter as his main source and is urging his readers to go back to the authoritative writings, both OT and now especially NT.

[8] tn Grk "be."

[9] tn Grk "going according to their own desires of ungodliness."

sn Jude cites 2 Pet 3:3, changing a few of the words among other things, cleaning up the syntax, conforming it to Hellenistic style.

[10] tn Grk "these are the ones who cause divisions."

[11] tn Or "natural," that is, living on the level of instincts, not on a spiritual level (the same word occurs in 1 Cor 2:14 as a description of nonbelievers).

[12] tn Grk "not having [the] Spirit."

sn The phrase devoid of the Spirit may well indicate Jude's and Peter's assessment of the spiritual status of the false teachers. Those who do not have the Spirit are clearly not saved.

[13] tn The participles in v. 20 have been variously interpreted. Some treat them imperatively or as attendant circumstance to the imperative in v. 21 ("maintain"): "build yourselves up… pray." But they do not follow the normal contours of either the imperatival or attendant circumstance participles, rendering this unlikely. A better option is to treat them as the means by which the readers are to maintain themselves in the love of God. This both makes eminently good sense and fits the structural patterns of instrumental participles elsewhere.

[14] tn Or "keep."

[15] tn Or "waiting for."

[16] tn Grk "unto eternal life."

[17] tn Grk "and save."

[18] tn Grk "and have mercy."

[19] tn Grk "with fear." But as this contrasts with ἀφόβως (aphobōs) in v. 12 (without reverence), the posture of the false teachers, it most likely refers to reverence for God.

sn Joining a fear of God to mercy is an important balance when involved in disciplinary action. On the one hand, being merciful without fear can turn to unwarranted sympathy for the individual, absolving him of personal responsibility, but fearing God without showing mercy can turn into personal judgment and condemnation.

[20] sn The imagery here suggests that the things close to the sinners are contaminated by them, presumably during the process of sinning.

[21] tn Grk "hating even the tunic spotted by the flesh." The "flesh" in this instance could refer to the body or to the sin nature. It makes little difference in one sense: Jude is thinking primarily of sexual sins, which are borne of the sin nature and manifest themselves in inappropriate deeds done with the body. At the same time, he is not saying that the body is intrinsically bad, a view held by the opponents of Christianity. Hence, it is best to see "flesh" as referring to the sin nature here and the language as metaphorical.

[22] tn The construction in Greek is a double accusative object-complement. "You" is the object and "free from falling" is the adjectival complement.

[23] tn Grk "with rejoicing." The prepositional clause is placed after "his glorious presence" in Greek, but most likely goes with "cause you to stand."

[24] tn The construction in Greek is a double accusative object-complement. "You" is the object and "without blemish" is the adjectival complement.

[25] tn Or "in the presence of his glory," "before his glory."

Revelation

The Prologue

1:1 The revelation of Jesus Christ,[1] which God gave him to show his servants[2] what must happen very soon.[3] He made it clear[4] by sending his angel to his servant[5] John, 1:2 who then[6] testified to everything that he saw concerning the word of God and the testimony about[7] Jesus Christ. 1:3 Blessed is the one who reads the words of this[8] prophecy aloud,[9] and blessed are[10] those who hear and obey[11] the things written in it, because the time is near![12]

1:4 From John,[13] to the seven churches that are in the province of Asia:[14] Grace and peace to you[15] from "he who is,"[16] and who was, and who is still to come,[17] and from the seven spirits who are before his throne, 1:5 and from Jesus Christ – the faithful[18] witness,[19] the firstborn from among

[1] tn The phrase ἀποκάλυψις Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (apokalupsis Iēsou Christou, "the revelation of Jesus Christ") could be interpreted as either an objective genitive ("the revelation about Jesus Christ"), subjective genitive ("the revelation from Jesus Christ"), or both (M. Zerwick's "general" genitive [Biblical Greek, §§36-39]; D. B. Wallace's "plenary" genitive [ExSyn 119-21]). In 1:1 and 22:16 it is clear that Jesus has sent his angel to proclaim the message to John; thus the message is from Christ, and this would be a subjective genitive. On a broader scale, though, the revelation is about Christ, so this would be an objective genitive. One important point to note is that the phrase under consideration is best regarded as the title of the book and therefore refers to the whole of the work in all its aspects. This fact favors considering this as a plenary genitive.

[2] tn Grk "slaves." Although this translation frequently renders δοῦλος (doulos) as "slave," the connotation is often of one who has sold himself into slavery; in a spiritual sense, the idea is that of becoming a slave of God or of Jesus Christ voluntarily. The voluntary notion is not conspicuous here; hence, the translation "servants." In any case, the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times…in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

[3] tn BDAG 992-93 s.v. τάχος has "quickly, at once, without delay Ac 10:33 D; 12:7; 17:15 D; 22:18; 1 Cl 48:1; 63:4… soon, in a short time…Rv 1:1; 22:6…shortly Ac 25:4."

[4] tn Or "He indicated it clearly" (L&N 33.153).

[5] tn See the note on the word "servants" earlier in this verse.

[6] tn "Then" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to make the chronological succession clear in the translation.

[7] tn The genitive phrase "about Jesus Christ" is taken as an objective genitive.

[8] tn The word "this" is used to translate the Greek article τῆς (tēs), bringing out its demonstrative force.

[9] tn The word "aloud" has been supplied to indicate that in the original historical setting reading would usually refer to reading out loud in public rather than silently to oneself.

[10] tn The words "blessed are" are repeated from the beginning of this verse for stylistic reasons and for clarity.

[11] tn Grk "keep." L&N 36.19 has "to continue to obey orders or commandments – 'to obey, to keep commandments, obedience.'"

[12] sn The time refers to the time when the things prophesied would happen.

[13] tn Grk "John." The word "From" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the sender of the letter.

[14] tn Grk "Asia"; in the NT this always refers to the Roman province of Asia, made up of about one-third of the west and southwest end of modern Asia Minor. Asia lay to the west of the region of Phrygia and Galatia. The words "the province of" are supplied to indicate to the modern reader that this does not refer to the continent of Asia.

[15] tn It is probable that the ὑμῖν (humin) applies to both elements of the greeting, i.e., to both grace and peace.

[16] tc The earliest and best MSS (𝔓^{18vid} ℵ A C P 2050 al lat sy co) lack the term "God" (θεοῦ, theou) between "from" (ἀπό, apo) and "he who is" (ὁ ὤν, ho ōn). Its inclusion, as supported by the bulk of the Byzantine witnesses, is clearly secondary and a scribal attempt to achieve two things: (1) to make explicit the referent in the passage, namely, God, and (2) to smooth out the grammar. The preposition "from" in Greek required a noun in the genitive case. But here in Rev 1:4 the words following the preposition "from" (ἀπό) are in another case, i.e., the nominative. There are two principal ways in which to deal with this grammatical anomaly. First, it could be a mistake arising from someone who just did not know Greek very well, or as a Jew, was heavily influenced by a Semitic form of Greek. Both of these unintentional errors are unlikely here. Commenting on this ExSyn 63 argues: "Either of these is doubtful here because (1) such a flagrant misunderstanding of the rudiments of Greek would almost surely mean that the author could not compose in Greek, yet the Apocalypse itself argues against this; (2) nowhere else does the Seer [i.e., John] use a nom. immediately after a preposition (in fact, he uses ἀπό 32 times with the gen. immediately following)." The passage appears to be an allusion to Exod 3:14 (in the LXX) where God refers to himself as "he who is" (ὁ ὤν), the same wording in Greek as here in Rev 1:4. Thus, it appears that John is wanting to leave the divine name untouched (perhaps to allude to God's immutability, or as a pointer to the Old Testament as the key to unlocking the meaning of this book), irrespective of what it "looks" like grammatically. The translation has placed the "he who is" in quotation marks to indicate to the reader that the syntactical awkwardness is intentional. (For further comments, see ExSyn 63).

[17] tn BDAG 106 s.v. ἀπό 5.d states: "The expr. εἰρήνη ἀπὸ ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος Rv 1:4 is quite extraordinary. It may be an interpretation of the name Yahweh already current, or an attempt to show reverence for the divine name by preserving it unchanged, or simply one more of the grammatical peculiarities so frequent in Rv."

[18] tn Or "Jesus Christ – the faithful one, the witness…" Some take ὁ πιστός (ho pistos) as a second substantive in relation to ὁ μάρτυς (ho martus). In the present translation, however, ὁ πιστός was taken as an adjective in attributive position to ὁ μάρτυς. The idea of martyrdom and faithfulness are intimately connected. See BDAG 820 s.v. πιστός 1.a.α: "ὁ μάρτυς μου ὁ πιστός μου Rv 2:13 (μάρτυς 3); in this 'book of martyrs' Christ is ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς (καὶ ὁ ἀληθινός) 1:5; 3:14; cp. 19:11 (the combination of ἀληθινός and πιστός in the last two passages is like 3 Macc 2:11). Cp. Rv 17:14."

[19] sn The Greek term translated witness can mean both "witness" and "martyr."

the dead, the ruler over the kings of the earth. To the one who loves us and has set us free[1] from our sins at the cost of[2] his own blood 1:6 and has appointed[3] us as a kingdom,[4] as priests[5] serving his God and Father – to him be the glory and the power for ever and ever![6] Amen.

1:7 (Look! He is returning with the clouds,[7] and every eye will see him, even[8] those who pierced him,[9] and all the tribes[10] on the earth will mourn because[11] of him.
This will certainly come to pass![12]
Amen.)[13]

1:8 "I am the Alpha and the Omega,"[14] says the Lord God – the one who is, and who was, and who is still to come – the All-Powerful![15]

1:9 I, John, your brother and the one who shares[16] with you in the persecution, kingdom, and endurance that[17] are in Jesus, was on the island called Patmos because of the word of God and the testimony about Jesus.[18] 1:10 I was in the Spirit[19] on the Lord's Day[20] when[21] I heard behind me a loud voice like a trumpet, 1:11 saying: "Write in a book what you see and send it to the seven churches – to Ephesus,[22] Smyrna,[23] Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea."

---

1 tc The reading "set free" (λύσαντι, lusanti) has better MS support (𝔓[18] ℵ A C 1611 2050 2329 2351 𝔐[A] sy) than its rival, λούσαντι (lousanti, "washed"; found in P 1006 1841 1854 2053 2062 𝔐[K] lat bo). Internally, it seems that the reading "washed" could have arisen in at least one of three ways: (1) as an error of hearing (both "released" and "washed" are pronounced similarly in Greek); (2) an error of sight (both "released" and "washed" look very similar – a difference of only one letter – which could have resulted in a simple error during the copying of a MS); (3) through scribal inability to appreciate that the Hebrew preposition ב can be used with a noun to indicate the price paid for something. Since the author of Revelation is influenced significantly by a Semitic form of Greek (e.g., 13:10), and since the Hebrew preposition "in" (ב) can indicate the price paid for something, and is often translated with the preposition "in" (ἐν, en) in the LXX, the author may have tried to communicate by the use of ἐν the idea of a price paid for something. That is, John was trying to say that Christ delivered us at the price of his own blood. This whole process, however, may have been lost on a later scribe, who being unfamiliar with Hebrew, found the expression "delivered in his blood" too difficult, and noticing the obvious similarities between λύσαντι and λούσαντι, assumed an error and then proceeded to change the text to "washed in his blood" – a thought more tolerable in his mind. Both readings, of course, are true to scripture; the current question is what the author wrote in this verse.

tn Or "and released us" (L&N 37.127).

2 tn The style here is somewhat Semitic, with the use of the ἐν (en) + the dative to mean "at the price of." The addition of "own" in the English is stylistic and is an attempt to bring out the personal nature of the statement and the sacrificial aspect of Jesus' death – a frequent refrain in the Apocalypse.

3 tn The verb ποιέω (poieō) can indicate appointment or assignment rather than simply "make" or "do." See Mark 3:14 (L&N 37.106).

4 tn See BDAG 168 s.v. βασιλεία 1.a for the idea of "he made us a kingdom," which was translated as "he appointed us (to be or function) as a kingdom" (see the note on the word "appointed" earlier in the verse).

5 tn Grk "a kingdom, priests." The term ἱερεῖς (hiereis) is either in apposition to βασιλείαν (basileian) or as a second complement to the object "us" (ἡμᾶς, hēmas). The translation retains this ambiguity.

6 tc Both the longer reading τῶν αἰώνων (tōn aiōnōn, "to the ages of the ages" or, more idiomatically, "for ever and ever"; found in ℵ C 𝔐) and the shorter ("for ever"; found in 𝔓[18] A P 2050 pc bo) have good MS support. The author uses the longer expression (εἰς [τοὺς] αἰῶνας [τῶν] αἰώνων, eis [tous] aiōnas [tōn] aiōnōn) in every other instance of αἰών in Revelation, twelve passages in all (1:18; 4:9, 10; 5:13; 7:12; 10:6; 11:15; 14:11; 15:7; 19:3; 20:10; 22:5). Thus, on the one hand, the style of the author is consistent, while on the other hand, the scribes may have been familiar with such a stylistic feature, causing them to add the words here. The issues are more complex than can be presented here; the longer reading, however, is probably original (the shorter reading arising from accidental omission of the genitive phrase due to similarity with the preceding words).

7 sn An allusion to Dan 7:13.

8 tn Here καί (kai) was translated as ascensive.

9 sn An allusion to Zech 12:10.

10 tn In this context, tribes (φυλαί, phulai) could also be translated as "nations" or "peoples" (L&N 11.56).

11 tn The conjunction ἐπί (epi) is most likely causal here. The people who crucified him are those of every tribe on the earth and they will mourn because he comes as judge.

12 tn Grk "Yes, Amen." The expression "This will certainly come to pass" is an attempt to capture the force of the juxtaposition of the Greek ναί (nai) and the Hebrew ἀμήν (amēn). See L&N 69.1.

13 sn These lines are placed in parentheses because they form an aside to the main argument.

14 tc The shorter reading "Omega" (ὦ, ō) has superior MS evidence (ℵ[1] A C 1611]) to the longer reading which includes "the beginning and the end" (ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος or ἡ ἀρχὴ καὶ τὸ τέλος, archē kai telos or hē archē kai to telos), found in ℵ*·[2] 1854 2050 2329 2351 𝔐[A] lat bo. There is little reason why a scribe would have deleted the words, but their clarifying value and the fact that they harmonize with 21:6 indicate that they are a secondary addition to the text.

15 tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

16 tn The translation attempts to bring out the verbal idea in συγκοινωνός (sunkoinōnos, "co-sharer"); John was suffering for his faith at the time he wrote this.

17 tn The prepositional phrase ἐν Ἰησοῦ (en Iēsou) could be taken with ὑπομονῇ (hupomonē) as the translation does or with the more distant συγκοινωνός (sunkoinōnos), in which case the translation would read "your brother and the one who shares with you in Jesus in the persecution, kingdom, and endurance."

18 tn The phrase "about Jesus" has been translated as an objective genitive.

19 tn Or "in the spirit." "Spirit" could refer either to the Holy Spirit or the human spirit, but in either case John was in "a state of spiritual exaltation best described as a trance" (R. H. Mounce, Revelation [NICNT], 75).

20 tn Concerning the phrase κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ (kuriakē hēmera) BDAG 576 s.v. κυριακός states: "pert. to belonging to the Lord, the Lord's...κ. ἡμέρα the Lord's day (Kephal. I 192, 1; 193, 31...) i.e. certainly Sunday (so in Mod. Gk....) Rv 1:10 (WStott, NTS 12, '65, 70-75)."

21 tn The conjunction καί (kai) is not introducing a coordinate thought, but one that is logically subordinate to the main verb ἐγενόμην (egenomēn).

22 map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

23 tn Grk "and to Smyrna." For stylistic reasons the conjunction καί (kai) and the preposition εἰς (eis) have not been translated before the remaining elements of the list. In lists with more than two elements contemporary English generally does not repeat the conjunction except between the next to last and last elements.

1:12 I[1] turned to see whose voice was speaking to me,[2] and when I did so,[3] I saw seven golden lampstands, 1:13 and in the midst of the lampstands was one like a son of man.[4] He was dressed in a robe extending down to his feet and he wore a wide golden belt[5] around his chest. 1:14 His[6] head and hair were as white as wool, even as white as snow,[7] and his eyes were like a fiery[8] flame. 1:15 His feet were like polished bronze[9] refined[10] in a furnace, and his voice was like the roar[11] of many waters. 1:16 He held[12] seven stars in his right hand, and a sharp double-edged sword extended out of his mouth. His[13] face shone like the sun shining at full strength. 1:17 When[14] I saw him I fell down at his feet as though I were dead, but[15] he placed his right hand on me and said: "Do not be afraid! I am the first and the last, 1:18 and the one who lives! I[16] was dead, but look, now I am alive – forever and ever – and I hold the keys of death and of Hades![17] 1:19 Therefore write what you saw, what is, and what will be after these things.[18] 1:20 The mystery of the seven stars that you saw in my right hand and the seven golden lampstands is this:[19] The seven stars are the angels[20] of the seven churches and the seven lampstands are the seven churches.

To the Church in Ephesus

2:1 "To the angel of the church in Ephesus,[21] write the following:[22]

[1] tn Throughout the translation John's use of καί (kai) often reflects the varied usage of the Hebrew conjunction ו (vav). A clause which καί introduces has been translated in terms of its semantic relationship to the clause that preceded it. If the καί seemed redundant, however, it was left untranslated; that is the case in this verse.

[2] tn Grk "with me." The translation "with me" implies that John was engaged in a dialogue with the one speaking to him (e.g., Jesus or an angel) when in reality it was a one-sided conversation, with John doing all the listening. For this reason, μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ (met' emou, "with me") was translated as "to me."

[3] tn Grk "and turning I saw." The repetition of ἐπιστρέφω (epistrephō) is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been translated generally.

[4] tn This phrase constitutes an allusion to Dan 7:13. Concerning υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου (huios tou anthrōpou), BDAG 1026 s.v. υἱός 2.d.γ says: "ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου lit. 'the son of the man'...'the human being, the human one, the man'...On Israelite thought contemporary w. Jesus and alleged knowledge of a heavenly being looked upon as a 'Son of Man' or 'Man', who exercises Messianic functions such as judging the world (metaph., pictorial passages in En 46-48; 4 Esdr 13:3, 51f)...Outside the gospels: Ac 7:56...Rv 1:13; 14:14 (both after Da 7:13...)." The term "son" here in this expression is anarthrous and as such lacks specificity. Some commentators and translations take the expression as an allusion to Daniel 7:13 and not to "the son of man" found in gospel traditions (e.g., Mark 8:31; 9:12; cf. D. E. Aune, Revelation [WBC], 2:800-801; cf. also NIV). Other commentators and versions, however, take the phrase "son of man" as definite, involving allusions to Dan 7:13 and "the son of man" gospel traditions (see G. K. Beale, Revelation [NIGTC], 771-72; NRSV).

[5] tn Or "a wide golden sash," but this would not be diagonal, as some modern sashes are, but horizontal. The Greek term can refer to a wide band of cloth or leather worn on the outside of one's clothing (L&N 6.178).

[6] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[7] tn The clause, "even as white as snow" seems to heighten the preceding clause and is so understood in this ascensive sense ("even") in the translation.

[8] tn The genitive noun πυρός (puros) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

[9] tn The precise meaning of the term translated "polished bronze" (χαλκολιβάνῳ, chalkolibanō), which appears nowhere else in Greek literature outside of the book of Revelation (see 2:18), is uncertain. Without question it is some sort of metal. BDAG 1076 s.v. χαλκολίβανον suggests "fine brass/bronze." L&N 2.57 takes the word to refer to particularly valuable or fine bronze, but notes that the emphasis here and in Rev 2:18 is more on the lustrous quality of the metal.

[10] tn Or "that has been heated in a furnace until it glows."

[11] tn Grk "sound," but the idea is closer to the roar of a waterfall or rapids.

[12] tn Grk "and having." In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence, but because contemporary English style employs much shorter sentences, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "he."

[13] tn This is a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text, but a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[14] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[15] tn Here the Greek conjunction καί (kai) has been translated as a contrastive ("but") due to the contrast between the two clauses.

[16] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[17] tn Concerning "Hades" BDAG 19 s.v. ᾅδης 1 and 2 states: "Orig. proper noun, god of the nether world, 'Hades', then the nether world, *Hade*s as place of the dead, Ac 2:27, 31 (Ps 15:10; Ecc l 9:10; PGM 1, 179; 16, 8; Philo, Mos. 1, 195; Jos., Bell. 1, 596, Ant. 6, 332). Of Jonah's fish ἐκ τοῦ κατωτάτου ᾅδου. In the depths, contrasted w. heaven ἕως (τοῦ) ᾅδου Mt 11:23; Lk 10:15 (PsSol 15:10; cp.; Is 14:11, 15); ἐν τῷ ᾅδῃ 16:23; ἐν Ἅιδου ApcPt Rainer. Accessible by gates (but the pl. is also used [e.g. Hom., X., Ael. Aristid. 47, 20 K.=23 p. 450 D.] when only one gate is meant), hence πύλαι ᾅδου (Il. 5, 646; Is 38:10; Wsd 16:13; 3 Macc 5:51; Pss. Sol. 16:2. – Lucian, Menipp. 6 the magicians can open τοῦ Ἅιδου τὰς πύλας and conduct people in and out safely) Mt 16:18...locked ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς τοῦ θανάτου καὶ τοῦ ᾅδου Rv 1:18 (the genitives are either obj. Is 28:15; Job 38:17...) Rv 6:8; 20:13f."

sn In the OT, *Hade*s was known as Sheol. It is the place where the unrighteous will reside (Matt 11:23; Luke 16:23; Rev 20:13-14).

[18] tn Grk "Therefore write the things that you saw, and the things that are, and the things that will take place after these things." Verse 19 could also be translated (taking καί...καί [kai...kai] as "both...and"): "Therefore write what you have seen, both what things currently are and what is going to happen after these things." The structure of this verse is debated.

[19] tn The words "is this" are supplied to make a complete sentence in English.

[20] tn Or perhaps "the messengers."

[21] map For location see JP1-D2; JP2-D2; JP3-D2; JP4-D2.

[22] tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[1] the one who has a firm grasp on[2] the seven stars in his right hand[3] – the one who walks among the seven golden[4] lampstands: 2:2 'I know your works as well as your[5] labor and steadfast endurance, and that you cannot tolerate[6] evil. You have even put to the test[7] those who refer to themselves as apostles (but are not), and have discovered that they are false. 2:3 I am also aware[8] that you have persisted steadfastly,[9] endured much for the sake of my name, and have not grown weary. 2:4 But I have this against you: You have departed[10] from your first love! 2:5 Therefore, remember from what high state[11] you have fallen and repent! Do[12] the deeds you did at the first;[13] if not, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place – that is, if you do not repent.[14] 2:6 But you do have this going for you:[15] You hate what the Nicolaitans[16] practice[17] – practices I also hate. 2:7 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers,[18] I will permit[19] him to eat from the tree of life that is[20] in the paradise of God.'[21]

To the Church in Smyrna

2:8 "To[22] the angel of the church in Smyrna write the following:[23]

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[24] the one who is the first and the last, the one who was dead, but[25] came to life: 2:9 'I know the distress you are suffering[26] and your poverty (but you are rich). I also know[27] the slander against you[28] by those who call themselves Jews and really are 1 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." The expression τάδε λέγει (tade legei) occurs eight times in the NT, seven of which are in Rev 2-3. "The pronoun is used to add solemnity to the prophetic utterance that follows. ...In classical drama, it was used to introduce a new actor to the scene (Smyth, Greek Grammar, 307 [§1241]). But the τάδε λέγει formula in the NT derives from the OT, where it was used to introduce a prophetic utterance (BAGD, s.v. ὅδε, 1)" (ExSyn 328). Thus, the translation "this is the solemn pronouncement of" for τάδε λέγει is very much in keeping with the OT connotations of this expression.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. The LXX has the same Greek phrase (τάδε λέγει, tade legei) about 350 times, with nearly 320 of them having "the Lord" (Heb יהוה, Yahweh) as subject. That the author of Revelation would use such an expression seven times with the risen Christ as the speaker may well imply something of Christ's sovereignty and deity. Cf. also Acts 21:11 in which the Holy Spirit is the speaker of this expression.

2 tn Grk "holds," but the term (i.e., κρατῶν, kratōn) with an accusative object, along with the context, argues for a sense of firmness. (Cf. ExSyn 132.)

3 sn On seven stars in his right hand see 1:16.

4 tn Grk "lampstands of gold" with the genitive τῶν χρυσῶν (tōn chrusōn) translated as an attributive genitive.

5 tn Although the first possessive pronoun σου (sou) is connected to τὰ ἔργα (ta erga) and the second σου is connected to ὑπομονήν (hupomonēn), semantically κόπον (kopon) is also to be understood as belonging to the Ephesian church. The translation reflects this.

6 tn The translation "tolerate" seems to capture the sense of βαστάσαι (bastasai) here. BDAG 171 s.v. βαστάζω 2.b.β says, "bear, endure...κακούς Rv 2:2....bear patiently, put up with: weaknesses of the weak Ro 15:1; cf. IPol 1:2; evil Rv 2:3."

7 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the participle was broken off from the previous sentence and translated as an indicative verb beginning a new sentence here in the translation.

8 tn Because of the length and complexity of this Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the phrase "I am also aware" to link this English sentence back to "I know" at the beginning of v. 2.

9 tn The Greek word translated "persisted steadfastly" (ὑπομονή, hupomonē) is the same one translated "steadfast endurance" in v. 2.

10 tn The Greek word translated "departed from" (ἀφίημι, aphiēmi; L&N 15.48) can actually be used of divorce (L&N 34.78), so the imagery here is very strong.

11 tn Grk "from where," but status is in view rather than physical position. On this term BDAG 838 s.v. πόθεν 1 states, "from what place? from where?...In imagery μνημόνευε πόθεν πέπτωκες remember from what (state) you have fallen Rv 2:5."

12 tn Grk "and do" (a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text). For stylistic reasons in English a new sentence was started here in the translation. The repeated mention of repenting at the end of the verse suggests that the intervening material ("do the deeds you did at first") specifies how the repentance is to be demonstrated.

13 tn Or "you did formerly."

14 tn Although the final clause is somewhat awkward, it is typical of the style of Revelation.

15 tn Grk "But you do have this." The words "going for you" are supplied to complete the English idiom; other phrases like "in your favor" (NIV) or "to your credit" (NRSV) could also be supplied.

16 sn The Nicolaitans were a sect (sometimes associated with Nicolaus, one of the seven original deacons in the church in Jerusalem according to Acts 6:5) that apparently taught that Christians could engage in immoral behavior with impunity.

17 tn The expression τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν (ta erga tōn Nikolaitōn) has been translated as a subjective genitive.

18 tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes." The pendent dative is allowed to stand in the English translation because it is characteristic of the author's style in Revelation.

19 tn Or "grant."

20 tn Or "stands."

21 tc The omission of "my" (μου, mou) after "God" (θεοῦ, theou) is well attested, supported by ℵ A C and the Andreas of Caesarea group of Byzantine mss (𝔐^{A}). Its addition in 1611, the 𝔐^{K} group, latt, and others, seems to be evidence of a purposeful conforming of the text to 3:2 and the four occurrences of "my God" (θεοῦ μου) in 3:12.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

24 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present between these two phrases.

26 tn Or "know your suffering." This could refer to suffering or distress caused by persecution (see L&N 22.2).

27 tn Because of the length and complexity of this Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the phrase "I also know" to link this English sentence back to "I know" at the beginning of the verse.

28 tn The words "against you" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

not, but are a synagogue[1] of Satan. 2:10 Do not be afraid of the things you are about to suffer. The devil is about to have some of you thrown[2] into prison so you may be tested,[3] and you will experience suffering[4] for ten days. Remain faithful even to the point of death, and I will give you the crown that is life itself.[5] 2:11 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches. The one who conquers[6] will in no way be harmed by the second death.'

To the Church in Pergamum

2:12 "To[7] the angel of the church in Pergamum write the following:[8]

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[9] the one who has the sharp double-edged sword:[10] 2:13 'I know[11] where you live – where Satan's throne is. Yet[12] you continue to cling[13] to my name and you have not denied your[14] faith in me,[15] even in the days of Antipas, my faithful witness,[16] who was killed in your city[17] where Satan lives. 2:14 But I have a few things against you: You have some people there who follow the teaching of Balaam,[18] who instructed Balak to put a stumbling block[19] before the people[20] of Israel so they would eat food sacrificed to idols and commit sexual immorality.[21] 2:15 In the same way, there are also some among you who follow the teaching of the Nicolaitans.[22] 2:16 Therefore,[23] repent! If not, I will come against you quickly and make war against those people[24] with the sword of my mouth. 2:17 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers,[25] I will give him some of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white[26] stone,[27] and on that stone will be written a new name that no one can understand[28] except the one who receives it.'

To the Church in Thyatira

2:18 "To[29] the angel of the church in Thyatira write the following:[30]

---

1 sn A synagogue was a place for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (e.g., Mt 4:23, Mk 1:21, Lk 4:15, Jn 6:59).

2 tn Grk "is about to throw some of you," but the force is causative in context.

3 tn Or "tempted."

4 tn Or "experience persecution," "will be in distress" (see L&N 22.2).

5 tn Grk "crown of life," with the genitive "of life" (τῆς ζωῆς, tēs zōēs) functioning in apposition to "crown" (στέφανον, stephanon): "the crown that consists of life."

6 tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes."

7 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

8 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

9 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

10 sn On the sharp double-edged sword see 1:16.

11 tc The shorter reading adopted here has superior MS support (א A C P 2053 al latt co), while the inclusion of "your works and" (τὰ ἔργα σου καί, ta erga sou kai) before "where you reside" is supported by the Byzantine witnesses and is evidently a secondary attempt to harmonize the passage with 2:2, 19; 3:1, 8, 15.

12 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Yet" to indicate the contrast between their location and their faithful behavior.

13 tn The present indicative verb κρατεῖς (krateis) has been translated as a progressive present.

14 tn Grk "the faith"; here the Greek article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

15 tn Grk "the faith of me" (τὴν πίστιν μου, tēn pistin mou) with the genitive "of me" (μου) functioning objectively.

16 tn Or "martyr." The Greek word μάρτυς can mean either "witness" or "martyr."

17 tn Grk "killed among you." The term "city" does not occur in the Greek text of course, but the expression παρ᾽ ὑμῖν, ὅπου ὁ σατανᾶς κατοικεῖ (par' humin, hopou ho satanas katoikei) seems to indicate that this is what is meant. See G. B. Caird, Revelation (HNTC), 36-38.

18 sn See Num 22-24; 31:16.

19 tn That is, a cause for sinning. An alternate translation is "who instructed Balak to cause the people of Israel to sin by eating food sacrificed to idols..."

20 tn Grk "sons," but the expression υἱοὶ Ἰσραήλ (huioi Israēl) is an idiom for the people of Israel as an ethnic entity (see L&N 11.58).

21 tn Due to the actual events in the OT (Num 22-24; 31:16), πορνεῦσαι (porneusai) is taken to mean "sexual immorality." BDAG 854 s.v. πορνεύω 1 states, "engage in illicit sex, to fornicate, to whore...W. φαγεῖν εἰδωλόθυτα 'eat meat offered to idols' Rv 2:14, 20."

22 tn The term ὁμοίως (homoiōs, "likewise") is left untranslated because it is quite redundant.

sn See the note on the term Nicolaitans in 2:6.

23 tc The "therefore" (οὖν, oun) is not found in א 2053 2329 2351 $\mathfrak{M}^{A}$ or the Latin MSS. It is, however, included in impressive witnesses such as {A C 046 1006 1611 $sy^{p,h}$ co}. Though the conjunction looks at first glance like a scribal clarification, its omission may be explained on the basis of its similarity to the last three letters of the verb "repent" (μετανόησον, metanoēson; since οὖν is a postpositive conjunction in Greek, the final three letters of the verb [-σον, -son] would have been immediately followed by ουν). A scribe could have simply passed over the conjunction in his copy when he saw the last three letters of the imperative verb. A decision is difficult, however, because of the motivation to add to the text and the quality of witnesses that lack the conjunction.

24 tn Grk "with them"; the referent (those people who follow the teaching of Balaam and the Nicolaitans) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes." The pendent dative is allowed to stand in the English translation because it is characteristic of the author's style in Revelation.

26 tn Or "bright." The Greek term λευκός (leukos) can refer either to the color white (traditional here) or to an object that is bright or shining, either from itself or from an outside source of illumination (L&N 14.50; 79.27).

27 tn On the interpretation of the stone, L&N 2.27 states, "A number of different suggestions have been made as to the reference of ψῆφος in this context. Some scholars believe that the white ψῆφος indicates a vote of acquittal in court. Others contend that it is simply a magical amulet; still others, a token of Roman hospitality; and finally, some have suggested that it may represent a ticket to the gladiatorial games, that is to say, to martyrdom. The context, however, suggests clearly that this is something to be prized and a type of reward for those who have 'won the victory.'"

28 tn Or "know"; for the meaning "understand" see L&N 32.4.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[1] the Son of God, the one who has eyes like a fiery flame[2] and whose feet are like polished bronze:[3] 2:19 'I know your deeds: your love, faith,[4] service, and steadfast endurance.[5] In fact,[6] your more recent deeds are greater than your earlier ones. 2:20 But I have this against you: You tolerate that[7] woman[8] Jezebel,[9] who calls herself a prophetess, and by her teaching deceives[10] my servants[11] to commit sexual immorality and to eat food sacrificed to idols.[12] 2:21 I[13] have given her time to repent, but[14] she is not willing to repent of her sexual immorality. 2:22 Look! I am throwing her onto a bed of violent illness,[15] and those who commit adultery with her into terrible suffering,[16] unless they repent of her deeds. 2:23 Furthermore, I will strike her followers[17] with a deadly disease,[18] and then all the churches will know that I am the one who searches minds and hearts. I will repay[19] each one of you[20] what your deeds deserve.[21] 2:24 But to the rest of you in Thyatira, all who do not hold to this teaching[22] (who have not learned the so-called "deep secrets[23] of Satan"), to you I say: I do not put any additional burden on you. 2:25 However, hold on to what you have until I come. 2:26 And to the one who conquers[24] and who continues in[25] my deeds until the end, I will give him authority over the nations[26] –

> 2:27 he[27] will rule[28] them with an iron rod[29] > and like clay jars he will break them to pieces,[30]

2:28 just as I have received the right to rule[31] from my Father – and I will give him the morning star.[32] 2:29 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'

clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

[1] tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

[2] tn Grk "a flame of fire." The Greek term πυρός (puros) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

[3] tn The precise meaning of the term translated "polished bronze" (χαλκολιβάνῳ, chalkolibanō), which appears no where else in Greek literature outside of the book of Revelation (see 1:15), is uncertain. Without question it is some sort of metal. BDAG 1076 s.v. χαλκολίβανον suggests "fine brass/bronze." L&N 2.57 takes the word to refer to particularly valuable or fine bronze, but notes that the emphasis here and in Rev 1:15 is more on the lustrous quality of the metal.

[4] tn Grk "and faith." Here and before the following term καί (kai) has not been translated because English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the next to last and last terms in a list.

[5] tn Or "perseverance."

[6] tn The phrase "In fact" is supplied in the translation to bring out the ascensive quality of the clause. It would also be possible to supply here an understood repetition of the phrase "I know" from the beginning of the verse (so NRSV). Grk "and your last deeds [that are] greater than the first."

[7] tn The Greek article has been translated here with demonstrative force.

[8] tc The MS evidence for γυναῖκα (gunaika, "woman") alone includes {א C P 1611 2053 pc lat}. The MS evidence for the addition of "your" (σου, sou) includes A 1006 2351 𝔐ᴷ pc sy. With the pronoun, the text reads "your wife, Jezebel" instead of "that woman, Jezebel." In Revelation, A C are the most important MSS, along with א 𝔓⁴⁷ (which only reads in portions of chapters 9-17) 1006 1611 2053; in this instance, the external evidence slightly favors the shorter reading. But internally, it gains strength. The longer reading implies the idea that the angel in 2:18 is the bishop or leader of the church in Thyatira. The pronoun "your" (σου) is used four times in vv. 19-20 and may have been the cause for the scribe copying it again. Further, once the monarchical episcopate was in vogue (beginning in the 2nd century) scribes might have been prone to add "your" here.

[9] sn Jezebel was the name of King Ahab's idolatrous and wicked queen in 1 Kgs 16:31; 18:1-5; 19:1-3; 21:5-24. It is probable that the individual named here was analogous to her prototype in idolatry and immoral behavior, since those are the items singled out for mention.

[10] tn Grk "teaches and deceives" (διδάσκει καὶ πλανᾷ, didaskei kai plana), a construction in which the first verb appears to specify the means by which the second is accomplished: "by her teaching, deceives..."

[11] tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[12] sn To commit sexual immorality and to eat food sacrificed to idols. Note the conclusions of the Jerusalem Council in Acts 15:29, which specifically prohibits Gentile Christians from engaging in these activities.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and contemporary English style.

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to bring out the contrast present in this woman's obstinate refusal to repent.

[15] tn Grk "onto a bed," in this context an idiom for severe illness (L&N 23.152).

[16] tn Or "into great distress." The suffering here is not specified as physical or emotional, and could involve persecution.

[17] tn Grk "her children," but in this context a reference to this woman's followers or disciples is more likely meant.

[18] tn Grk "I will kill with death." θάνατος (thanatos) can in particular contexts refer to a manner of death, specifically a contagious disease (see BDAG 443 s.v. 3; L&N 23.158).

[19] tn Grk "I will give." The sense of δίδωμι (didōmi) in this context is more "repay" than "give."

[20] sn This pronoun and the following one are plural in the Greek text.

[21] tn Grk "each one of you according to your works."

[22] sn That is, the teaching of Jezebel (v. 20).

[23] tn Grk "deep things." For the translation "deep secrets" see L&N 28.76; cf. NAB, NIV, CEV.

[24] tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes."

[25] tn Grk "keeps." In a context that speaks of "holding on to what you have," the idea here is one of continued faithful behavior (BDAG 1002 s.v. τηρέω 3 has "ὁ τηρῶν τὰ ἔργα μου the one who takes my deeds to heart Rv 2:26").

[26] tn Or "over the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

[27] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[28] tn Grk "will shepherd."

[29] tn Or "scepter." The Greek term ῥάβδος (rhabdos) can mean either "rod" or "scepter."

[30] sn A quotation from Ps 2:9 (with the line introducing the quotation containing a partial allusion to Ps 2:8). See also Rev 12:5, 19:15.

[31] tn What has been received is not specified in the Greek text, but must be supplied from the context. In the light of the two immediately preceding verses about rulership or dominion, it seems that the implied direct object of δώσω (dōsō) is "the right to rule" (i.e., ἔξειν ἐξουσίαν ποιμάνειν, echein exousian poimanein), although many modern translations supply the word "authority" here (so NAB, NRSV, NLT).

[32] tn On this expression BDAG 892 s.v. πρωϊνός states, "early, belonging to the morning ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ πρ. the morning star, Venus Rv 2:28; 22:16."

To the Church in Sardis

3:1 "To[1] the angel of the church in Sardis write the following:[2]

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[3] the one who holds[4] the seven spirits of God and the seven stars: 'I know your deeds, that you have a reputation[5] that you are alive, but[6] in reality[7] you are dead. 3:2 Wake up then, and strengthen what remains that was about[8] to die, because I have not found your deeds complete[9] in the sight[10] of my God. 3:3 Therefore, remember what you received and heard,[11] and obey it,[12] and repent. If you do not wake up, I will come like a thief, and you will never[13] know at what hour I will come against[14] you. 3:4 But you have a few individuals[15] in Sardis who have not stained[16] their clothes, and they will walk with me dressed[17] in white, because they are worthy. 3:5 The one who conquers[18] will be dressed like them[19] in white clothing,[20] and I will never[21] erase[22] his name from the book of life, but[23] will declare[24] his name before my Father and before his angels. 3:6 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'

To the Church in Philadelphia

3:7 "To[25] the angel of the church in Philadelphia write the following:[26]

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[27] the Holy One, the True One, who holds the key of David, who opens doors[28] no one can shut, and shuts doors[29] no one can open: 3:8 'I know your deeds. (Look! I have put[30] in front of you an open door that no one can shut.)[31] I know[32] that you have little strength,[33] but[34] you have obeyed[35] my word and have not denied my name. 3:9 Listen![36] I am going to make those people from the synagogue[37] of Satan – who say they are Jews yet[38] are not, but are lying – Look, I will make[39] them come and bow down[40] at

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

3 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

4 tn Grk "who has" (cf. 1:16).

5 tn Grk "a name."

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

7 tn The prepositional phrase "in reality" is supplied in the translation to make explicit the idea that their being alive was only an illusion.

8 tn The verb ἔμελλον (emellon) is in the imperfect tense.

9 tn The perfect passive participle has been translated as an intensive (resultative) perfect here.

10 tn Or "in the judgment." BDAG 342 s.v. ἐνώπιον 3 states, "in the opinion/judgment of...As a rule...of θεός or κύριος; so after...πεπληρωμένος Rv 3:2."

11 tn The expression πῶς εἴληφας καὶ ἤκουσας (pōs eilēphas kai ēkousas) probably refers to the initial instruction in the Christian life they had received and been taught; this included doctrine and ethical teaching.

12 tn Grk "keep it," in the sense of obeying what they had initially been taught.

13 tn The negation here is with οὐ μή (ou mē, the strongest possible form of negation in Koine Greek).

14 tn Or "come on."

15 tn Grk "a few names"; here ὄνομα (onoma) is used by figurative extension to mean "person" or "people"; according to L&N 9.19 there is "the possible implication of existence or relevance as individuals."

16 tn Or "soiled" (so NAB, NRSV, NIV); NCV "have kept their clothes unstained"; CEV "have not dirtied your clothes with sin."

17 tn The word "dressed" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

18 tn Or "who overcomes."

19 tn Grk "thus."

20 tn Or "white robes."

21 tn The negation here is with οὐ μή (ou mē), the strongest possible form of negation in Koine Greek.

22 tn Or "will never wipe out."

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

24 tn Grk "will confess."

25 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

26 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

27 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

28 tn The word "door" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied in the translation. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context. Since the following verse does contain the word "door" (θύραν, thuran), that word has been supplied as the direct object here.

29 tn See the note on the word "door" earlier in this verse.

30 tn Grk "I have given."

31 tn Grk "to shut it," but English would leave the direct object understood in this case.

sn The entire statement is parenthetical, interrupting the construction found in other letters to the churches in 3:1 and 3:15, "I know your deeds, that..." where an enumeration of the deeds follows.

32 tn This translation is based on connecting the ὅτι (hoti) clause with the οἶδα (oida) at the beginning of the verse, giving the content of what is known (see also 3:1, 3:15 for parallels). Because of the intervening clause that is virtually parenthetical (see the note on the word "shut" earlier in this verse), the words "I know that" from the beginning of the verse had to be repeated to make this connection clear for the English reader. However, the ὅτι could be understood as introducing a causal subordinate clause instead and thus translated, "because you have."

33 tn Or "little power."

34 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

35 tn Grk "and having kept." The participle ἐτήρησας (etērēsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. For the translation of τηρέω (tēreō) as "obey" see L&N 36.19. This is the same word that is used in 3:10 (there translated "kept") where there is a play on words.

36 tn Grk "behold" (L&N 91.13).

37 sn See the note on synagogue in 2:9.

38 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast between what these people claimed and what they were.

39 tn The verb here is ποιέω (poieō), but in this context it has virtually the same meaning as δίδωμι (didōmi) used at the beginning of the verse. Stylistic variation like this is typical of Johannine literature.

40 tn The verb here is προσκυνήσουσιν (proskunēsousin), normally used to refer to worship.

your feet and acknowledge[1] that I have loved you. 3:10 Because you have kept[2] my admonition[3] to endure steadfastly,[4] I will also keep you from the hour of testing that is about to come on the whole world to test those who live on the earth. 3:11 I am coming soon. Hold on to what you have so that no one can take away[5] your crown.[6] 3:12 The one who conquers[7] I will make[8] a pillar in the temple of my God, and he will never depart from it. I[9] will write on him the name of my God and the name of the city of my God (the new Jerusalem that comes down out of heaven from my God),[10] and my new name as well. 3:13 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'

To the Church in Laodicea

3:14 "To[11] the angel of the church in Laodicea write the following:[12]

"This is the solemn pronouncement of[13] the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the originator[14] of God's creation: 3:15 'I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot.[15] I wish you were either cold or hot! 3:16 So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I am going[16] to vomit[17] you out of my mouth! 3:17 Because you say, "I am rich and have acquired great wealth,[18] and need nothing," but[19] do not realize that you are wretched, pitiful,[20] poor, blind, and naked, 3:18 take my advice[21] and buy gold from me refined by fire so you can become rich! Buy from me[22] white clothing so you can be clothed and your shameful nakedness[23] will not be exposed, and buy eye salve[24] to put on your eyes

1 tn Or "and know," "and recognize."

2 tn Or "obey." For the translation of τηρέω (tēreō) as "obey" see L&N 36.19. In the Greek there is a wordplay: "because you have kept my word...I will keep you," though the meaning of τηρέω is different each time.

3 tn The Greek term λόγον (logon) is understood here in the sense of admonition or encouragement.

4 tn Or "to persevere." Here ὑπομονῆς (hupomonēs) has been translated as a genitive of reference/respect related to τὸν λόγον (ton logon).

5 tn On the verb λάβῃ (labē) here BDAG 583 s.v. λαμβάνω 2 states, "to take away, remove...with or without the use of force τὰ ἀργύρια take away the silver coins (fr. the temple) Mt 27:6. τὰς ἀσθενείας diseases 8:17. τὸν στέφανον Rv 3:11."

6 sn Your crown refers to a wreath consisting either of foliage or of precious metals formed to resemble foliage and worn as a symbol of honor, victory, or as a badge of high office – 'wreath, crown' (L&N 6.192).

7 tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes."

8 tn Grk "I will make him," but the pronoun (αὐτόν, auton, "him") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

10 sn This description of the city of my God is parenthetical, explaining further the previous phrase and interrupting the list of "new names" given here.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated due to differences between Greek and English style.

12 tn The phrase "the following" after "write" is supplied to clarify that what follows is the content of what is to be written.

13 tn Grk "These things says [the One]..." See the note on the phrase "this is the solemn pronouncement of" in 2:1.

sn The expression This is the solemn pronouncement of reflects an OT idiom. See the note on this phrase in 2:1.

14 tn Or "the beginning of God's creation"; or "the ruler of God's creation." From a linguistic standpoint all three meanings for ἀρχή (archē) are possible. The term is well attested in both LXX (Gen 40:13, 21; 41:13) and intertestamental Jewish literature (2 Macc 4:10, 50) as meaning "ruler, authority" (BDAG 138 s.v. 6). Some have connected this passage to Paul's statements in Col 1:15, 18 which describe Christ as ἀρχή and πρωτότοκος (prōtotokos; e.g., see R. H. Mounce, Revelation [NICNT], 124) but the term ἀρχή has been understood as either "beginning" or "ruler" in that passage as well. The most compelling connection is to be found in the prologue to John's Gospel (1:2-4) where the λόγος (logos) is said to be "in the beginning (ἀρχή) with God," a temporal reference connected with creation, and then v. 3 states that "all things were made through him." The connection with the original creation suggests the meaning "originator" for ἀρχή here. BDAG 138 s.v. 3 gives the meaning "the first cause" for the word in Rev 3:14, a term that is too philosophical for the general reader, so the translation "originator" was used instead. BDAG also notes, "but the mng. beginning = 'first created' is linguistically probable (s. above 1b and Job 40:19; also CBurney, Christ as the Ἀρχή of Creation: JTS 27, 1926, 160-77)." Such a meaning is unlikely here, however, since the connections described above are much more probable.

15 sn Laodicea was near two other towns, each of which had a unique water source. To the north was Hierapolis which had a natural hot spring, often used for medicinal purposes. To the east was Colossae which had cold, pure waters. In contrast to these towns, Laodicea had no permanent supply of good water. Efforts to pipe water to the city from nearby springs were successful, but it would arrive lukewarm. The metaphor in the text is not meant to relate spiritual fervor to temperature. This would mean that Laodicea would be commended for being spiritually cold, but it is unlikely that Jesus would commend this. Instead, the metaphor condemns Laodicea for not providing spiritual healing (being hot) or spiritual refreshment (being cold) to those around them. It is a condemnation of their lack of works and lack of witness.

16 tn Or "I intend."

17 tn This is the literal meaning of the Greek verb ἐμέω (emeō). It is usually translated with a much weaker term like "spit out" due to the unpleasant connotations of the English verb "vomit," as noted by L&N 23.44. The situation confronting the Laodicean church is a dire one, however, and such a term is necessary if the modern reader is to understand the gravity of the situation.

18 tn Grk "and have become rich." The semantic domains of the two terms for wealth here, πλούσιος (plousios, adjective) and πλουτέω (ploutēō, verb) overlap considerably, but are given slightly different English translations for stylistic reasons.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

20 tn All the terms in this series are preceded by καί (kai) in the Greek text, but contemporary English generally uses connectives only between the last two items in such a series.

21 tn Grk "I counsel you to buy."

22 tn Grk "rich, and." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation, repeating the words "Buy from me" to make the connection clear for the English reader.

23 tn Grk "the shame of the nakedness of you," which has been translated as an attributed genitive like καινότητι ζωῆς (kainotēti zōēs) in Rom 6:4 (ExSyn 89-90).

24 sn The city of Laodicea had a famous medical school and exported a powder (called a "Phrygian powder") that was widely used as an eye salve. It was applied to the eyes in the form of a paste the consistency of dough (the Greek term for the salve here, κολλούριον, kollourion [Latin collyrium], is a diminutive form of the word for a long roll of bread).

so you can see! 3:19 All those[1] I love, I rebuke and discipline. So be earnest and repent! 3:20 Listen![2] I am standing at the door and knocking! If anyone hears my voice and opens the door I will come into his home[3] and share a meal with him, and he with me. 3:21 I will grant the one[4] who conquers[5] permission[6] to sit with me on my throne, just as I too conquered[7] and sat down with my Father on his throne. 3:22 The one who has an ear had better hear what the Spirit says to the churches.'"

The Amazing Scene in Heaven

4:1 After these things I looked, and there was[8] a door standing open in heaven![9] And the first voice I had heard speaking to me[10] like a trumpet[11] said: "Come up here so that[12] I can show you what must happen after these things." 4:2 Immediately I was in the Spirit,[13] and[14] a throne was standing[15] in heaven with someone seated on it! 4:3 And the one seated on it was like jasper[16] and carnelian[17] in appearance, and a rainbow looking like it was made of emerald[18] encircled the throne. 4:4 In[19] a circle around the throne were twenty-four other thrones, and seated on those thrones were twenty-four elders. They were[20] dressed in white clothing and had golden crowns[21] on their heads. 4:5 From[22] the throne came out flashes of lightning and roaring[23] and crashes of thunder. Seven flaming torches, which are the seven spirits of God,[24] were burning in front of the throne 4:6 and in front of the throne was something like a sea of glass, like crystal.[25]

In[26] the middle of the throne[27] and around the throne were four living creatures[28] full of eyes in front and in back. 4:7 The[29] first living creature was like a lion, the[30] second creature like an ox, the third creature had a face like a man's, and the fourth creature looked like an eagle flying. 4:8 Each one of the four living creatures had six wings[31] and was full of eyes all around and inside.[32] They never rest day or night, saying:[33]

1 tn The Greek pronoun ὅσος (hosos) means "as many as" and can be translated "All those" or "Everyone."

2 tn Grk "Behold."

3 tn Grk "come in to him."

sn The expression in Greek does not mean entrance into the person, as is popularly taken, but entrance into a room or building toward the person. See ExSyn 380-82. Some interpreters understand the door here to be the door to the Laodicean church, and thus a collective or corporate image rather than an individual one.

4 tn Grk "The one who conquers, to him I will grant."

5 tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes."

6 tn Grk "I will give [grant] to him."

7 tn Or "have been victorious"; traditionally, "have overcome."

8 tn Grk "and behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

9 tn Or "in the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

10 tn Grk "with me." The translation "with me" implies that John was engaged in a dialogue with the one speaking to him (e.g., Jesus or an angel) when in reality it was a one-sided conversation, with John doing all the listening. For this reason, μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ (met' emou, "with me") was translated as "to me."

11 sn The phrase speaking to me like a trumpet refers back to Rev 1:10.

12 tn The conjunction καί (kai), much like the vav-consecutive in Hebrew, appears to be introducing a final/purpose clause here rather than a coordinate clause.

13 tn Or "in the spirit." "Spirit" could refer either to the Holy Spirit or the human spirit, but in either case John was in "a state of spiritual exaltation best described as a trance" (R. H. Mounce, Revelation [NICNT], 75).

14 tn Grk "and behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

15 tn BDAG 537 s.v. κεῖμαι 2 gives the translation "stand" for the term in this verse.

16 tn Grk "jasper stone."

sn Jasper was a semiprecious gemstone, probably green in color (L&N 2.30).

17 sn Carnelian was a semiprecious gemstone, usually red in color (L&N 2.36).

18 tn Or "a rainbow emerald-like in appearance."

19 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

20 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the words "They were" to indicate the connection to the preceding material.

21 sn See the note on the word crown in Rev 3:11.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn Or "sounds," "voices." It is not entirely clear what this refers to. BDAG 1071 s.v. φωνή 1 states, "In Rv we have ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί (cp. Ex 19:16) 4:5; 8:5; 11:19; 16:18 (are certain other sounds in nature thought of here in addition to thunder, as e.g. the roar of the storm?...)."

24 sn Some interpret the seven spirits of God as angelic beings, while others see them as a reference to the sevenfold ministry of the Holy Spirit.

25 tn This could refer to rock crystal, but it is possible this refers to ice (an older meaning). See BDAG 571 s.v. κρύσταλλος.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

27 tn Perhaps, "in the middle of the throne area" (see L&N 83.10).

28 tn On the meaning of ζῴον (zōon) BDAG 431 s.v. 2 states, "Of the four peculiar beings at God's throne, whose description Rv 4:6-9 reminds one of the ζῷα in Ezk 1:5ff, the cherubim. S. also Rv 5:6, 8, 11, 14; 6:1, 3, 5-7; 7:11; 14:3; 15:7; 19:4."

29 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn Both here and before the phrase "the third," καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

31 tn Grk "six wings apiece," but this is redundant with "each one" in English.

32 tn Some translations render ἔσωθεν (esōthen) as "under [its] wings," but the description could also mean "filled all around on the outside and on the inside with eyes." Since the referent is not available to the interpreter, the exact force is difficult to determine.

33 tn Or "They never stop saying day and night."

"Holy Holy Holy is the Lord God, the All-Powerful,[1]
Who was and who is, and who is still to come!"

4:9 And whenever the living creatures give glory, honor,[2] and thanks to the one who sits on the throne, who lives forever and ever, 4:10 the twenty-four elders throw themselves to the ground[3] before the one who sits on the throne and worship the one who lives forever and ever, and they offer their crowns[4] before his[5] throne, saying:

> 4:11 "You are worthy, our Lord and God, > to receive glory and honor and power, > since you created all things, > and because of your will they existed and were created!"[6]

The Opening of the Scroll

5:1 Then[7] I saw in the right hand of the one who was seated on the throne a scroll written on the front and back[8] and sealed with seven seals.[9] 5:2 And I saw a powerful angel proclaiming in a loud voice: "Who is worthy to open the scroll and to break its seals?" 5:3 But[10] no one in heaven or on earth or under the earth was able to open the scroll or look into it. 5:4 So[11] I began weeping bitterly[12] because no one was found who was worthy to open the scroll or to look into it. 5:5 Then[13] one of the elders said[14] to me, "Stop weeping![15] Look, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, has conquered;[16] thus he can open[17] the scroll and its seven seals."

5:6 Then[18] I saw standing in the middle of the throne[19] and of the four living creatures, and in the middle of the elders, a Lamb that appeared to have been killed.[20] He had[21] seven horns and seven eyes, which[22] are the seven[23] spirits of God[24] sent out into all the earth. 5:7 Then[25] he came and took the scroll[26] from the right hand of the one who was seated on the throne, 5:8 and when he had taken the scroll, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders threw themselves to the ground[27] before the Lamb. Each[28] of them had a harp and golden bowls full of sn A quotation from (or an allusion to) Isa 6:3.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

3 tn Grk "the twenty-four elders fall down." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

4 sn See the note on the word crown in Rev 3:11.

5 tn The pronoun "his" is understood from the demonstrative force of the article τοῦ (tou) before θρόνου (thronou).

6 tc The past tense of "they existed" (ἦσαν, ēsan) and the order of the expression "they existed and were created" seems backwards both logically and chronologically. The text as it stands is the more difficult reading and seems to have given rise to codex A omitting the final "they were created," 2329 replacing "they existed" (ἦσαν) with "have come into being" (ἐγένοντο, egeneto), and 046 adding οὐκ (ouk, "not") before ἦσαν ("they did not exist, [but were created]"). Several MSS (1854 2050 𝔐ᴬ sa) also attempt to alleviate the problem by replacing ἦσαν with "they are" (εἰσιν, eisin).

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

8 tn Grk "written on the inside and the outside" (an idiom for having writing on both sides).

9 tn L&N 6.55 states, "From the immediate context of Re 5:1 it is not possible to determine whether the scroll in question had seven seals on the outside or whether the scroll was sealed at seven different points. However, since according to chapter six of Revelation the seals were broken one after another, it would appear as though the scroll had been sealed at seven different places as it had been rolled up."

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of no one being found worthy to open the scroll.

12 tn Grk "much."

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

14 tn Grk "says" (a historical present).

15 tn The present imperative with μή (mē) is used here to command cessation of an action in progress (ExSyn 724 lists this verse as an example).

16 tn Or "has been victorious"; traditionally, "has overcome."

17 tn The infinitive has been translated as an infinitive of result here.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

19 tn Perhaps, "in the middle of the throne area" (see L&N 83.10).

20 tn Or "slaughtered"; traditionally, "slain." The phrase behind this translation is ὡς ἐσφαγμένον (hōs esphagmenon). The particle ὡς is used in Greek generally for comparison, and in Revelation it is used often to describe the appearance of what the author saw. This phrase does not imply that the Lamb "appeared to have been killed" but in reality was not, because the wider context of the NT shows that in fact the Lamb, i.e., Jesus, was killed. See 13:3 for the only other occurrence of this phrase in the NT.

21 tn Grk "killed, having." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "he."

22 sn The relative pronoun which is masculine, referring back to the eyes rather than to the horns.

23 tc There is good MS evidence for the inclusion of "seven" (ἑπτά, hepta; 𝔓²⁴ ℵ 2053 2351 𝔐ᴷ). There is equally good MS support for the omission of the term (A 1006 1611 𝔐ᴬ pc). It may have been accidentally added due to its repeated presence in the immediately preceding phrases, or it may have been intentionally added to maintain the symmetry of the phrases or more likely to harmonize the phrase with 1:4; 3:1; 4:5. Or it may have been accidentally deleted by way of homoioteleuton (τὰ ἑπτά, ta hepta). A decision is difficult in this instance. NA²⁷ also does not find the problem easy to solve, placing the word in brackets to indicate doubts as to its authenticity.

24 sn See the note on the phrase the seven spirits of God in Rev 4:5.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

26 tn The words "the scroll" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

27 tn Grk "fell down." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

28 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

incense (which are the prayers of the saints).[1]
5:9 They were singing a new song:[2]

"You are worthy to take the scroll and to open its seals because you were killed,[3] and at the cost of your own blood[4] you have purchased[5] for God persons[6] from every tribe, language,[7] people, and nation.
5:10 You have appointed[8] them[9] as a kingdom and priests[10] to serve[11] our God, and they will reign[12] on the earth."

5:11 Then[13] I looked and heard the voice of many angels in a circle around the throne, as well as the living creatures and the elders. Their[14] number was ten thousand times ten thousand[15] – thousands times thousands – 5:12 all of whom[16] were singing[17] in a loud voice:

"Worthy is the lamb who was killed[18] to receive power and wealth and wisdom and might and honor and glory and praise!"

5:13 Then[19] I heard every creature – in heaven, on earth, under the earth, in the sea, and all that is in them – singing:[20]

"To the one seated on the throne and to the Lamb be praise, honor, glory, and ruling power[21] forever and ever!"

5:14 And the four living creatures were saying "Amen," and the elders threw themselves to the ground[22] and worshiped.

The Seven Seals

6:1 I looked on when the Lamb opened one of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four living creatures saying with a thunderous voice,[23] "Come!"[24] 6:2 So[25] I looked,[26] and here came[27] a white horse! The[28] one who rode it[29]

---

1 sn This interpretive comment by the author forms a parenthesis in the narrative.

2 tn The redundant participle λέγοντες (legontes) has not been translated here.

3 tn Or "slaughtered"; traditionally, "slain."

4 tn The preposition ἐν (en) is taken to indicate price here, like the Hebrew preposition ב (bet) does at times. BDAG 329 s.v. ἐν 5.b states, "The ἐν which takes the place of the gen. of price is also instrumental ἠγόρασας ἐν τῷ αἵματί σου Rv 5:9 (cp. 1 Ch 21:24 ἀγοράζω ἐν ἀργυρίῳ)."

5 tc The Greek text as it stands above (i.e., the reading τῷ θεῷ [tō theō] alone) is found in codex A. ℵ 2050 2344 𝔐 sy add the term "us" (ἡμᾶς, hēmas), either before or after τῷ θεῷ, as an attempt to clarify the object of "purchased" (ἠγόρασας, ēgorasas). A few mss (1 vg^{ms}) delete the reference to God altogether and simply replace it with "us" (ἡμᾶς). This too is an attempt to remove ambiguity in the phrase and provide an object for "purchased." The shorter reading, supported by the best witness for Revelation, best accounts for the other readings.

6 tn The word "persons" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

7 tn Grk "and language," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

8 tn The verb ἐποίησας (epoiēsas) is understood to mean "appointed" here. For an example of this use, see Mark 3:14.

9 tc The vast majority of witnesses have αὐτούς (autous, "them") here, while the Textus Receptus reads ἡμᾶς (hēmas, "us") with insignificant support (pc gig vg^{ci} sa Prim Bea). There is no question that the original text read αὐτούς here.

10 tn The reference to "kingdom and priests" may be a hendiadys: "priestly kingdom."

11 tn The words "to serve" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by the word "priests."

12 tc The textual problem here between the present tense βασιλεύουσιν (basileuousin, "they are reigning"; so A 1006 1611 𝔐^{K} pc) and the future βασιλεύσουσιν (basileusousin, "they will reign"; so ℵ 1854 2053 𝔐^{A} pc lat co) is a difficult one. Both readings have excellent support. On the one hand, the present tense seems to be the harder reading in this context. On the other hand, codex A elsewhere mistakes the future for the present (20:6). Further, the lunar sigma in uncial script could have been overlooked by some scribes, resulting in the present tense. All things considered, there is a slight preference for the future.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

14 tn Grk "elders, and the number of them was." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

15 tn Or "myriads of myriads." Although μυριάς (murias) literally means "10,000," the point of the combination here may simply be to indicate an incalculably huge number. See L&N 60.9.

16 tn The words "all of whom" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to indicate the resumption of the phrase "the voice of many angels" at the beginning of the verse.

17 tn Grk "saying."

18 tn Or "slaughtered"; traditionally, "slain."

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

20 tn Grk "saying."

21 tn Or "dominion."

22 tn Grk "fell down." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

23 tn Grk "saying like a voice [or sound] of thunder."

24 tc The addition of "and see" (καὶ ἴδε or καὶ βλέπε [kai ide or kai blepe]) to "come" (ἔρχου, erchou) in 6:1, 3-5, 7 is a gloss directed to John, i.e., "come and look at the seals and the horsemen!" But the command ἔρχου is better interpreted as directed to each of the horsemen. The shorter reading also has the support of the better witnesses.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of hearing the voice summon the first rider.

26 tc The reading "and I looked" (καὶ εἶδον, kai eidon) or some slight variation (e.g., ἴδον, idon) has excellent ms support ({ℵ A C P 1611}) and its omission seems to come through the mss that have already placed "and look" (καὶ ἴδε or καὶ βλέπε [kai ide or kai blepe]) after the verb "come" (ἔρχου, erchou) as mentioned in the text-critical note on 6:1. Thus, for these copyists it was redundant to add "and I looked" again.

27 tn The phrase "and here came" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

28 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

29 tn Grk "the one sitting on it."

sn The one who rode it. The identity of the first rider on the white horse has been discussed at great length by interpreters. Several answers are given: (1) A number understand the rider on the white horse to be Christ himself, identifying this horse and rider with the one mentioned in 19:11, where the identification is clear (cf. 19:13, 16). It must be noted, though, that there is little in common between the two riders beyond the white horse. The word for "crown" is different, the armament is different, and the context here is different (conquest vs. retribution), with three other horsemen bringing catastrophe following. (2) Others see the rider on the white horse representing a spirit of military conquest that dominates human had a bow, and he was given a crown,[1] and as a conqueror[2] he rode out to conquer.

6:3 Then[3] when the Lamb[4] opened the second seal, I heard the second living creature saying, "Come!" 6:4 And another horse, fiery red,[5] came out, and the one who rode it[6] was granted permission[7] to take peace from the earth, so that people would butcher[8] one another, and he was given a huge sword.

6:5 Then[9] when the Lamb opened the third seal I heard the third living creature saying, "Come!" So[10] I looked,[11] and here came[12] a black horse! The[13] one who rode it[14] had a balance scale[15] in his hand. 6:6 Then[16] I heard something like a voice from among the four living creatures saying, "A quart[17] of wheat will cost a day's pay[18] and three quarts of barley will cost a day's pay. But[19] do not damage the olive oil and the wine!"

6:7 Then[20] when the Lamb opened the fourth seal I heard the voice of the fourth living creature saying, "Come!" 6:8 So[21] I looked[22] and here came[23] a pale green[24] horse! The[25] name of the one who rode it[26] was Death, and Hades followed right behind.[27] They[28] were given authority over a fourth of the earth, to kill its population with the sword,[29] famine, and disease,[30] and by the wild animals of the earth.

6:9 Now[31] when the Lamb opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of those who had been violently killed[32] because of the word of God and because of the testimony they had g history and leads to the catastrophes that follow. (3) Another possibility is that the white horse rider represents the Antichrist, who appears later in Rev 11:7; 13:17, and whose similarity to Christ explains the similarity with the rider in 19:11. This interpretation has been discussed at length by M. Rissi, "The Rider on the White Horse: A Study of Revelation 6:1-8," Int 18 (1964): 407-18. This interpretation is the most probable one.

[1] sn See the note on the word crown in Rev 3:11.

[2] tn The participle νικῶν (nikōn) has been translated as substantival, the subject of the verb ἐξῆλθεν (exēlthen). Otherwise, as an adverbial participle of manner, it is somewhat redundant: "he rode out conquering and to conquer."

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the Lamb) has been specified in the translation for clarity here and throughout the rest of the chapter.

[5] tn L&N 79.31 states, "'fiery red' (probably with a tinge of yellow or orange)."

[6] tn Grk "the one sitting on it."

[7] tn The word "permission" is implied; Grk "it was given to him to take peace from the earth."

[8] tn BDAG 979 s.v. σφάζω states, "Of the killing of a person by violence...σφάζειν τινά butcher or murder someone (4 Km 10:7; Jer 52:10; Manetho: 609 fgm. 8, 76 Jac. [in Jos., C. Ap. 1, 76]; Demetr.[?]: 722 fgm. 7; Ar. 10, 9) 1J 3:12; Rv 6:4. Pass. (Hdt. 5, 5) 5:9; 6:9; 18:24."

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[10] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the summons by the third creature.

[11] tc The reading "and I looked" (καὶ εἶδον, kai eidon) or some slight variation (e.g., ἴδον, idon) has excellent MS support ({א A C P 1611}) and its omission seems to have come through the MSS that have already placed "and look" (καὶ ἴδε or καὶ βλέπε [kai ide or kai blepe]) after the verb "come" (ἔρχου, erchou) in 6:1. Thus, for these copyists it was redundant to add "and I looked" again.

[12] tn The phrase "and here came" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[14] tn Grk "the one sitting on it."

[15] sn A balance scale would have been a rod held by a rope in the middle with pans attached to both ends for measuring.

[16] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[17] tn BDAG 1086 s.v. χοῖνιξ states, "a dry measure, oft. used for grain, approximately equivalent to one quart or one liter, quart. A χ.of grain was a daily ration for one pers....Rv 6:6ab."

[18] tn Grk "a quart of wheat for a denarius." A denarius was one day's pay for an average worker. The words "will cost" are used to indicate the genitive of price or value; otherwise the English reader could understand the phrase to mean "a quart of wheat to be given as a day's pay."

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[20] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the summons by the fourth creature.

[22] tc The reading "and I looked" (καὶ εἶδον, kai eidon) or some slight variation (e.g., ἴδον, idon) has excellent MS support ({א A C P 1611}) and its omission seems to have come through the MSS that have already placed "and look" (καὶ ἴδε or καὶ βλέπε [kai ide or kai blepe]) after the verb "come" (ἔρχου, erchou) in 6:1. Thus, for these copyists it was redundant to add "and I looked" again.

[23] tn The phrase "and here came" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

[24] tn A sickly pallor, when referring to persons, or the green color of plants. BDAG 1085 s.v. χλωρός 2 states, "pale, greenish gray...as the color of a pers. in sickness contrasted with appearance in health...so the horse ridden by Death...ἵππος χλωρός Rv 6:8." Because the color of the horse is symbolic, "pale green" is used in the translation. Cf. NIV, NCV "pale"; NASB "ashen."

[25] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[26] tn Grk "the one sitting on it."

[27] tn Grk "And Hades was following with him." The Greek expression μετ᾽ αὐτοῦ (met' autou, "with him") is Semitic and indicates close proximity. The translation "followed right behind" reflects this.

[28] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[29] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[30] tn Grk "with death." θάνατος (thanatos) can in particular contexts refer to a manner of death, specifically a contagious disease (see BDAG 443 s.v. 3; L&N 23.158).

[31] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of a new and somewhat different topic after the introduction of the four riders.

[32] tn Or "murdered." See the note on the word "butcher" in 6:4.

iven. 6:10 They[1] cried out with a loud voice,[2] "How long,[3] Sovereign Master,[4] holy and true, before you judge those who live on the earth and avenge our blood?" 6:11 Each[5] of them was given a long white robe and they were told to rest for a little longer, until the full number was reached[6] of both their fellow servants[7] and their brothers who were going to be killed just as they had been.

6:12 Then[8] I looked when the Lamb opened the sixth seal, and a huge[9] earthquake took place; the sun became as black as sackcloth made of hair,[10] and the full moon became blood red;[11] 6:13 and the stars in the sky[12] fell to the earth like a fig tree dropping[13] its unripe figs[14] when shaken by a fierce[15] wind. 6:14 The sky[16] was split apart[17] like a scroll being rolled up,[18] and every mountain and island was moved from its place. 6:15 Then[19] the kings of the earth, the[20] very important people, the generals,[21] the rich, the powerful, and everyone, slave[22] and free, hid themselves in the caves and among the rocks of the mountains. 6:16 They[23] said to the mountains and to the rocks, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of the one who is seated on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb,[24] 6:17 because the great day of their[25] wrath has come, and who is able to withstand it?"[26]

The Sealing of the 144,000

7:1 After this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, holding back the four winds of the earth so no wind could blow on the earth, on the sea, or on any tree. 7:2 Then[27] I saw another angel ascending from the east,[28] who had[29] the seal[30] of the living God. He[31] shouted out with a loud voice to the four angels who had been given permission[32] to damage the earth and the sea:[33] 7:3 "Do not damage the earth or the sea or the trees until we have put a seal on the foreheads of the servants[34] of our God." 7:4 Now[35] I heard the number of those

[1] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[2] tn Grk "voice, saying"; the participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

[3] tn The expression ἕως πότε (eōs pote) was translated "how long." Cf. BDAG 423 s.v. ἕως 1.b.γ.

[4] tn The Greek term here is δεσπότης (despotēs; see L&N 37.63).

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[6] tn Grk "until they had been completed." The idea of a certain "number" of people is implied by the subject of πληρωθῶσιν (plērōthōsin).

[7] tn Though σύνδουλος (sundoulos) has been translated "fellow servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[8] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[9] tn Or "powerful"; Grk "a great."

[10] tn Or "like hairy sackcloth" (L&N 8.13).

[11] tn Grk "like blood," understanding αἷμα (aima) as a blood-red color rather than actual blood (L&N 8.64).

[12] tn Or "in heaven" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky"). The genitive τοῦ οὐρανοῦ (tou ouranou) is taken as a genitive of place.

[13] tn Grk "throws [off]"; the indicative verb has been translated as a participle due to English style.

[14] tn L&N 3.37 states, "a fig produced late in the summer season (and often falling off before it ripens) – 'late fig.' ὡς συκὴ βάλλει τοὺς ὀλύνθους αὐτῆς ὑπὸ ἀνέμου μεγάλου σειομένη 'as the fig tree sheds its late figs when shaken by a great wind' Re 6:13. In the only context in which ὄλυνθος occurs in the NT (Re 6:13), one may employ an expression such as 'unripe fig' or 'fig which ripens late.'"

[15] tn Grk "great wind."

[16] tn Or "The heavens were." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) can mean either "heaven" or "sky."

[17] tn BDAG 125 s.v. ἀποχωρίζω states, "ὁ οὐρανὸς ἀπεχωρίσθη the sky was split Rv 6:14." Although L&N 79.120 gives the meaning "the sky disappeared like a rolled-up scroll" here, a scroll that is rolled up does not "disappear," and such a translation could be difficult for modern readers to understand.

[18] tn On this term BDAG 317 s.v. ἑλίσσω states, "ὡς βιβλίον ἑλισσόμενον like a scroll that is rolled up...Rv 6:14."

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[20] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated; nor is it translated before each of the following categories, since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[21] tn Grk "chiliarchs." A chiliarch was normally a military officer commanding a thousand soldiers, but here probably used of higher-ranking commanders like generals (see L&N 55.15; cf. Rev 6:15).

[22] tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[23] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[24] tn It is difficult to say where this quotation ends. The translation ends it after "withstand it" at the end of v. 17, but it is possible that it should end here, after "Lamb" at the end of v. 16. If it ends after "Lamb," v. 17 is a parenthetical explanation by the author.

[25] tc Most mss (A 𝔐 bo) change the pronoun "their" to "his" (αὐτοῦ, autou) in order to bring the text in line with the mention of the one seated on the throne in the immediately preceding verse, and to remove the ambiguity about whose wrath is in view here. The reading αὐτῶν (autōn, "their") is well supported by ℵ C 1611 1854 2053 2329 2344 pc latt sy. On both internal and external grounds, it should be regarded as original.

[26] tn The translation "to withstand (it)" for ἵστημι (histēmi) is based on the imagery of holding one's ground in a military campaign or an attack (BDAG 482 s.v. B.4).

[27] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[28] tn Grk "from the rising of the sun." BDAG 74 s.v. ἀνατολή 2.a takes this as a geographical direction: "ἀπὸ ἀ. ἡλίου... from the east Rv 7:2; 16:12...simply ἀπὸ ἀ. ...21:13."

[29] tn Grk "having," but v. 3 makes it clear that the angel's purpose is to seal others with the seal he carries.

[30] tn Or "signet" (L&N 6.54).

[31] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[32] tn The word "permission" is implied; Grk "to whom it was given to them to damage the earth."

[33] tn Grk "saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[34] tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[35] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of new but related material.

who were marked with the seal,[1] one hundred and forty-four thousand, sealed from all[2] the tribes of the people of Israel:[3]

7:5 From the tribe of Judah, twelve thousand were sealed,
from the tribe of Reuben, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Gad, twelve thousand,
7:6 from the tribe of Asher, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Naphtali, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Manasseh, twelve
thousand,
7:7 from the tribe of Simeon, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Levi, twelve thousand, from the tribe of Issachar, twelve
thousand,
7:8 from the tribe of Zebulun, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Joseph, twelve
thousand,
from the tribe of Benjamin, twelve thousand were sealed.

7:9 After these things I looked, and here was[4] an enormous crowd that no one could count, made up of persons from every nation, tribe,[5] people, and language, standing before the throne and before the Lamb dressed in long white robes, and with palm branches in their hands. 7:10 They were shouting out in a loud voice,

"Salvation belongs to our God,[6] to the one seated on the throne, and to the Lamb!"

7:11 And all the angels stood[7] there in a circle around the throne and around the elders and the four living creatures, and they threw themselves down with their faces to the ground[8] before the throne and worshiped God, 7:12 saying,

"Amen! Praise and glory, and wisdom and thanksgiving, and honor and power and strength be to our God for ever and ever. Amen!"

7:13 Then[9] one of the elders asked[10] me, "These dressed in long white robes – who are they and where have they come from?" 7:14 So[11] I said to him, "My lord, you know the answer."[12] Then[13] he said to me, "These are the ones who have come out of the great tribulation. They[14] have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb! 7:15 For this reason they are before the throne of God, and they serve[15] him day and night in his temple, and the one seated on the throne will shelter them.[16] 7:16 They will never go hungry or be thirsty again, and the sun will not beat down on them, nor any burning heat,[17] 7:17 because the Lamb in the middle of the throne will shepherd them and lead them to springs of living water, and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes."[18]

The Seventh Seal

8:1 Now[19] when the Lamb[20] opened the seventh seal there was silence in heaven for about half an hour. 8:2 Then[21] I saw the seven angels who stand before God, and seven trumpets were given to them. 8:3 Another[22] angel holding[23] a golden censer[24] came and was stationed[25] at the altar. A[26] large amount of incense was given to

[1] tn Grk "who were sealed."

[2] tn Normally, "every," but since 144,000 is the total number, "all" is clearer here.

[3] tn Grk "the sons of Israel," normally an idiom for the Israelites as an ethnic entity (L&N 11.58). However, many scholars understand the expression in this context to refer to Christians rather than ethnic Israelites.

[4] tn The phrase "and here was" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated before each of the following categories, since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[6] tn The dative here has been translated as a dative of possession.

[7] tn The verb is pluperfect, but the force is simple past. See ExSyn 586.

[8] tn Grk "they fell down on their faces." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.β. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[10] tn Grk "spoke" or "declared to," but in the context "asked" reads more naturally in English.

[11] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the previous question.

[12] tn Though the expression "the answer" is not in the Greek text, it is clearly implied. Direct objects in Greek were frequently omitted when clear from the context.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[14] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[15] tn Or "worship." The word here is λατρεύω (latreuō).

[16] tn Grk "will spread his tent over them," normally an idiom for taking up residence with someone, but when combined with the preposition ἐπί (epi, "over") the idea is one of extending protection or shelter (BDAG 929 s.v. σκηνόω).

[17] tn An allusion to Isa 49:10. The phrase "burning heat" is one word in Greek (καῦμα, kauma) that refers to a burning, intensely-felt heat. See BDAG 536 s.v.

[18] sn An allusion to Isa 25:8.

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the resumption of the topic of the seals.

[20] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the Lamb) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[23] tn Grk "having."

[24] sn A golden censer was a bowl in which incense was burned. The imagery suggests the OT role of the priest.

[25] tn The verb "to station" was used to translate ἑστάθη (hestathē) because it connotes the idea of purposeful arrangement in English, which seems to be the idea in the Greek.

him to offer up, with the prayers of all the saints, on the golden altar that is before the throne. 8:4 The[1] smoke coming from the incense,[2] along with the prayers of the saints, ascended before God from the angel's hand. 8:5 Then[3] the angel took the censer, filled it with fire from the altar, and threw it on the earth, and there were crashes of thunder, roaring,[4] flashes of lightning, and an earthquake.

8:6 Now[5] the seven angels holding[6] the seven trumpets prepared to blow them.

8:7 The[7] first angel blew his trumpet, and there was hail and fire mixed with blood, and it was thrown at the earth so that[8] a third of the earth was burned up, a third of the trees were burned up, and all the green grass was burned up.

8:8 Then[9] the second angel blew his trumpet, and something like a great mountain of burning fire was thrown into the sea. A[10] third of the sea became blood, 8:9 and a third of the creatures[11] living in the sea died, and a third of the ships were completely destroyed.[12]

8:10 Then[13] the third angel blew his trumpet, and a huge star burning like a torch fell from the sky;[14] it landed[15] on a third of the rivers and on the springs of water. 8:11 (Now[16] the name of the star is[17] Wormwood.)[18] So[19] a third of the waters became wormwood,[20] and many people died from these waters because they were poisoned.[21]

8:12 Then[22] the fourth angel blew his trumpet, and a third of the sun was struck, and a third of the moon, and a third of the stars, so that a third of them were darkened. And there was no light for a third of the day[23] and for a third of the night likewise. 8:13 Then[24] I looked, and I heard an[25] eagle[26] flying directly overhead,[27] proclaiming with a loud voice, "Woe! Woe! Woe to those who live on the earth because of the remaining sounds of the trumpets of the three angels who are about to blow them!"[28]

9:1 Then[29] the fifth angel blew his trumpet, and I saw a star that had fallen from the sky[30] to the earth, and he was given the key to the shaft of the abyss.[31] 9:2 He[32] opened the shaft of the abyss and smoke rose out of it[33] like smoke from

1 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn The expression τῶν θυμιαμάτων (tōn thumiamatōn) is taken as a "genitive of producer," i.e., the noun in the genitive produces the head noun.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

4 tn Or "sounds," "voices." It is not entirely clear what this refers to. BDAG 1071 s.v. φωνή 1 states, "In Rv we have ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί (cp. Ex 19:16) 4:5; 8:5; 11:19; 16:18 (are certain other sounds in nature thought of here in addition to thunder, as e.g. the roar of the storm?...)."

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

6 tn Grk "having."

7 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so that" because what follows has the logical force of a result clause.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn Or "a third of the living creatures in the sea"; Grk "the third of the creatures which were in the sea, the ones having life."

12 tn On the term translated "completely destroyed," L&N 20.40 states, "to cause the complete destruction of someone or something – 'to destroy utterly.' τὸ τρίτον τῶν πλοίων διεφθάρησαν 'a third of the ships were completely destroyed' Re 8:9."

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

14 tn Or "from heaven" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

15 tn Grk "fell."

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" in keeping with the parenthetical nature of this remark.

17 tn Grk "is called," but this is somewhat redundant in contemporary English.

18 sn Wormwood refers to a particularly bitter herb with medicinal value. According to L&N 3.21, "The English term wormwood is derived from the use of the plant as a medicine to kill intestinal worms." This remark about the star's name is parenthetical in nature.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the star falling on the waters.

20 tn That is, terribly bitter (see the note on "Wormwood" earlier in this verse).

21 tn Grk "and many of the men died from these waters because they were bitter."

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

23 tn Grk "the day did not shine [with respect to] the third of it."

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

25 tn Grk "one eagle."

26 tc 𝔐ᴬ reads "angel" (ἀγγέλου, angelou) instead of "eagle" (ἀετοῦ, aetou), a reading strongly supported by {ℵ A 046 𝔐ᴷ and several versions}. On external grounds, ἀετοῦ is clearly the superior reading. ἀγγέλου could have arisen inadvertently due to similarities in spelling or sound between ἀετοῦ and ἀγγέλου. It may also have been intentional in order to bring this statement in line with 14:6 where an angel is mentioned as the one flying in midair. This seems a more likely reason, strengthened by the facts that the book only mentions eagles two other times (4:7; 12:14). Further, the immediate as well as broad context is replete with references to angels.

27 tn Concerning the word μεσουράνημα (mesouranēma), L&N 1.10 states, "a point or region of the sky directly above the earth – 'high in the sky, midpoint in the sky, directly overhead, straight above in the sky.' εἶδον, καὶ ἤκουσα ἑνὸς ἀετοῦ πετομένου ἐν μεσουρανήματι 'I looked, and I heard an eagle that was flying overhead in the sky' Re 8:13."

28 tn Grk "about to sound their trumpets," but this is redundant in English.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

30 tn Or "from heaven" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

31 tn On this term BDAG 2 s.v. ἄβυσσος 2 states, "netherworld, abyss, esp. the abode of the dead Ro 10:7 (Ps 106:26) and of demons Lk 8:31; dungeon where the devil is kept Rv 20:3; abode of the θηρίον, the Antichrist 11:7; 17:8; of Ἀβαδδών (q.v.), the angel of the underworld 9:11...φρέαρ τῆς ἀ. 9:1f; capable of being sealed 9:1; 20:1, 3."

32 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

33 tn Grk "the shaft," but since this would be somewhat redundant in English, the pronoun "it" is used here.

a giant furnace. The[1] sun and the air were darkened with smoke from the shaft. 9:3 Then[2] out of the smoke came locusts onto the earth, and they were given power[3] like that of the scorpions of the earth. 9:4 They[4] were told[5] not to damage the grass of the earth, or any green plant or tree, but only those people[6] who did not have the seal of God on their[7] forehead. 9:5 The locusts[8] were not given permission[9] to kill[10] them, but only to torture[11] them[12] for five months, and their torture was like that[13] of a scorpion when it stings a person.[14] 9:6 In[15] those days people[16] will seek death, but[17] will not be able to[18] find it; they will long to die, but death will flee from them.

9:7 Now[19] the locusts looked like horses equipped for battle. On[20] their heads were something like crowns similar to gold,[21] and their faces looked like men's[22] faces. 9:8 They[23] had hair like women's hair, and their teeth were like lions' teeth. 9:9 They had breastplates[24] like iron breastplates, and the sound of their wings was like the noise of many horse-drawn chariots charging into battle. 9:10 They have[25] tails and stingers like scorpions, and their ability[26] to injure people for five months is in their tails. 9:11 They have as king over them the angel of the abyss, whose name in Hebrew is Abaddon, and in Greek, Apollyon.[27]

9:12 The first woe has passed, but[28] two woes are still coming after these things!

9:13 Then[29] the sixth angel blew his trumpet, and I heard a single voice coming from the[30] horns on the golden altar that is before God, 9:14 saying to the sixth angel, the one holding[31] the trumpet, "Set free[32] the four angels who are bound at the great river Euphrates!" 9:15 Then[33] the four angels who had been prepared for this[34] hour, day,[35] month, and year were set free to kill[36] a third of humanity. 9:16 The[37] number of soldiers on horseback was two hundred million;[38]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

3 tn See BDAG 352 s.v. ἐξουσία 2, "potential or resource to command, control, or govern, capability, might, power."

4 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

5 tn The dative indirect object (αὐταῖς, autais) was converted into the subject ("they") as this more closely approximates English usage. The following ἵνα (hina) is taken as substantival, introducing a direct object clause. In this case, because it is reported speech, the ἵνα is similar to the declarative ὅτι (hoti).

6 tn Grk "men"; but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here of both men and women.

7 tn The article τῶν (tōn) has been translated as a possessive pronoun here (ExSyn 215).

8 tn Grk "It was not permitted to them"; the referent (the locusts) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn The word "permission" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

10 tn The two ἵνα (hina) clauses of 9:5 are understood to be functioning as epexegetical or complementary clauses related to ἐδόθη (edothē).

11 tn On this term BDAG 168 s.v. βασανισμός states, "1. infliction of severe suffering or pain associated with torture or torment, tormenting, torture Rv 9:5b. – 2. the severe pain experienced through torture, torment vs. 5a; 14:11; 18:10, 15; (w. πένθος) vs. 7."

12 tn The pronoun "them" is not in the Greek text but is picked up from the previous clause.

13 tn Grk "like the torture," but this is redundant in contemporary English.

14 tn Grk "a man"; but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in an individualized sense without being limited to the male gender.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

16 tn Grk "men"; but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here of both men and women.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

18 tn The phrase "not be able to" was used in the translation to emphasize the strong negation (οὐ μή, ou mē) in the Greek text.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of the description of the locusts, which is somewhat parenthetical in the narrative.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

21 tn The translation attempts to bring out the double uncertainty in this clause in the Greek text, involving both the form (ὡς στέφανοι, hōs stephanoi, "like crowns") and the material (ὅμοιοι χρυσῷ, homoioi chrusō, "similar to gold").

22 tn Or "human faces." The Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is often used in a generic sense, referring to both men and women. However, because "women's hair" in the next clause suggests a possible gender distinction here, "men's" was retained.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn Or perhaps, "scales like iron breastplates" (RSV, NRSV) although the Greek term θώραξ (thōrax) would have to shift its meaning within the clause, and elsewhere in biblical usage (e.g., Eph 6:14; 1 Thess 5:8) it normally means "breastplate." See also L&N 8.38.

25 tn In the Greek text there is a shift to the present tense here; the previous verbs translated "had" are imperfects.

26 tn See BDAG 352 s.v. ἐξουσία 2, "potential or resource to command, control, or govern, capability, might, power."

27 sn Both the Hebrew Abaddon and the Greek Apollyon mean "Destroyer."

28 tn Grk "behold." Here ἰδού (idou) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in the context.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

30 tc ‡ Several key MSS (𝔓[47] 𝔎[1] A 0207 1611 2053 2344 pc lat sy[h] co) lack the word τεσσάρων (tessarōn, "four") before κεράτων (keratōn, "horns"). The word seems to have been added by scribes because a "horned" altar (described in the OT [Exod 30:2, 10]) could have only four "horns" or projections at the corners. NA[27] includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

31 tn Grk "having."

32 tn On λῦσον (luson) BDAG 606-7 s.v. λύω 2 states, "set free, loose, untie – a. lit. a pers., animal, or thing that is bound or tied...Angels that are bound Rv 9:14f."

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

34 tn The Greek article τήν (tēn) has been translated with demonstrative force here.

35 tn The Greek term καί (kai) has not been translated here and before the following term "month" since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

36 tn Grk "so that they might kill," but the English infinitive is an equivalent construction to indicate purpose here.

37 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

38 tn Grk "twenty thousand of ten thousands."

I heard their number. 9:17 Now[1] this is what the horses and their riders[2] looked like in my[3] vision: The riders had breastplates that were fiery red,[4] dark blue,[5] and sulfurous[6] yellow in color.[7] The[8] heads of the horses looked like lions' heads, and fire, smoke, and sulfur[9] came out of their mouths. 9:18 A third of humanity was killed by these three plagues, that is,[10] by the fire, the smoke, and the sulfur that came out of their mouths. 9:19 For the power[11] of the horses resides[12] in their mouths and in their tails, because their tails are like snakes, having heads that inflict injuries. 9:20 The rest of humanity, who had not been killed by these plagues, did not repent of the works of their hands, so that they did not stop worshiping demons and idols made[13] of gold, silver,[14] bronze, stone, and wood – idols that cannot see or hear or walk about. 9:21 Furthermore,[15] they did not repent of their murders, of their magic spells,[16] of their sexual immorality, or of their stealing.

The Angel with the Little Scroll

10:1 Then[17] I saw another powerful angel descending from heaven, wrapped[18] in a cloud, with a rainbow above his head; his face was like the sun and his legs were like pillars of fire.[19] 10:2 He held[20] in his hand a little scroll that was open, and he put his right foot on the sea and his left on the land. 10:3 Then[21] he shouted in a loud voice like a lion roaring, and when he shouted, the seven thunders sounded their voices. 10:4 When the seven thunders spoke, I was preparing to write, but[22] just then[23] I heard a voice from heaven say, "Seal up what the seven thunders spoke and do not write it down." 10:5 Then[24] the angel I saw standing on the sea and on the land raised his right hand to heaven 10:6 and swore by the one who lives forever and ever, who created heaven and what is in it, and the earth and what is in it, and the sea and what is in it, "There will be no more delay![25] 10:7 But in the days[26] when the seventh angel is about to blow his trumpet, the mystery of God is completed,[27] just as he has[28] proclaimed to his servants[29] the prophets." 10:8 Then[30] the voice I had heard from heaven began to speak[31] to me[32] again,[33]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of the description of the horses and riders, which is somewhat parenthetical in the narrative.

2 tn Grk "and those seated on them."

3 tn Grk "the vision"; the Greek article has been translated as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

4 tn L&N 79.31 states, "'fiery red' (probably with a tinge of yellow or orange)."

5 tn On this term BDAG 1022 s.v. ὑακίνθινος states, "hyacinth-colored, i.e. dark blue (dark red?) w. πύρινος Rv 9:17."

6 tn On this term BDAG 446 s.v. θειώδης states, "sulphurous Rv 9:17."

7 sn The colors of the riders' breastplates parallel the three plagues of fire, smoke, and sulfur in v. 18.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

9 tn Traditionally, "brimstone."

10 tn The phrase ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς καὶ τοῦ καπνοῦ καὶ τοῦ θείου τοῦ ἐκπορευομένου ἐκ τῶν στομάτων αὐτῶν ("by the fire, the smoke, and the sulfur that came out of their mouths") is taken as epexegetical (explanatory) to the phrase τῶν τριῶν πληγῶν τούτων ("these three plagues").

11 tn See BDAG 352 s.v. ἐξουσία 2, "potential or resource to command, control, or govern, capability, might, power."

12 tn Grk "is."

13 tn The word "made" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

14 tn The Greek conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here or before the following materials in this list, since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

15 tn Grk "and." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation, with "furthermore" used to indicate a continuation of the preceding.

16 tn On the term φαρμακεία (pharmakeia, "magic spells") see L&N 53.100: "the use of magic, often involving drugs and the casting of spells upon people – 'to practice magic, to cast spells upon, to engage in sorcery, magic, sorcery.' φαρμακεία: ἐν τῇ φαρμακείᾳ σου ἐπλανήθησαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη 'with your magic spells you deceived all the peoples (of the world)' Re 18:23."

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

18 tn Or "clothed."

19 tn Or "like fiery pillars," translating πυρός (puros) as an attributive genitive.

20 tn Grk "and having." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "he."

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

23 tn The words "just then" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

25 tn On this phrase see BDAG 1092 s.v. χρόνος.

26 tn Grk "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel."

27 tn The aorist ἐτελέσθη (etelesthē) has been translated as a proleptic (futuristic) aorist (ExSyn 564 cites this verse as an example).

28 tn The time of the action described by the aorist εὐηγγέλισεν (euēngelisen) seems to be past with respect to the aorist passive ἐτελέσθη (etelesthē). This does not require that the prophets in view here be OT prophets. They may actually refer to the martyrs in the church (so G. B. Caird, Revelation [HNTC], 129).

29 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

31 tn The participle λαλοῦσαν (lalousan) has been translated as "began to speak." The use of πάλιν (palin) indicates an ingressive idea.

32 tn Grk "with me." The translation "with me" implies that John was engaged in a dialogue with the one speaking to him (e.g., Jesus or an angel) when in reality it was a one-sided conversation, with John doing all the listening. For this reason, μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ (met' emou, "with me") was translated as "to me."

33 tn Grk "again, saying." The participle λέγουσαν (legousan) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

"Go and take the open[1] scroll in the hand of the angel who is standing on the sea and on the land." 10:9 So[2] I went to the angel and asked him to give me the little scroll. He[3] said to me, "Take the scroll[4] and eat it. It[5] will make your stomach bitter, but it will be as sweet as honey in your mouth." 10:10 So[6] I took the little scroll from the angel's hand and ate it, and it did taste[7] as sweet as honey in my mouth, but[8] when I had eaten it, my stomach became bitter. 10:11 Then[9] they[10] told me: "You must prophesy again about many peoples, nations,[11] languages, and kings."

The Fate of the Two Witnesses

11:1 Then[12] a measuring rod[13] like a staff was given to me, and I was told,[14] "Get up and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and the ones who worship there. 11:2 But[15] do not measure the outer courtyard[16] of the temple; leave it out,[17] because it has been given to the Gentiles,[18] and they will trample on the holy city[19] for forty-two months. 11:3 And I will grant my two witnesses authority[20] to prophesy for 1,260 days, dressed in sackcloth. 11:4 (These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands that stand before the Lord of the earth.)[21] 11:5 If[22] anyone wants to harm them, fire comes out of their mouths[23] and completely consumes[24] their enemies. If[25] anyone wants to harm them, they must be killed this way. 11:6 These two have the power[26] to close up the sky so that it does not rain during the time[27] they are prophesying. They[28] have power[29] to turn the waters to blood and to strike the earth with every kind of plague whenever they want. 11:7 When[30] they have completed their testimony, the beast that comes up from the abyss will make war on them and conquer[31] them and kill them. 11:8 Their[32] corpses will lie in the street[33] of the great city that is symbolically[34] called Sodom and Egypt, where their Lord was also crucified. 11:9 For three and a half days those from every[35] people, tribe,[36] nation, and language will look at their corpses, because they will not permit them to be placed in a tomb.[37] 11:10 And those who live on the earth will rejoice over them and celebrate, even sending gifts to each other, because these two prophets had tormented those who live on the earth. 11:11 But[38] after three and a half days a breath of life from God entered them, and they stood on their feet, and tremendous fear seized[39] those who were watching them. 11:12 Then[40] they[41] heard a loud voice from heaven saying to them: "Come up here!" So the two prophets[42]

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the instructions given by the angel.

[7] tn Grk "it was." The idea of taste is implied.

[8] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[10] tn The referent of "they" is not clear in the Greek text.

[11] tn Grk "and nations," but καί (kai) has not been translated here or before the next item since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[13] tn Grk "a reed" (but these were used for measuring). Cf. Ezek 40:3ff.

[14] tn Grk "saying."

[15] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[16] tn On the term αὐλήν (aulēn) BDAG 150 s.v. αὐλή 1 states, "(outer) court of the temple...Rv 11:2."

[17] tn The precise meaning of the phrase ἔκβαλε ἔξωθεν (ekbale exōthen) is difficult to determine.

[18] tn Or "to the nations" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

[19] sn The holy city appears to be a reference to Jerusalem. See also Luke 21:24.

[20] tn The word "authority" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. "Power" would be another alternative that could be supplied here.

[21] sn This description is parenthetical in nature.

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[23] tn This is a collective singular in Greek.

[24] tn See L&N 20.45 for the translation of κατεσθίω (katesthiō) as "to destroy utterly, to consume completely."

[25] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[26] tn Or "authority."

[27] tn Grk "the days."

[28] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[29] tn Or "authority."

[30] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[31] tn Or "be victorious over"; traditionally, "overcome."

[32] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[33] tn The Greek word πλατεῖα (plateia) refers to a major (broad) street (L&N 1.103).

[34] tn Grk "spiritually."

[35] tn The word "every" is not in the Greek text, but is implied by the following list.

[36] tn The Greek term καί (kai) has not been translated before this and the following items in the list, since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[37] tn Or "to be buried."

[38] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[39] tn Grk "fell upon."

[40] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[41] tn Though the nearest antecedent to the subject of ἤκουσαν (ēkousan) is the people ("those who were watching them"), it could also be (based on what immediately follows) that the two prophets are the ones who heard the voice.

[42] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the two prophets) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

went up to heaven in a cloud while[1] their enemies stared at them. 11:13 Just then[2] a major earthquake took place and a tenth of the city collapsed; seven thousand people[3] were killed in the earthquake, and the rest were terrified and gave glory to the God of heaven.

11:14 The second woe has come and gone;[4] the third is coming quickly.

The Seventh Trumpet

11:15 Then[5] the seventh angel blew his trumpet, and there were loud voices in heaven saying:

"The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ,[6] and he will reign for ever and ever."

11:16 Then[7] the twenty-four elders who are seated on their thrones before God threw themselves down with their faces to the ground[8] and worshiped God 11:17 with these words:[9]

"We give you thanks, Lord God, the All-Powerful,[10]
the one who is and who was, because you have taken your great power and begun to reign.[11]
11:18 The[12] nations[13] were enraged, but[14] your wrath has come, and the time has come for the dead to be judged, and the time has come to give to your servants,[15]
the prophets, their reward, as well as to the saints and to those who revere[16] your name, both small and great, and the time has come[17] to destroy those who destroy[18] the earth."

11:19 Then[19] the temple of God in heaven was opened and the ark of his covenant was visible within his temple. And there were flashes of lightning, roaring,[20] crashes of thunder, an earthquake, and a great hailstorm.[21]

The Woman, the Child, and the Dragon

12:1 Then[22] a great sign appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, and with the moon under her feet, and on her head was a crown of twelve stars.[23] 12:2 She[24] was pregnant and was screaming in labor pains, struggling[25] to give birth. 12:3 Then[26] another sign appeared in heaven: a huge red dragon that had seven heads and ten horns, and on its heads were seven diadem crowns.[27] 12:4 Now[28] the dragon's[29] tail swept away a third of the stars in heaven and hurled them to the earth. Then[30] the dragon stood before the woman who was about to give birth, so that he might devour her child as soon

[1] tn The conjunction καί (kai) seems to be introducing a temporal clause contemporaneous in time with the preceding clause.

[2] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[3] tn Grk "seven thousand names of men."

[4] tn Grk "has passed."

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[6] tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

[7] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[8] tn Grk "they fell down on their faces." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

[9] tn Grk "saying."

[10] tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

[11] tn The aorist verb ἐβασίλευσας (ebasileusas) has been translated ingressively.

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[13] tn Or "The Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[15] tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[16] tn Grk "who fear."

[17] tn The words "the time has come" do not occur except at the beginning of the verse; the phrase has been repeated for emphasis and contrast. The Greek has one finite verb ("has come") with a compound subject ("your wrath," "the time"), followed by three infinitive clauses ("to be judged," "to give," "to destroy"). The rhetorical power of the repetition of the finite verb in English thus emulates the rhetorical power of its lone instance in Greek.

[18] tn Or "who deprave." There is a possible wordplay here on two meanings for διαφθείρω (diaphtheirō), with the first meaning "destroy" and the second meaning either "to ruin" or "to make morally corrupt." See L&N 20.40.

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence on events within the vision.

[20] tn Or "sounds," "voices." It is not entirely clear what this refers to. BDAG 1071 s.v. φωνή 1 states, "In Rv we have ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί (cp. Ex 19:16) 4:5; 8:5; 11:19; 16:18 (are certain other sounds in nature thought of here in addition to thunder, as e.g. the roar of the storm?...)."

[21] tn Although BDAG 1075 s.v. χάλαζα gives the meaning "hail" here, it is not clear whether the adjective μεγάλη (megalē) refers to the intensity of the storm or the size of the individual hailstones, or both.

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[23] sn Sun...moon...stars. This imagery is frequently identified with the nation Israel because of Joseph's dream in Gen 37.

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[25] tn Grk "and being tortured," though βασανίζω (basanizō) in this context refers to birth pangs. BDAG 168 s.v. 2.b states, "Of birth-pangs (Anth. Pal. 9, 311 βάσανος has this mng.) Rv 12:2." The καί (kai) has not been translated.

[26] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[27] tn For the translation of διάδημα (diadēma) as "diadem crown" see L&N 6.196.

sn Diadem crowns were a type of crown used as a symbol of the highest ruling authority in a given area, and thus often associated with kingship.

[28] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate that this remark is virtually parenthetical.

[29] tn Grk "its"; the referent (the dragon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[30] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

as it was born. 12:5 So[1] the woman gave birth to a son, a male child,[2] who is going to rule[3] over all the nations[4] with an iron rod.[5] Her[6] child was suddenly caught up to God and to his throne, 12:6 and she[7] fled into the wilderness[8] where a place had been prepared for her[9] by God, so she could be taken care of[10] for 1,260 days.

War in Heaven

12:7 Then[11] war broke out in heaven: Michael[12] and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon and his angels fought back. 12:8 But[13] the dragon was not strong enough to prevail,[14] so there was no longer any place left[15] in heaven for him and his angels.[16] 12:9 So[17] that huge dragon – the ancient serpent, the one called the devil and Satan, who deceives the whole world – was thrown down to the earth, and his angels along with him. 12:10 Then[18] I heard a loud voice in heaven saying,

> "The salvation and the power > and the kingdom of our God, > and the ruling authority[19] of his Christ,[20]
> have now come,
> because the accuser of our brothers and sisters,[21]
> the one who accuses them day and night[22] > before our God, > has been thrown down.
> 12:11 But[23] they overcame him > by the blood of the Lamb > and by the word of their testimony, > and they did not love their lives[24] so much > that they were afraid to die.
> 12:12 Therefore you heavens rejoice, and > all who reside in them!
> But[25] woe to the earth and the sea > because the devil has come down to you!
> He[26] is filled with terrible anger, > for he knows that he only has a little > time!"

12:13 Now[27] when the dragon realized[28] that he had been thrown down to the earth, he pursued the woman who had given birth to the male child. 12:14 But[29] the woman was given the two wings of a giant eagle so that she could fly out into the wilderness,[30] to the place God[31] prepared for her, where she is taken care of – away from the presence of the serpent – for a time, times, and half a time.[32] 12:15 Then[33] the serpent spouted water like a river out of his mouth after the woman in an attempt to[34] sweep her away by a flood, 12:16 but[35] the earth came to her

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the conclusion of the anticipated birth.

2 tn On this term BDAG 135 s.v. ἄρσην states: "male...The neut. ἄρσεν Rv 12:5, difft. vs. 13, comes fr. Is 66:7 and is in apposition to υἱόν. On the juxtaposition s. FBoll, ZNW 15, 1914, 253; BOlsson, Glotta 23, '34, 112."

3 tn Grk "shepherd."

4 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

5 tn Or "scepter." The Greek term ῥάβδος (rhabdos) can mean either "rod" or "scepter."

sn An allusion to Ps 2:9 (see also Rev 2:27; 19:15).

6 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 tn Grk "and the woman," which would be somewhat redundant in English.

8 tn Or "desert."

9 tn Grk "where she has there a place prepared by God."

10 tn Grk "so they can take care of her."

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

12 sn The archangel Michael had a special role in protecting the nation of Israel in the OT (Dan 10:13, 21; 12:1; see also Jude 9).

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the implied contrast.

14 tn The words "to prevail" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

15 tn Grk "found."

16 tn Grk "for them"; the referent (the dragon and his angels, v. 7) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the war in heaven.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

19 tn Or "the right of his Messiah to rule." See L&N 37.35.

20 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

21 tn Grk "brothers," but the Greek word may be used for "brothers and sisters" or "fellow Christians" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 1, where considerable nonbiblical evidence for the plural ἀδελφοί [adelphoi] meaning "brothers and sisters" is cited). The translation "fellow believer" would normally apply (L&N 11.23), but since the speaker(s) are not specified in this context, it is not clear if such a translation would be appropriate here. The more generic "brothers and sisters" was chosen to emphasize the fact of a relationship without specifying its type.

22 tn Or "who accuses them continually."

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast.

24 sn They did not love their lives. See Matt 16:25; Luke 17:33; John 12:25.

25 tn The word "But" is not in the Greek text, but the contrast is clearly implied. This is a case of asyndeton (lack of a connective).

26 tn Grk "and is filled," a continuation of the previous sentence. Because English tends to use shorter sentences (especially when exclamations are involved), a new sentence was started here in the translation.

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" because the clause it introduces is clearly resumptive.

28 tn Grk "saw."

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present here.

30 tn Or "desert."

31 tn The word "God" is supplied based on the previous statements made concerning "the place prepared for the woman" in 12:6.

32 tc The reading "and half a time" (καὶ ἥμισυ καιροῦ, kai hēmisu kairou) is lacking in the important uncial C. Its inclusion, however, is supported by {𝔓47 ℵ A and the rest of the ᴍs tradition}. There is apparently no reason for the scribe of C to intentionally omit the phrase, and the fact that the word "time" (καιρὸν καὶ καιρούς, kairon kai kairous) appears twice before may indicate a scribal oversight.

sn The parallel statement in Rev 12:6 suggests that the phrase a time, times, and half a time equals 1,260 days (three and a half years of 360 days each).

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

34 tn Grk "so that he might make her swept away."

35 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present here.

rescue;[1] the ground opened up[2] and swallowed the river that the dragon had spewed from his mouth. 12:17 So[3] the dragon became enraged at the woman and went away to make war on the rest of her children,[4] those who keep[5] God's commandments and hold to[6] the testimony about Jesus.[7] 12:18 And the dragon[8] stood[9] on the sand[10] of the seashore.[11]

The Two Beasts

13:1 Then[12] I saw a beast coming up out of the sea. It[13] had ten horns and seven heads, and on its horns were ten diadem crowns,[14] and on its heads a blasphemous name.[15] 13:2 Now[16] the beast that I saw was like a leopard, but its feet were like a bear's, and its mouth was like a lion's mouth. The[17] dragon gave the beast[18] his power, his throne, and great authority to rule.[19] 13:3 One of the beast's[20] heads appeared to have been killed,[21] but the lethal wound had been healed.[22] And the whole world followed[23] the beast in amazement; 13:4 they worshiped the dragon because he had given ruling authority[24] to the beast, and they worshiped the beast too, saying: "Who is like the beast?" and "Who is able to make war against him?"[25] 13:5 The beast[26] was given a mouth speaking proud words[27] and blasphemies, and he was permitted[28] to exercise ruling authority[29] for forty-two months.

[1] tn Grk "the earth helped the woman."

[2] tn Grk "the earth opened its mouth" (a metaphor for the ground splitting open).

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the woman's escape.

[4] tn Grk "her seed" (an idiom for offspring, children, or descendants).

[5] tn Or "who obey."

[6] tn Grk "and having."

[7] tn Grk "the testimony of Jesus," which may involve a subjective genitive ("Jesus' testimony") or, more likely, an objective genitive ("testimony about Jesus").

[8] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the dragon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tc Grk ἐστάθη (estathē, "he stood"). The reading followed by the translation is attested by the better MSS (𝔓47 ℵ A C 1854 2344 2351 pc lat sy^{h}) while the majority of MSS (051 𝔐 vg^{mss} sy^{ph} co) have the reading ἐστάθην (estathēn, "I stood"). Thus, the majority of MSS make the narrator, rather than the dragon of 12:17, the subject of the verb. The first person reading is most likely an assimilation to the following verb in 13:1, "I saw." The reading "I stood" was introduced either by accident or to produce a smoother flow, giving the narrator a vantage point on the sea's edge from which to observe the beast rising out of the sea in 13:1. But almost everywhere else in the book, the phrase καὶ εἶδον (kai eidon, "and I saw") marks a transition to a new vision, without reference to the narrator's activity. On both external and internal grounds, it is best to adopt the third person reading, "he stood."

[10] tn Or "sandy beach" (L&N 1.64).

[11] sn The standard critical texts of the Greek NT, NA^{27} and UBS^{4}, both include this sentence as 12:18, as do the RSV and NRSV. Other modern translations like the NASB and NIV include the sentence at the beginning of 13:1; in these versions chap. 12 has only 17 verses.

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[13] tn Grk "having" (a continuation of the previous sentence). All of the pronouns referring to this beast (along with the second beast appearing in 13:11) could be translated as "it" because the word for beast (θηρίον, thērion) is neuter gender in Greek and all the pronouns related to it are parsed as neuter in the Gramcord/Accordance database. Nevertheless, most interpreters would agree that the beast ultimately represents a human ruler, so beginning at the end of v. 4 the masculine pronouns ("he," "him," etc.) are used to refer to the first beast as well as the second beast appearing in 13:11.

[14] tn For the translation of διάδημα (diadēma) as "diadem crown" see L&N 6.196.

sn Diadem crowns were a type of crown used as a symbol of the highest ruling authority in a given area, and thus often associated with kingship.

[15] tc ‡ Several MSS (A 051 1611 1854 2053 2344 2351 𝔐^{K}) read the plural ὀνόματα (onomata, "[blasphemous] names"), while the singular ὄνομα (onoma, "name") has somewhat better support (𝔓47 ℵ C 1006 1841 2329 𝔐^{A}). The plural reading seems motivated by the fact that what is written is written "on its heads." In the least, it is a clarifying reading. NA^{27} puts the plural in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

sn Whether this means a single name on all seven heads or seven names, one on each head, is not clear.

[16] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the parenthetical nature of the following description of the beast.

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[18] tn Grk "gave it"; the referent (the beast) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] tn For the translation "authority to rule" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

[20] tn Grk "one of its heads"; the referent (the beast) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[21] tn Grk "killed to death," an expression emphatic in its redundancy. The phrase behind this translation is ὡς ἐσφαγμένον (hōs esphagmenon). The particle ὡς is used in Greek generally for comparison, and in Revelation it is used often to describe the appearance of what the author saw. In this instance, the appearance of the beast's head did not match reality, because the next phrase shows that in fact it did not die. This text does not affirm that the beast died and was resurrected, but some draw this conclusion because of the only other use of the phrase, which refers to Jesus in 5:6.

[22] tn The phrase τοῦ θανάτου (tou thanatou) can be translated as an attributive genitive ("deathly wound") or an objective genitive (the wound which caused death) and the final αὐτοῦ (autou) is either possessive or reference/respect.

[23] tn On the phrase "the whole world followed the beast in amazement," BDAG 445 s.v. θαυμάζω 2 states, "wonder, be amazed...Rv 17:8. In pregnant constr. ἐθαυμάσθη ὅλη ἡ γῆ ὀπίσω τ. θηρίου the whole world followed the beast, full of wonder 13:3 (here wonder becomes worship: cp. Ael. Aristid. 13 p. 290 D.; 39 p. 747 of Dionysus and Heracles, οἳ ὑφ' ἡμῶν ἐθαυμάσθησαν. Sir 7:29; Jos., Ant. 3, 65. – The act. is also found in this sense: Cebes 2, 3 θ. τινά = 'admire' or 'venerate' someone; Epict. 1, 17, 19 θ. τὸν θεόν)."

[24] tn For the translation "ruling authority" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

[25] tn On the use of the masculine pronoun to refer to the beast, see the note on the word "It" in 13:1.

[26] tn Grk "and there was given to him." Here the passive construction has been simplified, the referent (the beast) has been specified for clarity, and καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[27] tn For the translation "proud words" (Grk "great things" or "important things") see BDAG 624 s.v. μέγας 4.b.

[28] tn Grk "to it was granted."

[29] tn For the translation "ruling authority" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

13:6 So[1] the beast[2] opened his mouth to blaspheme against God – to blaspheme both his name and his dwelling place,[3] that is, those who dwell in heaven. 13:7 The beast[4] was permitted to go to war against the saints and conquer them.[5] He was given ruling authority[6] over every tribe, people,[7] language, and nation, 13:8 and all those who live on the earth will worship the beast,[8] everyone whose name has not been written since the foundation of the world[9] in the book of life belonging to the Lamb who was killed.[10] 13:9 If anyone has an ear, he had better listen!

13:10 If anyone is meant for captivity, into captivity he will go.
If anyone is to be killed by the sword,[11]
then by the sword he must be killed.

This[12] requires steadfast endurance[13] and faith from the saints.

13:11 Then[14] I saw another beast[15] coming up from the earth. He[16] had two horns like a lamb,[17] but[18] was speaking like a dragon. 13:12 He[19] exercised all the ruling authority[20] of the first beast on his behalf,[21] and made the earth and those who inhabit it worship the first beast, the one whose lethal wound had been healed. 13:13 He[22] performed momentous signs, even making fire come down from heaven in front of people[23] 13:14 and, by the signs he was permitted to perform on behalf of the beast, he

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the permission granted to the beast.

2 tn Grk "he" (or "it"); the referent (the beast) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tc The reading "and his dwelling place" does not occur in codex C, but its omission is probably due to scribal oversight since the phrase has the same ending as the phrase before it, i.e., they both end in "his" (αὐτοῦ, autou). This is similar to the mistake this scribe made in 12:14 with the omission of the reading "and half a time" (καὶ ἥμισυ καιροῦ, kai hēmisu kairou).

4 tn Grk "and it was given to him to go to war." Here the passive construction has been simplified, the referent (the beast) has been specified for clarity, and καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

5 tc Many MSS omit the phrase "it was given to make war with the saints and to overcome them" (𝔓47 A C 2053 𝔐A sa). It is, however, found in 𝔓115vid ℵ 051 1006 (1611) 1841 (1854) 2329 2344 2351 (𝔐K) lat syph,(h) bo. Although the MS evidence is somewhat in favor of the shorter reading, the support of 𝔓115 (a recently-discovered MS) for the longer reading balances things out. Normally, the shorter reading should be given preference. However, in an instance in which homoioteleuton could play a role, caution must be exercised. In this passage, accidental omission is quite likely. That this could have happened seems apparent from the two occurrences of the identical phrase "and it was given to him" (καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ, kai edothē autō) in v. 7. The scribe's eye skipped over the first καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ and went to the second, hence creating an accidental omission of eleven words.

6 tn For the translation "ruling authority" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

7 tn Grk "and people," but καί (kai) has not been translated here or before the following term since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

8 tn Grk "it"; the referent (the beast) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn The prepositional phrase "since the foundation of the world" is traditionally translated as a modifier of the immediately preceding phrase in the Greek text, "the Lamb who was killed" (so also G. B. Caird, Revelation [HNTC], 168), but it is more likely that the phrase "since the foundation of the world" modifies the verb "written" (as translated above). Confirmation of this can be found in Rev 17:8 where the phrase "written in the book of life since the foundation of the world" occurs with no ambiguity.

10 tn Or "slaughtered"; traditionally, "slain."

11 tc Many MSS (C 051* 2351 𝔐A pc) read "if anyone will kill with the sword, it is necessary for him to be killed with the sword" (εἴ τις ἐν μαχαίρῃ ἀποκτενεῖ, δεῖ αὐτὸν ἐν μαχαίρῃ ἀποκτανθῆναι). Other MSS (ℵ 1006 1611* 1854 al) are similar except that they read a present tense "kills" (ἀποκτείνει, apokteinei) in this sentence. Both of these variants may be regarded as essentially saying the same thing. On the other hand, codex A reads "if anyone is to be killed by the sword, he is to be killed by the sword" (εἴ τις ἐν μαχαίρῃ ἀποκτανθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐν μαχαίρῃ ἀποκτανθῆναι). Thus the first two variants convey the idea of retribution, while the last variant, supported by codex A, does not. (There are actually a dozen variants here, evidence that scribes found the original text quite difficult. Only the most important variants are discussed in this note.) The first two variants seem to be in line with Jesus' comments in Matt 26:52: "everyone who takes up the sword will die by the sword." The last variant, however, seems to be taking up an idea found in Jer 15:2: "Those destined for death, to death; those for the sword, to the sword; those for starvation, to starvation; those for captivity, to captivity." Though G. B. Caird, Revelation (HNTC), 169-70, gives four arguments in favor of the first reading (i.e., "whoever kills with the sword must with the sword be killed"), the arguments he puts forward can be read equally as well to support the latter alternative. In the end, the reading in codex A seems to be original. The fact that this sentence seems to be in parallel with 10a (which simply focuses on God's will and suffering passively and is therefore akin to the reading in codex A), and that it most likely gave rise to the others as the most difficult reading, argues for its authenticity.

12 tn On ὧδε (hōde) here, BDAG 1101 s.v. 2 states: "a ref. to a present event, object, or circumstance, in this case, at this point, on this occasion, under these circumstances…in this case moreover 1 Cor 4:2. ὧδε ἡ σοφία ἐστίν…Rv 13:18; cf. 17:9. ὧδέ ἐστιν ἡ ὑπομονή…13:10; 14:12."

13 tn Or "perseverance."

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

15 sn This second beast is identified in Rev 16:13 as "the false prophet."

16 tn Grk "and it had," a continuation of the preceding sentence. On the use of the pronoun "he" to refer to the second beast, see the note on the word "It" in 13:1.

17 tn Or perhaps, "like a ram." Here L&N 4.25 states, "In the one context in the NT, namely, Re 13:11, in which ἀρνίον refers literally to a sheep, it is used in a phrase referring to the horns of an ἀρνίον. In such a context the reference is undoubtedly to a 'ram,' that is to say, the adult male of sheep." In spite of this most translations render the word "lamb" here to maintain the connection between this false lamb and the true Lamb of the Book of Revelation, Jesus Christ.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

20 tn For the translation "ruling authority" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

21 tn For this meaning see BDAG 342 s.v. ἐνώπιον 4.b, "by the authority of, on behalf of Rv 13:12, 14; 19:20."

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both men and women.

deceived those who live on the earth. He told[1] those who live on the earth to make an image to the beast who had been wounded by the sword, but still lived. 13:15 The second beast[2] was empowered[3] to give life[4] to the image of the first beast[5] so that it could speak, and could cause all those who did not worship the image of the beast to be killed. 13:16 He also caused[6] everyone (small and great, rich and poor, free and slave[7]) to obtain a mark on their right hand or on their forehead. 13:17 Thus no one was allowed to buy[8] or sell things[9] unless he bore[10] the mark of the beast – that is, his name or his number.[11] 13:18 This calls for wisdom:[12] Let the one who has insight calculate the beast's number, for it is man's number,[13] and his number is 666.[14]

An Interlude: The Song of the 144,000

14:1 Then[15] I looked, and here was[16] the Lamb standing on Mount Zion, and with him were one hundred and forty-four thousand, who had his name and his Father's name written on their foreheads. 14:2 I also heard a sound[17] coming out of heaven like the sound of many waters and like the sound of loud thunder. Now[18] the sound I heard was like that made by harpists playing their harps, 14:3 and they were singing a new song before the throne and before the four living creatures and the elders. No[19] one was able to learn the song except the one hundred and forty-four thousand who had been redeemed from the earth.

14:4 These are the ones who have not defiled themselves[20] with women, for they are virgins. These are the ones who follow the Lamb wherever he goes. These were redeemed from humanity as firstfruits to God and to the Lamb, 14:5 and no lie was found on their lips;[21] they[22] are blameless.

---

1 tn Grk "earth, telling." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in Greek.

sn He told followed by an infinitive ("to make an image…") is sufficiently ambiguous in Greek that it could be taken as "he ordered" (so NIV) or "he persuaded" (so REB).

2 tn Grk "it"; the referent (the second beast) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "it was given [permitted] to it [the second beast]."

4 tn Grk "breath," but in context the point is that the image of the first beast is made to come to life and speak.

5 tn Grk "of the beast"; the word "first" has been supplied to specify the referent.

6 tn Or "forced"; Grk "makes" (ποιεῖ, poiei).

7 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

8 tn Grk "and that no one be able to buy or sell." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Although the ἵνα (hina) is left untranslated, the English conjunction "thus" is used to indicate that this is a result clause.

9 tn The word "things" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context. In the context of buying and selling, food could be primarily in view, but the more general "things" was used in the translation because the context is not specific.

10 tn Grk "except the one who had."

11 tn Grk "his name or the number of his name."

12 tn Grk "Here is wisdom."

13 tn Grk "it is man's number." ExSyn 254 states "if ἀνθρώπου is generic, then the sense is, 'It is [the] number of humankind.' It is significant that this construction fits Apollonius' Canon (i.e., both the head noun and the genitive are anarthrous), suggesting that if one of these nouns is definite, then the other is, too. Grammatically, those who contend that the sense is 'it is [the] number of a man' have the burden of proof on them (for they treat the head noun, ἀριθμός, as definite and the genitive, ἀνθρώπου, as indefinite – the rarest of all possibilities). In light of Johannine usage, we might also add Rev 16:18, where the Seer clearly uses the anarthrous ἄνθρωπος in a generic sense, meaning 'humankind.' The implications of this grammatical possibility, exegetically speaking, are simply that the number '666' is the number that represents humankind. Of course, an individual is in view, but his number may be the number representing all of humankind. Thus the Seer might be suggesting here that the antichrist, who is the best representative of humanity without Christ (and the best counterfeit of a perfect man that his master, that old serpent, could muster), is still less than perfection (which would have been represented by the number seven)." See G. K. Beale, Revelation, [NIGTC], 723-24, who argues for the "generic" understanding of the noun; for an indefinite translation, see the ASV and ESV which both translate the clause as "it is the number of a man."

sn The translation man's number suggests that the beast's number is symbolic of humanity in general, while the translation a man's number suggests that it represents an individual.

14 tc A few MSS (𝔓115 C, along with a few MSS known to Irenaeus {and two minuscule MSS, 5 and 11, no longer extant}), read 616 here, and several other witnesses have other variations. Irenaeus' mention of MSS that have 616 is balanced by his rejection of such witnesses in this case. As intriguing as the reading 616 is (since the conversion of Nero Caesar's name in Latin by way of gematria would come out to 616), it must remain suspect because such a reading seems motivated in that it conforms more neatly to Nero's gematria.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

16 tn The phrase "and here was" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

17 tn Or "a voice" (cf. Rev 1:15), but since in this context nothing is mentioned as the content of the voice, it is preferable to translate φωνή (phōnē) as "sound" here.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of a new topic.

19 tn Grk "elders, and no one." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text, but because of the length and complexity of the sentence a new sentence was started here in the translation.

20 tn The aorist passive verb is rendered as a reflexive ("defiled themselves") by BDAG 657 s.v. μολύνω 2.

21 tn Grk "in their mouth was not found a lie."

22 tc Several MSS (𝔓47 א 1 1006 1611 2351 𝔐K pc) have the conjunction "for" (γάρ, gar) here so that the phrase reads: "for they are blameless." Other important MSS (A C P 1854 2053 al lat) lack the word. The shorter reading is to be preferred since the scribes were more likely to make the connection explicit through the addition of "for" than they would have been to omit the conjunction. As it is, the passage without the conjunction makes good sense and evokes a very somber tone.

Three Angels and Three Messages

14:6 Then[1] I saw another[2] angel flying directly overhead,[3] and he had[4] an eternal gospel to proclaim[5] to those who live[6] on the earth – to every nation, tribe,[7] language, and people. 14:7 He declared[8] in a loud voice: "Fear God and give him glory, because the hour of his judgment has arrived, and worship the one who made heaven and earth, the sea and the springs of water!"

14:8 A[9] second[10] angel[11] followed the first,[12] declaring:[13] "Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great city![14] She made all the nations[15] drink of the wine of her immoral passion."[16]

14:9 A[17] third angel[18] followed the first two,[19] declaring[20] in a loud voice: "If anyone worships the beast and his image, and takes the mark on his forehead or his hand, 14:10 that person[21] will also drink of the wine of God's anger[22] that has been mixed undiluted in the cup of his wrath, and he will be tortured with fire and sulfur[23] in front of the holy angels and in front of the Lamb. 14:11 And the smoke from their[24] torture will go up[25] forever and ever, and those who worship the beast and his image will have[26] no rest day or night, along with[27] anyone who receives the mark of his name." 14:12 This requires[28] the steadfast endurance[29] of the saints – those who obey[30] God's commandments and hold to[31] their faith in Jesus.[32]

14:13 Then[33] I heard a voice from heaven say, "Write this:

> 'Blessed are the dead, > those who die in the Lord from this moment on!'"

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

2 tc Most MSS (𝔓47 ℵ* 𝔐 sa) lack ἄλλον (allon, "another") here, but the support for it is stronger (𝔓115vid ℵ2 A C P 051 1006 1611 1841 2053 2329 al latt sy bo). The problem that its inclusion represents is that there is no reference to any other angel in the immediate context (the last mention was in 11:15). In this instance, the longer reading is harder. The word was probably intentionally omitted in order to resolve the tension; less likely, it might have been accidentally omitted since its spelling is similar to "angel" (ἄγγελος, angelos).

3 tn L&N 1.10 states, "a point or region of the sky directly above the earth – 'high in the sky, midpoint in the sky, directly overhead, straight above in the sky.'"

4 tn Grk "having."

5 tn Or "an eternal gospel to announce as good news."

6 tn Grk "to those seated on the earth."

7 tn Grk "and tribe," but καί (kai) has not been translated here or before the following term since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

8 tn Grk "people, saying." In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence. For the translation of λέγω (legō) as "declare," see BDAG 590 s.v. 2.e.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

10 tc There are several different variants comprising a textual problem involving "second" (δεύτερος, deuteros). First, several MSS (A 1 2329 𝔐K) read "another, a second angel" (ἄλλος δεύτερος ἄγγελος, allos deuteros angelos). Second, other MSS (𝔓47 ℵ* 1006 1841 1854 pc) read just "another, a second" (ἄλλος δεύτερος). Third, the reading "another angel" (ἄλλος ἄγγελος) is supported by a few Greek MSS and some versional evidence (69 pc ar vg). Fourth, several MSS (ℵ2 [C reads δεύτερον instead of δεύτερος] 051 1611 2053 2344 𝔐A) support the reading "another, a second angel" (ἄλλος ἄγγελος δεύτερος). The reading that most likely gave rise to the others is the fourth. The first reading attempts to smooth out the grammar by placing the adjective in front of the noun. The second reading may have dropped out the "angel" on the basis of its similarity to "another" (ἄλλος). The third reading either intentionally or accidentally left out the word "second." In any event, this is weakly attested and should not be given much consideration. (If, however, this reading had had good support, with "second" floating, and with "third" in the text in 14:9, one could possibly see δεύτερος as a motivated reading. But without sufficient support for the third reading, the one thing that is most certain is that δεύτερος was part of the original text here.) It is difficult to account for the rise of the other readings if "second" is not original. And the undisputed use of "third" (τρίτος, tritos) in 14:9 may be another indicator that the adjective "second" was in the original text. Finally, the fourth reading is the more difficult and therefore, in this case, to be accepted as the progenitor of the others.

11 tn Grk "And another angel, a second."

12 tn The words "the first" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

13 tn For the translation of λέγω (legō) as "declare," see BDAG 590 s.v. 2.e.

14 sn The fall of Babylon the great city is described in detail in Rev 18:2-24.

15 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

16 tn Grk "of the wine of the passion of the sexual immorality of her." Here τῆς πορνείας (tēs porneias) has been translated as an attributive genitive. In an ironic twist of fate, God will make Babylon drink her own mixture, but it will become the wine of his wrath in retribution for her immoral deeds (see the note on the word "wrath" in 16:19).

17 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

18 tn Grk "And another angel, a third."

19 tn Grk "followed them."

20 tn For the translation of λέγω (legō) as "declare," see BDAG 590 s.v. 2.e.

21 tn Grk "he himself."

22 tn The Greek word for "anger" here is θυμός (thumos), a wordplay on the "passion" (θυμός) of the personified city of Babylon in 14:8.

23 tn Traditionally, "brimstone."

24 tn The Greek pronoun is plural here even though the verbs in the previous verse are singular.

25 tn The present tense ἀναβαίνει (anabainei) has been translated as a futuristic present (ExSyn 535-36). This is also consistent with the future passive βασανισθήσεται (basanisthēsetai) in v. 10.

26 tn The present tense ἔχουσιν (echousin) has been translated as a futuristic present to keep the English tense consistent with the previous verb (see note on "will go up" earlier in this verse).

27 tn Grk "and."

28 tn Grk "Here is."

29 tn Or "the perseverance."

30 tn Grk "who keep."

31 tn The words "hold to" are implied as a repetition of the participle translated "keep" (οἱ τηροῦντες, hoi tērountes).

32 tn Grk "faith of Jesus." The construction may mean either "faith in Jesus" or "faithful to Jesus." Either translation implies that Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou) is to be taken as an objective genitive; the difference is more lexical than grammatical because πίστις (pistis) can mean either "faith" or "faithfulness."

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

"Yes," says the Spirit, "so they can rest from their hard work,[1] because their deeds will follow them."[2]

14:14 Then[3] I looked, and a white cloud appeared,[4] and seated on the cloud was one like a son of man![5] He had[6] a golden crown on his head and a sharp sickle in his hand. 14:15 Then[7] another angel came out of the temple, shouting in a loud voice to the one seated on the cloud, "Use[8] your sickle and start to reap,[9] because the time to reap has come, since the earth's harvest is ripe!" 14:16 So[10] the one seated on the cloud swung his sickle over the earth, and the earth was reaped.

14:17 Then[11] another angel came out of the temple in heaven, and he too had a sharp sickle. 14:18 Another[12] angel, who was in charge of[13] the fire, came from the altar and called in a loud voice to the angel[14] who had the sharp sickle, "Use[15] your sharp sickle and gather[16] the clusters of grapes[17] off the vine of the earth,[18] because its grapes[19] are now ripe."[20] 14:19 So[21] the angel swung his sickle over the earth and gathered the grapes from the vineyard[22] of the earth and tossed them into the great[23] winepress of the wrath of God. 14:20 Then[24] the winepress was stomped[25] outside the city, and blood poured out of the winepress up to the height of horses' bridles[26] for a distance of almost two hundred miles.[27]

The Final Plagues

15:1 Then[28] I saw another great and astounding sign in heaven: seven angels who have seven final plagues[29] (they are final because in them God's anger is completed).

---

1 tn Or "from their trouble" (L&N 22.7).

2 tn Grk "their deeds will follow with them."

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

4 tn Grk "and behold, a white cloud."

5 tn This phrase constitutes an allusion to Dan 7:13. Concerning υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου (huios tou anthrōpou), BDAG 1026 s.v. υἱός 2.d.γ says: "ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου lit. 'the son of the man'...'the human being, the human one, the man'...On Israelite thought contemporary w. Jesus and alleged knowledge of a heavenly being looked upon as a 'Son of Man' or 'Man', who exercises Messianic functions such as judging the world (metaph., pictorial passages in En 46-48; 4 Esdr 13:3, 51f)...Outside the gospels: Ac 7:56...Rv 1:13; 14:14 (both after Da 7:13...)." The term "son" here in this expression is anarthrous and as such lacks specificity. Some commentators and translations take the expression as an allusion to Daniel 7:13 and not to "the son of man" found in gospel traditions (e.g., Mark 8:31; 9:12; cf. D. E. Aune, Revelation [WBC], 2:800-801; cf. also NIV). Other commentators and versions, however, take the phrase "son of man" as definite, involving allusions to Dan 7:13 and "the son of man" gospel traditions (see G. K. Beale, Revelation [NIGTC], 771-72; NRSV).

6 tn Grk "like a son of man, having." In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

8 tn Grk "Send out."

9 tn The aorist θέρισον (therison) has been translated ingressively.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's directions.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

12 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

13 tn Grk "who had authority over." This appears to be the angel who tended the fire on the altar.

14 tn Grk "to the one having the sharp sickle"; the referent (the angel in v. 17) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Grk "Send."

16 tn On this term BDAG 1018 s.v. τρυγάω states: "'gather in' ripe fruit, esp. harvest (grapes) w. acc. of the fruit (POslo. 21, 13 [71 AD]; Jos., Ant. 4, 227) Lk 6:44; Rv 14:18 (in imagery, as in the foll. places)...W. acc. of that which bears the fruit gather the fruit of the vine...or the vineyard (s. ἄμπελος a) Rv 14:19."

17 tn On this term BDAG 181 s.v. βότρυς states, "bunch of grapes Rv 14:18...The word is also found in the Phrygian Papias of Hierapolis, in a passage in which he speaks of the enormous size of the grapes in the new aeon (in the Lat. transl. in Irenaeus 5, 33, 2f.): dena millia botruum Papias (1:2). On this see Stephan. Byz. s.v. Εὐκαρπία: Metrophanes says that in the district of Εὐκαρπία in Phrygia Minor the grapes were said to be so large that one bunch of them caused a wagon to break down in the middle."

18 tn The genitive τῆς γῆς (tēs gēs), taken symbolically, could be considered a genitive of apposition.

19 tn Or perhaps, "its bunches of grapes" (a different Greek word from the previous clause). L&N 3.38 states, "the fruit of grapevines (see 3.27) – 'grape, bunch of grapes.' τρύγησον τοὺς βότρυας τῆς ἀμπέλου τῆς γῆς, ὅτι ἤκμασαν αἱ σταφυλαὶ αὐτῆς 'cut the grapes from the vineyard of the earth because its grapes are ripe' Re 14:18. Some scholars have contended that βότρυς means primarily a bunch of grapes, while σταφυλή designates individual grapes. In Re 14:18 this difference might seem plausible, but there is scarcely any evidence for such a distinction, since both words may signify grapes as well as bunches of grapes."

20 tn On the use of ἤκμασαν (ēkmasan) BDAG 36 s.v. ἀκμάζω states, "to bloom...of grapes...Rv 14:18."

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's directions.

22 tn Or "vine." BDAG 54 s.v. ἄμπελος a states, "τρυγᾶν τοὺς βότρυας τῆς ἀ. τῆς γῆς to harvest the grapes fr. the vine of the earth (i.e. fr. the earth, symbol. repr. as a grapevine) Rv 14:18f; but ἀ may be taking on the meaning of ἀμπελών, as oft. in pap., possibly PHib. 70b, 2 [III BC]." The latter alternative has been followed in the translation (ἀμπελών = "vineyard").

23 tn Although the gender of μέγαν (megan, masc.) does not match the gender of ληνόν (lēnon, fem.) it has been taken to modify that word (as do most English translations).

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

25 sn The winepress was stomped. See Isa 63:3, where Messiah does this alone (usually several individuals would join in the process).

26 tn L&N 6.7 states, "In Re 14:20 the reference to a bit and bridle is merely an indication of measurement, that is to say, the height of the bit and bridle from the ground, and one may reinterpret this measurement as 'about a meter and a half' or 'about five feet.'"

27 tn Grk "1,600 stades." A stade was a measure of length about 607 ft (185 m). Thus the distance here would be 184 mi or 296 km.

28 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

29 tn Grk "seven plagues – the last ones."

15:2 Then[1] I saw something like a sea of glass[2] mixed with fire, and those who had conquered[3] the beast and his image and the number of his name. They were standing[4] by[5] the sea of glass, holding harps given to them by God.[6] 15:3 They[7] sang the song of Moses the servant[8] of God and the song of the Lamb:[9]

"Great and astounding are your deeds,
Lord God, the All-Powerful![10]
Just[11] and true are your ways,
King over the nations![12]
15:4 Who will not fear you, O Lord, and glorify[13] your name, because you alone are holy?[14]
All nations[15] will come and worship before you for your righteous acts[16] have been revealed."

15:5 After[17] these things I looked, and the temple (the tent[18] of the testimony)[19] was opened in heaven, 15:6 and the seven angels who had the seven plagues came out of the temple, dressed in clean bright linen, wearing wide golden belts[20] around their chests. 15:7 Then[21] one of the four living creatures gave the seven angels seven

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

2 sn See Rev 4:6 where the sea of glass was mentioned previously.

3 tn Or "had been victorious over"; traditionally, "had overcome."

4 tn Grk "of his name, standing." A new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the words "They were."

5 tn Or "on." The preposition ἐπί (epi) with the accusative case could mean "on, at, by, near"; given the nature of this scene appearing in a vision, it is difficult to know precisely which the author of Revelation intended. See BDAG 363 s.v. ἐπί 1.c.γ, "At, by, near someone or someth."

6 tn Grk "harps of God." The phrase τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou) has been translated as a genitive of agency.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

8 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

9 tn Grk "saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

10 tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

11 tn Or "righteous," although the context favors justice as the theme.

12 tc Certain MSS (𝔓[47] ℵ*·2 C 1006 1611 1841 pc) read "ages" (αἰώνων, aiōnōn) instead of "nations" (ἐθνῶν, ethnōn), which itself is supported by several MSS (ℵ[1] A 051 𝔐). The MS evidence seems to be fairly balanced, though αἰώνων has somewhat better support. The replacement of "ages" with "nations" is possibly a scribal attempt to harmonize this verse with the use of "nations" in the following verse. On the other hand, the idea of "nations" fits well with v. 4 and it may be that "ages" is a scribal attempt to assimilate this text to 1 Tim 1:17: "the king of the ages" (βασιλεὺς τῶν αἰώνων, basileus tōn aiōnōn). The decision is a difficult one since both scenarios deal well with the evidence, though the verbal parallel with 1 Tim 1:17 is exact while the parallel with v. 4 is not. The term "king" occurs 17 other times (most occurrences refer to earthly kings) in Revelation and it is not used with either "ages" or "nations" apart from this verse. Probably the reading "nations" should be considered original due to the influence of 1 Tim 1:17.

13 tn Or "and praise."

sn Jeremiah 10:7 probably stands behind the idea of fearing God, and Psalm 86:9-10 stands behind the ideas of glorifying God, his uniqueness, and the nations coming to worship him. Many other OT passages also speak about the nations "coming to his temple" to worship (Isa 2:2-3; 49:22-23; 66:23-24; Micah 4:2; Zech 8:20-22). See G. K. Beale, Revelation (NIGTC), 796-97.

14 sn Because you alone are holy. In the Greek text the sentence literally reads "because alone holy." Three points can be made in connection with John's language here: (1) Omitting the second person, singular verb "you are" lays stress on the attribute of God's holiness. (2) The juxtaposition of alone with holy stresses the unique nature of God's holiness and complete "otherness" in relationship to his creation. It is not just moral purity which is involved in the use of the term holy, though it certainly includes that. It is also the pervasive OT idea that although God is deeply involved in the governing of his creation, he is to be regarded as separate and distinct from it. (3) John's use of the term holy is also intriguing since it is the term ὅσιος (hosios) and not the more common NT term ἅγιος (hagios). The former term evokes images of Christ's messianic status in early Christian preaching. Both Peter in Acts 2:27 and Paul in Acts 13:35 apply Psalm 16:10 (LXX) to Jesus, referring to him as the "holy one" (ὅσιος). It is also the key term in Acts 13:34 (Isa 55:3 [LXX]) where it refers to the "holy blessings" (i.e., forgiveness and justification) brought about through Jesus in fulfillment of Davidic promise. Thus, in Rev 15:3-4, when John refers to God as "holy," using the term ὅσιος in a context where the emphasis is on both God and Christ, there might be an implicit connection between divinity and the Messiah. This is bolstered by the fact that the Lamb is referred to in other contexts as the King of Kings and Lord of Lords (cf. 1:5; 17:14; 19:16 and perhaps 11:15; G. K. Beale, Revelation [NIGTC], 796-97).

15 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

16 tn Or perhaps, "your sentences of condemnation." On δικαίωμα (dikaiōma) in this context BDAG 249 s.v. 2. states, "righteous deed...δι᾽ ἑνὸς δικαιώματος (opp. παράπτωμα) Ro 5:18. – B 1:2 (cp. Wengst, Barnabas-brief 196, n.4); Rv 15:4 (here perh.= 'sentence of condemnation' [cp. Pla., Leg. 9, 864e; ins fr. Asia Minor: LBW 41, 2 [κατὰ] τὸ δι[καί]ωμα τὸ κυρω[θέν]= 'acc. to the sentence which has become valid']; difft. Wengst, s. above); 19:8."

17 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

18 tn On this term BDAG 928 s.v. σκηνή 1.b.α states, "ἡ σκηνὴ τοῦ μαρτυρίου the Tabernacle or Tent of Testimony (Ex 27:21; 29:4; Lev 1:1; Num 1:1 and oft....) Ac 7:44; 1 Cl 43:2, 5," and then continues in section 2 to state, "Rv 15:5 speaks of a ναὸς τῆς σκηνῆς τοῦ μαρτυρίου ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. God's σκ.= dwelling is in heaven 13:6, and will some time be among humans 21:3."

19 tn Grk "the temple of the tent of the testimony" (ὁ ναὸς τῆς σκηνῆς τοῦ μαρτυρίου, ho naos tēs skēnēs tou marturiou). The genitive "of the tent" is probably an appositional genitive and should be rendered as "the temple, which is the tent." The entire expression, then, would be "the temple which is the tent of testimony," that is, "the heavenly equivalent of the tent or tabernacle that was with Israel in the wilderness" (G. K. Beale, Revelation [NIGTC], 801-2).

sn In the OT the expression "tent of the testimony" occurs frequently (130 times in Exodus through Deuteronomy). The "testimony" refers to the ten commandments, i.e., the revelation of the righteous will of God (Exod 16:34; 25:21; 31:18; 32:15; 40:24). It is little wonder that the wrath of God upon an unrighteous, lawbreaking humanity follows in John's description.

20 tn Or "wide golden sashes," but these would not be diagonal, as some modern sashes are, but horizontal. The Greek term can refer to a wide band of cloth or leather worn on the outside of one's clothing (L&N 6.178).

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

golden bowls filled with the wrath[1] of God who lives forever and ever, 15:8 and the temple was filled with smoke from God's glory and from his power. Thus[2] no one could enter the temple until the seven plagues from the seven angels were completed.

The Bowls of God's Wrath

16:1 Then[3] I heard a loud voice from the temple declaring to the seven angels: "Go and pour out on the earth the seven bowls containing God's wrath."[4] 16:2 So[5] the first angel[6] went and poured out his bowl on the earth. Then[7] ugly and painful sores[8] appeared on the people[9] who had the mark of the beast and who worshiped his image.

16:3 Next,[10] the second angel[11] poured out his bowl on the sea and it turned into blood, like that of a corpse, and every living creature that was in the sea died.

16:4 Then[12] the third angel[13] poured out his bowl on the rivers and the springs of water, and they turned into blood. 16:5 Now[14] I heard the angel of the waters saying:

"You are just[15] – the one who is and who was, the Holy One – because you have passed these judgments,[16] 16:6 because they poured out the blood of your saints and prophets, so[17] you have given them blood to drink.
They got what they deserved!"[18]

16:7 Then[19] I heard the altar reply,[20] "Yes, Lord God, the All-Powerful,[21] your judgments are true and just!"

16:8 Then[22] the fourth angel[23] poured out his bowl on the sun, and it was permitted to scorch people[24] with fire. 16:9 Thus[25] people[26] were scorched by the terrible heat,[27] yet[28] they blasphemed the name of God, who has ruling authority[29] over these plagues, and they would not repent and give him glory.

16:10 Then[30] the fifth angel[31] poured out his bowl on the throne of the beast so that[32] darkness covered his kingdom,[33] and people[34] began to bite[35] their tongues because[36] of their pain. 16:11 They blasphemed the God of heaven because of their sufferings[37] and because of their sores,[38] but nevertheless[39] they still refused to repent[40] of their deeds.

[1] tn Or "anger."

[2] tn Grk "power, and no one." A new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "thus" to indicate the implied result of the temple being filled with smoke.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[4] tn Or "anger." Here τοῦ θυμοῦ (tou thumou) has been translated as a genitive of content.

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the directions given by the voice from the temple.

[6] tn Grk "the first"; the referent (the first angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[8] tn Or "ulcerated sores"; the term in the Greek text is singular but is probably best understood as a collective singular.

[9] tn Grk 'the men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) and refers to both men and women.

[10] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "next" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[11] tn Grk "the second"; the referent (the second angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[13] tn Grk "the third"; the referent (the third angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the somewhat parenthetical nature of the remarks that follow.

[15] tn Or "righteous," although the context favors justice as the theme.

[16] tn Or "because you have judged these things." The pronoun ταῦτα (tauta) is neuter gender.

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that this judgment is the result of what these wicked people did to the saints and prophets.

[18] tn Grk "They are worthy"; i.e., of this kind of punishment. By extension, "they got what they deserve."

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[20] tn Grk "the altar saying."

[21] tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[23] tn Grk "the fourth"; the referent (the fourth angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] tn Grk "men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) and refers to both men and women.

[25] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "thus" to indicate the implied result of the bowl poured on the sun.

[26] tn Grk "men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) and refers to both men and women.

[27] tn On this phrase BDAG 536 s.v. καῦμα states, "burning, heat Rv 7:16...καυματίζεσθαι κ. μέγα be burned with a scorching heat 16:9."

[28] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[29] tn For the translation "ruling authority" for ἐξουσία (exousia) see L&N 37.35.

[30] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[31] tn Grk "the fifth"; the referent (the fifth angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[32] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so that" to indicate the implied result of the fifth bowl being poured out.

[33] tn Grk "his kingdom became dark."

[34] tn Grk "men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) and refers to both men and women.

[35] tn On this term BDAG 620 s.v. μασάομαι states, "bite w. acc. τὰς γλώσσας bite their tongues Rv 16:10."

[36] tn The preposition ἐκ (ek) has been translated here and twice in the following verse with a causal sense.

[37] tn Grk "pains" (the same term in Greek [πόνος, ponos] as the last word in v. 11, here translated "sufferings" because it is plural). BDAG 852 s.v. 2 states, "ἐκ τοῦ π. in pain...Rv 16:10; pl. (Gen 41:51; Jos., C. Ap. 2, 146; Test. Jud. 18:4) ἐκ τῶν π. ...because of their sufferings vs. 11."

[38] tn Or "ulcerated sores" (see 16:2).

[39] tn Grk "and they did not repent." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but nevertheless" to express the contrast here.

[40] tn Grk "they did not repent" The addition of "still refused" reflects the hardness of people's hearts in the context.

16:12 Then[1] the sixth angel[2] poured out his bowl on the great river Euphrates and dried up its water[3] to prepare the way[4] for the kings from the east.[5] 16:13 Then[6] I saw three unclean spirits[7] that looked like frogs coming out of the mouth of the dragon, out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. 16:14 For they are the spirits of the demons performing signs who go out to the kings of the earth[8] to bring them together for the battle that will take place on the great day of God, the All-Powerful.[9]

> 16:15 (Look! I will come like a thief!
> Blessed is the one who stays alert and > does not lose[10] his clothes so that he > his shameful condition[11] be seen.)[12]

16:16 Now[13] the spirits[14] gathered the kings and their armies[15] to the place that is called Armageddon[16] in Hebrew.

16:17 Finally[17] the seventh angel[18] poured out his bowl into the air and a loud voice came out of the temple from the throne, saying: "It is done!" 16:18 Then[19] there were flashes of lightning, roaring,[20] and crashes of thunder, and there was a tremendous earthquake – an earthquake unequaled since humanity[21] has been on the earth, so tremendous was that earthquake. 16:19 The[22] great city was split into three parts and the cities of the nations[23] collapsed.[24] So[25] Babylon the great was remembered before God, and was given the cup[26] filled with the wine made of God's furious wrath.[27] 16:20 Every[28] island fled away[29] and no mountains could be found.[30] 16:21 And gigantic hailstones, weighing about a hundred pounds[31] each, fell from heaven[32] on

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

2 tn Grk "the sixth"; the referent (the sixth angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "and its water was dried up." Here the passive construction has been translated as an active one.

4 tn Grk "in order that the way might be prepared." Here the passive construction has been translated as an active one.

5 tn Grk "from the rising of the sun." BDAG 74 s.v. ἀνατολή 2.a takes this as a geographical direction: "ἀπὸ ἀ. ἡλίου... from the east Rv 7:2; 16:12; simply ἀπὸ ἀ. ...21:13."

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

7 sn According to the next verse, these three unclean spirits are spirits of demons.

8 tn BDAG 699 s.v. οἰκουμένη 1 states, "the inhabited earth, the world...ὅλη ἡ οἰκ. the whole inhabited earth...Mt 24:14; Ac 11:28; Rv 3:10; 16:14."

9 tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

10 tn Grk "and keeps." BDAG 1002 s.v. τηρέω 2.c states "of holding on to someth. so as not to give it up or lose it...τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ Rv 16:15 (or else he will have to go naked)."

11 tn On the translation of ἀσχημοσύνη (aschēmosunē) as "shameful condition" see L&N 25.202. The indefinite third person plural ("and they see") has been translated as a passive here.

12 sn These lines are parenthetical, forming an aside to the narrative. The speaker here is the Lord Jesus Christ himself rather than the narrator. Many interpreters have seen this verse as so abrupt that it could not be an original part of the work, but the author has used such asides before (1:7; 14:13) and the suddenness here (on the eve of Armageddon) is completely parallel to Jesus' warning in Mark 13:15-16 and parallels.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the resumption and conclusion of the remarks about the pouring out of the sixth bowl.

14 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the demonic spirits, v. 14) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Grk "gathered them"; the referent (the kings and [implied] their armies, v. 14) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tc There are many variations in the spelling of this name among the Greek mss, although Ἁρμαγεδών (harmagedōn) has the best support. The usual English spelling is Armageddon, used in the translation.

tn Or "Harmagedon" (a literal transliteration of the Greek), or "Har-Magedon" (NASB), meaning "the Mount of Magedon" in Hebrew.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "finally" to indicate the conclusion of the seven bowl judgments.

18 tn Grk "the seventh"; the referent (the seventh angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

20 tn Or "sounds," "voices." It is not entirely clear what this refers to. BDAG 1071 s.v. φωνή 1 states, "In Rv we have ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί (cp. Ex 19:16) 4:5; 8:5; 11:19; 16:18 (are certain other sounds in nature thought of here in addition to thunder, as e.g. the roar of the storm?...)."

21 tn The singular ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used generically here to refer to the human race.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn Or "of the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

24 tn Grk "fell."

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Babylon's misdeeds (see Rev 14:8).

26 tn Grk "the cup of the wine of the anger of the wrath of him." The concatenation of four genitives has been rendered somewhat differently by various translations (see the note on the word "wrath").

27 tn Following BDAG 461 s.v. θυμός 2, the combination of the genitives of θυμός (thumos) and ὀργή (orgē) in Rev 16:19 and 19:15 are taken to be a strengthening of the thought as in the OT and Qumran literature (Exod 32:12; Jer 32:37; Lam 2:3; CD 10:9). Thus in Rev 14:8 (to which the present passage alludes) and 18:3 there is irony: The wine of immoral behavior with which Babylon makes the nations drunk becomes the wine of God's wrath for her.

28 tn Grk "And every." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

29 tn Or "vanished."

30 sn Every island fled away and no mountains could be found. Major geographical and topographical changes will accompany the Day of the Lord.

31 tn Here BDAG 988 s.v. ταλαντιαῖος states, "weighing a talent...χάλαζα μεγάλη ὡς ταλαντιαία a severe hailstorm with hailstones weighing a talent (the talent=125 librae, or Roman pounds of c. 343 gr. or 12 ounces each) (weighing about a hundred pounds NRSV) Rv 16:21." This means each hailstone would weigh just under 100 pounds or 40 kilograms.

32 tn Or "the sky." Due to the apocalyptic nature of this book, it is probably best to leave the translation as "from heaven," since God is ultimately the source of the judgment.

people,[1] but they[2] blasphemed God because of the plague of hail, since it[3] was so horrendous.[4]

The Great Prostitute and the Beast

17:1 Then[5] one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls came and spoke to me.[6] "Come," he said, "I will show you the condemnation and punishment[7] of the great prostitute who sits on many waters, 17:2 with whom the kings of the earth committed sexual immorality and the earth's inhabitants got drunk with the wine of her immorality."[8] 17:3 So[9] he carried me away in the Spirit[10] to a wilderness,[11] and there[12] I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast that was full of blasphemous names and had seven heads and ten horns. 17:4 Now[13] the woman was dressed in purple and scarlet clothing,[14] and adorned with gold,[15] precious stones, and pearls. She held[16] in her hand a golden cup filled with detestable things and unclean things from her sexual immorality.[17] 17:5 On[18] her forehead was written a name, a mystery:[19] "Babylon the Great, the Mother of prostitutes and of the detestable things of the earth." 17:6 I saw that the woman was drunk with the blood of the saints and the blood of those who testified to Jesus.[20] I[21] was greatly astounded[22] when I saw her. 17:7 But[23] the angel said to me, "Why are you astounded? I will interpret[24] for you the mystery of the woman and of the beast with the seven heads and ten horns that carries her. 17:8 The beast you saw was, and is not, but is about to come up from the abyss[25] and then go to destruction. The[26] inhabitants of the earth – all those whose names have not been written in the book of life since the foundation of the world – will be astounded when they see that[27] the beast was, and is not, but is to come. 17:9 (This requires[28] a mind that has wisdom.) The seven heads are seven mountains[29] the woman sits on. They are

---

1 tn Grk "on men," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a generic sense to refer to people in general (the hailstones did not single out adult males, but would have also fallen on women and children).

2 tn Grk "the men"; for stylistic reasons the pronoun "they" is used here.

3 tn Grk "the plague of it."

4 tn Grk "since the plague of it was exceedingly great."

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

6 tn Grk "with me." The translation "with me" implies that John was engaged in a dialogue with the one speaking to him (e.g., Jesus or an angel) when in reality it was a one-sided conversation, with John doing all the listening. For this reason, μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ (met' emou, "with me") was translated as "to me."

7 tn Here one Greek term, κρίμα (krima), has been translated by the two English terms "condemnation" and "punishment." See BDAG 567 s.v. 4.b, "mostly in an unfavorable sense, of the condemnatory verdict and sometimes the subsequent punishment itself 2 Pt 2:3; Jd 4...τὸ κ. τῆς πόρνης the condemnation and punishment of the prostitute Rv 17:1."

8 tn This is the same word translated "sexual immorality" earlier in the verse, but here the qualifier "sexual" has not been repeated for stylistic reasons.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's invitation to witness the fate of the prostitute.

10 tn Or "in the spirit." "Spirit" could refer either to the Holy Spirit or the human spirit, but in either case John was in "a state of spiritual exaltation best described as a trance" (R. H. Mounce, Revelation [NICNT], 75).

11 tn Or "desert."

12 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied for stylistic reasons.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the detailed description of the woman, which is somewhat parenthetical in nature.

14 tn The word "clothing" is supplied to clarify that the words "purple" and "scarlet" refer to cloth or garments rather than colors.

15 tn Grk "gilded with gold" (an instance of semantic reinforcement, see L&N 49.29).

16 tn Grk "pearls, having in her hand." Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

17 tc Several MSS (including 1611 1854 2053 𝔐ᴷ pc) read "sexual immorality on/of the earth" (πορνείας τῆς γῆς, porneias tēs gēs) instead of "her sexual immorality." Other MSS (ℵ sy^{h} [co]) read "her sexual immorality and the earth's" (πορνείας αὐτῆς καὶ τῆς γῆς, porneias autēs kai tēs gēs). The translation is a rendering of πορνείας αὐτῆς, found in {A 1006 2344 al}. It seems that the first reading "sexuality immorality on/of the earth" was a scribal mistake in which letters may have been confused (ΑΥΤΗϹ would have been read as ΤΗϹΓΗϹ), or was perhaps influenced by the presence of "of the world" (τῆς γῆς) at the end of v. 5. The original wording seems to be "her sexual immorality"; codex ℵ has conflated the two readings.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

19 tn Some translations consider the word μυστήριον (mustērion, "mystery") a part of the name written ("Mystery Babylon the Great," so KJV, NIV), but the gender of both ὄνομα (onoma, "name") and μυστήριον are neuter, while the gender of "Babylon" is feminine. This strongly suggests that μυστήριον should be understood as an appositive to ὄνομα ("a name, i.e., a mystery").

20 tn Or "of the witnesses to Jesus." Here the genitive Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou) is taken as an objective genitive; Jesus is the object of their testimony.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 tn Grk "I marveled a great marvel" (an idiom for great astonishment).

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

24 tn Grk "I will tell you," but since what follows is the angel's interpretation of the vision, "interpret for you" is the preferred translation here.

25 tn On this term BDAG 2 s.v. ἄβυσσος 2 states, "netherworld, abyss, esp. the abode of the dead Ro 10:7 (Ps 106:26) and of demons Lk 8:31; dungeon where the devil is kept Rv 20:3; abode of the θηρίον, the Antichrist 11:7; 17:8; of Ἀβαδδών (q.v.), the angel of the underworld 9:11...φρέαρ τῆς ἀ. 9:1f; capable of being sealed 9:1; 20:1, 3."

26 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

27 tn Some translations take the ὅτι (hoti) here as causal: "because he was, and is not, but is to come" (so NIV, NRSV), but it is much more likely that the subject of the ὅτι clause has been assimilated into the main clause: "when they see the beast, that he was..." = "when they see that the beast was" (so BDAG 732 s.v. ὅτι 1.f, where Rev 17:8 is listed).

28 tn Grk "Here is the mind that has wisdom."

29 tn It is important to note that the height of "mountains" versus "hills" or other topographical terms is somewhat relative. In terms of Palestinian topography, Mount Tabor (traditionally regarded as the mount of transfiguration) is some 1,800 ft (550 m) above sea level, while the Mount of Olives is only some 100 ft (30 m) higher than Jerusalem.

also seven kings: 17:10 five have fallen; one is,[1] and the other has not yet come, but whenever he does come, he must remain for only a brief time. 17:11 The[2] beast that was, and is not, is himself an eighth king and yet is one of the seven, and is going to destruction. 17:12 The[3] ten horns that you saw are ten kings who have not yet received a kingdom, but will receive ruling authority[4] as kings with the beast for one hour. 17:13 These kings[5] have a single intent, and they will give their power and authority to the beast. 17:14 They will make war with the Lamb, but the Lamb will conquer them, because he is Lord of lords and King of kings, and those accompanying[6] the Lamb are the called, chosen, and faithful."

17:15 Then[7] the angel[8] said to me, "The waters you saw (where the prostitute is seated) are peoples, multitudes,[9] nations, and languages. 17:16 The[10] ten horns that you saw, and the beast – these will hate the prostitute and make her desolate and naked. They[11] will consume her flesh and burn her up with fire.[12] 17:17 For God has put into their minds[13] to carry out his purpose[14] by making[15] a decision[16] to give their royal power[17] to the beast until the words of God are fulfilled.[18] 17:18 As for[19] the woman you saw, she is the great city that has sovereignty over the kings of the earth."

Babylon is Destroyed

18:1 After these things I saw another angel, who possessed great authority, coming down out of heaven, and the earth was lit up by his radiance.[20] 18:2 He[21] shouted with a powerful voice:

> "Fallen, fallen, is Babylon the great!
> She[22] has become a lair for demons, > a haunt[23] for every unclean spirit,
> a haunt for every unclean bird,
> a haunt for every unclean and detested beast.[24]

18:3 For all the nations[25] have fallen[26] from 5 tn The word "kings" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to clarify the referent.

6 tn See BDAG 636 s.v. μετά A.2.a.α.

8 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn Grk "and multitudes," but καί (kai) has not been translated here and before the following term since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn A new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

12 tn The final clause could also be turned into an adverbial clause of means: "They will consume her flesh by burning her with fire."

13 tn Grk "hearts."

14 tn Or "his intent."

15 tn The infinitive ποιῆσαι (poiēsai) was translated here as giving the logical means by which God's purpose was carried out.

16 tn On this term BDAG 203 s.v. γνώμη 4 states, "declaration, decision, resolution...of God Rv 17:17."

17 tn For this translation see BDAG 168 s.v. βασιλεία 1.a, "kingship, royal power, royal rule."

18 tn Or "completed."

19 tn Grk "And." Because this remark is somewhat resumptive in nature, "as for" is used in the translation.

20 tn Grk "glory"; but often in the sense of splendor, brightness, or radiance (see L&N 14.49).

21 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style

22 tn Or "It" (the subject is embedded in the verb in Greek; the verb only indicates that it is third person). Since the city has been personified as the great prostitute, the feminine pronoun was used in the translation.

23 tn Here BDAG 1067 s.v. φυλακή 3 states, "a place where guarding is done, prison...Of the nether world or its place of punishment (πνεῦμα 2 and 4c) 1 Pt 3:19 (BReicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism '46, 116f). It is in a φ. in the latter sense that Satan will be rendered harmless during the millennium Rv 20:7. The fallen city of Babylon becomes a φυλακή haunt for all kinds of unclean spirits and birds 18:2ab."

24 tc There are several problems in this verse. It seems that according to the MS evidence the first two phrases (i.e., "and a haunt for every unclean spirit, and a haunt for every unclean bird" [καὶ φυλακὴ παντὸς πνεύματος ἀκαθάρτου καὶ φυλακὴ παντὸς ὀρνέου ἀκαθάρτου, kai phulakē pantos pneumatos akathartou kai phulakē pantos orneou akathartou]) are to be regarded as authentic, though there are some MS discrepancies. The similar beginnings (καὶ φυλακὴ παντός) and endings (ἀκαθάρτου) of each phrase would easily account for some MSS omitting one or the other phrase. The third phrase ("a haunt for every unclean animal" [καὶ φυλακὴ παντὸς θηρίου ἀκαθάρτου, kai phulakē pantos thēriou akathartou]), however, is more problematic since it is missing in several important MSS (𝔓 C 051 𝔐). The passage as a whole, including the third phrase, seems to be an allusion to Isa 13:21 and 34:11. It seems reasonable, in such a case, to assume that since there is good MS evidence to support the third phrase (A 1611 2329 al), it probably dropped out of certain MSS because of its similarity to the two preceding clauses. It is the presence of all three phrases in the original that most likely gave rise to the divergent MS evidence extant today.

25 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

26 tc ‡ Several MSS (𝔓 A C 1006* 1611 1841 2030 𝔐ᵏ), including the best witnesses, read "have fallen" (πεπτώκασιν or πέπτωκαν [peptōkasin or peptōkan]). The singular πέπτωκεν (peptōken), which is better grammatically with the neuter plural subject πάντα τὰ ἔθνη (panta ta ethnē, "all the nations"), is read by 1854 2062 pc; 2042 pc read πεπότικεν (pepotiken). A few MSS (1006ᶜ 2329 pc latt syʰ) read "have drunk" (πέπωκαν/πεπώκασιν, pepōkan/pepōkasin); the singular πέπωκεν (pepōken) is read by P 051 1 2053* al. The more difficult reading and that which has the best MS support is "have fallen." That it is not too difficult is evidenced by the fact that the great majority of Byzantine minuscules, which have a tendency to smooth out problems, left it stand as is. Nonetheless, it is somewhat difficult (TCGNT 683 says that this reading is "scarcely suitable in the context"), and for that reason certain MSS seem to have changed it to "have drunk" to agree with the idea of "wine" (οἴνου, oinou). One can understand how this could happen: A scribe coming to the text and seeing the term "wine" expects a verb of drinking. When he sees "have fallen" and knows that in Greek the verbs "have fallen" and "have drunk" are spelled similarly, the wine of her immoral passion,[1] and the kings of the earth have committed sexual immorality with her, and the merchants of the earth have gotten rich from the power of her sensual behavior."[2]

18:4 Then[3] I heard another voice from heaven saying, "Come out of her, my people, so you will not take part in her sins and so you will not receive her plagues, 18:5 because her sins have piled[4] up all the way to heaven[5] and God has remembered[6] her crimes.[7] 18:6 Repay her the same way she repaid others;[8] pay her back double[9] corresponding to her deeds. In the cup she mixed, mix double the amount for her. 18:7 As much as[10] she exalted herself and lived in sensual luxury,[11] to this extent give her torment and grief because she said to herself,[12] 'I rule as queen and am no widow; I will never experience grief!' 18:8 For this reason, she will experience her plagues[13] in a single day: disease,[14] mourning,[15] and famine, and she will be burned down[16] with fire, because the Lord God who judges her is powerful!"

18:9 Then[17] the kings of the earth who committed immoral acts with her and lived in sensual luxury[18] with her will weep and wail for her when they see the smoke from the fire that burns her up.[19] 18:10 They will stand a long way off because they are afraid of her torment, and will say,

"Woe, woe, O great city,
Babylon the powerful city!
For in a single hour your doom[20] has come!"

18:11 Then[21] the merchants of the earth will weep and mourn for her because no one buys their cargo[22] any longer – 18:12 cargo such as gold, silver,[23] precious stones, pearls, fine linen, purple cloth, silk,[24] scarlet cloth,[25] all sorts of things made of citron wood,[26] all sorts of objects made of ivory, all sorts of things made of expensive wood, bronze, iron and marble, 18:13 cinnamon, spice,[27] incense, perfumed ointment,[28]

---

he concludes that there has been a slip of the pen in the MS he is using, which he then seeks to correct back to the "have drunk" reading. This appears to be more reasonable than to conclude that three early uncials (i.e., ℵ A C) as well as a great number of other witnesses all felt the need to change "have drunk" (πέπωκαν) to "have fallen" (πέπτωκαν), even if "fallen" occurs in the immediate context ("fallen, fallen, [ἔπεσεν ἔπεσεν, epesen epesen] Babylon the great" in the preceding verse). The preferred reading, on both external and internal grounds, is "have fallen," and thus the Seer intends to focus on the effects of wine, namely, a drunken stupor.

[1] tn See the notes on the words "passion" in Rev 14:8 and "wrath" in 16:19.

[2] tn According to BDAG 949 s.v. στρῆνος and στρηνιάω, these terms can refer either to luxury or sensuality. In the context of Rev 18, however (as L&N 88.254 indicate) the stress is on gratification of the senses by sexual immorality, so that meaning was emphasized in the translation here.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[4] tn On ἐκολλήθησαν (ekollēthēsan) BDAG 556 s.v. κολλάω 2.a.β states, "fig. cling to = come in close contact with (cp. Ps 21:16; 43:26 ἐκολλήθη εἰς γῆν ἡ γαστὴρ ἡμῶν. The act.='bring into contact' PGM 5, 457 κολλήσας τ. λίθον τῷ ὠτίῳ) ἐκολλήθησαν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ἄχρι τ. οὐρανοῦ the sins have touched the heaven = reached the sky (two exprs. are telescoped) Rv 18:5."

[5] tn Or "up to the sky" (the same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky").

[6] tn That is, remembered her sins to execute judgment on them.

[7] tn Or "her sins."

[8] tn The word "others" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[9] tn On this term BDAG 252 s.v. διπλόω states, "to double τὰ διπλᾶ pay back double Rv 18:6."

[10] tn "As much as" is the translation of ὅσα (hosa).

[11] tn On the term ἐστρηνίασεν (estrēniasen) BDAG 949 s.v. στρηνιάω states, "live in luxury, live sensually Rv 18:7. W. πορνεύειν vs. 9."

[12] tn Grk "said in her heart," an idiom for saying something to oneself.

[13] tn Grk "For this reason, her plagues will come."

[14] tn Grk "death." θάνατος (thanatos) can in particular contexts refer to a manner of death, specifically a contagious disease (see BDAG 443 s.v. 3; L&N 23.158).

[15] tn This is the same Greek word (πένθος, penthos) translated "grief" in vv. 7-8.

[16] tn Here "burned down" was used to translate κατακαυθήσεται (katakauthēsetai) because a city is in view.

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[18] tn On the term ἐστρηνίασεν (estrēniasen) BDAG 949 s.v. στρηνιάω states, "live in luxury, live sensually Rv 18:7. W. πορνεύειν vs. 9."

[19] tn Grk "from the burning of her." For the translation "the smoke from the fire that burns her up," see L&N 14.63.

[20] tn Or "judgment," condemnation," "punishment." BDAG 569 s.v. κρίσις 1.a.β states, "The word oft. means judgment that goes against a person, condemnation, and the sentence that follows...ἡ κ. σου your judgment Rv 18:10."

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[22] tn On γόμος (gomos) BDAG 205 s.v. states, "load, freight... cargo of a ship...Ac 21:3. W. gen. of the owner Rv 18:11. W. gen. of content...γ. χρυσοῦ a cargo of gold vs. 12."

[23] tn Grk "and silver," but καί (kai) has not been translated before most of these terms since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more

[24] tn On this term BDAG 924-25 s.v. σιρικός states, "per. to silk from Ser, subst. τὸ σιρικόν silk cloth or garments w. other costly materials Rv 18:12."

[25] tn On the translation of κόκκινον (kokkinon) as "scarlet cloth" see L&N 6.170.

[26] tn On the phrase πᾶν ξύλον θύϊνον (pan xulon thuinon) L&N 3.63 states, "pertaining to being made or consisting of citron wood (that is, from a citron tree) – 'of citron wood.' καὶ πᾶν ξύλον θύϊνον καὶ πᾶν σκεῦος ἐλεφάντινον 'and all kinds of things made of citron wood and all kinds of objects made of ivory' Re 18:12. The citron tree belongs to the citrus family of plants, and it produces a pale yellow fruit somewhat larger than a lemon, the rind of which is often candied. In Re 18:12, however, the focus is upon the fine quality of the wood."

[27] tn On the term ἄμωμον (amōmon) L&N 5.23 states, "a generic term for any kind of spice, though often a specific reference to amomum, an Indian type of spice – 'spice, amomum.' κιννάμωμον καὶ ἄμωμον καὶ θυμιάματα 'cinnamon and spice and incense' Re 18:13. In most translations ἄμωμον is interpreted as spice in general."

[28] tn Or "myrrh," a strong aromatic ointment often used to prepare a body for burial (L&N 6.205).

frankincense,[1] wine, olive oil and costly flour,[2] wheat, cattle and sheep, horses and four-wheeled carriages,[3] slaves and human lives.[4]

18:14 (The ripe fruit[5] you greatly desired[6] has gone from you, and all your luxury[7] and splendor[8]
have gone from you – they will never ever be found again!)[9]

18:15 The merchants who sold[10] these things, who got rich from her, will stand a long way off because they are afraid of her torment. They will weep[11] and mourn, 18:16 saying,

"Woe, woe, O great city – dressed in fine linen, purple and scarlet clothing,[12]
and adorned with gold,[13] precious stones, and pearls –
18:17 because in a single hour such great wealth has been destroyed!"[14]

And every ship's captain,[15] and all who sail along the coast[16] – seamen, and all who[17] make their living from the sea, stood a long way off 18:18 and began to shout[18] when they saw the smoke from the fire that burned her up,[19] "Who is like the great city?" 18:19 And they threw dust on their heads and were shouting with weeping and mourning,[20]

"Woe, Woe, O great city – in which all those who had ships on the sea got rich from her wealth – because in a single hour she has been destroyed!"[21]
18:20 (Rejoice over her, O heaven, and you saints and apostles and prophets, for God has pronounced judgment[22] against her on your behalf!)[23]

18:21 Then[24] one powerful angel picked up a stone like a huge millstone, threw it into the sea, and said,

"With this kind of sudden violent force[25]

---

1 tn The Greek term λίβανος (libanos) refers to the aromatic resin of a certain type of tree (L&N 6.212).

2 tn On σεμίδαλις (semidalis) L&N 5.10 states, "a fine grade of wheat flour – 'fine flour.' οἶνον καὶ ἔλαιον καὶ σεμίδαλιν καὶ σῖτον 'wine and oil and fine flour and wheat' Re 18:13. In some languages 'fine flour' may be best expressed as 'expensive flour.' Such a rendering fits well the context of Re 18:13."

3 tn Or "and wagons." On the term ῥέδη (rhedē) see L&N 6.53: "a four-wheeled carriage or wagon used for travel or the transportation of loads – 'carriage, wagon.' The term ῥέδη occurs only in Re 18:13 in a list of products bought and sold by merchants."

4 tn Grk "and bodies and souls of men." This could be understood (1) as a hendiadys (two things mentioned = one thing meant), referring only to slave trade; (2) it could be referring to two somewhat different concepts: slavery (bodies) and the cheapness of human life – some of the items earlier in the list of merchandise were to be obtained only at great cost of human life; or (3) a somewhat related idea, that the trade is in not just physical bodies (slavery) but human souls (people whose lives are destroyed through this trade).

5 tn On ὀπώρα (opōra) L&N 3.34 states, "ἡ ὀπώρα σου τῆς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ψυχῆς 'the ripe fruit for which you longed' Re 18:14. In this one occurrence of ὀπώρα in the NT, 'ripe fruit' is to be understood in a figurative sense of 'good things.'"

6 tn Grk "you desired in your soul."

7 tn On λιπαρός (liparos) BDAG 597 s.v. states, "luxury Rv 18:14."

8 tn On τὰ λαμπρά (ta lampra) BDAG 585 s.v. λαμπρός 4 states, "splendor...in which a rich man takes delight (cp. Jos., Ant. 12, 220 δωρεὰς δοὺς λαμπράς) Rv 18:14."

9 tn Verse 14 is set in parentheses because in it the city, Babylon, is addressed directly in second person.

sn This verse forms a parenthetical aside in the narrative.

10 tn Grk "the merchants [sellers] of these things."

11 tn Grk "her torment, weeping." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation by supplying the words "They will" here.

12 tn The word "clothing" is supplied to clarify that the words "purple" and "scarlet" refer to cloth or garments rather than colors.

13 tn Grk "gilded with gold" (an instance of semantic reinforcement, see L&N 49.29).

14 tn On ἠρημώθη (ērēmōthē) L&N 20.41 states, "to suffer destruction, with the implication of being deserted and abandoned – 'to be destroyed, to suffer destruction, to suffer desolation.' ἐρημόομαι: μιᾷ ὥρᾳ ἠρημώθη ὁ τοσοῦτος πλοῦτος 'such great wealth has been destroyed within a single hour' Re 18:17."

15 tn On κυβερνήτης (kubernētēs) BDAG 574 s.v. 1 states, "one who is responsible for the management of a ship, shipmaster, lit. Rv 18:17."

16 tn Or perhaps, "everyone who sails as a passenger." On πλέων (pleōn) BDAG 825 s.v. πλέω states, "πᾶς ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων everyone who sails to a place = seafarer, sea traveler...Rv 18:17. The vv.ll....have led to various interpretations. Some render: everyone who sails along the coast...See EbNestle, Einführung in das Griech. NT 1909, 182; AFridrichsen, K. Hum. Vetensk.-Samf. i Upps. Årsb. '43, 31 note ὁ ἐπίτοπον πλέων=one who sails occasionally, a passenger. – S. also IHeikel, StKr 106, '34/'35, 317)."

17 tn Grk "and as many as."

18 tn Here the imperfect ἔκραζον (ekrazon) has been translated ingressively.

19 tn Grk "from the burning of her, saying." For the translation "the smoke from the fire that burned her up," see L&N 14.63. Here the participle λέγοντες (legontes, "saying") has not been translated because it is redundant in contemporary English.

20 tn Grk "with weeping and mourning, saying." Here the participle λέγοντες (legontes) has not been translated because it is redundant in contemporary English.

21 tn On ἠρημώθη (hērēmōthē) L&N 20.41 states, "to suffer destruction, with the implication of being deserted and abandoned – 'to be destroyed, to suffer destruction, to suffer desolation.' ἐρημόομαι: μιᾷ ὥρᾳ ἠρημώθη ὁ τοσοῦτος πλοῦτος 'such great wealth has been destroyed within a single hour' Re 18:17."

22 tn On the phrase "pronounced judgment" BDAG 567 s.v. κρίμα 4.b states, "The OT is the source of the expr. κρίνειν τὸ κρ. (cp. Zech 7:9; 8:16; Ezk 44:24) ἔκρινεν ὁ θεὸς τὸ κρίμα ὑμῶν ἐξ αὐτῆς God has pronounced judgment for you against her or God has pronounced on her the judgment she wished to impose on you (HHoltzmann, Hdb. 1893 ad loc.) Rv 18:20."

23 tn Grk "God has judged a judgment of you of her." Verse 20 is set in parentheses because in it the saints, etc. are addressed directly in the second person.

sn This verse forms a parenthetical aside in the narrative.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

25 tn On ὁρμημα (hormēma) BDAG 724 s.v. states, "violent rush, onset ὁρμήματι βληθήσεται Βαβυλών Babylon will be thrown down with violence Rv 18:21." L&N 68.82 refers to the suddenness of the force or violence.

Babylon the great city will be thrown down[1]
and it will never be found again!
18:22 And the sound of the harpists, musicians,
flute players, and trumpeters
will never be heard in you[2] again.
No[3] craftsman[4] who practices any trade will ever be found in you again;
the noise of a mill[5] will never be heard in you again.
18:23 Even the light from a lamp will never shine in you again!
The voices of the bridegroom and his bride will never be heard in you again.
For your merchants were the tycoons of the world, because all the nations[6] were deceived
by your magic spells![7]
18:24 The[8] blood of the saints and prophets was found in her,[9] along with the blood[10] of all those who had been killed on the earth."

19:1 After these things I heard what sounded like the loud voice of a vast throng in heaven, saying,

"Hallelujah! Salvation and glory and power belong to our God, 19:2 because his judgments are true and just.[11]
For he has judged[12] the great prostitute who corrupted the earth with her sexual immorality, and has avenged the blood of his servants[13] poured out by her own hands!"[14]

19:3 Then[15] a second time the crowd shouted, "Hallelujah!" The smoke rises from her forever and ever.[16] 19:4 The twenty-four elders and the four living creatures threw themselves to the ground[17] and worshiped God, who was seated on the throne, saying: "Amen! Hallelujah!"

19:5 Then[18] a voice came from the throne, saying:

"Praise our God
all you his servants, and all you who fear Him,
both the small and the great!"

The Wedding Celebration of the Lamb

19:6 Then[19] I heard what sounded like the voice of a vast throng, like the roar of many waters and like loud crashes of thunder. They were shouting:[20]

"Hallelujah!
For the Lord our God,[21] the All-Powerful,[22] reigns!
19:7 Let us rejoice[23] and exult and give him glory, because the wedding celebration of the Lamb has come,
and his bride has made herself ready.

[1] sn Thrown down is a play on both the words and the action. The angel's action with the stone illustrates the kind of sudden violent force with which the city will be overthrown.

[2] tn The shift to a second person pronoun here corresponds to the Greek text.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[4] tn On this term BDAG 1001 s.v. τεχνίτης states, "craftsperson, artisan, designer...Of a silversmith Ac 19:24, 25 v.l., 38....Of a potter 2 Cl 8:2 (metaph., cp. Ath. 15:2). πᾶς τεχνίτης πάσης τέχνης Rv 18:22."

[5] tn This is a different Greek word (μύλος, mulos) from the one for the millstone in v. 21 (μύλινος, mulinos). See L&N 7.68.

[6] tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

[7] tn On the term φαρμακεία (pharmakeia, "magic spells") see L&N 53.100: "the use of magic, often involving drugs and the casting of spells upon people – 'to practice magic, to cast spells upon, to engage in sorcery, magic, sorcery.' φαρμακεία: ἐν τῇ φαρμακείᾳ σου ἐπλανήθησαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη 'with your magic spells you deceived all the peoples (of the world)' Re 18:23."

[8] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[9] tn The shift in pronouns from second to third person corresponds to the Greek text.

[10] tn Grk "and of all." The phrase "along with the blood" has been repeated from the previous clause for stylistic reasons.

[11] tn Compare the similar phrase in Rev 16:7.

[12] tn Or "has punished." See BDAG 568 s.v. κρίνω 5.b.α, describing the OT background which involves both the vindication of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty.

[13] tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

[14] tn Grk "from her hand" (referring to her responsibility in causing the blood of God's followers to be shed).

[15] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[16] tn Or "her smoke ascends forever and ever."

[17] tn Grk "creatures fell down." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.β. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

[18] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[20] tn Grk "like the voice of a large crowd...saying." Because of the complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the words "They were."

[21] tc Several MSS (𝔎² P 1611 2053 2344 pc 𝔐ᴷ lat) read "the Lord our God" (κύριος ὁ θεός ἡμῶν, kurios ho theos hēmōn). Other important MSS (A 1006 1841 pc), however, omit the "our" (ἡμῶν). Further, certain MSS (051 𝔐ᴬ) omit "Lord" (κύριος), while others (including 𝔎*) change the order of the statement to "God our Lord" (ὁ θεός ὁ κύριος ἡμῶν). The expression "the Lord God, the All-Powerful" occurs in 6 other places in Revelation (1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22) and the pronoun "our" is never used. Scribes familiar with the expression in this book, and especially with the frequent κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ (kurios ho theos ho pantokratōr; "the Lord God, the All-Powerful") in the OT Prophets (LXX; cf. Jer 39:19; Hos 12:6; Amos 3:13; 4:13; 5:8, 14, 15, 16, 27; 9:5, 6, 15; Nah 3:5; Zech 10:3), would naturally omit the pronoun. Its presence may have arisen due to liturgical motivations or to conform to the expression "our God" in 19:1, 5, but this seems much less likely than an aversion to using the pronoun here and only here in the Greek Bible in the fuller title κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ.

[22] tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God...(ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22...κύριος ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν ὁ π. Rv 19:6."

[23] tn This verb and the next two verbs are hortatory subjunctives (giving exhortations).

19:8 She was permitted to be dressed in bright, clean, fine linen"[1] (for the fine linen is the righteous deeds of the saints).[2]

19:9 Then[3] the angel[4] said to me, "Write the following: Blessed are those who are invited to the banquet at the wedding celebration of the Lamb!" He also said to me, "These are the true words of God." 19:10 So[5] I threw myself down[6] at his feet to worship him, but[7] he said, "Do not do this![8] I am only[9] a fellow servant[10] with you and your brothers[11] who hold to the testimony about[12] Jesus. Worship God, for the testimony about Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."

The Son of God Goes to War

19:11 Then[13] I saw heaven opened and here came[14] a white horse! The[15] one riding it was called "Faithful" and "True," and with justice[16] he judges and goes to war. 19:12 His eyes are like a fiery[17] flame and there are many diadem crowns[18] on his head. He has[19] a name written[20] that no one knows except himself. 19:13 He is dressed in clothing dipped[21] in blood, and he is called[22] the Word of God. 19:14 The[23] armies that are in heaven, dressed in white, clean, fine linen,[24] were following him on white horses. 19:15 From his mouth extends a sharp sword, so that with it he can strike the nations.[25] He[26] will rule[27] them with an iron rod,[28] and he stomps the winepress[29] of the furious[30] wrath of God, the All-Powerful.[31] 19:16 He has a name written on his clothing and on his thigh: "King of kings and Lord of lords."

19:17 Then[32] I saw one angel standing in[33] the sun, and he shouted in a loud voice to all the birds flying high in the sky:[34]

---

1 tn On the term translated "fine linen," BDAG 185 s.v. βύσσινος states, "made of fine linen, subst. τὸ β. fine linen, linen garment...Rv 18:12...16; 19:8, 14."

2 sn This phrase is treated as a parenthetical explanation by the author.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

4 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's announcement.

6 tn Grk "I fell down at his feet." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.β. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

8 tn On the elliptical expression ὅρα μή (hora mē) BDAG 720 s.v. ὁράω B.2 states: "Elliptically...ὅρα μή (sc. ποιήσῃς) watch out! don't do that! Rv 19:10; 22:9."

9 tn The lowliness of a slave is emphasized in the Greek text with the emphatic position of σύνδουλος (sundoulos). The use of "only" helps to bring this nuance out in English.

10 tn Grk "fellow slave." See the note on the word "servants" in v. 2.

11 tn The Greek term "brother" literally refers to family relationships, but here it is used in a broader sense to connote familial relationships within the family of God (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a).

12 tn The genitive Ἰησοῦ (Iēsou) has been translated as an objective genitive here. A subjective genitive, also possible, would produce the meaning "who hold to what Jesus testifies."

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

14 tn The phrase "and here came" expresses the sense of καὶ ἰδού (kai idou).

15 tn A new sentence was started in the translation at this point and καί (kai) was not translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

16 tn Or "in righteousness," but since the context here involves the punishment of the wicked and the vindication of the saints, "justice" was preferred.

17 tn The genitive noun πυρός (puros) has been translated as an attributive genitive (see also Rev 1:14).

18 tn For the translation of διάδημα (diadēma) as "diadem crown" see L&N 6.196.

sn Diadem crowns were a type of crown used as a symbol of the highest ruling authority in a given area, and thus often associated with kingship.

19 tn Grk "head, having." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

20 tn Although many translations supply a prepositional phrase to specify what the name was written on ("upon Him," NASB; "on him," NIV), there is no location for the name specified in the Greek text.

21 tc It appears that "dipped" (βεβαμμένον, bebammenon), supported by several uncials and other witnesses (A 051 𝔐), is the original reading. Due to the lack of the preposition "in" (ἐν, en) after the verb (βεβαμμένον αἵματι, bebammenon haimati), and also probably because of literary allusions to Isa 63:3, several MSS and versions seem to have changed the text to "sprinkled" (either ῥεραντισμένον [rherantismenon] in P 2329 al; ἐρραντισμένον [errantismenon] in 1006 1841; ἐρραμμένον [errammenon] in 2053 2062; or ῥεραμμένον [rherammenon] in 1611; or in one case περιρεραμμένον [perirerammenon] in ℵ[2]). The reading most likely to give rise to the others is "dipped."

tn Or perhaps "soaked."

22 tn Grk "the name of him is called."

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn On the term translated "fine linen," BDAG 185 s.v. βύσσινος states, "made of fine linen, subst. τὸ β. fine linen, linen garment...Rv 18:12, 16; 19:8, 14."

25 tn Or "the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

26 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

27 tn Grk "will shepherd."

28 tn Or "scepter." The Greek term ῥάβδος (rhabdos) can mean either "rod" or "scepter."

sn A quotation from Ps 2:9 (see also Rev 2:27, 12:5).

29 sn He stomps the winepress. See Isa 63:3, where Messiah does this alone (usually several individuals would join in the process), and Rev 14:20.

30 tn The genitive θυμοῦ (thumou) has been translated as an attributed genitive. Following BDAG 461 s.v. θυμός 2, the combination of the genitives of θυμός (thumos) and ὀργή (orgē) in Rev 16:19 and 19:15 are taken to be a strengthening of the thought as in the OT and Qumran literature (Exod 32:12; Jer 32:37; Lam 2:3; CD 10:9).

31 tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

32 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

33 tn The precise significance of ἐν (en) here is difficult to determine.

34 tn On μεσουρανήματι (mesouranēmati) here see L&N 1.10: "high in the sky, midpoint in the sky, directly overhead, straight above in the sky." The birds mentioned here are carrion birds like vultures, circling high overhead, and now being summoned to feast on the corpses.

"Come, gather around for the great banquet[1] of God, 19:18 to eat[2] your fill[3] of the flesh of kings, the flesh of generals,[4]
the flesh of powerful people, the flesh of horses and those who ride them, and the flesh of all people, both free and slave,[5] and small and great!"

19:19 Then[6] I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies assembled to do battle with the one who rode the horse and with his army. 19:20 Now[7] the beast was seized, and along with him the false prophet who had performed the signs on his behalf[8] – signs by which he deceived those who had received the mark of the beast and those who worshiped his image. Both of them were thrown alive into the lake of fire burning with sulfur.[9] 19:21 The[10] others were killed by the sword that extended from the mouth of the one who rode the horse, and all the birds gorged[11] themselves with their flesh.

The Thousand Year Reign

20:1 Then[12] I saw an angel descending from heaven, holding[13] in his hand the key to the abyss and a huge chain. 20:2 He[14] seized the dragon – the ancient serpent, who is the devil and Satan – and tied him up for a thousand years. 20:3 The angel[15] then[16] threw him into the abyss and locked[17] and sealed it so that he could not deceive the nations until the one thousand years were finished. (After these things he must be released for a brief period of time.)

20:4 Then[18] I saw thrones and seated on them were those who had been given authority to judge.[19] I also saw the souls of those who had been beheaded because of the testimony about Jesus and because of the word of God. These[20] had not worshiped the beast or his image and had refused to receive his mark on their forehead or hand. They[21] came to life[22] and reigned with Christ for a thousand years. 20:5 (The rest of the dead did not come to life until the thousand years were finished.)[23] This is the first resurrection. 20:6 Blessed and holy is the one who takes part[24] in the first resurrection. The second death has no power over them,[25] but they will be priests of God and of Christ, and they will reign with him for a thousand years.

Satan's Final Defeat

20:7 Now[26] when the thousand years are finished, Satan will be released from his prison 20:8 and will go out to deceive[27] the nations at

---

1 tn This is the same Greek word (δεῖπνον, deipnon) used in 19:9.

2 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause, insofar as it is related to the first imperative, has the force of an imperative.

3 tn The idea of eating "your fill" is evident in the context with the use of χορτάζω (chortazō) in v. 21.

4 tn Grk "chiliarchs"; normally a chiliarch was a military officer commanding a thousand soldiers, but here probably used of higher-ranking commanders like generals (see L&N 55.15; cf. Rev 6:15).

5 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of an unexpected development in the account: The opposing armies do not come together in battle; rather the leader of one side is captured.

8 tn For this meaning see BDAG 342 s.v. ἐνώπιον 4.b, "by the authority of, on behalf of Rv 13:12, 14; 19:20."

9 tn Traditionally, "brimstone."

10 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn On the translation of ἐχορτάσθησαν (echortasthēsan) BDAG 1087 s.v. χορτάζω 1.a states, "of animals, pass. in act. sense πάντα τὰ ὄρνεα ἐχορτάσθησαν ἐκ τῶν σαρκῶν αὐτῶν all the birds gorged themselves with their flesh Rv 19:21 (cp. TestJud. 21:8)."

12 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

13 tn The word "holding" is implied. The two clauses "having the key of the abyss" and "a huge chain in his hand" can be construed in two ways: (1) both are controlled by the participle ἔχοντα (echonta) and both are modified by the phrase "in his hand" – "having in his hand the key to the abyss and a huge chain." (2) The participle ἔχοντα refers only to the key, and the phrase "in his hand" refers only to the chain – "having the key of the abyss and holding a huge chain in his hand." Because of the stylistic tendency in Rev to use the verb ἔχω (echō) to mean "hold (something)" and the phrase "in his hand" forming a "bracket" along with the verb ἔχω around both the phrases in question, the first option is preferred.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel introduced in v. 1) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

17 tn Or "and shut." While the lexical force of the term is closer to "shut," it is acceptable to render the verb ἔκλεισεν (ekleisen) as "locked" here in view of the mention of the key in the previous verse.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

19 tn Grk "I saw thrones, and those seated on them, and judgment was given to them." BDAG 567 s.v. κρίμα 3 says, "judging, judgment, the κρίμα ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς authority to judge was given to them Rv 20:4."

20 tn Grk "God, and who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "these" as subject.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 tn On the use of the aorist ἔζησαν (ezēsan) BDAG 425 s.v. ζάω 1.a.β says, "of dead persons who return to life become alive again: of humans in general (3 Km 17:23) Mt 9:18; Ac 9:41; 20:12; Rv 20:4, 5."

23 sn This statement appears to be a parenthetical comment by the author.

24 tn Grk "who has a share."

25 tn The shift from the singular pronoun ("the one") to the plural ("them") in the passage reflects the Greek text: The singular participle ὁ ἔχων (ho echōn) is followed by the plural pronoun τούτων (toutōn). In the interests of English style, this is obscured in most modern translations except the NASB.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

27 tn Or "mislead."

the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog,[1] to bring them together for the battle. They are as numerous as the grains of sand in the sea.[2] 20:9 They[3] went up[4] on the broad plain of the earth[5] and encircled[6] the camp[7] of the saints and the beloved city, but[8] fire came down from heaven and devoured them completely.[9] 20:10 And the devil who deceived[10] them was thrown into the lake of fire and sulfur,[11] where the beast and the false prophet are[12] too, and they will be tormented there day and night forever and ever.

The Great White Throne

20:11 Then[13] I saw a large[14] white throne and the one who was seated on it; the earth and the heaven[15] fled[16] from his presence, and no place was found for them. 20:12 And I saw the dead, the great and the small, standing before the throne. Then[17] books were opened, and another book was opened – the book of life.[18] So[19] the dead were judged by what was written in the books, according to their deeds.[20] 20:13 The[21] sea gave up the dead that were in it, and Death[22] and Hades gave up the dead that were in them, and each one was judged according to his deeds. 20:14 Then[23] Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death – the lake of fire. 20:15 If[24] anyone's name[25] was not found written in the book of life, that person[26] was thrown into the lake of fire.

A New Heaven and a New Earth

21:1 Then[27] I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and earth had ceased to exist,[28] and the sea existed no more. 21:2 And I saw the holy city – the new Jerusalem – descending out of heaven from God, made ready like a bride adorned for her husband. 21:3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne saying: "Look! The residence[29] of God is among human beings.[30] He[31] will live among them, and they

[1] sn The battle with Gog and Magog is described in the OT in Ezek 38:1-39:20.

[2] tn Grk "of whom the number of them [is] like the sand of the sea" (an allusion to Isa 10:22).

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[4] tn The shift here to past tense reflects the Greek text.

[5] tn On the phrase "broad plain of the earth" BDAG 823 s.v. πλάτος states, "τὸ πλάτος τῆς γῆς Rv 20:9 comes fr. the OT (Da 12:2 LXX. Cp. Hab 1:6; Sir 1:3), but the sense is not clear: breadth = the broad plain of the earth is perh. meant to provide room for the countless enemies of God vs. 8, but the 'going up' is better suited to Satan (vs. 7) who has recently been freed, and who comes up again fr. the abyss (vs. 3)." The referent here thus appears to be a plain large enough to accommodate the numberless hoards that have drawn up for battle against the Lord Christ and his saints.

[6] tn Or "surrounded."

[7] tn On the term παρεμβολή (parembolē) BDAG 775 s.v. states, "Mostly used as a military t.t....so always in our lit....1. a (fortified) camp...ἡ παρεμβολὴ τῶν ἁγίων Rv 20:9 is also to be understood fr. the OT use of the word."

[8] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[9] tn See L&N 20.45 for the translation of κατεσθίω (katesthiō) as "to destroy utterly, to consume completely."

[10] tn Or "misled."

[11] tn Traditionally, "brimstone."

[12] tn The verb in this clause is elided. In keeping with the previous past tenses some translations supply a past tense verb here ("were"), but in view of the future tense that follows ("they will be tormented"), a present tense verb was used to provide a transition from the previous past tense to the future tense that follows.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[14] tn Traditionally, "great," but μέγας (megas) here refers to size rather than importance.

[15] tn Or "and the sky." The same Greek word means both "heaven" and "sky," and context usually determines which is meant. In this apocalyptic scene, however, it is difficult to be sure what referent to assign the term.

[16] tn Or "vanished."

sn The phrase the earth and the heaven fled from his presence can be understood (1) as visual imagery representing the fear of corruptible matter in the presence of God, but (2) it can also be understood more literally as the dissolution of the universe as we know it in preparation for the appearance of the new heaven and new earth (Rev 21:1).

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[18] tn Grk "another book was opened, which is of life."

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the books being opened.

[20] tn Grk "from the things written in the books according to their works."

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[22] sn Here Death is personified (cf. 1 Cor 15:55).

[23] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[25] tn The word "name" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[26] tn Grk "he"; the pronoun has been intensified by translating as "that person."

[27] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[28] tn For the translation of ἀπέρχομαι (aperchomai; here ἀπῆλθαν [apēlthan]) L&N 13.93 has "to go out of existence – 'to cease to exist, to pass away, to cease.'"

[29] tn Or "dwelling place"; traditionally, "tabernacle"; literally "tent."

[30] tn Or "people"; Grk "men" (ἀνθρώπων, anthrōpōn), a generic use of the term. In the translation "human beings" was used here because "people" occurs later in the verse and translates a different Greek word (λαοί, laoi).

[31] tn Grk "men, and he." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

will be his people, and God himself will be with them.[1] 21:4 He[2] will wipe away every tear from their eyes, and death will not exist any more – or mourning, or crying, or pain, for the former things have ceased to exist."[3]

21:5 And the one seated on the throne said: "Look! I am making all things new!" Then[4] he said to me, "Write it down,[5] because these words are reliable[6] and true." 21:6 He also said to me, "It is done![7] I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. To the one who is thirsty I will give water[8] free of charge[9] from the spring of the water of life. 21:7 The one who conquers[10] will inherit these things, and I will be his God and he will be my son. 21:8 But to the cowards, unbelievers, detestable persons, murderers, the sexually immoral, and those who practice magic spells,[11] idol worshipers,[12] and all those who lie, their place[13] will be in the lake that burns with fire and sulfur.[14] That[15] is the second death."

The New Jerusalem Descends

21:9 Then[16] one of the seven angels who had the seven bowls full of the seven final plagues came and spoke to me,[17] saying, "Come, I will show you the bride, the wife of the Lamb!" 21:10 So[18] he took me away in the Spirit[19] to a huge, majestic mountain[20] and showed me the holy city, Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God. 21:11 The city possesses[21] the glory of God; its brilliance is like a precious jewel, like a stone of crystal-clear jasper.[22] 21:12 It has[23] a massive, high wall[24] with twelve gates,[25] with twelve angels at the gates, and the names of the twelve tribes of the nation of Israel[26] are written on the gates.[27] 21:13 There are[28] three gates on the east side, three gates on the north side, three gates on the south side and three gates on the

[1] tc ‡ Most MSS (א $\mathfrak{M}^{K}$) do not add the words "[as] their God" (αὐτῶν θεός, autōn theos) after "he will be with them." The MSS with these words include A 2030 2050 2329 al. The Andreas group ($\mathfrak{M}^{A}$) also has the words, but in a different arrangement with the preceding (ἔσται μετ᾽ αὐτῶν θεὸς αὐτῶν, estai met' autōn theos autōn). Not only do the words float, but scribes may have been motivated to make a connection here more directly with Isa 7:14; 8:8; Jer 24:7; 31:33; Zech 8:8. In light of sufficient external evidence as well as the possibility that the longer reading is theologically motivated, the shorter reading is preferred. NA^{27} places the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

[2] tn Grk "God, and he." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[3] tn For the translation of ἀπέρχομαι (aperchomai; here ἀπῆλθαν [apēlthan]) L&N 13.93 has "to go out of existence – 'to cease to exist, to pass away, to cease.'"

[4] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

[5] tn The words "it down" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[6] tn Grk "faithful."

[7] tn Or "It has happened."

[8] tn The word "water" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[9] tn Or "as a free gift" (see L&N 57.85).

[10] tn Or "who is victorious"; traditionally, "who overcomes."

[11] tn On the term φαρμακεία (pharmakeia, "magic spells") see L&N 53.100: "the use of magic, often involving drugs and the casting of spells upon people – 'to practice magic, to cast spells upon, to engage in sorcery, magic, sorcery.' φαρμακεία: ἐν τῇ φαρμακείᾳ σου ἐπλανήθησαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη 'with your magic spells you deceived all the peoples (of the world)' Re 18:23."

[12] tn Grk "idolaters."

[13] tn Grk "their share."

[14] tn Traditionally, "brimstone."

[15] tn Grk "sulfur, which is." The relative pronoun has been translated as "that" to indicate its connection to the previous clause. The nearest logical antecedent is "the lake [that burns with fire and sulfur]," although "lake" (λίμνη, limnē) is feminine gender, while the pronoun "which" (ὅ, ho) is neuter gender. This means that (1) the proper antecedent could be "their place" (Grk "their share,") agreeing with the relative pronoun in number and gender, or (2) the neuter pronoun still has as its antecedent the feminine noun "lake," since agreement in gender between pronoun and antecedent was not always maintained, with an explanatory phrase occurring with a neuter pronoun regardless of the case of the antecedent. In favor of the latter explanation is Rev 20:14, where the phrase "the lake of fire" is in apposition to the phrase "the second death."

[16] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

[17] tn Grk "with me." The translation "with me" implies that John was engaged in a dialogue with the one speaking to him (e.g., Jesus or an angel) when in reality it was a one-sided conversation, with John doing all the listening. For this reason, μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ (met' emou, "with me") was translated as "to me." See also v. 15.

[18] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's invitation.

[19] tn Or "in the spirit." "Spirit" could refer either to the Holy Spirit or the human spirit, but in either case John was in "a state of spiritual exaltation best described as a trance" (R. H. Mounce, Revelation [NICNT], 75).

[20] tn Grk "to a mountain great and high."

[21] tn Grk "from God, having the glory of God." Here a new sentence was started in the translation by supplying the words "the city" to refer back to the previous clause and translating the participle ("having") as a finite verb.

[22] tn On the term ἰάσπιδι (iaspidi) BDAG 465 s.v. ἴασπις states, "jasper, a precious stone found in various colors, mostly reddish, somet. green...brown, blue, yellow, and white. In antiquity the name was not limited to the variety of quartz now called jasper, but could designate any opaque precious stone. Rv 21:18f. W. λίθος 4:3 (TestSol C 11:8). λίθος ἴασπις κρυσταλλίζων a stone of crystal-clear jasper 21:11 (cp. Is 54:12); perh. the opal is meant here; acc. to some, the diamond."

[23] tn Grk "jasper, having." Here a new sentence was started in the translation.

[24] tn Grk "a (city) wall great and high."

[25] tn On this term BDAG 897 s.v. πυλών 1 states, "gate, esp. of the large, impressive gateways at the entrance of temples and palaces...of the entrances of the heavenly Jerusalem...οἱ πυλῶνες αὐτῆς οὐ μὴ κλεισθῶσιν its entrances shall never be shut Rv 21:25; cp. vss. 12ab, 13abcd, 15, 21ab; 22:14."

[26] tn Grk "of the sons of Israel." The translation "nation of Israel" is given in L&N 11.58.

[27] tn Grk "on them"; the referent (the gates) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tn The words "There are" have been supplied to make a complete English sentence. This is a continuation of the previous sentence, a lengthy and complicated one in Greek.

west side.[1] 21:14 The[2] wall of the city has twelve foundations, and on them are the twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

21:15 The angel[3] who spoke to me had a golden measuring rod with which to measure the city and its foundation stones and wall. 21:16 Now[4] the city is laid out as a square,[5] its length and width the same. He[6] measured the city with the measuring rod[7] at fourteen hundred miles[8] (its length and width and height are equal). 21:17 He also measured its wall, one hundred forty-four cubits[9] according to human measurement, which is also the angel's.[10] 21:18 The city's[11] wall is made[12] of jasper and the city is pure gold, like transparent glass.[13] 21:19 The foundations of the city's wall are decorated[14] with every kind of precious stone. The first foundation is jasper, the second sapphire, the third agate,[15] the fourth emerald, 21:20 the fifth onyx,[16] the sixth carnelian,[17] the seventh chrysolite,[18] the eighth beryl,[19] the ninth topaz, the tenth chrysoprase,[20] the eleventh jacinth,[21] and the twelfth amethyst. 21:21 And the twelve gates are twelve pearls – each one of the gates is made from just one pearl! The[22] main street[23] of the city is pure gold, like transparent glass.

21:22 Now[24] I saw no temple in the city, because the Lord God – the All-Powerful[25] – and the Lamb are its temple. 21:23 The city does not need the sun or the moon to shine on it, because the glory of God lights it up, and its lamp is the Lamb. 21:24 The nations[26] will walk by its light and the kings of the earth will bring their grandeur[27] into it. 21:25 Its gates will never be closed during the day[28] (and[29] there will be no night there).[30] 21:26 They will bring the grandeur and the wealth[31] of the nations[32] into it,

[1] tn The word "side" has been supplied four times in this verse for clarity.

[2] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[3] tn Grk "the one"; the referent (the angel of v. 9) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the somewhat parenthetical nature of the description of the city.

[5] tn Or "the city lies square." On κεῖμαι (keimai) in this context, BDAG 537 s.v. 2 states, "lie, of things...ἡ πόλις τετράγωνος κεῖται is laid out as a square Rv 21:16."

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[7] tn Grk "with the rod"; the word "measuring" is supplied from the description in v. 15.

[8] tn Or "two thousand two hundred kilometers," Grk "12,000 stades." A stade was a measure of length about 607 ft (185 m).

[9] tn Here the measurement was kept in cubits in the translation because of the possible symbolic significance of the number 144 (12 times 12). This is about 216 ft (65 m).

[10] tn Here L&N 81.1 translate the phrase μέτρον ἀνθρώπου, ὅ ἐστιν ἀγγέλου (metron anthrōpou, ho estin angelou) "'the unit of measurement used by a person, that is, by an angel' Re 21:17." It is more likely that μέτρον is an accusative of respect or reference.

[11] tn Grk "and its wall"; the referent of the pronoun (the city) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[12] tn The phrase ἡ ἐνδώμησις τοῦ τείχους (hē endōmēsis tou teichous) is difficult to translate precisely. BDAG 334 s.v. ἐνδώμησις states, "primary mng. 'interior structure'; in our lit. prob.=construction, hence material τοῦ τείχους Rv 21:18." The phrase could then be translated, "the foundation of the city wall was jasper" or "the material used for the wall of the city was jasper." The latter alternative has been used in the translation because the text goes on to discuss the foundation in 21:19 (using the term θεμέλιος [themelios]), which is somewhat redundant if the foundation is mentioned here.

[13] tn Or "transparent crystal." See L&N 6.222, which notes the emphasis is on transparency here. The same Greek word, καθαρός (katharos), means both "pure" (referring to the gold) and "transparent" (referring to the glass).

[14] tn The perfect participle here has been translated as an intensive (resultative) perfect.

[15] sn Agate (also called chalcedony) is a semiprecious stone usually milky or gray in color (L&N 2.32).

[16] sn Onyx (also called sardonyx) is a semiprecious stone that comes in various colors (L&N 2.35).

[17] sn Carnelian is a semiprecious gemstone, usually red in color (L&N 2.36).

[18] sn Chrysolite refers to either quartz or topaz, golden yellow in color (L&N 2.37).

[19] sn Beryl is a semiprecious stone, usually blue-green or green in color (L&N 2.38).

[20] sn Chrysoprase is a greenish type of quartz (L&N 2.40).

[21] sn Jacinth is a semiprecious stone, probably blue in color (also called "hyacinth," but that translation is not used here because of possible confusion with the flower of the same name). See L&N 2.41.

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[23] tn The Greek word πλατεῖα (plateia) refers to a major (broad) street (L&N 1.103).

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. Every verse from here to the end of this chapter begins with καί in Greek, but due to differences between Greek and contemporary English style, these have not been translated.

[25] tn On this word BDAG 755 s.v. παντοκράτωρ states, "the Almighty, All-Powerful, Omnipotent (One) only of God... (ὁ) κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὁ π. ...Rv 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7; 21:22."

[26] tn Or "the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

[27] tn Or "splendor"; Grk "glory."

[28] tn On the translation "during the day" see BDAG 436 s.v. ἡμέρα 1.a, "But also, as in Thu. et al., of time within which someth. occurs, ἡμέρας during the day Rv 21:25."

[29] tn The Greek connective γάρ (gar) most often expresses some sort of causal connection. However, in this context there is no causal force to the second phrase; γάρ simply expresses continuation or connection. Because of this it has been translated as "and." See BDAG 189-90 s.v. 2.

[30] tn The clause has virtually the force of a parenthetical comment.

[31] tn Grk "honor," but BDAG 1005 s.v. τιμή 2.b states, "An outstanding feature of the use of τ., as already shown in several passages, is its combination w. δόξα...of earthly possessions τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν τῶν ἐθνῶν Rv 21:26 (τιμή concr.=an object of value: Ezk 22:25)."

[32] tn Or "the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

21:27 but[1] nothing ritually unclean[2] will ever enter into it, nor anyone who does what is detestable[3] or practices falsehood,[4] but only those whose names[5] are written in the Lamb's book of life.

22:1 Then[6] the angel[7] showed me the river of the water of life – water as clear as crystal – pouring out[8] from the throne of God and of the Lamb, 22:2 flowing down the middle of the city's[9] main street.[10] On each side[11] of the river is the tree of life producing twelve kinds[12] of fruit, yielding its fruit every month of the year.[13] Its leaves are for the healing of the nations. 22:3 And there will no longer be any curse,[14] and the throne of God and the Lamb will be in the city.[15] His[16] servants[17] will worship[18] him, 22:4 and they will see his face, and his name will be on their foreheads. 22:5 Night will be no more, and they will not need the light of a lamp or the light of the sun, because the Lord God will shine on them, and they will reign forever and ever.

A Final Reminder

22:6 Then[19] the angel[20] said to me, "These words are reliable[21] and true. The Lord, the God of the spirits of the prophets, has sent his angel to show his servants[22] what must happen soon."

> 22:7 (Look! I am coming soon!
> Blessed is the one who keeps the words > of the prophecy expressed in this > book.)[23]

22:8 I, John, am the one who heard and saw these things,[24] and when I heard and saw them,[25] I threw myself down[26] to worship at the feet of the angel who was showing them to me. 22:9 But[27] he said to me, "Do not do this![28] I am a fellow servant[29] with you and with your brothers the prophets, and with those who obey[30] the words of this book. Worship God!" 22:10 Then[31] he said to me, "Do not seal up the words of the prophecy contained in this book, because the time is near. 22:11 The evildoer must continue to do evil,[32] and the one who is morally filthy[33] must continue to be filthy. The[34] one who is righteous must continue to act righteously, and the one who is holy must continue to be holy."

> 22:12 (Look! I am coming soon, > and my reward is with me to pay[35] each > one according to what he has done!
> 22:13 I am the Alpha and the Omega, > the first and the last,
> the beginning and the end!)[36]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

2 tn Here BDAG 552 s.v. κοινός 2 states, "pert. to being of little value because of being common, common, ordinary, profane...b. specifically, of that which is ceremonially impure: Rv 21:27."

3 tn Or "what is abhorrent"; Grk "who practices abominations."

4 tn Grk "practicing abomination or falsehood." Because of the way βδέλυγμα (bdelugma) has been translated ("does what is detestable") it was necessary to repeat the idea from the participle ποιῶν (poiōn, "practices") before the term "falsehood." On this term, BDAG 1097 s.v. ψεῦδος states, "ποιεῖν ψεῦδος practice (the things that go with) falsehood Rv 21:27; 22:15." Cf. Rev 3:9.

5 tn Grk "those who are written"; the word "names" is implied.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel mentioned in 21:9, 15) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "proceeding." Water is more naturally thought to pour out or flow out in English idiom.

9 tn Grk "its"; the referent (the city, the new Jerusalem) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn The Greek word πλατεῖα (plateia) refers to a major (broad) street (L&N 1.103).

11 tn Grk "From here and from there."

12 tn Or "twelve crops" (one for each month of the year).

13 tn The words "of the year" are implied.

14 tn Or "be anything accursed" (L&N 33.474).

15 tn Grk "in it"; the referent (the city, the new Jerusalem) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "city, and his." Although this is a continuation of the previous sentence in Greek, a new sentence was started here in the translation because of the introduction of the Lamb's followers.

17 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

18 tn Or "will serve."

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence within the narrative.

20 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the angel mentioned in 21:9, 15; 22:1) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "faithful."

22 tn See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

23 sn These lines are parenthetical, forming an aside to the narrative. The speaker here is the Lord Jesus Christ himself rather than the narrator.

24 tn Or "I am John, the one who heard and saw these things."

25 tn The pronoun "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

26 tn Grk "I fell down and worshiped at the feet." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.בב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion or humility, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present here.

28 tn On the elliptical expression ὅρα μή (hora mē) BDAG 720 s.v. ὁράω B.2 states: "Elliptically...ὅρα μή (sc. ποιήσῃς) watch out! don't do that! Rv 19:10; 22:9."

29 tn Grk "fellow slave." Though σύνδουλος (sundoulos) is here translated "fellow servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. See the note on the word "servants" in 1:1.

30 tn Grk "keep" (an idiom for obedience).

31 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the vision.

32 tn Grk "must do evil still."

33 tn For this translation see L&N 88.258; the term refers to living in moral filth.

34 tn Grk "filthy, and the." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in Greek, but because of the length and complexity of the construction a new sentence was started in the translation.

35 tn The Greek term may be translated either "pay" or "pay back" and has something of a double meaning here. However, because of the mention of "wages" ("reward," another wordplay with two meanings) in the previous clause, the translation "pay" for ἀποδοῦναι (apodounai) was used here.

36 sn These lines are parenthetical, forming an aside to the narrative. The speaker here is the Lord Jesus Christ himself rather than the narrator.

22:14 Blessed are those who wash their robes so they can have access[1] to the tree of life and can enter into the city by the gates. 22:15 Outside are the dogs and the sorcerers[2] and the sexually immoral, and the murderers, and the idolaters and everyone who loves and practices falsehood![3]

22:16 "I, Jesus, have sent my angel to testify to you about these things for the churches. I am the root and the descendant of David, the bright morning star!"[4] 22:17 And the Spirit and the bride say, "Come!" And let the one who hears say: "Come!" And let the one who is thirsty come; let the one who wants it take the water of life free of charge.

22:18 I testify to the one who hears the words of the prophecy contained in this book: If anyone adds to them, God will add to him the plagues described[5] in this book. 22:19 And if anyone takes away from the words of this book of prophecy, God will take away his share in the tree of life[6] and in the holy city that are described in this book.

22:20 The one who testifies to these things says, "Yes, I am coming soon!" Amen! Come, Lord Jesus! 22:21 The grace of the Lord Jesus be with all.[7]

[1] tn Grk "so that there will be to them authority over the tree of life."

[2] tn On the term φάρμακοι (pharmakoi) see L&N 53.101.

[3] tn Or "lying," "deceit."

[4] tn On this expression BDAG 892 s.v. πρωϊνός states, "early, belonging to the morning ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ πρ. the morning star, Venus Rv 2:28; 22:16."

[5] tn Grk "written."

[6] tc The Textus Receptus, on which the KJV rests, reads "the book" of life (ἀπὸ βίβλου, apo biblou) instead of "the tree" of life. When the Dutch humanist Desiderius Erasmus translated the NT he had access to no Greek MSS for the last six verses of Revelation. So he translated the Latin Vulgate back into Greek at this point. As a result he created seventeen textual variants which were not in any Greek MSS. The most notorious of these is this reading. It is thus decidedly inauthentic, while "the tree" of life, found in the best and virtually all Greek MSS, is clearly authentic. The confusion was most likely due to an intra-Latin switch: The form of the word for "tree" in Latin in this passage is ligno; the word for "book" is libro. The two-letter difference accounts for an accidental alteration in some Latin MSS; that "book of life" as well as "tree of life" is a common expression in the Apocalypse probably accounts for why this was not noticed by Erasmus or the KJV translators. (This textual problem is not discussed in NA[27].)

[7] tc Most MSS (א 𝔐) read "amen" (ἀμήν, amēn) after "all" (πάντων, pantōn). It is, however, not found in other important MSS (A 1006 1841 pc). It is easier to account for its addition than its omission from the text if original. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant.

NET BIBLE Principles of Translation

1. Text

- Old Testament: For the OT the translators started with the MT (Masoretic Text) found in the current edition of BHS (Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia). In particularly difficult passages the translator may have followed a variant reading found in the versions, alternative Hebrew tradition (e.g., DSS), or in some cases, conjectural emendation. Such variations from the MT were noted by the individual translator and reviewed by the OT textual consultant.
- New Testament: For the NT the Greek text to be used by individual translators was decided by the textual consultant. The full Greek text will be published at a later date.
- Traditional passages: For passages which lack adequate textual authority (i.e., are almost certainly not part of the autographs) the words were included in the translation in double square brackets with a note giving a brief discussion of the problem.

2. Interpretive Decisions and Tools

- Interpretive decisions, where necessary to translate a passage, were made by the translators and editors. The alternative renderings, where exegetically significant, have been indicated in the notes.
- Standard technical (critical) commentaries and relevant periodical articles were consulted in the translation process. These are often cited in the notes.
- Current standard lexical tools were consulted as needed. For the OT, these included such works as BDB, KB3, and TDOT; for the NT, BDAG, Louw-Nida, and TDNT.
- Computerized concordance programs and electronic search engines were used extensively in the production of this translation.

3. Form of Translation

No translation can ever achieve complete formal equivalence. Even a translation which sometimes reflects Hebrew and Greek word order at the expense of English style has to resort to paraphrase in some places. On the other hand, no translation achieves complete dynamic equivalence either. Thus this translation, like every other, ends up somewhere between the two extremes. These considerations are reflected by the following specific qualifications:

- In vocabulary and grammatical forms every attempt has been made to reflect the different styles of the different authors of the Bible. Paul's letters should not sound like John's or Peter's or that of Hebrews in the English translation where possible.
- The level of English style is formal (not, however, technical) except in passages where somewhat more informal style would be more in keeping with the content. In general the use of contractions ("don't," "isn't") has been avoided, except in quoted speech.
- The language of average adults had priority. The translation attempts to use good literary style but is not overly formal or embellished.
- The translation is intended to be understandable to non-Christians as well as Christians, so liturgical language or Christian "jargon" has been avoided.
- Archaisms have also been avoided (e.g., "letter" was used instead of "epistle" in the NT). This includes the absolute avoidance of "thou" and "thee," since there were no distinctions in the original Hebrew or Greek between pronouns used to address people and those used to address Deity. On a related note, pronouns which refer to Deity are not capitalized for this same reason.
- Long, complicated sentences in the original languages have been broken up into shorter sentences more acceptable in contemporary English. However, an attempt has been made to maintain the connections present in the original languages wherever possible.
- Idiomatic expressions and figurative language in the original languages have been changed when they make no sense to a typical modern English reader or are likely to lead to misunderstanding by a typical modern English reader. The literal reading has been placed in a note giving a brief explanation (a translator's note).
- Nouns have been used for pronouns where the English pronoun would be obscure or ambiguous to a modern reader. This has been indicated in a note.
- Questions expecting a negative answer have been phrased to indicate this to the English reader.

NET BIBLE PRINCIPLES OF TRANSLATION

- Clearly redundant expressions such as "answered and said" have been avoided unless they have special rhetorical force in context. The literal reading is frequently indicated in a note.
- Introductory expressions like "verily, verily" have been translated idiomatically, the single ἀμήν as "I tell you the truth" and the double ἀμήν (peculiar to John's Gospel) as "I tell you the solemn truth."
- Introductory particles like ἰδού ("behold") have been translated to fit the context (sometimes "listen," "pay attention," "look," or occasionally left untranslated).
- Use of quotation marks (which did not exist in the original Hebrew and Greek manuscripts) conforms to contemporary American English usage.
- The basic unit of translation is the paragraph. Verse numbers are included in boldface type. Poetry is set out as poetry.
- Greek historical presents have been translated by English simple past tenses since English has no corresponding use of the present tense.
- In places where passive constructions create ambiguity, obscurity, or awkwardness in contemporary English, either the agent has been specified from context or the construction has been changed to active voice in the English translation, with an explanatory note.
- Ellipses have been filled out according to current English requirements (e.g., 1 John 2:19). This is normally explained in a note.
- Proper names have been standardized in accordance with accepted English usage.

4. Additional Features of the Translation and Notes

- Any place supplementary information is required (e.g., word-plays, historical details, cultural differences, etc.) this is provided in a brief study note.
- Any technical terms (corban, Mark 7:11) used in the translation are explained in a study note.
- Any unfamiliar terms for weights, measures, and coins have been explained in a study note, although in general these have been expressed in contemporary American units, with metric units given parenthetically in the notes.
- A limited system of cross-referencing to principal parallel texts, cross-references, or significant allusions is found in the notes.
- Descriptive section headings have been provided by the translators and editors as an aid to the reader.
- Greek and Hebrew in the translator's notes use Greek and Hebrew fonts, often followed by transliteration. The occasional reference to a Greek or Hebrew word in a study note is transliterated.
- Abbreviations of biblical books and reference material follow Patrick H. Alexander et al., eds., The SBL Handbook of Style: For Ancient Near Eastern, Biblical, and Early Christian Studies (Peabody, Mass.: Hendrickson, 1999) with only a few exceptions.

Other Ancient Documents

Two citation systems for Philo and Josephus are used in the notes. The older (classical) system is listed first, and the Loeb citation system then follows in parentheses.

1 En.	1 Enoch, a Jewish pseudepigraphic work that includes what are thought to be Christian interpolations in chaps. 37-71 (also called Ethiopic Enoch)
1 Kgdms	1 Kingdoms, the book of the LXX which corresponds to 1 Samuel
1QH	Thanksgiving Hymns, hymns composed for worship within the Qumran community
1QS	Rule of the Community, one of the first Dead Sea Scrolls recovered. This scroll details rules for admission into the Qumran community.
2 Bar.	2 Baruch, a Jewish apocalyptic work written early in the second century
2 En.	2 Enoch, an Jewish pseudepigraphic work that expands upon Gen 5:21-32
4QMMT	Miqsat Maʿaseh Torah from Qumran Cave 4, one of the Dead Sea Scrolls
Ag. Ap.	Against Apion, a defense of the Jewish people written by Josephus, a Jewish historian who lived from A.D. 37/38 until the early years of the second century.
Ant.	Jewish Antiquities, a history of the Jewish people written by Josephus (see Ag. Ap. above)
b.	Indicates a tractate from the Babylonian Talmud, which contains the Mishnah and rabbinic interpretive expansions. Collected ca. A.D. 500-550.
CD	A copy of the Damascus Document, which is one of the Dead Sea Scrolls, found in the Cairo genizah
Embassy	On the Embassy to Gaius, a philosophical work by Philo, a Jewish philosopher who lived from 20 B.C. to A.D. 50
Praep. Ev.	Praeparatio evangelica (Preparation for the Gospel), a work by Eusebius, bishop of Caesarea in Palestine, who lived ca. A.D. 260-341
Flaccus	Against Flaccus, a philosophical work by Philo (see Embassy above)
Heir	Who is the Heir?, a philosophical work by Philo (see Embassy above)
Herm.	Shepherd of Hermas, a Christian work written in Rome sometime during the 1st and 2nd centuries A.D.
Ibn Ezra	Rabbi Abraham Ibn Ezra, a medieval Jewish scholar who wrote many works, including a commentary on the Hebrew Bible. Lived A.D. 1092/1093 to A.D.1167.

Abbreviations and Introduction to Principal Manuscript Evidence for the Greek New Testament

No ancient literature has survived in its original form; everything we have is derived from copies of the originals. The NT is no exception. However, in comparison with any other ancient literature, the NT is without a peer—both in terms of the chronological proximity and the surviving number. Several ancient authorities are preserved in only a handful of manuscripts. Not so with the NT. There are approximately 5,500 Greek witnesses, ranging in date from the second century AD into the middle ages. Besides the Greek evidence, there are nearly 30,000 versional copies (e.g., Latin, Coptic, and Syriac), and over 1,000,000 quotations from the NT in the church Fathers. NT textual criticism has always had an embarrassment of riches unparalleled in any other field.

The Greek Witnesses

The Greek witnesses are by far the most important, since in large measure they represent some of our earliest witnesses and since they involve direct reproduction from Greek to Greek. There are four kinds of Greek witnesses: papyri, uncials (or majuscules), minuscules (or cursives), and lectionaries. The first three are important enough to warrant some discussion here.

Papyri

These documents are written on the cheap writing materials of the ancient world that were roughly equivalent to modern paper. Literally thousands of papyrus fragments have been found of which approximately 100 contain portions of the New Testament. Actually, taken together, these 100 fragments constitute over half of the New Testament and all but four are in the form of codices (i.e., four are scrolls rather than the book-form [codex]). All NT papyri were written with uncial or capital letters. They range in date from the early second century through the eighth century. About 50 of them are to be dated before the fourth century. Though many of them are somewhat fragmentary, and at times the copying was looser than one would like (i.e., they were done before the canon was officially recognized), they are nevertheless extremely important for establishing the text of the New Testament—if for no other reason than the fact that they represent some of the most ancient witnesses we possess. Five important papyri are illustrated in the chart below. The symbol for each papyrus is 𝔓 followed by a number (e.g., $\mathfrak{P}^{45}$). The most important papyri cited in the NET NT footnotes are as follows:

Papyri	Name	Date	NT Books Covered	General Characteristics
$\mathfrak{P}^{45}$	Chester Beatty papyrus	3rd century AD	Gospels, Acts 4-17	Mark (Caesarean); Matt, Luke, John (intermediate between Alexandrian and Western texttypes)
$\mathfrak{P}^{46}$	Chester Beatty papyrus	ca. AD 200	10 Pauline Epistles (all but Pastorals) and Hebrews	Overall closer to Alexandrian than Western
$\mathfrak{P}^{47}$	Chester Beatty papyrus	3rd century AD	Revelation 9:10-17:2	Alexandrian; often agrees with Sinaiticus (𝔓)
$\mathfrak{P}^{66}$	Bodmer Papyrus	ca. AD 200	John	Mixed text between Western and Alexandrian
$\mathfrak{P}^{75}$	Bodmer papyrus	early 3rd century	Luke and John	Alexandrian, often agrees with B

Uncials

There are approximately 300 uncials known to exist today that contain portions of the New Testament and one uncial that contains the entire NT. Like the papyri, these manuscripts were written with uncial or capital letters, but unlike the papyri they were written on animal skins or vellum. For the most part they are beautiful manuscripts, elegantly written and routinely done in scriptoria and often for special purposes. Generally speaking, they range in date from the fourth through the ninth centuries. Our oldest complete copy of the NT is an uncial manuscript, א (see chart below). The symbol for each uncial is either a capital letter (in Latin or Greek letters [though one MS has a Hebrew letter, א]) or a number beginning with 0 (e.g., 01, 0220, etc.). The most important uncials cited in the NET NT footnotes are as follows:

Uncial	Name	Date (approx.)	NT Books Covered	General Characteristics
א (01)	Aleph or Sinaiticus	4th century	The entire NT	Alexandrian; best in epistles
A (02)	Alexandrinus	5th century	Most of the NT	Important in the Epistles and Revelation
B (03)	Vaticanus	4th century	Most of NT except Hebrews 9:14ff, the Pastorals, Phlm, Rev	Alexandrian; best in Gospels
C (04)	Ephraemi Rescriptus	5th century	Portions of every book except 2 Thess and 2 John	mixed
D (05)	Bezae/Cantabrigiensis	5th century	Gospels and Acts	Western
D (06)	Claromontanus	6th century	Pauline Epistles and Hebrews	Western
F (010)	Augiensis	9th century	Pauline Epistles	Western
G (012)	Boernerianus	9th century	Pauline Epistles	Western
L (019)	Regius	8th century	Gospels	Often agrees with Vaticanus
W (032)	Washingtonianus	early 5th century	Gospels	mixed; earliest representation of Byzantine texttype. Alexandrian in John 5:12-21:25.
Θ (038)	Koridethi	9th century	Gospels	The text of Mark is similar to that used by Origen and Eusebius in the third and fourth centuries at Caesarea
Ψ (044)	Athous Laurae	8th/ 9th century	Gospels/Acts/ Paul/General Epistles	Contains Alexandrian, Western, and Byzantine influences

Minuscules

There are approximately 2,813 NT Greek minuscule manuscripts known to us today. These copies range in date from the ninth to sixteenth centuries, were produced on vellum or paper, and were written in cursive or a lower-case, flowing hand. They are the best representatives of the medieval ecclesiastical text, that is, the Byzantine text. There are approximately 150-200 that deviate from the Byzantine standard, almost always representing an earlier transmissional stream and hence quite important for NT textual criticism. The symbols for the minuscules are of three kinds: (a) Arabic numbers (e.g., 1, 565, 1739), each of which represents one manuscript; (b) "family 1," [𝔐^{1}] "family 13" [𝔐^{13}] (involving a group of closely associated manuscripts); (c) Byz (involving the majority of Byzantine minuscules). The following are among the more important witnesses cited in the NET NT notes:

Minuscule	Date (approx.)	NT Books Covered	General Characteristics
33	9th century	Gospels, Acts, Paul, Catholic Epistles	Alexandrian
81	AD 1044	Acts, Paul, Catholic Epistles	Very important for establishing the text of Acts. Agrees substantially with the Alexandrian texttype.
1739	10th century, but probably goes back to a late 4th century ms	Acts, Paul, Catholic Epistles	Alexandrian
Family 1 (𝔐^{1})	12th-14th centuries	Gospels	Caesarean (of the 3rd or 4th centuries)
Family 13 (𝔐^{13})	11th-15th centuries	Gospels	Important in the discussion of the authenticity of the pericope adulterae (i.e., John 7:53-8:11)

Versional Evidence

Versions were initially prepared for missionary purposes. The history and transmission of versions are often quite complex, and scholars often do not agree on or do not know the particular dates or characteristics of the versions. The chart below contains the major versions cited in the notes; the most important abbreviations are listed, but not all abbreviations are indicated. For more information on the versional evidence for the NT, consult B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (3d ed.; New York: Oxford University Press, 1992), 67-86; B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford: Clarendon, 1977); and B. D. Ehrman and M. W. Holmes, eds., The Text of the New Testament in Contemporary Research: Essays on the Status Quaestionis (Studies and Documents 46; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995), 75-187.

Version	Abbreviations	Date (approx.)	General Characteristics
Vulgate and part of the Itala witnesses	lat	2nd to 3rd century	Western, Alexandrian, and others
Itala	it	3rd century	Western
Vulgate	vg	4th century and later	extensive cross-contamination of texttypes
Syriac	syr	2nd to 6th centuries	Old Syriac (syr^c and syr^s) is generally Western. The Peshitta (syr^p) has a mixed text in Gospels and Epistles, Western in Acts. The Harclean version (syr^h) of Acts is Western. The Palestinian Syriac (syr^{pal}) is generally Caesarean.
Coptic	cop	3rd and 4th centuries (Sahidic dialect is 4th to 5th centuries; Bohairic dialect is 9th century)	generally Alexandrian in the entire tradition; Sahidic (sa) and Bohairic (bo) are Alexandrian with numerous Western readings
Armenian	arm	5th century	generally Caesarean but sections are Byzantine, and the MSS of Paul show strong Alexandrian affinities
Georgian	geo	5th century	mixed texttypes; generally Caesarean, but becoming strongly Byzantine in later MSS
Ethiopic	eth	exact date unknown, but most likely within the 4th to 5th centuries	mixed text, but generally early Byzantine
Slavonic	slav	9th century	Byzantine

Patristic Evidence

A tremendous source for evidence of the Greek NT are citations found in early Church Fathers. They help to locate and date various readings and texttypes found in the manuscripts and versions. This field is quite complex for two broad reasons: (1) It is often difficult to determine if what the Father actually wrote has been preserved in the extant manuscripts or if corruption has occurred. (2) It is often difficult to determine if a Father is citing a text verbatim, paraphrasing it, or alluding to it. All of the Fathers cited in the notes are listed below. For more information on the patristic evidence for the NT, consult B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (3d ed.; New York: Oxford University Press, 1992), 86-92; and B. D. Ehrman and M. W. Holmes, eds., The Text of the New Testament in Contemporary Research: Essays on the Status Quaestionis (Studies and Documents 46; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995), 189-236.

Hebrew and Greek Transliteration

Throughout the notes most Hebrew and Greek words or phrases will be transliterated into English. General guidelines for transliteration are as follows: Hebrew and Greek words or phrases in study notes will always be transliterated. Hebrew and Greek in translator's notes and text-critical notes will usually be transliterated, but there are some exceptions. Only the first occurrence of a word in any note will be transliterated. Hebrew and Greek words contained in citations of lexical tools (e.g., BDAG 2 s.v. ἄβυσσος) will not be transliterated, nor will Hebrew or Greek words and phrases contained in direct quotations. When appropriate (based on the context within the note) the translation of the word or phrase will follow the transliteration. If a Hebrew or Greek phrase in the notes is extensive, in many cases it will not be transliterated for stylistic reasons to avoid unnecessary length and awkwardness. Occasionally a Hebrew word will be written with radicals only and no vowel pointing; in this case there will be no transliteration. As per the Unicode® specification for the Hebrew language, furtive patakh has the same placement as the patakh.
