2:1 "Now, you priests, this commandment is for you. 2:2 If you do not listen and take seriously[5] the need to honor my name," says the LORD who rules over all, "I will send judgment[6] on you and turn your blessings into curses – indeed, I have already done so because you are not taking it to heart. 2:3 I am about to discipline your children[7] and will spread offal[8] on your faces,[9] the very offal produced at your festivals, and you will be carried away along with it. 2:4 Then you will know that I sent this commandment to you so that my covenant[10] may continue to be with Levi," says the LORD who rules over all. 2:5 "My covenant with him was designed to bring life and peace. I gave its statutes to him to fill him with awe, and he indeed revered me and stood in awe before me. 2:6 He taught what was true;[11] sinful words were not found on his lips. He walked with me in peace and integrity, and he turned many people away from sin. 2:7 For the lips of a priest should preserve knowledge of sacred things, and people should seek instruction from him[12] because he is the messenger of the LORD who rules over all. 2:8 You, however, have turned from the way. You have caused many to violate the law;[13] you have corrupted the covenant with Levi,"[14] says the LORD who rules over all. 2:9 "Therefore, I have caused you to be ignored and belittled before all people to the extent to which you are not following after me and are showing partiality in your[15] instruction."

The Rebellion of the People

2:10 Do we not all have one father?[16] Did not one God create us? Why do we betray one another, in this way making light of the covenant of our ancestors? 2:11 Judah has become disloyal, and unspeakable sins have been committed in Israel and Jerusalem.[17] For Judah has profaned[18] the holy things that the LORD loves and

[1] sn My name will be great among the nations. In what is clearly a strongly ironic shift of thought, the LORD contrasts the unbelief and virtual paganism of the postexilic community with the conversion and obedience of the nations that will one day worship the God of Israel.

[2] tn Heb "fruit." The following word "food" in the Hebrew text (אָכְלוֹ, 'okhlo) appears to be an explanatory gloss to clarify the meaning of the rare word נִיב (niv, "fruit"; see Isa 57:19 Qere; נוֹב, nov, "fruit," in Kethib). Cf. ASV "the fruit thereof, even its food." In this cultic context the reference is to the offerings on the altar.

[3] tn Heb "from your hand," a metonymy of part (the hand) for whole (the person).

[4] sn The epithet great king was used to describe the Hittite rulers on their covenant documents and so, in the covenant ideology of Malachi, is an apt description of the LORD.

[5] tn Heb "and if you do not place upon [the] heart"; KJV, NAB, NRSV "lay it to heart."

[6] tn Heb "the curse" (so NASB, NRSV); NLT "a terrible curse."

[7] tc The phrase "discipline your children" is disputed. The LXX and Vulgate suppose זְרוֹעַ (z^{e}roa', "arm") for the MT זֶרַע (zera', "seed"; hence, "children"). Then, for the MT גֹּעֵר (go'er, "rebuking") the same versions suggest גָּרַע (gara', "take away"). The resulting translation is "I am about to take away your arm" (cf. NAB "deprive you of the shoulder"). However, this reading is unlikely. It is common for a curse (v. 2) to fall on offspring (see, e.g., Deut 28:18, 32, 41, 53, 55, 57), but a curse never takes the form of a broken or amputated arm. It is preferable to retain the reading of the MT here.

[8] tn The Hebrew term פֶּרֶשׁ (feresh, "offal") refers to the entrails as ripped out in preparing a sacrificial victim (BDB 831 s.v. פֶּרֶשׁ). This graphic term has been variously translated: "dung" (KJV, RSV, NRSV, NLT); "refuse" (NKJV, NASB); "offal" (NEB, NIV).

[9] sn See Zech 3:3-4 for similar coarse imagery which reflects cultic disqualification.

[10] sn My covenant refers to the priestly covenant through Aaron and his grandson Phinehas (see Exod 6:16-20; Num 25:10-13; Jer 33:21-22). The point here is to contrast the priestly ideal with the disgraceful manner in which it was being carried out in postexilic times.

[11] tn Heb "True teaching was in his mouth"; cf. NASB, NRSV "True instruction (doctrine NAB) was in his mouth."

[12] tn Heb "from his mouth" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV).

[13] tn The definite article embedded within בַּתּוֹרָה (battorah) may suggest that the Torah is in mind and not just "ordinary" priestly instruction, though it might refer to the instruction previously mentioned (v. 7).

[14] tn Or "the Levitical covenant."

[15] tn Heb "in the instruction" (so NASB). The Hebrew article is used here as a possessive pronoun (cf. NRSV, NLT).

[16] sn The rhetorical question Do we not all have one father? by no means teaches the "universal fatherhood of God," that is, that all people equally are children of God. The reference to the covenant in v. 10 as well as to Israel and Judah (v. 11) makes it clear that the referent of "we" is God's elect people.

has turned to a foreign god![1] 2:12 May the LORD cut off from the community[2] of Jacob every last person who does this,[3] as well as the person who presents improper offerings to the LORD who rules over all!

2:13 You also do this: You cover the altar of the LORD with tears[4] as you weep and groan, because he no longer pays any attention to the offering nor accepts it favorably from you. 2:14 Yet you ask, "Why?" The LORD is testifying against you on behalf of the wife you married when you were young,[5] to whom you have become unfaithful even though she is your companion and wife by law.[6] 2:15 No one who has even a small portion of the Spirit in him does this.[7] What did our ancestor[8] do when seeking a child from God? Be attentive, then, to your own spirit, for one should not be disloyal to the wife he took in his youth.[9]

2:16 "I hate divorce,"[10] says the LORD God of Israel, "and the one who is guilty of violence,"[11] says the LORD who rules over all. "Pay attention to your conscience, and do not be unfaithful."

Resistance to the Lord through Self-deceit

2:17 You have wearied the LORD with your words. But you say, "How have we wearied him?" Because you say, "Everyone who does evil is good in the Lord's opinion,[12] and he delights in them," or "Where is the God of justice?" 3:1 "I am about to send my messenger,[13] who will clear the way before me. Indeed, the Lord[14] you are seeking will suddenly come to his temple, and the messenger[15] of the covenant, whom you long for, is certainly coming," says the LORD who rules over all.

3:2 Who can endure the day of his coming? Who can keep standing when he appears? For he will be like a refiner's fire,[16] like a launderer's soap. 3:3 He will act like a refiner and purifier of silver and will cleanse the Levites and refine them like gold and silver. Then they will offer the LORD a proper offering. 3:4 The offerings[17]

[1] tn Heb "has married the daughter of a foreign god." Marriage is used here as a metaphor to describe Judah's idolatry, that is, her unfaithfulness to the LORD and "remarriage" to pagan gods. But spiritual intermarriage found expression in literal, physical marriage as well, as vv. 14-16 indicate.

[2] tn Heb "tents," used figuratively for the community here (cf. NCV, TEV); NLT "the nation of Israel."

[3] tc Heb "every man who does this, him who is awake and him who answers." For "answers" the LXX suggests an underlying Hebrew text of עָנָה ('anah, "to be humbled"), and then the whole phrase is modified slightly: "until he is humbled." This requires also that the MT עַר ('er, "awake") be read as עַד ('ed, "until"; here the LXX reads ἕως, heōs). The reading of the LXX is most likely an alteration to correct what is arguably a difficult text.

tn Heb "every man who does this, him who is awake and him who answers." The idea seems to be a merism expressing totality, that is, everybody from the awakener to the awakened, thus "every last person who does this" (NLT similar); NIV "whoever he may be."

[4] sn You cover the altar of the LORD with tears. These tears are the false tears of hypocrisy, not genuine tears of repentance. The people weep because the LORD will not hear them, not because of their sin.

[5] tn Heb "the LORD is a witness between you and [between] the wife of your youth."

[6] sn Though there is no explicit reference to marriage vows in the OT (but see Job 7:13; Prov 2:17; Ezek 16:8), the term law (Heb "covenant") here asserts that such vows or agreements must have existed. References to divorce documents (e.g., Deut 24:1-3; Jer 3:8) also presuppose the existence of marriage documents.

[7] tn Heb "and not one has done, and a remnant of the spirit to him." The very elliptical nature of the statement suggests it is proverbial. The present translation represents an attempt to clarify the meaning of the statement (cf. NASB).

[8] tn Heb "the one." This is an oblique reference to Abraham who sought to obtain God's blessing by circumventing God's own plan for him by taking Hagar as wife (Gen 16:1-6). The result of this kind of intermarriage was, of course, disastrous (Gen 16:11-12).

[9] sn The wife he took in his youth probably refers to the first wife one married (cf. NCV "the wife you married when you were young").

[10] tc The verb שָׂנֵא (sane') appears to be a third person form, "he hates," which makes little sense in the context, unless one emends the following word to a third person verb as well. Then one might translate, "he [who] hates [his wife] [and] divorces her...is guilty of violence." A similar translation is advocated by M. A. Shields, "Syncretism and Divorce in Malachi 2,10-16," ZAW 111 (1999): 81-85. However, it is possible that the first person pronoun אָנֹכִי ('anokhi, "I") has accidentally dropped from the text after כִּי (ki). If one restores the pronoun, the form שָׂנֵא can be taken as a participle and the text translated, "for I hate" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV, NLT).

sn Though the statement "I hate divorce" may (and should) be understood as a comprehensive biblical principle, the immediate context suggests that the divorce in view is that of one Jewish person by another in order to undertake subsequent marriages. The injunction here by no means contradicts Ezra's commands to Jewish men to divorce their heathen wives (Ezra 9–10).

[11] tn Heb "him who covers his garment with violence" (similar ASV, NRSV). Here "garment" is a metaphor for appearance and "violence" a metonymy of effect for cause. God views divorce as an act of violence against the victim.

[12] tn Heb "in the eyes of the LORD."

[13] tn In Hebrew the phrase "my messenger" is מַלְאָכִי (mal'akhi), the same form as the prophet's name (see note on the name "Malachi" in 1:1). However, here the messenger appears to be an eschatological figure who is about to appear, as the following context suggests. According to 4:5, this messenger is "Elijah the prophet," whom the NT identifies as John the Baptist (Matt 11:10; Mark 1:2) because he came in the "spirit and power" of Elijah (Matt 11:14; 17:11-12; Lk 1:17).

[14] tn Here the Hebrew term הָאָדוֹן (ha'adon) is used, not יְהוָה (yehvah, typically rendered LORD). Thus the focus is not on the Lord as the covenant God, but on his role as master.

[15] sn This messenger of the covenant may be equated with my messenger (that is, Elijah) mentioned earlier in the verse, or with the Lord himself. In either case the messenger functions as an enforcer of the covenant. Note the following verses, which depict purifying judgment on a people that has violated the Lord's covenant.

[16] sn The refiner's fire was used to purify metal and refine it by melting it and allowing the dross, which floated to the top, to be scooped off.

of Judah and Jerusalem[1] will be pleasing to the LORD as in former times and years past.

3:5 "I[2] will come to you in judgment. I will be quick to testify against those who practice divination, those who commit adultery, those who break promises,[3] and those who exploit workers, widows, and orphans,[4] who refuse to help[5] the immigrant[6] and in this way show they do not fear me," says the LORD who rules over all.

Resistance to the Lord through Selfishness

3:6 "Since, I, the LORD, do not go back on my promises,[7] you, sons of Jacob, have not perished. 3:7 From the days of your ancestors you have ignored[8] my commandments[9] and have not kept them! Return to me, and I will return to you," says the LORD who rules over all. "But you say, 'How should we return?' 3:8 Can a person rob[10] God? You indeed are robbing me, but you say, 'How are we robbing you?' In tithes and contributions![11] 3:9 You are bound for judgment[12] because you are robbing me – this whole nation is guilty.[13]

3:10 "Bring the entire tithe into the storehouse[14] so that there may be food in my temple. Test me in this matter," says the LORD who rules over all, "to see if I will not open for you the windows of heaven and pour out for you a blessing until there is no room for it all. 3:11 Then I will stop the plague[15] from ruining your crops,[16] and the vine will not lose its fruit before harvest," says the LORD who rules over all. 3:12 "All nations will call you happy, for you indeed will live in[17] a delightful land," says the LORD who rules over all.

Resistance to the Lord through Self-sufficiency

3:13 "You have criticized me sharply,"[18] says the LORD, "but you ask, 'How have we criticized you?' 3:14 You have said, 'It is useless to serve God. How have we been helped[19] by keeping his requirements and going about like mourners before the LORD who rules over all?[20] 3:15 So now we consider the arrogant to be happy; indeed, those who practice evil are successful.[21] In fact, those who challenge[22] God escape!'"

3:16 Then those who respected[23] the LORD spoke to one another, and the LORD took notice.[24] A scroll[25] was prepared before him in which were recorded the names of those who respected the LORD and honored his name. 3:17 "They will belong to me," says the LORD who rules over all, "in the day when I prepare my own special property.[26] I will spare them as a man spares his son who serves him. 3:18 Then once more you will see that I make a distinction between[27] the righteous and the wicked, between the one who serves God and the one who does not.

[2] tn The first person pronoun (a reference to the LORD) indicates that the LORD himself now speaks (see also v. 1). The prophet speaks in vv. 2-4 (see also 2:17).

[3] tn Heb "those who swear [oaths] falsely." Cf. NIV "perjurers"; TEV "those who give false testimony"; NLT "liars."

[4] tn Heb "and against the oppressors of the worker for a wage, [the] widow and orphan."

[5] tn Heb "those who turn aside."

[6] tn Or "resident foreigner"; NIV "aliens"; NRSV "the alien."

[7] tn Heb "do not change." This refers to God's ongoing commitment to his covenant promises to Israel.

[8] tn Heb "turned aside from."

[9] tn Or "statutes" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV); NIV "decrees"; NLT "laws."

[10] tc The LXX presupposes an underlying Hebrew text of עָקַב ('aqav, "deceive"), a metathesis of קָבַע (qava', "rob"), in all four uses of the verb here (vv. 8-9). The intent probably is to soften the impact of "robbing" God, but the language of the passage is intentionally bold and there is no reason to go against the reading of the MT (which is followed here by most English versions).

[11] sn The tithes and contributions mentioned here are probably those used to sustain the Levites (see Num 18:8, 11, 19, 21-24).

[12] tn Heb "cursed with a curse" that is, "under a curse" (so NIV, NLT, CEV).

[13] tn The phrase "is guilty" is not present in the Hebrew text but is implied, and has been supplied in the translation for clarification and stylistic reasons.

[14] tn The Hebrew phrase בֵּית הָאוֹצָר (bet ha'otsar, here translated "storehouse") refers to a kind of temple warehouse described more fully in Nehemiah (where the term לִשְׁכָּה גְּדוֹלָה [lishkah gedolah, "great chamber"] is used) as a place for storing grain, frankincense, temple vessels, wine, and oil (Neh 13:5). Cf. TEV "to the Temple."

[15] tn Heb "the eater" (אֹכֵל, 'okhel), a general term for any kind of threat to crops and livelihood. This is understood as a reference to a locust plague by a number of English versions: NAB, NRSV "the locust"; NIV "pests"; NCV, TEV "insects."

[16] tn Heb "and I will rebuke for you the eater and it will not ruin for you the fruit of the ground."

[17] tn Heb "will be" (so NAB, NRSV); TEV "your land will be a good place to live in."

[18] tn Heb "your words are hard [or "strong"] against me"; cf. NIV "said harsh things against me"; TEV, NLT "said terrible things about me."

[19] tn Heb "What [is the] profit"; NIV "What did we gain."

[20] sn The people's public display of self-effacing piety has gone unrewarded by the LORD. The reason, of course, is that it was blatantly hypocritical.

[21] tn Heb "built up" (so NASB); NIV, NRSV "prosper"; NLT "get rich."

[22] tn Or "test"; NRSV, CEV "put God to the test."

[23] tn Or "fear" (so NAB); NRSV "revered"; NCV "honored."

[24] tn Heb "heard and listened"; NAB "listened attentively."

[25] sn The scroll mentioned here is a "memory book" (סֵפֶר זִכָּרוֹן, sefer zikkaron) in which the LORD keeps an ongoing record of the names of all the redeemed (see Exod 32:32; Isa 4:3; Dan 12:1; Rev 20:12-15).

[26] sn The Hebrew word סְגֻלָּה (segullah, "special property") is a technical term referring to all the recipients of God's redemptive grace, especially Israel (Exod 19:5; Deut 7:6; 14:2; 26:18). The LORD says here that he will not forget even one individual in the day of judgment and reward.

4:1 (3:19)[1] "For indeed the day[2] is coming, burning like a furnace, and all the arrogant evildoers will be chaff. The coming day will burn them up," says the LORD who rules over all. "It[3] will not leave even a root or branch. 4:2 But for you who respect my name, the sun of vindication[4] will rise with healing wings,[5] and you will skip about[6] like calves released from the stall. 4:3 You will trample on the wicked, for they will be like ashes under the soles of your feet on the day which I am preparing," says the LORD who rules over all.

Restoration through the Lord

4:4 "Remember the law of my servant Moses, to whom at Horeb[7] I gave rules and regulations for all Israel to obey.[8] 4:5 Look, I will send you Elijah[9] the prophet before the great and terrible day of the LORD arrives. 4:6 He will encourage fathers and their children to return to me,[10] so that I will not come and strike the earth with judgment."[11]

[1] sn Beginning with 4:1, the verse numbers through 4:6 in the English Bible differ from the verse numbers in the Hebrew text (BHS), with 4:1 ET = 3:19 HT, 4:2 ET = 3:20 HT, etc., through 4:6 ET = 3:24 HT. Thus the book of Malachi in the Hebrew Bible has only three chapters, with 24 verses in ch. 3.

[2] sn This day is the well-known "day of the LORD" so pervasive in OT eschatological texts (see Joel 2:30-31; Amos 5:18; Obad 15). For the believer it is a day of grace and salvation; for the sinner, a day of judgment and destruction.

[3] tn Heb "so that it" (so NASB, NRSV). For stylistic reasons a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

[4] tn Here the Hebrew word צְדָקָה (ts^{e}daqah), usually translated "righteousness" (so KJV, NIV, NRSV, NLT; cf. NAB "justice"), has been rendered as "vindication" because it is the vindication of God's people that is in view in the context. Cf. BDB 842 s.v. צְדָקָה 6; "righteousness as vindicated, justification, salvation, etc."

sn The expression the sun of vindication will rise is a metaphorical way of describing the day of the LORD as a time of restoration when God vindicates his people (see 2 Sam 23:4; Isa 30:26; 60:1, 3). Their vindication and restoration will be as obvious and undeniable as the bright light of the rising sun.

[5] sn The point of the metaphor of *healing wing*s is unclear. The sun seems to be compared to a bird. Perhaps the sun's "wings" are its warm rays. "Healing" may refer to a reversal of the injury done by evildoers (see Mal 3:5).

[6] tn Heb "you will go out and skip about."

[7] sn Horeb is another name for Mount Sinai (cf. Exod 3:1).

[8] tn Heb "which I commanded him in Horeb concerning all Israel, statutes and ordinances."

[9] sn I will send you Elijah the prophet. In light of the ascension of Elijah to heaven without dying (2 Kgs 2:11), Judaism has always awaited his return as an aspect of the messianic age (see, e.g., John 1:19-28). Jesus identified John the Baptist as Elijah, because he came in the "spirit and power" of his prototype Elijah (Matt 11:14; 17:1-13; Mark 9:2-13; Luke 9:28-36).

[10] tn Heb "he will turn the heart[s] of [the] fathers to [the] sons, and the heart[s] of [the] sons to their fathers." This may mean that the messenger will encourage reconciliation of conflicts within Jewish families in the postexilic community (see Mal 2:10; this interpretation is followed by most English versions). Another option is to translate, "he will turn the hearts of the fathers together with those of the children [to me], and the hearts of the children together with those of their fathers [to me]." In this case the prophet encourages both the younger and older generations of sinful society to repent and return to the LORD (cf. Mal 3:7). This option is preferred in the present translation; see Beth Glazier-McDonald, Malachi (SBLDS), 256.

[11] tn Heb "[the] ban" (חֵרֶם, kherem). God's prophetic messenger seeks to bring about salvation and restoration, thus avoiding the imposition of the covenant curse, that is, the divine ban that the hopelessly unrepentant must expect (see Deut 7:2; 20:17; Judg 1:21; Zech 14:11). If the wicked repent, the purifying judgment threatened in 4:1-3 will be unnecessary.

The New Testament

Matthew

The Genealogy of Jesus Christ

1:1 This is the record of the genealogy[1] of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

1:2 Abraham was the father[2] of Isaac, Isaac the father of Jacob, Jacob the father of Judah and his brothers, 1:3 Judah the father of Perez and Zerah (by Tamar), Perez the father of Hezron, Hezron the father of Ram, 1:4 Ram the father of Amminadab, Amminadab the father of Nahshon, Nahshon the father of Salmon, 1:5 Salmon the father of Boaz (by Rahab), Boaz the father of Obed (by Ruth), Obed the father of Jesse, 1:6 and Jesse the father of David the king.

David was the father of Solomon (by the wife of Uriah[3]), 1:7 Solomon the father of Rehoboam, Rehoboam the father of Abijah, Abijah the father of Asa,[4] 1:8 Asa the father of Jehoshaphat, Jehoshaphat the father of Joram, Joram the father of Uzziah, 1:9 Uzziah the father of Jotham, Jotham the father of Ahaz, Ahaz the father of Hezekiah, 1:10 Hezekiah the father of Manasseh, Manasseh the father of Amon,[5] Amon the father of Josiah, 1:11 and Josiah[6] the father of Jeconiah and his brothers, at the time of the deportation to Babylon.

1:12 After[7] the deportation to Babylon, Jeconiah became the father of Shealtiel,[8] Shealtiel the father of Zerubbabel, 1:13 Zerubbabel the father of Abiud, Abiud the father of Eliakim, Eliakim the father of Azor, 1:14 Azor the father of Zadok, Zadok the father of Achim, Achim the father of Eliud, 1:15 Eliud the father of Eleazar, Eleazar the father of Matthan, Matthan the father of Jacob, 1:16 and Jacob the father of Joseph, the husband of Mary, by whom[9] Jesus was born, who is called Christ.[10]

1:17 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations, and from David to the deportation to Babylon, fourteen generations, and from the deportation to Babylon to Christ,[11] fourteen generations.

The Birth of Jesus Christ

1:18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ happened this way. While his mother Mary was engaged to Joseph, but before they came together,[12] she was found to be pregnant through the Holy

1 tn Grk "the book of the genealogy." The noun βίβλος (biblos), though it is without the article, is to be translated as definite due to Apollonius' corollary and the normal use of anarthrous nouns in titles.

2 tn Grk "fathered."

3 sn By the wife of Uriah, i.e., Bathsheba (cf. 2 Sam 11:3).

4 tc The reading Ἀσάφ (Asaph), a variant spelling on Ἀσά (Asa), is found in the earliest and most widespread witnesses (𝔓^{1vid} ℵ B C [D^{luc}] $f^{1.13}$ 700 pc it co). Although Asaph was a psalmist and Asa was a king, it is doubtful that the author mistook one for the other since other ancient documents have variant spellings on the king's name (such as "Asab," "Asanos," and "Asaph"). Thus the spelling Ἀσάφ that is almost surely found in the original of Matt 1:7-8 has been translated as "Asa" in keeping with the more common spelling of the king's name.

5 tc Ἀμώς (Amōs) is the reading found in the earliest and best witnesses (ℵ B C [D^{luc}] Γ Δ Θ f^{1} 33 pc it sa bo), and as such is most likely original, but this is a variant spelling of the name Ἀμών (Amōn). The translation uses the more well-known spelling "Amon" found in the Hebrew MT and the majority of LXX mss. See also the textual discussion of "Asa" versus "Asaph" (vv. 7-8); the situation is similar.

6 sn Before the mention of Jeconiah, several medieval mss add Jehoiakim, in conformity with the genealogy in 1 Chr 3:15-16. But this alters the count of fourteen generations (v. 17). It is evident that the author is selective in his genealogy for a theological purpose.

7 tn Because of the difference between Greek style, which usually begins a sentence with a conjunction, and English style, which generally does not, the conjunction δέ (de) has not been translated here.

8 sn The Greek text and the KJV read Salathiel. Most modern English translations use the OT form of the name (cf. Ezra 3:2).

9 tc There are three significant variant readings at this point in the text. Some mss and versional witnesses (Θ f^{13} it) read, "Joseph, to whom the virgin Mary, being betrothed, bore Jesus, who is called Christ." This reading makes even more explicit than the feminine pronoun (see sn below) the virginal conception of Jesus and as such seems to be a motivated reading. The Sinaitic Syriac ms alone indicates that Joseph was the father of Jesus ("Joseph, to whom was betrothed Mary the virgin, fathered Jesus who is called the Christ"). Although much discussed, this reading has not been found in any Greek witnesses. B. M. Metzger suggests that it was produced by a careless scribe who simply reproduced the set formula of the preceding lines in the genealogy (TCGNT 6). In all likelihood, the two competing variants were thus produced by intentional and unintentional scribal alterations respectively. The reading adopted in the translation has overwhelming support from a variety of witnesses (𝔓^{1} ℵ B C L W [f^{1}] 33 𝔐 co), and therefore should be regarded as authentic. For a detailed discussion of this textual problem, see TCGNT 2-6.

sn The pronoun whom is feminine gender in the Greek text, referring to Mary.

10 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn The term χριστός (christos) was originally an adjective ("anointed"), developing in LXX into a substantive ("an anointed one"), then developing still further into a technical generic term ("the anointed one"). In the intertestamental period it developed further into a technical term referring to the hoped-for anointed one, that is, a specific individual. In the NT the development starts there (technical-specific), is so used in the gospels, and then develops in Paul to mean virtually Jesus' last name.

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

12 tn The connotation of the Greek is "before they came together in marital and domestic union" (so BDAG 970 s.v. συνέρχομαι 3).

Spirit. 1:19 Because Joseph, her husband to be,[1] was a righteous man, and because he did not want to disgrace her, he intended to divorce her[2] privately. 1:20 When he had contemplated this, an[3] angel of the Lord[4] appeared to him in a dream and said, "Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary as your wife, because the child conceived in her is from the Holy Spirit. 1:21 She will give birth to a son and you will name him[5] Jesus,[6] because he will save his people from their sins." 1:22 This all happened so that what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet would be fulfilled: 1:23 "Look! The virgin will conceive and bear a son, and they will call him[7] Emmanuel,"[8] which means[9] "God with us."[10] 1:24 When Joseph awoke from sleep he did what the angel of the Lord[11] told him. He took his wife, 1:25 but did not have marital relations[12] with her until she gave birth to a son, whom he named[13] Jesus.

The Visit of the Wise Men

2:1 After Jesus was born in Bethlehem[14] in Judea, in the time[15] of King Herod,[16] wise men[17] from the East came to Jerusalem[18] 2:2 saying, "Where is the one who is born king of the Jews? For we saw his star when it rose[19] and have come to worship him." 2:3 When King Herod[20] heard this he was alarmed, and all Jerusalem with him. 2:4 After assembling all the chief priests and experts in the law,[21] he asked them where the Christ[22] was to be born. 2:5 "In Bethlehem of Judea," they said, "for it is written this way by the prophet:

> 2:6 'And you, Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, > are in no way least among the rulers of Judah, > for out of you will come a ruler who will shepherd my people Israel.'"[23]

2:7 Then Herod[24] privately summoned the wise men and determined from them when the star had appeared. 2:8 He[25] sent them to Bethlehem and said, "Go and look carefully for the child. When you find him, inform me so that I can go and worship him as well." 2:9 After listening to the king they left, and once again[26] the star they saw when it rose[27] led them until it stopped above the place where the child was. 2:10 When they saw the star they shouted

---

1 tn Grk "husband." See following note for discussion.

2 tn Or "send her away."

sn In the Jewish context, "full betrothal was so binding that its breaking required a certificate of divorce, and the death of one party made the other a widow or widower (m. Ketub. 1:2; m. Sota 1:5; m. Git. passim…)" (R. H. Gundry, Matthew: A Commentary on his Literary and Theological Art, 21).

3 tn Grk "behold, an angel." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

4 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." Linguistically, "angel of the Lord" is the same in both testaments (and thus, he is either "an angel of the Lord" or "the angel of the Lord" in both testaments). For arguments and implications, see ExSyn 252; M. J. Davidson, "Angels," DJG, 9; W. G. MacDonald argues for "an angel" in both testaments: "Christology and 'The Angel of the Lord'," Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation, 324-35.

5 tn Grk "you will call his name."

6 sn The Greek form of the name Iēsous, which was translated into Latin as Jesus, is the same as the Hebrew Yeshua (Joshua), which means "Yahweh saves" (Yahweh is typically rendered as "LORD" in the OT). It was a fairly common name among Jews in 1st century Palestine, as references to a number of people by this name in the LXX and Josephus indicate.

7 tn Grk "they will call his name."

8 sn A quotation from Isa 7:14.

9 tn Grk "is translated."

10 sn An allusion to Isa 8:8, 10 (LXX).

11 tn See the note on the word "Lord" in 1:20. Here the translation "the angel of the Lord" is used because the Greek article (ὁ, ho) which precedes ἄγγελος (angelos) is taken as an anaphoric article (ExSyn 217-19) referring back to the angel mentioned in v. 20.

12 tn Or "did not have sexual relations"; Grk "was not knowing her." The verb "know" (in both Hebrew and Greek) is a frequent biblical euphemism for sexual relations. However, a translation like "did not have sexual relations with her" is too graphic in light of the popularity and wide use of Matthew's infancy narrative. Thus the somewhat more subdued but still clear "did not have marital relations" was selected.

13 tn Grk "and he called his name Jesus." The coordinate clause has been translated as a relative clause in English for stylistic reasons.

15 tn Grk "in the days."

16 sn King Herod was Herod the Great, who ruled Palestine from 37 B.C. until he died in 4 B.C. He was known for his extensive building projects (including the temple in Jerusalem) and for his cruelty.

17 sn The Greek term magi here describes a class of wise men and priests who were astrologers (L&N 32.40).

18 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

19 tn Or "in its rising," referring to the astrological significance of a star in a particular portion of the sky. The term used for the "East" in v. 1 is ἀνατολαί (anatolai, a plural form that is used typically of the rising of the sun), while in vv. 2 and 9 the singular ἀνατολή (anatolē) is used. The singular is typically used of the rising of a star and as such should not normally be translated "in the east" (cf. BDAG 74 s.v. 1: "because of the sg. and the article in contrast to ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν, vs. 1, [it is] prob. not a geograph. expr. like the latter, but rather astronomical…likew. vs. 9").

20 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1.

21 tn Or "and scribes of the people." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

22 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

23 sn A quotation from Mic 5:2.

24 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

26 tn Grk "and behold the star."

27 tn See the note on the word "rose" in 2:2.

joyfully.[1] 2:11 As they came into the house and saw the child with Mary his mother, they bowed down[2] and worshiped him. They opened their treasure boxes and gave him gifts of gold, frankincense,[3] and myrrh.[4] 2:12 After being warned in a dream not to return to Herod,[5] they went back by another route to their own country.

The Escape to Egypt

2:13 After they had gone, an[6] angel of the Lord[7] appeared to Joseph in a dream and said, "Get up, take the child and his mother and flee to Egypt, and stay there until I tell you, for Herod[8] is going to look for the child to kill him." 2:14 Then he got up, took the child and his mother during[9] the night, and went to Egypt. 2:15 He stayed there until Herod[10] died. In this way what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet was fulfilled: "I called my Son out of Egypt."[11]

2:16 When Herod[12] saw that he had been tricked by the wise men, he became enraged. He sent men[13] to kill all the children in Bethlehem[14] and throughout the surrounding region from the age of two and under, according to the time he had learned from the wise men. 2:17 Then what was spoken by Jeremiah the prophet was fulfilled:

> 2:18 "A voice was heard in Ramah, > weeping and loud wailing,[15]
> Rachel weeping for her children, > and she did not want to be comforted, be- > cause they were[16] gone."[17]

The Return to Nazareth

2:19 After Herod[18] had died, an[19] angel of the Lord[20] appeared in a dream to Joseph in Egypt 2:20 saying, "Get up, take the child and his mother, and go to the land of Israel, for those who were seeking the child's life are dead." 2:21 So[21] he got up and took the child and his mother and returned to the land of Israel. 2:22 But when he heard that Archelaus[22] was reigning over Judea in place of his father Herod,[23] he was afraid to go there. After being warned in a dream, he went to the regions of Galilee. 2:23 He came to a town called Nazareth[24] and lived there. Then what had been spoken by the prophets was fulfilled, that Jesus[25] would be called a Nazarene.[26]

The Ministry of John the Baptist

3:1 In those days John the Baptist came into the wilderness[27] of Judea proclaiming,

1 tn Grk "they rejoiced with very great joy."

2 tn Grk "they fell down." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.β has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

3 sn Frankincense refers to the aromatic resin of certain trees, used as a sweet-smelling incense (L&N 6.212).

4 sn Myrrh consisted of the aromatic resin of certain shrubs (L&N 6.208). It was used in preparing a corpse for burial.

5 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1.

6 tn Grk "behold, an angel." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

7 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 1:20.

8 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1. Herod the Great was particularly ruthless regarding the succession to his throne.

9 tn The feminine singular genitive noun νυκτός (nuktos, "night") indicates the time during which the action of the main verb takes place (ExSyn 124).

10 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1.

11 sn A quotation from Hos 11:1.

12 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1. Note the fulfillment of the prophecy given by the angel in 2:13.

13 tn Or "soldiers."

14 map For location see Map5-B1; Map7-E2; Map8-E2; Map10-B4.

15 tc The LXX of Jer 38:15 (31:15 ET) has "lamentation, weeping, and loud wailing"; most later mss (C D L W 0233 f^{13} 33 𝔐) have a quotation in Matthew which conforms to that of the LXX (θρῆνος καὶ κλαυθμός καὶ ὀδυρμός; thrēnos kai klauthmos kai odurmos). But such assimilations were routine among the scribes; as such, they typically should be discounted because they are both predictable and motivated. The shorter reading, without "lamentation and," is thus to be preferred, especially since it cannot easily be accounted for unless it is the original wording here. Further, it is found in the better mss along with a good cross-section of other witnesses (ℵ B Z 0250 f^{1} pc lat co).

17 sn A quotation from Jer 31:15.

18 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1. When Herod the Great died in 4 b.c., his kingdom was divided up among his three sons: Archelaus, who ruled over Judea (where Bethlehem was located, v. 22); Philip, who became tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis (cf. Luke 3:1); and Antipas, who became tetrarch of Galilee.

19 tn Grk "behold, an angel." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

20 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 1:20.

21 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's instructions.

22 sn Archelaus took after his father Herod the Great in terms of cruelty and ruthlessness, so Joseph was afraid to go there. After further direction in a dream, he went instead to Galilee.

23 sn See the note on King Herod in 2:1.

24 sn Nazareth was a very small village in the region of Galilee (Galilee lay north of Samaria and Judea). The town was located about 15 mi (25 km) west of the southern edge of the Sea of Galilee. According to Luke 1:26, Mary was living in Nazareth when the birth of Jesus was announced to her.

map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

25 tn There is no expressed subject of the third person singular verb here; the pronoun "he" is implied. Instead of this pronoun the referent "Jesus" has been supplied in the text to clarify to whom this statement refers.

26 tn The Greek could be indirect discourse (as in the text), or direct discourse ("he will be called a Nazarene"). Judging by the difficulty of finding OT quotations (as implied in the plural "prophets") to match the wording here, it appears that the author was using a current expression of scorn that conceptually (but not verbally) found its roots in the OT.

27 tn Or "desert."

3:2 "Repent,[1] for the kingdom of heaven is near."
3:3 For he is the one about whom Isaiah the prophet had spoken:[2]

> "The voice[3] of one shouting in the wilderness,
> 'Prepare the way for the Lord, make[4] his paths straight.'"[5]

3:4 Now John wore clothing made from camel's hair with a leather belt around his waist, and his diet consisted of locusts and wild honey.[6] 3:5 Then people from Jerusalem,[7] as well as all Judea and all the region around the Jordan, were going out to him, 3:6 and he was baptizing them[8] in the Jordan River as they confessed their sins.

3:7 But when he saw many Pharisees[9] and Sadducees[10] coming to his baptism, he said to them, "You offspring of vipers! Who warned you to flee from the coming wrath? 3:8 Therefore produce fruit[11] that proves your[12] repentance, 3:9 and don't think you can say to yourselves, 'We have Abraham as our father.' For I tell you that God can raise up children for Abraham from these stones! 3:10 Even now the ax is laid at[13] the root of the trees, and every tree that does not produce good fruit will be cut down and thrown into the fire.

3:11 "I baptize you with water, for repentance, but the one coming after me is more powerful than I am – I am not worthy[14] to carry his sandals. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire.[15] 3:12 His winnowing fork[16] is in his hand, and he will clean out his threshing floor and will gather his wheat into the storehouse,[17] but the chaff he will burn up with inextinguishable fire."[18]

The Baptism of Jesus

3:13 Then Jesus came from Galilee to John to be baptized by him in the Jordan River.[19] 3:14 But John[20] tried to prevent[21] him, saying, "I

1 tn Grk "and saying, 'Repent.'" The participle λέγων (legōn) at the beginning of v. 2 is redundant in English and has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "was spoken of by Isaiah the prophet, saying." The participle λέγοντος (legontos) is redundant and has not been translated. The passive construction has also been rendered as active in the translation for the sake of English style.

3 tn Or "A voice."

4 sn This call to "make paths straight" in this context is probably an allusion to preparation through repentance.

5 sn A quotation from Isa 40:3.

6 sn John's lifestyle was in stark contrast to many of the religious leaders of Jerusalem who lived in relative ease and luxury. While his clothing and diet were indicative of someone who lived in the desert, they also depicted him in his role as God's prophet (cf. Zech 13:4); his appearance is similar to the Prophet Elijah (2 Kgs 1:8). Locusts and wild honey were a common diet in desert regions, and locusts (dried insects) are listed in Lev 11:22 among the "clean" foods.

7 tn Grk "Then Jerusalem."

8 tn Grk "they were being baptized by him." The passive construction has been rendered as active in the translation for the sake of English style.

9 sn Pharisees were members of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

10 sn The Sadducees controlled the official political structures of Judaism at this time, being the majority members of the Sanhedrin. They were known as extremely strict on law and order issues (Josephus, J. W. 2.8.2 [2.119], 2.8.14 [2.164-166]; Ant. 13.5.9 [13.171-173], 13.10.6 [13.293-298], 18.1.2 [18.11], 18.1.4 [18.16-17], 20.9.1 [20.199]; Life 2 [10-11]). See also Matt 16:1-12; 22:23-34; Mark 12:18-27; Luke 20:27-38; Acts 5:17; 23:6-8.

11 sn Fruit that proves your repentance refers to the deeds that indicate a change of attitude (heart) on the part of John's hearers.

12 tn Grk "fruit worthy of."

13 sn Laid at the root. That is, placed and aimed, ready to begin cutting.

14 tn Grk "of whom I am not worthy."

sn The humility of John is evident in the statement I am not worthy. This was considered one of the least worthy tasks of a slave, and John did not consider himself worthy to do even that for the one to come, despite the fact he himself was a prophet.

15 sn With the Holy Spirit and fire. There are differing interpretations for this phrase regarding the number of baptisms and their nature. (1) Some see one baptism here, and this can be divided further into two options. (a) The baptism of the Holy Spirit and fire could refer to the cleansing, purifying work of the Spirit in the individual believer through salvation and sanctification, or (b) it could refer to two different results of Christ's ministry: Some accept Christ and are baptized with the Holy Spirit, but some reject him and receive judgment. (2) Other interpreters see two baptisms here: The baptism of the Holy Spirit refers to the salvation Jesus brings at his first advent, in which believers receive the Holy Spirit, and the baptism of fire refers to the judgment Jesus will bring upon the world at his second coming. One must take into account both the image of fire and whether individual or corporate baptism is in view. A decision is not easy on either issue. The image of fire is used to refer to both eternal judgment (e.g., Matt 25:41) and the power of the Lord's presence to purge and cleanse his people (e.g., Isa 4:4-5). The pouring out of the Spirit at Pentecost, a fulfillment of this prophecy no matter which interpretation is taken, had both individual and corporate dimensions. It is possible that since Holy Spirit and fire are governed by a single preposition in Greek, the one-baptism view may be more likely, but this is not certain. Simply put, there is no consensus view in scholarship at this time on the best interpretation of this passage.

16 sn A winnowing fork was a pitchfork-like tool used to toss threshed grain in the air so that the wind blew away the chaff, leaving the grain to fall to the ground. The note of purging is highlighted by the use of imagery involving sifting though threshed grain for the useful kernels.

17 tn Or "granary," "barn" (referring to a building used to store a farm's produce rather than a building to house livestock).

18 sn The image of fire that cannot be extinguished is from the OT: Job 20:26; Isa 34:8-10; 66:24.

19 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

20 tc ‡ The earliest MSS (𝔓⁹⁶ ℵ* B sa) lack the name of John here ("but he tried to prevent him," instead of "but John tried to prevent him"). It is, however, clearly implied (and is thus supplied in translation). Although the longer reading has excellent support (𝔓⁹⁶ ℵ¹ C Dˢ L W 0233 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat[t] sy mae bo), it looks to be a motivated and predictable reading: Scribes apparently could not resist adding this clarification.

21 tn The imperfect verb has been translated conatively.

need to be baptized by you, and yet you come to me?" 3:15 So Jesus replied[1] to him, "Let it happen now,[2] for it is right for us to fulfill all righteousness." Then John[3] yielded[4] to him. 3:16 After[5] Jesus was baptized, just as he was coming up out of the water, the[6] heavens[7] opened[8] and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove[9] and coming on him. 3:17 And[10] a voice from heaven said,[11] "This is my one dear Son;[12] in him[13] I take great delight."[14]

The Temptation of Jesus

4:1 Then Jesus was led by the Spirit into the wilderness[15] to be tempted by the devil. 4:2 After he fasted forty days and forty nights he was famished.[16] 4:3 The tempter came and said to him, "If you are the Son of God, command these stones to become bread."[17] 4:4 But he answered,[18] "It is written, 'Man[19] does not live[20] by bread alone, but by every word that comes from the mouth of God.'"[21] 4:5 Then the devil took him to the holy city,[22] had him stand[23] on the highest point[24] of the temple, 4:6 and said to him, "If you are the Son of God, throw yourself down. For it is written, 'He will command his angels concerning you'[25] and 'with their hands they will lift you up, so that you will not strike your foot against a stone.'"[26] 4:7 Jesus said to him, "Once again it is written: 'You are not to put the Lord your God to the test.'"[27] 4:8 Again, the devil took him to a very high mountain, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and their grandeur.[28] 4:9 And he said to him, "I will give you all these things if you throw yourself to the ground and worship[29] me." 4:10 Then Jesus said to him, "Go away,[30] Satan! For it is written: 'You are to worship the Lord your God and serve only him.'"[31] 4:11 Then the devil left him, and angels[32] came and began ministering to his needs.

Preaching in Galilee

4:12 Now when Jesus[33] heard that John had been imprisoned,[34] he went into Galilee.

1 tn Grk "but Jesus, answering, said." This construction with passive participle and finite verb is pleonastic (redundant) and has been simplified in the translation to "replied to him."

2 tn Grk "Permit now."

3 tn Grk "he"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Or "permitted him."

5 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "behold the heavens." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

7 tn Or "sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The same word is used in v. 17.

8 tc ‡ αὐτῷ (autō, "to/before him") is found in the majority of witnesses (ℵ¹ C Dˢ L W 0233 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat), perhaps added as a point of clarification or emphasis. NA²⁷ includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

9 sn The phrase like a dove is a descriptive comparison. The Spirit is not a dove, but descended like one in some sort of bodily representation.

10 tn Grk "and behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated here.

11 tn Grk "behold, a voice from the cloud, saying." This is an incomplete sentence in Greek which portrays intensity and emotion. The participle λέγουσα (legousa) was translated as a finite verb in keeping with English style.

12 tn Grk "my beloved Son," or "my Son, the beloved [one]." The force of ἀγαπητός (agapētos) is often "pertaining to one who is the only one of his or her class, but at the same time is particularly loved and cherished" (L&N 58.53; cf. also BDAG 7 s.v. 1).

sn The parallel accounts in Mark 1:11 and Luke 3:22 read "You are" rather than "This is," portraying the remark as addressed personally to Jesus.

13 tn Grk "in whom."

14 tn Or "with whom I am well pleased."

sn The allusions in the remarks of the text recall Ps 2:7a; Isa 42:1 and either Isa 41:8 or, less likely, Gen 22:12,16. God is marking out Jesus as his chosen one (the meaning of "[in him I take] great delight"), but it may well be that this was a private experience that only Jesus and John saw and heard (cf. John 1:32-33).

15 tn Or "desert."

16 tn Grk "and having fasted forty days and forty nights, afterward he was hungry."

17 tn Grk "say that these stones should become bread."

18 tn Grk "answering, he said." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant, but the syntax of the phrase has been changed for clarity.

19 tn Or "a person." Greek ὁ ἄνθρωπος (ho anthrōpos) is used generically for humanity. The translation "man" is used because the emphasis in Jesus' response seems to be on his dependence on God as a man.

20 tn Grk "will not live." The verb in Greek is a future tense, but it is unclear whether it is meant to be taken as a command (also known as an imperatival future) or as a statement of reality (predictive future).

21 sn A quotation from Deut 8:3.

22 sn The order of the second and third temptations differs in Luke's account (4:5-12) from the order given in Matthew.

23 tn Grk "and he stood him."

24 sn The highest point of the temple probably refers to the point on the temple's southeast corner where it looms directly over a cliff some 450 ft (135 m) high. However, some have suggested the reference could be to the temple's high gate.

25 sn A quotation from Ps 91:11. This was not so much an incorrect citation as a use in a wrong context (a misapplication of the passage).

26 sn A quotation from Ps 91:12.

27 sn A quotation from Deut 6:16.

28 tn Grk "glory."

29 tn Grk "if, falling down, you will worship." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

30 tc The majority of later witnesses (C² D L Z 33 𝔐) have "behind me" (ὀπίσω μου; opisō mou) after "Go away." But since this is the wording in Matt 16:23, where the text is certain, scribes most likely added the words here to conform to the later passage. Further, the shorter reading has superior support (ℵ B C*ᵛⁱᵈ K P W Δ 0233 $f^{1,13}$ 565 579* 700 al). Thus, both externally and internally, the shorter reading is strongly preferred.

31 sn A quotation from Deut 6:13. The word "only" is an interpretive expansion not found in either the Hebrew or Greek (LXX) text of the OT.

32 tn Grk "and behold, angels." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

33 tn Grk "he."

34 tn Or "arrested," "taken into custody" (see L&N 37.12).

4:13 While in Galilee, he moved from Nazareth[1] to make his home in Capernaum[2] by the sea,[3] in the region of Zebulun and Naphtali, 4:14 so that what was spoken by Isaiah the prophet would be fulfilled:[4]

> 4:15 "Land of Zebulun and land of Naphtali, > the way by the sea, beyond the Jordan,
> Galilee of the Gentiles –
> 4:16 the people who sit in darkness have seen a great light, > and on those who sit in the region and shadow of death a light has dawned."[5]

4:17 From that time Jesus began to preach this message:[6] "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is near."

The Call of the Disciples

4:18 As[7] he was walking by the Sea of Galilee he saw two brothers, Simon (called Peter) and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea (for they were fishermen).[8] 4:19 He said to them, "Follow me, and I will turn you into fishers of people."[9] 4:20 They[10] left their nets immediately and followed him.[11] 4:21 Going on from there he saw two other brothers, James the son of Zebedee and John his brother, in a boat[12] with Zebedee their father, mending their nets. Then[13] he called them. 4:22 They[14] immediately left the boat and their father and followed him.

Jesus' Healing Ministry

4:23 Jesus[15] went throughout all of Galilee, teaching in their synagogues,[16] preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all kinds of disease and sickness among the people. 4:24 So a report about him spread throughout Syria. People[17] brought to him all who suffered with various illnesses and afflictions, those who had seizures,[18] paralytics, and those possessed by demons,[19] and he healed them. 4:25 And large crowds followed him from Galilee, the Decapolis,[20] Jerusalem,[21] Judea, and beyond the Jordan River.[22]

2 tn Grk "and leaving Nazareth, he came and took up residence in Capernaum."

sn Capernaum was a town located on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region, and it became the hub of operations for Jesus' Galilean ministry.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

3 tn Or "by the lake."

sn By the sea refers to the Sea of Galilee.

4 tn The redundant participle λέγοντος (legontos) has not been translated here.

5 sn A quotation from Isa 9:1.

6 tn Grk "and to say."

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 tn The two phrases in this verse placed in parentheses are explanatory comments by the author, parenthetical in nature.

9 tn The Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, thus "people."

sn The kind of fishing envisioned was net – not line – fishing (cf. v. 18; cf. also BDAG 55 s.v. ἀμφιβάλλω, ἀμφίβληστρον) which involved a circular net that had heavy weights around its perimeter. The occupation of fisherman was labor-intensive. The imagery of using a lure and a line (and waiting for the fish to strike) is thus foreign to this text. Rather, the imagery of a fisherman involved much strain, long hours, and often little results. Jesus' point may have been one or more of the following: the strenuousness of evangelism, the work ethic that it required, persistence and dedication to the task (often in spite of minimal results), the infinite value of the new "catch" (viz., people), and perhaps an eschatological theme of snatching people from judgment (cf. W. L. Lane, Mark [NICNT], 67). If this last motif is in view, then catching people is the opposite of catching fish: The fish would be caught, killed, cooked, and eaten; people would be caught so as to remove them from eternal destruction and to give them new life.

10 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

11 sn The expression followed him pictures discipleship, which means that to learn from Jesus is to follow him as the guiding priority of one's life.

12 tn Or "their boat." The phrase ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ (en tō ploiō) can either refer to a generic boat, some boat (as it seems to do here); or it can refer to "their" boat, implying possession. Mark assumes a certain preunderstanding on the part of his readers about the first four disciples and hence the translation "their boat" is justified (cf. also v. 20 in which the "hired men" indicates that Zebedee's family owned the boats), while Matthew does not.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

14 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

15 tn Grk "And he."

16 sn Synagogues were places for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (cf. Luke 8:41). Though the origin of the synagogue is not entirely clear, it seems to have arisen in the postexilic community during the intertestamental period. A town could establish a synagogue if there were at least ten men. In normative Judaism of the NT period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present (see the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2).

17 tn Grk "And they"; "they" is probably an indefinite plural, referring to people in general rather than to the Syrians (cf. v. 25).

18 tn Grk "those who were moonstruck," possibly meaning "lunatic" (so NAB), although now the term is generally regarded as referring to some sort of seizure disorder such as epilepsy (L&N 23.169; BDAG 919 s.v. σεληνιάζομαι).

19 tn The translation has adopted a different phrase order here than that in the Greek text. The Greek text reads, "People brought to him all who suffered with various illnesses and afflictions, those possessed by demons, epileptics, and paralytics." Even though it is obvious that four separate groups of people are in view here, following the Greek word order could lead to the misconception that certain people were possessed by epileptics and paralytics. The word order adopted in the translation avoids this problem.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated before each of the places in the list, since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

sn The Decapolis refers to a league of towns (originally consisting of ten; the Greek name literally means "ten towns") whose region (except for Scythopolis) lay across the Jordan River.

21 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

22 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity. The region referred to here is sometimes known as Transjordan (i.e., "across the Jordan").

The Beatitudes

5:1 When[1] he saw the crowds, he went up the mountain.[2] After he sat down his disciples came to him. 5:2 Then[3] he began to teach[4] them by saying:

5:3 "Blessed[5] are the poor in spirit,[6] for the kingdom of heaven belongs[7] to them.
5:4 "Blessed are those who mourn, for they will be comforted.[8]
5:5 "Blessed are the meek, for they will inherit the earth.
5:6 "Blessed are those who hunger[9] and thirst for righteousness, for they will be satisfied.
5:7 "Blessed are the merciful, for they will be shown mercy.
5:8 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they will see God.
5:9 "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children[10] of God.
5:10 "Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to them.
5:11 "Blessed are you when people[11] insult you and persecute you and say all kinds of evil things about you falsely[12] on account of me. 5:12 Rejoice and be glad because your reward is great in heaven, for they persecuted the prophets before you in the same way.

Salt and Light

5:13 "You are the salt[13] of the earth. But if salt loses its flavor,[14] how can it be made salty again? It is no longer good for anything except to be thrown out and trampled on by people. 5:14 You are the light of the world. A city located on a hill cannot be hidden. 5:15 People[15] do not light a lamp and put it under a basket[16] but on a lampstand, and it gives light to all in the house. 5:16 In the same way, let your light shine before people, so that they can see your good deeds and give honor to your Father in heaven.

Fulfillment of the Law and Prophets

5:17 "Do not think that I have come to abolish the law or the prophets. I have not come to abolish these things but to fulfill them.[17] 5:18 I[18] tell you the truth,[19] until heaven and earth pass away not the smallest letter or stroke of a letter[20] will pass from the law until everything takes place. 5:19 So anyone who breaks one of the

1 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 tn Or "up a mountain" (εἰς τὸ ὄρος, eis to oros).

sn The expression up the mountain here may be idiomatic or generic, much like the English "he went to the hospital" (cf. 15:29), or even intentionally reminiscent of Exod 24:12 (LXX), since the genre of the Sermon on the Mount seems to be that of a new Moses giving a new law.

4 tn Grk "And opening his mouth he taught them, saying." The imperfect verb ἐδίδασκεν (edidasken) has been translated ingressively.

5 sn The term Blessed introduces the first of several beatitudes promising blessing to those whom God cares for. They serve as an invitation to come into the grace God offers.

6 sn The poor in spirit is a reference to the "pious poor" for whom God especially cares. See Ps 14:6; 22:24; 25:16; 34:6; 40:17; 69:29.

7 sn The present tense (*belong*s) here is significant. Jesus makes the kingdom and its blessings currently available. This phrase is unlike the others in the list with the possessive pronoun being emphasized.

8 sn The promise they will be comforted is the first of several "reversals" noted in these promises. The beatitudes and the reversals that accompany them serve in the sermon as an invitation to enter into God's care, because one can know God cares for those who turn to him.

9 sn Those who hunger are people like the poor Jesus has already mentioned. The term has OT roots both in conjunction with the poor (Isa 32:6-7; 58:6-7, 9-10; Ezek 18:7, 16) or by itself (Ps 37:16-19; 107:9).

10 tn Grk "sons," though traditionally English versions have taken this as a generic reference to both males and females, hence "children" (cf. KJV, NAB, NRSV, NLT).

11 tn Grk "when they insult you." The third person pronoun (here implied in the verb ὀνειδίσωσιν [oneidisōsin]) has no specific referent, but refers to people in general.

12 tc Although ψευδόμενοι (pseudomenoi, "bearing witness falsely") could be a motivated reading, clarifying that the disciples are unjustly persecuted, its lack in only D it sy^{s} Tert does not help its case. Since the Western text is known for numerous free alterations, without corroborative evidence the shorter reading must be judged as secondary.

13 sn Salt was used as seasoning or fertilizer (BDAG 41 s.v. ἅλας a), or as a preservative. If salt ceased to be useful, it was thrown away. With this illustration Jesus warned about a disciple who ceased to follow him.

14 sn The difficulty of this saying is understanding how salt could lose its flavor since its chemical properties cannot change. It is thus often assumed that Jesus was referring to chemically impure salt, perhaps a natural salt which, when exposed to the elements, had all the genuine salt leached out, leaving only the sediment or impurities behind. Others have suggested that the background of the saying is the use of salt blocks by Arab bakers to line the floor of their ovens; under the intense heat these blocks would eventually crystallize and undergo a change in chemical composition, finally being thrown out as unserviceable. A saying in the Talmud (b. Bekhorot 8b) attributed to R. Joshua ben Chananja (ca. A.D. 90), when asked the question "When salt loses its flavor, how can it be made salty again?" is said to have replied, "By salting it with the afterbirth of a mule." He was then asked, "Then does the mule (being sterile) bear young?" to which he replied: "Can salt lose its flavor?" The point appears to be that both are impossible. The saying, while admittedly late, suggests that culturally the loss of flavor by salt was regarded as an impossibility. Genuine salt can never lose its flavor. In this case the saying by Jesus here may be similar to Matt 19:24, where it is likewise impossible for the camel to go through the eye of a sewing needle.

15 tn Grk "Nor do they light." The plural in Greek is indefinite, referring to people in general.

16 tn Or "a bowl"; this refers to any container for dry material of about eight liters (two gallons) capacity. It could be translated "basket, box, bowl" (L&N 6.151).

17 tn Grk "not come to abolish but to fulfill." Direct objects ("these things," "them") were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but have been supplied here to conform to contemporary English style.

18 tn Grk "For I tell." Here an explanatory γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

19 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

20 tn Grk "Not one iota or one serif."

sn The smallest letter refers to the smallest Hebrew letter (yod) and the stroke of a letter to a serif (a hook or projection on a Hebrew letter).

least of these commands and teaches others[1] to do so will be called least in the kingdom of heaven, but whoever obeys them and teaches others to do so will be called great in the kingdom of heaven. 5:20 For I tell you, unless your righteousness goes beyond that of the experts in the law[2] and the Pharisees,[3] you will never enter the kingdom of heaven.

Anger and Murder

5:21 "You have heard that it was said to an older generation,[4] 'Do not murder,'[5] and 'whoever murders will be subjected to judgment.' 5:22 But I say to you that anyone who is angry with a brother[6] will be subjected to judgment. And whoever insults[7] a brother will be brought before[8] the council,[9] and whoever says 'Fool'[10] will be sent[11] to fiery hell.[12] 5:23 So then, if you bring your gift to the altar and there remember that your brother has something against you, 5:24 leave your gift there in front of the altar. First go and be reconciled to your brother and then come and present your gift. 5:25 Reach agreement[13] quickly with your accuser while on the way to court,[14] or he[15] may hand you over to the judge, and the judge hand you over to the warden, and you will be thrown into prison. 5:26 I tell you the truth,[16] you will never get out of there until you have paid the last penny![17]

Adultery

5:27 "You have heard that it was said, 'Do not commit adultery.'[18] 5:28 But I say to you that whoever looks at a woman to desire her has already committed adultery with her in his heart. 5:29 If your right eye causes you to sin, tear it out and throw it away! It is better to lose one of your members than to have your whole body thrown into hell.[19] 5:30 If your right hand causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away! It is better to lose one of your members than to have your whole body go into hell.

Divorce

5:31 "It was said, 'Whoever divorces his wife must give her a legal document.'[20] 5:32 But I say to you that everyone who divorces his wife, except for immorality, makes her commit adultery, and whoever marries a divorced woman commits adultery.

Oaths

5:33 "Again, you have heard that it was said to an older generation,[21] 'Do not break an oath, but fulfill your vows to the Lord.'[22] 5:34 But I say to you, do not take oaths at all – not by heaven, because it is the throne of God, 5:35 not by earth, because it is his footstool, and not by Jerusalem,[23] because it is the city of the great King. 5:36 Do not take an oath by your head, because you are not able to make one hair white or black. 5:37 Let your word be 'Yes, yes' or 'No, no.' More than this is from the evil one.[24]

1 tn Grk "teaches men" (in a generic sense, people).

2 tn Or "that of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

3 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

4 tn Grk "to the ancient ones."

5 sn A quotation from Exod 20:13; Deut 5:17.

6 tc The majority of MSS read the word εἰκῇ (eikē, "without cause") here after "brother." This insertion has support from ℵ² D L W Θ 0233 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 it sy co Ir^{lat} Or^{mss} Cyp Cyr. Thus the Western, Caesarean, and Byzantine texttypes all include the word, while the best Alexandrian and some other witnesses (𝔓^{64} ℵ* B 1424^{mg} pc aur vg Or Hier^{mss}) lack it. The MS evidence favors its exclusion, though there is a remote possibility that εἰκῇ could have been accidentally omitted from these witnesses by way of homoioarcton (the next word, ἔνοχος [enochos, "guilty"], begins with the same letter). An intentional change would likely arise from the desire to qualify "angry," especially in light of the absolute tone of Jesus' words. While "without cause" makes good practical sense in this context, and must surely be a true interpretation of Jesus' meaning (cf. Mark 3:5), it does not commend itself as original.

7 tn Grk "whoever says to his brother 'Raca,'" an Aramaic word of contempt or abuse meaning "fool" or "empty head."

8 tn Grk "subjected," "guilty," "liable."

9 tn Grk "the Sanhedrin."

10 tn The meaning of the term μωρός (mōros) is somewhat disputed. Most take it to mean, following the Syriac versions, "you fool," although some have argued that it represents a transliteration into Greek of the Hebrew term מוֹרֶה (moreh) "rebel" (Deut 21:18, 20; cf. BDAG 663 s.v. μωρός c).

11 tn Grk "subjected," "guilty," "liable."

12 tn Grk "the Gehenna of fire."

sn The word translated hell is "Gehenna" (γέεννα, geenna), a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew words ge hinnom ("Valley of Hinnom"). This was the valley along the south side of Jerusalem. In OT times it was used for human sacrifices to the pagan god Molech (cf. Jer 7:31; 19:5-6; 32:35), and it came to be used as a place where human excrement and rubbish were disposed of and burned. In the intertestamental period, it came to be used symbolically as the place of divine punishment (cf. 1 En. 27:2, 90:26; 4 Ezra 7:36).

13 tn Grk "Make friends."

14 tn The words "to court" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

15 tn Grk "the accuser."

16 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

17 tn Here the English word "penny" is used as opposed to the parallel in Luke 12:59 where "cent" appears since the Greek word there is different and refers to a different but similar coin.

sn The penny here was a quadrans, a Roman copper coin worth 1/64 of a denarius (L&N 6.78). The parallel passage in Luke 12:59 mentions the lepton, equal to one-half of a quadrans and thus the smallest coin available.

19 sn On this word here and in the following verse, see the note on the word hell in 5:22.

24 tn The term πονηροῦ (ponērou) may be understood as specific and personified, referring to the devil, or possibly as a general reference to evil. It is most likely personified, however, since it is articular (τοῦ πονηροῦ, tou ponērou). Cf. also "the evildoer" in v. 39, which is the same construction.

Retaliation

5:38 "You have heard that it was said, 'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.'[1] 5:39 But I say to you, do not resist the evildoer.[2] But whoever strikes you on the[3] right cheek, turn the other to him as well. 5:40 And if someone wants to sue you and to take your tunic,[4] give him your coat also. 5:41 And if anyone forces you to go one mile,[5] go with him two. 5:42 Give to the one who asks you,[6] and do not reject[7] the one who wants to borrow from you.

Love for Enemies

5:43 "You have heard that it was said, 'Love your neighbor'[8] and 'hate your enemy.' 5:44 But I say to you, love your enemy and[9] pray for those who persecute you, 5:45 so that you may be like[10] your Father in heaven, since he causes the sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the righteous and the unrighteous. 5:46 For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have? Even the tax collectors[11] do the same, don't they? 5:47 And if you only greet your brothers, what more do you do? Even the Gentiles do the same, don't they? 5:48 So then, be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.[12]

Pure-hearted Giving

6:1 "Be[13] careful not to display your righteousness merely to be seen by people.[14] Otherwise you have no reward with your Father in heaven. 6:2 Thus whenever you do charitable giving,[15] do not blow a trumpet before you, as the hypocrites do in synagogues[16] and on streets so that people will praise them. I tell you the truth,[17] they have their reward. 6:3 But when you do your giving, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, 6:4 so that your gift may be in secret. And your Father, who sees in secret, will reward you.[18]

Private Prayer

6:5 "Whenever you pray, do not be like the hypocrites, because they love to pray while standing in synagogues[19] and on street corners so that people can see them. Truly I say to you, they have their reward. 6:6 But whenever you pray, go into your room,[20] close the door, and pray to your Father in secret. And your Father, who sees in secret, will reward you.[21] 6:7 When[22] you pray, do not babble repetitiously like the Gentiles, because they think that by their many words they will be heard. 6:8 Do[23] not be

1 sn A quotation from Exod 21:24; Lev 24:20.

2 tn The articular πονηρός (ponēros, "the evildoer") cannot be translated simply as "evil" for then the command would be "do not resist evil." Every instance of this construction in Matthew is most likely personified, referring either to an evildoer (13:49) or, more often, "the evil one" (as in 5:37; 6:13; 13:19, 38).

3 tc ‡ Many MSS (B D K L Δ Θ f^{13} 565 579 700 1424 pm) have σου (sou) here ("your right cheek"), but many others lack the pronoun (ℵ W f^{1} 33 892 1241 pm). The pronoun was probably added by way of clarification. NA^{27} has σου in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

4 tn Or "shirt" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). The name for this garment (χιτών, chitōn) presents some difficulty in translation. Most modern readers would not understand what a "tunic" was any more than they would be familiar with a "chiton." On the other hand, attempts to find a modern equivalent are also a problem: "Shirt" conveys the idea of a much shorter garment that covers only the upper body, and "undergarment" (given the styles of modern underwear) is more misleading still. "Tunic" was therefore employed, but with a note to explain its nature.

5 sn If anyone forces you to go one mile. In NT times Roman soldiers had the authority to press civilians into service to carry loads for them.

6 sn Jesus advocates a generosity and a desire to meet those in dire need with the command give to the one who asks you. This may allude to begging; giving alms was viewed highly in the ancient world (Matt 6:1-4; Deut 15:7-11).

7 tn Grk "do not turn away from."

8 sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

9 tc Most MSS ([D] L [W] Θ f^{13} 33 𝔐 lat) read "bless those who curse you, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those who mistreat you," before "those who persecute you." But this is surely a motivated reading, importing the longer form of this aphorism from Luke 6:27-28. The shorter text is found in ℵ B f^{1} pc sa, as well as several fathers and versional witnesses.

10 tn Grk "be sons of your Father in heaven." Here, however, the focus is not on attaining a relationship (becoming a child of God) but rather on being the kind of person who shares the characteristics of God himself (a frequent meaning of the Semitic idiom "son of"). See L&N 58.26.

11 sn The tax collectors would bid to collect taxes for the Roman government and then add a surcharge, which they kept. Since tax collectors worked for Rome, they were viewed as traitors to their own people and were not well liked.

12 sn This remark echoes the more common OT statements like Lev 19:2 or Deut 18:13: "you must be holy as I am holy."

13 tc ‡ Several MSS (ℵ L Z Θ f^{1} 33 892 1241 1424 al) have δέ (de, "but, now") at the beginning of this verse; the reading without δέ is supported by B D W 0250 f^{13} 𝔐 lat. A decision is difficult, but apparently the conjunction was added by later scribes to indicate a transition in the thought-flow of the Sermon on the Mount. NA^{27} has δέ in brackets, indicating reservations about its authenticity.

14 tn Grk "before people in order to be seen by them."

15 tn Grk "give alms," but this term is not in common use today. The giving of alms was highly regarded in the ancient world (Deut 15:7-11).

16 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23.

17 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

18 tc L W Θ 0250 𝔐 it read ἐν τῷ φανερῷ (en tō phanerō, "openly") at the end of this verse, giving a counterweight to what is done in secret. But this reading is suspect because of the obvious literary balance, because of detouring the point of the passage (the focus of vv. 1-4 is not on two kinds of public rewards but on human vs. divine approbation), and because of superior external testimony that lacks this reading (ℵ B D Z $f^{1,13}$ 33 al).

19 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23.

20 sn The term translated room refers to the inner room of a house, normally without any windows opening outside, the most private location possible (BDAG 988 s.v. ταμεῖον 2).

21 tc See the tc note on "will reward you" in 6:4: The problem is the same and the MS support differs only slightly.

22 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

23 tn Grk "So do not." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

like them, for your Father knows what you need before you ask him. 6:9 So pray this way:[1]

Our Father[2] in heaven, may your name be honored,[3]
6:10 may your kingdom come,[4]
may your will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
6:11 Give us today our daily bread,[5]
6:12 and forgive us our debts, as we ourselves[6] have forgiven our debtors.
6:13 And do not lead us into temptation,[7]
but deliver us from the evil one.[8]

6:14 "For if you forgive others[9] their sins, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. 6:15 But if you do not forgive others, your Father will not forgive you your sins.

Proper Fasting

6:16 "When[10] you fast, do not look sullen like the hypocrites, for they make their faces unattractive[11] so that people will see them fasting. I tell you the truth,[12] they have their reward. 6:17 When[13] you fast, put oil on your head and wash your face, 6:18 so that it will not be obvious to others when you are fasting, but only to your Father who is in secret. And your Father, who sees in secret, will reward you.

Lasting Treasure

6:19 "Do not accumulate for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth[14] and rust destroy and where thieves break in and steal. 6:20 But accumulate for yourselves treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not destroy, and thieves do not break in and steal. 6:21 For where your[15] treasure[16] is, there your heart will be also.

6:22 "The eye is the lamp of the body. If then your eye is healthy,[17] your whole body will be full of light. 6:23 But if your eye is diseased,[18] your whole body will be full of darkness. If then the light in you is darkness, how great is the darkness!

6:24 "No one can serve two masters, for either he will hate[19] the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise[20] the other. You cannot serve God and money.[21]

Do Not Worry

6:25 "Therefore I tell you, do not worry[22] about your life, what you will eat or drink, or about your body, what you will wear. Isn't there

[1] sn Pray this way. What follows, although traditionally known as the Lord's prayer, is really the disciples' prayer. It represents how they are to approach God, by acknowledging his uniqueness and their need for his provision and protection.

[2] sn God is addressed in terms of intimacy (Father). The original Semitic term here was probably Abba. The term is a little unusual in a personal prayer, especially as it lacks qualification. It is not the exact equivalent of "daddy" (as is sometimes popularly suggested), but it does suggest a close, familial relationship.

[3] tn Grk "hallowed be your name."

[4] sn Your kingdom come represents the hope for the full manifestation of God's promised rule.

[5] tn Or "Give us bread today for the coming day," or "Give us today the bread we need for today." The term ἐπιούσιος (epiousios) does not occur outside of early Christian literature (other occurrences are in Luke 11:3 and Didache 8:2), so its meaning is difficult to determine. Various suggestions include "daily," "the coming day," and "for existence." See BDAG 376-77 s.v.; L&N 67:183, 206.

[6] tn Or "as even we." The phrase ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς (hōs kai hēmeis) makes ἡμεῖς emphatic. The translation above adds an appropriate emphasis to the passage.

[7] tn Or "into a time of testing."

sn The request do not lead us into temptation is not to suggest God causes temptation, but is a rhetorical way to ask for his protection from sin.

[8] tc Most mss (L W Θ 0233 f^{13} 33 𝔐 sy sa Didache) read (though some with slight variation) ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ἀμήν ("for yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever, amen") here. The reading without this sentence, though, is attested by generally better witnesses (ℵ B D Z 0170 f^{1} pc lat mae Or). The phrase was probably composed for the liturgy of the early church and most likely was based on 1 Chr 29:11-13; a scribe probably added the phrase at this point in the text for use in public scripture reading (see TCGNT 13-14). Both external and internal evidence argue for the shorter reading.

tn The term πονηροῦ (ponērou) may be understood as specific and personified, referring to the devil, or possibly as a general reference to evil. It is most likely personified since it is articular (τοῦ πονηροῦ, tou ponērou). Cf. also "the evildoer" in 5:39, which is the same construction.

[9] tn Here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense: "people, others."

[10] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[11] tn Here the term "disfigure" used in a number of translations was not used because it could convey to the modern reader the notion of mutilation. L&N 79.17 states, "'to make unsightly, to disfigure, to make ugly.' ἀφανίζουσιν γὰρ τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν 'for they make their faces unsightly' Mt 6:16."

[12] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[13] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[14] tn The term σής (sēs) refers to moths in general. It is specifically the larvae of moths that destroy clothing by eating holes in it (L&N 4.49; BDAG 922 s.v.). See Jas 5:2, which mentions "moth-eaten" clothing.

[15] tn The pronouns in this verse are singular while the pronouns in vv. 19-20 are plural. The change to singular emphasizes personal responsibility as opposed to corporate responsibility; even if others do not listen, the one who hears Jesus' commands should obey.

[16] sn Seeking heavenly treasure means serving others and honoring God by doing so.

[17] tn Or "sound" (so L&N 23.132 and most scholars). A few scholars take this word to mean something like "generous" here (L&N 57.107). partly due to the immediate context concerning money, in which case the "eye" is a metonymy for the entire person ("if you are generous").

sn There may be a slight wordplay here, as this term can also mean "evil," so the figure uses a term that points to the real meaning of being careful as to what one pays attention to or looks at.

[19] sn The contrast between hate and love here is rhetorical. The point is that one will choose the favorite if a choice has to be made.

[20] tn Or "and treat [the other] with contempt."

[21] tn Grk "God and mammon."

sn The term money is used to translate mammon, the Aramaic term for wealth or possessions. The point is not that money is inherently evil, but that it is often misused so that it is a means of evil; see 1 Tim 6:6-10, 17-19. God must be first, not money or possessions.

[22] tn Or "do not be anxious," and so throughout the rest of this paragraph.

more to life than food and more to the body than clothing? 6:26 Look at the birds in the sky:[1] They do not sow, or reap, or gather into barns, yet your heavenly Father feeds[2] them. Aren't you more valuable[3] than they are? 6:27 And which of you by worrying can add even one hour to his life?[4] 6:28 Why do you worry about clothing? Think about how the flowers[5] of the field grow; they do not work[6] or spin. 6:29 Yet I tell you that not even Solomon in all his glory was clothed like one of these! 6:30 And if this is how God clothes the wild grass,[7] which is here today and tomorrow is tossed into the fire to heat the oven,[8] won't he clothe you even more,[9] you people of little faith? 6:31 So then, don't worry saying, 'What will we eat?' or 'What will we drink?' or 'What will we wear?' 6:32 For the unconverted[10] pursue these things, and your heavenly Father knows that you need them. 6:33 But above all pursue his kingdom[11] and righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well. 6:34 So then, do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself. Today has enough trouble of its own.[12]

Do Not Judge

7:1 "Do not judge so that you will not be judged.[13] 7:2 For by the standard you judge you will be judged, and the measure you use will be the measure you receive.[14] 7:3 Why[15] do you see the speck[16] in your brother's eye, but fail to see[17] the beam of wood[18] in your own? 7:4 Or how can you say[19] to your brother, 'Let me remove the speck from your eye,' while there is a beam in your own? 7:5 You hypocrite! First remove the beam from your own eye, and then you can see clearly to remove the speck from your brother's eye. 7:6 Do not give what is holy to dogs or throw your pearls before pigs; otherwise they will trample them under their feet and turn around and tear you to pieces.[20]

Ask, Seek, Knock

7:7 "Ask[21] and it will be given to you; seek and you will find; knock and the door[22] will be opened for you. 7:8 For everyone who asks[23] receives, and the one who seeks finds, and to the one who knocks, the door will be

1 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

2 tn Or "God gives them food to eat." L&N 23.6 has both "to provide food for" and "to give food to someone to eat."

3 tn Grk "of more value."

4 tn Or "a cubit to his height." A cubit (πῆχυς, pēchus) can measure length (normally about 45 cm or 18 inches) or time (a small unit, "hour" is usually used [BDAG 812 s.v.] although "day" has been suggested [L&N 67.151]). The term ἡλικία (hēlikia) is ambiguous in the same way as πῆχυς (pēchus). Most scholars take the term to describe age or length of life here, although a few refer it to bodily stature (see BDAG 436 s.v. 3 for discussion). Worry about length of life seems a more natural figure than worry about height. However, the point either way is clear: Worrying adds nothing to life span or height.

5 tn Traditionally, "lilies." According to L&N 3.32, "Though traditionally κρίνον has been regarded as a type of lily, scholars have suggested several other possible types of flowers, including an anemone, a poppy, a gladiolus, and a rather inconspicuous type of daisy." In view of the uncertainty, the more generic "flowers" has been used in the translation.

6 tn Or, traditionally, "toil." Although it might be argued that "work hard" would be a more precise translation of κοπιάω (kopiaō) here, the line in English reads better in terms of cadence with a single syllable.

7 tn Grk "grass of the field."

8 tn Grk "into the oven." The expanded translation "into the fire to heat the oven" has been used to avoid misunderstanding; most items put into modern ovens are put there to be baked, not burned.

sn The oven was most likely a rounded clay oven used for baking bread, which was heated by burning wood and dried grass.

9 sn The phrase even more is a typical form of rabbinic argumentation, from the lesser to the greater. If God cares for the little things, surely he will care for the more important things.

10 tn Or "unbelievers"; Grk "Gentiles."

11 tc ‡ Most mss (L W Θ 0233 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy mae) read τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην αὐτοῦ (tēn basileian tou theou kai tēn dikaiosunēn autou, "the kingdom of God and his righteousness") here, but the words "of God" are lacking in ℵ B pc sa bo Eus. On the one hand, there is the possibility of accidental omission on the part of these Alexandrian witnesses, but it seems unlikely that the scribe's eye would skip over both words (especially since τοῦ θεοῦ is bracketed by first declension nouns). Intrinsically, the author generally has a genitive modifier with βασιλεία – especially θεοῦ or οὐρανῶν (ouranōn) – but this argument cuts both ways: Although he might be expected to use such an adjunct here, scribes might also be familiar with his practice and would thus naturally insert it if it were missing in their copy of Matthew. Although a decision is difficult, the omission of τοῦ θεοῦ is considered most likely to be original. NA^{27} includes the words in brackets, indicating doubt as to their authenticity.

sn God's kingdom is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong.

12 tn Grk "Sufficient for the day is its evil."

13 sn The point of the statement do not judge so that you will not be judged is that the standards we apply to others God applies to us. The passive verbs in this verse look to God's action.

14 tn Grk "by [the measure] with which you measure it will be measured to you."

15 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

16 sn The term translated speck refers to a small piece of wood, chaff, or straw; see L&N 3.66.

17 tn Or "do not notice."

18 sn The term beam of wood refers to a very big piece of wood, the main beam of a building, in contrast to the speck in the other's eye (L&N 7.78).

19 tn Grk "how will you say?"

20 tn Or "otherwise the latter will trample them under their feet and the former will turn around and tear you to pieces." This verse is sometimes understood as a chiasm of the pattern a-b-b-a, in which the first and last clauses belong together ("dogs...turn around and tear you to pieces") and the second and third clauses belong together ("pigs...trample them under their feet").

21 sn The three present imperatives in this verse (Ask... seek...knock) are probably intended to call for a repeated or continual approach before God.

22 tn Grk "it"; the referent (a door) is implied by the context and has been specified in the translation here and in v. 8 for clarity.

23 sn The actions of asking, seeking, and knocking are repeated here from v. 7 with the encouragement that God does respond.

opened. 7:9 Is[1] there anyone among you who, if his son asks for bread, will give him a stone? 7:10 Or if he asks for a fish, will give him a snake?[2] 7:11 If you then, although you are evil,[3] know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your Father in heaven give good gifts[4] to those who ask him! 7:12 In[5] everything, treat others as you would want them[6] to treat you,[7] for this fulfills[8] the law and the prophets.

The Narrow Gate

7:13 "Enter through the narrow gate, because the gate is wide and the way is spacious that leads to destruction, and there are many who enter through it. 7:14 But the gate is narrow and the way is difficult that leads to life, and there are few who find it.

A Tree and Its Fruit

7:15 "Watch out for false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly are voracious wolves.[9] 7:16 You will recognize them by their fruit. Grapes are not gathered[10] from thorns or figs from thistles, are they?[11] 7:17 In the same way, every good tree bears good fruit, but the bad[12] tree bears bad fruit. 7:18 A good tree is not able to bear bad fruit, nor a bad tree to bear good fruit. 7:19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 7:20 So then, you will recognize them by their fruit.

Judgment of Pretenders

7:21 "Not everyone who says to me, 'Lord, Lord,'[13] will enter into the kingdom of heaven – only the one who does the will of my Father in heaven. 7:22 On that day, many will say to me, 'Lord, Lord, didn't we prophesy in your name, and in your name cast out demons and do[14] many powerful deeds?' 7:23 Then I will declare to them, 'I never knew you. Go away from me, you lawbreakers!'[15]

Hearing and Doing

7:24 "Everyone[16] who hears these words of mine and does them is like[17] a wise man[18] who built his house on rock. 7:25 The rain fell, the flood[19] came, and the winds beat against that house, but it did not collapse because it had been founded on rock. 7:26 Everyone who hears these words of mine and does not do them is like a foolish man who built his house on sand. 7:27 The rain fell, the flood came, and the winds beat against that house, and it collapsed; it was utterly destroyed!"[20]

7:28 When[21] Jesus finished saying these things, the crowds were amazed by his teaching, 7:29 because he taught them like one who had authority,[22] not like their experts in the law.[23]

Cleansing a Leper

8:1 After he came down from the mountain, large crowds followed him. 8:2 And a leper[24]

---

[1] tn Grk "Or is there."

[2] sn The two questions of vv. 9-10 expect the answer, "No parent would do this!"

[3] tn The participle ὄντες (ontes) has been translated concessively.

[4] sn The provision of the good gifts is probably a reference to the wisdom and guidance supplied in response to repeated requests. The teaching as a whole stresses not that we get everything we want, but that God gives the good that we need.

[5] tn Grk "Therefore in." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

[6] tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

[7] sn Jesus' teaching as reflected in the phrase treat others as you would want them to treat you, known generally as the Golden Rule, is not completely unique in the ancient world, but here it is stated in its most emphatic, selfless form.

[8] tn Grk "is."

[9] sn Sheep's clothing…voracious wolves. Jesus uses a metaphor here to point out that these false prophets appear to be one thing, but in reality they are something quite different and dangerous.

[10] tn Grk "They do not gather." This has been simplified to the passive voice in the translation since the subject "they" is not specified further in the context.

[11] sn The statement illustrates the principle: That which cannot produce fruit does not produce fruit.

[12] tn Grk "rotten." The word σαπρός, modifying "tree" in both v. 17 and 18, can also mean "diseased" (L&N 65.28).

[13] sn The double use of the vocative is normally used in situations of high emotion or emphasis. Even an emphatic confession without action means little.

[14] tn Grk "and in your name do." This phrase was not repeated here in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[15] tn Grk "workers of lawlessness."

[16] tn Grk "Therefore everyone." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

[17] tn Grk "will be like." The same phrase occurs in v. 26.

[18] tn Here and in v. 26 the Greek text reads ἀνήρ (anēr), while the parallel account in Luke 6:47-49 uses ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) in vv. 48 and 49.

[19] tn Grk "the rivers."

[20] tn Grk "and great was its fall."

[21] tn Grk "And it happened when." The introductory phrase καὶ ἐγένετο (kai egeneto, "it happened that") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[22] sn Jesus' teaching impressed the hearers with the directness of its claim; he taught with authority. A study of Jewish rabbinic interpretation shows that it was typical to cite a list of authorities to make one's point. Apparently Jesus addressed the issues in terms of his own understanding.

[23] tn Or "their scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[24] tn Grk "And behold, a leper came." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

sn The ancient term for leprosy covers a wider array of conditions than what we call leprosy today. A leper was totally ostracized from society until he was declared cured (Lev 13:45-46).

approached, and bowed low before him, saying,[1] "Lord, if[2] you are willing, you can make me clean." 8:3 He stretched out his hand and touched[3] him saying, "I am willing. Be clean!" Immediately his leprosy was cleansed. 8:4 Then Jesus said to him, "See that you do not speak to anyone,[4] but go, show yourself to a priest, and bring the offering[5] that Moses commanded,[6] as a testimony to them."[7]

Healing the Centurion's Servant

8:5 When he entered Capernaum,[8] a centurion[9] came to him asking for help:[10] 8:6 "Lord,[11] my servant[12] is lying at home paralyzed, in terrible anguish." 8:7 Jesus[13] said to him, "I will come and heal him." 8:8 But the centurion replied,[14] "Lord, I am not worthy to have you come under my roof. Instead, just say the word and my servant will be healed. 8:9 For I too am a man under authority, with soldiers under me.[15] I say to this one, 'Go' and he goes,[16] and to another 'Come' and he comes, and to my slave[17] 'Do this' and he does it."[18] 8:10 When[19] Jesus heard this he was amazed and said to those who followed him, "I tell you the truth,[20] I have not found such faith in anyone in Israel! 8:11 I tell you, many will come from the east and west to share the banquet[21] with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob[22] in the kingdom of heaven, 8:12 but the sons of the kingdom will be thrown out into the outer darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth."[23] 8:13 Then Jesus said to the centurion, "Go; just as you believed, it will be done for you." And the servant[24] was healed at that hour.

Healings at Peter's House

8:14 Now[25] when Jesus entered Peter's house, he saw his mother-in-law lying down,[26]

1 tn Grk "a leper approaching, bowed low before him, saying."

2 tn This is a third class condition. The report portrays the leper making no presumptions about whether Jesus will heal him or not.

3 sn Touched. This touch would have rendered Jesus ceremonially unclean (Lev 14:46; also Mishnah, m. Nega'im 3.1; 11.1; 12.1; 13.6-12).

4 sn The command for silence was probably meant to last only until the cleansing took place with the priests and sought to prevent Jesus' healings from becoming the central focus of the people's reaction to him. See also 9:30, 12:16, 16:20, and 17:9 for other cases where Jesus asks for silence concerning him and his ministry.

5 tn Grk "gift."

6 sn On the phrase bring the offering that Moses commanded see Lev 14:1-32.

7 tn Or "as an indictment against them." The pronoun αὐτοῖς (autois) may be a dative of disadvantage.

8 sn Capernaum was a town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

9 sn A centurion was a noncommissioned officer in the Roman army or one of the auxiliary territorial armies, commanding a centuria of (nominally) 100 men. The responsibilities of centurions were broadly similar to modern junior officers, but there was a wide gap in social status between them and officers, and relatively few were promoted beyond the rank of senior centurion. The Roman troops stationed in Judea were auxiliaries, who would normally be rewarded with Roman citizenship after 25 years of service. Some of the centurions may have served originally in the Roman legions (regular army) and thus gained their citizenship at enlistment. Others may have inherited it, like the apostle Paul did.

10 sn While in Matthew's account the centurion came to him asking for help, Luke's account (7:1-10) mentions that the centurion sent some Jewish elders as emissaries on his behalf.

11 tn Grk "and saying, 'Lord.'" The participle λέγων (legōn) at the beginning of v. 6 is redundant in English and has not been translated.

12 tn The Greek term here is παῖς (pais), often used of a slave who was regarded with some degree of affection, possibly a personal servant (Luke 7:7 uses the more common term δοῦλος, doulos). See L&N 87.77.

13 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "But answering, the centurion replied." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

15 tn Grk "having soldiers under me."

16 sn I say to this one 'Go' and he goes. The illustrations highlight the view of authority the soldier sees in the word of one who has authority. Since the centurion was a commander of a hundred soldiers, he understood what it was both to command others and to be obeyed.

17 tn Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times... in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v. 1). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος) in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

18 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

19 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

20 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

21 tn Grk "and recline at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away. The word "banquet" has been supplied to clarify for the modern reader the festive nature of the imagery. The banquet imagery is a way to describe the fellowship and celebration of being among the people of God at the end.

sn 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

22 tn Grk "and Isaac and Jacob," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

23 sn Weeping and gnashing of teeth is a figure for remorse and trauma, which occurs here because of exclusion from God's promise.

24 tc ‡ Most mss read αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after "servant." It is unlikely that the pronoun was accidentally overlooked by such diverse witnesses as ℵ B 0250 0281 f^{1} 33 latt. More likely is the probability that Western, Byzantine, and some other scribes added the word for clarification (so C L W Θ 0233 f^{13} 𝔐 sy sa). NA^{27} has the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

25 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

26 tn Grk "having been thrown down." The verb βεβλημένην (beblēmenēn) is a perfect passive participle of the verb βάλλω (ballō, "to throw"). This indicates the severity of her sickness.

sick with a fever. 8:15 He touched her hand, and the fever left her. Then[1] she got up and began to serve them. 8:16 When it was evening, many demon-possessed people were brought to him. He drove out the spirits with a word, and healed all who were sick.[2] 8:17 In this way what was spoken by Isaiah the prophet was fulfilled:[3]

> "He took our weaknesses and carried our diseases."[4]

Challenging Professed Followers

8:18 Now when Jesus saw a large crowd[5] around him, he gave orders to go to the other side of the lake.[6] 8:19 Then[7] an expert in the law[8] came to him and said, "Teacher, I will follow you wherever you go."[9] 8:20 Jesus said to him, "Foxes have dens, and the birds in the sky[10] have nests, but the Son of Man has no place to lay his head."[11] 8:21 Another[12] of the[13] disciples said to him, "Lord, let me first go and bury my father." 8:22 But Jesus said to him, "Follow me, and let the dead bury their own dead."[14]

Stilling of a Storm

8:23 As he got into the boat, his disciples followed him.[15] 8:24 And a great storm developed on the sea so that the waves began to swamp the boat. But he was asleep. 8:25 So they came[16] and woke him up saying, "Lord, save us! We are about to die!" 8:26 But[17] he said to them, "Why are you cowardly, you people of little faith?" Then he got up and rebuked[18] the winds and the sea,[19] and it was dead calm. 8:27 And the men[20] were amazed and said,[21] "What sort of person is this? Even the winds and the sea obey him!"[22]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then."

2 sn Note how the author distinguishes healing from exorcism here, implying that the two are not identical.

3 tn Grk "was fulfilled, saying." The participle λέγοντος (legontos) is redundant and has not been translated.

4 sn A quotation from Isa 53:4.

5 tc ‡ Codex B and some Sahidic mss read simply ὄχλον (ochlon, "crowd"), the reading that NA^{27} follows; the first hand of ℵ, as well as f^{1} and a few others, has ὄχλους (ochlous, "crowds"); other witnesses read πολὺν ὄχλον (polun ochlon, "a large crowd"). But the reading most likely to be original seems to be πολλούς ὄχλους (pollous ochlous). It is found in ℵ^{2} C L Θ 0233 f^{13} 33 𝔐 lat; it is judged to be superior on internal grounds (the possibility of accidental omission of πολλούς/πολύν in isolated witnesses) and, to a lesser extent, external grounds (geographically widespread, various texttypes). For reasons of English style, however, this phrase has been translated as "a large crowd."

6 tn The phrase "of the lake" is not in the Greek text but is clearly implied; it has been supplied here for clarity.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then."

8 tn Or "a scribe." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

9 sn The statement I will follow you wherever you go is an offer to follow Jesus as a disciple, no matter what the cost.

10 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

11 sn Jesus' reply is simply this: Does the man understand the rejection he will be facing? Jesus has no home in the world (the Son of Man has no place to lay his head).

12 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

13 tc ‡ Most mss (C L W Θ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat sy mae bo) read αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") here, but the earliest witnesses, ℵ and B (along with 33 and a few others), lack it. The addition may have been a motivated reading to clarify whose disciples were in view. NA^{27} includes the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubt as to its authenticity.

14 sn There are several options for the meaning of Jesus' reply Leave the dead to bury their own dead: (1) Recent research suggests that burial customs in the vicinity of Jerusalem from about 20 b.c. to a.d. 70 involved a reinterment of the bones a year after the initial burial, once the flesh had rotted away. At that point the son would have placed his father's bones in a special box known as an ossuary to be set into the wall of the tomb. Thus Jesus could well be rebuking the man for wanting to wait around for as much as a year before making a commitment to follow him. In 1st century Jewish culture, to have followed Jesus rather than burying one's father would have seriously dishonored one's father (cf. Tobit 4:3-4). (2) The remark is an idiom (possibly a proverbial saying) that means, "The matter in question is not the real issue," in which case Jesus was making a wordplay on the wording of the man's (literal) request (see L&N 33.137). (3) This remark could be a figurative reference to various kinds of people, meaning, "Let the spiritually dead bury the dead." (4) It could also be literal and designed to shock the hearer by the surprise of the contrast. Whichever option is preferred, it is clear that the most important priority is to follow Jesus.

15 sn A boat that held all the disciples would be of significant size.

16 tn The participle προσελθόντες (proselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

17 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

18 tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

19 sn Who has authority over the seas and winds is discussed in the OT: Ps 104:3; 135:7; 107:23-30. When Jesus rebuked the winds and the sea he was making a statement about who he was.

20 tn It is difficult to know whether ἄνθρωποι (anthrōpoi) should be translated as "men" or "people" (in a generic sense) here. At issue is whether (1) only the Twelve were with Jesus in the boat, as opposed to other disciples (cf. v. 23), and (2) whether any of those other disciples would have been women. The issue is complicated further by the parallel in Mark (4:35-41), where the author writes (4:36) that other boats accompanied them on this journey.

21 tn Grk "the men were amazed, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) has been translated as a finite verb to make the sequence of events clear in English.

22 sn Jesus' authority over creation raised a question for the disciples about his identity (What sort of person is this?). This verse shows that the disciples followed Jesus even though they did not know all about him yet.

23 tc The textual tradition here is quite complicated. A number of mss (B C [Δ] Θ al sy^{s,p,h}) read "Gadarenes," which is the better reading here. Many other mss (ℵ^{2} L W $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 [sy^{hmg}] bo) have "Gergesenes." Others (892^{c} latt sy^{hmg} sa mae) have "Gerasenes," which is the reading followed in Luke 8:26. The difference between Matthew and Luke may be due to uses of variant regional terms.

sn The region of the Gadarenes would be in Gentile territory on the southeastern side of the Sea of Galilee across from Galilee. Luke 8:26 and Mark 5:1 record this miracle as occurring "in the region of the Gerasenes." "Irrespective of how one settles this issue, for the [second and] Third Evangelist the chief concern is that Jesus has crossed over into Gentile territory, 'opposite Galilee'" (J. B. Green, Luke [NICNT], 337).

men coming from the tombs met him. They were extremely violent, so that no one was able to pass by that way. 8:29 They[1] cried out, "Son of God, leave us alone![2] Have you come here to torment us before the time?"[3] 8:30 A[4] large herd of pigs was feeding some distance from them. 8:31 Then the demons begged him,[5] "If you drive us out, send us into the herd of pigs." 8:32 And he said,[6] "Go!" So[7] they came out and went into the pigs, and the herd rushed down the steep slope into the lake and drowned in the water. 8:33 The[8] herdsmen ran off, went into the town,[9] and told everything that had happened to the demon-possessed men. 8:34 Then[10] the entire town[11] came out to meet Jesus. And when they saw him, they begged him to leave their region.

The region of Gadara extended to the Sea of Galilee and included the town of Sennabris on the southern shore – the town that the herdsmen most likely entered after the drowning of the pigs.

[1] tn Grk "And behold, they cried out, saying." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1). The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated.

[2] tn Grk "what to us and to you?" (an idiom). The phrase τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί (ti hēmin kai soi) is Semitic in origin, though it made its way into colloquial Greek (BDAG 275 s.v. ἐγώ). The equivalent Hebrew expression in the OT had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12, 2 Chr 35:21, 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his own, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13, Hos 14:8). These nuances were apparently expanded in Greek, but the basic notions of defensive hostility (option 1) and indifference or disengagement (option 2) are still present. BDAG suggests the following as glosses for this expression: What have I to do with you? What have we in common? Leave me alone! Never mind! Hostility between Jesus and the demons is certainly to be understood in this context, hence the translation: "Leave us alone...."

[3] sn There was an appointed time in which demons would face their judgment, and they seem to have viewed Jesus' arrival on the scene as an illegitimate change in God's plan regarding the time when their sentence would be executed.

[5] tn Grk "asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

Healing and Forgiving a Paralytic

9:1 After getting into a boat he crossed to the other side and came to his own town.[12] 9:2 Just then[13] some people[14] brought to him a paralytic lying on a stretcher.[15] When Jesus saw their[16] faith, he said to the paralytic, "Have courage, son! Your sins are forgiven."[17] 9:3 Then[18] some of the experts in the law[19] said to themselves, "This man is blaspheming!"[20] 9:4 When Jesus saw their reaction he said, "Why do you respond with evil in your hearts? 9:5 Which is easier,[21] to say, 'Your sins are forgiven' or to say, 'Stand up and walk'? 9:6 But so that you may know[22] that the Son of Man[23] has authority on earth to forgive sins" – then he said to the paralytic[24] –

[12] sn His own town refers to Capernaum. It was a town of approximately 1000-1500, though of some significance.

[13] tn Grk "And behold, they were bringing." Here καὶ ἰδού (kai idou) has been translated as "just then" to indicate the somewhat sudden appearance of the people carrying the paralytic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1), especially in conjunction with the suddenness of the stretcher bearers' appearance.

[14] tn Grk "they"; the referent (some unnamed people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Traditionally, "on a bed," but this could be confusing to the modern reader who might envision a large piece of furniture. In various contexts, κλίνη (klinē) may be translated "bed, couch, cot, stretcher, or bier" (in the case of a corpse). See L&N 6.106.

[16] sn The plural pronoun their makes it clear that Jesus was responding to the faith of the entire group, not just the paralyzed man.

[17] sn The passive voice here is a divine passive (ExSyn 437). It is clear that God does the forgiving.

[18] tn Grk "And behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1). Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events in the narrative.

[19] tn Or "some of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[20] sn Blaspheming meant to say something that dishonored God. To claim divine prerogatives or claim to speak for God when one really does not would be such an act of offense. The remark raised directly the issue of the nature of Jesus' ministry.

[21] sn Which is easier is a reflective kind of question. On the one hand to declare sins are forgiven is easier, since one does not need to see it, unlike telling a paralyzed person to walk. On the other hand, it is harder, because for it to be true one must possess the authority to forgive the sin.

[22] sn Now Jesus put the two actions together. The walking of the man would be proof (so that you may know) that his sins were forgiven and that God had worked through Jesus (i.e., the Son of Man).

[23] sn The term Son of Man, which is a title in Greek, comes from a pictorial description in Dan 7:13 of one "like a son of man" (i.e., a human being). It is Jesus' favorite way to refer to himself. Jesus did not reveal the background of the term here, which mixes human and divine imagery as the man in Daniel rides a cloud, something only God does. He just used it. It also could be an idiom in Aramaic meaning either "some person" or "me." So there is a little ambiguity in its use here, since its origin is not clear at this point. However, the action makes it clear that Jesus used it to refer to himself here.

[24] sn Jesus did not finish his sentence with words but with action, that is, healing the paralytic with an accompanying pronouncement to him directly.

"Stand up, take your stretcher, and go home."[1] 9:7 And he stood up and went home.[2] 9:8 When[3] the crowd saw this, they were afraid[4] and honored God who had given such authority to men.[5]

The Call of Matthew; Eating with Sinners

9:9 As Jesus went on from there, he saw a man named Matthew sitting at the tax booth.[6] "Follow me," he said to him. And he got up and followed him. 9:10 As[7] Jesus[8] was having a meal[9] in Matthew's[10] house, many tax collectors[11] and sinners came and ate with Jesus and his disciples. 9:11 When the Pharisees[12] saw this they said to his disciples, "Why does your teacher eat with tax collectors and sinners?"[13] 9:12 When[14] Jesus heard this he said, "Those who are healthy don't need a physician, but those who are sick do.[15] 9:13 Go and learn what this saying means: 'I want mercy and not sacrifice.'[16] For I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners."

The Superiority of the New

9:14 Then John's[17] disciples came to Jesus[18] and asked, "Why do we and the Pharisees[19] fast often,[20] but your disciples don't fast?" 9:15 Jesus said to them, "The wedding guests[21] cannot mourn while the bridegroom[22] is with them, can they? But the days[23] are coming when the bridegroom will be taken from them,[24] and then they will fast. 9:16 No one sews a patch of unshrunk cloth on an old garment, because the patch will pull away from the garment and the tear will be worse. 9:17 And no one pours new wine into old wineskins;[25] otherwise the skins burst and the wine is spilled out and the skins are destroyed. Instead they put new wine into new wineskins[26] and both are preserved."

Restoration and Healing

9:18 As he was saying these things, a ruler came, bowed low before him, and said, "My daughter has just died, but come and lay your hand on her and she will live." 9:19 Jesus and his disciples got up and followed him. 9:20 But[27] a

[1] tn Grk "to your house."

[3] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[4] tc Most witnesses (C L Θ 0233 f^{13} 𝔐) have ἐθαύμασαν (ethaumasan; "marveled, were amazed") instead of ἐφοβήθησαν (ephobēthēsan) here, effectively turning the fearful reaction into one of veneration. But the harder reading is well supported by ℵ B D W 0281 f^{1} 33 892 1424 al lat co and thus is surely authentic.

[5] tn Grk "people." The plural of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) usually indicates people in general, but the singular is used in the expression "Son of Man." There is thus an ironic allusion to Jesus' statement in v. 6: His self-designation as "Son of Man" is meant to be unique, but the crowd regards it simply as meaning "human, person." To maintain this connection for the English reader the plural ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) has been translated here as "men" rather than as the more generic "people."

sn The tax booth was a booth located on the edge of a city or town to collect taxes for trade. There was a tax booth in Capernaum, which was on the trade route from Damascus to Galilee and the Mediterranean. The "taxes" were collected on produce and goods brought into the area for sale, and were a sort of "sales tax" paid by the seller but obviously passed on to the purchaser in the form of increased prices (L&N 57.183). It was here that Jesus met Matthew (also named Levi [see Mark 2:14, Luke 5:27]) who was ultimately employed by the Romans, though perhaps more directly responsible to Herod Antipas. It was his job to collect taxes for Rome and he was thus despised by Jews who undoubtedly regarded him as a traitor.

[7] tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase καὶ ἐγένετο (kai egeneto, "it happened that") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[8] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn Grk "was reclining at table."

sn As Jesus was having a meal. 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

[10] tn Grk "in the house." The Greek article is used here in a context that implies possession, and the referent of the implied possessive pronoun (Matthew) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[11] sn See the note on tax collectors in 5:46.

[12] sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

[13] sn The issue here is inappropriate associations. Jews were very careful about personal associations and contact as a matter of ritual cleanliness. Their question borders on an accusation that Jesus is ritually unclean.

[14] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[15] sn Jesus' point is that he associates with those who are sick because they have the need and will respond to the offer of help. A person who is healthy (or who thinks mistakenly that he is) will not seek treatment.

[16] sn A quotation from Hos 6:6 (see also Matt 12:7).

[17] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[18] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[19] sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

[20] sn John's disciples and the Pharisees followed typical practices with regard to fasting and prayer. Many Jews fasted regularly (Lev 16:29-34; 23:26-32; Num 29:7-11). The zealous fasted twice a week on Monday and Thursday.

[21] tn Grk "sons of the wedding hall," an idiom referring to wedding guests, or more specifically friends of the bridegroom present at the wedding celebration (L&N 11.7).

[22] sn The expression while the bridegroom is with them is an allusion to messianic times (John 3:29; Isa 54:5-6; 62:4-5; 4 Ezra 2:15, 38).

[23] tn Grk "days."

[24] sn The statement the bridegroom will be taken from them is a veiled allusion by Jesus to his death, which he did not make explicit until the incident at Caesarea Philippi in 16:13ff.

[25] sn Wineskins were bags made of skin or leather, used for storing wine in NT times. As the new wine fermented and expanded, it would stretch the new wineskins. Putting new (unfermented) wine in old wineskins, which had already been stretched, would result in the bursting of the wineskins.

[26] sn The meaning of the saying new wine into new wineskins is that the presence and teaching of Jesus was something new and signaled the passing of the old. It could not be confined within the old religion of Judaism, but involved the inauguration and consummation of the kingdom of God.

[27] tn Grk "And behold a woman." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

woman who had been suffering from a hemorrhage[1] for twelve years came up behind him and touched the edge[2] of his cloak.[3] 9:21 For she kept saying to herself,[4] "If only I touch his cloak, I will be healed."[5] 9:22 But when Jesus turned and saw her he said, "Have courage, daughter! Your faith has made you well."[6] And the woman was healed[7] from that hour. 9:23 When Jesus entered the ruler's house and saw the flute players and the disorderly crowd, 9:24 he said, "Go away, for the girl is not dead but asleep." And they began making fun of him.[8] 9:25 But when the crowd had been put outside, he went in and gently took her by the hand, and the girl got up. 9:26 And the news of this spread throughout that region.[9]

9:27 As Jesus went on from there, two blind men followed him, shouting,[10] "Have mercy[11] on us, Son of David!"[12] 9:28 When[13] he went into the house, the blind men came to him. Jesus[14] said to them, "Do you believe that I am able to do this?" They said to him, "Yes, Lord." 9:29 Then he touched their eyes saying, "Let it be done for you according to your faith." 9:30 And their eyes were opened. Then Jesus sternly warned them, "See that no one knows about this." 9:31 But they went out and spread the news about him throughout that entire region.[15]

9:32 As[16] they were going away,[17] a man who could not talk and was demon-possessed was brought to him. 9:33 After the demon was cast out, the man who had been mute spoke. The crowds were amazed and said, "Never has anything like this been seen in Israel!" 9:34 But the Pharisees[18] said, "By the ruler[19] of demons he casts out demons."[20]

Workers for the Harvest

9:35 Then Jesus went throughout all the towns[21] and villages, teaching in their synagogues,[22] preaching the good news of the kingdom, and healing every kind of disease and sickness.[23] 9:36 When[24] he saw the crowds, he had compassion on them because they were bewildered and helpless,[25] like sheep without a shepherd. 9:37 Then he said to his disciples, "The harvest is plentiful, but the workers are few. 9:38 Therefore ask the Lord of the harvest[26] to send out[27] workers into his harvest."

Sending Out the Twelve Apostles

10:1 Jesus[28] called his twelve disciples and gave them authority over unclean spirits[29] so they could cast them out and heal every kind of disease and sickness.[30] 10:2 Now these are the

1 sn Suffering from a hemorrhage. The woman was most likely suffering from a vaginal hemorrhage which would make her ritually unclean.

2 sn The edge of his cloak refers to the kraspedon, the blue tassel on the garment that symbolized a Jewish man's obedience to the law (cf. Num 15:37-41). The woman thus touched the very part of Jesus' clothing that indicated his ritual purity.

3 tn Grk "garment," but here ἱμάτιον (himation) denotes the outer garment in particular.

4 tn The imperfect verb is here taken iteratively, for the context suggests that the woman was trying to find the courage to touch Jesus' cloak.

5 tn Grk "saved."

sn In this pericope the author uses a term for being healed (Grk "saved") that would have spiritual significance to his readers. It may be a double entendre (cf. parallel in Mark 5:28 which uses the same term), since elsewhere he uses verbs that simply mean "heal": If only the reader would "touch" Jesus, he too would be "saved."

6 tn Or "has delivered you"; Grk "has saved you." This should not be understood as an expression for full salvation in the immediate context; it refers only to the woman's healing.

7 tn Grk "saved."

8 tn Grk "They were laughing at him." The imperfect verb has been taken ingressively.

9 tn For the translation of τὴν γῆν ἐκείνην (tēn gēn ekeinēn) as "that region," see L&N 1.79.

10 tn Grk "shouting, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

11 sn Have mercy on us is a request for healing. It is not owed to the men. They simply ask for God's kind grace.

12 sn There was a tradition in Judaism that the Son of David (Solomon) had great powers of healing (Josephus, Ant. 8.2.5 [8.42-49]).

13 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "to him, and Jesus." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in Greek, but a new sentence was started here in the translation.

15 tn For the translation of τὴν γῆν ἐκείνην (tēn gēn ekeinēn) as "that region," see L&N 1.79.

16 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

17 tn Grk "away, behold, they brought a man to him." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

18 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

19 tn Or "prince."

20 tc Although codex Cantabrigiensis (D), along with a few other Western versional and patristic witnesses, lacks this verse, virtually all other witnesses have it. The Western text's reputation for free alterations as well as the heightened climax if v. 33 concludes this pericope explains why these witnesses omitted the verse.

21 tn Or "cities."

22 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23.

23 tn Grk "and every [kind of] sickness." Here "every" was not repeated in the translation for stylistic reasons.

24 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

25 tn Or "because they had been bewildered and helpless." The translational issue is whether the perfect participles are predicate (as in the text) or are pluperfect periphrastic (the alternate translation). If the latter, the implication would seem to be that the crowds had been in such a state until the Great Shepherd arrived.

26 sn The phrase Lord of the harvest recognizes God's sovereignty over the harvest process.

27 tn Grk "to thrust out."

28 tn Grk "And he."

29 sn Unclean spirits refers to evil spirits.

names of the twelve apostles:[1] first, Simon[2] (called Peter), and Andrew his brother; James son of Zebedee and John his brother; 10:3 Philip and Bartholomew;[3] Thomas[4] and Matthew the tax collector;[5] James the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus;[6] 10:4 Simon the Zealot[7] and Judas Iscariot,[8] who betrayed him.[9] 10:5 Jesus sent out these twelve, instructing them as follows:[10] "Do not go to Gentile regions[11] and do not enter any Samaritan town.[12] 10:6 Go[13] instead to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. 10:7 As you go, preach this message: 'The kingdom of heaven is near!' 10:8 Heal the sick, raise the dead,[14] cleanse lepers, cast out demons. Freely you received, freely give. 10:9 Do not take gold, silver, or copper in your belts, 10:10 no bag[15] for the journey, or an extra tunic,[16] or sandals or staff;[17] for the worker deserves his provisions. 10:11 Whenever[18] you enter a town or village,[19] find out who is worthy there[20] and stay with them[21] until you leave. 10:12 As you enter the house, give it greetings.[22] 10:13 And if the house is worthy, let your peace come on it, but if it is not worthy, let your peace return to you.[23] 10:14 And if anyone will not welcome you or listen to your message, shake the dust off[24] your feet as you leave that house or that town. 10:15 I tell you the truth,[25] it will be more bearable for the region of Sodom and Gomorrah[26] on the day of judgment than for that town!

Persecution of Disciples

10:16 "I[27] am sending you out like sheep surrounded by wolves,[28] so be wise as serpents and

1 sn The term apostles is rare in the gospels, found only here, Mark 3:14, and six more times in Luke (6:13; 9:10; 11:49; 17:5; 22:14; 24:10).

2 sn In the various lists of the twelve, Simon (that is, Peter) is always mentioned first (see also Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:13-16; Acts 1:13) and the first four are always the same, though not in the same order after Peter.

3 sn Bartholomew (meaning "son of Tolmai" in Aramaic) could be another name for Nathanael mentioned in John 1:45.

4 sn This is the "doubting Thomas" of John 20:24-29.

5 sn See the note on tax collectors in 5:46.

6 tc Witnesses differ on the identification of the last disciple mentioned in v. 3: He is called Λεββαῖος (Lebbaios, "Lebbaeus") in D, Judas Zelotes in it, and not present in sy^{s}. The Byzantine text, along with a few others (C$^{(*)L,2}$ L W Θ f^{1} 33 𝔐), conflates earlier readings by calling him "Lebbaeus, who was called Thaddaeus," while codex 13 pc conflate by way of transposition ("Thaddaeus, who was called Lebbaeus"). But excellent witnesses of the earliest texttypes (ℵ B f^{13} 892 pc lat co) call him merely Θαδδαῖος (Thaddaios, "Thaddaeus"), a reading which, because of this support, is most likely correct.

7 tn Grk "the Cananean," but according to both BDAG 507 s.v. Καναναῖος and L&N 11.88, this term has no relation at all to the geographical terms for Cana or Canaan, but is derived from the Aramaic term for "enthusiast, zealot" (see Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13), possibly because of an earlier affiliation with the party of the Zealots. He may not have been technically a member of the particular Jewish nationalistic party known as "Zealots" (since according to some scholars this party had not been organized at that time), but simply someone who was zealous for Jewish independence from Rome, in which case the term would refer to his temperament.

8 sn There is some debate about what the name Iscariot means. It probably alludes to a region in Judea and thus might make Judas the only non-Galilean in the group. Several explanations for the name Iscariot have been proposed, but it is probably transliterated Hebrew with the meaning "man of Kerioth" (there are at least two villages that had that name). For further discussion see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 1:546; also D. A. Carson, John, 304.

9 tn Grk "who even betrayed him."

10 tn Grk "instructing them, saying."

11 tn Grk "on the road of the Gentiles." That is, a path that leads to Gentile regions.

12 tn Grk "town [or city] of the Samaritans."

13 tn Grk "But go." The Greek μᾶλλον (mallon, "rather, instead") conveys the adversative nuance here so that δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 tc The majority of Byzantine minuscules, along with a few other witnesses (C^{3} K L Γ Θ 700* al), lack νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε (nekrous egeirete, "raise the dead"), most likely because of oversight due to a string of similar endings (-ετε in the second person imperatives, occurring five times in v. 8). The longer version of this verse is found in several diverse and ancient witnesses such as ℵ B C* (D) N 0281^{vid} $f^{1,13}$ 33 565 al lat; P W Δ 348 have a word-order variation, but nevertheless include νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε. Although some Byzantine-text proponents charge the Alexandrian witnesses with theologically-motivated alterations toward heterodoxy, it is interesting to find a variant such as this in which the charge could be reversed (do the Byzantine scribes have something against the miracle of resurrection?). In reality, such charges of wholesale theologically-motivated changes toward heterodoxy are immediately suspect due to lack of evidence of intentional changes (here the change is evidently due to accidental omission).

15 tn Or "no traveler's bag"; or possibly "no beggar's bag" (L&N 6.145; BDAG 811 s.v. πήρα).

16 tn Grk "two tunics." See the note on the word "tunic" in Matt 5:40.

17 sn Mark 6:8 allows one staff. It might be that Matthew's summary (cf. Luke 9:3) means not taking an extra staff or that the expression is merely rhetorical for "traveling light" which has been rendered in two slightly different ways.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

19 tn Grk "Into whatever town or village you enter." This acts as a distributive, meaning every town or village they enter; this is expressed more naturally in English as "whenever you enter a town or village."

20 tn Grk "in it" (referring to the city or village).

21 tn Grk "there." This was translated as "with them" to avoid redundancy in English and to clarify where the disciples were to stay.

sn Jesus telling his disciples to stay with them in one house contrasts with the practice of religious philosophers in the ancient world who went from house to house begging.

22 tn This is a metonymy; the "house" is put for those who live in it.

23 sn The response to these messengers determines how God's blessing is bestowed – if the messengers are not welcomed, their blessing will return to them. Jesus shows just how important their mission is by this remark.

24 sn To shake the dust off represented shaking off the uncleanness from one's feet; see Luke 10:11; Acts 13:51; 18:6. It was a sign of rejection.

25 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

26 sn The allusion to Sodom and Gomorrah, the most wicked of OT cities from Gen 19:1-29, shows that to reject the current message is even more serious than the worst sins of the old era and will result in more severe punishment.

27 tn Grk "Behold I." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

28 sn This imagery of wolves is found in intertestamental Judaism; see Pss. Sol. 8:23, 30.

innocent as doves. 10:17 Beware[1] of people, because they will hand you over to councils[2] and flog[3] you in their synagogues.[4] 10:18 And you will be brought before governors and kings[5] because of me, as a witness to them and the Gentiles. 10:19 Whenever[6] they hand you over for trial, do not worry about how to speak or what to say,[7] for what you should say will be given to you at that time.[8] 10:20 For it is not you speaking, but the Spirit of your Father speaking through you.

10:21 "Brother[9] will hand over brother to death, and a father his child. Children will rise against[10] parents and have them put to death. 10:22 And you will be hated by everyone because of my name. But the one who endures to the end will be saved. 10:23 Whenever[11] they persecute you in one place,[12] flee to another. I tell you the truth,[13] you will not finish going through all the towns[14] of Israel before the Son of Man comes.

10:24 "A disciple is not greater than his teacher, nor a slave[15] greater than his master. 10:25 It is enough for the disciple to become like his teacher, and the slave like his master. If they have called the head of the house 'Beelzebul,' how much more will they defame the members of his household!

Fear God, Not Man

10:26 "Do[16] not be afraid of them, for nothing is hidden[17] that will not be revealed,[18] and nothing is secret that will not be made known. 10:27 What I say to you in the dark, tell in the light, and what is whispered in your ear,[19] proclaim from the housetops.[20] 10:28 Do[21] not be afraid of those who kill the body[22] but cannot kill the soul. Instead, fear the one who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.[23] 10:29 Aren't two sparrows sold for a penny?[24] Yet not one of them falls to the ground apart from your Father's will.[25] 10:30 Even all the hairs on your head are numbered. 10:31 So do not be afraid;[26] you are more valuable than many sparrows.

10:32 "Whoever, then, acknowledges[27] me before people, I will acknowledge[28] before my Father in heaven. 10:33 But whoever denies me before people, I will deny him also before my Father in heaven.

Not Peace, but a Sword

10:34 "Do not think that I have come to bring[29] peace to the earth. I have not come to bring peace but a sword. 10:35 For I have come to set a man against his father, a daughter against her mother, and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, 10:36 and a man's enemies will be the members of his household.[30]

10:37 "Whoever loves father or mother more than me is not worthy of me, and whoever loves son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. 10:38 And whoever does not take up his cross[31] and follow me is not worthy of me.

1 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 sn Councils in this context refers to local judicial bodies attached to the Jewish synagogue. This group would be responsible for meting out justice and discipline within the Jewish community.

3 tn BDAG 620 s.v. μαστιγόω 1.a states, "of flogging as a punishment decreed by the synagogue (Dt 25:2f; s. the Mishna Tractate Sanhedrin-Makkoth, edited w. notes by SKrauss '33) w. acc. of pers. Mt 10:17; 23:34."

4 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23.

5 sn These statements look at persecution both from a Jewish context as the mention of councils and synagogues suggests, and from a Gentile one as the reference to governors and kings suggests. Some fulfillment of Jewish persecution can be seen in Acts.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "how or what you might speak."

8 tn Grk "in that hour."

9 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

10 tn Or "will rebel against."

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn The Greek word here is πόλις (polis), which can mean either "town" or "city."

13 tn Grk "For truly (ἀμήν, amēn) I say to you." Here γάρ (gar, "for") has not been translated.

14 tn The Greek word here is πόλις (polis), which can mean either "town" or "city." "Town" was chosen here to emphasize the extensive nature of the disciples' ministry. The same word is translated earlier in the verse as "place."

15 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

16 tn Grk "Therefore do not." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

17 tn Or "concealed."

18 sn I.e., be revealed by God. The passive voice here and in the next verb see the revelation as coming from God. The text is both a warning about bad things being revealed and an encouragement that good things will be made known.

19 tn Grk "what you hear in the ear," an idiom.

20 tn The expression "proclaim from the housetops" is an idiom for proclaiming something publicly (L&N 7.51). Roofs of many first century Jewish houses in Judea and Galilee were flat and had access either from outside or from within the house. Something shouted from atop a house would be heard by everyone in the street below.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

22 sn Judaism had a similar exhortation in 4 Macc 13:14-15.

23 sn See the note on the word hell in 5:22.

24 sn The penny refers to an assarion, a small Roman copper coin. One of them was worth one-sixteenth of a denarius or less than a half hour's average wage. Sparrows were the cheapest items sold in the market. God knows about even the most financially insignificant things; see Isa 49:15.

25 tn Or "to the ground without the knowledge and consent of your Father."

26 sn Do not be afraid. One should respect and show reverence to God, but need not fear his tender care.

27 tn Or "confesses."

28 tn Grk "I will acknowledge him also."

sn This acknowledgment will take place at the judgment. On Jesus and judgment, see Luke 22:69; Acts 10:42-43; 17:31.

29 tn Grk "cast." For βάλλω (ballō) in the sense of causing a state or condition, see L&N 13.14.

30 tn Matt 10:35-36 are an allusion to Mic 7:6.

31 sn It was customary practice in a Roman crucifixion for the prisoner to be made to carry his own cross. Jesus is speaking figuratively here in the context of rejection. If the priority is not one's allegiance to Jesus, then one will not follow him in the face of possible rejection.

10:39 Whoever finds his life[1] will lose it,[2] and whoever loses his life because of me[3] will find it.

Rewards

10:40 "Whoever receives you receives me, and whoever receives me receives the one who sent me.[4] 10:41 Whoever receives a prophet in the name of a prophet will receive a prophet's reward. Whoever[5] receives a righteous person in the name of a righteous person will receive a righteous person's reward. 10:42 And whoever gives only a cup of cold water to one of these little ones in the name of a disciple, I tell you the truth,[6] he will never lose his reward."

11:1 When[7] Jesus had finished instructing his twelve disciples, he went on from there to teach and preach in their towns.

Jesus and John the Baptist

11:2 Now when John[8] heard in prison about the deeds Christ[9] had done, he sent his disciples to ask a question:[10] 11:3 "Are you the one who is to come,[11] or should we look for another?" 11:4 Jesus answered them,[12] "Go tell John what you hear and see:[13] 11:5 The blind see, the[14] lame walk, lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the poor have good news proclaimed to them. 11:6 Blessed is anyone[15] who takes no offense at me."

11:7 While they were going away, Jesus began to speak to the crowd about John: "What did you go out into the wilderness[16] to see? A reed shaken by the wind?[17] 11:8 What[18] did you go out to see? A man dressed in fancy clothes?[19] Look, those who wear fancy clothes are in the homes of kings![20] 11:9 What did you go out to see? A prophet? Yes, I tell you, and more[21] than a prophet. 11:10 This is the one about whom it is written:

> 'Look, I am sending my messenger ahead of you,[22]
> who will prepare your way before you.'[23]

11:11 "I tell you the truth,[24] among those born of women, no one has arisen greater than John the Baptist. Yet the one who is least[25] in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he is. 11:12 From[26] the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven has suffered violence,

1 tn Grk "his soul," but ψυχή (psuchē) is frequently used of one's physical life. It clearly has that meaning in this context.

2 sn If there is no willingness to suffer the world's rejection at this point, then one will not respond to Jesus (which is trying to find life) and then will be subject to this judgment (which is losing it).

3 tn Or "for my sake." The traditional rendering "for my sake" can be understood in the sense of "for my benefit," but the Greek term ἕνεκα indicates the cause or reason for something (BDAG 334 s.v. 1).

4 sn The one who sent me refers to God.

5 tn Grk "And whoever." Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

7 tn Grk "And it happened when." The introductory phrase καὶ ἐγένετο (kai egeneto, "it happened that") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

8 sn John refers to John the Baptist.

9 tc The Western codex D and a few other MSS (0233 1424 al) read "Jesus" here instead of "Christ." This is not likely to be original because it is not found in the earliest and most important MSS, nor in the rest of the MS tradition.

tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

10 tc Instead of "by his disciples" (see the tn below for the reading of the Greek), the majority of later MSS (C³ L f^{1} 𝔐 lat bo) have "two of his disciples." The difference in Greek, however, is only two letters: διὰ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ vs. δύο τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ (dia tōn mathētōn autou vs. duo tōn mathētōn autou). Although an accidental alteration could account for either of these readings, it is more likely that δύο is an assimilation to the parallel in Luke 7:18. Further, διά is read by a good number of early and excellent witnesses (א B C* D P W Z Δ Θ 0233 f^{13} 33 sa), and thus should be considered original.

tn Grk "sending by his disciples he said to him." The words "a question" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

11 sn Aspects of Jesus' ministry may have led John to question whether Jesus was the promised stronger and greater one who is to come that he had preached about in Matt 3:1-12.

12 tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said to them." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

13 sn What you hear and see. The following activities all paraphrase various OT descriptions of the time of promised salvation: Isa 35:5-6; 26:19; 29:18-19; 61:1. Jesus is answering not by acknowledging a title, but by pointing to the nature of his works, thus indicating the nature of the time.

14 tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more. Two other conjunctions are omitted in this series.

15 tn Grk "whoever."

16 tn Or "desert."

17 tn There is a debate as to whether one should read this figuratively ("to see someone who is easily blown over?") or literally (Grk "to see the wilderness vegetation?... No, to see a prophet"). Either view makes good sense, but the following examples suggest the question should be read literally and understood to point to the fact that a prophet drew them to the desert.

18 tn Grk "But what." Here ἀλλά (alla, a strong contrastive in Greek) produces a somewhat awkward sense in English, and has not been translated. The same situation occurs at the beginning of v. 9.

19 sn The reference to fancy clothes makes the point that John was not rich or powerful, in that he did not come from the wealthy classes.

20 tn Or "palaces."

21 tn John the Baptist is "more" because he introduces the one (Jesus) who brings the new era. The term is neuter, but may be understood as masculine in this context (BDAG 806 s.v. περισσότερος b).

22 tn Grk "before your face" (an idiom).

23 sn The quotation is primarily from Mal 3:1 with pronouns from Exod 23:20. Here is the forerunner who points the way to the arrival of God's salvation. His job is to prepare and guide the people, as the cloud did for Israel in the desert.

24 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

25 sn After John comes a shift of eras. The new era is so great that the lowest member of it (the one who is least in the kingdom of God) is greater than the greatest one of the previous era.

26 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

and forceful people lay hold of it.[1] 11:13 For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John appeared.[2] 11:14 And if you are willing to accept it, he is Elijah, who is to come. 11:15 The one who has ears had better listen![3]

11:16 "To[4] what should I compare this generation? They are like children sitting in the marketplaces who call out to one another,[5]

> 11:17 'We played the flute for you, yet you did not dance;[6]
> we wailed in mourning,[7] yet you did not weep.'

11:18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, 'He has a demon!'[8] 11:19 The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, 'Look at him,[9] a glutton and a drunk, a friend of tax collectors[10] and sinners!'[11] But wisdom is vindicated[12] by her deeds."[13]

Woes on Unrepentant Cities

11:20 Then Jesus began to criticize openly the cities[14] in which he had done many of his miracles, because they did not repent. 11:21 "Woe to you, Chorazin![15] Woe to you, Bethsaida! If[16] the miracles[17] done in you had been done in Tyre[18] and Sidon,[19] they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. 11:22 But I tell you, it will be more bearable for Tyre and Sidon on the day of judgment than for you! 11:23 And you, Capernaum,[20] will you be exalted to heaven?[21] No, you will be thrown down to Hades![22] For if the miracles done among you had been done in Sodom, it would have continued to this day. 11:24 But I tell you, it will be more bearable for the region of Sodom[23] on the day of judgment than for you!"

Jesus' Invitation

11:25 At that time Jesus said,[24] "I praise[25] you, Father, Lord[26] of heaven and earth, because[27] you have hidden these things from the wise[28] and intelligent, and revealed them to little children. 11:26 Yes, Father, for this was your gracious will.[29] 11:27 All things have been handed over to me by my Father.[30] No one knows the Son except the Father, and no one knows the Father except the Son and anyone to

---

1 tn Or "the kingdom of heaven is forcibly entered and violent people take hold of it." For a somewhat different interpretation of this passage, see the note on the phrase "urged to enter in" in Luke 16:16.

2 tn The word "appeared" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

3 tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 8:8, 14:35).

4 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "who call out to one another, saying." The participle λέγουσιν (legousin) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

6 sn 'We played the flute for you, yet you did not dance...' The children of this generation were making the complaint (see vv. 18-19) that others were not playing the game according to the way they played the music. John and Jesus did not follow "their tune." Jesus' complaint was that this generation wanted things their way, not God's.

7 tn The verb ἐθρηνήσαμεν (ethrēnēsamen) refers to the loud wailing and lamenting used to mourn the dead in public in 1st century Jewish culture.

8 sn John the Baptist was too separatist and ascetic for some, and so he was accused of not being directed by God, but by a demon.

9 tn Grk "Behold a man."

10 sn See the note on tax collectors in 5:46.

11 sn Neither were they happy with Jesus (the Son of Man), even though he was the opposite of John and associated freely with people like tax collectors and sinners. Either way, God's messengers were subject to complaint.

12 tn Or "shown to be right."

13 tc Most witnesses (B^2 C D L Θ f^1 33 𝔐 lat) have "children" (τέκνων, teknōn) here instead of "deeds" (ἔργων, ergōn), but since "children" is the reading of the parallel in Luke 7:35, scribes would be motivated to convert the less colorful "deeds" into more animate offspring of wisdom. Further, ἔργων enjoys support from ℵ B^* W (f^{13}) as well as early versional and patristic support.

14 tn The Greek word here is πόλις (polis) which can be translated "city" or "town." "Cities" was chosen here to emphasize the size of the places Jesus' mentions in the following verses.

15 sn Chorazin was a town of Galilee that was probably fairly small in contrast to Bethsaida and is otherwise unattested. Bethsaida was declared a polis by the tetrarch Herod Philip, sometime after A.D. 30.

16 tn This introduces a second class (contrary to fact) condition in the Greek text.

17 tn Or "powerful deeds."

18 map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

19 sn Tyre and Sidon are two other notorious OT cities (Isa 23; Jer 25:22; 47:4). The remark is a severe rebuke, in effect: "Even the sinners of the old era would have responded to the proclamation of the kingdom, unlike you!"

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

20 sn Capernaum was a town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

21 tn The interrogative particle introducing this question expects a negative reply.

22 sn In the OT, Hades was known as Sheol. It is the place where the unrighteous will reside (Luke 10:15; 16:23; Rev 20:13-14).

23 sn The allusion to Sodom, the most wicked of OT cities from Gen 19:1-29, shows that to reject the current message is even more serious, and will result in more severe punishment, than the worst sins of the old era. The phrase region of Sodom is in emphatic position in the Greek text.

24 tn Grk "At that time, answering, Jesus said." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

25 tn Or "thank."

26 sn The title Lord is an important name for God, showing his sovereignty, but it is interesting that it comes next to a reference to the Father, a term indicative of God's care. The two concepts are often related in the NT; see Eph 1:3-6.

27 tn Or "that."

28 sn See 1 Cor 1:26-31.

29 tn Grk "for (to do) thus was well-pleasing before you," BDAG 325 s.v. ἔμπροσθεν 1.b.δ; speaking of something taking place "before" God is a reverential way of avoiding direct connection of the action to him.

30 sn This verse has been noted for its conceptual similarity to teaching in John's Gospel (10:15; 17:2). The authority of the Son and the Father are totally intertwined.

whom the Son decides[1] to reveal him. 11:28 Come to me, all you who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest. 11:29 Take my yoke[2] on you and learn from me, because I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. 11:30 For my yoke is easy to bear, and my load is not hard to carry."

Lord of the Sabbath

12:1 At that time Jesus went through the grain fields on a Sabbath. His[3] disciples were hungry, and they began to pick heads of wheat[4] and eat them. 12:2 But when the Pharisees[5] saw this they said to him, "Look, your disciples are doing what is against the law to do on the Sabbath." 12:3 He[6] said to them, "Haven't you read what David did when he and his companions were hungry – 12:4 how he entered the house of God and they ate[7] the sacred bread,[8] which was against the law[9] for him or his companions to eat, but only for the priests?[10] 12:5 Or have you not read in the law that the priests in the temple desecrate the Sabbath and yet are not guilty? 12:6 I[11] tell you that something greater than the temple is here. 12:7 If[12] you had known what this means: 'I want mercy and not sacrifice,'[13] you would not have condemned the innocent. 12:8 For the Son of Man is lord[14] of the Sabbath."

12:9 Then[15] Jesus[16] left that place and entered their synagogue.[17] 12:10 A[18] man was there who had a withered[19] hand. And they asked Jesus,[20] "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath?"[21] so that they could accuse him. 12:11 He said to them, "Would not any one of you, if he had one sheep that fell into a pit on the Sabbath, take hold of it and lift it out? 12:12 How much more valuable is a person than a sheep! So it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath." 12:13 Then he said to the man, "Stretch out your hand." He stretched it out and it was restored,[22] as healthy as the other. 12:14 But the Pharisees went out and plotted against him, as to how they could assassinate[23] him.

God's Special Servant

12:15 Now when Jesus learned of this, he went away from there. Great[24] crowds[25] followed him, and he healed them all. 12:16 But he sternly warned them not to make him known. 12:17 This fulfilled what was spoken by Isaiah the prophet:[26]

1 tn Or "wishes"; or "intends"; or "plans" (cf. BDAG 182 s.v. βούλομαι 2.b). Here it is the Son who has sovereignty.

2 sn A yoke is a wooden bar or frame that joins two animals like oxen or horses so that they can pull a wagon, plow, etc. together. Here it is used figuratively of the restrictions that a teacher or rabbi would place on his followers.

3 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

4 tn Or "heads of grain." While the generic term στάχυς (stachus) can refer to the cluster of seeds at the top of grain such as barley or wheat, in the NT the term is restricted to wheat (L&N 3.40; BDAG 941 s.v. 1).

5 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tc The Greek verb ἔφαγεν (ephagen, "he ate") is found in a majority of witnesses (𝔓70 C D L W Θ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt sy co) in place of ἔφαγον (ephagon, "they ate"), the wording found in ℵ B pc. ἔφαγεν is most likely motivated by the parallels in Mark and Luke (both of which have the singular).

8 tn Grk "the bread of presentation."

sn The sacred bread refers to the "bread of presentation," "showbread," or "bread of the Presence," twelve loaves prepared weekly for the tabernacle and later, the temple. See Exod 25:30; 35:13; 39:36; Lev 24:5-9. Each loaf was made from 3 quarts (3.5 liters; Heb "two tenths of an ephah") of fine flour. The loaves were placed on a table in the holy place of the tabernacle, on the north side opposite the lampstand (Exod 26:35). It was the duty of the priest each Sabbath to place fresh bread on the table; the loaves from the previous week were then given to Aaron and his descendants, who ate them in the holy place, because they were considered sacred (Lev 24:9). See also Mark 2:23-28, Luke 6:1-5.

9 sn Jesus' response to the charge that what his disciples were doing was against the law is one of analogy: "If David did it for his troops in a time of need, then so can I with my disciples." Jesus is clear that on the surface there was a violation here. What is not as clear is whether he is arguing a "greater need" makes this permissible or that this was within the intention of the law all along.

10 sn See 1 Sam 21:1-6.

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

13 sn A quotation from Hos 6:6 (see also Matt 9:13).

14 tn The term "lord" is in emphatic position in the Greek text.

sn A second point in Jesus' defense of his disciples' actions was that his authority as Son of Man also allowed it, since as Son of Man he was lord of the Sabbath.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23.

18 tn Grk "And behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

19 sn Withered means the man's hand was shrunken and paralyzed.

20 tn Grk "and they asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated. The referent of the pronoun (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 sn The background for this is the view that only if life was endangered should one attempt to heal on the Sabbath (see the Mishnah, m. Shabbat 6.3; 12.1; 18.3; 19.2; m. Yoma 8.6).

22 sn The passive was restored points to healing by God. Now the question became: Would God exercise his power through Jesus, if what Jesus was doing were wrong? Note also Jesus' "labor." He simply spoke and it was so.

23 tn Grk "destroy."

24 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

25 tc ℵ B pc lat read only πολλοί (polloi, "many") here, the first hand of N reads ὄχλοι (ochloi, "crowds"), while virtually all the rest of the witnesses have ὄχλοι πολλοί (ochloi polloi, "great crowds"). In spite of the good quality of both ℵ and B (especially in combination), and the testimony of the Latin witnesses, the longer reading is most likely correct; the shorter readings were probably due to homoioteleuton.

26 tn Grk "so that what was said by Isaiah the prophet would be fulfilled, saying." This final clause, however, is part of one sentence in Greek (vv. 15b-17) and is thus not related only to v. 16. The participle λέγοντος (legontos) is redundant and has not been translated.

12:18 "Here is[1] my servant whom I have chosen, the one I love, in whom I take great delight.[2]
I will put my Spirit on him, and he will proclaim justice to the nations.
12:19 He will not quarrel or cry out, nor will anyone hear his voice in the streets.
12:20 He will not break a bruised reed or extinguish a smoldering wick, until he brings justice to victory.
12:21 And in his name the Gentiles[3] will hope."[4]

Jesus and Beelzebul

12:22 Then they brought to him a demon-possessed man who was blind and mute. Jesus[5] healed him so that he could speak and see.[6] 12:23 All the crowds were amazed and said, "Could this one be the Son of David?" 12:24 But when the Pharisees[7] heard this they said, "He does not cast out demons except by the power of Beelzebul,[8] the ruler[9] of demons!" 12:25 Now when Jesus[10] realized what they were thinking, he said to them,[11] "Every kingdom divided against itself is destroyed,[12] and no town or house divided against itself will stand. 12:26 So if[13] Satan casts out Satan, he is divided against himself. How then will his kingdom stand? 12:27 And if I cast out demons by Beelzebul, by whom do your sons[14] cast them[15] out? For this reason they will be your judges. 12:28 But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God[16] has already overtaken[17] you. 12:29 How[18] else can someone enter a strong man's[19] house and steal his property, unless he first ties up the strong man? Then he can thoroughly plunder the house.[20] 12:30 Whoever is not with me is against me,[21] and whoever does not gather with me scatters.[22] 12:31 For this reason I tell you, people will be forgiven for every sin and blasphemy,[23] but the blasphemy against the Spirit will not be forgiven. 12:32 Whoever speaks a word against the Son of Man will be forgiven.[24] But whoever

1 tn Grk "Behold my servant."

2 tn Grk "in whom my soul is well pleased."

3 tn Or "the nations" (the same Greek word may be translated "Gentiles" or "nations").

4 sn Verses 18-21 are a quotation from Isa 42:1-4.

5 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "demoniac, and he healed him, so that the mute man spoke and saw."

7 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

8 tn Grk "except by Beelzebul."

sn Beelzebul is another name for Satan. So some people recognized Jesus' work as supernatural, but called it diabolical.

9 tn Or "prince."

10 tc The majority of MSS read ὁ Ἰησοῦς (ho Iēsous, "Jesus"), which clarifies who is the subject of the sentence. Although the shorter text is attested in far fewer witnesses (𝔓21 ℵ B D 892* sy^{s,c} sa bo), both the pedigree of the MSS and the strong internal evidence (viz., scribes were not prone to intentionally delete the name of Jesus) argue for the omission of Jesus' name. The name has been included in the translation, however, for clarity.

11 sn Jesus here demonstrated the absurdity of the thinking of the religious leaders who maintained that he was in league with Satan and that he actually derived his power from the devil. He first teaches (vv. 25-28) that if he casts out demons by the ruler of the demons, then in reality Satan is fighting against himself, with the result that his kingdom has come to an end. He then teaches (v. 29) about tying up the strong man to prove that he does not need to align himself with the devil because he is more powerful. Jesus defeated Satan at his temptation (4:1-11) and by his exorcisms he clearly demonstrated himself to be stronger than the devil. The passage reveals the desperate condition of the religious leaders, who in their hatred for Jesus end up attributing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satan (a position for which they will be held accountable, 12:31-32).

12 tn Or "is left in ruins."

13 tn This first class condition, the first of three "if" clauses in the following verses, presents the example vividly as if it were so. In fact, all three conditions in these verses are first class. The examples are made totally parallel. The expected answer is that Satan's kingdom will not stand, so the suggestion makes no sense. Satan would not seek to heal.

14 sn Most read your sons as a reference to Jewish exorcists (cf. "your followers," L&N 9.4), but more likely this is a reference to the disciples of Jesus themselves, who are also Jewish and have been healing as well (R. J. Shirock, "Whose Exorcists are they? The Referents of οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν at Matthew 12:27/Luke 11:19," JSNT 46 [1992]: 41-51). If this is a reference to the disciples, then Jesus' point is that it is not only him, but those associated with him whose power the hearers must assess. The following reference to judging also favors this reading.

15 tn The pronoun "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong.

17 tn The phrase ἔφθασεν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς (ephthasen eph' humas) is quite important. Does it mean merely "approach" (which would be reflected in a translation like "has come near to you") or actually "come upon" (as in the translation given above, "has already overtaken you," which has the added connotation of suddenness)? Is the arrival of the kingdom merely anticipated or already in process? Two factors favor arrival over anticipation here. First, the prepositional phrase ἐφ' ὑμᾶς (eph' humas, "upon you") in the Greek text suggests arrival (Dan 4:24, 28 Theodotion). Second, the following illustration in v. 29 looks at the healing as portraying Satan being overrun. So the presence of God's authority has arrived. See also L&N 13.123 for the translation of φθάνω (phthanō) as "to happen to already, to come upon, to come upon already."

18 tn Grk "Or how can."

19 sn The strong man here pictures Satan.

20 sn Some see the imagery here as similar to Eph 4:7-10, although no opponents are explicitly named in that passage. Jesus has the victory over Satan. Jesus' acts of healing mean that the war is being won and the kingdom is coming.

21 sn Whoever is not with me is against me. The call here is to join the victor. Failure to do so means that one is being destructive. Responding to Jesus is the issue.

22 sn For the image of scattering, see Pss. Sol. 17:18.

23 tn Grk "every sin and blasphemy will be forgiven men."

24 tn Grk "it will be forgiven him."

speaks against the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven,[1] either in this age or in the age to come.

Trees and Their Fruit

12:33 "Make a tree good and its fruit will be good, or make a tree bad[2] and its fruit will be bad, for a tree is known by its fruit. 12:34 Offspring of vipers! How are you able to say anything good, since you are evil? For the mouth speaks from what fills the heart. 12:35 The good person[3] brings good things out of his[4] good treasury,[5] and the evil person brings evil things out of his evil treasury. 12:36 I[6] tell you that on the day of judgment, people will give an account for every worthless word they speak. 12:37 For by your words you will be justified, and by your words you will be condemned."

The Sign of Jonah

12:38 Then some of the experts in the law[7] along with some Pharisees[8] answered him,[9] "Teacher, we want to see a sign[10] from you." 12:39 But he answered them,[11] "An evil and adulterous generation asks for a sign, but no sign will be given to it except the sign of the prophet Jonah. 12:40 For just as Jonah was in the belly of the huge fish[12] for three days and three nights,[13] so the Son of Man will be in the heart of the earth for three days and three nights. 12:41 The people[14] of Nineveh will stand up at the judgment with this generation and condemn it, because they repented when Jonah preached to them[15] – and now,[16] something greater than Jonah is here! 12:42 The queen of the South[17] will rise up at the judgment with this generation and condemn it, because she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon – and now,[18] something greater than Solomon is here!

The Return of the Unclean Spirit

12:43 "When[19] an unclean spirit[20] goes out of a person,[21] it passes through waterless places[22] looking for rest but[23] does not find it. 12:44 Then it says, 'I will return to the home I left.'[24] When it returns,[25] it finds the house[26] empty, swept clean, and put in order.[27] 12:45 Then it goes and brings with it seven other spirits more evil than itself, and they go in and live there, so[28] the last state of that person is worse than the first. It will be that way for this evil generation as well!"

sn Whoever speaks against the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven. This passage has troubled many people, who have wondered whether or not they have committed this sin. Three things must be kept in mind: (1) the nature of the sin is to ascribe what is the obvious work of the Holy Spirit (e.g., releasing people from Satan's power) to Satan himself; (2) it is not simply a momentary doubt or sinful attitude, but is indeed a settled condition which opposes the Spirit's work, as typified by the religious leaders who opposed Jesus; and (3) a person who is concerned about it has probably never committed this sin, for those who commit it here (i.e., the religious leaders) are not in the least concerned about Jesus' warning.

[2] tn Grk "rotten." The word σαπρός, modifying both "tree" and "fruit," can also mean "diseased" (L&N 65.28).

[3] tn The Greek text reads here ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos). The term is generic referring to any person.

[4] tn Grk "the"; the Greek article has been translated here and in the following clause ("his evil treasury") as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[5] sn The treasury here is a metaphorical reference to a person's heart (cf. BDAG 456 s.v. θησαυρός 1.b and the parallel passage in Luke 6:45).

[6] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[7] tn Or "Then some of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[8] tn Grk "and Pharisees." The word "some" before "Pharisees" has been supplied for clarification.

sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

[9] tn Grk "answered him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant, but the syntax of the sentence was changed to conform to English style.

[10] sn What exactly this sign would have been, given what Jesus was already doing, is not clear. But here is where the fence-sitters reside, refusing to commit to him.

[11] tn Grk "But answering, he said to them." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

[12] tn Grk "large sea creature."

[13] sn A quotation from Jonah 1:17.

[14] tn Grk "men"; the word here (ἀνήρ, anēr) usually indicates males or husbands, but occasionally is used in a generic sense of people in general, as here (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 1.a, 2).

[15] tn Grk "at the preaching of Jonah."

[17] sn On the queen of the South see 1 Kgs 10:1-3 and 2 Chr 9:1-12, as well as Josephus, Ant. 8.6.5-6 (8.165-175). The South most likely refers to modern southwest Arabia, possibly the eastern part of modern Yemen, although there is an ancient tradition reflected in Josephus which identifies this geo-political entity as Ethiopia.

[18] tn Grk "behold."

[19] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[20] sn Unclean spirit refers to an evil spirit.

[21] tn Grk "man." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females. This same use occurs in v. 45.

[22] sn The background for the reference to waterless places is not entirely clear, though some Jewish texts suggest spirits must have a place to dwell, but not with water (Luke 8:29-31; Tob 8:3). Some suggest that the image of the desert or deserted cities as the places demons dwell is where this idea started (Isa 13:21; 34:14).

[23] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[24] tn Grk "I will return to my house from which I came."

[25] tn Grk "comes."

[26] tn The words "the house" are not in Greek but are implied.

[27] sn The image of the house empty, swept clean, and put in order refers to the life of the person from whom the demon departed. The key to the example appears to be that no one else has been invited in to dwell. If an exorcism occurs and there is no response to God, then the way is free for the demon to return. Some see the reference to exorcism as more symbolic; thus the story's only point is about responding to Jesus. This is possible and certainly is an application of the passage.

[28] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the concluding point of the story.

Jesus' True Family

12:46 While Jesus[1] was still speaking to the crowds,[2] his mother and brothers[3] came and[4] stood outside, asking[5] to speak to him. 12:47[6] Someone[7] told him, "Look, your mother and your brothers are standing outside wanting[8] to speak to you." 12:48 To the one who had said this, Jesus[9] replied,[10] "Who is my mother and who are my brothers?" 12:49 And pointing[11] toward his disciples he said, "Here[12] are my mother and my brothers! 12:50 For whoever does the will of my Father in heaven is[13] my brother and sister and mother."

The Parable of the Sower

13:1 On that day after Jesus went out of the house, he sat by the lake. 13:2 And such a large crowd gathered around him that he got into a boat to sit while[14] the whole crowd stood on the shore. 13:3 He[15] told them many things in parables,[16] saying: "Listen![17] A sower went out to sow.[18] 13:4 And as he sowed, some seeds[19] fell along the path, and the birds came and devoured them. 13:5 Other[20] seeds fell on rocky ground[21] where they did not have much soil. They sprang up quickly because the soil was not deep.[22] 13:6 But when the sun came up, they were scorched, and because they did not have sufficient root, they withered. 13:7 Other seeds fell among the thorns,[23] and they grew up and choked them.[24] 13:8 But other seeds fell on good soil and produced grain, some a hundred times as much, some sixty, and some thirty. 13:9 The one who has ears had better listen!"[25]

13:10 Then[26] the disciples came to him and said, "Why do you speak to them in parables?" 13:11 He replied,[27] "You have been given[28] the opportunity to know[29] the secrets[30] of the king-

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Grk "crowds, behold, his mother." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

3 sn The issue of whether Jesus had brothers (siblings) has had a long history in the church. Epiphanius, in the 4th century, argued that Mary was a perpetual virgin and had no offspring other than Jesus. Others argued that these brothers were really cousins. Nothing in the text suggests any of this. See also John 7:3.

4 tn "His mother and brothers came and" is a translation of "behold, his mother and brothers came."

5 tn Grk "seeking."

6 tc A few ancient MSS and versions lack this verse (ℵ* B L Γ pc ff[1] k sy[s,c] sa). The witness of ℵ and B is especially strong, but internal considerations override this external evidence. Both v. 46 and 47 end with the word λαλῆσαι ("to speak"), so early scribes probably omitted the verse through homoioteleuton. The following verses make little sense without v. 47; its omission is too hard a reading. Thus v. 47 was most likely part of the original text.

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 tn Grk "seeking."

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn Grk "And answering, he said to the one who had said this." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) at the beginning of the clause has not been translated.

11 tn Grk "extending his hand."

12 tn Grk "Behold my mother and my brothers."

13 tn The pleonastic pronoun αὐτός (autos, "he") which precedes this verb has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "and all the crowd." The clause in this phrase, although coordinate in terms of grammar, is logically subordinate to the previous clause.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

16 sn Though parables can contain a variety of figures of speech (cf. the remainder of chapter 13), many times they are simply stories that attempt to teach spiritual truth (which is unknown to the hearers) by using a comparison with something known to the hearers. In general, parables usually advance a single idea, though there may be many parts and characters in a single parable and subordinate ideas may expand the main idea further. The beauty of using the parable as a teaching device is that it draws the listener into the story, elicits an evaluation, and demands a response.

17 tn Grk "Behold."

18 sn A sower went out to sow. The background for this well-known parable, drawn from a typical scene in the Palestinian countryside, is a field through which a well-worn path runs. Sowing would occur in late fall or early winter (October to December) in the rainy season, looking for sprouting in April or May and a June harvest. The use of seed as a figure for God's giving life has OT roots (Isa 55:10-11). The point of the parable of the sower is to illustrate the various responses to the message of the kingdom of God.

19 tn In Matthew's version of this parable, plural pronouns are used to refer to the seed in v. 4 (ἅ...αὐτά [ha...auta]), although the collective singular is used in v. 5 and following (indicated by the singular verbs like ἔπεσεν [epesen]). For the sake of consistency in English, plural pronouns referring to the seed are used in the translation throughout the Matthean account. In both Mark and Luke the collective singular is used consistently throughout (cf. Mark 4:1-9; Luke 8:4-8).

20 tn Here and in vv. 7 and 8 δέ (de) has not been translated.

21 sn The rocky ground in Palestine would be a limestone base lying right under the soil.

22 tn Grk "it did not have enough depth of earth."

23 sn Palestinian weeds like these thorns could grow up to six feet in height and have a major root system.

24 sn That is, crowded out the good plants.

25 tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15, 13:43; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 8:8, 14:35).

27 tn Grk "And answering, he said to them." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

28 tn This is an example of a "divine passive," with God understood to be the source of the revelation (see ExSyn 437-38).

29 tn Grk "to you it has been given to know." The dative pronoun occurs first, in emphatic position in the Greek text, although this position is awkward in contemporary English.

30 tn Grk "the mysteries."

sn The key term secrets (μυστήριον, mustērion) can mean either (1) a new revelation or (2) a revealing interpretation of existing revelation as in Dan 2:17-23, 27-30. Jesus seems to be explaining how current events develop old promises, since the NT consistently links the events of Jesus' ministry and message with old promises (Rom 1:1-4; Heb 1:1-2). The traditional translation of this word, "mystery," is misleading to the modern English reader because it suggests a secret which people have tried to uncover but which they have failed to understand (L&N 28.77).

dom of heaven, but they have not. 13:12 For whoever has will be given more, and will have an abundance. But whoever does not have, even what he has will be taken from him.[1] 13:13 For this reason I speak to them in parables: Although they see they do not see, and although they hear they do not hear nor do they understand. 13:14 And concerning them the prophecy of Isaiah is fulfilled that says:

> 'You will listen carefully[2] yet will never understand, > you will look closely[3] yet will never comprehend.
> 13:15 For the heart of this people has become dull;
> they are hard of hearing,
> and they have shut their eyes,
> so that they would not see with their eyes > and hear with their ears > and understand with their hearts > and turn, and I would heal them.'[4]

13:16 "But your eyes are blessed[5] because they see, and your ears because they hear. 13:17 For I tell you the truth,[6] many prophets and righteous people longed to see[7] what you see but did not see it, and to hear what you hear but did not hear it.

13:18 "So listen to the parable of the sower: 13:19 When anyone hears the word about the kingdom and does not understand it, the evil one[8] comes and snatches what was sown in his heart;[9] this is the seed sown along the path. 13:20 The[10] seed sown on rocky ground[11] is the person who hears the word and immediately receives it with joy. 13:21 But he has no root in himself and does not endure;[12] when[13] trouble or persecution comes because of the word, immediately he falls away. 13:22 The[14] seed sown among thorns is the person who hears the word, but worldly cares and the seductiveness of wealth[15] choke the word,[16] so it produces nothing. 13:23 But as for the seed sown on good soil, this is the person who hears the word and understands. He bears fruit, yielding a hundred, sixty, or thirty times what was sown."[17]

The Parable of the Weeds

13:24 He presented them with another parable:[18] "The kingdom of heaven is like a person who sowed good seed in his field. 13:25 But while everyone was sleeping, an enemy came and sowed weeds[19] among the wheat and went away. 13:26 When[20] the plants sprouted and bore grain, then the weeds also appeared. 13:27 So the slaves[21] of the owner came and said to him, 'Sir, didn't you sow good seed in your field? Then where did the weeds come from?' 13:28 He said, 'An enemy has done this.' So[22] the slaves replied, 'Do you want us to go and gather them?' 13:29 But he said, 'No, since in gathering the weeds you may uproot the wheat with them. 13:30 Let both grow together until the harvest. At[23] harvest time I will tell the reapers, "First collect the weeds and tie them in bundles to be burned, but then[24] gather[25] the wheat into my barn."'"

The Parable of the Mustard Seed

13:31 He gave[26] them another parable:[27]

[1] sn What he has will be taken from him. The meaning is that the one who accepts Jesus' teaching concerning his person and the kingdom will receive a share in the kingdom now and even more in the future, but for the one who rejects Jesus' words, the opportunity that that person presently possesses with respect to the kingdom will someday be taken away forever.

[2] tn Grk "with hearing," a cognate dative that intensifies the action of the main verb "you will listen" (ExSyn 168-69).

[3] tn Grk "look by looking." The participle is redundant, functioning to intensify the force of the main verb.

[4] sn A quotation from Isa 6:9-10. Thus parables both conceal or reveal depending on whether one is open to hearing what they teach.

[5] sn This beatitude highlights the great honor bestowed on the disciples to share in this salvation.

[6] tn Grk "truly (ἀμήν, amēn) I say to you."

[7] sn This is what past prophets and righteous people had wanted very much to see, yet the fulfillment had come to the disciples. This remark is like 1 Pet 1:10-12 or Heb 1:1-2.

[8] sn Interestingly, the synoptic parallels each use a different word for Satan here: Mark 4:15 has "Satan," while Luke 8:12 has "the devil." This illustrates the fluidity of the gospel tradition in often using synonyms at the same point of the parallel tradition.

[9] sn The word of Jesus has the potential to save if it germinates in a person's heart, something the devil is very much against.

[10] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[11] tn Grk "The one sown on rocky ground, this is the one." The next two statements like this one have this same syntactical structure.

[12] tn Grk "is temporary."

[13] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[14] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[15] tn Grk "the deceitfulness of riches." Cf. BDAG 99 s.v. ἀπάτη 1, "the seduction which comes from wealth."

[17] tn The Greek is difficult to translate because it switches from a generic "he" to three people within this generic class (thus, something like: "Who indeed bears fruit and yields, in one instance a hundred times, in another, sixty times, in another, thirty times").

[18] tn Grk "He set before them another parable, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

[19] tn Grk "sowed darnel." The Greek term ζιζάνιον (zizanion) refers to an especially undesirable weed that looks like wheat but has poisonous seeds (L&N 3.30).

[20] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[21] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

[22] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the owner's statement.

[23] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[24] tn Grk "but."

[25] tn Grk "burned, but gather."

[27] tn Grk "He set before them another parable, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

"The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed[1] that a man took and sowed in his field. 13:32 It is the smallest of all the seeds, but when it has grown it is the greatest garden plant and becomes a tree,[2] so that the wild birds[3] come and nest in its branches."[4]

The Parable of the Yeast

13:33 He told them another parable: "The kingdom of heaven is like yeast that a woman took and mixed with[5] three measures[6] of flour until all the dough had risen."[7]

The Purpose of Parables

13:34 Jesus spoke all these things in parables to the crowds; he did not speak to them without a parable. 13:35 This fulfilled what was spoken by the prophet:[8]

"I will open my mouth in parables,
I will announce what has been hidden from the foundation of the world."[9]

Explanation for the Disciples

13:36 Then he left the crowds and went into the house. And his disciples came to him saying, "Explain to us the parable of the weeds in the field." 13:37 He[10] answered, "The one who sowed the good seed is the Son of Man. 13:38 The field is the world and the good seed are the people[11] of the kingdom. The weeds are the people[12] of the evil one, 13:39 and the enemy who sows them is the devil. The harvest is the end of the age, and the reapers are angels. 13:40 As[13] the weeds are collected and burned with fire, so it will be at the end of the age. 13:41 The Son of Man will send his angels, and they will gather from his kingdom everything that causes sin as well as all lawbreakers.[14] 13:42 They will throw them into the fiery furnace,[15] where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 13:43 Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father.[16] The one who has ears had better listen![17]

Parables on the Kingdom of Heaven

13:44 "The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure, hidden in a field, that a person found and hid. Then because of joy he went and sold all that he had and bought that field.

13:45 "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant searching for fine pearls. 13:46 When he found a pearl of great value, he went out and sold everything he had and bought it.

13:47 "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a net that was cast into the sea that caught all kinds of fish. 13:48 When it was full, they pulled it ashore, sat down, and put the good fish into

[1] sn The mustard seed was noted for its tiny size.

[2] sn This is rhetorical hyperbole, since technically a mustard plant is not a tree. This could refer to one of two types of mustard plant popular in Palestine and would be either ten or twenty-five ft (3 or 7.5 m) tall.

[3] tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

[4] sn The point of the parable seems to be that while the kingdom of God may appear to have insignificant and unnoticeable beginnings (i.e., in the ministry of Jesus), it will someday (i.e., at the second advent) be great and quite expansive. The kingdom, however, is not to be equated with the church, but rather the church is an expression of the kingdom. Also, there is important OT background in the image of the mustard seed that grew and became a tree: Ezek 17:22-24 pictures the reemergence of the Davidic house where people can find calm and shelter. Like the mustard seed, it would start out small but grow to significant size.

[5] tn Grk "hid in."

[6] sn This measure was a saton, the Greek name for the Hebrew term "seah." Three of these was a very large quantity of flour, since a saton is a little over 16 pounds (7 kg) of dry measure (or 13.13 liters). So this was over 47 lbs (21 kg) of flour total, enough to feed over a hundred people.

[7] tn Grk "it was all leavened."

sn The parable of the yeast and the dough teaches that the kingdom of God will start small but eventually grow to permeate everything. Jesus' point was not to be deceived by its seemingly small start, the same point made in the parable of the mustard seed, which preceded this one.

[8] tc A few important mss (𝔓[45] 𝔎* Θ $f^{1.13}$ 33) identify the prophet as Isaiah, a reading that is significantly harder than the generic "prophet" because the source of this prophecy is not Isaiah but Asaph in Ps 78. Jerome mentioned some mss that had "Asaph" here, though none are known to exist today. This problem is difficult because of the temptation for scribes to delete the reference to Isaiah in order to clear up a discrepancy. Indeed, the vast majority of witnesses have only "the prophet" here (𝔎[1] B C D L W 0233 0242 𝔐 lat sy co). However, as B. M. Metzger points out, "if no prophet were originally named, more than one scribe might have been prompted to insert the name of the best known prophet – something which has, in fact, happened elsewhere more than once" (TCGNT 27). In light of the paucity of evidence for the reading Ἠσαΐου, as well as the proclivity of scribes to add his name, it is probably best to consider the shorter reading as authentic.

tn Grk "was spoken by the prophet, saying." The participle λέγοντος (legontos) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[9] sn A quotation from Ps 78:2.

[10] tn Grk "And answering, he said." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[11] tn Grk "the sons of the kingdom." This idiom refers to people who should properly be, or were traditionally regarded as, a part of God's kingdom. L&N 11.13 translates the phrase: "people of God's kingdom, God's people."

[12] tn Grk "the sons of the evil one." See the preceding note on the phrase "people of the kingdom" earlier in this verse, which is the opposite of this phrase. See also L&N 9.4; 11.13; 11.14.

[13] tn Grk "Therefore as." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

[14] tn Grk "the ones who practice lawlessness."

[15] sn A quotation from Dan 3:6.

[16] sn An allusion to Dan 12:3.

[17] tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15, 13:9; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 8:8, 14:35).

containers and threw the bad away. 13:49 It will be this way at the end of the age. Angels will come and separate the evil from the righteous 13:50 and throw them into the fiery furnace,[1] where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

13:51 "Have you understood all these things?" They replied, "Yes." 13:52 Then he said to them, "Therefore every expert in the law[2] who has been trained for the kingdom of heaven is like the owner of a house who brings out of his treasure what is new and old."

Rejection at Nazareth

13:53 Now when[3] Jesus finished these parables, he moved on from there. 13:54 Then[4] he came to his hometown[5] and began to teach the people[6] in their synagogue.[7] They[8] were astonished and said, "Where did this man get such wisdom and miraculous powers? 13:55 Isn't this the carpenter's son? Isn't his mother named Mary?[9] And aren't his brothers James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas? 13:56 And aren't all his sisters here with us? Where did he get all this?"[10] 13:57 And so they took offense at him. But Jesus said to them, "A prophet is not without honor except in his hometown and in his own house." 13:58 And he did not do many miracles there because of their unbelief.

The Death of John the Baptist

14:1 At that time Herod the tetrarch[11] heard reports about Jesus, 14:2 and he said to his servants, "This is John the Baptist. He has been raised from the dead! And because of this, miraculous powers are at work in him." 14:3 For Herod had arrested John, bound him,[12] and put him in prison on account of Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, 14:4 because John had repeatedly told[13] him, "It is not lawful for you to have her."[14] 14:5 Although[15] Herod[16] wanted to kill John,[17] he feared the crowd because they accepted John as a prophet. 14:6 But on Herod's birthday, the daughter of Herodias danced before them and pleased Herod, 14:7 so much that he promised with an oath[18] to give her whatever she asked. 14:8 Instructed by her mother, she said, "Give me the head of John the Baptist here on a platter." 14:9 Although it grieved the king,[19] because of his oath and the dinner guests he commanded it to be given. 14:10 So[20] he sent and had John beheaded in the prison. 14:11 His[21] head was brought on a platter and given to the girl, and she brought it to her mother. 14:12 Then John's[22] disciples came and took the body and buried it and went and told Jesus.

[1] sn An allusion to Dan 3:6.

[2] tn Or "every scribe." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4. It is possible that the term translated "expert in the law" (traditionally, "scribe") here is a self-description used by the author, Matthew, to represent his role in conveying the traditions about Jesus to his intended audience. See David E. Orton, The Understanding Scribe [JSNTSup].

[3] tn Grk "Now it happened that when." The introductory phrase καὶ ἐγένετο (kai egeneto, "it happened that") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[4] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

[5] sn Jesus' hometown (where he spent his childhood years) was Nazareth, about 20 miles (30 km) southwest of Capernaum.

[6] tn Grk "them"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] sn See the note on synagogues in 4:23. Jesus undoubtedly took the opportunity on this occasion to speak about his person and mission, and the relation of both to OT fulfillment.

[8] tn Grk "synagogue, so that they." Here ὥστε (hōste) has not been translated. Instead a new sentence was started in the translation.

[9] sn The reference to Jesus as the carpenter's son is probably derogatory, indicating that they knew Jesus only as a common laborer like themselves. The reference to his mother...Mary (even though Jesus' father was probably dead by this point) appears to be somewhat derogatory, for a man was not regarded as his mother's son in Jewish usage unless an insult was intended (cf. Judg 11:1-2; John 4:41; 8:41; 9:29).

[11] sn A tetrarch, a ruler with rank and authority lower than a king, ruled only with the approval of the Roman authorities. This was roughly equivalent to being governor of a region. Several times in the NT, Herod, tetrarch of Galilee, is called a king (Matt 14:9, Mark 6:14-29), reflecting popular usage rather than an official title.

[12] tc ‡ Most witnesses (𝔓^{2} C D L W Z Θ 0106 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) read αὐτόν (auton, "him") here as a way of clarifying the direct object; various important witnesses lack the word, however (𝔓$^{}$* B 700 pc ff^{1} h q). The original wording most likely lacked it, but it has been included here due to English style. NA^{27} includes the word in brackets, indicating reservations about its authenticity.

[13] tn The imperfect tense verb is here rendered with an iterative force.

[14] sn This marriage of Herod to his brother Philip's wife was a violation of OT law (Lev 18:16; 20:21). In addition, both Herod Antipas and Herodias had each left marriages to enter into this union.

[15] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[16] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] tn Grk "him" (also in the following phrase, Grk "accepted him"); in both cases the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] tn Grk "and being grieved, the king commanded."

sn Herod was technically not a king, but this reflects popular usage. See the note on tetrarch in 14:1.

[20] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[21] tn Grk "And his"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Grk "his"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

The Feeding of the Five Thousand

14:13 Now when Jesus heard this he went away from there privately in a boat to an isolated place. But when the crowd heard about it,[1] they followed him on foot from the towns.[2] 14:14 As he got out he saw the large crowd, and he had compassion on them and healed their sick. 14:15 When evening arrived, his disciples came to him saying, "This is an isolated place[3] and the hour is already late. Send the crowds away so that they can go into the villages and buy food for themselves." 14:16 But he[4] replied, "They don't need to go. You[5] give them something to eat." 14:17 They[6] said to him, "We have here only five loaves and two fish." 14:18 "Bring them here to me," he replied. 14:19 Then[7] he instructed the crowds to sit down on the grass. He took the five loaves and two fish, and looking up to heaven he gave thanks and broke the loaves. He gave them to the disciples,[8] who in turn gave them to the crowds.[9] 14:20 They all ate and were satisfied, and they picked up the broken pieces left over, twelve baskets full. 14:21 Not counting women and children, there were about five thousand men who ate.

Walking on Water

14:22 Immediately Jesus[10] made the disciples get into the boat and go ahead of him to the other side, while he dispersed the crowds. 14:23 And after he sent the crowds away, he went up the mountain by himself to pray. When evening came, he was there alone. 14:24 Meanwhile the boat, already far from land,[11] was taking a beating from the waves because the wind was against it. 14:25 As the night was ending,[12] Jesus came to them walking on the sea.[13] 14:26 When[14] the disciples saw him walking on the water[15] they were terrified and said, "It's a ghost!" and cried out with fear. 14:27 But immediately Jesus[16] spoke to them:[17] "Have courage! It is I. Do not be afraid." 14:28 Peter[18] said to him,[19] "Lord, if it is you, order me to come to you on the water." 14:29 So he said, "Come." Peter got out of the boat, walked on the water, and came toward Jesus. 14:30 But when he saw the strong wind he became afraid. And starting to sink, he cried out,[20] "Lord, save me!" 14:31 Immediately Jesus reached out his hand and caught him, saying to him, "You of little faith, why did you doubt?" 14:32 When they went up into the boat, the wind ceased. 14:33 Then those who were in the boat worshiped him, saying, "Truly you are the Son of God."

14:34 After they had crossed over, they came to land at Gennesaret.[21] 14:35 When the people[22] there recognized him, they sent word into all the surrounding area, and they brought all their sick to him. 14:36 They begged him if[23] they could only touch the edge of his cloak, and all who touched it were healed.

1 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

2 tn Or "cities."

3 tn Or "a desert" (meaning a deserted or desolate area with sparse vegetation).

4 tc ‡ The majority of witnesses read Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus") here, perhaps to clarify the subject. Although only a few Greek mss, along with several versional witnesses (ℵ* D Z^{vid} 579 1424 pc e k sy^{s,c,p} sa bo), lack the name of Jesus, the omission does not seem to be either accidental or malicious and is therefore judged to be most likely the original reading. Nevertheless, a decision is difficult. NA^{27} has the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

5 tn Here the pronoun ὑμεῖς (humeis) is used, making "you" in the translation emphatic.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

8 tn Grk "And after instructing the crowds to recline for a meal on the grass, after taking the five loaves and the two fish, after looking up to heaven, he gave thanks, and after breaking the loaves he gave them to the disciples." Although most of the participles are undoubtedly attendant circumstance, there are but two indicative verbs – "he gave thanks" and "he gave." The structure of the sentence thus seems to focus on these two actions and has been translated accordingly.

9 tn Grk "to the disciples, and the disciples to the crowds."

10 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "The boat was already many stades from the land." A stade (στάδιον, stadion) was a unit of distance about 607 feet (187 meters) long.

12 tn Grk "In the fourth watch of the night," that is, between 3 a.m. and 6 a.m.

13 tn Or "on the lake."

14 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

15 tn Grk "on the sea"; or "on the lake." The translation "water" has been used here for stylistic reasons (cf. the same phrase in v. 25).

16 tc Most witnesses have ὁ Ἰησοῦς (ho Iēsous, "Jesus"), while a few lack the words (ℵ* D 073 892 pc ff^{1} sy^{c} sa bo). Although such additions are often suspect (due to liturgical influences, piety, or for the sake of clarity), in this case it is likely that ὁ Ἰησοῦς dropped out accidentally. Apart from a few albeit important witnesses, as noted above, the rest of the tradition has either ὁ Ἰησοῦς αὐτοῖς (ho Iēsous autois) or αὐτοῖς ὁ Ἰησοῦς (autois ho Iēsous). In uncial letters, with Jesus' name as a nomen sacrum, this would have been written as ΔΥΤΟΙCΟΙC̄ or ΟΙC̄ΔΥΤΟΙC. Thus homoioteleuton could explain the reason for the omission of Jesus' name.

17 tn Grk "he said to them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

19 tn Grk "answering him, Peter said." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

20 tn Grk "he cried out, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

21 sn Gennesaret was a fertile plain south of Capernaum (see also Mark 6:53). The Sea of Galilee was also sometimes known as the Sea of Gennesaret (Luke 5:1).

22 tn Grk "men"; the word here (ἀνήρ, anēr) usually indicates males or husbands, but occasionally is used in a generic sense of people in general, as here (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 1.a, 2).

23 tn Grk "asked that they might touch."

Breaking Human Traditions

15:1 Then Pharisees[1] and experts in the law[2] came from Jerusalem[3] to Jesus and said,[4] 15:2 "Why do your disciples disobey the tradition of the elders? For they don't wash their[5] hands when they eat."[6] 15:3 He answered them,[7] "And why do you disobey the commandment of God because of your tradition? 15:4 For God said,[8] 'Honor your father and mother'[9] and 'Whoever insults his father or mother must be put to death.'[10] 15:5 But you say, 'If someone tells his father or mother, "Whatever help you would have received from me is given to God,"[11] 15:6 he does not need to honor his father.'[12] You have nullified the word of God on account of your tradition. 15:7 Hypocrites! Isaiah prophesied correctly about you when he said,

> 15:8 'This people honors me with their lips, > but their heart[13] is far from me, > 15:9 and they worship me in vain, > teaching as doctrines the commandments of men.'"[14]

True Defilement

15:10 Then he called the crowd to him and said,[15] "Listen and understand. 15:11 What defiles a person is not what goes into the mouth; it is what[16] comes out of the mouth that defiles a person." 15:12 Then the disciples came to him and said, "Do you know that when the Pharisees[17] heard this saying they were offended?" 15:13 And he replied,[18] "Every plant that my heavenly Father did not plant will be uprooted. 15:14 Leave them! They are blind guides.[19] If someone who is blind leads another who is blind,[20] both will fall into a pit." 15:15 But Peter[21] said to him, "Explain this parable to us." 15:16 Jesus[22] said, "Even after all this, are you

4 tn The participle λέγοντες (legontes) has been translated as a finite verb so that its telic (i.e., final or conclusive) force can be more easily detected: The Pharisees and legal experts came to Jesus in order to speak with him.

5 tc ‡ Although most witnesses read the genitive plural pronoun αὐτῶν (autōn, "their"), it may have been motivated by clarification (as it is in the translation above). Several other authorities do not have the pronoun, however (𝔓 B Δ 073 f^{1} 579 700 892 1424 pc f g^{1}); the lack of an unintentional oversight as the reason for omission strengthens their combined testimony in this shorter reading. NA^{27} has the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

6 tn Grk "when they eat bread."

7 tn Grk "But answering, he said to them."

8 tc Most mss (𝔓*,2 C L W 0106 33 𝔐) have an expanded introduction here; instead of "For God said," they read "For God commanded, saying" (ὁ γὰρ θεὸς ἐνετείλατο λέγων, ho gar theos eneteilato legōn). But such expansions are generally motivated readings; in this case, most likely it was due to the wording of the previous verse ("the commandment of God") that caused early scribes to add to the text. Although it is possible that other witnesses reduced the text to the simple εἶπεν (eipen, "[God] said") because of perceived redundancy with the statement in v. 3, such is unlikely in light of the great variety and age of these authorities (𝔓^{1} B D Θ 073 $f^{1,13}$ 579 700 892 pc lat co, as well as other versions and fathers).

10 sn A quotation from Exod 21:17; Lev 20:9.

11 tn Grk "is a gift," that is, something dedicated to God.

12 tc The logic of v. 5 would seem to demand that both father and mother are in view in v. 6. Indeed, the majority of mss (C L W Θ 0106 f^{1} 𝔐) have "or his mother" (ἢ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ, ē tēn mētera autou) after "honor his father" here. However, there are significant witnesses that have variations on this theme (καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ [kai tēn mētera autou, "and his mother"] in Φ 565 1241 pc and ἢ τὴν μητέρα ["or mother"] in 073 f^{13} 33 579 700 892 pc), which is usually an indication of a predictable addition to the text rather than an authentic reading. Further, the shorter reading (without any mention of "mother") is found in early and important witnesses (𝔓 B D sa). Although it is possible that the shorter reading came about accidentally (due to the repetition of -ερα αὐτοῦ), the evidence more strongly suggests that the longer readings were intentional scribal alterations.

tn Grk "he will never honor his father." Here Jesus is quoting the Pharisees, whose intent is to release the person who is giving his possessions to God from the family obligation of caring for his parents. The verb in this phrase is future tense, and it is negated with οὐ μή (ou mē), the strongest negation possible in Greek. A literal translation of the phrase does not capture the intended sense of the statement; it would actually make the Pharisees sound as if they agreed with Jesus. Instead, a more interpretive translation has been used to focus upon the release from family obligations that the Pharisees allowed in these circumstances.

sn Here Jesus refers to something that has been set aside as a gift to be given to God at some later date, but which is still in the possession of the owner. According to contemporary Jewish tradition, the person who made this claim was absolved from responsibility to support or assist his parents, a clear violation of the Mosaic law to honor one's parents (v. 4).

13 tn The term "heart" is a collective singular in the Greek text.

14 sn A quotation from Isa 29:13.

15 tn Grk "And calling the crowd, he said to them." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as attendant circumstance. The emphasis here is upon Jesus' speaking to the crowd.

16 tn Grk "but what."

17 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

18 tn Grk "And answering, he said."

19 tc ‡ Most mss, some of which are significant, read "They are blind guides of the blind" (𝔓^{1} C L W Z Θ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat). The shorter reading is read by 𝔓*,2 B D 0237 Epiph. There is a distinct possibility of omission due to homoioarcton in 𝔓*; this manuscript has a word order variation which puts the word τυφλοί (tuphloi, "blind") right before the word τυφλῶν (tuphlōn, "of the blind"). This does not explain the shorter reading, however, in the other witnesses, of which B and D are quite weighty. Internal considerations suggest that the shorter reading is original: "of the blind" was likely added by scribes to balance this phrase with Jesus' following statement about the blind leading the blind, which clearly has two groups in view. A decision is difficult, but internal considerations here along with the strength of the witnesses argue that the shorter reading is more likely original. NA^{27} places τυφλῶν in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

20 tn Grk "If blind leads blind."

21 tn Grk "And answering, Peter said to him." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

A Canaanite Woman's Faith

15:21 After going out from there, Jesus went to the region of Tyre[3] and Sidon.[4] 15:22 A[5] Canaanite woman from that area came[6] and cried out,[7] "Have mercy on me, Lord, Son of David! My daughter is horribly demon-possessed!" 15:23 But he did not answer her a word. Then[8] his disciples came and begged him,[9] "Send her away, because she keeps on crying out after us." 15:24 So[10] he answered, "I was sent only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." 15:25 But she came and bowed down[11] before him and said,[12] "Lord, help me!" 15:26 "It is not right[13] to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs,"[14] he said.[15] 15:27 "Yes, Lord," she replied,[16] "but even the dogs eat the crumbs that fall from their masters' table." 15:28 Then[17] Jesus answered her, "Woman,[18] your faith is great! Let what you want be done for you." And her daughter was healed from that hour.

Healing Many Others

15:29 When he left there, Jesus went along the Sea of Galilee. Then he went up a mountain, where he sat down. 15:30 Then[19] large crowds came to him bringing with them the lame, blind, crippled, mute, and many others. They[20] laid them at his feet, and he healed them. 15:31 As a result, the crowd was amazed when they saw the mute speaking, the crippled healthy, the lame walking, and the blind seeing, and they praised the God of Israel.

The Feeding of the Four Thousand

15:32 Then Jesus called the[21] disciples and said, "I have compassion on the crowd, because they have already been here with me three days and they have nothing to eat. I don't want to send them away hungry since they may faint on the way." 15:33 The disciples said to him, "Where can we get enough bread in this desolate place to satisfy so great a crowd?" 15:34 Jesus said to them, "How many loaves do you have?" They replied, "Seven – and a few small fish." 15:35 After instructing the crowd to sit down on the ground, 15:36 he took the seven loaves and the fish, and after giving thanks, he broke them and began giving them to the disciples, who then gave them to the crowds.[22] 15:37 They[23] all ate and were satisfied, and they picked up the broken pieces left over, seven baskets full. 15:38 Not counting children and women,[24] there

5 tn Grk "And behold a Canaanite." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

6 tn Grk The participle ἐξελθοῦσα (exelthousa) is here translated as a finite verb. The emphasis is upon her crying out to Jesus.

7 tn Grk "cried out, saying." The participle λέγουσα (legousa) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

9 tn Grk "asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

10 tn Grk "And answering, he said." The construction in Greek is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the disciples' request.

11 tn In this context the verb προσκυνέω (proskunew), which often describes worship, probably means simply bowing down to the ground in an act of reverence or supplication (see L&N 17.21).

12 tn Grk "she bowed down to him, saying."

13 tn Grk "And answering, he said, 'It is not right.'" The introductory phrase "answering, he said" has been simplified and placed at the end of the English sentence for stylistic reasons. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 tn Or "lap dogs, house dogs," as opposed to dogs on the street. The diminutive form originally referred to puppies or little dogs, then to house pets. In some Hellenistic uses κυνάριον (kunarion) simply means "dog."

sn The term dogs does not refer to wild dogs (scavenging animals roaming around the countryside) in this context, but to small dogs taken in as house pets. It is thus not a derogatory term per se, but is instead intended by Jesus to indicate the privileged position of the Jews (especially his disciples) as the initial recipients of Jesus' ministry. The woman's response of faith and her willingness to accept whatever Jesus would offer pleased him to such an extent that he granted her request.

15 tn Grk "And answering, he said." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

16 tn Grk "she said."

17 tn Grk "Then answering, Jesus said to her." This expression has been simplified in the translation.

18 sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή 1), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

20 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

21 tc ‡ Although the external evidence is not great (ℵ W Θ 700 pc), the internal evidence for the omission of αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after "disciples" is fairly strong. The pronoun may have been added by way of clarification. NA^{27}, however, includes the pronoun, on the basis of the much stronger external evidence.

22 tn Grk "was giving them to the disciples, and the disciples to the crowd."

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

24 tc ‡ Although most witnesses (B C L W f^{13} 33 𝔐 f sy^{s,p,h} mae) read "women and children" instead of "children and women," it is likely that the majority's reading is a harmonization to Matt 14:21. "Children and women" is found in early and geographically widespread witnesses (e.g., ℵ D [Θ f^{1}] 579 lat sy^{c} sa bo), and has more compelling internal arguments on its side, suggesting that this is the original reading. NA^{27}, however, agrees with the majority of witnesses.

were four thousand men who ate.[1] 15:39 After sending away the crowd, he got into the boat and went to the region of Magadan.[2]

The Demand for a Sign

16:1 Now when the Pharisees[3] and Sadducees[4] came to test Jesus,[5] they asked him to show them a sign from heaven.[6] 16:2 He[7] said, "When evening comes you say, 'It will be fair weather, because the sky is red,' 16:3 and in the morning, 'It will be stormy today, because the sky is red and darkening.'[8] You know how to judge correctly the appearance of the sky,[9] but you cannot evaluate the signs of the times. 16:4 A wicked and adulterous generation asks for a sign, but no sign will be given to it except the sign of Jonah." Then[10] he left them and went away.

The Yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees

16:5 When the disciples went to the other side, they forgot to take bread. 16:6 "Watch out," Jesus said to them, "beware of the yeast of the Pharisees[11] and Sadducees."[12] 16:7 So[13] they began to discuss this among themselves, saying, "It is because we brought no bread." 16:8 When Jesus learned of this,[14] he said, "You who have such little faith![15] Why are you arguing[16] among yourselves about having no bread? 16:9 Do you still not understand? Don't you remember the five loaves for the five thousand, and how many baskets you took up? 16:10 Or the seven loaves for the four thousand and how many baskets you took up? 16:11 How could you not understand that I was not speaking to you about bread? But beware of the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees!" 16:12 Then they understood that he had not told them to be on guard against the yeast in bread, but against the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees.

Peter's Confession

16:13 When[17] Jesus came to the area of Caesarea Philippi,[18] he asked his disciples,[19] "Who do people say that the Son of Man is?" 16:14 They answered, "Some say John the Baptist, others Elijah,[20] and others Jeremiah or one of the prophets." 16:15 He said to them, "But who do you say that I am?" 16:16 Simon Peter answered,[21] "You are the Christ,[22] the Son of the living God." 16:17 And Jesus answered him,[23] "You are blessed, Simon son of Jonah, because flesh and blood[24] did not reveal this to you, but my Father in heaven! 16:18 And I tell you that you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades[25] will not overpower it. 16:19 I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you release on earth will have been released in heaven." 16:20 Then he instructed his disciples not to tell anyone that he was the Christ.[26]

[23] tn Grk "answering, Jesus said to him." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant, but the syntax of this phrase has been modified for clarity.

[24] tn The expression "flesh and blood" could refer to "any human being" (so TEV, NLT; cf. NIV "man"), but it could also refer to Peter himself (i.e., his own intuition; cf. CEV "You didn't discover this on your own"). Because of the ambiguity of the referent, the phrase "flesh and blood" has been retained in the translation.

[25] tn Or "and the power of death" (taking the reference to the gates of Hades as a metonymy).

sn In the OT, Hades was known as Sheol. It is the place where the unrighteous will reside (Matt 11:23; Luke 16:23; Rev 20:13-14). Some translations render this by its modern equivalent, "hell"; others see it as a reference to the power of death.

[26] tc Most MSS (𝔑² C W 𝔐 lat bo) have "Jesus, the Christ" (Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός, Iēsous ho Christos) here, while D has "Christ Jesus" (ὁ Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς). On the one hand, this is a much harder reading than the mere Χριστός, because the name Jesus was already well known for the disciples' master – both to them and to others. Whether he was the Messiah is the real focus of the passage. But this is surely too hard a reading: There are no other texts in which the Lord tells his disciples not to disclose his personal name. Further, it is plainly a motivated reading in that scribes had the proclivity to add Ἰησοῦς to Χριστός or to κύριος (kurios, "Lord"), regardless of whether such was appropriate to the context. In this instance it clearly is not, and it only reveals that scribes sometimes, if not often, did not think about the larger interpretive consequences of their alterations to the text. Further, the shorter reading is well supported by 𝔑* B L Δ Θ $f^{1,13}$ 565 700 1424 al it sa.

tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

First Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

16:21 From that time on[1] Jesus began to show his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem[2] and suffer[3] many things at the hands of the elders, chief priests, and experts in the law,[4] and be killed, and on the third day be raised. 16:22 So Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him:[5] "God forbid,[6] Lord! This must not happen to you!" 16:23 But he turned and said to Peter, "Get behind me, Satan! You are a stumbling block to me, because you are not setting your mind on God's interests, but on man's."[7] 16:24 Then Jesus said to his disciples, "If anyone wants to become my follower,[8] he must deny[9] himself, take up his cross,[10] and follow me. 16:25 For whoever wants to save his life[11] will lose it,[12] but whoever loses his life for my sake will find it. 16:26 For what does it benefit a person[13] if he gains the whole world but forfeits his life? Or what can a person give in exchange for his life? 16:27 For the Son of Man will come with his angels in the glory of his Father, and then he will reward each person according to what he has done.[14] 16:28 I tell you the truth,[15] there are some standing here who will not[16] experience[17] death before they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom."[18]

The Transfiguration

17:1 Six days later[19] Jesus took with him Peter, James, and John the brother of James,[20] and led them privately up a high mountain. 17:2 And he was transfigured before them.[21] His[22] face shone like the sun, and his clothes became white as light. 17:3 Then Moses[23] and Elijah[24] also appeared before them, talking with him. 17:4 So[25] Peter said[26] to Jesus, "Lord, it is good for us to be here. If you want, I will make[27] three

3 sn The necessity that the Son of Man suffer is the particular point that needed emphasis since for many 1st century Jews the Messiah was a glorious and powerful figure, not a suffering one.

4 tn Or "and scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

5 tn Grk "began to rebuke him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "Merciful to you." A highly elliptical expression: "May God be merciful to you in sparing you from having to undergo [some experience]" (L&N 88.78). A contemporary English equivalent is "God forbid!"

7 tn Grk "people."

8 tn Grk "to come after me."

9 tn This translation better expresses the force of the Greek third person imperative than the traditional "let him deny," which could be understood as merely permissive.

10 sn To bear the cross means to accept the rejection of the world for turning to Jesus and following him. Discipleship involves a death that is like a crucifixion; see Gal 6:14.

11 tn Or "soul" (throughout vv. 25-26).

12 sn The point of the saying whoever wants to save his life will lose it is that if one comes to Jesus then rejection by many will certainly follow. If self-protection is a key motivation, then one will not respond to Jesus and will not be saved. One who is willing to risk rejection will respond and find true life.

13 tn Grk "a man," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here to refer to both men and women.

14 sn An allusion to Pss 28:4; 62:12; cf. Prov 24:12.

15 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

16 tn The Greek negative here (οὐ μή, ou mē) is the strongest possible.

17 tn Grk "will not taste." Here the Greek verb does not mean "sample a small amount" (as a typical English reader might infer from the word "taste"), but "experience something cognitively or emotionally; come to know something" (cf. BDAG 195 s.v. γεύομαι 2).

18 sn Several suggestions have been made as to the referent for the phrase the Son of Man coming in his kingdom: (1) the transfiguration itself, which immediately follows in the narrative; (2) Jesus' resurrection and ascension; (3) the coming of the Spirit; (4) Christ's role in the Church; (5) the destruction of Jerusalem; (6) Jesus' second coming and the establishment of the kingdom. The reference to six days later in 17:1 seems to indicate that Matthew had the transfiguration in mind insofar as it was a substantial prefiguring of the consummation of the kingdom (although this interpretation is not without its problems). As such, the transfiguration would be a tremendous confirmation to the disciples that even though Jesus had just finished speaking of his death (in vv. 21-23), he was nonetheless the promised Messiah and things were proceeding according to God's plan.

19 tn Grk "And after six days."

21 sn In 1st century Judaism and in the NT, there was the belief that the righteous get new, glorified bodies in order to enter heaven (1 Cor 15:42-49; 2 Cor 5:1-10). This transformation means the righteous will share the glory of God. One recalls the way Moses shared the Lord's glory after his visit to the mountain in Exod 34. So the disciples saw Jesus transfigured, and they were getting a sneak preview of the great glory that Jesus would have (only his glory is more inherent to him as one who shares in the rule of the kingdom).

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

23 tn Grk "And behold, Moses." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

24 sn Commentators and scholars discuss why Moses and Elijah are present. The most likely explanation is that Moses represents the prophetic office (Acts 3:18-22) and Elijah pictures the presence of the last days (Mal 4:5-6), the prophet of the eschaton (the end times).

25 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that the appearance of Moses and Elijah prompted Peter's comment.

26 tn Grk "Peter answering said." This construction is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

27 tc Instead of the singular future indicative ποιήσω (poiēsō, "I will make"), most witnesses (C³ D L W Θ [Φ] 0281 $f^{1[1],13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy co) have the plural aorist subjunctive ποιήσωμεν (poiēsōmen, "let us make"). But since ποιήσωμεν is the reading found in the parallel accounts in Mark and Luke, it is almost surely a motivated reading. Further, the earliest and best witnesses, as well as a few others (ℵ B C* 700 pc) have ποιήσω. It is thus more likely that the singular verb is authentic.

shelters[1] – one for you, one for Moses, and one for Elijah." 17:5 While he was still speaking, a[2] bright cloud[3] overshadowed[4] them, and a voice from the cloud said,[5] "This is my one dear Son,[6] in whom I take great delight. Listen to him!"[7] 17:6 When the disciples heard this, they were overwhelmed with fear and threw themselves down with their faces to the ground.[8] 17:7 But Jesus came and touched them. "Get up," he said. "Do not be afraid." 17:8 When[9] they looked up, all they saw was Jesus alone.

17:9 As they were coming down from the mountain, Jesus commanded them,[10] "Do not tell anyone about the vision until the Son of Man is raised from the dead." 17:10 The disciples asked him,[11] "Why then do the experts in the law[12] say that Elijah must come first?" 17:11 He[13] answered, "Elijah does indeed come first and will restore all things. 17:12 And I tell you that Elijah has already come. Yet they did not recognize him, but did to him whatever they wanted. In[14] the same way, the Son of Man will suffer at their hands." 17:13 Then the disciples understood that he was speaking to them about John the Baptist.

The Disciples' Failure to Heal

17:14 When[15] they came to the crowd, a man came to him, knelt before him, 17:15 and said, "Lord, have mercy on my son, because he has seizures[16] and suffers terribly, for he often falls into the fire and into the water. 17:16 I brought him to your disciples, but[17] they were not able to heal him." 17:17 Jesus answered,[18] "You[19] unbelieving[20] and perverse generation! How much longer[21] must I be with you? How much longer must I endure[22] you?[23] Bring him here to me." 17:18 Then[24] Jesus rebuked[25] the demon and it came out of him, and the boy was healed from that moment. 17:19 Then the disciples came[26] to Jesus privately and said, "Why couldn't we cast it out?" 17:20 He told them, "It was because of your little faith. I tell you the truth,[27] if you have faith the size of[28] a mustard seed, you will say to this mountain, 'Move from here to there,' and it will move; nothing[29] will be impossible for you."[30]

[1] tn Or "booths," "dwellings" (referring to the temporary booths constructed in the celebration of the feast of Tabernacles).

sn Peter apparently wanted to celebrate the feast of Tabernacles or Booths that looked forward to the end and wanted to treat Moses, Elijah, and Jesus as equals by making three shelters (one for each). It was actually a way of expressing honor to Jesus, but the next verse makes it clear that it was not enough honor.

[2] tn Grk "behold, a." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated here or in the following clause because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[3] sn This cloud is the cloud of God's presence and the voice is his as well.

[4] tn Or "surrounded."

[5] tn Grk "behold, a voice from the cloud, saying." This is an incomplete sentence in Greek which portrays intensity and emotion. The participle λέγουσα (legousa) was translated as a finite verb in keeping with English style.

[6] tn Grk "my beloved Son," or "my Son, the beloved [one]." The force of ἀγαπητός (agapētos) is often "pertaining to one who is the only one of his or her class, but at the same time is particularly loved and cherished" (L&N 58.53; cf. also BDAG 7 s.v. 1).

[7] sn The expression listen to him comes from Deut 18:15 and makes two points: 1) Jesus is a prophet like Moses, a leader-prophet, and 2) they have much yet to learn from him.

[8] tn Grk "they fell down on their faces." BDAG 815 s.v. πίπτω 1.b.α.ב. has "fall down, throw oneself to the ground as a sign of devotion, before high-ranking persons or divine beings."

[9] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[10] tn Grk "Jesus commanded them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

[11] tn Grk "asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated.

[12] tn Or "do the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[13] tn Grk "And answering, he said." This has been simplified in the translation.

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[15] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[16] tn Grk "he is moonstruck," possibly meaning "lunatic" (so NAB, NASB), although now the term is generally regarded as referring to some sort of seizure disorder such as epilepsy (L&N 23.169; BDAG 919 s.v. σεληνιάζομαι).

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[18] tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

[19] tn Grk "O." The marker of direct address, ὦ (ō), is functionally equivalent to a vocative and is represented in the translation by "you."

[20] tn Or "faithless."

sn The rebuke for lack of faith has OT roots: Num 14:27; Deut 32:5, 30; Isa 59:8.

[21] tn Grk "how long."

[22] tn Or "put up with." See Num 11:12; Isa 46:4.

[23] sn The pronouns you…you are plural, indicating that Jesus is speaking to a group rather than an individual.

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then."

[25] tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

[26] tn Grk "coming, the disciples said." The participle προσελθόντες (proselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb to make the sequence of events clear in English.

[27] tn Grk "For truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you." Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

[29] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[30] tc Many important MSS (א* B Θ 0281 33 579 892* pc e ff[1] sy[s,c] sa) do not include 17:21 "But this kind does not go out except by prayer and fasting." The verse is included in א[2] C D L W $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat, but is almost certainly not original. As B. M. Metzger notes, "Since there is no satisfactory reason why the passage, if originally present in Matthew, should have been omitted in a wide variety of witnesses, and since copyists frequently inserted material derived from another Gospel, it appears that most manuscripts have been assimilated to the parallel in Mk 9.29" (TCGNT 35). The present translation follows NA[27] in omitting the verse number as well, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

Second Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

17:22 When[1] they gathered together in Galilee, Jesus told them, "The Son of Man is going to be betrayed into the hands of men.[2] 17:23 They will kill him, and on the third day he will be raised." And they became greatly distressed.

The Temple Tax

17:24 After[3] they arrived in Capernaum,[4] the collectors of the temple tax[5] came to Peter and said, "Your teacher pays the double drachma tax, doesn't he?" 17:25 He said, "Yes." When Peter came into the house, Jesus spoke to him first,[6] "What do you think, Simon? From whom do earthly kings collect tolls or taxes – from their sons[7] or from foreigners?" 17:26 After he said, "From foreigners," Jesus said to him, "Then the sons[8] are free. 17:27 But so that we don't offend them, go to the lake and throw out a hook. Take the first fish that comes up, and when you open its mouth, you will find a four drachma coin.[9] Take that and give it to them for me and you."

Questions About the Greatest

18:1 At that time the disciples came to Jesus saying, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" 18:2 He called a child, had him stand among them, 18:3 and said, "I tell you the truth,[10] unless you turn around and become like little children,[11] you will never[12] enter the kingdom of heaven! 18:4 Whoever then humbles himself like this little child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. 18:5 And whoever welcomes[13] a child like this in my name welcomes me.

18:6 "But if anyone causes one of these little ones who believe in me to sin,[14] it would be better for him to have a huge millstone[15] hung around his neck and to be drowned in the open sea.[16] 18:7 Woe to the world because of stumbling blocks! It[17] is necessary that stumbling blocks come, but woe to the person through whom they come. 18:8 If[18] your hand or your foot causes you to sin,[19] cut it off and throw it away. It is better for you to enter life crippled or lame than to have[20] two hands or two feet and be thrown into eternal fire. 18:9 And if your eye causes you to sin, tear it out and throw it away. It is better for you to enter into life with one eye than to have[21] two eyes and be thrown into fiery hell.[22]

The Parable of the Lost Sheep

18:10 "See that you do not disdain one of these little ones. For I tell you that their angels in heaven always see the face of my Father in heaven.[23] 18:12 What do you think? If

1 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is considered by some to be used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NRSV "into human hands"; TEV, CEV "to people"). However, because this can be taken as a specific reference to the group responsible for Jesus' arrest, where it is unlikely women were present (cf. Matt 26:47-56; Mark 14:43-52; Luke 22:47-53; John 18:2-12), the word "men" has been retained in the translation. There may also be a slight wordplay with "the Son of Man" earlier in the verse.

3 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

4 map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

5 tn Grk "Collectors of the double drachma." This is a case of metonymy, where the coin formerly used to pay the tax (the double drachma coin, or δίδραχμον [didrachmon]) was put for the tax itself (cf. BDAG 241 s.v.). Even though this coin was no longer in circulation in NT times and other coins were used to pay the tax, the name for the coin was still used to refer to the tax itself.

sn The temple tax refers to the half-shekel tax paid annually by male Jews to support the temple (Exod 30:13-16).

6 tn Grk "spoke first to him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

7 sn The phrase their sons may mean "their citizens," but the term "sons" has been retained here in order to preserve the implicit comparison between the Father and his Son, Jesus.

8 sn See the note on the phrase their sons in the previous verse.

9 sn The four drachma coin was a stater (στατήρ, statēr), a silver coin worth four drachmas. One drachma was equivalent to one denarius, the standard pay for a day's labor (L&N 6.80).

10 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

11 sn The point of the comparison become like little children has more to do with a child's trusting spirit, as well as willingness to be dependent and receive from others, than any inherent humility the child might possess.

12 tn The negation in Greek (οὐ μή, ou mē) is very strong here.

13 tn This verb, δέχομαι (dechomai), is a term of hospitality (L&N 34.53).

14 tn The Greek term σκανδαλίζω (skandalizō), translated here "causes to sin" can also be translated "offends" or "causes to stumble."

15 tn Grk "the millstone of a donkey." This refers to a large flat stone turned by a donkey in the process of grinding grain (BDAG 661 s.v. μύλος 2; L&N 7.68-69). The same term is used in the parallel account in Mark 9:42.

sn The punishment of drowning with a heavy weight attached is extremely gruesome and reflects Jesus' views concerning those who cause others who believe in him to sin.

16 tn The term translated "open" here (πελάγει, pelagei) refers to the open sea as opposed to a stretch of water near a coastline (BDAG 794 s.v. πέλαγος). A similar English expression would be "the high seas."

17 tn Grk "For it." Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

19 sn In Greek there is a wordplay that is difficult to reproduce in English here. The verb translated "causes...to sin" (σκανδαλίζω, skandalizō) comes from the same root as the word translated "stumbling blocks" (σκάνδαλον, skandalon) in the previous verse.

20 tn Grk "than having."

21 tn Grk "than having."

22 tn Grk "the Gehenna of fire."

sn See the note on the word hell in 5:22.

23 tc The most important MSS (ℵ B L* Θ* $f^{1,13}$ 33 892* pc e ff^1 sy^s sa) do not include 18:11 "For the Son of Man came to save the lost." The verse is included in D L^{mg} W $Θ^c$ 078^{vid} 𝔐 lat $sy^{c,p,h}$, but is almost certainly not original, being borrowed, as it were, from the parallel in Luke 19:10. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number as well, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

someone[1] owns a hundred[2] sheep and one of them goes astray, will he not leave the ninety-nine on the mountains and go look for the one that went astray?[3] 18:13 And if he finds it, I tell you the truth,[4] he will rejoice more over it than over the ninety-nine that did not go astray. 18:14 In the same way, your Father in heaven is not willing that one of these little ones be lost.

Restoring Christian Relationships

18:15 "If[5] your brother[6] sins,[7] go and show him his fault[8] when the two of you are alone. If he listens to you, you have regained your brother. 18:16 But if he does not listen, take one or two others with you, so that at the testimony of two or three witnesses every matter may be established.[9] 18:17 If[10] he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church. If[11] he refuses to listen to the church, treat him like[12] a Gentile[13] or a tax collector.[14]

18:18 "I tell you the truth,[15] whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you release on earth will have been released in heaven. 18:19 Again, I tell you the truth,[16] if two of you on earth agree about whatever you ask, my Father in heaven will do it for you.[17] 18:20 For where two or three are assembled in my name, I am there among them."

18:21 Then Peter came to him and said, "Lord, how many times must I forgive my brother[18] who sins against me? As many as seven times?" 18:22 Jesus said to him, "Not seven times, I tell you, but seventy-seven times![19]

The Parable of the Unforgiving Slave

18:23 "For this reason, the kingdom of heaven is like a king who wanted to settle accounts with his slaves.[20] 18:24 As[21] he began settling his accounts, a man who owed ten thousand talents[22] was brought to him. 18:25 Because[23] he was not able to repay it,[24] the lord ordered him to be sold, along with[25] his wife, children, and whatever he possessed, and repayment to be made. 18:26 Then the slave threw himself to the ground[26] before him, saying,[27] 'Be patient with me, and I will repay you everything.' 18:27 The lord had compassion on that slave and released him, and forgave him the debt. 18:28 After[28] he went out, that same slave found one of his fellow slaves who owed him

1 tn Grk "a certain man." The Greek word ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a somewhat generic sense.

2 sn This individual with a hundred sheep is a shepherd of modest means, as flocks often had up to two hundred head of sheep.

3 sn Look for the one that went astray. The parable pictures God's pursuit of the sinner. On the image of Jesus as the Good Shepherd, see John 10:1-18.

4 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

5 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated. All the "if" clauses in this paragraph are third class conditions in Greek.

6 tn The Greek term "brother" can mean "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a) whether male or female. It can also refer to siblings, though here it is used in a broader sense to connote familial relationships within the family of God. Therefore, because of the familial connotations, "brother" has been retained in the translation here in preference to the more generic "fellow believer" ("fellow Christian" would be anachronistic in this context).

7 tc ‡ The earliest and best witnesses lack "against you" after "if your brother sins." It is quite possible that the shorter reading in these witnesses (ℵ B, as well as 0281 f^{1} 579 pc sa) occurred when scribes either intentionally changed the text (to make it more universal in application) or unintentionally changed the text (owing to the similar sound of the end of the verb ἁμαρτήσῃ [hamartēsē] and the prepositional phrase εἰς σέ [eis se]). However, if the MSS were normally copied by sight rather than by sound, especially in the early centuries of Christianity, such an unintentional change is not as likely for these MSS. And since scribes normally added material rather than deleted it for intentional changes, on balance, the shorter reading appears to be original. NA^{27} includes the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

8 tn Grk "go reprove him."

9 sn A quotation from Deut 19:15.

10 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn Grk "let him be to you as."

13 tn Or "a pagan."

14 sn To treat him like a Gentile or a tax collector means not to associate with such a person. See the note on tax collectors in 5:46.

15 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

16 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

17 tn Grk "if two of you...agree about whatever they ask, it will be done for them by my Father who is in heaven." The passive construction has been translated as an active one in keeping with contemporary English style, and the pronouns, which change from second person plural to third person plural in the Greek text, have been consistently translated as second person plural.

18 tn Here the term "brother" means "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a), whether male or female. Concerning the familial connotations, see also the note on the first occurrence of this term in v. 15.

19 tn Or "seventy times seven," i.e., an unlimited number of times. See L&N 60.74 and 60.77 for the two possible translations of the phrase.

20 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

21 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

22 sn A talent was a huge sum of money, equal to 6,000 denarii. One denarius was the usual day's wage for a worker. L&N 6.82 states, "a Greek monetary unit (also a unit of weight) with a value which fluctuated, depending upon the particular monetary system which prevailed at a particular period of time (a silver talent was worth approximately six thousand denarii with gold talents worth at least thirty times that much)."

23 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

24 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

25 tn Grk "and his wife."

26 tn Grk "falling therefore the slave bowed down to the ground." The redundancy of this expression signals the desperation of the slave in begging for mercy.

27 tc The majority of MSS (ℵ L W 058 0281 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 it sy^{p,h} co) begin the slave's plea with "Lord" (κύριε, kurie), though a few important witnesses lack this vocative (B D Θ 700 pc lat sy^{s,c} Or Chr). Understanding the parable to refer to the Lord, scribes would be naturally prone to add the vocative here, especially as the slave's plea is a plea for mercy. Thus, the shorter reading is more likely to be authentic.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

one hundred silver coins.[1] So[2] he grabbed him by the throat and started to choke him,[3] saying, 'Pay back what you owe me!'[4] 18:29 Then his fellow slave threw himself down and begged him,[5] 'Be patient with me, and I will repay you.' 18:30 But he refused. Instead, he went out and threw him in prison until he repaid the debt. 18:31 When[6] his fellow slaves saw what had happened, they were very upset and went and told their lord everything that had taken place. 18:32 Then his lord called the first slave[7] and said to him, 'Evil slave! I forgave you all that debt because you begged me! 18:33 Should you not have shown mercy to your fellow slave, just as I showed it to you?' 18:34 And in anger his lord turned him over to the prison guards to torture him[8] until he repaid all he owed. 18:35 So also my heavenly Father will do to you, if each of you does not forgive your[9] brother[10] from your heart."

Questions About Divorce

19:1 Now when[11] Jesus finished these sayings, he left Galilee and went to the region of Judea beyond the Jordan River.[12] 19:2 Large crowds followed him, and he healed them there.

19:3 Then some Pharisees[13] came to him in order to test him. They asked, "Is it lawful[14] to divorce a wife for any cause?"[15] 19:4 He answered, "Have you not read that from the beginning the Creator made them male and female,[16] 19:5 and said, 'For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and will be united with his wife, and the two will become one flesh'?[17] 19:6 So they are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate." 19:7 They said to him, "Why then did Moses command us to give a certificate of dismissal and to divorce her?"[18] 19:8 Jesus[19] said to them, "Moses permitted you to divorce your wives because of your hard hearts,[20] but from the beginning it was not this way. 19:9 Now I say to you that whoever divorces his wife, except for immorality, and marries another commits adultery." 19:10 The[21] disciples said to him,

1 tn Grk "one hundred denarii." The denarius was a silver coin worth about a day's wage for a laborer; this would be about three month's pay.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so." A new sentence was started at this point in the translation in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

3 tn Grk "and he grabbed him and started choking him."

4 tn The word "me" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

5 tn Grk "begged him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "Therefore when." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the first slave mentioned in v. 24) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "handed him over to the torturers," referring specifically to guards whose job was to torture prisoners who were being questioned. According to L&N 37.126, it is difficult to know for certain in this instance whether the term actually envisions torture as a part of the punishment or is simply a hyperbole. However, in light of the following verse and Jesus' other warning statements in Matthew about "fiery hell," "the outer darkness," etc., it is best not to dismiss this as mere imagery.

9 tn Grk "his." The pronoun has been translated to follow English idiom (the last pronoun of the verse ["from your heart"] is second person plural in the original).

10 tn Here the term "brother" means "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a), whether male or female. Concerning the familial connotations, see also the note on the first occurrence of this term in v. 15.

11 tn Grk "it happened when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

12 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity. The region referred to here is sometimes known as Transjordan (i.e., "across the Jordan").

13 tn Grk "And Pharisees."

sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

14 tc ‡ Most MSS have either ἀνθρώπῳ (anthrōpō, "for a man" [so ℵ² C D W Θ 087 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt]) or ἀνδρί (andri, "for a husband" [1424ᶜ pc]) before the infinitive ἀπολῦσαι (apolusai, "to divorce"). The latter reading is an assimilation to the parallel in Mark; the former reading may have been motivated by the clarification needed (especially to give the following αὐτοῦ [autou, "his"] an antecedent). But a few significant MSS (ℵ* B L Γ 579 [700] 1424* pc) have neither noun. As the harder reading, it seems to best explain the rise of the others. NA²⁷, however, reads ἀνθρώπῳ here.

15 sn The question of the Pharisees was anything but sincere; they were asking it to test him. Jesus was now in the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas (i.e., Judea and beyond the Jordan) and it is likely that the Pharisees were hoping he might answer the question of divorce in a way similar to John the Baptist and so suffer the same fate as John, i.e., death at the hands of Herod (cf. 14:1-12). Jesus answered the question not on the basis of rabbinic custom and the debate over Deut 24:1, but rather from the account of creation and God's original design.

17 sn A quotation from Gen 2:24.

18 tc ‡ Although the majority of witnesses (B C W 078 087 f^{13} 33 𝔐 sy^{p,h}) have αὐτήν (autēn, "her") after the infinitive ἀπολῦσαι (apolusai, "to divorce"), a variant lacks the αὐτήν. This shorter reading may be due to assimilation to the Markan parallel, but since it is attested in early and diverse witnesses (ℵ D L Z Θ f^{1} 579 700 pc lat) and since the parallel verse (Mark 10:4) already departs at many points, the shorter reading seems more likely to be original. The pronoun has been included in the translation, however, for clarity. NA²⁷ includes the word in brackets, indicating reservations regarding its authenticity.

sn A quotation from Deut 24:1. The Pharisees were all in agreement that the OT permitted a man to write a certificate of dismissal and to divorce his wife (not vice-versa) and that remarriage was therefore sanctioned. But the two rabbinic schools of Shammai and Hillel differed on the grounds for divorce. Shammai was much stricter than Hillel and permitted divorce only in the case of sexual immorality. Hillel permitted divorce for almost any reason (cf. the Mishnah, m. Gittin 9.10).

19 tc A few important MSS (ℵ Φ pc) have the name "Jesus" here, but it is probably not original. Nevertheless, this translation routinely specifies the referents of pronouns to improve clarity, so that has been done here.

tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "heart" (a collective singular).

21 tc ‡ Some significant witnesses, along with the majority of later MSS (𝔓²⁵ C D L W Z 078 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy sa^{mss} bo), read αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after μαθηταί (mathētai, "disciples"),

"If this is the case of a husband with a wife, it is better not to marry!" 19:11 He[1] said to them, "Not everyone can accept this statement, except those to whom it has been given. 19:12 For there are some eunuchs who were that way from birth,[2] and some who were made eunuchs[3] by others,[4] and some who became eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom of heaven. The one who is able to accept this should accept it."

Jesus and Little Children

19:13 Then little children were brought to him for him to lay his hands on them and pray.[5] But the disciples scolded those who brought them.[6] 19:14 But Jesus said, "Let the little children come to me and do not try to stop them, for the kingdom of heaven belongs to such as these."[7] 19:15 And he placed his hands on them and went on his way.[8]

The Rich Young Man

19:16 Now[9] someone came up to him and said, "Teacher, what good thing must I do to gain eternal life?" 19:17 He said to him, "Why do you ask me about what is good? There is only one who is good. But if you want to enter into life, keep the commandments." 19:18 "Which ones?" he asked. Jesus replied, "Do not murder, do not commit adultery, do not steal, do not give false testimony, 19:19 honor your father and mother,[10] and love your neighbor as yourself."[11] 19:20 The young man said to him, "I have wholeheartedly obeyed[12] all these laws.[13] What do I still lack?" 19:21 Jesus said to him, "If you wish to be perfect, go sell your possessions and give the money[14] to the poor, and you will have treasure[15] in heaven. Then come, follow me." 19:22 But when the young man heard this he went away sorrowful, for he was very rich.[16]

19:23 Then Jesus said to his disciples, "I tell you the truth,[17] it will be hard for a rich person to enter the kingdom of heaven! 19:24 Again I say,[18] it is easier for a camel[19] to go through the eye of a needle[20] than for a rich person to enter into the kingdom of God." 19:25 The[21] disciples were greatly astonished when they heard this and said, "Then who can be saved?"[22] 19:26 Jesus[23] looked at them and replied, "This is impossible for mere humans,[24] but for God all things are possible." 19:27 Then Peter said[25] to but this looks to be a clarifying reading. Other early and important witnesses lack the pronoun (𝔓^{71vid} ℵ B Θ e ff^{1} g^{1} sa^{ms} mae), the reading adopted here. NA^{27} includes the pronoun in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[1] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[2] tn Grk "from the womb of the mother" (an idiom).

[3] tn The verb εὐνουχίζω occurs twice in this verse, translated the first time as "made eunuchs" and the second time as "became eunuchs." The term literally refers to castration. The second occurrence of the word in this verse is most likely figurative, though, referring to those who willingly maintain a life of celibacy for the furtherance of the kingdom (see W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, Matthew [ICC], 3:23).

[4] tn Grk "people."

[5] tn Grk "so that he would lay his hands on them and pray."

[6] tn Grk "the disciples scolded them." In the translation the referent has been specified as "those who brought them," since otherwise the statement could be understood to mean that the disciples scolded the children rather than their parents who brought them.

[7] sn The kingdom of heaven belongs to such as these. Children are a picture of those whose simple trust illustrates what faith is all about. The remark illustrates how everyone is important to God, even those whom others regard as insignificant.

[8] tn Grk "went from there."

[9] tn Grk "And behold one came." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1). Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[10] sn A quotation from Exod 20:12-16; Deut 5:16-20.

[11] sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

[12] tn Grk "kept." The implication of this verb is that the man has obeyed the commandments without fail, so the adverb "wholeheartedly" has been added to the translation to bring out this nuance.

[13] tn Grk "these things." The referent of the pronoun (the laws mentioned by Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn While the rich man was probably being sincere when he insisted I have wholeheartedly obeyed all these laws, he had confined his righteousness to external obedience. The rich man's response to Jesus' command – to give away all he had – revealed that internally he loved money more than God.

[14] tn The words "the money" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[15] sn The call for sacrifice comes with a promise of eternal reward: You will have treasure in heaven. Jesus' call is a test to see how responsive the man is to God's direction through him. Will he walk the path God's agent calls him to walk? For a rich person who got it right, see Zacchaeus in Luke 19:1-10.

[16] tn Grk "he had many possessions." This term (κτῆμα, ktēma) is often used for land as a possession.

[17] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[18] tn Grk "I say to you."

[19] tc A few late witnesses (579 1424 pc) read κάμιλον (kamilon, "rope") for κάμηλον (kamēlon, "camel"), either through accidental misreading of the text or intentionally so as to soften Jesus' words.

[20] sn The eye of a needle refers to a sewing needle. (The gate in Jerusalem known as "The Needle's Eye" was built during the middle ages and was not in existence in Jesus' day.) Jesus was saying rhetorically that it is impossible for a rich person to enter God's kingdom, unless God (v. 26) intervenes.

[21] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[22] sn The assumption is that the rich are blessed, so if they risk exclusion, who is left to be saved?

[23] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[24] tn The plural Greek term ἄνθρωποις (anthrōpois) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NASB 1995 update, "people"). Because of the contrast here between mere mortals and God ("impossible for men, but for God all things are possible") the phrase "mere humans" has been used in the translation. There may also be a slight wordplay with "the Son of Man" in v. 28.

[25] tn Grk "Then answering, Peter said." This construction is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

him, "Look,[1] we have left everything to follow you![2] What then will there be for us?" 19:28 Jesus[3] said to them, "I tell you the truth:[4] In the age when all things are renewed,[5] when the Son of Man sits on his glorious throne, you who have followed me will also sit on twelve thrones, judging[6] the twelve tribes of Israel. 19:29 And whoever has left houses or brothers or sisters or father or mother or children or fields for my sake will receive a hundred times as much[7] and will inherit eternal life. 19:30 But many who are first will be last, and the last first.

Workers in the Vineyard

20:1 "For the kingdom of heaven is like a landowner[8] who went out early in the morning to hire workers for his vineyard. 20:2 And after agreeing with the workers for the standard wage,[9] he sent them into his vineyard. 20:3 When it was about nine o'clock in the morning,[10] he went out again and saw others standing around in the marketplace without work. 20:4 He said to them, 'You go into the vineyard too, and I will give you whatever is right.' 20:5 So they went. When[11] he went out again about noon and three o'clock that afternoon,[12] he did the same thing. 20:6 And about five o'clock that afternoon[13] he went out and found others standing around, and said to them, 'Why are you standing here all day without work?' 20:7 They said to him, 'Because no one hired us.' He said to them, 'You go and work in the vineyard too.' 20:8 When[14] it was evening[15] the owner of the vineyard said to his manager, 'Call the workers and give the pay[16] starting with the last hired until the first.' 20:9 When those hired about five o'clock came, each received a full day's pay.[17] 20:10 And when those hired first came, they thought they would receive more. But each one also received the standard wage. 20:11 When[18] they received it, they began to complain[19] against the landowner, 20:12 saying, 'These last fellows worked one hour, and you have made them equal to us who bore the hardship and burning heat of the day.' 20:13 And the landowner[20] replied to one of them,[21] 'Friend, I am not treating you unfairly. Didn't you agree with me to work for the standard wage?[22] 20:14 Take what is yours and go. I[23] want to give to this last man[24] the same as I gave to you. 20:15 Am I not[25] permitted to do what I want with what belongs to me? Or are you envious because I am generous?'[26] 20:16 So the last will be first, and the first last."

Third Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

20:17 As Jesus was going up to Jerusalem,[27] he took the twelve[28] aside privately and said to them on the way, 18 "Look, we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be handed over to the chief priests and the experts in the

5 sn The Greek term translated the age when all things are renewed (παλιγγενεσία, palingenesia) is understood as a reference to the Messianic age, the time when all things are renewed and restored (cf. Rev 21:5).

6 sn The statement you...will also sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel looks at the future authority the Twelve will have when Jesus returns. They will share in Israel's judgment.

7 sn Jesus reassures his disciples with a promise that (1) much benefit in this life (a hundred times as much) and (2) eternal life will be given.

8 sn The term landowner here refers to the owner and manager of a household.

9 tn Grk "agreeing with the workers for a denarius a day."

sn The standard wage was a denarius a day. The denarius was a silver coin worth about a day's wage for a laborer in Palestine in the 1st century.

10 tn Grk "about the third hour."

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

16 tc ‡ Most witnesses (including B D W Θ $f^{1,13}$ 33^{vid} 𝔐 latt sy) have αὐτοῖς (autois, "to them") after ἀπόδος (apodos, "give the pay"), but this seems to be a motivated reading, clarifying the indirect object. The omission is supported by ℵ C L Z 085 Or. Nevertheless, NA^{27} includes the pronoun on the basis of the greater external attestation.

17 tn Grk "each received a denarius." See the note on the phrase "standard wage" in v. 2.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

19 tn The imperfect verb ἐγόγγυζον (egonguzon) has been translated ingressively.

20 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the landowner) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "And answering, he said to one of them." This construction is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

22 tn Grk "for a denarius a day."

23 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

24 tn Grk "this last one," translated as "this last man" because field laborers in 1st century Palestine were men.

25 tc ‡ Before οὐκ (ouk, "[am I] not") a number of significant witnesses read ἤ (ē, "or"; e.g., ℵ C W 085 $f^{1,13}$ 33 and most others). Although in later Greek the οι in σοι (oi in soi) – the last word of v. 14 – would have been pronounced like ἤ, since ἤ is lacking in early MSS (B D; among later witnesses, note L Z Θ 700) and since MSS were probably copied predominantly by sight rather than by sound, even into the later centuries, the omission of ἤ cannot be accounted for as easily. Thus the shorter reading is most likely original. NA^{27} includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

26 tn Grk "Is your eye evil because I am good?"

The longer reading looks to be a scribal clarification, and hence is considered to be secondary. NA^{27} puts the word in brackets to show doubts about its authenticity.

A Request for James and John

20:20 Then the mother of the sons of Zebedee came to him with her sons, and kneeling down she asked him for a favor.[5] 20:21 He said to her, "What do you want?" She replied,[6] "Permit[7] these two sons of mine to sit, one at your[8] right hand and one at your left, in your kingdom." 20:22 Jesus[9] answered, "You don't know what you are asking![10] Are you able to drink the cup I am about to drink?"[11] They said to him, "We are able."[12] 20:23 He told them, "You will drink my cup,[13] but to sit at my right and at my left is not mine to give. Rather, it is for those for whom it has been prepared by my Father."

20:24 Now[14] when the other ten[15] heard this,[16] they were angry with the two brothers. 20:25 But Jesus called them and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and those in high positions use their authority over them. 20:26 It must not be this way among you! Instead whoever wants to be great among you must be your servant, 20:27 and whoever wants to be first among you must be your slave[17] – 20:28 just as the Son of Man did not come to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom[18] for many."

Two Blind Men Healed

20:29 As they were leaving Jericho,[19] a large crowd followed them. 20:30 Two[20] blind men were sitting by the road. When they heard that Jesus was passing by, they shouted,[21] "Have mercy[22] on us, Lord, Son of David!"[23] 20:31 The[24] crowd scolded[25] them to get them to be quiet. But they shouted even more loudly, "Lord, have mercy on us,[26] Son of David!" 20:32 Jesus stopped, called them, and said, "What do

[2] tn Traditionally, "scourged" (the term means to beat severely with a whip, L&N 19.9). BDAG 620 s.v. μαστιγόω 1.a states, "The 'verberatio' is denoted in the passion predictions and explicitly as action by non-Israelites Mt 20:19; Mk 10:34; Lk 18:33"; the verberatio was the beating given to those condemned to death in the Roman judicial system. Here the term μαστιγόω (mastigoō) has been translated "flog...severely" to distinguish it from the term φραγελλόω (phragelloō) used in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15.

[3] sn Crucifixion was the cruelest form of punishment practiced by the Romans. Roman citizens could not normally undergo it. It was reserved for the worst crimes, like treason and evasion of due process in a capital case. The Roman historian Cicero called it "a cruel and disgusting penalty" (Against Verres 2.5.63-66 §§163-70); Josephus (J. W. 7.6.4 [7.203]) called it the worst of deaths.

[4] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[5] tn Grk "asked something from him."

[6] tn Grk "said to him."

[7] tn Grk "Say that."

[8] tc A majority of witnesses read σου (sou, "your") here, perhaps for clarification. At the same time, it is possible that the pronoun dropped out through haplography or was excised because of perceived redundancy (there are two other such pronouns in the verse) by ℵ B. Either way, the translation adds it due to the requirements of English style. NA[27] includes σου here.

[9] tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said." This is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[10] tn The verbs in Greek are plural here, indicating that Jesus is not answering the mother but has turned his attention directly to the two disciples.

[11] tc Most MSS (C W 33 𝔐, as well as some versional and patristic authorities) in addition have "or to be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized?" But this is surely due to a recollection of the fuller version of this dominical saying found in Mark 10:38. The same MSS also have the Lord's response, "and you will be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized" in v. 23, again due to the parallel in Mark 10:39. The shorter reading, in both v. 22 and v. 23, is to be preferred both because it better explains the rise of the other reading and is found in superior witnesses (ℵ B D L Z Θ 085 $f^{1,13}$ pc lat, as well as other versional and patristic authorities).

[12] sn No more naïve words have ever been spoken as those found here coming from James and John, "We are able." They said it with such confidence and ease, yet they had little clue as to what they were affirming. In the next sentence Jesus confirms that they will indeed suffer for his name.

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[15] tn Grk "the ten."

[16] tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[17] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

[18] sn The Greek word for ransom (λύτρον, lutron) is found here and in Mark 10:45 and refers to the payment of a price in order to purchase the freedom of a slave. The idea of Jesus as the "ransom" is that he paid the price with his own life by standing in our place as a substitute, enduring the judgment that we deserved for sin.

[20] tn Grk "And behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[21] tn Grk "shouted, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[22] sn Have mercy on us is a request for healing. It is not owed to the men. They simply ask for God's kind grace.

[23] sn There was a tradition in Judaism that the Son of David (Solomon) had great powers of healing (Josephus, Ant. 8.2.5 [8.42-49]).

[24] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[25] tn Or "rebuked." The crowd's view was that surely Jesus would not be bothered with someone as unimportant as a blind beggar.

[26] tc ‡ The majority of MSS (C W f^{1} 33 𝔐 and several versional witnesses) read κύριε (kurie, "Lord") after ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς (eleēson hēmas, "have mercy on us"). But since this is the order of words in v. 30 (though that wording is also disputed), and since the κύριε-first reading enjoys widespread and early support (ℵ B D L Z Θ 085 0281 f^{13} 892 pc lat), the latter was considered original. However, the decision was by no means easy. NA[27] has κύριε after ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς here; a majority of that committee felt that since the placement of κύριε in last place was the nonliturgical order it "would have been likely to be altered in transcription to the more familiar sequence" (TCGNT 44).

you want me to do for you?" 20:33 They said to him, "Lord, let our eyes be opened." 20:34 Moved with compassion, Jesus touched their eyes. Immediately they received their sight and followed him.

The Triumphal Entry

21:1 Now[1] when they approached Jerusalem[2] and came to Bethphage,[3] at the Mount of Olives,[4] Jesus sent two disciples, 21:2 telling them, "Go to the village ahead of you.[5] Right away you will find a donkey tied there, and a colt with her. Untie them and bring them to me. 21:3 If anyone says anything to you, you are to say, 'The Lord needs them,'[6] and he will send them at once." 21:4 This[7] took place to fulfill what was spoken by the prophet:[8]

> 21:5 "Tell the people of Zion,[9]
> 'Look, your king is coming to you, > unassuming and seated on a donkey,
> and on a colt, the foal of a donkey.'"[10]

21:6 So[11] the disciples went and did as Jesus had instructed them. 21:7 They brought the donkey and the colt and placed their cloaks[12] on them, and he sat on them. 21:8 A[13] very large crowd spread their cloaks on the road. Others cut branches from the trees and spread them on the road. 21:9 The crowds that went ahead of him and those following kept shouting,[14] "Hosanna[15] to the Son of David! Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord![16] Hosanna in the highest!" 21:10 As he entered Jerusalem the whole city was thrown into an uproar,[17] saying, "Who is this?" 21:11 And the crowds were saying, "This is the prophet Jesus, from Nazareth[18] in Galilee."

Cleansing the Temple

21:12 Then[19] Jesus entered the temple area[20] and drove out all those who were selling and buying in the temple courts,[21] and turned over the tables of the money changers and the chairs of those selling doves. 21:13 And he said to them, "It is written, 'My house will be called a house of prayer,'[22] but you are turning it into a den[23] of robbers!"[24]

21:14 The blind and lame came to him in the temple courts, and he healed them. 21:15 But when the chief priests and the experts in the law[25] saw the wonderful things he did and heard the children crying out in the temple courts,[26] "Hosanna to the Son of David," they became

The Mount of Olives is really a ridge running north to south about 3 kilometers (1.8 miles) long, east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley. Its central elevation is about 30 meters (100 ft) higher than Jerusalem. It was named for the large number of olive trees which grew on it.

The idiom "daughter of Zion" has been translated as "people of Zion" because the original idiom, while firmly embedded in the Christian tradition, is not understandable to most modern English readers.

12 tn Grk "garments"; but this refers in context to their outer cloaks. The action is like 2 Kgs 9:13.

13 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "were shouting, saying." The participle λέγοντας (legontas) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

15 tn The expression Ὡσαννά (hōsanna, literally in Hebrew, "O Lord, save") in the quotation from Ps 118:25-26 was probably by this time a familiar liturgical expression of praise, on the order of "Hail to the king," although both the underlying Aramaic and Hebrew expressions meant "O Lord, save us." In words familiar to every Jew, the author is indicating that at this point every messianic expectation is now at the point of realization. It is clear from the words of the psalm shouted by the crowd that Jesus is being proclaimed as messianic king. See E. Lohse, TDNT 9:682-84.

sn Hosanna is an Aramaic expression that literally means, "help, I pray," or "save, I pray." By Jesus' time it had become a strictly liturgical formula of praise, however, and was used as an exclamation of praise to God.

16 sn A quotation from Ps 118:25-26.

17 tn Grk "was shaken." The translation "thrown into an uproar" is given by L&N 25.233.

18 map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

20 tn Grk "the temple."

sn The merchants (those who were selling) would have been located in the Court of the Gentiles.

21 tn Grk "the temple."

sn Matthew (here, 21:12-27), Mark (11:15-19) and Luke (19:45-46) record this incident of the temple cleansing at the end of Jesus' ministry. John (2:13-16) records a cleansing of the temple at the beginning of Jesus' ministry. See the note on the word temple courts in John 2:14 for a discussion of the relationship of these accounts to one another.

22 sn A quotation from Isa 56:7.

23 tn Or "a hideout" (see L&N 1.57).

24 sn A quotation from Jer 7:11. The meaning of Jesus' statement about making the temple courts a den of robbers probably operates here at two levels. Not only were the religious leaders robbing the people financially, but because of this they had also robbed them spiritually by stealing from them the opportunity to come to know God genuinely. It is possible that these merchants had recently been moved to this location for convenience.

25 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

26 tn Grk "crying out in the temple [courts] and saying." The participle λέγοντας (legontas) is somewhat redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

indignant 21:16 and said to him, "Do you hear what they are saying?" Jesus said to them, "Yes. Have you never read, 'Out of the mouths of children and nursing infants you have prepared praise for yourself'?"[1] 21:17 And leaving them, he went out of the city to Bethany and spent the night there.

The Withered Fig Tree

21:18 Now early in the morning, as he returned to the city, he was hungry. 21:19 After noticing a fig tree[2] by the road he went to it, but found nothing on it except leaves. He said to it, "Never again will there be fruit from you!" And the fig tree withered at once. 21:20 When the disciples saw it they were amazed, saying, "How did the fig tree wither so quickly?" 21:21 Jesus[3] answered them, "I tell you the truth,[4] if you have faith and do not doubt, not only will you do what was done to the fig tree, but even if you say to this mountain, 'Be lifted up and thrown into the sea,' it will happen. 21:22 And whatever you ask in prayer, if you believe,[5] you will receive."

The Authority of Jesus

21:23 Now after Jesus[6] entered the temple courts,[7] the chief priests and elders of the people came up to him as he was teaching and said, "By what authority[8] are you doing these things, and who gave you this authority?" 21:24 Jesus[9] answered them, "I will also ask you one question. If you answer me then I will also tell you by what authority I do these things. 21:25 Where did John's baptism come from? From heaven or from people?"[10] They discussed this among themselves, saying, "If we say, 'From heaven,' he will say, 'Then why did you not believe him?' 21:26 But if we say, 'From people,' we fear the crowd, for they all consider John to be a prophet." 21:27 So[11] they answered Jesus,[12] "We don't know."[13] Then he said to them, "Neither will I tell you[14] by what authority[15] I am doing these things.

The Parable of the Two Sons

21:28 "What[16] do you think? A man had two sons. He went to the first and said, 'Son, go and work in the vineyard today.' 21:29 The boy answered,[17] 'I will not.' But later he had a change of heart[18] and went. 21:30 The father[19] went to the other son and said the same thing. This boy answered,[20] 'I will, sir,' but did not go. 21:31 Which of the two did his father's will?" They said, "The first."[21] Jesus said to them, "I tell you

1 sn A quotation from Ps 8:2.

2 tn Grk "one fig tree."

sn The fig tree is a variation on the picture of a vine as representing the nation; see Isa 5:1-7.

3 tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

4 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

5 tn Grk "believing"; the participle here is conditional.

6 tn Grk "he."

7 tn Grk "the temple."

8 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ.ι

9 tn Grk "answering, Jesus said to them." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

10 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is used here (and in v. 26) in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NAB, NRSV, "of human origin"; TEV, "from human beings"; NLT, "merely human").

sn The question is whether John's ministry was of divine or human origin.

11 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "So" to indicate that the clause is a result of the deliberations of the leaders.

12 tn Grk "answering Jesus, they said." This construction is somewhat awkward in English and has been simplified in the translation.

13 sn Very few questions could have so completely revealed the wicked intentions of the religious leaders. Jesus' question revealed the motivation of the religious leaders and exposed them for what they really were – hypocrites. They indicted themselves when they cited only two options and chose neither of them ("We do not know"). The point of Matt 21:23-27 is that no matter what Jesus said in response to their question, they were not going to believe it and would in the end use it against him.

14 sn Neither will I tell you. Though Jesus gave no answer, the analogy he used to their own question makes his view clear. His authority came from heaven.

15 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ. This is exactly the same phrase as in v. 23.

16 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

17 tn Grk "And answering, he said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here the referent ("the boy") has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn The Greek text reads here μεταμέλομαι (metamelomai): "to change one's mind about something, with the probable implication of regret" (L&N 31.59); cf. also BDAG 639 s.v. The idea in this context involves more than just a change of mind, for the son regrets his initial response. The same verb is used in v. 32.

19 tn "And he"; here δέ (de) has not been translated.

20 tn Grk "And answering, he said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated. Here the referent ("this boy") has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tc Verses 29-31 involve a rather complex and difficult textual problem. The variants cluster into three different groups: (1) The first son says "no" and later has a change of heart, and the second son says "yes" but does not go. The second son is called the one who does his father's will. This reading is found in the Western MSS (D it). But the reading is so hard as to be nearly impossible. One can only suspect some tampering with the text, extreme carelessness on the part of the scribe, or possibly a recognition of the importance of not shaming one's parent in public. (Any of these reasons is not improbable with this texttype, and with codex D in particular.) The other two major variants are more difficult to assess. Essentially, the responses make sense (the son who does his father's will is the one who changes his mind after saying "no"): (2) The first son says "no" and later has a change of heart, and the second son says "yes" but does not go. But here, the first son is called the one who does his father's will (unlike the Western reading). This is the reading found in (𝔓 C L W (Z) 0102 0281 f^{1} 33 𝔐 and several versional witnesses. (3) The first son says "yes" but does not go, and the second son says "no" but later has a change of heart. This is the reading found in B Θ f^{13} 700 and several versional witnesses. Both of these latter two readings make good sense and have significantly better textual support than the first reading. The real question, then, is this: Is the first son or the second the obedient one? If one were to argue simply from the parabolic logic, the second son would be seen as the obedient one (hence, the third reading). The first son would represent the Pharisees (or the truth,[1] tax collectors[2] and prostitutes will go ahead of you into the kingdom of God! 21:32 For John came to you in the way of righteousness, and you did not believe him. But the tax collectors and prostitutes did believe. Although[3] you saw this, you did not later change your minds[4] and believe him.

The Parable of the Tenants

21:33 "Listen to another parable: There was a landowner[5] who planted a vineyard.[6] He put a fence around it, dug a pit for its winepress, and built a watchtower. Then[7] he leased it to tenant farmers[8] and went on a journey. 21:34 When the harvest time was near, he sent his slaves[9] to the tenants to collect his portion of the crop.[10] 21:35 But the tenants seized his slaves, beat one,[11] killed another, and stoned another. 21:36 Again he sent other slaves, more than the first, and they treated them the same way. 21:37 Finally he sent his son to them,[12] saying, 'They will respect my son.' 21:38 But when the tenants saw the son, they said to themselves, 'This is the heir. Come, let's kill him and get his inheritance!' 21:39 So[13] they seized him,[14] threw him out of the vineyard,[15] and killed him. 21:40 Now when the owner of the vineyard comes, what will he do to those tenants?" 21:41 They said to him, "He will utterly destroy those evil men! Then he will lease the vineyard to other tenants who will give him his portion at the harvest."

21:42 Jesus said to them, "Have you never read in the scriptures:

> 'The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone.[16]
> This is from the Lord, and it is marvelous in our eyes'?[17]

21:43 For this reason I tell you that the kingdom of God will be taken from you and given to a people[18] who will produce its fruit. 21:44 The one who falls on this stone will be broken to pieces, and the one on whom it falls will be crushed."[19] 21:45 When[20] the chief priests and the Pharisees[21] heard his parables, they realized that he was speaking about them. 21:46 They wanted to arrest him, but they were afraid of the crowds, because the crowds[22] regarded him as a prophet.

The Parable of the Wedding Banquet

22:1 Jesus spoke[23] to them again in parables, saying: 22:2 "The kingdom of heaven can be Jews) who claim to obey God, but do not (cf. Matt 23:3). This accords well with the parable of the prodigal son (in which the oldest son represents the unbelieving Jews). Further, the chronological sequence of the second son being obedient fits well with the real scene: Gentiles and tax collectors and prostitutes were not, collectively, God's chosen people, but they did repent and come to God, while the Jewish leaders claimed to be obedient to God but did nothing. At the same time, the external evidence is weaker for this reading (though stronger than the first reading), not as widespread, and certainly suspect because of how neatly it fits. One suspects scribal manipulation at this point. Thus the second reading looks to be superior to the other two on both external and transcriptional grounds. But what about intrinsic evidence? One can surmise that Jesus didn't always give predictable responses. In this instance, he may well have painted a picture in which the Pharisees saw themselves as the first son, only to stun them with his application (v. 32).

[1] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[2] sn See the note on tax collectors in 5:46.

[3] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[4] sn The word translated change your minds is the same verb used in v. 29 (there translated had a change of heart). Jesus is making an obvious comparison here, in which the religious leaders are viewed as the disobedient son.

[5] tn The term here refers to the owner and manager of a household.

[6] sn The vineyard is a figure for Israel in the OT (Isa 5:1-7). The nation and its leaders are the tenants, so the vineyard here may well refer to the promise that resides within the nation. The imagery is like that in Rom 11:11-24.

[8] sn The leasing of land to tenant farmers was common in this period.

[9] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

sn These slaves represent the prophets God sent to the nation, who were mistreated and rejected.

[10] tn Grk "to collect his fruits."

[11] sn The image of the tenants mistreating the owner's slaves pictures the nation's rejection of the prophets and their message.

[12] sn The owner's decision to send his son represents God sending Jesus.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the tenants' decision to kill the son in v. 38.

[14] tn Grk "seizing him." The participle λαβόντες (labontes) has been translated as attendant circumstance.

[15] sn Throwing the heir out of the vineyard pictures Jesus' death outside of Jerusalem.

[16] tn Or "capstone," "keystone." Although these meanings are lexically possible, the imagery in Eph 2:20-22 and 1 Cor 3:11 indicates that the term κεφαλὴ γωνίας (kephalē gōnias) refers to a cornerstone, not a capstone.

sn The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone. The use of Ps 118:22-23 and the "stone imagery" as a reference to Christ and his suffering and exaltation is common in the NT (see also Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet 2:6-8; cf. also Eph 2:20). The irony in the use of Ps 118:22-23 here is that in the OT, Israel was the one rejected (or perhaps her king) by the Gentiles, but in the NT it is Jesus who is rejected by Israel.

[17] sn A quotation from Ps 118:22-23.

[18] tn Or "to a nation" (so KJV, NASB, NLT).

[19] tc A few witnesses, especially of the Western text (D 33 it^{s} sy^{s} Or Eus^{syr}), do not contain 21:44. However, the verse is found in ℵ B C L W Z (Θ) 0102 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat sy^{c,p,h} co and should be included as authentic.

tn Grk "on whomever it falls, it will crush him."

sn This proverb basically means that the stone crushes, without regard to whether it falls on someone or someone falls on it. On the stone as a messianic image, see Isa 28:16 and Dan 2:44-45.

[20] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[21] sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

[22] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the crowds) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Both previous occurrences of "they" in this verse refer to the chief priests and the Pharisees.

[23] tn Grk "And answering again, Jesus spoke." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

compared to a king who gave a wedding banquet for his son. 22:3 He sent his slaves[1] to summon those who had been invited to the banquet, but they would not come. 22:4 Again he sent other slaves, saying, 'Tell those who have been invited, "Look! The feast I have prepared for you is ready.[2] My oxen and fattened cattle have been slaughtered, and everything is ready. Come to the wedding banquet."' 22:5 But they were indifferent and went away, one to his farm, another to his business. 22:6 The[3] rest seized his slaves, insolently mistreated them, and killed them. 22:7 The[4] king was furious! He sent his soldiers, and they put those murderers to death[5] and set their city[6] on fire. 22:8 Then he said to his slaves, 'The wedding is ready, but the ones who had been invited were not worthy. 22:9 So go into the main streets and invite everyone you find to the wedding banquet.' 22:10 And those slaves went out into the streets and gathered all they found, both bad and good, and the wedding hall was filled with guests. 22:11 But when the king came in to see the wedding guests, he saw a man there who was not wearing wedding clothes. 22:12 And he said to him, 'Friend, how did you get in here without wedding clothes?' But he had nothing to say.[7] 22:13 Then the king said to his attendants, 'Tie him up hand and foot and throw him into the outer darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth!' 22:14 For many are called, but few are chosen."

Paying Taxes to Caesar

22:15 Then the Pharisees[8] went out and planned together to entrap him with his own words.[9] 22:16 They sent to him their disciples along with the Herodians,[10] saying, "Teacher, we know that you are truthful, and teach the way of God in accordance with the truth.[11] You do not court anyone's favor because you show no partiality.[12] 22:17 Tell us then, what do you think? Is it right[13] to pay taxes[14] to Caesar[15] or not?"

22:18 But Jesus realized their evil intentions and said, "Hypocrites! Why are you testing me? 22:19 Show me the coin used for the tax." So[16] they brought him a denarius.[17] 22:20 Jesus[18] said to them, "Whose image[19] is this, and whose inscription?" 22:21 They replied,[20] "Caesar's." He said to them,[21] "Then give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."[22] 22:22 Now when they heard this they were stunned,[23] and they left him and went away.

[1] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

[2] tn Grk "Behold, I have prepared my dinner." In some contexts, however, to translate ἄριστον (ariston) as "dinner" somewhat misses the point. L&N 23.22 here suggests, "See now, the feast I have prepared (for you is ready)."

[3] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[4] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[5] tn Grk "he sent his soldiers, destroyed those murderers." The verb ἀπώλεσεν (apōlesen) is causative, indicating that the king was the one behind the execution of the murderers. In English the causative idea is not expressed naturally here; either a purpose clause ("he sent his soldiers to put those murderers to death") or a relative clause ("he sent his soldier who put those murderers to death") is preferred.

[6] tn The Greek text reads here πόλις (polis), which could be translated "town" or "city." The prophetic reference is to the city of Jerusalem, so "city" is more appropriate here.

[7] tn Grk "he was silent."

[8] sn See the note on *Pharis*ees in 3:7.

[9] tn Grk "trap him in word."

[10] sn The *Herodian*s are mentioned in the NT only once in Matt (22:16 = Mark 12:13) and twice in Mark (3:6; 12:13; some MSS also read "Herodians" instead of "Herod" in Mark 8:15). It is generally assumed that as a group the Herodians were Jewish supporters of the Herodian dynasty (or of Herod Antipas in particular). In every instance they are linked with the Pharisees. This probably reflects agreement regarding political objectives (nationalism as opposed to submission to the yoke of Roman oppression) rather than philosophy or religious beliefs.

[11] sn Teach the way of God in accordance with the truth. Very few comments are as deceitful as this one; they did not really believe this at all. The question of the Pharisees and Herodians was specifically designed to trap Jesus.

[12] tn Grk "And it is not a concern to you about anyone because you do not see the face of men."

[13] tn Or "lawful," that is, in accordance with God's divine law. On the syntax of ἔξεστιν (exestin) with an infinitive and accusative, see BDF §409.3.

[14] tn According to L&N 57.180 the term κῆνσος (kēnsos) was borrowed from Latin and referred to a poll tax, a tax paid by each adult male to the Roman government.

sn This question concerning taxes was specifically designed to trap Jesus. If he answered yes, then his opponents could publicly discredit him as a sympathizer with Rome. If he answered no, then they could go to the Roman governor and accuse Jesus of rebellion.

[15] tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

[16] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate their response to Jesus' request for a coin.

[17] tn Here the specific name of the coin was retained in the translation, because not all coins in circulation in Palestine at the time carried the image of Caesar. In other places δηνάριον (dēnarion) has been translated simply as "silver coin" with an explanatory note.

sn A denarius was a silver coin worth approximately one day's wage for a laborer. The fact that they had such a coin showed that they already operated in the economic world of Rome. The denarius would have had a picture of Tiberius Caesar stamped on it.

[18] tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[19] tn Or "whose likeness."

sn In this passage Jesus points to the image (Grk εἰκών, eikōn) of Caesar on the coin. This same Greek word is used in Gen 1:26 (LXX) to state that humanity is made in the "image" of God. Jesus is making a subtle yet powerful contrast: Caesar's image is on the denarius, so he can lay claim to money through taxation, but God's image is on humanity, so he can lay claim to each individual life.

[20] tn Grk "they said to him."

[21] tn Grk "then he said to them." τότε (tote) has not been translated to avoid redundancy.

[22] sn Jesus' answer to give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's was a both/and, not the questioners' either/or. So he slipped out of their trap.

[23] tn Grk "they were amazed; they marveled."

Marriage and the Resurrection

22:23 The same day Sadducees[1] (who say there is no resurrection)[2] came to him and asked him,[3] 22:24 "Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies without having children, his brother must marry the widow and father children[4] for his brother.'[5] 22:25 Now there were seven brothers among us. The first one married and died, and since he had no children he left his wife to his brother. 22:26 The second did the same, and the third, down to the seventh. 22:27 Last[6] of all, the woman died. 22:28 In the resurrection, therefore, whose wife of the seven will she be? For they all had married her."[7] 22:29 Jesus[8] answered them, "You are deceived,[9] because you don't know the scriptures or the power of God. 22:30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels[10] in heaven. 22:31 Now as for the resurrection of the dead, have you not read what was spoken to you by God,[11] 22:32 'I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob'?[12] He is not the God of the dead but of the living!"[13] 22:33 When the crowds heard this, they were amazed at his teaching.

The Greatest Commandment

22:34 Now when the Pharisees[14] heard that he had silenced the Sadducees,[15] they assembled together.[16] 22:35 And one of them, an expert in religious law,[17] asked him a question to test[18] him: 22:36 "Teacher, which commandment in the law is the greatest?"[19] 22:37 Jesus[20] said to him, "'Love[21] the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind.'[22] 22:38 This is the first and greatest[23] commandment. 22:39 The second is like it: 'Love your neighbor as yourself.'[24] 22:40 All the law and the prophets depend[25] on these two commandments."

The Messiah: David's Son and Lord

22:41 While[26] the Pharisees[27] were assembled, Jesus asked them a question:[28] 22:42 "What do you think about the Christ?[29] Whose son is he?" They said, "The son of David."[30] 22:43 He said to them, "How then does David by the Spirit call him 'Lord,' saying,

22:44 'The Lord said to my lord,[31]

2 sn This remark is best regarded as a parenthetical note by the author.

3 tn Grk "and asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

4 tn Grk "and raise up seed," an idiom for fathering children (L&N 23.59).

5 sn A quotation from Deut 25:5. This practice is called levirate marriage (see also Ruth 4:1-12; Mishnah, m. Yevamot; Josephus, Ant. 4.8.23 [4.254-256]). The levirate law is described in Deut 25:5-10. The brother of a man who died without a son had an obligation to marry his brother's widow. This served several purposes: It provided for the widow in a society where a widow with no children to care for her would be reduced to begging, and it preserved the name of the deceased, who would be regarded as the legal father of the first son produced from that marriage.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "For all had her."

8 tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said to them." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

9 tn Or "mistaken" (cf. BDAG 822 s.v. πλανάω 2.c.γ).

10 tc Most witnesses have "of God" after "angels," although some MSS read ἄγγελοι θεοῦ (angeloi theou; ℵ L f^{13} {28} 33 892 1241 1424 al) while others have ἄγγελοι τοῦ θεοῦ (angeloi tou theou; W 0102 0161 𝔐). Whether with or without the article, the reading "of God" appears to be motivated as a natural expansion. A few important witnesses lack the adjunct (B D Θ {0233} f^{1} 700 {sa}); this coupled with strong internal evidence argues for the shorter reading.

sn Angels do not die, nor do they eat according to Jewish tradition (1 En. 15:6; 51:4; Wis 5:5; 2 Bar. 51:10; 1QH 3.21-23).

11 tn Grk "spoken to you by God, saying." The participle λέγοντος (legontos) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

12 sn A quotation from Exod 3:6.

13 sn He is not God of the dead but of the living. Jesus' point was that if God could identify himself as God of the three old patriarchs, then they must still be alive when God spoke to Moses; and so they must be raised.

14 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

15 sn See the note on Sadducees in 3:7.

16 tn Grk "for the same." That is, for the same purpose that the Sadducees had of testing Jesus.

17 tn Traditionally, "a lawyer." This was an expert in the interpretation of the Mosaic law.

18 tn Grk "testing." The participle, however, is telic in force.

19 tn Or possibly "What sort of commandment in the law is great?"

20 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

21 tn Grk "You will love." The future indicative is used here with imperatival force (see ExSyn 452 and 569).

22 sn A quotation from Deut 6:5. The threefold reference to different parts of the person says, in effect, that one should love God with all one's being.

23 tn Grk "the great and first."

24 sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

25 tn Grk "hang." The verb κρεμάννυμι (kremannumi) is used here with a figurative meaning (cf. BDAG 566 s.v. 2.b).

26 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

27 sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

28 tn Grk "asked them a question, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is somewhat redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

30 sn It was a common belief in Judaism that Messiah would be the son of David in that he would come from the lineage of David. On this point the Pharisees agreed and were correct. But their understanding was nonetheless incomplete, for Messiah is also David's Lord. With this statement Jesus was affirming that, as the Messiah, he is both God and man.

31 sn The Lord said to my Lord. With David being the speaker, this indicates his respect for his descendant (referred to as my Lord). Jesus was arguing, as the ancient exposition assumed, that the passage is about the Lord's anointed. The passage looks at an enthronement of this figure and a declaration of honor for him as he takes his place at the side of God. In Jerusalem, the king's palace was located to the right of the temple to indicate this kind of relationship. Jesus was pressing the language here to get his opponents to reflect on how great Messiah is.

"Sit at my right hand,
until I put your enemies under your feet"?[1]

22:45 If David then calls him 'Lord,' how can he be his son?"[2] 22:46 No one[3] was able to answer him a word, and from that day on no one dared to question him any longer.

Seven Woes

23:1 Then Jesus said to the crowds and to his disciples, 23:2 "The[4] experts in the law[5] and the Pharisees[6] sit on Moses' seat. 23:3 Therefore pay attention to what they tell you and do it. But do not do what they do, for they do not practice what they teach.[7] 23:4 They[8] tie up heavy loads, hard to carry, and put them on men's shoulders, but they themselves are not willing even to lift a finger to move them. 23:5 They[9] do all their deeds to be seen by people, for they make their phylacteries[10] wide and their tassels[11] long. 23:6 They[12] love the place of honor at banquets and the best seats in the synagogues[13] 23:7 and elaborate greetings[14] in the marketplaces, and to have people call them 'Rabbi.' 23:8 But you are not to be called 'Rabbi,' for you have one Teacher and you are all brothers. 23:9 And call no one your 'father' on earth, for you have one Father, who is in heaven. 23:10 Nor are you to be called 'teacher,' for you have one teacher, the Christ.[15] 23:11 The[16] greatest among you will be your servant. 23:12 And whoever exalts himself will be humbled, and whoever humbles himself will be exalted.

23:13 "But woe to you, experts in the law[17] and you Pharisees, hypocrites![18] You keep locking people out of the kingdom of heaven![19] For you neither enter nor permit those trying to enter to go in.[20] 23:15 "Woe to you, experts in the law[21] and you Pharisees, hypocrites! You cross land and sea to make one convert,[22] and when you get one,[23] you make him twice as much a child of hell[24] as yourselves!

23:16 "Woe to you, blind guides, who say, 'Whoever swears by the temple is bound by nothing.[25] But whoever swears by the gold of the temple is bound by the oath.' 23:17 Blind fools! Which is greater, the gold or the temple that makes the gold sacred? 23:18 And, 'Whoever swears by the altar is bound by nothing.[26] But if anyone swears by the gift on it he is bound by the oath.' 23:19 You are blind! For which is greater, the gift or the altar that makes the gift sacred? 23:20 So whoever swears by the altar swears by it and by everything on it. 23:21 And whoever swears by the temple swears by it and the one who dwells in it. 23:22 And whoever swears by heaven swears by the throne of God and the one who sits on it.

23:23 "Woe to you, experts in the law[27] and you Pharisees, hypocrites! You give a tenth[28] of mint, dill, and cumin,[29] yet you neglect what is more important in the law – justice, mercy, and sn Tassels refer to the tassels that a male Israelite was obligated to wear on the four corners of his outer garment according to the Mosaic law (Num 15:38; Deut 22:12).

[11] tn The term κράσπεδον (kraspedon) in some contexts could refer to the outer fringe of the garment (possibly in Mark 6:56). This edge could have been plain or decorated. L&N 6.180 states, "In Mt 23:5 κράσπεδον denotes the tassels worn at the four corners of the outer garment (see 6.194)."

[20] tc The most important MSS (ℵ B D L Z Θ f^1 33 892* pc and several versional witnesses) do not have 23:14 "Woe to you experts in the law and you Pharisees, hypocrites! You devour widows' property, and as a show you pray long prayers! Therefore you will receive a more severe punishment." Part or all of the verse is contained (either after v. 12 or after v. 13) in W 0102 0107 f^{13} 𝔐 and several versions, but it is almost certainly not original. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number as well, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations. Note also that Mark 12:40 and Luke 20:47 are very similar in wording and are not disputed textually.

[1] tc ‡ Many witnesses (B C K L W Δ 0102 33 565 892 pm) have δέ (de, "but") after ταῦτα (tauta, "these things"), while many others lack it (ℵ D Γ Θ $f^{1,13}$ 579 700 1241 1424 pm). Since asyndeton was relatively rare in Koine Greek, the conjunction may be an intentional alteration, and is thus omitted from the present translation. NA^{27} includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[3] tn Or "scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[4] tc A very difficult textual problem is found here. The most important Alexandrian and Byzantine, as well as significant Western, witnesses (ℵ B C L W 0102 0281 f^{13} 33 𝔐 lat co) have "and the dish" (καὶ τῆς παροψίδος, kai tēs paropsidos) after "cup," while few important witnesses (D Θ f^{1} 700 and some versional and patristic authorities) omit the phrase. On the one hand, scribes sometimes tended to eliminate redundancy; since "and the dish" is already present in v. 25, it may have been deleted in v. 26 by well-meaning scribes. On the other hand, as B. M. Metzger notes, the singular pronoun αὐτοῦ (autou, "its") with τὸ ἐκτός (to ektos, "the outside") in some of the same witnesses that have the longer reading (viz., B* f^{13} al) hints that their archetype lacked the words (TCGNT 50). Further, scribes would be motivated both to add the phrase from v. 25 and to change αὐτοῦ to the plural pronoun αὐτῶν (autōn, "their"). Although the external evidence for the shorter reading is not compelling in itself, combined with these two prongs of internal evidence, it is to be slightly preferred.

[5] tn Or "scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

[6] sn This was an idiom for hypocrisy – just as the wall was painted on the outside but something different on the inside, so this person was not what he appeared or pretended to be (for discussion of a similar metaphor, see L&N 88.234; BDAG 1010 s.v. τοῖχος). [21] tn Although the opening address ("Jerusalem, Jerusalem") is direct (second person), the remainder of this sentence in the Greek text is third person ("who kills the prophets and stones those sent to her"). The following sentences then revert to second person ("your... you"), so to keep all this consistent in English, the third person pronouns in the present verse were translated as second person ("you who kill... sent to you").

[22] sn How often I have longed to gather your children. Jesus, like a lamenting prophet, speaks for God here, who longed to care tenderly for Israel and protect her.

[23] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[24] tn Grk "you were not willing."

[25] sn A quotation from Ps 118:26.

The Destruction of the Temple

24:1 Now[1] as Jesus was going out of the temple courts and walking away, his disciples came to show him the temple buildings.[2] 24:2 And he said to them,[3] "Do you see all these things? I tell you the truth,[4] not one stone will be left on another.[5] All will be torn down!"[6]

Signs of the End of the Age

24:3 As[7] he was sitting on the Mount of Olives, his disciples came to him privately and said, "Tell us, when will these things[8] happen? And what will be the sign of your coming and of the end of the age?" 24:4 Jesus answered them,[9] "Watch out[10] that no one misleads you. 24:5 For many will come in my name, saying, 'I am the Christ,'[11] and they will mislead many. 24:6 You will hear of wars and rumors of wars. Make sure that you are not alarmed, for this must happen, but the end is still to come.[12] 24:7 For nation will rise up in arms[13] against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. And there will be famines[14] and earthquakes[15] in various places. 24:8 All[16] these things are the beginning of birth pains.

Persecution of Disciples

24:9 "Then they will hand you over to be persecuted and will kill you. You will be hated by all the nations[17] because of my name.[18] 24:10 Then many will be led into sin,[19] and they will betray one another and hate one another. 24:11 And many false prophets will appear and deceive[20] many, 24:12 and because lawlessness will increase so much, the love of many will grow cold. 24:13 But the person who endures to the end will be saved.[21] 24:14 And this gospel of the kingdom will be preached throughout the whole inhabited earth as a testimony to all the nations,[22] and then the end will come.

The Abomination of Desolation

24:15 "So when you see the abomination of desolation[23] – spoken about by Daniel the prophet – standing in the holy place (let the reader understand), 24:16 then those in Judea must flee[24] to the mountains. 24:17 The one on the roof[25] must not come down[26] to take anything out of his house, 24:18 and the one in the field must not turn back to get his cloak. 24:19 Woe[27] to those who are pregnant and to those who are nursing their babies in those days! 24:20 Pray[28] that your flight may not be in winter or on a Sabbath. 24:21 For then there will be great suffering[29] unlike anything that has happened[30]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

2 sn The Jerusalem temple was widely admired around the world. See Josephus, Ant. 15.11 [15.380-425]; J. W. 5.5 [5.184-227] and Tacitus, History 5.8, who called it "immensely opulent." Josephus compared it to a beautiful snowcapped mountain.

3 tn Grk "answering, he said to them." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

4 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

5 sn With the statement not one stone will be left on another Jesus predicted the total destruction of the temple, something that did occur in A.D. 70.

6 tn Grk "not one stone will be left here on another which will not be thrown down."

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 sn Because the phrase these things is plural, more than the temple's destruction is in view. The question may presuppose that such a catastrophe signals the end.

9 tn Grk "answering, Jesus said to them." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

10 tn Or "Be on guard."

11 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

12 tn Grk "it is not yet the end."

13 tn For the translation "rise up in arms" see L&N 55.2.

14 sn See Isa 5:13-14; 13:6-16; Hag 2:6-7; Zech 14:4.

15 tc Most witnesses (C Θ 0102 $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐) have "and plagues" (καὶ λοιμοί, kai loimoi) between "famines" (λιμοί, limoi) and "earthquakes" (σεισμοί, seismoi), while others have "plagues and famines and earthquakes" (L W 33 pc lat). The similarities between λιμοί and λοιμοί could explain how καὶ λοιμοί might have accidentally dropped out, but since the Lukan parallel has both terms (and W lat have the order λοιμοὶ καὶ λιμοί there too, as they do in Matthew), it seems more likely that scribes added the phrase here. The shorter reading does not enjoy overwhelming support ([ℵ] B D 892 pc, as well as versional witnesses), but it is nevertheless significant; coupled with the internal evidence it should be given preference.

16 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

17 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "nations" or "Gentiles").

18 sn See Matt 5:10-12; 1 Cor 1:25-31.

19 tn Or "many will fall away." This could also refer to apostasy.

20 tn Or "and lead many astray."

21 sn But the person who endures to the end will be saved. Jesus was not claiming here that salvation is by works. He was simply arguing that genuine faith evidences itself in persistence through even the worst of trials.

22 tn Or "all the Gentiles" (the same Greek word may be translated "nations" or "Gentiles").

23 sn The reference to the abomination of desolation is an allusion to Dan 9:27. Though some have seen the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy in the actions of Antiochus IV (or a representative of his) in 167 B.C., the words of Jesus seem to indicate that Antiochus was not the final fulfillment, but that there was (from Jesus' perspective) still another fulfillment yet to come. Some argue that this was realized in A.D. 70, while others claim that it refers specifically to Antichrist and will not be fully realized until the period of the great tribulation at the end of the age (cf. Mark 13:14, 19, 24; Rev 3:10).

24 sn Fleeing to the mountains is a key OT image: Gen 19:17; Judg 6:2; Isa 15:5; Jer 16:16; Zech 14:5.

25 sn On the roof. Most of the roofs in the NT were flat roofs made of pounded dirt, sometimes mixed with lime or stones, supported by heavy wooden beams. They generally had an easy means of access, either a sturdy wooden ladder or stone stairway, sometimes on the outside of the house.

26 sn The swiftness and devastation of the judgment will require a swift escape. There will be no time to come down from the roof and pick up anything from inside one's home.

27 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

29 tn Traditionally, "great tribulation."

30 sn Suffering unlike anything that has happened. Some refer this event to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. While the events of A.D. 70 may reflect somewhat the comments Jesus makes here, the reference to the scope and severity of this judgment strongly suggest that much more is in from the beginning of the world until now, or ever will happen. 24:22 And if those days had not been cut short, no one would be saved. But for the sake of the elect those days will be cut short. 24:23 Then if anyone says to you, 'Look, here is the Christ!'[1] or 'There he is!' do not believe him. 24:24 For false messiahs[2] and false prophets will appear and perform great signs and wonders to deceive, if possible, even the elect. 24:25 Remember,[3] I have told you ahead of time. 24:26 So then, if someone[4] says to you, 'Look, he is in the wilderness,'[5] do not go out, or 'Look, he is in the inner rooms,' do not believe him. 24:27 For just like the lightning[6] comes from the east and flashes to the west, so the coming of the Son of Man will be. 24:28 Wherever the corpse is, there the vultures[7] will gather.[8]

The Arrival of the Son of Man

24:29 "Immediately[9] after the suffering[10] of those days, the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light; the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven will be shaken.[11] 24:30 Then[12] the sign of the Son of Man will appear in heaven,[13] and[14] all the tribes of the earth will mourn. They[15] will see the Son of Man arriving on the clouds of heaven[16] with power and great glory. 24:31 And he will send his angels with a loud trumpet blast, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven[17] to the other.

The Parable of the Fig Tree

24:32 "Learn[18] this parable from the fig tree: Whenever its branch becomes tender and puts out its leaves, you know that summer is near. 24:33 So also you, when you see all these things, know[19] that he is near, right at the door. 24:34 I tell you the truth,[20] this generation[21] will not pass away until all these things take place. 24:35 Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will never pass away.[22]

Be Ready!

24:36 "But as for that day and hour no one knows it – not even the angels in heaven[23] –

4 tn Grk "they say." The third person plural is used here as an indefinite and translated "someone" (ExSyn 402).

5 tn Or "in the desert."

6 sn The Son of Man's coming in power will be sudden and obvious like lightning. No one will need to point it out.

7 tn The same Greek term can refer to "eagles" or "vultures" (L&N 4.42; BDAG 22 s.v. ἀετός), but in this context it must mean vultures because the gruesome image is one of dead bodies being consumed by scavengers.

sn Jesus' answer is that when the judgment comes, the scenes of death will be obvious and so will the location of the judgment. See also Luke 17:37.

8 tn Grk "will be gathered." The passive construction has been translated as an active one in English.

9 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

10 tn Traditionally, "tribulation."

11 sn An allusion to Isa 13:10, 34:4 (LXX); Joel 2:10. The heavens were seen as the abode of heavenly forces, so their shaking indicates distress in the spiritual realm. Although some take the powers as a reference to bodies in the heavens (like stars and planets, "the heavenly bodies," NIV) this is not as likely.

12 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

13 tn Or "in the sky"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context.

14 tn Here τότε (tote, "then") has not been translated to avoid redundancy in English.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

16 sn An allusion to Dan 7:13. Here is Jesus returning with full authority to judge.

17 tn Or "of the sky"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

19 tn The verb γινώσκετε (ginōskete, "know") can be parsed as either present indicative or present imperative. In this context the imperative fits better, since the movement is from analogy (trees and seasons) to the future (the signs of the coming of the kingdom) and since the emphasis is on preparation for this event.

20 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

21 sn This is one of the hardest verses in the gospels to interpret. Various views exist for what generation means. (1) Some take it as meaning "race" and thus as an assurance that the Jewish race (nation) will not pass away. But it is very questionable that the Greek term γενεά (genea) can have this meaning. Two other options are possible. (2) Generation might mean "this type of generation" and refer to the generation of wicked humanity. Then the point is that humanity will not perish, because God will redeem it. Or (3) generation may refer to "the generation that sees the signs of the end" (v. 30), who will also see the end itself. In other words, once the movement to the return of Christ starts, all the events connected with it happen very quickly, in rapid succession.

22 sn The words that Jesus predicts here will never pass away. They are more stable and lasting than creation itself. For this kind of image, see Isa 40:8; 55:10-11.

23 tc ‡ Some important witnesses, including early Alexandrian and Western mss (𝔓[45] ℵ*.2 B D Θ f^{13} pc it vg[mss] Ir[lat] Hier[mss]), have the additional words οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός (oude ho huios, "nor the son") here. Although the shorter reading (which lacks this phrase) is suspect in that it seems to soften the prophetic ignorance of Jesus, the final phrase ("except the Father alone") already implies this. Further, the parallel in Mark 13:32 has οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός, with almost no witnesses lacking the expression. Hence, it is doubtful that the absence of "neither the Son" is due to the scribes. In keeping with Matthew's general softening of Mark's harsh statements throughout his Gospel, it is more likely that the absence of "neither the Son" is part of the original text of Matthew, being an intentional change on the part of the author. Further, this shorter reading is supported by the first corrector of ℵ as well as L W f^{1} 33 𝔐 vg sy co Hier[mss]. Admittedly, the external evidence is not as impressive for the shorter reading, but it best explains the rise of the other reading (in particular, how does one account for virtually no mss excising οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός at Mark 13:32 if such an absence here is due to scribal alteration? Although scribes were hardly consistent, for such a theologically significant issue at least some consistency would be expected on the part of a few scribes). Nevertheless, NA[27] includes οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός here.

except the Father alone. 24:37 For just like the days of Noah[1] were, so the coming of the Son of Man will be. 24:38 For in those days before the flood, people[2] were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day Noah entered the ark. 24:39 And they knew nothing until the flood came and took them all away.[3] It will be the same at the coming of the Son of Man.[4] 24:40 Then there will be two men in the field; one will be taken and one left.[5] 24:41 There will be two women grinding grain with a mill;[6] one will be taken and one left.

24:42 "Therefore stay alert, because you do not know on what day[7] your Lord will come. 24:43 But understand this: If the owner of the house had known at what time of night the thief[8] was coming, he would have been alert and would not have let his house be broken into. 24:44 Therefore you also must be ready, because the Son of Man will come at an hour when you do not expect him.[9]

The Faithful and Wise Slave

24:45 "Who then is the faithful and wise slave,[10] whom the master has put in charge of his household, to give the other slaves[11] their food at the proper time? 24:46 Blessed is that slave whom the master finds at work[12] when he comes. 24:47 I tell you the truth,[13] the master[14] will put him in charge of all his possessions. 24:48 But if[15] that evil slave should say to himself,[16] 'My master is staying away a long time,' 24:49 and he begins to beat his fellow slaves and to eat and drink with drunkards, 24:50 then the master of that slave will come on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour he does not foresee, 24:51 and will cut him in two,[17] and assign him a place with the hypocrites, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The Parable of the Ten Virgins

25:1 "At that time the kingdom of heaven will be like ten virgins who took their lamps and went out to meet the bridegroom. 25:2 Five[18] of the virgins[19] were foolish, and five were wise. 25:3 When[20] the foolish ones took their lamps, they did not take extra[21] olive oil[22] with them. 25:4 But the wise ones took flasks of olive oil with their lamps. 25:5 When[23] the bridegroom was delayed a long time, they all became drowsy and fell asleep. 25:6 But at midnight there was a shout, 'Look, the bridegroom is here! Come out to meet him.'[24] 25:7 Then all the virgins woke up and trimmed their lamps. 25:8 The[25] foolish ones said to the wise, 'Give us some of your oil, because our lamps are going out.' 25:9 'No,' they replied.[26] 'There won't be enough for you and for us. Go instead to those who sell oil and buy some for yourselves.' 25:10 But while they had gone to buy it, the bridegroom arrived, and those who were ready went inside with him to the

[1] sn Like the days of Noah, the time of the flood in Gen 6:5-8:22, the judgment will come as a surprise as people live their day to day lives.

[2] tn Grk "they," but in an indefinite sense, "people."

[3] sn Like the flood that came and took them all away, the coming judgment associated with the Son of Man will condemn many.

[4] tn Grk "So also will be the coming of the Son of Man."

[5] sn There is debate among commentators and scholars over the phrase one will be taken and one left about whether one is taken for judgment or for salvation. If the imagery is patterned after the rescue of Noah from the flood, as some suggest, the ones taken are the saved (as Noah was) and those left behind are judged. The imagery, however, is not directly tied to the identification of the two groups. Its primary purpose in context is to picture the sudden, surprising separation of the righteous and the judged (i.e., condemned) at the return of the Son of Man.

[6] tn According to L&N 46.16, this refers to a hand mill normally operated by two women.

[7] tc Most later mss (L 0281 𝔐 lat) have here ὥρᾳ (hōra, "hour") instead of ἡμέρᾳ (hemera, "day"). Although the merits of this reading could be argued either way, in light of the overwhelming and diverse early support for ἡμέρᾳ ({𝔓[101] 𝔓[103] ℵ B C D W Δ Θ f^{13} 33 892 1424}, as well as several versions and fathers}), the more general term is surely correct.

[8] sn On Jesus pictured as a returning thief, see 1 Thess 5:2, 4; 2 Pet 3:10; Rev 3:3; 16:15.

[9] sn Jesus made clear that his coming could not be timed, and suggested it would take some time – so long, in fact, that some will not be looking for him any longer (at an hour when you do not expect him).

[10] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

[11] tn Grk "give them."

[12] tn That is, doing his job, doing what he is supposed to be doing.

[13] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[14] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the master) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn In the Greek text this is a third class condition that for all practical purposes is a hypothetical condition (note the translation of the following verb "should say").

[16] tn Grk "should say in his heart."

[17] tn The verb διχοτομέω (dichotomeō) means to cut an object into two parts (L&N 19.19). This is an extremely severe punishment compared to the other two later punishments. To translate it simply as "punish" is too mild. If taken literally this servant is dismembered, although it is possible to view the stated punishment as hyperbole (L&N 38.12).

[18] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[19] tn Grk "Five of them."

[20] tn Grk "For when." Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

[21] tn The word "extra" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The point is that the five foolish virgins had only the oil in their lamps, but took along no extra supply from which to replenish them. This is clear from v. 8, where the lamps of the foolish virgins are going out because they are running out of oil.

[22] tn On the use of olive oil in lamps, see L&N 6.202.

[23] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[24] tc ‡ Most witnesses have αὐτοῦ (autou, "[with] him") after ἀπάντησιν (apantēsin, "meeting"), a reading which makes explicit what is already implied in the shorter text (as found in ℵ B 700). The translation likewise adds "him" for clarity's sake even though the word is not considered part of the original text. NA[27] has αὐτοῦ in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[25] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

The Parable of the Talents

25:14 "For it is like a man going on a journey, who summoned his slaves[7] and entrusted his property to them. 25:15 To[8] one he gave five talents,[9] to another two, and to another one, each according to his ability. Then he went on his journey. 25:16 The one who had received five talents went off right away and put his money to work[10] and gained five more. 25:17 In the same way, the one who had two gained two more. 25:18 But the one who had received one talent went out and dug a hole in the ground and hid his master's money in it. 25:19 After[11] a long time, the master of those slaves came and settled his accounts with them. 25:20 The[12] one who had received the five talents came and brought five more, saying, 'Sir,[13] you entrusted me with five talents. See, I have gained five more.' 25:21 His master answered,[14] 'Well done, good and faithful slave! You have been faithful in a few things. I will put you in charge of many things. Enter into the joy of your master.' 25:22 The[15] one with the two talents also came and said, 'Sir, you entrusted two talents to me. See, I have gained two more.' 25:23 His master answered, 'Well done, good and faithful slave! You have been faithful with a few things. I will put you in charge of many things. Enter into the joy of your master.' 25:24 Then the one who had received the one talent came and said, 'Sir, I knew that you were a hard man, harvesting where you did not sow, and gathering where you did not scatter seed, 25:25 so[16] I was afraid, and I went and hid your talent in the ground. See, you have what is yours.' 25:26 But his master answered,[17] 'Evil and lazy slave! So you knew that I harvest where I didn't sow and gather where I didn't scatter? 25:27 Then you should have deposited my money with the bankers,[18] and on my return I would have received my money back with interest![19] 25:28 Therefore take the talent from him and give it to the one who has ten.[20] 25:29 For the one who has will be given more,[21] and he will have more than enough. But the one who does not have, even what he has will be taken from him.[22] 25:30 And throw that worthless slave into the outer darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.'

The Judgment

25:31 "When[23] the Son of Man comes in his glory and all the angels with him, then he will sit on his glorious throne. 25:32 All[24] the nations will be assembled before him, and he will separate people one from another like a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats. 25:33 He[25] will put the sheep on his right and the goats on his left. 25:34 Then the king will say to those on his right, 'Come, you who are blessed by my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. 25:35 For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me something to drink, I was a stranger and you invited me in, 25:36 I was naked and you gave me clothing, I was sick and you took care of me, I was in prison and you visited me.' 25:37 Then the righteous will answer him,[26] 'Lord, when did we see you hungry and feed you, or thirsty and give you something to drink? 25:38 When[27] did we see you a stranger and invite you in, or naked and clothe you?

The longer reading thus appears to be an explanatory expansion and should not be considered authentic. The Plot Against Jesus

26:1 When[9] Jesus had finished saying all these things, he told his disciples, 26:2 "You know that after two days the Passover is coming, and the Son of Man will be handed over[10] to be crucified."[11] 26:3 Then the chief priests and the elders of the people met together in the palace of the high priest, who was named Caiaphas. 26:4 They[12] planned to arrest Jesus by stealth and kill him. 26:5 But they said, "Not during the feast, so that there won't be a riot among the people."[13]

Jesus' Anointing

26:6 Now while Jesus was in Bethany at the house of Simon the leper, 26:7 a woman came to him with an alabaster jar[14] of expensive perfumed oil,[15] and she poured it on his head as he was at the table.[16] 26:8 When[17] the disciples saw this, they became indignant and said, "Why this waste? 26:9 It[18] could have been sold at a high price and the money[19] given to the poor!" 26:10 When[20] Jesus learned of this, he said to them, "Why are you bothering this woman? She[21] has done a good service for me. 26:11 For you will always have the poor with you, but you will not always have me![22] 26:12 When[23] she poured this oil on my body, she did it to prepare me for burial. 26:13 I tell you the truth,[24] wherever this gospel is proclaimed in the whole world, what she has done will also be told in memory of her."

The Plan to Betray Jesus

26:14 Then one of the twelve, the one named Judas Iscariot, went to the chief priests 26:15 and said, "What will you give me to betray him into your hands?"[25] So they set out thirty silver coins for him. 26:16 From that time[26] on, Judas[27] began looking for an opportunity to betray him.

The Passover

26:17 Now on the first day of the feast of[1] Unleavened Bread the disciples came to Jesus and said,[2] "Where do you want us to prepare for you to eat the Passover?"[3] 26:18 He[4] said, "Go into the city to a certain man and tell him, 'The Teacher says, "My time is near. I will observe the Passover with my disciples at your house."'" 26:19 So[5] the disciples did as Jesus had instructed them, and they prepared the Passover. 26:20 When[6] it was evening, he took his place at the table[7] with the twelve.[8] 26:21 And while they were eating he said, "I tell you the truth,[9] one of you will betray me."[10] 26:22 They[11] became greatly distressed[12] and each one began to say to him, "Surely not I, Lord?" 26:23 He[13] answered, "The one who has dipped his hand into the bowl with me[14] will betray me. 26:24 The Son of Man will go as it is written about him, but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! It would be better for him if he had never been born." 26:25 Then[15] Judas, the one who would betray him, said, "Surely not I, Rabbi?" Jesus[16] replied, "You have said it yourself."

The Lord's Supper

26:26 While[17] they were eating, Jesus took bread, and after giving thanks he broke it, gave it to his disciples, and said, "Take, eat, this is my body." 26:27 And after taking the cup and giving thanks, he gave it to them, saying, "Drink from it, all of you, 26:28 for this is my blood, the blood[18] of the covenant,[19] that is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins. 26:29 I[20] tell you, from now on I will not drink of this fruit[21] of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." 26:30 After[22] singing a hymn,[23] they went out to the Mount of Olives.

> 'I will strike the shepherd,

The population of the city swelled during the feast, so lodging could be difficult to find. The Passover was celebrated each year in commemoration of the Israelites' deliverance from Egypt; thus it was a feast celebrating redemption (see Exod 12). The Passover lamb was roasted and eaten after sunset in a family group of at least ten people (m. Pesahim 7.13). People ate the meal while reclining (see the note on table in 26:20). It included, besides the lamb, unleavened bread and bitter herbs as a reminder of Israel's bitter affliction at the hands of the Egyptians. Four cups of wine mixed with water were also used for the meal. For a further description of the meal and the significance of the wine cups, see E. 6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "he was reclining at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

8 tc Many witnesses, some of them important, have μαθητῶν (mathētōn, "disciples"; ℵ A L W Δ Θ 33 892 1241 1424 pm lat) or μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ (mathētōn autou, "his disciples"; 0281 pc it) after δώδεκα (dōdeka, "twelve"). However, such clarifications are typical scribal expansions to the text. Further, the shorter reading (the one that ends with δώδεκα) has strong support in 𝔓[37vid,45vid] B D K Γ $f^{1,13}$ 565 579 700 pm. Thus both internally and externally the reading that ends the verse with "the twelve" is to be preferred.

9 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

10 tn Or "will hand me over."

11 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

12 tn The participle λυπούμενοι (lupoumenoi) has been translated as a finite verb to make the sequence of events clear in English.

13 tn Grk "answering, he said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 sn The one who has dipped his hand into the bowl with me. The point of Jesus' comment here is not to identify the specific individual per se, but to indicate that it is one who was close to him – somebody whom no one would suspect. His comment serves to heighten the treachery of Judas' betrayal.

15 tn Grk "answering, Judas." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to reflect the sequence of events in the narrative.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

18 tn Grk "for this is my blood of the covenant that is poured out for many." In order to avoid confusion about which is poured out, the translation supplies "blood" twice so that the following phrase clearly modifies "blood," not "covenant."

19 tc Although most witnesses read καινῆς (kainēs, "new") here, this is evidently motivated by the parallel in Luke 22:20. Apart from the possibility of homoioteleuton, there is no good reason for the shorter reading to have arisen later on. But since it is found in such good and diverse witnesses (e.g., 𝔓[37,45vid] ℵ B L Z Θ 0298[vid] 33 pc mae), the likelihood of homoioteleuton becomes rather remote.

sn Jesus' death established the forgiveness promised in the new covenant of Jer 31:31. Jesus is reinterpreting the symbolism of the Passover meal, indicating the presence of a new era.

20 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

21 tn Grk "produce" ("the produce of the vine" is a figurative expression for wine).

22 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

23 sn After singing a hymn. The Hallel Psalms (Pss 113-118) were sung during the meal. Psalms 113 and 114 were sung just before the second cup and 115-118 were sung at the end of the meal, after the fourth, or hallel cup.

25 tn Grk "answering, Peter said to him." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

fall away!" 26:34 Jesus said to him, "I tell you the truth,[1] on this night, before the rooster crows, you will deny me three times." 26:35 Peter said to him, "Even if I must die with you, I will never deny you." And all the disciples said the same thing.

Gethsemane

26:36 Then Jesus went with them to a place called Gethsemane, and he said to the disciples, "Sit here while I go over there and pray." 26:37 He took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and became anguished and distressed. 26:38 Then he said to them, "My soul is deeply grieved, even to the point of death. Remain here and stay awake with me." 26:39 Going a little farther, he threw himself down with his face to the ground and prayed,[2] "My Father, if possible,[3] let this cup[4] pass from me! Yet not what I will, but what you will." 26:40 Then he came to the disciples and found them sleeping. He[5] said to Peter, "So, couldn't you stay awake with me for one hour? 26:41 Stay awake and pray that you will not fall into temptation. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." 26:42 He went away a second time and prayed,[6] "My Father, if this cup[7] cannot be taken away unless I drink it, your will must be done." 26:43 He came again and found them sleeping; they could not keep their eyes open.[8] 26:44 So leaving them again, he went away and prayed for the third time, saying the same thing once more. 26:45 Then he came to the disciples and said to them, "Are you still sleeping and resting? Look, the hour is approaching, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. 26:46 Get up, let us go. Look! My betrayer[9] is approaching!"

Betrayal and Arrest

26:47 While he was still speaking, Judas,[10] one of the twelve, arrived. With him was a large crowd armed with swords and clubs, sent by the chief priests and elders of the people. 26:48 (Now the betrayer[11] had given them a sign, saying, "The one I kiss is the man.[12] Arrest him!")[13] 26:49 Immediately[14] he went up to Jesus and said, "Greetings, Rabbi," and kissed him.[15] 26:50 Jesus[16] said to him, "Friend, do what you are here to do." Then they came and took hold[17] of Jesus and arrested him. 26:51 But[18] one of those with Jesus grabbed[19] his sword, drew it out, and struck the high priest's slave,[20] cutting off his ear. 26:52 Then Jesus said to him, "Put your sword back in its place![21] For all who take hold of the sword will die by the sword. 26:53 Or do you think that I cannot call on my Father, and that he would send me more than twelve legions[22] of angels right now? 26:54 How then would the scriptures that say it must happen this way be fulfilled?" 26:55 At that moment Jesus said to the crowd, "Have you come out with swords and clubs to arrest me like you would an outlaw?[23] Day after day I sat teaching in the temple courts, yet[24] you did not arrest me. 26:56 But this has happened so that[25] the scriptures of the prophets would be fulfilled." Then all the disciples left him and fled.

Condemned by the Sanhedrin

26:57 Now the ones who had arrested Jesus led him to Caiaphas, the high priest, in whose house[26] the experts in the law[27] and the elders had gathered. 26:58 But Peter was following him from a distance, all the way to the high priest's

[2] tn Grk "ground, praying and saying." Here the participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[3] tn Grk "if it is possible."

[4] sn This cup alludes to the wrath of God that Jesus would experience (in the form of suffering and death) for us. See Ps 11:6; 75:8-9; Isa 51:17, 19, 22 for this figure.

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[6] tn Grk "saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[7] tn Grk "this"; the referent (the cup) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Grk "because their eyes were weighed down," an idiom for becoming extremely or excessively sleepy (L&N 23.69).

[9] tn Grk "the one who betrays me."

[10] tn Grk "behold, Judas." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[11] tn Grk "the one who betrays him."

[12] tn Grk "The one I kiss is he."

[13] sn This remark is parenthetical within the narrative and has thus been placed in parentheses.

[14] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[15] sn Judas' act of betrayal when he kissed Jesus is especially sinister when it is realized that it was common in the culture of the times for a disciple to kiss his master when greeting him.

[16] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[17] tn Grk "and put their hands on Jesus."

[18] tn Grk "And behold one." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[19] tn Grk "extending his hand, drew out his sword, and struck." Because rapid motion is implied in the circumstances, the translation "grabbed" was used.

[20] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 8:9.

[21] tn The translation "put your sword back in its place" for this phrase is given in L&N 85.52.

[22] sn A legion was a Roman army unit of about 6,000 soldiers, so twelve legions would be 72,000.

[23] tn Or "a revolutionary." This term can refer to one who stirs up rebellion: BDAG 594 s.v. λῃστής 2 has "revolutionary, insurrectionist, guerrilla" citing evidence from Josephus (J. W. 2.13.2-3 [2.253-254]). However, this usage generally postdates Jesus' time. It does refer to a figure of violence. Luke uses the same term for the highwaymen who attack the traveler in the parable of the good Samaritan (Luke 10:30).

[24] tn Grk "and" (καί, kai), a conjunction that is elastic enough to be used to indicate a contrast, as here.

[25] tn Grk "But so that"; the verb "has happened" is implied.

[26] tn Grk "where."

[27] tn Or "where the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

courtyard. After[1] going in, he sat with the guards[2] to see the outcome. 26:59 The[3] chief priests and the whole Sanhedrin were trying to find false testimony against Jesus so that they could put him to death. 26:60 But they did not find anything, though many false witnesses came forward. Finally[4] two came forward 26:61 and declared, "This man[5] said, 'I am able to destroy the temple of God and rebuild it in three days.'" 26:62 So[6] the high priest stood up and said to him, "Have you no answer? What is this that they are testifying against you?" 26:63 But Jesus was silent. The[7] high priest said to him, "I charge you under oath by the living God, tell us if you are the Christ,[8] the Son of God." 26:64 Jesus said to him, "You have said it yourself. But I tell you, from now on you will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand[9] of the Power[10] and coming on the clouds of heaven."[11] 26:65 Then the high priest tore his clothes and declared,[12] "He has blasphemed! Why do we still need witnesses? Now[13] you have heard the blasphemy! 26:66 What is your verdict?"[14] They[15] answered, "He is guilty and deserves[16] death." 26:67 Then they spat in his face and struck him with their fists. And some slapped him, 26:68 saying, "Prophesy for us, you Christ![17] Who hit you?"[18]

Peter's Denials

26:69 Now Peter was sitting outside in the courtyard. A[19] slave girl[20] came to him and said, "You also were with Jesus the Galilean." 26:70 But he denied it in front of them all:[21] "I don't know what you're talking about!" 26:71 When[22] he went out to the gateway, another slave girl[23] saw him and said to the people there, "This man was with Jesus the Nazarene." 26:72 He denied it again with an oath, "I do not know the man!" 26:73 After[24] a little while, those standing there came up to Peter and said, "You really are one of them too – even your accent[25] gives you away!" 26:74 At that he began to curse, and he swore with an oath, "I do not know the man!" At that moment a rooster crowed.[26] 26:75 Then Peter remembered what Jesus had said: "Before the rooster crows, you will deny me three times." And he went outside and wept bitterly.[27]

Jesus Brought Before Pilate

27:1 When[28] it was early in the morning, all the chief priests and the elders of the people plotted against Jesus to execute him. 27:2 They[29] tied him up, led him away, and handed him over to Pilate[30] the governor.[31]

9 sn An allusion to Ps 110:1. This is a claim that Jesus shares authority with God in heaven. Those present may have thought they were his judges, but, in fact, the reverse was true.

10 sn The expression the right hand of the Power is a circumlocution for referring to God. Such indirect references to God were common in 1st century Judaism out of reverence for the divine name.

sn Who hit you? This is a variation of one of three ancient games that involved blindfolds.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

20 tn The Greek term here is παιδίσκη (paidiskē), referring to a slave girl or slave woman.

21 tn Grk "he denied it...saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

22 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

23 tn The words "slave girl" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by the feminine singular form ἄλλη (allē).

24 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

25 tn Grk "your speech."

26 tn It seems most likely that this refers to a real rooster crowing, although a number of scholars have suggested that "cockcrow" is a technical term referring to the trumpet call which ended the third watch of the night (from midnight to 3 a.m.). This would then be a reference to the Roman gallicinium (ἀλεκτοροφωνία, alektorophōnia; the term is used in Mark 13:35 and is found in some MSS [$\mathfrak{P}^{37vid,45}$ f^{1}] in Matt 26:34) which would have been sounded at 3 a.m.; in this case Jesus would have prophesied a precise time by which the denials would have taken place. For more details see J. H. Bernard, St. John (ICC), 2:604. However, in light of the fact that Mark mentions the rooster crowing twice (Mark 14:72) and in Luke 22:60 the words are reversed (ἐφώνησεν ἀλέκτωρ, ephōnēsen alektōr), it is more probable that a real rooster is in view. In any event natural cockcrow would have occurred at approximately 3 a.m. in Palestine at this time of year (March-April) anyway.

27 sn When Peter went out and wept bitterly it shows he really did not want to fail here and was deeply grieved that he had.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

30 tc Most MSS (A C W Θ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 latt) have Ποντίῳ (Pontiō, "Pontius") before Πιλάτῳ (Pilatō, "Pilate"), but there seems to be no reason for omitting the tribal name, either intentionally or unintentionally. Adding "Pontius," however, is a natural expansion on the text, and is in keeping with several other NT and patristic references to the Roman governor (cf. Luke 3:1; Acts 4:27; 1 Tim 6:13; Ign. Magn. 11.1; Ign. Trall. 9.1; Ign. Smyrn. 1.2; Justin Martyr, passim). The shorter reading, supported by ℵ B L 0281 33 pc co, is thus strongly preferred.

Judas' Suicide

27:3 Now when[1] Judas, who had betrayed him, saw that Jesus[2] had been condemned, he regretted what he had done and returned the thirty silver coins to the chief priests and the elders, 27:4 saying, "I have sinned by betraying innocent blood!" But they said, "What is that to us? You take care of it yourself!" 27:5 So[3] Judas threw the silver coins into the temple and left. Then he went out and hanged himself. 27:6 The[4] chief priests took the silver and said, "It is not lawful to put this into the temple treasury, since it is blood money." 27:7 After[5] consulting together they bought the Potter's Field with it, as a burial place for foreigners. 27:8 For this reason that field has been called the "Field of Blood" to this day. 27:9 Then what was spoken by Jeremiah[6] the prophet was fulfilled: "They took the thirty silver coins, the price of the one whose price had been set by the people of Israel,[7] 27:10 and they gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord commanded me."[8]

Jesus and Pilate

27:11 Then[9] Jesus stood before the governor, and the governor asked him,[10] "Are you the king[11] of the Jews?" Jesus[12] said, "You say so."[13] 27:12 But when he was accused by the chief priests and the elders, he did not respond. 27:13 Then Pilate said to him, "Don't you hear how many charges they are bringing against you?" 27:14 But he did not answer even one accusation, so that the governor was quite amazed.

27:15 During the feast the governor was accustomed to release one prisoner to the crowd,[14] whomever they wanted. 27:16 At that time they had in custody a notorious prisoner named Jesus[15] Barabbas. 27:17 So after they had assembled, Pilate said to them, "Whom do you want me to release for you, Jesus[16] Barabbas or Jesus who is called the Christ?"[17] 27:18 (For he knew that they had handed him over because of envy.)[18] 27:19 As[19] he was sitting on the judgment seat,[20] his wife sent a message[21] to tence. The Romans kept close control of the death penalty in conquered territories to prevent it from being used to execute Roman sympathizers.

[1] tn Grk "Then when." Here τότε (tote) has been translated as "now" to indicate a somewhat parenthetical interlude in the sequence of events.

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the leaders' response to Judas.

[4] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[5] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[6] tc The problematic citing of Jeremiah for a text which appears to come from Zechariah has prompted certain scribes to alter it. Codex 22 has Ζαχαρίου (Zachariou, "Zechariah") while Φ 33 omit the prophet's name altogether. And codex 21 and the Latin ms l change the prophet's name to "Isaiah," in accordance with natural scribal proclivities to alter the text toward the most prominent OT prophet. But unquestionably the name Jeremiah is the wording of the original here, because it is supported by virtually all witnesses and because it is the harder reading. See D. A. Carson, "Matthew," EBC 8:562-63, for a discussion of the textual and especially hermeneutical problem.

[7] tn Grk "the sons of Israel," an idiom referring to the people of Israel as an ethnic entity (L&N 11.58).

[8] sn The source of this citation is debated (see the tc note on Jeremiah in v. 9 above for a related discussion). The quotation is most closely related to Zech 11:12-13, but the reference to Jeremiah in v. 9 as the source leads one to look there as well. There is no exact match for this text in Jeremiah, but there are some conceptual parallels: In Jer 18:2-6 the prophet visits a potter, and in Jer 32:6-15 he buys a field. D. A. Carson argues that Jer 19:1-13 is the source of the quotation augmented with various phrases drawn from Zech 11:12-13 ("Matthew," EBC 8:563). W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison argue that the reference to Jeremiah is not meant to refer to one specific text from that prophet, but instead to signal that his writings as a whole are a source from which the quotation is drawn (Matthew [ICC], 3:568-69). Although the exact source of the citation is uncertain, it is reasonable to see texts from the books of Jeremiah and Zechariah both coming into play here.

[9] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[10] tn Grk "asked him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[11] sn "Are you the king of the Jews?" Pilate was interested in this charge because of its political implications of sedition against Rome.

[12] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[13] sn The reply "You say so" is somewhat enigmatic, like Jesus' earlier reply to the Jewish leadership in 26:64.

[14] sn The custom of Pilate to release one prisoner is unknown outside the gospels in Jewish writings, but it was a Roman custom at the time and thus probably used in Palestine as well (cf. Matt 27:15; John 18:39).

[15] tc Although the external evidence for the inclusion of "Jesus" before "Barabbas" (in vv. 16 and 17) is rather sparse, being restricted virtually to the Caesarean text (Θ f^{1} 700* pc sy^{s}), the omission of the Lord's name in apposition to "Barabbas" is such a strongly motivated reading that it can hardly be original. There is no good explanation for a scribe unintentionally adding Ἰησοῦν (Iēsoun) before Βαραββᾶν (Barabban), especially since Barabbas is mentioned first in each verse (thus dittography is ruled out). Further, the addition of τὸν λεγόμενον Χριστόν (ton legomenon Christon, "who is called Christ") to Ἰησοῦν in v. 17 makes better sense if Barabbas is also called "Jesus" (otherwise, a mere "Jesus" would have been a sufficient appellation to distinguish the two).

[16] tc Again, as in v. 16, the name "Jesus" is supplied before "Barabbas" in Θ f^{1} 700* pc sy^{s} Or^{mss} (Θ 700* lack the article τόν [ton] before Βαραββᾶν [Barabban]). The same argument for accepting the inclusion of "Jesus" as original in the previous verse applies here as well.

sn See the note on Christ in 1:16.

[18] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[19] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[20] tn Or "the judge's seat."

sn The judgment seat (βῆμα, bēma) was a raised platform mounted by steps and usually furnished with a seat. It was used by officials in addressing an assembly or making official pronouncements, often of a judicial nature.

[21] tn The word "message" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

him:[1] "Have nothing to do with that innocent man;[2] I have suffered greatly as a result of a dream[3] about him today." 27:20 But the chief priests and the elders persuaded the crowds to ask for Barabbas and to have Jesus killed. 27:21 The[4] governor asked them, "Which of the two do you want me to release for you?" And they said, "Barabbas!" 27:22 Pilate said to them, "Then what should I do with Jesus who is called the Christ?"[5] They all said, "Crucify him!"[6] 27:23 He asked, "Why? What wrong has he done?" But they shouted more insistently, "Crucify him!"

Jesus is Condemned and Mocked

27:24 When[7] Pilate saw that he could do nothing, but that instead a riot was starting, he took some water, washed his hands before the crowd and said, "I am innocent of this man's blood. You take care of it yourselves!"[8] 27:25 In[9] reply all the people said, "Let his blood be on us and on our children!" 27:26 Then he released Barabbas for them. But after he had Jesus flogged,[10] he handed him over[11] to be crucified.[12] 27:27 Then the governor's soldiers took Jesus into the governor's residence[13] and gathered the whole cohort[14] around him. 27:28 They[15] stripped him and put a scarlet robe[16] around him, 27:29 and after braiding[17] a crown of thorns,[18] they put it on his head. They[19] put a staff[20] in his right hand, and kneeling down before him, they mocked him:[21] "Hail, king of the Jews!"[22] 27:30 They[23] spat on him and took the staff[24] and struck him repeatedly[25] on the head. 27:31 When[26] they had mocked him, they stripped him of the robe and put his own clothes back on him. Then[27] they led him away to crucify him.

The Crucifixion

4 tn Grk "answering, the governor said to them." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "Him – be crucified!" The third person imperative is difficult to translate because English has no corresponding third person form for the imperative. The traditional translation "Let him be crucified" sounds as if the crowd is giving consent or permission. "He must be crucified" is closer, but it is more natural in English to convert the passive to active and simply say "Crucify him."

sn See the note on crucified in 20:19.

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 sn You take care of it yourselves! Compare the response of the chief priests and elders to Judas in 27:4. The expression is identical except that in 27:4 it is singular and here it is plural.

9 tn Grk "answering, all the people said." This construction is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

10 tn The Greek term φραγελλόω (phragellōō) refers to flogging. BDAG 1064 s.v. states, "flog, scourge, a punishment inflicted on slaves and provincials after a sentence of death had been pronounced on them. So in the case of Jesus before the crucifixion...Mt 27:26; Mk 15:15."

sn A Roman flogging (traditionally, "scourging") was an excruciating punishment. The victim was stripped of his clothes and bound to a post with his hands fastened above him (or sometimes he was thrown to the ground). Guards standing on either side of the victim would incessantly beat him with a whip (flagellum) made out of leather with pieces of lead and bone inserted into its ends. While the Jews only allowed 39 lashes, the Romans had no such limit; many people who received such a beating died as a result. See C. Schneider, TDNT, 515-19.

11 tn Or "delivered him up."

12 sn See the note on crucified in 20:19.

13 tn Or "into their headquarters"; Grk "into the praetorium."

sn The governor's residence (Grk "praetorium") was the Roman governor's official residence. The one in Jerusalem may have been Herod's palace in the western part of the city, or the fortress Antonia northwest of the temple area.

14 sn A Roman cohort was a tenth of a legion, about 500-600 soldiers.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

16 sn The scarlet robe probably refers to a military garment which had the color of royal purple, and thus resembled a king's robe. The soldiers did this to Jesus as a form of mockery in view of the charges that he was a king.

17 tn Or "weaving."

18 sn The crown may have been made from palm spines or some other thorny plant common in Israel. In placing the crown of thorns on his head, the soldiers were unwittingly symbolizing God's curse on humanity (cf. Gen 3:18) being placed on Jesus. Their purpose would have been to mock Jesus' claim to be a king; the crown of thorns would have represented the "radiant corona" portrayed on the heads of rulers on coins and other artifacts in the 1st century.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

20 tn Or "a reed." The Greek term can mean either "staff" or "reed." See BDAG 502 s.v. κάλαμος 2.

21 tn Grk "they mocked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated.

22 tn Or "Long live the King of the Jews!"

sn The statement Hail, King of the Jews! is a mockery patterned after the Romans' cry of Ave, Caesar ("Hail, Caesar!").

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

24 tn Or "the reed."

25 tn The verb here has been translated as an iterative imperfect.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

29 tn Or "conscripted"; or "pressed into service."

30 sn Jesus was beaten severely with a whip before this (the prelude to crucifixion, known to the Romans as verberatio, mentioned in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15; John 19:1), so he would have been weak from trauma and loss of blood. Apparently he was unable to bear the cross himself, so Simon was conscripted to help (in all probability this was only the crossbeam, called in Latin the patibulum, since the upright beam usually remained in the ground at the place of execution). Cyrene was located in North Africa where Tripoli is today. Nothing more is known about this Simon. Mark 15:21 names him as father of two people apparently known to Mark's audience.

31 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

to a place called Golgotha[1] (which means "Place of the Skull")[2] 27:34 and offered Jesus[3] wine mixed with gall to drink.[4] But after tasting it, he would not drink it. 27:35 When[5] they had crucified[6] him, they divided his clothes by throwing dice.[7] 27:36 Then they sat down and kept guard over him there. 27:37 Above[8] his head they put the charge against him,[9] which read:[10] "This is Jesus, the king of the Jews." 27:38 Then two outlaws were crucified with him, one on his right and one on his left. 27:39 Those[11] who passed by defamed him, shaking their heads 27:40 and saying, "You who can destroy the temple and rebuild it in three days, save yourself![12] If you are God's Son, come down[13] from the cross!" 27:41 In[14] the same way even the chief priests – together with the experts in the law[15] and elders[16] – were mocking him:[17] 27:42 "He saved others, but he cannot save himself! He is the king of Israel! If he comes down[18] now from the cross, we will believe in him! 27:43 He trusts in God – let God, if he wants to, deliver him now[19] because he said, 'I am God's Son'!" 27:44 The[20] robbers who were crucified with him also spoke abusively to him.[21]

Jesus' Death

27:45 Now from noon until three,[22] darkness came over all the land.[23] 27:46 At[24] about three o'clock Jesus shouted with a loud voice,[25] "Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani?" that is, "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?"[26] 27:47 When[27] some of the bystanders heard it, they said, "This man is calling for Elijah." 27:48 Immediately[28] one of them ran and got a sponge, filled it with sour wine,[29] put it on a stick,[30] and gave it to him to drink. 27:49 But the rest said, "Leave him alone! Let's see if Elijah will come to save him."[31] 27:50 Then Jesus cried out again with a loud voice and gave up his spirit. 27:51 Just then[32] the temple curtain[33] was torn in two,

1 tn This is an Aramaic name; see John 19:17.

2 sn A place called Golgotha (which means "Place of the Skull"). This location is north and just outside of Jerusalem. The hill on which it is located protruded much like a skull, giving the place its name. The Latin word for the Greek term κρανίον (kranion) is calvaria, from which the English word "Calvary" is derived (cf. Luke 23:33 in the KJV).

3 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 sn It is difficult to say for certain who gave Jesus this drink of wine mixed with gall (e.g., the executioner, or perhaps women from Jerusalem). In any case, whoever gave it to him most likely did so in order to relieve his pain, but Jesus was unwilling to take it.

5 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

6 sn See the note on crucified in 20:19.

7 tn Grk "by throwing the lot" (probably by using marked pebbles or broken pieces of pottery). A modern equivalent, "throwing dice," was chosen here because of its association with gambling. According to L&N 6.219 a term for "dice" is particularly appropriate.

sn An allusion to Ps 22:18.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

9 sn Mention of the inscription is an important detail, because the inscription would normally give the reason for the execution. It shows that Jesus was executed for claiming to be a king. It was also probably written with irony from the executioners' point of view.

10 tn Grk "was written."

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 sn There is rich irony in the statements of those who were passing by, "save yourself!" and "come down from the cross!" In summary, they wanted Jesus to come down from the cross and save his physical life, but it was indeed his staying on the cross and giving his physical life that led to the fact that they could experience a resurrection from death to life.

13 tc ‡ Many important witnesses (ℵ* A D pc it sy$^{(s),p}$) read καί (kai, here with the force of "then") before κατάβηθι (katabēthi, "come down"). The shorter reading may well be due to homoioarcton, but judging by the diverse external evidence (ℵ^{2} B L W Θ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) it is equally possible that the shorter reading is original (and is so considered for this translation). NA^{27} puts the καί in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

15 tn Or "with the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 2:4.

16 tn Only "chief priests" is in the nominative case; this sentence structure attempts to capture this emphasis.

17 tn Grk "Mocking him, the chief priests...said."

18 tn Here the aorist imperative καταβάτω (katabatō) has been translated as a conditional imperative. This fits the pattern of other conditional imperatives (imperative + καί + future indicative) outlined by ExSyn 489.

19 sn An allusion to Ps 22:8.

20 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

21 sn Matthew's wording suggests that both of the criminals spoke abusively to him. If so, one of them quickly changed his attitude toward Jesus (see Luke 23:40-43).

22 tn Grk "from the sixth hour to the ninth hour."

23 sn This imagery has parallels to the Day of the Lord: Joel 2:10; Amos 8:9; Zeph 1:15.

24 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

25 tn Grk "with a loud voice, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant here in contemporary English and has not been translated.

26 sn A quotation from Ps 22:1.

27 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

28 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

29 sn Sour wine refers to cheap wine that was called in Latin posca, a cheap vinegar wine diluted heavily with water. It was the drink of slaves and soldiers, and was probably there for the soldiers who had performed the crucifixion.

30 tn Grk "a reed."

31 tc Early and important mss (ℵ B C L Γ pc) have another sentence at the end of this verse: "And another [soldier] took a spear and pierced him in the side, and water and blood flowed out." This comment finds such a strong parallel in John 19:34 that it was undoubtedly lifted from the Fourth Gospel by early, well-meaning scribes and inserted into Matt 27:49. Consequently, even though the support for the shorter reading (A D W Θ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy sa bo) is not nearly as impressive, internal considerations on its behalf are compelling.

32 tn Grk "And behold."

33 tn The referent of this term, καταπέτασμα (katapetasma), is not entirely clear. It could refer to the curtain separating the holy of holies from the holy place (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.5 [5.219]), or it could refer to one at the entrance of the temple court (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.4 [5.212]). Many argue that the inner curtain is meant because another term, κάλυμμα (kalumma), is also used for the outer curtain. Others see a reference to the outer curtain as more likely because of the public nature of this sign. Either way, the symbolism means that access to God has been opened up. It also pictures a judgment that includes the sacrifices.

from top to bottom. The[1] earth shook and the rocks were split apart. 27:52 And tombs were opened, and the bodies of many saints who had died[2] were raised. 27:53 (They[3] came out of the tombs after his resurrection and went into the holy city and appeared to many people.) 27:54 Now when the centurion[4] and those with him who were guarding Jesus saw the earthquake and what took place, they were extremely terrified and said, "Truly this one was God's Son!" 27:55 Many[5] women who had followed Jesus from Galilee and given him support[6] were also there, watching from a distance. 27:56 Among them were Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joseph, and the mother of the sons of Zebedee.

Jesus' Burial

27:57 Now[7] when it was evening, there came a rich man from Arimathea, named Joseph, who was also a disciple of Jesus.[8] 27:58 He went to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus.[9] Then Pilate ordered that it be given to him. 27:59 Joseph[10] took the body, wrapped it in a clean linen cloth,[11] 27:60 and placed it[12] in his own new tomb that he had cut in the rock.[13] Then he rolled a great stone across the entrance[14] of the tomb and went away. 27:61 (Now Mary Magdalene and the other Mary were sitting there, opposite the tomb.)

The Guard at the Tomb

27:62 The[15] next day (which is after the day of preparation) the chief priests and the Pharisees[16] assembled before Pilate 27:63 and said, "Sir, we remember that while that deceiver was still alive he said, 'After three days I will rise again.' 27:64 So give orders to secure the tomb until the third day. Otherwise his disciples may come and steal his body[17] and say to the people, 'He has been raised from the dead,' and the last deception will be worse than the first." 27:65 Pilate said to them, "Take[18] a guard of soldiers. Go and make it as secure as you can." 27:66 So[19] they went with the soldiers[20] of the guard and made the tomb secure by sealing the stone.

The Resurrection

28:1 Now after the Sabbath, at dawn on the first day of the week, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to look at the tomb. 28:2 Suddenly there was a severe earthquake, for an angel of the Lord[21] descending from heaven came and rolled away the stone and sat on it. 28:3 His[22] appearance was like lightning, and his clothes were white as snow. 28:4 The[23] guards were shaken and became like dead men because they were so afraid of him. 28:5 But the angel said[24] to the women, "Do not be afraid; I know[25] that you are looking for Jesus, who was crucified.[26] 28:6 He is not here, for he has been raised,[27] just as he said. Come and see the place where he[28] was lying. 28:7 Then go quickly and tell his disciples, 'He has been raised from the dead. He[29] is going ahead of you into Galilee.

[1] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[2] tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for the death of a believer.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[4] sn See the note on the word centurion in Matt 8:5.

[5] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[6] tn Grk "and ministered to him."

sn Cf. Luke 8:3.

[7] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[8] sn Though some dispute that Joseph of Arimathea was a disciple of Jesus, his actions regarding Jesus' burial suggest otherwise.

[9] sn Asking for the body of Jesus was indeed a bold move on the part of Joseph of Arimathea, for it clearly and openly identified him with a man who had just been condemned and executed, namely, Jesus. His faith is exemplary, especially for someone who was a member of the council that handed Jesus over for crucifixion (cf. Mark 15:43, Luke 23:51). He did this because he sought to give Jesus an honorable burial.

[10] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

[11] tn The term σινδών (sindōn) can refer to a linen cloth used either for clothing or for burial.

[12] tc ‡ αὐτό (auto, "it") is found after ἔθηκεν (ethēken, "placed") in the majority of witnesses, including many important ones, though it seems to be motivated by a need for clarification and cannot therefore easily explain the rise of the shorter reading (which is read by ℵ L Θ f^{13} 33 892 pc). Regardless of which reading is original (though with a slight preference for the shorter reading), English style requires the pronoun. NA^{27} includes αὐτό here, no doubt due to the overwhelming external attestation.

[14] tn Or "to the door," "against the door."

[15] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[16] sn See the note on Pharisees in 3:7.

[17] tn Grk "him."

[18] tn Grk "You have a guard."

[19] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Pilate's order.

[20] tn Grk "with the guard." The words "soldiers of the" have been supplied in the translation to prevent "guard" from being misunderstood as a single individual.

[21] tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 1:20.

[22] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[23] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[24] tn Grk "But answering, the angel said." This is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

[25] tn Grk "for I know."

[26] sn See the note on crucified in 20:19.

[27] tn The verb here is passive (ἠγέρθη, ēgerthē). This "divine passive" (see ExSyn 437-38) points to the fact that Jesus was raised by God.

[28] tc Expansions on the text, especially when the Lord is the subject, are a common scribal activity. In this instance, since the subject is embedded in the verb, three major variants have emerged to make the subject explicit: ὁ κύριος (ho kurios, "the Lord"; A C D L W 0148 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat), τὸ σῶμα τοῦ κυρίου (to sōma tou kuriou, "the body of the Lord"; 1424 pc), and ὁ Ἰησοῦς (ho Iēsous, "Jesus"; Φ). The reading with no explicit subject, however, is superior on both internal and external grounds, being supported by ℵ B Θ 33 892* pc co.

[29] tn Grk "And behold he." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

You will see him there.' Listen, I have told you!" 28:8 So[1] they left the tomb quickly, with fear and great joy, and ran to tell his disciples. 28:9 But[2] Jesus met them, saying, "Greetings!" They[3] came to him, held on to his feet and worshiped him. 28:10 Then Jesus said to them, "Do not be afraid. Go and tell my brothers to go to Galilee. They will see me there."

The Guards' Report

28:11 While[4] they were going, some[5] of the guard went into the city and told the chief priests everything that had happened. 28:12 After[6] they had assembled with the elders and formed a plan, they gave a large sum of money to the soldiers, 28:13 telling them, "You are to say, 'His disciples came at night and stole his body[7] while we were asleep.' 28:14 If[8] this matter is heard before the governor,[9] we will satisfy him[10] and keep you out of trouble."[11] 28:15 So they took the money and did as they were instructed. And this story is told among the Jews to this day.[12]

The Great Commission

28:16 So[13] the eleven disciples went to Galilee to the mountain Jesus had designated. 28:17 When[14] they saw him, they worshiped him,[15] but some doubted.[16] 28:18 Then Jesus came up and said to them,[17] "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. 28:19 Therefore go[18] and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit,[19] 28:20 teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And remember,[20] I am with you[21] always, to the end of the age."[22]

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the angel's instructions to tell the disciples.

2 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate that the return of the women from the tomb was interrupted by this appearance of Jesus. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

3 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

4 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "behold, some of the guard." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

6 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "him."

8 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

9 tn Here ἐπί (epi) followed by the genitive = "before," especially in the language of lawsuits (BDAG 363 s.v. 3).

10 tc ‡ αὐτόν (auton, "him") is found after πείσομεν (peisomen, "we will satisfy") in the majority of witnesses, though it seems to be motivated by a need for clarification and cannot therefore easily explain the rise of the shorter reading (which is found in ℵ B Θ 33 pc). Nevertheless, English style requires the pronoun. NA^{27} includes the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

11 tn Grk "and you will not have to be worried" = "we will keep you out of trouble."

12 tc ‡ The word ἡμέρας (hēmeras, "day") is found after σήμερον (sēmeron, "today, this [day]") in some early and important witnesses (B D L Θ lat), but may be a clarifying (or perhaps redundant) note. The shorter reading (found in ℵ A W 0148^{vid} $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐) is thus preferred. NA^{27} includes the word in brackets, indicating reservations about its authenticity.

13 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' instructions in v. 10.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

15 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 tn The Greek text reads here οἱ δὲ ἐδίστασαν (hoi de edistasan). Some scholars argue that the article is functioning like a personal pronoun, thus "they doubted" (e.g., D. A. Hagner, Matthew [WBC], 2:884). If so, then all the disciples would be in view. The translation of the text takes οἱ as an alternative pronoun which has a partitive notion (i.e., some of the disciples doubted, but not all). The difficulty with the personal pronoun view is that there are no examples of it in Matthew in which the same subject immediately precedes with its own verb (as would be the case in "they worshiped...they doubted"). Such, in fact, would be quite awkward, for the article would be unnecessary since the pronominal referent is already embedded in the verb. The only reason for the article here would be to distinguish the subject in some way; but if the same subject is in view, no distinction is being made.

17 tn Grk "coming, Jesus spoke to them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn, "saying") is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

18 tn "Go...baptize...teach" are participles modifying the imperative verb "make disciples." According to ExSyn 645 the first participle (πορευθέντες, poreuthentes, "Go") fits the typical structural pattern for the attendant circumstance participle (aorist participle preceding aorist main verb, with the mood of the main verb usually imperative or indicative) and thus picks up the mood (imperative in this case) from the main verb (μαθητεύσατε, mathēteusate, "make disciples"). This means that semantically the action of "going" is commanded, just as "making disciples" is. As for the two participles that follow the main verb (βαπτίζοντες, baptizontes, "baptizing"; and διδάσκοντες, didaskontes, "teaching"), these do not fit the normal pattern for attendant circumstance participles, since they are present participles and follow the aorist main verb. However, some interpreters do see them as carrying additional imperative force in context. Others regard them as means, manner, or even result.

19 tc Although some scholars have denied that the trinitarian baptismal formula in the Great Commission was a part of the original text of Matthew, there is no MS support for their contention. F. C. Conybeare, "The Eusebian Form of the Text of Mt. 28:19," ZNW 2 (1901): 275-88, based his view on a faulty reading of Eusebius' quotations of this text. The shorter reading has also been accepted, on other grounds, by a few other scholars. For discussion (and refutation of the conjecture that removes this baptismal formula), see B. J. Hubbard, The Matthean Redaction of a Primitive Apostolic Commissioning (SBLDS 19), 163-64, 167-75; and Jane Schaberg, The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit (SBLDS 61), 27-29.

20 tn The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has been translated here as "remember" (BDAG 468 s.v. 1.c).

21 sn I am with you. Matthew's Gospel begins with the prophecy that the Savior's name would be "Emmanuel, that is, 'God with us,'" (1:23, in which the author has linked Isa 7:14 and 8:8, 10 together) and it ends with Jesus' promise to be with his disciples forever. The Gospel of Matthew thus forms an inclusio about Jesus in his relationship to his people that suggests his deity.

22 tc Most MSS (A^{c}Θ f^{13} 𝔐 it sy) have ἀμήν (amēn, "amen") at the end of v. 20. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, no good reason exists for the omission of the particle in significant and early witnesses such as ℵ A* B D W f^{1} 33 al lat sa.

Mark

The Ministry of John the Baptist

1:1 The beginning of the gospel[1] of Jesus Christ,[2] the Son of God.[3] 1:2 As it is written in Isaiah the prophet,[4]

"Look, I am sending my messenger ahead of you, who will prepare your way,[5]
1:3 the voice of one shouting in the wilderness,
'Prepare the way for the Lord,
make[6] his paths straight.'"[7]

1:4 In the wilderness[8] John the baptizer[9] began preaching a baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins.[10] 1:5 People[11] from the whole Judean countryside and all of Jerusalem[12] were going out to him, and he was baptizing them[13] in the Jordan River as they confessed their sins. 1:6 John wore a garment made of camel's hair with a leather belt around his waist, and he ate locusts and wild honey.[14]

1 sn By the time Mark wrote, the word gospel had become a technical term referring to the preaching about Jesus Christ and God's saving power accomplished through him for all who believe (cf. Rom 1:16).

2 tn The genitive in the phrase τοῦ εὐαγγελίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ (tou euangeliou Iēsou Christou, "the gospel of Jesus Christ") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("the gospel which Jesus brings [or proclaims]") or an objective genitive ("the gospel about Jesus Christ"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, an interplay between the two concepts is intended: The gospel which Jesus proclaims is in fact the gospel about himself.

3 tc ℵ* Θ 28 *l*2211 pc sa^{ms} Or lack υἱοῦ θεοῦ (huiou theou, "son of God"), while virtually all the rest of the witnesses have the words (A $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 also have τοῦ [tou] before θεοῦ), so the evidence seems to argue for the authenticity of the words. Most likely, the words were omitted by accident in some witnesses, since the last four words of v. 1, in uncial script, would have looked like this: ΙΥΧΡΥΥΥΘΥ. With all the successive *upsilon*s an accidental deletion is likely. Further, the inclusion of υἱοῦ θεοῦ here finds its complement in 15:39, where the centurion claims that Jesus was υἱὸς θεοῦ (huios theou, "son of God"). Even though ℵ is in general one of the best NT mss, its testimony is not quite as preeminent in this situation. There are several other instances in which it breaks up chains of genitives ending in ου (cf., e.g., Acts 28:31; Col 2:2; Heb 12:2; Rev 12:14; 15:7; 22:1), showing that there is a significantly higher possibility of accidental scribal omission in a case like this. This christological inclusio parallels both Matthew ("Immanuel…God with us" in 1:23/"I am with you" in 28:20) and John ("the Word was God" in 1:1/"My Lord and my God" in 20:28), probably reflecting nascent christological development and articulation.

sn The first verse of Mark's Gospel appears to function as a title: The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. It is not certain, however, whether Mark intended it to refer to the entire Gospel, to the ministry of John the Baptist, or through the use of the term beginning (ἀρχή, archē) to allude to Genesis 1:1 (in the Greek Bible, LXX). The most likely option is that the statement as a whole is an allusion to Genesis 1:1 and that Mark is saying that with the "good news" of the coming of Christ, God is commencing a "new beginning."

4 tc Instead of "in Isaiah the prophet" the majority of mss read "in the prophets" (A W f^{13} 𝔐 Ir^{lat}). Except for Irenaeus (2nd century), the earliest evidence for this is thus from the 5th (or possibly late 4th) century (W A). The difficulty of Irenaeus is that he wrote in Greek but has been preserved largely in Latin. His Greek remains have "in Isaiah the prophet." Only the later Latin translation has "in the prophets." The KJV reading is thus in harmony with the majority of late mss. On the other hand, the witnesses for "in Isaiah the prophet" (either with the article before Isaiah or not) are early and geographically widespread: ℵ B D L Δ Θ f^{1} 33 565 700 892 1241 2427 al sy^{p} co Ir. This evidence runs deep into the 2nd century, is widespread, and is found in the most important Alexandrian, Western, and Caesarean witnesses. The "Isaiah" reading has a better external pedigree in every way. It has the support of the earliest and best witnesses from all the texttypes that matter. Moreover it is the harder reading, since the quotation in the first part of the verse appears to be from Exod 23:20 and Mal 3:1, with the quotation from Isa 40:3 coming in the next verse. The reading of the later mss seems motivated by a desire to resolve this difficulty.

5 sn The opening lines of the quotation are from Exod 23:20; Mal 3:1. Here is the forerunner who points the way to the arrival of God's salvation. His job is to prepare and guide the people, as the cloud did for Israel in the desert.

6 sn This call to "make his paths straight" in this context is probably an allusion to preparation through repentance.

7 sn A quotation from Isa 40:3.

8 tn Or "desert."

9 tn While Matthew and Luke consistently use the noun βαπτίστης (baptistēs, "[the] Baptist") to refer to John, as a kind of a title, Mark prefers the substantival participle ὁ βαπτίζων (ho baptizōn, "the one who baptizes, the baptizer") to describe him (only twice does he use the noun [Mark 6:25; 8:28]).

10 sn A baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins was a call for preparation for the arrival of the Lord's salvation. To participate in this baptism was a recognition of the need for God's forgiveness with a sense that one needed to live differently as a response to it.

11 tn Grk "And the whole Judean countryside." Mark uses the Greek conjunction καί (kai) at numerous places in his Gospel to begin sentences and paragraphs. This practice is due to Semitic influence and reflects in many cases the use of the Hebrew ו (vav) which is used in OT narrative, much as it is here, to carry the narrative along. Because in contemporary English style it is not acceptable to begin every sentence with "and," καί was often left untranslated or rendered as "now," "so," "then," or "but" depending on the context. When left untranslated it has not been noted. When given an alternative translation, this is usually indicated by a note.

13 tn Grk "they were being baptized by him." The passive construction has been rendered as active in the translation for the sake of English style.

14 sn John's lifestyle was in stark contrast to many of the religious leaders of Jerusalem who lived in relative ease and luxury. While his clothing and diet were indicative of someone who lived in the desert, they also depicted him in his role as God's prophet (cf. Zech 13:4); his appearance is similar to the Prophet Elijah (2 Kgs 1:8). Locusts and wild honey were a common diet in desert regions and locusts (dried insects) are listed in Lev 11:22 among the "clean" foods.

1:7 He proclaimed,[1] "One more powerful than I am is coming after me; I am not worthy[2] to bend down and untie the strap[3] of his sandals. 1:8 I baptize you with water, but he will baptize you with the Holy Spirit."

The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus

1:9 Now[4] in those days Jesus came from Nazareth[5] in Galilee and was baptized by John in the Jordan River.[6] 1:10 And just as Jesus[7] was coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens[8] splitting apart and the Spirit descending on him like a dove.[9] 1:11 And a voice came from heaven: "You are my one dear Son;[10] in you I take great delight."[11] 1:12 The Spirit immediately drove him into the wilderness. 1:13 He was in the wilderness forty days,[12] enduring temptations from Satan. He[13] was with wild animals, and angels were ministering to his needs.[14]

Preaching in Galilee and the Call of the Disciples

1:14 Now after John was imprisoned,[15] Jesus went into Galilee and proclaimed the gospel[16] of God.[17] 1:15 He[18] said, "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God[19] is near. Repent and believe the gospel!" 1:16 As he went along the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew, Simon's brother, casting a net into the sea (for they were fishermen).[20] 1:17 Jesus said to them, "Follow me, and I will turn you into fishers of people."[21] 1:18 They left their nets immediately and followed him.[22] 1:19 Going on a little farther, he saw James, the son of Zebedee, and John his

---

1 tn Grk "proclaimed, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "of whom I am not worthy."

sn The humility of John is evident in the statement I am not worthy. This was considered one of the least worthy tasks of a slave, and John did not consider himself worthy to do even that for the one to come, despite the fact he himself was a prophet.

3 tn The term refers to the leather strap or thong used to bind a sandal. This is often viewed as a collective singular and translated as a plural, "the straps of his sandals," but it may be more emphatic to retain the singular here.

4 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

5 map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

6 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

7 tn Grk "and immediately coming up out of the water, he saw." The present participle has been translated temporally, with the subject (Jesus) specified for clarity.

8 tn Or "sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The same word is used in v. 11.

9 sn The phrase like a dove is a descriptive comparison. The Spirit is not a dove, but descended like one in some sort of bodily representation.

10 tn Grk "my beloved Son," or "my Son, the beloved [one]." The force of ἀγαπητός (agapētos) is often "pertaining to one who is the only one of his or her class, but at the same time is particularly loved and cherished" (L&N 58.53; cf. also BDAG 7 s.v. 1).

11 tn Or "with you I am well pleased."

sn The allusions in the remarks of the text recall Ps 2:7a; Isa 42:1 and either Isa 41:8 or, less likely, Gen 22:12,16. God is marking out Jesus as his chosen one (the meaning of "[in you I take] great delight"), but it may well be that this was a private experience that only Jesus and John saw and heard (cf. John 1:32-33).

12 sn The forty days may allude to the experience of Moses (Exod 34:28), Elijah (1 Kgs 19:8, 15), or David and Goliath (1 Sam 17:16).

13 tn Grk "And he."

14 tn Grk "were serving him," "were ministering to him."

15 tn Or "arrested," "taken into custody" (see L&N 37.12).

16 tc Most witnesses, especially later ones (A D W 𝔐 lat), have τῆς βασιλείας (tēs basileias) between τὸ εὐαγγέλιον (to euangelion) and τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou): "the gospel of the kingdom of God." On the one hand, it is perhaps possible that τῆς βασιλείας was omitted to conform the expression to that which is found in the epistles (cf. Rom 1:1; 15:16; 2 Cor 11:7; 1 Thess 2:2, 8, 9; 1 Pet 4:17). On the other hand, this expression, "the gospel of God," occurs nowhere else in the Gospels, while "the gospel of the kingdom" is a Matthean expression (Matt 4:23; 9:35; 24:14), and "kingdom of God" is pervasive in the synoptic Gospels (occurring over 50 times). Scribes would thus be more prone to add τῆς βασιλείας than to omit it. Further, the external support for the shorter reading (𝔓[45] B L Θ $f^{1,13}$ 28* 33 565 579 892 2427 sa) is significantly stronger than that for the longer reading. There is little doubt, therefore, that the shorter reading is authentic.

17 tn The genitive in the phrase τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ θεοῦ (to euangelion tou theou, "the gospel of God") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("the gospel which God brings") or an objective genitive ("the gospel about God"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, an interplay between the two concepts is intended: The gospel which God brings is in fact the gospel about himself.

18 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

19 sn The kingdom of God is a reference to the sovereign activity of God as he rules over his creation and brings his plans to realization.

20 sn This is a parenthetical comment by the author.

21 tn The Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, thus "people."

sn The kind of fishing envisioned was net – not line – fishing (cf. v. 16; cf. also BDAG 55 s.v. ἀμφιβάλλω, ἀμφίβληστρον) which involved a circular net that had heavy weights around its perimeter. The occupation of fisherman was labor-intensive. The imagery of using a lure and a line (and waiting for the fish to strike) is thus foreign to this text. Rather, the imagery of a fisherman involved much strain, long hours, and often little results. Jesus' point may have been one or more of the following: the strenuousness of evangelism, the work ethic that it required, persistence and dedication to the task (often in spite of minimal results), the infinite value of the new "catch" (viz., people), and perhaps an eschatological theme of snatching people from judgment (cf. W. L. Lane, Mark [NICNT], 67). If this last motif is in view, then catching people is the opposite of catching fish: The fish would be caught, killed, cooked, and eaten; people would be caught so as to remove them from eternal destruction and to give them new life.

22 sn The expression followed him pictures discipleship, which means that to learn from Jesus is to follow him as the guiding priority of one's life.

brother in their[1] boat mending nets. 1:20 Immediately he called them, and they left their father Zebedee in the boat with the hired men and followed him.

Jesus' Authority

1:21 Then[2] they went to Capernaum.[3] When the Sabbath came,[4] Jesus[5] went into the synagogue[6] and began to teach. 1:22 The people there[7] were amazed by his teaching, because he taught them like one who had authority,[8] not like the experts in the law.[9] 1:23 Just then there was a man in their synagogue with an unclean spirit,[10] and he cried out,[11] 1:24 "Leave us alone,[12] Jesus the Nazarene! Have you come to destroy us? I know who you are – the Holy One[13] of God!" 1:25 But[14] Jesus rebuked him:[15] "Silence! Come out of him!"[16] 1:26 After throwing him into convulsions, the unclean spirit cried out with a loud voice and came out of him. 1:27 They were all amazed so that they asked each other, "What is this? A new teaching with authority! He even commands the unclean spirits and they obey him." 1:28 So[17] the news about him spread quickly throughout all the region around Galilee.

Healings at Simon's House

1:29 Now[18] as soon as they left the synagogue,[19] they entered Simon and Andrew's house, with James and John. 1:30 Simon's mother-in-law was lying down, sick with a fever, so[20] they spoke to Jesus[21] at once about her. 1:31 He came and raised her up by gently taking her hand. Then the fever left her and she began to serve[22] them. 1:32 When it was evening, after sunset, they brought to him all who were sick and demon-possessed. 1:33 The whole town

[1] tn Or "a boat." The phrase ἐν τῷ πλοίῳ (en tō ploiō) can either refer to a generic boat, some boat (as it seems to do in Matt 4:21); or it can refer to "their" boat, implying possession. Mark assumes a certain preunderstanding on the part of his readers about the first four disciples and hence the translation "their boat" is justified (cf. also v. 20 in which the "hired men" indicates that Zebedee's family owned the boats).

[2] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[3] sn Capernaum was a town located on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region, and it became the hub of operations for Jesus' Galilean ministry.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

[4] tn The Greek word εὐθύς (euthus, often translated "immediately" or "right away") has not been translated here. It sometimes occurs with a weakened, inferential use (BDAG 406 s.v. 2), not contributing significantly to the flow of the narrative. For further discussion, see R. J. Decker, Temporal Deixis of the Greek Verb in the Gospel of Mark with Reference to Verbal Aspect (SBG 10), 73-77.

[5] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] sn The synagogue was a place for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (cf. Luke 8:41). Though its origin is not entirely clear, it seems to have arisen in the postexilic community during the intertestamental period. A town could establish a synagogue if there were at least ten men. In normative Judaism of the NT period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present. (See the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2.) First came the law, then the prophets, then someone was asked to speak on the texts. Jesus undoubtedly took the opportunity on this occasion to speak about his person and mission, and its relationship to Old Testament fulfillment.

[7] tn Grk "They."

[8] sn Jesus' teaching impressed the hearers with the directness of its claim; he taught with authority. A study of Jewish rabbinic interpretation shows that it was typical to cite a list of authorities to make one's point. Apparently Jesus addressed the issues in terms of his own understanding.

[9] tn Or "the scribes." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

[10] sn Unclean spirit refers to an evil spirit.

[11] tn Grk "he cried out, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[12] tn Grk "What to us and to you?" This is an idiom meaning, "We have nothing to do with one another," or "Why bother us!" The phrase τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί (ti hēmin kai soi) is Semitic in origin, though it made its way into colloquial Greek (BDAG 275 s.v. ἐγώ). The equivalent Hebrew expression in the OT had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12, 2 Chr 35:21, 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his own, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13, Hos 14:8). Option (1) implies hostility, while option (2) merely implies disengagement. BDAG suggests the following as glosses for this expression: What have I to do with you? What have we in common? Leave me alone! Never mind! Hostility between Jesus and the demons is certainly to be understood in this context, hence the translation: "Leave me alone...." For a very similar expression see Lk 8:28 and (in a different context) John 2:4.

[13] sn The confession of Jesus as the Holy One here is significant, coming from an unclean spirit. Jesus, as the Holy One of God, who bears God's Spirit and is the expression of holiness, comes to deal with uncleanness and unholiness.

[14] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[15] tn Grk "rebuked him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

[16] sn The command Come out of him! is an example of Jesus' authority (see v. 32). Unlike other exorcists, Jesus did not use magical incantations nor did he invoke anyone else's name.

[17] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[18] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[19] sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21.

[20] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[21] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn The imperfect verb is taken ingressively here.

gathered by the door. 1:34 So[1] he healed many who were sick with various diseases and drove out many demons.[2] But[3] he would not permit the demons to speak,[4] because they knew him.[5]

Praying and Preaching

1:35 Then[6] Jesus[7] got up early in the morning when it was still very dark, departed, and went out to a deserted place, and there he spent time in prayer.[8] 1:36 Simon and his companions searched for him. 1:37 When they found him, they said, "Everyone is looking for you." 1:38 He replied,[9] "Let us go elsewhere, into the surrounding villages, so that I can preach there too. For that is what I came out here to do."[10] 1:39 So[11] he went into all of Galilee preaching in their synagogues[12] and casting out demons.

Cleansing a Leper

1:40 Now[13] a leper[14] came to him and fell to his knees, asking for help. "If[15] you are willing, you can make me clean," he said. 1:41 Moved with compassion,[16] Jesus[17] stretched out his hand and touched[18] him, saying, "I am willing. Be clean!" 1:42 The leprosy left him at once, and he was clean. 1:43 Immediately Jesus[19] sent the man[20] away with a very strong warning. 1:44 He told him,[21] "See that you do not say anything to anyone,[22] but go, show yourself to a priest, and bring the offering that Moses commanded[23] for your cleansing, as a testimony to them."[24] 1:45 But as the man[25] went out he began to announce it publicly and spread the story widely, so that Jesus[26] was no longer able to enter any town openly but stayed outside in remote places.

1 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

2 sn Note how the author distinguishes healing from exorcism here, implying that the two are not identical.

3 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

4 sn Why Jesus would not permit the demons to speak is much discussed. Two possibilities are (1) the mere source of the testimony (demonic) and (2) that the title, with its political implications, may have had elements that Jesus wished to avoid until the full nature of his mission was clarified.

5 tc The MSS vary on what is read at the end of v. 34. Some have "they knew him to be the Christ," with various Greek constructions (ᾔδεισαν αὐτὸν Χριστὸν εἶναι [ēdeisan auton Christon einai] in B L W Θ f^{1} 28 33^{vid} 565 2427 al; ᾔδεισαν τὸν Χριστὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι [ēdeisan ton Christon auton einai] in [ℵ^{2}] C [f^{13} 700] 892 1241 [1424] pc); codex D has "they knew him and he healed many who were sick with various diseases and drove out many demons," reproducing exactly the first half of the verse. These first two longer readings are predictable expansions to an enticingly brief statement; the fact that there are significant variations on the word order and presence or absence of τόν argues against their authenticity as well. D's reading is a palpable error of sight. The reading adopted in the translation is supported by ℵ A 0130 𝔐 lat. This support, though hardly overwhelming in itself, in combination with strong internal evidence, renders the shorter reading fairly certain.

6 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn The imperfect προσηύχετο (prosēucheto) implies some duration to the prayer.

9 tn Grk "And he said to them."

10 tn Grk "Because for this purpose I have come forth."

11 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

12 sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

14 sn The ancient term for leprosy covers a wider array of conditions than what we call leprosy today. A leper was totally ostracized from society until he was declared cured (Lev 13:45-46).

15 tn This is a third class condition. The report portrays the leper making no presumptions about whether Jesus will heal him or not.

16 tc The reading found in almost the entire NT MS tradition is σπλαγχνισθείς (splanchnistheis, "moved with compassion"). Codex Bezae (D), {1358}, and a few Latin MSS (a ff^{2} r^{1*}) here read ὀργισθεὶς (orgistheis, "moved with anger"). It is more difficult to account for a change from "moved with compassion" to "moved with anger" than it is for a copyist to soften "moved with anger" to "moved with compassion," making the decision quite difficult. B. M. Metzger (TCGNT 65) suggests that "moved with anger" could have been prompted by 1:43, "Jesus sent the man away with a very strong warning." It also could have been prompted by the man's seeming doubt about Jesus' desire to heal him (v. 40). As well, it is difficult to explain why scribes would be prone to soften the text here but not in Mark 3:5 or 10:14 (where Jesus is also said to be angry or indignant). Thus, in light of diverse MSS supporting "moved with compassion," and at least a plausible explanation for ὀργισθείς as arising from the other reading, it is perhaps best to adopt σπλαγχνισθείς as the original reading. Nevertheless, a decision in this case is not easy. For the best arguments for ὀργισθείς, however, see M. A. Proctor, "The 'Western' Text of Mark 1:41: A Case for the Angry Jesus" (Ph. D. diss., Baylor University, 1999).

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn Touched. This touch would have rendered Jesus ceremonially unclean (Lev 14:46; also Mishnah, m. Nega'im 3.1; 11.1; 12.1; 13.6-12).

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the man who was healed) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "And after warning him, he immediately sent him away and told him."

22 sn The silence ordered by Jesus was probably meant to last only until the cleansing took place with the priests and sought to prevent Jesus' healings from becoming the central focus of the people's reaction to him. See also 1:34; 3:12; 5:43; 7:36; 8:26, 30; and 9:9 for other cases where Jesus asks for silence concerning him and his ministry.

23 sn On the phrase bring the offering that Moses commanded see Lev 14:1-32.

24 tn Or "as an indictment against them"; or "as proof to the people." This phrase could be taken as referring to a positive witness to the priests, a negative testimony against them, or as a testimony to the community that the man had indeed been cured. In any case, the testimony shows that Jesus is healing and ministering to those in need.

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man who was healed) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

Still[1] they kept coming[2] to him from everywhere.

Healing and Forgiving a Paralytic

2:1 Now[3] after some days, when he returned to Capernaum,[4] the news spread[5] that he was at home. 2:2 So many gathered that there was no longer any room, not even by[6] the door, and he preached the word to them. 2:3 Some people[7] came bringing to him a paralytic, carried by four of them.[8] 2:4 When they were not able to bring him in because of the crowd, they removed the roof[9] above Jesus.[10] Then,[11] after tearing it out, they lowered the stretcher the paralytic was lying on. 2:5 When Jesus saw their[12] faith, he said to the paralytic, "Son, your sins are forgiven."[13] 2:6 Now some of the experts in the law[14] were sitting there, turning these things over in their minds:[15] 2:7 "Why does this man speak this way? He is blaspheming![16] Who can forgive sins but God alone?" 2:8 Now[17] immediately, when Jesus realized in his spirit that they were contemplating such thoughts,[18] he said to them, "Why are you thinking such things in your hearts?[19] 2:9 Which is easier,[20] to say to the paralytic, 'Your sins are forgiven,' or to say, 'Stand up, take your stretcher, and walk'? 2:10 But so that you may know[21] that the Son of Man[22] has authority on earth to forgive sins," – he said to the paralytic[23] – 2:11 "I tell you, stand up, take your stretcher, and go home."[24] 2:12 And immediately the man[25] stood up, took his stretcher, and went out in front of them all. They were all amazed and glorified God, saying, "We have never seen anything like this!"

The Call of Levi; Eating with Sinners

2:13 Jesus[26] went out again by the sea. The whole crowd came to him, and he taught them. 2:14 As he went along, he saw Levi, the son of Alphaeus, sitting at the tax booth.[27] "Follow me," he said to him. And he got up and followed him. 2:15 As Jesus[28] was having a meal[29]

1 tn Grk "and"; καί (kai) often has a mildly contrastive force, as here.

2 tn The imperfect verb has been translated iteratively.

3 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

4 sn Capernaum was a town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

5 tn Grk "it was heard."

6 tn Some translations (e.g., NIV, NLT) take the preposition πρός (pros), which indicates proximity, to mean "outside the door." Others render it as "in front of the door" (TEV, CEV), and still others, "around the door" (NAB). There is some ambiguity inherent in the description here.

7 tn Grk "they"; the referent (some unnamed people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn The redundancy in this verse is characteristic of the author's rougher style.

9 sn A house in 1st century Palestine would have had a flat roof with stairs or a ladder going up. This access was often from the outside of the house.

10 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

12 sn The plural pronoun their makes it clear that Jesus was responding to the faith of the entire group, not just the paralyzed man.

13 sn The passive voice here is a divine passive (ExSyn 437). It is clear that God does the forgiving.

14 tn Or "some of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

15 tn Grk "Reasoning within their hearts."

16 sn Blaspheming meant to say something that dishonored God. To claim divine prerogatives or claim to speak for God when one really does not would be such an act of offense. The remark raised directly the issue of the nature of Jesus' ministry.

17 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the shift from the thoughts of the experts in the law to Jesus' response.

18 tn Grk "they were thus reasoning within themselves."

19 tn Grk "Why are you reasoning these things in your hearts?"

20 sn Which is easier is a reflective kind of question. On the one hand to declare sins are forgiven is easier, since one does not need to see it, unlike telling a paralyzed person to walk. On the other hand, it is harder, because for it to be true one must possess the authority to forgive the sin.

21 sn Now Jesus put the two actions together. The walking of the man would be proof (so that you may know) that his sins were forgiven and that God had worked through Jesus (i.e., the Son of Man).

22 sn The term Son of Man, which is a title in Greek, comes from a pictorial description in Dan 7:13 of one "like a son of man" (i.e., a human being). It is Jesus' favorite way to refer to himself. Jesus did not reveal the background of the term here, which mixes human and divine imagery as the man in Daniel rides a cloud, something only God does. He just used it. It also could be an idiom in Aramaic meaning either "some person" or "me." So there is a little ambiguity in its use here, since its origin is not clear at this point. However, the action makes it clear that Jesus used it to refer to himself here.

23 sn Jesus did not finish his sentence with words but with action, that is, healing the paralytic with an accompanying pronouncement to him directly.

24 tn Grk "to your house."

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man who was healed) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn While "tax office" is sometimes given as a translation for τελώνιον (telōnion, so L&N 57.183), this could give the modern reader a false impression of an indoor office with all its associated furnishings.

sn The tax booth was a booth located on the edge of a city or town to collect taxes for trade. There was a tax booth in Capernaum, which was on the trade route from Damascus to Galilee and the Mediterranean. The "taxes" were collected on produce and goods brought into the area for sale, and were a sort of "sales tax" paid by the seller but obviously passed on to the purchaser in the form of increased prices (L&N 57.183). It was here that Jesus met Levi (also named Matthew [see Matt 9:9]) who was ultimately employed by the Romans, though perhaps more directly responsible to Herod Antipas. It was his job to collect taxes for Rome and he was thus despised by Jews who undoubtedly regarded him as a traitor.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "As he reclined at table."

sn As Jesus was having a meal. 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

in Levi's[1] home, many tax collectors[2] and sinners were eating with Jesus and his disciples, for there were many who followed him. 2:16 When the experts in the law[3] and the Pharisees[4] saw that he was eating with sinners and tax collectors, they said to his disciples, "Why does he eat with tax collectors and sinners?"[5] 2:17 When Jesus heard this he said to them, "Those who are healthy don't need a physician, but those who are sick do.[6] I have not come to call the righteous, but sinners."

2:18 Now[7] John's[8] disciples and the Pharisees[9] were fasting.[10] So[11] they came to Jesus[12] and said, "Why do the disciples of John and the disciples of the Pharisees fast, but your disciples don't fast?" 2:19 Jesus[13] said to them, "The wedding guests[14] cannot fast while the bridegroom[15] is with them, can they?[16] As long as they have the bridegroom with them they do not fast. 2:20 But the days are coming when the bridegroom will be taken from them,[17] and at that time[18] they will fast. 2:21 No one sews a patch of unshrunk cloth on an old garment; otherwise, the patch pulls away from it, the new from the old, and the tear becomes worse. 2:22 And no one pours new wine into old wineskins;[19] otherwise, the wine will burst the skins, and both the wine and the skins will be destroyed. Instead new wine is poured into new wineskins."[20]

Lord of the Sabbath

2:23 Jesus[21] was going through the grain fields on a Sabbath, and his disciples began to pick some heads of wheat[22] as they made their way. 2:24 So[23] the Pharisees[24] said to him, "Look, why are they doing what is against the law on the Sabbath?" 2:25 He said to them, "Have you never read what David did when he was in need and he and his companions were hungry – 2:26 how he entered the house of God when Abiathar was high priest[25] and ate the

[1] tn Grk "his."

[2] sn The tax collectors would bid to collect taxes for the Roman government and then add a surcharge, which they kept. Since tax collectors worked for Rome, they were viewed as traitors to their own people and were not well liked.

[3] tn Or "the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[4] sn Pharisees were members of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

[5] sn The issue here is inappropriate associations. Jews were very careful about personal associations and contact as a matter of ritual cleanliness. Their question borders on an accusation that Jesus is ritually unclean.

[6] sn Jesus' point is that he associates with those who are sick because they have the need and will respond to the offer of help. A person who is healthy (or who thinks mistakenly that he is) will not seek treatment.

[7] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[8] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[9] sn See the note on Pharisees in 2:16.

[10] sn John's disciples and the Pharisees followed typical practices with regard to fasting and prayer. Many Jews fasted regularly (Lev 16:29-34; 23:26-32; Num 29:7-11). The zealous fasted twice a week on Monday and Thursday.

[11] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate that in the narrative this question happened as a result of the fasting of John's disciples and the Pharisees.

[12] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tn Grk "And Jesus."

[14] tn Grk "sons of the wedding hall," an idiom referring to wedding guests, or more specifically, friends of the bridegroom present at the wedding celebration (L&N 11.7).

[15] sn The expression while the bridegroom is with them is an allusion to messianic times (John 3:29; Isa 54:5-6; 62:4-5; 4 Ezra 2:15, 38).

[17] sn The statement the bridegroom will be taken from them is a veiled allusion by Jesus to his death, which he did not make explicit until the incident at Caesarea Philippi in 8:27ff. (cf. 8:31; 9:31; 10:33).

[18] tn Grk "then on that day."

[19] sn Wineskins were bags made of skin or leather, used for storing wine in NT times. As the new wine fermented and expanded, it would stretch the new wineskins. Putting new (unfermented) wine in old wineskins, which had already been stretched, would result in the bursting of the wineskins.

[20] sn The meaning of the saying new wine is poured into new skins is that the presence and teaching of Jesus was something new and signaled the passing of the old. It could not be confined within the old religion of Judaism, but involved the inauguration and consummation of the kingdom of God.

[21] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Or "heads of grain." While the generic term στάχυς (stachus) can refer to the cluster of seeds at the top of grain such as barley or wheat, in the NT the term is restricted to wheat (L&N 3.40; BDAG 941 s.v. 1).

[23] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[24] sn See the note on Pharisees in 2:16.

[25] tn A decision about the proper translation of this Greek phrase (ἐπὶ Ἀβιαθὰρ ἀρχιερέως, epi Abiathar archiereōs) is very difficult for a number of reasons. The most natural translation of the phrase is "when Abiathar was high priest," but this is problematic because Abiathar was not the high priest when David entered the temple and ate the sacred bread; Ahimelech is the priest mentioned in 1 Sam 21:1-7. Three main solutions have been suggested to resolve this difficulty. (1) There are alternate readings in various manuscripts, but these are not likely to be original: D W {271} it sy^{s} and a few others omit ἐπὶ Ἀβιαθὰρ ἀρχιερέως, no doubt in conformity to the parallels in Matt 12:4 and Luke 6:4; {A C Θ Π Σ Φ 074 f^{13} and many others} add τοῦ before ἀρχιερέως, giving the meaning "in the days of Abiathar the high priest," suggesting a more general time frame. Neither reading has significant external support and both most likely are motivated by the difficulty of the original reading. (2) Many scholars have hypothesized that one of the three individuals who would have been involved in the transmission of the statement (Jesus who uttered it originally, Mark who wrote it down in the Gospel, or Peter who served as Mark's source) was either wrong about Abiathar or intentionally loose with the biblical data in order to make a point. (3) It is possible that what sacred bread,[1] which is against the law[2] for any but the priests to eat, and also gave it to his companions?"[3] 2:27 Then[4] he said to them, "The Sabbath was made for people,[5] not people for the Sabbath. 2:28 For this reason the Son of Man is lord[6] even of the Sabbath."

Healing a Withered Hand

3:1 Then[7] Jesus[8] entered the synagogue[9] again, and a man was there who had a withered[10] hand. 3:2 They watched[11] Jesus[12] closely to see if he would heal him on the Sabbath,[13] so that they could accuse him. 3:3 So he said to the man who had the withered hand, "Stand up among all these people."[14] 3:4 Then[15] he said to them, "Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath, or evil, to save a life or destroy it?" But they were silent. 3:5 After looking around[16] at them in anger, grieved by the hardness of their hearts,[17] he said to the man, "Stretch out your hand." He stretched it out, and his hand was restored.[18] 3:6 So[19] the Pharisees[20] went out immediately and began plotting with the Herodians,[21] as to how they could assassinate[22] him.

is currently understood to be the most natural reading of the text is in fact not correct. (a) There are very few biblical parallels to this grammatical construction (ἐπί + genitive proper noun, followed by an anarthrous common noun), so it is possible that an extensive search for this construction in nonbiblical literature would prove that the meaning does involve a wide time frame. If this is so, "in the days of Abiathar the high priest" would be a viable option. (b) It is also possible that this phrasing serves as a loose way to cite a scripture passage. There is a parallel to this construction in Mark 12:26: "Have you not read in the book of Moses, in the passage about the bush?" Here the final phrase is simply ἐπὶ τοῦ βάτου (epi tou batou), but the obvious function of the phrase is to point to a specific passage within the larger section of scripture. Deciding upon a translation here is difficult. The translation above has followed the current consensus on the most natural and probable meaning of the phrase ἐπὶ Ἀβιαθὰρ ἀρχιερέως: "when Abiathar was high priest." It should be recognized, however, that this translation is tentative because the current state of knowledge about the meaning of this grammatical construction is incomplete, and any decision about the meaning of this text is open to future revision.

sn The sacred bread refers to the "bread of presentation," "showbread," or "bread of the Presence," twelve loaves prepared weekly for the tabernacle and later, the temple. See Exod 25:30; 35:13; 39:36; Lev 24:5-9. Each loaf was made from 3 quarts (3.5 liters; Heb "two tenths of an ephah") of fine flour. The loaves were placed on a table in the holy place of the tabernacle, on the north side opposite the lampstand (Exod 26:35). It was the duty of the priest each Sabbath to place fresh bread on the table; the loaves from the previous week were then given to Aaron and his descendants, who ate them in the holy place, because they were considered sacred (Lev 24:9). See also Matt 12:1-8, Luke 6:1-5.

[2] sn Jesus' response to the charge that what his disciples were doing was against the law is one of analogy: "If David did it for his troops in a time of need, then so can I with my disciples." Jesus is clear that on the surface there was a violation here. What is not as clear is whether he is arguing a "greater need" makes this permissible or that this was within the intention of the law all along.

[3] sn See 1 Sam 21:1-6.

[5] tn The Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used twice in this verse in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, thus "people."

[6] tn The term "lord" is in emphatic position in the Greek text.

sn A second point in Jesus' defense of his disciples' actions was that his authority as Son of Man also allowed it, since as Son of Man he was lord of the Sabbath.

[7] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[8] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21.

[10] sn Withered means the man's hand was shrunken and paralyzed.

[11] sn The term translated watched...closely is emotive, since it carries negative connotations. It means they were watching him out of the corner of their eye or spying on him.

[12] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] sn The background for this is the view that only if life was endangered should one attempt to heal on the Sabbath (see the Mishnah, m. Shabbat 6.3; 12.1; 18.3; 19.2; m. Yoma 8.6).

[14] tn Grk "Stand up in the middle."

sn Most likely synagogues were arranged with benches along the walls and open space in the center for seating on the floor.

[16] tn The aorist participle περιβλεψάμενος (periblepsamenos) has been translated as antecedent (prior) to the action of the main verb. It could also be translated as contemporaneous ("Looking around...he said").

[17] tn This term is a collective singular in the Greek text.

[18] sn The passive was restored points to healing by God. Now the question became: Would God exercise his power through Jesus, if what Jesus was doing were wrong? Note also Jesus' "labor." He simply spoke and it was so.

[19] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[20] sn See the note on Pharisees in 2:16.

[21] tn Grk inserts "against him" after "Herodians." This is somewhat redundant in English and has not been translated.

sn The Herodians are mentioned in the NT only once in Matt (22:16 = Mark 12:13) and twice in Mark (3:6; 12:13; some MSS also read "Herodians" instead of "Herod" in Mark 8:15). It is generally assumed that as a group the Herodians were Jewish supporters of the Herodian dynasty (or of Herod Antipas in particular). In every instance they are linked with the Pharisees. This probably reflects agreement regarding political objectives (nationalism as opposed to submission to the yoke of Roman oppression) rather than philosophy or religious beliefs.

[22] tn Grk "destroy."

Crowds by the Sea

3:7 Then[1] Jesus went away with his disciples to the sea, and a great multitude from Galilee followed him.[2] And from Judea, 3:8 Jerusalem,[3] Idumea, beyond the Jordan River,[4] and around Tyre[5] and Sidon[6] a great multitude came to him when they heard about the things he had done. 3:9 Because of the crowd, he told his disciples to have a small boat ready for him so the crowd[7] would not press toward him. 3:10 For he had healed many, so that all who were afflicted with diseases pressed toward him in order to touch him. 3:11 And whenever the unclean spirits[8] saw him, they fell down before him and cried out, "You are the Son of God." 3:12 But[9] he sternly ordered them not to make him known.[10]

Appointing the Twelve Apostles

3:13 Now[11] Jesus went up the mountain[12] and called for those he wanted, and they came to him. 3:14 He[13] appointed twelve (whom he named apostles[14]),[15] so that they would be with him and he could send them to preach 3:15 and to have authority to cast out demons. 3:16 He appointed twelve:[16] To Simon[17] he gave the name Peter; 3:17 to James and his brother John, the sons of Zebedee,[18] he gave the name Boanerges (that is, "sons of thunder"); 3:18 and Andrew, Philip, Bartholomew,[19] Matthew, Thomas,[20] James the son of Alphaeus, Thaddaeus,[21] Simon the Zealot,[22] 3:19 and Judas Iscariot,[23] who betrayed him.[24]

[1] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[2] tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[5] map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

[7] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] sn Unclean spirits refers to evil spirits.

[9] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[10] sn Jesus did not permit the demons to make him known because the time for such disclosure was not yet at hand, and such a revelation would have certainly been misunderstood by the people. In all likelihood, if the people had understood him early on to be the Son of God, or Messiah, they would have reduced his mission to one of political deliverance from Roman oppression (cf. John 6:15). Jesus wanted to avoid, as much as possible, any premature misunderstanding about who he was and what he was doing. However, at the end of his ministry, he did not deny such a title when the high priest asked him (14:61-62).

[12] tn Or "up a mountain" (εἰς τὸ ὄρος, eis to horos).

sn The expression up the mountain here may be idiomatic or generic, much like the English "he went to the hospital" (cf. 15:29), or even intentionally reminiscent of Exod 24:12 (LXX), since the genre of the Sermon on the Mount seems to be that of a new Moses giving a new law.

[14] sn The term *apostle*s is rare in the gospels, found only here and Mark 6:30, Matt 10:2, and six more times in Luke (6:13; 9:10; 11:49; 17:5; 22:14; 24:10).

[15] tc The phrase "whom he named apostles" is lacking in the majority of MSS (A C² [D] L f^{1} 33 𝔐 latt sy). Several primary Alexandrian and Caesarean witnesses (ℵ B [C* W] Θ f^{13} 28 pc co) include the phrase, so the external evidence is strongly in favor of this reading, especially since Alexandrian witnesses tend to witness to the shorter reading. It is possible that the Alexandrian witnesses have inserted these words to bring the text in line with Luke 6:13 (TCGNT 69), but against this is the internal evidence of Mark's style: Mark tends toward gratuitous redundancy. Thus the inclusion of this phrase is supported by both internal and external evidence and should be regarded as more likely original than the omission.

[16] tc The phrase "he appointed twelve" is lacking in the majority of manuscripts (A C² D L Θ f^{1} 33 2427 𝔐 lat sy bo). Some important witnesses include the phrase (ℵ B C* Δ 565 579 pc), but perhaps the best explanation for the omission of the clause in the majority of witnesses is haplography in combination with homoioarcton: The first word of the clause in question is καί (kai), and the first word after the clause in question is also καί. And the first two letters of the second word, in each instance, are επ (ep). Early scribes most likely jumped accidentally from the first καί to the second, omitting the intervening material. Thus the clause was most likely in the original text. (See 3:14 above for a related textual problem.)

[17] sn In the various lists of the twelve, Simon (that is, Peter) is always mentioned first (see also Matt 10:1-4; Luke 6:13-16; Acts 1:13) and the first four are always the same, though not in the same order after Peter.

[18] tn Grk "to James, the son of Zebedee, and John, the brother of James."

[19] sn Bartholomew (meaning "son of Tolmai" in Aramaic) could be another name for Nathanael mentioned in John 1:45.

[20] sn This is the "doubting Thomas" of John 20:24-29.

[21] tc This disciple is called Λεββαῖον (Lebbaion, "Lebbaeus") in D it; see the discussion of the parallel text in Matt 10:3 where conflation occurs among other witnesses as well.

[22] tn Grk "the Cananean," but according to both BDAG 507 s.v. Καναναῖος and L&N 11.88, this term has no relation at all to the geographical terms for Cana or Canaan, but is derived from the Aramaic term for "enthusiast, zealot" (see Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13), possibly because of an earlier affiliation with the party of the Zealots. He may not have been technically a member of the particular Jewish nationalistic party known as "Zealots" (since according to some scholars this party had not been organized at that time), but simply someone who was zealous for Jewish independence from Rome, in which case the term would refer to his temperament.

[23] sn There is some debate about what the name Iscariot means. It probably alludes to a region in Judea and thus might make Judas the only non-Galilean in the group. Several explanations for the name Iscariot have been proposed, but it is probably transliterated Hebrew with the meaning "man of Kerioth" (there are at least two villages that had that name). For further discussion see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 1:546; also D. A. Carson, John, 304.

[24] tn Grk "who even betrayed him."

Jesus and Beelzebul

3:20 Now[1] Jesus[2] went home, and a crowd gathered so that they were not able to eat. 3:21 When his family[3] heard this they went out to restrain him, for they said, "He is out of his mind." 3:22 The experts in the law[4] who came down from Jerusalem[5] said, "He is possessed by Beelzebul,"[6] and, "By the ruler[7] of demons he casts out demons." 3:23 So[8] he called them and spoke to them in parables:[9] "How can Satan cast out Satan? 3:24 If[10] a kingdom is divided against itself, that kingdom will not be able to stand. 3:25 If a house is divided against itself, that house will not be able to stand. 3:26 And if Satan rises against himself and is divided, he is not able to stand and his end has come. 3:27 But no one is able to enter a strong man's[11] house and steal his property unless he first ties up the strong man. Then he can thoroughly plunder his house.[12] 3:28 I tell you the truth,[13] people will be forgiven for all sins, even all the blasphemies they utter.[14] 3:29 But whoever blasphemes against the Holy Spirit will never be forgiven, but is guilty of an eternal sin"[15] 3:30 (because they said, "He has an unclean spirit"[16]).

Jesus' True Family

3:31 Then[17] Jesus'[18] mother and his brothers[19] came. Standing[20] outside, they sent word to him, to summon him. 3:32 A crowd was sitting around him and they said to him, "Look, your mother and your brothers[21] are outside looking

3 tc Western witnesses D W it, instead of reading οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ (hoi par' autou, here translated "family"), have περὶ αὐτοῦ οἱ γραμματεῖς καὶ οἱ λοιποί (peri autou hoi grammateis kai hoi loipoi, "[when] the scribes and others [heard] about him"). But this reading is obviously motivated, for it removes the embarrassing statement about Jesus' family's opinion of him as "out of his mind" and transfers this view to the Lord's opponents. The fact that virtually all other witnesses have οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ here, coupled with the strong internal evidence for the shorter reading, shows this Western reading to be secondary.

tn On the meaning "family" for οἱ παρ' αὐτοῦ (hoi par' autou), see BDAG 756-57 s.v. παρά A.3.b.β.ב.

sn The incident involving the religious leaders accusing Jesus of being in league with the devil (3:22-30) is sandwiched between Mark's mention of Jesus' family coming to restrain him (the Greek word for restrain here is also used to mean arrest; see Mark 6:17; 12:12; 14:1, 44, 46, 49, 51) because they thought he was out of his mind (3:21). It is probably Mark's intention in this structure to show that Jesus' family is to be regarded as not altogether unlike the experts in the law [scribes] in their perception of the true identity of Jesus; they are incorrect in their understanding of him as well. The tone is obviously one of sadness and the emphasis on Jesus' true family in vv. 31-35 serves to underscore the comparison between his relatives and the scribes on the one hand, and those who truly obey God on the other.

4 tn Or "The scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

7 tn Or "prince."

8 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

9 sn Jesus spoke two parables to demonstrate the absurdity of the thinking of the religious leaders who maintained that he was in league with Satan and that he actually derived his power from the devil. The first parable (vv. 23-26) teaches that if Jesus cast out demons by the ruler of the demons, then in reality Satan is fighting against himself, with the result that his kingdom has come to an end. The second parable (v. 28) about tying up a strong man proves that Jesus does not need to align himself with the devil because Jesus is more powerful. Jesus defeated Satan at his temptation (1:12-13) and by his exorcisms he clearly demonstrated himself to be stronger than the devil. The passage reveals the desperate condition of the religious leaders, who in their hatred for Jesus end up attributing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satan (a position for which they will be held accountable, 3:29-30). For an explanation of what a parable is, see the note on parables in 4:2.

10 sn The three conditional statements in vv. 24-26 express the logical result of the assumption that Jesus heals by Satan's power, expressed by the religious leaders. The point is clear: If the leaders are correct, then Satan's kingdom will not stand, so the suggestion makes no sense. Satan would not seek to heal.

11 sn The strong man here pictures Satan.

12 sn Some see the imagery here as similar to Eph 4:7-10, although no opponents are explicitly named in that passage. Jesus has the victory over Satan. Jesus' acts of healing mean that the war is being won and the kingdom is coming.

13 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

14 tn Grk "all the sins and blasphemies they may speak will be forgiven the sons of men."

15 sn Is guilty of an eternal sin. This passage has troubled many people, who have wondered whether or not they have committed this eternal sin. Three things must be kept in mind: (1) the nature of the sin is to ascribe what is the obvious work of the Holy Spirit (e.g., releasing people from Satan's power) to Satan himself; (2) it is not simply a momentary doubt or sinful attitude, but is indeed a settled condition which opposes the Spirit's work, as typified by the religious leaders who opposed Jesus; and (3) a person who is concerned about it has probably never committed this sin, for those who commit it here (i.e., the religious leaders) are not in the least concerned about Jesus' warning. On this last point see W. W. Wessel, "Mark," EBC 8:645-46.

16 sn Unclean spirit refers to an evil spirit.

17 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

18 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 sn The issue of whether Jesus had brothers (siblings) has had a long history in the church. Epiphanius, in the 4th century, argued that Mary was a perpetual virgin and had no offspring other than Jesus. Others argued that these brothers were really cousins. Nothing in the text suggests any of this. See also John 7:3.

20 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

21 tc ‡ Many MSS read "and your sisters" here after "your brothers" (A D Γ 700 pm it). However, the pedigree of several of the MSS which lack this phrase is considerable (ℵ B C K L W Δ Θ $f^{1.13}$ 28 33 565 892 1241 1424 2542 pm lat sy). It seems likely that this phrase was added by an early Western scribe to harmonize this statement with Jesus' response in v. 35. NA^{27} has the words in brackets, indicating some doubt as

The Parable of the Sower

4:1 Again he began to teach by the lake. Such a large crowd gathered around him that he got into a boat on the lake and sat there while[4] the whole crowd was on the shore by the lake. 4:2 He taught them many things in parables,[5] and in his teaching said to them: 4:3 "Listen! A sower went out to sow.[6] 4:4 And as he sowed, some seed[7] fell along the path, and the birds came and devoured it. 4:5 Other seed fell on rocky ground[8] where it did not have much soil. It sprang up at once because the soil was not deep.[9] 4:6 When the sun came up it was scorched, and because it did not have sufficient root,[10] it withered. 4:7 Other seed fell among the thorns,[11] and they grew up and choked it,[12] and it did not produce grain. 4:8 But[13] other seed fell on good soil and produced grain, sprouting and growing; some yielded thirty times as much, some sixty, and some a hundred times." 4:9 And he said, "Whoever has ears to hear had better listen!"[14]

The Purpose of Parables

4:10 When he was alone, those around him with the twelve asked him about the parables. 4:11 He said to them, "The secret[15] of the kingdom of God has been given[16] to you. But to those outside, everything is in parables,

> 4:12 so that although they look they may look but not see,
> and although they hear they may hear but not understand,
> so they may not repent and be forgiven."[17]

4:13 He said to them, "Don't you understand this parable? Then[18] how will you understand any parable? 4:14 The sower sows the word. 4:15 These are the ones on the path where the word is sown: Whenever they hear, immediately Satan[19] comes and snatches the word[20] that was sown in them. 4:16 These are the ones sown on rocky ground: As soon as they hear the word, they to their authenticity.

[1] tn Grk "Who is my mother and my brothers?" The use of the singular verb ἐστιν (estin) here singles out Mary above Jesus' brothers, giving her special prominence (see ExSyn 401-2). This is slightly unnatural in English since the predicate nominative is plural, though, so a plural verb was used in the translation.

[2] tn Grk "Behold my mother and my brothers."

[3] tn The pleonastic pronoun οὗτος (houtos, "this one") which precedes this verb has not been translated.

[5] sn Though parables can contain a variety of figures of speech (cf. 2:19-22; 3:23-25; 4:3-9, 26-32; 7:15-17; 13:28), many times they are simply stories that attempt to teach spiritual truth (which is unknown to the hearers) by using a comparison with something known to the hearers. In general, parables usually advance a single idea, though there may be many parts and characters in a single parable and subordinate ideas may expand the main idea further. The beauty of using the parable as a teaching device is that it draws the listener into the story, elicits an evaluation, and demands a response.

[6] sn A sower went out to sow. The background for this well-known parable, drawn from a typical scene in the Palestinian countryside, is a field through which a well worn path runs. Sowing would occur in late fall or early winter (October to December) in the rainy season, looking for sprouting in April or May and a June harvest. The use of seed as a figure for God's giving life has OT roots (Isa 55:10-11). The point of the parable of the sower is to illustrate the various responses to the message of the kingdom of God (cf. 4:11).

[7] tn Mark's version of the parable, like Luke's (cf. Luke 8:4-8), uses the collective singular to refer to the seed throughout, so singular pronouns have been used consistently throughout this parable in the English translation. However, the parallel account in Matt 13:1-9 begins with plural pronouns in v. 4 but then switches to the collective singular in v. 5 ff.

[8] sn The rocky ground in Palestine would be a limestone base lying right under the soil.

[9] tn Grk "it did not have enough depth of earth."

[10] tn Grk "it did not have root."

[11] sn Palestinian weeds like these thorns could grow up to six feet in height and have a major root system.

[12] sn That is, crowded out the good plants.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in the final stage of the parable.

[14] tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:23; Luke 8:8, 14:35).

sn The key term secret (μυστήριον, mustērion) can mean either (1) a new revelation or (2) a revealing interpretation of existing revelation as in Dan 2:17-23, 27-30. Jesus seems to be explaining how current events develop old promises, since the NT consistently links the events of Jesus' ministry and message with old promises (Rom 1:1-4; Heb 1:1-2). The traditional translation of this word, "mystery," is misleading to the modern English reader because it suggests a secret which people have tried to uncover but which they have failed to understand (L&N 28.77).

[16] tn This is an example of a "divine passive," with God understood to be the source of the revelation (see ExSyn 437-38).

[17] sn A quotation from Isa 6:9-10. Thus parables both conceal or reveal depending on whether one is open to hearing what they teach.

[18] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[19] sn Interestingly, the synoptic parallels each use a different word for Satan here: Matt 13:19 has "the evil one," while Luke 8:12 has "the devil." This illustrates the fluidity of the gospel tradition in often using synonyms at the same point of the parallel tradition.

receive it with joy. 4:17 But[1] they have no root in themselves and do not endure.[2] Then, when trouble or persecution comes because of the word, immediately they fall away. 4:18 Others are the ones sown among thorns: They are those who hear the word, 4:19 but[3] worldly cares, the seductiveness of wealth,[4] and the desire for other things come in and choke the word,[5] and it produces nothing. 4:20 But[6] these are the ones sown on good soil: They hear the word and receive it and bear fruit, one thirty times as much, one sixty, and one a hundred."

The Parable of the Lamp

4:21 He also said to them, "A lamp[7] isn't brought to be put under a basket[8] or under a bed, is it? Isn't it to be placed on a lampstand? 4:22 For nothing is hidden except to be revealed,[9] and nothing concealed except to be brought to light. 4:23 If anyone has ears to hear, he had better listen!"[10] 4:24 And he said to them, "Take care about what you hear. The measure you use will be the measure you receive,[11] and more will be added to you. 4:25 For whoever has will be given more, but[12] whoever does not have, even what he has will be taken from him."[13]

The Parable of the Growing Seed

4:26 He also said, "The kingdom of God is like someone who spreads seed on the ground. 4:27 He goes to sleep and gets up, night and day, and the seed sprouts and grows, though he does not know how. 4:28 By itself the soil produces a crop, first the stalk, then the head, then the full grain in the head. 4:29 And when the grain is ripe, he sends in the sickle[14] because the harvest has come."[15]

The Parable of the Mustard Seed

4:30 He also asked, "To what can we compare the kingdom of God, or what parable can we use to present it? 4:31 It is like a mustard seed[16] that when sown in the ground, even though it is the smallest of all the seeds in the ground – 4:32 when it is sown, it grows up,[17] becomes the greatest of all garden plants, and grows large branches so that the wild birds[18] can nest in its shade."[19]

The Use of Parables

4:33 So[20] with many parables like these, he spoke the word to them, as they were able to hear. 4:34 He did not speak to them without a

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

7 sn The lamp is probably an ancient oil burning lamp or perhaps a candlestick. Jesus is comparing revelation to light, particularly the revelation of his ministry.

8 tn Or "a bowl"; this refers to any container for dry material of about eight liters (two gallons) capacity. It could be translated "basket, box, bowl" (L&N 6.151).

9 tn Or "disclosed."

10 tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9; Luke 8:8, 14:35).

11 tn Grk "by [the measure] with which you measure it will be measured to you."

12 tn Grk "and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

13 sn What he has will be taken from him. The meaning is that the one who accepts Jesus' teaching concerning his person and the kingdom will receive a share in the kingdom now and even more in the future, but for the one who rejects Jesus' words, the opportunity that that person presently possesses with respect to the kingdom will someday be taken away forever.

14 tn The Greek word εὐθύς (euthus, often translated "immediately" or "right away") has not been translated here. It sometimes occurs with a weakened, inferential use (BDAG 406 s.v. 2), not contributing significantly to the flow of the narrative. For further discussion, see R. J. Decker, Temporal Deixis of the Greek Verb in the Gospel of Mark with Reference to Verbal Aspect (SBG 10), 73-77.

15 sn Because the harvest has come. This parable is found only in Mark (cf. Matt 13:24-30) and presents a complete picture of the coming of God's kingdom: (1) sowing; (2) growth; (3) harvest. Some understand the parable as a reference to evangelism. While this is certainly involved, it does not seem to be the central idea. In contrast to the parable of the sower which emphasizes the quality of the different soils, this parable emphasizes the power of the seed to cause growth (with the clear implication that the mysterious growth of the kingdom is accomplished by God), apart from human understanding and observation.

16 sn Mustard seeds are known for their tiny size.

17 tn Mark 4:31-32 is fairly awkward in Greek. Literally the sentence reads as follows: "As a mustard seed, which when sown in the earth, being the smallest of all the seeds in the earth, and when it is sown, it grows up..." The structure has been rendered in more idiomatic English, although some of the awkward structure has been retained for rhetorical effect.

18 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

19 sn The point of the parable seems to be that while the kingdom of God may appear to have insignificant and unnoticeable beginnings (i.e., in the ministry of Jesus), it will someday (i.e., at the second advent) be great and quite expansive. The kingdom, however, is not to be equated with the church, but rather the church is an expression of the kingdom. Also, there is important OT background in the image of the mustard seed that grew and became a tree: Ezek 17:22-24 pictures the reemergence of the Davidic house where people can find calm and shelter. Like the mustard seed, it would start out small but grow to significant size.

parable. But privately he explained everything to his own disciples.

Stilling of a Storm

4:35 On that day, when evening came, Jesus[1] said to his disciples, "Let's go across to the other side of the lake."[2] 4:36 So[3] after leaving the crowd, they took him along, just as he was, in the boat,[4] and other boats were with him. 4:37 Now[5] a great windstorm[6] developed and the waves were breaking into the boat, so that the boat was nearly swamped. 4:38 But[7] he was in the stern, sleeping on a cushion. They woke him up and said to him, "Teacher, don't you care that we are about to die?" 4:39 So[8] he got up and rebuked[9] the wind, and said to the sea,[10] "Be quiet! Calm down!" Then[11] the wind stopped, and it was dead calm. 4:40 And he said to them, "Why are you cowardly? Do you still not have faith?" 4:41 They were overwhelmed by fear and said to one another, "Who then is this?[12] Even the wind and sea obey him!"[13]

[2] tn The phrase "of the lake" is not in the Greek text but is clearly implied; it has been supplied here for clarity.

[3] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the response to Jesus' request.

[4] tn It is possible that this prepositional phrase modifies "as he was," not "they took him along." The meaning would then be "they took him along in the boat in which he was already sitting" (see 4:1).

sn A boat that held all the disciples would be of significant size.

[5] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[6] tn Or "a squall."

sn The Sea of Galilee is located in a depression some 700 ft (200 m) below sea level and is surrounded by hills. Frequently a rush of wind and the right mix of temperatures can cause a storm to come suddenly on the lake. Storms on the Sea of Galilee were known for their suddenness and violence.

[9] tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

[10] sn Who has authority over the seas and winds is discussed in the OT: Ps 104:3; 135:7; 107:23-30. When Jesus rebuked the wind and the sea he was making a statement about who he was.

[12] sn Jesus' authority over creation raised a question for the disciples about who he was exactly (Who then is this?). This verse shows that the disciples followed Jesus even though they did not know all about him yet.

[13] sn This section in Mark (4:35-5:43) contains four miracles: (1) the calming of the storm; (2) the exorcism of the demon-possessed man; (3) the giving of life to Jairus' daughter; (4) the healing of the woman hemorrhaging for twelve years. All these miracles demonstrate Jesus' right to proclaim the kingdom message and his sovereign authority over forces, directly or indirectly, hostile to the kingdom. The last three may have been brought together to show that Jesus had power over all defilement, since contact with graves, blood, or a corpse was regarded under Jewish law as causing a state of ritual uncleanness.

Healing of a Demoniac

5:1 So[14] they came to the other side of the lake, to the region of the Gerasenes.[15] 5:2 Just as Jesus[16] was getting out of the boat, a man with an unclean spirit[17] came from the tombs and met him.[18] 5:3 He lived among the tombs, and no one could bind him anymore, not even with a chain. 5:4 For his hands and feet had often been bound with chains and shackles,[19] but[20] he had torn the chains apart and broken the shackles in pieces. No one was strong enough to subdue him. 5:5 Each night and every day among the tombs and in the mountains, he would cry out and cut himself with stones. 5:6 When he saw Jesus from a distance, he ran and bowed down before him. 5:7 Then[21] he cried out with a loud voice, "Leave me alone,[22] Jesus, Son of the Most High God! I

[14] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate a summary and transition in the narrative.

[15] tc The textual tradition here is quite complicated. Most later MSS (A C f^{13} 𝔐 $sy^{p,h}$) read "Gadarenes," which is the better reading in Matt 8:28. Other MSS (𝔓^{45} 𝔓^{75} ℵ^{2} L Δ Θ f^{1} 28 33 565 579 700 892 1241 1424 al sy^{s} bo) have "Gergesenes." Others (ℵ* B D latt sa) have "Gerasenes," which is the reading followed in the translation here and in Luke 8:26. The difference between Matthew and Mark (which is parallel to Luke) may well have to do with uses of variant regional terms.

sn The *region of the Gerasene*s would be in Gentile territory on the (south)eastern side of the Sea of Galilee across from Galilee. Matthew 8:28 records this miracle as occurring "in the region of the Gadarenes." "Irrespective of how one settles this issue, for the [second and] Third Evangelist the chief concern is that Jesus has crossed over into Gentile territory, 'opposite Galilee'" (J. B. Green, Luke [NICNT], 337). The region of Gadara extended to the Sea of Galilee and included the town of Sennabris on the southern shore – the town that the herdsmen most likely entered after the drowning of the pigs.

[16] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] sn Unclean spirit refers to an evil spirit.

[18] tn Grk "met him from the tombs a man with an unclean spirit." When this is converted to normal English word order ("a man met him from the tombs with an unclean spirit") it sounds as if "with an unclean spirit" modifies "the tombs." Likewise, "a man with an unclean spirit from the tombs met him" implies that the unclean spirit came from the tombs, while the Greek text is clear that it is the man who had the unclean spirit who came from the tombs. To make this clear a second verb, "came," is supplied in English: "came from the tombs and met him."

[19] tn Grk "he had often been bound with chains and shackles." "Shackles" could also be translated "fetters"; they were chains for the feet.

[20] tn Grk "and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[21] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[22] tn Grk "What to me and to you?" (an idiom). The phrase τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί (ti emoi kai soi) is Semitic in origin, though it made its way into colloquial Greek (BDAG 275 s.v. ἐγώ). The equivalent Hebrew expression in the OT had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12, 2 Chr 35:21, 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his own, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13, Hos 14:8). These nuances were apparently expanded in Greek, but the basic notions of defensive implore you by God[1] – do not torment me!" 5:8 (For Jesus[2] had said to him, "Come out of that man, you unclean spirit!")[3] 5:9 Jesus[4] asked him, "What is your name?" And he said, "My name is Legion,[5] for we are many." 5:10 He begged Jesus[6] repeatedly not to send them out of the region. 5:11 There on the hillside,[7] a great herd of pigs was feeding. 5:12 And the demonic spirits[8] begged him, "Send us into the pigs. Let us enter them." 5:13 Jesus[9] gave them permission.[10] So[11] the unclean spirits came out and went into the pigs. Then the herd rushed down the steep slope into the lake, and about two thousand were drowned in the lake.

5:14 Now[12] the herdsmen ran off and spread the news in the town and countryside, and the people went out to see what had happened. 5:15 They came to Jesus and saw the demon-possessed man sitting there, clothed and in his right mind – the one who had the "Legion" – and they were afraid. 5:16 Those who had seen what had happened to the demon-possessed man reported it, and they also told about the pigs. 5:17 Then[13] they asked Jesus[14] to leave their region. 5:18 As he was getting into the boat the man who had been demon-possessed asked if he could go[15] with him. 5:19 But[16] Jesus[17] did not permit him to do so. Instead, he said to him, "Go to your home and to your people and tell them what the Lord has done for you,[18] that he had mercy on you." 5:20 So[19] he went away and began to proclaim in the Decapolis[20] what Jesus had done for him,[21] and all were amazed.

Restoration and Healing

5:21 When Jesus had crossed again in a boat to the other side, a large crowd gathered around him, and he was by the sea. 5:22 Then[22] one of the synagogue rulers,[23] named Jairus,[24] came up, and when he saw Jesus,[25] he fell at his feet. 5:23 He asked him urgently, "My little daughter is near death. Come and lay your hands on her so hostility (option 1) and indifference or disengagement (option 2) are still present. BDAG suggests the following as glosses for this expression: What have I to do with you? What have we in common? Leave me alone! Never mind! Hostility between Jesus and the demons is certainly to be understood in this context, hence the translation: "Leave me alone...."

[1] sn Though it seems unusual for a demon to invoke God's name ("I implore you by God") in his demands of Jesus, the parallel in Matt 8:29 suggests the reason: "Why have you come to torment us before the time?" There was an appointed time in which demons would face their judgment, and they seem to have viewed Jesus' arrival on the scene as an illegitimate change in God's plan regarding the time when their sentence would be executed.

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] sn This is a parenthetical explanation by the author.

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] sn The name Legion means "thousands," a word taken from a Latin term for a large group of soldiers. The term not only suggests a multiple possession, but also adds a military feel to the account. This is a true battle.

[6] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[7] tn Grk "mountain," but this might give the English reader the impression of a far higher summit.

[8] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the demonic spirits) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[10] sn Many have discussed why Jesus gave them permission, since the animals were destroyed. However, this is another example of a miracle that is a visual lesson. The demons are destructive: They were destroying the man. They destroyed the pigs. They destroy whatever they touch. The point was to take demonic influence seriously, as well as Jesus' power over it as a picture of the larger battle for human souls. There would be no doubt how the man's transformation had taken place.

[11] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate a conclusion and transition in the narrative.

[12] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate a transition to the response to the miraculous healing.

[13] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[14] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Grk "be," that is, "remain." In this context that would involve accompanying Jesus as he went on his way.

[16] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[17] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] sn Jesus instructs the man to declare what the Lord has done for him, in contrast to the usual instructions (e.g., 1:44; 5:43) to remain silent. Here in Gentile territory Jesus allowed more open discussion of his ministry. D. L. Bock (Luke [BECNT], 1:781) suggests that with few Jewish religious representatives present, there would be less danger of misunderstanding Jesus' ministry as political.

[19] tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate the conclusion of the episode in the narrative.

[20] sn The Decapolis refers to a league of towns (originally consisting of ten; the Greek name literally means "ten towns") whose region (except for Scythopolis) lay across the Jordan River.

[21] sn Note that the man could not separate what God had done from the one through whom God had done it (what Jesus had done for him). This man was called to witness to God's goodness at home.

[23] tn That is, "an official in charge of the synagogue"; ἀρχισυνάγωγος (archisunagōgos) refers to the "president of a synagogue" (so BDAG 139 s.v. and L&N 53.93; cf. Luke 8:41).

sn The synagogue was a place for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership. See also the note on synagogue in 1:21.

[24] tc Codex Bezae (D) and some Itala mss omit the words "named Jairus." The evidence for the inclusion of the phrase is extremely strong, however. The witnesses in behalf of ὀνόματι Ἰάϊρος (onomati Iairos) include {$\mathfrak{P}^{45}$ ℵ A B C L $\mathfrak{M}$ lat sy co}. The best explanation is that the phrase was accidentally dropped during the transmission of one strand of the Western text.

[25] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

that she may be healed and live." 5:24 Jesus[1] went with him, and a large crowd followed and pressed around him.

5:25 Now[2] a woman was there who had been suffering from a hemorrhage[3] for twelve years.[4] 5:26 She had endured a great deal under the care of many doctors and had spent all that she had. Yet instead of getting better, she grew worse. 5:27 When she heard about Jesus, she came up behind him in the crowd and touched his cloak,[5] 5:28 for she kept saying,[6] "If only I touch his clothes, I will be healed."[7] 5:29 At once the bleeding stopped,[8] and she felt in her body that she was healed of her disease. 5:30 Jesus knew at once that power had gone out from him. He turned around in the crowd and said, "Who touched my clothes?" 5:31 His disciples said to him, "You see the crowd pressing against you and you say, 'Who touched me?'" 5:32 But[9] he looked around to see who had done it. 5:33 Then the woman, with fear and trembling, knowing what had happened to her, came and fell down before him and told him the whole truth. 5:34 He said to her, "Daughter, your faith has made you well.[10] Go in peace, and be healed of your disease."

5:35 While he was still speaking, people came from the synagogue ruler's[11] house saying, "Your daughter has died. Why trouble the teacher any longer?" 5:36 But Jesus, paying no attention to what was said, told the synagogue ruler, "Do not be afraid; just believe." 5:37 He did not let anyone follow him except Peter, James,[12] and John, the brother of James. 5:38 They came to the house of the synagogue ruler where[13] he saw noisy confusion and people weeping and wailing loudly.[14] 5:39 When he entered he said to them, "Why are you distressed and weeping? The child is not dead but asleep." 5:40 And they began making fun of him.[15] But he put them all outside[16] and he took the child's father and mother and his own companions[17] and went into the room where the child was.[18] 5:41 Then, gently taking the child by the hand, he said to her, "Talitha koum," which means, "Little girl, I say to you, get up." 5:42 The girl got up at once and began to walk around (she was twelve years old). They were completely astonished at this.[19] 5:43 He strictly ordered that no one should know about this,[20] and told them to give her something to eat.

Rejection at Nazareth

6:1 Now[21] Jesus left that place and came to his hometown,[22] and his disciples followed him. 6:2 When the Sabbath came, he began to teach in the synagogue.[23] Many who heard him were astonished, saying, "Where did he get these ideas?[24] And what is this wisdom that has been given to him? What are these miracles that are done through his hands? 6:3 Isn't this the

1 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

3 tn Grk "a flow of blood."

4 sn This story of the woman who had been suffering from hemorrhages for twelve years is recounted in the middle of the story about Jairus' daughter. Mark's account (as is often the case) is longer and more detailed than the parallel accounts in Matt 9:18-26 and Luke 8:40-56. Mark's fuller account may be intended to show that the healing of the woman was an anticipation of the healing of the little girl.

5 tn Grk "garment," but here ἱμάτιον (himation) denotes the outer garment in particular.

6 tn The imperfect verb is here taken iteratively, for the context suggests that the woman was trying to muster up the courage to touch Jesus' cloak.

7 tn Grk "saved."

sn In this pericope the author uses a term for being healed (Grk "saved") that would have spiritual significance to his readers. It may be a double entendre (cf. parallel in Matt 9:21 which uses the same term), since elsewhere he uses verbs that simply mean "heal": If only the reader would "touch" Jesus, he too would be "saved."

8 tn Grk "the flow of her blood dried up."

sn The woman was most likely suffering from a vaginal hemorrhage, in which case her bleeding would make her ritually unclean.

9 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

10 tn Or "has delivered you"; Grk "has saved you." This should not be understood as an expression for full salvation in the immediate context; it refers only to the woman's healing.

11 sn See the note on synagogue rulers in 5:22.

12 tn Grk "and James," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

13 tn Grk "and," though such paratactic structure is rather awkward in English.

14 sn This group probably includes outside or even professional mourners, not just family, because a large group seems to be present.

15 tn Grk "They were laughing at him." The imperfect verb has been taken ingressively.

16 tn Or "threw them all outside." The verb used, ἐκβάλλω (ekballō), almost always has the connotation of force in Mark.

17 tn Grk "those with him."

18 tn Grk "into where the child was."

19 tn The Greek word εὐθύς (euthus, often translated "immediately" or "right away") has not been translated here. It sometimes occurs with a weakened, inferential use (BDAG 406 s.v. 2), not contributing significantly to the flow of the narrative. For further discussion, see R. J. Decker, Temporal Deixis of the Greek Verb in the Gospel of Mark with Reference to Verbal Aspect (SBG 10), 73-77.

20 sn That no one should know about this. See the note on the phrase who he was in 3:12.

21 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

22 sn Jesus' hometown (where he spent his childhood years) was Nazareth, about 20 miles (30 km) southwest of Capernaum.

23 sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21. Jesus undoubtedly took the opportunity on this occasion to speak about his person and mission, and the relation of both to OT fulfillment.

24 tn Or "this teaching"; Grk "these things." The response of the people centers upon the content of Jesus' teaching, so the phrase "these ideas" was supplied in the text to make this clear.

carpenter, the son[1] of Mary[2] and brother of James, Joses, Judas, and Simon? And aren't his sisters here with us?" And so they took offense at him. 6:4 Then[3] Jesus said to them, "A prophet is not without honor except in his hometown, and among his relatives, and in his own house." 6:5 He was not able to do a miracle there, except to lay his hands on a few sick people and heal them. 6:6 And he was amazed because of their unbelief. Then[4] he went around among the villages and taught.

Sending Out the Twelve Apostles

6:7 Jesus[5] called the twelve and began to send them out two by two. He gave them authority over the unclean spirits.[6] 6:8 He instructed them to take nothing for the journey except a staff[7] – no bread, no bag,[8] no money in their belts – 6:9 and to put on sandals but not to wear two tunics.[9] 6:10 He said to them, "Wherever you enter a house, stay there[10] until you leave the area. 6:11 If a place will not welcome you or listen to you, as you go out from there, shake the dust off[11] your feet as a testimony against them." 6:12 So[12] they went out and preached that all should repent. 6:13 They cast out many demons and anointed many sick people with oil and healed them.

The Death of John the Baptist

6:14 Now[13] King Herod[14] heard this, for Jesus'[15] name had become known. Some[16] were saying, "John the baptizer[17] has been raised from the dead, and because of this, miraculous powers are at work in him." 6:15 Others said, "He is Elijah." Others said, "He is a prophet, like one of the prophets from the past." 6:16 But when Herod heard this, he said, "John, whom I beheaded, has been raised!" 6:17 For Herod himself had sent men, arrested John, and bound him in prison on account of Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, because Herod[18] had married her. 6:18 For John had repeatedly told[19] Herod, "It is not lawful for you to have your brother's wife."[20] 6:19 So Herodias nursed a grudge against him and wanted to kill him. But[21] she could not 6:20 because Herod stood in awe of[22] John and protected him, since he knew that John[23] was a righteous and holy man.

1 tc Evidently because of the possible offensiveness of designating Jesus a carpenter, several MSS ([𝔓45vid] f^{13} 33vid [565 579] 700 [2542] pc it vgmss) harmonize the words "carpenter, the son" to the parallel passage in Matt 13:55, "the son of the carpenter." Almost all the rest of the MSS read "the carpenter, the son." Since the explicit designation of Jesus as a carpenter is the more difficult reading, and is much better attested, it is most likely correct.

2 sn The reference to Jesus as the carpenter is probably derogatory, indicating that they knew Jesus only as a common laborer like themselves. The reference to him as the son of Mary (even though Jesus' father was probably dead by this point) appears to be somewhat derogatory, for a man was not regarded as his mother's son in Jewish usage unless an insult was intended (cf. Judg 11:1-2; John 6:42; 8:41; 9:29).

3 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

4 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

5 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 sn The phrase unclean spirits refers to evil spirits.

7 sn Neither Matt 10:9-10 nor Luke 9:3 allow for a staff. It might be that Matthew and Luke mean not taking an extra staff, or that the expression is merely rhetorical for "traveling light," which has been rendered in two slightly different ways.

8 tn Or "no traveler's bag"; or possibly "no beggar's bag" (L&N 6.145; BDAG 811 s.v. πήρα).

9 tn Or "shirts" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). The name for this garment (χιτών, chitōn) presents some difficulty in translation. Most modern readers would not understand what a "tunic" was any more than they would be familiar with a "chiton." On the other hand, attempts to find a modern equivalent are also a problem: "Shirt" conveys the idea of a much shorter garment that covers only the upper body, and "undergarment" (given the styles of modern underwear) is more misleading still. "Tunic" was therefore employed, but with a note to explain its nature.

10 sn Jesus telling his disciples to stay there in one house contrasts with the practice of religious philosophers in the ancient world who went from house to house begging.

11 sn To shake the dust off represented shaking off the uncleanness from one's feet; see Luke 10:11; Acts 13:51; 18:6. It was a sign of rejection.

12 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

13 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

14 sn Herod was technically not a king, but a tetrarch, a ruler with rank and authority lower than a king. A tetrarch ruled only with the approval of the Roman authorities. This was roughly equivalent to being governor of a region. In the NT, Herod, who ruled over Galilee, is called a king (Matt 14:9, Mark 6:14-29), reflecting popular usage rather than an official title.

15 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

17 tn While Matthew and Luke consistently use the noun βαπτίστης (baptistēs, "the Baptist") to refer to John, as a kind of a title, Mark prefers the substantival participle ὁ βαπτίζων (ho baptizōn, "the one who baptizes, the baptizer") to describe him (only twice does he use the noun [Mark 6:25; 8:28]).

18 tn Grk "he"; here it is necessary to specify the referent as "Herod," since the nearest previous antecedent in the translation is Philip.

19 tn The imperfect tense verb is here rendered with an iterative force.

20 sn It is not lawful for you to have your brother's wife. This was a violation of OT law (Lev 18:16; 20:21). In addition, both Herod Antipas and Herodias had each left marriages to enter into this union.

21 tn Grk "and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

22 tn Grk "was fearing," "was respecting"; the imperfect tense connotes an ongoing fear or respect for John.

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

When Herod[1] heard him, he was thoroughly baffled,[2] and yet[3] he liked to listen to John.[4] 6:21 But[5] a suitable day[6] came, when Herod gave a banquet on his birthday for his court officials, military commanders, and leaders of Galilee. 6:22 When his daughter Herodias[7] came in and danced, she pleased Herod and his dinner guests. The king said to the girl, "Ask me for whatever you want and I will give it to you." 6:23 He swore to her,[8] "Whatever you ask I will give you, up to half my kingdom."[9] 6:24 So[10] she went out and said to her mother, "What should I ask for?" Her mother said,[11] "The head of John the baptizer."[12] 6:25 Immediately she hurried back to the king and made her request:[13] "I want the head of John the Baptist on a platter immediately." 6:26 Although it grieved the king deeply,[14] he did not want to reject her request because of his oath and his guests. 6:27 So[15] the king sent an executioner at once to bring John's[16] head, and he went and beheaded John in prison. 6:28 He brought his head on a platter and gave it to the girl, and the girl gave it to her mother. 6:29 When John's[17] disciples heard this, they came and took his body and placed it in a tomb.

The Feeding of the Five Thousand

6:30 Then[18] the apostles gathered around Jesus and told him everything they had done and taught. 6:31 He said to them, "Come with me privately to an isolated place and rest a while" (for many were coming and going, and there was no time to eat). 6:32 So they went away by themselves in a boat to some remote place. 6:33 But many saw them leaving and recognized them, and they hurried on foot[19] from all the towns[20]

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tc In place of ἠπόρει (ēporei, "he was baffled") the majority of MSS (A C D f^1 33 𝔐 lat sy) have ἐποίει (epoiei, "he did"; cf. KJV's "he did many things.") The best MSS (𝔎 B L [W] Θ 2427 co) support the reading followed in the translation. The variation may be no more than a simple case of confusion of letters, since the two readings look very much alike. The verb ποιέω (poieō, "I do") certainly occurs more frequently than ἀπορέω (aporeō, "I am at a loss"), so a scribe would be more likely to write a more familiar word. Further, even though the reading ἐποίει is the harder reading in terms of the sense, it is virtually nonsensical here, rendering it most likely an unintentional corruption.

tn Or "terribly disturbed," "rather perplexed." The verb ἀπορέω (aporeō) means "to be in perplexity, with the implication of serious anxiety" (L&N 32.9).

3 tn Grk "and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "and yet" to indicate the concessive nature of the final clause.

4 tn Grk "him"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

6 tn Grk "a day of opportunity"; cf. BDAG 407 s.v. εὔκαιρος, "in our lit. only pert. to time than is considered a favorable occasion for some event or circumstance, well-timed, suitable."

7 tc Behind "his daughter Herodias" is a most difficult textual problem. The reading adopted in the translation, τῆς θυγατρὸς αὐτοῦ Ἡρῳδιάδος (tēs thugatros autou herōdiados), is supported by 𝔎 B D L Δ 565 pc; it is also the most difficult reading internally since it describes Herodias as Herod's daughter. Other readings are less awkward, but they do not have adequate external support. The reading τῆς θυγατρὸς αὐτῆς τῆς Ἡρῳδιάδος (tēs thugatros autēs tēs herōdiados, "the daughter of Herodias herself") is supported by A C (W) Θ f^{13} 33 𝔐, but this is also grammatically awkward. The easiest reading, τῆς θυγατρὸς τῆς Ἡρῳδιάδος ("the daughter of Herodias") is supported by f^1 pc, but this reading probably arose from an accidental omission of αὐτῆς in the previous reading. The reading τῆς θυγατρὸς αὐτοῦ Ἡρῳδιάδος, despite its historical difficulties, is most likely original due to external attestation and the fact that it most likely gave rise to the other readings as scribes sought to correct it.

8 tc ‡ The witnesses here support several different readings: αὐτῇ πολλά (autē polla, "to her insistently") is found in D Θ 565 700 it; πολλά is the reading of 𝔓^{45vid} 28; both words are lacking in L pc; and 𝔎 A B C^{2vid} f^{13} 33 2427 𝔐 lat have just αὐτῇ. The best candidates for authenticity, on external grounds, are αὐτῇ πολλά and αὐτῇ. So the issue revolves around whether πολλά is part of the text. On the one hand, πολλά used adverbially is a distinctive Markanism (10 of the 16 NT instances are found in Mark; of the other Gospels, Matthew alone adds a single example [Matt 9:14]). It could be argued that such an unremarkable term would go unnoticed by the scribes, and consequently would not have been inserted in imitation of Mark's style observed elsewhere. On the other hand, the largest cluster of instances of an adverbial πολλά are in Mark 5-6, with the most recent example coming just three verses earlier (Mark 5:23, 38, 43; 6:20). Scribes may well have imitated the usage so recently and so frequently seen. Further, the best Alexandrian witnesses, as well as good representatives of the Western and Byzantines texts, lack πολλά. On the whole, though a decision is difficult, it is probably best to read the text without πολλά. NA^{27} places the word in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

9 sn The expression up to half my kingdom is a proverbial comment meaning "great wealth."

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

11 tn Grk "She said"; the referent (the girl's mother) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn While Matthew and Luke consistently use the noun βαπτίστης (baptistēs, "the Baptist") to refer to John, as a kind of a title, Mark employs the substantival participle ὁ βαπτίζων (ho baptizōn, "the one who baptizes, the baptizer") to describe him (though twice he does use the noun [Mark 6:25; 8:28]).

13 tn Grk "she asked, saying." The participle λέγουσα (legousa) is redundant and has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "and being deeply grieved, the king did not want."

15 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

16 tn Grk "his"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Grk "his"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "ran together on foot." The idea of συντρέχω (suntrechō) is "to come together quickly to form a crowd" (L&N 15.133).

20 tn Or "cities."

and arrived there ahead of them.[1] 6:34 As Jesus[2] came ashore[3] he saw the large crowd and he had compassion on them, because they were like sheep without a shepherd. So[4] he taught them many things.

6:35 When it was already late, his disciples came to him and said, "This is an isolated place[5] and it is already very late. 6:36 Send them away so that they can go into the surrounding countryside and villages and buy something for themselves to eat." 6:37 But he answered them,[6] "You[7] give them something to eat." And they said, "Should we go and buy bread for two hundred silver coins[8] and give it to them to eat?" 6:38 He said to them, "How many loaves do you have? Go and see." When they found out, they said, "Five – and two fish." 6:39 Then he directed them all to sit down in groups on the green grass. 6:40 So they reclined in groups of hundreds and fifties. 6:41 He took the five loaves and the two fish, and looking up to heaven, he gave thanks and broke the loaves. He[9] gave them to his[10] disciples to serve the people, and he divided the two fish among them all. 6:42 They all ate and were satisfied, 6:43 and they picked up the broken pieces and fish that were left over, twelve baskets full. 6:44 Now[11] there were five thousand men[12] who ate the bread.[13]

Walking on Water

6:45 Immediately Jesus[14] made his disciples get into the boat and go on ahead to the other side, to Bethsaida, while he dispersed the crowd. 6:46 After saying good-bye to them, he went to the mountain to pray. 6:47 When evening came, the boat was in the middle of the sea and he was alone on the land. 6:48 He[15] saw them straining at the oars, because the wind was against them. As the night was ending,[16] he came to them walking on the sea,[17] for[18] he wanted to pass by them.[19] 6:49 When they saw him walking on the water[20] they thought he was a ghost. They[21] cried out, 6:50 for they all saw him and were

1 tc The translation here follows the reading προῆλθον (proēlthon, "they preceded"), found in ℵ B (0187) 892 2427 pc lat co. Some mss (D 28 33 700 pc) read συνῆλθον (sunēlthon, "arrived there with them"), while the majority of mss, most of them late (𝔓[84vid] [A f^{13}] 𝔐 sy[h]), conflate the two readings (προῆλθον αὐτοὺς καὶ συνῆλθον πρὸς αὐτόν, "they preceded them and came together to him"). The reading adopted here thus has better external credentials than the variants. As well, it is the harder reading internally, being changed "by copyists who thought it unlikely that the crowd on the land could have outstripped the boat" (TCGNT 78).

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "came out [of the boat]," with the reference to the boat understood.

4 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate this action is the result of Jesus' compassion on the crowd in the narrative.

5 tn Or "a desert" (meaning a deserted or desolate area with sparse vegetation).

6 tn Grk "answering, he said to them." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant, but the syntax of the sentence has been changed for clarity.

7 tn Here the pronoun ὑμεῖς (humeis) is used, making "you" in the translation emphatic.

8 sn The silver coin referred to here is the denarius. A denarius, inscribed with a picture of Tiberius Caesar, was worth approximately one day's wage for a laborer. Two hundred denarii was thus approximately equal to eight months' wages. The disciples did not have the resources in their possession to feed the large crowd, so Jesus' request is his way of causing them to trust him as part of their growth in discipleship.

9 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

10 tc ‡ Most mss (𝔓[45] A D W Θ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat sy) have αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") after τοῖς μαθηταῖς (tois mathētais, "the disciples"), but several excellent witnesses (ℵ B L Δ 33 579 892 1241 1424 2427 pc) lack the pronoun. This kind of variant is often a predictable expansion of the text; further, that many important mss lack the pronoun gives support for the shorter reading. For these reasons, the pronoun is considered to be secondary. NA[27] puts αὐτοῦ in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

tn Grk "the disciples"; the Greek article has been translated here as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate a somewhat parenthetical remark by the author.

12 tn The Greek word here is ἀνήρ, meaning "adult male" (BDAG 79 s.v. 1). According to Matt 14:21, Jesus fed not only five thousand men, but also an unspecified number of women and children.

13 tc Many good mss (𝔓[45] ℵ D W Θ $f^{1.13}$ 28 565 700 2542 lat sa) lack τοὺς ἄρτους (tous artous, lit. "the loaves" [here translated "the bread"]). On the other hand, just as weighty mss (A B L 33 2427 𝔐) have the words. Although a decision is not easy, the most satisfactory explanation seems to be that scribes were more prone to delete than to add the words here. They may have been puzzled as to why "the bread" should be mentioned without a corresponding mention of "fish." Since neither Matt 14:21 or Luke 9:17 explicitly mention the bread, a desire for harmonization may have motivated the copyists as well. On the other hand, D and W are prone to longer, explanatory readings. Since they both lack the words here, it is likely that their archetypes also lacked the words. But given Mark's pleonastic style, the good witnesses with "the bread," and a reasonable explanation for the omission, "the bread" is most likely part of the original text of Mark.

14 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn This verse is one complete sentence in the Greek text, but it has been broken into two sentences in English for clarity.

16 tn Grk "about the fourth watch of the night," between 3 a.m. and 6 a.m.

17 tn Or "on the lake."

18 tn The καί (kai) was translated so as to introduce a subordinate clause, i.e., with the use of "for." See BDF §442.9.

19 sn The statement he wanted to pass by them is somewhat difficult to understand. There are at least two common interpretations: (1) it refers to the perspective of the disciples, that is, from their point of view it seemed that Jesus wanted to pass by them; or (2) it refers to a theophany and uses the language of the Greek Old Testament (LXX) when God "passed by" Moses at Sinai (cf. Exod 33:19, 22). According to the latter alternative, Jesus is "passing by" the disciples during their struggle, in order to assure them of his presence with them. See W. L. Lane, Mark (NICNT), 236.

20 tn Grk "on the sea," "on the lake." The translation "water" has been used here for stylistic reasons (cf. the same phrase in v. 48).

21 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

Healing the Sick

6:53 After they had crossed over, they came to land at Gennesaret[2] and anchored there. 6:54 As they got out of the boat, people immediately recognized Jesus.[3] 6:55 They ran through that whole region and began to bring the sick on mats to wherever he was rumored to be.[4] 6:56 And wherever he would go – into villages, towns, or countryside – they would place the sick in the marketplaces, and would ask him if[5] they could just touch the edge of his cloak, and all who touched it were healed.

Breaking Human Traditions

7:1 Now[6] the Pharisees[7] and some of the experts in the law[8] who came from Jerusalem[9] gathered around him. 7:2 And they saw that some of Jesus' disciples ate their bread with unclean hands, that is, unwashed. 7:3 (For the Pharisees and all the Jews do not eat unless they perform a ritual washing,[10] holding fast to the tradition of the elders. 7:4 And when they come from the marketplace, they do not eat unless they wash. They hold fast to many other traditions: the washing of cups, pots, kettles, and dining couches.[11])[12] 7:5 The Pharisees and the experts in the law asked him, "Why do your disciples not live according to the tradition of the elders, but eat[13] with unwashed hands?" 7:6 He said to them, "Isaiah prophesied correctly about you hypocrites, as it is written:

> 7:7 They worship me in vain,
> teaching as doctrine the commandments

7:8 Having no regard[16] for the command of God, you hold fast to human tradition."[17] 7:9 He also said to them, "You neatly reject the commandment of God in order to set up[18] your tradition. 7:10 For Moses said, 'Honor your father and your mother,'[19] and, 'Whoever insults his father or mother must be put to death.'[20] 7:11 But you say that if anyone tells his father or mother, 'Whatever help you would have received from me is corban'[21] (that is, a gift for God), 7:12 then 11 tc Several important witnesses (𝔓45vid ℵ B L Δ 28* pc) lack "and dining couches" (καὶ κλινῶν, kai klinōn), while the majority of MSS (A D W Θ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 latt) have the reading. Although normally the shorter reading is to be preferred, especially when it is backed by excellent witnesses as in this case, there are some good reasons to consider καὶ κλινῶν as authentic: (1) Although the addition of κλινῶν could be seen as motivated by a general assimilation to the purity regulations in Lev 15 (as some have argued), there are three problems with such a supposition: (a) the word κλίνη (klinē) does not occur in the LXX of Lev 15; (b) nowhere in Lev 15 is the furniture washed or sprinkled; and (c) the context of Lev 15 is about sexual impurity, while the most recent evidence suggests that κλίνη in Mark 7:4, in keeping with the other terms used here, refers to a dining couch (cf. BDAG 549 s.v. κλίνη 2). Thus, it is difficult to see καὶ κλινῶν as a motivated reading. (2) κλίνη, though a relatively rare term in the NT, is in keeping with Markan usage (cf. Mark 4:21; 7:30). (3) The phrase could have been dropped accidentally, at least in some cases, via homoioteleuton. (4) The phrase may have been deliberately expunged by some scribes who thought the imagery of washing a dining couch quite odd. The longer reading, in this case, can thus be argued as the harder reading. On balance, even though a decision is difficult (especially because of the weighty external evidence for the shorter reading), it is preferable to retain καὶ κλινῶν in the text.

12 sn Verses 3-4 represent parenthetical remarks by the author, giving background information.

17 tc The majority of MSS, mostly Byzantine ([A] f^{13} 33 𝔐), have at the end of v. 8 material that seems to have come from v. 4 and v. 13: "the washing of pots and cups, and you do many other similar things." A slight variation on the wording occurs at the very beginning of v. 8 in mostly Western witnesses (D Θ 0131vid 28 565 it). Such floating texts are usually signs of scribal emendations. The fact that the earliest and most reliable MSS, as well as other important witnesses (𝔓45 ℵ B L W Δ 0274 f^{1} 2427 co), lacked this material also strongly suggests that the longer reading is secondary.

18 tc The translation here follows the reading στήσητε (stēsēte, "set up") found in D W Θ f^{1} 28 565 2542 it sys.p Cyp. The majority of MSS here read τηρήσητε (tērēsete; ℵ A L f^{13} 33 𝔐 co) or τηρῆτε (tērēte; B 2427), both translated "keep." It is hard to know which reading is best: On the one hand, τηρήσητε/τηρῆτε has much stronger external support, but στήσητε is a more difficult reading. What makes "keep" suspect is that it appears in two different forms, suggesting independent alterations of a difficult reading. Further, scribes may have been influenced by the preceding "commandment of God" to change the text toward "keep" (TCGNT 81), a common enough expression (cf. Matt 19:17; John 14:15; 1 Tim 6:1; 1 John 5:3; Rev 14:12). Thus, the more difficult reading is "set up." Also, the more natural opposite of "reject" (ἀθετεῖτε [atheite], literally "you set aside") is "set up." However, the Western reading may have been influenced by Exod 6:4 or Heb 10:9, but this likelihood seems remote. Thus, "set up" is more likely to be the original wording of Mark here.

21 sn Corban is a Hebrew loanword (transliterated in the Greek text and in most modern English translations) referring to something that has been set aside as a gift to be given to God at some later date, but which is still in the possession of the owner (L&N 53.22). According to contemporary Jewish tradition the person who made this claim was absolved from responsibility to support or assist his parents, a clear violation of the Mosaic law to honor one's parents (v. 10).

you no longer permit him to do anything for his father or mother. 7:13 Thus you nullify[1] the word of God by your tradition that you have handed down. And you do many things like this."

7:14 Then[2] he called the crowd again and said to them, "Listen to me, everyone, and understand. 7:15 There is nothing outside of a person that can defile him by going into him. Rather, it is what comes out of a person that defiles him."[3]

7:17 Now[4] when Jesus[5] had left the crowd and entered the house, his disciples asked him about the parable. 7:18 He said to them, "Are you so foolish? Don't you understand that whatever goes into a person from outside cannot defile him? 7:19 For it does not enter his heart but his stomach, and then goes out into the sewer."[6] (This means all foods are clean.)[7] 7:20 He said, "What comes out of a person defiles him. 7:21 For from within, out of the human heart, come evil ideas, sexual immorality, theft, murder, 7:22 adultery, greed, evil, deceit, debauchery, envy, slander, pride, and folly. 7:23 All these evils come from within and defile a person."

A Syrophoenician Woman's Faith

7:24 After Jesus[8] left there, he went to the region of Tyre.[9] When he went into a house, he did not want anyone to know, but[10] he was not able to escape notice. 7:25 Instead, a woman whose young daughter had an unclean spirit[11] immediately heard about him and came and fell at his feet. 7:26 The woman was a Greek, of Syrophoenician origin. She[12] asked him to cast the demon out of her daughter. 7:27 He said to her, "Let the children be satisfied first, for it is not right to take the children's bread and to throw it to the dogs."[13] 7:28 She answered, "Yes, Lord, but even the dogs under the table eat the children's crumbs." 7:29 Then[14] he said to her, "Because you said this, you may go. The demon has left your daughter." 7:30 She went home and found the child lying on the bed, and the demon gone.

Healing a Deaf Mute

7:31 Then[15] Jesus[16] went out again from the region of Tyre[17] and came through Sidon[18] to the Sea of Galilee in the region of the Decapolis.[19] 7:32 They brought to him a deaf man who had difficulty speaking, and they asked him to place his hands on him. 7:33 After Jesus[20] took him aside privately, away from the crowd, he put his

[3] tc Most later MSS add 7:16 "Let anyone with ears to hear, listen." This verse is included in A D W Θ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 latt sy, but is lacking in important Alexandrian MSS and a few others (א B L Δ* 0274 28 2427). It appears to be a scribal gloss (see 4:9 and 4:23), perhaps introduced as a reiteration of the thought in 7:14, and is almost certainly not an original part of the Greek text of Mark. The present translation follows NA[27] in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

[9] tc Most MSS, including early and important witnesses (א A B $f^{1.13}$ 33 2427 𝔐 lat), have here καὶ Σιδῶνος (kai Sidōnos, "and Sidon"). The Western text, as well as several other important MSS (D L W Δ Θ 28 565 it), lack the words. Although the external evidence is on the side of inclusion, it is difficult to explain why scribes would omit the mention of Sidon. On the other hand, the parallels in v. 31 and Matt 15:21 would be sufficient motivation for scribes to add Sidon here. Furthermore, every other mention of Tyre in the Gospels is accompanied by Sidon, putting pressure on scribes to conform this text as well. The shorter reading therefore, though without compelling external evidence on its side, is strongly supported by internal evidence, rendering judgment on its authenticity fairly certain.

sn The term *dog*s does not refer to wild dogs (scavenging animals roaming around the countryside) in this context, but to small dogs taken in as house pets. It is thus not a derogatory term per se, but is instead intended by Jesus to indicate the privileged position of the Jews (especially his disciples) as the initial recipients of Jesus' ministry. The woman's response of faith and her willingness to accept whatever Jesus would offer pleased him to such an extent that he granted her request. This is the only miracle mentioned in Mark that Jesus performed at a distance without ever having seen the afflicted person, or issuing some sort of audible command.

The Feeding of the Four Thousand

8:1 In those days there was another large crowd with nothing to eat. So[7] Jesus[8] called his disciples and said to them, 8:2 "I have compassion on the crowd, because they have already been here with me three days, and they have nothing to eat. 8:3 If I send them home hungry, they will faint on the way, and some of them have come from a great distance." 8:4 His disciples answered him, "Where can someone get enough bread in this desolate place to satisfy these people?" 8:5 He asked them, "How many loaves do you have?" They replied, "Seven." 8:6 Then[9] he directed the crowd to sit down on the ground. After he took the seven loaves and gave thanks, he broke them and began giving them to the disciples to serve. So[10] they served the crowd. 8:7 They also had a few small fish. After giving thanks for these, he told them to serve these as well. 8:8 Everyone[11] ate and was satisfied, and they picked up the broken pieces left over, seven baskets full. 8:9 There were about four thousand[12] who ate.[13] Then he dismissed them.[14] 8:10 Immediately he got into a boat with his disciples and went to the district of Dalmanutha.[15]

The Demand for a Sign

8:11 Then the Pharisees[16] came and began to argue with Jesus, asking for[17] a sign from heaven[18] to test him. 8:12 Sighing deeply in his spirit he said, "Why does this generation look for a sign? I tell you the truth,[19] no sign will be given to this generation." 8:13 Then[20] he left them, got back into the boat, and went to the other side.

The Yeast of the Pharisees and Herod

8:14 Now[21] they had forgotten to take bread, except for one loaf they had with them in the boat. 8:15 And Jesus[22] ordered them,[23] "Watch out! Beware of the yeast of the Pharisees[24] and the yeast of Herod!" 8:16 So they began to discuss with one another about having no bread.[25] 8:17 When he learned of this,[26] Jesus said to them, "Why are you arguing[27] about having no bread? Do you still not see or understand? Have your hearts been hardened? 8:18 Though you have eyes, don't you see? And though you have

While there are similarities in language and in the response of the disciples, there are also noticeable differences, including the different number present on each occasion (i.e., 5,000 in chap. 6 and 4,000 here). In the final analysis, the fact that Jesus refers to two distinct feedings in 8:18-20 settles the issue; this passage represents another very similar incident to that recorded in 6:30-44.

A Two-stage Healing

8:22 Then[5] they came to Bethsaida. They brought a blind man to Jesus[6] and asked him to touch him. 8:23 He took the blind man by the hand and brought him outside of the village. Then[7] he spit on his eyes, placed his hands on his eyes[8] and asked, "Do you see anything?" 8:24 Regaining his sight[9] he said, "I see people, but they look like trees walking." 8:25 Then Jesus[10] placed his hands on the man's[11] eyes again. And he opened his eyes,[12] his sight was restored, and he saw everything clearly. 8:26 Jesus[13] sent him home, saying, "Do not even go into the village."[14]

Peter's Confession

8:27 Then Jesus and his disciples went to the villages of Caesarea Philippi.[15] On the way he asked his disciples,[16] "Who do people say that I am?" 8:28 They said,[17] "John the Baptist, others say Elijah,[18] and still others, one of the prophets." 8:29 He asked them, "But who do you say that I am?" Peter answered him,[19] "You are the Christ."[20] 8:30 Then[21] he warned them not to tell anyone about him.[22]

1 tn Grk "do you not hear?"

2 tc ‡ A difficult textual problem is found here, involving three different variants: καὶ λέγουσιν (kai legousin) is found in ℵ pc; οἱ δὲ εἶπον (hoi de eipon) is the reading of 𝔓⁴⁵ A D W Θ *f*¹·¹³ 33 𝔐 it; and καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ (kai legousin autō) is supported by B C L (Δ 579 892) 2427 pc. The first two variants would not be translated differently; the third reading, however, would add "to him" after "they replied." What complicates the issue is that the external evidence is fairly evenly split between the second and third readings, though the first reading is in agreement with the second reading in lacking the dative pronoun. Indeed, another layout of the problem here could treat this as two distinct problems: καὶ λέγουσιν vs. οἱ δὲ εἶπον and αὐτῷ vs. omission of the word. In this second arrangement of the problem, the reading without the pronoun has slightly stronger support (𝔓⁴⁵ ℵ A D W Θ *f*¹·¹³ 33 𝔐 it). Internally, Mark never elsewhere uses the form εἶπον for the third person plural indicative form of this verb (it is always εἶπαν [eipan]). And although only one other time in Mark is the object lacking after λέγουσιν (6:38), it is a similar context (viz., the disciples' response before Jesus feeds the 5000). Very tentatively, the reading that is followed here is καὶ λέγουσιν. NA²⁷ puts αὐτῷ in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to indicate the implied sequence in the narrative.

4 sn Do you still not understand? The disciples in Mark's Gospel often misunderstood the miracles of Jesus as well as his teaching. Between Matthew, Mark, and Luke, Mark paints the most revealing portrait of the shortcomings of the Twelve (cf. 6:51-52; 7:17-19; 8:1-10, 14-21, 27-30, 33; 9:5, 10, 33; 10:28, 35-45; 14:19, 29-31, 32-37, 50, 66-72).

6 tn Grk "to him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "village, and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

8 tn Grk "on him," but the word πάλιν in v. 25 implies that Jesus touched the man's eyes at this point.

9 tn The verb ἀναβλέπω, though normally meaning "look up," when used in conjunction with blindness means "regain sight."

10 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the blind man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Or "he looked intently"; or "he stared with eyes wide open" (BDAG 226 s.v. διαβλέπω 1).

13 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tc Codex Bezae (D) replaces "Do not even go into the village" with "Go to your house, and do not tell anyone, not even in the village." Other MSS with some minor variations (Θ *f*¹³ 28 565 2542 pc) expand on this prohibition to read "Go to your house, and if you go into the village, do not tell anyone." There are several other variants here as well. While these expansions are not part of Mark's original text, they do accurately reflect the sense of Jesus' prohibition.

16 tn Grk "he asked his disciples, saying to them." The phrase λέγων αὐτοῖς (legōn autois) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

17 tn Grk "And they said to him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

18 sn The appearance of Elijah would mean that the end time had come. According to 2 Kgs 2:11, Elijah was still alive. In Mal 4:5 it is said that Elijah would be the precursor of Messiah.

19 tn Grk "Answering, Peter said to him." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "Peter answered him."

20 tn Or "the Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn The term χριστός (christos) was originally an adjective ("anointed"), developing in LXX into a substantive ("an anointed one"), then developing still further into a technical generic term ("the anointed one"). In the intertestamental period it developed further into a technical term referring to the hoped-for anointed one, that is, a specific individual. In the NT the development starts there (technical-specific), is so used in the gospels, and then develops in Paul to mean virtually Jesus' last name.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to indicate the conclusion of the episode.

22 sn Mark 8:27-10:52. The entire section 8:27-10:52 is built around three passion predictions of Jesus (8:31; 9:31; 10:33). These predictions form the structure of the section, the content for the section (Jesus' suffering, death, and the meaning of genuine discipleship) and the mood of the section (i.e., a somber mood). What is interesting is that after each passion prediction, Mark records both the misunderstanding of the disciples and then Jesus' teaching on the nature of his death and what genuine discipleship is all about: (1) denying oneself (8:34-38); (2) humility and serving (9:33-37); (3) suffering, humble service, and not lording it over people (10:35-45). For further discussion of the structure of the passage, see W. L. Lane, Mark (NICNT), 292-94.

First Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

8:31 Then[1] Jesus[2] began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer[3] many things and be rejected by the elders, chief priests, and experts in the law,[4] and be killed, and after three days rise again. 8:32 He spoke openly about this. So[5] Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him. 8:33 But after turning and looking at his disciples, he rebuked Peter and said, "Get behind me, Satan. You are not setting your mind on God's interests, but on man's."[6]

Following Jesus

8:34 Then[7] Jesus[8] called the crowd, along with his disciples, and said to them, "If anyone wants to become my follower,[9] he must deny[10] himself, take up his cross,[11] and follow me. 8:35 For whoever wants to save his life[12] will lose it,[13] but whoever loses his life for my sake and for the gospel will save it. 8:36 For what benefit is it for a person[14] to gain the whole world, yet[15] forfeit his life? 8:37 What can a person give in exchange for his life? 8:38 For if anyone is ashamed of me and my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, the Son of Man will also be ashamed of him[16] when he comes in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." 9:1 And he said to them, "I tell you the truth,[17] there are some standing here who will not[18] experience[19] death before they see the kingdom of God come with power."[20]

The Transfiguration

9:2 Six days later[21] Jesus took with him Peter, James, and John and led them alone up a high mountain privately. And he was transfigured before them,[22] 9:3 and his clothes became radiantly white, more so than any launderer in the world could bleach them. 9:4 Then Elijah appeared before them along with Moses,[23] and they were talking with Jesus. 9:5 So[24] Peter said to Jesus,[25] "Rabbi, it is good for us to be here. Let us make three shelters[26] – one for you, one for Moses, and one for Elijah." 9:6 (For they were afraid, and he did not know what to say.)[27]

---

[1] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] sn The necessity that the Son of Man suffer is the particular point that needed emphasis, since for many 1st century Jews the Messiah was a glorious and powerful figure, not a suffering one.

[4] tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate Peter's rebuke is in response to Jesus' teaching about the suffering of the Son of Man.

[6] tn Grk "people's."

[8] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn Grk "to follow after me."

[10] tn This translation better expresses the force of the Greek third person imperative than the traditional "let him deny," which could be understood as merely permissive.

[11] sn To bear the cross means to accept the rejection of the world for turning to Jesus and following him. Discipleship involves a death that is like a crucifixion; see Gal 6:14.

[12] tn Or "soul" (throughout vv. 35-37).

[13] sn The point of the saying whoever wants to save his life will lose it is that if one comes to Jesus then rejection by many will certainly follow. If self-protection is a key motivation, then one will not respond to Jesus and will not be saved. One who is willing to risk rejection will respond and find true life.

[14] tn Grk "a man," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here to refer to both men and women.

[15] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[16] sn How one responds now to Jesus and his teaching is a reflection of how Jesus, as the Son of Man who judges, will respond then in the final judgment.

[17] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[18] tn The Greek negative here (οὐ μή, ou mē) is the strongest possible.

[19] tn Grk "will not taste." Here the Greek verb does not mean "sample a small amount" (as a typical English reader might infer from the word "taste"), but "experience something cognitively or emotionally; come to know something" (cf. BDAG 195 s.v. γεύομαι 2).

[20] sn Several suggestions have been made as to the referent for the phrase the kingdom of God come with power: (1) the transfiguration itself, which immediately follows in the narrative; (2) Jesus' resurrection and ascension; (3) the coming of the Spirit; (4) Jesus' second coming and the establishment of the kingdom. The reference to after six days in 9:2 seems to indicate that Mark had the transfiguration in mind insofar as it was a substantial prefiguring of the consummation of the kingdom (although this interpretation is not without its problems). As such, the transfiguration was a tremendous confirmation to the disciples that even though Jesus had just finished speaking of his death (8:31; 9:31; 10:33), he was nonetheless the promised Messiah and things were proceeding according to God's plan.

[22] sn In 1st century Judaism and in the NT, there was the belief that the righteous get new, glorified bodies in order to enter heaven (1 Cor 15:42-49; 2 Cor 5:1-10). This transformation means the righteous will share the glory of God. One recalls the way Moses shared the Lord's glory after his visit to the mountain in Exod 34. So the disciples saw Jesus transfigured, and they were getting a sneak preview of the great glory that Jesus would have (only his glory is more inherent to him as one who shares in the rule of the kingdom).

[23] sn Commentators and scholars discuss why Moses and Elijah are present. The most likely explanation is that Moses represents the prophetic office (Acts 3:18-22) and Elijah pictures the presence of the last days (Mal 4:5-6), the prophet of the eschaton (the end times).

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[25] tn Grk "And answering, Peter said to Jesus." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

[26] tn Or "dwellings," "booths" (referring to the temporary booths constructed in the celebration of the feast of Tabernacles).

sn Peter apparently wanted to celebrate the feast of Tabernacles or Booths that looked forward to the end and wanted to treat Moses, Elijah, and Jesus as equals by making three shelters (one for each). It was actually a way of expressing honor to Jesus, but the next few verses make it clear that it was not enough honor.

[27] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

9:7 Then[1] a cloud[2] overshadowed them,[3] and a voice came from the cloud, "This is my one dear Son.[4] Listen to him!"[5] 9:8 Suddenly when they looked around, they saw no one with them any more except Jesus.

9:9 As they were coming down from the mountain, he gave them orders not to tell anyone what they had seen until after the Son of Man had risen from the dead. 9:10 They kept this statement to themselves, discussing what this rising from the dead meant.

9:11 Then[6] they asked him,[7] "Why do the experts in the law[8] say that Elijah must come first?" 9:12 He said to them, "Elijah does indeed come first, and restores all things. And why is it written that the Son of Man must suffer many things and be despised? 9:13 But I tell you that Elijah has certainly come, and they did to him whatever they wanted, just as it is written about him."

The Disciples' Failure to Heal

9:14 When they came to the disciples, they saw a large crowd around them and experts in the law[9] arguing with them. 9:15 When the whole crowd saw him, they were amazed and ran[10] at once and greeted him. 9:16 He asked them, "What are you arguing about with them?" 9:17 A member of the crowd said to him, "Teacher, I brought you my son, who is possessed by a spirit that makes him mute. 9:18 Whenever it seizes him, it throws him down, and he foams at the mouth, grinds his teeth, and becomes rigid. I asked your disciples to cast it out, but[11] they were not able to do so."[12] 9:19 He answered them,[13] "You[14] unbelieving[15] generation! How much longer[16] must I be with you? How much longer must I endure[17] you?[18] Bring him to me." 9:20 So they brought the boy[19] to him. When the spirit saw him, it immediately threw the boy into a convulsion. He[20] fell on the ground and rolled around, foaming at the mouth. 9:21 Jesus[21] asked his father, "How long has this been happening to him?" And he said, "From childhood. 9:22 It has often thrown him into fire or water to destroy him. But if you are able to do anything, have compassion on us and help us." 9:23 Then Jesus said to him, "'If you are able?'[22] All things are possible for the one who believes." 9:24 Immediately the father of the boy cried out and said, "I believe; help my unbelief!"

9:25 Now when Jesus saw that a crowd was quickly gathering, he rebuked[23] the unclean spirit,[24] saying to it, "Mute and deaf spirit, I command you, come out of him and never enter

2 sn This cloud is the cloud of God's presence and the voice is his as well.

3 tn Grk "And there came a cloud, surrounding them."

4 tn Grk "my beloved Son," or "my Son, the beloved [one]." The force of ἀγαπητός (agapētos) is often "pertaining to one who is the only one of his or her class, but at the same time is particularly loved and cherished" (L&N 58.53; cf. also BDAG 7 s.v. 1).

5 sn The expression listen to him comes from Deut 18:15 and makes two points: 1) Jesus is a prophet like Moses, a leader-prophet, and 2) they have much yet to learn from him.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

7 tn Grk "And they were asking him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated.

8 tn Or "Why do the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

9 tn Or "and scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

10 tn Grk The participle προστρέχοντες (prostrechontes) has been translated as a finite verb to make the sequence of events clear in English.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

12 tn The words "to do so" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity and stylistic reasons.

13 tn Grk "And answering, he said to them." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant, but the phrasing of the sentence was modified slightly to make it clearer in English.

14 tn Grk "O." The marker of direct address, ὦ (ō), is functionally equivalent to a vocative and is represented in the translation by "you."

15 tn Or "faithless."

sn The rebuke for lack of faith has OT roots: Num 14:27; Deut 32:5, 30; Isa 59:8.

16 tn Grk "how long."

17 tn Or "put up with." See Num 11:12; Isa 46:4.

18 sn The pronouns you...you are plural, indicating that Jesus is speaking to a group rather than an individual.

19 tn Grk "him."

20 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

21 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tc Most mss (A C^3 Ψ 33 𝔐) have τὸ εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι (to ei dunasai pisteusai, "if you are able to believe"), instead of τὸ εἰ δύνῃ (to ei dunē, "if you are able"; supported by ℵ B C* L N* Δ f^1 579 892 pc). Others have εἰ δύνῃ (or δυνάσαι) πιστεῦσαι ("if you are able to believe"; so D K Θ f^{13} 28 565 al), while still others have τοῦτο εἰ δύνῃ (touto ei dunē, "if you can [do] this"; so 𝔓^{45} W). The reading that best explains the rise of the others is τὸ εἰ δύνῃ. The neuter article indicates that the Lord is now quoting the boy's father who, in v. 22, says εἴ τι δύνῃ (ei ti dunē, "if you are able to do anything"). The article is thus used anaphorically (see ExSyn 238). However, scribes could easily have overlooked this idiom and would consequently read τὸ εἰ δύνῃ as the protasis of a conditional clause of the Lord's statement. As such, it would almost demand the infinitive πιστεῦσαι, producing the reading τὸ εἰ δύνασαι πιστεῦσαι ("if you are able to believe, all things are possible..."). But the article here seems to be meaningless, prompting other scribes to modify the text still further. Some dropped the nonsensical article, while others turned it into the demonstrative τοῦτο and dropped the infinitive. It is clear that scribes had difficulty with the original wording here, and made adjustments in various directions. What might not be so clear is the exact genealogy of the descent of all the readings. However, τὸ εἰ δύνῃ is both a hard saying, best explains the rise of the other readings, and is supported by the best witnesses. It thus rightly deserves to be considered authentic.

23 tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

24 sn Unclean spirit refers to an evil spirit.

him again." 9:26 It shrieked, threw him into terrible convulsions, and came out. The boy[1] looked so much like a corpse that many said, "He is dead!" 9:27 But Jesus gently took his hand and raised him to his feet, and he stood up.

9:28 Then,[2] after he went into the house, his disciples asked him privately, "Why couldn't we cast it out?" 9:29 He told them, "This kind can come out only by prayer."[3]

Second Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

9:30 They went out from there and passed through Galilee. But[4] Jesus[5] did not want anyone to know, 9:31 for he was teaching his disciples and telling them, "The Son of Man will be betrayed into the hands of men.[6] They[7] will kill him,[8] and after three days he will rise."[9] 9:32 But they did not understand this statement and were afraid to ask him.

Questions About the Greatest

9:33 Then[10] they came to Capernaum.[11] After Jesus[12] was inside the house he asked them, "What were you discussing on the way?" 9:34 But they were silent, for on the way they had argued with one another about who was the greatest. 9:35 After he sat down, he called the twelve and said to them, "If anyone wants to be first, he must be last of all and servant of all." 9:36 He took a little child and had him stand among them. Taking him in his arms, he said to them, 9:37 "Whoever welcomes[13] one of these little children[14] in my name welcomes me, and whoever welcomes me does not welcome me but the one who sent me."

On Jesus' Side

9:38 John said to him, "Teacher, we saw someone casting out demons in your name, and we tried to stop him because he was not following us." 9:39 But Jesus said, "Do not stop him, because no one who does a miracle in my name will be able soon afterward to say anything bad about me. 9:40 For whoever is not against us is for us. 9:41 For I tell you the truth,[15] whoever gives you a cup of water because[16] you bear Christ's[17] name will never lose his reward.

9:42 "If anyone causes one of these little ones who believe in me to sin, it would be better for him to have a huge millstone[18] tied around his neck and to be thrown into the sea. 9:43 If your hand causes you to sin, cut it off! It is better for you to enter into life crippled than to have[19] two hands and go into hell,[20] to the unquenchable fire.[21] 9:45 If your foot causes you to sin,

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the boy) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

3 tc Most witnesses, even early and excellent ones (𝔓45vid ℵ2 A C D L W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat co), have "and fasting" (καὶ νηστείᾳ, kai nēsteia) after "prayer" here. But this seems to be a motivated reading, due to the early church's emphasis on fasting (TCGNT 85; cf., e.g., 2 Clem. 16:4; Pol. Phil 7:2; Did. 1:3; 7:4). That the most important witnesses (ℵ* B), as well as a few others (0274 2427 k), lack καὶ νηστείᾳ, when a good reason for the omission is difficult to find, argues strongly for the shorter reading.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is considered by some to be used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NRSV, "into human hands"; CEV, "to people"). However, because this can be taken as a specific reference to the group responsible for Jesus' arrest, where it is unlikely women were present (cf. Matt 26:47-56; Mark 14:43-52; Luke 22:47-53; John 18:2-12), the word "men" has been retained in the translation. There may also be a slight wordplay with "the Son of Man" earlier in the verse.

7 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

8 tn Grk "They will kill him, and being killed, after..." The redundancy in the statement has been removed in the translation.

9 sn They will kill him and after three days he will rise. See the note at the end of Mark 8:30 regarding the passion predictions.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn This verb, δέχομαι (dechomai), is a term of hospitality (L&N 34.53).

14 sn Children were very insignificant in ancient culture, so this child would be the perfect object lesson to counter the disciples' selfish ambitions.

15 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

16 tn Grk "in [the] name that of Christ you are."

17 tn Or "bear the Messiah's"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 8:29.

18 tn Grk "the millstone of a donkey." This refers to a large flat stone turned by a donkey in the process of grinding grain (BDAG 661 s.v. μύλος 2; L&N 7.68-69). The same term is used in the parallel account in Matt 18:6.

sn The punishment of drowning with a heavy weight attached is extremely gruesome and reflects Jesus' views concerning those who cause others who believe in him to sin.

19 tn Grk "than having."

20 sn The word translated hell is "Gehenna" (γέεννα, geenna), a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew words ge hinnom ("Valley of Hinnom"). This was the valley along the south side of Jerusalem. In OT times it was used for human sacrifices to the pagan god Molech (cf. Jer 7:31; 19:5-6; 32:35), and it came to be used as a place where human excrement and rubbish were disposed of and burned. In the intertestamental period, it came to be used symbolically as the place of divine punishment (cf. 1 En. 27:2, 90:26; 4 Ezra 7:36). This Greek term also occurs in vv. 45, 47.

It is better to enter life lame than to have[1] two feet and be thrown into hell.[2] 9:47 If your eye causes you to sin, tear it out![3] It is better to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye than to have[4] two eyes and be thrown into hell, 9:48 where their worm never dies and the fire is never quenched. 9:49 Everyone will be salted with fire.[5] 9:50 Salt[6] is good, but if it loses its saltiness,[7] how can you make it salty again? 5 tc The earliest MSS ([𝔎] B L [W] Δ 0274 $f^{1,13}$ 28* 565 700 pc sy^{s} sa) have the reading adopted by the translation. Codex Bezae (D) and several Itala read “Every sacrifice will be salted with salt.” The majority of other MSS (A C Θ Ψ [2427] 𝔐 lat $sy^{p,h}$) have both readings, “Everyone will be salted with fire, and every sacrifice will be salted with salt.” An early scribe may have written the LXX text of Lev 2:13 (“Every sacrifice offering of yours shall be salted with salt”) in the margin of his MS. At a later stage, copyists would either replace the text with this marginal note or add the note to the text. The longer reading thus seems to be the result of the conflation of the Alexandrian reading “salted with fire” and the Western reading “salted with salt.” The reading adopted by the text enjoys the best support and explains the other readings in the MS tradition.

sn The statement everyone will be salted with fire is difficult to interpret. It may be a reference to (1) unbelievers who enter hell as punishment for rejection of Jesus, indicating that just as salt preserves so they will be preserved in their punishment in hell forever; (2) Christians who experience suffering in this world because of their attachment to Christ; (3) any person who experiences suffering in a way appropriate to their relationship to Jesus. For believers this means the suffering of purification, and for unbelievers it means hell, i.e., eternal torment.

6 sn Salt was used as seasoning or fertilizer (BDAG 41 s.v. ἅλας a), or as a preservative. If salt ceased to be useful, it was thrown away. With this illustration Jesus warned about a disciple who ceased to follow him.

7 sn The difficulty of this saying is understanding how salt could lose its saltiness since its chemical properties cannot change. It is thus often assumed that Jesus was referring to chemically impure salt, perhaps a natural salt which, when exposed to the elements, had all the genuine salt leached out, leaving only the sediment or impurities behind. Others have suggested the background of the saying is the use of salt blocks by Arab bakers to line the floor of their ovens: Under the intense heat these blocks would eventually crystallize and undergo a change in chemical composition, finally being thrown out as unserviceable. A saying in the Talmud (b. Bekhorot 8b) attributed to R. Joshua ben Chananja (ca. A.D. 90), when asked the question “When salt loses its flavor, how can it be made salty again?” is said to have replied, “By salting it with the afterbirth of a mule.” He was then asked, “Then does the mule (being sterile) bear young?” to which he replied: “Can salt lose its flavor?” The point appears to be both are impossible. The saying, while admittedly late, suggests that culturally the loss of flavor by salt was regarded as an impossibility. Genuine salt can never lose its flavor. In this case the saying by Jesus here may be similar to Matt 19:24, where it is likewise impossible for the camel to go through the eye of a sewing needle.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as “then” to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

9 tn Grk “He”; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tc Alexandrian and other witnesses (𝔎 B C* L Ψ 0274 892 2427 pc co) read καὶ πέραν (kai peran, “and beyond”), while Western and Caesarean witnesses (C^{2} D W Δ Θ $f^{1,13}$ 28 565 579 1241 al) read πέραν (simply “beyond”). It is difficult to decide between the Alexandrian and Western readings here, but since the parallel in Matt 19:1 omits καί the weight is slightly in favor of including it here; scribes may have omitted the word here to harmonize this passage to the Matthean passage. Because of the perceived geographical difficulties found in the earlier readings (omission of the word “and” would make it seem as though Judea is beyond the Jordan), the majority of the witnesses (A 𝔐) read διὰ τοῦ πέραν (dia tou peran, “through the other side”), perhaps trying to indicate the direction of Jesus’ travel.

11 tn “River” is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity. The region referred to here is sometimes known as Transjordan (i.e., “across the Jordan”).

12 tc The Western text (D it) and a few others have only καί (kai) here, rather than καὶ προσελθόντες Φαρισαῖοι (kai proselthontes Pharisaioi, here translated as “then some Pharisees came”). The longer reading, a specific identification of the subject, may have been prompted by the parallel in Matt 19:3. The fact that the MSS vary in how they express this subject lends credence to this judgment: οἱ δὲ Φαρισαῖοι προσελθόντες (hoi de Pharisaioi proselthontes, “now the Pharisees came”) in W Θ 565 2542 pc; καὶ προσελθόντες οἱ Φαρισαῖοι (kai proselthontes hoi Pharisaioi, “then the Pharisees came”) in 𝔎 C N (f^{1}: καὶ προσελθόντες ἐπηρώτησαν αὐτὸν οἱ Φαρισαῖοι) 579 1241 1424 pm; and καὶ προσελθόντες Φαρισαῖοι in A B K L Γ Δ Ψ f^{13} 28 700 892 2427 pm. Further, the use of an indefinite plural (a general “they”) is a Markan feature, occurring over twenty times. Thus, internally the evidence looks rather strong for the shorter reading, in spite of the minimal external support for it. However, if scribes assimilated this text to Matt 19:3, a more exact parallel might have been expected: Matthew has καὶ προσῆλθον αὐτῷ Φαρισαῖοι (kai prosēlthon autō Pharisaioi, “then Pharisees came to him”). Although the verb form needs to be different according to syntactical requirements of the respective sentences, the word order variety, as well as the presence or absence of the article and the alternation between δέ and καί as the introductory conjunction, all suggest that the variety of readings might not be due to scribal adjustments toward Matthew. At the same time, the article with Φαρισαῖοι is found in both Gospels in many of the same witnesses (𝔎 𝔐 in Matt; 𝔎 pm in Mark), and the anarthrous Φαρισαῖοι is likewise parallel in many MSS (B L f^{13} 700 892). Another consideration is the possibility that very early in the transmissional history, scribes naturally inserted the most obvious subject (the Pharisees would be the obvious candidates as the ones to test Jesus). This may account for the reading with δέ, since Mark nowhere else uses this conjunction to introduce the Pharisees into the narrative. As solid as the internal arguments against the longer reading seem to be, the greatest weakness is the witnesses that support it. The Western MSS are prone to alter the text by adding, deleting, substituting, or rearranging large amounts of material. There are times when the rationale for this seems inexplicable. In light of the much stronger evidence for “the Pharisees came,” even though it occurs in various permutations, it is probably wisest to retain the words. This judgment, however, is hardly certain.

sn See the note on Pharisees in 2:16.

him[1] they asked, "Is it lawful for a man to divorce his[2] wife?"[3] 10:3 He answered them,[4] "What did Moses command you?" 10:4 They said, "Moses permitted a man to write a certificate of dismissal and to divorce her."[5] 10:5 But Jesus said to them, "He wrote this commandment for you because of your hard hearts.[6] 10:6 But from the beginning of creation he[7] made them male and female.[8] 10:7 For this reason a man will leave his father and mother,[9] 10:8 and the two will become one flesh.[10] So they are no longer two, but one flesh. 10:9 Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate."

1 tn In Greek this phrase occurs at the end of the sentence. It has been brought forward to conform to English style.

2 tn The personal pronoun "his" is not in the Greek text, but is certainly implied and has been supplied in the English translation to clarify the sense of the statement (cf. "his wife" in 10:7).

3 tn The particle εἰ (ei) is often used to introduce both indirect and direct questions. Thus, another possible translation is to take this as an indirect question: "They asked him if it were lawful for a man to divorce his wife." See BDF §440.3.

sn The question of the Pharisees was anything but sincere; they were asking it to test him. Jesus was now in the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas (i.e., Judea and beyond the Jordan) and it is likely that the Pharisees were hoping he might answer the question of divorce in a way similar to John the Baptist and so suffer the same fate as John, i.e., death at the hands of Herod (cf. 6:17-19). Jesus answered the question not on the basis of rabbinic custom and the debate over Deut 24:1, but rather from the account of creation and God's original design.

5 tn Grk "to divorce." The pronoun has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

sn An allusion to Deut 24:1. The Pharisees were all in agreement that the OT permitted a man to write a certificate of dismissal and divorce his wife (not vice-versa) and that remarriage was therefore sanctioned. But the two rabbinic schools of Shammai and Hillel differed on the grounds for divorce. Shammai was much stricter than Hillel and permitted divorce only in the case of sexual immorality. Hillel permitted divorce for almost any reason (cf. the Mishnah, m. Gittin 9.10).

6 tn Grk "heart" (a collective singular).

7 tc Most MSS have ὁ θεός (ho theos, "God") as the explicit subject of ἐποίησεν (epoiēsen, "he made"; A D W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat sy), while the most important witnesses, along with a few others, lack ὁ θεός (𝔓 B C L Δ 579 2427 co). On the one hand, it is possible that the shorter reading is an assimilation to the wording of the LXX of Gen 1:27b where ὁ θεός is lacking. However, since it is mentioned at the beginning of the verse (Gen 1:27a) with ἐποίησεν scribes may have been motivated to add it in Mark to make the subject clear. Further, confusion could easily arise in this dominical saying, because Moses was the previously mentioned subject (v. 5) and inattentive readers might regard him as the subject of ἐποίησεν in v. 6. Thus, both on internal and external grounds, the most probable wording of the original text here lacked ὁ θεός.

8 sn A quotation from Gen 1:27; 5:2.

9 tc ‡ The earliest witnesses, as well as a few other important MSS (𝔓 B Ψ 892* 2427 sy^{s}), lack the rest of the quotation from Gen 2:24, "and will be united with his wife." Most MSS ([A C] D [L N] W [Δ] Θ $f^{1[1],13}$ [579] 𝔐 lat co) have the clause. It could be argued that the shorter reading was an accidental omission, due to this clause and v. 8 both beginning with καί (kai, "and"). But if that were the case, one might expect to see corrections in 𝔓 or B. This can be overstated, of course; both MSS combine in their errors on several other occasions. However, the nature of the omission here (both its length and the fact that it is from the OT) argues that 𝔓 and B reflect the original wording. Further, the form of the longer reading is identical with the LXX of Gen 2:24, but different from the quotation in Matt 19:5 (προσκολληθήσεται vs. κολληθήσεται [proskollēthēsetai vs. kollēthēsetai], πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα vs. τῇ γυναικί [pros tēn gunaika vs. tē gunaiki]). The significance of this is that Matthew's quotations of the OT are often, if not usually, directly from the Hebrew – except when he is following Mark's quotation of the OT. Matthew in fact only departs from Mark's verbatim quotation of the LXX in 15:4 and 19:19, both texts quoting from Exod 20:12/Deut 5:6 (and in both places the only difference from Mark/LXX is the dropping of σου [sou, "your"]). This might suggest that the longer reading here was not part of what the first evangelist had in his copy of Mark. Further, the reading without this line is harder, for the wife is not explicitly mentioned in v. 7; the casual reader could read "the two" of v. 8 as referring to father and mother rather than husband and wife. (And Mark is known for having harder, shorter readings that scribes tried to soften by explanatory expansion: In this chapter alone, cf. the textual problems in v. 6 [the insertion of ὁ θεός]; in v. 13 [the replacement of αὐτοῖς with τοῖς προσφέρουσιν or τοῖς φέρουσιν]; in v. 24 [insertion of ἐστιν τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ χρήμασιν, πλούσιον, or τὰ χρήματα ἔχοντες; and perhaps in v. 2 [possible insertion of προσελθόντες Φαρισαῖοι or similar permutations].) Although a decision is difficult, the preferred reading lacks "and will be united with his wife." NA^{27} has the longer reading in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

10 sn A quotation from Gen 2:24. The "two" refers to husband and wife, not father and mother mentioned in the previous verse. See the tc note on "mother" in v. 7 for discussion.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "So" to indicate that Jesus' statement is in response to the disciples' question (v. 10).

12 sn It was not uncommon in Jesus' day for a Jewish man to divorce his wife, but it was extremely rare for a wife to initiate such an action against her husband, since among many things it would have probably left her destitute and without financial support. Mark's inclusion of the statement And if she divorces her husband and marries another, she commits adultery (v. 12) reflects more the problem of the predominantly Gentile church in Rome to which he was writing. As such it may be an interpretive and parenthetical comment by the author rather than part of the saying by Jesus, which would stop at the end of v. 11. As such it should then be placed in parentheses. Further NT passages that deal with the issue of divorce and remarriage are Matt 5:31-32; 19:1-12; Luke 16:18; 1 Cor 7.

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

14 tn Grk "so that he would touch them." Here the touch is connected with (or conveys) a blessing (cf. v. 16; also BDAG 126 s.v. ἅπτω 2.c).

15 tc "Those who brought them" (ἐπετιμῶν τοῖς προσφέρουσιν, epetimōn tois prospherousin) is the reading of most MSS (A D W [Θ $f^{1,13}$] 𝔐 lat sy), but it is probably a motivated reading. Since the subject is not explicit in the earliest and best witnesses as well as several others (𝔓 B C L Δ Ψ 579 892 2427), scribes would be prone to add "those who brought them" here to clarify that the children were not the ones being scolded. It could be argued that the masculine pronoun αὐτοῖς (autois, "them") only rarely was used with the neuter antecedent παιδία (paidia, "children"), and thus the longer reading was not motivated by scribal clarification. However, such rare usage is found in Mark (cf. 5:41; 9:24-26); when Jesus saw this, he was indignant and said to them, "Let the little children come to me and do not try to stop them, for the kingdom of God belongs to such as these.[1] 10:15 I tell you the truth,[2] whoever does not receive[3] the kingdom of God like a child[4] will never[5] enter it." 10:16 After he took the children in his arms, he placed his hands on them and blessed them.

The Rich Man

10:17 Now[6] as Jesus[7] was starting out on his way, someone ran up to him, fell on his knees, and said, "Good teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"[8] 10:18 Jesus said to him, "Why do you call me good?[9] No one is good except God alone. 10:19 You know the commandments: 'Do not murder, do not commit adultery, do not steal, do not give false testimony, do not defraud, honor your father and mother.'"[10] 10:20 The man[11] said to him, "Teacher, I have wholeheartedly obeyed[12] all these laws[13] since my youth."[14] 10:21 As Jesus looked at him, he felt love for him and said, "You lack one thing. Go, sell whatever you have and give the money[15] to the poor, and you will have treasure[16] in heaven. Then come, follow me." 10:22 But at this statement, the man[17] looked sad and went away sorrowful, for he was very rich.[18]

10:23 Then[19] Jesus looked around and said to his disciples, "How hard it is for the rich to enter the kingdom of God!" 10:24 The disciples were astonished at these words. But again Jesus said to them,[20] "Children, how hard it is[21] to enter the further, scribes routinely added clarifications when such were not necessary. Thus, both on external and internal grounds, the shorter reading is strongly preferred. Similar motivations are behind the translation here, namely, "those who brought them" has been supplied to ensure that the parents who brought the children are in view, not the children themselves.

tn Grk "the disciples scolded them."

1 sn The kingdom of God belongs to such as these. Children are a picture of those whose simple trust illustrates what faith is all about. The remark illustrates how everyone is important to God, even those whom others regard as insignificant.

2 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

3 sn On receive see John 1:12.

4 sn The point of the comparison receive the kingdom of God like a child has more to do with a child's trusting spirit and willingness to be dependent and receive from others than any inherent humility the child might possess.

5 tn The negation in Greek (οὐ μή, ou mē) is very strong here.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn Mark 10:17-31. The following unit, Mark 10:17-31, can be divided up into three related sections: (1) the rich man's question (vv. 17-22); (2) Jesus' teaching on riches and the kingdom of God (vv. 23-27); and (3) Peter's statement and Jesus' answer (vv. 28-31). They are all tied together around the larger theme of the relationship of wealth to the kingdom Jesus had been preaching. The point is that it is impossible to attain to the kingdom by means of riches. The passage as a whole is found in the section 8:27-10:52 in which Mark has been focusing on Jesus' suffering and true discipleship. In vv. 28-31 Jesus does not deny great rewards to those who follow him, both in the present age and in the age to come, but it must be thoroughly understood that suffering will be integral to the mission of the disciples and the church, for in the very next section (10:32-34) Jesus reaffirmed the truth about his coming rejection, suffering, death, and resurrection.

8 sn The rich man wanted to know what he must do to inherit eternal life, but Jesus had just finished teaching that eternal life was not earned but simply received (10:15).

9 sn Jesus' response, Why do you call me good?, was designed to cause the young man to stop and think for a moment about who Jesus really was. The following statement No one is good except God alone seems to point the man in the direction of Jesus' essential nature and the demands which logically follow on the man for having said it.

10 sn A quotation from Exod 20:12-16; Deut 5:16-20, except for do not defraud, which is an allusion to Deut 24:14.

11 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the man who asked the question in v. 17) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Grk "kept." The implication of this verb is that the man has obeyed the commandments without fail throughout his life, so the adverb "wholeheartedly" has been added to the translation to bring out this nuance.

13 tn Grk "these things." The referent of the pronoun (the laws mentioned by Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn While the rich man was probably being sincere when he insisted I have wholeheartedly obeyed all these laws, he had confined his righteousness to external obedience. The rich man's response to Jesus' command to give away all he had revealed that internally he loved money more than God.

14 sn Since my youth. Judaism regarded the age of thirteen as the age when a man would have become responsible to live by God's commands.

15 tn The words "the money" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 sn The call for sacrifice comes with a promise of eternal reward: You will have treasure in heaven. Jesus' call is a test to see how responsive the man is to God's direction through him. Will he walk the path God's agent calls him to walk? For a rich person who got it right, see Zacchaeus in Luke 19:1-10.

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man who asked the question in v. 17) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn Grk "he had many possessions." This term (κτῆμα, ktēma) is often used for land as a possession.

20 tn Grk "But answering, Jesus again said to them." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

21 tc Most MSS (A C D Θ $f^{1.13}$ 28 565 2427 𝔐 lat sy) have here "for those who trust in riches" (τοὺς πεποιθότας ἐπὶ [τοῖς] χρήμασιν, tous pepoithotas epi [tois] chrēmasin); W has πλούσιον (plousion) later in the verse, producing the same general modification on the dominical saying ("how hard it is for the rich to enter..."). But such qualifications on the Lord's otherwise harsh and absolute statements are natural scribal expansions, intended to soften the dictum. Further, the earliest and best witnesses, along with a few others (ℵ B Δ Ψ sa), lack any such qualifications. That W lacks the longer expansion and only has πλούσιον suggests that its archetype agreed with ℵ B here; its voice should be heard with theirs. Thus, both on external and internal grounds, the shorter reading is preferred.

kingdom of God! 10:25 It is easier for a camel[1] to go through the eye of a needle[2] than for a rich person to enter the kingdom of God." 10:26 They were even more astonished and said[3] to one another, "Then[4] who can be saved?"[5] 10:27 Jesus looked at them and replied, "This is impossible for mere humans,[6] but not for God; all things are possible for God."

10:28 Peter began to speak to him, "Look,[7] we have left everything to follow you!"[8] 10:29 Jesus said, "I tell you the truth,[9] there is no one who has left home or brothers or sisters or mother or father or children or fields for my sake and for the sake of the gospel 10:30 who will not receive in this age[10] a hundred times as much – homes, brothers, sisters, mothers, children, fields, all with persecutions[11] – and in the age to come, eternal life.[12] 10:31 But many who are first will be last, and the last first."

Third Prediction of Jesus' Death and Resurrection

10:32 They were on the way, going up to Jerusalem.[13] Jesus was going ahead of them, and they were amazed, but those who followed were afraid. He took the twelve aside again and began to tell them what was going to happen to him. 10:33 "Look, we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be handed over to the chief priests and experts in the law.[14] They will condemn him to death and will turn him over to the Gentiles. 10:34 They will mock him, spit on him, flog[15] him severely, and kill him. Yet[16] after three days,[17] he will rise again."

The Request of James and John

10:35 Then[18] James and John, the sons of Zebedee, came to him and said, "Teacher, we want you to do for us whatever we ask." 10:36 He said to them, "What do you want me to do for you?" 10:37 They said to him, "Permit one of us to sit at your right hand and the other at your left in your glory." 10:38 But Jesus said to them, "You don't know what you are asking! Are you able to drink the cup I drink or be baptized with the baptism I experience?"[19] 10:39 They said to him, "We are able."[20] Then Jesus said to them, "You will drink the cup I drink, and you will be baptized with the baptism I experience, 10:40 but to sit at my right or at my left is not mine to give. It is for those for whom it has been prepared."[21]

1 tc A few witnesses (f[13] 28 579 pc) read κάμιλον (kamilon, "rope") for κάμηλον (kamēlon, "camel"), either through accidental misreading of the text or intentionally so as to soften Jesus' words.

2 sn The referent of the eye of a needle is a sewing needle. (The gate in Jerusalem known as "The Needle's Eye" was built during the middle ages and was not in existence in Jesus' day.) Jesus was speaking rhetorically to point out that apart from God's intervention, salvation is impossible (v. 27).

3 tn Grk "But they were even more astonished, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) has been translated here as a finite verb to emphasize the sequence of events: The disciples were astonished, then they spoke.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of thought.

5 sn The assumption is that the rich are blessed, so if they risk exclusion, who is left to be saved?

6 tn The plural Greek term ἄνθρωποις (anthrōpois) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NASB 1995 update, "people"). Because of the contrast here between mere mortals and God ("impossible for men...all things are possible for God") the phrase "mere humans" has been used in the translation.

7 sn Peter wants reassurance that the disciples' response and sacrifice has been noticed.

8 tn Grk "We have left everything and followed you." Koine Greek often used paratactic structure when hypotactic was implied.

9 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

10 tn Grk "this time" (καιρός, kairos), but for stylistic reasons this has been translated "this age" here.

11 tn Grk "with persecutions." The "all" has been supplied to clarify that the prepositional phrase belongs not just to the "fields."

12 sn Note that Mark (see also Matt 19:29; Luke 10:25, 18:30) portrays eternal life as something one receives in the age to come, unlike John, who emphasizes the possibility of receiving eternal life in the present (John 5:24).

14 tn Or "chief priests and scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

15 tn Traditionally, "scourge him" (the term means to beat severely with a whip, L&N 19.9). BDAG 620 s.v. μαστιγόω 1.a states, "The 'verberatio' is denoted in the passion predictions and explicitly as action by non-Israelites Mt 20:19; Mk 10:34; Lk 18:33"; the verberatio was the beating given to those condemned to death in the Roman judicial system. Here the term μαστιγόω (mastigow) has been translated "flog...severely" to distinguish it from the term φραγελλόω (fragellow) used in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

17 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (A[1*] W Θ f[1.13] 𝔐 sy), have "on the third day" (τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, tē tritē hēmera) instead of "after three days." But not only does Mark nowhere else speak of the resurrection as occurring on the third day, the idiom he uses is a harder reading (cf. Mark 8:31; 9:31, though in the latter text the later witnesses also have τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ). Further, τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ conforms to the usage that is almost universally used in Matthew and Luke, and is found in the parallels to this text (Matt 20:19; Luke 18:33). Thus, scribes would be doubly motivated to change the wording. The most reliable witnesses, along with several other MSS (ℵ B C D L Δ Ψ 579 892 2427 it co), have resisted this temptation.

19 tn Grk "baptism I am baptized with." This same change has been made in v. 39.

20 sn No more naïve words have ever been spoken as those found here coming from James and John, "We are able." They said it with such confidence and ease, yet they had little clue as to what they were affirming. In the next sentence Jesus confirms that they will indeed suffer for his name.

21 sn After the first passion prediction in 8:31 Jesus rebuked Peter as having been used by Satan. After the second passion prediction in 9:31 the disciples were concerned about who would be the greatest in the kingdom. After the third passion prediction in 10:33 James and John asked for positions of honor and rulership in the kingdom, revealing their complete misunderstanding of the nature of the kingdom and exposing their inadequacy as true disciples of Jesus. Jesus replied that such positions were for those for whom it has been prepared.

10:41 Now[1] when the other ten[2] heard this,[3] they became angry with James and John. 10:42 Jesus called them and said to them, "You know that those who are recognized as rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and those in high positions use their authority over them. 10:43 But it is not this way among you. Instead whoever wants to be great among you must be your servant, 10:44 and whoever wants to be first among you must be the slave[4] of all. 10:45 For even the Son of Man did not come to be served but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom[5] for many."

Healing Blind Bartimaeus

10:46 They came to Jericho.[6] As Jesus[7] and his disciples and a large crowd were leaving Jericho, Bartimaeus the son of Timaeus, a blind beggar, was sitting by the road. 10:47 When he heard that it was Jesus the Nazarene, he began to shout,[8] "Jesus, Son of David,[9] have mercy[10] on me!" 10:48 Many scolded[11] him to get him to be quiet, but he shouted all the more, "Son of David, have mercy on me!" 10:49 Jesus stopped and said, "Call him." So[12] they called the blind man and said to him, "Have courage! Get up! He is calling you." 10:50 He threw off his cloak, jumped up, and came to Jesus. 10:51 Then[13] Jesus said to him,[14] "What do you want me to do for you?" The blind man replied, "Rabbi,[15] let me see again."[16] 10:52 Jesus said to him, "Go, your faith has healed you." Immediately he regained[17] his sight and followed him on the road.

The Triumphal Entry

11:1 Now[18] as they approached Jerusalem,[19] near Bethphage[20] and Bethany, at the Mount of Olives,[21] Jesus[22] sent two of his disciples 11:2 and said to them, "Go to the village ahead of you.[23] As soon as you enter it, you will find a colt tied there that has never been ridden.[24] Untie it and bring it here. 11:3 If anyone says to you, 'Why are you doing this?' say, 'The Lord needs it[25] and will send it back here soon.'" 11:4 So[26] they went and found a colt tied at a door, outside in the street, and untied it. 11:5 Some people standing there said to them, "What are you doing, untying that colt?" 11:6 They replied as Jesus had told them, and the bystanders[27] let them go. 11:7 Then[28] they brought the colt to Jesus, threw their cloaks[29] on it, and he sat on it.[30] 11:8 Many spread their cloaks on the road and others spread branches they had cut in the fields. 11:9 Both those who went ahead and

2 tn Grk "the ten."

3 tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

4 tn Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v. 1). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

5 sn The Greek word for ransom (λύτρον, lutron) is found here and in Matt 20:28 and refers to the payment of a price in order to purchase the freedom of a slave. The idea of Jesus as the "ransom" is that he paid the price with his own life by standing in humanity's place as a substitute, enduring the judgment that was deserved for sin.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "to shout and to say." The infinitive λέγειν (legein) is redundant here and has not been translated.

9 sn Jesus was more than a Nazarene to this blind person, who saw quite well that Jesus was Son of David. There was a tradition in Judaism that the Son of David (Solomon) had great powers of healing (Josephus, Ant. 8.2.5 [8.42-49]).

10 sn Have mercy on me is a request for healing. It is not owed the man. He simply asks for God's kind grace.

11 tn Or "rebuked." The crowd's view was that surely Jesus would not be bothered with someone as unimportant as a blind beggar.

15 tn Or "Master"; Grk ῥαββουνί (rabbouni).

16 tn Grk "that I may see [again]." The phrase can be rendered as an imperative of request, "Please, give me sight." Since the man is not noted as having been blind from birth (as the man in John 9 was) it is likely the request is to receive back the sight he once had.

17 tn Or "received" (see the note on the phrase "let me see again" in v. 51).

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

20 sn The exact location of the village of Bethphage is not known. Most put it on the southeast side of the Mount of Olives and northwest of Bethany, about 1.5 miles (3 km) east of Jerusalem.

21 sn "Mountain" in English generally denotes a higher elevation than it often does in reference to places in Palestine. The Mount of Olives is really a ridge running north to south about 3 kilometers (1.8 miles) long, east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley. Its central elevation is about 30 meters (100 ft) higher than Jerusalem. It was named for the large number of olive trees which grew on it.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn Grk "the village lying before you" (BDAG 530 s.v. κατέναντι 2.b).

24 tn Grk "a colt tied there on which no one of men has ever sat."

25 sn The custom called angaria allowed the impressment of animals for service to a significant figure.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

27 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the people mentioned in v. 5) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "garments"; but this refers in context to their outer cloaks. The action is like 2 Kgs 9:13.

those who followed kept shouting, "Hosanna![1] Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord![2] 11:10 Blessed is the coming kingdom of our father David! Hosanna in the highest!" 11:11 Then[3] Jesus[4] entered Jerusalem and went to the temple. And after looking around at everything, he went out to Bethany with the twelve since it was already late.

Cursing of the Fig Tree

11:12 Now[5] the next day, as they went out from Bethany, he was hungry. 11:13 After noticing in the distance a fig tree with leaves, he went to see if he could find any fruit[6] on it. When he came to it he found nothing but leaves, for it was not the season for figs. 11:14 He said to it,[7] "May no one ever eat fruit from you again." And his disciples heard it.[8]

Cleansing the Temple

11:15 Then[9] they came to Jerusalem.[10] Jesus[11] entered the temple area[12] and began to drive out those who were selling and buying in the temple courts.[13] He turned over the tables of the money changers and the chairs of those selling doves, 11:16 and he would not permit anyone to carry merchandise[14] through the temple courts.[15] 11:17 Then he began to teach[16] them and said, "Is it not written: 'My house will be called a house of prayer for all nations'?[17] But you have turned it into a den[18] of robbers!"[19] 11:18 The chief priests and the experts in the law[20] heard it and they considered how they could assassinate[21] him, for they feared him, because the whole crowd was amazed by his teaching. 11:19 When evening came, Jesus and his disciples[22] went out of the city.

The Withered Fig Tree

11:20 In the morning as they passed by, they saw the fig tree withered from the roots. 11:21 Peter remembered and said to him, "Rabbi, look! The fig tree you cursed has withered." 11:22 Jesus said to them, "Have faith in God. 11:23 I tell you the truth,[23] if someone says to this mountain, 'Be lifted up and thrown into the sea,' and does not doubt in his heart but believes that sn Hosanna is an Aramaic expression that literally means, "help, I pray," or "save, I pray." By Jesus' time it had become a strictly liturgical formula of praise, however, and was used as an exclamation of praise to God.

[1] tn The expression Ὡσαννά (hōsanna, literally in Hebrew, "O Lord, save") in the quotation from Ps 118:25-26 was probably by this time a familiar liturgical expression of praise, on the order of "Hail to the king," although both the underlying Aramaic and Hebrew expressions meant "O Lord, save us." The introductory ὡσαννά is followed by the words of Ps 118:25, εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι κυρίου (eulogēmenos ho erchomenos en onomati kuriou), although in the Fourth Gospel the author adds for good measure καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ (kai ho basileus tou Israēl). In words familiar to every Jew, the author is indicating that at this point every messianic expectation is now at the point of realization. It is clear from the words of the psalm shouted by the crowd that Jesus is being proclaimed as messianic king. See E. Lohse, TDNT 9:682-84.

[2] sn A quotation from Ps 118:25-26.

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to indicate the transition from the previous narrative.

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[6] tn Grk "anything."

[7] tn Grk "And answering, he said to it." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

[8] sn Mark 11:12-14. The incident of the cursing of the fig tree occurs before he enters the temple for a third time (11:27ff) and is questioned at length by the religious leaders (11:27-12:40). It appears that Mark records the incident as a portent of what is going to happen to the leadership in Jerusalem who were supposed to have borne spiritual fruit but have been found by Messiah at his coming to be barren. The fact that the nation as a whole is indicted is made explicit in chapter 13:1-37 where Jesus speaks of Jerusalem's destruction and his second coming.

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[11] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "the temple."

sn The merchants (those who were selling) would have been located in the Court of the Gentiles.

sn Matthew (21:12-27), Mark (here, 11:15-19), and Luke (19:45-46) record this incident of the temple cleansing at the end of Jesus' ministry. John (2:13-16) records a cleansing of the temple at the beginning of Jesus' ministry. See the note on the word temple courts in John 2:14 for a discussion of the relationship of these accounts to one another.

[14] tn Or "things." The Greek word σκεῦος (skeuos) can refer to merchandise, property, goods, a vessel, or even generally "things" (but in the sense of some implement or tool). The idea here is almost certainly restricted to merchandise, rather than the more general "things," although some suggest from the parallel with m. Berakhot 9.5 that Jesus was not even allowing sandals, staffs, or coin-purses to be carried through the court. The difficulty with this interpretation, however, is that it is fundamentally an appeal to Jewish oral tradition (something Jesus rarely sided with) as well as being indiscriminate toward all the worshipers.

[15] tn Grk "the temple."

[16] tn The imperfect ἐδίδασκεν (edidasken) is here taken ingressively.

[17] sn A quotation from Isa 56:7.

[18] tn Or "a hideout" (see L&N 1.57).

[19] sn A quotation from Jer 7:11. The meaning of Jesus' statement about making the temple courts a den of robbers probably operates here at two levels. Not only were the religious leaders robbing the people financially, but because of this they had also robbed them spiritually by stealing from them the opportunity to come to know God genuinely. It is possible that these merchants had recently been moved to this location for convenience.

[20] tn Or "The chief priests and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[21] tn Grk "how they could destroy him."

[22] tn Grk "they"; the referents (Jesus and his disciples) have been specified in the translation for clarity. Without such clarification there is room for considerable confusion here, since there are two prior sets of plural referents in the context, "the chief priests and experts in the law" and "the whole crowd" (both in v. 18).

[23] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

what he says will happen, it will be done for him. 11:24 For this reason I tell you, whatever you pray and ask for, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours. 11:25 Whenever you stand praying, if you have anything against anyone, forgive him, so that your Father in heaven will[1] also forgive you your sins."[2]

The Authority of Jesus

11:27 They came again to Jerusalem.[3] While Jesus[4] was walking in the temple courts,[5] the chief priests, the experts in the law,[6] and the elders came up to him 11:28 and said, "By what authority[7] are you doing these things? Or who gave you this authority to do these things?" 11:29 Jesus said to them, "I will ask you one question. Answer me and I will tell you by what authority I do these things: 11:30 John's baptism – was it from heaven or from people?[8] Answer me." 11:31 They discussed with one another, saying, "If we say, 'From heaven,' he will say, 'Then why did you not believe him?' 11:32 But if we say, 'From people – '" (they feared the crowd, for they all considered John to be truly a prophet). 11:33 So[9] they answered Jesus,[10] "We don't know."[11] Then Jesus said to them, "Neither will I tell you[12] by what authority[13] I am doing these things."

The Parable of the Tenants

12:1 Then[14] he began to speak to them in parables: "A man planted a vineyard.[15] He put a fence around it, dug a pit for its winepress, and built a watchtower. Then[16] he leased it to tenant farmers[17] and went on a journey. 12:2 At harvest time he sent a slave[18] to the tenants to collect from them[19] his portion of the crop.[20] 12:3 But[21] those tenants[22] seized his slave,[23] beat him,[24] and sent him away empty-handed.[25] 12:4 So[26] he sent another slave to them again. This one they struck on the head and treated outrageously. 12:5 He sent another, and that one they killed. This happened to many others, some of whom were beaten, others killed. 12:6 He had one left, his one dear son.[27] Finally he sent him to them, saying, 'They will respect my son.' 12:7 But those tenants said to one another, 'This is the heir.

1 tn Although the Greek subjunctive mood, formally required in a subordinate clause introduced by ἵνα (hina), is traditionally translated by an English subjunctive (e.g., "may," so KJV, NAB, NIV, NRSV), changes in the use of the subjunctive in English now result in most readers understanding such a statement as indicating permission ("may" = "has permission to") or as indicating uncertainty ("may" = "might" or "may or may not"). Thus a number of more recent translations render such instances by an English future tense ("will," so TEV, CEV, NLT, NASB 1995 update). That approach has been followed here.

2 tc A number of significant MSS of various texttypes (א B L W Δ Ψ 565 700 892 pc sa) do not include 11:26 "But if you do not forgive, neither will your Father in heaven forgive your sins." The verse is included in most later MSS (A [C D] Θ [$f^{1,13}$ 33] 𝔐 lat) and is not likely to be original. It is probably an assimilation to Matt 6:15. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

5 tn Grk "the temple."

6 tn Or "the chief priests, the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

7 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ.

8 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is probably used here (and in v. 32) in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NAB, NRSV, "of human origin"; TEV, "from human beings"; NLT, "merely human").

sn The question is whether John's ministry was of divine or human origin.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

10 tn Grk "answering, they said to Jesus." The participle ἀποκριθέντες (apokrithentes) is redundant, but the syntax of the phrase has been modified to conform to English style.

11 sn Very few questions could have so completely revealed the wicked intentions of the religious leaders. Jesus' question revealed the motivation of the religious leaders and exposed them for what they really were – hypocrites. They indicted themselves when they cited only two options and chose neither of them ("We do not know"). The point of Mark 11:27-33 is that no matter what Jesus said in response to their question they were not going to believe it and would in the end use it against him.

12 sn Neither will I tell you. Though Jesus gave no answer, the analogy he used to their own question makes his view clear. His authority came from heaven.

13 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ. This is exactly the same phrase as in v. 28.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

15 sn The vineyard is a figure for Israel in the OT (Isa 5:1-7). The nation and its leaders are the tenants, so the vineyard here may well refer to the promise that resides within the nation. The imagery is like that in Rom 11:11-24.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

17 sn The leasing of land to tenant farmers was common in this period.

18 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 10:44.

sn This slave (along with the others) represent the prophets God sent to the nation, who were mistreated and rejected.

19 tn Grk "from the tenants," but this is redundant in English, so the pronoun ("them") was used in the translation.

20 tn Grk "from the fruits of the vineyard."

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

22 tn Grk "But they"; the referent (the tenants, v. 1) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn Grk "seizing him, they beat and sent away empty-handed." The referent of the direct object of "seizing" (the slave sent by the owner) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The objects of the verbs "beat" and "sent away" have been supplied in the translation to conform to English style. Greek often omits direct objects when they are clear from the context.

24 sn The image of the tenants beating up the owner's slave pictures the nation's rejection of the prophets and their message.

25 sn The slaves being sent empty-handed suggests that the vineyard was not producing any fruit – and thus neither was the nation of Israel.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the tenants' mistreatment of the first slave.

27 tn Grk "one beloved son." See comment at Mark 1:11.

sn The owner's decision to send his one dear son represents God sending Jesus.

Come, let's kill him and the inheritance will be ours!' 12:8 So[1] they seized him,[2] killed him, and threw his body[3] out of the vineyard.[4] 12:9 What then will the owner of the vineyard do? He will come and destroy[5] those tenants and give the vineyard to others.[6] 12:10 Have you not read this scripture:

> 'The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone.[7]
> 12:11 This is from the Lord, and it is marvelous in our eyes'?"[8]

12:12 Now[9] they wanted to arrest him (but they feared the crowd), because they realized that he told this parable against them. So[10] they left him and went away.[11]

Paying Taxes to Caesar

12:13 Then[12] they sent some of the Pharisees[13] and Herodians[14] to trap him with his own words.[15] 12:14 When they came they said to him, "Teacher, we know that you are truthful and do not court anyone's favor, because you show no partiality[16] but teach the way of God in accordance with the truth.[17] Is it right[18] to pay taxes[19] to Caesar[20] or not? Should we pay or shouldn't we?" 12:15 But he saw through their hypocrisy and said[21] to them, "Why are you testing me? Bring me a denarius[22] and let me look at it." 12:16 So[23] they brought one, and he said to them, "Whose image[24] is this, and whose inscription?" They replied,[25] "Caesar's." 12:17 Then Jesus said to them, "Give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."[26] And they were utterly amazed at him.

Marriage and the Resurrection

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

2 tn Grk "seizing him." The participle λαβόντες (labontes) has been translated as attendant circumstance.

3 tn Grk "him."

4 sn Throwing the heir's body out of the vineyard pictures Jesus' death outside of Jerusalem.

5 sn The statement that the owner will come and destroy those tenants is a promise of judgment; see Luke 13:34-35; 19:41-44.

6 sn The warning that the owner would give the vineyard to others suggests that the care of the promise and the nation's hope would be passed to others. This eventually looks to Gentile inclusion; see Eph 2:11-22.

7 tn Or "capstone," "keystone." Although these meanings are lexically possible, the imagery in Eph 2:20-22 and 1 Cor 3:11 indicates that the term κεφαλὴ γωνίας (kephalē gōnias) refers to a cornerstone, not a capstone.

sn The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone. The use of Ps 118:22-23 and the "stone imagery" as a reference to Christ and his suffering and exaltation is common in the NT (see also Matt 21:42; Luke 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet 2:6-8; cf. also Eph 2:20). The irony in the use of Ps 118:22-23 in Mark 12:10-11 is that in the OT, Israel was the one rejected (or perhaps her king) by the Gentiles, but in the NT it is Jesus who is rejected by Israel.

8 sn A quotation from Ps 118:22-23.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to introduce a somewhat parenthetical remark by the author.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

11 sn The point of the parable in Mark 12:1-12 is that the leaders of the nation have been rejected by God and the vineyard (v. 9, referring to the nation and its privileged status) will be taken from them and given to others (an allusion to the Gentiles).

13 sn See the note on Pharisees in 2:16.

14 sn Pharisees and Herodians made a very interesting alliance. W. W. Wessel ("Mark," EBC 8:733) comments: "The Herodians were as obnoxious to the Pharisees on political grounds as the Sadducees were on theological grounds. Yet the two groups united in their opposition to Jesus. Collaboration in wickedness, as well as goodness, has great power. Their purpose was to trip Jesus up in his words so that he would lose the support of the people, leaving the way open for them to destroy him." See also the note on "Herodians" in Mark 3:6.

15 tn Grk "trap him in word."

16 tn Grk "and it is not a concern to you about anyone because you do not see the face of men."

17 sn Teach the way of God in accordance with the truth. Very few comments are as deceitful as this one; they did not really believe this at all. The question of the Pharisees and Herodians was specifically designed to trap Jesus.

18 tn Or "lawful," that is, in accordance with God's divine law. On the syntax of ἔξεστιν (exestin) with an infinitive and accusative, see BDF §409.3.

19 tn According to L&N 57.180 the term κῆνσος (kēnsos) was borrowed from Latin and referred to a poll tax, a tax paid by each adult male to the Roman government.

sn This question concerning taxes was specifically designed to trap Jesus. If he answered yes, then his opponents could publicly discredit him as a sympathizer with Rome. If he answered no, then they could go to the Roman governor and accuse Jesus of rebellion.

20 tn Or "the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

21 tn Grk "Aware of their hypocrisy he said."

22 tn Here the specific name of the coin was retained in the translation, because not all coins in circulation in Palestine at the time carried the image of Caesar. In other places δηνάριον (dēnarion) has been translated simply as "silver coin" with an explanatory note.

sn A denarius was a silver coin stamped with the image of the emperor and worth approximately one day's wage for a laborer.

23 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate their response to Jesus' request for a coin.

24 tn Or "whose likeness."

sn In this passage Jesus points to the image (Grk εἰκών, eikōn) of Caesar on the coin. This same Greek word is used in Gen 1:26 (LXX) to state that humanity is made in the "image" of God. Jesus is making a subtle yet powerful contrast: Caesar's image is on the denarius, so he can lay claim to money through taxation, but God's image is on humanity, so he can lay claim to each individual life.

25 tn Grk "they said to him."

26 sn Jesus' answer to give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's was a both/and, not the questioners' either/or. So he slipped out of their trap.

27 sn The Sadducees controlled the official political structures of Judaism at this time, being the majority members of the Sanhedrin. They were known as extremely strict on law and order issues (Josephus, J. W. 2.8.2 [2.119], 2.8.14 [2.164-166]; Ant. 13.5.9 [13.171-173], 13.10.6 [13.293-298], 18.1.2 [18.11], 18.1.4 [18.16-17], 20.9.1 [20.199]; Life 2 [10-11]). They also did not believe in resurrection or in angels, an important detail in v. 25. See also Matt 3:7, 16:1-12, 22:23-34; Luke 20:27-38; Acts 4:1, 5:17, 23:6-8.

28 sn This remark is best regarded as a parenthetical note by the author.

him,[1] 12:19 "Teacher, Moses wrote for us: 'If a man's brother dies and leaves a wife but no children, that man[2] must marry[3] the widow and father children[4] for his brother.'[5] 12:20 There were seven brothers. The first one married,[6] and when he died he had no children. 12:21 The second married her and died without any children, and likewise the third. 12:22 None of the seven had children. Finally, the woman died too. 12:23 In the resurrection, when they rise again,[7] whose wife will she be? For all seven had married her."[8] 12:24 Jesus said to them, "Aren't you deceived[9] for this reason, because you don't know the scriptures or the power of God? 12:25 For when they rise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels[10] in heaven. 12:26 Now as for the dead being raised,[11] have you not read in the book of Moses, in the passage about the bush,[12] how God said to him, 'I am the God of Abraham, the[13] God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob'?[14] 12:27 He is not the God of the dead but of the living.[15] You are badly mistaken!"

The Greatest Commandment

12:28 Now[16] one of the experts in the law[17] came and heard them debating. When he saw that Jesus[18] answered them well, he asked him, "Which commandment is the most important of all?" 12:29 Jesus answered, "The most important is: 'Listen, Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one. 12:30 Love[19] the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind, and with all your strength.'[20] 12:31 The second is: 'Love your neighbor as yourself.'[21] There is no other commandment greater than these." 12:32 The expert in the law said to him, "That is true, Teacher; you are right to say that he is one, and there is no one else besides him.[22] 12:33 And to love him with all your heart, with all your mind, and with all your strength[23] and to love your neighbor as yourself[24] is more important than all burnt offerings and sacrifices." 12:34 When Jesus saw that he had answered thoughtfully, he said to him, "You are not far from the kingdom of God." Then no one dared any longer to question him.

The Messiah: David's Son and Lord

12:35 While Jesus was teaching in the temple courts, he said, "How is it that the experts in the law[25] say that the Christ[26] is David's son?[27] 12:36 David himself, by the Holy Spirit, said,

1 tn Grk "and asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "his brother"; but this would be redundant in English with the same phrase "his brother" at the end of the verse, so most modern translations render this phrase "the man" (so NIV, NRSV).

3 tn The use of ἵνα (hina) with imperatival force is unusual (BDF §470.1).

4 tn Grk "raise up seed" (an idiom for fathering children).

5 sn A quotation from Deut 25:5. This practice is called levirate marriage (see also Ruth 4:1-12; Mishnah, m. Yevamot; Josephus, Ant. 4.8.23 [4.254-256]). The levirate law is described in Deut 25:5-10. The brother of a man who died without a son had an obligation to marry his brother's widow. This served several purposes: It provided for the widow in a society where a widow with no children to care for her would be reduced to begging, and it preserved the name of the deceased, who would be regarded as the legal father of the first son produced from that marriage.

6 tn Grk "took a wife" (an idiom for marrying a woman).

7 tc The words "when they rise again" are missing from several important witnesses (א B C D L W Δ Ψ 33 579 892 2427 pc c r^1 k sy^p co). They are included in A Θ $f^{1.(13)}$ 𝔐 lat $sy^{s.h}$. The strong external pedigree of the shorter reading gives one pause. Nevertheless, the Alexandrian and other MSS most likely dropped the words from the text either to conform the wording to the parallel in Matt 22:28 or because "when they rise again" was redundant. But the inclusion of these words is thoroughly compatible with Mark's usually pleonastic style (see TCGNT 93), and therefore most probably authentic to Mark's Gospel.

8 tn Grk "For the seven had her as wife."

9 tn Or "mistaken" (cf. BDAG 822 s.v. πλανάω 2.c.γ).

10 sn Angels do not die, nor do they eat according to Jewish tradition (1 En. 15:6; 51:4; Wis 5:5; 2 Bar. 51:10; 1QH 3.21-23).

11 tn Grk "Now as for the dead that they are raised."

12 sn See Exod 3:6. Jesus used a common form of rabbinic citation here to refer to the passage in question.

13 tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

14 sn A quotation from Exod 3:6.

15 sn He is not God of the dead but of the living. Jesus' point was that if God could identify himself as God of the three old patriarchs, then they must still be alive when God spoke to Moses; and so they must be raised.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

17 tn Or "One of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "You will love." The future indicative is used here with imperatival force (see ExSyn 452 and 569).

20 sn A quotation from Deut 6:4-5 and Josh 22:5 (LXX). The fourfold reference to different parts of the person says, in effect, that one should love God with all one's being.

21 sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

22 sn A quotation from Deut 4:35.

23 sn A quotation from Deut 6:5.

24 sn A quotation from Lev 19:18.

25 tn Or "that the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

26 tn Or "the Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 8:29.

27 sn It was a common belief in Judaism that Messiah would be David's son in that he would come from the lineage of David. On this point the Pharisees agreed and were correct. But their understanding was nonetheless incomplete, for Messiah is also David's Lord. With this statement Jesus was affirming that, as the Messiah, he is both God and man.

'The Lord said to my lord,[1]
"Sit at my right hand,
until I put your enemies under your feet."'[2] 12:37 If David himself calls him 'Lord,' how can he be his son?"[3] And the large crowd was listening to him with delight.

Warnings About Experts in the Law

12:38 In his teaching Jesus[4] also said, "Watch out for the experts in the law.[5] They like walking[6] around in long robes and elaborate greetings[7] in the marketplaces, 12:39 and the best seats in the synagogues[8] and the places of honor at banquets. 12:40 They[9] devour widows' property,[10] and as a show make long prayers. These men will receive a more severe punishment."

The Widow's Offering

12:41 Then[11] he[12] sat down opposite the offering box,[13] and watched the crowd putting coins into it. Many rich people were throwing in large amounts. 12:42 And a poor widow came and put in two small copper coins,[14] worth less than a penny. 12:43 He called his disciples and said to them, "I tell you the truth,[15] this poor widow has put more into the offering box[16] than all the others.[17] 12:44 For they all gave out of their wealth.[18] But she, out of her poverty, put in what she had to live on, everything she had."[19]

The Destruction of the Temple

13:1 Now[20] as Jesus[21] was going out of the temple courts, one of his disciples said to him, "Teacher, look at these tremendous stones and buildings!"[22] 13:2 Jesus said to him, "Do you see these great buildings? Not one stone will be left on another.[23] All will be torn down!"[24]

Signs of the End of the Age

13:3 So[25] while he was sitting on the Mount of Olives opposite the temple, Peter, James, John,[26] and Andrew asked him privately,

---

[1] sn The Lord said to my Lord. With David being the speaker, this indicates his respect for his descendant (referred to as my Lord). Jesus was arguing, as the ancient exposition assumed, that the passage is about the Lord's anointed. The passage looks at an enthronement of this figure and a declaration of honor for him as he takes his place at the side of God. In Jerusalem, the king's palace was located to the right of the temple to indicate this kind of relationship. Jesus was pressing the language here to get his opponents to reflect on how great Messiah is.

[2] sn A quotation from Ps 110:1.

[3] tn Grk "David himself calls him 'Lord.' So how is he his son?" The conditional nuance, implicit in Greek, has been made explicit in the translation (cf. Matt 22:45).

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn Or "for the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[6] tn In Greek this is the only infinitive in vv. 38-39. It would be awkward in English to join an infinitive to the following noun clauses, so this has been translated as a gerund.

[7] sn There is later Jewish material in the Talmud that spells out such greetings in detail. See H. Windisch, TDNT 1:498.

[8] sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21.

[9] tn Grk "who," continuing the sentence begun in v. 38.

[10] tn Grk "houses," "households"; however, the term can have the force of "property" or "possessions" as well (O. Michel, TDNT 5:131; BDAG 695 s.v. οἶκια 1.a).

[12] tc Most MSS, predominantly of the Western and Byzantine texts (A D W Θ $f^{1,13}$ 33 2542 𝔐 lat), have ὁ Ἰησοῦς (ho Iēsous, "Jesus") as the explicit subject here, while ℵ B L Δ Ψ 892 2427 pc lack the name. A natural scribal tendency is to expand the text, especially to add the Lord's name as the explicit subject of a verb. Scribes much less frequently omitted the Lord's name (cf. the readings of W Θ 565 1424 in Mark 12:17). The internal and external evidence support one another here in behalf of the shorter reading.

[13] tn On the term γαζοφυλάκιον (gazophulakion), often translated "treasury," see BDAG 186 s.v., which states, "For Mk 12:41, 43; Lk 21:1 the mng. contribution box or receptacle is attractive. Acc. to Mishnah, Shekalim 6, 5 there were in the temple 13 such receptacles in the form of trumpets. But even in these passages the general sense of 'treasury' is prob., for the contributions would go [into] the treasury via the receptacles." Based upon the extra-biblical evidence (see sn following), however, the translation opts to refer to the actual receptacles and not the treasury itself.

sn The offering box probably refers to the receptacles in the temple forecourt by the Court of Women used to collect free-will offerings. These are mentioned by Josephus, J. W. 5.5.2 (5.200); 6.5.2 (6.282); Ant. 19.6.1 (19.294), and in 1 Macc 14:49 and 2 Macc 3:6, 24, 28, 40 (see also Luke 21:1; John 8:20).

[14] sn These two small copper coins were lepta (sing. "lepton"), the smallest and least valuable coins in circulation in Palestine, worth one-half of a quadrans or 1/128 of a denarius, or about six minutes of an average daily wage. This was next to nothing in value.

[15] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[16] tn See the note on the term "offering box" in v. 41.

[17] sn Has put more into the offering box than all the others. With God, giving is weighed evaluatively, not counted. The widow was praised because she gave sincerely and at some considerable cost to herself.

[18] tn Grk "out of what abounded to them."

[19] sn The contrast between this passage, 12:41-44, and what has come before in 11:27-12:40 is remarkable. The woman is set in stark contrast to the religious leaders. She was a poor widow, they were rich. She was uneducated in the law, they were well educated in the law. She was a woman, they were men. But whereas they evidenced no faith and actually stole money from God and men (cf. 11:17), she evidenced great faith and gave out of her extreme poverty everything she had.

[20] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[21] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] sn The Jerusalem temple was widely admired around the world. See Josephus, Ant. 15.11 [15.380-425]; J. W. 5.5 [5.184-227] and Tacitus, History 5.8, who called it "immensely opulent." Josephus compared it to a beautiful snowcapped mountain.

[23] sn With the statement not one stone will be left on another Jesus predicted the total destruction of the temple, something that did occur in A.D. 70.

[24] tn Grk "not one stone will be left here on another which will not be thrown down."

[25] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

[26] tn Grk "and James and John," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

13:4 "Tell us, when will these things[1] happen? And what will be the sign that all these things are about to take place?" 13:5 Jesus began to say to them, "Watch out[2] that no one misleads you. 13:6 Many will come in my name, saying, 'I am he,'[3] and they will mislead many. 13:7 When you hear of wars and rumors of wars, do not be alarmed. These things must happen, but the end is still to come.[4] 13:8 For nation will rise up in arms[5] against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. There will be earthquakes in various places, and there will be famines.[6] These are but the beginning of birth pains.

Persecution of Disciples

13:9 "You must watch out for yourselves. You will be handed over[7] to councils[8] and beaten in the synagogues.[9] You will stand before governors and kings[10] because of me, as a witness to them. 13:10 First the gospel must be preached to all nations. 13:11 When they arrest you and hand you over for trial, do not worry about what to speak. But say whatever is given you at that time,[11] for it is not you speaking, but the Holy Spirit. 13:12 Brother will hand over brother to death, and a father his child. Children will rise against[12] parents and have them put to death. 13:13 You will be hated by everyone because of my name.[13] But the one who endures to the end will be saved.[14]

The Abomination of Desolation

13:14 "But when you see the abomination of desolation[15] standing where it should not be (let the reader understand), then those in Judea must flee[16] to the mountains. 13:15 The one on the roof[17] must not come down or go inside to take anything out of his house.[18] 13:16 The one in the field must not turn back to get his cloak. 13:17 Woe to those who are pregnant and to those who are nursing their babies in those days! 13:18 Pray that it may not be in winter. 13:19 For in those days there will be suffering[19] unlike anything that has happened[20] from the beginning of the creation that God created until now, or ever will happen. 13:20 And if the Lord had not cut short those days, no one would be saved. But because of the elect, whom he chose, he has cut them[21] short. 13:21 Then[22] if anyone says to you, 'Look, here is the Christ!'[23] or 'Look, there he is!' do not believe him. 13:22 For false messiahs[24] and false prophets will appear and perform signs and wonders to deceive, if possible, the elect. 13:23 Be careful! I have told you everything ahead of time.

The Arrival of the Son of Man

13:24 "But in those days, after that suffering,[25] the sun will be darkened and the moon will not give its light; 13:25 the stars will be falling from heaven, and the powers in the heavens will

---

1 sn Both references to these things are plural, so more than the temple's destruction is in view. The question may presuppose that such a catastrophe signals the end.

2 tn Or "Be on guard."

3 tn That is, "I am the Messiah."

4 tn Grk "it is not yet the end."

5 tn For the translation "rise up in arms" see L&N 55.2.

6 sn See Isa 5:13-14; 13:6-16; Hag 2:6-7; Zech 14:4.

7 tn Grk "They will hand you over." "They" is an indefinite plural, referring to people in general. The parallel in Matt 10:17 makes this explicit.

8 sn Councils in this context refers to local judicial bodies attached to the Jewish synagogue. This group would be responsible for meting out justice and discipline within the Jewish community.

9 sn See the note on synagogue in 1:21.

10 sn These statements look at persecution both from a Jewish context as the mention of councils and synagogues suggests, and from a Gentile one as the reference to governors and kings suggests. Some fulfillment of Jewish persecution can be seen in Acts.

11 tn Grk "in that hour."

12 tn Or "will rebel against."

13 sn See 1 Cor 1:25-31.

14 sn But the one who endures to the end will be saved. Jesus was not claiming here that salvation is by works, because he had already taught that it is by grace (cf. 10:15). He was simply arguing that genuine faith evidences itself in persistence through even the worst of trials.

15 sn The reference to the abomination of desolation is an allusion to Dan 9:27. Though some have seen the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy in the actions of Antiochus IV (or a representative of his) in 167 B.C., the words of Jesus seem to indicate that Antiochus was not the final fulfillment, but that there was (from Jesus' perspective) still another fulfillment yet to come. Some argue that this was realized in A.D. 70, while others claim that it refers specifically to Antichrist and will not be fully realized until the period of the great tribulation at the end of the age (cf. Mark 13:19, 24; Matt 24:21; Rev 3:10).

16 sn Fleeing to the mountains is a key OT image: Gen 19:17; Judg 6:2; Isa 15:5; Jer 16:16; Zech 14:5.

17 sn Most of the roofs in the NT were flat roofs made of pounded dirt, sometimes mixed with lime or stones, supported by heavy wooden beams. They generally had an easy means of access, either a sturdy wooden ladder or stone stairway, sometimes on the outside of the house.

18 sn The nature of the judgment coming upon them will be so quick and devastating that one will not have time to come down or go inside to take anything out of his house. It is best just to escape as quickly as possible.

19 tn Traditionally, "tribulation."

20 sn Suffering unlike anything that has happened. Some refer this event to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. While the events of A.D. 70 may reflect somewhat the comments Jesus makes here, the reference to the scope and severity of this judgment strongly suggest that much more is in view. Most likely Jesus is referring to the great end-time judgment on Jerusalem in the great tribulation.

21 tn Grk "the days."

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

23 tn Or "the Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."
sn See the note on Christ in 8:29.

24 tn Or "false christs"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

25 tn Traditionally, "tribulation."

be shaken.[1] 13:26 Then everyone[2] will see the Son of Man arriving in the clouds[3] with great power and glory. 13:27 Then he will send angels and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from the ends of the earth to the ends of heaven.[4]

The Parable of the Fig Tree

13:28 "Learn this parable from the fig tree: Whenever its branch becomes tender and puts out its leaves, you know that summer is near. 13:29 So also you, when you see these things happening, know[5] that he is near, right at the door. 13:30 I tell you the truth,[6] this generation[7] will not pass away until all these things take place. 13:31 Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will never pass away.[8]

Be Ready!

13:32 "But as for that day or hour no one knows it – neither the angels in heaven, nor the Son[9] – except the Father. 13:33 Watch out! Stay alert![10] For you do not know when the time will come. 13:34 It is like a man going on a journey. He left his house and put his slaves[11] in charge, assigning[12] to each his work, and commanded the doorkeeper to stay alert. 13:35 Stay alert, then, because you do not know when the owner of the house will return – whether during evening, at midnight, when the rooster crows, or at dawn – 13:36 or else he might find you asleep when he returns suddenly. 13:37 What I say to you I say to everyone: Stay alert!"

The Plot Against Jesus

14:1 Two days before the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread, the chief priests and the experts in the law[13] were trying to find a way[14] to arrest Jesus[15] by stealth and kill him. 14:2 For they said, "Not during the feast, so there won't be a riot among the people."[16]

Jesus' Anointing

14:3 Now[17] while Jesus[18] was in Bethany at the house of Simon the leper, reclining at the table,[19] a woman came with an alabaster jar[20] of costly aromatic oil[21] from pure nard. After

[1] sn An allusion to Isa 13:10, 34:4 (LXX); Joel 2:10. The heavens were seen as the abode of heavenly forces, so their shaking indicates distress in the spiritual realm. Although some take the powers as a reference to bodies in the heavens (like stars and planets, "the heavenly bodies," NIV) this is not as likely.

[2] tn Grk "they."

[3] sn An allusion to Dan 7:13. Here is Jesus returning with full judging authority.

[4] tn Or "of the sky"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context.

[5] tn The verb γινώσκετε (ginōskete, "know") can be parsed as either present indicative or present imperative. In this context the imperative fits better, since the movement is from analogy (trees and seasons) to the future (the signs of the coming of the kingdom) and since the emphasis is on preparation for this event.

[6] tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

[7] sn This is one of the hardest verses in the gospels to interpret. Various views exist for what generation means. (1) Some take it as meaning "race" and thus as an assurance that the Jewish race (nation) will not pass away. But it is very questionable that the Greek term γενεά (genea) can have this meaning. Two other options are possible. (2) Generation might mean "this type of generation" and refer to the generation of wicked humanity. Then the point is that humanity will not perish, because God will redeem it. Or (3) generation may refer to "the generation that sees the signs of the end" (v. 26), who will also see the end itself. In other words, once the movement to the return of Christ starts, all the events connected with it happen very quickly, in rapid succession.

[8] sn The words that Jesus predicts here will never pass away. They are more stable and lasting than creation itself! For this kind of image, see Isa 40:8; 55:10-11.

[9] sn The phrase nor the Son has caused a great deal of theological debate because on the surface it appears to conflict with the concept of Jesus' deity. The straightforward meaning of the text is that the Son does not know the time of his return. If Jesus were divine, though, wouldn't he know this information? There are other passages which similarly indicate that Jesus did not know certain things. For example, Luke 2:52 indicates that Jesus grew in wisdom; this has to mean that Jesus did not know everything all the time but learned as he grew. So Mark 13:32 is not alone in implying that Jesus did not know certain things. The best option for understanding Mark 13:32 and similar passages is to hold the two concepts in tension: The Son in his earthly life and ministry had limited knowledge of certain things, yet he was still deity.

[10] tc The vast majority of witnesses (𝔑 A C L W Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat sy co) have καὶ προσεύχεσθε after ἀγρυπνεῖτε (agrupneite kai proseuchesthe, "stay alert and pray"). This may be a motivated reading, influenced by the similar command in Mark 14:38 where προσεύχεσθε is solidly attested, and more generally from the parallel in Luke 21:36 (though δέομαι [deomai, "ask"] is used there). As B. M. Metzger notes, it is a predictable variant that scribes would have been likely to produce independently of each other (TCGNT 95). The words are not found in B D 2427 a c {d} k. Although the external evidence for the shorter reading is slender, it probably better accounts for the longer reading than vice versa.

[12] tn Grk "giving."

[13] tn Or "the chief priests and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[14] tn Grk "were seeking how."

[15] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] sn The suggestion here is that Jesus was too popular to openly arrest him. The verb were trying is imperfect. It suggests, in this context, that they were always considering the opportunities.

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[18] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] sn 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

[20] sn A jar made of alabaster stone was normally used for very precious substances like perfumes. It normally had a long neck which was sealed and had to be broken off so the contents could be used.

[21] tn Μύρον (muron) was usually made of myrrh (from which the English word is derived) but here it is used in the sense of ointment or perfumed oil (L&N 6.205). The adjective πιστικῆς (pistikēs) is difficult with regard to its exact meaning; some have taken it to derive from πίστις (pistis) and relate to the purity of the oil of nard. More probably it is something like a brand name, "pistic nard," the exact significance of which has not been discovered.

sn Nard or spikenard is a fragrant oil from the root and breaking open the jar, she poured it on his head. 14:4 But some who were present indignantly said to one another, "Why this waste of expensive[1] ointment? 14:5 It[2] could have been sold for more than three hundred silver coins[3] and the money[4] given to the poor!" So[5] they spoke angrily to her. 14:6 But Jesus said, "Leave her alone. Why are you bothering her? She has done a good service for me. 14:7 For you will always have the poor with you, and you can do good for them whenever you want. But you will not always have me![6] 14:8 She did what she could. She anointed my body beforehand for burial. 14:9 I tell you the truth,[7] wherever the gospel is proclaimed in the whole world, what she has done will also be told in memory of her."

The Plan to Betray Jesus

14:10 Then[8] Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went to the chief priests to betray Jesus into their hands.[9] 14:11 When they heard this, they were delighted[10] and promised to give him money.[11] So[12] Judas[13] began looking for an opportunity to betray him.

The Passover

14:12 Now[14] on the first day of the feast of[15] Unleavened Bread, when the Passover lamb is sacrificed,[16] Jesus'[17] disciples said to him, "Where do you want us to prepare for you to eat the Passover?"[18] 14:13 He sent two of his disciples and told them, "Go into the city, and a man carrying a jar[19] of water will meet you. Follow him. 14:14 Wherever he enters, tell the owner of the house, 'The Teacher says, "Where is my guest room where I may eat the Passover with my disciples?"' 14:15 He will show you a large room upstairs, furnished and ready. Make preparations for us there." 14:16 So[20] the disciples left, went[21] into the city, and found things just as he had told them,[22] and they prepared the Passover.

14:17 Then,[23] when it was evening, he came to the house[24] with the twelve. 14:18 While they were at the table[25] eating, Jesus said, "I tell you the truth,[26] one of you eating with me will betray spike of the nard plant of northern India. This aromatic oil, if made of something like nard, would have been extremely expensive, costing up to a year's pay for an average laborer.

1 tn The word "expensive" is not in the Greek text but has been included to suggest a connection to the lengthy phrase "costly aromatic oil from pure nard" occurring earlier in v. 3. The author of Mark shortened this long phrase to just one word in Greek when repeated here, and the phrase "expensive ointment" used in the translation is intended as an abbreviated paraphrase.

2 tn Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

3 tn Grk "three hundred denarii." One denarius was the standard day's wage, so the value exceeded what a laborer could earn in a year (taking in to account Sabbaths and feast days when no work was done).

4 tn The words "the money" are not in the Greek text, but are implied (as the proceeds from the sale of the perfumed oil).

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

6 tn In the Greek text of this clause, "me" is in emphatic position (the first word in the clause). To convey some impression of the emphasis, an exclamation point is used in the translation.

7 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

9 tn Grk "betray him to them"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 sn The leaders were delighted when Judas contacted them about betraying Jesus, because it gave them the opportunity they had been looking for, and they could later claim that Jesus had been betrayed by one of his own disciples.

11 sn Matt 26:15 states the amount of money they gave Judas was thirty pieces of silver (see also Matt 27:3-4; Zech 11:12-13).

12 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

15 tn The words "the feast of" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity.

16 sn Generally the feast of Unleavened Bread would refer to Nisan 15 (Friday), but the following reference to the sacrifice of the Passover lamb indicates that Nisan 14 (Thursday) was what Mark had in mind (Nisan = March 27 to April 25). The celebration of the Feast of Unleavened Bread lasted eight days, beginning with the Passover meal. The celebrations were so close together that at times the names of both were used interchangeably.

17 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn This required getting a suitable lamb and finding lodging in Jerusalem where the meal could be eaten. The population of the city swelled during the feast, so lodging could be difficult to find. The Passover was celebrated each year in commemoration of the Israelites' deliverance from Egypt; thus it was a feast celebrating redemption (see Exod 12). The Passover lamb was roasted and eaten after sunset in a family group of at least ten people (m. Pesahim 7.13). People ate the meal while reclining (see the note on table in 14:18). It included, besides the lamb, unleavened bread and bitter herbs as a reminder of Israel's bitter affliction at the hands of the Egyptians. Four cups of wine mixed with water were also used for the meal. For a further description of the meal and the significance of the wine cups, see E. Ferguson, Backgrounds of Early Christianity, 523-24.

19 sn Since women usually carried these jars, it would have been no problem for the two disciples (Luke 22:8 states that they were Peter and John) to recognize the man Jesus was referring to.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the flow within the narrative.

21 tn Grk "and came."

22 sn The author's note that the disciples found things just as he had told them shows that Jesus' word could be trusted.

24 tn The prepositional phrase "to the house" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied for clarity.

25 tn Grk "while they were reclined at the table."

sn 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

me."[1] 14:19 They were distressed, and one by one said to him, "Surely not I?" 14:20 He said to them, "It is one of the twelve, one who dips his hand[2] with me into the bowl.[3] 14:21 For the Son of Man will go as it is written about him, but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! It would be better for him if he had never been born."

The Lord's Supper

14:22 While they were eating, he took bread, and after giving thanks he broke it, gave it to them, and said, "Take it. This is my body." 14:23 And after taking the cup and giving thanks, he gave it to them, and they all drank from it. 14:24 He said to them, "This is my blood, the blood[4] of the covenant,[5] that is poured out for many. 14:25 I tell you the truth,[6] I will no longer drink of the fruit[7] of the vine until that day when I drink it new in the kingdom of God." 14:26 After singing a hymn,[8] they went out to the Mount of Olives.

The Prediction of Peter's Denial

14:27 Then[9] Jesus said to them, "You will all fall away, for it is written,

> 'I will strike the shepherd,
> and the sheep will be scattered.'[10]

14:28 But after I am raised, I will go ahead of you into Galilee." 14:29 Peter said to him, "Even if they all fall away, I will not!" 14:30 Jesus said to him, "I tell you the truth,[11] today – this very night – before a rooster crows twice, you will deny me three times." 14:31 But Peter[12] insisted emphatically,[13] "Even if I must die with you, I will never deny you." And all of them said the same thing.

Gethsemane

14:32 Then[14] they went to a place called Gethsemane, and Jesus[15] said to his disciples, "Sit here while I pray." 14:33 He took Peter, James,[16] and John with him, and became very troubled and distressed. 14:34 He said to them, "My soul is deeply grieved, even to the point of death. Remain here and stay alert." 14:35 Going a little farther, he threw himself to the ground and prayed that if it were possible the hour would pass from him. 14:36 He said, "Abba,[17] Father, all things are possible for you. Take this cup[18] away from me. Yet not what I will, but what you will." 14:37 Then[19] he came and found them sleeping, and said to Peter, "Simon, are you sleeping? Couldn't you stay awake for one hour? 14:38 Stay awake and pray that you will not fall into temptation. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." 14:39 He went away again and prayed the same thing. 14:40 When he came again he found them sleeping; they could not keep their eyes open.[20] And they did not know what to tell him. 14:41 He came a third time and said to them, "Are you still sleeping and resting?[21] Enough of that![22] The hour has come.

1 tn Or "will hand me over"; Grk "one of you will betray me, the one who eats with me."

2 tn Grk "one who dips with me." The phrase "his hand" has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

3 sn One who dips with me in the bowl. The point of Jesus' comment here is not to identify the specific individual per se, but to indicate that it is one who was close to him – somebody whom no one would suspect. His comment serves to heighten the treachery of Judas' betrayal.

4 tn Grk "this is my blood of the covenant that is poured out for many." In order to avoid confusion about which is poured out, the translation supplies "blood" twice so that the following phrase clearly modifies "blood," not "covenant."

5 tc Most MSS (A $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat sy) have καινῆς (kainēs, "new") before διαθήκης (diathēkēs, "covenant"), a reading that is almost surely influenced by the parallel passage in Luke 22:20. Further, the construction τὸ τῆς καινῆς διαθήκης (to tēs kainēs diathēkēs), in which the resumptive article τό (referring back to τὸ αἷμα [to haima, "the blood"]) is immediately followed by the genitive article, is nowhere else used in Mark except for constructions involving a genitive of relationship (cf. Mark 2:14; 3:17, 18; 16:1). Thus, on both transcriptional and intrinsic grounds, this reading looks to be a later addition (which may have derived from τὸ τῆς διαθήκης of D* W 2427). The most reliable MSS, along with several others (ℵ B C D^c L Θ Ψ 565), lack καινῆς. This reading is strongly preferred.

sn Jesus' death established the forgiveness promised in the new covenant of Jer 31:31. Jesus is reinterpreting the symbolism of the Passover meal, indicating the presence of a new era.

6 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

7 tn Grk "the produce" ("the produce of the vine" is a figurative expression for wine).

8 sn After singing a hymn. The Hallel Psalms (Pss 113-118) were sung during the meal. Psalms 113 and 114 were sung just before the second cup and 115-118 were sung at the end of the meal, after the fourth, or hallel cup.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

10 sn A quotation from Zech 13:7.

11 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Grk "said emphatically."

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "and James," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

17 tn The word means "Father" in Aramaic.

18 sn This cup alludes to the wrath of God that Jesus would experience (in the form of suffering and death) for us. See Ps 11:6; 75:8-9; Isa 51:17, 19, 22 for this figure.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

20 tn Grk "because their eyes were weighed down," an idiom for becoming extremely or excessively sleepy (L&N 23.69).

21 tn Or "Sleep on, and get your rest." This sentence can be taken either as a question or a sarcastic command.

22 tc Codex D (with some support with minor variation from W Θ f^{13} 565 2542 pc it) reads, "Enough of that! It is the end and the hour has come." Evidently, this addition highlights Jesus' assertion that what he had predicted about his own death was now coming true (cf. Luke 22:37). Even though the addition highlights the accuracy of Jesus' prediction, it should not be regarded as part of the text of Mark, since it receives little support from the rest of the witnesses and because D especially is prone to expand the wording of a text.

Look, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. 14:42 Get up, let us go. Look! My betrayer[1] is approaching!"

Betrayal and Arrest

14:43 Right away, while Jesus[2] was still speaking, Judas, one of the twelve, arrived.[3] With him came a crowd armed with swords and clubs, sent by the chief priests and experts in the law[4] and elders. 14:44 (Now the betrayer[5] had given them a sign, saying, "The one I kiss is the man. Arrest him and lead him away under guard.")[6] 14:45 When Judas[7] arrived, he went up to Jesus[8] immediately and said, "Rabbi!" and kissed[9] him. 14:46 Then they took hold of him[10] and arrested him. 14:47 One of the bystanders drew his sword and struck the high priest's slave,[11] cutting off his ear. 14:48 Jesus said to them, "Have you come with swords and clubs to arrest me like you would an outlaw?[12] 14:49 Day after day I was with you, teaching in the temple courts, yet[13] you did not arrest me. But this has happened so that[14] the scriptures would be fulfilled." 14:50 Then[15] all the disciples[16] left him and fled. 14:51 A young man was following him, wearing only a linen cloth. They tried to arrest him, 14:52 but he ran off naked,[17] leaving his linen cloth behind.

Condemned by the Sanhedrin

14:53 Then[18] they led Jesus to the high priest, and all the chief priests and elders and experts in the law[19] came together. 14:54 And Peter had followed him from a distance, up to the high priest's courtyard. He[20] was sitting with the guards[21] and warming himself by the fire. 14:55 The chief priests and the whole Sanhedrin were looking for evidence against Jesus so that they could put him to death, but they did not find anything. 14:56 Many gave false testimony against him, but their testimony did not agree. 14:57 Some stood up and gave this false testimony against him:[22] 14:58 "We heard him say, 'I will destroy this temple made with hands and in three days build another not made with hands.'" 14:59 Yet even on this point their testimony did not agree. 14:60 Then[23] the high priest stood up before them[24] and asked Jesus, "Have you no answer? What is this that they are testifying against you?" 14:61 But he was silent and did not answer. Again the high priest questioned him,[25] "Are you the Christ,[26] the Son of the Blessed One?" 14:62 "I am," said Jesus, "and you will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand[27] of the Power[28] and coming with the clouds of heaven."[29] 14:63 Then the high priest tore his clothes and said, "Why do we still need witnesses? 14:64 You have heard the blasphemy! What is your verdict?"[30] They all condemned him as deserving death. 14:65 Then[31] some be-

[1] tn Grk "the one who betrays me."

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn Or "approached." This is a different verb than the one translated "arrived" in Matt 26:47 and below in v. 45, although in this context the meanings probably overlap.

[4] tn Or "from the chief priests, scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[5] tn Grk "the one who betrays him."

[6] sn This remark is parenthetical within the narrative and has thus been placed in parentheses.

[7] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] sn Judas' act of betrayal when he kissed Jesus is especially sinister when it is realized that it was common in the culture of the times for a disciple to kiss his master when greeting him.

[10] tn Grk "put their hands on him."

[11] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 10:44.

[12] tn Or "a revolutionary." This term can refer to one who stirs up rebellion: BDAG 594 s.v. λῃστής 2 has "revolutionary, insurrectionist," citing evidence from Josephus (J. W. 2.13.2-3 [2.253-254]). However, this usage generally postdates Jesus' time. It does refer to a figure of violence. Luke uses the same term for the highwaymen who attack the traveler in the parable of the good Samaritan (Luke 10:30).

[13] tn Grk "and"; καί (kai) is elastic enough to be used contrastively on occasion, as here.

[14] tn Grk "But so that"; the verb "has happened" is implied.

[16] tn Grk "they"; the referent (Jesus' disciples) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] sn The statement he ran off naked is probably a reference to Mark himself, traditionally assumed to be the author of this Gospel. Why he was wearing only an outer garment and not the customary tunic as well is not mentioned. W. L. Lane, Mark (NICNT), 527-28, says that Mark probably mentioned this episode so as to make it clear that "all fled, leaving Jesus alone in the custody of the police."

[19] tn Or "and scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

[20] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[21] sn The guards would have been the guards of the chief priests who had accompanied Judas to arrest Jesus.

[22] tn Grk "Some standing up gave false testimony against him, saying."

[24] tn Grk "in the middle."

[25] tn Grk "questioned him and said to him."

sn See the note on Christ in 8:29.

[27] sn An allusion to Ps 110:1. This is a claim that Jesus shares authority with God in heaven. Those present may have thought they were his judges, but, in fact, the reverse was true.

[28] sn The expression the right hand of the Power is a circumlocution for referring to God. Such indirect references to God were common in 1st century Judaism out of reverence for the divine name.

[29] sn An allusion to Dan 7:13.

[30] tn Grk "What do you think?"

gan to spit on him, and to blindfold him, and to strike him with their fists, saying, "Prophesy!" The guards also took him and beat[1] him.

Peter's Denials

14:66 Now[2] while Peter was below in the courtyard, one of the high priest's slave girls[3] came by. 14:67 When she saw Peter warming himself, she looked directly at him and said, "You also were with that Nazarene, Jesus." 14:68 But he denied it:[4] "I don't even understand what you're talking about!"[5] Then[6] he went out to the gateway, and a rooster crowed.[7] 14:69 When the slave girl saw him, she began again to say to the bystanders, "This man is one of them." 14:70 But he denied it again. A short time later the bystanders again said to Peter, "You must be[8] one of them, because you are also a Galilean." 14:71 Then he began to curse, and he swore with an oath, "I do not know this man you are talking about!" 14:72 Immediately a rooster[9] crowed a second time. Then[10] Peter remembered what Jesus had said to him: "Before a rooster crows twice, you will deny me three times." And he broke down and wept.[11]

Jesus Brought Before Pilate

15:1 Early in the morning, after forming a plan, the chief priests with the elders and the experts in the law[12] and the whole Sanhedrin tied Jesus up, led him away, and handed him over to Pilate.[13] 15:2 So[14] Pilate asked him, "Are you the king[15] of the Jews?" He replied,[16] "You say so."[17] 15:3 Then[18] the chief priests began to accuse him repeatedly. 15:4 So Pilate asked him again,[19] "Have you nothing to say? See how many charges they are bringing against you!" 15:5 But Jesus made no further reply, so that Pilate was amazed.

Jesus and Barabbas

15:6 During the feast it was customary to release one prisoner to the people,[20] whomever they requested. 15:7 A man named Barabbas was imprisoned with rebels who had committed murder during an insurrection. 15:8 Then the crowd came up and began to ask Pilate to release a prisoner for them, as was his custom.[21] 15:9 So Pilate asked them,[22] "Do you want me to release the king of the Jews for you?" 15:10 (For he knew that the chief priests had handed him over because of envy.)[23] 15:11 But the chief priests stirred up the crowd to have him release[24] Barabbas instead. 15:12 So Pilate spoke to them

1 tn For the translation of ῥάπισμα (rhapisma), see L&N 19.4.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

3 tn The Greek term here is παιδίσκη (paidiskē), referring to a slave girl or slave woman.

4 tn Grk "he denied it, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "I do not know or understand what you are saying." In the translation this is taken as a hendiadys (a figure of speech where two terms express a single meaning, usually for emphatic reasons).

7 tc Several important witnesses (ℵ B L W Ψ* 579 892 2427 pc) lack the words "and a rooster crowed." The fact that such good and early Alexandrian witnesses lack these words makes this textual problem difficult to decide, especially because the words receive support from other witnesses, some of which are fairly decent (A C D Θ Ψ^{c} 067 $f^{1,13}$ 33 [1424] 𝔐 lat). The omission could have been intentional on the part of some Alexandrian scribes who wished to bring this text in line with the other Gospel accounts that only mention a rooster crowing once (Matt 26:74; Luke 22:60; John 18:27). The insertion could be an attempt to make the fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy in 14:30 more explicit. Internally, the words "and a rooster crowed" fit Mark's Gospel here, not only in view of 14:30, "before a rooster crows twice," but also in view of the mention of "a second time" in 14:71 (a reading which is much more textually secure). Nevertheless, a decision is difficult.

tn A real rooster crowing is probably in view here (rather than the Roman trumpet call known as gallicinium), in part due to the fact that Mark mentions the rooster crowing twice. See the discussion at Matt 26:74.

8 tn Grk "Truly you are."

9 tn This occurrence of the word ἀλέκτωρ (alektōr, "rooster") is anarthrous and consequently may not point back explicitly to the rooster which had crowed previously in v. 68. The reason for the anarthrous construction is most likely to indicate generically that some rooster crowed. Further, the translation of ἀλέκτωρ as an indefinite noun retains the subtlety of the Greek in only hinting at the Lord's prediction v. 30. See also NAB, TEV, NASB.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

11 tn Grk "he wept deeply."

12 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22.

13 sn The Jews most assuredly wanted to put Jesus to death, but they lacked the authority to do so. For this reason they handed him over to Pilate in hopes of securing a death sentence. The Romans kept close control of the death penalty in conquered territories to prevent it being used to execute Roman sympathizers.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action in the narrative.

15 sn "Are you the king of the Jews?" Pilate was interested in this charge because of its political implications of sedition against Rome.

16 tn Grk "answering, he said to him." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant, but the syntax of the phrase has been modified for clarity.

17 sn The reply "You say so" is somewhat enigmatic, like Jesus' earlier reply to the Jewish leadership (mentioned in Matt 26:64 and Luke 22:70).

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

19 tn Grk "Pilate asked him again, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

20 tn Grk "them"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn The custom of Pilate to release one prisoner to them is unknown outside the gospels in Jewish writings, but it was a Roman custom at the time and thus probably used in Palestine as well (cf. Matt 27:15; John 18:39); see W. W. Wessel, "Mark," EBC 8:773-74.

21 tn Grk "Coming up the crowd began to ask [him to do] as he was doing for them."

22 tn Grk "Pilate answered them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

23 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

24 tn Grk "to have him release for them."

again,[1] "Then what do you want me to do[2] with the one you call king of the Jews?" 15:13 They shouted back, "Crucify[3] him!" 15:14 Pilate asked them, "Why? What has he done wrong?" But they shouted more insistently, "Crucify him!" 15:15 Because he wanted to satisfy the crowd, Pilate released Barabbas for them. Then,[4] after he had Jesus flogged,[5] he handed him over[6] to be crucified.

Jesus is Mocked

15:16 So[7] the soldiers led him into the palace (that is, the governor's residence)[8] and called together the whole cohort.[9] 15:17 They put a purple cloak[10] on him and after braiding[11] a crown of thorns,[12] they put it on him. 15:18 They began to salute him: "Hail, king of the Jews!"[13] 15:19 Again and again[14] they struck him on the head with a staff[15] and spit on him. Then they knelt down and paid homage to him. 15:20 When they had finished mocking[16] him, they stripped him of the purple cloak and put his own clothes back on him. Then[17] they led him away to crucify him.[18]

The Crucifixion

15:21 The soldiers[19] forced[20] a passerby to carry his cross,[21] Simon of Cyrene, who was coming in from the country[22] (he was the father of Alexander and Rufus). 15:22 They brought Jesus[23] to a place called Golgotha[24] (which is translated, "Place of the Skull").[25] 15:23 They

1 tn Grk "answering, Pilate spoke to them again." The participle ἀποκριθείς (apokritheis) is redundant and has not been translated.

2 tc Instead of "what do you want me to do" several witnesses, including the most important ones (𝔓 B C W Δ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 892 2427 pc), lack θέλετε (thelete, "you want"), turning the question into the more abrupt "what should I do?" Although the witnesses for the longer reading are not as significant (A D Θ 0250 𝔐 latt sy), the reading without θέλετε conforms to Matt 27:22 and thus is suspected of being a scribal emendation. The known scribal tendency to assimilate one synoptic passage to another parallel, coupled with the lack of such assimilation in mss that are otherwise known to do this most frequently (the Western and Byzantine texts), suggests that θέλετε is authentic. Further, Mark's known style of being generally more verbose and redundant than Matthew's argues that θέλετε is authentic here. That this is the longer reading, however, and that a good variety of witnesses omit the word, gives one pause. Perhaps the wording without θέλετε would have been perceived as having greater homiletical value, motivating scribes to move in this direction. A decision is difficult, but on the whole internal evidence leads toward regarding θέλετε as authentic.

3 sn Crucifixion was the cruelest form of punishment practiced by the Romans. Roman citizens could not normally undergo it. It was reserved for the worst crimes, like treason and evasion of due process in a capital case. The Roman historian Cicero called it "a cruel and disgusting penalty" (Against Verres 2.5.63-66 §§163-70); Josephus (J. W. 7.6.4 [7.203]) called it the worst of deaths.

5 tn The Greek term φραγελλόω (phragelloō) refers to flogging. BDAG 1064 s.v. states, "flog, scourge, a punishment inflicted on slaves and provincials after a sentence of death had been pronounced on them. So in the case of Jesus before the crucifixion...Mt 27:26; Mk 15:15."

sn A Roman flogging (traditionally, "scourging") was an excruciating punishment. The victim was stripped of his clothes and bound to a post with his hands fastened above him (or sometimes he was thrown to the ground). Guards standing on either side of the victim would incessantly beat him with a whip (flagellum) made out of leather with pieces of lead and bone inserted into its ends. While the Jews only allowed 39 lashes, the Romans had no such limit; many people who received such a beating died as a result. See C. Schneider, TDNT, 4:515-19.

6 tn Or "delivered him up."

7 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "So" to indicate that the soldiers' action is in response to Pilate's condemnation of the prisoner in v. 15.

8 tn Grk "(that is, the praetorium)."

sn The governor's residence (Grk "praetorium") was the Roman governor's official residence. The one in Jerusalem may have been Herod's palace in the western part of the city, or the fortress Antonia northwest of the temple area.

9 sn A Roman cohort was a tenth of a legion, about 500-600 soldiers.

10 sn The purple cloak probably refers to a military garment which had the color of royal purple, and thus resembled a king's robe. The soldiers did this to Jesus as a form of mockery in view of the charges that he was a king (cf. 15:2).

11 tn Or "weaving."

12 sn The crown may have been made from palm spines or some other thorny plant common in Israel. In placing the crown of thorns on his head, the soldiers were unwittingly symbolizing God's curse on humanity (cf. Gen 3:18) being placed on Jesus. Their purpose would have been to mock Jesus' claim to be a king; the crown of thorns would have represented the "radiant corona" portrayed on the heads of rulers on coins and other artifacts in the 1st century.

13 tn Or "Long live the King of the Jews!"

sn The statement Hail, King of the Jews! is a mockery patterned after the Romans' cry of Ave, Caesar ("Hail, Caesar!").

14 tn The verb here has been translated as an iterative imperfect.

15 tn Or "a reed." The Greek term can mean either "staff" or "reed." See BDAG 502 s.v. κάλαμος 2.

16 tn The aorist tense is taken consummatively here.

18 sn See the note on Crucify in 15:13.

19 tn Grk "They"; the referent (the soldiers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Or "conscripted"; or "pressed into service."

21 sn Jesus was beaten severely with a whip before this (the prelude to crucifixion, known to the Romans as verberatio, mentioned in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15; John 19:1), so he would have been weak from trauma and loss of blood. Apparently he was unable to bear the cross himself, so Simon was conscripted to help (in all probability this was only the crossbeam, called in Latin the patibulum, since the upright beam usually remained in the ground at the place of execution). Cyrene was located in North Africa where Tripoli is today. Nothing more is known about this Simon.

22 tn Or perhaps, "was coming in from his field" outside the city (BDAG 15-16 s.v. ἀγρός 1).

23 tn Grk "him."

24 tn Grk "a place, Golgotha." This is an Aramaic name; see John 19:17.

25 sn The place called Golgotha (which is translated "Place of the Skull"). This location is north and just outside of Jerusalem. The hill on which it is located protruded much like a skull, giving the place its name. The Latin word for the Greek term κρανιον (kranion) is calvaria, from which the English word "Calvary" is derived (cf. Luke 23:33 in the KJV).

offered him wine mixed with myrrh,[1] but he did not take it. 15:24 Then[2] they crucified[3] him and divided his clothes, throwing dice[4] for them, to decide what each would take. 15:25 It was nine o'clock in the morning[5] when they crucified him. 15:26 The inscription[6] of the charge against him read, "The king of the Jews." 15:27 And they crucified two outlaws with him, one on his right and one on his left.[7] 15:29 Those who passed by defamed him, shaking their heads and saying, "Aha! You who can destroy the temple and rebuild it in three days, 15:30 save yourself and come down from the cross!"[8] 15:31 In the same way even the chief priests – together with the experts in the law[9] – were mocking him among themselves:[10] "He saved others, but he cannot save himself! 15:32 Let the Christ,[11] the king of Israel, come down from the cross now, that we may see and believe!" Those who were crucified with him also spoke abusively to him.[12]

Jesus' Death

15:33 Now[13] when it was noon,[14] darkness came over the whole land[15] until three in the afternoon.[16] 15:34 Around three o'clock[17] Jesus cried out with a loud voice, "Eloi, Eloi, lema sabachthani?" which means, "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?"[18] 15:35 When some of the bystanders heard it they said, "Listen, he is calling for Elijah!"[19] 15:36 Then someone ran, filled a sponge with sour wine,[20] put it on a stick,[21] and gave it to him to drink, saying, "Leave him alone! Let's see if Elijah will come to take him down!" 15:37 But Jesus cried out with a loud voice and breathed his last. 15:38 And the temple curtain[22] was torn in two, from top to bottom. 15:39 Now when the centurion,[23]

1 sn It is difficult to say for certain who gave Jesus this drink of wine mixed with myrrh (e.g., the executioner, or perhaps women from Jerusalem). In any case, whoever gave it to him most likely did so in order to relieve his pain, but Jesus was unwilling to take it.

3 sn See the note on Crucify in 15:13.

4 tn Grk "by throwing the lot" (probably by using marked pebbles or broken pieces of pottery). A modern equivalent, "throwing dice," was chosen here because of its association with gambling. According to L&N 6.219 a term for "dice" is particularly appropriate.

sn An allusion to Ps 22:18.

5 tn Grk "It was the third hour." This time would have been approximate, and could refer to the beginning of the process, some time before Jesus was lifted on the cross.

6 sn Mention of the inscription is an important detail, because the inscription would normally give the reason for the execution. It shows that Jesus was executed for claiming to be a king. It was also probably written with irony from the executioners' point of view.

7 tc Most later MSS add 15:28 "And the scripture was fulfilled that says, 'He was counted with the lawless ones.'" Verse 28 is included in L Θ 083 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat, but is lacking in important Alexandrian and Western MSS and some others (𝔎 A B C D Ψ pc). The addition of the verse with its quotation from Isa 53:12 probably represents a scribal assimilation from Luke 22:37. It was almost certainly not an original part of Mark's Gospel. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

8 sn There is rich irony in the statement of those who were passing by, "Save yourself and come down from the cross!" In summary, they wanted Jesus to come down from the cross and save his physical life, but it was indeed his staying on the cross and giving his physical life that led to the fact that they could experience a resurrection from death to life. There is a similar kind of irony in the statement made by the chief priests and experts in the law in 15:31.

9 tn Or "with the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 1:22. Only "chief priests" is in the nominative case; this sentence structure attempts to capture this emphasis.

10 tn Grk "Mocking him, the chief priests…said among themselves."

11 tn Or "the Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 8:29.

12 sn Mark's wording suggests that both of the criminals spoke abusively to him. If so, one of them quickly changed his attitude toward Jesus (see Luke 23:40-43).

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

14 tn Grk "When the sixth hour had come."

15 sn This imagery has parallels to the Day of the Lord: Joel 2:10; Amos 8:9; Zeph 1:15.

16 tn Grk "until the ninth hour."

17 tn The repetition of the phrase "three o'clock" preserves the author's rougher, less elegant style (cf. Matt 27:45-46; Luke 23:44). Although such stylistic matters are frequently handled differently in the translation, because the issue of synoptic literary dependence is involved here, it was considered important to reflect some of the stylistic differences among the synoptics in the translation, so that the English reader can be aware of them.

18 sn A quotation from Ps 22:1.

19 sn Perhaps the crowd thought Jesus was calling for Elijah because the exclamation "my God, my God" (i.e., in Aramaic, Eloi, Eloi) sounds like the name Elijah.

20 sn Sour wine refers to cheap wine that was called in Latin posca, a cheap vinegar wine diluted heavily with water. It was the drink of slaves and soldiers, and was probably there for the soldiers who had performed the crucifixion.

21 tn Grk "a reed."

22 tn The referent of this term, καταπέτασμα (katapetasma), is not entirely clear. It could refer to the curtain separating the holy of holies from the holy place (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.5 [5.219]), or it could refer to one at the entrance of the temple court (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.4 [5.212]). Many argue that the inner curtain is meant because another term, κάλυμμα (kalumma), is also used for the outer curtain. Others see a reference to the outer curtain as more likely because of the public nature of this sign. Either way, the symbolism means that access to God has been opened up. It also pictures a judgment that includes the sacrifices.

23 sn A centurion was a noncommissioned officer in the Roman army or one of the auxiliary territorial armies, commanding a centuria of (nominally) 100 men. The responsibilities of centurions were broadly similar to modern junior officers, but there was a wide gap in social status between them and officers, and relatively few were promoted beyond the rank of senior centurion. The Roman troops stationed in Judea were auxiliaries, who would normally be rewarded with Roman citizenship after 25 years of service. Some of the centurions may have served originally in the Roman legions (regular army) and thus gained their citizenship at enlistment. Others may have inherited it, like Paul.

who stood in front of him, saw how he died,[1] he said, "Truly this man was God's Son!" 15:40 There were also women, watching from a distance. Among them were Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the younger and of Joses,[2] and Salome. 15:41 When he was in Galilee, they had followed him and given him support.[3] Many other women who had come up with him to Jerusalem[4] were there too.

Jesus' Burial

15:42 Now[5] when evening had already come, since it was the day of preparation (that is, the day before the Sabbath),[6] 15:43 Joseph of Arimathea, a highly regarded member of the council,[7] who was himself looking forward to[8] the kingdom of God,[9] went boldly to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus.[10] 15:44 Pilate was surprised that he was already dead. He[11] called the centurion and asked him if he had been dead for some time. 15:45 When Pilate[12] was informed by the centurion,[13] he gave the body to Joseph. 15:46 After Joseph[14] bought a linen cloth[15] and took down the body, he wrapped it in the linen and placed it in a tomb cut out of the rock.[16] Then[17] he rolled a stone across the entrance[18] of the tomb. 15:47 Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses saw where the body[19] was placed.

The Resurrection

16:1 When the Sabbath was over, Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, and Salome bought aromatic spices[20] so that they might go and anoint him. 16:2 And very early on the first day of the week, at sunrise, they went to the tomb. 16:3 They had been asking each other, "Who will roll away the stone for us from the entrance to the tomb?" 16:4 But[21] when they looked up, they saw that the stone, which was very large, had been rolled back. 16:5 Then[22] as they went into the tomb, they saw a young man dressed in a white robe[23] sitting on the right side; and they were alarmed. 16:6 But he said to them, "Do not be alarmed. You are looking for Jesus the Nazarene, who was crucified.[24] He has been raised![25] He is not here. Look, there is the place where they laid him. 16:7 But go, tell his disciples, even Peter, that he is going ahead of you into Galilee. You will see him there, just as he told you." 16:8 Then[26] they went out and ran from the tomb, for terror and bewilderment had seized them.[27] And they said nothing to anyone, because they were afraid.

---

[1] tn Grk "the way he breathed his last"; or "the way he expired"; or "that he thus breathed no more."

[2] sn In Matt 27:56 the name Joses is written as Joseph.

[3] tn Grk "and ministered to him."

sn Cf. Luke 8:3.

[4] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[5] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic and introduction of a new character.

[6] sn The day of preparation was the day before the Sabbath when everything had to be prepared for it, as no work could be done on the Sabbath.

[7] tn Grk "a councillor" (as a member of the Sanhedrin, see L&N 11.85). This indicates that some individuals among the leaders did respond to Jesus.

[8] tn Or "waiting for."

[9] sn Though some dispute that Joseph of Arimathea was a disciple of Jesus, this remark that he was looking forward to the kingdom of God and his actions regarding Jesus' burial suggest otherwise.

[10] sn Asking for the body of Jesus was indeed a bold move on the part of Joseph of Arimathea, for it clearly and openly identified him with a man who had just been condemned and executed, namely, Jesus. His faith is exemplary, especially for someone who was a member of the council that handed Jesus over for crucifixion (cf. Luke 23:51). He did this because he sought to give Jesus an honorable burial.

[11] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[12] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Pilate) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] sn See the note on the word centurion in 15:39.

[14] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Joseph of Arimathea) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn The term σινδών (sindōn) can refer to a linen cloth used either for clothing or for burial.

[16] tn That is, cut or carved into an outcropping of natural rock, resulting in a cave-like structure (see L&N 19.25).

[18] tn Or "to the door," "against the door."

[19] tn Grk "it"; the referent (Jesus' body) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[20] tn On this term see BDAG 140 s.v. ἄρωμα. The Jews did not practice embalming, so these materials were used to cover the stench of decay and slow decomposition.

sn Spices were used not to preserve the body, but as an act of love, and to mask the growing stench of a corpse.

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[23] sn Mark does not explicitly identify the young man dressed in a white robe as an angel (though the white robe suggests this), but Matthew does (Matt 28:2).

[24] sn See the note on Crucify in 15:13.

[25] tn The verb here is passive (ἠγέρθη, ēgerthē). This "divine passive" (see ExSyn 437-38) points to the fact that Jesus was raised by God.

[27] tn Grk "they began to have trembling and bewilderment."

The Longer Ending of Mark

[1][[16:9 Early on the first day of the week, after he arose, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, from whom he had driven out seven demons. 16:10 She went out and told those who were with him, while they were mourning and weeping. 16:11 And when they heard that he was alive and had been seen by her, they did not believe.

16:12 After this he appeared in a different form to two of them while they were on their way to the country. 16:13 They went back and told the rest, but they did not believe them. 16:14 Then he appeared to the eleven themselves, while they were eating, and he rebuked them for their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not believe those who had seen him resurrected. 16:15 He said to them, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. 16:16 The one who believes and is baptized will be saved, but the one who does not believe will be condemned. 16:17 These signs will accompany those who believe: In my name they will drive out demons; they will speak in new languages;[2] 16:18 they will pick up snakes with their hands, and whatever poison they drink will not harm them;[3] they will place their hands on the sick and they will be well." 16:19 After the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, he was taken up into heaven and sat down at the right hand of God. 16:20 They went out and proclaimed everywhere, while the Lord worked with them and confirmed the word through the accompanying signs.]]

[1] tc The Gospel of Mark ends at this point in some witnesses (ℵ B 304 sy^{s} sa^{ms} arm^{mss} Eus Eus^{mss} Hier^{mss}), including two of the most respected MSS (ℵ B). The following shorter ending is found in some MSS: "They reported briefly to those around Peter all that they had been commanded. After these things Jesus himself sent out through them, from the east to the west, the holy and imperishable preaching of eternal salvation. Amen." This shorter ending is usually included with the longer ending (L Ψ 083 099 0112 579 al); k, however, ends at this point. Most MSS include the longer ending (vv. 9-20) immediately after v. 8 (A C D W [which has a different shorter ending between vv. 14 and 15] Θ f^{13} 33 2427 𝔐 lat sy$^{c.p.h}$ bo); however, Jerome and Eusebius knew of almost no Greek MSS that had this ending. Several MSS have marginal comments noting that earlier Greek MSS lacked the verses, while others mark the text with asterisks or obeli (symbols that scribes used to indicate that the portion of text being copied was spurious). Internal evidence strongly suggests the secondary nature of both the short and the long endings. Their vocabulary and style are decidedly non-Markan (for further details, see TCGNT 102-6). All of this evidence strongly suggests that as time went on scribes added the longer ending, either for the richness of its material or because of the abruptness of the ending at v. 8. (Indeed, the strange variety of dissimilar endings attests to the probability that early copyists had a copy of Mark that ended at v. 8, and they filled out the text with what seemed to be an appropriate conclusion. All of the witnesses for alternative endings to vv. 9-20 thus indirectly confirm the Gospel as ending at v. 8.) Because of such problems regarding the authenticity of these alternative endings, 16:8 is usually regarded as the last verse of the Gospel of Mark. There are three possible explanations for Mark ending at 16:8: (1) The author intentionally ended the Gospel here in an open-ended fashion; (2) the Gospel was never finished; or (3) the last leaf of the MS was lost prior to copying. This first explanation is the most likely due to several factors, including (a) the probability that the Gospel was originally written on a scroll rather than a codex (only on a codex would the last leaf get lost prior to copying); (b) the unlikelihood of the MS not being completed; and (c) the literary power of ending the Gospel so abruptly that the readers are now drawn into the story itself. E. Best aptly states, "It is in keeping with other parts of his Gospel that Mark should not give an explicit account of a conclusion where this is already well known to his readers" (Mark, 73; note also his discussion of the ending of this Gospel on 132 and elsewhere). The readers must now ask themselves, "What will I do with Jesus? If I do not accept him in his suffering, I will not see him in his glory."

sn Double brackets have been placed around this passage to indicate that most likely it was not part of the original text of the Gospel of Mark. In spite of this, the passage has an important role in the history of the transmission of the text, so it has been included in the translation.

[2] tn Grk "tongues," though the word is used figuratively (perhaps as a metonymy of cause for effect). To "speak in tongues" meant to "speak in a foreign language," though one that was new to the one speaking it and therefore due to supernatural causes. For a discussion concerning whether such was a human language, heavenly language, or merely ecstatic utterance, see BDAG 201-2 s.v. γλῶσσα 2, 3; BDAG 399 s.v. ἕτερος 2; L&N 33.2-4; ExSyn 698; C. M. Robeck Jr., "Tongues," DPL, 939-43.

Luke

Explanatory Preface

1:1 Now[1] many have undertaken to compile an account[2] of the things[3] that have been fulfilled[4] among us, 1:2 like the accounts[5] passed on[6] to us by those who were eyewitnesses and servants of the word[7] from the beginning.[8] 1:3 So[9] it seemed good to me as well,[10] because I have followed[11] all things carefully from the beginning, to write an orderly account[12] for you, most excellent Theophilus, 1:4 so that you may know for certain[13] the things you were taught.[14]

Birth Announcement of John the Baptist

1:5 During the reign[15] of Herod[16] king of Judea, there lived a priest named Zechariah who belonged to[17] the priestly division of Abijah,[18] and he had a wife named Elizabeth,[19] who was a descendant of Aaron.[20] 1:6 They[21] were both righteous in the sight of God, following[22] all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly.[23] 1:7 But they did not have a child, because Elizabeth was barren,[24] and they were both very old.[25]

---

1 tn Grk "Since" or "Because." This begins a long sentence that extends through v. 4. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence and the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences, the Greek sentence has been divided up into shorter English sentences in the translation.

2 tn This is sometimes translated "narrative," but the term itself can refer to an oral or written account. It is the verb "undertaken" which suggests a written account, since it literally is "to set one's hand" to something (BDAG 386 s.v. ἐπιχειρέω). "Narrative" is too specific, denoting a particular genre of work for the accounts that existed in the earlier tradition. Not all of that material would have been narrative.

3 tn Or "events."

4 tn Or "have been accomplished." Given Luke's emphasis on divine design (e.g., Luke 24:43-47) a stronger sense ("fulfilled") is better than a mere reference to something having taken place ("accomplished").

5 tn Grk "even as"; this compares the recorded tradition of 1:1 with the original eyewitness tradition of 1:2.

6 tn Or "delivered."

7 sn The phrase eyewitnesses and servants of the word refers to a single group of people who faithfully passed on the accounts about Jesus. The language about delivery (passed on) points to accounts faithfully passed on to the early church.

8 tn Grk "like the accounts those who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and servants of the word passed on to us." The location of "in the beginning" in the Greek shows that the tradition is rooted in those who were with Jesus from the start.

9 tn The conjunction "so" is supplied here to bring out the force of the latter part of this Greek sentence, which the translation divides up because of English style. Luke, in compiling his account, is joining a tradition with good precedent.

10 sn When Luke says it seemed good to me as well he is not being critical of the earlier accounts, but sees himself stepping into a tradition of reporting about Jesus to which he will add uniquely a second volume on the early church when he writes the Book of Acts.

11 tn Grk "having followed"; the participle παρηκολουθηκότι (parēkolouthēkoti) has been translated causally.

12 sn An orderly account does not necessarily mean that all events are recorded in the exact chronological sequence in which they occurred, but that the account produced is an orderly one. This could include, for example, thematic or topical order rather than strict chronological order.

13 tn Or "know the truth about"; or "know the certainty of." The issue of the context is psychological confidence; Luke's work is trying to encourage Theophilus. So in English this is better translated as "know for certain" than "know certainty" or "know the truth," which sounds too cognitive. "Certain" assumes the truth of the report. On this term, see Acts 2:36; 21:34; 22:30; and 25:26. The meaning "have assurance concerning" is also possible here.

14 tn Or "you heard about." This term can refer merely to a report of information (Acts 21:24) or to instruction (Acts 18:25). The scope of Luke's Gospel as a whole, which calls for perseverance in the faith and which assumes much knowledge of the OT, suggests Theophilus had received some instruction and was probably a believer.

15 tn Grk "It happened that in the days." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

16 sn Herod was Herod the Great, who ruled Palestine from 37 B.C. until he died in 4 B.C. He was known for his extensive building projects (including the temple in Jerusalem) and for his cruelty.

17 tn Grk "of," but the meaning of the preposition ἐκ (ek) is more accurately expressed in contemporary English by the relative clause "who belonged to."

18 sn There were twenty-four divisions of priesthood and the priestly division of Abijah was eighth on the list according to 1 Chr 24:10.

19 tn Grk "and her name was Elizabeth."

20 tn Grk "a wife of the daughters of Aaron."

sn It was not unusual for a priest to have a wife from a priestly family (a descendant of Aaron); this was regarded as a special blessing.

21 tn Grk "And they." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

22 tn Grk "walking in" (an idiom for one's lifestyle).

sn The description of Zechariah and Elizabeth as following... blamelessly was not to say that they were sinless, but that they were faithful and pious. Thus a practical righteousness is meant here (Gen 6:8; Deut 28:9).

23 tn The predicate adjective has the effect of an adverb here (BDF §243).

24 sn Elizabeth was barren. Both Zechariah and Elizabeth are regarded by Luke as righteous in the sight of God, following all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly (v. 6). With this language, reminiscent of various passages in the OT, Luke is probably drawing implicit comparisons to the age and barrenness of such famous OT personalities as Abraham and Sarah (see, e.g., Gen 18:9-15), the mother of Samson (Judg 13:2-5), and Hannah, the mother of Samuel (1 Sam 1:1-20). And, as it was in the case of these OT saints, so it is with Elizabeth: After much anguish and seeking the Lord, she too is going to have a son in her barrenness. In that day it was a great reproach to be childless, for children were a sign of God's blessing (cf. Gen 1:28; Lev 20:20-21; Pss 127 and 128; Jer 22:30). As the dawn of salvation draws near, however, God will change this elderly couple's grief into great joy and grant them the one desire time had rendered impossible.

25 tn Grk "were both advanced in days" (an idiom for old age).

1:8 Now[1] while Zechariah[2] was serving as priest before God when his division was on duty,[3] 1:9 he was chosen by lot, according to the custom of the priesthood,[4] to enter[5] the holy place[6] of the Lord and burn incense. 1:10 Now[7] the whole crowd[8] of people were praying outside at the hour of the incense offering.[9] 1:11 An[10] angel of the Lord,[11] standing on the right side of the altar of incense, appeared[12] to him. 1:12 And Zechariah, visibly shaken when he saw the angel,[13] was seized with fear.[14] 1:13 But the angel said to him, "Do not be afraid, Zechariah, for your prayer has been heard,[15] and your wife Elizabeth will bear you a son; you[16] will name him John.[17] 1:14 Joy and gladness will come[18] to you, and many will rejoice at[19] his birth,[20] 1:15 for he will be great in the sight of[21] the Lord. He[22] must never drink wine or strong drink, and he will be filled with the Holy Spirit, even before his birth.[23] 1:16 He[24] will turn[25] many of the people[26] of Israel to the Lord their God. 1:17 And he will go as forerunner before the Lord[27] in the spirit and power of Elijah, to turn the hearts of the fathers back to their children and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just,[28] to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for him."

1:18 Zechariah[29] said to the angel, "How can I be sure of this?[30] For I am an old man, and my wife is old as well."[31] 1:19 The[32] angel answered

1 tn Grk "Now it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Zechariah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "serving as priest in the order of his division before God."

sn Zechariah's division would be on duty twice a year for a week at a time.

4 tn Grk "according to the custom of the priesthood it fell to him by lot." The order of the clauses has been rearranged in the translation to make it clear that the prepositional phrase κατὰ τὸ ἔθος τῆς ἱερατείας (kata to ethos tēs hierateias, "according to the custom of the priesthood") modifies the phrase "it fell to him by lot" rather than the preceding clause.

5 tn This is an aorist participle and is temporally related to the offering of incense, not to when the lot fell.

6 tn Or "temple." Such sacrifices, which included the burning of incense, would have occurred in the holy place according to the Mishnah (m. Tamid 1.2; 3.1; 5-7). A priest would have given this sacrifice, which was offered for the nation, once in one's career. It would be offered either at 9 a.m. or 3 p.m., since it was made twice a day.

7 tn Grk "And," but "now" better represents the somewhat parenthetical nature of this statement in the flow of the narrative.

8 tn Grk "all the multitude." While "assembly" is sometimes used here to translate πλῆθος (plēthos), that term usually implies in English a specific or particular group of people. However, this was simply a large group gathered outside, which was not unusual, especially for the afternoon offering.

9 tn The "hour of the incense offering" is another way to refer to the time of sacrifice.

10 tn Grk "And an angel." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, δέ (de) has not been translated here.

11 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." Linguistically, "angel of the Lord" is the same in both testaments (and thus, he is either "an angel of the Lord" or "the angel of the Lord" in both testaments). For arguments and implications, see ExSyn 252; M. J. Davidson, "Angels," DJG, 9; W. G. MacDonald argues for "an angel" in both testaments: "Christology and 'The Angel of the Lord'," Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation, 324-35.

12 sn This term is often used to describe a supernatural appearance (24:34; Acts 2:3; 7:2, 30, 35; 9:17; 13:31; 16:9; 26:16).

13 tn The words "the angel" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

14 tn Or "and he was afraid"; Grk "fear fell upon him." Fear is common when supernatural agents appear (1:29-30, 65; 2:9; 5:8-10; 9:34; 24:38; Exod 15:16; Judg 6:22-23; 13:6, 22; 2 Sam 6:9).

15 tn The passive means that the prayer was heard by God.

sn Your prayer has been heard. Zechariah's prayer while offering the sacrifice would have been for the nation, but the answer to the prayer also gave them a long hoped-for child, a hope they had abandoned because of their old age.

16 tn Grk "a son, and you"; καί (kai) has not been translated. Instead a semicolon is used in the translation for stylistic reasons.

17 tn Grk "you will call his name John." The future tense here functions like a command (see ExSyn 569-70). This same construction occurs in v. 31.

sn "Do not be afraid...you must call his name John." This is a standard birth announcement (see Gen 16:11; Isa 7:14; Matt 1:21; Luke 1:31).

18 tn Grk "This will be joy and gladness."

19 tn Or "because of."

20 tn "At his birth" is more precise as the grammatical subject (1:58), though "at his coming" is a possible force, since it is his mission, as the following verses note, that will really bring joy.

21 tn Grk "before."

22 tn Grk "and he"; because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun in the translation.

23 tn Grk "even from his mother's womb." While this idiom may be understood to refer to the point of birth ("even from his birth"), Luke 1:41 suggests that here it should be understood to refer to a time before birth.

sn He will be filled with the Holy Spirit, even before his birth. This is the language of the birth of a prophet (Judg 13:5, 7; Isa 49:1; Jer 1:5; Sir 49:7); see 1:41 for the first fulfillment.

24 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

25 sn The word translated will turn is a good summary term for repentance and denotes John's call to a change of direction (Luke 3:1-14).

26 tn Grk "sons," but clearly this is a generic reference to people of both genders.

27 tn Grk "before him"; the referent (the Lord) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 sn These two lines cover all relationships: Turn the hearts of the fathers back to their children points to horizontal relationships, while (turn) the disobedient to the wisdom of the just shows what God gives from above in a vertical manner.

29 tn Grk "And Zechariah." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn Grk "How will I know this?"

31 tn Grk "is advanced in days" (an idiom for old age).

32 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

him, "I am Gabriel, who stands[1] in the presence of God, and I was sent to speak to you and to bring[2] you this good news. 1:20 And now,[3] because you did not believe my words, which will be fulfilled in their time,[4] you will be silent, unable to speak,[5] until the day these things take place."

1:21 Now[6] the people were waiting for Zechariah, and they began to wonder[7] why he was delayed in the holy place.[8] 1:22 When[9] he came out, he was not able to speak to them. They[10] realized that he had seen a vision[11] in the holy place,[12] because[13] he was making signs to them and remained unable to speak.[14] 1:23 When his time of service was over,[15] he went to his home.

1:24 After some time[16] his wife Elizabeth became pregnant,[17] and for five months she kept herself in seclusion.[18] She said,[19] 1:25 "This is what[20] the Lord has done for me at the time[21] when he has been gracious to me,[22] to take away my disgrace[23] among people."[24]

Birth Announcement of Jesus the Messiah

1:26 In the sixth month of Elizabeth's pregnancy,[25] the angel Gabriel[26] was sent by[27] God to a town of Galilee called Nazareth,[28] 1:27 to a virgin engaged[29] to a man whose name was Joseph, a descendant of David,[30] and the virgin's name was Mary. 1:28 The[31] angel[32] came[33] to her and said, "Greetings, favored one,[34] the Lord is with you!"[35] 1:29 But[36] she was greatly

---

1 tn Grk "the one who is standing before God."

2 tn Grk "to announce these things of good news to you."

3 tn Grk "behold."

4 sn The predicted fulfillment in the expression my words, which will be fulfilled in their time takes place in Luke 1:63-66.

5 sn Silent, unable to speak. Actually Zechariah was deaf and mute as 1:61-63 indicates, since others had to use gestures to communicate with him.

6 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

7 tn The imperfect verb ἐθαύμαζον (ethaumazon) has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

8 tn Or "temple." See the note on the phrase "the holy place" in v. 9.

9 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

10 tn Grk "and they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn That is, "he had had a supernatural encounter in the holy place," since the angel came to Zechariah by the altar. This was not just a "mental experience."

12 tn Or "temple." See the note on the phrase "the holy place" in v. 9.

13 tn Grk "and," but the force is causal or explanatory in context.

14 tn Grk "dumb," but this could be understood to mean "stupid" in contemporary English, whereas the point is that he was speechless.

15 tn Grk "And it happened that as the days of his service were ended." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

16 tn Grk "After these days." The phrase refers to a general, unspecified period of time that passes before fulfillment comes.

17 tn Or "Elizabeth conceived."

18 sn The text does not state why Elizabeth withdrew into seclusion, nor is the reason entirely clear.

19 tn Grk "she kept herself in seclusion, saying." The participle λέγουσα (legousa) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

20 tn Grk "Thus."

21 tn Grk "in the days."

22 tn Grk "has looked on me" (an idiom for taking favorable notice of someone).

23 sn Barrenness was often seen as a reproach or disgrace (Lev 20:20-21; Jer 22:30), but now at her late age (the exact age is never given in Luke's account), God had miraculously removed it (see also Luke 1:7).

24 tn Grk "among men," but the context clearly indicates a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) here.

25 tn Grk "in the sixth month." The phrase "of Elizabeth's pregnancy" was supplied in the translation to clarify the exact time meant by this reference. That Elizabeth's pregnancy is meant is clear from vv. 24-25.

26 sn Gabriel is the same angel mentioned previously in v. 19. He is traditionally identified as an angel who brings revelation (see Dan 8:15-16; 9:21). Gabriel and Michael are the only two good angels named in the Bible.

27 tn Or "from." The account suggests God's planned direction in these events, so "by" is better than "from," as six months into Elizabeth's pregnancy, God acts again.

28 sn Nazareth was a town in the region of Galilee, located north of Samaria and Judea. Galilee extended from about 45 to 85 miles north of Jerusalem and was about 30 miles in width. Nazareth was a very small village and was located about 15 miles west of the southern edge of the Sea of Galilee.

map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

29 tn Or "promised in marriage."

30 tn Grk "Joseph, of the house of David."

sn The Greek word order here favors connecting Davidic descent to Joseph, not Mary, in this remark.

31 tn Grk "And coming to her." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

32 tn Grk "And coming to her, he said"; the referent (the angel) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn Grk "coming to her, he said." The participle εἰσελθών (eiselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

34 tn The address, "favored one" (a perfect participle, Grk "Oh one who is favored") points to Mary as the recipient of God's grace, not a bestower of it. She is a model saint in this passage, one who willingly receives God's benefits. The Vulgate rendering "full of grace" suggests something more of Mary as a bestower of grace, but does not make sense here contextually.

35 tc Most MSS (A C D Θ f^{13} 33 𝔐 latt sy) read here εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξίν (eulogēmenē su en gunaixin, "blessed are you among women") which also appears in 1:42 (where it is textually certain). This has the earmarks of a scribal addition for balance; the shorter reading, attested by the most important witnesses and several others (𝔓 B L W Ψ f^{1} 565 579 700 1241 pc co), is thus preferred.

36 tc Most MSS (A C Θ 0130 f^{13} 𝔐 lat sy) have ἰδοῦσα (idousa, "when [she] saw [the angel]") here as well, making Mary's concern the appearance of the angel. This construction is harder than the shorter reading since it adds a transitive verb without an explicit object. However, the shorter reading has significant support (𝔓 B D L W Ψ f^{1} 565 579 1241 sa) and on balance should probably be considered authentic.

troubled[1] by his words and began to wonder about the meaning of this greeting.[2] 1:30 So[3] the angel said to her, "Do not be afraid,[4] Mary, for you have found favor[5] with God! 1:31 Listen:[6] You will become pregnant[7] and give birth to[8] a son, and you will name him[9] Jesus.[10] 1:32 He[11] will be great,[12] and will be called the Son of the Most High,[13] and the Lord God will give him the throne of his father[14] David. 1:33 He[15] will reign over the house of Jacob[16] forever, and his kingdom will never end." 1:34 Mary[17] said to the angel, "How will this be, since I have not had sexual relations with[18] a man?" 1:35 The angel replied,[19] "The Holy Spirit will come upon you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow[20] you. Therefore the child[21] to be born[22] will be holy;[23] he will be called the Son of God.

1:36 "And look,[24] your relative[25] Elizabeth has also become pregnant with[26] a son in her old age – although she was called barren, she is now in her sixth month![27] 1:37 For nothing[28] will be impossible with God." 1:38 So[29] Mary said, "Yes,[30] I am a servant[31] of the Lord; let this

[1] sn On the phrase greatly troubled see 1:12. Mary's reaction was like Zechariah's response.

[2] tn Grk "to wonder what kind of greeting this might be." Luke often uses the optative this way to reveal a figure's thinking (3:15; 8:9; 18:36; 22:23).

[3] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Gabriel's statement is a response to Mary's perplexity over the greeting.

[4] sn Do not be afraid. See 1:13 for a similar statement to Zechariah.

[5] tn Or "grace."

sn The expression found favor is a Semitism, common in the OT (Gen 6:8; 18:3; 43:14; 2 Sam 15:25). God has chosen to act on this person's behalf.

[6] tn Grk "And behold."

[7] tn Grk "you will conceive in your womb."

[8] tn Or "and bear."

[9] tn Grk "you will call his name."

[10] tn See v. 13 for a similar construction.

sn You will name him Jesus. This verse reflects the birth announcement of a major figure; see 1:13; Gen 16:7; Judg 13:5; Isa 7:14. The Greek form of the name Iēsous, which was translated into Latin as Jesus, is the same as the Hebrew Yeshua (Joshua), which means "Yahweh saves" (Yahweh is typically rendered as "LORD" in the OT). It was a fairly common name among Jews in 1st century Palestine, as references to a number of people by this name in the LXX and Josephus indicate.

[11] tn Grk "this one."

[12] sn Compare the description of Jesus as great here with 1:15, "great before the Lord." Jesus is greater than John, since he is Messiah compared to a prophet. Great is stated absolutely without qualification to make the point.

[13] sn The expression Most High is a way to refer to God without naming him. Such avoiding of direct reference to God was common in 1st century Judaism out of reverence for the divine name.

[14] tn Or "ancestor."

[15] tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. A new sentence is begun here in the translation because of the length of the sentence in Greek.

[16] tn Or "over Israel."

sn The expression house of Jacob refers to Israel. This points to the Messiah's relationship to the people of Israel.

[17] tn Grk "And Mary." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[18] tn Grk "have not known." The expression in the Greek text is a euphemism for sexual relations. Mary seems to have sensed that the declaration had an element of immediacy to it that excluded Joseph. Many modern translations render this phrase "since I am a virgin," but the Greek word for virgin is not used in the text, and the euphemistic expression is really more explicit, referring specifically to sexual relations.

[19] tn Grk "And the angel said to her." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. The pronoun αὐτῇ (autē, "to her") has not been included in the translation since it is redundant in contemporary English.

[20] sn The phrase will overshadow is a reference to God's glorious presence at work (Exod 40:34-35; Ps 91:4).

[21] tn Or "the one born holy will be called the Son of God." The wording of this phrase depends on whether the adjective is a predicate adjective, as in the text, or is an adjective modifying the participle serving as the subject. The absence of an article with the adjective speaks for a predicate position. Other less appealing options supply a verb for "holy"; thus "the one who is born will be holy"; or argue that both "holy" and "Son of God" are predicates, so "The one who is born will be called holy, the Son of God."

[22] tc A few MSS (C* Θ f^{1} 33 pc) add "by you" here. This looks like a scribal addition to bring symmetry to the first three clauses of the angel's message (note the second person pronoun in the previous two clauses), and is too poorly supported to be seriously considered as authentic.

[23] tn Or "Therefore the holy child to be born will be called the Son of God." There are two ways to understand the Greek phrase τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον (to gennōmenon hagion) here. First, τὸ γεννώμενον could be considered a substantival participle with ἅγιον as an adjective in the second predicate position, thus making a complete sentence; this interpretation is reflected in the translation above. Second, τὸ ἅγιον could be considered a substantival adjective with γεννωμενον acting as an adjectival participle, thus making the phrase the subject of the verb κληθήσεται (klēthēsetai); this interpretation is reflected in the alternative reading. Treating the participle γεννώμενον as adjectival is a bit unnatural for the very reason that it forces one to understand ἅγιον as substantival; this introduces a new idea in the text with ἅγιον when an already new topic is being introduced with γεννώμενον. Semantically this would overload the new subject introduced at this point. For this reason the first interpretation is preferred.

[24] tn Grk "behold."

[25] tn Some translations render the word συγγενίς (sungenis) as "cousin" (so Phillips) but the term is not necessarily this specific.

[26] tn Or "has conceived."

[27] tn Grk "and this is the sixth month for her who was called barren." Yet another note on Elizabeth's loss of reproach also becomes a sign of the truth of the angel's declaration.

[28] tn In Greek, the phrase πᾶν ῥῆμα (pan rhēma, "nothing") has an emphatic position, giving it emphasis as the lesson in the entire discussion. The remark is a call for faith.

[29] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

[30] tn Grk "behold."

[31] tn Traditionally, "handmaid"; Grk "slave woman." Though δούλη (doulē) is normally translated "woman servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free woman serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times... in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v. δοῦλος). The most accurate translation is "bondservant," sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος (doulos), in that it often indicates one who sells himself or herself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few to-happen to me[1] according to your word."[2] Then[3] the angel departed from her.

Mary and Elizabeth

1:39 In those days[4] Mary got up and went hurriedly into the hill country, to a town of Judah,[5] 1:40 and entered Zechariah's house and greeted Elizabeth. 1:41 When[6] Elizabeth heard Mary's greeting, the baby leaped[7] in her[8] womb, and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Spirit.[9] 1:42 She[10] exclaimed with a loud voice,[11] "Blessed are you among women,[12] and blessed is the child[13] in your womb! 1:43 And who am I[14] that the mother of my Lord should come and visit me? 1:44 For the instant[15] the sound of your greeting reached my ears,[16] the baby in my womb leaped for joy.[17] 1:45 And blessed[18] is she who believed that[19] what was spoken to her by[20] the Lord would be fulfilled."[21]

Mary's Hymn of Praise

1:46 And Mary[22] said,[23]

"My soul exalts[24] the Lord,[25]
1:47 and my spirit has begun to rejoice[26]
in God my Savior,
1:48 because he has looked upon the humble state of his servant.[27]
For[28] from now on[29] all generations will call me blessed,[30]
1:49 because he who is mighty[31] has done great things for me, and holy is his name;
1:50 from[32] generation to generation he is day understand its force.

[1] tn Grk "let this be to me."

[2] sn The remark according to your word is a sign of Mary's total submission to God's will, a response that makes her exemplary.

[4] sn The expression In those days is another general time reference, though the sense of the context is that the visit came shortly after Mary miraculously conceived and shortly after the announcement about Jesus.

[5] sn The author does not say exactly where Elizabeth stayed. The location is given generally as a town of Judah. Judah is about a three day trip south of Nazareth.

[6] tn Grk "And it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here either.

[7] sn When the baby leaped John gave his first testimony about Jesus, a fulfillment of 1:15.

[8] tn The antecedent of "her" is Elizabeth.

[9] sn The passage makes clear that Elizabeth spoke her commentary with prophetic enablement, filled with the Holy Spirit.

[10] tn Grk "and she." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was begun here in the translation. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[11] tn Grk "and she exclaimed with a great cry and said." The verb εἶπεν (eipen, "said") has not been included in the translation since it is redundant in contemporary English.

[12] sn The commendation Blessed are you among women means that Mary has a unique privilege to be the mother of the promised one of God.

[13] tn Grk "fruit," which is figurative here for the child she would give birth to.

[14] tn Grk "From where this to me?" The translation suggests the note of humility and surprise that Elizabeth feels in being a part of these events. The ἵνα (hina) clause which follows explains what "this" is. A literal translation would read "From where this to me, that is, that the mother of my Lord comes to visit me?"

[15] tn Grk "for behold."

[16] tn Grk "when the sound of your greeting [reached] my ears."

[17] sn On the statement the baby in my womb leaped for joy see both 1:14 and 1:47. This notes a fulfillment of God's promised word.

[18] sn Again the note of being blessed makes the key point of the passage about believing God.

[19] tn This ὅτι (hoti) clause, technically indirect discourse after πιστεύω (pisteuō), explains the content of the faith, a belief in God's promise coming to pass.

[20] tn That is, "what was said to her (by the angel) at the Lord's command" (BDAG 756 s.v. παρά A.2).

[21] tn Grk "that there would be a fulfillment of what was said to her from the Lord."

sn This term speaks of completion of something planned (2 Chr 29:35).

[22] tc A few witnesses, especially Latin MSS, (a b l* Ir^{arm} Or$^{lat\ MSS}$ Nic) read "Elizabeth" here, since she was just speaking, but the MS evidence overwhelmingly supports "Mary" as the speaker.

[23] sn The following passage has been typeset as poetry because many scholars regard this passage as poetic or hymnic. These terms are used broadly to refer to the genre of writing, not to the content. There are two broad criteria for determining if a passage is poetic or hymnic: "(a) stylistic: a certain rhythmical lilt when the passages are read aloud, the presence of parallelismus membrorum (i.e., an arrangement into couplets), the semblance of some metre, and the presence of rhetorical devices such as alliteration, chiasmus, and antithesis; and (b) linguistic: an unusual vocabulary, particularly the presence of theological terms, which is different from the surrounding context" (P. T. O'Brien, Philippians [NIGTC], 188-89). Classifying a passage as hymnic or poetic is important because understanding this genre can provide keys to interpretation. However, not all scholars agree that the above criteria are present in this passage, so the decision to typeset it as poetry should be viewed as a tentative decision about its genre.

[24] tn Or "lifts up the Lord in praise."

[25] sn This psalm (vv. 46-55) is one of the few praise psalms in the NT. Mary praises God and then tells why both in terms of his care for her (vv. 46-49) and for others, including Israel (vv. 50-55). Its traditional name, the "Magnificat," comes from the Latin for the phrase My soul magnifies the Lord at the hymn's start.

[26] tn Or "rejoices." The translation renders this aorist, which stands in contrast to the previous line's present tense, as ingressive, which highlights Mary's joyous reaction to the announcement. A comprehensive aorist is also possible here.

[27] tn See the note on the word "servant" in v. 38.

[28] tn Grk "for behold."

[29] sn From now on is a favorite phrase of Luke's, showing how God's acts change things from this point on (5:10; 12:52; 22:18, 69; Acts 18:6).

[30] sn Mary is seen here as an example of an object of God's grace (blessed) for all generations.

[31] tn Traditionally, "the Mighty One."

[32] tn Grk "and from." Here καί (kai) has been translated by a semicolon to improve the English style.

merciful[1] to those who fear[2] him.
1:51 He has demonstrated power[3] with his arm; he has scattered those whose pride wells up from the sheer arrogance[4] of their hearts.
1:52 He has brought down the mighty[5] from their thrones, and has lifted up those of lowly position;[6]
1:53 he has filled the hungry with good things,[7] and has sent the rich away empty.[8]
1:54 He has helped his servant Israel, remembering[9] his mercy,[10]
1:55 as he promised[11] to our ancestors,[12] to Abraham and to his descendants[13] forever."

1:56 So[14] Mary stayed with Elizabeth[15] about three months[16] and then returned to her home.

The Birth of John

1:57 Now the time came[17] for Elizabeth to have her baby,[18] and she gave birth to a son. 1:58 Her[19] neighbors and relatives heard that the Lord had shown[20] great mercy to her, and they rejoiced[21] with her.

1:59 On[22] the eighth day[23] they came to circumcise the child, and they wanted to name[24] him Zechariah after his father. 1:60 But[25] his mother replied,[26] "No! He must be named[27] John."[28] 1:61 They[29] said to her, "But[30] none of your relatives bears this name."[31] 1:62 So[32] they made signs to the baby's[33] father,[34] inquiring what he wanted to name his son.[35] 1:63 He[36] asked for a writing tablet[37] and wrote,[38] "His name is John." And they were all amazed.[39] 1:64 Immediately[40] Zechariah's[41] mouth was opened and his tongue[42] released,[43] and he

---

1 sn God's mercy refers to his "loyal love" or "steadfast love," expressed in faithful actions, as the rest of the psalm illustrates.

2 tn That is, "who revere." This refers to those who show God a reverential respect for his sovereignty.

3 tn Or "shown strength," "performed powerful deeds." The verbs here switch to aorist tense through 1:55. This is how God will act in general for his people as they look to his ultimate deliverance.

4 tn Grk "in the imaginations of their hearts." The psalm rebukes the arrogance of the proud, who think that power is their sovereign right. Here διανοίᾳ (dianoia) can be understood as a dative of sphere or reference/respect.

5 tn Or "rulers."

6 tn Or "those of humble position"

sn The contrast between the mighty and those of lowly position is fundamental for Luke. God cares for those that the powerful ignore (Luke 4:18-19).

7 sn Good things refers not merely to material blessings, but blessings that come from knowing God.

8 sn Another fundamental contrast of Luke's is between the hungry and the rich (Luke 6:20-26).

9 tn Or "because he remembered mercy," understanding the infinitive as causal.

10 tn Or "his [God's] loyal love."

11 tn Grk "as he spoke." Since this is a reference to the covenant to Abraham, ἐλάλησεν (elalēsen) can be translated in context "as he promised." God keeps his word.

12 tn Grk "fathers."

13 tn Grk "his seed" (an idiom for offspring or descendants).

14 tn Grk "And." Here (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the conclusion of the topic.

15 tn Grk "her"; the referent (Elizabeth) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 sn As is typical with Luke the timing is approximate (about three months), not specific.

17 tn Grk "the time was fulfilled."

18 tn The words "her baby" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity.

19 tn Grk "And her." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

20 tn Grk "had magnified his mercy with her."

21 tn The verb συνέχαιρον (sunechairon) is an imperfect and could be translated as an ingressive force, "they began to rejoice."

22 tn Grk "And it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 sn They were following OT law (Lev 12:3) which prescribed that a male child was to be circumcised on the eighth day.

24 tn This could be understood as a conative imperfect, expressing an unrealized desire ("they were trying to name him"). It has been given more of a voluntative nuance in the translation.

25 tn Grk "And," but with clearly contrastive emphasis in context.

26 tn Grk "his mother answering, said." The combination of participle and finite verb is redundant in English and has been simplified to "replied" in the translation.

27 tn This future passive indicative verb has imperatival force and thus has been translated "he must be named."

28 sn "No! He must be named John." By insisting on the name specified by the angel, Elizabeth (v. 60) and Zechariah (v. 63) have learned to obey God (see Luke 1:13).

29 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn The word "but" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

31 tn Grk "There is no one from your relatives who is called by this name."

32 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the consequential nature of the action described.

33 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the baby) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

34 sn The crowd was sure there had been a mistake, so they appealed to the child's father. But custom was not to be followed here, since God had spoken. The fact they needed to signal him (made signs) shows that he was deaf as well as unable to speak.

35 tn Grk "what he might wish to call him."

36 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

37 sn The writing tablet requested by Zechariah would have been a wax tablet.

38 tn Grk "and wrote, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant is English and has not been translated.

39 sn The response, they were all amazed, expresses a mixture of surprise and reflection in this setting where they were so certain of what the child's name would be.

40 tn Grk "And immediately." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

41 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Zechariah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

42 sn The mention of both mouth and tongue here is a figure called zeugma and emphasizes that the end of the temporary judgment came instantly and fully upon Zechariah's expression of faith in naming the child. He had learned to trust and obey God during his short period of silence. He had learned from his trial.

43 tn "Released" is implied; in the Greek text both στόμα (stoma) and γλῶσσα (glōssa) are subjects of ἀνεῴχθη (aneōchthē), but this would be somewhat redundant in English.

spoke, blessing God. 1:65 All[1] their neighbors were filled with fear, and throughout the entire hill country of Judea all these things were talked about. 1:66 All[2] who heard these things[3] kept them in their hearts,[4] saying, "What then will this child be?"[5] For the Lord's hand[6] was indeed with him.

Zechariah's Praise and Prediction

1:67 Then[7] his father Zechariah was filled with the Holy Spirit and prophesied,[8]

1:68 "Blessed[9] be the Lord God of Israel, because he has come to help[10] and has redeemed[11] his people.
1:69 For[12] he has raised up[13] a horn of salvation[14] for us in the house of his servant David,[15]
1:70 as he spoke through the mouth of his holy prophets from long ago,[16]
1:71 that we should be saved[17] from our enemies,[18] and from the hand of all who hate us.
1:72 He has done this[19] to show mercy[20] to our ancestors,[21] and to remember his holy covenant[22] –
1:73 the oath[23] that he swore to our ancestor[24] Abraham.
This oath grants[25]
1:74 that we, being rescued from the hand of our[26] enemies, may serve him without fear,[27]
1:75 in holiness and righteousness[28] before him for as long as we live.[29]
1:76 And you, child,[30] will be called the

[1] tn Grk "And all." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

sn Fear is the emotion that comes when one recognizes something unusual, even supernatural, has taken place.

[2] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. A new sentence was begun at this point in the translation because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence.

[3] tn Grk "heard them"; the referent (these things, from the previous verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Grk "heart." The term "heart" (καρδία, kardia) could also be translated as "mind," or "thoughts," and the entire phrase be rendered as "kept them in mind," "thought about," or the like. But the immediate context is clearly emotive, suggesting that much more is at work than merely the mental processes of thinking or reasoning about "these things." There is a sense of joy and excitement (see the following question, "What then will this child be?") and even fear. Further, the use of καρδία in 1:66 suggests connections with the same term in 2:19 where deep emotion is being expressed as well. Therefore, recognizing both the dramatic nature of the immediate context and the literary connections to 2:19, the translation renders the term in 1:66 as "hearts" to capture both the cognitive and emotive aspects of the people's response.

[6] sn The reference to the Lord's hand indicates that the presence, direction, and favor of God was with him (Acts 7:9b).

[8] tn Grk "and he prophesied, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

sn Prophesied. The reference to prophecy reflects that Zechariah is enabled by the Spirit to speak God's will. He does so in this case through a praise psalm, which calls for praise and then gives the reason why God should be praised.

[9] sn The traditional name of this psalm, the "Benedictus," comes from the Latin wording of the start of the hymn ("Blessed be...").

[10] sn The verb come to help can refer to a visit, but can also connote concern or assistance (L&N 85.11).

[11] tn Or "has delivered"; Grk "has accomplished redemption."

sn Has redeemed is a reference to redemption, but it anticipates the total release into salvation that the full work of Messiah will bring for Israel. This involves both spiritual and material benefits eventually.

[12] tn Grk "and," but specifying the reason for the praise in the psalm.

[13] sn The phrase raised up means for God to bring someone significant onto the scene of history.

[14] sn The horn of salvation is a figure that refers to the power of Messiah and his ability to protect, as the horn refers to what an animal uses to attack and defend (Ps 75:4-5, 10; 148:14; 2 Sam 22:3). Thus the meaning of the figure is "a powerful savior."

[15] sn In the house of his servant David is a reference to Messiah's Davidic descent. Zechariah is more interested in Jesus than his own son John at this point.

[16] tn Grk "from the ages," "from eternity."

[18] sn The theme of being saved from our enemies is like the release Jesus preached in Luke 4:18-19. Luke's narrative shows that one of the enemies in view is Satan and his cohorts, with the grip they have on humanity.

[19] tn The words "He has done this" (referring to the raising up of the horn of salvation from David's house) are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to allow a new sentence to be started in the translation. The Greek sentence is lengthy and complex at this point, while contemporary English uses much shorter sentences.

[20] sn Mercy refers to God's loyal love (steadfast love) by which he completes his promises. See Luke 1:50.

[21] tn Or "our forefathers"; Grk "our fathers." This begins with the promise to Abraham (vv. 55, 73), and thus refers to many generations of ancestors.

[22] sn The promises of God can be summarized as being found in the one promise (the oath that he swore) to Abraham (Gen 12:1-3).

[23] tn This is linked back grammatically by apposition to "covenant" in v. 72, specifying which covenant is meant.

[24] tn Or "forefather"; Grk "father."

[25] tn Again for reasons of English style, the infinitival clause "to grant us" has been translated "This oath grants" and made the beginning of a new sentence in the translation.

[26] tc Many important early MSS (𝔓 B L W [0130] $f^{1.13}$ 565 892 pc) lack "our," while most (A C D [K] Θ Ψ 0177 33 𝔐 pc) supply it. Although the addition is most likely not authentic, "our" has been included in the translation due to English stylistic requirements.

[27] tn This phrase in Greek is actually thrown forward to the front of the verse to give it emphasis.

[28] sn The phrases that we...might serve him...in holiness and righteousness from Luke 1:74-75 well summarize a basic goal for a believer in the eyes of Luke. Salvation frees us up to serve God without fear through a life full of ethical integrity.

[29] tn Grk "all our days."

[30] sn Now Zechariah describes his son John (you, child) through v. 77.

prophet[1] of the Most High.[2]
For you will go before[3] the Lord to prepare his ways,[4]
1:77 to give his people knowledge of salvation[5] through the forgiveness[6] of their sins.
1:78 Because of[7] our God's tender mercy[8]
the dawn[9] will break[10] upon us from on high 1:79 to give light to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death,[11] to guide our feet into the way[12] of peace."

1:80 And the child kept growing[13] and becoming strong[14] in spirit, and he was in the wilderness[15] until the day he was revealed[16] to Israel.

The Census and the Birth of Jesus

2:1 Now[17] in those days a decree[18] went out from Caesar[19] Augustus[20] to register[21] all the empire[22] for taxes. 2:2 This was the first registration, taken when Quirinius was governor[23] of Syria. 2:3 Everyone[24] went to his own town[25] to be registered. 2:4 So[26] Joseph also went up from the town of Nazareth[27] in Galilee to Judea, to the city[28] of David called Bethlehem,[29] because he was of the house[30] and family line[31] of David. 2:5 He went[32] to be registered with Mary, who was promised in marriage to him,[33] and who was

---

1 tn Or "a prophet," but since Greek nouns can be definite without the article, and since in context this is a reference to the eschatological forerunner of the Messiah (cf. John 1:17), the concept is better conveyed to the English reader by the use of the definite article "the."

2 sn In other words, John is a prophet of God; see 1:32 and 7:22-23, 28.

3 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (A C D L Θ Ψ 0130 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 sy), have πρὸ προσώπου κυρίου (pro prosōpou kuriou, "before the face of the Lord"), but the translation follows the reading ἐνώπιον κυρίου (enōpion kuriou, "before the Lord"), which has earlier and better MS support (𝔓⁴ ℵ B W 0177 pc) and is thus more likely to be authentic.

4 tn This term is often translated in the singular, looking specifically to the forerunner role, but the plural suggests the many elements in that salvation.

sn On the phrase prepare his ways see Isa 40:3-5 and Luke 3:1-6.

5 sn John's role, to give his people knowledge of salvation, is similar to that of Jesus (Luke 3:1-14; 5:31-32).

6 sn Forgiveness is another major Lukan theme (Luke 4:18; 24:47; Acts 10:37).

7 tn For reasons of style, a new sentence has been started in the translation at this point. God's mercy is ultimately seen in the deliverance John points to, so v. 78a is placed with the reference to Jesus as the light of dawning day.

8 sn God's loyal love (steadfast love) is again the topic, reflected in the phrase tender mercy; see Luke 1:72.

9 sn The Greek term translated dawn (ἀνατολή, anatolē) can be a reference to the morning star or to the sun. The Messiah is pictured as a saving light that shows the way. The Greek term was also used to translate the Hebrew word for "branch" or "sprout," so some see a double entendre here with messianic overtones (see Isa 11:1-10; Jer 23:5; 33:15; Zech 3:8; 6:12).

10 tn Grk "shall visit us."

11 sn On the phrases who sit in darkness...and...death see Isa 9:1-2; 42:7; 49:9-10.

12 tn Or "the path."

13 tn This verb is imperfect.

14 tn This verb is also imperfect.

15 tn Or "desert."

16 tn Grk "until the day of his revealing."

17 tn Grk "Now it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

18 sn This decree was a formal decree from the Roman Senate.

19 tn Or "from the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

20 sn Caesar Augustus refers to Octavian, who was Caesar from 27 B.C. to A.D. 14. He was known for his administrative prowess.

21 tn Grk "that all the empire should be registered for taxes." The passive infinitive ἀπογράφεσθαι (apographesthai) has been rendered as an active in the translation to improve the English style. The verb is regarded as a technical term for official registration in tax lists (BDAG 108 s.v. ἀπογράφω a).

sn This census (a decree...to register all the empire) is one of the more disputed historical remarks in Luke. Josephus (Ant. 18.1.1 [18.1-2]) only mentions a census in A.D. 6, too late for this setting. Such a census would have been a massive undertaking; it could have started under one ruler and emerged under another, to whose name it became attached. This is one possibility to explain the data. Another is that Quirinius, who became governor in Syria for the later census, may have been merely an administrator for this census. See also Luke 2:2.

22 tn Grk "the whole (inhabited) world," but this was a way to refer to the Roman empire (L&N 1.83).

23 tn Or "was a minister of Syria." This term could simply refer to an administrative role Quirinius held as opposed to being governor (Josephus, Ant. 18.4.2 [18.88]). See also Luke 2:1.

24 tn Grk "And everyone." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

25 tn Or "hometown" (so CEV).

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the consequential nature of the action.

27 sn On Nazareth see Luke 1:26.

map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

28 tn Or "town." The translation "city" is used here because of its collocation with "of David," suggesting its importance, though not its size.

29 sn The journey from Nazareth to the city of David called Bethlehem was a journey of about 90 mi (150 km). Bethlehem was a small village located about 7 miles south-southwest of Jerusalem.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map7-E2; Map8-E2; Map10-B4.

30 sn Luke's use of the term "house" probably alludes to the original promise made to David outlined in the Nathan oracle of 2 Sam 7:12-16, especially in light of earlier connections between Jesus and David made in Luke 1:32. Further, the mention of Bethlehem reminds one of the promise of Mic 5:2, namely, that a great king would emerge from Bethlehem to rule over God's people.

31 tn Or "family," "lineage."

32 tn The words "He went" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to begin a new sentence in the translation. The Greek sentence is longer and more complex than normal contemporary English usage.

33 tn Traditionally, "Mary, his betrothed." Although often rendered in contemporary English as "Mary, who was engaged to him," this may give the modern reader a wrong impression, since Jewish marriages in this period were typically arranged marriages. The term ἐμνηστευμένῃ (emnēsteumenē) may suggest that the marriage is not yet consummated, not necessarily that they are not currently married. Some MSS read "the betrothed to him wife"; others, simply "his wife." These expecting a child. 2:6 While[1] they were there, the time came for her to deliver her child.[2] 2:7 And she gave birth to her firstborn son and wrapped him in strips of cloth[3] and laid him in a manger,[4] because there was no place for them in the inn.[5]

The Shepherds' Visit

2:8 Now[6] there were shepherds[7] nearby[8] living out in the field, keeping guard[9] over their flock at night. 2:9 An[10] angel of the Lord[11] appeared to[12] them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were absolutely terrified.[13] 2:10 But the angel said to them, "Do not be afraid! Listen carefully,[14] for I proclaim to you good news[15] that brings great joy to all the people: 2:11 Today[16] your Savior is born in the city[17] of David.[18] He is Christ[19] the Lord. 2:12 This[20] will be a sign[21] for you: You will find a baby wrapped in strips of cloth and lying in a manger."[22] 2:13 Suddenly[23] a vast, heavenly army[24] appeared with the angel, praising God and saying,

> 2:14 "Glory[25] to God in the highest, > and on earth peace among people[26] with > whom he is pleased!"[27] readings, though probably not original, may give the right sense.

1 tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn The words "her child" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied to clarify what was being delivered. The wording here is like Luke 1:57. Grk "the days for her to give birth were fulfilled."

3 sn The strips of cloth (traditionally, "swaddling cloths") were strips of linen that would be wrapped around the arms and legs of an infant to keep the limbs protected.

4 tn Or "a feeding trough."

5 tn The Greek word κατάλυμα is flexible, and usage in the LXX and NT refers to a variety of places for lodging (see BDAG 521 s.v.). Most likely Joseph and Mary sought lodging in the public accommodations in the city of Bethlehem (see J. Nolland, Luke [WBC], 1:105), which would have been crude shelters for people and animals. However, it has been suggested by various scholars that Joseph and Mary were staying with relatives in Bethlehem (e.g., C. S. Keener, The IVP Bible Background Commentary: New Testament, 194; B. Witherington, "Birth of Jesus," DJG, 69-70); if that were so the term would refer to the guest room in the relatives' house, which would have been filled beyond capacity with all the other relatives who had to journey to Bethlehem for the census.

sn There was no place for them in the inn. There is no drama in how this is told. There is no search for a variety of places to stay or a heartless innkeeper. (Such items are later, nonbiblical embellishments.) Bethlehem was not large and there was simply no other place to stay. The humble surroundings of the birth are ironic in view of the birth's significance.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

7 sn Some argue that shepherds were among the culturally despised, but the evidence for this view of shepherds is late, coming from 5th century Jewish materials. December 25 as the celebrated date of Jesus' birth arose around the time of Constantine (ca. A.D. 306-337), though it is mentioned in material from Hippolytus (A.D. 165-235). Some think that the reason for celebration on this date was that it coincided with the pagan Roman festival of Saturnalia, and Christians could celebrate their own festival at this time without fear of persecution. On the basis of the statement that the shepherds were living out in the field, keeping guard over their flock at night it is often suggested that Jesus' birth took place in early spring, since it was only at lambing time that shepherds stood guard over their flocks in the field. This is not absolutely certain, however.

8 tn Grk "in that region."

9 tn Grk "living in the field (see BDAG 15 s.v. ἀγραυλέω) and guarding their flock."

10 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn Or "the angel of the Lord." See the note on the word "Lord" in 1:11.

12 tn Or "stood in front of."

13 tn Grk "they feared a great fear" (a Semitic idiom which intensifies the main idea, in this case their fear).

sn Terrified. See similar responses in Luke 1:12, 29.

14 tn Grk "behold."

15 tn Grk "I evangelize to you great joy."

16 sn The Greek word for today (σημερον, sēmeron) occurs eleven times in the Gospel of Luke (2:11; 4:21; 5:26; 12:28; 13:32-33; 19:5, 9; 22:34, 61; 23:43) and nine times in Acts. Its use, especially in passages such as 2:11, 4:21, 5:26; 19:5, 9, signifies the dawning of the era of messianic salvation and the fulfillment of the plan of God. Not only does it underscore the idea of present fulfillment in Jesus' ministry, but it also indicates salvific fulfillment present in the church (cf. Acts 1:6; 3:18; D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:412; I. H. Marshall, Luke, [NIGTC], 873).

17 tn Or "town." See the note on "city" in v. 4.

18 tn This is another indication of a royal, messianic connection.

19 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn The term χριστός (christos) was originally an adjective ("anointed"), developing in LXX into a substantive ("an anointed one"), then developing still further into a technical generic term ("the anointed one"). In the intertestamental period it developed further into a technical term referring to the hoped-for anointed one, that is, a specific individual. In the NT the development starts there (technical-specific), is so used in the gospels, and then develops in Paul to mean virtually Jesus' last name.

20 tn Grk "And this." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

21 sn The sign functions for the shepherds like Elizabeth's conception served for Mary in 1:36.

22 tn Or "a feeding trough," see Luke 2:7.

23 tn Grk "And suddenly." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn Grk "a multitude of the armies of heaven."

25 sn Glory here refers to giving honor to God.

26 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) referring to both males and females.

27 tc Most witnesses (𝔓[1] B[2] L Θ Ξ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 sy bo) have ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία (en anthrōpois eudokia, "good will among people") instead of ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας (en anthrōpois eudokias, "among people with whom he is pleased"), a reading attested by ℵ* A B* D W pc (sa). Most of the Itala witnesses and some other versional witnesses reflect a Greek text which has the genitive εὐδοκίας but drops the preposition ἐν. Not only is the genitive reading better attested, but it is more difficult than the nominative. "The meaning seems to be, not that divine peace can be bestowed only where human good will is already present, but that at the birth of the Saviour God's peace rests on those whom he has chosen in accord with his good pleasure" (TCGNT 111).

2:15 When[1] the angels left them and went back to heaven, the shepherds said to one another, "Let us go over to Bethlehem[2] and see this thing that has taken place, that the Lord[3] has made known to us." 2:16 So they hurried off and located Mary and Joseph, and found the baby lying in a manger.[4] 2:17 When[5] they saw him,[6] they related what they had been told[7] about this child, 2:18 and all who heard it were astonished[8] at what the shepherds said. 2:19 But Mary treasured up all these words, pondering in her heart what they might mean.[9] 2:20 So[10] the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising[11] God for all they had heard and seen; everything was just as they had been told.[12]

2:21 At[13] the end of eight days, when he was circumcised, he was named Jesus, the name given by the angel[14] before he was conceived in the womb.

Jesus' Presentation at the Temple

2:22 Now[15] when the time came for their[16] purification according to the law of Moses, Joseph and Mary[17] brought Jesus[18] up to Jerusalem[19] to present him to the Lord 2:23 (just as it is written in the law of the Lord, "Every firstborn male[20] will be set apart to the Lord"[21]), 2:24 and to offer a sacrifice according to what is specified in the law of the Lord, a pair of doves[22] or two young pigeons.[23]

1 tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 map For location see Map5-B1; Map7-E2; Map8-E2; Map10-B4.

3 sn Note how although angels delivered the message, it was the Lord whose message is made known, coming through them.

4 tn Or "a feeding trough."

5 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

6 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

7 tn Grk "the word which had been spoken to them."

8 tn Grk "marveled." It is a hard word to translate with one term in this context. There is a mixture of amazement and pondering at work in considering the surprising events here. See Luke 1:21, 63; 2:33.

9 tn The term συμβάλλουσα (sumballousa) suggests more than remembering. She is trying to put things together here (Josephus, Ant. 2.5.3 [2.72]). The words "what they might mean" have been supplied in the translation to make this clear. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the conclusion of the topic.

11 sn The mention of glorifying and praising God is the second note of praise in this section; see Luke 2:13-14.

12 tn Grk "just as [it] had been spoken to them." This has been simplified in the English translation by making the prepositional phrase ("to them") the subject of the passive verb.

sn The closing remark just as they had been told notes a major theme of Luke 1-2 as he sought to reassure Theophilus: God does what he says he will do.

13 tn Grk "And when eight days were completed." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

14 sn Jesus' parents obeyed the angel as Zechariah and Elizabeth had (1:57-66). These events are taking place very much under God's direction.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

16 tc The translation follows most MSS, including early and important ones ({א A B L}). Some copyists, aware that the purification law applied to women only, produced MSS ({76 it^{pt} vg} [though the Latin word eius could be either masculine or feminine]) that read "her purification." But the extant evidence for an unambiguous "her" is shut up to one late minuscule ({codex 76}) and a couple of patristic citations of dubious worth ({Pseudo-Athanasius} whose date is unknown, and the {Catenae in euangelia Lucae et Joannis}, edited by J. A. Cramer. The Catenae is a work of collected patristic sayings whose exact source is unknown [thus, it could come from a period covering hundreds of years]). A few other witnesses (D pc lat) read "his purification." The KJV has "her purification," following Beza's Greek text (essentially a revision of Erasmus'). Erasmus did not have it in any of his five editions. Most likely Beza put in the feminine form αὐτῆς (autēs) because, recognizing that the eius found in several Latin MSS could be read either as a masculine or a feminine, he made the contextually more satisfying choice of the feminine. Perhaps it crept into one or two late Greek witnesses via this interpretive Latin back-translation. So the evidence for the feminine singular is virtually nonexistent, while the masculine singular αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") was a clear scribal blunder. There can be no doubt that "their purification" is the authentic reading.

tn Or "when the days of their purification were completed." In addition to the textual problem concerning the plural pronoun (which apparently includes Joseph in the process) there is also a question whether the term translated "purification" (καθαρισμός, katharismos) refers to the time period prescribed by the Mosaic law or to the offering itself which marked the end of the time period (cf. NLT, "it was time for the purification offering").

sn Exegetically the plural pronoun "their" creates a problem. It was Mary's purification that was required by law, forty days after the birth (Lev 12:2-4). However, it is possible that Joseph shared in a need to be purified by having to help with the birth or that they also dedicated the child as a first born (Exod 13:2), which would also require a sacrifice that Joseph would bring. Luke's point is that the parents followed the law. They were pious.

17 tn Grk "they"; the referents (Joseph and Mary) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

20 tn Grk "every male that opens the womb" (an idiom for the firstborn male).

21 sn An allusion to Exod 13:2, 12, 15.

22 sn The offering of a pair of doves or two young pigeons, instead of a lamb, speaks of the humble roots of Jesus' family – they apparently could not afford the expense of a lamb.

23 sn A quotation from Lev 12:8; 5:11 (LXX).

The Prophecy of Simeon

2:25 Now[1] there was a man in Jerusalem[2] named Simeon who was righteous[3] and devout, looking for the restoration[4] of Israel, and the Holy Spirit[5] was upon him. 2:26 It[6] had been revealed[7] to him by the Holy Spirit that he would not die[8] before[9] he had seen the Lord's Christ.[10] 2:27 So[11] Simeon,[12] directed by the Spirit,[13] came into the temple courts,[14] and when the parents brought in the child Jesus to do for him what was customary according to the law,[15] 2:28 Simeon[16] took him in his arms and blessed God, saying,[17]

2:29 "Now, according to your word,[18] Sovereign Lord,[19] permit[20] your servant[21] to depart[22] in peace.
2:30 For my eyes have seen your salvation[23]
2:31 that you have prepared in the presence of all peoples:[24]
2:32 a light,[25]
for revelation to the Gentiles, and for glory[26] to your people Israel."

2:33 So[27] the child's[28] father[29] and mother were amazed[30] at what was said about him. 2:34 Then[31] Simeon blessed them and said to his mother Mary, "Listen carefully:[32] This child[33] is destined to be the cause of the falling and

1 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

2 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

3 tn Grk "This man was righteous." The Greek text begins a new sentence here, but this was changed to a relative clause in the translation to avoid redundancy.

4 tn Or "deliverance," "consolation."

sn The restoration of Israel refers to Simeon's hope that the Messiah would come and deliver the nation (Isa 40:1; 49:13; 51:3; 57:18; 61:2; 2 Bar 44:7).

5 sn Once again, by mentioning the Holy Spirit, Luke stresses the prophetic enablement of a speaker. The Spirit has fallen on both men (Zechariah, 1:67) and women (Elizabeth, 1:41) in Luke 1–2 as they share the will of the Lord.

6 tn Grk "And it." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 tn The use of the passive suggests a revelation by God, and in the OT the corresponding Hebrew term represented here by κεχρηματισμένον (kechrēmatismenon) indicated some form of direct revelation from God (Jer 25:30; 33:2; Job 40:8).

8 tn Grk "would not see death" (an idiom for dying).

9 tn On the grammar of this temporal clause, see BDF §§383.3; 395.

10 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn The revelation to Simeon that he would not die before he had seen the Lord's Christ is yet another example of a promise fulfilled in Luke 1-2. Also, see the note on Christ in 2:11.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the consequential nature of the action.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Simeon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Grk "So in the Spirit" or "So by the Spirit," but since it refers to the Spirit's direction the expanded translation "directed by the Spirit" is used here.

14 tn Grk "the temple."

sn The temple courts is a reference to the larger temple area, not the holy place. Simeon was either in the court of the Gentiles or the court of women, since Mary was present.

15 tn Grk "to do for him according to the custom of the law." See Luke 2:22-24.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Simeon) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Grk "and said." The finite verb in Greek has been replaced with a participle in English to improve the smoothness of the translation.

18 sn The phrase according to your word again emphasizes that God will perform his promise.

19 tn The Greek word translated here by "Sovereign Lord" is δεσπότης (despotēs).

20 sn This short prophetic declaration is sometimes called the Nunc dimittis, which comes from the opening phrase of the saying in Latin, "now dismiss," a fairly literal translation of the Greek verb ἀπολύεις (apolueis, "now release") in this verse.

21 tn Here the Greek word δοῦλος (doulos, "slave") has been translated "servant" since it acts almost as an honorific term for one specially chosen and appointed to carry out the Lord's tasks.

sn Undoubtedly the background for the concept of being the Lord's slave or servant is to be found in the Old Testament scriptures. For a Jew this concept did not connote drudgery, but honor and privilege. It was used of national Israel at times (Isa 43:10), but was especially associated with famous OT personalities, including such great men as Moses (Josh 14:7), David (Ps 89:3; cf. 2 Sam 7:5, 8) and Elijah (2 Kgs 10:10); all these men were "servants (or slaves) of the Lord."

22 tn Grk "now release your servant."

23 sn To see Jesus, the Messiah, is to see God's salvation.

24 sn Is the phrase all peoples a reference to Israel alone, or to both Israel and the Gentiles? The following verse makes it clear that all peoples includes Gentiles, another key Lukan emphasis (Luke 24:47; Acts 10:34-43).

25 tn The syntax of this verse is disputed. Most read "light" and "glory" in parallelism, so Jesus is a light for revelation to the Gentiles and is glory to the people for Israel. Others see "light" (1:78-79) as a summary, while "revelation" and "glory" are parallel, so Jesus is light for all, but is revelation for the Gentiles and glory for Israel. Both readings make good sense and either could be correct, but Luke 1:78-79 and Acts 26:22-23 slightly favor this second option.

26 sn In other words, Jesus is a special cause for praise and honor ("glory") for the nation.

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the consequential nature of the action.

28 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the child) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tc Most MSS ([A] Θ [Ψ] f^{13} 33 𝔐 it) read "Joseph," but in favor of the reading ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ (ho patēr autou, "his father") is both external (ℵ B D L W 1 700 1241 pc sa) and internal evidence. Internally, the fact that Mary is not named at this point and that "Joseph" is an obviously motivated reading, intended to prevent confusion over the virgin conception of Christ, argues strongly for ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ as the authentic reading here. See also the tc note on "parents" in 2:43.

30 tn The term refers to the amazement at what was happening as in other places in Luke 1–2 (1:63; 2:18). The participle is plural, while the finite verb used in the periphrastic construction is singular, perhaps to show a unity in the parents' response (BDF §135.1.d: Luke 8:19).

31 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

32 tn Grk "behold."

33 tn Grk "this one"; the referent (the child) is supplied in the translation for clarity.

rising[1] of many in Israel and to be a sign that will be rejected.[2] 2:35 Indeed, as a result of him the thoughts[3] of many hearts will be revealed[4] – and a sword[5] will pierce your own soul as well!"[6]

The Testimony of Anna

2:36 There was also a prophetess, Anna the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher. She was very old,[7] having been married to her husband for seven years until his death. 2:37 She had lived as a widow since then for eighty-four years.[8] She never left the temple, worshiping with fasting and prayer night and day.[9] 2:38 At that moment,[10] she came up to them[11] and began to give thanks to God and to speak[12] about the child[13] to all who were waiting for the redemption of Jerusalem.[14]

2:39 So[15] when Joseph and Mary[16] had performed[17] everything according to the law of the Lord,[18] they returned to Galilee, to their own town[19] of Nazareth.[20] 2:40 And the child grew and became strong,[21] filled with wisdom,[22] and the favor[23] of God[24] was upon him.

Jesus in the Temple

2:41 Now[25] Jesus'[26] parents went to Jerusalem[27] every[28] year for the feast of the Passover.[29] 2:42 When[30] he was twelve years old,[31] they went up[32] according to custom. 2:43 But[33] when the feast was over,[34] as they were returning home,[35] the boy Jesus stayed behind in

---

1 sn The phrase the falling and rising of many emphasizes that Jesus will bring division in the nation, as some will be judged (falling) and others blessed (rising) because of how they respond to him. The language is like Isa 8:14-15 and conceptually like Isa 28:13-16. Here is the first hint that Jesus' coming will be accompanied with some difficulties.

2 tn Grk "and for a sign of contradiction."

3 tn Or "reasonings" (in a hostile sense). See G. Schrenk, TDNT 2:97.

4 sn The remark the thoughts of many hearts will be revealed shows that how people respond to Jesus indicates where their hearts really are before God.

5 sn A sword refers to a very large, broad two-edged sword. The language is figurative, picturing great pain. Though it refers in part to the cross, it really includes the pain all of Jesus' ministry will cause, including the next event in Luke 2:41-52 and extending to the opposition he faced throughout his ministry.

6 sn This remark looks to be parenthetical and addressed to Mary alone, not the nation. Many modern English translations transpose this to make it the final clause in Simeon's utterance as above to make this clear.

7 tn Her age is emphasized by the Greek phrase here, "she was very old in her many days."

8 tn Grk "living with her husband for seven years from her virginity and she was a widow for eighty four years." The chronology of the eighty-four years is unclear, since the final phrase could mean "she was widowed until the age of eighty-four" (so BDAG 423 s.v. ἕως 1.b.α). However, the more natural way to take the syntax is as a reference to the length of her widowhood, the subject of the clause, in which case Anna was about 105 years old (so D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:251-52; I. H. Marshall, Luke, [NIGTC], 123-24).

9 sn The statements about Anna worshiping with fasting and prayer night and day make her extreme piety clear.

10 tn Grk "at that very hour."

11 tn Grk "And coming up." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. The participle ἐπιστᾶσα (epistasa) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn The imperfect ἐλάλει (elalei) here looks at a process of declaration, not a single moment. She clearly was led by God to address men and women about the hope Jesus was. The testimony of Luke 1—2 to Jesus has involved all types of people.

13 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the child) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tc A few MSS (1216 pc) read Ἰσραήλ (Israēl, "Israel") or ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ (en tō Israēl, "in Israel"), but this reading does not have enough MS support to be considered authentic. More substantial is the reading ἐν Ἰερουσαλήμ (en Ierousalēm, "in Jerusalem"; found in A D L Θ Ψ 0130 f^{13} 33 𝔐), though the preposition was almost surely added to clarify (and perhaps alter) the meaning of the original. The simple Ἰερουσαλήμ, without preposition, is found in ℵ B W Ξ 1 565* lat co.

21 tc Most MSS (A Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐) read πνεύματι (pneumati, "in spirit") after "became strong," but this looks like an assimilation to Luke 1:80. The better witnesses (ℵ B D L N W pc lat co) lack the word.

22 sn With the description grew and became strong, filled with wisdom Luke emphasizes the humanity of Jesus and his growth toward maturity.

23 tn Or "grace."

24 sn On the phrase the favor of God see Luke 1:66.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

26 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn On the distributive use of the term κατά (kata), see BDF §305.

29 sn The custom of Jesus and his family going to Jerusalem every year for the feast of the Passover shows their piety in obeying the law (Exod 23:14-17).

30 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

31 sn According to the Mishnah, the age of twelve years old is one year before a boy becomes responsible for his religious commitments (m. Niddah 5.6).

32 tc Most MSS, especially later ones (A C^{vid} Θ Ψ 0130 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) have εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα (eis hierosoluma, "to Jerusalem") here, but the MS support for the omission is much stronger (ℵ B D L W 579 1241 pc co); further, the longer reading clarifies what they went up to and thus looks like a motivated reading.

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated contrastively in keeping with the context. This outcome is different from what had happened all the times before.

34 tn Grk "when the days ended."

35 tn The word "home" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied for clarity.

Jerusalem. His[1] parents[2] did not know it, 2:44 but (because they assumed that he was in their group of travelers)[3] they went a day's journey. Then[4] they began to look for him among their relatives and acquaintances.[5] 2:45 When[6] they did not find him, they returned to Jerusalem[7] to look for him. 2:46 After[8] three days[9] they found him in the temple courts,[10] sitting among the teachers,[11] listening to them and asking them questions. 2:47 And all who heard Jesus[12] were astonished[13] at his understanding and his answers. 2:48 When[14] his parents[15] saw him, they were overwhelmed. His[16] mother said to him, "Child,[17] why have you treated[18] us like this? Look, your father and I have been looking for you anxiously."[19] 2:49 But[20] he replied,[21] "Why were you looking for me?[22] Didn't you know that I must be in my Father's house?"[23] 2:50 Yet[24] his parents[25] did not understand[26] the remark[27] he made[28] to them. 2:51 Then[29] he went down with them and came to Nazareth,[30] and was obedient[31] to them. But[32] his mother kept all these things[33] in her heart.[34]

1 tn Grk "And his." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tc Most mss, especially later ones (A C Ψ 0130 f^{13} 𝔐 it), read Ἰωσὴφ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτοῦ (Iōsēph kai hē mētēr autou, "[both] Joseph and his mother"), a reading evidently intended to insulate the doctrine of the virgin conception of our Lord. But ℵ B D L W Θ f^{1} 33 579 1241 pc lat sa read οἱ γονεῖς αὐτοῦ (hoi goneis autou, "his parents") as in the translation. Such motivated readings as the former lack credibility, especially since the better witnesses affirm the virgin conception of Christ in Luke 1:34-35.

3 sn An ancient journey like this would have involved a caravan of people who traveled together as a group for protection and fellowship.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

5 tn Or "and friends." See L&N 28.30 and 34.17.

6 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 sn The return to Jerusalem would have taken a second day, since they were already one day's journey away.

8 tn Grk "And it happened that after." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

9 sn Three days means there was one day out, another day back, and a third day of looking in Jerusalem.

10 tn Grk "the temple."

11 tn This is the only place in Luke's Gospel where the term διδάσκαλος (didaskalos, "teacher") is applied to Jews.

12 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 sn There was wonder (all who heard...were astonished) that Jesus at such a young age could engage in such a discussion. The fact that this story is told of a preteen hints that Jesus was someone special.

14 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

15 tn Grk "when they"; the referent (his parents) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "And his." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

17 tn The Greek word here is τέκνον (teknon) rather than υἱός (huios, "son").

18 tn Or "Child, why did you do this to us?"

19 tn Or "your father and I have been terribly worried looking for you."

20 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast.

21 tn Grk "he said to them."

22 tn Grk "Why is it that you were looking for me?"

23 tn Or "I must be about my Father's business" (so KJV, NKJV); Grk "in the [things] of my Father," with an ellipsis. This verse involves an idiom that probably refers to the necessity of Jesus being involved in the instruction about God, given what he is doing. The most widely held view today takes this as a reference to the temple as the Father's house. Jesus is saying that his parents should have known where he was.

24 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast.

25 tn Grk "they"; the referent (his parents) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 sn This was the first of many times those around Jesus did not understand what he was saying at the time (9:45; 10:21-24; 18:34).

27 tn Or "the matter."

28 tn Grk "which he spoke."

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

30 map For location see Map1-D3; Map2-C2; Map3-D5; Map4-C1; Map5-G3.

31 tn Or "was submitting."

32 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast.

33 tn Or "all these words."

34 sn On the phrase his mother kept all these things in her heart compare Luke 2:19.

35 tn Or "kept increasing." The imperfect tense suggests something of a progressive force to the verb.

36 tn Or "Emperor Tiberius" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

sn Tiberius Caesar was the Roman emperor Tiberius Claudius Caesar Augustus, who ruled from A.D. 14-37.

37 sn The rule of Pontius Pilate is also described by Josephus, J. W. 2.9.2-4 (2.169-177) and Ant. 18.3.1 (18.55-59).

38 sn Herod refers here to Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great. He ruled from 4 B.C.-A.D. 39, sharing the rule of his father's realm with his two brothers. One brother, Archelaus (Matt 2:22) was banished in A.D. 6 and died in A.D. 18; the other brother, Herod Philip (mentioned next) died in A.D. 34.

39 sn A tetrarch was a ruler with rank and authority lower than a king, who ruled only with the approval of the Roman authorities. This was roughly equivalent to being governor of a region. Several times in the NT, Herod tetrarch of Galilee is called a king (Matt 14:9, Mark 6:14-29), reflecting popular usage.

40 sn Philip refers to Herod Philip, son of Herod the Great and brother of Herod Antipas. Philip ruled as tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis from 4 B.C.-A.D. 34.

41 sn Nothing else is known about Lysanias tetrarch of Abilene.

42 sn Use of the singular high priesthood to mention two figures is unusual but accurate, since Annas was the key priest from A.D. 6-15 and then his relatives were chosen for many the word[1] of God came to John the son of Zechariah in the wilderness.[2] 3:3 He[3] went into all the region around the Jordan River,[4] preaching a baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins.[5]

3:4 As it is written in the book of the words of Isaiah the prophet,

> "The voice[6] of one shouting in the wilderness:[7]
> 'Prepare the way for the Lord,
> make[8] his paths straight.
> 3:5 Every valley will be filled,[9]
> and every mountain and hill will be brought low, > and the crooked will be made straight,
> and the rough ways will be made smooth,
> 3:6 and all humanity[10] will see the salvation of God.'"[11]

3:7 So John[12] said to the crowds[13] that came out to be baptized by him, "You offspring of vipers![14] Who warned you to flee[15] from the coming wrath? 3:8 Therefore produce[16] fruit[17] that proves your repentance, and don't begin to say[18] to yourselves, 'We have Abraham as our father.'[19] For I tell you that God can raise up children for Abraham from these stones![20] 3:9 Even now the ax is laid at the root of the trees,[21] and every tree that does not produce good fruit will be[22] cut down and thrown into the fire."

3:10 So[23] the crowds were asking[24] him, "What then should we do?" 3:11 John[25] answered them,[26] "The person who has two of the next several years. After two brief tenures by others, his son-in-law Caiaphas came to power and stayed there until A.D. 36.

1 tn The term translated "word" here is not λόγος (logos) but ῥῆμα (rhēma), and thus could refer to the call of the Lord to John to begin ministry.

2 tn Or "desert."

3 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

4 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

5 sn A baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins was a call for preparation for the arrival of the Lord's salvation. To participate in this baptism was a recognition of the need for God's forgiveness with a sense that one needed to live differently as a response to it (Luke 3:10-14).

6 tn Or "A voice."

7 tn Or "desert." The syntactic position of the phrase "in the wilderness" is unclear in both Luke and the LXX. The MT favors taking it with "Prepare a way," while the LXX takes it with "a voice shouting." If the former, the meaning would be that such preparation should be done "in the wilderness." If the latter, the meaning would be that the place from where John's ministry went forth was "in the wilderness." There are Jewish materials that support both renderings: 1QS 8:14 and 9.19-20 support the MT while certain rabbinic texts favor the LXX (see D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:290-91). While it is not absolutely necessary that a call in the wilderness led to a response in the wilderness, it is not unlikely that such would be the case. Thus, in the final analysis, the net effect between the two choices may be minimal. In any case, a majority of commentators and translations take "in the wilderness" with "The voice of one shouting" (D. L. Bock; R. H. Stein, Luke [NAC], 129; I. H. Marshall, Luke [NIGTC], 136; NIV, NRSV, NKJV, NLT, NASB, REB).

8 tn This call to "make paths straight" in this context is probably an allusion to preparation through repentance as the verb ποιέω (poieō) reappears in vv. 8, 10, 11, 12, 14.

9 sn The figurative language of this verse speaks of the whole creation preparing for the arrival of a major figure, so all obstacles to his approach are removed.

10 tn Grk "all flesh."

11 sn A quotation from Isa 40:3-5. Though all the synoptic gospels use this citation from Isaiah, only Luke cites the material of vv. 5-6. His goal may well be to get to the declaration of v. 6, where all humanity (i.e., all nations) see God's salvation (see also Luke 24:47).

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 sn The crowds. It is interesting to trace references to "the crowd" in Luke. It is sometimes noted favorably, other times less so. The singular appears 25 times in Luke while the plural occurs 16 times. Matt 3:7 singles out the Sadducees and Pharisees here.

14 tn Or "snakes."

15 sn The rebuke "Who warned you to flee…?" compares the crowd to snakes who flee their desert holes when the heat of a fire drives them out.

16 tn The verb here is ποιέω (poieō; see v. 4).

17 tn Grk "fruits." The plural Greek term καρπούς has been translated with the collective singular "fruit" (so NIV; cf. Matt 3:8 where the singular καρπός is found). Some other translations render the plural καρπούς as "fruits" (e.g., NRSV, NASB, NAB, NKJV).

18 tn In other words, "do not even begin to think this."

19 sn We have Abraham as our father. John's warning to the crowds really assumes two things: (1) A number of John's listeners apparently believed that simply by their physical descent from Abraham, they were certain heirs of the promises made to the patriarch, and (2) God would never judge his covenant people lest he inadvertently place the fulfillment of his promises in jeopardy. In light of this, John tells these people two things: (1) they need to repent and produce fruit in keeping with repentance, for only that saves from the coming wrath, and (2) God will raise up "children for Abraham from these stones" if he wants to. Their disobedience will not threaten the realization of God's sovereign purposes.

20 sn The point of the statement God is able from these stones to raise up children to Abraham is that ancestry or association with a tradition tied to the great founder of the Jewish nation is not an automatic source of salvation.

21 sn Even now the ax is laid at the root of the trees. The imagery of an "ax already laid at the root of the trees" is vivid, connoting sudden and catastrophic judgment for the unrepentant and unfruitful. The image of "fire" serves to further heighten the intensity of the judgment referred to. It is John's way of summoning all people to return to God with all their heart and avoid his unquenchable wrath soon to be poured out. John's language and imagery is probably ultimately drawn from the OT where Israel is referred to as a fruitless vine (Hos 10:1-2; Jer 2:21-22) and the image of an "ax" is used to indicate God's judgment (Ps 74:5-6; Jer 46:22).

22 tn Grk "is"; the present tense (ἐκκόπτεται, ekkoptetai) has futuristic force here.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the consequential nature of the people's response.

24 tn Though this verb is imperfect, in this context it does not mean repeated, ongoing questions, but simply a presentation in vivid style as the following verbs in the other examples are aorist.

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

tunics[1] must share with the person who has none, and the person who has food must do likewise.'' 3:12 Tax collectors[2] also came to be baptized, and they said to him, ''Teacher, what should we do?'' 3:13 He told them, ''Collect no more[3] than you are required to.''[4] 3:14 Then some soldiers[5] also asked him, ''And as for us – what should we do?''[6] He told them, ''Take money from no one by violence[7] or by false accusation,[8] and be content with your pay.''

3:15 While the people were filled with anticipation[9] and they all wondered[10] whether perhaps John[11] could be the Christ,[12] 3:16 John answered them all,[13] ''I baptize you with water,[14] but one more powerful than I am is coming – I am not worthy[15] to untie the strap[16] of his sandals. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire.[17] 3:17 His winnowing fork[18] is in his hand to clean out his threshing floor and to gather the wheat into his storehouse,[19] but the chaff he will burn up with inextinguishable fire.''[20]

3:18 And in this way,[21] with many other exhortations, John[22] proclaimed good news to the people. 3:19 But when John rebuked Herod[23] the tetrarch[24] because of Herodias, his brother's

1 tn Or "shirt" (a long garment worn under the cloak next to the skin). The name for this garment (χιτών, chitōn) presents some difficulty in translation. Most modern readers would not understand what a 'tunic' was any more than they would be familiar with a 'chiton.' On the other hand, attempts to find a modern equivalent are also a problem: "Shirt" conveys the idea of a much shorter garment that covers only the upper body, and "undergarment" (given the styles of modern underwear) is more misleading still. "Tunic" was therefore employed, but with a note to explain its nature.

2 sn The tax collectors would bid to collect taxes for the Roman government and then add a surcharge, which they kept. Since tax collectors worked for Rome, they were viewed as traitors to their own people and were not well liked. Yet even they were moved by John's call.

3 tn In the Greek text μηδὲν πλέον (mēden pleon, "no more") is in an emphatic position.

sn By telling the tax collectors to collect no more than...required John was calling for honesty and integrity in a business that was known for greed and dishonesty.

4 tn Or "than you are ordered to."

5 tn Grk "And soldiers."

6 tn Grk "And what should we ourselves do?"

7 tn Or "Rob no one." The term διασείσητε (diaseisēte) here refers to "shaking someone." In this context it refers to taking financial advantage of someone through violence, so it refers essentially to robbery. Soldiers are to perform their tasks faithfully. A changed person is to carry out his tasks in life faithfully and without grumbling.

8 tn The term translated "accusation" (συκοφαντήσητε, sukophantēsēte) refers to a procedure by which someone could bring charges against an individual and be paid a part of the fine imposed by the court. Soldiers could do this to supplement their pay, and would thus be tempted to make false accusations.

9 tn Or "with expectation." The participle προσδοκῶντος (prosdokōntos) is taken temporally.

sn The people were filled with anticipation because they were hoping God would send someone to deliver them.

10 tn Grk "pondered in their hearts."

11 tn Grk "in their hearts concerning John, (whether) perhaps he might be the Christ." The translation simplifies the style here.

12 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

13 tn Grk "answered them all, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

14 tc A few MSS (C D 892 1424 pc it) add εἰς μετάνοιαν (eis metanoian, "for repentance"). Although two of the MSS in support are early and important, it is an obviously motivated reading to add clarification, probably representing a copyist's attempt to harmonize Luke's version with Matt 3:11.

15 tn Grk "of whom I am not worthy."

sn The humility of John is evident in the statement I am not worthy. This was considered one of the least worthy tasks of a slave, and John did not consider himself worthy to do even that for the one to come, despite the fact he himself was a prophet!

16 tn The term refers to the leather strap or thong used to bind a sandal. This is often viewed as a collective singular and translated as a plural, "the straps of his sandals," but it may be more emphatic to retain the singular here.

17 sn With the Holy Spirit and fire. There are differing interpretations for this phrase regarding the number of baptisms and their nature. (1) Some see one baptism here, and this can be divided further into two options. (a) The baptism of the Holy Spirit and fire could refer to the cleansing, purifying work of the Spirit in the individual believer through salvation and sanctification, or (b) it could refer to two different results of Christ's ministry: Some accept Christ and are baptized with the Holy Spirit, but some reject him and receive judgment. (2) Other interpreters see two baptisms here: The baptism of the Holy Spirit refers to the salvation Jesus brings at his first advent, in which believers receive the Holy Spirit, and the baptism of fire refers to the judgment Jesus will bring upon the world at his second coming. One must take into account both the image of fire and whether individual or corporate baptism is in view. A decision is not easy on either issue. The image of fire is used to refer to both eternal judgment (e.g., Matt 25:41) and the power of the Lord's presence to purge and cleanse his people (e.g., Isa 4:4-5). The pouring out of the Spirit at Pentecost, a fulfillment of this prophecy no matter which interpretation is taken, had both individual and corporate dimensions. It is possible that since Holy Spirit and fire are governed by a single preposition in Greek, the one-baptism view may be more likely, but this is not certain. Simply put, there is no consensus view in scholarship at this time on the best interpretation of this passage.

18 sn A winnowing fork is a pitchfork-like tool used to toss threshed grain in the air so that the wind blows away the chaff, leaving the grain to fall to the ground. The note of purging is highlighted by the use of imagery involving sifting though threshed grain for the useful kernels.

19 tn Or "granary," "barn" (referring to a building used to store a farm's produce rather than a building for housing livestock).

20 sn The image of fire that cannot be extinguished is from the OT: Job 20:26; Isa 34:8-10; 66:24.

21 tn On construction μὲν οὖν καί (men oun kai), see BDF §451.1.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 sn Herod refers here to Herod Antipas. See the note on Herod Antipas in 3:1.

24 sn See the note on tetrarch in 3:1.

wife,[1] and because of all the evil deeds[2] that he had done, 3:20 Herod added this to them all: He locked up John in prison.

The Baptism of Jesus

3:21 Now when[3] all the people were baptized, Jesus also was baptized. And while he was praying,[4] the heavens[5] opened, 3:22 and the Holy Spirit descended on him in bodily form like a dove.[6] And a voice came from heaven, "You are my one dear Son;[7] in you I take great delight."[8]

The Genealogy of Jesus

3:23 So[9] Jesus, when he began his ministry,[10] was about thirty years old. He was[11] the son (as was supposed)[12] of Joseph, the son[13] of Heli, 3:24 the son of Matthat, the son of Levi, the son of Melchi, the son of Jannai, the son of Joseph, 3:25 the son of Mattathias, the son of Amos, the son of Nahum, the son of Esli, the son of Naggai, 3:26 the son of Maath, the son of Mattathias, the son of Semein, the son of Josech, the son of Joda, 3:27 the son of Joanan, the son of Rhesa, the son of Zerubbabel,[14] the son of Shealtiel,[15] the son of Neri,[16] 3:28 the son of Melchi, the son of Addi, the son of Cosam, the son of Elmadam, the son of Er, 3:29 the son of Joshua, the son of Eliezer, the son of Jorim, the son of Matthat, the son of Levi, 3:30 the son of Simeon, the son of Judah, the son of Joseph, the son of Jonam, the son of Eliakim, 3:31 the son of Melea, the son of Menna, the son of Mattatha, the son of Nathan,[17] the son of David,[18] 3:32 the son of Jesse, the son of Obed, the son of Boaz, the son of Sala,[19] the son of Nahshon, 3:33 the son of Amminadab, the son of Admin, the son of Arni,[20] the son of

1 tc Several MSS (A C K W Ψ 33 565 579 1424 2542 al bo) read τῆς γυναικὸς Φιλίππου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ (tēs gunaikos Philippou tou adelphou autou, "the wife of his brother Philip"), specifying whose wife Herodias was. The addition of "Philip," however, is an assimilation to Matt 14:3 and is lacking in the better witnesses.

sn This marriage to his brother's wife was a violation of OT law (Lev 18:16; 20:21). In addition, both Herod Antipas and Herodias had each left previous marriages to enter into this union.

2 tn Or "immoralities."

3 tn Grk "Now it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

4 tn Grk "and while Jesus was being baptized and praying." The first of these participles has been translated as a finite verb to be more consistent with English style.

5 tn Or "the sky"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. In this context, although the word is singular, the English plural "heavens" connotes the Greek better than the singular "heaven" would, for the singular does not normally refer to the sky.

6 tn This phrase is a descriptive comparison. The Spirit is not a dove, but descends like one in some type of bodily representation.

7 tn Grk "my beloved Son," or "my Son, the beloved [one]." The force of ἀγαπητός (agapētos) is often "pertaining to one who is the only one of his or her class, but at the same time is particularly loved and cherished" (L&N 58.53; cf. also BDAG 7 s.v. 1).

8 tc Instead of "You are my one dear Son; in you I take great delight," one Greek MS and several Latin MSS and church fathers (D it Ju [Cl] Meth Hil Aug) quote Ps 2:7 outright with "You are my Son; today I have fathered you." But the weight of the MS testimony is against this reading.

tn Or "with you I am well pleased."

sn The allusions in the remarks of the text recall Ps 2:7a; Isa 42:1 and either Isa 41:8 or, less likely, Gen 22:12,16. God is marking out Jesus as his chosen one (the meaning of "[in you I take] great delight"), but it may well be that this was a private experience that only Jesus and John saw and heard (cf. John 1:32-33).

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the summary nature of the statement.

10 tn The words "his ministry" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the contemporary English reader.

11 tn Grk "of age, being." Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the participle ὢν (ōn) has been translated as a finite verb with the pronoun "he" supplied as subject, and a new sentence begun in the translation at this point.

12 sn The parenthetical remark as was supposed makes it clear that Joseph was not the biological father of Jesus. But a question still remains whose genealogy this is. Mary is nowhere mentioned, so this may simply refer to the line of Joseph, who would have functioned as Jesus' legal father, much like stepchildren can have when they are adopted by a second parent.

13 tc Several of the names in the list have alternate spellings in the MS tradition, but most of these are limited to a few MSS. Only significant differences are considered in the notes through v. 38.

tn The construction of the genealogy is consistent throughout as a genitive article (τοῦ, tou) marks sonship. Unlike Matthew's genealogy, this one runs from Jesus down. It also goes all the way to Adam, not stopping at Abraham as Matthew's does. Jesus has come for all races of humanity. Both genealogies go through David.

14 sn On Zerubbabel see Ezra 2:2.

15 sn Grk and KJV Salathiel. Most modern English translations use the OT form of the name (Shealtiel, Ezra 3:2).

16 sn Shealtiel, the son of Neri. 1 Chr 3:17 identifies Jeconiah as the father of Shealtiel. The judgment on Jeconiah's line (Jer 22:30) may be reflected here.

17 sn The use of Nathan here as the son of David is different than Matthew, where Solomon is named. Nathan was David's third son. It is not entirely clear what causes the difference. Some argue Nathan stresses a prophetic connection, but it is not clear how (through confusion with the prophet Nathan?). Others note the absence of a reference to Jeconiah later, so that here there is a difference to show the canceling out of this line. The differences appear to mean that Matthew's line is a "royal and physical" line, while Luke has a "royal and legal" line.

18 sn The mention of David begins a series of agreements with Matthew's line. The OT background is 1 Chr 2:1-15 and Ruth 4:18-22.

19 tc The reading Σαλά (Sala, "Sala") is found in the best and earliest witnesses (𝔓⁴ ℵ* B sy^{c} sa). Almost all the rest of the MSS (ℵ² A D L Θ Ψ 0102 [$f^{1,13}$] 33 𝔐 latt sy^{p,h} bo) have Σαλμών (Salmōn, "Salmon"), an assimilation to Matt 1:4-5 and 1 Chr 2:11 (LXX). "In view of the early tradition that Luke was a Syrian of Antioch it is perhaps significant that the form Σαλά appears to embody a Syriac tradition" (TCGNT 113).

20 tc The number and order of the first few names in this verse varies greatly in the MSS. The variants which are most likely to be original based upon external evidence are Amminadab, Aram (A D 33 565 [1424] pm lat); Amminadab, Aram, Joram (K Δ Ψ 700 2542 pm); Adam, Admin, Arni (𝔓^{4vid} ℵ* 1241 pc sa); and Amminadab, Admin, Arni (ℵ² L X [Γ] f^{13} pc). Deciding between these variants is quite difficult. The read-

Hezron, the son of Perez, the son of Judah, 3:34 the son of Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham, the son of Terah,[1] the son of Nahor, 3:35 the son of Serug, the son of Reu, the son of Peleg, the son of Eber, the son of Shelah, 3:36 the son of Cainan,[2] the son of Arphaxad, the son of Shem, the son of Noah, the son of Lamech, 3:37 the son of Methuselah, the son of Enoch, the son of Jared, the son of Mahalalel,[3] the son of Kenan,[4] 3:38 the son of Enosh, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, the son of God.[5]

The Temptation of Jesus

4:1 Then[6] Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from the Jordan River[7] and was led by the Spirit[8] in[9] the wilderness,[10] 4:2 where for forty days he endured temptations[11] from the devil. He[12] ate nothing[13] during those days, and when they were completed,[14] he was famished. 4:3 The devil said to him, "If[15] you are the Son of God, command this stone to become bread."[16] 4:4 Jesus answered him, "It is written, 'Man[17] does not live by bread alone.'"[18]

4:5 Then[19] the devil[20] led him up[21] to a high place[22] and showed him in a flash all the kingdoms of the world. 4:6 And he[23] said to him, "To you[24] I will grant this whole realm[25] – and the ing "Amminadab, Aram" is the strongest externally since it is represented by Alexandrian, Western, and Byzantine witnesses, although it is significantly weaker internally because it disrupts the artistic balance of the number of generations and their groups that three names would preserve (see TCGNT 113, fn. 1 for discussion). In this case, the subtle intrinsic arguments that would most likely be overlooked by scribes argues for the reading "Amminadab, Admin, Arni," although a decision is quite difficult because of the lack of strong external support.

1 sn The list now picks up names from Gen 11:10-26; 5:1-32; 1 Chr 1:1-26, especially 1:24-26.

2 tc It is possible that the name Καϊνάμ (Kainam) should be omitted, since two key mss, 𝔓75vid and D, lack it. But the omission may be a motivated reading: This name is not found in the editions of the Hebrew OT, though it is in the LXX, at Gen 11:12 and 10:24. But the witnesses with this reading (or a variation of it) are substantial: ℵ B L f^{1} 33 (Καϊνάμ), A Θ Ψ 0102 f^{13} 𝔐 (Καϊνάν, Kainan). The translation above has adopted the more common spelling "Cainan," although it is based on the reading Καϊνάμ.

3 sn Here the Greek text reads Mahalaleel. Some modern English translations follow the Greek spelling (NASB, NRSV) while others (NIV) use the OT form of the name (Gen 5:12, 15).

4 sn The Greek text has Kainam here. Some modern English translations follow the Greek spelling more closely (NASB, NRSV Cainan) while others (NIV) use the OT form of the name (Kenan in Gen 5:9, 12).

5 sn The reference to the son of God here is not to a divine being, but to one directly formed by the hand of God. He is made in God's image, so this phrase could be read as appositional ("Adam, that is, the son of God"). See Acts 17:28-29.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate continuity with the previous topic.

7 tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

8 sn The double mention of the Spirit in this verse makes it clear that the temptation was neither the fault of Jesus nor an accident.

9 tc Most mss (A Θ Ξ Ψ 0102 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) read εἰς τὴν ἔρημον (eis tēn erēmon, "into the wilderness"), apparently motivated by the parallel in Matt 4:1. However, the reading behind the translation (ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, en tē erēmō) is found in overall better witnesses (𝔓4vid,7,75vid ℵ B D L W 579 892 1241 pc it).

10 tn Or "desert."

11 tn Grk "in the desert, for forty days being tempted." The participle πειραζόμενος (peirazomenos) has been translated as an adverbial clause in English to avoid a run-on sentence with a second "and." Here the present participle suggests a period of forty days of testing. Three samples of the end of the testing are given in the following verses.

12 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

13 sn The reference to Jesus eating nothing could well be an idiom meaning that he ate only what the desert provided; see Exod 34:28. A desert fast simply meant eating only what one could obtain in the desert. The parallel in Matt 4:2 speaks only of Jesus fasting.

14 tn The Greek word here is συντελεσθείσων (sunteleistheisōn) from the verb συντελέω (sunteleō).

sn This verb and its cognate noun, sunteleia, usually implies not just the end of an event, but its completion or fulfillment. The noun is always used in the NT in eschatological contexts; the verb is often so used (cf. Matt 13:39, 40; 24:3; 28:20; Mark 13:4; Rom 9:28; Heb 8:8; 9:26). The idea here may be that the forty-day period of temptation was designed for a particular purpose in the life of Christ (the same verb is used in v. 13). The cognate verb teleioō is a key NT term for the completion of God's plan: See Luke 12:50; 22:37; John 19:30; and (where it has the additional component of meaning "to perfect") Heb 2:10; 5:8-9; 7:28.

15 tn This is a first class condition: "If (and let's assume that you are) the Son of God..."

16 tn Grk "say to this stone that it should become bread."

17 tn Or "a person." The Greek word ὁ ἄνθρωπος (ho anthrōpos) is used generically for humanity. The translation "man" is used because the emphasis in Jesus' response seems to be on his dependence on God as a man.

18 tc Most mss (A [D] Θ Ψ [0102] $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt) complete the citation with ἀλλ᾽ ἐπὶ παντὶ ῥήματι θεοῦ (all' epi panti rhēmati theou, "but by every word from God"), an assimilation to Matt 4:4 (which is a quotation of Deut 8:3). The shorter reading is found in ℵ B L W 1241 pc sa. There is no good reason why scribes would omit the rest of the quotation here. The shorter reading, on both internal and external grounds, should be considered the original wording in Luke.

sn A quotation from Deut 8:3. Jesus will live by doing God's will, and will take no shortcuts.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

sn The order of Luke's temptations differs from Matthew's at this point as numbers two and three are reversed. It is slightly more likely that Luke has made the change to put the Jerusalem temptation last, as Jerusalem is so important to Luke's later account. The temporal markers in Matthew's account are also slightly more specific.

20 tn Grk "he."

21 tc Most mss (ℵ1 A [D W] Θ Ψ 0102 $f^{1,[13]}$ 33 700 2542 𝔐 it) refer to Jesus being taken up "to a high mountain" (with many of these also explicitly adding "the devil") here in parallel with Matt 4:8, but both scribal harmonization to that text and the pedigree of the witnesses for the shorter reading (ℵ* B L 1241 pc) is the reason it should be omitted from Luke.

22 tn "A high place" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied for clarity.

23 tn Grk "And the devil."

24 sn In Greek, this phrase is in an emphatic position. In effect, the devil is tempting Jesus by saying, "Look what you can have!"

25 tn Or "authority." BDAG 353 s.v. ἐξουσία 6 suggests, concerning this passage, that the term means "the sphere in which the power is exercised, domain." Cf. also Luke 22:53; 23:7; Acts 26:18; Eph 2:2.

glory that goes along with it,[1] for it has been relinquished[2] to me, and I can give it to anyone I wish. 4:7 So then, if[3] you will worship[4] me, all this will be[5] yours." 4:8 Jesus[6] answered him,[7] "It is written, 'You are to worship[8] the Lord[9] your God and serve only him.'"[10]

4:9 Then[11] the devil[12] brought him to Jerusalem,[13] had him stand[14] on the highest point of the temple,[15] and said to him, "If[16] you are the Son of God, throw yourself down from here, 4:10 for it is written, 'He will command his angels concerning you, to protect you,'[17] 4:11 and 'with their hands they will lift you up, so that you will not strike your foot against a stone.'"[18] 4:12 Jesus[19] answered him,[20] "It is said, 'You are not to put the Lord your God to the test.'"[21] 4:13 So[22] when the devil[23] had completed every temptation, he departed from him until a more opportune time.[24]

The Beginning of Jesus' Ministry in Galilee

4:14 Then[25] Jesus, in the power of the Spirit,[26] returned to Galilee, and news about him spread[27] throughout the surrounding countryside.[28] 4:15 He[29] began to teach[30] in their synagogues[31] and was praised[32] by all.

Rejection at Nazareth

4:16 Now[33] Jesus[34] came to Nazareth,[35] where he had been brought up, and went into the

---

1 tn The addendum referring to the glory of the kingdoms of the world forms something of an afterthought, as the following pronoun ("it") makes clear, for the singular refers to the realm itself.

2 tn For the translation of παραδέδοται (paradedotai) see L&N 57.77. The devil is erroneously implying that God has given him such authority with the additional capability of sharing the honor.

3 tn This is a third class condition: "If you worship me (and I am not saying whether you will or will not)..."

4 tn Or "will prostrate yourself in worship before..." The verb προσκυνέω (proskunēō) can allude not only to the act of worship but the position of the worshiper. See L&N 53.56.

5 tn One could translate this phrase "it will all be yours." The sense is the same, but the translation given is a touch more emphatic and more likely to catch the force of the offer.

6 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (A Θ Ψ 0102 f^{13} 𝔐 it), have "Get behind me, Satan!" at the beginning of the quotation. This roughly parallels Matt 4:10 (though the Lukan MSS add ὀπίσω μου to read ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, σατανᾶ [hupage opisō mou, satana]); for this reason the words are suspect as a later addition to make the two accounts agree more precisely. A similar situation occurred in v. 5.

8 tn Or "You will prostrate yourself in worship before..." The verb προσκυνέω (proskunēō) can allude not only to the act of worship but the position of the worshiper. See L&N 53.56.

9 tc Most later MSS (A Θ 0102 𝔐) alter the word order by moving the verb forward in the quotation. This alteration removes the emphasis from "the Lord your God" as the one to receive worship (as opposed to Satan) by moving it away from the beginning of the quotation.

sn In the form of the quotation in the Greek text found in the best MSS, it is the unique sovereignty of the Lord that has the emphatic position.

10 sn A quotation from Deut 6:13. The word "only" is an interpretive expansion not found in either the Hebrew or Greek (LXX) text of the OT.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the devil) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

14 tn Grk "and stood him."

15 sn The reference to the highest point of the temple probably refers to the one point on the temple's southeast corner where the site looms directly over a cliff some 450 feet (135 m) high. However, some have suggested the reference could be to the temple's high gate.

16 tn This is another first class condition, as in v. 3.

17 sn A quotation from Ps 91:11 by the devil. This was not so much an incorrect citation as a use in a wrong context (a misapplication of the passage).

18 sn A quotation from Ps 91:12.

19 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

20 tn Grk "Jesus, answering, said to him." This is redundant in English and has been simplified to "Jesus answered him."

21 sn A quotation from Deut 6:16 used by Jesus in reply to the devil. The point is that God's faithfulness should not be put to the test, but is rather a given.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate a summary.

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the devil) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Grk "until a favorable time."

sn Until a more opportune time. Though some have argued that the devil disappears until Luke 22:3, this is unlikely since the cosmic battle with Satan and all the evil angels is consistently mentioned throughout Luke (8:26-39; 11:14-23).

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

26 sn Once again Jesus is directed by the Spirit. Luke makes a point about Jesus' association with the Spirit early in his ministry (3:22, 4:1 [2x]; 4:18).

27 tn Grk "went out."

28 tn Grk "all the surrounding region."

29 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn The imperfect verb has been translated ingressively.

31 sn The next incident in Luke 4:16-30 is probably to be seen as an example of this ministry of teaching in their synagogues in Galilee. Synagogues were places for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (cf. Luke 8:41). Though the origin of the synagogue is not entirely clear, it seems to have arisen in the postexilic community during the intertestamental period. A town could establish a synagogue if there were at least ten men. In normative Judaism of the NT period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present (see the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2).

32 tn Grk "being glorified." The participle δοξαζόμενος (doxazomenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style. This is the only place Luke uses the verb δοξάζω (doxazō) of Jesus.

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

34 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

35 sn Nazareth was Jesus' hometown (which is why he is known as Jesus of Nazareth) about 20 miles (30 km) southwest from Capernaum.

synagogue[1] on the Sabbath day, as was his custom.[2] He[3] stood up to read,[4] 4:17 and the scroll of the prophet Isaiah was given to him. He[5] unrolled[6] the scroll and found the place where it was written,

4:18 "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed[7] me to proclaim good news[8] to the poor.[9]
He has sent me[10] to proclaim release[11] to the captives and the regaining of sight[12] to the blind, to set free[13] those who are oppressed,[14] 4:19 to proclaim the year[15] of the Lord's favor.*"[16]

4:20 Then[17] he rolled up[18] the scroll, gave it back to the attendant, and sat down. The eyes of everyone in the synagogue were fixed on[19] him. 4:21 Then[20] he began to tell them, "Today[21] this scripture has been fulfilled even as you heard it being read."[22] 4:22 All[23] were speaking well of him, and were amazed at the gracious words coming out of his mouth. They[24] said, "Isn't this[25] Joseph's son?" 4:23 Jesus[26] said to them, "No doubt you will quote to me the proverb, 'Physician, heal yourself!'[27] and say, 'What we have heard that you did in Capernaum,[28] do here in your hometown too.'" 4:24 And he added,[29] "I tell you the truth,[30] no prophet is acceptable[31] in his hometown. 4:25 But in truth I tell you, there were many widows in Israel in Elijah's days,[32]

---

1 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

2 tn Grk "according to his custom."

3 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

4 sn In normative Judaism of the period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present. See the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2. First came the law, then the prophets, then someone was asked to speak on the texts. Normally one stood up to read out of respect for the scriptures, and then sat down (v. 20) to expound them.

5 tn Grk "And unrolling the scroll he found." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Instead a new sentence has been started in the translation.

6 tn Grk "opening," but a scroll of this period would have to be unrolled. The participle ἀναπτύξας (anaptuxas) has been translated as a finite verb due to the requirements of contemporary English style.

7 sn The phrase he has anointed me is an allusion back to Jesus' baptism in Luke 3:21-22.

8 tn Grk "to evangelize," "to preach the gospel."

9 sn The poor is a key term in Luke. It refers to the pious poor and indicates Jesus' desire to reach out to those the world tends to forget or mistreat. It is like 1:52 in force and also will be echoed in 6:20 (also 1 Pet 2:11-25). Jesus is commissioned to do this.

10 tc The majority of MSS, especially the later Byzantines, include the phrase "to heal the brokenhearted" at this point (A Θ Ψ 0102 f^{1} 𝔐). The phrase is lacking in several weighty MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ B D L W Ξ f^{13} 33 579 700 892* pc lat sy^{s} co), including representatives from both the Alexandrian and Western texttypes. From the standpoint of external evidence, the omission of the phrase is more likely original. When internal evidence is considered, the shorter reading becomes almost certain. Scribes would be much more prone to add the phrase here to align the text with Isa 61:1, the source of the quotation, than to remove it from the original.

11 sn The release in view here is comprehensive, both at a physical level and a spiritual one, as the entire ministry of Jesus makes clear (Luke 1:77-79; 7:47; 24:47; Acts 2:38; 5:31; 10:43).

12 sn Again, as with the previous phrase, regaining of sight may well mean more than simply miraculously restoring physical sight, which itself pictures a deeper reality (Luke 1:77-79; 18:35-43).

13 sn The essence of Jesus' messianic work is expressed in the phrase to set free. This line from Isa 58 says that Jesus will do what the nation had failed to do. It makes the proclamation messianic, not merely prophetic, because Jesus doesn't just proclaim the message – he brings the deliverance. The word translated set free is the same Greek word (ἄφεσις, aphesis) translated release earlier in the verse.

14 sn Again, as with the previous phrases, oppressed may well mean more than simply political or economic oppression, but a deeper reality of oppression by sin (Luke 1:77-79; 18:35-43).

15 sn The year of the Lord's favor (Grk "the acceptable year of the Lord") is a description of the year of Jubilee (Lev 25:10). The year of the total forgiveness of debt is now turned into a metaphor for salvation. Jesus had come to proclaim that God was ready to forgive sin totally.

16 sn A quotation from Isa 61:1-2a. Within the citation is a line from Isa 58:6, with its reference to setting the oppressed free.

17 tn Grk "And closing." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

18 tn Grk "closing," but a scroll of this period would have to be rolled up. The participle πτύξας (ptuxas) has been translated as a finite verb due to the requirements of contemporary English style.

19 tn Or "gazing at," "staring at."

20 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

21 sn See the note on today in 2:11.

22 tn Grk "in your hearing."

23 tn Grk "And all." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

25 sn The form of the question assumes a positive reply. It really amounts to an objection, as Jesus' response in the next verses shows. Jesus spoke smoothly and impressively. He made a wonderful declaration, but could a local carpenter's son make such an offer? That was their real question.

26 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

27 sn The proverb Physician, heal yourself! means that Jesus should prove his claims. It is a "Prove it to us!" mentality that Jesus says the people have.

28 sn The remark "What we have heard that you did at Capernaum" makes many suspect that Luke has moved this event forward in sequence to typify what Jesus' ministry was like, since the ministry in Capernaum follows in vv. 31-44. The location of this event in the parallel of Mark 6:1-6 also suggests this transposition.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

29 tn Grk "said," but since this is a continuation of previous remarks, "added" is used here.

30 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

31 sn Jesus argues that he will get no respect in his own hometown. There is a wordplay here on the word acceptable (δεκτός, dektos), which also occurs in v. 19: Jesus has declared the "acceptable" year of the Lord (here translated year of the Lord's favor), but he is not "accepted" by the people of his own hometown.

32 sn Elijah's days. Jesus, by discussing Elijah and Elisha, pictures one of the lowest periods in Israel's history. These examples, along with v. 24, also show that Jesus is making prophetic claims as well as messianic ones. See 1 Kgs 17-18.

when the sky[1] was shut up three and a half years, and[2] there was a great famine over all the land. 4:26 Yet[3] Elijah was sent to none of them, but only to a woman who was a widow at Zarephath in Sidon.[4] 4:27 And there were many lepers in Israel in the time of the prophet Elisha,[5] yet[6] none of them was cleansed except Naaman the Syrian."[7] 4:28 When they heard this, all the people[8] in the synagogue were filled with rage. 4:29 They got up, forced[9] him out of the town,[10] and brought him to the brow of the hill on which their town was built, so that[11] they could throw him down the cliff.[12] 4:30 But he passed through the crowd[13] and went on his way.[14]

Ministry in Capernaum

4:31 So[15] he went down to Capernaum,[16] a town[17] in Galilee, and on the Sabbath he began to teach the people.[18] 4:32 They[19] were amazed[20] at his teaching, because he spoke[21] with authority.[22]

4:33 Now[23] in the synagogue[24] there was a man who had the spirit of an unclean[25] demon, and he cried out with a loud voice, 4:34 "Ha! Leave us alone,[26] Jesus the Nazarene! Have you come to destroy us? I know who you are – the Holy One[27] of God." 4:35 But[28] Jesus rebuked him:[29] "Silence! Come out of him!"[30] Then, after the demon threw the man[31] down in their midst, he came out of him without hurting him.[32] 4:36 They[33] were all amazed and began to say[34]

1 tn Or "the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. Since the context here refers to a drought (which produced the famine), "sky" is preferable.

2 tn Grk "as." The particle ὡς can also function temporally (see BDAG 1105-6 s.v. 8).

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast.

4 sn Zarephath in Sidon was Gentile territory (see 1 Kgs 17:9-24). Jesus' point was that he would be forced to minister elsewhere, and the implication is that this ministry would ultimately extend (through the work of his followers) to those outside the nation.

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

5 sn On Elisha see 2 Kgs 5:1-14.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast.

7 sn The reference to Naaman the Syrian (see 2 Kgs 5:1-24) is another example where an outsider and Gentile was blessed. The stress in the example is the missed opportunity of the people to experience God's work, but it will still go on without them.

8 tn The words "the people" are not in the Greek text but have been supplied.

9 tn Grk "cast."

10 tn Or "city."

11 tn The Greek conjunction ὥστε (hōste) here indicates their purpose.

12 sn The attempt to throw him down the cliff looks like "lynch law," but it may really be an indication that Jesus was regarded as a false prophet who was worthy of death (Deut 13:5). Such a sentence meant being thrown into a pit and then stoned.

13 tn Grk "their midst."

14 tn The verb πορεύομαι (poreuomai) in Luke often suggests divine direction, "to go in a led direction" (4:42; 7:6, 11; 9:51, 52, 56, 57; 13:33; 17:11; 22:22, 29; 24:28). It could suggest that Jesus is on a journey, a theme that definitely is present later in Luke 9-19.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the continuation of the topic; in light of his rejection at Nazareth, Jesus went on to Capernaum.

16 sn Capernaum was a town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region, and it became the hub of operations for Jesus' Galilean ministry.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

17 tn Or "city."

18 tn Grk "them"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

20 sn They were amazed. The astonishment shown here is like that in Luke 2:48.

21 tn Grk "because his word was."

22 sn Jesus' teaching impressed the hearers with the directness of its claim (with authority). A study of Jewish rabbinic interpretation shows that it was typical to cite a list of authorities to make one's point. Apparently Jesus addressed the issues in terms of his own understanding.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a specific example of how Jesus spoke with authority (v. 32).

24 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

25 tn Grk "having an unclean, demonic spirit," that is, an evil spirit. This is the only place Luke uses this lengthy phrase. Normally he simply says an "unclean spirit."

26 tn Grk "What to us and to you?" This is an idiom meaning, "We have nothing to do with one another," or "Why bother us!" The phrase τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί (ti hēmin kai soi) is Semitic in origin, though it made its way into colloquial Greek (BDAG 275 s.v. ἐγώ). The equivalent Hebrew expression in the Old Testament had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12; 2 Chr 35:21; 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13; Hos 14:8). Option (1) implies hostility, while option (2) merely implies disengagement. BDAG suggests the following as glosses for this expression: What have I to do with you? What have we in common? Leave me alone! Never mind! Hostility between Jesus and the demons is certainly to be understood in this context, hence the translation: "Leave me alone...." For a very similar expression, see Luke 8:28 and (in a different context) John 2:4.

27 sn The confession of Jesus as the Holy One here is significant, coming from an unclean spirit. Jesus, as the Holy One of God, who bears God's Spirit and is the expression of holiness, comes to deal with uncleanness and unholiness.

28 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast involved in Jesus' reply.

29 tn Grk "rebuked him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

30 sn The command Come out of him! is an example of Jesus' authority (see v. 32). Unlike other exorcists, Jesus did not use magical incantations nor did he invoke anyone else's name.

31 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

32 sn The departure of the evil spirit from the man without hurting him shows Jesus' total deliverance and protection of this individual.

33 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

34 tn This imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

to one another, "What's happening here?[1] For with authority and power[2] he commands the unclean spirits, and they come out!" 4:37 So[3] the news[4] about him spread into all areas of the region.[5]

4:38 After Jesus left[6] the synagogue, he entered Simon's house. Now Simon's mother-in-law was suffering from a high fever, and they asked Jesus[7] to help her.[8] 4:39 So[9] he stood over her, commanded[10] the fever, and it left her. Immediately[11] she got up and began to serve[12] them.

4:40 As the sun was setting, all those who had any relatives[13] sick with various diseases brought them to Jesus.[14] He placed[15] his hands on every one of them and healed them. 4:41 Demons also came out[16] of many, crying out,[17] "You are the Son of God!"[18] But he rebuked[19] them, and would not allow them to speak,[20] because they knew that he was the Christ.[21]

4:42 The next morning[22] Jesus[23] departed and went to a deserted place. Yet[24] the crowds were seeking him, and they came to him and tried to keep him from leaving them. 4:43 But Jesus[25] said to them, "I must[26] proclaim the good news of the kingdom[27] of God to the other towns[28] too, for that is what I was sent[29] to do."[30] 4:44 So[31] he continued to preach in the synagogues of Judea.[32]

---

1 tn Grk "What is this word?" The Greek term λόγος (logos) has a wide range of meaning. Here it seems to mean, "What is this matter?" More idiomatically it would be, "What's going on here?!"

2 sn The phrase with authority and power is in an emphatic position in the Greek text. Once again the authority of Jesus is the point, but now it is not just his teaching that is emphasized, but his ministry. Jesus combined word and deed into a powerful testimony in Capernaum.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate resultative nature of the action.

4 tn That is, "information concerning a person or an event – 'report, news, word, information'" (L&N 33.211).

5 sn Given Luke 4:31, the phrase the region is a reference to Galilee.

6 tn Grk "Arising from the synagogue, he entered." The participle ἀναστάς (anastas) has been taken temporally here, and the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "they asked him about her." It is clear from the context that they were concerned about her physical condition. The verb "to help" in the translation makes this explicit.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the resultative nature of Jesus' actions.

10 tn Or "rebuked," but "rebuke" implies strong disapproval, while the usage here involves more of a command with perhaps the implication of a threat (L&N 33.331).

sn The language here (commanded) almost treats the illness as a personal force (see vv. 35, 41), but this is not the case. This healing shows Jesus' power over sickness and should not be construed as an exorcism.

11 tn Grk "and immediately." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, δέ (de) has not been translated here. Instead a new sentence is started in the translation.

sn The note that this happened immediately shows the speed and totality of the recovery.

12 tn The imperfect verb has been translated ingressively.

13 tn Grk "everyone, as many as had those being sick." The use of εἶχον (eichon, "had") suggests that the subject of the accusative participle ἀσθενοῦντας (asthenountas, "those being sick") is not simply acquaintances, but rather relatives, perhaps immediate family, and certainly close friends.

14 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Or "laid." The participle ἐπιτεθείς (epitetheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

16 sn Demons also came out. Note how Luke distinguishes healing from exorcism here, implying that the two are not identical.

17 tn Grk "crying out and saying." The participle λέγοντα (legonta) is redundant in English and has not been translated here.

18 tc Most MSS (A Q Θ Ψ 0102 $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐) read "the Christ, the Son of God." But the earliest and best MSS, along with several other witnesses (ℵ B C D L W Ξ 33 579 700 1241 2542 lat sa), lack "the Christ" here. It is likely that later scribes wished to bring the demons' confession in line with what Luke says they knew later in the verse.

19 tn Or "commanded," but "rebuke" implies strong disapproval, which seems to be more in keeping with the context here (L&N 33.419).

20 sn Jesus would not allow the demons to speak because the time for such disclosure was not yet at hand, and such a revelation would have certainly been misunderstood by the people. In all likelihood, if the people had understood him early on to be the Son of God, or Messiah, they would have reduced his mission to one of political deliverance from Roman oppression (cf. John 6:15). Jesus wanted to avoid, as much as possible, any premature misunderstanding about who he was and what he was doing. However, at the end of his ministry, he did not deny such a title when the high priest asked him (22:66-71).

21 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn Note how Luke associates Son of God with Messiah (Christ) in this context, a regal connection with OT roots (Ps 2:7). Also, see the note on Christ in 2:11.

22 tn Grk "When it became day."

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate that the crowds still sought Jesus in spite of his withdrawal.

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Here δεῖ (dei, "it is necessary") indicates divine commission (cf. Luke 2:49).

27 sn The good news of the kingdom, the kingdom of the rule of God through the Messiah, is the topic of Jesus' preaching.

28 tn Or "cities."

29 sn Jesus was sent by God for this purpose. This is the language of divine commission.

30 tn Grk "because for this purpose I was sent."

31 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the summarization.

32 tc Most MSS (A D Θ Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐 latt) have "of Galilee"; others, "of the Jews" (W). "Judea" (read by $\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ B Q 579 892 pc sa, and [with minor variation] C L f^{1} 1241) is probably the original reading since it is both the harder reading and supported by the best witnesses. "Galilee" is an assimilation to Mark 1:39 and Matt 4:23.

The Call of the Disciples

5:1 Now[1] Jesus was standing by the Lake of Gennesaret,[2] and the crowd was pressing around him[3] to hear the word of God. 5:2 He[4] saw two boats by the lake, but the fishermen had gotten out of them and were washing their nets. 5:3 He got into[5] one of the boats, which was Simon's, and asked him to put out a little way from the shore. Then[6] Jesus[7] sat down[8] and taught the crowds from the boat. 5:4 When he had finished speaking, he said to Simon, "Put out into the deep water and lower[9] your nets for a catch." 5:5 Simon[10] answered,[11] "Master,[12] we worked hard all night and caught nothing! But at your word[13] I will lower[14] the nets." 5:6 When[15] they had done this, they caught so many fish that their nets started to tear.[16] 5:7 So[17] they motioned[18] to their partners in the other boat to come and help them. And they came and filled both boats, so that they were about to sink.[19] 5:8 But when Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, "Go away from me, Lord,[20] for I am a sinful man!"[21] 5:9 For[22] Peter[23] and all who were with him were astonished[24] at the catch of fish that they had taken, 5:10 and so were James and John, Zebedee's sons, who were Simon's business partners.[25] Then[26] Jesus said to Simon, "Do not be afraid; from now on[27] you will be catching people."[28] 5:11 So[29] when they had brought their boats to shore, they left everything and followed[30] him.

Healing a Leper

5:12 While[31] Jesus[32] was in one of the towns,[33] a man came[34] to him who was covered

---

1 tn Grk "Now it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

2 sn The Lake of Gennesaret is another name for the Sea of Galilee. Cf. the parallel in Matt 4:18.

3 sn The image of the crowd pressing around him suggests the people leaning forward to catch Jesus' every word.

4 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

5 tn Grk "Getting into"; the participle ἐμβάς (embas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "sitting down"; the participle καθίσας (kathisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

9 tn Or "let down." The verb here is plural, so this is a command to all in the boat, not just Peter.

10 tn Grk "And Simon." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn Grk "answering, Simon said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation to "Simon answered."

12 tn The word ἐπιστάτης is a term of respect for a person of high status (see L&N 87.50).

13 tn The expression "at your word," which shows Peter's obedience, stands first in the Greek clause for emphasis.

14 tn Or "let down."

15 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

16 tn In context, this imperfect verb is best taken as an ingressive imperfect (BDF §338.1).

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate consequential nature of the action.

18 tn That is, "they signaled by making gestures" (L&N 33.485).

19 tn This infinitive conveys the idea that the boats were at the point of sinking.

20 sn Lord is a term of high respect in this context. God's presence in the work of Jesus makes Peter recognize his authority. This vocative is common in Luke (20 times), but does not yet have its full confessional force.

21 sn Peter was intimidated that someone who was obviously working with divine backing was in his presence ("Go away from me"). He feared his sinfulness might lead to judgment, but Jesus would show him otherwise.

22 sn An explanatory conjunction (For) makes it clear that Peter's exclamation is the result of a surprising set of events. He speaks, but the others feel similarly.

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 sn In the Greek text, this term is in an emphatic position.

25 tn Or "business associates."

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

27 sn From now on is a common Lukan expression, see Luke 1:48.

28 tn The Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, thus "people."

sn The kind of fishing envisioned was net – not line – fishing, which involved a circular net that had heavy weights around its perimeter. The occupation of fisherman was labor-intensive. The imagery of using a lure and a line (and waiting for the fish to strike) is thus foreign to this text. Rather, the imagery of a fisherman involved much strain, long hours, and often little results. Jesus' point may have been one or more of the following: the strenuousness of evangelism, the work ethic that it required, persistence and dedication to the task (often in spite of minimal results), the infinite value of the new "catch" (viz., people), and perhaps an eschatological theme of snatching people from judgment (cf. W. L. Lane, Mark [NICNT], 67; D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:461). If this last motif is in view, then catching people is the opposite of catching fish: The fish would be caught, killed, cooked, and eaten; people would be caught so as to remove them from eternal destruction and to give them new life. With the statement "You will be catching people" Jesus turns the miracle into a metaphor for mission.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of Jesus' pronouncement.

30 sn The expression left everything and followed him pictures discipleship, which means that to learn from Jesus is to follow him as the guiding priority of one's life.

31 tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

32 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn Or "cities."

34 tn Grk "towns, behold, a man covered with leprosy." The Greek word ἰδού (idou, "behold") has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

with[1] leprosy.[2] When[3] he saw Jesus, he bowed down with his face to the ground[4] and begged him,[5] "Lord, if[6] you are willing, you can make me clean." 5:13 So[7] he stretched out his hand and touched[8] him, saying, "I am willing. Be clean!" And immediately the leprosy left him. 5:14 Then[9] he ordered the man[10] to tell no one,[11] but commanded him,[12] "Go[13] and show yourself to a priest, and bring the offering[14] for your cleansing, as Moses commanded,[15] as a testimony to them."[16] 5:15 But the news about him spread even more,[17] and large crowds were gathering together to hear him[18] and to be healed of their illnesses. 5:16 Yet Jesus himself[19] frequently withdrew[20] to the wilderness[21] and prayed.

Healing and Forgiving a Paralytic

5:17 Now on[22] one of those days, while he was teaching, there were Pharisees[23] and teachers of the law[24] sitting nearby (who had come from every village of Galilee and Judea and from Jerusalem),[25] and the power of the Lord was with him[26] to heal. 5:18 Just then[27] some men showed up, carrying a paralyzed man[28] on a stretcher.[29] They[30] were trying to bring him in

---

1 tn Grk "full of leprosy" (an idiom for a severe condition).

2 sn The ancient term for leprosy covers a wider array of conditions than what is called leprosy today. A leper was totally ostracized from society until he was declared cured (Lev 13:45-46).

3 tn Grk "And seeing." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, δέ (de) has not been translated here. The participle ἰδών (idōn) has been taken temporally.

4 tn Grk "he fell on his face"; an idiom for bowing down with one's face to the ground.

5 tn Grk "and begged him, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

6 tn This is a third class condition. The report portrays the leper making no presumptions about whether Jesus will heal him or not.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the response of Jesus to the man's request.

8 sn Touched. This touch would have rendered Jesus ceremonially unclean (Lev 14:46; also Mishnah, m. Nega'im 3.1; 11.1; 12.1; 13.6-12).

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

10 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 sn The silence ordered by Jesus was probably meant to last only until the cleansing took place with the priests and sought to prevent Jesus' healings from becoming the central focus of the people's reaction to him. See also 4:35, 41; 8:56 for other cases where Jesus asks for silence with reference to miracles.

12 tn The words "commanded him" are not in the Greek text but have been supplied for clarity. This verse moves from indirect to direct discourse. This abrupt change is very awkward, so the words have been supplied to smooth out the transition.

13 tn Grk "Going, show." The participle ἀπελθών (apelthōn) has been translated as an attendant circumstance participle. Here the syntax also changes somewhat abruptly from indirect discourse to direct discourse.

14 tn The words "the offering" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

15 sn On the phrase as Moses commanded see Lev 14:1-32.

16 tn Or "as an indictment against them"; or "as proof to the people." This phrase could be taken as referring to a positive witness to the priests, a negative testimony against them, or as a testimony to the community that the man had indeed been cured. In any case, the testimony shows that Jesus is healing and ministering to those in need.

17 sn That is, in spite of Jesus' instructions to the man to tell no one about the healing (v. 14).

18 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

19 tn Here αὐτός (autos) has been translated reflexively.

20 tn Grk "was withdrawing" (ἦν ὑποχωρῶν, ēn hupochōrōn). The adverb "frequently" has been added in the translation to bring out what is most likely an iterative force to the imperfect. However, the imperfect might instead portray an ingressive idea: "he began to withdraw." See ExSyn 542-43.

21 tn Or "desert."

22 tn Grk "And it happened that on." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

23 sn Pharisees were members of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

24 tn That is, those who were skilled in the teaching and interpretation of the OT law. These are called "experts in the law" (Grk "scribes") in v. 21.

25 sn Jesus was now attracting attention outside of Galilee as far away as Jerusalem, the main city of Israel.

26 tc Most MSS (A C D [K] Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt bo) read αὐτούς (autous) instead of αὐτόν (auton) here. If original, this plural pronoun would act as the direct object of the infinitive ἰᾶσθαι (iasthai, "to heal"). However, the reading with the singular pronoun αὐτόν, which acts as the subject of the infinitive, is to be preferred. Externally, it has support from better MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ 𝔓⁴⁵ B L W al sa). Internally, it is probable that scribes changed the singular αὐτόν to the plural αὐτούς, expecting the object of the infinitive to come at this point in the text. The singular as the harder reading accounts for the rise of the other reading.

27 tn Grk "And behold." Here καὶ ἰδού (kai idou) has been translated as "just then" to indicate the somewhat sudden appearance of the men carrying the paralytic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1), especially in conjunction with the suddenness of the stretcher-bearers' appearance.

28 tn Grk "a man who was paralyzed"; the relative clause in Greek has adjectival force and has been simplified to a simple adjective in the translation.

29 tn Traditionally, "on a bed," but this could be confusing to the modern reader who might envision a large piece of furniture. In various contexts, κλίνη (klinē) may be translated "bed, couch, cot, stretcher, or bier" (in the case of a corpse). See L&N 6.106.

30 tn Grk "stretcher, and." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Instead, because of the tendency of contemporary English to use shorter sentences, a new sentence was begun here in the translation.

and place him before Jesus.[1] 5:19 But[2] since they found[3] no way to carry him in because of the crowd, they went up on the roof[4] and let him down on the stretcher[5] through the roof tiles[6] right[7] in front of Jesus.[8] 5:20 When[9] Jesus[10] saw their[11] faith he said, "Friend,[12] your sins are forgiven."[13] 5:21 Then[14] the experts in the law[15] and the Pharisees began to think[16] to themselves,[17] "Who is this man[18] who is uttering blasphemies?[19] Who can forgive sins but God alone?" 5:22 When Jesus perceived[20] their hostile thoughts,[21] he said to them,[22] "Why are you raising objections[23] within yourselves? 5:23 Which is easier,[24] to say, 'Your sins are forgiven,' or to say, 'Stand up and walk'? 5:24 But so that you may know[25] that the Son of Man[26] has authority on earth to forgive sins" – he said to the paralyzed man[27] – "I tell you, stand up, take your stretcher[28] and go home."[29] 5:25 Immediately[30]

[1] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[2] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast implied in the context: They wanted to bring the man to Jesus, but found no way.

[3] tn Grk "But finding." The participle εὑρόντες (heurontes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

[4] sn A house in 1st century Palestine would have had a flat roof with stairs or a ladder going up. This access was often from the outside of the house.

[5] tn This word, κλινίδιον (klinidion), is a different Greek word than the one used in the previous verse (κλίνη, klinē). In this context both may be translated "stretcher" (see L&N 6.106 and 6.107).

[6] tn There is a translational problem at this point in the text. The term Luke uses is κέραμος (keramos). It can in certain contexts mean "clay," but usually this is in reference to pottery (see BDAG 540 s.v. 1). The most natural definition in this instance is "roof tile" (used in the translation above). However, tiles were generally not found in Galilee. Recent archaeological research has suggested that this house, which would have probably been typical for the area, could not have supported "a second story, nor could the original roof have been masonry; no doubt it was made from beams and branches of trees covered with a mixture of earth and straw" (J. F. Strange and H. Shanks, "Has the House Where Jesus Stayed in Capernaum Been Found?" BAR 8, no. 6 [Nov/Dec 1982]: 34). Luke may simply have spoken of building materials that would be familiar to his readers.

[7] tn Grk "in the midst."

[8] sn The phrase right in front of Jesus trailing as it does at the end of the verse is slightly emphatic, adding a little note of drama: What would Jesus do?

[9] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[10] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[11] sn The plural pronoun their makes it clear that Jesus was responding to the faith of the entire group, not just the paralyzed man.

[12] tn Grk "Man," but the term used in this way was not derogatory in Jewish culture. Used in address (as here) it means "friend" (see BDAG 82 s.v. ἄνθρωπος 8).

[13] tn Grk "Man, your sins are forgiven you." Luke stresses the forgiveness of sins (cf. 1:77; 3:3; 24:47). In 5:20 he uses both the perfect ἀφέωνται and the personal pronoun σοι which together combine to heighten the subjective aspect of the experience of forgiveness. The σοι has been omitted in translation in light of normal English style.

sn The passive voice here is a divine passive (ExSyn 437). It is clear that God does the forgiving.

[15] tn Or "Then the scribes." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

[16] tn Or "to reason" (in a hostile sense). See G. Schrenk, TDNT 2:97.

[17] tn The participle λέγοντες (legontes, "saying") has not been translated because it is redundant in contemporary English.

[18] tn Grk "this one" (οὗτος, houtos).

[19] sn Uttering blasphemies meant to say something that dishonored God. To claim divine prerogatives or claim to speak for God when one really does not would be such an act of offense. The remark raised directly the issue of the nature of Jesus' ministry.

[20] sn Jesus often perceived people's thoughts in Luke; see 4:23; 6:8; 7:40; 9:47. Such a note often precedes a rebuke.

[21] tn Grk "reasonings." This is the noun form of the infinitive διαλογίζεσθαι (dialogizesthai, "began to reason to themselves") used in v. 21. Jesus' reply to them in the latter part of the present verse makes clear that these reasonings were mental and internal, so the translation "thoughts" was used here. On the hostile or evil nature of these thoughts, see G. Schrenk, TDNT 2:97.

[22] tn Grk "answering, he said to them." This construction with passive participle and finite verb is pleonastic (redundant) and has been simplified in the translation.

[23] tn The Greek verb διαλογίζεσθε (dialogizesthe, "you reason"), used in context with διαλογισμούς (dialogismous, "reasonings"), connotes more than neutral reasoning or thinking. While the verb can refer to normal "reasoning," "discussion," or "reflection" in the NT, its use here in Luke 5:22, alongside the noun – which is regularly used with a negative sense in the NT (cf. Matt 15:19; Mark 7:21; Luke 2:35, 6:8, 9:47; Rom 1:21; 1 Cor 3:20; G. Schrenk, TDNT 2:96-97; D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:484) – suggests the idea of "contention." Therefore, in order to reflect the hostility evident in the reasoning of the Pharisees and teachers of the law, the verb has been translated as "raising objections."

[24] sn Which is easier is a reflective kind of question. On the one hand to declare sins are forgiven is easier, since one does not need to see it, unlike telling a paralyzed person to walk. On the other hand, it is harder, because for it to be true one must possess the authority to forgive the sin.

[25] sn Now Jesus put the two actions together. The walking of the man would be proof (so that you may know) that his sins were forgiven and that God had worked through Jesus (i.e., the Son of Man).

[26] sn The term Son of Man, which is a title in Greek, comes from a pictorial description in Dan 7:13 of one "like a son of man" (i.e., a human being). It is Jesus' favorite way to refer to himself. Jesus did not reveal the background of the term here, which mixes human and divine imagery as the man in Daniel rides a cloud, something only God does. He just used it. It also could be an idiom in Aramaic meaning either "some person" or "me." So there is a little ambiguity in its use here, since its origin is not clear at this point. However, the action makes it clear that Jesus used it to refer to himself here.

[27] tn Grk "to the one who was paralyzed"; the Greek participle is substantival and has been simplified to a simple adjective and noun in the translation.

sn Jesus did not finish his sentence with words but with action, that is, healing the paralytic with an accompanying pronouncement to him directly.

[28] tn This word, κλινίδιον (klinidion), is the same as the one used in v. 19. In this context it may be translated "stretcher" (see L&N 6.107).

[29] tn Grk "to your house."

[30] tn Grk "And immediately." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

he stood up before them, picked[1] up the stretcher[2] he had been lying on, and went home, glorifying[3] God. 5:26 Then[4] astonishment[5] seized them all, and they glorified[6] God. They were filled with awe,[7] saying, "We have seen incredible[8] things[9] today."[10]

The Call of Levi; Eating with Sinners

5:27 After[11] this, Jesus[12] went out and saw a tax collector[13] named Levi[14] sitting at the tax booth.[15] "Follow me,"[16] he said to him. 5:28 And he got up and followed him, leaving everything[17] behind.[18]

5:29 Then[19] Levi gave a great banquet[20] in his house for Jesus,[21] and there was a large crowd of tax collectors and others sitting[22] at the table with them. 5:30 But[23] the Pharisees[24] and their experts in the law[25] complained[26] to his disciples, saying, "Why do you eat and drink with tax collectors and sinners?"[27] 5:31 Jesus[28] answered them, "Those who are well don't need a physician, but those who are sick do.[29] 5:32 I have not come[30] to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."[31]

The Superiority of the New

5:33 Then[32] they said to him, "John's[33] disciples frequently fast[34] and pray,[35] and so do the disciples of the Pharisees,[36] but yours continue

---

1 tn Grk "and picked up." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because contemporary English normally places a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series.

2 tn Grk "picked up what he had been lying on"; the referent of the relative pronoun (the stretcher) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 sn Note the man's response, glorifying God. Joy at God's work is also a key theme in Luke: 2:20; 4:15; 5:26; 7:16; 13:13; 17:15; 18:43; 23:47.

5 tn Or "amazement." See L&N 25.217, which translates this clause, "astonishment seized all of them."

6 tn This imperfect verb could be translated as an ingressive ("they began to glorify God"), but this is somewhat awkward in English since the following verb is aorist and is normally translated as a simple past.

7 tn Grk "fear," but the context and the following remark show that it is mixed with wonder; see L&N 53.59.

8 tn Or "remarkable." The term παράδοξος (paradoxos) is hard to translate exactly; it suggests both the unusual and the awe inspiring in this context. For the alternatives see L&N 31.44 ("incredible") and 58.56 ("remarkable"). It is often something beyond belief (G. Kittel, TDNT 2:255).

9 tn The word "things" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied because the adjective παράδοξος (paradoxos) is substantival. Other translations sometimes supply alternate words like "miracles" or "signs," but "things" is the most neutral translation.

10 sn See the note on today in 2:11.

11 tn Grk "And after." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

13 sn See the note on tax collectors in 3:12.

14 sn It is possible that Levi is a second name for Matthew, because people often used alternative names in 1st century Jewish culture.

15 tn While "tax office" is sometimes given as a translation for τελώνιον (telōnion; so L&N 57.183), this could give the modern reader a false impression of an indoor office with all its associated furnishings.

sn The tax booth was a booth located on the edge of a city or town to collect taxes for trade. There was a tax booth in Capernaum, which was on the trade route from Damascus to Galilee and the Mediterranean. The "taxes" were collected on produce and goods brought into the area for sale, and were a sort of "sales tax" paid by the seller but obviously passed on to the purchaser in the form of increased prices (L&N 57.183). It was here that Jesus met Levi (also named Matthew [see Matt 9:9]) who was ultimately employed by the Romans, though perhaps more directly responsible to Herod Antipas. It was his job to collect taxes for Rome and he was thus despised by Jews who undoubtedly regarded him as a traitor.

16 sn Follow me. For similar calls on the part of Jesus see Luke 5:10-11; 9:23, 59; 18:22.

17 sn On the phrase leaving everything see Luke 5:10-11; 14:33.

18 tn The participial phrase "leaving everything behind" occurs at the beginning of the sentence, but has been transposed to the end in the translation for logical reasons, since it serves to summarize Levi's actions.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

20 sn A great banquet refers to an elaborate meal. Many of the events in Luke take place in the context of meal fellowship: 7:36-50; 9:12-17; 10:38-42; 11:37-54; 14:1-24; 22:7-38; 24:29-32, 41-43.

21 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn Grk "reclining." This term reflects the normal practice in 1st century Jewish culture of eating a meal in a semi-reclining position. Since it is foreign to most modern readers, the translation "sitting" has been substituted.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the implied contrast present in this context.

24 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

25 tn Or "and their scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

26 tn Or "grumbled"; a term often used in the OT for inappropriate grumbling: Exod 15:24; 16:7-8; Num 14:2, 26-35; 16:11.

27 sn The issue here is inappropriate associations (eat and drink with tax collectors and sinners) and the accusation comes not against Jesus, but his disciples.

28 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

29 sn Jesus' point is that he associates with those who are sick because they have the need and will respond to the offer of help. A person who is well (or who thinks mistakenly that he is) will not seek treatment.

30 sn I have not come is another commission statement by Jesus; see 4:43-44.

31 sn Though parallels exist to this saying (Matt 9:13; Mark 2:17), only Luke has this last phrase but sinners to repentance. Repentance is a frequent topic in Luke's Gospel: 3:3, 8; 13:1-5; 15:7, 10; 16:30; 17:3-4; 24:47.

32 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

33 tc Most MSS (𝔎*,2 A C D Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 latt sy) read διὰ τί (dia ti, "Why do John's...?") here, turning the statement into a question. But such seems to be a motivated reading, assimilating the text to Mark 2:18 and Matt 9:14. The reading represented in the translation is supported by $\mathfrak{P}^{4}$ 𝔎¹ B L W Ξ 33 892* 1241 sa.

sn John refers to John the Baptist.

34 sn John's disciples and the disciples of the Pharisees followed typical practices with regard to fasting and prayer. Many Jews fasted regularly (Lev 16:29-34; 23:26-32; Num 29:7-11). The zealous fasted twice a week on Monday and Thursday.

35 tn Grk "and offer prayers," but this idiom (δέησις + ποιέω) is often simply a circumlocution for praying.

36 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

to eat and drink."[1] 5:34 So[2] Jesus said to them, "You cannot make the wedding guests[3] fast while the bridegroom[4] is with them, can you?[5] 5:35 But those days are coming, and when the bridegroom is taken from them,[6] at that time[7] they will fast." 5:36 He also told them a parable:[8] "No one tears a patch from a new garment and sews[9] it on an old garment. If he does, he will have torn[10] the new, and the piece from the new will not match the old.[11] 5:37 And no one pours new wine into old wineskins.[12] If he does, the new wine will burst the skins and will be spilled, and the skins will be destroyed. 5:38 Instead new wine must be poured into new wineskins.[13] 5:39[14] No[15] one after drinking old wine wants the new, for he says, 'The old is good enough.'"[16]

Lord of the Sabbath

6:1 Jesus[17] was going through the grain fields on[18] a Sabbath,[19] and his disciples picked some heads of wheat,[20] rubbed them in their hands, and ate them.[21] 6:2 But some of the Pharisees[22] said, "Why are you[23] doing what is against the law[24] on the Sabbath?" 6:3 Jesus[25] answered them,[26] "Haven't you read what David did when he and his companions were hungry – 6:4 how he entered the house of God, took[27] and ate the sacred bread,[28] which is not

---

1 tn Grk "but yours are eating and drinking." The translation "continue to eat and drink" attempts to reflect the progressive or durative nature of the action described, which in context is a practice not limited to the specific occasion at hand (the banquet).

2 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' pronouncement is a result of their statements about his disciples.

3 tn Grk "the sons of the wedding hall," an idiom referring to guests at the wedding, or more specifically, friends of the bridegroom present at the wedding celebration (L&N 11.7).

4 sn The expression while the bridegroom is with them is an allusion to messianic times (John 3:29; Isa 54:5-6; 62:4-5; 4 Ezra 2:15, 38).

5 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here it is "can you?").

6 sn The statement when the bridegroom is taken from them is a veiled allusion by Jesus to his death, which he did not make explicit until the incident at Caesarea Philippi in 9:18ff.

7 tn Grk "then in those days."

8 sn The term parable in a Semitic context can cover anything from a long story to a brief wisdom saying. Here it is the latter.

9 tn Grk "puts," but since the means of attachment would normally be sewing, the translation "sews" has been used.

10 tn Grk "he tears." The point is that the new garment will be ruined to repair an older, less valuable one.

11 sn The piece from the new will not match the old. The imagery in this saying looks at the fact that what Jesus brings is so new that it cannot simply be combined with the old. To do so would be to destroy what is new and to put together something that does not fit.

12 sn Wineskins were bags made of skin or leather, used for storing wine in NT times. As the new wine fermented and expanded, it would stretch the new wineskins. Putting new (unfermented) wine in old wineskins, which had already been stretched, would result in the bursting of the wineskins.

13 tc Most MSS (A C [D] Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 latt sy) have καὶ ἀμφότεροι συντηροῦνται (kai amphoteroi suntērountai, "and both will be preserved"), assimilating the text to Matt 9:17. The earliest and best witnesses, as well as many others (𝔓$^{4.75vid}$ ℵ B L W f^{1} 33 579 700 1241 2542 co), however, lack the words.

sn The meaning of the saying new wine…into new skins is that the presence and teaching of Jesus was something new and signaled the passing of the old. It could not be confined within the old religion of Judaism, but involved the inauguration and consummation of the kingdom of God.

14 tc The Western textual tradition (D it) lacks 5:39. The verse is unique to Luke, so the omission by these MSS looks like assimilation to the other synoptic accounts.

15 tc ‡ Although most MSS begin the verse with καί (kai, "and"), beginning the sentence without a conjunction is both a harder reading and is found in early and important witnesses (𝔓$^{4.75vid}$ ℵ^{2} B 579 700 892 1241). NA^{27} puts the word in brackets indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

16 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (A C Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 lat), read χρηστότερος (chrēstoteros, "better"), a smoother reading. The reading of the text (found in 𝔓^{4} ℵ B L W 1241 pc) is preferred as the more difficult reading. This reading could suggest that the new thing Jesus brings is not even considered, since the "old wine" is already found quite acceptable.

tn Grk "good."

sn The third illustration points out that those already satisfied with what they have will not seek the new (The old is good enough).

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 tn Grk "Now it happened that on." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

19 tc Most later MSS (A C D Θ Ψ [f^{13}] 𝔐 lat) read ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ (en sabbatō deuteroprōtō, "a second-first Sabbath"), while the earlier and better witnesses have simply ἐν σαββάτῳ (𝔓^{4} ℵ B L W f^{1} 33 579 1241 2542 it sa). The longer reading is most likely secondary, though various explanations may account for it (for discussion, see TCGNT 116).

20 tn Or "heads of grain." While the generic term στάχυς (stachus) can refer to the cluster of seeds at the top of grain such as barley or wheat, in the NT the term is restricted to wheat (L&N 3.40; BDAG 941 s.v. 1).

21 tn Grk "picked and ate some heads of grain, rubbing them in their hands." The participle ψώχοντες (psōchontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style, and the order of the clauses has been transposed to reflect the logical order, which sounds more natural in English.

22 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

23 tn Note that the verb is second person plural (with an understood plural pronominal subject in Greek). The charge is again indirectly made against Jesus by charging the disciples.

24 sn The alleged violation expressed by the phrase what is against the law is performing work on the Sabbath. That the disciples ate from such a field is no problem given Deut 23:25, but Sabbath activity is another matter in the leaders' view (Exod 20:8-11 and Mishnah, m. Shabbat 7.2). The supposed violation involved reaping, threshing, winnowing, and preparing food. This probably explains why the clause describing the disciples "rubbing" the heads of grain in their hands is mentioned last, in emphatic position. This was preparation of food.

25 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

26 tn Grk "Jesus, answering them, said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "Jesus answered them."

27 tn Grk "and took."

28 tn Grk "the bread of presentation."

sn The sacred bread refers to the "bread of presentation," "showbread," or "bread of the Presence," twelve loaves prepared weekly for the tabernacle and later, the temple. See Exod 25:30; 35:13; 39:36; Lev 24:5-9. Each loaf was made from 3 quarts (3.5 liters; Heb "two tenths of an ephah") of lawful[1] for any to eat but the priests alone, and[2] gave it to his companions?"[3] 6:5 Then[4] he said to them, "The Son of Man is lord[5] of the Sabbath."

Healing a Withered Hand

6:6 On[6] another Sabbath, Jesus[7] entered the synagogue[8] and was teaching. Now[9] a man was there whose right hand was withered.[10] 6:7 The experts in the law[11] and the Pharisees[12] watched[13] Jesus[14] closely to see if[15] he would heal on the Sabbath,[16] so that they could find a reason to accuse him. 6:8 But[17] he knew[18] their thoughts,[19] and said to the man who had the withered hand, "Get up and stand here."[20] So[21] he rose and stood there. 6:9 Then[22] Jesus said to them, "I ask you,[23] is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath or to do evil, to save a life or to destroy it?" 6:10 After[24] looking around[25] at them all, he said to the man,[26] "Stretch out your hand." The man[27] did so, and his hand was restored.[28] 6:11 But they were filled with mindless rage[29] and began debating with one another what they would do[30] to Jesus.

fine flour. The loaves were placed on a table in the holy place of the tabernacle, on the north side opposite the lampstand (Exod 26:35). It was the duty of the priest each Sabbath to place fresh bread on the table; the loaves from the previous week were then given to Aaron and his descendants, who ate them in the holy place, because they were considered sacred (Lev 24:9). These were the loaves that David requested from Ahimelech for himself and his men (1 Sam 21:1-6; cf. also Matt 12:1-8; Mark 2:23-28).

1 sn Jesus' response to the charge that what his disciples were doing was not lawful is one of analogy: 'If David did it for his troops in a time of need, then so can I with my disciples.' Jesus is clear that on the surface there was a violation here. What is not as clear is whether he is arguing a "greater need" makes this permissible or that this was within the intention of the law all along.

2 tc Most MSS (ℵ A D Θ f^{13} 33 𝔐) read "also" here, but this looks like it is a reading made to agree with Mark 2:26. A better combination of witnesses (B L W Ψ f^{1} lat sa) lacks the word "also."

3 tc The Western MS D adds here a full saying that reads, "On the same day, as he saw someone working on the Sabbath he said, 'Man, if you know what you are doing, you are blessed, but if you do not know, you are cursed and a violator of the law.'" Though this is not well enough attested to be considered authentic, many commentators have debated whether this saying might go back to Jesus. Most reject it, though it does have wording that looks like Rom 2:25, 27 and Jas 2:11.

sn See 1 Sam 21:1-6.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

5 tn The term "lord" is in emphatic position in the Greek text. To make this point even clearer a few MSS add "also" before the reference to the Son of Man, while a few others add it before the reference to the Sabbath.

sn A second point in Jesus' defense of his disciples' actions was that his authority as Son of Man also allowed it, since as Son of Man he was lord of the Sabbath.

6 tn Grk "Now it happened that on." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. In addition, because the Greek sentence is rather long and complex, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

10 tn Grk "a man was there and his right hand was withered."

sn Withered means the man's hand was shrunken and paralyzed.

11 tn Or "The scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

12 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

13 sn The term translated watched...closely is emotive, since it carries negative connotations. It means they were watching him out of the corner of their eye or spying on him.

14 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text; Jesus' opponents anticipated he would do this.

16 sn The background for this is the view that only if life was endangered should one attempt to heal on the Sabbath (see the Mishnah, m. Shabbat 6.3; 12.1; 18.3; 19.2; m. Yoma 8.6).

17 tn Here the conjunction δέ (de) has been translated as contrastive.

18 sn The statement that Jesus knew their thoughts adds a prophetic note to his response; see Luke 5:22.

19 tn Grk "their reasonings." The implication is that Jesus knew his opponents' plans and motives, so the translation "thoughts" was used here.

20 sn Most likely synagogues were arranged with benches along the walls and open space in the center for seating on the floor.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the man's action was a result of Jesus' order.

22 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

23 sn With the use of the plural pronoun ("you"), Jesus addressed not just the leaders but the crowd with his question to challenge what the leadership was doing. There is irony as well. As Jesus sought to restore on the Sabbath (but improperly according to the leaders' complaints) the leaders were seeking to destroy, which surely is wrong. The implied critique recalls the OT: Isa 1:1-17; 58:6-14.

24 tn Grk "And after." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

25 tn The aorist participle περιβλεψάμενος (periblepsamenos) has been translated as antecedent (prior) to the action of the main verb. It could also be translated as contemporaneous ("Looking around... he said").

26 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the man with the withered hand) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

28 sn The passive was restored points to healing by God. Now the question became: Would God exercise his power through Jesus, if what Jesus was doing were wrong? Note also Jesus' "labor." He simply spoke and it was so.

29 tn The term ἄνοια (anoia) denotes a kind of insane or mindless fury; the opponents were beside themselves with rage. They could not rejoice in the healing, but could only react against Jesus.

30 tn The use of the optative (ποιήσαιεν, poiēsaien, "might do") in an indirect question indicates that the formal opposition and planning of Jesus' enemies started here (BDF §§385.1; 386.1).

Choosing the Twelve Apostles

6:12 Now[1] it was during this time that Jesus[2] went out to the mountain[3] to pray, and he spent all night[4] in prayer to God.[5] 6:13 When[6] morning came, he called his disciples and chose twelve of them, whom he also named apostles:[7] 6:14 Simon[8] (whom he named Peter), and his brother Andrew; and James, John, Philip, Bartholomew,[9] 6:15 Matthew, Thomas,[10] James the son of Alphaeus, Simon who was called the Zealot,[11] 6:16 Judas the son of James, and Judas Iscariot,[12] who became a traitor.

The Sermon on the Plain

6:17 Then[13] he came down with them and stood on a level place.[14] And a large number[15] of his disciples had gathered[16] along with[17] a vast multitude from all over Judea, from[18] Jerusalem,[19] and from the seacoast of Tyre[20] and Sidon.[21] They came to hear him and to be healed[22] of their diseases, 6:18 and those who suffered from[23] unclean[24] spirits were cured. 6:19 The[25] whole crowd was trying to touch him, because power[26] was coming out from him and healing them all.

6:20 Then[27] he looked up[28] at his disciples and said:

"Blessed[29] are you who are poor,[30] for the kingdom of God belongs[31] to you.
6:21 "Blessed are you who hunger[32] now, for you will be satisfied.[33]

---

[1] tn Grk "Now it happened that in." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] tn Or "to a mountain" (εἰς τὸ ὄρος, eis to horos).

sn The expression to the mountain here may be idiomatic or generic, much like the English "he went to the hospital" (cf. 15:29), or even intentionally reminiscent of Exod 24:12 (LXX), since the genre of the Sermon on the Mount seems to be that of a new Moses giving a new law.

[4] sn This is the only time all night prayer is mentioned in the NT.

[5] tn This is an objective genitive, so prayer "to God."

[6] tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[7] sn The term apostles is rare in the gospels, found only in Matt 10:2, possibly in Mark 3:14, and six more times in Luke (here plus 9:10; 11:49; 17:5; 22:14; 24:10).

[8] sn In the various lists of the twelve, Simon (that is, Peter) is always mentioned first (Matt 10:1-4; Mark 3:16-19; Acts 1:13) and the first four are always the same, though not in the same order after Peter.

[9] sn Bartholomew (meaning "son of Tolmai" in Aramaic) could be another name for Nathanael mentioned in John 1:45.

[10] sn This is the "doubting Thomas" of John 20:24-29.

[11] sn The designation Zealot means that Simon was a political nationalist before coming to follow Jesus. He may not have been technically a member of the particular Jewish nationalistic party known as "Zealots" (since according to some scholars this party had not been organized at that time), but simply someone who was zealous for Jewish independence from Rome, in which case the descriptive term applied to Simon means something like "Simon the patriot" (see L&N 25.77 and especially 11.88).

[12] sn There is some debate about what the name Iscariot means. It probably alludes to a region in Judea and thus might make Judas the only non-Galilean in the group. Several explanations for the name Iscariot have been proposed, but it is probably transliterated Hebrew with the meaning "man of Kerioth" (there are at least two villages that had that name). For further discussion see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 1:546; also D. A. Carson, John, 304.

[14] tn Or "on a plateau." This could refer to a message given in a flat locale or in a flat locale in the midst of a more mountainous region (Jer 21:13; Isa 13:2). It is quite possible that this sermon is a summary version of the better known Sermon on the Mount from Matt 5-7.

[15] tn Grk "large crowd."

[16] tn There is no verb in Greek at this point, but since "a large crowd" (see preceding tn) is in the nominative case, one needs to be supplied.

[17] tn Grk "and."

[18] tn Grk "and from," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[19] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[20] map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

[22] sn To hear him and to be healed. Jesus had a two-level ministry: The word and then wondrous acts of service that showed his message of God's care were real.

[23] tn Or "were oppressed by," "were troubled with." See L&N 22.17.

[24] sn Unclean spirits refers to evil spirits. See Luke 4:33.

[25] tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[26] sn There was a recognition that there was great power at work through Jesus, the subject of a great debate in 11:14-23. Luke highlights Jesus' healing ministry (5:17; 6:18; 7:7; 8:47; 9:11, 42; 14:4; 17:15; 18:42-43; 22:51; Acts 10:38).

[28] tn Grk "lifting up his eyes" (an idiom). The participle ἐπάρας (eparas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[29] sn The term Blessed introduces the first of several beatitudes promising blessing to those whom God cares for. They serve as an invitation to come into the grace God offers.

[30] sn You who are poor is a reference to the "pious poor" for whom God especially cares. See Ps 14:6; 22:24; 25:16; 34:6; 40:17; 69:29.

[31] sn The present tense (belongs) here is significant. Jesus makes the kingdom and its blessings currently available. This phrase is unlike the others in the list with the possessive pronoun being emphasized. Jesus was saying, in effect, "the kingdom belongs even now to people like you."

[32] sn You who hunger are people like the poor Jesus has already mentioned. The term has OT roots both in conjunction with the poor (Isa 32:6-7; 58:6-7, 9-10; Ezek 18:7, 16) or by itself (Ps 37:16-19; 107:9).

[33] sn The promise you will be satisfied is the first of several "reversals" noted in these promises. The beatitudes and the reversals that accompany them serve in the sermon as an invitation to enter into God's care, because one can know God cares for those who turn to him.

"Blessed are you who weep now, for you will laugh.[1] 6:22 "Blessed are you when people[2] hate you, and when they exclude you and insult you and reject you as evil[3] on account of the Son of Man! 6:23 Rejoice in that day, and jump for joy, because[4] your reward is great in heaven. For their ancestors[5] did the same things to the prophets.[6]
6:24 "But woe[7] to you who are rich, for you have received[8] your comfort[9] already.
6:25 "Woe to you who are well satisfied with food[10] now, for you will be hungry.
"Woe to you[11] who laugh[12] now, for you will mourn and weep.
6:26 "Woe to you[13] when all people[14] speak well of you, for their ancestors[15] did the same things to the false prophets.

6:27 "But I say to you who are listening: Love your enemies,[16] do good to those who hate you, 6:28 bless those who curse you, pray for those who mistreat[17] you. 6:29 To the person who strikes you on the cheek,[18] offer the other as well,[19] and from the person who takes away your coat,[20] do not withhold your tunic[21] either.[22] 6:30 Give to everyone who asks you,[23] and do not ask for your possessions[24] back[25] from the person who takes them away. 6:31 Treat others[26] in the same way that you would want them to treat you.[27]

6:32 "If[28] you love those who love you, what credit is that to you? For even sinners[29] love those who love them.[30] 6:33 And[31] if you do good to those who do good to you, what credit is

---

1 sn You will laugh alludes to the joy that comes to God's people in the salvation to come.

2 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

3 tn Or "disdain you"; Grk "cast out your name as evil." The word "name" is used here as a figure of speech to refer to the person as a whole.

sn The phrase when they exclude you and insult you and reject you as evil alludes to a person being ostracized and socially isolated because of association with the Son of Man, Jesus.

4 tn Grk "because behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this clause has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

5 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

6 sn Mistreatment of the prophets is something Luke often notes (Luke 11:47-51; Acts 7:51-52).

7 sn Jesus promises condemnation (woe) to those who are callous of others, looking only to their own comforts. On Luke and the rich see 1:53; 12:16; 14:12; 16:1, 21-22; 18:23; 19:2; 21:1. These woes are unique to Luke.

8 sn Ironically the language of reward shows that what the rich have received is all they will get. This result looks at a current situation, just as the start of the beatitudes did. The rest of the conclusions to the woes look to the future at the time of judgment.

9 tn Grk "your consolation."

10 tn Grk "who are filled." See L&N 23.18 for the translation "well satisfied with food."

11 tc The wording "to you" (ὑμῖν, humin) is lacking in several witnesses (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ B K L T W Θ Ξ 0147 $f^{1,13}$ 579 700 892 1241 2542 al), though found in most (A D Q Ψ 33 𝔐 lat co). The longer reading looks to be a clarifying addition; nevertheless, "to you" is included in the translation because of English requirements.

12 sn That is, laugh with happiness and joy.

13 tc The wording "to you" (ὑμῖν, humin) is lacking throughout the MS tradition except for a few witnesses (D W* Δ 1424 pc co). The Western witnesses tend to add freely to the text. Supported by the vast majority of witnesses and the likelihood that "to you" is a clarifying addition, the shorter reading should be considered original; nevertheless, "to you" is included in the translation because of English requirements.

14 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

15 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

16 sn Love your enemies is the first of four short exhortations that call for an unusual response to those who are persecuting disciples. Disciples are to relate to hostility in a completely unprecedented manner.

17 tn The substantival participle ἐπηρεαζόντων (epēreazontōn), sometimes translated "those who abuse" (NRSV), is better rendered "those who mistreat," a more general term (see L&N 88.129).

18 sn The phrase strikes you on the cheek probably pictures public rejection, like the act that indicated expulsion from the synagogue.

19 sn This command to offer the other cheek as well is often misunderstood. It means that there is risk involved in reaching out to people with God's hope. But if one is struck down in rejection, the disciple is to continue reaching out.

20 tn Or "cloak."

21 tn See the note on the word "tunics" in 3:11.

22 sn The command do not withhold your tunic either is again an image of continually being totally at risk as one tries to keep contact with those who are hostile to what Jesus and his disciples offer.

23 sn Jesus advocates a generosity and a desire to meet those in dire need with the command give to everyone who asks you. This may allude to begging; giving alms was viewed highly in the ancient world (Matt 6:1-4; Deut 15:7-11).

24 tn Grk "your things," sometimes translated "what is yours" or "what belongs to you."

25 sn Do not ask for your possessions back… is an example of showing forgiveness. Paul's remarks in 1 Cor 6:7 may reflect this principle.

26 tn This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

27 sn Jesus' teaching as reflected in the phrase treat others in the same way you would want them to treat you, known generally as the Golden Rule, is not completely unique in the ancient world, but it is stated here in its most emphatic, selfless form.

28 tn Grk "And if." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. This is a first class condition, but the next two conditional clauses are third class conditions, so that stylistic variation is probably at work.

29 sn Here the term sinners may refer to people who had no concern for observing the details of the Mosaic law; these were often treated as social outcasts. See L&N 88.295.

30 sn Jesus' point in the statement even sinners love those who love them is that disciples are to go farther than sinners do. The examples replay vv. 29-30.

31 tc ‡ Three key MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ* B) have "for" here, but it is unlikely that it was present originally. The addition of conjunctions, especially to the beginning of a clause, are typically suspect because they fit the pattern of Koine tendencies toward greater explicitness. NA²⁷ has the word in brackets, indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

that to you? Even[1] sinners[2] do the same. 6:34 And if you lend to those from whom you hope to be repaid,[3] what credit is that to you? Even sinners[4] lend to sinners, so that they may be repaid in full.[5] 6:35 But love your enemies, and do good, and lend, expecting nothing back.[6] Then[7] your reward will be great, and you will be sons[8] of the Most High,[9] because he is kind to ungrateful and evil people.[10] 6:36 Be merciful,[11] just as your Father is merciful.

Do Not Judge Others

6:37 "Do[12] not judge,[13] and you will not be judged;[14] do not condemn, and you will not be condemned; forgive,[15] and you will be forgiven. 6:38 Give, and it will be given to you: A good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over,[16] will be poured[17] into your lap. For the measure you use will be the measure you receive."[18]

6:39 He also told them a parable: "Someone who is blind cannot lead another who is blind, can he?[19] Won't they both fall[20] into a pit? 6:40 A disciple[21] is not greater than[22] his teacher, but everyone when fully trained will be like his teacher. 6:41 Why[23] do you see the speck[24] in your brother's eye, but fail to see[25] the beam of wood[26] in your own? 6:42 How can you say to your brother, 'Brother, let me remove the speck from your eye,' while you yourself don't see the beam in your own? You hypocrite! First remove the beam from your own eye, and then you can see clearly to remove the speck from your brother's eye.

6:43 "For[27] no good tree bears bad[28] fruit, nor again[29] does a bad tree bear good fruit, 6:44 for each tree is known[30] by its own fruit. For figs are not gathered[31] from thorns, nor are grapes picked[32] from brambles.[33] 6:45 The good person

---

1 tc Most MSS (A D L Θ Ξ Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐 lat) include γάρ (gar, "for") following καί (kai, here translated "even"), but a few important MSS (𝔎 B W 700 892* 1241 pc) lack the conjunction. The inclusion of the conjunction seems to be motivated by clarity and should probably be considered inauthentic.

2 sn See the note on the word sinners in v. 32.

3 tn Grk "to receive," but in context the repayment of the amount lent is implied. Jesus was noting that utilitarian motives are the way of the world.

4 sn See the note on the word sinners in v. 32.

5 tn Grk "to receive as much again."

6 tn Or "in return."

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the outcome or result. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation at this point.

8 sn The character of these actions reflects the grace and kindness of God, bearing witness to a "line of descent" or relationship of the individual to God (sons of the Most High). There is to be a unique kind of ethic at work with disciples. Jesus refers specifically to sons here because in the ancient world sons had special privileges which were rarely accorded to daughters. However, Jesus is most likely addressing both men and women in this context, so women too would receive these same privileges.

9 sn That is, "sons of God."

10 tn Or "to the ungrateful and immoral." The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

11 sn Merciful is a characteristic of God often noted in the OT: Exod 34:6; Deut 4:31; Joel 2:31; Jonah 4:2; 2 Sam 24:14. This remark also echoes the more common OT statements like Lev 19:2 or Deut 18:13: "you must be holy as I am holy."

12 tn Grk "And do." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

13 sn As the Gospel makes clear, with the statement do not judge Jesus had in mind making a judgment that caused one to cut oneself off from someone so that they ceased to be reached out to (5:27-32; 15:1-32). Jesus himself did make judgments about where people stand (11:37-54), but not in such a way that he ceased to continue to offer them God's grace.

14 sn The point of the statement do not judge, and you will not be judged is that the standards one applies to others God applies back. The passive verbs in this verse look to God's action.

15 sn On forgive see Luke 11:4; 1 Pet 3:7.

16 sn The background to the image pressed down, shaken together, running over is pouring out grain for measure in the marketplace. One often poured the grain into a container, shook it to level out the grain and then poured in some more. Those who are generous have generosity running over for them.

17 tn Grk "they will give"; that is, "pour." The third person plural has been replaced by the passive in the translation.

18 tn Grk "by [the measure] with which you measure it will be measured back to you."

19 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here it is "can he?").

20 sn The picture of a blind man leading a blind man is a warning to watch who one follows: Won't they both fall into a pit? The sermon has been about religious choices and reacting graciously to those who oppose the followers of Jesus. Here Jesus' point was to be careful who you follow and where they are taking you.

21 tn Or "student."

22 tn Or "significantly different." The idea, as the next phrase shows, is that teachers build followers who go the same direction they do.

23 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

24 sn A speck (also twice in v. 42) refers to a small piece of wood, chaff, or straw (L&N 3.66).

25 tn Or "do not notice."

26 sn The beam of wood (also twice in v. 42) refers to a big piece of wood, the main beam of a building, in contrast to the speck in the other's eye (L&N 7.78).

27 tn The explanatory connective γάρ (gar) is often dropped from translations, but the point of the passage is that one should be self-corrective and be careful who one follows (vv. 41-42), because such choices also reflect what the nature of the tree is and its product.

28 tn Grk "rotten." The word σαπρός, modifying both "fruit" and "tree," can also mean "diseased" (L&N 65.28).

29 tc Most MSS, especially later ones (A C D Θ Ψ 33 𝔐 lat sy sa), lack the adverb πάλιν (palin, "again") here. Its presence is attested, however, by several good witnesses (𝔓^{75} 𝔎 B L W Ξ $f^{1,13}$ 579 892 1241 2542).

30 sn The principle of the passage is that one produces what one is.

31 tn Grk "they do not gather"; this has been simplified to the passive voice in the translation since the subject "they" is not specified further in the context.

32 tn This is a different verb (τρυγῶσιν, trugōsin) for gathering from the previous one (συλλέγουσιν, sullegousin).

33 tn This is a different term (βάτος, batos) for a thorn or bramble bush than the previous one (ἄκανθα, akantha).

sn The statement nor are grapes picked from brambles illustrates the principle: That which cannot produce fruit, does not produce fruit.

out of the good treasury of his[1] heart[2] produces good, and the evil person out of his evil treasury[3] produces evil, for his mouth speaks[4] from what fills[5] his heart.

6:46 "Why[6] do you call me 'Lord, Lord,'[7] and don't do what I tell you?[8]

6:47 "Everyone who comes to me and listens to my words and puts them into practice[9] – I will show you what he is like: 6:48 He is like a man[10] building a house, who dug down deep,[11] and laid the foundation on bedrock. When[12] a flood came, the river[13] burst against that house but[14] could not shake it, because it had been well built.[15] 6:49 But the person who hears and does not put my words into practice[16] is like a man who built a house on the ground without a foundation. When[17] the river burst against that house,[18] it collapsed immediately, and was utterly destroyed!"[19]

Healing the Centurion's Slave

7:1 After Jesus[20] had finished teaching all this to the people,[21] he entered Capernaum.[22] 7:2 A centurion[23] there[24] had a slave[25] who was highly regarded,[26] but who was sick and at the point of death. 7:3 When the centurion[27] heard[28] about Jesus, he sent some Jewish elders[29] to him, asking him to come[30] and heal his slave. 7:4 When[31] they came[32] to Jesus, they urged[33]

---

1 tn Grk "the"; the Greek article has been translated here and in the following clause ("out of the evil") as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

2 sn Mention of the heart shows that Jesus is not interested in what is done, but why. Motives are more important than actions for him.

3 tn The word "treasury" is not repeated in the Greek text at this point, but is implied.

4 sn What one utters from one's mouth is especially singled out as the example of this principle. James seems to have known this teaching (Jas 1:26; 3:1-12).

5 tn Grk "for out of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaks."

6 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

7 tn The double use of the vocative is normally used in situations of high emotion or emphasis. Even an emphatic confession without action means little.

8 sn Why do you call me 'Lord, Lord,' and don't do what I tell you? Respect is not a matter of mere words, but is reflected in obedient action. This short saying, which is much simpler than its more developed conceptual parallel in Matt 7:21-23, serves in this form to simply warn and issue a call to hear and obey, as the last parable also does in vv. 47-49.

9 tn Grk "and does them."

10 tn Here and in v. 49 the Greek text reads ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), while the parallel account in Matt 7:24-27 uses ἀνήρ (anēr) in vv. 24 and 26.

11 tn There are actually two different Greek verbs used here: "who dug (ἔσκαψεν, eskapsen) and dug deep (ἐβάθυνεν, ebathunen)." Jesus is placing emphasis on the effort to which the man went to prepare his foundation.

12 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

13 sn The picture here is of a river overflowing its banks and causing flooding and chaos.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in the context.

15 tc Most MSS, especially later ones (A C D Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 latt), read "because he built [it] on the rock" rather than "because it had been well built" (𝔓^{75vid} ℵ B L W Ξ 33 579 892 1241 2542 pc sa). The reading of the later MSS seems to be a harmonization to Matt 7:25, rendering it most likely secondary.

16 tn Grk "does not do [them]."

17 tn Grk "against which"; because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative clause was converted to a temporal clause in the translation and a new sentence started here.

18 tn Grk "it"; the referent (that house) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "and its crash was great."

sn The extra phrase at the end of this description (and was utterly destroyed) portrays the great disappointment that the destruction of the house caused as it crashed and was swept away.

20 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "After he had completed all his sayings in the hearing of the people."

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

23 sn A centurion was a noncommissioned officer in the Roman army or one of the auxiliary territorial armies, commanding a centuria of (nominally) 100 men. The responsibilities of centurions were broadly similar to modern junior officers, but there was a wide gap in social status between them and officers, and relatively few were promoted beyond the rank of senior centurion. The Roman troops stationed in Judea were auxiliaries, who would normally be rewarded with Roman citizenship after 25 years of service. Some of the centurions may have served originally in the Roman legions (regular army) and thus gained their citizenship at enlistment. Others may have inherited it, like Paul.

24 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

25 tn Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times... in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v. 1). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος) in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force. In addition, the parallel passage in Matt 8:6 uses the Greek term παῖς (pais), to refer to the centurion's slave. This was a term often used of a slave who was regarded with some degree of affection, possibly a personal servant.

26 tn The term ἔντιμος (entimos) could mean "highly valued," but this sounds too much like the slave was seen as an asset, while the text suggests a genuine care for the person. More archaically, it could be said the centurion was fond of this slave.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the centurion) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn The participle ἀκούσας (akousas) has been taken temporally.

29 sn Why some Jewish elders are sent as emissaries is not entirely clear, but the centurion was probably respecting ethnic boundaries, which were important in ancient Greco-Roman and Jewish culture. The parallel account in Matt 8:5-13 does not mention the emissaries.

30 tn The participle ἐλθών (elthōn) has been translated as an infinitive in parallel with διασώσῃ (diasōsē) due to requirements of contemporary English style.

31 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

32 tn Although the participle παραγενόμενοι (paragenomenoi) is preceded by the Greek article (οἱ, hoi) which would normally cause it to be regarded as an adjectival or substantival participle, most modern translations, probably as a result of the necessities of contemporary English style, render it as a temporal participle ("when they came").

33 tn Or "implored."

him earnestly,[1] "He is worthy[2] to have you do this for him, 7:5 because he loves our nation,[3] and even[4] built our synagogue."[5] 7:6 So[6] Jesus went with them. When[7] he was not far from the house, the centurion[8] sent friends to say to him, "Lord, do not trouble yourself,[9] for I am not worthy[10] to have you come under my roof. 7:7 That is why[11] I did not presume[12] to come to you. Instead, say the word, and my servant must be healed.[13] 7:8 For I too am a man set under authority, with soldiers under me.[14] I say to this one, 'Go,' and he goes,[15] and to another, 'Come,' and he comes, and to my slave, 'Do this,' and he does it."[16] 7:9 When Jesus heard this, he was amazed[17] at him. He turned and said to the crowd that followed him, "I tell you, not even in Israel have I found such faith!"[18] 7:10 So[19] when those who had been sent returned to the house, they found the slave[20] well.

Raising a Widow's Son

7:11 Soon[21] afterward[22] Jesus[23] went to a town[24] called Nain, and his disciples and a large crowd went with him. 7:12 As he approached the town gate, a man[25] who had died was being carried out,[26] the only son of his mother (who[27] was a widow[28]), and a large crowd from the town[29] was with her. 7:13 When[30] the Lord saw her, he had compassion[31] for her and said to her, "Do

---

1 tn Grk "urged him earnestly, saying"; the participle λέγοντες (legontes) is pleonastic (redundant) and has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "Worthy is he to have you do this"; the term "worthy" comes first in the direct discourse and is emphatic.

3 tn Or "people." The use of ἔθνος (ethnos, "nation") here instead of "God" probably meant the man was not a full proselyte, but that he had simply been supportive of the Jews and their culture. He could have been a God-fearer. The Romans saw a stable religious community as politically helpful and often supported it (Josephus, Ant. 16.6.2 [16.162-165], 19.6.3 [19.300-311]).

4 tn In the Greek text, the pronoun αὐτός (autos) is included, making this emphatic. Naturally the force of this statement is causative, meaning the centurion either had the synagogue built or donated the cost of its construction.

5 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the resultative action.

7 tn The participle ἀπέχοντος (apechontos) has been taken temporally.

8 sn See the note on the word centurion in 7:2.

9 tn Or "do not be bothered."

10 sn Note the humility in the centurion's statement I am not worthy in light of what others think (as v. 4 notes). See Luke 5:8 for a similar example of humility.

11 tn Or "roof; therefore."

12 tn Grk "I did not consider myself worthy to come to you." See BDAG 94 s.v. ἀξιόω 1. "Presume" assumes this and expresses the idea in terms of offense.

13 tc The aorist imperative ἰαθήτω (iathētō, "must be healed") is found in 𝔓75vid B L 1241 sa. Most mss (א A C D W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt bo) have instead a future indicative, ἰαθήσεται (iathēsetai, "will be healed"). This is most likely an assimilation to Matt 8:8, and thus, as a motivated reading, should be considered secondary. The meaning either way is essentially the same.

tn The aorist imperative may be translated as an imperative of command ("must be healed" or, more periphrastically, "command [my servant] to be healed") or as a permissive imperative ("let my servant be healed"), which lessens the force of the imperative somewhat in English.

14 tn Grk "having soldiers under me."

15 sn I say to this one, 'Go,' and he goes. The illustrations highlight the view of authority the soldier sees in the word of one who has authority. Since the centurion was a commander of a hundred soldiers, he understood what it was both to command others and to be obeyed.

16 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

17 tn Or "pleased with him and amazed." The expanded translation brings out both Jesus' sense of wonder at the deep insight of the soldier and the pleasure he had that he could present the man as an example of faith.

18 sn There are two elements to the faith that Jesus commended: The man's humility and his sense of Jesus' authority which recognized that only Jesus' word, not his physical presence, were required.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the summarization at the end of the account.

20 tc Most mss, especially later ones (A C [D] Θ Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐), have "the sick slave" here instead of "the slave." This brings out the contrast of the healing more clearly, but this reading looks secondary both internally (scribes tended toward clarification) and externally (the shorter reading is well supported by a variety of witnesses: 𝔓75 א B L W f^{1} 579 700 892* 1241 2542 it co).

21 tn Grk "And it happened that soon." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

22 tc Several variants to ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ (egeneto en tō) are found before the adverb ἑξῆς (hexēs), all of them clarifying by the use of the feminine article that the next day is meant (τῇ [tē] in D; ἐγένετο τῇ in W; ἐγένετο ἐν τῇ in א* C K 565 892 1424 pm). But these readings are decidedly secondary, for they are more specific than Luke usually is, and involve an unparalleled construction (viz., article + ἡμέρα [hēmera] + ἑξῆς; elsewhere, when Luke uses this adverb, the noun it modifies is either implied or after the adverb [cf. Luke 9:37; Acts 21:1; 25:17; 27:18]). The reading adopted for the translation is a more general time indicator; the article τῷ modifies an implied χρόνῳ (chronō), with the general sense of "soon afterward."

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn The term πόλις (polis) can refer to a small town, which is what Nain was. It was about six miles southeast of Nazareth.

25 tn Grk "behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

26 tn That is, carried out for burial. This was a funeral procession.

27 tn Grk "and she." The clause introduced by καί (kai) has been translated as a relative clause for the sake of English style.

28 sn The description of the woman as a widow would mean that she was now socially alone and without protection in 1st century Jewish culture.

29 tn Or "city."

30 tn Grk "And seeing her, the Lord." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. The participle ἰδών (idōn) has been taken temporally.

31 sn He had compassion. It is unusual for Luke to note such emotion by Jesus, though the other Synoptics tend to mention it (Matt 14:14; Mark 6:34; Matt 15:32; Mark 8:2).

not weep."[1] 7:14 Then[2] he came up[3] and touched[4] the bier,[5] and those who carried it stood still. He[6] said, "Young man, I say to you, get up!" 7:15 So[7] the dead man[8] sat up and began to speak, and Jesus[9] gave him back[10] to his mother. 7:16 Fear[11] seized them all, and they began to glorify[12] God, saying, "A great prophet[13] has appeared[14] among us!" and "God has come to help[15] his people!" 7:17 This[16] report[17] about Jesus[18] circulated[19] throughout[20] Judea and all the surrounding country.

Jesus and John the Baptist

7:18 John's[21] disciples informed him about all these things. So[22] John called[23] two of his disciples 7:19 and sent them to Jesus[24] to ask,[25] "Are you the one who is to come,[26] or should we look for another?" 7:20 When[27] the men came to Jesus,[28] they said, "John the Baptist has sent us to you to ask,[29] 'Are you the one who is to come, or should we look for another?'"[30] 7:21 At that very time[31] Jesus[32] cured many people of diseases, sicknesses,[33] and evil spirits, and granted[34] sight to many who were blind. 7:22 So[35] he answered them,[36] "Go tell[37] John what you have seen and heard:[38] The blind see, the lame walk, lepers are cleansed, the[39] deaf hear, the dead are raised, the poor have good news proclaimed to them. 7:23 Blessed is anyone[40] who takes no offense at me."

7:24 When[41] John's messengers had gone, Jesus[42] began to speak to the crowds about John: "What did you go out into the wilderness[43] to

1 tn The verb κλαίω (klaiō) denotes the loud wailing or lamenting typical of 1st century Jewish mourning.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

3 tn Grk "coming up, he touched." The participle προσελθών (proselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

4 sn The act of having touched the bier would have rendered Jesus ceremonially unclean, but it did not matter to him, since he was expressing his personal concern (Num 19:11, 16).

5 sn Although sometimes translated "coffin," the bier was actually a stretcher or wooden plank on which the corpse was transported to the place of burial. See L&N 6.109.

6 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of Jesus' command.

8 tn Or "the deceased."

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn In the context, the verb δίδωμι (didōmi) has been translated "gave back" rather than simply "gave."

11 tn Or "Awe." Grk "fear," but the context and the following remark show that it is mixed with wonder; see L&N 53.59. This is a reaction to God's work; see Luke 5:9.

12 tn This imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

13 sn That Jesus was a great prophet was a natural conclusion for the crowd to make, given the healing, but Jesus is more than this. See Luke 9:8, 19-20.

14 tn Grk "arisen."

15 tn Grk "visited," but this conveys a different impression to a modern reader. L&N 85.11 renders the verb, "to be present, with the implication of concern – 'to be present to help, to be on hand to aid.' ... 'God has come to help his people' Lk 7:16." The language recalls Luke 1:68, 78.

16 tn Grk "And this." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

17 sn See Luke 4:14 for a similar report.

18 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "went out."

20 tn Grk "through the whole of."

21 tn Grk "And John's." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. This is a reference to John the Baptist as the following context makes clear.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that John's action was a result of the report he had heard.

23 tn Grk "And calling two of his disciples, John sent." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

24 tc ‡ Although most mss (ℵ A W Θ Ψ f^{1} 𝔐 it sy bo) read πρὸς τὸν Ἰησοῦν (pros ton Iēsoun, "to Jesus"), other important witnesses (B L Ξ f^{13} 33 pc sa) read πρὸς τὸν κύριον (pros ton kurion, "to the Lord"). A decision is difficult in this instance, as there are good witnesses on both sides. In light of this, that "Jesus" is more widespread than "the Lord" with almost equally important witnesses argues for its authenticity.

25 tn Grk "to Jesus, saying," but since this takes the form of a question, it is preferable to use the phrase "to ask" in English.

26 sn Aspects of Jesus' ministry may have led John to question whether Jesus was the promised stronger and greater one who is to come that he had preached about in Luke 3:15-17.

27 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

28 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "to you, saying," but since this takes the form of a question, it is preferable to use the phrase "to ask" in English.

30 tn This question is repeated word for word from v. 19.

31 tn Grk "In that hour."

32 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tn Grk "and sicknesses," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

34 tn Or "and bestowed (sight) on."

35 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the relationship to Jesus' miraculous cures in the preceding sentence.

36 tn Grk "answering, he said to them." This is redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation to "he answered them."

37 sn The same verb has been translated "inform" in 7:18.

38 sn What you have seen and heard. The following activities all paraphrase various OT descriptions of the time of promised salvation: Isa 35:5-6; 26:19; 29:18-19; 61:1. Jesus is answering not by acknowledging a title, but by pointing to the nature of his works, thus indicating the nature of the time.

39 tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

40 tn Grk "whoever."

41 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

42 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

43 tn Or "desert."

see? A reed shaken by the wind?[1] 7:25 What[2] did you go out to see? A man dressed in fancy[3] clothes?[4] Look, those who wear fancy clothes and live in luxury[5] are in kings' courts![6] 7:26 What did you go out to see? A prophet? Yes, I tell you, and more[7] than a prophet. 7:27 This is the one about whom it is written, 'Look, I am sending my messenger ahead of you,[8] who will prepare your way before you.'[9] 7:28 I tell you, among those born of women no one is greater[10] than John.[11] Yet the one who is least[12] in the kingdom of God[13] is greater than he is." 7:29 (Now[14] all the people who heard this, even the tax collectors,[15] acknowledged[16] God's justice, because they had been baptized[17] with John's baptism. 7:30 However, the Pharisees[18] and the experts in religious law[19] rejected God's purpose[20] for themselves, because they had not been baptized[21] by John.[22])[23]

7:31 "To what then should I compare the people[24] of this generation, and what are they like? 7:32 They are like children sitting in the marketplace and calling out to one another,[25]

> 'We played the flute for you, yet you did not dance;[26]
> we wailed in mourning,[27] yet you did not weep.'

7:33 For John the Baptist has come[28] eating no bread and drinking no wine,[29] and you say, 'He has a demon!'[30] 7:34 The Son of Man has come eating and drinking, and you say, 'Look at him,[31] a glutton and a drunk, a friend of tax collectors and sinners!'[32] 7:35 But wisdom is vindicated[33] by all her children."[34]

---

1 tn There is a debate as to whether one should read this figuratively ("to see someone who is easily blown over?") or literally (Grk "to see the wilderness vegetation?...No, to see a prophet"). Either view makes good sense, but the following examples suggest the question should be read literally and understood to point to the fact that a prophet drew them to the desert.

2 tn Grk "But what." Here ἀλλά (alla, a strong contrastive in Greek) produces a somewhat awkward sense in English, and has not been translated. The same situation occurs at the beginning of v. 26.

3 tn Or "soft"; see L&N 79.100.

4 sn The reference to fancy clothes makes the point that John was not rich or powerful, in that he did not come from the wealthy classes.

5 tn See L&N 88.253, "to revel, to carouse, to live a life of luxury."

6 tn Or "palaces."

7 tn John the Baptist is "more" because he introduces the one (Jesus) who brings the new era. The term is neuter, but may be understood as masculine in this context (BDAG 806 s.v. περισσότερος b.).

8 tn Grk "before your face" (an idiom).

9 sn The quotation is primarily from Mal 3:1 with pronouns from Exod 23:20. Here is the forerunner who points the way to the arrival of God's salvation. His job is to prepare and guide the people, as the cloud did for Israel in the desert.

10 sn In the Greek text greater is at the beginning of the clause in the emphatic position. John the Baptist was the greatest man of the old era.

11 tc The earliest and best mss read simply Ἰωάννου (Iōannou, "John") here (𝔓75 ℵ B L W Ξ f^{1} 579 pc). Others turn this into "John the Baptist" (K 33 565 al it), "the prophet John the Baptist" (A [D] Θ f^{13} 𝔐 lat), or "the prophet John" (Ψ 700 [892 1241] pc). "It appears that προφήτης was inserted by pedantic copyists who wished thereby to exclude Christ from the comparison, while others added τοῦ βαπτιστοῦ, assimilating the text to Mt 11.11" (TCGNT 119).

12 sn After John comes a shift of eras. The new era is so great that the lowest member of it (the one who is least in the kingdom of God) is greater than the greatest one of the previous era.

13 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus' proclamation. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21. It is not strictly future, though its full manifestation is yet to come. That is why membership in it starts right after John the Baptist.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the parenthetical nature of the comment by the author.

15 sn See the note on tax collectors in 3:12.

16 tn Or "vindicated God"; Grk "justified God." This could be expanded to "vindicated and responded to God." The point is that God's goodness and grace as evidenced in the invitation to John was justified and responded to by the group one might least expect, tax collector and sinners. They had more spiritual sensitivity than others. The contrastive response is clear from v. 30.

17 tn The participle βαπτισθέντες (baptisthentes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

18 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

19 tn That is, the experts in the interpretation of the Mosaic law (see also Luke 5:17, although the Greek term is not identical there, and Luke 10:25, where it is the same).

20 tn Or "plan."

21 tn The participle βαπτισθέντες (baptisthentes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle; it could also be translated as means ("for themselves, by not having been baptized"). This is similar to the translation found in the NRSV.

22 tn Grk "by him"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 sn Luke 7:29-30 forms something of an aside by the author. To indicate this, they have been placed in parentheses.

24 tn Grk "men," but this is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos). The comparison that follows in vv. 32-34 describes "this generation," not Jesus and John.

25 tn Grk "They are like children sitting...and calling out...who say."

26 sn 'We played the flute for you, yet you did not dance...' The children of this generation were making the complaint (see vv. 33-34) that others were not playing the game according to the way they played the music. John and Jesus did not follow "their tune." Jesus' complaint was that this generation wanted things their way, not God's.

27 tn The verb ἐθρηνήσαμεν (ethrēnēsamen) refers to the loud wailing and lamenting used to mourn the dead in public in 1st century Jewish culture.

28 tn The perfect tenses in both this verse and the next do more than mere aorists would. They not only summarize, but suggest the characteristics of each ministry were still in existence at the time of speaking.

29 tn Grk "neither eating bread nor drinking wine," but this is somewhat awkward in contemporary English.

30 sn John the Baptist was too separatist and ascetic for some, and so he was accused of not being directed by God, but by a demon.

31 tn Grk "Behold a man."

32 sn Neither were they happy with Jesus (the Son of Man), even though he was the opposite of John and associated freely with people like tax collectors and sinners. Either way, God's messengers were subject to complaint.

33 tn Or "shown to be right." This is the same verb translated "acknowledged... justice" in v. 29, with a similar sense – including the notion of response. Wisdom's children are those who respond to God through John and Jesus.

34 tn Or "by all those who follow her" (cf. CEV, NLT). Note that the parallel in Matt 11:19 reads "by her deeds."

Jesus' Anointing

7:36 Now one of the Pharisees[1] asked Jesus[2] to have dinner with him, so[3] he went into the Pharisee's house and took his place at the table.[4] 7:37 Then[5] when a woman of that town, who was a sinner, learned that Jesus[6] was dining[7] at the Pharisee's house, she brought an alabaster jar[8] of perfumed oil.[9] 7:38 As[10] she stood[11] behind him at his feet, weeping, she began to wet his feet with her tears. She[12] wiped them with her hair,[13] kissed[14] them,[15] and anointed[16] them with the perfumed oil. 7:39 Now when the Pharisee who had invited him saw this,[17] he said to himself, "If this man were a prophet,[18] he would know who and what kind of woman[19] this is who is touching him, that she is a sinner." 7:40 So[20] Jesus answered him,[21] "Simon, I have something to say to you." He replied,[22] "Say it, Teacher." 7:41 "A certain creditor[23] had two debtors; one owed him[24] five hundred silver coins,[25] and the other fifty. 7:42 When they could not pay, he canceled[26] the debts of both. Now which of them will love him more?" 7:43 Simon answered,[27] "I suppose the one who had the bigger debt canceled."[28] Jesus[29] said to him, "You have judged rightly." 7:44 Then,[30] turning toward the woman, he said to Simon, "Do you see this woman? I entered your house. You gave me no water for my feet,[31] but she has wet my feet with her tears and wiped them with her hair. 7:45 You gave me no kiss of greeting,[32] but from the time I entered she has not stopped kissing my feet. 7:46 You did not anoint my head with oil, but she has

1 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

2 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' action was the result of the Pharisee's invitation.

4 tn Grk "and reclined at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

5 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

6 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "was reclining at table."

8 sn A jar made of alabaster stone was normally used for very precious substances like perfumes. It normally had a long neck which was sealed and had to be broken off so the contents could be used.

9 tn Μύρον (muron) was usually made of myrrh (from which the English word is derived) but here it is used in the sense of ointment or perfumed oil (L&N 6.205). The same phrase occurs at the end of v. 38 and in v. 46.

sn Nard or spikenard is a fragrant oil from the root and spike of the nard plant of northern India. This perfumed oil, if made of something like nard, would have been extremely expensive, costing up to a year's pay for an average laborer.

10 tn Grk "And standing." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

11 tn Grk "standing"; the participle στᾶσα (stasa) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn Grk "tears, and she." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

13 tn Grk "with the hair of her head."

14 tn Grk "and kissed," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

15 tn Grk "kissed his feet," but this has been replaced by the pronoun "them" in keeping with contemporary English style.

16 sn The series of verbs in this verse detail the woman's every move, much as if the onlookers were watching her every step. That she attended the meal is not so surprising, as teachers often ate an open meal where listeners were welcome, but for her to approach Jesus was unusual and took great nerve, especially given her reputation.

17 tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

18 tn This is a good example of a second class (contrary to fact) Greek conditional sentence. The Pharisee said, in effect, "If this man were a prophet (but he is not)..."

19 sn The Pharisees believed in a form of separationism that would have prevented them from any kind of association with such a sinful woman.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the connection with the preceding statement recording the Pharisee's thoughts.

21 tn Grk "answering, said to him." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "answered him."

sn Jesus answered him. Note that as the Pharisee is denying to himself that Jesus is a prophet, Jesus is reading his thoughts.

22 tn Grk "he said."

23 sn A creditor was a moneylender, whose business was to lend money to others at a fixed rate of interest.

24 tn The word "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

25 tn Grk "five hundred denarii."

sn The silver coins were denarii. The denarius was worth about a day's wage for a laborer; this would be an amount worth not quite two years' pay. The debts were significant: They represented two months' pay and one and three quarter years' pay (20 months) based on a six day work week.

26 tn The verb ἐχαρίσατο (echarisato) could be translated as "forgave." Of course this pictures the forgiveness of God's grace, which is not earned but bestowed with faith (see v. 49).

27 tn Grk "answering, said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "answered."

28 tn Grk "the one to whom he forgave more" (see v. 42).

29 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

31 sn It is discussed whether these acts in vv. 44-46 were required by the host. Most think they were not, but this makes the woman's acts of respect all the more amazing.

32 tn Grk "no kiss." This refers to a formalized kiss of greeting, standard in that culture. To convey this to the modern reader, the words "of greeting" have been supplied to qualify what kind of kiss is meant.

anointed my feet[1] with perfumed oil. 7:47 Therefore I tell you, her sins, which were many, are forgiven, thus she loved much;[2] but the one who is forgiven little loves little." 7:48 Then[3] Jesus[4] said to her, "Your sins are forgiven."[5] 7:49 But[6] those who were at the table[7] with him began to say among themselves, "Who is this, who even forgives sins?" 7:50 He[8] said to the woman, "Your faith[9] has saved you;[10] go in peace."

Jesus' Ministry and the Help of Women

8:1 Some time[11] afterward[12] he went on through towns[13] and villages, preaching and proclaiming the good news[14] of the kingdom of God.[15] The[16] twelve were with him, 8:2 and also some women[17] who had been healed of evil spirits and disabilities:[18] Mary[19] (called Magdalene), from whom seven demons had gone out, 8:3 and Joanna the wife of Cuza[20] (Herod's[21] household manager),[22] Susanna, and many others who provided for them[23] out of their own resources.

The Parable of the Sower

8:4 While a large crowd was gathering and people were coming to Jesus[24] from one town after another,[25] he spoke to them[26] in a parable: 8:5 "A sower went out to sow[27] his seed.[28] And as he sowed, some fell along the path and was trampled on, and the wild birds[29] devoured it. 8:6 Other seed fell on rock,[30] and when it came up,

1 sn This event is not equivalent to the anointing of Jesus that takes place in the last week of his life (Matt 26:6-13; Mark 14:3-9; John 12:1-8). That woman was not a sinner, and Jesus was eating in the home of Simon the leper, who, as a leper, could never be a Pharisee.

2 tn Grk "for she loved much." The connection between this statement and the preceding probably involves an ellipsis, to the effect that the ὅτι clause gives the evidence of forgiveness, not the ground. For similar examples of an "evidentiary" ὅτι, cf. Luke 1:22; 6:21; 13:2. See discussion in D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 1:703-5. Further evidence that this is the case here is the final statement: "the one who is forgiven little loves little" means that the one who is forgiven little is thus not able to love much. The REB renders this verse: "her great love proves that her many sins have been forgiven; where little has been forgiven, little love is shown."

sn She loved much. Jesus' point is that the person who realizes how great a gift forgiveness is (because they have a deep sense of sin) has a great love for the one who forgives, that is, God. The woman's acts of reverence to Jesus honored him as the one who brought God's message of grace.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

4 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 sn Jesus showed his authority to forgive sins, something that was quite controversial. See Luke 5:17-26 and the next verse.

6 tn Grk "And"; here καί (kai) has been translated as an adversative (contrastive).

7 tn Grk "were reclining at table."

8 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

9 sn On faith see Luke 5:20; 7:9; 8:25; 12:28; 17:6; 18:8; 22:32.

10 sn The questioning did not stop Jesus. He declared authoritatively that the woman was forgiven by God (your faith has saved you). This event is a concrete example of Luke 5:31-32.

11 tn Grk "And it happened that some time." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

12 tn Καθεξῆς (Kathexēs) is a general temporal term and need not mean "soon afterward"; see Luke 1:3; Acts 3:24; 11:4; 18:23 and L&N 61.1.

13 tn Or "cities."

14 sn The combination of preaching and proclaiming the good news is a bit emphatic, stressing Jesus' teaching ministry on the rule of God.

15 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

16 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

17 sn There is an important respect shown to women in this text, as their contributions were often ignored in ancient society.

18 tn Or "illnesses." The term ἀσθένεια (astheneia) refers to the state of being ill and thus incapacitated in some way – "illness, disability, weakness." (L&N 23.143).

19 sn This Mary is not the woman mentioned in the previous passage (as some church fathers claimed), because she is introduced as a new figure here. In addition, she is further specified by Luke with the notation called Magdalene, which seems to distinguish her from the woman at Simon the Pharisee's house.

20 sn Cuza is also spelled "Chuza" in many English translations.

21 sn Herod's refers here to Herod Antipas. See the note on Herod Antipas in 3:1.

22 tn Here ἐπίτροπος (epitropos) is understood as referring to the majordomo or manager of Herod's household (BDAG 385 s.v. ἐπίτροπος 1). However, as BDAG notes, the office may be political in nature and would then be translated something like "governor" or "procurator." Note that in either case the gospel was reaching into the highest levels of society.

23 tc Many MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ A L Ψ f^1 33 565 579 1241 2542 pm it co) read "for him," but "for them" also has good MS support (B D K W Γ Δ Θ f^{13} 700 892 1424 pm lat). From an internal standpoint the singular pronoun looks like an assimilation to texts like Matt 27:55 and Mark 15:41.

24 tn Grk "to him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn This phrase renders a distributive use of κατά (kata) with πόλις (polis), literally "according to [each] town."

26 tn The words "to them" do not appear in the Greek text but are supplied in the translation for clarity.

27 sn A sower went out to sow. The background for this well-known parable is a field through which a well-worn path runs in the Palestinian countryside. Sowing would occur in late fall or early winter (October to December) in the rainy season, looking for sprouting in April or May and a June harvest. The use of seed as a figure for God's giving life has OT roots: Isa 55:10-11.

28 tn Luke's version of the parable, like Mark's (cf. Mark 4:1-9) uses the collective singular to refer to the seed throughout, so singular pronouns have been used consistently throughout this parable in the English translation. However, the parallel account in Matt 13:1-9 begins with plural pronouns in v. 4 but then switches to the collective singular in v. 5 ff.

29 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

30 sn The rock in Palestine would be a limestone base lying right under the soil.

it withered because it had no moisture. 8:7 Other seed fell among the thorns,[1] and they grew up with it and choked[2] it. 8:8 But[3] other seed fell on good soil and grew,[4] and it produced a hundred times as much grain."[5] As he said this,[6] he called out, "The one who has ears to hear had better listen!"[7]

8:9 Then[8] his disciples asked him what this parable meant.[9] 8:10 He[10] said, "You have been given[11] the opportunity to know[12] the secrets[13] of the kingdom of God,[14] but for others they are in parables, so that although they see they may not see, and although they hear they may not understand.[15]

8:11 "Now the parable means[16] this: The seed is the word of God. 8:12 Those along the path are the ones who have heard; then the devil[17] comes and takes away the word[18] from their hearts, so that they may not believe[19] and be saved. 8:13 Those[20] on the rock are the ones who receive the word with joy when they hear it, but they have no root. They believe for a while,[21] but[22] in a time of testing[23] fall away.[24] 8:14 As for the seed that[25] fell among thorns, these are the ones who hear, but[26] as they go on their way they are choked[27] by the worries and riches and pleasures of life,[28] and their fruit does not mature.[29] 8:15 But as for the seed that landed on good soil, these are the ones who, after hearing[30] the word, cling to it[31] with an honest and good[32] heart, and bear fruit with steadfast endurance.[33]

---

1 sn Palestinian weeds like these thorns could grow up to six feet in height and have a major root system.

2 sn That is, crowded out the good plants.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in the final stage of the parable.

4 tn Grk "when it grew, after it grew."

5 sn Unlike the parallel accounts in Matt 13:8 and Mark 4:8, there is no distinction in yield in this version of the parable.

6 tn Grk "said these things."

7 tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 14:35).

8 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

9 tn Grk "what this parable might be" (an optative after a secondary tense, in keeping with good Koine style).

10 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

11 tn This is an example of a so-called "divine passive," with God understood to be the source of the revelation (see ExSyn 437-38).

12 tn Grk "it has been given to you to know." The dative pronoun occurs first, in emphatic position in the Greek text, although this position is awkward in contemporary English.

13 tn Grk "the mysteries."

sn The key term secrets (μυστήριον, mustērion) can mean either (1) a new revelation or (2) a revealing interpretation of existing revelation as in Dan 2:17-23, 27-30. Jesus seems to be explaining how current events develop old promises, since the NT consistently links the events of Jesus' ministry and message with old promises (Rom 1:1-4; Heb 1:1-2). The traditional translation of this word, "mystery," is misleading to the modern English reader because this English word suggests a secret which people have tried to uncover but which they have failed to understand (L&N 28.77).

14 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

15 sn A quotation from Isa 6:9. Thus parables both conceal or reveal depending on whether one is open to hearing what they teach.

16 tn Grk "is," but in this context it is clearly giving an explanation of the parable.

17 sn Interestingly, the synoptic parallels each use a different word for the devil here: Matt 13:19 has "the evil one," while Mark 4:15 has "Satan." This illustrates the fluidity of the gospel tradition in often using synonyms at the same point of the parallel tradition.

18 sn The word of Jesus has the potential to save if it germinates in a person's heart, something the devil is very much against.

19 tn The participle πιστεύσαντες (pisteusantes) has been translated as a finite verb here. It may be regarded as an adverbial participle of attendant circumstance. From a logical standpoint the negative must govern both the participle and the finite verb.

20 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

21 sn This time of temporary faith represented by the description believe for a while is presented rather tragically in the passage. The seed does not get a chance to do all it can.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

23 tn Traditionally, "temptation." Such a translation puts the emphasis on temptation to sin rather than testing of faith, which is what the context seems to indicate.

24 sn Fall away. On the idea of falling away and the warnings against it, see 2 Tim 3:1; Heb 3:12; Jer 3:14; Dan 9:9.

25 tn Grk "What"; the referent (the seed) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

27 sn That is, their concern for spiritual things is crowded out by material things.

28 sn On warnings about the dangers of excessive material attachments, described here as the worries and riches and pleasures of life, see Luke 12:12-21; 16:19-31.

29 tn The verb τελεσφορέω (telesphoreō) means "to produce mature or ripe fruit" (L&N 23.203). Once again the seed does not reach its goal.

30 tn The aorist participle ἀκούσαντες (akousantes) has been taken temporally, reflecting action antecedent (prior to) that of the main verb.

31 sn There is a tenacity that is a part of spiritual fruitfulness.

32 sn In an ancient context, the qualifier good described the ethical person who possessed integrity. Here it is integrity concerning God's revelation through Jesus.

33 sn Given the pressures noted in the previous soils, bearing fruit takes time (steadfast endurance), just as it does for the farmer. See Jas 1:2-4.

Showing the Light

8:16 "No one lights[1] a lamp[2] and then covers it with a jar or puts it under a bed, but puts it on a lampstand so that those who come in can see the light.[3] 8:17 For nothing is hidden[4] that will not be revealed,[5] and nothing concealed that will not be made known and brought to light. 8:18 So listen carefully,[6] for whoever has will be given more, but[7] whoever does not have, even what he thinks he has[8] will be taken from him."

Jesus' True Family

8:19 Now Jesus'[9] mother and his brothers[10] came to him, but[11] they could not get near him because of the crowd. 8:20 So[12] he was told, "Your mother and your brothers are standing outside, wanting to see you." 8:21 But he replied[13] to them, "My mother and my brothers are those[14] who hear the word of God and do it."[15]

Stilling of a Storm

8:22 One[16] day Jesus[17] got into a boat[18] with his disciples and said to them, "Let's go across to the other side of the lake." So[19] they set out, 8:23 and as they sailed he fell asleep. Now a violent windstorm[20] came down on the lake,[21] and the boat[22] started filling up with water, and they were in danger. 8:24 They[23] came[24] and woke him, saying, "Master, Master,[25] we are about to die!" So[26] he got up and rebuked[27] the wind and the raging waves;[28] they died down, and it was calm. 8:25 Then[29] he said to them, "Where is your faith?"[30] But they were afraid and amazed,[31] saying to one another, "Who then is this? He commands even the winds and the water,[32] and they obey him!"

---

1 tn The participle ἅψας (hapsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

2 sn This is probably an ancient oil burning lamp or perhaps a candlestick. Jesus is comparing revelation to light, particularly the revelation of his ministry; see 1:78-79.

3 tn Or "its light," if the Greek article is translated as a possessive pronoun (for such usage, cf. ExSyn 215).

4 sn Nothing is hidden. Light also exposes, and Jesus was suggesting that his teaching likewise revealed where people are and where they will be. Truth will be manifest in the future, just as it was declared by him then. Nothing will be concealed.

5 tn Or "disclosed."

6 tn Or "Therefore pay close attention"; Grk "Take heed therefore how you hear."

7 tn Grk "and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

8 sn The phrase what he thinks he has is important, because it is not what a person thinks he has that is important but whether he actually has something or not. Jesus describes the person who does not heed his word as having nothing. The person who has nothing loses even that which he thought was something but was not. In other words, he has absolutely nothing at all. Jesus' teaching must be taken seriously.

9 tn Grk "his"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 sn The issue of whether Jesus had brothers (siblings) has had a long history in the church. Epiphanius, in the 4th century, argued that Mary was a perpetual virgin and had no offspring other than Jesus. Others argued that these brothers were really cousins. Nothing in the text suggests any of this. See also John 7:3.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

12 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the sequence of events.

13 tn Grk "answering, he said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "he replied."

14 tn There is some discussion about the grammar of this verse in Greek. If "these" is the subject, then it reads, "These are my mother and brothers, those who." If "these" is a nominative absolute, which is slightly more likely, then the verse more literally reads, "So my mother and brothers, they are those who." The sense in either case is the same.

15 sn Hearing and doing the word of God is another important NT theme: Luke 6:47-49; Jas 1:22-25.

16 tn Grk "Now it happened that one." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here δέ (de) has not been translated either.

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn A boat that held all the disciples would be of significant size.

19 tn Grk "lake, and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the response to Jesus' request. In addition, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

20 tn Or "a squall."

21 sn A violent windstorm came down on the lake. The Sea of Galilee is located in a depression some 700 ft (200 m) below sea level and is surrounded by hills. Frequently a rush of wind and the right mix of temperatures can cause a storm to come suddenly on the lake. Storms on the Sea of Galilee were known for their suddenness and violence.

22 tn Grk "they were being swamped," but English idiom speaks of the boat being swamped rather than the people in it, so the referent (the boat) has been supplied to reflect this usage.

23 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

24 tn The participle προσελθόντες (proselthontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 tn The double vocative shows great emotion.

26 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the connection to the preceding events.

27 tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

28 sn Who has authority over the seas and winds is discussed in the OT: Ps 104:3; 135:7; 107:23-30. When Jesus rebuked the wind and the raging waves he was making a statement about who he was.

29 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

30 sn "Where is your faith?" The call is to trust God and realize that those who exercise faith can trust in his care.

31 sn The combination of fear and respect (afraid and amazed) shows that the disciples are becoming impressed with the great power at work in Jesus, a realization that fuels their question. For a similar reaction, see Luke 5:9.

32 sn Jesus' authority over creation raised a question for the disciples about who he was exactly ("Who then is this?"). This verse shows that the disciples followed Jesus even though they did not know all about him yet.

Healing of a Demoniac

8:26 So[1] they sailed over to the region of the Gerasenes,[2] which is opposite[3] Galilee. 8:27 As[4] Jesus[5] stepped ashore,[6] a certain man from the town[7] met him who was possessed by demons.[8] For a long time this man[9] had worn no clothes and had not lived in a house, but among[10] the tombs. 8:28 When he saw[11] Jesus, he cried out, fell[12] down before him, and shouted with a loud voice, "Leave me alone,[13] Jesus, Son of the Most High[14] God! I beg you, do not torment[15] me!" 8:29 For Jesus[16] had started commanding[17] the evil[18] spirit to come out of the man. (For it had seized him many times, so[19] he would be bound with chains and shackles[20] and kept under guard. But[21] he would break the restraints and be driven by the demon into deserted[22] places.)[23] 8:30 Jesus then[24] asked him, "What is your name?" He[25] said, "Legion,"[26] because many demons had entered him. 8:31 And they began to beg[27] him not to order[28] them to depart into the abyss.[29] 8:32 Now a large herd of pigs was feeding there on the hillside,[30] and the demonic spirits[31] begged Jesus[32] to let them go into them. He gave them permission.[33] 8:33 So[34] the demons came

1 tn Grk "And." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate a summary and transition in the narrative.

2 tc The textual tradition here is quite complicated. Most MSS, especially later ones (A W Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 sy), read "Gadarenes," which is the better reading in Matt 8:28. Some MSS (𝔎 L Θ Ξ f^{1} 33 579 700* 1241 pc) have "Gergesenes." But early and important representatives of the Alexandrian and Western texttypes ($\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ B D latt) have "Gerasenes," the reading followed in the translation. The difference between Matthew and Luke may well have to do with uses of variant regional terms.

sn The region of the Gerasenes would be in Gentile territory on the (south)eastern side of the Sea of Galilee across from Galilee. Matthew 8:28 records this miracle as occurring "in the region of the Gadarenes." "Irrespective of how one settles this issue, for the Third Evangelist the chief concern is that Jesus has crossed over into Gentile territory, 'opposite Galilee'" (J. B. Green, Luke [NICNT], 337). The region of Gadara extended to the Sea of Galilee and included the town of Sennabris on the southern shore – the town that the herdsmen most likely entered after the drowning of the pigs.

3 sn That is, across the Sea of Galilee from Galilee.

4 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "stepped out on land."

7 tn Or "city."

8 tn Grk "who had demons."

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the demon-possessed man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 tn Or "in."

11 tn Grk "And seeing." The participle ἰδών (idōn) has been taken temporally. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn Grk "and fell," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

13 tn Grk "What to me and to you?" (an idiom). The phrase τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί (ti emoi kai soi) is Semitic in origin, though it made its way into colloquial Greek (BDAG 275 s.v. ἐγώ). The equivalent Hebrew expression in the OT had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12; 2 Chr 35:21; 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his own, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13; Hos 14:8). These nuances were apparently expanded in Greek, but the basic notions of defensive hostility (option 1) and indifference or disengagement (option 2) are still present. BDAG suggests the following as glosses for this expression: What have I to do with you? What have we in common? Leave me alone! Never mind! Hostility between Jesus and the demons is certainly to be understood in this context, hence the translation: "Leave me alone...."

14 sn On the title Most High see Luke 1:35.

15 sn The demons' plea "do not torment me" is a recognition of Jesus' inherent authority over evil forces. The request is that Jesus not bother them. There was an appointed time in which demons would face their judgment, and they seem to have viewed Jesus' arrival on the scene as an illegitimate change in God's plan regarding the time when their sentence would be executed.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tc ‡ Although the external evidence favors the aorist παρήγγειλεν (parēngeilen, "he commanded"; $\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ B Θ Ξ Ψ f^{13} 579 700 1241 1424 2542 pm), the internal evidence favors the imperfect παρήγγελλεν (parēngellen, here translated "he had started commanding"; 𝔎 A C K L W Γ Δ 1 33 565 892 pm). The aorist is suspect because it can more easily be taken as a single command, and thus an immediate exorcism. The imperfect would most likely be ingressive (BDF §§328; 329; 331), suggesting that Jesus started to command the evil spirit to depart, and continued the command.

18 tn Grk "unclean."

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so," introducing a clause that gives the result of the man being seized by the demon.

20 tn Or "fetters"; these were chains for the feet.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

22 tn Grk "into the deserts." The plural use here has been translated as "deserted places," that is, uninhabited areas.

23 sn This is a parenthetical, explanatory comment by the author.

24 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to pick up the sequence of the narrative prior to the parenthetical note by the author.

25 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

26 sn The name Legion means "thousands," a word taken from a Latin term for a large group of soldiers. The term not only suggests a multiple possession, but also adds a military feel to the account. This is a true battle.

27 tn One could also translate the imperfect tense here with a repetitive force like "begged him repeatedly."

28 tn Or "command."

29 tn This word, ἄβυσσος (abussos), is a term for the place where the dead await the judgment. It also could hold hostile spirits according to Jewish belief (Jub. 5:6-7; 1 En. 10:4-6; 18:11-16).

30 tn Grk "mountain," but this might give the English reader the impression of a far higher summit.

31 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the demonic spirits) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

32 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 sn Many have discussed why Jesus gave them permission, since the animals were destroyed. However, this is another example of a miracle that is a visual lesson. The demons are destructive: They were destroying the man. They destroyed the pigs. They destroy whatever they touch. The point was to take demonic influence seriously, as well as Jesus' power over it as a picture of the larger battle for human souls. There would be no doubt how the man's transformation had taken place.

34 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate a conclusion and transition in the narrative.

out of the man and went into the pigs, and the herd of pigs[1] rushed down the steep slope into the lake and drowned. 8:34 When[2] the herdsmen saw what had happened, they ran off and spread the news[3] in the town[4] and countryside. 8:35 So[5] the people went out to see what had happened, and they came to Jesus. They[6] found the man from whom the demons had gone out, sitting at Jesus' feet, clothed and in his right mind, and they were afraid. 8:36 Those[7] who had seen it told them how the man who had been demon-possessed had been healed.[8] 8:37 Then[9] all the people of the Gerasenes[10] and the surrounding region[11] asked Jesus[12] to leave them alone,[13] for they were seized with great fear.[14] So[15] he got into the boat and left.[16] 8:38 The man from whom the demons had gone out begged to go[17] with him, but Jesus[18] sent him away, saying, 8:39 "Return to your home,[19] and declare[20] what God has done for you."[21] So[22] he went away, proclaiming throughout the whole town[23] what Jesus[24] had done for him.

Restoration and Healing

8:40 Now when Jesus returned,[25] the crowd welcomed him, because they were all waiting for him. 8:41 Then[26] a man named Jairus, who was a ruler[27] of the synagogue,[28] came up. Falling[29] at Jesus' feet, he pleaded[30] with him to come to his house, 8:42 because he had an only daughter, about twelve years old, and she was dying.[31]

As Jesus was on his way, the crowds pressed[32] around him. 8:43 Now[33] a woman was there who had been suffering from a hemorrhage[34] for twelve years[35] but could not be healed by anyone. 8:44 She[36] came up behind

---

1 tn The words "of pigs" are supplied because of the following verb in English, "were drowned," which is plural.

2 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

3 tn Or "reported it." This verb is used three times in the next few verses (vv. 36, 37), showing how the healing became a major topic of conversation in the district.

4 tn Or "city."

5 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the people's response to the report.

6 tn Grk "Jesus, and they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 tn Or "had been delivered"; Grk "had been saved." This should not be understood as an expression for full salvation. They were only discussing the healing.

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

10 tc See the tc note on "Gerasenes" in v. 26 for the same geographical options for the textual variants.

11 tn Grk "all the people of the surrounding region of the Gerasenes," but according to L&N 1.80, "περίχωρος may include not only the surrounding region but also the point of reference, for example…'the Gerasenes and the people living around them' Lk 8:37."

12 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Or "to depart from them."

14 sn Again there is great fear at God's activity, but there is a different reaction. Some people want nothing to do with God's presence. Mark 5:16 hints that economic reasons motivated their request.

15 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' departure was the result of the Gerasenes' response. A new sentence was started in the translation at this point for stylistic reasons.

16 tn Grk "returned," but the effect is that he departed from the Gerasene region.

17 tn Grk "be," that is, "remain." In this context that would involve accompanying Jesus as he went on his way.

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "your house."

20 tn Or "describe."

21 sn Jesus instructs the man to declare what God has done for him, in contrast to the usual instructions (e.g., 8:56; 9:21) to remain silent. Here in Gentile territory Jesus allowed more open discussion of his ministry. D. L. Bock (Luke [BECNT], 1:781) suggests that with few Jewish religious representatives present, there would be less danger of misunderstanding Jesus' ministry as political.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the man's response to Jesus' instructions.

23 tn Or "city."

24 sn Note that the man could not separate what God had done from the one through whom God had done it (what Jesus had done for him). This man was called to witness to God's goodness at home.

25 tn This is a temporal infinitival clause in contrast to Mark's genitive absolute (Mark 5:21).

sn Here the author notes that Jesus returned to the western shore of the Sea of Galilee after his brief excursion into Gentile territory (8:26-39; cf. also Mark 5:21).

26 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

27 tn Jairus is described as ἄρχων τῆς συναγωγῆς (archōn tēs sunagōgēs), the main elder at the synagogue who was in charge of organizing the services.

28 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

29 tn Grk "and falling." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation at this point.

30 tn This verb is an imperfect tense, commonly used by Luke for vividness.

31 tn This imperfect verb could be understood ingressively: "she was beginning to die" or "was approaching death."

32 sn Pressed is a very emphatic term – the crowds were pressing in so hard that one could hardly breathe (L&N 19.48).

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

34 tn Grk "a flow of blood."

35 tc ‡ Most MSS, including the majority of later MSS (𝔎[* C] A L W Θ Ξ [Ψ] $f^{1,13}$ 33 [1424] 𝔐 [lat $sy^{c,p,h}$]) read here, "having spent all her money on doctors." Uncertainty over its authenticity is due primarily to the fact that certain important witnesses do not have the phrase (e.g., 𝔓^{75} B [D] 0279 sy^{s} sa Or). This evidence alone renders its authenticity unlikely. It may have been intentionally added by later scribes in order to harmonize Luke's account with similar material in Mark 5:26 (see TCGNT 121). NA^{27} includes the words in brackets, indicating doubt as to their authenticity.

36 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

Jesus[1] and touched the edge[2] of his cloak,[3] and at once the bleeding[4] stopped. 8:45 Then[5] Jesus asked,[6] "Who was it who touched me?" When they all denied it, Peter[7] said, "Master, the crowds are surrounding you and pressing[8] against you!" 8:46 But Jesus said, "Someone touched me, for I know that power has gone out[9] from me." 8:47 When[10] the woman saw that she could not escape notice,[11] she came trembling and fell down before him. In[12] the presence of all the people, she explained why[13] she had touched him and how she had been immediately healed. 8:48 Then[14] he said to her, "Daughter, your faith has made you well.[15] Go in peace."

8:49 While he was still speaking, someone from the synagogue ruler's[16] house came and said, "Your daughter is dead; do not trouble the teacher any longer." 8:50 But when Jesus heard this, he told[17] him, "Do not be afraid; just believe, and she will be healed."[18] 8:51 Now when he came to the house, Jesus[19] did not let anyone go in with him except Peter, John,[20] and James, and the child's father and mother. 8:52 Now they were all[21] wailing and mourning[22] for her, but he said, "Stop your weeping; she is not dead but asleep." 8:53 And they began making fun[23] of him, because they knew[24] that she was dead.[25] 8:54 But Jesus[26] gently took her by the hand and said,[27] "Child, get up." 8:55 Her[28] spirit returned,[29] and she got up immediately. Then[30] he told them to give her something to eat. 8:56 Her[31] parents were astonished, but he ordered them to tell no one[32] what had happened.

The Sending of the Twelve Apostles

9:1 After[33] Jesus[34] called[35] the twelve[36] together, he gave them power and authority over

---

1 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 sn The edge of his cloak refers to the kraspedon, the blue tassel on the garment that symbolized a Jewish man's obedience to the law (cf. Num 15:37-41). The woman thus touched the very part of Jesus' clothing that indicated his ritual purity.

3 tn Grk "garment," but here ἱμάτιον (himation) denotes the outer garment in particular.

4 tn Grk "the flow of her blood."

sn The woman was most likely suffering from a vaginal hemorrhage, in which case her bleeding would make her ritually unclean.

6 tn Grk "said."

7 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (𝔎 A C*,3 D L W Θ Ξ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt), also have "and those together with him" (with two different Greek constructions for the phrase "with him"), while several important witnesses omit this phrase (𝔓^{75} B Π 700* al sa). The singular verb εἶπεν (eipen, "he said") could possibly suggest that only Peter was originally mentioned, but, if the longer reading is authentic, then εἶπεν would focus on Peter as the spokesman for the group, highlighting his prominence (cf. ExSyn 401-2). Nevertheless, the longer reading looks like a clarifying note, harmonizing this account with Mark 5:31.

8 sn Pressing is a graphic term used in everyday Greek of pressing grapes. Peter says in effect, "How could you ask this? Everyone is touching you!"

9 tn This is a consummative perfect. Jesus sensed that someone had approached him to be healed, as his reference to power makes clear. The perception underlies Jesus' prophetic sense as well.

10 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

11 tn Or "could not remain unnoticed" (see L&N 28.83).

13 tn Grk "told for what reason."

14 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

15 tn Or "has delivered you"; Grk "has saved you." This should not be understood as an expression for full salvation in the immediate context; it refers only to the woman's healing.

16 tn That is, "the official in charge of the synagogue"; ἀρχισυνάγωγος (archisunagōgos) refers to the "president of a synagogue" (so BDAG 139 s.v. and L&N 53.93). In this case the referent is Jairus (v. 41).

17 tn Grk "answered."

18 tn Or "will be delivered"; Grk "will be saved." This should not be understood as an expression for full salvation in the immediate context; it refers only to the girl's healing.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "and John," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

21 sn This group probably includes outside or even professional mourners, not just family, because a large group seems to be present.

22 tn Grk "beating the breasts" (in mourning); see L&N 52.1.

23 tn This imperfect verb has been translated as an ingressive imperfect.

24 tn The participle εἰδότες (eidotes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle.

25 tn Or "had died."

26 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "and called, saying." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation to "and said."

28 tn Grk "And her." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

29 sn In other words, she came back to life; see Acts 20:10.

31 tn Grk "And her." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

32 sn Jesus ordered them to tell no one because he desired that miracles not become the center of his ministry.

33 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

34 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

35 tn An aorist participle preceding an aorist main verb may indicate either contemporaneous (simultaneous) action ("When he called... he gave") or antecedent (prior) action ("After he called... he gave"). The participle συγκαλεσάμενος (sunkalesamenos) has been translated here as indicating antecedent action.

36 tc Some MSS add ἀποστόλους (apostolous, "apostles"; 𝔎 C* L Θ Ψ 070 0291 f^{13} 33 579 892 1241 1424 2542 pc lat) or μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ (mathētas autou, "his disciples"; C^{3} al it) here, but such clarifying notes are clearly secondary.

all demons and to cure[1] diseases, 9:2 and he sent[2] them out to proclaim[3] the kingdom of God[4] and to heal the sick.[5] 9:3 He[6] said to them, "Take nothing for your[7] journey – no staff,[8] no bag,[9] no bread, no money, and do not take an extra tunic.[10] 9:4 Whatever[11] house you enter, stay there[12] until you leave the area.[13] 9:5 Wherever[14] they do not receive you,[15] as you leave that town,[16] shake the dust off[17] your feet as a testimony against them." 9:6 Then[18] they departed and went throughout[19] the villages, proclaiming the good news[20] and healing people everywhere.

Herod's Confusion about Jesus

9:7 Now Herod[21] the tetrarch[22] heard about everything that was happening, and he was thoroughly perplexed,[23] because some people were saying that John[24] had been raised from the dead, 9:8 while others were saying that Elijah[25] had appeared, and still others that one of the prophets of long ago had risen.[26] 9:9 Herod said, "I had John[27] beheaded, but who is this about whom I hear such things?" So Herod wanted to learn about Jesus.[28]

The Feeding of the Five Thousand

9:10 When[29] the apostles returned,[30] they told Jesus[31] everything they had done. Then[32] he took them with him and they withdrew privately to a town[33] called

---

1 sn Note how Luke distinguishes between exorcisms (authority over all demons) and diseases here.

2 sn "To send out" is often a term of divine commission in Luke: 1:19; 4:18, 43; 7:27; 9:48; 10:1, 16; 11:49; 13:34; 24:49.

3 tn Or "to preach."

4 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

5 sn As Jesus' own ministry (Luke 4:16-44) involved both word (to proclaim) and deed (to heal) so also would that of the disciples.

6 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

7 tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

8 sn Mark 6:8 allows one staff. It might be that Luke's summary (cf. Matt 10:9-10) means not taking an extra staff or that the expression is merely rhetorical for "traveling light" which has been rendered in two slightly different ways.

9 tn Or "no traveler's bag"; or possibly "no beggar's bag" (L&N 6.145; BDAG 811 s.v. πήρα).

10 tn Grk "have two tunics." See the note on the word "tunics" in 3:11.

11 tn Grk "And whatever." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

12 sn Jesus telling his disciples to stay there in one house contrasts with the practice of religious philosophers in the ancient world who went from house to house begging.

13 tn Grk "and depart from there." The literal wording could be easily misunderstood; the meaning is that the disciples were not to move from house to house in the same town or locality, but remain at the same house as long as they were in that place.

14 tn Grk "And wherever." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

15 tn Grk "all those who do not receive you."

16 tn Or "city."

17 sn To shake the dust off represented shaking off the uncleanness from one's feet; see Luke 10:11; Acts 13:51; 18:6. It was a sign of rejection.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

19 tn This is a distributive use of κατά (kata); see L&N 83:12 where this verse is cited as an example of the usage.

20 tn Or "preaching the gospel."

sn This verse is similar to Luke 9:2, except for good news at this point. The change means that to "preach the kingdom" is to "preach the good news." The ideas are interchangeable as summaries for the disciples' message. They are combined in Luke 8:1.

21 sn Herod refers here to Herod Antipas. See the note on Herod Antipas in 3:1.

22 sn See the note on tetrarch in 3:1.

23 tn Or "was very confused." See L&N 32.10 where this verse is given as an example of the usage.

24 sn John refers to John the Baptist, whom Herod had beheaded (v. 9).

25 sn The appearance of Elijah would mean that the end time had come. According to 2 Kgs 2:11, Elijah was still alive. In Mal 4:5 it is said that Elijah would be the precursor of Messiah.

26 sn The phrase had risen could be understood to mean "had been resurrected," but this is only a possible option, not a necessary one, since the phrase could merely mean that a figure had appeared on the scene who mirrored an earlier historical figure. The three options of vv. 7-8 will be repeated in v. 19.

27 tn Grk "John I beheaded"; John's name is in emphatic position in the Greek text. The verb is causative, since Herod would not have personally carried out the execution.

28 tn The expression ἐζήτει ἰδεῖν αὐτόν (ezētei idein auton, "was seeking to see him") probably indicates that Herod, for curiosity's sake or more likely for evil purposes, wanted to get to know Jesus, i.e., who he was and what he was doing. See I. H. Marshall, Luke (NIGTC), 357. Herod finally got his wish in Luke 23:6-12, with inconclusive results from his point of view.

29 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn The participle ὑποστρέψαντες (hupostrepsantes) has been taken temporally.

31 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tc There is a seeming myriad of variants for this text. Many mss read εἰς τόπον ἔρημον (eis topon erēmon, "to a deserted place"); ℵ*·2 [1241]) or εἰς τόπον ἔρημον πόλεως καλουμένης Βηθσαϊδά (eis topon erēmon poleōs kaloumenēs Bēthsaida, "to a deserted place of a town called Bethsaida"; [A] C W Ξ^{mg} [$f^{1,13}$] [565] 𝔐) here, while others have εἰς κώμην λεγομένην Βηδσαϊδά (eis kōmēn legomenēn Bēdsaida, "to a village called Bedsaida"; D), εἰς κώμην καλουμένην Βηθσαϊδά εἰς τόπον ἔρημον (eis kōmēn kaloumenēn Bēthsaida eis topon erēmon, "to a village called Bethsaida to a deserted place"; Θ), or εἰς τόπον καλουμένον Βηθσαϊδά (eis topon kaloumenon Bēthsaida, "to a place called Bethsaida"; Ψ). The Greek behind the translation (εἰς πόλιν καλουμένην Βηθσαϊδά, eis polin kaloumenēn Bēthsaida) is supported by (𝔓^{75}) ℵ^{1} B L Ξ* 33 2542 pc co. The variants can be grouped generally into those that speak of a "deserted place" and those that speak of a place/city/town called Bethsaida. The Byzantine reading is evidently a conflation of the earlier texts, and should be dismissed as secondary. The variants that speak of a deserted

Bethsaida.[1] 9:11 But when the crowds found out, they followed him. He[2] welcomed them, spoke to them about the kingdom of God,[3] and cured those who needed healing.[4] 9:12 Now the day began to draw to a close,[5] so[6] the twelve came and said to Jesus,[7] "Send the crowd away, so they can go into the surrounding villages and countryside and find lodging[8] and food, because we are in an isolated place."[9] 9:13 But he said to them, "You[10] give them something to eat." They[11] replied,[12] "We have no more than five loaves and two fish – unless[13] we go[14] and buy food[15] for all these people." 9:14 (Now about five thousand men[16] were there.)[17] Then[18] he said to his disciples, "Have[19] them sit down in groups of about fifty each." 9:15 So they did as Jesus directed,[20] and the people[21] all sat down.

9:16 Then[22] he took the five loaves and the two fish, and looking up to heaven he gave thanks[23] and broke them. He gave them to the disciples to set before the crowd. 9:17 They all ate and were satisfied, and what was left over[24] was picked up – twelve baskets of broken pieces.

Peter's Confession

9:18 Once[25] when Jesus[26] was praying[27] by himself, and his disciples were nearby, he asked them,[28] "Who do the crowds say that I am?"[29] 9:19 They[30] answered,[31] "John the Baptist; others say Elijah;[32] and still others that one of the place are an assimilation to Mark 6:32, as well a harmonization with v. 12, and should also be regarded as secondary. The reading that best explains the rise of the others – both internally and externally – is the one that stands behind the translation and is found in the text of NA[27].

tn Or "city."

1 sn Bethsaida was a town on the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee. Probably this should be understood to mean a place in the vicinity of the town. It represents an attempt to reconcile the location with the place of the miraculous feeding that follows.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

3 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

4 sn Again the combination of word (spoke to them) and healing (cured, compassionate deed) is what summarizes Jesus' ministry: See Luke 4:38-44; 6:17-19; 7:22 (as also the disciples, 9:6).

5 tn Grk "the day began to decline," looking to the approach of sunset.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that the disciples' request was related to the approach of sunset.

7 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn That is, find someone to show them hospitality. L&N 34.61 has "find lodging," using this verse as an example.

9 tn Or "in a desert" (meaning a deserted or desolate area with sparse vegetation). Here ὧδε (hōde) has not been translated.

10 tn Here the pronoun ὑμεῖς (humeis) is used, making "you" in the translation emphatic.

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn Grk "said."

13 tn This possibility is introduced through a conditional clause, but it is expressed with some skepticism (BDF §376).

14 tn The participle πορευθέντες (poreuthentes) has been taken as indicating attendant circumstance.

15 sn Not only would going and buying food have been expensive and awkward at this late time of day, it would have taken quite a logistical effort to get the food back out to this isolated location.

16 tn The Greek text reads here ἄνδρες (andres) – that is, adult males. The actual count would be larger, since the use of this Greek term suggests that women and children were not included in this number (see the parallel in Matt 14:21).

17 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

18 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

19 tn Or "Make" (depending on how the force of the imperative verb is understood). Grk "cause them to recline" (the verb has causative force here).

20 tn Grk "And they did thus." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that the disciples' action was a result of Jesus' instructions. The adverb οὕτως (houtōs, "thus") has been expanded in the translation to "as Jesus directed" to clarify what was done.

21 tn Grk "and they"; the referent (the people) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

23 sn Gave thanks adds a note of gratitude to the setting. The scene is like two other later meals: Luke 22:19 and 24:30. Jesus gives thanks to God "with respect to" the provision of food. The disciples learn how Jesus is the mediator of blessing. John 6 speaks of him in this scene as picturing the "Bread of Life."

24 sn There was more than enough for everybody, as indicated by the gathering of what was left over.

25 tn Grk "And it happened that." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

26 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 sn Prayer is a favorite theme of Luke and he is the only one of the gospel authors to mention it in the following texts (with the exception of 22:41): Luke 3:21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:28-29; 11:1; 22:41; 23:34, 46.

28 tn Grk "the disciples were with him, and he asked them, saying."

29 sn "Who do the crowds say that I am?" The question of who Jesus is occurs frequently in this section of Luke: 7:49; 8:25; 9:9. The answer resolves a major theme of Luke's Gospel.

30 tn Grk "And they." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

31 tn Grk "And answering, they said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "They answered."

prophets of long ago has risen."[1] 9:20 Then[2] he said to them, "But who do you say that I am?" Peter[3] answered,[4] "The Christ[5] of God." 9:21 But he forcefully commanded[6] them not to tell this to anyone,[7] 9:22 saying, "The Son of Man must suffer[8] many things and be rejected by the elders,[9] chief priests, and experts in the law,[10] and be killed, and on the third day be raised."[11]

A Call to Discipleship

9:23 Then[12] he said to them all,[13] "If anyone wants to become my follower,[14] he must deny[15] himself, take up his cross daily,[16] and follow me. 9:24 For whoever wants to save his life will lose it,[17] but whoever loses his life for my sake will save it. 9:25 For what does it benefit a person[18] if he gains the whole world but loses or forfeits himself? 9:26 For whoever is ashamed[19] of me and my words, the Son of Man will be ashamed of that person[20] when he comes in his glory and in the glory[21] of the Father and of the holy angels. 9:27 But I tell you most certainly,[22] there are some standing here who will not[23] experience[24] death before they see the kingdom of God."[25]

The Transfiguration

9:28 Now[26] about eight days[27] after these sayings, Jesus[28] took with him Peter, John, and James, and went up the mountain to pray. 9:29 As[29] he was praying,[30] the appearance of his face was transformed,[31] and his clothes became very

---

1 sn The phrase has risen could be understood to mean "has been resurrected," but this is only a possible option, not a necessary one, since the phrase could merely mean that a figure had appeared on the scene who mirrored an earlier historical figure. Note that the three categories in the reply match the ones in Luke 9:7-8.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

3 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

4 tn Grk "Peter answering, said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "Peter answered."

5 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

6 tn The combination of the participle and verb ἐπιτιμήσας and παρήγγειλεν (epitimēsas and parēngeilen, "commanding, he ordered") is a hendiadys that makes the instruction emphatic.

7 sn No explanation for the command not to tell this to anyone is given, but the central section of Luke, chapters 9-19, appears to reveal a reason. The disciples needed to understand who the Messiah really was and exactly what he would do before they were ready to proclaim Jesus as such. But they and the people had an expectation that needed some instruction to be correct.

8 sn The necessity that the Son of Man suffer is the particular point that needed emphasis, since for many 1st century Jews the Messiah was a glorious and powerful figure, not a suffering one.

9 sn Rejection in Luke is especially by the Jewish leadership (here elders, chief priests, and experts in the law), though in Luke 23 almost all will join in.

10 tn Or "and scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

11 sn The description of the Son of Man being rejected... killed, and...raised is the first of six passion summaries in Luke: 9:44; 17:25; 18:31-33; 24:7; 24:46-47.

12 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

13 sn Here them all could be limited to the disciples, since Jesus was alone with them in v. 18. It could also be that by this time the crowd had followed and found him, and he addressed them, or this could be construed as a separate occasion from the discussion with the disciples in 9:18-22. The cost of discipleship is something Jesus was willing to tell both insiders and outsiders about. The rejection he felt would also fall on his followers.

14 tn Grk "to come after me."

15 tn This translation better expresses the force of the Greek third person imperative than the traditional "let him deny," which could be understood as merely permissive.

16 sn Only Luke mentions taking up one's cross daily. To bear the cross means to accept the rejection of the world for turning to Jesus and following him. Discipleship involves a death that is like a crucifixion; see Gal 6:14.

17 sn The point of the saying whoever wants to save his life will lose it is that if one comes to Jesus then rejection by many will certainly follow. If self-protection is a key motivation, then one will not respond to Jesus and will not be saved. One who is willing to risk rejection will respond and find true life.

18 tn Grk "a man," but ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used in a generic sense here to refer to both men and women.

19 sn How one responds now to Jesus and his teaching is a reflection of how Jesus, as the Son of Man who judges, will respond then in the final judgment.

20 tn This pronoun (τοῦτον, touton) is in emphatic position in its own clause in the Greek text: "of that person the Son of Man will be ashamed..."

21 tn Grk "in the glory of him and of the Father and of the holy angels." "Glory" is repeated here in the translation for clarity and smoothness because the literal phrase is unacceptably awkward in contemporary English.

22 tn Grk "I tell you truly" (λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν ἀληθῶς, legō de humin alēthōs).

23 tn The Greek negative here (οὐ μή, ou mē) is the strongest possible.

24 tn Grk "will not taste." Here the Greek verb does not mean "sample a small amount" (as a typical English reader might infer from the word "taste"), but "experience something cognitively or emotionally; come to know something" (cf. BDAG 195 s.v. γεύομαι 2).

25 sn The meaning of the statement that some will not taste death before they see the kingdom of God is clear at one level, harder at another. Jesus predicts some will experience the kingdom before they die. When does this happen? (1) An initial fulfillment is the next event, the transfiguration. (2) It is also possible in Luke's understanding that all but Judas experience the initial fulfillment of the coming of God's presence and rule in the work of Acts 2. In either case, the "kingdom of God" referred to here would be the initial rather than the final phase.

26 tn Grk "Now it happened that about." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

27 tn Matt 17:1 and Mark 9:2 specify the interval more exactly, saying it was the sixth day. Luke uses ὡσεί (hōsei, "about") to give an approximate reference.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "And as." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 tn Here the preposition ἐν (en) plus the dative articular aorist infinitive has been translated as a temporal clause (ExSyn 595).

31 tn Or "the appearance of his face became different."

sn In 1st century Judaism and in the NT, there was the belief that the righteous get new, glorified bodies in order to enter heaven (1 Cor 15:42-49; 2 Cor 5:1-10). This transformation bright, a brilliant white.[1] 9:30 Then[2] two men, Moses and Elijah,[3] began talking with him.[4] 9:31 They appeared in glorious splendor and spoke about his departure[5] that he was about to carry out[6] at Jerusalem.[7] 9:32 Now Peter and those with him were quite sleepy,[8] but as they became fully awake,[9] they saw his glory and the two men standing with him. 9:33 Then[10] as the men[11] were starting to leave,[12] Peter said to Jesus, "Master, it is good for us to be here. Let us make three shelters,[13] one for you and one for Moses and one for Elijah" – not knowing what he was saying. 9:34 As[14] he was saying this, a cloud[15] came[16] and overshadowed[17] them, and they were afraid as they entered the cloud. 9:35 Then[18] a voice came from the cloud, saying, "This is my Son, my Chosen One.[19] Listen to him!"[20] 9:36 After[21] the voice had spoken, Jesus was found alone. So[22] they kept silent and told no one[23] at that time[24] anything of what they had seen.

Healing a Boy with an Unclean Spirit

9:37 Now on[25] the next day, when they had come down from the mountain, a large crowd met him. 9:38 Then[26] a man from the crowd cried out,[27] "Teacher, I beg you to look at[28] my son – he is my only child! 9:39 A[29] spirit seizes him, and he suddenly screams;[30] it throws him means the righteous will share the glory of God. One recalls the way Moses shared the Lord's glory after his visit to the mountain in Exod 34. So the disciples saw the appearance of his face transformed, and they were getting a sneak preview of the great glory that Jesus would have (only his glory is more inherent to him as one who shares in the rule of the kingdom).

[1] tn Or "became bright as a flash of lightning" (cf. BDAG 346 s.v. ἐξαστράπτω); or "became brilliant as light" (cf. BDAG 593 s.v. λευκός 1).

[2] tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[3] sn Commentators and scholars discuss why Moses and Elijah are present. The most likely explanation is that Moses represents the prophetic office (Acts 3:18-22) and Elijah pictures the presence of the last days (Mal 4:5-6), the prophet of the eschaton (the end times).

[4] tn Grk "two men were talking with him, who were Moses and Elijah." The relative clause has been simplified to an appositive and transposed in keeping with contemporary English style.

[5] tn Grk "his exodus," which refers to Jesus' death in Jerusalem and journey back to glory. Here is the first lesson that the disciples must learn. The wondrous rule comes only after suffering.

[6] tn Or "accomplish," "bring to completion."

[7] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[8] tn Grk "weighed down with sleep" (an idiom).

[9] tn Or "after they became fully awake," "but they became fully awake and saw."

[10] tn Grk "And it happened that as." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[11] tn Grk "as they"; the referent ("the men," referring to Moses and Elijah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[12] tn Grk "to leave from him."

[13] tn Or "booths," "dwellings" (referring to the temporary booths constructed in the celebration of the feast of Tabernacles).

sn By making three shelters Peter apparently wanted to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles or Booths that looked forward to the end and to treat Moses, Elijah, and Jesus as equals. It was actually a way of expressing honor to Jesus, but the remark at the end of the verse makes it clear that it was not enough honor.

[14] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[15] sn This cloud is the cloud of God's presence and the voice is his as well.

[16] tn Or "appeared."

[17] tn Or "surrounded."

[19] tc Most mss, especially the later ones, have ἀγαπητός (agapētos, "the one I love"; A C* W f^{13} 33 𝔐 it), or ἀγαπητὸς ἐν ᾧ (ἡ)υδόκησα (agapētos en hō (ē)udokēsa, "the one I love, in whom I am well pleased"; C^3 D Ψ pc) here, instead of ἐκλελεγμένος (eklelegmenos, "the Chosen One"), but these variants are probably assimilations to Matt 17:5 and Mark 9:7. The text behind the translation also enjoys excellent support from $𝔓^{45.75}$ ℵ B L Ξ (579) 892 1241 pc co.

tn The participle ὁ ἐκλελεγμένος (ho eklelegmenos), which could be translated "the One who has been chosen," is best understood as a title rather than a descriptive phrase, probably deriving from Isa 42:1 (LXX) which uses the similar ὁ ἐκλεκτός (ho eklektos) which also appears in Luke 23:35.

sn This divine endorsement is like Luke 3:22 at Jesus' baptism. One difference here is the mention of the Chosen One, a reference to the unique and beloved role of the regal, messianic Son.

[20] sn The expression listen to him comes from Deut 18:15 and makes two points: 1) Jesus is a prophet like Moses, a leader-prophet, and 2) they have much yet to learn from him.

[21] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[22] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the concluding summary of the account.

[23] sn Although the disciples told no one at the time, later they did recount this. The commentary on this scene is 2 Pet 1:17-18.

[24] tn Grk "in those days."

[25] tn Grk "Now it happened that on." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[26] tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the somewhat unexpected appearance of the man. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[27] tn Grk "cried out, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[28] tn This verb means "to have regard for"; see Luke 1:48.

[29] tn Grk "and behold, a." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, καί (kai) has not been translated here; instead a new sentence was started in the translation. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[30] tn The Greek here is slightly ambiguous; the subject of the verb "screams" could be either the son or the spirit.

into convulsions[1] and causes him to foam at the mouth. It hardly ever leaves him alone, torturing[2] him severely. 9:40 I[3] begged[4] your disciples to cast it out, but[5] they could not do so."[6] 9:41 Jesus answered,[7] "You[8] unbelieving[9] and perverse generation! How much longer[10] must I be with you and endure[11] you?[12] Bring your son here." 9:42 As[13] the boy[14] was approaching, the demon threw him to the ground[15] and shook him with convulsions.[16] But Jesus rebuked[17] the unclean[18] spirit, healed the boy, and gave him back to his father. 9:43 Then[19] they were all astonished at the mighty power[20] of God.

Another Prediction of Jesus' Suffering

But while the entire crowd[21] was amazed at everything Jesus[22] was doing, he said to his disciples, 9:44 "Take these words to heart,[23] for the Son of Man is going to be betrayed into the hands of men."[24] 9:45 But they did not understand this statement; its meaning[25] had been concealed[26] from them, so that they could not grasp it. Yet[27] they were afraid to ask him about this statement.

Concerning the Greatest

9:46 Now an argument started among the disciples[28] as to which of them might be[29] the greatest. 9:47 But when Jesus discerned their innermost thoughts,[30] he took a child, had him stand by[31] his side, 9:48 and said to them, "Whoever welcomes[32] this child[33] in my name welcomes me, and whoever welcomes me welcomes the one who sent me, for the one who is least among you all is the one who is great."[34]

---

1 sn The reaction is like an epileptic fit (see L&N 14.27). See the parallel in Matt 17:14-20.

2 tn Or "bruising," or "crushing." This verb appears to allude to the damage caused when it throws him to the ground. According to L&N 19.46 it is difficult to know from this verb precisely what the symptoms caused by the demon were, but it is clear they must have involved severe pain. The multiple details given in the account show how gruesome the condition of the boy was.

3 tn Grk "And I." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, καί (kai) has not been translated here; instead a new sentence was started in the translation.

4 sn Note the repetition of the verb from v. 38, an indication of the father's desperation.

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

6 tn The words "do so" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity and stylistic reasons.

7 tn Grk "And answering, Jesus said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "Jesus answered." Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 tn Grk "O." The marker of direct address, ὦ (ō), is functionally equivalent to a vocative and is represented in the translation by "you."

9 tn Or "faithless."

sn The rebuke for lack of faith has OT roots: Num 14:27; Deut 32:5, 30; Isa 59:8.

10 tn Grk "how long."

11 tn Or "and put up with." See Num 11:12; Isa 46:4.

12 sn The pronouns you...you are plural, indicating that Jesus is speaking to a group rather than an individual.

13 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the boy) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 sn At this point the boy was thrown down in another convulsion by the demon. See L&N 23.168.

16 tn See L&N 23.167-68, where the second verb συσπαράσσω (susparassō) is taken to mean the violent shaking associated with the convulsions, thus the translation here "and shook him with convulsions."

17 tn Or "commanded" (often with the implication of a threat, L&N 33.331).

18 sn This is a reference to an evil spirit. See Luke 4:33.

19 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the response at the conclusion of the account.

20 sn The revelation of the mighty power of God was the manifestation of God's power shown through Jesus. See Acts 10:38.

21 tn Grk "all"; the referent (the crowd) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 tc Most MSS, especially the later ones (A C W Θ Ψ 0115 f^{13} 33 892 𝔐 al), actually supply ὁ Ἰησοῦς (ho Iēsous, "Jesus") here. Since the earliest and best witnesses, along with many others (𝔓^{75} ℵ B D L Ξ f^{1} 579 700 1241 2542 pc lat), lack the name, and since scribes were unlikely to intentionally omit it, the shorter reading is preferred as the original reading.

tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Some MSS have done the same.

23 tn Grk "Place these words into your ears," an idiom. The meaning is either "do not forget these words" (L&N 29.5) or "Listen carefully to these words" (L&N 24.64). See also Exod 17:14. For a variation of this expression, see Luke 8:8.

24 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is considered by some to be used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NRSV, "into human hands"; TEV, "to the power of human beings"). However, because this can be taken as a specific reference to the group responsible for Jesus' arrest, where it is unlikely women were present (cf. Matt 26:47-56; Mark 14:43-52; Luke 22:47-53; John 18:2-12), the word "men" has been retained in the translation. There may also be a slight wordplay with "the Son of Man" earlier in the verse.

25 tn Grk "it"; the referent (the meaning of the statement) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 sn The passive verb had been concealed probably indicates that some force was preventing them from responding. It is debated whether God or Satan is meant here. By 24:25 it is clear that their lack of response is their own responsibility. The only way to reverse this is to pay careful attention as v. 44a urges.

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate that in spite of their lack of understanding, the disciples were afraid to ask about it. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

28 tn Grk "among them"; the referent (the disciples) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn The use of the optative mood means the answer is not clear (BDF §§267.2.3; 385.2.2).

30 tn Grk "knowing the thoughts of their hearts" (an idiom).

31 tn On this use of παρά (para), see BDF §239.1.1.

32 tn This verb, δέχομαι (dechomai), is a term of hospitality (L&N 34.53).

33 sn Children were very insignificant in ancient culture, so this child would be the perfect object lesson to counter the disciples' selfish ambitions.

34 tn Grk "among you all, this one is great." The absence of a comparative term here makes the point that comparison should not be done.

On the Right Side

9:49 John answered,[1] "Master, we saw someone casting out demons in your name, and we tried to stop[2] him because he is not a disciple[3] along with us." 9:50 But Jesus said to him, "Do not stop him, for whoever is not against you is for you."

Rejection in Samaria

9:51 Now when[4] the days drew near[5] for him to be taken up,[6] Jesus[7] set out resolutely[8] to go to Jerusalem.[9] 9:52 He[10] sent messengers on ahead of him.[11] As they went along,[12] they entered a Samaritan village to make things ready in advance[13] for him, 9:53 but the villagers[14] refused to welcome[15] him, because he was determined to go to Jerusalem.[16] 9:54 Now when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, "Lord, do you want us to call fire to come down from heaven and consume[17] them?"[18] 9:55 But Jesus[19] turned and rebuked them,[20] 9:56 and they went on to another village.

Challenging Professed Followers

9:57 As[21] they were walking[22] along the road, someone said to him, "I will follow you wherever you go."[23] 9:58 Jesus said to him, "Foxes have dens and the birds in the sky[24] have nests, but the Son of Man has no place to lay his head."[25] 9:59 Jesus[26] said to another, "Follow me." But he replied,[27] "Lord, first let me go and bury my father." 9:60 But Jesus[28] said to him, "Let the dead bury their own dead,[29] but as for

---

1 tn Grk "And answering, John said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "John answered." Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 tc The translation follows the reading that has Luke's normal imperfect here (ἐκωλύομεν, ekōluomen; found in 𝔓75vid ℵ B L Ξ 579 892 1241). Most mss, however, have an aorist (ἐκωλύσαμεν, ekōlusamen; found in A C D W Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 co), which would be translated "we forbade him." The imperfect enjoys the best external and internal support.

3 tn Grk "does not follow with us." BDAG 36 s.v. ἀκολουθέω 2 indicates that the pronoun σοι (soi, "you") is to be supplied after the verb in this particular instance; the translation in the text best represents this nuance.

4 tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "the days were being fulfilled." There is literary design here. This starts what has been called in the Gospel of Luke the "Jerusalem Journey." It is not a straight-line trip, but a journey to meet his fate (Luke 13:31-35).

6 sn Taken up is a reference to Jesus' upcoming return to heaven by crucifixion and resurrection (compare Luke 9:31). This term was used in the LXX of Elijah's departure in 2 Kgs 2:9.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Grk "he set his face," a Semitic idiom that speaks of a firm, unshakable resolve to do something (Gen 31:21; Isa 50:7).

9 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

10 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

11 tn Grk "sent messengers before his face," an idiom.

12 tn Grk "And going along, they entered." The aorist passive participle πορευθέντες (poreuthentes) has been taken temporally. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

13 tn Or "to prepare (things) for him."

14 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the villagers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn Or "did not receive"; this verb, δέχομαι (dechomai), is a term of hospitality or welcome (L&N 34.53).

16 tn Grk "because his face was set toward Jerusalem."

sn Jerusalem is to be the place of rejection, as Luke 9:44 suggested. Jesus had resolved to meet his fate in Jerusalem, so the rejection was no surprise.

17 tn Or "destroy."

18 tc Most mss, especially the later ones (A C D W Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 it), read here "as also Elijah did," making the allusion to 2 Kgs 1:10, 12, 14 more explicit. The shorter reading has better and earlier support (𝔓45.75 ℵ B L Ξ 579 700* 1241 pc lat sa). It is difficult to explain how the shorter reading could have arisen from the longer, especially since it is well represented early on. However, the longer reading looks to have been a marginal note originally, incorporated into the text of Luke by early scribes.

sn An allusion to 2 Kgs 1:10, 12, 14.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tc Many mss ([D] K Γ Θ $f^{1.13}$ [579] 700 2542 pm it) have at the end of the verse (with slight variations) "and he said, 'You do not know what sort of spirit you are of, for the Son of Man did not come to destroy people's lives, but to save [them].'" This variant is clearly secondary, as it gives some content to the rebuke. Further, it is difficult to explain how such rich material would have been omitted by the rest of the witnesses, including the earliest and best mss.

sn The point of the rebuke is that now was not the time for judgment but patience; see 2 Pet 3:9.

21 tn Grk "And as." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 tn Grk "going," but "walking" is an accurate description of how they traveled about.

23 tc Most mss (A C W Θ Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐) add κύριε (kurie, "Lord") here, but scribes were prone to add to the text, especially appellations for the Lord. The shorter reading also enjoys significant ms support (𝔓45.75 ℵ B D L Ξ f^{1} lat co).

sn The statement "I will follow you wherever you go" is an offer to follow Jesus as a disciple, no matter what the cost.

24 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

25 sn Jesus' reply is simply this: Does the man understand the rejection he will be facing? Jesus has no home in the world (the Son of Man has no place to lay his head).

26 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

27 tn Grk "said."

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 sn There are several options for the meaning of Jesus' reply Leave the dead to bury their own dead: (1) Recent research suggests that burial customs in the vicinity of Jerusalem from about 20 b.c. to a.d. 70 involved a reinterment of the bones a year after the initial burial, once the flesh had rotted away. At that point the son would have placed his father's bones in a special box known as an ossuary to be set into the wall of the tomb. Thus Jesus could well be rebuking the man for wanting to wait around for as much as a year before making a commitment to follow him. In 1st century Jewish culture, to have followed Jesus rather than burying one's father would have seriously dishonored one's father (cf. Tobit 4:3-4). (2) The remark is an idiom (possibly a proverbial saying) that means, "The matter in question is not the real issue," in which case Jesus was making a wordplay on the wording of the man's (literal) request (see L&N 33.137). (3) This remark could be a figurative reference to various kinds you, go and proclaim the kingdom of God.”[1] 9:61 Yet[2] another said, “I will follow you, Lord, but first let me say goodbye to my family.”[3] 9:62 Jesus[4] said to him, “No one who puts his[5] hand to the plow and looks back[6] is fit for the kingdom of God.”[7]

The Mission of the Seventy-Two

10:1 After this[8] the Lord appointed seventy-two[9] others and sent them on ahead of him two by two into every town[10] and place where he himself was about to go. 10:2 He[11] said to them, “The harvest is plentiful, but the workers are few. Therefore ask the Lord of the harvest[12] to send out[13] workers into his harvest. 10:3 Go! I[14] am sending you out like lambs[15] surrounded by wolves.[16] 10:4 Do not carry[17] a money bag,[18] a traveler’s bag,[19] or sandals, and greet no one on the road.[20] 10:5 Whenever[21] you enter a house,[22] first say, ‘May peace[23] be on this house!’ 10:6 And if a peace-loving person[24] is there, your peace will remain on him, but if not, it will return to you.[25] 10:7 Stay[26] in that same house, eating and drinking what they give you,[27] for the worker deserves his pay.[28] Do not move around from house to house. 10:8 Whenever[29] you enter a town[30] and the people[31] welcome you, eat what is set before you. 10:9 Heal[32] the sick in that town[33] and say to them, ‘The kingdom of God[34] has come upon[35] you!’

of people, meaning, “Let the spiritually dead bury the dead.” (4) It could also be literal and designed to shock the hearer by the surprise of the contrast. Whichever option is preferred, it is clear that the most important priority is to preach the gospel (proclaim the kingdom of God).

[1] sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

[2] tn Grk “And another also said.”

[3] tn Grk “to those in my house.”

[4] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[5] tn Grk “the”; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[6] sn Jesus warns that excessive concern for family ties (looks back) will make the kingdom a lesser priority, which is not appropriate for discipleship. The image is graphic, for who can plow straight ahead toward a goal while looking back? Discipleship cannot be double-minded.

[7] sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

[8] tn Grk “And after these things.” Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[9] tc There is a difficult textual problem here and in v. 17, where the number is either “seventy” (א A C L W Θ Ξ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 and several church fathers and early versions) or “seventy-two” (𝔓^{75} B D 0181 pc lat as well as other versions and fathers). The more difficult reading is “seventy-two,” since scribes would be prone to assimilate this passage to several OT passages that refer to groups of seventy people (Num 11:13-17; Deut 10:22; Judg 8:30; 2 Kgs 10:1 et al.); this reading also has slightly better ms support. “Seventy” could be the preferred reading if scribes drew from the tradition of the number of translators of the LXX, which the Letter of Aristeas puts at seventy-two (TCGNT 127), although this is far less likely. All things considered, “seventy-two” is a much more difficult reading and accounts for the rise of the other. Only Luke notes a second larger mission like the one in 9:1-6.

[10] tn Or “city.”

[11] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[12] sn The phrase Lord of the harvest recognizes God’s sovereignty over the harvest process.

[13] tn Grk “to thrust out.”

[14] tn Grk “Behold I.” The Greek word ἰδού (idou) has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[15] sn On the imagery of lambs see Isa 40:11, Ezek 34:11-31, and John 10:1-18.

[16] sn This imagery of wolves is found in intertestamental Judaism as well; see Pss. Sol. 8:23.

[17] sn On the command Do not carry see Luke 9:3. The travel instructions communicate a note of urgency and stand in contrast to philosophical teachers, who often took a bag. There is no ostentation in this ministry.

[18] tn Traditionally, “a purse.”

[19] tn Or possibly “a beggar’s bag” (L&N 6.145; BDAG 811 s.v. πήρα).

[20] tn Or “no one along the way.”

[21] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[22] tn Grk “Into whatever house you enter.” This acts as a distributive, meaning every house they enter; this is expressed more naturally in English as “whenever you enter a house.”

[23] sn The statement ‘May peace be on this house!’ is really a benediction, asking for God’s blessing. The requested shalom (peace) is understood as coming from God.

[24] tn Grk “a son of peace,” a Hebrew idiom for a person of a certain class or kind, as specified by the following genitive construction (in this case, “of peace”). Such constructions are discussed further in L&N 9.4. Here the expression refers to someone who responds positively to the disciples’ message, like “wisdom’s child” in Luke 7:30.

[25] sn The response to these messengers determines how God’s blessing is bestowed – if they are not welcomed with peace, their blessing will return to them. Jesus shows just how important their mission is by this remark.

[26] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[27] tn Grk “eating and drinking the things from them” (an idiom for what the people in the house provide the guests).

[28] sn On the phrase the worker deserves his pay see 1 Tim 5:18 and 1 Cor 9:14.

[29] tn Grk “And whatever town you enter,” but this is more often expressed in English as “whenever you enter a town.” Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[30] tn Or “city.” Jesus now speaks of the town as a whole, as he will in vv. 10-12.

[31] tn Grk “and they”; the referent (the people who live in the town) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[32] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

sn Ministry (heal the sick) is to take place where it is well received (note welcome in the preceding verse).

[33] tn Grk “in it”; the referent (that town) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[35] tn Or “come near to you,” suggesting the approach (but not arrival) of the kingdom. But the combination of the perfect tense of ἐγγίζω (engizō) with the preposition ἐπί (epi) most likely suggests that the sense is “has come upon” (see BDAG 270 s.v. ἐγγίζω 2; W. R. Hutton, “The Kingdom of God Has Come,” ExpTim 64 [Dec 1952]: 89-91; and D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 2:1000; cf. also NAB “is at hand for you”). These passages argue that a key element of the kingdom is

10:10 But whenever[1] you enter a town[2] and the people[3] do not welcome[4] you, go into its streets[5] and say, 10:11 'Even the dust of your town[6] that clings to our feet we wipe off[7] against you.[8] Nevertheless know this: The kingdom of God has come.'[9] 10:12 I tell you, it will be more bearable on that day for Sodom[10] than for that town![11]

10:13 "Woe to you, Chorazin![12] Woe to you, Bethsaida! For if[13] the miracles[14] done in you had been done in Tyre[15] and Sidon,[16] they would have repented long ago, sitting in sackcloth and ashes. 10:14 But it will be more bearable for Tyre and Sidon in the judgment than for you! 10:15 And you, Capernaum,[17] will you be exalted to heaven?[18] No, you will be thrown down to Hades![19]

10:16 "The one who listens[20] to you listens to me,[21] and the one who rejects you rejects me, and the one who rejects me rejects[22] the one who sent me."[23]

10:17 Then[24] the seventy-two[25] returned with joy, saying, "Lord, even the demons submit to[26] us in your name!"[27] 10:18 So[28] he said to them, "I saw[29] Satan fall[30] like lightning[31] from heaven. 10:19 Look, I have given you authority to tread[32] on snakes and scorpions[33] and on the full force of the enemy,[34] and nothing will[35] hurt you. 10:20 Nevertheless, do not rejoice that[36] the its ability to overcome the power of Satan and those elements in the creation that oppose humanity. Confirmation of this understanding comes in v. 18 and in Luke 11:14-23, especially the parable of vv. 21-23.

[1] tn Grk "whatever town you enter," but this is more often expressed in English as "whenever you enter a town."

[2] tn Or "city."

[3] tn Grk "and they"; the referent (the people who live in the town) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] sn More discussion takes place concerning rejection (the people do not welcome you), as these verses lead into the condemnation of certain towns for their rejection of God's kingdom.

[5] tn The term πλατεῖα (plateia) refers to the "broad street," so this refers to the main roads of the town.

[6] tn Or "city."

[7] sn See Luke 9:5, where the verb is different but the meaning is the same. This was a sign of rejection.

[8] tn Here ὑμῖν (humin) has been translated as a dative of disadvantage.

[9] tn Or "has come near." As in v. 9 (see above), the combination of ἐγγίζω (engizō) with the preposition ἐπί (epi) is decisive in showing that the sense is "has come" (see BDAG 270 s.v. ἐγγίζω 2, and W. R. Hutton, "The Kingdom of God Has Come," ExpTim 64 [Dec 1952]: 89-91).

[10] sn The allusion to Sodom, the most wicked of OT cities from Gen 19:1-29, shows that to reject the current message is even more serious than the worst sins of the old era and will result in more severe punishment. The noun Sodom is in emphatic position in the Greek text.

[11] tn Or "city."

[12] sn Chorazin was a town of Galilee that was probably fairly small in contrast to Bethsaida and is otherwise unattested. Bethsaida was declared a polis by the tetrarch Herod Philip, sometime after A.D. 30.

[13] tn This introduces a second class (contrary to fact) condition in the Greek text.

[14] tn Or "powerful deeds."

[15] map For location see Map1-A2; Map2-G2; Map4-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

map For location see Map1-A1; JP3-F3; JP4-F3.

[17] sn Capernaum was a town on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee, 680 ft (204 m) below sea level. It was a major trade and economic center in the North Galilean region.

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

[18] tn The interrogative particle introducing this question expects a negative reply.

[19] sn In the OT, Hades was known as Sheol. It is the place where the unrighteous will reside (Matt 11:23; Luke 16:23; Rev 20:13-14).

[20] tn Grk "hears you," but as the context of vv. 8-9 makes clear, it is response that is the point. In contemporary English, "listen to" is one way to express this function (L&N 31.56).

[21] sn Jesus linked himself to the disciples' message: Responding to the disciples (listens to you) counts as responding to him.

[22] tn The double mention of rejection in this clause – ἀθετῶν ἀθετεῖ (athetōn athetei) in the Greek text – keeps up the emphasis of the section.

[23] sn The one who sent me refers to God.

[24] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[25] tc See the tc note on the number "seventy-two" in Luke 10:1.

[26] tn Or "the demons obey"; see L&N 36.18.

[27] tn The prepositional phrase "in your name" indicates the sphere of authority for the messengers' work of exorcism.

[28] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' reply in vv. 18-20 follows from the positive report of the messengers in v. 17.

[29] tn This is an imperfect tense verb.

[30] tn In Greek, this is a participle and comes at the end of the verse, making it somewhat emphatic.

[31] tn This is probably best taken as allusion to Isa 14:12; the phrase in common is ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ (ek tou ouranou). These exorcisms in Jesus' name are a picture of Satan's greater defeat at Jesus' hands (D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 2:1006-7).

[32] tn Or perhaps, "trample on" (which emphasizes the impact of the feet on the snakes). See L&N 15.226.

[33] sn Snakes and scorpions are examples of the hostility in the creation that is defeated by Jesus. The use of battle imagery shows who the kingdom fights against. See Acts 28:3-6.

[34] tn Or "I have given you authority to tread on snakes and scorpions, and [authority] over the full force of the enemy." The second prepositional phrase can be taken either as modifying the infinitive πατεῖν (patein, "to tread") or the noun ἐξουσίαν (exousian, "power"). The former is to be preferred and has been represented in the translation.

sn The enemy is a reference to Satan (mentioned in v. 18).

[35] tn This is an emphatic double negative in the Greek text.

[36] tn Grk "do not rejoice in this, that." This is awkward in contemporary English and has been simplified to "do not rejoice that."

spirits submit to you, but rejoice[1] that your names stand written[2] in heaven."

10:21 On that same occasion[3] Jesus[4] rejoiced[5] in the Holy Spirit and said, "I praise[6] you, Father, Lord[7] of heaven and earth, because[8] you have hidden these things from the wise[9] and intelligent, and revealed them to little children. Yes, Father, for this was your gracious will.[10] 10:22 All things have been given to me by my Father.[11] No one knows who the Son is except the Father, or who the Father is except the Son and anyone to whom the Son decides[12] to reveal him."

10:23 Then[13] Jesus[14] turned[15] to his[16] disciples and said privately, "Blessed[17] are the eyes that see what you see! 10:24 For I tell you that many prophets and kings longed to see[18] what you see but did not see it, and to hear what you hear but did not hear it."

The Parable of the Good Samaritan

10:25 Now[19] an expert in religious law[20] stood up to test Jesus,[21] saying, "Teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"[22] 10:26 He said to him, "What is written in the law? How do you understand it?"[23] 10:27 The expert[24] answered, "Love[25] the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your strength, and with all your mind,[26] and love your neighbor as yourself."[27] 10:28 Jesus[28] said to him, "You have answered correctly;[29] do this, and you will live."

10:29 But the expert,[30] wanting to justify[31] himself, said to Jesus, "And who is my neighbor?" 10:30 Jesus replied,[32] "A man was going down[33] from Jerusalem[34] to Jericho,[35] and fell into the hands of robbers, who stripped him,

[1] tn The verb here is a present imperative, so the call is to an attitude of rejoicing.

[2] tn The verb here, a perfect tense, stresses a present reality of that which was a completed action, that is, their names were etched in the heavenly stone, as it were.

[3] tn Grk "In that same hour" (L&N 67.1).

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] sn Jesus rejoiced. The account of the mission in 10:1-24 ends with several remarks about joy.

[6] tn Or "thank."

[7] sn The title Lord is an important name for God, showing his sovereignty, but it is interesting that it comes next to a reference to the Father, a term indicative of God's care. The two concepts are often related in the NT; see Eph 1:3-6.

[8] tn Or "that."

[9] sn See 1 Cor 1:26-31.

[10] tn Grk "for (to do) thus was well pleasing before you," BDAG 325 s.v. ἔμπροσθεν 1.δ; speaking of something taking place "before" God is a reverential way of avoiding direct connection of the action to him.

[11] sn This verse has been noted for its conceptual similarity to teaching in John's Gospel (10:15; 17:2). The authority of the Son and the Father are totally intertwined.

[12] tn Or "wishes"; or "intends"; or "plans" (cf. BDAG 182 s.v. βούλομαι 2.b). Here it is the Son who has sovereignty.

[13] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[14] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn Grk "turning to the disciples, he said." The participle στραφείς (strapheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

[16] tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[17] sn This beatitude highlights the great honor bestowed on the disciples to share in this salvation, as v. 20 also noted. See also Luke 2:30.

[18] sn This is what past prophets and kings had wanted very much to see, yet the fulfillment had come to the disciples. This remark is like 1 Pet 1:10-12 or Heb 1:1-2.

[19] tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[20] tn Traditionally, "a lawyer." This was an expert in the interpretation of the Mosaic law (see also Luke 7:30, where the same term occurs).

[21] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] sn The combination of inherit with eternal life asks, in effect, "What must I do to be saved?"

[23] tn Grk "How do you read?" The pronoun "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[24] tn Grk "And he"; the referent (the expert in religious law, shortened here to "the expert") has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[25] tn Grk "You will love." The future indicative is used here with imperatival force (see ExSyn 452 and 569).

[26] sn A quotation from Deut 6:5. The fourfold reference to different parts of the person says, in effect, that one should love God with all one's being.

[27] tn This portion of the reply is a quotation from Lev 19:18. The verb is repeated in the translation for stylistic reasons.

[28] tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[29] sn Jesus commends the reply (you have answered correctly). What is assumed here, given the previous context, is that he will respond to Jesus' message, as to love God is to respond to his Son; see v. 22.

[30] tn Grk "And he"; the referent (the expert in religious law, shortened here to "the expert") has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[31] tn Or "vindicate."

sn The expert in religious law picked up on the remark about the neighbor and sought to limit his responsibility for loving. Some believed this obligation would only be required toward the righteous (Sir 12:1-4). The lawyer was trying to see if that was right and thus confidently establish his righteousness (wanting to justify himself).

[32] tn Grk "answering, said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "replied."

[33] sn The journey from Jerusalem to Jericho was 17 mi (27 km), descending some 1800 ft (540 m) in altitude. It was known for its danger because the road ran through areas of desert and caves where the robbers hid.

[34] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

beat[1] him up, and went off, leaving him half dead.[2] 10:31 Now by chance[3] a priest was going down that road, but[4] when he saw the injured man[5] he passed by[6] on the other side.[7] 10:32 So too a Levite, when he came up to[8] the place and saw him,[9] passed by on the other side. 10:33 But[10] a Samaritan[11] who was traveling[12] came to where the injured man[13] was, and when he saw him, he felt compassion for him.[14] 10:34 He[15] went up to him[16] and bandaged his wounds, pouring oil[17] and wine on them. Then[18] he put him on[19] his own animal,[20] brought him to an inn, and took care of him. 10:35 The[21] next day he took out two silver coins[22] and gave them to the innkeeper, saying, 'Take care of him, and whatever else you spend, I will repay you when I come back this way.'[23] 10:36 Which of these three do you think became a neighbor[24] to the man who fell into the hands of the robbers?" 10:37 The expert in religious law[25] said, "The one who showed mercy[26] to him." So[27] Jesus said to him, "Go and do[28] the same."

Jesus and Martha

10:38 Now as they went on their way, Jesus[29] entered a certain village where a woman named Martha welcomed him as a guest.[30] 10:39 She[31] had a sister named Mary, who sat[32] at the Lord's feet[33] and listened to what he said. 10:40 But Martha was distracted[34] with all the preparations

---

1 tn Grk "and beat," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

2 sn That is, in a state between life and death; severely wounded.

3 sn The phrase by chance adds an initial note of hope and fortune to the expectation in the story.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context between the priest's expected action (helping the victim) and what he really did.

5 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the injured man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 sn It is not said why the priest passed by and refused to help. It is not relevant to the point of the parable that no help was given in the emergency situation.

7 sn The text suggests that the priest went out of his way (on the other side) not to get too close to the scene.

8 tn Here κατά (kata) has been translated "up to"; it could also be translated "upon."

9 tn The clause containing the aorist active participle ἐλθών (elthōn) suggests that the Levite came up to the place, took a look, and then moved on.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context between the previous characters (considered by society to be examples of piety and religious duty) and a hated Samaritan.

11 tn This is at the beginning of the clause, in emphatic position in the Greek text.

12 tn The participle ὁδεύων (hodeuōn) has been translated as an adjectival participle (cf. NAB, NASB, TEV); it could also be taken temporally ("while he was traveling," cf. NRSV, NIV).

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the injured man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn "Him" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The verb means "to feel compassion for," and the object of the compassion is understood.

sn Here is what made the Samaritan different: He felt compassion for him. In the story, compassion becomes the concrete expression of love. The next verse details explicitly six acts of compassion.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Instead, because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

16 tn The words "to him" are not in the Greek text but are implied. The participle προσελθών (proselthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

17 sn The ancient practice of pouring oil was designed to comfort and clean the wounds (Isa 1:6).

18 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. Because of the length and complexity of this Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

19 tn It is not clear whether the causative nuance of the verb included actual assistance or not ("helped him on" versus "had him get on"; see L&N 15.98), but in light of the severity of the man's condition as described in the preceding verses, some degree of assistance was almost certainly needed.

20 sn His own animal refers to a riding animal, presumably a donkey, but not specified.

21 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 tn Grk "two denarii."

sn The two silver coins were denarii. A denarius was a silver coin worth about a day's pay for a laborer; this would be an amount worth about two days' pay.

23 tn Grk "when I come back"; the words "this way" are part of an English idiom used to translate the phrase.

24 sn Jesus reversed the question the expert in religious law asked in v. 29 to one of becoming a neighbor by loving. "Do not think about who they are, but who you are," was his reply.

25 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (the expert in religious law) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

26 sn The neighbor did not do what was required (that is why his response is called mercy) but had compassion and out of kindness went the extra step that shows love. See Mic 6:8. Note how the expert in religious law could not bring himself to admit that the example was a Samaritan, someone who would have been seen as a racial half-breed and one not worthy of respect. So Jesus makes a second point that neighbors may appear in surprising places.

27 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the concluding summary.

28 tn This recalls the verb of the earlier reply in v. 28.

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

30 tc Most MSS have "into the house" (𝔓^{3vid} ℵ C L Ξ 33 579 pc) or "into her house" (ℵ^{1} A C^{2} D W Θ Ψ 070 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat) at the end of the sentence. But the English translation masks the multitude of variants: Different forms of "house" (οἰκίαν [oikian], οἶκον [oikon]) and "her" occur (see TCGNT 129). These variations argue against authenticity; they no doubt arose because of the abrupt ending of the sentence (the Greek is more literally translated simply as "Martha received him"), prompting copyists to add the location. The shorter reading is found in 𝔓^{45,75} B sa.

tn For the meaning "to welcome, to have as a guest" see L&N 34.53.

31 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

32 tn This reflexive makes it clear that Mary took the initiative in sitting by Jesus.

33 sn The description of Mary sitting at the Lord's feet and listening to him makes her sound like a disciple (compare Luke 8:35).

34 sn The term distracted means "to be pulled away" by something (L&N 25.238). It is a narrative comment that makes clear who is right in the account.

she had to make,[1] so[2] she came up to him and said, "Lord, don't you care[3] that my sister has left me to do all the work[4] alone? Tell[5] her to help me." 10:41 But the Lord[6] answered her,[7] "Martha, Martha,[8] you are worried and troubled[9] about many things, 10:42 but one thing[10] is needed. Mary has chosen the best[11] part; it will not be taken away from her."

Instructions on Prayer

11:1 Now[12] Jesus[13] was praying in a certain place. When[14] he stopped, one of his disciples said to him, "Lord, teach us to pray, just as John[15] taught[16] his disciples." 11:2 So he said to them, "When you pray,[17] say:

Father,[18] may your name be honored;[19]
may your kingdom come.[20]
11:3 Give us each day our daily bread,[21]
11:4 and forgive us our sins, for we also forgive everyone who sins[22] against us.
And do not lead us into temptation."[23]

11:5 Then[24] he said to them, "Suppose one of you[25] has a friend, and you go to him[26] at midnight and say to him, 'Friend, lend me three loaves of bread,[27] 11:6 because a friend of mine has stopped here while on a journey,[28] and I have nothing to set before[29] him.' 11:7 Then[30] he will reply[31] from inside, 'Do not bother me. The door is already shut, and my children and I are

---

1 tn Grk "with much serving."

2 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that the following was a result of Martha's distraction.

3 tn The negative οὐ (ou) used with the verb expects a positive reply. Martha expected Jesus to respond and rebuke Mary.

4 tn Grk "has left me to serve alone."

5 tn The conjunction οὖν (oun, "then, therefore") has not been translated here.

6 tc Most MSS (A B* C D W Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 it) read "Jesus" instead of "the Lord" here, but κύριος (kurios, "Lord") has the support of some weighty papyri, uncials, and other witnesses ($\mathfrak{P}^{3.[45].75}$ ℵ B² L 579 892 pc lat sa).

7 tn Grk "answering, said to her." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "answered her."

8 sn The double vocative Martha, Martha communicates emotion.

9 tn Or "upset." Here the meanings of μεριμνάω (merimnaō) and θορυβάζομαι (thorubazomai) reinforce each other (L&N 25.234).

10 tc Or, with some MSS ($\mathfrak{P}^{3}$ [ℵ] B C² L 070^{vid} f^{1} 33 [579] pc), "few things are needed – or only one" (as well as other variants). The textual problem here is a difficult one to decide. The shorter reading is normally preferred, but it is not altogether clear how the variants would arise from it. However, the reading followed in the translation has good support (with some internal variations) from a number of witnesses ($\mathfrak{P}^{45.75}$ A C* W Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 lat sa).

11 tn Or "better"; Grk "good." This is an instance of the positive adjective used in place of the superlative adjective. According to ExSyn 298, this could also be treated as a positive for comparative ("better").

12 tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

13 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

15 sn John refers to John the Baptist.

16 sn It was not unusual for Jewish groups to have their own prayer as a way of expressing corporate identity. Judaism had the Eighteen Benedictions and apparently John the Baptist had a prayer for his disciples as well.

17 sn When you pray. What follows, although traditionally known as the Lord's prayer, is really the disciples' prayer. It represents how they are to approach God, by acknowledging his uniqueness and their need for his provision and protection.

18 tc Most MSS, including later majority (A C D W Θ Ψ 070 f^{13} 33^{vid} 𝔐 it), add ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς (hēmōn ho en tois ouranois, "our [Father] in heaven") here. This makes the prayer begin like the version in Matt 6:9. The shorter version is read by $\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ B (L: + ἡμῶν) 1 700 pc as well as some versions and fathers. Given this more weighty external evidence, combined with the scribal tendency to harmonize Gospel parallels, the shorter reading is preferred.

sn God is addressed in terms of intimacy (Father). The original Semitic term here was probably Abba. The term is a little unusual in a personal prayer, especially as it lacks qualification. It is not the exact equivalent of "Daddy" (as is sometimes popularly suggested), but it does suggest a close, familial relationship.

19 tn Grk "hallowed be your name."

20 tc Most MSS (ℵ A C D W Θ Ψ 070 f^{13} 33^{vid} 𝔐 it) read at the end of the verse "may your will be done on earth as [it is] in heaven," making this version parallel to Matt 6:10. The shorter reading is found, however, in weighty MSS ($\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ B L pc), and cannot be easily explained as arising from the longer reading.

sn Your kingdom come represents the hope for the full manifestation of God's promised rule.

21 tn Or "Give us bread each day for the coming day," or "Give us each day the bread we need for today." The term ἐπιούσιος (epiousios) does not occur outside of early Christian literature (other occurrences are in Matt 6:11 and Didache 8:2), so its meaning is difficult to determine. Various suggestions include "daily," "the coming day," and "for existence." See BDAG 376 s.v.; L&N 67:183, 206.

22 tn Grk "who is indebted to us" (an idiom). The picture of sin as debt is not unusual. As for forgiveness offered and forgiveness given, see 1 Pet 3:7.

23 tc Most MSS (ℵ¹ A C D W Θ Ψ 070 f^{13} 33 𝔐 it sy$^{c.p.h}$) add "but deliver us from the evil one," an assimilation to Matt 6:13. The shorter reading has better attestation ($\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ*.² B L 1 700 pc vg sa Or). Internally, since the MSS that have the longer reading here display the same tendency throughout the Lord's Prayer to assimilate the Lukan version to the Matthean version, the shorter reading should be regarded as authentic in Luke.

tn Or "into a time of testing."

sn The request Do not lead us into temptation is not to suggest that God causes temptation, but is a rhetorical way to ask for his protection from sin.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

25 tn Grk "Who among you will have a friend and go to him."

26 tn Grk "he will go to him."

27 tn The words "of bread" are not in the Greek text, but are implied by ἄρτους (artous, "loaves").

28 tn Grk "has come to me from the road."

29 sn The background to the statement I have nothing to set before him is that in ancient Middle Eastern culture it was a matter of cultural honor to be a good host to visitors.

30 tn Κἀκεῖνος (kakeinos) has been translated "Then he."

31 tn Grk "answering, he will say." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "he will reply."

in bed.[1] I cannot get up and give you anything.'[2] 11:8 I tell you, even though the man inside[3] will not get up and give him anything because he is his friend, yet because of the first man's[4] sheer persistence[5] he will get up and give him whatever he needs.

11:9 "So[6] I tell you: Ask,[7] and it will be given to you; seek, and you will find; knock, and the door[8] will be opened for you. 11:10 For everyone who asks[9] receives, and the one who seeks finds, and to the one who knocks, the door[10] will be opened. 11:11 What father among you, if your[11] son asks for[12] a fish, will give him a snake[13] instead of a fish? 11:12 Or if he asks for an egg, will give him a scorpion?[14] 11:13 If you then, although you are[15] evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will the heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit[16] to those who ask him!"

Jesus and Beelzebul

11:14 Now[17] he was casting out a demon that was mute.[18] When[19] the demon had gone out, the man who had been mute began to speak,[20] and the crowds were amazed. 11:15 But some of them said, "By the power of Beelzebul,[21] the ruler[22] of demons, he casts out demons." 11:16 Others, to test[23] him,[24] began asking for[25] a sign[26] from heaven. 11:17 But Jesus,[27] realizing their thoughts, said to them,[28] "Every kingdom divided against itself is destroyed,[29] and a

1 tn Grk "my children are with me in the bed." In Jewish homes in the time of Jesus, the beds were often all together in one room; thus the householder may be speaking of individual beds (using a collective singular) rather than a common bed.

2 tn The syntax of vv. 6-7 is complex. In the Greek text Jesus' words in v. 6 begin as a question. Some see Jesus' question ending at v. 6, but the reply starting in v. 8 favors extending the question through the entire illustration. The translation breaks up the long sentence at the beginning of v. 7 and translates Jesus' words as a statement for reasons of English style.

3 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man in bed in the house) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the first man mentioned) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn The term ἀναίδεια (anaideia) is hard to translate. It refers to a combination of ideas, a boldness that persists over time, or "audacity," which comes close. It most likely describes the one making the request, since the unit's teaching is an exhortation about persistence in prayer. Some translate the term "shamelessness" which is the term's normal meaning, and apply it to the neighbor as an illustration of God responding for the sake of his honor. But the original question was posed in terms of the first man who makes the request, not of the neighbor, so the teaching underscores the action of the one making the request.

6 tn Here καί (kai, from καγώ [kagō]) has been translated as "so" to indicate the conclusion drawn from the preceding parable.

7 sn The three present imperatives in this verse (Ask... seek...knock) are probably intended to call for a repeated or continual approach before God.

8 tn Grk "it"; the referent (a door) is implied by the context and has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 sn The actions of asking, seeking, and knocking are repeated here from v. 9 with the encouragement that God does respond.

10 tn Grk "it"; the referent (a door) is implied by the context and has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

12 tc Most MSS (𝔎 A C D L W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat $sy^{c,p,h}$ bo) have "bread, does not give him a stone instead, or" before "a fish"; the longer reading, however, looks like a harmonization to Matt 7:9. The shorter reading is thus preferred, attested by $𝔓^{45,75}$ B 1241 pc sy^{s} sa.

13 sn The snake probably refers to a water snake.

14 sn The two questions of vv. 11-12 expect the answer, "No father would do this!"

15 tn The participle ὑπάρχοντες (huparchontes) has been translated as a concessive participle.

16 sn The provision of the Holy Spirit is probably a reference to the wisdom and guidance supplied in response to repeated requests. Some apply it to the general provision of the Spirit, but this would seem to look only at one request in a context that speaks of repeated asking. The teaching as a whole stresses not that God gives everything his children want, but that God gives the good that they need. The parallel account in Matthew (7:11) refers to good things where Luke mentions the Holy Spirit.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

18 tn The phrase "a demon that was mute" should probably be understood to mean that the demon caused muteness or speechlessness in its victim, although it is sometimes taken to refer to the demon's own inability to speak (cf. TEV, "a demon that could not talk").

19 tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here δέ (de) has not been translated either.

20 sn This miracle is different from others in Luke. The miracle is told entirely in one verse and with minimum detail, while the response covers several verses. The emphasis is on explaining what Jesus' work means.

21 tn Grk "By Beelzebul."

sn Beelzebul is another name for Satan. So some people recognized Jesus' work as supernatural, but called it diabolical.

22 tn Or "prince."

23 tn Grk "testing"; the participle is taken as indicating the purpose of the demand.

24 tn The pronoun "him" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

25 tn Grk "seeking from him." The imperfect ἐζήτουν (ezētoun) is taken ingressively. It is also possible to regard it as iterative ("kept on asking").

26 sn What exactly this sign would have been, given what Jesus was already doing, is not clear. But here is where the fence-sitters reside, refusing to commit to him.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 sn Jesus here demonstrated the absurdity of the thinking of those who maintained that he was in league with Satan and that he actually derived his power from the devil. He first teaches (vv. 17-20) that if he casts out demons by the ruler of the demons, then in reality Satan is fighting against himself, with the result that his kingdom has come to an end. He then teaches (v. 21-22) about defeating the strong man to prove that he does not need to align himself with the devil because he is more powerful. Jesus defeated Satan at his temptation (4:1-13) and by his exorcisms he clearly demonstrated himself to be stronger than the devil. The passage reveals the desperate condition of the religious leaders, who in their hatred for Jesus end up attributing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satan.

29 tn Or "is left in ruins."

divided household falls.[1] 11:18 So[2] if[3] Satan too is divided against himself, how will his kingdom stand? I ask you this because[4] you claim that I cast out demons by Beelzebul. 11:19 Now if I cast out demons by Beelzebul, by whom do your sons[5] cast them[6] out? Therefore they will be your judges. 11:20 But if I cast out demons by the finger[7] of God, then the kingdom of God[8] has already overtaken[9] you. 11:21 When a strong man,[10] fully armed, guards his own palace,[11] his possessions are safe.[12] 11:22 But[13] when a stronger man[14] attacks[15] and conquers him, he takes away the first man's[16] armor on which the man relied[17] and divides up[18] his plunder.[19] 11:23 Whoever is not with me is against me,[20] and whoever does not gather with me scatters.[21]

Response to Jesus' Work

11:24 "When an unclean spirit[22] goes out of a person,[23] it passes through waterless places[24] looking for rest but[25] not finding any. Then[26] it says, 'I will return to the home I left.'[27] 11:25 When it returns,[28] it finds the house[29] swept clean and put in order.[30] 11:26 Then it goes and brings seven other spirits more evil than itself, and they go in and live there, so[31] the last state of that person[32] is worse than the first."[33]

---

[1] tn Grk "and house falls on house." This phrase pictures one house collapsing on another, what is called today a "house of cards."

[2] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that the clause that follows is a logical conclusion based on the preceding examples.

[3] tn This first class condition, the first of three "if" clauses in the following verses, presents the example vividly as if it were so. In fact, all three conditions in these verses are first class. The examples are made totally parallel. The expected answer is that Satan's kingdom will not stand, so the suggestion makes no sense. Satan would not seek to heal.

[4] tn Grk "because." "I ask you this" is supplied for the sake of English.

[5] sn Most read your sons as a reference to Jewish exorcists (cf. "your followers," L&N 9.4; for various views see D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 2:1077-78), but more likely this is a reference to the disciples of Jesus themselves, who are also Jewish and have been healing as well (R. J. Shirock, "Whose Exorcists are they? The Referents of οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν at Matthew 12:27/Luke 11:19," JSNT 46 [1992]: 41-51). If this is a reference to the disciples, then Jesus' point is that it is not only him, but those associated with him whose power the hearers must assess. The following reference to judging also favors this reading.

[6] tn The pronoun "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[7] sn The finger of God is a figurative reference to God's power (L&N 76.3). This phrase was used of God's activity during the Exodus (Exod 8:19).

[8] sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

[9] tn The phrase ἔφθασεν ἐφ' ὑμᾶς (ephthasen eph' humas) is important. Does it mean merely "approach" (which would be reflected in a translation like "has come near to you") or actually "come upon" (as in the translation given above, "has already overtaken you," which has the added connotation of suddenness)? The issue here is like the one in 10:9 (see note there on the phrase "come on"). Is the arrival of the kingdom merely anticipated or already in process? Two factors favor arrival over anticipation here. First, the prepositional phrase "upon you" suggests arrival (Dan 4:24, 28 Theodotion). Second, the following illustration in vv. 21-23 looks at the healing as portraying Satan being overrun. So the presence of God's authority has arrived. See also L&N 13.123 for the translation of φθάνω (phthanō) as "to happen to already, to come upon, to come upon already."

[10] tn The referent of the expression "a strong man" is Satan.

[11] tn The word αὐλή (aulē) describes any building large and elaborate enough to have an interior courtyard, thus "dwelling, palace, mansion" (L&N 7.6).

[12] tn Grk "his goods are in peace."

[13] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[14] tn The referent of the expression "a stronger man" is Jesus.

[15] tn Grk "stronger man than he attacks."

[16] tn Grk "his"; the referent (the first man mentioned) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] tn Grk "on which he relied."

[18] tn Or "and distributes."

[19] sn Some see the imagery here as similar to Eph 4:7-10, although no opponents are explicitly named in that passage. Jesus has the victory over Satan. Jesus' acts of healing mean that the war is being won and the kingdom is coming.

[20] sn Whoever is not with me is against me. The call here is to join the victor. Failure to do so means that one is being destructive. Responding to Jesus is the issue.

[21] sn For the image of scattering, see Pss. Sol. 17:18.

[22] sn This is a reference to an evil spirit. See Luke 4:33.

[23] tn Grk "man." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

[24] sn The background for the reference to waterless places is not entirely clear, though some Jewish texts suggest spirits must have a place to dwell, but not with water (Luke 8:29-31; Tob 8:3). Some suggest that the image of the desert or deserted cities as the places demons dwell is where this idea started (Isa 13:21; 34:14).

[25] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[26] tc ‡ Most MSS, including a few early and important ones (𝔓45 ℵ* A C D W Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat), lack τότε (tote, "then"). Other MSS, including some early and important ones (𝔓75 ℵ² B L Θ Ξ 070 33 579 892 1241 pc co), have the adverb. Although the external evidence better supports the longer reading, the internal evidence is on the side of the shorter, for conjunctions and adverbs were frequently added by copyists to remove asyndeton and to add clarification. The shorter reading is thus preferred. The translation, however, adds "Then" because of English stylistic requirements. NA27 has τότε in brackets indicating doubts as to its authenticity.

[27] tn Grk "I will return to my house from which I came."

[28] tn Grk "comes."

[29] tn The words "the house" are not in Greek but are implied.

[30] sn The image of the house swept clean and put in order refers to the life of the person from whom the demon departed. The key to the example appears to be that no one else has been invited in to dwell. If an exorcism occurs and there is no response to God, then the way is free for the demon to return. Some see the reference to exorcism as more symbolic; thus the story's only point is about responding to Jesus. This is possible and certainly is an application of the passage.

[31] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the concluding point of the story.

[32] tn Grk "man." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

[33] sn The point of the story is that to fail to respond is to risk a worse fate than when one started.

11:27 As[1] he said these things, a woman in the crowd spoke out[2] to him, "Blessed is the womb[3] that bore you and the breasts at which you nursed!"[4] 11:28 But he replied,[5] "Blessed rather are those who hear the word of God and obey[6] it!"

The Sign of Jonah

11:29 As[7] the crowds were increasing, Jesus[8] began to say, "This generation is a wicked generation; it looks for a sign,[9] but no sign will be given to it except the sign of Jonah.[10] 11:30 For just as Jonah became a sign to the people of Nineveh,[11] so the Son of Man will be a sign[12] to this generation.[13] 11:31 The queen of the South[14] will rise up at the judgment[15] with the people[16] of this generation and condemn them, because she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon – and now,[17] something greater[18] than Solomon is here! 11:32 The people[19] of Nineveh will stand up at the judgment with this generation and condemn it, because they repented when Jonah preached to them[20] – and now,[21] something greater than Jonah is here!

Internal Light

11:33 "No one after lighting a lamp puts it in a hidden place[22] or under a basket,[23] but on a lampstand, so that those who come in can see the light. 11:34 Your eye is the lamp of your body. When your eye is healthy,[24] your whole body is full of light, but when it is diseased,[25] your body is full of darkness. 11:35 Therefore see to it[26] that the light in you[27] is not darkness. 11:36 If[28] then[29] your whole body is full of light, with no part in the dark,[30] it will be as full of light as when the light of a lamp shines on you."[31]

---

1 tn Grk "And it happened that as." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "lifted up her voice and said." This idiom is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "spoke out."

3 tn For this term see L&N 8.69.

4 sn Both the reference to the womb and the breasts form a figure of speech called metonymy. In this case the parts are mentioned instead of the whole; the meaning is "Blessed is your mother!" The warnings seem to have sparked a little nervousness that brought forth this response. In the culture a mother was valued for the accomplishments of her son. So this amounts to a compliment to Jesus.

5 tn Grk "said."

6 sn This is another reference to hearing and doing the word of God, which here describes Jesus' teaching; see Luke 8:21.

7 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

8 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 sn The mention of a sign alludes back to Luke 11:16. Given what Jesus had done, nothing would be good enough. This leads to the rebuke that follows.

10 sn As the following comparisons to Solomon and Jonah show, in the present context the sign of Jonah is not an allusion to Jonah being three days in the belly of the fish, but to Jesus' teaching about wisdom and repentance.

11 tn Grk "to the Ninevites." What the Ninevites experienced was Jonah's message (Jonah 3:4, 10; 4:1).

12 tn The repetition of the words "a sign" are not in the Greek text, but are implied and are supplied here for clarity.

13 tc Only the Western MS D and a few Itala MSS add here a long reference to Jonah being in the belly of the fish for three days and nights and the Son of Man being three days in the earth, apparently harmonizing the text to the parallel in Matt 12:40.

14 sn On the queen of the South see 1 Kgs 10:1-3 and 2 Chr 9:1-12, as well as Josephus, Ant. 8.6.5-6 (8.165-175). The South most likely refers to modern southwest Arabia, possibly the eastern part of modern Yemen, although there is an ancient tradition reflected in Josephus which identifies this geopolitical entity as Ethiopia.

15 sn For the imagery of judgment, see Luke 10:13-15 and 11:19. The warnings are coming consistently now.

16 tn Grk "men"; the word here (ἀνήρ, anēr) usually indicates males or husbands, but occasionally is used in a generic sense of people in general, as is the case here (cf. BDAG 79 s.v. 1, 2). The same term, translated the same way, occurs in v. 32.

17 tn Grk "behold."

18 sn The message of Jesus was something greater than what Solomon offered. On Jesus and wisdom, see Luke 7:35; 10:21-22; 1 Cor 1:24, 30.

19 tn See the note on the word "people" in v. 31.

20 tn Grk "at the preaching of Jonah."

sn The phrase repented when Jonah preached to them confirms that in this context the sign of Jonah (v. 30) is his message.

21 tn Grk "behold."

22 tn Or perhaps "in a cellar" (L&N 28.78). The point is that the light of Jesus' teaching has been put in public view.

23 tc The phrase "or under a basket" is lacking in some important and early MSS (𝔓45.75 L Γ Ξ 070 f^{1} 700* 1241 2542 pc sy^{s} sa). It is hard to decide in this case, since the inclusion of "or under a basket" is widely attested by some early and decent witnesses, as well as the overwhelming majority of MSS (ℵ A B C D W Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 latt). The parallel passage in Luke 8:16 does not include "under a basket." If the phrase "under a basket" were added as a harmonization with Mark 4:21 and Matt 5:15, it is perhaps surprising that scribes did not add the phrase at Luke 8:16 as well. It seems somewhat more likely that a scribe copying Luke would be inclined to harmonize 11:33 with 8:16 by omitting the phrase here. Thus, the words "or under a basket" seem to have the marks of authenticity.

tn Or "a bowl"; this refers to any container for dry material of about eight liters (two gallons) capacity. It could be translated "basket, box, bowl" (L&N 6.151).

24 tn Or "sound" (so L&N 23.132 and most scholars). A few scholars take this word to mean something like "generous" here (L&N 57.107), partly due to the immediate context of this saying in Matt 6:22 which concerns money, in which case the "eye" is a metonymy for the entire person ("if you are generous").

25 tn Or "when it is sick" (L&N 23.149).

sn There may be a slight wordplay here, as this term can also mean "evil," so the figure uses a term that points to the real meaning of being careful as to what one pays attention to or looks at.

26 tn This is a present imperative, calling for a constant watch (L&N 24.32; ExSyn 721).

27 sn Here you is a singular pronoun, individualizing the application.

28 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text, so the example ends on a hopeful, positive note.

29 tn Grk "Therefore"; the same conjunction as at the beginning of v. 35, but since it indicates a further inference or conclusion, it has been translated "then" here.

30 tn Grk "not having any part dark."

31 tn Grk "it will be completely illumined as when a lamp illumines you with its rays."

Rebuking the Pharisees and Experts in the Law

11:37 As he spoke,[1] a Pharisee[2] invited Jesus[3] to have a meal with him, so he went in and took his place at the table.[4] 11:38 The[5] Pharisee was astonished when he saw that Jesus[6] did not first wash his hands[7] before the meal. 11:39 But the Lord said to him, "Now you Pharisees clean[8] the outside of the cup and the plate, but inside you are full of greed and wickedness.[9] 11:40 You fools![10] Didn't the one who made the outside make the inside as well?[11] 11:41 But give from your heart to those in need,[12] and[13] then everything will be clean for you.[14]

11:42 "But woe to you Pharisees![15] You give a tenth[16] of your mint,[17] rue,[18] and every herb, yet you neglect justice[19] and love for God! But you should have done these things without neglecting the others.[20] 11:43 Woe to you Pharisees! You love the best seats[21] in the synagogues[22] and elaborate greetings[23] in the marketplaces! 11:44 Woe to you![24] You are like unmarked graves, and people[25] walk over them without realizing it!"[26]

11:45 One of the experts in religious law[27] answered him, "Teacher, when you say these things you insult[28] us too." 11:46 But Jesus[29] replied,[30] "Woe to you experts in religious law

---

1 tn The use of the aorist infinitive here should probably be translated "as he spoke" rather than "while he was speaking" (see ExSyn 595). The Pharisee did not necessarily interrupt Jesus to issue the invitation.

2 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

3 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Grk "and reclined at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

5 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

6 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn The words "his hands" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity.

sn Washing before meals was a cultural practice that was described in the OT, but not prescribed there (Gen 18:4; Judg 19:21). It was apparently related to concern about contracting ceremonial uncleanness (Lev 11:31-38; t. Demai 2.11-12).

8 sn The allusion to washing (clean the outside of the cup) shows Jesus knew what they were thinking and deliberately set up a contrast that charged them with hypocrisy and majoring on minors.

9 tn Or "and evil."

10 sn You fools is a rebuke which in the OT refers to someone who is blind to God (Ps 14:1, 53:1; 92:6; Prov 6:12).

11 tn The question includes a Greek particle, οὐ (ou), that expects a positive reply. God, the maker of both, is concerned for what is both inside and outside.

12 tn Grk "Give the things inside as alms." Three different approaches have been taken to the syntax and meaning of this phrase: (1) τὰ ἐνόντα (ta enonta, "the things inside") is an accusative of respect ("give alms with respect to the things inside"); (2) τὰ ἐνόντα is an adverbial accusative ("give alms inwardly," i.e., from the heart); (3) the word translated "alms" represents a mistranslation of the original Aramaic term "cleanse," so the statement urges the hearers to "cleanse the things inside." According to D. L. Bock (Luke [BECNT], 2:1115) the latter meaning is unlikely because the present verse is independent of Matt 23:26, not parallel to it, and makes good sense as it stands.

sn In Jewish culture giving alms to the poor was a very important religious observance; it was meant to be an act of mercy, kindness, and love (D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 2:1114). The implication from the text is that the Pharisees gave alms, but without any of the spiritual concern which should have motivated those generous actions. Here Jesus commands the Pharisees to give from within themselves to those in need instead of just giving of their possessions. In so doing they would show true inner purity acceptable to God. This is in keeping with the author's social concerns elsewhere in the Gospel (cf., e.g., 1:52-53, 4:18-19, 6:20-21, 14:13).

13 tn Grk "and behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this clause has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

14 sn The expression everything will be clean for you refers to the agreement that should exist between the overt practice of one's religious duties, such as almsgiving, and the inner condition of one's heart, including true love for God and the poor; one is not only to wash the outside of the cup and plate, but the inside as well, since as Jesus said, God created the inside too. Religious duties are not to be performed hypocritically, i.e., for the applause and esteem of people, but rather they are to be done out of a deep love for God and a sensitivity to and concern for the needs of others. Then, everything will be clean, both hearts and lives.

15 tn Grk "Woe to you...because you..." The causal particle ὅτι (hoti) has not been translated here for rhetorical effect (and so to the end of this chapter).

16 tn Or "you tithe mint."

17 sn These small herbs were tithed with great care (Mishnah, m. Demai 2:1).

18 tn Grk "and rue." Καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

sn Rue was an evergreen herb used for seasoning.

19 sn Justice was a major theme of OT ethics (Mic 6:8; Zech 7:8-10).

20 tn Grk "those," but this has been translated as "the others" to clarify which are meant.

21 tn Or "seats of honor." The term here is plural and is not a reference only to the lead "seat of Moses" in the synagogue, but includes the front seats near the ark.

22 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

23 tn Grk "and the greetings."

sn The later Jewish summary of oral tradition, the Talmud, notes elaborate greetings for rabbis. The rebuke here is for pride.

24 tc Most MSS (A [D] W Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 it) have "experts in the law and Pharisees, hypocrites" after "you," but this looks like an assimilation to the parallel in Matt 23:25, 27, 29. The shorter reading has earlier attestation from a variety of reliable MSS (𝔓$^{45.75}$ ℵ B C L f^{1} 33 1241 2542 lat sa).

25 tn Grk "men." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

26 sn In Judaism to come into contact with the dead or what is associated with them, even without knowing it, makes one unclean (Num 19:11-22; Lev 21:1-3; Mishnah, m. Demai 2:3). To Pharisees, who would have been so sensitive about contracting ceremonial uncleanness, it would have been quite a stinging rebuke to be told they caused it.

27 sn That is, an expert in the interpretation of the Mosaic law. They worked closely with the Pharisees.

28 tn For this term, see Matt 22;6; Luke 18:32; Acts 14:5; 1 Thess 2:2.

29 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

30 tn Grk "said."

as well![1] You load people[2] down with burdens difficult to bear, yet you yourselves refuse to touch[3] the burdens with even one of your fingers! 11:47 Woe to you! You build[4] the tombs of the prophets whom your ancestors[5] killed. 11:48 So you testify that you approve of[6] the deeds of your ancestors,[7] because they killed the prophets[8] and you build their[9] tombs![10] 11:49 For this reason also the wisdom[11] of God said, 'I will send them prophets and apostles, some of whom they will kill and persecute,' 11:50 so that this generation may be held accountable[12] for the blood of all the prophets that has been shed since the beginning[13] of the world,[14] 11:51 from the blood of Abel[15] to the blood of Zechariah,[16] who was killed[17] between the altar and the sanctuary.[18] Yes, I tell you, it will be charged against[19] this generation. 11:52 Woe to you experts in religious law! You have taken away[20] the key to knowledge! You did not go in yourselves, and you hindered[21] those who were going in."

11:53 When he went out from there, the experts in the law[22] and the Pharisees began to oppose him bitterly,[23] and to ask him hostile questions[24] about many things, 11:54 plotting against[25] him, to catch[26] him in something he might say.

Fear God, Not People

12:1 Meanwhile,[27] when many thousands of the crowd had gathered so that they were trampling on one another, Jesus[28] began to speak first to his disciples, "Be on your guard against[29] the yeast of the Pharisees,[30] which is hypocrisy.[31] 12:2 Nothing is hidden[32] that will not be revealed,[33] and nothing is secret that will not be made known. 12:3 So then[34] whatever you have said in the dark will be heard in the light, and what you have whispered[35] in private rooms[36] will be proclaimed from the housetops.[37]

---

1 tn Here "as well" is used to translate καί (kai) at the beginning of the statement.

2 tn Grk "men." This is a generic use of ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), referring to both males and females.

3 tn Grk "you yourselves do not touch." This could mean one of two things: (1) Either they make others do what they themselves do not (through various technical exceptions) or (2) they make no effort to help the others fulfill what they are required to do. Considering the care these religious figures are said to have given to the law, the second option is more likely (see L&N 18.11).

4 sn The effect of what the experts in the law were doing was to deny the message of the prophets and thus honor their death by supporting those who had sought their removal. The charge that this is what previous generations did shows the problem is chronic. As T. W. Manson said, the charge here is "The only prophet you honor is a dead prophet!" (The Sayings of Jesus, 101).

5 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

6 tn Grk "you are witnesses and approve of."

7 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

8 tn Grk "them"; the referent (the prophets) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn "Their," i.e., the prophets.

10 tc The majority of MSS list a specific object ("their tombs"), filling out the sentence (although there are two different words for "tombs" among the MSS, as well as different word orders: αὐτῶν τὰ μνημεῖα (autōn ta mnēmeia; found in A C W Θ Ψ 33 𝔐) and τοὺς τάφους αὐτῶν (tous taphous autōn; found in $f^{1.[13]}$ 2542 pc). This suggests that early copyists had no term in front of them but felt the verb needed an object. But since a wide distribution of early Alexandrian and Western MSS lack these words ($\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ B D L 579 1241 it sa), it is likely that they were not part of the original text of Luke. Nevertheless, the words "their tombs" are inserted in the translation because of requirements of English style.

11 sn The expression the wisdom of God is a personification of an attribute of God that refers to his wise will.

12 tn Or "that this generation may be charged with"; or "the blood of all the prophets... may be required from this generation." This is a warning of judgment. These people are responsible for the shedding of prophetic blood.

13 tn Or "foundation." However, this does not suggest a time to the modern reader.

14 tn The order of the clauses in this complicated sentence has been rearranged to simplify it for the modern reader.

15 sn Gen 4:10 indicates that Abel's blood cried out for justice.

16 sn It is not clear which Zechariah is meant here. It is probably the person mentioned in 2 Chr 24:20-25.

17 tn Or "who perished."

18 tn Or "and the temple"; Grk "and the house," but in this context a reference to the house of God as a place of sanctuary.

19 tn Or "required from."

20 sn You have taken away the key to knowledge is another stinging rebuke. They had done the opposite of what they were trying to do.

21 tn Or "you tried to prevent."

22 tn Or "the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

23 tn Or "terribly."

24 tn For this term see L&N 33.183.

25 tn Grk "lying in ambush against," but this is a figurative extension of that meaning.

26 tn This term was often used in a hunting context (BDAG 455 s.v. θηρεύω; L&N 27.30). Later examples of this appear in Luke 20.

27 tn The phrase ἐν οἷς (en hois) can be translated "meanwhile."

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn According to L&N 27.59, "to pay attention to, to keep on the lookout for, to be alert for, to be on your guard against." This is another Lukan present imperative calling for constant vigilance.

30 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

31 sn The pursuit of popularity can lead to hypocrisy, if one is not careful.

32 tn Or "concealed."

33 sn I.e., be revealed by God. The passive voice verbs here ("be revealed," be made known") see the revelation as coming from God. The text is both a warning about bad things being revealed and an encouragement that good things will be made known, though the stress with the images of darkness and what is hidden in vv. 2-3 is on the attempt to conceal.

34 tn Or "because." Understanding this verse as a result of v. 2 is a slightly better reading of the context. Knowing what is coming should impact our behavior now.

35 tn Grk "spoken in the ear," an idiom. The contemporary expression is "whispered."

36 sn The term translated private rooms refers to the inner room of a house, normally without any windows opening outside, the most private location possible (BDAG 988 s.v. ταμεῖον 2).

37 tn The expression "proclaimed from the housetops" is an idiom for proclaiming something publicly (L&N 7.51). Roofs of many first century Jewish houses in Judea and Galilee were flat and had access either from outside or from within the house. Something shouted from atop a house would be heard by everyone in the street below.

12:4 "I[1] tell you, my friends, do not be afraid of those who kill the body,[2] and after that have nothing more they can do. 12:5 But I will warn[3] you whom you should fear: Fear the one who, after the killing,[4] has authority to throw you[5] into hell.[6] Yes, I tell you, fear him! 12:6 Aren't five sparrows sold for two pennies?[7] Yet not one of them is forgotten before God. 12:7 In fact, even the hairs on your head are all numbered. Do not be afraid;[8] you are more valuable than many sparrows.

12:8 "I[9] tell you, whoever acknowledges[10] me before men,[11] the Son of Man will also acknowledge[12] before God's angels. 12:9 But the one who denies me before men will be denied before God's angels. 12:10 And everyone who speaks a word against the Son of Man will be forgiven, but the person who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit[13] will not be forgiven.[14] 12:11 But when they bring you before the synagogues,[15] the[16] rulers, and the authorities, do not worry about how you should make your defense[17] or what you should say, 12:12 for the Holy Spirit will teach you at that moment[18] what you must say."[19]

The Parable of the Rich Landowner

12:13 Then[20] someone from the crowd said to him, "Teacher, tell[21] my brother to divide the inheritance with me." 12:14 But Jesus[22] said to him, "Man,[23] who made me a judge or arbitrator between you two?"[24] 12:15 Then[25] he said to them, "Watch out and guard yourself from[26] all types of greed,[27] because one's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions." 12:16 He then[28] told them a parable:[29] "The land of a certain rich man produced[30] an abundant crop, 12:17 so[31] he thought to himself,[32] 'What should I do, for I have nowhere to store my crops?'[33] 12:18 Then[34] he said, 'I[35] will do this: I will tear down my barns and build bigger ones,

---

1 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 sn Judaism had a similar exhortation in 4 Macc 13:14-15.

3 tn Grk "will show," but in this reflective context such a demonstration is a warning or exhortation.

4 sn The actual performer of the killing is not here specified. It could be understood to be God (so NASB, NRSV) but it could simply emphasize that, after a killing has taken place, it is God who casts the person into hell.

5 tn The direct object ("you") is understood.

6 sn The word translated hell is "Gehenna" (γέεννα, geenna), a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew words ge hinnom ("Valley of Hinnom"). This was the valley along the south side of Jerusalem. In OT times it was used for human sacrifices to the pagan god Molech (cf. Jer 7:31; 19:5-6; 32:35), and it came to be used as a place where human excrement and rubbish were disposed of and burned. In the intertestamental period, it came to be used symbolically as the place of divine punishment (cf. 1 En. 27:2, 90:26; 4 Ezra 7:36).

7 sn The pennies refer to the assarion, a small Roman copper coin. One of them was worth one sixteenth of a denarius or less than a half hour's average wage. Sparrows were the cheapest thing sold in the market. God knows about even the most financially insignificant things; see Isa 49:15.

8 sn Do not be afraid. One should respect and show reverence to God (v. 5), but need not fear his tender care.

9 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

10 tn Or "confesses."

11 tn Although this is a generic reference and includes both males and females, in this context "men" has been retained because of the wordplay with the Son of Man and the contrast with the angels. The same is true of the occurrence of "men" in v. 9.

12 sn This acknowledgment will take place at the judgment. Of course, the Son of Man is a reference to Jesus as it has been throughout the Gospel. On Jesus and judgment, see 22:69; Acts 10:42-43; 17:31.

13 sn Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit probably refers to a total rejection of the testimony that the Spirit gives to Jesus and the plan of God. This is not so much a sin of the moment as of one's entire life, an obstinate rejection of God's message and testimony. Cf. Matt 12:31-32 and Mark 3:28-30.

14 tn Grk "it will not be forgiven the person who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit."

15 sn The saying looks at persecution both from a Jewish context as the mention of synagogues suggests, and from a Gentile one as the reference to the rulers and the authorities suggests.

sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

16 tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

17 tn Grk "about how or what you should say in your defense," but this is redundant with the following clause, "or what you should say."

18 tn Grk "in that very hour" (an idiom).

19 tn Grk "what it is necessary to say."

20 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

21 sn Tell my brother. In 1st century Jewish culture, a figure like a rabbi was often asked to mediate disputes, except that here mediation was not requested, but representation.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn This term of address can be harsh or gentle depending on the context (BDAG 82 s.v. ἄνθρωπος 8). Here it is a rebuke.

24 tn The pronoun ὑμᾶς (humas) is plural, referring to both the man and his brother; thus the translation "you two."

25 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

26 tn See L&N 13.154 for this use of the middle voice of φυλάσσω (phulassō) in this verse.

27 tn Or "avarice," "covetousness." Note the warning covers more than money and gets at the root attitude – the strong desire to acquire more and more possessions and experiences.

28 tn Grk "And he." Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the connection to the preceding statement.

29 tn Grk "a parable, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

30 tn Or "yielded a plentiful harvest."

31 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that this is a result of the preceding statement.

32 tn Grk "to himself, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

33 sn I have nowhere to store my crops. The thinking here is prudent in terms of recognizing the problem. The issue in the parable will be the rich man's solution, particularly the arrogance reflected in v. 19.

35 sn Note how often the first person pronoun is present in these verses. The farmer is totally self absorbed.

and there I will store all my grain and my goods. 12:19 And I will say to myself,[1] "You have plenty of goods stored up for many years; relax, eat, drink, celebrate!"' 12:20 But God said to him, 'You fool! This very night your life[2] will be demanded back from[3] you, but who will get what you have prepared for yourself?'[4] 12:21 So it is with the one who stores up riches for himself,[5] but is not rich toward God."

Exhortation Not to Worry

12:22 Then[6] Jesus[7] said to his[8] disciples, "Therefore I tell you, do not worry[9] about your[10] life, what you will eat, or about your[11] body, what you will wear. 12:23 For there is more to life than food, and more to the body than clothing. 12:24 Consider the ravens:[12] They do not sow or reap, they have no storeroom or barn, yet God feeds[13] them. How much more valuable are you than the birds! 12:25 And which of you by worrying[14] can add an hour to his life?[15] 12:26 So if[16] you cannot do such a very little thing as this, why do you worry about[17] the rest? 12:27 Consider how the flowers[18] grow; they do not work[19] or spin. Yet I tell you, not even Solomon in all his glory was clothed like one of these! 12:28 And if[20] this is how God clothes the wild grass,[21] which is here[22] today and tomorrow is tossed into the fire to heat the oven,[23] how much more[24] will he clothe you, you people of little faith! 12:29 So[25] do not be overly concerned about[26] what you will eat and what you will drink, and do not worry about such things.[27] 12:30 For all the nations of the world pursue[28] these things, and your Father knows that you need them. 12:31 Instead, pursue[29] his[30] kingdom,[31] and these things will be given to you as well.

---

1 tn Grk "to my soul," which is repeated as a vocative in the following statement, but is left untranslated as redundant.

2 tn Grk "your soul," but ψυχή (psuchē) is frequently used of one's physical life. It clearly has that meaning in this context.

3 tn Or "required back." This term, ἀπαιτέω (apaitеō), has an economic feel to it and is often used of a debt being called in for repayment (BDAG 96 s.v. 1).

4 tn Grk "the things you have prepared, whose will they be?" The words "for yourself" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

5 sn It is selfishness that is rebuked here, in the accumulation of riches for himself. Recall the emphasis on the first person pronouns throughout the parable.

6 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. Jesus' remarks to the disciples are an application of the point made in the previous parable.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tc αὐτοῦ (autou, "his") is lacking in 𝔓45vid,75 B 1241 c e. Although the addition of clarifying pronouns is a known scribal alteration, in this case it is probably better to view the dropping of the pronoun as the alteration in light of its minimal attestation.

9 tn Or "do not be anxious."

10 tc Most mss (𝔓45 Ψ 070 f^{13} 33 𝔐) supply the pronoun ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") here, although several important and early witnesses omit it (𝔓75 ℵ A B D L Q W Θ f^{1} 700 2542 al lat). Externally, the shorter reading is superior. Internally, the pronoun looks to be a scribal clarification. In context the article can be translated as a possessive pronoun anyway (ExSyn 215), as it has been done for this translation.

11 tc Some mss (B 070 f^{13} 33 1424 al) supply the pronoun ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") here, although the witnesses for the omission are early, important, and varied (𝔓45vid,75 ℵ A D L Q W Θ Ψ f^{1} 𝔐 lat). See previous tc note for more discussion.

12 tn Or "crows." Crows and ravens belong to the same family of birds. English uses "crow" as a general word for the family. Palestine has several indigenous members of the crow family.

13 tn Or "God gives them food to eat." L&N 23.6 has both "to provide food for" and "to give food to someone to eat."

14 tn Or "by being anxious."

15 tn Or "a cubit to his height." A cubit (πῆχυς, pēchus) can measure length (normally about 45 cm or 18 inches) or time (a small unit, "hour" is usually used [BDAG 812 s.v.] although "day" has been suggested [L&N 67.151]). The term ἡλικία (hēlikia) is ambiguous in the same way as πῆχυς. Most scholars take the term to describe age or length of life here, although a few refer it to bodily stature (see BDAG 435-36 s.v. 1.a for discussion). Worry about length of life seems a more natural figure than worry about height. However, the point either way is clear: Worrying adds nothing to life span or height.

16 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text.

17 tn Or "why are you anxious for."

18 tn Traditionally, "lilies." According to L&N 3.32, "Though traditionally κρίνον has been regarded as a type of lily, scholars have suggested several other possible types of flowers, including an anemone, a poppy, a gladiolus, and a rather inconspicuous type of daisy." In view of the uncertainty, the more generic "flowers" has been used in the translation.

19 tn Traditionally, "toil." Although it might be argued that "work hard" would be a more precise translation of κοπιάω (kopiaō) here, the line in English scans better in terms of cadence with a single syllable.

20 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text.

21 tn Grk "grass in the field."

22 tn Grk "which is in the field today."

23 tn Grk "into the oven." The expanded translation "into the fire to heat the oven" has been used to avoid misunderstanding; most items put into modern ovens are put there to be baked, not burned.

sn The oven was most likely a rounded clay oven used for baking bread, which was heated by burning wood and dried grass.

24 sn The phrase how much more is a typical form of rabbinic argumentation, from the lesser to the greater. If God cares for the little things, surely he will care for the more important things.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate a conclusion drawn from the previous illustrations.

26 tn Grk "do not seek," but this could be misunderstood to mean that people should make no attempt to obtain their food. The translation "do not be overly concerned" attempts to reflect the force of the original.

27 tn The words "about such things" have been supplied to qualify the meaning; the phrase relates to obtaining food and drink mentioned in the previous clause.

28 tn Grk "seek."

29 tn Grk "seek," but in the sense of the previous verses.

30 tc Most mss (𝔓45 A D^{1} Q W Θ 070 $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy) read τοῦ θεοῦ (tou theou, "of God") instead of αὐτοῦ (autou, "his"; found in ℵ B D* L Ψ 579 892 pc co). But such a clarifying reading is suspect. αὐτοῦ is superior on both internal and external grounds. 𝔓75 includes neither and as such would support the translation above since the article alone can often be translated as a possessive pronoun.

31 sn His (that is, God's) kingdom is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

12:32 "Do not be afraid, little flock, for your Father is well pleased[1] to give you the kingdom. 12:33 Sell your possessions[2] and give to the poor.[3] Provide yourselves purses that do not wear out – a treasure in heaven[4] that never decreases,[5] where no thief approaches and no moth[6] destroys. 12:34 For where your treasure[7] is, there your heart will be also.

Call to Faithful Stewardship

12:35 "Get dressed for service[8] and keep your lamps burning;[9] 12:36 be like people[10] waiting for their master to come back from the wedding celebration,[11] so that when he comes and knocks they can immediately open the door for him. 12:37 Blessed are those slaves[12] whom their master finds alert[13] when he returns! I tell you the truth,[14] he will dress himself to serve,[15] have them take their place at the table,[16] and will come[17] and wait on them![18] 12:38 Even if he comes in the second or third watch of the night[19] and finds them alert,[20] blessed are those slaves![21] 12:39 But understand this: If the owner of the house had known at what hour the thief[22] was coming, he would not have let[23] his house be broken into. 12:40 You also must be ready, because the Son of Man will come at an hour when you do not expect him."[24]

12:41 Then[25] Peter said, "Lord, are you telling this parable for us or for everyone?"[26] 12:42 The Lord replied,[27] "Who then is the faithful and wise manager,[28] whom the master puts in charge of his household servants,[29] to give them their allowance of food at the proper time? 12:43 Blessed is that slave[30] whom his master finds at work[31] when he returns. 12:44 I tell you the truth,[32] the master[33] will put him in charge of all his possessions. 12:45 But if[34] that[35] slave should

---

1 tn Or perhaps, "your Father chooses."

2 sn The call to s*ell your possessions* is a call to a lack of attachment to the earth and a generosity as a result.

3 tn Grk "give alms," but this term is not in common use today.

4 tn Grk "in the heavens."

5 tn Or "an unfailing treasure in heaven," or "an inexhaustible treasure in heaven."

6 tn The term σής (sēs) refers to moths in general. It is specifically the larvae of moths that destroy clothing by eating holes in it (L&N 4.49; BDAG 922 s.v.). See Jas 5:2, which mentions "moth-eaten" clothing.

7 sn Seeking heavenly treasure means serving others and honoring God by doing so; see Luke 6:35-36.

8 tn Grk "Let your loins be girded," an idiom referring to the practice of tucking the ends of the long cloak (outer garment) into the belt to shorten it in preparation for activities like running, etc.

9 sn Keep your lamps burning means to be ready at all times.

10 tn That is, like slaves (who are mentioned later, vv. 37-38), although the term ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) is used here. Since in this context it appears generic rather than gender-specific, the translation "people" is employed.

11 sn An ancient wedding celebration could last for days (Tob 11:18).

12 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

13 tn Or "watching"; Grk "awake," but in context this is not just being awake but alert and looking out.

14 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

15 tn See v. 35 (same verb).

16 tn Grk "have them recline at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

17 tn The participle παρελθών (parelthōn) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

18 sn He...will come and wait on them is a reversal of expectation, but shows that what Jesus asks for he is willing to do as well; see John 13:5 and 15:18-27, although those instances merely foreshadow what is in view here.

19 sn The second or third watch of the night would be between 9 p.m. and 3 a.m. on a Roman schedule and 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. on a Jewish schedule. Luke uses the four-watch schedule of the Romans in Acts 12:4, so that is more probable here. Regardless of the precise times of the watches, however, it is clear that the late-night watches when a person is least alert are in view here.

20 tn Grk "finds (them) thus," but this has been clarified in the translation by referring to the status ("alert") mentioned in v. 37.

21 tn Grk "blessed are they"; the referent (the watchful slaves, v. 37) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 sn On Jesus pictured as a returning thief, see 1 Thess 5:2, 4; 2 Pet 3:10; Rev 3:3; 16:15.

23 tc Most MSS (𝔎^{1} A B L Q W Θ Ψ 070 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy^{p,h} sa^{mss} bo) read "he would have watched and not let" here, but this looks like an assimilation to Matt 24:43. The alliance of two important and early MSS along with a few others (𝔓^{75} 𝔎* [D] e i sy^{s,c} sa^{mss}), coupled with much stronger internal evidence, suggests that the shorter reading is authentic.

24 sn Jesus made clear that his coming could not be timed, and suggested it might take some time – so long, in fact, that some would not be looking for him any longer (at an hour when you do not expect him).

25 tn Grk "And Peter." Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the connection to the preceding statement.

26 sn Is the parable only for disciples (us) or for all humanity (everyone)? Or does Peter mean for disciples (us) or for the crowd (everyone)? The fact that unfaithful slaves are mentioned in v. 46 looks to a warning that includes a broad audience, though it is quality of service that is addressed. This means the parable focuses on those who are associated with Jesus.

27 tn Grk "And the Lord said." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

28 tn Or "administrator," "steward" (L&N 37.39).

29 tn This term, θεραπεία (therapeia), describes the group of servants working in a particular household (L&N 46.6).

30 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

31 tn That is, doing his job, doing what he is supposed to be doing.

32 tn Grk "Truly (ἀληθῶς, alēthōs), I say to you."

33 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the master) has been specified in the translation for clarity. See also Luke 19:11-27.

34 tn In the Greek text this is a third class condition that for all practical purposes is a hypothetical condition (note the translation of the following verb "should say").

35 tn The term "that" (ἐκεῖνος, ekeinos) is used as a catchword to list out, in the form of a number of hypothetical circumstances, what the possible responses of "that" servant could be. He could be faithful (vv. 43-44) or totally unfaithful (vv. 45-46). He does not complete his master's will with knowledge (v. 47) or from ignorance (v 48). These differences are indicated by the different levels of punishment in vv. 46-48.

say to himself,[1] 'My master is delayed[2] in returning,' and he begins to beat[3] the other[4] slaves, both men and women,[5] and to eat, drink, and get drunk, 12:46 then the master of that slave will come on a day when he does not expect him and at an hour he does not foresee, and will cut him in two,[6] and assign him a place with the unfaithful.[7] 12:47 That[8] servant who knew his master's will but did not get ready or do what his master asked[9] will receive a severe beating. 12:48 But the one who did not know his master's will[10] and did things worthy of punishment[11] will receive a light beating.[12] From everyone who has been given much, much will be required,[13] and from the one who has been entrusted with much,[14] even more will be asked.[15]

Not Peace, but Division

12:49 "I have come[16] to bring[17] fire on the earth – and how I wish it were already kindled! 12:50 I have a baptism[18] to undergo,[19] and how distressed I am until it is finished! 12:51 Do you think I have come to bring peace on earth? No, I tell you, but rather division![20] 12:52 For from now on[21] there will be five in one household divided, three against two and two against three. 12:53 They will be divided,[22] father against son and son against father, mother against daughter and daughter against mother, mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law and daughter-in-law against mother-in-law."

Reading the Signs

12:54 Jesus[23] also said to the crowds, "When you see a cloud rising in the west,[24] you say at once, 'A rainstorm[25] is coming,' and it does. 12:55 And when you see the south wind[26] blowing, you say, 'There will be scorching heat,' and there is. 12:56 You hypocrites![27] You know how to interpret the appearance of the earth and the sky, but how can you not know how[28] to interpret the present time?

Clear the Debts

12:57 "And[29] why don't you judge for yourselves what is right? 12:58 As you are going with your accuser before the magistrate,[30] make an effort to settle with him on the way, so that he will not drag you before the judge, and the judge

---

[1] tn Grk "should say in his heart."

[2] tn Or "is taking a long time."

[3] sn The slave's action in beginning to beat the other slaves was not only a failure to carry out what was commanded but involved doing the exact reverse.

[4] tn The word "other" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[5] tn Grk "the menservants and the maidservants." The term here, used in both masculine and feminine grammatical forms, is παῖς (pais), which can refer to a slave, but also to a slave who is a personal servant, and thus regarded kindly (L&N 87.77).

[6] tn The verb διχοτομέω (dichotomeō) means to cut an object into two parts (L&N 19.19). This is an extremely severe punishment compared to the other two later punishments. To translate it simply as "punish" is too mild. If taken literally this servant is dismembered, although it is possible to view the stated punishment as hyperbole (L&N 38.12).

[7] tn Or "unbelieving." Here the translation employs the slightly more ambiguous "unfaithful," which creates a link with the point of the parable – faithfulness versus unfaithfulness in servants. The example of this verse must be taken together with the examples of vv. 47-48 as part of a scale of reactions with the most disobedient response coming here. The fact that this servant is placed in a distinct group, unlike the one in vv. 47-48, also suggests ultimate exclusion. This is the hypocrite of Matt 24:51.

[8] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[9] tn Grk "or do according to his will"; the referent (the master) has been specified in the translation for clarity. This example deals with the slave who knew what the command was and yet failed to complete it.

[10] tn Grk "did not know"; the phrase "his master's will" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context, but must be supplied for the contemporary English reader.

[11] tn Grk "blows."

[12] tn Grk "will receive few (blows)."

[13] tn Grk "required from him," but the words "from him" are redundant in English and have not been translated.

[14] sn Entrusted with much. To be gifted with precious responsibility is something that requires faithfulness.

[15] tn Grk "they will ask even more."

[16] sn This mission statement, "I have come to bring fire on the earth," looks to the purging and division Jesus causes: See Luke 3:9, 17; 9:54; 17:29 for fire, 5:32; 7:34; 9:58; 12:51 for the topic of mission.

[17] tn Grk "cast." For βάλλω (ballō) in the sense of causing a state or condition, see L&N 13.14.

[18] sn The figure of the baptism is variously interpreted, as some see a reference (1) to martyrdom or (2) to inundation with God's judgment. The OT background, however, suggests the latter sense: Jesus is about to be uniquely inundated with God's judgment as he is rejected, persecuted, and killed (Ps 18:4, 16; 42:7; 69:1-2; Isa 8:7-8; 30:27-28; Jonah 2:3-6).

[19] tn Grk "to be baptized with."

[20] tn Or "hostility." This term pictures dissension and hostility (BDAG 234 s.v. διαμερισμός).

[21] sn From now on is a popular phrase in Luke: 1:48; 5:10; 22:18, 69; see Mic 7:6.

[22] tn There is dispute whether this phrase belongs to the end of v. 52 or begins v. 53. Given the shift of object, a connection to v. 53 is slightly preferred.

[23] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "also" and δέ (de) has not been translated.

[24] sn A cloud rising in the west refers to moisture coming from the Mediterranean Sea.

[25] tn The term ὄμβρος (ombros) refers to heavy rain, such as in a thunderstorm (L&N 14.12).

[26] sn The south wind comes from the desert, and thus brings scorching heat.

[27] sn In Luke, the term hypocrites occurs here, in 6:42, and in 13:15.

[28] tc Most MSS ($\mathfrak{P}^{45}$ A W Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat) have a syntax here that reflects a slightly different rhetorical question: "but how do you not interpret the present time?" The reading behind the translation, however, has overall superior support: $\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ B L Θ 33 892 1241 pc.

[29] tn Jesus calls for some personal reflection. However, this unit probably does connect to the previous one – thus the translation of δέ (de) here as "And" – to make a good spiritual assessment, thus calling for application to the spiritual, rather than personal, realm.

[30] sn The term magistrate (ἄρχων, archōn) refers to an official who, under the authority of the government, serves as judge in legal cases (see L&N 56.29).

hand you over to the officer,[1] and the officer throw you into prison. 12:59 I tell you, you will never get out of there until you have paid the very last cent!"[2]

A Call to Repent

13:1 Now[3] there were some present on that occasion who told him about the Galileans whose blood Pilate had mixed with their sacrifices.[4] 13:2 He[5] answered them, "Do you think these Galileans were worse sinners[6] than all the other Galileans, because they suffered these things? 13:3 No, I tell you! But unless you repent,[7] you will all perish as well![8] 13:4 Or those eighteen who were killed[9] when the tower in Siloam fell on them,[10] do you think they were worse offenders than all the others who live in Jerusalem?[11] 13:5 No, I tell you! But unless you repent[12] you will all perish as well!"[13]

Warning to Israel to Bear Fruit

13:6 Then[14] Jesus[15] told this parable: "A man had a fig tree[16] planted in his vineyard, and he came looking for fruit on it and found none. 13:7 So[17] he said to the worker who tended the vineyard, 'For[18] three years[19] now, I have come looking for fruit on this fig tree, and each time I inspect it[20] I find none. Cut[21] it down! Why[22] should it continue to deplete[23] the soil?' 13:8 But the worker[24] answered him, 'Sir, leave it alone this year too, until I dig around it and put fertilizer[25] on it. 13:9 Then if[26] it bears fruit next year,[27] very well,[28] but if[29] not, you can cut it down.'"

Healing on the Sabbath

13:10 Now he was teaching in one of the synagogues[30] on the Sabbath, 13:11 and a woman was there[31] who had been disabled by a

1 sn The officer (πράκτωρ, praktōr) was a civil official who functioned like a bailiff and was in charge of debtor's prison. The use of the term, however, does not automatically demand a Hellenistic setting (BDAG 859 s.v.; K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT 8:539; C. Maurer, TDNT 6:642).

2 tn Here the English word "cent" is used as opposed to the parallel in Matt 5:26 where "penny" appears, since the Greek word there is different and refers to a different but similar coin.

sn This cent was a lepton, the smallest coin available. It was copper or bronze, worth one-half of a quadrans or 1/128 of a denarius. The parallel in Matt 5:26 mentions the quadrans instead of the lepton. The illustration refers to the debt one owes God and being sure to settle with him in the right time, before it is too late. Some interpreters, however, consider it to be like Matt 5:26, which has similar imagery but a completely different context.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

4 sn This is an event that otherwise is unattested, though several events similar to it are noted in Josephus (J. W. 2.9.2-4 [2.169-177]; Ant. 13.13.5 [13.372-73], 18.3.1-2 [18.55-62]; 18.4.1 [18.85-87]). It would have caused a major furor.

5 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

6 sn Jesus did not want his hearers to think that tragedy was necessarily a judgment on these people because they were worse sinners.

7 sn Jesus was stressing that all stand at risk of death, if they do not repent and receive life.

8 tn Or "you will all likewise perish," but this could be misunderstood to mean that they would perish by the same means as the Galileans. Jesus' point is that apart from repentance all will perish.

9 tn Grk "on whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them." This relative clause embedded in a prepositional phrase is complex in English and has been simplified to an adjectival and a temporal clause in the translation.

10 sn Unlike the previous event, when the tower in Siloam fell on them, it was an accident of fate. It raised the question, however, "Was this a judgment?"

11 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

12 sn Jesus' point repeats v. 3. The circumstances make no difference. All must deal with the reality of what death means.

13 tn Grk "similarly."

14 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 sn The fig tree is a variation on the picture of a vine as representing the nation; see Isa 5:1-7.

17 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the man's response as a result of the lack of figs in the preceding clause.

18 tn Grk "Behold, for."

19 sn The elapsed time could be six years total since planting, since often a fig was given three years before one even started to look for fruit. The point in any case is that enough time had been given to expect fruit.

20 tn The phrase "each time I inspect it" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied to indicate the customary nature of the man's search for fruit.

21 tc ‡ Several witnesses (𝔓^{75} A L Θ Ψ 070 f^{13} 33 579 892 al lat co) have "therefore" (οὖν, oun) here. This conjunction has the effect of strengthening the logical connection with the preceding statement but also of reducing the rhetorical power and urgency of the imperative. In light of the slightly greater internal probability of adding a conjunction to an otherwise asyndetic sentence, as well as significant external support for the omission (𝔎 B D W f^{1} 𝔐), the shorter reading appears to be more likely as the original wording here. NA^{27} puts the conjunction in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

22 tn Grk "Why indeed." Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

23 sn Such fig trees would deplete the soil, robbing it of nutrients needed by other trees and plants.

24 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the worker who tended the vineyard) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Grk "toss manure [on it]." This is a reference to manure used as fertilizer.

26 tn This is a third class condition in the Greek text. The conjunction καί (kai, a component of κάν [kan]) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

27 tn Grk "the coming [season]."

28 tn The phrase "very well" is supplied in the translation to complete the elided idea, but its absence is telling.

29 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text, showing which of the options is assumed.

30 sn See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

31 tn Grk "and behold, a woman." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

spirit[1] for eighteen years. She[2] was bent over and could not straighten herself up completely.[3] 13:12 When[4] Jesus saw her, he called her to him[5] and said, "Woman,[6] you are freed[7] from your infirmity."[8] 13:13 Then[9] he placed his hands on her, and immediately[10] she straightened up and praised God. 13:14 But the president of the synagogue, indignant because Jesus had healed on the Sabbath, said to the crowd, "There are six days on which work[11] should be done![12] So come[13] and be healed on those days, and not on the Sabbath day." 13:15 Then the Lord answered him,[14] "You hypocrites! Does not each of you on the Sabbath untie his ox or his donkey from its stall,[15] and lead it to water?[16] 13:16 Then[17] shouldn't[18] this woman, a daughter of Abraham whom Satan[19] bound for eighteen long[20] years, be released from this imprisonment[21] on the Sabbath day?" 13:17 When[22] he said this all his adversaries were humiliated,[23] but[24] the entire crowd was rejoicing at all the wonderful things[25] he was doing.[26]

On the Kingdom of God

13:18 Thus Jesus[27] asked,[28] "What is the kingdom of God[29] like?[30] To[31] what should I compare it? 13:19 It is like a mustard seed[32] that a man took and sowed[33] in his garden. It[34] grew and became a tree,[35] and the wild birds[36] nested in its branches."[37]

13:20 Again[38] he said, "To what should I

1 tn Grk "a woman having a spirit of weakness" (or "a spirit of infirmity").

2 tn Grk "years, and." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

3 tn Or "and could not straighten herself up at all." If εἰς τὸ παντελές (eis to panteles) is understood to modify δυναμένη (dunamenē), the meaning is "she was not able at all to straighten herself up," but the phrase may be taken with ἀνακύψαι (anakupsai) and understood to mean the same as the adverb παντελῶς (pantelōs), with the meaning "she was not able to straighten herself up completely." See BDAG 754 s.v. παντελής 1 for further discussion. The second option is preferred in the translation because of proximity: The phrase in question follows ἀνακύψαι in the Greek text.

4 tn The participle ἰδών (idōn) has been taken temporally. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

5 tn The verb προσεφώνησεν (prosephōnēsen) has been translated as "called (her) to (him)," with the direct object ("her") and the indirect object ("him") both understood.

6 sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions.

7 tn Or "released."

8 tn Or "sickness."

10 sn The healing took place immediately.

11 sn The irony is that Jesus' "work" consisted of merely touching the woman. There is no sense of joy that eighteen years of suffering was reversed with his touch.

12 tn Grk "on which it is necessary to work." This has been simplified in the translation.

13 tn The participle ἐρχόμενοι (erchomenoi) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

14 tn Grk "answered him and said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been shortened to "answered him."

15 tn Grk "from the manger [feeding trough]," but by metonymy of part for whole this can be rendered "stall."

16 sn The charge here is hypocrisy, but it is only part one of the response. Various ancient laws detail what was allowed with cattle; see Mishnah, m. Shabbat 5; CD 11:5-6.

17 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to show the connection with Jesus' previous statement.

18 tn Grk "is it not necessary that." Jesus argues that no other day is more appropriate to heal a descendant of Abraham than the Sabbath, the exact opposite view of the synagogue leader.

19 sn Note that this is again a battle between Satan and God; see 11:18-23.

20 tn The word "long" reflects the emphasis added in the Greek text by ἰδού (idou). See BDAG 468 s.v. 1.

21 tn Or "bondage"; Grk "bond."

22 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn Or "were put to shame."

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

25 sn Concerning all the wonderful things see Luke 7:16; 19:37.

26 tn Grk "that were being done by him." The passive has been converted to an active construction in the translation.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Grk "said," but what follows is a question.

29 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

30 sn What is the kingdom of God like? Unlike Mark 4 or Matt 13, where the kingdom parables tend to be all in one location in the narrative, Luke scatters his examples throughout the Gospel.

31 tn Grk "And to." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

32 sn The mustard seed was noted for its tiny size.

33 tn Grk "threw."

34 tn Grk "garden, and it." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

35 sn Calling the mustard plant a tree is rhetorical hyperbole, since technically it is not one. This plant could be one of two types of mustard popular in Palestine and would be either 10 or 25 ft (3 or 7.5 m) tall.

36 tn Grk "the birds of the sky" or "the birds of the heaven"; the Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated either "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context. The idiomatic expression "birds of the sky" refers to wild birds as opposed to domesticated fowl (cf. BDAG 809 s.v. πετεινόν).

37 sn The point of the parable seems to be that while the kingdom of God may appear to have insignificant and unnoticeable beginnings (i.e., in the ministry of Jesus), it will someday (i.e., at the second advent) be great and quite expansive. The kingdom, however, is not to be equated with the church, but rather the church is an expression of the kingdom. Also, there is important OT background in the image of the mustard seed that grew and became a tree: Ezek 17:22-24 pictures the reemergence of the Davidic house where people can find calm and shelter. Like the mustard seed, it would start out small but grow to significant size.

38 tn Grk "And again." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

compare the kingdom of God?[1] 13:21 It is like yeast that a woman took and mixed with[2] three measures[3] of flour until all the dough had risen."[4]

The Narrow Door

13:22 Then[5] Jesus[6] traveled throughout[7] towns[8] and villages, teaching and making his way toward[9] Jerusalem.[10] 13:23 Someone[11] asked[12] him, "Lord, will only a few[13] be saved?" So[14] he said to them, 13:24 "Exert every effort[15] to enter through the narrow door, because many, I tell you, will try to enter and will not be able to. 13:25 Once[16] the head of the house[17] gets up[18] and shuts the door, then you will stand outside and start to knock on the door and beg him, 'Lord,[19] let us in!'[20] But he will answer you,[21] 'I don't know where you come from.'[22] 13:26 Then you will begin to say, 'We ate and drank in your presence, and you taught in our streets.'[23] 13:27 But[24] he will reply,[25] 'I don't know where you come from![26] Go away from me, all you evildoers!'[27] 13:28 There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth[28] when you see Abraham, Isaac, Jacob,[29] and all the prophets in the kingdom of God[30] but you yourselves thrown out.[31] 13:29 Then[32] people[33] will come from east and west, and from north and south, and take their places at the

1 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

2 tn Grk "hid in."

3 sn This measure was a saton, the Greek name for the Hebrew term "seah." Three of these was a very large quantity of flour, since a saton is a little over 16 lbs (7 kg) of dry measure (or 13.13 liters). So this was over 47 lbs (21 kg) of flour total, enough to feed over a hundred people.

4 tn Grk "it was all leavened."

sn The parable of the yeast and the dough teaches that the kingdom of God will start small but eventually grow to permeate everything. Jesus' point was not to be deceived by its seemingly small start, the same point made in the parable of the mustard seed, which preceded this one.

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

6 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn This is a distributive use of κατά (kata); see L&N 83:12.

8 tn Or "cities."

9 tn Grk "making his journey toward." This is the first of several travel notes in Luke's Jerusalem journey section of Luke 9-19; other notes appear at 17:11; 18:31; 19:28, 41.

10 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

11 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

12 tn Grk "said to."

13 sn The warnings earlier in Jesus' teaching have led to the question whether only a few will be saved.

14 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' reply was triggered by the preceding question.

15 tn Or "Make every effort" (L&N 68.74; cf. NIV); "Do your best" (TEV); "Work hard" (NLT); Grk "Struggle." The idea is to exert one's maximum effort (cf. BDAG 17 s.v. ἀγωνίζομαι 2.b, "strain every nerve to enter") because of the supreme importance of attaining entry into the kingdom of God.

16 tn The syntactical relationship between vv. 24-25 is disputed. The question turns on whether v. 25 is connected to v. 24 or not. A lack of a clear connective makes an independent idea more likely. However, one must then determine what the beginning of the sentence connects to. Though it makes for slightly awkward English, the translation has opted to connect it to "he will answer" so that this functions, in effect, as an apodosis. One could end the sentence after "us" and begin a new sentence with "He will answer" to make simpler sentences, although the connection between the two sentences is thereby less clear. The point of the passage, however, is clear. Once the door is shut, because one failed to come in through the narrow way, it is closed permanently. The moral: Do not be too late in deciding to respond.

17 tn Or "the master of the household."

18 tn Or "rises," or "stands up."

19 tn Or "Sir."

20 tn Grk "Open to us."

21 tn Grk "and answering, he will say to you." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "he will answer you."

22 sn For the imagery behind the statement "I do not know where you come from," see Ps 138:6; Isa 63:16; Jer 1:5; Hos 5:3.

23 sn This term refers to wide streets, and thus suggests the major streets of a city.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

25 tc Most MSS (𝔓75* A D L W Θ Ψ 070 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐) have ἐρεῖ λέγω ὑμῖν (erei legō humin; "he will say, 'I say to you'") here, while some have only ἐρεῖ ὑμῖν ("he will say to you" in ℵ 579 pc lat sa) or simply ἐρεῖ ("he will say" in 1195 pc). The variety of readings seems to have arisen from the somewhat unusual wording of the original, ἐρεῖ λέγων ὑμῖν (erei legōn humin; "he will say, saying to you" found in 𝔓75c B 892 pc). Given the indicative λέγω, it is difficult to explain how the other readings would have arisen. But if the participle λέγων were original, the other readings can more easily be explained as arising from it. Although the external evidence is significantly stronger in support of the indicative reading, the internal evidence is on the side of the participle.

tn Grk "he will say, saying to you." The participle λέγων (legōn) and its indirect object ὑμῖν (humin) are redundant in contemporary English and have not been translated.

26 sn The issue is not familiarity (with Jesus' teaching) or even shared activity (eating and drinking with him), but knowing Jesus. Those who do not know him, he will not know where they come from (i.e., will not acknowledge) at the judgment.

27 tn Grk "all you workers of iniquity." The phrase resembles Ps 6:8.

28 sn Weeping and gnashing of teeth is a figure for remorse and trauma, which occurs here because of exclusion from God's promise.

29 tn Grk "and Isaac and Jacob," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

30 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

31 tn Or "being thrown out." The present accusative participle, ἐκβαλλομένους (ekballomenous), related to the object ὑμᾶς (humas), seems to suggest that these evildoers will witness their own expulsion from the kingdom.

32 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events in the discourse.

33 tn Grk "they"; the referent (people who will come to participate in the kingdom) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

Going to Jerusalem

13:31 At that time,[6] some Pharisees[7] came up and said to Jesus,[8] "Get away from here,[9] because Herod[10] wants to kill you." 13:32 But[11] he said to them, "Go[12] and tell that fox,[13] 'Look, I am casting out demons and performing healings today and tomorrow, and on the third day[14] I will complete my work.[15] 13:33 Nevertheless I must[16] go on my way today and tomorrow and the next day, because it is impossible[17] that a prophet should be killed[18] outside Jerusalem.'[19] 13:34 O Jerusalem, Jerusalem,[20] you who kill the prophets and stone those who are sent to you![21] How often I have longed[22] to gather your children together as a hen gathers her chicks under her wings, but[23] you would have none of it![24] 13:35 Look, your house is forsaken![25] And I tell you, you will not see me until you say, 'Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord!'"[26]

Healing Again on the Sabbath

14:1 Now[27] one Sabbath when Jesus went to dine[28] at the house of a leader[29] of the Pharisees,[30] they were watching[31] him closely. 14:2 There[32] right[33] in front of him was a man suffer-

1 tn Grk "and recline at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away. The word "banquet" has been supplied to clarify for the modern reader the festive nature of the imagery The banquet imagery is a way to describe the fellowship and celebration of accompanying those who are included as the people of God at the end.

2 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

4 tn Grk "behold."

5 sn Some are last who will be first, and some are first who will be last. Jesus' answer is that some who are expected to be there (many from Israel) will not be there, while others not expected to be present (from other nations) will be present. The question is not, "Will the saved be few?" (see v. 23), but "Will it be you?"

6 tn Grk "At that very hour."

7 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

8 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

9 tn Grk "Go away and leave from here," which is redundant in English and has been shortened to "Get away from here."

10 sn Herod refers here to Herod Antipas. See the note on Herod Antipas in 3:1.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

12 tn The participle πορευθέντες (poreuthentes) has been taken as indicating attendant circumstance.

13 sn That fox. This is not fundamentally a figure for cleverness as in modern western culture, but could indicate (1) an insignificant person (Neh 4:3; 2 Esd 13:35 LXX); (2) a deceiver (Song Rabbah 2.15.1 on 2:15); or someone destructive, a destroyer (Ezek 13:4; Lam 5:18; 1 En. 89:10, 42-49, 55). Luke's emphasis seems to be on destructiveness, since Herod killed John the Baptist, whom Luke calls "the greatest born of women" (Luke 7:28) and later stands opposed to Jesus (Acts 4:26-28). In addition, "a person who is designated a fox is an insignificant or base person. He lacks real power and dignity, using cunning deceit to achieve his aims" (H. W. Hoehner, Herod Antipas [SNTSMS], 347).

14 sn The third day is a figurative reference to being further on in time, not a reference to three days from now. Jesus is not even in Jerusalem yet, and the events of the last days in Jerusalem take a good week.

15 tn Or "I reach my goal." The verb τελειόω (teleioō) is a key NT term for the completion of God's plan: See Luke 12:50; 22:37; John 19:30; and (where it has the additional component of meaning "to perfect") Heb 2:10; 5:8-9; 7:28.

16 tn This is the frequent expression δεῖ (dei, "it is necessary") that notes something that is a part of God's plan.

17 tn Or "unthinkable." See L&N 71.4 for both possible meanings.

18 tn Or "should perish away from."

19 sn Death in Jerusalem is another key theme in Luke's material: 7:16, 34; 24:19; Acts 3:22-23. Notice that Jesus sees himself in the role of a prophet here. Jesus' statement, it is impossible that a prophet should be killed outside Jerusalem, is filled with irony; Jesus, traveling about in Galilee (most likely), has nothing to fear from Herod; it is his own people living in the very center of Jewish religion and worship who present the greatest danger to his life. The underlying idea is that Jerusalem, though she stands at the very heart of the worship of God, often kills the prophets God sends to her (v. 34). In the end, Herod will be much less a threat than Jerusalem.

20 sn The double use of the city's name betrays intense emotion.

21 tn Although the opening address ("Jerusalem, Jerusalem") is direct (second person), the remainder of this sentence in the Greek text is third person ("who kills the prophets and stones those sent to her"). The following sentences then revert to second person ("your... you"), so to keep all this consistent in English, the third person pronouns in the present verse were translated as second person ("you who kill... sent to you").

22 sn How often I have longed to gather your children. Jesus, like a lamenting prophet, speaks for God here, who longed to care tenderly for Israel and protect her.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

24 tn Grk "you were not willing."

25 sn Your house is forsaken. The language here is from Jer 12:7 and 22:5. It recalls exilic judgment.

26 sn A quotation from Ps 118:26. The judgment to come will not be lifted until the Lord returns. See Luke 19:41-44.

27 tn Grk "Now it happened that one." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

28 tn Grk "to eat bread," an idiom for participating in a meal.

29 tn Grk "a ruler of the Pharisees." He was probably a synagogue official.

30 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

31 sn Watching...closely is a graphic term meaning to lurk and watch; see Luke 11:53-54.

32 tn Grk "And there." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

33 tn Grk "behold." The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1). Here it has been translated as "right" in the phrase "right in front of him," giving a similar effect of vividness in the translation.

ing from dropsy.[1] 14:3 So[2] Jesus asked[3] the experts in religious law[4] and the Pharisees, "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath[5] or not?" 14:4 But they remained silent. So[6] Jesus[7] took hold of the man,[8] healed him, and sent him away.[9] 14:5 Then[10] he said to them, "Which of you, if you have a son[11] or an ox that has fallen into a well on a Sabbath day, will not immediately pull him out?" 14:6 But[12] they could not reply[13] to this.

On Seeking Seats of Honor

14:7 Then[14] when Jesus[15] noticed how the guests[16] chose the places of honor,[17] he told them a parable. He said to them, 14:8 "When you are invited by someone to a wedding feast,[18] do not take[19] the place of honor, because a person more distinguished than you may have been invited by your host.[20] 14:9 So[21] the host who invited both of you will come and say to you, 'Give this man your place.' Then, ashamed,[22] you will begin to move to the least important[23] place. 14:10 But when you are invited, go and take the least important place, so that when your host[24] approaches he will say to you, 'Friend, move up here to a better place.'[25] Then you will be honored in the presence of all who share the meal with you. 14:11 For everyone who exalts himself will be humbled, but[26] the one who humbles[27] himself will be exalted."

14:12 He[28] said also to the man[29] who had invited him, "When you host a dinner or a banquet,[30] don't invite your friends or your brothers or your relatives or rich neighbors so you can be invited by them in return and get repaid. 14:13 But when you host an elaborate meal,[31] invite the poor, the crippled,[32] the lame, and[33] the blind.[34] 14:14 Then[35] you will be blessed,[36]

[1] sn The condition called dropsy involves swollen limbs resulting from the accumulation of fluid in the body's tissues, especially the legs.

[2] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the sequence of events (Jesus' question was prompted by the man's appearance).

[3] tn Grk "Jesus, answering, said." This is redundant in contemporary English. In addition, since the context does not describe a previous question to Jesus (although one may well be implied), the phrase has been translated here as "Jesus asked."

[4] tn That is, experts in the interpretation of the Mosaic law (traditionally, "lawyers").

[5] sn "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath or not?" Will the Pharisees and experts in religious law defend tradition and speak out against doing good on the Sabbath? Has anything at all been learned since Luke 13:10-17? Has repentance come (13:6-9)?

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the sequence of events (Jesus' healing the man was in response to their refusal to answer).

[7] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn Grk "taking hold [of the man]." The participle ἐπιλαβόμενος (epilabomenos) has been taken as indicating attendant circumstance.

[9] tn Or "and let him go."

[11] tc Here "son," found in 𝔓45,75 (A) B W 𝔐, is the preferred reading. The other reading, "donkey" (found in ℵ K L Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 579 892 1241 2542 al lat bo), looks like an assimilation to Luke 13:15 and Deut 22:4; Isa 32:20, and was perhaps motivated by an attempt to soften the unusual collocation of "son" and "ox." The Western MS D differs from all others and reads "sheep."

[12] tn καί (kai) has been translated here as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context. The experts, who should be expected to know the law, are unable to respond to Jesus' question.

[13] sn They could not reply. Twice in the scene, the experts remain silent (see v. 4). That, along with the presence of power working through Jesus, serves to indicate endorsement of his work and message.

[14] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[15] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Grk "those who were invited."

[17] tn Or "the best places." The "places of honor" at the meal would be those closest to the host.

[18] tn Or "banquet." This may not refer only to a wedding feast, because this term can have broader sense (note the usage in Esth 2:18; 9:22 LXX). However, this difference does not affect the point of the parable.

[19] tn Grk "do not recline in the place of honor." 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

[20] tn Grk "by him"; the referent (the host) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn Grk "host, and." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate this action is a result of the situation described in the previous verse. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[22] tn Or "then in disgrace"; Grk "with shame." In this culture avoiding shame was important.

[23] tn Grk "lowest place" (also in the repetition of the phrase in the next verse).

[24] tn Grk "the one who invited you."

[25] tn Grk "Go up higher." This means to move to a more important place.

[26] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context, which involves the reversal of expected roles.

[27] sn The point of the statement the one who humbles himself will be exalted is humility and the reversal imagery used to underline it is common: Luke 1:52-53; 6:21; 10:15; 18:14.

[28] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[29] sn That is, the leader of the Pharisees (v. 1).

[30] tn The meaning of the two terms for meals here, ἄριστον (ariston) and δεῖπνον (deipnon), essentially overlap (L&N 23.22). Translators usually try to find two terms for a meal to use as equivalents (e.g., lunch and dinner, dinner and supper, etc.). In this translation "dinner" and "banquet" have been used, since the expected presence of rich neighbors later in the verse suggests a rather more elaborate occasion than an ordinary meal.

[31] tn This term, δοχή (dochē), is a third term for a meal (see v. 12) that could also be translated "banquet, feast."

[32] sn Normally the term means crippled as a result of being maimed or mutilated (L&N 23.177).

[33] tn Here "and" has been supplied between the last two elements in the series in keeping with English style.

[34] sn This list of needy is like Luke 7:22. See Deut 14:28-29; 16:11-14; 26:11-13.

[35] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate that this follows from the preceding action. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[36] sn You will be blessed. God notes and approves of such generosity.

because they cannot repay you, for you will be repaid[1] at the resurrection of the righteous."

The Parable of the Great Banquet

14:15 When[2] one of those at the meal with Jesus[3] heard this, he said to him, "Blessed is everyone[4] who will feast[5] in the kingdom of God!"[6] 14:16 But Jesus[7] said to him, "A man once gave a great banquet[8] and invited[9] many guests.[10] 14:17 At[11] the time for the banquet[12] he sent his slave[13] to tell those who had been invited, 'Come, because everything is now ready.' 14:18 But one after another they all[14] began to make excuses.[15] The first said to him, 'I have bought a field,[16] and I must go out and see it. Please excuse me.'[17] 14:19 Another[18] said, 'I have bought five yoke of oxen,[19] and I am going out[20] to examine them. Please excuse me.' 14:20 Another[21] said, 'I just got married, and I cannot come.'[22] 14:21 So[23] the slave came back and reported this to his master. Then the master of the household was furious[24] and said to his slave, 'Go out quickly[25] to the streets and alleys of the city,[26] and bring in the poor,[27] the crippled,[28] the blind, and the lame.' 14:22 Then[29] the slave said, 'Sir, what you instructed has been done, and there is still room.'[30] 14:23 So[31] the master said to his[32] slave, 'Go out to the highways[33] and country roads[34] and urge[35] people[36] to come in, so that my house will be filled.[37]

---

1 sn The passive verb will be repaid looks at God's commendation.

2 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

3 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 tn Grk "whoever" (the indefinite relative pronoun). This has been translated as "everyone who" to conform to contemporary English style.

5 tn Or "will dine"; Grk "eat bread." This refers to those who enjoy the endless fellowship of God's coming rule.

6 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Or "dinner."

9 sn Presumably those invited would have sent a reply with the invitation stating their desire to attend, much like a modern R.S.V.P. Then they waited for the servant to announce the beginning of the celebration (D. L. Bock, Luke [BECNT], 2:1272).

10 tn The word "guests" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

11 tn Grk "And at." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

12 tn Or "dinner."

13 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

14 tn Or "all unanimously" (BDAG 107 s.v. ἀπό 6). "One after another" is suggested by L&N 61.2.

15 sn To make excuses and cancel at this point was an insult in the culture of the time. Regardless of customs concerning responses to invitations, refusal at this point was rude.

16 sn I have bought a field. An examination of newly bought land was a common practice. It was this person's priority.

17 sn The expression Please excuse me is probably a polite way of refusing, given the dynamics of the situation, although it is important to note that an initial acceptance had probably been indicated and it was now a bit late for a refusal. The semantic equivalent of the phrase may well be "please accept my apologies."

18 tn Grk "And another." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

19 sn Five yoke of oxen. This was a wealthy man, because the normal farmer had one or two yoke of oxen.

20 tn The translation "going out" for πορεύομαι (poreuomai) is used because "going" in this context could be understood to mean "I am about to" rather than the correct nuance, "I am on my way to."

21 tn Grk "And another." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 sn I just got married, and I cannot come. There is no request to be excused here; just a refusal. Why this disqualifies attendance is not clear. The OT freed a newly married man from certain responsibilities such as serving in the army (Deut 20:7; 24:5), but that would hardly apply to a banquet. The invitation is not respected in any of the three cases.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the preceding responses.

24 tn Grk "being furious, said." The participle ὀργισθείς (orgistheis) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

25 sn It was necessary to go out quickly because the banquet was already prepared. All the food would spoil if not eaten immediately.

26 tn Or "town."

27 sn The poor, the crippled, the blind and the lame. Note how the list matches v. 13, illustrating that point. Note also how the party goes on; it is not postponed until a later date. Instead new guests are invited.

28 tn Grk "and the crippled." Normally crippled as a result of being maimed or mutilated (L&N 23.177). Καί (kai) has not been translated here and before the following category (Grk "and the blind and the lame") since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

29 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the order of events within the parable.

30 sn And still there is room. This comment suggests the celebration was quite a big one, picturing the openness of God's grace.

31 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the master's response to the slave's report.

32 tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

33 sn Go out to the highways and country roads. This suggests the inclusion of people outside the town, even beyond the needy (poor, crippled, blind, and lame) in the town, and so is an allusion to the inclusion of the Gentiles.

34 tn The Greek word φραγμός (phragmos) refers to a fence, wall, or hedge surrounding a vineyard (BDAG 1064 s.v. 1). "Highways" and "country roads" probably refer not to separate places, but to the situation outside the town where the rural roads run right alongside the hedges or fences surrounding the fields (cf. J. A. Fitzmyer, Luke [AB], 1057).

35 tn Traditionally "force" or "compel," but according to BDAG 60 s.v. ἀναγκάζω 2 this is a weakened nuance: "strongly urge/invite." The meaning in this context is more like "persuade."

36 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

37 sn So that my house will be filled. God will bless many people.

14:24 For I tell you, not one of those individuals[1] who were invited[2] will taste my banquet!'"[3]

Counting the Cost

14:25 Now large crowds[4] were accompanying Jesus,[5] and turning to them he said, 14:26 "If anyone comes to me and does not hate[6] his own father and mother, and wife and children, and brothers and sisters, and even his own life,[7] he cannot be my disciple. 14:27 Whoever does not carry his own cross[8] and follow[9] me cannot be my disciple. 14:28 For which of you, wanting to build a tower, doesn't sit down[10] first and compute the cost[11] to see if he has enough money to complete it? 14:29 Otherwise,[12] when he has laid[13] a foundation and is not able to finish the tower,[14] all who see it[15] will begin to make fun of[16] him. 14:30 They will say,[17] 'This man[18] began to build and was not able to finish!'[19] 14:31 Or what king, going out to confront another king in battle, will not sit down[20] first and determine whether he is able with ten thousand to oppose[21] the one coming against him with twenty thousand? 14:32 If he cannot succeed,[22] he will send a representative[23] while the other is still a long way off and ask for terms of peace.[24] 14:33 In the same way therefore not one of you can be my disciple if he does not renounce all his own possessions.[25]

14:34 "Salt[26] is good, but if salt loses its flavor,[27] how can its flavor be restored? 14:35 It is

1 tn The Greek word here is ἀνήρ (anēr), which frequently stresses males or husbands (in contrast to women or wives). However, the emphasis in the present context is on identifying these individuals as the ones previously invited, examples of which were given in vv. 18-20. Cf. also BDAG 79 s.v. ἀνήρ 2.

2 sn None of those individuals who were invited. This is both the point and the warning. To be a part of the original invitation does not mean one automatically has access to blessing. One must respond when the summons comes in order to participate. The summons came in the person of Jesus and his proclamation of the kingdom. The statement here refers to the fact that many in Israel will not be blessed with participation, for they have ignored the summons when it came.

3 tn Or "dinner."

4 sn It is important to note that the following remarks are not just to disciples, but to the large crowds who were following Jesus.

5 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn This figurative use operates on a relative scale. God is to be loved more than family or self.

7 tn Grk "his own soul," but ψυχή (psuchē) is frequently used of one's physical life. It clearly has that meaning in this context.

8 sn It was customary practice in a Roman crucifixion for the prisoner to be made to carry his own cross. Jesus is speaking figuratively here in the context of rejection. If the priority is not one's allegiance to Jesus, then one will not follow him in the face of possible rejection; see Luke 9:23.

9 tn Grk "and come after." In combination with the verb ἔρχομαι (erchomai) the improper preposition ὀπίσω (opisō) means "follow."

10 tn The participle καθίσας (kathisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

11 tn The first illustration involves checking to see if enough funds exist to build a watchtower. Both ψηφίζω (psēphizō, "compute") and δαπάνη (dapanē, "cost") are economic terms.

12 tn Grk "to complete it, lest." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation and ἵνα μήποτε (hina mēpote, "lest") has been translated as "Otherwise."

13 tn The participle θέντος (thentos) has been taken temporally.

14 tn The words "the tower" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

15 tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 tn Or "mock," "ridicule." The person who did not plan ahead becomes an object of joking and ridicule.

17 tn Grk "make fun of him, saying."

18 sn The phrase this man is often used in Luke in a derogatory sense; see "this one" and expressions like it in Luke 5:21; 7:39; 13:32; 23:4, 14, 22, 35.

19 sn The failure to finish the building project leads to embarrassment (in a culture where avoiding public shame was extremely important). The half completed tower testified to poor preparation and planning.

20 tn The participle καθίσας (kathisas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

21 tn On the meaning of this verb see also L&N 55.3, "to meet in battle, to face in battle."

22 tn Grk "And if not." Here δέ (de) has not been translated; "succeed" is implied and has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

23 tn Grk "a messenger."

24 sn This image is slightly different from the former one about the tower (vv. 28-30). The first part of the illustration (sit down first and determine) deals with preparation. The second part of the illustration (ask for terms of peace) has to do with recognizing who is stronger. This could well suggest thinking about what refusing the "stronger one" (God) might mean, and thus constitutes a warning. Achieving peace with God, the more powerful king, is the point of the illustration.

25 tn Grk "Likewise therefore every one of you who does not renounce all his own possessions cannot be my disciple." The complex double negation is potentially confusing to the modern reader and has been simplified in the translation. See L&N 57.70.

sn The application of the saying is this: Discipleship requires that God be in first place. The reference to renunciation of all his own possessions refers to all earthly attachments that have first place.

26 tn Grk "Now salt..."; here οὖν has not been translated.

sn Salt was used as seasoning or fertilizer (BDAG 41 s.v. ἅλας a), or as a preservative. If salt ceased to be useful, it was thrown away. With this illustration Jesus warned about a disciple who ceased to follow him.

27 sn The difficulty of this saying is understanding how salt could lose its flavor since its chemical properties cannot change. It is thus often assumed that Jesus was referring to chemically impure salt, perhaps a natural salt which, when exposed to the elements, had all the genuine salt leached out, leaving only the sediment or impurities behind. Others have suggested the background of the saying is the use of salt blocks by Arab bakers to line the floor of their ovens: Under the intense heat these blocks would eventually crystallize and undergo a change in chemical composition, finally being thrown out as unserviceable. A saying in the Talmud (b. Bekhorot 8b) attributed to R. Joshua ben Chananja (ca. A.D. 90), when asked the question "When salt loses its flavor, how can it be made salty again?" is said to have replied, "By salting it with the afterbirth of a mule." He was then asked, "Then does the mule (being sterile) bear young?" to which he replied: "Can salt lose its flavor?" The point appears to be, both are impossible. The saying, while admittedly late, suggests that culturally the loss of flavor by salt was regarded as an impos-

of no value[1] for the soil or for the manure pile; it is to be thrown out.[2] The one who has ears to hear had better listen!"[3]

The Parable of the Lost Sheep and Coin

15:1 Now all the tax collectors[4] and sinners were coming[5] to hear him. 15:2 But[6] the Pharisees[7] and the experts in the law[8] were complaining,[9] "This man welcomes[10] sinners and eats with them."

15:3 So[11] Jesus[12] told them[13] this parable:[14] 15:4 "Which one[15] of you, if he has a hundred[16] sheep and loses one of them, would not leave the ninety-nine in the open pasture[17] and go look for[18] the one that is lost until he finds it?[19] 15:5 Then[20] when he has found it, he places it on his shoulders, rejoicing. 15:6 Returning[21] home, he calls together[22] his[23] friends and neighbors, telling them, 'Rejoice with me, because I have found my sheep that was lost.' 15:7 I tell you, in the same way there will be more joy in heaven over one sinner[24] who repents than over ninety-nine righteous people[25] who have no need to repent.[26]

15:8 "Or what woman, if she has ten silver coins[27] and loses[28] one of them,[29] does not light a lamp, sweep[30] the house, and search thoroughly until she finds it? 15:9 Then[31] when she has found it, she calls together her[32] friends and neighbors, saying, 'Rejoice[33] with me, for I have found the coin[34] that I had lost.' 15:10 In the same way, I tell you, there is joy in the presence of God's angels[35] over one sinner who repents."

The Parable of the Compassionate Father

15:11 Then[36] Jesus[37] said, "A man had two sons. 15:12 The[38] younger of them said to his[39] father, 'Father, give me the share of the estate[40] sibility. Genuine salt can never lose its flavor. In this case the saying by Jesus here may be similar to Matt 19:24, where it is likewise impossible for the camel to go through the eye of a sewing needle.

[1] tn Or "It is not useful" (L&N 65.32).

[2] tn Grk "they throw it out." The third person plural with unspecified subject is a circumlocution for the passive here.

[3] tn The translation "had better listen!" captures the force of the third person imperative more effectively than the traditional "let him hear," which sounds more like a permissive than an imperative to the modern English reader. This was Jesus' common expression to listen and heed carefully (cf. Matt 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mark 4:9, 23; Luke 8:8).

[4] sn See the note on tax collectors in 3:12.

[5] tn Grk "were drawing near."

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

[7] sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

[8] tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

[9] tn Or "grumbling"; Grk "were complaining, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[10] tn Or "accepts," "receives." This is not the first time this issue has been raised: Luke 5:27-32; 7:37-50.

[11] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' telling of the parable is in response to the complaints of the Pharisees and experts in the law.

[12] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] sn Them means at the minimum the parable is for the leadership, but probably also for those people Jesus accepted, but the leaders regarded as outcasts.

[14] tn Grk "parable, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[15] tn Grk "What man." The Greek word ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used here in a somewhat generic sense.

[16] sn This individual with a hundred sheep is a shepherd of modest means, as flocks often had up to two hundred head of sheep.

[17] tn Or "desert," but here such a translation might suggest neglect of the 99 sheep left behind.

[18] tn Grk "go after," but in contemporary English the idiom "to look for" is used to express this.

[19] sn Until he finds it. The parable pictures God's pursuit of the sinner. On the image of Jesus as the Good Shepherd, see John 10:1-18.

[21] tn Grk "And coming into his..." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[22] sn A touch of drama may be present, as the term calls together can mean a formal celebration (1 Kgs 1:9-10).

[23] tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215). It occurs before "neighbors" as well ("his friends and his neighbors") but has not been translated the second time because of English style.

[24] sn There will be more joy in heaven over one sinner who repents. The pursuit of the sinner is a priority in spite of the presence of others who are doing well (see also Luke 5:32; 19:10). The theme of repentance, a major Lukan theme, is again emphasized.

[25] tn Here δικαίοις (dikaiois) is an adjective functioning substantivally and has been translated "righteous people."

[26] tn Or "who do not need to repent"; Grk "who do not have need of repentance."

[27] sn This silver coin is a drachma, equal to a denarius, that is, a day's pay for the average laborer.

[28] tn Grk "What woman who has ten silver coins, if she loses." The initial participle ἔχουσα (echousa) has been translated as a finite verb parallel to ἀπολέσῃ (apolesē) in the conditional clause to improve the English style.

[29] tn Grk "one coin."

[30] tn Grk "and sweep," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

[31] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[32] tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[33] sn Rejoice. Besides the theme of pursuing the lost, the other theme of the parable is the joy of finding them.

[34] tn Grk "drachma."

[35] sn The whole of heaven is said to rejoice. Joy in the presence of God's angels is a way of referring to God's joy as well without having to name him explicitly. Contemporary Judaism tended to refer to God indirectly where possible out of reverence or respect for the divine name.

[36] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[37] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[38] tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[39] tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

[40] tn L&N 57.19 notes that in nonbiblical contexts in which the word οὐσία (ousia) occurs, it refers to considerable possessions or wealth, thus "estate."

that will belong[1] to me.' So[2] he divided his[3] assets between them.[4] 15:13 After[5] a few days,[6] the younger son gathered together all he had and left on a journey to a distant country, and there he squandered[7] his wealth[8] with a wild lifestyle. 15:14 Then[9] after he had spent everything, a severe famine took place in that country, and he began to be in need. 15:15 So he went and worked for[10] one of the citizens of that country, who[11] sent him to his fields to feed pigs.[12] 15:16 He[13] was longing to eat[14] the carob pods[15] the pigs were eating, but[16] no one gave him anything. 15:17 But when he came to his senses[17] he said, 'How many of my father's hired workers have food[18] enough to spare, but here I am dying from hunger! 15:18 I will get up and go to my father and say to him, "Father, I have sinned[19] against heaven[20] and against[21] you. 15:19 I am no longer worthy to be called your son; treat me[22] like one of your hired workers."' 15:20 So[23] he got up and went to his father. But while he was still a long way from home[24] his father saw him, and his heart went out to him;[25] he ran and hugged[26] his son[27] and kissed him. 15:21 Then[28] his son said to him, 'Father, I have sinned against heaven[29] and against you; I am no longer worthy to be called your son.'[30] 15:22 But the father said to his slaves,[31] 'Hurry! Bring the best robe,[32] and put it on him! Put a ring on his finger[33] and sandals[34] on his feet! 15:23 Bring[35] the fattened calf[36] and kill it! Let us eat[37] and celebrate, 15:24 because this son of mine was dead, and is alive again – he was lost and is found!'[38] So[39] they began to celebrate.

15:25 "Now his older son was in the field. As[40] he came and approached the house, he heard

---

1 tn L&N 57.3, "to belong to or come to belong to, with the possible implication of by right or by inheritance."

2 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the father's response to the younger son's request.

3 tn Grk "the"; in context the article is used as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

4 sn He divided his assets between them. There was advice against doing this in the OT Apocrypha (Sir 33:20). The younger son would get half of what the older son received (Deut 21:17).

5 tn Grk "And after." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

6 tn Grk "after not many days."

7 tn Or "wasted." This verb is graphic; it means to scatter (L&N 57.151).

8 tn Or "estate" (the same word has been translated "estate" in v. 12).

9 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the sequence of events in the parable. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

10 tn Grk "joined himself to" (in this case an idiom for beginning to work for someone).

11 tn Grk "and he." Here the conjunction καί (kai) and the personal pronoun have been translated by a relative pronoun to improve the English style.

12 sn To a Jew, being sent to the field to feed pigs would be an insult, since pigs were considered unclean animals (Lev 11:7).

13 tn Grk "And he." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

14 tn Or "would gladly have eaten"; Grk "was longing to be filled with."

15 tn This term refers to the edible pods from a carob tree (BDAG 540 s.v. κεράτιον). They were bean-like in nature and were commonly used for fattening pigs, although they were also used for food by poor people (L&N 3.46).

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

17 tn Grk "came to himself" (an idiom).

18 tn Grk "bread," but used figuratively for food of any kind (L&N 5.1).

19 sn In the confession "I have sinned" there is a recognition of wrong that pictures the penitent coming home and "being found."

20 sn The phrase against heaven is a circumlocution for God.

21 tn According to BDAG 342 s.v. ἐνώπιον 4.a, "in relation to ἁμαρτάνειν ἐ. τινος sin against someone Lk 15:18, 21 (cf. Jdth 5:17; 1 Km 7:6; 20:1)."

22 tn Or "make me." Here is a sign of total humility.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the son's decision to return home. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

24 tn Grk "a long way off from [home]." The word "home" is implied (L&N 85.16).

25 tn Or "felt great affection for him," "felt great pity for him."

sn The major figure of the parable, the forgiving father, represents God the Father and his compassionate response. God is ready with open arms to welcome the sinner who comes back to him.

26 tn Grk "he fell on his neck," an idiom for showing special affection for someone by throwing one's arms around them. The picture is of the father hanging on the son's neck in welcome.

27 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the son) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

29 sn The phrase against heaven is a circumlocution for God. 1st century Judaism tended to minimize use of the divine name out of reverence.

30 sn The younger son launches into his confession just as he had planned. See vv. 18-19.

31 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

32 sn With the instructions Hurry! Bring the best robe, there is a total acceptance of the younger son back into the home.

33 tn Grk "hand," but χείρ (cheir) can refer to either the whole hand or any relevant part of it (L&N 8.30).

34 sn The need for sandals underlines the younger son's previous destitution, because he was barefoot.

35 tn Grk "And bring." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

36 tn Or "the prize calf" (L&N 65.8). See also L&N 44.2, "grain-fattened." Such a calf was usually reserved for religious celebrations.

37 tn The participle φαγόντες (phagontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

38 sn This statement links the parable to the theme of 15:6, 9.

39 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the father's remarks in the preceding verses.

40 tn Grk "And as." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

music[1] and dancing. 15:26 So[2] he called one of the slaves[3] and asked what was happening. 15:27 The slave replied,[4] 'Your brother has returned, and your father has killed the fattened calf[5] because he got his son[6] back safe and sound.' 15:28 But the older son[7] became angry[8] and refused[9] to go in. His father came out and appealed to him, 15:29 but he answered[10] his father, 'Look! These many years I have worked like a slave[11] for you, and I never disobeyed your commands. Yet[12] you never gave me even a goat[13] so that I could celebrate with my friends! 15:30 But when this son of yours[14] came back, who has devoured[15] your assets with prostitutes,[16] you killed the fattened calf[17] for him!' 15:31 Then[18] the father[19] said to him, 'Son, you are always with me, and everything that belongs to me is yours. 15:32 It was appropriate[20] to celebrate and be glad, for your brother[21] was dead, and is alive; he was lost and is found.'"[22]

The Parable of the Clever Steward

16:1 Jesus[23] also said to the disciples, "There was a rich man who was informed of accusations[24] that his manager[25] was wasting[26] his assets. 16:2 So[27] he called the manager[28] in and said to him, 'What is this I hear about you?[29] Turn in the account of your administration,[30] because you can no longer be my manager.' 16:3 Then[31] the manager said to himself, 'What should I do, since my master is taking my position[32] away from me? I'm not strong enough to dig,[33] and I'm too ashamed[34] to beg. 16:4 I know[35] what to do so that when I am put out of management, people will welcome me into their

---

1 sn This would have been primarily instrumental music, but might include singing as well.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the older son hearing the noise of the celebration in progress.

3 tn The Greek term here, παῖς (pais), describes a slave, possibly a household servant regarded with some affection (L&N 87.77).

4 tn Grk "And he said to him." Here δέ (de) has not been translated. The rest of the phrase has been simplified to "the slave replied," with the referent (the slave) specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn See note on the phrase "fattened calf" in v. 23.

6 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the younger son) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the older son, v. 25) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn The aorist verb ὠργίσθη (ōrgisthē) has been translated as an ingressive aorist, reflecting entry into a state or condition.

9 sn Ironically the attitude of the older son has left him outside and without joy.

10 tn Grk "but answering, he said." This is somewhat redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified to "but he answered."

11 tn Or simply, "have served," but in the emotional context of the older son's outburst the translation given is closer to the point.

12 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to bring out the contrast indicated by the context.

13 sn You never gave me even a goat. The older son's complaint was that the generous treatment of the younger son was not fair: "I can't get even a little celebration with a basic food staple like a goat!"

14 sn Note the younger son is not "my brother" but this son of yours (an expression with a distinctly pejorative nuance).

15 sn This is another graphic description. The younger son's consumption had been like a glutton. He had both figuratively and literally devoured the assets which were given to him.

16 sn The charge concerning the prostitutes is unproven, but essentially the older brother accuses the father of committing an injustice by rewarding his younger son's unrighteous behavior.

17 sn See note on the phrase "fattened calf" in v. 23.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events in the parable.

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the father) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Or "necessary."

21 sn By referring to him as your brother, the father reminded the older brother that the younger brother was part of the family.

22 sn The theme he was lost and is found is repeated from v. 24. The conclusion is open-ended. The reader is left to ponder with the older son (who pictures the scribes and Pharisees) what the response will be. The parable does not reveal the ultimate response of the older brother. Jesus argued that sinners should be pursued and received back warmly when they returned.

23 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn These are not formal legal charges, but reports from friends, acquaintances, etc.; Grk "A certain man was rich who had a manager, and this one was reported to him as wasting his property."

25 sn His manager was the steward in charge of managing the house. He could have been a slave trained for the role.

26 tn Or "squandering." This verb is graphic; it means to scatter (L&N 57.151).

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the reports the man received about his manager.

28 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the manager) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 sn Although phrased as a question, the charges were believed by the owner, as his dismissal of the manager implies.

30 tn Or "stewardship"; the Greek word οἰκονομία (oikonomia) is cognate with the noun for the manager (οἰκονόμος, oikonomos).

31 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events in the parable.

32 tn Grk "the stewardship," "the management."

33 tn Here "dig" could refer (1) to excavation ("dig ditches," L&N 19.55) or (2) to agricultural labor ("work the soil," L&N 43.3). In either case this was labor performed by the uneducated, so it would be an insult as a job for a manager.

34 tn Grk "I do not have strength to dig; I am ashamed to beg."

sn To beg would represent a real lowering of status for the manager, because many of those whom he had formerly collected debts from, he would now be forced to beg from.

35 tn This is a dramatic use of the aorist and the verse is left unconnected to the previous verse by asyndeton, giving the impression of a sudden realization.

homes.'[1] 16:5 So[2] he contacted[3] his master's debtors one by one. He asked the first, 'How much do you owe my master?' 16:6 The man[4] replied, 'A hundred measures[5] of olive oil.' The manager[6] said to him, 'Take your bill, sit down quickly, and write fifty.'[7] 16:7 Then he said to another, 'And how much do you owe?' The second man[8] replied, 'A hundred measures[9] of wheat.' The manager[10] said to him, 'Take your bill, and write eighty.'[11] 16:8 The[12] master commended the dishonest[13] manager because he acted shrewdly.[14] For the people[15] of this world are more shrewd in dealing with their contemporaries[16] than the people[17] of light. 16:9 And I tell you, make friends for yourselves by how you use worldly wealth,[18] so that when it runs out you will be welcomed[19] into the eternal homes.[20]

16:10 "The one who is faithful in a very little[21] is also faithful in much, and the one who is dishonest in a very little is also dishonest in much. 16:11 If then you haven't been trustworthy[22] in handling worldly wealth,[23] who will entrust you with the true riches?[24] 16:12 And if you haven't been trustworthy[25] with someone else's property,[26] who will give you your own[27]? 16:13 No servant can serve two masters, for either he will hate[28] the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise[29] the other. You cannot serve God and money."[30]

More Warnings about the Pharisees

16:14 The Pharisees[31] (who loved money) heard all this and ridiculed[32] him. 16:15 But[33] Jesus[34] said to them, "You are the ones who justify yourselves in men's eyes,[35] but God

---

1 sn Thinking ahead, the manager develops a plan to make people think kindly of him (welcome me into their homes).

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of the manager's decision.

3 tn Grk "summoning." The participle προσκαλεσάμενος (proskalesamenos) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

4 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the first debtor) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 sn A measure (sometimes translated "bath") was just over 8 gallons (about 30 liters). This is a large debt – about 875 gallons (3000 liters) of olive oil, worth 1000 denarii, over three year's pay for a daily worker.

6 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the manager) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

7 sn The bill was halved (sit down quickly, and write fifty). What was the steward doing? This is debated. 1) Did he simply lower the price? 2) Did he remove interest from the debt? 3) Did he remove his own commission? It is hard to be sure. Either of the latter two options is more likely. The goal was clear: The manager would be seen in a favorable light for bringing a deflationary trend to prices.

8 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the second debtor) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

9 sn The hundred measures here was a hundred cors. A cor was a Hebrew dry measure for grain, flour, etc., of between 10-12 bushels (about 390 liters). This was a huge amount of wheat, representing the yield of about 100 acres, a debt of between 2500-3000 denarii.

10 tn Grk "He"; the referent (the manager) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 sn The percentage of reduction may not be as great because of the change in material.

12 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

13 sn Is the manager dishonest because of what he just did? Or is it a reference to what he had done earlier, described in v. 1? This is a difficult question, but it seems unlikely that the master, having fired the man for prior dishonesty, would now commend those same actions. It would also be unusual for Jesus to make that point of the story the example. Thus it is more likely the reference to dishonesty goes back to the earliest events, while the commendation is for the cleverness of the former manager reflected in vv. 5-7.

14 sn Where this parable ends is debated: Does it conclude with v. 7, after v. 8a, after v. 8b, or after v. 9? Verse 8a looks as if it is still part of the story, with its clear reference to the manager, while 8b looks like Jesus' application, since its remarks are more general. So it is most likely the parable stops after v. 8a.

15 tn Grk "sons" (an idiom).

16 tn Grk "with their own generation."

17 tn Grk "sons." Here the phrase "sons of light" is a reference to the righteous. The point is that those of the world often think ahead about consequences better than the righteous do.

18 tn Grk "unrighteous mammon." Mammon is the Aramaic term for wealth or possessions. The point is not that money is inherently evil, but that it is often misused so that it is a means of evil; see 1 Tim 6:6-10, 17-19. The call is to be generous and kind in its use. Zacchaeus becomes the example of this in Luke's Gospel (19:1-10).

19 sn The passive refers to the welcome of heaven.

20 tn Grk "eternal tents" (as dwelling places).

21 sn The point of the statement faithful in a very little is that character is shown in how little things are treated.

22 tn Or "faithful."

23 tn Grk "the unrighteous mammon." See the note on the phrase "worldly wealth" in v. 9.

24 sn Entrust you with the true riches is a reference to future service for God. The idea is like 1 Cor 9:11, except there the imagery is reversed.

25 tn Or "faithful."

26 tn Grk "have not been faithful with what is another's."

27 tn Grk "what is your own."

28 sn The contrast between hate and love here is rhetorical. The point is that one will choose the favorite if a choice has to be made.

29 tn Or "and treat [the other] with contempt."

30 tn Grk "God and mammon." This is the same word (μαμωνᾶς, mamōnas; often merely transliterated as "mammon") translated "worldly wealth" in vv. 9, 11.

sn The term money is used to translate mammon, the Aramaic term for wealth or possessions. The point is not that money is inherently evil, but that it is often misused so that it is a means of evil; see 1 Tim 6:6-10, 17-19. God must be first, not money or possessions.

31 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

32 tn A figurative extension of the literal meaning "to turn one's nose up at someone"; here "ridicule, sneer at, show contempt for" (L&N 33.409).

33 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

34 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

35 tn Grk "before men." The contrast is between outward appearance ("in people's eyes") and inward reality ("God knows your hearts"). Here the Greek term ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used twice in a generic sense, referring to both men and women, but "men" has been retained in the text to provide a strong verbal contrast with "God" in the second half of the verse.

knows your hearts. For what is highly prized[1] among men is utterly detestable[2] in God's sight.

16:16 "The law and the prophets were in force[3] until John;[4] since then,[5] the good news of the kingdom of God[6] has been proclaimed, and everyone is urged to enter it.[7] 16:17 But it is easier for heaven and earth to pass away than for one tiny stroke of a letter[8] in the law to become void.[9] 16:18 "Everyone who divorces his wife and marries[10] someone else commits adultery, and the one who marries a woman divorced from her husband commits adultery.

The Rich Man and Lazarus

16:19 "There was a rich man who dressed in purple[11] and fine linen and who feasted sumptuously[12] every day. 16:20 But at his gate lay[13] a poor man named Lazarus[14] whose body was covered with sores,[15] 16:21 who longed to eat[16] what fell from the rich man's table. In addition, the dogs[17] came and licked[18] his sores.

16:22 "Now[19] the poor man died and was carried by the angels to Abraham's side.[20] The[21] rich man also died and was buried.[22] 16:23 And in hell,[23] as he was in torment,[24] he looked up[25] and saw Abraham far off with Lazarus at his side.[26] 16:24 So[27] he called out,[28] 'Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus[29] to dip the tip of his finger[30] in water and cool my tongue, because I am in anguish[31] in this fire.'[32] 16:25 But Abraham said, 'Child,[33] remember that in your lifetime you received your good things and Lazarus likewise bad things, but now he is comforted here and you are in anguish.[34]

1 tn Or "exalted." This refers to the pride that often comes with money and position.

2 tn Or "is an abomination," "is abhorrent" (L&N 25.187).

3 tn There is no verb in the Greek text; one must be supplied. Some translations (NASB, NIV) supply "proclaimed" based on the parallelism with the proclamation of the kingdom. The transitional nature of this verse, however, seems to call for something more like "in effect" (NRSV) or, as used here, "in force." Further, Greek generally can omit one of two kinds of verbs – either the equative verb or one that is already mentioned in the preceding context (ExSyn 39).

4 sn John refers to John the Baptist.

5 sn Until John; since then. This verse indicates a shift in era, from law to kingdom.

6 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

7 tn Many translations have "entereth violently into it" (ASV) or "is forcing his way into it" (NASB, NIV). This is not true of everyone. It is better to read the verb here as passive rather than middle, and in a softened sense of "be urged." See Gen 33:11; Judg 13:15-16; 19:7; 2 Sam 3:25, 27 in the LXX. This fits the context well because it agrees with Jesus' attempt to persuade his opponents to respond morally. For further discussion and details, see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1352-53.

8 tn Or "one small part of a letter" (L&N 33.37).

9 tn Grk "to fall"; that is, "to drop out of the text." Jesus' point may be that the law is going to reach its goal without fail, in that the era of the promised kingdom comes.

10 sn The examples of marriage and divorce show that the ethical standards of the new era are still faithful to promises made in the presence of God. To contribute to the breakup of a marriage, which involved a vow before God, is to commit adultery. This works whether one gets a divorce or marries a person who is divorced, thus finalizing the breakup of the marriage. Jesus' point concerns the need for fidelity and ethical integrity in the new era.

11 sn Purple describes a fine, expensive dye used on luxurious clothing, and by metonymy, refers to clothing colored with that dye. It pictures someone of great wealth.

12 tn Or "celebrated with ostentation" (L&N 88.255), that is, with showing off. Here was the original conspicuous consumer.

13 tn The passive verb ἐβέβλητο (ebeblēto) does not indicate how Lazarus got there. Cf. BDAG 163 s.v. βάλλω 1.b, "he lay before the door"; Josephus, Ant. 9.10.2 (9.209).

14 sn This is the one time in all the gospels that a figure in a parable is mentioned by name. It will become important later in the account.

15 tn Or "was covered with ulcers." The words "whose body" are implied in the context (L&N 23.180).

16 tn Grk "to eat his fill," but this phrase has been simplified as "to eat" for stylistic reasons.

17 tn The term κύνες (kunes) refers to "wild" dogs (either "street" dogs or watchdogs), not house pets (L&N 4.34).

18 sn When the dogs came and licked his sores it meant that he was unclean. See the negative image of Rev 22:15 that draws on this picture.

19 tn Grk "Now it happened that the." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

20 tn Grk "to Abraham's bosom." The phrase "carried by the angels to Abraham's bosom" describes being gathered to the fathers and is a way to refer to heaven (Gen 15:15; 47:30; Deut 31:16).

21 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 sn The shorter description suggests a different fate, which is confirmed in the following verses.

23 sn The Greek term Hades stands for the Hebrew concept of Sheol. It is what is called hell today. This is where the dead were gathered (Ps 16:10; 86:13). In the NT Hades has an additional negative force of awaiting judgment (Rev 20:13).

24 sn Hades is a place of torment, especially as one knows that he is separated from God.

25 tn Grk "he lifted up his eyes" (an idiom).

26 tn Grk "in his bosom," the same phrase used in 16:22. This idiom refers to heaven and/or participation in the eschatological banquet. An appropriate modern equivalent is "at Abraham's side."

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous actions in the narrative.

28 tn Grk "calling out he said"; this is redundant in contemporary English style and has been simplified to "he called out."

29 sn The rich man had not helped Lazarus before, when he lay outside his gate (v. 2), but he knew him well enough to know his name. This is why the use of the name Lazarus in the parable is significant. (The rich man's name, on the other hand, is not mentioned, because it is not significant for the point of the story.)

30 sn The dipping of the tip of his finger in water is evocative of thirst. The thirsty are in need of God's presence (Ps 42:1-2; Isa 5:13). The imagery suggests the rich man is now separated from the presence of God.

31 tn Or "in terrible pain" (L&N 24.92).

32 sn Fire in this context is OT imagery; see Isa 66:24.

33 tn The Greek term here is τέκνον (teknon), which could be understood as a term of endearment.

34 tn Or "in terrible pain" (L&N 24.92). Here is the reversal Jesus mentioned in Luke 6:20-26.

16:26 Besides all this,[1] a great chasm[2] has been fixed between us,[3] so that those who want to cross over from here to you cannot do so, and no one can cross from there to us.' 16:27 So[4] the rich man[5] said, 'Then I beg you, father – send Lazarus[6] to my father's house 16:28 (for I have five brothers) to warn[7] them so that they don't come[8] into this place of torment.' 16:29 But Abraham said,[9] 'They have Moses and the prophets; they must respond to[10] them.' 16:30 Then[11] the rich man[12] said, 'No, father Abraham, but if someone from the dead[13] goes to them, they will repent.' 16:31 He[14] replied to him, 'If they do not respond to[15] Moses and the prophets, they will not be convinced even if someone rises from the dead.'"[16]

Sin, Forgiveness, Faith, and Service

17:1 Jesus[17] said to his disciples, "Stumbling blocks are sure to come, but woe[18] to the one through whom they come! 17:2 It would be better for him to have a millstone[19] tied around his neck and be thrown into the sea[20] than for him to cause one of these little ones to sin.[21] 17:3 Watch[22] yourselves! If[23] your brother[24] sins, rebuke him. If[25] he repents, forgive him. 17:4 Even if he sins against you seven times in a day, and seven times returns to you saying, 'I repent,' you must forgive[26] him."

17:5 The[27] apostles said to the Lord, "Increase our faith!"[28] 17:6 So[29] the Lord replied,[30] "If[31] you had faith the size of[32] a mustard seed, you could say to this black mulberry[33] tree, 'Be pulled out by the roots and planted in the sea,'[34] and it would obey[35] you.

---

1 tn Grk "And in all these things." There is no way Lazarus could carry out this request even if divine justice were not involved.

2 sn The great chasm between heaven and hell is impassable forever. The rich man's former status meant nothing now.

3 tn Grk "between us and you."

4 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the rich man's response to Abraham's words.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the rich man, v. 19) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "Then I beg you, father, that you send him"; the referent (Lazarus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 sn To warn them. The warning would consist of a call to act differently than their dead brother had, or else meet his current terrible fate.

8 tn Grk "lest they also come."

9 tn Grk "says." This is one of the few times Luke uses the historical present.

10 tn Or "obey"; Grk "hear." This recalls the many OT texts calling for a righteous heart to respond to people in need (Deut 14:28-29; Isa 3:14-15; Amos 2:6-8; Mic 2:1-2; Zech 7:9-10).

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the rich man, v. 19) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 sn If someone from the dead goes to them. The irony and joy of the story is that what is denied the rich man's brothers, a word of warning from beyond the grave, is given to the reader of the Gospel in this exchange.

14 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

15 tn Or "obey"; Grk "hear." See the note on the phrase "respond to" in v. 29.

16 sn The concluding statement of the parable, they will not be convinced even if someone rises from the dead, provides a hint that even Jesus' resurrection will not help some to respond. The message of God should be good enough. Scripture is the sign to be heeded.

17 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

18 sn See Luke 6:24-26.

19 tn This term refers to the heavy upper stone of a grinding mill (L&N 7.70; BDAG 660 s.v. μυλικός).

sn The punishment of drowning with a heavy weight attached is extremely gruesome and reflects Jesus' views concerning those who cause others who believe in him to sin.

20 tn Grk "if a millstone were tied...and he were thrown." The conditional construction in Greek has been translated by English infinitives: "to have... and be thrown."

21 tn Or "to stumble." This verb, σκανδαλίσῃ (skandalisē), has the same root as the noun σκάνδαλον (skandalon) in 17:1, translated "stumbling blocks"; this wordplay is difficult to reproduce in English. It is possible that the primary cause of offense here would be leading disciples ("little ones") astray in a similar fashion.

22 tn It is difficult to know if this looks back or forward or both. The warning suggests it looks back. For this verb, see Luke 8:18; 12:1, 15; 20:46; 21:8, 34. The present imperative reflects an ongoing spirit of watchfulness.

23 tn Both the "if" clause in this verse and the "if" clause in v. 4 are third class conditions in Greek.

24 tn Here the term "brother" means "fellow believer" or "fellow Christian" (cf. BDAG 18 s.v. ἀδελφός 2.a, contra BDAG 19 s.v. 2.c), but with a familial connotation. It refers equally to men, women, or children. However, because of the familial connotations, "brother" has been retained in the translation here in preference to the more generic "fellow believer" ("fellow Christian" would be anachronistic in this context).

25 tn Grk "And if." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

26 sn You must forgive him. Forgiveness is to be readily given and not withheld. In a community that is to have restored relationships, grudges are not beneficial.

27 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

28 sn The request of the apostles, "Increase our faith," is not a request for a gift of faith, but a request to increase the depth of their faith.

29 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of previous action(s) in the narrative.

30 tn Grk "said."

31 tn This is a mixed condition, with ἄν (an) in the apodosis.

32 tn Grk "faith as," "faith like."

33 sn A black mulberry tree is a deciduous fruit tree that grows about 20 ft (6 m) tall and has black juicy berries. This tree has an extensive root system, so to pull it up would be a major operation.

34 tn The passives here (ἐκριζώθητι and φυτεύθητι, ekrizōthēti and phuteuthēti) are probably a circumlocution for God performing the action (the so-called divine passive, see ExSyn 437-38). The issue is not the amount of faith (which in the example is only very tiny), but its presence, which can accomplish impossible things. To cause a tree to be uprooted and planted in the sea is impossible. The expression is a rhetorical idiom. It is like saying a camel can go through the eye of a needle (Luke 18:25).

35 tn The verb is aorist, though it looks at a future event, another rhetorical touch to communicate certainty of the effect of faith.

17:7 "Would any one of you say[1] to your slave[2] who comes in from the field after plowing or shepherding sheep, 'Come at once and sit down for a meal'?[3] 17:8 Won't[4] the master[5] instead say to him, 'Get my dinner ready, and make yourself ready[6] to serve me while[7] I eat and drink. Then[8] you may eat and drink'? 17:9 He won't thank the slave because he did what he was told,[9] will he?[10] 17:10 So you too, when you have done everything you were commanded to do, should say, 'We are slaves undeserving of special praise;[11] we have only done what was our duty.'"[12]

The Grateful Leper

17:11 Now on[13] the way to Jerusalem,[14] Jesus[15] was passing along[16] between Samaria and Galilee. 17:12 As[17] he was entering[18] a village, ten men with leprosy[19] met him. They[20] stood at a distance, 17:13 raised their voices and said, "Jesus, Master, have mercy[21] on us." 17:14 When[22] he saw them he said, "Go[23] and show yourselves to the priests."[24] And[25] as they went along, they were cleansed. 17:15 Then one of them, when he saw he was healed, turned back, praising[26] God with a loud voice. 17:16 He[27] fell with his face to the ground[28] at Jesus' feet and thanked him.[29] (Now[30] he was a Samaritan.)[31] 17:17 Then[32] Jesus said,[33] "Were[34] not ten cleansed? Where are the other[35] nine? 17:18 Was no one found to turn back and give praise to God except this foreigner?"[36] 17:19 Then[37] he said to the man,[38] "Get up and go your way. Your faith has made you well."[39]

---

[1] tn Grk "Who among you, having a slave... would say to him."

[2] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

[3] tn Grk "and recline at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away. See BDAG 70 s.v. ἀναπίπτω 1.

[4] tn The question includes a Greek particle, οὐχί (ouchi), that expects a positive reply. The slave is expected to prepare a meal before eating himself.

[5] tn Grk "he"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Grk "and gird yourself" (with an apron or towel, in preparation for service).

[7] tn BDAG 423 s.v. ἕως 2.b, "to denote contemporaneousness as long as, while... w. subjunctive... Lk 17:8."

[8] tn Grk "after these things."

[9] tn Grk "did what was commanded."

[10] tn The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' at the end, "will he?" Thanks are not required.

[11] tn Some translations describe the slaves as "worthless" (NRSV) or "unworthy" (NASB, NIV) but that is not Jesus' point. These disciples have not done anything deserving special commendation or praise (L&N 33.361), but only what would normally be expected of a slave in such a situation (thus the translation "we have only done what was our duty").

[12] tn Or "we have only done what we were supposed to do."

[13] tn Grk "Now it happened that on." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[14] sn This is another travel note about Jesus going to Jerusalem in Luke 9:51-19:48, the so-called "Jerusalem journey" section of Luke's Gospel. It is not a straight line journey, because to travel along the Galilean and Samaritan border is to go east or west, not south to Jerusalem.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[15] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[16] tn Or "was traveling about."

[17] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[18] tn The participle εἰσερχομένου (eiserchomenou) is taken temporally.

[19] sn The ten men with leprosy would have been unable to approach Jesus (Lev 13:45-46; Num 5:2-3). The ancient term for leprosy covered a wider array of conditions than what is called leprosy today. A leper was totally ostracized from society until he was declared cured (Lev 13:45-46).

[20] tn Grk "leprosy, who." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the relative pronoun was replaced with a personal pronoun and a new sentence started at this point in the translation.

[21] sn "Have mercy on us" is a request to heal them (Luke 18:38-39; 16:24; Matt 9:27; 15:22; 17:15; 20:31-32; Mark 10:47-49).

[22] tn Καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[23] tn The participle πορευθέντες (poreuthentes) is a good example of an adverbial participle of attendant circumstance. As such, it picks up the force of an imperative from the verb to which it is related (ExSyn 640-45).

[24] sn These are the instructions of what to do with a healing (Lev 13:19; 14:1-11; Luke 5:14).

[25] tn Grk "And it happened that as." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[26] tn Grk "glorifying God."

[27] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[28] tn Grk "he fell on his face" (an idiom for complete prostration).

[29] sn And thanked him. This action recognized God's healing work through Jesus.

[30] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of a parenthetical comment.

[31] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. The comment that the man was a Samaritan means that to most Jews of Jesus' day he would have been despised as a half-breed and a heretic. The note adds a touch of irony to the account (v. 18).

[32] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[33] tn Grk "Jesus answering said"; this is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

[34] tn The Greek construction used here (οὐχί, ouchi) expects a positive reply.

[35] tn The word "other" is implied in the context.

[36] sn Jesus' point in calling the man a foreigner is that none of the other nine, who were presumably Israelites, responded with gratitude. Only the "outsiders" were listening and responding.

[38] tn Grk "to him"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[39] tn Or "has delivered you"; Grk "has saved you." The remark about faith suggests the benefit of trusting in Jesus' ability to deliver. Apparently the Samaritan benefited from the healing in a way the other nine did not.

The Coming of the Kingdom

17:20 Now at one point[1] the Pharisees[2] asked Jesus[3] when the kingdom of God[4] was coming, so he answered, "The kingdom of God is not coming with signs[5] to be observed, 17:21 nor will they say, 'Look, here it is!' or 'There!' For indeed, the kingdom of God is[6] in your midst."[7]

The Coming of the Son of Man

17:22 Then[8] he said to the disciples, "The days are coming when you will desire to see one of the days[9] of the Son of Man, and you will not see it. 17:23 Then people[10] will say to you, 'Look, there he is!'[11] or 'Look, here he is!' Do not go out or chase after them.[12] 17:24 For just like the lightning flashes[13] and lights up the sky from one side to the other, so will the Son of Man be in his day.[14] 17:25 But first he must[15] suffer many things and be rejected by this generation. 17:26 Just[16] as it was[17] in the days of Noah,[18] so too it will be in the days of the Son of Man. 17:27 People[19] were eating,[20] they were drinking, they were marrying, they were being given in marriage – right up to the day Noah entered the ark. Then[21] the flood came and destroyed them all.[22] 17:28 Likewise, just as it was[23] in the days of Lot, people[24] were eating, drinking, buying, selling, planting, building; 17:29 but on the day Lot went out from Sodom, fire and sulfur rained down from heaven and destroyed them all.[25] 17:30 It will be the same on the day the Son of Man is revealed. 17:31 On that day, anyone who is on the roof,[26] with his goods in the house, must not come down[27] to take them away, and likewise the person in the field must not turn back. 17:32 Remember Lot's wife![28] 17:33 Whoever tries to keep[29] his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life[30] will preserve it. 17:34 I tell you, in that night there will be two

[1] tn The words "at one point" are supplied to indicate that the following incident is not necessarily in chronological sequence with the preceding event.

[2] sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

[3] tn Grk "having been asked by the Pharisees." The passive construction has been translated as an active one in keeping with contemporary English style, and the direct object, Jesus, has been supplied from the context.

[4] sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

[5] tn Or "is not coming in a way that it can be closely watched" (L&N 24.48). Although there are differing interpretations of what this means, it probably refers to the cosmic signs often associated with the kingdom's coming in the Jewish view (1 En. 91, 93; 2 Bar. 53—74). See D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1412-14, also H. Riesenfeld, TDNT 8:150.

[6] tn This is a present tense in the Greek text. In contrast to waiting and looking for the kingdom, it is now available.

[7] tn This is a far better translation than "in you." Jesus would never tell the hostile Pharisees that the kingdom was inside them. The reference is to Jesus present in their midst. He brings the kingdom. Another possible translation would be "in your grasp." For further discussion and options, see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1414-19.

[8] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[9] sn This is a reference to the days of the full manifestation of Jesus' power in a fully established kingdom. The reference to "days" instead of "day" is unusual, appearing only here and in v. 26, but it may be motivated merely by parallelism with the "days" of Noah there and the "days of Lot" in v. 28.

[10] tn Grk "And they will say." The plural in Greek is indefinite, referring to people in general. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[11] tn The words "he is" here and in the following clause are understood and have been supplied from the context.

[12] sn Do not go out or chase after them. There will be no need to search for the Son of Man at his coming, though many will falsely claim its arrival.

[13] sn The Son of Man's coming in power will be sudden and obvious like lightning. No one will need to point it out.

[14] tc Some very important MSS (𝔓75 B D it sa) lack the words ἐν τῇ ἡμέρα αὐτοῦ (en tē hēmera autou, "in his day"), but the words are included in ℵ A L W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat sy bo. On the one hand, the shorter reading is impressive because it has some of the best Alexandrian and Western witnesses in support; on the other hand, the expression ἐν τῇ ἡμέρα αὐτοῦ is unusual (found nowhere else in the NT), and may be considered the harder reading. A decision is difficult, but it is probably best to retain the words. NA[27] rightly has the words in brackets, expressing doubt as to their authenticity.

[15] sn The Son of Man's suffering and rejection by this generation is another "it is necessary" type of event in God's plan (Luke 4:43; 24:7, 26, 44) and the fifth passion prediction in Luke's account (9:22, 44; 12:50; 13:32-33; for the last, see 18:32-33).

[16] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[17] tn Or "as it happened."

[18] sn Like the days of Noah, the time of the flood in Gen 6:5-8:22, the judgment will come as a surprise as people live their day to day lives.

[19] tn Grk "They." The plural in Greek is indefinite, referring to people in general.

[20] tn These verbs ("eating... drinking... marrying... being given in marriage") are all progressive imperfects, describing action in progress at that time.

[22] sn Like that flood came and destroyed them all, the coming judgment associated with the Son of Man will condemn many.

[23] tn Or "as it happened."

[24] tn Grk "they." The plural in Greek is indefinite, referring to people in general.

[25] sn And destroyed them all. The coming of the Son of Man will be like the judgment on Sodom, one of the most immoral places of the OT (Gen 19:16-17; Deut 32:32-33; Isa 1:10).

[26] sn Most of the roofs in the NT were flat roofs made of pounded dirt, sometimes mixed with lime or stones, supported by heavy wooden beams. They generally had an easy means of access, either a sturdy wooden ladder or stone stairway, sometimes on the outside of the house.

[27] sn The swiftness and devastation of the judgment will require a swift escape. There is no time to come down from one's roof and pick up anything from inside one's home.

[28] sn An allusion to Gen 19:26. The warning about Lot's wife is not to look back and long to be where one used to be. The world is being judged, and the person who delays or turns back will be destroyed.

[29] tn Or "tries to preserve"; Grk "seeks to gain."

sn If there is no willingness to suffer the world's rejection at this point, then one will not respond to Jesus (which is trying to keep his life) and then will be subject to this judgment (which is losing it).

[30] sn Whoever loses his life. Suffering and persecution caused by the world, even to death, cannot stop God from saving (Luke 12:4-6).

people in one bed; one will be taken and the other left.[1] 17:35 There will be two women grinding grain together;[2] one will be taken and the other left."[3]

17:37 Then[4] the disciples[5] said[6] to him, "Where,[7] Lord?" He replied to them, "Where the dead body[8] is, there the vultures[9] will gather."[10]

Prayer and the Parable of the Persistent Widow

18:1 Then[11] Jesus[12] told them a parable to show them they should always[13] pray and not lose heart.[14] 18:2 He said,[15] "In a certain city[16] there was a judge[17] who neither feared God nor respected people.[18] 18:3 There was also a widow[19] in that city[20] who kept coming[21] to him and saying, 'Give me justice against my adversary.' 18:4 For[22] a while he refused, but later on[23] he said to himself, 'Though I neither fear God nor have regard for people,[24] 18:5 yet because this widow keeps on bothering me, I will give her justice, or in the end she will wear me out[25] by her unending pleas.'"[26] 18:6 And the Lord said, "Listen to what the unrighteous judge says! 18:7 Won't[28] God give justice to his chosen ones, who cry out[29] to him day and night?[30] Will he delay[31] long to help them? 18:8 I tell you, he will give them justice speedily.[32] Nevertheless, when the Son of Man comes, will he find faith[33] on earth?"

The Parable of the Pharisee and Tax Collector

18:9 Jesus[34] also told this parable to some who were confident that they were righteous and looked down[35] on everyone else. 18:10 "Two men went up[36] to the temple to pray, one a Pharisee[37] and the other a tax collector.[38]

---

1 sn There is debate among commentators and scholars over the phrase one will be taken and the other left about whether one is taken for judgment or for salvation. If the imagery is patterned after the rescue of Noah from the flood and Lot from Sodom, as some suggest, the ones taken are the saved (as Noah and Lot were) and those left behind are judged. The imagery, however, is not directly tied to the identification of the two groups. Its primary purpose in context is to picture the sudden, surprising separation of the righteous and the judged (i.e., condemned) at the return of the Son of Man.

2 tn Grk "at the same place." According to L&N 46.16, this refers to a hand mill normally operated by two women.

3 tc Several MSS (D f^{13} [579] 700 al lat sy) add (with several variations among these witnesses) 17:36 "There will be two in the field; one will be taken and the other left." It is not well enough attested to be original. Further, it is an assimilation to the parallel in Matt 24:40, which marks the addition as secondary. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

5 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the disciples, v. 22) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "answering, they said to him." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

7 sn The question "Where, Lord?" means, "Where will the judgment take place?"

8 tn Or "corpse."

9 tn The same Greek term can refer to "eagles" or "vultures" (L&N 4.42; BDAG 22 s.v. ἀετός), but in this context it must mean vultures, because the gruesome image is one of dead bodies being consumed by scavengers.

sn Jesus' answer is that when the judgment comes, the scenes of death will be obvious and so will the location of the judgment.

10 tn Grk "will be gathered." The passive construction has been translated as an active one in English.

11 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

12 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Or "should pray at all times" (L&N 67.88).

14 sn This is one of the few parables that comes with an explanation at the start: ...they should always pray and not lose heart. It is part of Luke's goal in encouraging Theophilus (1:4).

15 tn Grk "lose heart, saying." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in the Greek text, but a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronominal subject "He."

16 tn Or "town."

17 sn The judge here is apparently portrayed as a civil judge who often handled financial cases.

18 tn Grk "man," but the singular ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used as a generic in comparison to God.

19 sn This widow was not necessarily old, since many people lived only into their thirties in the 1st century.

20 tn Or "town."

21 tn This is an iterative imperfect; the widow did this on numerous occasions.

22 tn Grk "And for." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

23 tn Grk "after these things."

24 tn Grk "man," but the singular ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) is used as a generic in comparison to God.

25 tn The term ὑπωπιάζω (hupōpiazō) in this context means "to wear someone out by continual annoying" (L&N 25.245).

26 tn Grk "by her continual coming," but the point of annoyance to the judge is her constant pleas for justice (v. 3).

27 sn Listen to what the unrighteous judge says! The point of the parable is that the judge's lack of compassion was overcome by the widow's persistence.

28 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

29 sn The prayers have to do with the righteous who cry out to him to receive justice. The context assumes the righteous are persecuted.

30 tn The emphatic particles in this sentence indicate that God will indeed give justice to the righteous.

31 sn The issue of delay has produced a whole host of views for this verse. (1) Does this assume provision to endure in the meantime? Or (2) does it mean God restricts the level of persecution until he comes? Either view is possible.

32 tn Some argue this should be translated "suddenly." When vindication comes it will be quick. But the more natural meaning is "soon." God will not forget his elect and will respond to them. It may be that this verse has a prophetic perspective. In light of the eternity that comes, vindication is soon.

33 sn Will he find faith on earth? The Son of Man is looking for those who continue to believe in him, despite the wait.

34 tn Grk "He"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity.

35 tn Grk "and despised." This is a second parable with an explanatory introduction.

36 sn The temple is on a hill in Jerusalem, so one would go up to enter its precincts.

37 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

38 sn See the note on tax collectors in 3:12.

18:11 The Pharisee stood and prayed about himself like this:[1] 'God, I thank[2] you that I am not like other people:[3] extortionists,[4] unrighteous people,[5] adulterers – or even like this tax collector.[6] 18:12 I fast twice[7] a week; I give a tenth[8] of everything I get.' 18:13 The tax collector, however, stood[9] far off and would not even look up[10] to heaven, but beat his breast and said, 'God, be merciful[11] to me, sinner that I am!'[12] 18:14 I tell you that this man went down to his home justified[13] rather than the Pharisee.[14] For everyone who exalts[15] himself will be humbled, but he who humbles himself will be exalted."

Jesus and Little Children

18:15 Now people[16] were even bringing their babies[17] to him for him to touch.[18] But when the disciples saw it, they began to scold those who brought them.[19] 18:16 But Jesus called for the children,[20] saying, "Let the little children come to me and do not try to stop them, for the kingdom of God[21] belongs to such as these.[22] 18:17 I tell you the truth,[23] whoever does not receive[24] the kingdom of God like a child[25] will never[26] enter it."

The Wealthy Ruler

18:18 Now[27] a certain ruler[28] asked him, "Good teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"[29] 18:19 Jesus[30] said to him, "Why do you call me good?[31] No one is good except God alone. 18:20 You know the commandments: 'Do not commit adultery, do not murder, do not steal, do not give false testimony, honor your

1 tn Or "stood by himself and prayed like this." The prepositional phrase πρὸς ἑαυτόν (pros eauton, "to/about himself") could go with either the aorist participle σταθείς (statheis, "stood") or with the imperfect verb προσηύχετο (prosēucheto, "he prayed"). If taken with the participle, then the meaning would seem at first glance to be: "stood 'by himself'," or "stood 'alone'." Now it is true that πρός can mean "by" or "with" when used with intransitive verbs such as ἵστημι (histēmi, "I stand"; cf. BDAG 874 s.v. πρός 2.a), but πρὸς ἑαυτόν together never means "by himself" or "alone" in biblical Greek. On the other hand, if πρὸς ἑαυτόν is taken with the verb, then two different nuances emerge, both of which highlight in different ways the principal point Jesus seems to be making about the arrogance of this religious leader: (1) "prayed to himself," but not necessarily silently, or (2) "prayed about himself," with the connotation that he prayed out loud, for all to hear. Since his prayer is really a review of his moral résumé, directed both at advertising his own righteousness and exposing the perversion of the tax collector, whom he actually mentions in his prayer, the latter option seems preferable. If this is the case, then the Pharisee's mention of God is really nothing more than a formality.

2 sn The Pharisee's prayer started out as a thanksgiving psalm to God, but the praise ended up not being about God.

3 tn Here the plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is used as a generic and can refer to both men and women (NASB, NRSV, "people"; NLT, "everyone else"; NAB, "the rest of humanity").

4 tn Or "swindlers" (BDAG 134 s.v. ἅρπαξ 2); see also Isa 10:2; Josephus, J. W. 6.3.4 [6.203].

5 sn A general category for "sinners" (1 Cor 6:9; Lev 19:3).

6 sn Note what the Pharisee assumes about the righteousness of this tax collector by grouping him with extortionists, unrighteous people, and adulterers.

7 sn The law only required fasting on the Day of Atonement. Such voluntary fasting as this practiced twice a week by the Pharisee normally took place on Monday and Thursday.

8 tn Or "I tithe."

9 tn Grk "standing"; the Greek participle has been translated as a finite verb.

10 tn Grk "even lift up his eyes" (an idiom).

11 tn The prayer is a humble call for forgiveness. The term for mercy (ἱλάσκομαι, hilaskomai) is associated with the concept of a request for atonement (BDAG 473-74 s.v. 1; Ps 51:1, 3; 25:11; 34:6, 18).

12 tn Grk "the sinner." The tax collector views himself not just as any sinner but as the worst of all sinners. See ExSyn 222-23.

13 sn The prayer that was heard and honored was the one given with humility; in a surprising reversal it was the tax collector who went down to his home justified.

14 tn Grk "the other"; the referent (the Pharisee, v. 10) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 sn Everyone who exalts himself. See Luke 14:11. Jesus often called for humility and condemned those who sought honor.

16 tn Grk "they."

17 tn The term βρέφος (brephos) here can refer to babies or to toddlers (2:12, 16; Acts 7:19; 2 Tim 3:15; 1 Pet 2:2).

18 tn Grk "so that he would touch them." Here the touch is connected with (or conveys) a blessing (cf. Mark 10:16; also BDAG 126 s.v. ἅπτω 2.c).

19 tn Grk "the disciples began to scold them." In the translation the referent has been specified as "those who brought them," since otherwise the statement could be understood to mean that the disciples began scolding the children rather than their parents who brought them.

20 tn Grk "summoned them"; the referent (the children) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

22 sn The kingdom of God belongs to such as these. Children are a picture of those whose simple trust illustrates what faith is all about. The remark illustrates how everyone is important to God, even those whom others regard as insignificant.

23 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

24 sn On receive see John 1:12.

25 sn The point of the comparison receive the kingdom of God like a child has more to do with a child's trusting spirit and willingness to be dependent and receive from others than any inherent humility the child might possess.

26 tn The negation in Greek used here (οὐ μή, ou mē) is very strong.

27 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

28 sn Only Luke states this man is a ruler (cf. the parallels in Matt 19:16-22 and Mark 10:17-22, where the questioner is described only as "someone"). He is probably a civic leader of some kind, a leader in the society.

29 sn The rich man wanted to know what he must do to inherit eternal life, but Jesus had just finished teaching that eternal life was not earned but simply received (18:17). See the similar question about inheriting eternal life in Luke 10:25.

30 tn Grk "And Jesus." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

31 sn Jesus' response, Why do you call me good?, was designed to cause the ruler to stop and think for a moment about who Jesus really was. The following statement No one is good except God alone seems to point the man in the direction of Jesus' essential nature and the demands which logically follow on the man for having said it.

father and mother.'"[1] 18:21 The man[2] replied, "I have wholeheartedly obeyed[3] all these laws[4] since my youth."[5] 18:22 When Jesus heard this, he said to him, "One thing you still lack. Sell all that you have[6] and give the money[7] to the poor,[8] and you will have treasure[9] in heaven. Then[10] come, follow me." 18:23 But when the man[11] heard this he became very sad,[12] for he was extremely wealthy. 18:24 When Jesus noticed this,[13] he said, "How hard[14] it is for the rich to enter the kingdom of God![15] 18:25 In fact, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle[16] than for a rich person to enter the kingdom of God." 18:26 Those who heard this said, "Then[17] who can be saved?"[18] 18:27 He replied, "What is impossible[19] for mere humans[20] is possible for God." 18:28 And Peter said, "Look, we have left everything we own[21] to follow you!"[22] 18:29 Then[23] Jesus[24] said to them, "I tell you the truth,[25] there is no one who has left home or wife or brothers[26] or parents or children for the sake of God's kingdom 18:30 who will not receive many times more[27] in this age[28] – and in the age to come, eternal life."[29]

Another Prediction of Jesus' Passion

18:31 Then[30] Jesus[31] took the twelve aside and said to them, "Look, we are going up to Jerusalem,[32] and everything that is written about the Son of Man by the prophets will be

1 sn A quotation from Exod 20:12-16 and Deut 5:16-20. Jesus cited the parts of the ten commandments that relate to how others should be treated.

2 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (the ruler mentioned in v. 18) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

3 tn Grk "kept." The implication of this verb is that the man has obeyed the commandments without fail throughout his life, so the adverb "wholeheartedly" has been added to the translation to bring out this nuance.

4 tn Grk "these things." The referent of the pronoun (the laws mentioned by Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn While the rich man was probably being sincere when he insisted I have wholeheartedly obeyed all these laws, he had confined his righteousness to external obedience. The rich man's response to Jesus' command to give away all he had revealed that internally he loved money more than God.

5 sn Since my youth. Judaism regarded the age of thirteen as the age when a man would have become responsible to live by God's commands.

6 sn See Luke 14:33.

7 tn The words "the money" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

8 sn See Luke 1:50-53; 6:20-23; 14:12-14.

9 sn The call for sacrifice comes with a promise of eternal reward: ...you will have treasure in heaven. Jesus' call is a test to see how responsive the man is to God's direction through him. Will he walk the path God's agent calls him to walk? For a rich person who got it right, see Zacchaeus in Luke 19:1-10.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the conversation.

11 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Or "very distressed" (L&N 25.277).

13 tc ‡ The phrase περίλυπον γενόμενον (perilupon genomenon, "[When Jesus saw him] becoming sad") is found in the majority of MSS (A [D] W Θ Ψ 078 f^{13} 33^{vid} 𝔐 latt sy), and it is not unknown in Lukan style to repeat a word or phrase in adjacent passages (TCGNT 143). However, the phrase is lacking in some significant MSS (𝔓^{75} ℵ B L f^{1} 579 1241 2542 co). The shorter reading is nevertheless difficult to explain if it is not original: It is possible that these witnesses omitted this phrase out of perceived redundancy from the preceding verse, although intentional omissions, especially by several and varied witnesses, are generally unlikely. NA^{27} places the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

tn Grk "him."

14 sn For the rich it is hard for wealth not to be the point of focus, as the contrast in vv. 28-30 will show, and for rich people to trust God. Wealth was not an automatic sign of blessing as far as Jesus was concerned.

15 sn The kingdom of God is a major theme of Jesus. It is a realm in which Jesus rules and to which those who trust him belong. See Luke 6:20; 11:20; 17:20-21.

16 sn The eye of a needle refers to a sewing needle, one of the smallest items one might deal with on a regular basis, in contrast to the biggest animal of the region. (The gate in Jerusalem known as "The Needle's Eye" was built during the middle ages and was not in existence in Jesus' day.) Jesus is saying rhetorically that this is impossible, unless God (v. 27) intervenes.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of thought.

18 sn The assumption is that the rich are blessed, so if they risk exclusion, who is left to be saved?

19 sn The term impossible is in the emphatic position in the Greek text. God makes the impossible possible.

20 tn The plural Greek term ἄνθρωποις (anthrōpois) is used here in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NASB 1995 update, "people"). Because of the contrast here between mere mortals and God ("impossible for men...possible for God") the phrase "mere humans" has been used in the translation.

21 tn Or "left our homes," "left our possessions"; Grk "left our own things." The word ἴδιος (idios) can refer to one's home (including the people and possessions in it) or to one's property or possessions. Both options are mentioned in BDAG 467 s.v. 4.b. See also I. H. Marshall, Luke (NIGTC), 688; D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1488.

22 tn Grk "We have left everything we own and followed you." Koine Greek often used paratactic structure when hypotactic was implied.

23 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

24 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

26 tn The term "brothers" could be understood as generic here, referring to either male or female siblings. However, it is noteworthy that in the parallel passages in both Matt 19:29 and Mark 10:29, "sisters" are explicitly mentioned in the Greek text.

27 sn Jesus reassures his disciples with a promise that (1) much benefit in this life (many times more) and (2) eternal life in the age to come will be given.

28 tn Grk "this time" (καιρός, kairos), but for stylistic reasons this has been translated "this age" here.

29 sn Note that Luke (see also Matt 19:29; Mark 10:30; Luke 10:25) portrays eternal life as something one receives in the age to come, unlike John, who emphasizes the possibility of receiving eternal life in the present (John 5:24).

30 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

31 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

32 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

accomplished.[1] 18:32 For he will be handed over[2] to the Gentiles; he will be mocked,[3] mistreated,[4] and spat on.[5] 18:33 They will flog him severely[6] and kill him. Yet[7] on the third day he will rise again." 18:34 But[8] the twelve[9] understood none of these things. This[10] saying was hidden from them, and they did not grasp[11] what Jesus meant.[12]

Healing a Blind Man

18:35 As[13] Jesus[14] approached[15] Jericho,[16] a blind man was sitting by the road begging. 18:36 When he heard a crowd going by, he asked what was going on. 18:37 They[17] told him, "Jesus the Nazarene is passing by." 18:38 So[18] he called out,[19] "Jesus, Son of David,[20] have mercy[21] on me!" 18:39 And those who were in front[22] scolded[23] him to get him to be quiet, but he shouted[24] even more, "Son of David, have mercy on me!" 18:40 So[25] Jesus stopped and ordered the beggar[26] to be brought to him. When the man[27] came near, Jesus[28] asked him, 18:41 "What do you want me to do for you?" He replied,[29] "Lord, let me see again."[30] 18:42 Jesus[31] said to him, "Receive[32] your sight; your faith has healed you."[33] 18:43 And immediately he regained[34] his sight and followed Jesus,[35] praising[36] God. When[37] all the people saw it, they too[38] gave praise to God.

---

1 tn Or "fulfilled." Jesus goes to Jerusalem by divine plan as the scripture records (Luke 2:39; 12:50; 22:37; Acts 13:29). See Luke 9:22, 44.

2 sn The passive voice verb be handed over does not indicate by whom, but other passages note the Jewish leadership and betrayal (9:22, 44).

3 sn See Luke 22:63; 23:11, 36.

4 tn Or "and insulted." L&N 33.390 and 88.130 note ὑβρίζω (hubrizō) can mean either "insult" or "mistreat with insolence."

5 sn And spat on. Later Luke does not note this detail in the passion narrative in chaps. 22-23, but see Mark 14:65; 15:19; Matt 26:67; 27:30 where Jesus' prediction is fulfilled.

6 tn Traditionally, "scourge" (the term means to beat severely with a whip, L&N 19.9). BDAG 620 s.v. μαστιγόω 1. states, "Of the beating (Lat. verberatio) given those condemned to death...J 19:1; cf. Mt 20:19; Mk 10:34; Lk 18:33." Here the term has been translated "flog...severely" to distinguish it from the term φραγελλόω (phragellōō) used in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast.

9 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the twelve, v. 31) has been specified in the context for clarity.

10 tn Grk "And this." Here καί (kai) has not been translated.

11 sn This failure of the Twelve to grasp what Jesus meant probably does not mean that they did not understand linguistically what Jesus said, but that they could not comprehend how this could happen to him, if he was really God's agent. The saying being hidden probably refers to God's sovereign timing.

12 tn Grk "the things having been said." The active agent, Jesus, has been specified for clarity, and "said" has been translated as "meant" to indicate that comprehension of the significance is really in view here.

13 tn Grk "Now it happened that as." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

14 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

15 tn The phrase is "he drew near to" (19:29; 24:28). It is also possible the term merely means "is in the vicinity of." Also possible is a reversal in the timing of the healing and Zacchaeus events for literary reasons as the blind man "sees" where the rich man with everything did not.

16 map For location see Map5-B2; Map6-E1; Map7-E1; Map8-E3; Map10-A2; Map11-A1.

17 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated. "They" could refer to bystanders or people in the crowd.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the blind man learning that Jesus was nearby.

19 tn Grk "called out, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

20 sn Jesus was more than a Nazarene to this blind person, who saw quite well that Jesus was S*on of David*. He understood what Luke 7:22-23 affirms. There was a tradition in Judaism that the Son of David (Solomon) had great powers of healing (Josephus, Ant. 8.2.5 [8.42-49]).

21 sn Have mercy on me is a request for healing (cf. 17:13). It is not owed the man. He simply asks for God's kind grace.

22 sn That is, those who were at the front of the procession.

23 tn Or "rebuked." The crowd's view was that surely Jesus would not be bothered with someone as unimportant as a blind beggar.

24 sn Public opinion would not sway the blind man from getting Jesus' attention. The term shouted is strong as it can be used of animal cries.

25 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the beggar's cries.

26 tn Grk "ordered him"; the referent (the blind beggar, v. 35) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the beggar) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "said."

30 tn Grk "Lord, that I may see [again]." The phrase can be rendered as an imperative of request, "Please, give me sight." Since the man is not noted as having been blind from birth (as the man in John 9 was) it is likely the request is to receive back the sight he once had.

31 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

32 tn Or "Regain" (see the note on the phrase "let me see again" in the previous verse).

33 tn Grk "has saved you," but in a nonsoteriological sense; the man has been delivered from his disability.

34 tn Or "received" (see the note on the phrase "let me see again" in v. 41).

35 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

36 sn The presence of God's work leads again to joy, with both the beggar and the people praising God (1:64; 2:20; 5:25-26; 7:16; 13:13; 17:15; 19:37).

37 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

38 tn The word "too" has been supplied for stylistic reasons.

Jesus and Zacchaeus

19:1 Jesus[1] entered Jericho[2] and was passing through it. 19:2 Now[3] a man named Zacchaeus was there; he was a chief tax collector[4] and was rich. 19:3 He[5] was trying to get a look at Jesus,[6] but being a short man he could not see over the crowd.[7] 19:4 So[8] he ran on ahead and climbed up into a sycamore tree[9] to see him, because Jesus[10] was going to pass that way. 19:5 And when Jesus came to that place, he looked up[11] and said to him, "Zacchaeus, come down quickly,[12] because I must[13] stay at your house today."[14] 19:6 So he came down quickly[15] and welcomed Jesus[16] joyfully.[17] 19:7 And when the people[18] saw it, they all complained,[19] "He has gone in to be the guest of a man who is a sinner."[20] 19:8 But Zacchaeus stopped and said to the Lord, "Look, Lord, half of my possessions I now give[21] to the poor, and if[22] I have cheated anyone of anything, I am paying back four times as much!" 19:9 Then[23] Jesus said to him, "Today salvation[24] has come to this household,[25] because he too is a son of Abraham![26] 19:10 For the Son of Man came[27] to seek and to save the lost."

The Parable of the Ten Minas

19:11 While the people were listening to these things, Jesus[28] proceeded to tell a parable, because he was near to Jerusalem,[29] and because they thought[30] that the kingdom of God[31] was going to[32] appear immediately. 19:12 Therefore he said, "A nobleman[33] went to a distant country to receive[34] for himself a kingdom and then return.[35] 19:13 And he summoned ten of his

1 tn Grk "And entering, he passed through"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 map For location see Map5-B2; Map6-E1; Map7-E1; Map8-E3; Map10-A2; Map11-A1.

3 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the introduction of a new character. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

4 sn This is the one place in the NT the office of chief tax collector is noted. He would organize the other tax collectors and collect healthy commissions (see also the note on the word tax collector in 3:12).

5 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

6 tn Grk "He was trying to see who Jesus was."

7 tn Grk "and he was not able to because of the crowd, for he was short in stature."

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Zacchaeus not being able to see over the crowd.

9 sn A sycamore tree would have large branches near the ground like an oak tree and would be fairly easy to climb. These trees reach a height of some 50 ft (about 15 m).

10 tn Grk "that one"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tc Most MSS (A [D] W [Ψ] f^{13} 33^{vid} 𝔐 latt) read "Jesus looking up, saw him and said." The words "saw him and" are not in 𝔓^{75} ℵ B L T Θ f^{1} 579 1241 2542 pc co. Both the testimony for the omission and the natural tendency toward scribal expansion argue for the shorter reading here.

12 tn Grk "hastening, come down." σπεύσας (speusas) has been translated as a participle of manner.

13 sn I must stay. Jesus revealed the necessity of his associating with people like Zacchaeus (5:31-32). This act of fellowship indicated acceptance.

14 sn On today here and in v. 9, see the note on today in 2:11.

15 tn Grk "hastening, he came down." σπεύσας (speusas) has been translated as a participle of manner.

16 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn The participle χαίρων (chairōn) has been taken as indicating manner.

sn Zacchaeus responded joyfully. Luke likes to mention joy as a response to what God was doing (1:14; 2:10; 10:20; 13:17; 15:5, 32; 19:37; 24:41, 52).

18 tn Grk "they"; the referent is unspecified but is probably the crowd in general, who would have no great love for a man like Zacchaeus who had enriched himself many times over at their expense.

19 tn This term is used only twice in the NT, both times in Luke (here and 15:2) and has negative connotations both times (BDAG 227 s.v. διαγογγύζω). The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

20 sn Being the guest of a man who is a sinner was a common complaint about Jesus: Luke 5:31-32; 7:37-50; 15:1-2.

21 sn Zacchaeus was a penitent man who resolved on the spot to act differently in the face of Jesus' acceptance of him. In resolving to give half his possessions to the poor, Zacchaeus was not defending himself against the crowd's charges and claiming to be righteous. Rather as a result of this meeting with Jesus, he was a changed individual. So Jesus could speak of salvation coming that day (v. 9) and of the lost being saved (v. 10).

22 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text. It virtually confesses fraud.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative

24 sn This is one of the few uses of the specific term salvation in Luke (1:69, 71, 77), though the concept runs throughout the Gospel.

25 sn The household is not a reference to the building, but to the people who lived within it (L&N 10.8).

26 sn Zacchaeus was personally affirmed by Jesus as a descendant (son) of Abraham and a member of God's family.

27 sn The Son of Man came to seek and to save the lost is Jesus' mission succinctly defined. See Luke 15:1-32.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

30 tn The present active infinitive δοκεῖν (dokein) has been translated as causal.

31 sn Luke means here the appearance of the full kingdom of God in power with the Son of Man as judge as Luke 17:22-37 describes.

32 tn Or perhaps, "the kingdom of God must appear immediately (see L&N 71.36).

33 tn Grk "a man of noble birth" or "a man of noble status" (L&N 87.27).

34 sn Note that the receiving of the kingdom takes place in the far country. This suggests that those in the far country recognize and acknowledge the king when his own citizens did not want him as king (v. 14; cf. John 1:11-12).

35 sn The background to this story about the nobleman who went...to receive for himself a kingdom had some parallels in the area's recent history: Archelaus was appointed ethnarch of Judea, Samaria, and Idumea in 4 B.C., but the people did not like him. Herod the Great also made a similar journey to Rome where he was crowned King of Judea in 40 B.C., although he was not able to claim his kingdom until 37 B.C.

slaves,[1] gave them ten minas,[2] and said to them, 'Do business with these until I come back.' 19:14 But his citizens[3] hated[4] him and sent a delegation after him, saying, 'We do not want this man[5] to be king[6] over us!' 19:15 When[7] he returned after receiving the kingdom, he summoned[8] these slaves to whom he had given the money. He wanted[9] to know how much they had earned[10] by trading. 19:16 So[11] the first one came before him and said, 'Sir,[12] your mina[13] has made ten minas more.' 19:17 And the king[14] said to him, 'Well done, good slave! Because you have been faithful[15] in a very small matter, you will have authority[16] over ten cities.' 19:18 Then[17] the second one came and said, 'Sir, your mina has made five minas.' 19:19 So[18] the king[19] said to him, 'And you are to be over five cities.' 19:20 Then another[20] slave[21] came and said, 'Sir, here is[22] your mina that I put away for safekeeping[23] in a piece of cloth.[24] 19:21 For I was afraid of you, because you are a severe[25] man. You withdraw[26] what you did not deposit[27] and reap what you did not sow.' 19:22 The king[28] said to him, 'I will judge you by your own words,[29] you wicked slave![30] So you knew, did you, that I was a severe[31] man, withdrawing what I didn't deposit and reaping what I didn't sow? 19:23 Why then didn't you put[32] my money in the bank,[33] so that when I returned I could have collected it with interest?' 19:24 And he said to his attendants,[34] 'Take the mina from him, and give it to the one who has ten.'[35] 19:25 But[36] they said to him, 'Sir, he has ten minas already!'[37] 19:26 'I tell you that everyone who has will be given more,[38] but from the one who does not have, even what he has will be taken away.[39] 19:27 But as for these ene-

[1] tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

[2] sn That is, one for each. A mina was a Greek monetary unit worth one hundred denarii or about four months' wages for an average worker based on a six-day work week.

[3] tn Or "subjects." Technically these people were not his subjects yet, but would be upon his return. They were citizens of his country who opposed his appointment as their king; later the newly-appointed king will refer to them as his "enemies" (v. 27).

[4] tn The imperfect is intense in this context, suggesting an ongoing attitude.

[5] tn Grk "this one" (somewhat derogatory in this context).

[6] tn Or "to rule."

[7] tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[8] tn Grk "he said for these slaves to be called to him." The passive construction has been translated as an active one and simplified to "he summoned."

[9] tn Grk "in order that he might know" (a continuation of the preceding sentence). Due to the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "he" as subject and the verb "wanted" to convey the idea of purpose.

[10] sn The Greek verb earned refers to profit from engaging in commerce and trade (L&N 57.195). This is an examination of stewardship.

[11] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the royal summons.

[12] tn Or "Lord"; or "Master." (and so throughout this paragraph).

[13] tn See the note on the word "minas" in v. 13.

[14] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the nobleman of v. 12, now a king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[15] tn See Luke 16:10.

[16] sn The faithful slave received expanded responsibility (authority over ten cities) as a result of his faithfulness; this in turn is an exhortation to faithfulness for the reader.

[18] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the second slave's report.

[19] tn Grk "he"; the referent (the nobleman of v. 12, now a king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[20] sn Though ten were given minas, the story stops to focus on the one who did nothing with the opportunity given to him. Here is the parable's warning about the one who does not trust the master. This figure is called "another," marking him out as different than the first two.

[21] tn The word "slave" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied for stylistic reasons.

[22] tn Grk "behold."

[23] tn Or "that I stored away." L&N 85.53 defines ἀπόκειμαι (apokeimai) here as "to put something away for safekeeping – 'to store, to put away in a safe place.'"

[24] tn The piece of cloth, called a σουδάριον (soudarion), could have been a towel, napkin, handkerchief, or face cloth (L&N 6.159).

[25] tn Or "exacting," "harsh," "hard."

[26] tn Grk "man, taking out." The Greek word can refer to withdrawing money from a bank (L&N 57.218), and in this context of financial accountability that is the most probable meaning. Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying the pronoun "you" as subject and translating the participle αἴρεις (aireis) as a finite verb.

[27] tn The Greek verb τίθημι (tithēmi) can be used of depositing money with a banker to earn interest (L&N 57.217). In effect the slave charges that the master takes what he has not earned.

[28] tn Grk "He"; the referent (the nobleman of v. 12, now a king) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[29] tn Grk "out of your own mouth" (an idiom).

[30] tn Note the contrast between this slave, described as "wicked," and the slave in v. 17, described as "good."

[31] tn Or "exacting," "harsh," "hard."

[32] tn That is, "If you really feared me why did you not do a minimum to get what I asked for?"

[33] tn Grk "on the table"; the idiom refers to a place where money is kept or managed, or credit is established, thus "bank" (L&N 57.215).

[34] tn Grk "to those standing by," but in this context involving an audience before the king to give an accounting, these would not be casual bystanders but courtiers or attendants.

[35] tn Grk "the ten minas."

[36] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context. Those watching the evaluation are shocked, as the one with the most gets even more. The word "already" is supplied at the end of the statement to indicate this surprise and shock.

[37] tc A few MSS (D W 69 pc and a few versional witnesses) omit this verse either to harmonize it with Matt 25:28-29 or to keep the king's speech seamless.

[38] tn Grk "to everyone who has, he will be given more."

sn Everyone who has will be given more. Again, faithfulness yields great reward (see Luke 8:18; also Matt 13:12; Mark 4:25).

[39] sn The one who has nothing has even what he seems to have taken away from him, ending up with no reward at all (see also Luke 8:18). The exact force of this is left ambiguous, but there is no comfort here for those who are pictured by the third slave as being totally unmoved by the master. Though not an outright enemy, there is no relationship to the master either. Three groups are represented in the parable: the faithful of various sorts (vv. 16, 18); the unfaithful who associate with Jesus but do not trust him (v. 21); and the enemies (v. 27).

mies of mine who did not want me to be their king,[1] bring them here and slaughter[2] them[3] in front of me!'"

The Triumphal Entry

19:28 After Jesus[4] had said this, he continued on ahead,[5] going up to Jerusalem.[6] 19:29 Now[7] when he approached Bethphage[8] and Bethany, at the place called the Mount of Olives,[9] he sent two of the disciples, 19:30 telling them,[10] "Go to the village ahead of you.[11] When[12] you enter it, you will find a colt tied there that has never been ridden.[13] Untie it and bring it here. 19:31 If anyone asks you, 'Why are you untying it?' just say, 'The Lord needs[14] it.'" 19:32 So those who were sent ahead found[15] it exactly[16] as he had told them. 19:33 As[17] they were untying the colt, its owners asked them,[18] "Why are you untying that colt?" 19:34 They replied, "The Lord needs it." 19:35 Then[19] they brought it to Jesus, threw their cloaks[20] on the colt,[21] and had Jesus get on[22] it. 19:36 As[23] he rode along, they[24] spread their cloaks on the road. 19:37 As he approached the road leading down from[25] the Mount of Olives,[26] the whole crowd of his[27] disciples began to rejoice[28] and praise[29] God with a loud voice for all the mighty works[30] they had seen:[31] 19:38 "Blessed is the king[32] who comes in the name of the Lord![33] Peace in heaven and glory in the highest!" 19:39 But[34] some of the Pharisees[35] in the crowd said to him, "Teacher, rebuke your disciples."[36] 19:40 He answered,[37] "I tell you, if they[38] keep silent, the very stones[39] will cry out!"

---

1 tn Grk "to rule over them."

2 tn This term, when used of people rather than animals, has some connotations of violence and mercilessness (L&N 20.72).

3 sn Slaughter them. To reject the king is to face certain judgment from him.

4 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

5 tn This could mean "before [his disciples]," but that is slightly more awkward, requiring an elided element (the disciples) to be supplied.

6 sn This is yet another travel note on the journey to Jerusalem. See also Luke 18:31; 19:11. Jesus does not actually enter Jerusalem until 19:45.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

7 tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

8 sn The exact location of the village of Bethphage is not known. Most locate it on the southeast side of the Mount of Olives and northwest of Bethany, about 1.5 miles (3 km) east of Jerusalem.

9 tn Grk "at the mountain called 'of Olives.'" This form of reference is awkward in contemporary English, so the more familiar "Mount of Olives" has been used in the translation.

sn "Mountain" in English generally denotes a higher elevation than it often does in reference to places in Palestine. The Mount of Olives is really a ridge running north to south about 1.8 mi (3 km) long, east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley. Its central elevation is about 100 ft (30 m) higher than Jerusalem. It was named for the large number of olive trees which grew on it.

10 tn Grk "saying."

11 tn Grk "the village lying before [you]" (BDAG 530 s.v. κατέναντι 2.a).

12 tn Grk "in which entering." This is a continuation of the previous sentence in Greek, but because of the length and complexity of the construction a new sentence was started here in the translation.

13 tn Grk "a colt tied there on which no one of men has ever sat."

14 sn The custom called angaria allowed the impressment of animals for service to a significant figure.

15 tn Grk "sent ahead and went and found."

16 sn Exactly as he had told them. Nothing in Luke 19-23 catches Jesus by surprise. Often he directs the action.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

18 tn Grk "said to them."

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

20 tn Grk "garments," but this refers in context to their outer cloaks. The action is like 2 Kgs 9:13.

21 sn See Zech 9:9.

22 tn Although ἐπεβίβασαν (epebibasan) is frequently translated "set [Jesus] on it" or "put [Jesus] on it," when used of a riding animal the verb can mean "to cause to mount" (L&N 15.98); thus here "had Jesus get on it." The degree of assistance is not specified.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn The disciples initiated this action (since in 19:35 and 37 they are the subject) but the other gospels indicate the crowds also became involved. Thus it is difficult to specify the referent here as "the disciples" or "people."

25 tn Grk "the descent of"; this could refer to either the slope of the hillside itself or the path leading down from it (the second option has been adopted for the translation, see L&N 15.109).

26 sn See the note on the name Mount of Olives in v. 29.

27 tn Grk "the"; the Greek article has been translated here as a possessive pronoun (ExSyn 215).

28 tn Here the participle χαίροντες (chairontes) has been translated as a finite verb in English; it could also be translated adverbially as a participle of manner: "began to praise God joyfully."

29 sn See 2:13, 20; Acts 2:47; 3:8-9.

30 tn Or "works of power," "miracles." Jesus' ministry of miracles is what has drawn attention. See Luke 7:22.

31 tn Grk "they had seen, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

32 sn Luke adds the title king to the citation from Ps 118:26 to make clear who was meant (see Luke 18:38). The psalm was used in looking for the deliverance of the end, thus leading to the Pharisees' reaction.

33 sn A quotation from Ps 118:26.

34 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context. Not all present are willing to join in the acclamation.

35 sn See the note on Pharisees in 5:17.

36 sn Teacher, rebuke your disciples. The Pharisees were complaining that the claims were too great.

37 tn Grk "and answering, he said." This has been simplified in the translation to "He answered." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

38 tn Grk "these."

39 sn This statement amounts to a rebuke. The idiom of creation speaking means that even creation knows what is taking place, yet the Pharisees miss it. On this idiom, see Gen 4:10 and Hab 2:11.

Jesus Weeps for Jerusalem under Judgment

19:41 Now[1] when Jesus[2] approached[3] and saw the city, he wept over it, 19:42 saying, "If you had only known on this day,[4] even you, the things that make for peace![5] But now they are hidden[6] from your eyes. 19:43 For the days will come upon you when your enemies will build[7] an embankment[8] against you and surround you and close in on you from every side. 19:44 They will demolish you[9] – you and your children within your walls[10] – and they will not leave within you one stone[11] on top of another,[12] because you did not recognize the time of your visitation from God."[13]

Cleansing the Temple

19:45 Then[14] Jesus[15] entered the temple courts[16] and began to drive out those who were selling things there,[17] 19:46 saying to them, "It is written, 'My house will be a house of prayer,'[18] but you have turned it into a den[19] of robbers!"[20]

19:47 Jesus[21] was teaching daily in the temple courts. The chief priests and the experts in the law[22] and the prominent leaders among the people were seeking to assassinate[23] him, 19:48 but[24] they could not find a way to do it,[25] for all the people hung on his words.[26]

The Authority of Jesus

20:1 Now one[27] day, as Jesus[28] was teaching the people in the temple courts[29] and proclaiming[30] the gospel, the chief priests and the experts in the law[31] with the elders came up[32] 20:2 and said to him,[33] "Tell us: By what authority[34] are you doing these things?[35] Or who is it who gave you this authority?" 20:3 He answered them,[36] "I will also ask you a question, and you tell me:

---

1 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

2 tn Grk "he."

3 sn When Jesus approached and saw the city. This is the last travel note in Luke's account (the so-called Jerusalem journey), as Jesus approached and saw the city before entering it.

4 sn On this day. They had missed the time of Messiah's coming; see v. 44.

5 tn Grk "the things toward peace." This expression seems to mean "the things that would 'lead to,' 'bring about,' or 'make for' peace."

6 sn But now they are hidden from your eyes. This becomes an oracle of doom in the classic OT sense; see Luke 13:31-35; 11:49-51; Jer 9:2; 13:7; 14:7. They are now blind and under judgment (Jer 15:5; Ps 122:6).

7 sn Jesus now predicted the events that would be fulfilled in the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The details of the siege have led some to see Luke writing this after Jerusalem's fall, but the language of the verse is like God's exilic judgment for covenant unfaithfulness (Hab 2:8; Jer 6:6, 14; 8:13-22; 9:1; Ezek 4:2; 26:8; Isa 29:1-4). Specific details are lacking and the procedures described (build an embankment against you) were standard Roman military tactics.

8 sn An embankment refers to either wooden barricades or earthworks, or a combination of the two.

9 tn Grk "They will raze you to the ground."

sn The singular pronoun you refers to the city of Jerusalem personified.

10 tn Grk "your children within you." The phrase "[your] walls" has been supplied in the translation to clarify that the city of Jerusalem, metaphorically pictured as an individual, is spoken of here.

11 sn (Not) one stone on top of another is an idiom for total destruction.

12 tn Grk "leave stone on stone."

13 tn Grk "the time of your visitation." To clarify what this refers to, the words "from God" are supplied at the end of the verse, although they do not occur in the Greek text.

sn You did not recognize the time of your visitation refers to the time God came to visit them. They had missed the Messiah; see Luke 1:68-79.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

15 tn Grk "he."

16 tn Grk "the temple" (also in v. 47).

sn The merchants (those who were selling things there) would have been located in the Court of the Gentiles.

17 sn Matthew (21:12-27), Mark (11:15-19) and Luke (here, 19:45-46) record this incident of the temple cleansing at the end of Jesus' ministry. John (2:13-16) records a cleansing of the temple at the beginning of Jesus' ministry. See the note on the word temple courts in John 2:14 for a discussion of the relationship of these accounts to one another.

18 sn A quotation from Isa 56:7.

19 tn Or "a hideout" (see L&N 1.57).

20 sn A quotation from Jer 7:11. The meaning of Jesus' statement about making the temple courts a den of robbers probably operates here at two levels. Not only were the religious leaders robbing the people financially, but because of this they had also robbed them spiritually by stealing from them the opportunity to come to know God genuinely. It is possible that these merchants had recently been moved to this location for convenience.

21 tn Grk "And he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

22 tn Grk "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

23 tn Grk "to destroy."

sn The action at the temple was the last straw. In their view, if Jesus could cause trouble in the holy place, then he must be stopped, so the leaders were seeking to assassinate him.

24 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

25 tn Grk "they did not find the thing that they might do."

26 sn All the people hung on his words is an idiom for intent, eager listening. Jesus' popularity and support made it unwise for the leadership to seize him.

27 tn Grk "Now it happened that one." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

29 tn Grk "the temple."

30 tn Or "preaching."

31 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

32 sn The chief priests and the experts in the law with the elders came up. The description is similar to Luke 19:47. The leaders are really watching Jesus at this point.

33 tn Grk "and said, saying to him." This is redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

34 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ.

35 sn The leadership is looking back to acts like the temple cleansing (19:45-48). How could a Galilean preacher do these things?

36 tn Grk "answering, he said to them." This is redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

20:4 John's baptism[1] – was it from heaven or from people?"[2] 20:5 So[3] they discussed it with one another, saying, "If we say, 'From heaven,' he will say, 'Why did you not believe him?' 20:6 But if we say, 'From people,' all the people will stone us, because they are convinced that John was a prophet." 20:7 So[4] they replied that they did not know[5] where it came from. 20:8 Then[6] Jesus said to them, "Neither will I tell you[7] by whose authority[8] I do these things."

The Parable of the Tenants

20:9 Then[9] he began to tell the people this parable: "A man[10] planted a vineyard,[11] leased it to tenant farmers,[12] and went on a journey for a long time. 20:10 When harvest time came, he sent a slave[13] to the tenants so that they would give[14] him his portion of the crop.[15] However, the tenants beat his slave[16] and sent him away empty-handed. 20:11 So[17] he sent another slave. They beat this one too, treated him outrageously, and sent him away empty-handed.[18] 20:12 So[19] he sent still a third. They even wounded this one, and threw him out. 20:13 Then[20] the owner of the vineyard said, 'What should I do? I will send my one dear son;[21] perhaps they will respect him.' 20:14 But when the tenants saw him, they said to one another, 'This is the heir; let's kill him so the inheritance will be ours!' 20:15 So[22] they threw him out of the vineyard and killed[23] him. What then will the owner of the vineyard do to them? 20:16 He will come and destroy[24] those tenants and give the vineyard to others."[25] When the people[26] heard this, they said, "May this never happen!"[27] 20:17 But Jesus[28] looked

---

1 sn John, like Jesus, was not a part of the official rabbinic order. So the question "John's baptism – was it from heaven or from men?" draws an analogy between John the Baptist and Jesus. See Luke 3:1-20; 7:24-27. The phrase John's baptism refers to the baptism practiced by John.

2 tn The plural Greek term ἀνθρώπων (anthrōpōn) is used here (and in v. 6) in a generic sense, referring to both men and women (cf. NAB, NRSV, "of human origin"; TEV, "from human beings"; NLT, "merely human").

sn The question is whether John's ministry was of divine or human origin.

3 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' question.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the dilemma Jesus' opponents faced.

5 sn Very few questions could have so completely revealed the wicked intentions of the religious leaders. Jesus' question revealed the motivation of the religious leaders and exposed them for what they really were – hypocrites. They indicted themselves when they cited only two options and chose neither of them. The point of Luke 20:1-8 is that no matter what Jesus said in response to their question they were not going to believe it and would in the end use it against him.

6 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

7 sn Neither will I tell you. Though Jesus gave no answer, the analogy he used to their own question makes his view clear. His authority came from heaven.

8 tn On this phrase, see BDAG 844 s.v. ποῖος 2.a.γ. This is exactly the same phrase as in v. 2.

9 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. The parable Jesus tells here actually addresses the question put to him by the leaders.

10 tc ‡ There are several variants here, most of which involve variations in word order that do not affect translation. However, the presence or absence of τις (tis) after ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), which would be translated "a certain man," does affect translation. The witnesses that have τις include A W Θ f^{13} 1241 2542 al sy. Those that lack it include ℵ B C D L Ψ f^{1} 33 𝔐 it. Externally, the evidence is significantly stronger for the omission. Internally, however, there is some pause. A feature unique to Luke-Acts in the NT is to use the construction ἄνθρωπος τις (cf. 10:30; 12:16; 14:2, 16; 15:11; 16:1; 19:12; Acts 9:33). However, scribes who were familiar with this idiom may have inserted it here. In light of the overwhelming external support for the omission of τις, the shorter reading is preferred. NA^{27} places τις in brackets, indicating some doubts as to its authenticity.

11 sn The vineyard is a figure for Israel in the OT (Isa 5:1-7). The nation and its leaders are the tenants, so the vineyard here may well refer to the promise that resides within the nation. The imagery is like that in Rom 11:11-24.

12 sn The leasing of land to tenant farmers was common in this period.

13 sn This slave (along with the next two) represent the prophets God sent to the nation, who were mistreated and rejected.

14 tc Instead of the future indicative δώσουσιν (dōsousin, "they will give"), most witnesses (C D W Θ Ψ f^{1} 𝔐) have the aorist subjunctive δῶσιν (dōsin, "they might give"). The aorist subjunctive is expected following ἵνα (hina, "so that"), so it is almost surely a motivated reading. Further, early and excellent witnesses, as well as a few others (ℵ A B f^{13} 33 579 1241 2542 al), have δώσουσιν. It is thus more likely that the future indicative is authentic. For a discussion of this construction, see BDF §369.2.

15 tn Grk "from the fruit of the vineyard."

16 tn Grk "him"; the referent (the slave sent by the owner) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn The image of the tenants beating up the owner's slave pictures the nation's rejection of the prophets and their message.

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the tenants' mistreatment of the first slave.

18 sn The slaves being sent empty-handed suggests that the vineyard was not producing any fruit – and thus neither was the nation of Israel.

19 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the tenants' mistreatment of the first two slaves.

20 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

21 tn Grk "my beloved son." See comment at Luke 3:22.

sn The owner's decision to send his one dear son represents God sending Jesus.

22 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the tenants' decision to kill the son.

23 sn Throwing the heir out of the vineyard pictures Jesus' death outside of Jerusalem.

24 sn The statement that the owner will come and destroy those tenants is a promise of judgment; see Luke 13:34-35; 19:41-44.

25 sn The warning that the owner would give the vineyard to others suggests that the care of the promise and the nation's hope would be passed to others. This eventually looks to Gentile inclusion; see Eph 2:11-22.

26 tn Grk "they"; the referent (the people addressed in v. 9) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

27 sn May this never happen! Jesus' audience got the point and did not want to consider a story where the nation would suffer judgment.

28 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

straight at them and said, "Then what is the meaning of that which is written: 'The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone'?[1] 20:18 Everyone who falls on this stone will be broken to pieces,[2] and the one on whom it falls will be crushed."[3] 20:19 Then[4] the experts in the law[5] and the chief priests wanted to arrest[6] him that very hour, because they realized he had told this parable against them. But[7] they were afraid of the people.

Paying Taxes to Caesar

20:20 Then[8] they watched him carefully and sent spies who pretended to be sincere.[9] They wanted to take advantage of what he might say[10] so that they could deliver him up to the authority and jurisdiction[11] of the governor. 20:21 Thus[12] they asked him, "Teacher, we know that you speak and teach correctly,[13] and show no partiality, but teach the way of God in accordance with the truth.[14] 20:22 Is it right[15] for us to pay the tribute tax[16] to Caesar[17] or not?" 20:23 But Jesus[18] perceived their deceit[19] and said to them, 20:24 "Show me a denarius.[20] Whose image[21] and inscription are on it?"[22] They said, "Caesar's." 20:25 So[23] he said to them, "Then give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."[24] 20:26 Thus[25] they were unable in the presence of the people to trap[26] him with his own words.[27] And stunned[28] by his answer, they fell silent.

Marriage and the Resurrection

20:27 Now some Sadducees[29] (who contend that there is no resurrection)[30] came to him. 20:28 They asked him,[31] "Teacher, Moses wrote for us that if a man's brother dies leaving a wife but sn The stone the builders rejected has become the cornerstone. The use of Ps 118:22-23 and the "stone imagery" as a reference to Christ and his suffering and exaltation is common in the NT (see also Matt 21:42; Mark 12:10; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet 2:6-8; cf. also Eph 2:20). The irony in the use of Ps 118:22-23 here is that in the OT, Israel was the one rejected (or perhaps her king) by the Gentiles, but in the NT it is Jesus who is rejected by Israel.

2 tn On this term, see BDAG 972 s.v. συνθλάω.

3 tn Grk "on whomever it falls, it will crush him."

sn This proverb basically means that the stone crushes, without regard to whether it falls on someone or someone falls on it. On the stone as a messianic image, see Isa 28:16 and Dan 2:44-45.

4 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

5 tn Or "The scribes" See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

6 tn Grk "tried to lay hands on him."

7 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

9 tn Grk "righteous," but in this context the point is their false sincerity.

10 tn Grk "so that they might catch him in some word."

11 tn This word is often translated "authority" in other contexts, but here, in combination with ἀρχή (archē), it refers to the domain or sphere of the governor's rule (L&N 37.36).

12 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "thus" to indicate the implied result of the plans by the spies.

13 tn Or "precisely"; Grk "rightly." Jesus teaches exactly, the straight and narrow.

14 sn Teach the way of God in accordance with the truth. Very few comments are as deceitful as this one; they did not really believe this at all. The question was specifically designed to trap Jesus.

15 tn Or "lawful," that is, in accordance with God's divine law. On the syntax of ἔξεστιν (exestin) with an infinitive and accusative, see BDF §409.3.

16 tn This was a "poll tax." L&N 57.182 states this was "a payment made by the people of one nation to another, with the implication that this is a symbol of submission and dependence – 'tribute tax.'"

17 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Or "craftiness." The term always has negative connotations in the NT (1 Cor 3:19; 2 Cor 4:2; 11:3; Eph 4:14).

20 tn Here the specific name of the coin was retained in the translation, because not all coins in circulation in Palestine at the time carried the image of Caesar. In other places δηνάριον (dēnarion) has been translated simply as "silver coin" with an explanatory note.

sn A denarius was a silver coin worth approximately one day's wage for a laborer. The fact that the leaders had such a coin showed that they already operated in the economic world of Rome. The denarius would have had a picture of Tiberius Caesar, the Roman emperor, on it.

21 tn Or "whose likeness."

sn In this passage Jesus points to the image (Grk εἰκών, eikōn) of Caesar on the coin. This same Greek word is used in Gen 1:26 (LXX) to state that humanity is made in the "image" of God. Jesus is making a subtle yet powerful contrast: Caesar's image is on the denarius, so he can lay claim to money through taxation, but God's image is on humanity, so he can lay claim to each individual life.

22 tn Grk "whose likeness and inscription does it have?"

23 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' pronouncement results from the opponents' answer to his question.

24 sn Jesus' answer to give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's was a both/and, not the questioners' either/or. So he slipped out of their trap.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "thus" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' unexpected answer.

26 tn On this term, see BDAG 374 s.v. ἐπιλαμβάνομαι 3.

27 tn Grk "to trap him in a saying."

28 tn Or "amazed."

29 sn The Sadducees controlled the official political structures of Judaism at this time, being the majority members of the Sanhedrin. They were known as extremely strict on law and order issues (Josephus, J. W. 2.8.2 [2.119], 2.8.14 [2.164-166]; Ant. 13.5.9 [13.171-173], 13.10.6 [13.293-298], 18.1.2 [18.11], 18.1.4 [18.16-17], 20.9.1 [20.199]; Life 2 [10-11]). They also did not believe in resurrection or in angels, an important detail in v. 36. See also Matt 3:7, 16:1-12, 22:23-34; Mark 12:18-27; Acts 4:1, 5:17, 23:6-8.

30 sn This remark is best regarded as a parenthetical note by the author.

no children, that man[1] must marry[2] the widow and father children[3] for his brother.[4] 20:29 Now there were seven brothers. The first one married a woman[5] and died without children. 20:30 The second[6] 20:31 and then the third married her, and in this same way all seven died, leaving no children. 20:32 Finally the woman died too. 20:33 In the resurrection, therefore, whose wife will the woman be?[7] For all seven had married her."[8]

20:34 So[9] Jesus said to them, "The people of this age[10] marry and are given in marriage. 20:35 But those who are regarded as worthy to share in[11] that age and in the resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage.[12] 20:36 In fact, they can no longer die, because they are equal to angels[13] and are sons of God, since they are[14] sons[15] of the resurrection. 20:37 But even Moses revealed that the dead are raised[16] in the passage about the bush,[17] where he calls the Lord the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob.[18] 20:38 Now he is not God of the dead, but of the living,[19] for all live before him."[20] 20:39 Then[21] some of the experts in the law[22] answered, "Teacher, you have spoken well!"[23] 20:40 For they did not dare any longer to ask[24] him anything.

The Messiah: David's Son and Lord

20:41 But[25] he said to them, "How is it that they say that the Christ[26] is David's son?[27] 20:42 For David himself says in the book of Psalms,

> 'The Lord said to my[28] lord,
> "Sit at my right hand,
> 20:43 until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet."'[29]

20:44 If David then calls him 'Lord,' how can he be his son?"[30]

---

1 tn Grk "his brother," but this would be redundant in English with the same phrase "his brother" at the end of the verse, so most modern translations render this phrase "the man" (so NIV, NRSV).

2 tn The use of ἵνα (hina) with imperatival force is unusual (BDF §470.1).

3 tn Grk "and raise up seed," an idiom for procreating children (L&N 23.59).

4 sn A quotation from Deut 25:5. Because the OT quotation does not include "a wife" as the object of the verb, it has been left as normal type. This practice is called levirate marriage (see also Ruth 4:1-12; Mishnah, m. Yevamot; Josephus, Ant. 4.8.23 [4.254-256]). The levirate law is described in Deut 25:5-10. The brother of a man who died without a son had an obligation to marry his brother's widow. This served several purposes: It provided for the widow in a society where a widow with no children to care for her would be reduced to begging, and it preserved the name of the deceased, who would be regarded as the legal father of the first son produced from that marriage.

5 tn Grk "took a wife" (an idiom for marrying a woman).

6 tc Most MSS (A W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) have the words, "took the wife and this one died childless" after "the second." But this looks like a clarifying addition, assimilating the text to Mark 12:21. In light of the early and diverse witnesses that lack the expression (ℵ B D L 0266 892 1241 co), the shorter reading should be considered authentic.

7 sn The point is a dilemma. In a world arguing a person should have one wife, whose wife will she be in the afterlife? The question was designed to show that (in the opinion of the Sadducees) resurrection leads to a major problem.

8 tn Grk "For the seven had her as wife."

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate that Jesus' response is a result of their framing of the question.

10 tn Grk "sons of this age" (an idiom, see L&N 11.16). The following clause which refers to being "given in marriage" suggests both men and women are included in this phrase.

11 tn Grk "to attain to."

12 sn Life in the age to come is different than life here (they neither marry nor are given in marriage). This means Jesus' questioners had made a false assumption that life was the same both now and in the age to come.

13 sn Angels do not die, nor do they eat according to Jewish tradition (1 En. 15:6; 51:4; Wis 5:5; 2 Bar. 51:10; 1QH 3.21-23).

14 tn Grk "sons of God, being." The participle ὄντες (ontes) has been translated as a causal adverbial participle here.

15 tn Or "people." The noun υἱός (huios) followed by the genitive of class or kind ("sons of…") denotes a person of a class or kind, specified by the following genitive construction. This Semitic idiom is frequent in the NT (L&N 9.4).

16 tn Grk "But that the dead are raised even Moses revealed."

17 sn See Exod 3:6. Jesus used a common form of rabbinic citation here to refer to the passage in question.

18 sn A quotation from Exod 3:6.

19 sn He is not God of the dead but of the living. Jesus' point was that if God could identify himself as God of the three old patriarchs, then they must still be alive when God spoke to Moses; and so they must be raised.

20 tn On this syntax, see BDF §192. The point is that all live "to" God or "before" God.

21 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

22 tn Or "some of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

23 sn Teacher, you have spoken well! The scribes, being Pharisees, were happy for the defense of resurrection and angels, which they (unlike the Sadducees) believed in.

24 sn The attempt to show Jesus as ignorant had left the experts silenced. At this point they did not dare any longer to ask him anything.

25 sn If the religious leaders will not dare to question Jesus any longer, then he will question them.

26 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

27 sn It was a common belief in Judaism that Messiah would be David's son in that he would come from the lineage of David. On this point the Pharisees agreed and were correct. But their understanding was nonetheless incomplete, for Messiah is also David's Lord. With this statement Jesus was affirming that, as the Messiah, he is both God and man.

28 sn The Lord said to my Lord. With David being the speaker, this indicates his respect for his descendant (referred to as my Lord). Jesus was arguing, as the ancient exposition assumed, that the passage is about the Lord's anointed. The passage looks at an enthronement of this figure and a declaration of honor for him as he takes his place at the side of God. In Jerusalem, the king's palace was located to the right of the temple to indicate this kind of relationship. Jesus was pressing the language here to get his opponents to reflect on how great Messiah is.

29 sn A quotation from Ps 110:1.

30 tn Grk "David thus calls him 'Lord.' So how is he his son?" The conditional nuance, implicit in Greek, has been made explicit in the translation (cf. Matt 22:45).

Jesus Warns the Disciples against Pride

20:45 As[1] all the people were listening, Jesus[2] said to his disciples, 20:46 "Beware[3] of the experts in the law.[4] They[5] like walking around in long robes, and they love elaborate greetings[6] in the marketplaces and the best seats[7] in the synagogues[8] and the places of honor at banquets. 20:47 They[9] devour[10] widows' property,[11] and as a show make long prayers. They will receive a more severe punishment."

The Widow's Offering

21:1 Jesus[12] looked up[13] and saw the rich putting their gifts into the offering box.[14] 21:2 He also saw a poor widow put in two small copper coins.[15] 21:3 He[16] said, "I tell you the truth,[17] this poor widow has put in more than all of them.[18] 21:4 For they all offered their gifts out of their wealth.[19] But she, out of her poverty, put in everything she had to live on."[20]

The Signs of the End of the Age

21:5 Now[21] while some were speaking about the temple, how it was adorned[22] with beautiful stones and offerings,[23] Jesus[24] said, 21:6 "As for these things that you are gazing at, the days will come when not one stone will be left on another.[25] All will be torn down!"[26] 21:7 So[27] they asked him,[28] "Teacher, when will these things[29] happen? And what will be the sign that[30] these things are about to take place?" 21:8 He[31] said, "Watch out[32] that you are not misled. For many will come in my name, saying, 'I am he,'[33] and, 'The time is near.' Do not follow them! 21:9 And when you hear of wars and rebellions,[34] do not be afraid.[35] For these things must happen first, but the end will not come at once."[36]

Persecution of Disciples

21:10 Then he said to them, "Nation will rise up in arms[37] against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. 21:11 There will be great earthquakes, and famines[38] and plagues in various places, and

---

1 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Or "Be on guard against." This is a present imperative and indicates that pride is something to constantly be on the watch against.

4 tn Or "of the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

5 tn Grk "who," continuing the sentence begun by the prior phrase.

6 sn There is later Jewish material in the Talmud that spells out such *greeting*s in detail. See D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1642; H. Windisch, TDNT 1:498.

7 sn See Luke 14:1-14.

8 sn See the note on *synagogue*s in 4:15.

9 tn Grk "who," continuing the sentence begun in v. 46.

10 sn How they were able to *devour widows' house*s is debated. Did they seek too much for contributions, or take too high a commission for their work, or take homes after debts failed to be paid? There is too little said here to be sure.

11 tn Grk "houses," "households"; however, the term can have the force of "property" or "possessions" as well (O. Michel, TDNT 5:131; BDAG 695 s.v. οἶκια 1.a).

12 tn Grk "He"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity. Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

13 tn Grk "looking up, he saw." The participle ἀναβλέψας (anablepsas) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

14 tn On the term γαζοφυλάκιον (gazophulakion), often translated "treasury," see BDAG 186 s.v., which states, "For Mk 12:41, 43; Lk 21:1 the mng. contribution box or receptacle is attractive. Acc. to Mishnah, Shekalim 6, 5 there were in the temple 13 such receptacles in the form of trumpets. But even in these passages the general sense of 'treasury' is prob., for the contributions would go [into] the treasury via the receptacles." Based upon the extra-biblical evidence (see sn following), however, the translation opts to refer to the actual receptacles and not the treasury itself.

sn The offering box probably refers to the receptacles in the temple forecourt by the Court of Women used to collect free-will offerings. These are mentioned by Josephus, J. W. 5.5.2 (5.200), 6.5.2 (6.282); Ant. 19.6.1 (19.294); and in 1 Macc 14:49 and 2 Macc 3:6, 24, 28, 40 (see also Mark 12:41; John 8:20).

15 sn These two small copper coins were lepta (sing. "lepton"), the smallest and least valuable coins in circulation in Palestine, worth one-half of a quadrans or 1/128 of a denarius, or about six minutes of an average daily wage. This was next to nothing in value.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

17 tn Grk "Truly, I say to you."

18 sn Has put in more than all of them. With God, giving is weighed evaluatively, not counted. The widow was praised because she gave sincerely and at some considerable cost to herself.

19 tn Grk "out of what abounded to them."

20 tn Or "put in her entire livelihood."

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

22 sn The Jerusalem temple was widely admired around the world. See Josephus, Ant. 15.11 (15.380-425); J. W. 5.5 (5.184-227) and Tacitus, History 5.8, who called it "immensely opulent." Josephus compared it to a beautiful snowcapped mountain.

23 tn For the translation of ἀνάθημα (anathēma) as "offering" see L&N 53.18.

24 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 sn With the statement days will come when not one stone will be left on another Jesus predicted the total destruction of the temple, something that did occur in A.D. 70.

26 tn Grk "the days will come when not one stone will be left on another that will not be thrown down."

27 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' comments about the temple's future destruction.

28 tn Grk "asked him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated.

29 sn Both references to *these thing*s are plural, so more than the temple's destruction is in view. The question may presuppose that such a catastrophe signals the end.

30 tn Grk "when."

31 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

32 tn Or "Be on guard."

33 tn That is, "I am the Messiah."

34 tn Social and political chaos also precedes the end. This term refers to revolutions (L&N 39.34).

35 tn This is not the usual term for fear, but refers to a deep sense of terror and emotional distress (Luke 24:37; BDAG 895 s.v. πτοέω).

36 sn The end will not come at once. This remark about timing not only indicates that there will be events before the end, but that some time will also pass before it comes.

37 tn For the translation "rise up in arms" see L&N 55.2.

38 sn See Isa 5:13-14; 13:6-16; Hag 2:6-7; Zech 14:4.

there will be terrifying sights[1] and great signs[2] from heaven. 21:12 But before all this,[3] they will seize[4] you and persecute you, handing you over to the synagogues[5] and prisons. You[6] will be brought before kings and governors because of my name. 21:13 This will be a time for you to serve as witnesses.[7] 21:14 Therefore be resolved[8] not to rehearse[9] ahead of time how to make your defense. 21:15 For I will give you the words[10] along with the wisdom[11] that none of your adversaries will be able to withstand or contradict. 21:16 You will be betrayed even by parents,[12] brothers, relatives,[13] and friends, and they will have some of you put to death. 21:17 You will be hated by everyone because of my name.[14] 21:18 Yet[15] not a hair of your head will perish.[16] 21:19 By your endurance[17] you will gain[18] your lives.[19]

The Desolation of Jerusalem

21:20 "But when you see Jerusalem[20] surrounded[21] by armies, then know that its[22] desolation[23] has come near. 21:21 Then those who are in Judea must flee[24] to the mountains. Those[25] who are inside the city must depart. Those[26] who are out in the country must not enter it, 21:22 because these are days of vengeance,[27] to fulfill[28] all that is written. 21:23 Woe to those who are pregnant and to those who are nursing their babies in those days! For there will be great distress[29] on the earth and wrath against this people. 21:24 They[30] will fall by the edge[31] of the sword and be led away as captives[32] among all nations. Jerusalem[33] will be trampled down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled.[34]

The Arrival of the Son of Man

21:25 "And there will be signs in the sun and moon and stars,[35] and on the earth nations will

---

1 tn This term, φόβητρον (phobētron), occurs only here in the NT. It could refer to an object, event, or condition that causes fear, but in the context it is linked with great signs from heaven, so the translation "sights" was preferred.

2 sn See Jer 4:13-22; 14:12; 21:6-7.

3 sn But before all this. Another note of timing is present, this one especially important in understanding the sequence in the discourse. Before the things noted in vv. 8-11 are the events of vv. 12-19.

4 tn Grk "will lay their hands on you."

5 sn Some of the persecution is of Jewish origin (the synagogues). Some fulfillment of this can be seen in Acts. See the note on synagogues in 4:15.

6 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

7 tn Grk "This will turn out to you for [a] testimony."

8 tn Grk "determine in your hearts."

9 tn This term could refer to rehearsing a speech or a dance. On its syntax, see BDF §392.2.

10 tn Grk "a mouth." It is a metonymy and refers to the reply the Lord will give to them.

11 tn Grk "and wisdom."

12 sn To confess Christ might well mean rejection by one's own family, even by parents.

13 tn Grk "and brothers and relatives," but καί (kai) has not been translated twice here since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

14 sn See Luke 6:22, 27; 1 Cor 1:25-31.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "yet" to indicate the contrast present in this context.

16 sn Given v. 16, the expression not a hair of your head will perish must be taken figuratively and refer to living ultimately in the presence of God.

17 sn By your endurance is a call to remain faithful, because trusting in Jesus is the means to life.

18 tc Some important Greek witnesses plus the majority of MSS (ℵ D L W Ψ f^{1} 𝔐) read the aorist imperative κτήσασθε (ktēsasthe) here, though some MSS (A B Θ f^{13} 33 pc lat sa) read the future indicative κτήσεσθε (ktēsesthe). A decision is difficult because the evidence is so evenly balanced, but the aorist imperative is the harder reading and better explains the rise of the other. J. A. Fitzmyer assesses the translation options this way: "In English one has to use something similar [i.e., a future indicative], even if one follows the [aorist imperative]" (Luke [AB], 2:1341); in the same vein, although this translation follows the aorist imperative, because of English requirements it has been translated as though it were a future indicative.

19 tn Grk "your souls," but ψυχή (psuchē) is frequently used of one's physical life. In light of v. 16 that does not seem to be the case here. The entire phrase could be taken as an idiom meaning "you will save yourselves" (L&N 21.20), or (as in v. 18) this could refer to living ultimately in the presence of God.

20 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

21 sn See Luke 19:41-44. This passage refers to the events associated with the fall of Jerusalem, when the city is surrounded by armies.

22 tn Grk "her," referring to the city of Jerusalem (the name "Jerusalem" in Greek is a feminine noun).

23 sn The phrase its desolation is a reference to the fall of the city, which is the only antecedent present in Luke's account. The parallels to this in Matt 24:15 and Mark 13:14 refer to the temple's desolation, though Matthew's allusion is clearer. They focus on the parallel events of the end, not on the short term realization in A.D. 70. The entire passage has a prophetic "two events in one" typology, where the near term destruction (A.D. 70) is like the end. So the evangelists could choose to focus on the near time realization (Luke) or on its long term fulfillment, which mirrors it (Matthew, Mark).

24 sn Fleeing to the mountains is a key OT image: Gen 19:17; Judg 6:2; Isa 15:5; Jer 16:16; Zech 14:5.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

26 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

27 tn Or "of punishment." This is a time of judgment.

28 tn The passive construction with the infinitive πλησθῆναι (plēsthēnai) has been translated as an active construction for simplicity, in keeping with contemporary English style.

29 sn Great distress means that this is a period of great judgment.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

31 tn Grk "by the mouth of the sword" (an idiom for the edge of a sword).

32 sn Here is the predicted judgment against the nation until the time of Gentile rule has passed: Its people will be led away as captives.

33 tn Grk "And Jerusalem." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

34 sn Until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled implies a time when Israel again has a central role in God's plan.

35 sn Signs in the sun and moon and stars are cosmic signs that turn our attention to the end and the Son of Man's return for the righteous. OT imagery is present: See Isa 13:9-10; 24:18-20; 34:4; Ezek 32:7-8; Joel 2:1, 30-31; 3:15.

be in distress,[1] anxious[2] over the roaring of the sea and the surging waves. 21:26 People will be fainting from fear[3] and from the expectation of what is coming on the world, for the powers of the heavens will be shaken.[4] 21:27 Then[5] they will see the Son of Man arriving in a cloud[6] with power and great glory. 21:28 But when these things[7] begin to happen, stand up and raise your heads, because your redemption[8] is drawing near."

The Parable of the Fig Tree

21:29 Then[9] he told them a parable: "Look at the fig tree and all the other trees.[10] 21:30 When they sprout leaves, you see[11] for yourselves and know that summer is now near. 21:31 So also you, when you see these things happening, know[12] that the kingdom of God[13] is near. 21:32 I tell you the truth,[14] this generation[15] will not pass away until all these things take place. 21:33 Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will never pass away.[16]

Be Ready!

21:34 "But be on your guard[17] so that your hearts are not weighed down with dissipation and drunkenness and the worries of this life, and that day close down upon you suddenly like a trap.[18] 21:35 For[19] it will overtake[20] all who live on the face of the whole earth.[21] 21:36 But stay alert at all times,[22] praying that you may have strength to escape all these things that must[23] happen, and to stand before the Son of Man."

21:37 So[24] every day Jesus[25] was teaching in the temple courts,[26] but at night he went and stayed[27] on the Mount of Olives.[28] 21:38 And all the people[29] came to him early in the morning to listen to him in the temple courts.[30]

Judas' Decision to Betray Jesus

22:1 Now the Feast of Unleavened Bread,[31] which is called the Passover, was approaching.

---

1 tn Grk "distress of nations."

2 tn Or "in consternation" (L&N 32.9).

3 tn According to L&N 23.184 this could be mainly a psychological experience rather than actual loss of consciousness. It could also refer to complete discouragement because of fear, leading people to give up hope (L&N 25.293).

4 sn An allusion to Isa 34:4. The heavens were seen as the abode of heavenly forces, so their shaking indicates distress in the spiritual realm. Although some take the powers as a reference to bodies in the heavens (like stars and planets, "the heavenly bodies," NIV) this is not as likely.

5 tn Grk "And then" (καὶ τότε, kai tote). Here καί has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

6 sn An allusion to Dan 7:13. Here is Jesus returning with full judging authority.

7 sn These things are all the events of vv. 8-27. Disciples represent the righteous here. The events surrounding the fall of the nation are a down payment on a fuller judgment to come on all humanity. The presence of one guarantees the other.

8 sn With Jesus' return comes the manifestation of judgment and final salvation (redemption).

10 tn Grk "all the trees."

11 tn Grk "seeing for yourselves, you know." The participle βλέποντες (blepontes) has been translated as a finite verb due to requirements of contemporary English style.

12 tn The verb γινώσκετε (ginōskete, "know") can be parsed as either present indicative or present imperative. In this context the imperative fits better, since the movement is from analogy (trees and seasons) to the future (the signs of the coming of the kingdom) and since the emphasis is on preparation for this event.

13 sn The kingdom of God refers here to the kingdom in all its power. See Luke 17:20-37.

14 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

15 sn This is one of the hardest verses in the gospels to interpret. Various views exist for what generation means. (1) Some take it as meaning "race" and thus as an assurance that the Jewish race (nation) will not pass away. But it is very questionable that the Greek term γενεά (genea) can have this meaning. Two other options are possible. (2) Generation might mean "this type of generation" and refer to the generation of wicked humanity. Then the point is that humanity will not perish, because God will redeem it. Or (3) generation may refer to "the generation that sees the signs of the end" (vv. 25-26), who will also see the end itself. In other words, once the movement to the return of Christ starts, all the events connected with it happen very quickly, in rapid succession.

16 sn The words that Jesus predicts here will never pass away. They are more stable and lasting than creation itself. For this kind of image, see Isa 40:8; 55:10-11.

17 tn Grk "watch out for yourselves."

sn Disciples are to watch out. If they are too absorbed into everyday life, they will stop watching and living faithfully.

18 sn Or like a thief, see Luke 12:39-40. The metaphor of a trap is a vivid one. Most modern English translations traditionally place the words "like a trap" at the end of v. 34, completing the metaphor. In the Greek text (and in the NRSV and REB) the words "like a trap" are placed at the beginning of v. 35. This does not affect the meaning.

19 tn There is debate in the textual tradition about the position of γάρ (gar) and whether v. 35 looks back to v. 34 or is independent. The textual evidence does slightly favor placing γάρ after the verb and thus linking it back to v. 34. The other reading looks like Isa 24:17. However, the construction is harsh and the translation prefers for stylistic reasons to start a new English sentence here.

20 tn Or "come upon."

21 sn This judgment involves everyone: all who live on the face of the whole earth. No one will escape this evaluation.

22 sn The call to be alert at all times is a call to remain faithful in looking for the Lord's return.

23 tn For the translation of μέλλω (mellō) as "must," see L&N 71.36.

24 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" since vv. 37-38 serve as something of a summary or transition from the discourse preceding to the passion narrative that follows.

25 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

26 tn Grk "in the temple."

27 tn Grk "and spent the night," but this is redundant because of the previous use of the word "night."

28 tn Grk "at the mountain called 'of Olives.'" sn See the note on the phrase Mount of Olives in 19:29.

29 sn Jesus' teaching was still quite popular with all the people at this point despite the leaders' opposition.

30 tc Some MSS (those of f^{13}) place John 7:53-8:11 here after v. 38, no doubt because it was felt that this was a better setting for the pericope.

tn Grk "in the temple."

31 sn The Feast of Unleavened Bread was a week long celebration that followed the day of Passover, so one name was used for both feasts (Exod 12:1-20; 23:15; 34:18; Deut 16:1-8).

22:2 The[1] chief priests and the experts in the law[2] were trying to find some way[3] to execute[4] Jesus,[5] for they were afraid of the people.[6]

22:3 Then[7] Satan[8] entered Judas, the one called Iscariot, who was one of the twelve.[9] 22:4 He went away and discussed with the chief priests and officers of the temple guard[10] how he might[11] betray Jesus,[12] handing him over to them.[13] 22:5 They[14] were delighted[15] and arranged to give him money.[16] 22:6 So[17] Judas[18] agreed and began looking for an opportunity to betray Jesus[19] when no crowd was present.[20]

The Passover

22:7 Then the day for the feast[21] of Unleavened Bread came, on which the Passover lamb had to be sacrificed.[22] 22:8 Jesus[23] sent Peter and John, saying, "Go and prepare the Passover[24] for us to eat."[25] 22:9 They[26] said to him, "Where do you want us to prepare[27] it?" 22:10 He said to them, "Listen,[28] when you have entered the city, a man carrying a jar of water[29] will meet you.[30] Follow him into the house that he enters, 22:11 and tell the owner of the house,[31] 'The Teacher says to you, "Where is the guest room where I may eat the Passover with my disciples?"' 22:12 Then he will show you a large furnished room upstairs. Make preparations there." 22:13 So[32] they went and found things[33] just as he had told them,[34] and they prepared the Passover.

The Lord's Supper

22:14 Now[35] when the hour came, Jesus[36] took his place at the table[37] and the apostles

---

1 tn Grk "And the." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

3 tn Grk "were seeking how."

4 tn The Greek verb here means "to get rid of by execution" (BDAG 64 s.v. ἀναιρέω 2; cf. also L&N 20.71, which states, "to get rid of someone by execution, often with legal or quasi-legal procedures").

5 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 sn The suggestion here is that Jesus was too popular to openly arrest him. The verb were trying is imperfect. It suggests, in this context, that they were always considering the opportunities.

7 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

8 sn The cross is portrayed as part of the cosmic battle between Satan and God; see Luke 4:1-13; 11:14-23.

9 tn Grk "Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve."

10 tn The full title στρατηγὸς τοῦ ἱεροῦ (stratēgos tou hierou; "officer of the temple" or "captain of the temple guard") is sometimes shortened to στρατηγός as here (L&N 37.91).

11 tn Luke uses this frequent indirect question to make his point (BDF §267.2).

12 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Grk "how he might hand him over to them," in the sense of "betray him."

14 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

15 sn The leaders were delighted when Judas contacted them about betraying Jesus, because it gave them the opportunity they had been looking for, and they could later claim that Jesus had been betrayed by one of his own disciples.

16 sn Matt 26:15 states the amount of money they gave Judas was thirty pieces of silver (see also Matt 27:3-4; Zech 11:12-13).

17 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the arrangement worked out in the preceding verse.

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "betray him to them"; the referent of the first pronoun (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 tn Grk "apart from the crowd."

sn The leaders wanted to do this quietly, when no crowd was present, so no public uproar would result (cf. v. 21:38; 22:2).

21 tn The words "for the feast" are not in the Greek text, but have been supplied for clarity.

22 sn Generally the feast of Unleavened Bread would refer to Nisan 15 (Friday), but the following reference to the sacrifice of the Passover lamb indicates that Nisan 14 (Thursday) was what Luke had in mind (Nisan = March 27 to April 25). The celebration of the Feast of Unleavened Bread lasted eight days, beginning with the Passover meal. The celebrations were so close together that at times the names of both were used interchangeably.

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 sn This required getting a suitable lamb and finding lodging in Jerusalem where the meal could be eaten. The population of the city swelled during the feast, so lodging could be difficult to find. The Passover was celebrated each year in commemoration of the Israelites' deliverance from Egypt; thus it was a feast celebrating redemption (see Exod 12). The Passover lamb was roasted and eaten after sunset in a family group of at least ten people (m. Pesahim 7.13). People ate the meal while reclining (see the note on table in 22:14). It included, besides the lamb, unleavened bread and bitter herbs as a reminder of Israel's bitter affliction at the hands of the Egyptians. Four cups of wine mixed with water were also used for the meal. For a further description of the meal and the significance of the wine cups, see E. Ferguson, Backgrounds of Early Christianity, 523-24.

25 tn Grk "for us, so that we may eat."

26 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

27 tn In the Greek text this a deliberative subjunctive.

28 tn Grk "behold."

29 sn Since women usually carried these jars, it would have been no problem for Peter and John to recognize the man Jesus was referring to.

30 sn Jesus is portrayed throughout Luke 22-23 as very aware of what will happen, almost directing events. Here this is indicated by his prediction that a man carrying a jar of water will meet you.

31 tn Grk "to the master of the household," referring to one who owns and manages the household, including family, servants, and slaves (L&N 57.14).

32 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' instructions.

33 tn The word "things" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

34 sn The author's note that the disciples found things just as he had told them shows that Jesus' word could be trusted.

35 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

36 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

37 tn Grk "reclined at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low joined[1] him. 22:15 And he said to them, "I have earnestly desired[2] to eat this Passover with you before I suffer. 22:16 For I tell you, I will not eat it again[3] until it is fulfilled[4] in the kingdom of God."[5] 22:17 Then[6] he took a cup,[7] and after giving thanks he said, "Take this and divide it among yourselves. 22:18 For I tell you that from now on I will not drink of the fruit[8] of the vine until the kingdom of God comes."[9] 22:19 Then[10] he took bread, and after giving thanks he broke it and gave it to them, saying, "This is my body[11] which is given for you.[12] Do this in remembrance of me." 22:20 And in the same way he took[13] the cup after they had eaten,[14] saying, "This cup that is poured out for you is the new covenant[15] in my blood.

A Final Discourse

22:21 "But look, the hand of the one who betrays[16] me is with me on the table.[17] 22:22 For the Son of Man is to go just as it has been determined,[18] but woe to that man by whom he is betrayed!" 22:23 So[19] they began to question one another as to which of them it could possibly be who would do this.

22:24 A dispute also started[20] among them over which of them was to be regarded as the greatest.[21] 22:25 So[22] Jesus[23] said to them, "The kings of the Gentiles lord it over them, and those in authority over them are called 'benefactors.'[24] 22:26 Not so with you;[25] instead the one who is greatest among you must become like the youngest, and the leader[26] like the one who serves.[27] 22:27 For who is greater, the one who is seated at the table,[28] or the one who serves? Is it not[29] the one who is seated at the table? But I am among you as one[30] who serves.

table and the feet farthest away.

[1] tn Grk "the apostles with him."

[2] tn This phrase parallels a Hebrew infinitive absolute and serves to underline Jesus' enthusiasm for holding this meal (BDF §198.6).

[3] tn Although the word "again" is not in the Greek text, it is supplied to indicate that Jesus did indeed partake of this Passover meal, as statements in v. 18 suggest ("from now on"). For more complete discussion see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1720.

[4] sn Jesus looked to a celebration in the kingdom to come when the Passover is fulfilled. This reference could well suggest that some type of commemorative sacrifice and meal will be celebrated then, as the antecedent is the Passover sacrifice. The reference is not to the Lord's supper as some argue, but the Passover.

[5] sn The kingdom of God here refers to the kingdom in all its power. See Luke 17:20-37.

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[7] sn Then he took a cup. Only Luke mentions two cups at this meal; the other synoptic gospels (Matt, Mark) mention only one. This is the first of the two. It probably refers to the first cup in the traditional Passover meal, which today has four cups (although it is debated whether the fourth cup was used in the 1st century).

[8] tn Grk "the produce" ("the produce of the vine" is a figurative expression for wine).

[9] sn Until the kingdom of God comes is a reference to the kingdom in all its power. See Luke 17:20-37. Jesus awaits celebration with the arrival of full kingdom blessing.

[11] tc Some important Western MSS (D it) lack the words from this point to the end of v. 20. However, the authenticity of these verses is very likely. The inclusion of the second cup is the harder reading, since it differs from Matt 26:26-29 and Mark 14:22-25, and it has much better MS support. It is thus easier to explain the shorter reading as a scribal accident or misunderstanding. Further discussion of this complicated problem (the most difficult in Luke) can be found in TCGNT 148-50.

[12] sn The language of the phrase given for you alludes to Christ's death in our place. It is a powerful substitutionary image of what he did for us.

[13] tn The words "he took" are not in the Greek text at this point, but are an understood repetition from v. 19.

[14] tn The phrase "after they had eaten" translates the temporal infinitive construction μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι (meta to deipnēsai), where the verb δειπνέω (deipneō) means "to eat a meal" or "to have a meal."

[15] sn Jesus' death established the forgiveness promised in the new covenant of Jer 31:31. Jesus is reinterpreting the symbolism of the Passover meal, indicating the presence of a new era.

[16] sn The one who betrays me. Jesus knows about Judas and what he has done.

[17] sn The point of Jesus' comment here is not to identify the specific individual per se, but to indicate that it is one who was close to him – somebody whom no one would suspect. His comment serves to heighten the treachery of Judas' betrayal.

[18] sn Jesus' death has been determined as a part of God's plan (Acts 2:22-24).

[19] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' comments: The disciples begin wondering who would betray him.

[20] tn Or "happened."

[21] tn Though the term μείζων (meizōn) here is comparative in form, it is superlative in sense (BDF §244).

[22] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the dispute among the apostles.

[23] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] sn The title 'benefactor,' highlighting grace and meaning something like "helper of the people," was even given to tyrants (2 Macc 4:2; 3 Macc 3:19; Josephus, J. W. 3.9.8 [3.459]).

[25] tn Grk "But you are not thus."

[26] tn Or "the ruler."

[27] sn And the leader like the one who serves. Leadership was not to be a matter of privilege and special status, but of service. All social status is leveled out by these remarks. Jesus himself is the prime example of the servant-leader.

[28] tn Grk "who reclines at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

[29] tn The interrogative particle used here in the Greek text (οὐχί, ouchi) expects a positive reply.

[30] sn Jesus' example of humble service, as one who serves, shows that the standard for a disciple is different from that of the world. For an example see John 13:1-17.

22:28 "You are the ones who have remained[1] with me in my trials. 22:29 Thus[2] I grant[3] to you a kingdom,[4] just as my Father granted to me, 22:30 that you may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and you will sit[5] on thrones judging[6] the twelve tribes of Israel.

22:31 "Simon,[7] Simon, pay attention![8] Satan has demanded to have you all,[9] to sift you like wheat,[10] 22:32 but I have prayed for you, Simon,[11] that your faith may not fail.[12] When[13] you have turned back,[14] strengthen[15] your brothers." 22:33 But Peter[16] said to him, "Lord, I am ready to go with you both to prison and to death!"[17] 22:34 Jesus replied,[18] "I tell you, Peter, the rooster will not crow[19] today until you have denied[20] three times that you know me."

22:35 Then[21] Jesus[22] said to them, "When I sent you out with no money bag,[23] or traveler's bag,[24] or sandals, you didn't lack[25] anything, did you?" They replied,[26] "Nothing." 22:36 He said to them, "But now, the one who[27] has a money bag must take it, and likewise a traveler's bag[28] too. And the one who has no sword must sell his cloak and buy one. 22:37 For I tell you that this scripture must be[29] fulfilled in me, 'And he was counted with the transgressors.'[30] For what is written about me is being fulfilled."[31] 22:38 So[32] they said, "Look, Lord, here are two swords."[33] Then he told them, "It is enough."[34]

On the Mount of Olives

22:39 Then[35] Jesus[36] went out and made his way,[37] as he customarily did, to the Mount of Olives,[38] and the disciples followed him. 22:40 When he came to the place,[39] he said to them,

---

1 tn Or "continued" (L&N 34.3). Jesus acknowledges the disciples' faithfulness.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "thus" to indicate the implied result of the disciples' perseverance with Jesus.

3 sn With the statement "I grant to you a kingdom" Jesus gave the disciples authority over the kingdom, as God had given him such authority. The present tense looks at authority given presently, though the major manifestation of its presence is yet to come as the next verse shows.

4 tn Or "I give you the right to rule" (cf. CEV). For this translation of διατίθεμαι βασιλείαν (diatithemai basileian) see L&N 37.105.

5 tn This verb is future indicative, and thus not subordinate to "grant" (διατίθεμαι, diatithemai) as part of the result clause beginning with ἵνα ἔσθητε (hina esthēte) at the beginning of v. 30. It is better understood as a predictive future.

6 sn The statement you will sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel looks at the future authority the Twelve will have when Jesus returns. They will share in Israel's judgment.

7 tc The majority of MSS (𝔎 A D W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 as well as several versional witnesses) begin this verse with an introductory comment, "and the Lord said," indicating a change in the subject of discussion. But this is apparently a reading motivated by the need for clarity. Some of the best witnesses, along with a few others (𝔓^{75} B L T 1241 2542^{c} sy^{s} co), do not contain these words. The abrupt shift is the more difficult reading and thus more likely to be original.

8 tn Grk "behold" (for "pay attention" see L&N 91.13).

9 sn This pronoun is plural in the Greek text, so it refers to all the disciples of which Peter is the representative.

10 sn Satan has demanded permission to put them to the test. The idiom "sift (someone) like wheat" is similar to the English idiom "to pick (someone) apart." The pronoun you is implied.

11 sn Here and in the remainder of the verse the second person pronouns are singular, so only Peter is in view. The name "Simon" has been supplied as a form of direct address to make this clear in English.

12 sn That your faith may not fail. Note that Peter's denials are pictured here as lapses, not as a total absence of faith.

13 tn Grk "And when." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

14 tn Or "turned around."

15 sn Strengthen your brothers refers to Peter helping to strengthen their faith. Jesus quite graciously restores Peter "in advance," even with the knowledge of his approaching denials.

16 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 sn The confidence Peter has in private (Lord, I am ready...) will wilt under the pressure of the public eye.

18 tn Grk "he said"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 sn That is, Peter's denials will happen before the sun rises.

20 sn Once again, Jesus is quite aware that Peter will deny him. Peter, however, is too nonchalant about the possibility of stumbling.

21 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tn Traditionally, "purse" (likewise in v. 36).

24 tn Or possibly "beggar's bag" (L&N 6.145).

25 sn This refers back to 9:3 and 10:3-4. The Greek construction anticipates a negative reply which is indicated in the translation by the 'tag' at the end, "did you?" Nothing was lacking.

26 tn Grk "said."

27 tn The syntax of this verse is disputed, resulting in various translations. The major options are either (1) that reflected in the translation or (2) that those who have a money bag and traveler's bag should get a sword, just as those who do not have these items should sell their cloak to buy a sword. The point of all the options is that things have changed and one now needs full provisions. Opposition will come. But "sword" is a figure for preparing to fight. See Luke 22:50-51.

28 tn Or possibly "beggar's bag" (L&N 6.145).

29 sn This scripture must be fulfilled in me. The statement again reflects the divine necessity of God's plan. See 4:43-44.

30 tn Or "with the lawless."

sn This is a quotation from Isa 53:12. It highlights a theme of Luke 22-23. Though completely innocent, Jesus dies as if he were a criminal.

31 tn Grk "is having its fulfillment."

32 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' comments about obtaining swords.

33 sn Here are two swords. The disciples mistakenly took Jesus to mean that they should prepare for armed resistance, something he will have to correct in 22:50-51.

34 sn It is enough. The disciples' misunderstanding caused Jesus to terminate the discussion.

35 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

36 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

37 tn Grk "went."

38 sn See the note on the Mount of Olives in Luke 19:29.

39 sn Luke does not mention Gethsemane by name, but calls it simply the place.

"Pray that you will not fall into temptation."[1] 22:41 He went away from them about a stone's throw, knelt down, and prayed, 22:42 "Father, if you are willing, take[2] this cup[3] away from me. Yet not my will but yours[4] be done." [22:43 Then an angel from heaven appeared to him and strengthened him. 22:44 And in his anguish[5] he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was like drops of blood falling to the ground.][6] 22:45 When[7] he got up from prayer, he came to the disciples and found them sleeping, exhausted[8] from grief. 22:46 So[9] he said to them, "Why are you sleeping? Get up and pray that you will not fall into temptation!"[10]

Betrayal and Arrest

22:47 While he was still speaking, suddenly a crowd appeared,[11] and the man named Judas, one of the twelve, was leading them. He walked up[12] to Jesus to kiss him.[13] 22:48 But Jesus said to him, "Judas, would you betray the Son of Man with a kiss?"[14] 22:49 When[15] those who were around him saw what was about to happen, they said, "Lord, should[16] we use our swords?"[17] 22:50 Then[18] one of them[19] struck the high priest's slave,[20] cutting off his right ear. 22:51 But Jesus said,[21] "Enough of this!" And he touched the man's[22] ear and healed[23] him. 22:52 Then[24] Jesus said to the chief priests, the officers of the temple guard,[25] and the elders who had come out to get him, "Have you come out with swords and clubs like you would against an outlaw?[26] 22:53 Day after day when I was with you

---

1 sn Jesus' instructions to pray not to fall into temptation is an allusion to Luke 22:28-38, especially 22:31. The temptation is Satan's challenge to them to defect, like what happened to Judas and what will happen to Peter.

2 tn Luke's term παρένεγκε is not as exact as the one in Matt 26:39. Luke's means "take away" (BDAG 772 s.v. παρένεγκε 2.c) while Matthew's means "take away without touching," suggesting an alteration (if possible) in God's plan. For further discussion see D. L. Bock, Luke (BECNT), 2:1759-60.

3 sn This cup alludes to the wrath of God that Jesus would experience (in the form of suffering and death) for us. See Ps 11:6; 75:8-9; Isa 51:17, 19, 22 for this figure.

4 sn With the statement "Not my will but yours be done" Jesus submitted fully to God's will.

5 tn Grk "And being in anguish."

6 tc Several important Greek MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ¹ A B N T W 579 1071*) along with diverse and widespread versional witnesses lack 22:43-44. In addition, the verses are placed after Matt 26:39 by f^{13}. Floating texts typically suggest both spuriousness and early scribal impulses to regard the verses as historically authentic. These verses are included in ℵ*,² D L Θ Ψ 0171 f^{1} 𝔐 lat Ju Ir Hipp Eus. However, a number of MSS mark the text with an asterisk or obelisk, indicating the scribe's assessment of the verses as inauthentic. At the same time, these verses generally fit Luke's style. Arguments can be given on both sides about whether scribes would tend to include or omit such comments about Jesus' humanity and an angel's help. But even if the verses are not literarily authentic, they are probably historically authentic. This is due to the fact that this text was well known in several different locales from a very early period. Since there are no synoptic parallels to this account and since there is no obvious reason for adding these words here, it is very likely that such verses recount a part of the actual suffering of our Lord. Nevertheless, because of the serious doubts as to these verses' authenticity, they have been put in brackets. For an important discussion of this problem, see B. D. Ehrman and M. A. Plunkett, "The Angel and the Agony: The Textual Problem of Luke 22:43-44," CBQ 45 (1983): 401-16.

sn Angelic aid is noted elsewhere in the gospels: Matt 4:11 = Mark 1:13.

7 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

8 tn Grk "from grief." The word "exhausted" is not in the Greek text, but is implied; the disciples have fallen asleep from mental and emotional exhaustion resulting from their distress (see L&N 25.273; cf. TEV, NIV, NLT).

9 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus finding them asleep.

10 sn Jesus calls the disciples again to prayerful watchfulness with the words "Get up and pray" (see 22:40). The time is full of danger (22:53).

11 tn Grk "While he was still speaking, behold, a crowd, and the one called Judas...was leading them." The abrupt appearance of the crowd on the scene is indicated in the translation by "suddenly" and "appeared."

12 tn Grk "drew near."

13 tc Many MSS (D Θ f^{13} 700 pm as well as several versional MSS) add here, "for this is the sign he gave to them: Whoever I kiss is [the one]." This addition is almost certainly not original, since most of the important MSS lack it. It may be a copyist's attempt to clarify the text, or the accidental inclusion of a marginal gloss.

14 sn Jesus' comment about betraying the Son of Man with a kiss shows the hypocrisy and blindness of an attempt to cover up sin. On "misused kisses" in the Bible, see Gen 27:26-27; 2 Sam 15:5; Prov 7:13; 27:6; and 2 Sam 20:9.

15 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

16 tn The direct question using "if" in Greek is not unusual (BDF §440.3).

17 sn "Should we use our swords?" The disciples' effort to defend Jesus recalls Luke 22:35-38. One individual did not wait for the answer.

18 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

19 sn One of them. The unnamed disciple is Peter according to John 18:10 (cf. also Matt 26:51; Mark 14:47).

20 tn See the note on the word "slave" in 7:2.

21 tn Grk "But answering, Jesus said." This is redundant in contemporary English and has been simplified in the translation.

22 tn Grk "his"; the referent (the slave of the high priest mentioned in the previous verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 sn When Jesus healed the man's ear he showed grace even to those who hated him, following his own teaching (Luke 6:27-36).

24 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

25 tn This title, literally "official of the temple" (στρατηγὸς τοῦ ἱεροῦ, stratēgos tou hierou), referred to the commander of the Jewish soldiers who guarded and maintained order in the Jerusalem temple. Here, since the term is plural, it has been translated "officers of the temple guard" rather than "commanders of the temple guard," since the idea of a number of commanders might be confusing to the modern English reader.

26 tn Or "a revolutionary." This term can refer to one who stirs up rebellion: BDAG 594 s.v. λῃστής 2 has "revolutionary, insurrectionist, guerrilla" citing evidence from Josephus (J. W. 2.13.2-3 [2.253-254]). However, this usage generally postdates Jesus' time. It does refer to a figure of violence. Luke uses the same term for the highwaymen who attack the traveler in the parable of the good Samaritan (10:30).

in the temple courts,[1] you did not arrest me.[2] But this is your hour,[3] and that of the power[4] of darkness!"

Jesus' Condemnation and Peter's Denials

22:54 Then[5] they arrested[6] Jesus,[7] led him away, and brought him into the high priest's house.[8] But Peter was following at a distance. 22:55 When they had made a fire in the middle of the courtyard and sat down together, Peter sat down among them. 22:56 Then a slave girl,[9] seeing him as he sat in the firelight, stared at him and said, "This man was with him too!" 22:57 But Peter[10] denied it: "Woman,[11] I don't know[12] him!" 22:58 Then[13] a little later someone else[14] saw him and said, "You are one of them too." But Peter said, "Man,[15] I am not!" 22:59 And after about an hour still another insisted,[16] "Certainly this man was with him, because he too is a Galilean."[17] 22:60 But Peter said, "Man, I don't know what you're talking about!" At that moment,[18] while he was still speaking, a rooster crowed.[19] 22:61 Then[20] the Lord turned and looked straight at Peter, and Peter remembered the word of the Lord,[21] how he had said to him, "Before a rooster crows today, you will deny me three times." 22:62 And he went outside and wept bitterly.[22]

22:63 Now[23] the men who were holding Jesus[24] under guard began to mock him and beat him. 22:64 They[25] blindfolded him and asked him repeatedly,[26] "Prophesy! Who hit you?"[27] 22:65 They also said many other things against him, reviling[28] him.

22:66 When day came, the council of the elders of the people gathered together, both the chief priests and the experts in the law.[29] Then[30] they led Jesus[31] away to their council[32] 22:67 and said, "If[33] you are the Christ,[34] tell us." But he said to them, "If[35] I tell you, you will not[36] believe, 22:68 and if[37] I ask you, you will not[38] answer. 22:69 But from now on[39] the Son of Man

---

1 tn Grk "in the temple."

2 tn Grk "lay hands on me."

3 tn Or "your time."

4 tn Or "authority," "domain."

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

6 tn Or "seized" (L&N 37.109).

7 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 sn Putting all the gospel accounts together, there is a brief encounter with Annas (brought him into the high priest's house, here and John 18:13, where Annas is named); the meeting led by Caiaphas (Matt 26:57-68 = Mark 14:53-65; and then a Sanhedrin meeting (Matt 27:1; Mark 15:1; Luke 22:66-71). These latter two meetings might be connected and apparently went into the morning.

9 tn The Greek term here is παιδίσκη (paidiskē), referring to a slave girl or slave woman.

10 tn Grk "he denied it, saying." The referent (Peter) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant and has not been translated.

11 sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions.

12 sn The expression "I do not know him" had an idiomatic use in Jewish ban formulas in the synagogue and could mean, "I have nothing to do with him."

13 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

14 sn In Mark 14:69, the same slave girl made the charge. So apparently Peter was being identified by a variety of people.

15 tn Here and in v. 60 "Man" is used as a neutral form of address to a stranger.

16 tn Grk "insisted, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in English and has not been translated here.

17 sn According to Mark 14:70 it was Peter's accent that gave him away as a Galilean.

18 tn Grk "And immediately." Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

19 tn A real rooster crowing is probably in view here (rather than the Roman trumpet call known as gallicinium), in part due to the fact that Mark 14:72 mentions the rooster crowing twice. See the discussion at Matt 26:74.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

21 tn "The word of the Lord" is a technical expression in OT literature, often referring to a divine prophetic utterance (e.g., Gen 15:1, Isa 1:10, Jonah 1:1). In the NT it occurs 15 times: 3 times as ῥῆμα τοῦ κυρίου (rhēma tou kuriou; here and in Acts 11:16, 1 Pet 1:25) and 12 times as λόγος τοῦ κυρίου (logos tou kuriou; Acts 8:25; 13:44, 48, 49; 15:35, 36; 16:32; 19:10, 20; 1 Thess 1:8, 4:15; 2 Thess 3:1). As in the OT, this phrase focuses on the prophetic nature and divine origin of what has been said. Because of its technical nature the expression has been retained in the translation in preference to a smoother rendering like "remembered what the Lord had said" (cf. TEV, NLT).

22 sn When Peter went out and wept bitterly it shows he really did not want to fail here and was deeply grieved that he had.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

24 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

26 tn The verb ἐπηρώτων (epērōtōn) has been translated as an iterative imperfect. The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in English and has not been translated here.

27 tn Grk "Who is the one who hit you?"

sn Who hit you? This is a variation of one of three ancient games that involved blindfolds.

28 tn Or "insulting." Luke uses a strong word here; it means "to revile, to defame, to blaspheme" (L&N 33.400).

29 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

31 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

32 sn Their council is probably a reference to the Jewish Sanhedrin, the council of seventy leaders.

33 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text.

34 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

35 tn This is a third class condition in the Greek text. Jesus had this experience already in 20:1-8.

36 tn The negation in the Greek text is the strongest possible (οὐ μή, ou mē).

37 tn This is also a third class condition in the Greek text.

38 tn The negation in the Greek text is the strongest possible (οὐ μή, ou mē).

39 sn From now on. Jesus' authority was taken up from this moment on. Ironically he is now the ultimate judge, who is himself being judged.

will be seated at the right hand[1] of the power[2] of God." 22:70 So[3] they all said, "Are you the Son of God,[4] then?" He answered[5] them, "You say[6] that I am." 22:71 Then[7] they said, "Why do we need further testimony? We have heard it ourselves[8] from his own lips!"[9]

Jesus Brought Before Pilate

23:1 Then[10] the whole group of them rose up and brought Jesus[11] before Pilate.[12] 23:2 They[13] began to accuse[14] him, saying, "We found this man subverting[15] our nation, forbidding[16] us to pay the tribute tax[17] to Caesar[18] and claiming that he himself is Christ,[19] a king." 23:3 So[20] Pilate asked Jesus,[21] "Are you the king[22] of the Jews?" He replied, "You say so."[23] 23:4 Then[24] Pilate said to the chief priests and the crowds, "I find no basis for an accusation[25] against this man." 23:5 But they persisted[26] in saying, "He incites[27] the people by teaching throughout all Judea. It started in Galilee and ended up here!"[28]

Jesus Brought Before Herod

23:6 Now when Pilate heard this, he asked whether the man was a Galilean. 23:7 When[29] he learned that he was from Herod's jurisdiction,[30] he sent him over to Herod,[31] who also happened to be in Jerusalem[32] at that time. 23:8 When[33] Herod saw Jesus, he was very glad, for he had long desired to see him, because he had heard about him and was hoping to see him perform[34] some miraculous sign.[35] 23:9 So[36] Herod[37]

---

1 sn Seated at the right hand is an allusion to Ps 110:1 ("Sit at my right hand...") and is a claim that Jesus shares authority with God in heaven. Those present may have thought they were his judges, but, in fact, the reverse was true.

2 sn The expression the right hand of the power of God is a circumlocution for referring to God. Such indirect references to God were common in 1st century Judaism out of reverence for the divine name.

3 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' pronouncement.

4 sn The members of the council understood the force of the claim and asked Jesus about another title, Son of God.

5 tn Grk "He said to them."

6 sn Jesus' reply, "You say that I am," was not a denial, but a way of giving a qualified positive response: "You have said it, but I do not quite mean what you think."

7 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

8 sn We have heard it ourselves. The Sanhedrin regarded the answer as convicting Jesus. They saw it as blasphemous to claim such intimacy and shared authority with God, a claim so serious and convicting that no further testimony was needed.

9 tn Grk "from his own mouth" (an idiom).

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

11 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 sn Pilate was the Roman prefect (procurator) in charge of collecting taxes and keeping the peace. His immediate superior was the Roman governor (proconsul) of Syria, although the exact nature of this administrative relationship is unknown. Pilate's relations with the Jews had been rocky (v. 12). Here he is especially sensitive to them.

13 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

14 sn They began to accuse him. There were three charges: (1) disturbing Jewish peace; (2) fomenting rebellion through advocating not paying taxes (a lie – 20:20-26); and (3) claiming to be a political threat to Rome, by claiming to be a king, an allusion to Jesus' messianic claims. The second and third charges were a direct challenge to Roman authority. Pilate would be forced to do something about them.

15 tn On the use of the term διαστρέφω (diastrephō) here, see L&N 31.71 and 88.264.

sn Subverting our nation was a summary charge, as Jesus "subverted" the nation by making false claims of a political nature, as the next two detailed charges show.

16 tn Grk "and forbidding." Here καί (kai) has not been translated to suggest to the English reader that this and the following charge are specifics, while the previous charge was a summary one. See the note on the word "misleading" earlier in this verse.

17 tn This was a "poll tax." L&N 57.182 states this was "a payment made by the people of one nation to another, with the implication that this is a symbol of submission and dependence – 'tribute tax.'"

18 tn Or "to the emperor" ("Caesar" is a title for the Roman emperor).

19 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

20 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the charges brought in the previous verse.

21 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 sn "Are you the king of the Jews?" Pilate was interested only in the third charge, because of its political implications of sedition against Rome.

23 sn The reply "You say so" is somewhat enigmatic, like Jesus' earlier reply to the Jewish leadership in 22:70.

24 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

25 tn Grk "find no cause."

sn Pilate's statement "I find no reason for an accusation" is the first of several remarks in Luke 23 that Jesus is innocent or of efforts to release him (vv. 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 22).

26 tn Or "were adamant." For "persisted in saying," see L&N 68.71.

27 sn He incites the people. The Jewish leadership claimed that Jesus was a political threat and had to be stopped. By reiterating this charge of stirring up rebellion, they pressured Pilate to act, or be accused of overlooking political threats to Rome.

28 tn Grk "beginning from Galilee until here."

29 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

30 sn Learning that Jesus was from Galilee and therefore part of Herod's jurisdiction, Pilate decided to rid himself of the problem by sending him to Herod.

31 sn Herod was Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great. See the note on Herod in 3:1.

32 sn Herod would probably have come to Jerusalem for the feast, although his father was only half Jewish (Josephus, Ant. 14.15.2 [14.403]). Josephus does mention Herod's presence in Jerusalem during a feast (Ant. 18.5.3 [18.122]).

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

33 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

34 tn Grk "to see some sign performed by him." Here the passive construction has been translated as an active one in keeping with contemporary English style.

35 sn Herod, hoping to see him perform some miraculous sign, seems to have treated Jesus as a curiosity (cf. 9:7-9).

36 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the previous statements in the narrative about Herod's desire to see Jesus.

37 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

questioned him at considerable length; Jesus[1] gave him no answer. 23:10 The chief priests and the experts in the law[2] were there, vehemently accusing him.[3] 23:11 Even Herod with his soldiers treated him with contempt and mocked him. Then,[4] dressing him in elegant clothes,[5] Herod[6] sent him back to Pilate. 23:12 That very day Herod and Pilate became friends with each other,[7] for prior to this they had been enemies.[8]

Jesus Brought Before the Crowd

23:13 Then[9] Pilate called together the chief priests, the[10] rulers, and the people, 23:14 and said to them, "You brought me this man as one who was misleading[11] the people. When I examined him before you, I[12] did not find this man guilty[13] of anything you accused him of doing. 23:15 Neither did Herod, for he sent him back to us. Look, he has done nothing[14] deserving death.[15] 23:16 I will therefore have him flogged[16] and release him."[17]

23:18 But they all shouted out together,[18] "Take this man[19] away! Release Barabbas for us!" 23:19 (This[20] was a man who had been thrown into prison for an insurrection[21] started in the city, and for murder.)[22] 23:20 Pilate addressed them once again because he wanted[23] to release Jesus. 23:21 But they kept on shouting,[24] "Crucify, crucify[25] him!" 23:22 A third time he said to them, "Why? What wrong has he done? I have found him guilty[26] of no crime deserving death.[27] I will therefore flog[28] him and release him." 23:23 But they were insistent,[29] demanding with loud shouts that he be crucified. And their shouts prevailed. 23:24 So[30] Pilate[31] decided[32] that their demand should be granted. 23:25 He released the man they asked for, who had been thrown in prison for insurrection and murder. But he handed Jesus over[33] to their will.[34]

---

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Or "and the scribes." See the note on the phrase "experts in the law" in 5:21.

3 sn Luke portrays the Jewish leadership as driving events toward the cross by vehemently accusing Jesus.

4 tn This is a continuation of the previous Greek sentence, but because of its length and complexity, a new sentence was started here in the translation by supplying "then" to indicate the sequence of events.

5 sn This mockery involved putting elegant royal clothes on Jesus, either white or purple (the colors of royalty). This was no doubt a mockery of Jesus' claim to be a king.

6 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Herod) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 sn Herod and Pilate became friends with each other. It may be that Pilate's change of heart was related to the death of his superior, Sejanus, who had a reputation for being anti-Jewish. To please his superior, Pilate may have ruled the Jews with insensitivity. Concerning Sejanus, see Philo, Embassy 24 (160-61) and Flaccus 1 (1).

8 tn Grk "at enmity with each other."

9 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

10 tn Grk "and the," but καί (kai) has not been translated since English normally uses a coordinating conjunction only between the last two elements in a series of three or more.

11 tn This term also appears in v. 2.

12 tn Grk "behold, I" A transitional use of ἰδού (idou) has not been translated here.

13 tn Grk "nothing did I find in this man by way of cause." The reference to "nothing" is emphatic.

14 sn With the statement "he has done nothing," Pilate makes another claim that Jesus is innocent of any crime worthy of death.

15 tn Grk "nothing deserving death has been done by him." The passive construction has been translated as an active one in keeping with contemporary English style.

16 tn Or "scourged" (BDAG 749 s.v. παιδεύω 2.b.γ). This refers to a whipping Pilate ordered in an attempt to convince Jesus not to disturb the peace. It has been translated "flogged" to distinguish it from the more severe verberatio.

17 tc Many of the best MSS, as well as some others (𝔓75 A B K L T 070 1241 pc sa), lack 23:17 "(Now he was obligated to release one individual for them at the feast.)" This verse appears to be a parenthetical note explaining the custom of releasing someone on amnesty at the feast. It appears in two different locations with variations in wording, which makes it look like a scribal addition. It is included in ℵ (D following v. 19) W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat. The verse appears to be an explanatory gloss based on Matt 27:15 and Mark 15:6, not original in Luke. The present translation follows NA[27] in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

18 tn Grk "together, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated here.

19 tn Grk "this one." The reference to Jesus as "this man" is pejorative in this context.

20 tn Grk "who" (a continuation of the previous sentence).

21 sn Ironically, what Jesus was alleged to have done, started an insurrection, this man really did.

22 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

23 sn The account pictures a battle of wills – the people versus Pilate. Pilate is consistently portrayed in Luke's account as wanting to release Jesus because he believed him to be innocent.

24 tn Grk "shouting, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant and has not been translated here.

25 tn This double present imperative is emphatic.

sn Crucifixion was the cruelest form of punishment practiced by the Romans. Roman citizens could not normally undergo it. It was reserved for the worst crimes, like treason and evasion of due process in a capital case. The Roman historian Cicero called it "a cruel and disgusting penalty" (Against Verres 2.5.63-66 §§163-70); Josephus (J. W. 7.6.4 [7.203]) called it the worst of deaths.

26 tn Grk "no cause of death I found in him."

27 sn The refrain of innocence comes once again. Pilate tried to bring some sense of justice, believing Jesus had committed no crime deserving death.

28 tn Or "scourge" (BDAG 749 s.v. παιδεύω 2.b.γ). See the note on "flogged" in v. 16.

29 tn Though a different Greek term is used here (BDAG 373 s.v. ἐπίκειμαι), this remark is like 23:5.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the crowd's cries prevailing.

31 sn Finally Pilate gave in. He decided crucifying one Galilean teacher was better than facing a riot. Justice lost out in the process, because he did not follow his own verdict.

32 tn Although some translations render ἐπέκρινεν (epekrinen) here as "passed sentence" or "gave his verdict," the point in context is not that Pilate sentenced Jesus to death here, but that finally, although convinced of Jesus' innocence, he gave in to the crowd's incessant demand to crucify an innocent man.

33 tn Or "delivered up."

34 sn He handed Jesus over to their will. Here is where Luke places the major blame for Jesus' death. It lies with the Jewish nation, especially the leadership, though in Acts 4:24-27 he will bring in the opposition of Herod, Pilate, and all people.

The Crucifixion

23:26 As[1] they led him away, they seized Simon of Cyrene,[2] who was coming in from the country.[3] They placed the cross on his back and made him carry it behind Jesus.[4] 23:27 A great number of the people followed him, among them women[5] who were mourning[6] and wailing for him. 23:28 But Jesus turned to them and said, "Daughters of Jerusalem,[7] do not weep for me, but weep for yourselves[8] and for your children. 23:29 For this is certain:[9] The days are coming when they will say, 'Blessed are the barren, the wombs that never bore children, and the breasts that never nursed!'[10] 23:30 Then they will begin to say to the mountains,[11] 'Fall on us!' and to the hills, 'Cover us!'[12] 23:31 For if such things are done[13] when the wood is green, what will happen when it is dry?"[14]

23:32 Two other criminals[15] were also led away to be executed with him. 23:33 So[16] when they came to the place that is called "The Skull,"[17] they crucified[18] him there, along with the criminals, one on his right and one on his left. 23:34 [But Jesus said, "Father, forgive them, for they don't know what they are doing."][19] Then[20] they threw dice[21] to divide his clothes.[22] 23:35 The people also stood there watching, but the rulers ridiculed[23] him, saying, "He saved others. Let him save[24] himself if[25] he is the Christ[26] of God, his chosen one!" 23:36 The soldiers also mocked him, coming up and offering him sour wine,[27] 23:37 and saying, "If[28] you are the king of the Jews, save yourself!"

1 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

2 sn Jesus was beaten severely with a whip before this (the prelude to crucifixion, known to the Romans as verberatio, mentioned in Matt 27:26; Mark 15:15; John 19:1), so he would have been weak from trauma and loss of blood. Apparently he was unable to bear the cross himself, so Simon was conscripted to help. Cyrene was located in North Africa where Tripoli is today. Nothing more is known about this Simon. Mark 15:21 names him as father of two people apparently known to Mark's audience.

3 tn Or perhaps, "was coming in from his field" outside the city (BDAG 15-16 s.v. ἀγρός 1).

4 tn Grk "they placed the cross on him to carry behind Jesus."

5 sn The background of these women is disputed. Are they "official" mourners of Jesus' death, appointed by custom to mourn death? If so, the mourning here would be more pro forma. However, the text seems to treat the mourning as sincere, so their tears and lamenting would have been genuine.

6 tn Or "who were beating their breasts," implying a ritualized form of mourning employed in Jewish funerals. See the note on the term "women" earlier in this verse.

7 sn The title Daughters of Jerusalem portrays these women mourning as representatives of the nation.

map For the location of Jerusalem see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

8 sn Do not weep for me, but weep for yourselves. Judgment now comes on the nation (see Luke 19:41-44) for this judgment of Jesus. Ironically, they mourn the wrong person – they should be mourning for themselves.

9 tn Grk "For behold."

10 tn Grk "Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that have not borne, and the breasts that have not nursed!"

sn Normally barrenness is a sign of judgment, because birth would be seen as a sign of blessing. The reversal of imagery indicates that something was badly wrong.

11 sn The figure of crying out to the mountains 'Fall on us!' (appealing to creation itself to hide them from God's wrath), means that a time will come when people will feel they are better off dead (Hos 10:8).

12 sn An allusion to Hos 10:8 (cf. Rev 6:16).

13 tn Grk "if they do such things." The plural subject here is indefinite, so the active voice has been translated as a passive (see ExSyn 402).

14 sn The figure of the green wood and the dry has been variously understood. Most likely the picture compares the judgment on Jesus as the green (living) wood to the worse judgment that will surely come for the dry (dead) wood of the nation.

15 tc The text reads either "two other criminals" or "others, two criminals." The first reading (found in 𝔓75 ℵ B) could be read as describing Jesus as a criminal, while the second (found in A C D L W Θ Ψ 070 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐) looks like an attempt to prevent this identification. The first reading, more difficult to explain from the other, is likely original.

sn Jesus is numbered among the criminals (see Isa 53:12 and Luke 22:37).

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the conclusion of the preceding material.

17 sn The place that is called 'The Skull' (known as Golgotha in Aramaic, cf. John 19:17) is north and just outside of Jerusalem. The hill on which it is located protruded much like a skull, giving the place its name. The Latin word for Greek κρανίον (kranion) is calvaria, from which the English word "Calvary" derives (cf. Luke 23:33 in the KJV).

18 sn See the note on crucify in 23:21.

19 tc Many important ᴍss (𝔓75 ℵ1 B D* W Θ 070 579 1241 pc sy^s sa) lack v. 34a. It is included in ℵ*,2 (A) C D2 L Ψ 0250 $f^{1,(13)}$ 33 𝔐 lat $sy^{c,p,h}$. It also fits a major Lukan theme of forgiving the enemies (6:27-36), and it has a parallel in Stephen's response in Acts 7:60. The lack of parallels in the other Gospels argues also for inclusion here. On the other hand, the fact of the parallel in Acts 7:60 may well have prompted early scribes to insert the saying in Luke's Gospel alone. Further, there is the great difficulty of explaining why early and diverse witnesses lack the saying. A decision is difficult, but even those who regard the verse as inauthentic literarily often consider it to be authentic historically. For this reason it has been placed in single brackets in the translation.

20 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

21 tn Grk "cast lots" (probably by using marked pebbles or broken pieces of pottery). A modern equivalent "threw dice" was chosen here because of its association with gambling.

22 sn An allusion to Ps 22:18, which identifies Jesus as the suffering innocent one.

23 tn A figurative extension of the literal meaning "to turn one's nose up at someone"; here "ridicule, sneer at, show contempt for" (L&N 33.409).

24 sn The irony in the statement Let him save himself is that salvation did come, but later, not while on the cross.

25 tn This is a first class condition in the Greek text.

26 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

27 sn Sour wine was cheap wine, called in Latin posca, and referred to a cheap vinegar wine diluted heavily with water. It was the drink of slaves and soldiers, and the soldiers who had performed the crucifixion, who had some on hand, now used it to taunt Jesus further.

28 tn This is also a first class condition in the Greek text.

23:38 There was also an inscription[1] over him, "This is the king of the Jews."

23:39 One of the criminals who was hanging there railed at him, saying, "Aren't[2] you the Christ?[3] Save yourself and us!" 23:40 But the other rebuked him, saying,[4] "Don't[5] you fear God, since you are under the same sentence of condemnation?[6] 23:41 And we rightly so, for we are getting what we deserve for what we did, but this man has done nothing[7] wrong." 23:42 Then[8] he said, "Jesus, remember me[9] when you come in[10] your kingdom." 23:43 And Jesus[11] said to him, "I tell you the truth,[12] today[13] you will be with me in paradise."[14]

23:44 It was now[15] about noon,[16] and darkness came over the whole land until three in the afternoon,[17] 23:45 because the sun's light failed.[18] The temple curtain[19] was torn in two.

1 sn Mention of the inscription is an important detail, because the inscription would normally give the reason for the execution. It shows that Jesus was executed for claiming to be a king. It was also probably written with irony from the executioners' point of view.

2 tc Most MSS (A C^3 W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) read εἰ σὺ εἶ (ei su ei, "If you are") here, while οὐχὶ σὺ εἶ (ouchi su ei, "Are you not") is found in overall better and earlier witnesses ($𝔓^{75}$ ℵ B C* L 070 1241 pc it). The "if" clause reading creates a parallel with the earlier taunts (vv. 35, 37), and thus is most likely a motivated reading.

sn The question in Greek expects a positive reply and is also phrased with irony.

3 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

4 tn Grk "But answering, the other rebuking him, said." This is somewhat redundant and has been simplified in the translation.

5 tn The particle used here (οὐδέ, oude), which expects a positive reply, makes this a rebuke – "You should fear God and not speak!"

6 tn The words "of condemnation" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

7 sn This man has done nothing wrong is yet another declaration that Jesus was innocent of any crime.

9 sn Jesus, remember me is a statement of faith from the cross, as Jesus saves another even while he himself is dying. This man's faith had shown itself when he rebuked the other thief. He hoped to be with Jesus sometime in the future in the kingdom.

10 tc ‡ The alternate readings of some MSS make the reference to Jesus' coming clearer. "Into your kingdom" – with εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν (eis tēn basileian), read by $𝔓^{75}$ B L – is a reference to his entering into God's presence at the right hand. "In your kingdom" – with ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ (en tē basileia), read by ℵ A C*,2 W Θ Ψ 070 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat sy – looks at his return. It could be argued that the reading with εἰς is more in keeping with Luke's theology elsewhere, but the contrast with Jesus' reply, "Today," slightly favors the reading "in your kingdom." Codex Bezae (D), in place of this short interchange between the criminal and Jesus, reads "Then he turned to the Lord and said to him, 'Remember me in the day of your coming.' Then the Lord said in reply to [him], 'Take courage; today you will be with me in paradise.'" This reading emphasizes the future aspect of the coming of Christ; it has virtually no support in any other MSS.

11 tn Grk "he."

12 tn Grk "Truly (ἀμήν, amēn), I say to you."

13 sn Jesus gives more than the criminal asked for, because the blessing will come today, not in the future. He will be among the righteous. See the note on today in 2:11.

14 sn In the NT, paradise is mentioned three times. Here it refers to the abode of the righteous dead. In Rev 2:7 it refers to the restoration of Edenic paradise predicted in Isa 51:3 and Ezek 36:35. In 2 Cor 12:4 it probably refers to the "third heaven" (2 Cor 12:2) as the place where God dwells.

15 tn Grk "And it was." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic.

16 tn Grk "the sixth hour."

17 tn Grk "until the ninth hour."

18 tc The wording "the sun's light failed" is a translation of τοῦ ἡλίου ἐκλιπόντος/ ἐκλείποντος (tou hēliou eklipontos/ ekleipontos), a reading found in the earliest and best witnesses (among them $𝔓^{75}$ ℵ B C*ᵛⁱᵈ L 070 579 2542 pc) as well as several ancient versions. The majority of MSS (A C^3 [D] W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐 lat sy) have the flatter, less dramatic term, "the sun was darkened" (ἐσκοτίσθη, eskotisthe), a reading that avoids the problem of implying an eclipse (see sn below). This alternative thus looks secondary because it is a more common word and less likely to be misunderstood as referring to a solar eclipse. That it appears in later witnesses rather than the earliest ones adds confirmatory testimony to its inauthentic character.

sn This imagery has parallels to the Day of the Lord: Joel 2:10; Amos 8:9; Zeph 1:15. Some students of the NT see in Luke's statement the sun's light failed (eklipontos) an obvious blunder in his otherwise meticulous historical accuracy. The reason for claiming such an error on the author's part is due to an understanding of the verb as indicating a solar eclipse when such would be an astronomical impossibility during a full moon. There are generally two ways to resolve this difficulty: (a) adopt a different reading ("the sun was darkened") that smoothes over the problem (discussed in the tc problem above), or (b) understand the verb eklipontos in a general way (such as "the sun's light failed") rather than as a technical term, "the sun was eclipsed." The problem with the first solution is that it is too convenient, for the Christian scribes who, over the centuries, copied Luke's Gospel would have thought the same thing. That is, they too would have sensed a problem in the wording and felt that some earlier scribe had incorrectly written down what Luke penned. The fact that the reading "was darkened" shows up in the later and generally inferior witnesses does not bolster one's confidence that this is the right solution. But second solution, if taken to its logical conclusion, proves too much for it would nullify the argument against the first solution: If the term did not refer to an eclipse, then why would scribes feel compelled to change it to a more general term? The solution to the problem is that ekleipo did in fact sometimes refer to an eclipse, but it did not always do so. (BDAG 306 s.v. ἐκλείπω notes that the verb is used in Hellenistic Greek "Of the sun cease to shine." In MM it is argued that "it seems more than doubtful that in Lk 23[45] any reference is intended to an eclipse. To find such a reference is to involve the Evangelist in a needless blunder, as an eclipse is impossible at full moon, and to run counter to his general usage of the verb = 'fail'..." [p. 195]. They enlist Luke 16:9; 22:32; and Heb 1:12 for the general meaning "fail," and further cite several contemporaneous examples from papyri of this meaning [195-96]) Thus, the very fact that the verb can refer to an eclipse would be a sufficient basis for later scribes altering the text out of pious motives; conversely, the very fact that the verb does not always refer to an eclipse and, in fact, does not normally do so, is enough of a basis to exonerate Luke of wholly uncharacteristic carelessness.

19 tn The referent of this term, καταπέτασμα (katapetasma), is not entirely clear. It could refer to the curtain separating the holy of holies from the holy place (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.5 [5.219]), or it could refer to one at the entrance of the temple court (Josephus, J. W. 5.5.4 [5.212]). Many argue that the inner curtain is meant because another term, κάλυμμα (kalumma), is also used for the outer curtain. Others see a reference to the outer curtain as more likely because of the public nature of this sign. Either way, the symbolism means that access to God has been opened up. It also pictures a judgment that includes the sacrifices.

23:46 Then Jesus, calling out with a loud voice, said, "Father, into your hands I commit my spirit!"[1] And after he said this he breathed his last.

23:47 Now when the centurion[2] saw what had happened, he praised God and said, "Certainly this man was innocent!"[3] 23:48 And all the crowds that had assembled for this spectacle, when they saw what had taken place, returned home beating their breasts.[4] 23:49 And all those who knew Jesus[5] stood at a distance, and the women who had followed him from Galilee saw[6] these things.

Jesus' Burial

23:50 Now[7] there was a man named Joseph who was a member of the council,[8] a good and righteous man. 23:51 (He[9] had not consented[10] to their plan and action.) He[11] was from the Judean town[12] of Arimathea, and was looking forward to[13] the kingdom of God.[14] 23:52 He went to Pilate and asked for the body[15] of Jesus. 23:53 Then[16] he took it down, wrapped it in a linen cloth,[17] and placed it[18] in a tomb cut out of the rock,[19] where no one had yet been buried.[20] 23:54 It was the day of preparation[21] and the Sabbath was beginning.[22] 23:55 The[23] women who had accompanied Jesus[24] from Galilee followed, and they saw the tomb and how his body was laid in it. 23:56 Then[25] they returned and prepared aromatic spices[26] and perfumes.[27]

---

1 sn A quotation from Ps 31:5. It is a psalm of trust. The righteous, innocent sufferer trusts in God. Luke does not have the cry of pain from Ps 22:1 (cf. Matt 27:46; Mark 15:34), but notes Jesus' trust instead.

2 sn See the note on the word centurion in 7:2.

3 tn Or "righteous." It is hard to know whether "innocent" or "righteous" is intended, as the Greek term used can mean either, and both make good sense in this context. Luke has been emphasizing Jesus as innocent, so that is slightly more likely here. Of course, one idea entails the other.

sn Here is a fourth figure who said that Jesus was innocent in this chapter (Pilate, Herod, a criminal, and now a centurion).

4 sn Some apparently regretted what had taken place. Beating their breasts was a sign of lamentation.

5 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Technically the participle ὁρῶσαι (horōsai) modifies only γυναῖκες (gunaikes) since both are feminine plural nominative, although many modern translations refer this as well to the group of those who knew Jesus mentioned in the first part of the verse. These events had a wide array of witnesses.

7 tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

8 tn Grk "a councillor" (as a member of the Sanhedrin, see L&N 11.85). This indicates that some individuals among the leaders did respond to Jesus.

9 tn Grk "This one." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation at this point.

10 tc Several MSS (𝔓⁷⁵ A B W Θ 33 𝔐), and is thus the preferred reading.

sn The parenthetical note at the beginning of v. 51 indicates that Joseph of Arimathea had not consented to the action of the Sanhedrin in condemning Jesus to death. Since Mark 14:64 indicates that all the council members condemned Jesus as deserving death, it is likely that Joseph was not present at the trial.

11 tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started in the translation at this point.

12 tn Or "Judean city"; Grk "from Arimathea, a city of the Jews." Here the expression "of the Jews" (Ἰουδαίων, Ioudaiōn) is used in an adjectival sense to specify a location (cf. BDAG 478 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.c) and so has been translated "Judean."

13 tn Or "waiting for."

14 sn Though some dispute that Joseph of Arimathea was a disciple of Jesus, this remark that he was looking forward to the kingdom of God, the affirmation of his character at the end of v. 50, and his actions regarding Jesus' burial all suggest otherwise.

15 sn Joseph went to Pilate and asked for the body because he sought to give Jesus an honorable burial. This was indeed a bold move on the part of Joseph of Arimathea, for it clearly and openly identified him with a man who had just been condemned and executed, namely, Jesus. His faith is exemplary, especially for someone who was a member of the council that handed Jesus over for crucifixion (cf. Mark 15:43).

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

17 tn The term σινδών (sindōn) can refer to a linen cloth used either for clothing or for burial.

18 tn In the Greek text this pronoun (αὐτόν, auton) is masculine, while the previous one (αὐτό, auto) is neuter, referring to the body.

19 tn That is, cut or carved into an outcropping of natural rock, resulting in a cave-like structure (see L&N 19.26).

20 tc Codex Bezae (D), with some support from 070, one Itala MS, and the Sahidic version, adds the words, "And after he [Jesus] was laid [in the tomb], he [Joseph of Arimathea] put a stone over the tomb which scarcely twenty men could roll." Although this addition is certainly not part of the original text of Luke, it does show how interested the early scribes were in the details of the burial and may even reflect a very primitive tradition. Matt 27:60 and Mark 15:46 record the positioning of a large stone at the door of the tomb.

tn Or "laid to rest."

21 sn The day of preparation was the day before the Sabbath when everything had to be prepared for it, as no work could be done on the Sabbath.

22 tn Normally, "dawning," but as the Jewish Sabbath begins at 6 p.m., "beginning" is more appropriate.

23 tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

24 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

25 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

26 tn On this term see BDAG 140-41 s.v. ἄρωμα. The Jews did not practice embalming, so these preparations were used to cover the stench of decay and slow decomposition. The women planned to return and anoint the body. But that would have to wait until after the Sabbath.

27 tn Or "ointments." This was another type of perfumed oil.

On the Sabbath they rested according to the commandment.[1]

The Resurrection

24:1 Now on the first day[2] of the week, at early dawn, the women[3] went to the tomb, taking the aromatic spices[4] they had prepared. 24:2 They[5] found that the stone had been rolled away from the tomb,[6] 24:3 but when they went in, they did not find the body of the Lord Jesus.[7] 24:4 While[8] they were perplexed[9] about this, suddenly[10] two men stood beside them in dazzling[11] attire. 24:5 The[12] women[13] were terribly frightened[14] and bowed[15] their faces to the ground, but the men said to them, "Why do you look for the living[16] among the dead? 24:6 He is not here, but has been raised![17] Remember how he told you, while he was still in Galilee,[18] 24:7 that[19] the Son of Man must be delivered[20] into the hands of sinful men,[21] and be crucified,[22] and on the third day rise again."[23] 24:8 Then[24] the women remembered his words,[25] 24:9 and when they returned from the tomb they told all these things to the eleven[26] and to all the rest. 24:10 Now it was Mary Magdalene,[27] Joanna,[28] Mary the mother of James, and the other women with them who told these things to the apostles. 24:11 But these words seemed like pure nonsense[29] to them, and

[1] sn According to the commandment. These women are portrayed as pious, faithful to the law in observing the Sabbath.

[2] sn The first day of the week is the day after the Sabbath.

[3] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the women mentioned in 23:55) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn On this term see BDAG 140-41 s.v. ἄρωμα. See also the note on "aromatic spices" in 23:56.

[5] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[6] sn Luke tells the story of the empty tomb with little drama. He simply notes that when they arrived the stone had been rolled away in a position where the tomb could be entered. This large stone was often placed in a channel so that it could be easily moved by rolling it aside. The other possibility is that it was merely placed over the opening in a position from which it had now been moved.

[7] tc The translation follows the much better attested longer reading here, "body of the Lord Jesus" (found in {$\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ A B C L W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 565 700 𝔐}), rather than simply "the body" (found in D it) or "the body of Jesus" (found in 579 1241 pc). Further, although this is the only time that "Lord Jesus" occurs in Luke, it seems to be Luke's normal designation for the Lord after his resurrection (note the many references to Christ in this manner in Acts, e.g., 1:21; 4:33; 7:59; 8:16; 11:17; 15:11; 16:31; 19:5; 20:21; 28:31). Although such a longer reading as this would normally be suspect, in this case some scribes, accustomed to Luke's more abbreviated style, did not take the resurrection into account.

sn What they found was not what they expected – an empty tomb.

[8] tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[9] tn Or "bewildered." The term refers to a high state of confusion and anxiety.

[10] tn Grk "behold."

[11] sn The brilliantly shining clothing (dazzling attire) points to the fact that these are angels (see 24:23).

[12] tn Here δέ (de) has not been translated.

[13] tn Grk "they"; the referent (the women) has been specified in the translation for clarity (the same has been done in v. 8).

[14] tn Or "They were extremely afraid."

[15] sn Bowed their faces to the ground. Such respect for angels is common: Dan 7:28; 10:9, 15.

[16] sn By referring to Jesus as the living, the angels make it clear that he is alive. There should be no surprise.

[17] tc The phrase "He is not here, but has been raised" is omitted by a few MSS (D it), but it has wide MS support and differs slightly from the similar statement in Matt 28:6 and Mark 16:6. Although NA^{27} places the phrase at the beginning of v. 6, as do most modern English translations, it is omitted from the RSV and placed at the end of v. 5 in the NRSV.

tn The verb here is passive (ἠγέρθη, ēgerthē). This "divine passive" (see ExSyn 437-38) points to the fact that Jesus was raised by God, and such activity by God is a consistent Lukan theological emphasis: Luke 20:37; 24:34; Acts 3:15; 4:10; 5:30; 10:40; 13:30, 37. A passive construction is also used to refer to Jesus' exaltation: Luke 24:51; Acts 1:11, 22.

[18] sn While he was still in Galilee looks back to the beginning of Jesus' ministry. So the point is that this was announced long ago, and should come as no surprise.

[19] tn Grk "saying that," but this would be redundant in English. Although the translation represents this sentence as indirect discourse, the Greek could equally be taken as direct discourse: "Remember how he told you, while he was still in Galilee: 'the Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and on the third day rise again.'"

[20] tn See Luke 9:22, 44; 13:33.

[21] tn Because in the historical context the individuals who were primarily responsible for the death of Jesus (the Jewish leadership in Jerusalem in Luke's view [see Luke 9:22]) would have been men, the translation "sinful men" for ἀνθρώπων ἁμαρτωλῶν (anthrōpōn hamartōlōn) is retained here.

[22] sn See the note on crucify in 23:21.

[23] tn Here the infinitive ἀναστῆναι (anastēnai) is active rather than passive.

[25] sn On his words see Luke 9:22.

[26] sn Judas is now absent and "the twelve" have now become "the eleven." Other disciples are also gathered with the remaining eleven.

[27] sn Mary Magdalene is always noted first in the appearance lists in the gospels. It is unusual that the first appearance would involve women as in this culture their role as witnesses would not be well accepted. It is a sign of the veracity of the account, because if an ancient were to create such a story he would never have it start with women.

[28] sn On Joanna see Luke 8:1-3.

[29] sn The term pure nonsense can describe idle talk or a tale. The point is important, since the disciples reacted with disbelief that a resurrection was possible. Sometimes it is thought the ancients were gullible enough to believe anything. But these disciples needed convincing about the resurrection.

they did not believe them. 24:12 But Peter got up and ran to the tomb.[1] He bent down[2] and saw only the strips of linen cloth;[3] then he went home,[4] wondering[5] what had happened.[6]

Jesus Walks the Road to Emmaus

24:13 Now[7] that very day two of them[8] were on their way to a village called Emmaus, about seven miles[9] from Jerusalem.[10] 24:14 They[11] were talking to each other about all the things that had happened. 24:15 While[12] they were talking and debating[13] these things,[14] Jesus himself approached and began to accompany them 24:16 (but their eyes were kept[15] from recognizing[16] him).[17] 24:17 Then[18] he said to them, "What are these matters[19] you are discussing so intently[20] as you walk along?" And they stood still, looking sad. 24:18 Then one of them, named Cleopas, answered him,[21] "Are you the only visitor to Jerusalem who doesn't know[22] the things that have happened there[23] in these days?" 24:19 He[24] said to them, "What things?" "The things concerning Jesus the Nazarene," they replied, "a man[25] who, with his powerful deeds and words, proved to be a prophet[26] before God and all the people; 24:20 and how our chief priests and rulers handed him over[27] to be condemned to death, and crucified[28] him. 24:21 But we had hoped[29] that he was the one who was going to redeem[30] Israel. Not only this, but it is now the third day since these things happened. 24:22 Furthermore, some women of our group amazed us.[31] They[32] were at the tomb early this morning, 24:23 and when they did not find his body, they came back and said they had seen a vision of angels,[33] who said he was alive. 24:24 Then[34] some of those who were with us went to

[1] sn While the others dismissed the report of the women, Peter got up and ran to the tomb, for he had learned to believe in what the Lord had said.

[2] sn In most instances the entrance to such tombs was less than 3 ft (1 m) high, so that an adult would have to bend down and practically crawl inside.

[3] tn In the NT this term is used only for strips of cloth used to wrap a body for burial (LN 6.154; BDAG 693 s.v. ὀθόνιον).

[4] tn Or "went away, wondering to himself." The prepositional phrase πρὸς ἑαυτόν (pros heauton) can be understood with the preceding verb ἀπῆλθεν (apēlthen) or with the following participle θαυμάζων (thaumazōn), but it more likely belongs with the former (cf. John 20:10, where the phrase can only refer to the verb).

[5] sn Peter's wondering was not a lack of faith, but struggling in an attempt to understand what could have happened.

[6] tc Some Western MSS (D it) lack 24:12. The verse has been called a Western noninterpolation, meaning that it reflects a shorter authentic reading in D and other Western witnesses. Many regard all such shorter readings as original (the verse is omitted in the RSV), but the MS evidence for omission is far too slight for the verse to be rejected as secondary. It is included in 𝔓⁷⁵ and the rest of the MS tradition.

[7] tn Grk "And behold." Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. The Greek word ἰδού (idou) at the beginning of this statement has not been translated because it has no exact English equivalent here, but adds interest and emphasis (BDAG 468 s.v. 1).

[8] tn These are disciples as they know about the empty tomb and do not know what to make of it all.

[9] tn Grk "sixty stades" or about 11 kilometers. A stade (στάδιον, stadion) was a unit of distance about 607 feet (187 meters) long.

[10] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[11] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[12] tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[13] tn This term suggests emotional dialogue and can thus be translated "debated."

[14] tn The phrase "these things" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[15] sn The two disciples will not be allowed to recognize Jesus until v. 31.

[16] tn This is an epexegetical (i.e., explanatory) infinitive in Greek.

[17] sn This parenthetical remark by the author is necessary so the reader will understand the account.

[18] tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

[19] tn Grk "words," but the term λόγος (logos) can refer to "matters" rather than only "words" (BDAG 600 s.v. 1.a.ε).

[20] tn "Discussing so intently" translates the reciprocal idea conveyed by πρὸς ἀλλήλους (pros allēlous). The term ἀντιβάλλω (antiballō), used only here in the NT, has the nuance of "arguing" or "debating" a point (the English idiom "to exchange words" also comes close).

[21] tn Grk "answering him, said." This is redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation.

[22] sn There is irony and almost a sense of mocking disbelief as the question "Are you the only visitor to Jerusalem who doesn't know the things that have happened there in these days?" comes to Jesus, but, of course, the readers know what the travelers do not.

[23] tn Grk "in it" (referring to the city of Jerusalem).

[24] tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

[25] tn This translates the Greek term ἀνήρ (anēr).

[26] sn The role of Jesus as prophet is a function Luke frequently mentions: 4:25-27; 9:35; 13:31-35.

[27] sn Handed him over is another summary of the passion like Luke 9:22.

[28] sn See the note on crucify in 23:21.

[29] tn The imperfect verb looks back to the view that they held during Jesus' past ministry.

[30] sn Their messianic hope concerning Jesus is expressed by the phrase who was going to redeem Israel.

[31] sn The account in 24:1-12 is repeated here, and it is clear that the other disciples were not convinced by the women, but could not explain the events either.

[32] tn In the Greek text this is a continuation of the previous sentence, but because of the length and complexity of the construction a new sentence was started here in the translation.

[33] sn The men in dazzling attire mentioned in v. 4 are identified as angels here.

the tomb, and found it just as the women had said, but they did not see him."[1] 24:25 So[2] he said to them, "You[3] foolish people[4] – how slow of heart[5] to believe[6] all that the prophets have spoken! 24:26 Wasn't[7] it necessary[8] for the Christ[9] to suffer these things and enter into his glory?" 24:27 Then[10] beginning with Moses and all the prophets,[11] he interpreted to them the things written about[12] himself in all the scriptures.

24:28 So they approached the village where they were going. He acted as though he wanted to go farther,[13] 24:29 but they urged him,[14] "Stay with us, because it is getting toward evening and the day is almost done." So[15] he went in to stay with them.

24:30 When[16] he had taken his place at the table[17] with them, he took the bread, blessed and broke it,[18] and gave it to them. 24:31 At this point[19] their eyes were opened and they recognized[20] him.[21] Then[22] he vanished out of their sight. 24:32 They[23] said to each other, "Didn't[24] our hearts[25] burn within us[26] while he was speaking with us on the road, while he was explaining[27] the scriptures to us?" 24:33 So[28] they got up that very hour and returned to Jerusalem.[29] They[30] found the eleven and those with them gathered together 24:34 and[31] saying, "The Lord has really risen, and has appeared to Simon!"[32] 24:35 Then they told what had happened on the road,[33] and how they recognized him[34] when he broke the bread.

1 tn Here the pronoun αὐτόν (auton), referring to Jesus, is in an emphatic position. The one thing they lacked was solid evidence that he was alive.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the disciples' inability to believe in Jesus' resurrection.

3 tn Grk "O," an interjection used both in address and emotion (BDAG 1101 s.v. 1).

4 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to complete the interjection.

5 sn The rebuke is for failure to believe the promise of scripture, a theme that will appear in vv. 43-47 as well.

6 tn On the syntax of this infinitival construction, see BDAG 364-65 s.v. ἐπί 6.b.

7 tn This Greek particle (οὐχί, ouchi) expects a positive reply.

8 sn The statement Wasn't it necessary is a reference to the design of God's plan (see Luke 24:7). Suffering must precede glory (see Luke 17:25).

9 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

sn See the note on Christ in 2:11.

10 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

11 sn The reference to Moses and all the prophets is a way to say the promise of Messiah runs throughout OT scripture from first to last.

12 tn Or "regarding," "concerning." "Written" is implied by the mention of the scriptures in context; "said" could also be used here, referring to the original utterances, but by now these things had been committed to writing.

13 sn He acted as though he wanted to go farther. This is written in a way that gives the impression Jesus knew they would ask him to stay.

14 tn Grk "urged him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes, "saying") has not been translated because it is redundant in contemporary English.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the disciples' request.

16 tn Grk "And it happened that when." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated. Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

17 tn Grk "had reclined at table," as 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

18 tn The pronoun "it" is not in the Greek text here or in the following clause, but is implied. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

19 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "At this point" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative. "Then," which is normally used to indicate this, would be redundant with the following clause.

20 sn They recognized him. Other than this cryptic remark, it is not told how the two disciples were now able to recognize Jesus.

21 tn This pronoun is somewhat emphatic.

22 tn This translates a καί (kai, "and") that has clear sequential force.

23 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

24 tn This question uses a Greek particle (οὐχί, ouchi) that expects a positive reply.

25 tn This is a collective singular use of the term καρδία (kardia), so each of their hearts were burning, a reference itself to the intense emotion of their response.

26 tc ‡ Most MSS have the phrase ἐν ἡμῖν (en hēmin, "within us") after οὐχὶ ἡ καρδία ἡμῶν καιομένη ἦν (ouchi hē kardia hēmōn kaiomenē ēn, "Didn't our hearts burn"). The phrase "within us" is lacking in some early MSS (𝔓75 B D c e sy^{s,c}). These early witnesses could have overlooked the words, since there are several occurrences of ἡμῖν in the context. But it seems likely that other scribes wanted to clarify the abrupt expression "Didn't our hearts burn," even as the translation has done here. NA^{27} includes the words in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity.

sn Even though it is most likely not original (see tc note above), the phrase within us has been included in the translation for clarity.

27 tn Grk "opening" (cf. Acts 17:3).

28 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of the Lord's appearance to them.

29 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

30 tn Here καί (kai) has not been translated because of differences between Greek and English style.

31 tn Here the word "and" has been supplied to make it clear that the disciples who had been to Emmaus found the eleven plus the others gathered and saying this.

32 sn The Lord...has appeared to Simon. Jesus had made another appearance besides the one on the road. The excitement was rising. Simon refers to Simon Peter.

33 sn Now with the recounting of what had happened on the road two sets of witnesses corroborate the women's report.

34 tn Grk "how he was made known to them"; or "how he was recognized by them." Here the passive construction has been converted to an active one in the translation in keeping with contemporary English style.

Jesus Makes a Final Appearance

24:36 While they were saying these things, Jesus[1] himself stood among them and said to them, "Peace be with you."[2] 24:37 But they were startled and terrified, thinking[3] they saw a ghost.[4] 24:38 Then[5] he said to them, "Why are you frightened,[6] and why do doubts[7] arise in your hearts? 24:39 Look at my hands and my feet; it's me![8] Touch me and see; a ghost[9] does not have flesh and bones like you see I have." 24:40 When he had said this, he showed them his hands and his feet.[10] 24:41 And while they still could not believe it[11] (because of their joy) and were amazed,[12] he said to them, "Do you have anything here to eat?"[13] 24:42 So[14] they gave him a piece of broiled fish, 24:43 and he took it and ate it in front of them.

Jesus' Final Commission

24:44 Then[15] he said to them, "These are my words that I spoke to you while I was still with you, that everything written about me[16] in the law of Moses and the prophets and the psalms[17] must be fulfilled." 24:45 Then he opened their minds so they could understand the scriptures,[18] 24:46 and said to them, "Thus it stands written that the Christ[19] would suffer[20] and would rise from the dead on the third day, 24:47 and repentance[21] for the forgiveness of sins would be proclaimed[22] in his name to all nations,[23] beginning from Jerusalem.[24] 24:48 You are witnesses[25] of these things. 24:49 And look, I am sending you[26] what my Father promised.[27] But stay in the city[28] until you have been clothed with power[29] from on high."

---

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tc The words "and said to them, 'Peace be with you'" are lacking in some Western MSS (D it). But the clause is otherwise well attested, being found in 𝔓75 and the rest of the MS tradition, and should be considered an original part of Luke.

3 sn The disciples were still not comfortable at this point thinking that this could be Jesus raised from the dead. Instead they thought they saw a spirit.

4 tc This is not a reference to "a phantom" as read by the Western MS D. For πνεῦμα (pneuma) having the force of "ghost," or "an independent noncorporeal being, in contrast to a being that can be perceived by the physical senses," see BDAG 833-34 s.v. πνεῦμα 4.

6 tn Or "disturbed," "troubled."

7 tn The expression here is an idiom; see BDAG 58 s.v. ἀναβαίνω 2. Here καρδία (kardia) is a collective singular; the expression has been translated as plural in English.

sn Jesus calls the disciples to faith with a gentle rebuke about doubts and a gracious invitation to see for themselves the evidence of his resurrection.

8 tn Grk "that it is I myself."

9 tn See tc note on "ghost" in v. 37.

10 tc Some Western MSS (D it) lack 24:40. However, it is present in all other MSS, including 𝔓75, and should thus be regarded as an original part of Luke's Gospel.

11 sn They still could not believe it. Is this a continued statement of unbelief? Or is it a rhetorical expression of their amazement? They are being moved to faith, so a rhetorical force is more likely here.

12 sn Amazement is the common response to unusual activity: 1:63; 2:18; 4:22; 7:9; 8:25; 9:43; 11:14; 20:26.

13 sn Do you have anything here to eat? Eating would remove the idea that a phantom was present. Angelic spirits refused a meal in Jdt 13:16 and Tob 12:19, but accepted it in Gen 18:8; 19:3 and Tob 6:6.

14 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "so" to indicate the implied result of Jesus' request for food.

15 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

16 sn Everything written about me. The divine plan, events, and scripture itself are seen here as being one.

17 sn For a similar threefold division of the OT scriptures, see the prologue to Sirach, lines 8-10, and from Qumran, the epilogue to 4QMMT, line 10.

18 sn Luke does not mention specific texts here, but it is likely that many of the *scripture*s he mentioned elsewhere in Luke-Acts would have been among those he had in mind.

19 tn Or "Messiah"; both "Christ" (Greek) and "Messiah" (Hebrew and Aramaic) mean "one who has been anointed."

20 tn Three Greek infinitives are the key to this summary: (1) to suffer, (2) to rise, and (3) to be preached. The Christ (Messiah) would be slain, would be raised, and a message about repentance would go out into all the world as a result. All of this was recorded in the scripture. The remark shows the continuity between Jesus' ministry, the scripture, and what disciples would be doing as they declared the Lord risen.

21 sn This repentance has its roots in declarations of the Old Testament. It is the Hebrew concept of a turning of direction.

22 tn Or "preached," "announced."

23 sn To all nations. The same Greek term (τὰ ἔθνη, ta ethnē) may be translated "the Gentiles" or "the nations." The hope of God in Christ was for all the nations from the beginning.

24 sn Beginning from Jerusalem. See Acts 2, which is where it all starts.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

25 sn You are witnesses. This becomes a key concept of testimony in Acts. See Acts 1:8.

26 tn Grk "sending on you."

27 tn Grk "the promise of my Father," with τοῦ πατρός (tou patros) translated as a subjective genitive. This is a reference to the Holy Spirit and looks back to how one could see Messiah had come with the promise of old (Luke 3:15-18). The promise is rooted in Jer 31:31 and Ezek 36:26.

28 sn The city refers to Jerusalem.

29 sn Until you have been clothed with power refers to the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. What the Spirit supplies is enablement. See Luke 12:11-12; 21:12-15. The difference the Spirit makes can be seen in Peter (compare Luke 22:54-62 with Acts 2:14-41).

Jesus' Departure

24:50 Then[1] Jesus[2] led them out as far as Bethany,[3] and lifting up his hands, he blessed them. 24:51 Now[4] during the blessing[5] he departed[6] and was taken up into heaven.[7] 24:52 So[8] they worshiped[9] him and returned to Jerusalem with great joy,[10] 24:53 and were continually in the temple courts[11] blessing[12] God.[13]

---

1 tn Here δέ (de) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events within the narrative.

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 sn Bethany was village on the Mount of Olives about 2 mi (3 km) from Jerusalem; see John 11:1, 18.

4 tn Grk "And it happened that while." The introductory phrase ἐγένετο (egeneto, "it happened that"), common in Luke (69 times) and Acts (54 times), is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

5 tn Grk "while he blessed them."

6 tn Grk "he departed from them."

7 tc The reference to the ascension ("and was taken up into heaven") is lacking in ℵ* D it sy^{s}, but it is found in 𝔓^{75} and the rest of the MS tradition. The authenticity of the statement here seems to be presupposed in Acts 1:2, for otherwise it is difficult to account for Luke's reference to the ascension there. For a helpful discussion, see TCGNT 162-63.

tn For the translation of ἀνεφέρετο (anephereto) as "was taken up" see BDAG 75 s.v. ἀναφέρω 1.

sn There is great debate whether this event equals Acts 1:9-11 so that Luke has telescoped something here that he describes in more detail later. The text can be read in this way because the temporal marker in v. 50 is vague.

8 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "so" to indicate the result of Jesus' ascension and the concluding summary of Luke's Gospel.

9 tc The reference to worship is lacking in the Western MS D, its last major omission in this Gospel.

10 sn Joy is another key theme for Luke: 1:14; 2:10; 8:13; 10:17; 15:7, 10; 24:41.

11 tn Grk "in the temple."

sn Luke's gospel story proper ends where it began, in the temple courts (Luke 1:4-22). The conclusion is open-ended, because the story continues in Acts with what happened from Jerusalem onwards, once the promise of the Father (v. 49) came.

12 tc The Western text (D it) has αἰνοῦντες (ainountes, "praising") here, while the Alexandrian MSS (𝔓^{75} ℵ B C* L) have εὐλογοῦντες (eulogountes, "blessing"). Most MSS, especially the later Byzantine MSS, evidently combine these two readings with αἰνοῦντες καὶ εὐλογοῦντες (A C^{2} W Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat). It is more difficult to decide between the two earlier readings. Internal arguments can go either way, but what seems decisive in this instance are the superior witnesses for εὐλογοῦντες.

13 tc The majority of Greek MSS, some of which are important witnesses (A B C^{2} Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 lat), add "Amen" to note the Gospel's end. Such a conclusion is routinely added by scribes to NT books because a few of these books originally had such an ending (cf. Rom 16:27; Gal 6:18; Jude 25). A majority of Greek witnesses have the concluding ἀμήν in every NT book except Acts, James, and 3 John (and even in these books, ἀμήν is found in some witnesses). It is thus a predictable variant. Further, since significant witnesses lack the word (𝔓^{75} ℵ C* D L W 1 33 pc it co), it is evidently not original.

John

The Prologue to the Gospel

1:1 In the beginning[1] was the Word, and the Word was with God,[2] and the Word was fully God.[3] 1:2 The Word[4] was with God in the beginning. 1:3 All things were created[5] by him, and apart from him not one thing was created[6] that has been created.[7] 1:4 In him was life,[8] and the

[1] sn In the beginning. The search for the basic "stuff" out of which things are made was the earliest one in Greek philosophy. It was attended by the related question of "What is the process by which the secondary things came out of the primary one (or ones)?," or in Aristotelian terminology, "What is the 'beginning' (same Greek word as beginning, John 1:1) and what is the origin of the things that are made?" In the New Testament the word usually has a temporal sense, but even BDAG 138 s.v. ἀρχή 3 lists a major category of meaning as "the first cause." For John, the words "In the beginning" are most likely a conscious allusion to the opening words of Genesis – "In the beginning." Other concepts which occur prominently in Gen 1 are also found in John's prologue: "life" (1:4) "light" (1:4) and "darkness" (1:5). Gen 1 describes the first (physical) creation; John 1 describes the new (spiritual) creation. But this is not to play off a false dichotomy between "physical" and "spiritual"; the first creation was both physical and spiritual. The new creation is really a re-creation, of the spiritual (first) but also the physical. (In spite of the common understanding of John's "spiritual" emphasis, the "physical" re-creation should not be overlooked; this occurs in John 2 with the changing of water into wine, in John 11 with the resurrection of Lazarus, and the emphasis of John 20-21 on the aftermath of Jesus' own resurrection.)

[2] tn The preposition πρός (pros) implies not just proximity, but intimate personal relationship. M. Dods stated, "Πρός ...means more than μετά or παρά, and is regularly employed in expressing the presence of one person with another" ("The Gospel of St. John," The Expositor's Greek Testament, 1:684). See also Mark 6:3, Matt 13:56, Mark 9:19, Gal 1:18, 2 John 12.

[3] tn Or "and what God was the Word was." Colwell's Rule is often invoked to support the translation of θεός (theos) as definite ("God") rather than indefinite ("a god") here. However, Colwell's Rule merely permits, but does not demand, that a predicate nominative ahead of an equative verb be translated as definite rather than indefinite. Furthermore, Colwell's Rule did not deal with a third possibility, that the anarthrous predicate noun may have more of a qualitative nuance when placed ahead of the verb. A definite meaning for the term is reflected in the traditional rendering "the word was God." From a technical standpoint, though, it is preferable to see a qualitative aspect to anarthrous θεός in John 1:1c (ExSyn 266-69). Translations like the NEB, REB, and Moffatt are helpful in capturing the sense in John 1:1c, that the Word was fully deity in essence (just as much God as God the Father). However, in contemporary English "the Word was divine" (Moffatt) does not quite catch the meaning since "divine" as a descriptive term is not used in contemporary English exclusively of God. The translation "what God was the Word was" is perhaps the most nuanced rendering, conveying that everything God was in essence, the Word was too. This points to unity of essence between the Father and the Son without equating the persons. However, in surveying a number of native speakers of English, some of whom had formal theological training and some of whom did not, the editors concluded that the fine distinctions indicated by "what God was the Word was" would not be understood by many contemporary readers. Thus the translation "the Word was fully God" was chosen because it is more likely to convey the meaning to the average English reader that the Logos (which "became flesh and took up residence among us" in John 1:14 and is thereafter identified in the Fourth Gospel as Jesus) is one in essence with God the Father. The previous phrase, "the Word was with God," shows that the Logos is distinct in person from God the Father.

sn And the Word was fully God. John's theology consistently drives toward the conclusion that Jesus, the incarnate Word, is just as much God as God the Father. This can be seen, for example, in texts like John 10:30 ("The Father and I are one"), 17:11 ("so that they may be one just as we are one"), and 8:58 ("before Abraham came into existence, I am"). The construction in John 1:1c does not equate the Word with the person of God (this is ruled out by 1:1b, "the Word was with God"); rather it affirms that the Word and God are one in essence.

[4] tn Grk "He"; the referent (the Word) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] tn Or "made"; Grk "came into existence."

[6] tn Or "made"; Grk "nothing came into existence."

[7] tc There is a major punctuation problem here: Should this relative clause go with v. 3 or v. 4? The earliest MSS have no punctuation (𝔓66.75* ℵ* A B Δ al). Many of the later MSS which do have punctuation place it before the phrase, thus putting it with v. 4 (𝔓75c C D L Ws 050* pc). NA25 placed the phrase in v. 3; NA26 moved the words to the beginning of v. 4. In a detailed article K. Aland defended the change ("Eine Untersuchung zu Johannes 1, 3-4. Über die Bedeutung eines Punktes," ZNW 59 [1968]: 174-209). He sought to prove that the attribution of ὃ γέγονεν (ho gegonen) to v. 3 began to be carried out in the 4th century in the Greek church. This came out of the Arian controversy, and was intended as a safeguard for doctrine. The change was unknown in the West. Aland is probably correct in affirming that the phrase was attached to v. 4 by the Gnostics and the Eastern Church; only when the Arians began to use the phrase was it attached to v. 3. But this does not rule out the possibility that, by moving the words from v. 4 to v. 3, one is restoring the original reading. Understanding the words as part of v. 3 is natural and adds to the emphasis which is built up there, while it also gives a terse, forceful statement in v. 4. On the other hand, taking the phrase ὃ γέγονεν with v. 4 gives a complicated expression: C. K. Barrett says that both ways of understanding v. 4 with ὃ γέγονεν included "are almost impossibly clumsy" (St. John, 157): "That which came into being – in it the Word was life"; "That which came into being – in the Word was its life." The following stylistic points should be noted in the solution of this problem: (1) John frequently starts sentences with ἐν (en); (2) he repeats frequently ("nothing was created that has been created"); (3) 5:26 and 6:53 both give a sense similar to v. 4 if it is understood without the phrase; (4) it makes far better Johannine sense to say that in the Word was life than to say that the created universe (what was made, ὃ γέγονεν) was life in him. In conclusion, the phrase is best taken with v. 3. Schnackenburg, Barrett, Carson, Haenchen, Morris, KJV, and NIV concur (against Brown, Beasley-Murray, and NEB). The arguments of R. Schnackenburg, St. John, 1:239-40, are particularly persuasive.

tn Or "made"; Grk "that has come into existence."

[8] tn John uses ζωή (zōē) 37 times: 17 times it occurs with αἰώνιος (aiōnios), and in the remaining occurrences outside the prologue it is clear from context that "eternal" life is meant. The two uses in 1:4, if they do not refer to "eternal" life, would be the only exceptions. (Also 1 John uses ζωή 13 times, always of "eternal" life.)

sn An allusion to Ps 36:9, which gives significant OT back-life was the light of mankind.[1] 1:5 And the light shines on[2] in the darkness,[3] but[4] the darkness has not mastered it.[5]

1:6 A man came, sent from God, whose name was John.[6] 1:7 He came as a witness[7] to testify[8] about the light, so that everyone[9] might believe through him. 1:8 He himself was not the light, but he came to testify[10] about the light. 1:9 The true light, who gives light to everyone,[11] was coming into the world.[12] 1:10 He was in the world, and the world was created[13] by him, but[14] the world did not recognize[15] him. 1:11 He came to what was his own,[16] but[17] his own people[18] did not receive him.[19] 1:12 But to all who have received him – those who believe in his name[20] – ground: "For with you is the fountain of life; In your light we see light." In later Judaism, Bar 4:2 expresses a similar idea. Life, especially eternal life, will become one of the major themes of John's Gospel.

[1] tn Or "humanity"; Grk "of men" (but ἄνθρωπος [anthrōpos] is used in a generic sense here, not restricted to males only, thus "mankind," "humanity").

[2] tn To this point the author has used past tenses (imperfects, aorists); now he switches to a present. The light continually shines (thus the translation, "shines on"). Even as the author writes, it is shining. The present here most likely has gnomic force (though it is possible to take it as a historical present); it expresses the timeless truth that the light of the world (cf. 8:12, 9:5, 12:46) never ceases to shine.

sn The light shines on. The question of whether John has in mind here the preincarnate Christ or the incarnate Christ is probably too specific. The incarnation is not really introduced until v. 9, but here the point is more general: It is of the very nature of light, that it shines.

[3] sn The author now introduces what will become a major theme of John's Gospel: the opposition of light and darkness. The antithesis is a natural one, widespread in antiquity. Gen 1 gives considerable emphasis to it in the account of the creation, and so do the writings of Qumran. It is the major theme of one of the most important extra-biblical documents found at Qumran, the so-called War Scroll, properly titled The War of the Sons of Light with the Sons of Darkness. Connections between John and Qumran are still an area of scholarly debate and a consensus has not yet emerged. See T. A. Hoffman, "1 John and the Qumran Scrolls," BTB 8 (1978): 117-25.

[4] tn Grk "and," but the context clearly indicates a contrast, so this has been translated as an adversative use of καί (kai).

[5] tn Or "comprehended it," or "overcome it." The verb κατέλαβεν (katelaben) is not easy to translate. "To seize" or "to grasp" is possible, but this also permits "to grasp with the mind" in the sense of "to comprehend" (esp. in the middle voice). This is probably another Johannine double meaning – one does not usually think of darkness as trying to "understand" light. For it to mean this, "darkness" must be understood as meaning "certain people," or perhaps "humanity" at large, darkened in understanding. But in John's usage, darkness is not normally used of people or a group of people. Rather it usually signifies the evil environment or 'sphere' in which people find themselves: "They loved darkness rather than light" (John 3:19). Those who follow Jesus do not walk in darkness (8:12). They are to walk while they have light, lest the darkness "overtake/overcome" them (12:35, same verb as here). For John, with his set of symbols and imagery, darkness is not something which seeks to "understand (comprehend)" the light, but represents the forces of evil which seek to "overcome (conquer)" it. The English verb "to master" may be used in both sorts of contexts, as "he mastered his lesson" and "he mastered his opponent."

[6] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[7] tn Grk "came for a testimony."

sn Witness is also one of the major themes of John's Gospel. The Greek verb μαρτυρέω (martureō) occurs 33 times (compare to once in Matthew, once in Luke, 0 in Mark) and the noun μαρτυρία (marturia) 14 times (0 in Matthew, once in Luke, 3 times in Mark).

[8] tn Or "to bear witness."

[9] tn Grk "all."

[10] tn Or "to bear witness."

[11] tn Grk "every man" (but in a generic sense, "every person," or "every human being").

[12] tn Or "He was the true light, who gives light to everyone who comes into the world." The participle ἐρχόμενον (erchomenon) may be either (1) neuter nominative, agreeing with τὸ φῶς (to phōs), or (2) masculine accusative, agreeing with ἄνθρωπον (anthrōpon). Option (1) results in a periphrastic imperfect with ἦν (ēn), ἦν τὸ φῶς... ἐρχόμενον, referring to the incarnation. Option (2) would have the participle modifying ἄνθρωπον and referring to the true light as enlightening "every man who comes into the world." Option (2) has some rabbinic parallels: The phrase "all who come into the world" is a fairly common expression for "every man" (cf. Leviticus Rabbah 31.6). But (1) must be preferred here, because: (a) In the next verse the light is in the world; it is logical for v. 9 to speak of its entering the world; (b) in other passages Jesus is described as "coming into the world" (6:14, 9:39, 11:27, 16:28) and in 12:46 Jesus says: ἐγὼ φῶς εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἐλήλυθα (egō phōs eis ton kosmon elēlutha); (c) use of a periphrastic participle with the imperfect tense is typical Johannine style: 1:28, 2:6, 3:23, 10:40, 11:1, 13:23, 18:18 and 25. In every one of these except 13:23 the finite verb is first and separated by one or more intervening words from the participle.

sn In v. 9 the world (κόσμος, kosmos) is mentioned for the first time. This is another important theme word for John. Generally, the world as a Johannine concept does not refer to the totality of creation (the universe), although there are exceptions at 11:9. 17:5, 24, 21:25, but to the world of human beings and human affairs. Even in 1:10 the world created through the Logos is a world capable of knowing (or reprehensibly not knowing) its Creator. Sometimes the world is further qualified as this world (ὁ κόσμος οὗτος, ho kosmos houtos) as in 8:23, 9:39, 11:9, 12:25, 31; 13:1, 16:11, 18:36. This is not merely equivalent to the rabbinic phrase "this present age" (ὁ αἰὼν οὗτος, ho aiōn houtos) and contrasted with "the world to come." For John it is also contrasted to a world other than this one, already existing; this is the lower world, corresponding to which there is a world above (see especially 8:23, 18:36). Jesus appears not only as the Messiah by means of whom an eschatological future is anticipated (as in the synoptic gospels) but also as an envoy from the heavenly world to this world.

[13] tn Or "was made"; Grk "came into existence."

[14] tn Grk "and," but in context this is an adversative use of καί (kai) and is thus translated "but."

[15] tn Or "know."

[16] tn Grk "to his own things."

[17] tn Grk "and," but in context this is an adversative use of καί (kai) and is thus translated "but."

[18] tn "People" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

[19] sn His own people did not receive him. There is a subtle irony here: When the λόγος (logos) came into the world, he came to his own (τὰ ἴδια, ta idia, literally "his own things") and his own people (οἱ ἴδιοι, hoi idioi), who should have known and received him, but they did not. This time John does not say that "his own" did not know him, but that they did not receive him (παρέλαβον, parelabon). The idea is one not of mere recognition, but of acceptance and welcome.

[20] tn On the use of the πιστεύω + εἰς (pisteuō + eis) construction in John: The verb πιστεύω occurs 98 times in John (compared to 11 times in Matthew, 14 times in Mark [including the longer ending], and 9 times in Luke). One of the unsolved mysteries is why the corresponding noun form πίστις (pistis) is never used at all. Many have held the noun was in he has given the right to become God's children 1:13 – children not born[1] by human parents[2] or by human desire[3] or a husband's[4] decision,[5] but by God.

1:14 Now[6] the Word became flesh[7] and took up residence[8] among us. We[9] saw his glory – the glory of the one and only,[10] full of grace and truth, who came from the Father. 1:15 John[11] testified[12] about him and shouted out,[13] "This one was the one about whom I said, 'He who comes after me is greater than I am,[14] because he existed before me.'" 1:16 For we have all received from his fullness one gracious gift after another.[15] 1:17 For the law was given through Moses, but[16] grace and truth came about through use in some pre-Gnostic sects and this rendered it suspect for John. It might also be that for John, faith was an activity, something that men do (cf. W. Turner, "Believing and Everlasting Life – A Johannine Inquiry," ExpTim 64 [1952/53]: 50-52). John uses πιστεύω in 4 major ways: (1) of believing facts, reports, etc., 12 times; (2) of believing people (or the scriptures), 19 times; (3) of believing "in" Christ" (πιστεύω + εἰς + accusative. It is not unlike the Pauline ἐν Χριστῷ (en Christō) formula. Some have argued that this points to a Hebrew (more likely Aramaic) original behind the Fourth Gospel. But it probably indicates something else, as C. H. Dodd observed: "πιστεύειν with the dative so inevitably connoted simple credence, in the sense of an intellectual judgment, that the moral element of personal trust or reliance inherent in the Hebrew or Aramaic phrase – an element integral to the primitive Christian conception of faith in Christ – needed to be otherwise expressed" (The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 183).

[1] tn The Greek term translated "born" here also involves conception.

[2] tn Grk "of blood(s)." The plural αἱμάτων (haimatōn) has seemed a problem to many interpreters. At least some sources in antiquity imply that blood was thought of as being important in the development of the fetus during its time in the womb: thus Wis 7:1: "in the womb of a mother I was molded into flesh, within the period of 10 months, compacted with blood, from the seed of a man and the pleasure of marriage." In John 1:13, the plural αἱμάτων may imply the action of both parents. It may also refer to the "genetic" contribution of both parents, and so be equivalent to "human descent" (see BDAG 26 s.v. αἷμα 1.a). E. C. Hoskyns thinks John could not have used the singular here because Christians are in fact 'begotten' by the blood of Christ (The Fourth Gospel, 143), although the context would seem to make it clear that the blood in question is something other than the blood of Christ.

[3] tn Or "of the will of the flesh." The phrase οὐδὲ ἐκ θελήματος σαρκός (oude ek thelēmatos sarkos) is more clearly a reference to sexual desire, but it should be noted that σάρξ (sarx) in John does not convey the evil sense common in Pauline usage. For John it refers to the physical nature in its weakness rather than in its sinfulness. There is no clearer confirmation of this than the immediately following verse, where the λόγος (logos) became σάρξ.

[4] tn Or "man's."

[5] tn The third phrase, οὐδὲ ἐκ θελήματος ἀνδρός (oude ek thelēmatos andros), means much the same as the second one. The word here (ἀνηρ, anēr) is often used for a husband, resulting in the translation "or a husband's decision," or more generally, "or of any human volition whatsoever." L. Morris may be right when he sees here an emphasis directed at the Jewish pride in race and patriarchal ancestry, although such a specific reference is difficult to prove (John [NICNT], 101).

[6] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic, the incarnation of the Word. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

[7] tn This looks at the Word incarnate in humility and weakness; the word σάρξ (sarx) does not carry overtones of sinfulness here as it frequently does in Pauline usage. See also John 3:6.

[8] tn Grk "and tabernacled."

sn The Greek word translated took up residence (σκηνόω, skēnoō) alludes to the OT tabernacle, where the Shekinah, the visible glory of God's presence, resided. The author is suggesting that this glory can now be seen in Jesus (note the following verse). The verb used here may imply that the Shekinah glory that once was found in the tabernacle has taken up residence in the person of Jesus. Cf. also John 2:19-21. The Word became flesh. This verse constitutes the most concise statement of the incarnation in the New Testament. John 1:1 makes it clear that the Logos was fully God, but 1:14 makes it clear that he was also fully human. A Docetic interpretation is completely ruled out. Here for the first time the Logos of 1:1 is identified as Jesus of Nazareth – the two are one and the same. Thus this is the last time the word logos is used in the Fourth Gospel to refer to the second person of the Trinity. From here on it is Jesus of Nazareth who is the focus of John's Gospel.

[9] tn Grk "and we saw."

[10] tn Or "of the unique one." Although this word is often translated "only begotten," such a translation is misleading, since in English it appears to express a metaphysical relationship. The word in Greek was used of an only child (a son [Luke 7:12, 9:38] or a daughter [Luke 8:42]). It was also used of something unique (only one of its kind) such as the mythological Phoenix (1 Clem. 25:2). From here it passes easily to a description of Isaac (Heb 11:17 and Josephus, Ant., 1.13.1 [1.222]) who was not Abraham's only son, but was one-of-a-kind because he was the child of the promise. Thus the word means "one-of-a-kind" and is reserved for Jesus in the Johannine literature of the NT. While all Christians are children of God, Jesus is God's Son in a unique, one-of-a-kind sense. The word is used in this way in all its uses in the Gospel of John (1:14, 1:18, 3:16, and 3:18).

[11] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[12] tn Or "bore witness."

[13] tn Grk "and shouted out saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant is English and has not been translated.

[14] tn Or "has a higher rank than I."

[15] tn Grk "for from his fullness we have all received, and grace upon grace." The meaning of the phrase χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος (charin anti charitos) could be: (1) love (grace) under the New Covenant in place of love (grace) under the Sinai Covenant, thus replacement; (2) grace "on top of" grace, thus accumulation; (3) grace corresponding to grace, thus correspondence. The most commonly held view is (2) in one sense or another, and this is probably the best explanation. This sense is supported by a fairly well-known use in Philo, Posterity 43 (145). Morna D. Hooker suggested that Exod 33:13 provides the background for this expression: "Now therefore, I pray you, if I have found χάρις (LXX) in your sight, let me know your ways, that I may know you, so that I may find χάρις (LXX) in your sight." Hooker proposed that it is this idea of favor given to one who has already received favor which lies behind 1:16, and this seems very probable as a good explanation of the meaning of the phrase ("The Johannine Prologue and the Messianic Secret," NTS 21 [1974/75]: 53).

sn Earlier commentators (including Origen and Luther) took the words For we have all received from his fullness one gracious gift after another to be John the Baptist's. Most modern commentators take them as the words of the author.

[16] tn "But" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied to indicate the implied contrast between the Mosaic law and grace through Jesus Christ. John 1:17 seems to indicate

Jesus Christ. 1:18 No one has ever seen God. The only one,[1] himself God, who is in closest fellowship with[2] the Father, has made God[3] known.[4] clearly that the Old Covenant (Sinai) was being contrasted with the New. In Jewish sources the Law was regarded as a gift from God (Josephus, Ant. 3.8.10 [3.223]; Pirqe Avot 1.1; Sifre Deut 31:4 §305). Further information can be found in T. F. Glasson, Moses in the Fourth Gospel (SBT).

1 tc The textual problem μονογενὴς θεός (monogenēs theos, "the only God") versus ὁ μονογενὴς υἱός (ho monogenēs huios, "the only son") is a notoriously difficult one. Only one letter would have differentiated the readings in the MSS, since both words would have been contracted as nomina sacra: thus $\overline{\Theta C}$ or $\overline{\Upsilon C}$. Externally, there are several variants, but they can be grouped essentially by whether they read θεός or υἱός. The majority of MSS, especially the later ones (A C^3 Θ Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 lat), read ὁ μονογενὴς υἱός. 𝔓75 ℵ1 33 pc have ὁ μονογενὴς θεός, while the anarthrous μονογενὴς θεός is found in 𝔓66 ℵ* B C* L pc. The articular θεός is almost certainly a scribal emendation to the anarthrous θεός, for θεός without the article is a much harder reading. The external evidence thus strongly supports μονογενὴς θεός. Internally, although υἱός fits the immediate context more readily, θεός is much more difficult. As well, θεός also explains the origin of the other reading (υἱός), because it is difficult to see why a scribe who found υἱός in the text he was copying would alter it to θεός. Scribes would naturally change the wording to υἱός however, since μονογενὴς υἱός is a uniquely Johannine christological title (cf. John 3:16, 18; 1 John 4:9). But θεός as the older and more difficult reading is preferred. As for translation, it makes the most sense to see the word θεός as in apposition to μονογενής, and the participle ὁ ὤν (ho ōn) as in apposition to θεός, giving in effect three descriptions of Jesus rather than only two. (B. D. Ehrman, The Orthodox Corruption of Scripture, 81, suggests that it is nearly impossible and completely unattested in the NT for an adjective followed immediately by a noun that agrees in gender, number, and case, to be a substantival adjective: "when is an adjective ever used substantivally when it immediately precedes a noun of the same inflection?" This, however, is an overstatement. First, as Ehrman admits, μονογενής in John 1:14 is substantival. And since it is an established usage for the adjective in this context, one might well expect that the author would continue to use the adjective substantivally four verses later. Indeed, μονογενής is already moving toward a crystallized substantival adjective in the NT [cf. Luke 9:38; Heb 11:17]; in patristic Greek, the process continued [cf. PGL 881 s.v. 7]. Second, there are several instances in the NT in which a substantival adjective is followed by a noun with which it has complete concord: cf., e.g., Rom 1:30; Gal 3:9; 1 Tim 1:9; 2 Pet 2:5.) The modern translations which best express this are the NEB (margin) and TEV. Several things should be noted: μονογενής alone, without υἱός, can mean "only son," "unique son," "unique one," etc. (see 1:14). Furthermore, θεός is anarthrous. As such it carries qualitative force much like it does in 1:1c, where θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος (theos ēn ho logos) means "the Word was fully God" or "the Word was fully of the essence of deity." Finally, ὁ ὤν occurs in Rev 1:4, 8; 4:8, 11:17; and 16:5, but even more significantly in the LXX of Exod 3:14. Putting all of this together leads to the translation given in the text.

tn Or "The unique one." For the meaning of μονογενής (monogenēs) see the note on "one and only" in 1:14.

2 tn Grk "in the bosom of" (an idiom for closeness or nearness; cf. L&N 34.18; BDAG 556 s.v. κόλπος 1).

3 tn Grk "him"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 sn Has made God known. In this final verse of the prologue, the climactic and ultimate statement of the earthly career of the Logos, Jesus of Nazareth, is reached. The unique One (John 1:14), the One who has taken on human form and nature by becoming incarnate (became flesh, 1:14), who is himself fully God (the Word was God, 1:1c) and is to be identified with the ever-living One of the Old Testament revelation (Exod 3:14), who is in intimate relationship with the Father, this One and no other has fully revealed what God is like. As Jesus said to Philip in John 14:9, "The one who has seen me has seen the Father."

The Testimony of John the Baptist

1:19 Now[5] this was[6] John's[7] testimony[8] when the Jewish leaders[9] sent[10] priests and Levites from Jerusalem[11] to ask him, "Who are you?"[12] 1:20 He confessed – he did not deny but confessed – "I am not the Christ!"[13] 1:21 So they

5 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "now" to indicate the transition to a new topic. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

6 tn Grk "is."

7 sn John's refers to John the Baptist.

8 tn Or "witness."

sn John the Baptist's testimony seems to take place over 3 days: day 1, John's testimony about his own role is largely negative (1:19-28); day 2, John gives positive testimony about who Jesus is (1:29-34); day 3, John sends his own disciples to follow Jesus (1:35-40).

9 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. Here the author refers to the authorities or leaders in Jerusalem. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.)

10 tc ‡ Several important witnesses have πρὸς αὐτόν (pros auton, "to him") either here (B C* 33 892c al it) or after "Levites" (𝔓66c vid A Θ Ψ f^{13} 579 al lat), while the earliest MSS as well as the majority of MSS (𝔓66*,75 ℵ C^3 L W^s f^1 𝔐) lack the phrase. On the one hand, πρὸς αὐτόν could be perceived as redundant since αὐτόν is used again later in the verse, thus prompting scribes to omit the phrase. On the other hand, both the variation in placement of πρὸς αὐτόν and the fact that this phrase rather than the latter αὐτόν is lacking in certain witnesses (cf. John 11:44; 14:7; 18:31), suggests that scribes felt that the sentence needed the phrase to make the sense clearer. Although a decision is difficult, the shorter reading is slightly preferred. NA27 has πρὸς αὐτόν in brackets, indicating doubt as to the phrase's authenticity.

12 sn "Who are you?" No uniform Jewish expectation of a single eschatological figure existed in the 1st century. A majority expected the Messiah. But some pseudepigraphic books describe God's intervention without mentioning the anointed Davidic king; in parts of 1 Enoch, for example, the figure of the Son of Man, not the Messiah, embodies the expectations of the author. Essenes at Qumran seem to have expected three figures: a prophet, a priestly messiah, and a royal messiah. In baptizing, John the Baptist was performing an eschatological action. It also seems to have been part of his proclamation (John 1:23, 26-27). Crowds were beginning to follow him. He was operating in an area not too far from the Essene center on the Dead Sea. No wonder the authorities were curious about who he was.

13 tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn "I am not the Christ." A 3rd century work, the pseudo-Clementine Recognitions (1.54 and 1.60 in the Latin text; the statement is not as clear in the Syriac version) records that John's followers proclaimed him to be the Messiah. There is no clear evidence that they did so in the 1st century, however – but Luke 3:15 indicates some wondered. Concerning the Christ, the term χριστός (christos) was originally an adjective ("anointed"), developing in LXX into a substantive ("an anointed one"), then developing still further into a technical generic term ("the anointed one"). In the intertestamental period it developed further into a technical term referring to the hoped-for anointed one, that is, a specific individual. In the NT the development starts there (technical-specific), is so used in the gospels, and then develops in Paul to mean virtually asked him, "Then who are you?[1] Are you Elijah?" He said, "I am not!"[2] "Are you the Prophet?"[3] He answered, "No!" 1:22 Then they said to him, "Who are you? Tell us[4] so that we can give an answer to those who sent us. What do you say about yourself?"

1:23 John[5] said, "I am the voice of one shouting in the wilderness, 'Make straight[6] the way for the Lord,'[7] as Isaiah the prophet said." 1:24 (Now they had been sent from the Pharisees.[8])[9] 1:25 So they asked John,[10] "Why then are you baptizing if you are not the Christ,[11] nor Elijah, nor the Prophet?"

1:26 John answered them,[12] "I baptize with water. Among you stands one whom you do not recognize,[13] 1:27 who is coming after me. I am not worthy[14] to untie the strap[15] of his sandal!" 1:28 These things happened in Bethany[16] across the Jordan River[17] where John was baptizing.

1:29 On the next day John[18] saw Jesus coming toward him and said, "Look, the Lamb of God[19] who takes away the sin of the world! 1:30 This is the one about whom I said, 'After me comes a man who is greater than I am,[20] because he existed before me.' 1:31 I did not recognize[21]

Jesus' last name.

[1] tn Grk "What then?" (an idiom).

[2] sn According to the 1st century rabbinic interpretation of 2 Kgs 2:11, Elijah was still alive. In Mal 4:5 it is said that Elijah would be the precursor of Messiah. How does one reconcile John the Baptist's denial here ("I am not") with Jesus' statements in Matt 11:14 (see also Mark 9:13 and Matt 17:12) that John the Baptist was Elijah? Some have attempted to remove the difficulty by a reconstruction of the text in the Gospel of John which makes the Baptist say that he was Elijah. However, external support for such emendations is lacking. According to Gregory the Great, John was not Elijah, but exercised toward Jesus the function of Elijah by preparing his way. But this avoids the real difficulty, since in John's Gospel the question of the Jewish authorities to the Baptist concerns precisely his function. It has also been suggested that the author of the Gospel here preserves a historically correct reminiscence – that John the Baptist did not think of himself as Elijah, although Jesus said otherwise. Mark 6:14-16 and Mark 8:28 indicate the people and Herod both distinguished between John and Elijah – probably because he did not see himself as Elijah. But Jesus' remarks in Matt 11:14, Mark 9:13, and Matt 17:12 indicate that John did perform the function of Elijah – John did for Jesus what Elijah was to have done for the coming of the Lord. C. F. D. Moule pointed out that it is too simple to see a straight contradiction between John's account and that of the synoptic gospels: "We have to ask by whom the identification is made, and by whom refused. The synoptic gospels represent Jesus as identifying, or comparing, the Baptist with Elijah, while John represents the Baptist as rejecting the identification when it is offered him by his interviewers. Now these two, so far from being incompatible, are psychologically complementary. The Baptist humbly rejects the exalted title, but Jesus, on the contrary, bestows it on him. Why should not the two both be correct?" (The Phenomenon of the New Testament [SBT], 70).

[3] sn The Prophet is a reference to the "prophet like Moses" of Deut 18:15, by this time an eschatological figure in popular belief. Acts 3:22 identifies Jesus as this prophet.

[4] tn The words "Tell us" are not in the Greek but are implied.

[5] tn Grk "He"; the referent (John the Baptist) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] sn This call to "make straight" is probably an allusion to preparation through repentance.

[7] sn A quotation from Isa 40:3.

[8] sn Pharisees were members of one of the most important and influential religious and political parties of Judaism in the time of Jesus. There were more Pharisees than Sadducees (according to Josephus, Ant. 17.2.4 [17.42] there were more than 6,000 Pharisees at about this time). Pharisees differed with Sadducees on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and zealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions such as angels and bodily resurrection.

[9] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[10] tn Grk "And they asked him, and said to him"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity, and the phrase has been simplified in the translation to "So they asked John."

[11] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[12] tn Grk "answered them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

[13] tn Or "know."

[14] tn Grk "of whom I am not worthy."

sn The humility of John is evident in the statement I am not worthy. This was considered one of the least worthy tasks of a slave, and John did not consider himself worthy to do even that for the one to come, despite the fact he himself was a prophet.

[15] tn The term refers to the leather strap or thong used to bind a sandal. This is often viewed as a collective singular and translated as a plural, "the straps of his sandals," but it may be more emphatic to retain the singular here.

[16] tc Many witnesses ([𝔓[66]] 𝔓[75] 𝔎[2] C[2] K T Ψ[c] 083 $f^{1,13}$ 33 pm sa Or) read Βηθαβαρᾷ (Bēthabara, "Bethabara") instead of Βηθανίᾳ (Bēthania, "Bethany"). But the reading Βηθανίᾳ is strongly supported by {𝔓[66-75] 𝔄 B C* L W[s] Δ Θ Ψ* 565 579 700 1241 1424 pm latt bo as well as several fathers}. Since there is no known Bethany "beyond the Jordan," it is likely that the name would have been changed to a more etymologically edifying one (Origen mistakenly thought the name Bethabara meant "house of preparation" and for this reason was appropriate in this context; see TCGNT 171 for discussion). On the other hand, both since Origen's understanding of the Semitic etymology of Bethabara was incorrect, and because Bethany was at least a well-known location in Palestine, mentioned in the Gospels about a dozen times, one has to wonder whether scribes replaced Βηθαβαρᾷ with Βηθανίᾳ. However, if Origen's understanding of the etymology of the name was representative, scribes may have altered the text in the direction of Bethabara. And even if most scribes were unfamiliar with what the name might signify, that a reading which did not contradict the Gospels' statements of a Bethany near Jerusalem was already at hand may have been sufficient reason for them to adopt Bethabara. Further, in light of the very strong testimony for Βηθανίᾳ, this reading should be regarded as authentic.

[17] tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

[18] tn Grk "he"; the referent (John) has been supplied in the translation for clarity.

[19] sn Gen 22:8 is an important passage in the background of the title Lamb of God as applied to Jesus. In Jewish thought this was held to be a supremely important sacrifice. G. Vermès stated: "For the Palestinian Jew, all lamb sacrifice, and especially the Passover lamb and the Tamid offering, was a memorial of the Akedah with its effects of deliverance, forgiveness of sin and messianic salvation" (Scripture and Tradition in Judaism [StPB], 225).

him, but I came baptizing with water so that he could be revealed to Israel."[1]

1:32 Then[2] John testified,[3] "I saw the Spirit descending like a dove[4] from heaven,[5] and it remained on him.[6] 1:33 And I did not recognize him, but the one who sent me to baptize with water said to me, 'The one on whom you see the Spirit descending and remaining – this is the one who baptizes with the Holy Spirit.' 1:34 I have both seen and testified that this man is the Chosen One of God."[7]

1:35 Again the next day John[8] was standing there[9] with two of his disciples. 1:36 Gazing at Jesus as he walked by, he said, "Look, the Lamb of God!"[10] 1:37 When John's[11] two disciples heard him say this,[12] they followed Jesus.[13] 1:38 Jesus turned around and saw them following and said to them, "What do you want?"[14] So they said to him, "Rabbi" (which is translated Teacher),[15] "where are you staying?" 1:39 Jesus[16] answered,[17] "Come and you will see." So they came and saw where he was staying, and they stayed with him that day. Now it was about four o'clock in the afternoon.[18]

1 sn John the Baptist, who has been so reluctant to elaborate his own role, now more than willingly gives his testimony about Jesus. For the author, the emphasis is totally on John the Baptist as a witness to Jesus. No attention is given to the Baptist's call to national repentance and very little to his baptizing. Everything is focused on what he has to say about Jesus: so that he could be revealed to Israel.

2 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "then" to indicate the implied sequence of events in the narrative. Greek style often begins sentences or clauses with "and," but English style generally does not.

3 tn Grk "testified, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated.

4 sn The phrase like a dove is a descriptive comparison. The Spirit is not a dove, but descended like one in some sort of bodily representation.

5 tn Or "from the sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven," depending on the context.

6 sn John says the Spirit remained on Jesus. The Greek verb μένω (menō) is a favorite Johannine word, used 40 times in the Gospel and 27 times in the Epistles (67 together) against 118 times total in the NT. The general significance of the verb μένω for John is to express the permanency of relationship between Father and Son and Son and believer. Here the use of the word implies that Jesus permanently possesses the Holy Spirit, and because he does, he will dispense the Holy Spirit to others in baptism. Other notes on the dispensation of the Spirit occur at John 3:5 and following (at least implied by the wordplay), John 3:34, 7:38-39, numerous passages in John 14-16 (the Paraclete passages) and John 20:22. Note also the allusion to Isa 42:1 – "Behold my servant...my chosen one in whom my soul delights. I have put my Spirit on him."

7 tc ‡ What did John the Baptist declare about Jesus on this occasion? Did he say, "This is the Son of God" (οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, houtos estin ho huios tou theou), or "This is the Chosen One of God" (οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐκλεκτὸς τοῦ θεοῦ, outos estin ho eklektos tou theou)? The majority of the witnesses, impressive because of their diversity in age and locales, read "This is the Son of God" (so {𝔓66.75 A B C L Θ Ψ 0233vid ƒ1.13 33 1241 aur c f l g bo as well as the majority of Byzantine minuscules and many others}). Most scholars take this to be sufficient evidence to regard the issue as settled without much of a need to reflect on internal evidence. On the other hand, one of the earliest MSS for this verse, {𝔓5} (3rd century), evidently read οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐκλεκτὸς τοῦ θεοῦ. (There is a gap in the MS at the point of the disputed words; it is too large for υἱός especially if written, as it surely would have been, as a nomen sacrum [ϒC]. The term ἐκλεκτός was not a nomen sacrum and would have therefore taken up much more space [ЄKΛЄKTOC]. Given these two variants, there is hardly any question as to what 𝔓5 read.) This papyrus has many affinities with ℵ*, which here also has ὁ ἐκλεκτός. In addition to their combined testimony 𝔓106vid b e ff2* sy6,c also support this reading. 𝔓106 is particularly impressive, for it is a second third-century papyrus in support of ὁ ἐκλεκτός. A third reading combines these two: "the elect Son" (electus filius in ff2c sa and a [with slight variation]). Although the evidence for ἐκλεκτός is not as impressive as that for υἱός, the reading is found in early Alexandrian and Western witnesses. Turning to the internal evidence, "the Chosen One" clearly comes out ahead. "Son of God" is a favorite expression of the author (cf. 1:49; 3:18; 5:25; 10:36; 11:4, 27; 19:7; 20:31); further, there are several other references to "his Son," "the Son," etc. Scribes would be naturally motivated to change ἐκλεκτός to υἱός since the latter is both a Johannine expression and is, on the surface, richer theologically in 1:34. On the other hand, there is not a sufficient reason for scribes to change υἱός to ἐκλεκτός. The term never occurs in John; even its verbal cognate (ἐκλέγω, eklegō) is never affirmed of Jesus in this Gospel. ἐκλεκτός clearly best explains the rise of υἱός. Further, the third reading ("Chosen Son of God") is patently a conflation of the other two. It has all the earmarks of adding υἱός to ἐκλεκτός. Thus, ὁ υἱός τοῦ θεοῦ is almost certainly a motivated reading. As R. E. Brown notes (John [AB], 1:57), "On the basis of theological tendency...it is difficult to imagine that Christian scribes would change 'the Son of God' to 'God's chosen one,' while a change in the opposite direction would be quite plausible. Harmonization with the Synoptic accounts of the baptism ('You are [This is] my beloved Son') would also explain the introduction of 'the Son of God' into John; the same phenomenon occurs in vi 69. Despite the weaker textual evidence, therefore, it seems best – with Lagrange, Barrett, Boismard, and others – to accept 'God's chosen one' as original."

8 sn John refers to John the Baptist.

9 tn "There" is not in the Greek text but is implied by current English idiom.

10 sn This section (1:35-51) is joined to the preceding by the literary expedient of repeating the Baptist's testimony about Jesus being the Lamb of God (1:36, cf. 1:29). This repeated testimony (1:36) no longer has revelatory value in itself, since it has been given before; its purpose, instead, is to institute a chain reaction which will bring John the Baptist's disciples to Jesus and make them Jesus' own disciples.

11 tn Grk "his"; the referent (John) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Grk "And the two disciples heard him speaking."

13 sn The expression followed Jesus pictures discipleship, which means that to learn from Jesus is to follow him as the guiding priority of one's life.

14 tn Grk "What are you seeking?"

15 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

16 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Grk "said to them."

18 tn Grk "about the tenth hour."

sn About four o'clock in the afternoon. What system of time reckoning is the author using? B. F. Westcott thought John, unlike the synoptic gospels, was using Roman time, which started at midnight (St. John, 282). This would make the time 10 a.m., which would fit here. But later in the Gospel's Passover account (John 19:42, where the sixth hour is on the "eve of the Passover") it seems clear the author had to be using Jewish reckoning, which began at 6 a.m. This would make the time here in 1:39 to be 4 p.m. This may be significant: If the hour was late, Andrew and the unnamed disciple probably spent the night in the same house where Jesus was staying, and the events of 1:41-42 took place on the next day. The evidence for Westcott's view, that the Gospel is using Roman time, is very slim. The Roman reckoning which started at midnight was only used by authorities as legal time (for contracts, official documents, etc.). Otherwise, the Romans too

Andrew's Declaration

1:40 Andrew, the brother of Simon Peter, was one of the two disciples who heard what John said[1] and followed Jesus.[2] 1:41 He first[3] found his own brother Simon and told him, "We have found the Messiah!"[4] (which is translated Christ).[5] 1:42 Andrew brought Simon[6] to Jesus. Jesus looked at him and said, "You are Simon, the son of John.[7] You will be called Cephas" (which is translated Peter).[8]

The Calling of More Disciples

1:43 On the next day Jesus[9] wanted to set out for Galilee.[10] He[11] found Philip and said[12] to him, "Follow me." 1:44 (Now Philip was from Bethsaida,[13] the town of[14] Andrew and Peter.) 1:45 Philip found Nathanael[15] and told him, "We have found the one Moses wrote about in the law, and the prophets also[16] wrote about – Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." 1:46 Nathanael[17] replied,[18] "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?"[19] Philip replied,[20] "Come and see."

1:47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming toward him and exclaimed,[21] "Look, a true Israelite in whom there is no deceit!"[22] 1:48 Nathanael asked him, "How do you know me?" Jesus replied,[23] "Before Philip called you, when you were under the fig tree,[24] I saw you." 1:49 Nathanael answered him, "Rabbi, you are the Son of God; you are the king[25] of Israel!"[26] 1:50 Jesus said to him,[27] "Because I told you that I saw you under

1 tn Grk "who heard from John."

2 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tc Most witnesses (ℵ* L W^{s} 𝔐) read πρῶτος (prōtos) here instead of πρῶτον (prōton). The former reading would be a predicate adjective and suggest that Andrew "was the first" person to proselytize another regarding Jesus. The reading preferred, however, is the neuter πρῶτον, used as an adverb (BDAG 893 s.v. πρῶτος 1.a.β.), and it suggests that the first thing that Andrew did was to proselytize Peter. The evidence for this reading is early and weighty: 𝔓^{66,75} ℵ^{2} A B Θ Ψ 083 $f^{1,13}$ 892 al lat.

4 sn Naturally part of Andrew's concept of the Messiah would have been learned from John the Baptist (v. 40). However, there were a number of different messianic expectations in 1st century Palestine (see the note on "Who are you?" in v. 19), and it would be wrong to assume that what Andrew meant here is the same thing the author means in the purpose statement at the end of the Fourth Gospel, 20:31. The issue here is not whether the disciples' initial faith in Jesus as Messiah was genuine or not, but whether their concept of who Jesus was grew and developed progressively as they spent time following him, until finally after his resurrection it is affirmed in the climactic statement of John's Gospel, the affirmation of Thomas in 20:28.

5 tn Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "the one who has been anointed."

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. See the note on Christ in 1:20.

6 tn Grk "He brought him"; both referents (Andrew, Simon) have been specified in the translation for clarity.

7 tc The reading "Simon, son of John" is well attested in 𝔓^{66,75,106} ℵ B* L 33 pc it co. The majority of MSS (A B^{2} Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐) read "Simon, the son of Jonah" here instead, but that is perhaps an assimilation to Matt 16:17.

8 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. The change of name from Simon to Cephas is indicative of the future role he will play. Only John among the gospel writers gives the Greek transliteration (Κηφᾶς, Kēphas) of Simon's new name, Qéphâ (which is Galilean Aramaic). Neither Πέτρος (Petros) in Greek nor Qéphâ in Aramaic is a normal proper name; it is more like a nickname.

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. Jesus is best taken as the subject of εὑρίσκει (heuriskei), since Peter would scarcely have wanted to go to Galilee.

10 sn No explanation is given for why Jesus wanted to set out for Galilee, but probably he wanted to go to the wedding at Cana (about a two day trip).

11 tn Grk "and he." Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, a new sentence was started here in the translation.

12 tn Grk "and Jesus said."

13 sn Although the author thought of the town as in Galilee (12:21), Bethsaida technically was in Gaulanitis (Philip the Tetrarch's territory) across from Herod's Galilee. There may have been two places called Bethsaida, or this may merely reflect popular imprecision – locally it was considered part of Galilee, even though it was just east of the Jordan river. This territory was heavily Gentile (which may explain why Andrew and Philip both have Gentile names).

14 tn Probably ἀπό (apo) indicates "originally from" in the sense of birthplace rather than current residence; Mark 1:21, 29 seems to locate the home of Andrew and Peter at Capernaum. The entire remark (v. 44) amounts to a parenthetical comment by the author.

15 sn Nathanael is traditionally identified with Bartholomew (although John never describes him as such). He appears here after Philip, while in all lists of the twelve except in Acts 1:13, Bartholomew follows Philip. Also, the Aramaic Bar-tolmai means "son of Tolmai," the surname; the man almost certainly had another name.

16 tn "Also" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

17 tn Grk "And Nathanael."

18 tn Grk "said to him."

19 sn Can anything good come out of Nazareth? may be a local proverb expressing jealousy among the towns.

20 tn Grk "And Philip said to him."

21 tn Grk "said about him."

22 tn Or "treachery."

sn An allusion to Ps 32:2.

23 tn Grk "answered and said to him." This is somewhat redundant in English and has been simplified in the translation to "replied."

24 sn Many have speculated about what Nathanael was doing under the fig tree. Meditating on the Messiah who was to come? A good possibility, since the fig tree was used as shade for teaching or studying by the later rabbis (Ecclesiastes Rabbah 5:11). Also, the fig tree was symbolic for messianic peace and plenty (Mic 4:4, Zech 3:10.)

25 tn Although βασιλεύς (basileus) lacks the article it is definite due to contextual and syntactical considerations. See ExSyn 263.

26 sn Nathanael's confession – You are the Son of God; you are the King of Israel – is best understood as a confession of Jesus' messiahship. It has strong allusions to Ps 2:6-7, a well-known messianic psalm. What Nathanael's exact understanding was at this point is hard to determine, but "son of God" was a designation for the Davidic king in the OT, and Nathanael parallels it with King of Israel here.

27 tn Grk "answered and said to him." This has been simplified in the translation to "said to him."

the fig tree, do you believe? You will see greater things than these."[1] 1:51 He continued,[2] "I tell all of you the solemn truth[3] – you will see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man."[4]

Turning Water into Wine

2:1 Now on the third day there was a wedding at Cana[5] in Galilee.[6] Jesus' mother[7] was there, 2:2 and Jesus and his disciples were also invited to the wedding.[8] 2:3 When the wine ran out, Jesus' mother said to him, "They have no wine left."[9] 2:4 Jesus replied,[10] "Woman,[11] why are you saying this to me?[12] My time[13] has not yet come." 2:5 His mother told the servants, "Whatever he tells you, do it."[14]

2:6 Now there were six stone water jars there for Jewish ceremonial washing,[15] each holding twenty or thirty gallons.[16] 2:7 Jesus told the servants,[17] "Fill the water jars with water." So they filled them up to the very top. 2:8 Then he told them, "Now draw some out and take it to the

[1] sn What are the greater things Jesus had in mind? In the narrative this forms an excellent foreshadowing of the miraculous signs which began at Cana of Galilee.

[2] tn Grk "and he said to him."

[3] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[4] sn The title Son of Man appears 13 times in John's Gospel. It is associated especially with the themes of crucifixion (3:14; 8:28), revelation (6:27; 6:53), and eschatological authority (5:27; 9:35). The title as used in John's Gospel has for its background the son of man figure who appears in Dan 7:13-14 and is granted universal regal authority. Thus for the author, the emphasis in this title is not on Jesus' humanity, but on his heavenly origin and divine authority.

[5] map For location see Map1-C3; Map2-D2; Map3-C5.

[6] sn Cana in Galilee was not a very well-known place. It is mentioned only here, in 4:46, and 21:2, and nowhere else in the NT. Josephus (Life 16 [86]) says he once had his quarters there. The probable location is present day Khirbet Cana, 8 mi (14 km) north of Nazareth, or Khirbet Kenna, 4 mi (7 km) northeast of Nazareth.

[7] tn Grk "in Galilee, and Jesus' mother."

[8] sn There is no clue to the identity of the bride and groom, but in all probability either relatives or friends of Jesus' family were involved, since Jesus' mother and both Jesus and his disciples were invited to the celebration. The attitude of Mary in approaching Jesus and asking him to do something when the wine ran out also suggests that familial obligations were involved.

[9] tn The word "left" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

sn They have no wine left. On the backgrounds of this miracle J. D. M. Derrett pointed out among other things the strong element of reciprocity about weddings in the Ancient Near East. It was possible in certain circumstances to take legal action against the man who failed to provide an appropriate wedding gift. The bridegroom and family here might have been involved in a financial liability for failing to provide adequately for their guests ("Water into Wine," BZ 7 [1963]: 80-97). Was Mary asking for a miracle? There is no evidence that Jesus had worked any miracles prior to this (although this is an argument from silence). Some think Mary was only reporting the situation, or (as Calvin thought) asking Jesus to give some godly exhortations to the guests and thus relieve the bridegroom's embarrassment. But the words, and the reply of Jesus in v. 4, seem to imply more. It is not inconceivable that Mary, who had probably been witness to the events of the preceding days, or at least was aware of them, knew that her son's public career was beginning. She also knew the supernatural events surrounding his birth, and the prophetic words of the angel, and of Simeon and Anna in the temple at Jesus' dedication. In short, she had good reason to believe Jesus to be the Messiah, and now his public ministry had begun. In this kind of context, her request does seem more significant.

[10] tn Grk "and Jesus said to her."

[11] sn The term Woman is Jesus' normal, polite way of addressing women (Matt 15:28, Luke 13:12; John 4:21; 8:10; 19:26; 20:15). But it is unusual for a son to address his mother with this term. The custom in both Hebrew (or Aramaic) and Greek would be for a son to use a qualifying adjective or title. Is there significance in Jesus' use here? It probably indicates that a new relationship existed between Jesus and his mother once he had embarked on his public ministry. He was no longer or primarily only her son, but the "Son of Man." This is also suggested by the use of the same term in 19:26 in the scene at the cross, where the beloved disciple is "given" to Mary as her "new" son.

[12] tn Grk "Woman, what to me and to you?" (an idiom). The phrase τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί, γύναι (ti emoi kai soi, gunai) is Semitic in origin. The equivalent Hebrew expression in the Old Testament had two basic meanings: (1) When one person was unjustly bothering another, the injured party could say "What to me and to you?" meaning, "What have I done to you that you should do this to me?" (Judg 11:12, 2 Chr 35:21, 1 Kgs 17:18). (2) When someone was asked to get involved in a matter he felt was no business of his, he could say to the one asking him, "What to me and to you?" meaning, "That is your business, how am I involved?" (2 Kgs 3:13, Hos 14:8). Option (1) implies hostility, while option (2) implies merely disengagement. Mere disengagement is almost certainly to be understood here as better fitting the context (although some of the Greek Fathers took the remark as a rebuke to Mary, such a rebuke is unlikely).

[13] tn Grk "my hour" (referring to the time of Jesus' crucifixion and return to the Father).

sn The Greek word translated time (ὥρα, hōra) occurs in John 2:4; 4:21, 23; 5:25, 28, 29; 7:30; 8:20; 12:23, 27; 13:1; 16:25; and 17:1. It is a reference to the special period in Jesus' life when he was to leave this world and return to the Father (13:1); the hour when the Son of man is glorified (17:1). This is accomplished through his suffering, death, resurrection (and ascension – though this last is not emphasized by John). John 7:30 and 8:20 imply that Jesus' arrest and death are included. John 12:23 and 17:1, referring to the glorification of the Son, imply that the resurrection and ascension are included as part of the "hour." In John 2:4 Jesus' remark to his mother indicates that the time for this self-manifestation has not yet arrived; his identity as Messiah is not yet to be publicly revealed.

[14] tn The pronoun "it" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

[15] tn Grk "for the purification of the Jews."

[16] tn Grk "holding two or three metretes" (about 75 to 115 liters). Each of the pots held 2 or 3 μετρηταί (metrētai). A μετρητῆς (metrētēs) was about 9 gallons (40 liters); thus each jar held 18-27 gallons (80-120 liters) and the total volume of liquid involved was 108-162 gallons (480-720 liters).

sn Significantly, these jars held water for Jewish ceremonial washing (purification rituals). The water of Jewish ritual purification has become the wine of the new messianic age. The wine may also be, after the fashion of Johannine double meanings, a reference to the wine of the Lord's Supper. A number have suggested this, but there does not seem to be anything in the immediate context which compels this; it seems more related to how frequently a given interpreter sees references to the sacraments in John's Gospel as a whole.

[17] tn Grk "them" (it is clear from the context that the servants are addressed).

head steward,"[1] and they did. 2:9 When[2] the head steward tasted the water that had been turned to wine, not knowing where it came from[3] (though the servants who had drawn the water knew), he[4] called the bridegroom 2:10 and said to him, "Everyone[5] serves the good wine first, and then the cheaper[6] wine when the guests[7] are drunk. You have kept the good wine until now!" 2:11 Jesus did this as the first of his miraculous signs,[8] in Cana[9] of Galilee. In this way he revealed[10] his glory, and his disciples believed in him.[11]

Cleansing the Temple

2:12 After this he went down to Capernaum[12] with his mother and brothers[13] and his disciples, and they stayed there a few days. 2:13 Now the Jewish feast of Passover[14] was near, so Jesus went up to Jerusalem.[15]

2:14[16] He found in the temple

[1] tn Or "the master of ceremonies."

[2] tn Grk "And when." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, δέ (de) has not been translated here.

[3] tn Grk "and he did not know where it came from."

[4] tn Grk "the head steward"; here the repetition of the phrase is somewhat redundant in English and the pronoun ("he") is substituted in the translation.

[5] tn Grk "every man" (in a generic sense).

[6] tn Or "poorer."

[7] tn Grk "when they"; the referent (the guests) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[8] tn This sentence in Greek involves an object-complement construction. The force can be either "Jesus did this as," or possibly "Jesus made this to be." The latter translation accents not only Jesus' power but his sovereignty too. Cf. also 4:54 where the same construction occurs.

[9] map For location see Map1-C3; Map2-D2; Map3-C5.

[10] tn Grk "in Cana of Galilee, and he revealed."

[11] tn Or "his disciples trusted in him," or "his disciples put their faith in him."

[12] sn Verse 12 is merely a transitional note in the narrative (although Capernaum does not lie on the direct route to Jerusalem from Cana). Nothing is mentioned in John's Gospel at this point about anything Jesus said or did there (although later his teaching is mentioned, see 6:59). From the synoptics it is clear that Capernaum was a center of Jesus' Galilean ministry and might even be called "his own town" (Matt 9:1). The royal official whose son Jesus healed (John 4:46-54) was from Capernaum. He may have heard Jesus speak there, or picked up the story about the miracle at Cana from one of Jesus' disciples.

[13] sn With respect to Jesus' brothers, the so-called Helvidian view is to be preferred (named after Helvidius, a 4th-century theologian). This view holds that the most natural way to understand the phrase is as a reference to children of Joseph and Mary after the birth of Jesus. Other views are that of Epiphanius (they were children of Joseph by a former marriage) or Jerome (they were cousins). The tradition of Mary's perpetual virginity appeared in the 2nd century and is difficult to explain (as J. H. Bernard, St. John [ICC], 1:85, points out) if some of her other children were prominent members of the early church (e.g., James of Jerusalem). But this is outweighed by the natural sense of the words.

[14] tn Grk "the Passover of the Jews." This is first of at least three (and possibly four) Passovers mentioned in John's Gospel. If it is assumed that the Passovers appear in the Gospel in their chronological order (and following a date of A.D. 33 for the crucifixion), this would be the Passover of the spring of A.D. 30, the first of Jesus' public ministry. There is a clear reference to another Passover in 6:4, and another still in 11:55, 12:1, 13:1, 18:28, 39, and 19:14. The latter would be the Passover of A.D. 33. There is a possibility that 5:1 also refers to a Passover, in which case it would be the second of Jesus' public ministry (A.D. 31), while 6:4 would refer to the third (A.D. 32) and the remaining references would refer to the final Passover at the time of the crucifixion. It is entirely possible, however, that the Passovers occurring in the Fourth Gospel are not intended to be understood as listed in chronological sequence. If the material of the Fourth Gospel originally existed in the form of homilies or sermons by the Apostle John on the life and ministry of Jesus, the present arrangement would not have to be in strict chronological order (it does not explicitly claim to be). In this case the Passover mentioned in 2:13, for example, might actually be later in Jesus' public ministry than it might at first glance appear. This leads, however, to a discussion of an even greater problem in the passage, the relationship of the temple cleansing in John's Gospel to the similar account in the synoptic gospels.

[16] sn John 2:14-22. Does John's account of the temple cleansing describe the same event as the synoptic gospels describe, or a separate event? The other accounts of the cleansing of the temple are Matt 21:12-13; Mark 11:15-17; and Luke 19:45-46. None are as long as the Johannine account. The fullest of the synoptic accounts is Mark's. John's account differs from Mark's in the mention of sheep and oxen, the mention of the whip of cords, the Greek word κερματιστῆς (kermatistēs) for money changer (the synoptics use κολλυβιστῆς [kollubistēs], which John mentions in 2:15), the scattering of the coins (2:15), and the command by Jesus, "Take these things away from here!" The word for overturned in John is ἀναστρέφω (anastrephō), while Matthew and Mark use καταστρέφω (katastrephō; Luke does not mention the moneychangers at all). The synoptics all mention that Jesus quoted Isa 56:7 followed by Jer 7:11. John mentions no citation of scripture at all, but says that later the disciples remembered Ps 69:9. John does not mention, as does Mark, Jesus' prohibition on carrying things through the temple (i.e., using it for a shortcut). But the most important difference is one of time: In John the cleansing appears as the first great public act of Jesus' ministry, while in the synoptics it is virtually the last. The most common solution of the problem, which has been endlessly discussed among NT scholars, is to say there was only one cleansing, and that it took place, as the synoptics record it, at the end of Jesus' ministry. In the synoptics it appears to be the event that finalized the opposition of the high priest, and precipitated the arrest of Jesus. According to this view, John's placing of the event at the opening of Jesus' ministry is due to his general approach; it was fitting 'theologically' for Jesus to open his ministry this way, so this is the way John records it. Some have overstated the case for one cleansing and John's placing of it at the opening of Jesus' public ministry, however. For example W. Barclay stated: "John, as someone has said, is more interested in the truth than in the facts. He was not interested to tell men when Jesus cleansed the Temple; he was supremely interested in telling men that Jesus did cleanse the Temple" (John [DSBS], 94). But this is not the impression one gets by a reading of John's Gospel: The evangelist seems to go out of his way to give details and facts, including notes of time and place. To argue as Barclay does that John is interested in truth apart from the facts is to set up a false dichotomy. Why should one have to assume, in any case, that there could have been only one cleansing of the temple? This account in John is found in a large section of nonsynoptic material. Apart from the work of John the Baptist – and even this is markedly different from the references in the synoptics – nothing else in the first five chapters of John's Gospel is found in any of the synoptics. It is certainly not impossible that John took one isolated episode from the conclusion of Jesus' earthly ministry and inserted it into his own narrative in a place which seemed appropriate according to his purposes. But in view of the differences between John and the synoptics, in both wording and content, as well as setting and time, it is at least possible that the courts[1] those who were selling oxen and sheep and doves, and the money changers sitting at tables.[2] 2:15 So he made a whip of cords[3] and drove them all out of the temple courts,[4] with the sheep and the oxen. He scattered the coins of the money changers[5] and overturned their tables. 2:16 To those who sold the doves he said, "Take these things away from here! Do not make[6] my Father's house a marketplace!"[7] 2:17 His disciples remembered that it was written, "Zeal[8] for your house will devour me."[9]

2:18 So then the Jewish leaders[10] responded,[11] "What sign can you show us, since you are doing these things?"[12] 2:19 Jesus replied,[13] "Destroy[14] this temple and in three days I will raise it up again." 2:20 Then the Jewish leaders[15] said to him, "This temple has been under construction[16] for forty-six years,[17] and are you going to raise it up in three days?" 2:21 But Jesus[18] was speaking about the temple of his event in question actually occurred twice (unless one begins with the presupposition that the Fourth Gospel is nonhistorical anyway). In support of two separate cleansings of the temple, it has been suggested that Jesus' actions on this occasion were not permanent in their result, and after (probably) 3 years the status quo in the temple courts had returned to normal. And at this time early in Jesus' ministry, he was virtually unknown. Such an action as he took on this occasion would have created a stir, and evoked the response John records in 2:18-22, but that is probably about all, especially if Jesus' actions met with approval among part of the populace. But later in Jesus' ministry, when he was well-known, and vigorously opposed by the high-priestly party in Jerusalem, his actions might have brought forth another, harsher response. It thus appears possible to argue for two separate cleansings of the temple as well as a single one relocated by John to suit his own purposes. Which then is more probable? On the whole, more has been made of the differences between John's account and the synoptic accounts than perhaps should have been. After all, the synoptic accounts also differ considerably from one another, yet few scholars would be willing to posit four cleansings of the temple as an explanation for this. While it is certainly possible that the author did not intend by his positioning of the temple cleansing to correct the synoptics' timing of the event, but to highlight its significance for the course of Jesus' ministry, it still appears somewhat more probable that John has placed the event he records in the approximate period of Jesus' public ministry in which it did occur, that is, within the first year or so of Jesus' public ministry. The statement of the Jewish authorities recorded by the author (this temple has been under construction for forty-six years) would tend to support an earlier rather than a later date for the temple cleansing described by John, since 46 years from the beginning of construction on Herod's temple in ca. 19 B.C. (the date varies somewhat in different sources) would be around A.D. 27. This is not conclusive proof, however.

[1] tn Grk "in the temple."

sn The merchants (those who were selling) would have been located in the Court of the Gentiles.

[2] tn Grk "the money changers sitting"; the words "at tables" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[3] tc Several witnesses, two of which are quite ancient (𝔓66.75 L N f^1 33 565 892 1241 al lat), have ὡς (hōs, "like") before φραγέλλιον (phragellion, "whip"). A decision based on external evidence would be difficult to make because the shorter reading also has excellent witnesses, as well as the majority, its side (𝔎 A B Θ Ψ f^{13} 𝔐 co). Internal evidence, though, leans toward the shorter reading. Scribes tended to add to the text, and the addition of ὡς here clearly softens the assertion of the evangelist: Instead of making a whip of cords, Jesus made "[something] like a whip of cords."

[4] tn Grk "the temple."

[5] sn Because of the imperial Roman portraits they carried, Roman denarii and Attic drachmas were not permitted to be used in paying the half-shekel temple-tax (the Jews considered the portraits idolatrous). The money changers exchanged these coins for legal Tyrian coinage at a small profit.

[6] tn Or (perhaps) "Stop making."

[7] tn Or "a house of merchants" (an allusion to Zech 14:21).

sn A marketplace. Zech 14:20-21, in context, is clearly a picture of the messianic kingdom. The Hebrew word translated "Canaanite" may also be translated "merchant" or "trader." Read in this light, Zech 14:21 states that there will be no merchant in the house of the Lord in that day (the day of the Lord, at the establishment of the messianic kingdom). And what would Jesus' words (and actions) in cleansing the temple have suggested to the observers? That Jesus was fulfilling messianic expectations would have been obvious – especially to the disciples, who had just seen the miracle at Cana with all its messianic implications.

[8] tn Or "Fervent devotion to your house."

[9] sn A quotation from Ps 69:9.

[10] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. Here the author refers to the authorities or leaders in Jerusalem. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.)

[11] tn Grk "answered and said to him."

[12] sn The request "What sign can you show us" by Jesus' adversaries was a request for a defense of his actions – a mark of divine authentication. Whether this was a request for a miracle is not entirely clear. Jesus never obliged such a request. Yet, ironically, the only sign the Jewish leadership will get is that predicted by Jesus in 2:19 – his crucifixion and resurrection. Cf. the "sign of Jonah" in the synoptics (Matt 12:39, 40; Luke 11:29-32).

[13] tn Grk "answered and said to them."

[14] tn The imperative here is really more than a simple conditional imperative (= "if you destroy"); its semantic force here is more like the ironical imperative found in the prophets (Amos 4:4, Isa 8:9) = "Go ahead and do this and see what happens."

[15] tn See the note on this phrase in v. 18.

[16] tn A close parallel to the aorist οἰκοδομήθη (oikodomēthē) can be found in Ezra 5:16 (LXX), where it is clear from the following verb that the construction had not yet been completed. Thus the phrase has been translated "This temple has been under construction for forty-six years." Some, however, see the term ναός (naos) here as referring only to the sanctuary and the aorist verb as consummative, so that the meaning would be "this temple was built forty-six years ago" (so ExSyn 560-61). Ultimately in context the logic of the authorities' reply appears to fit more naturally if it compares length of time for original construction with length of time to reconstruct it.

[17] sn According to Josephus (Ant. 15.11.1 [15.380]), work on this temple was begun in the 18th year of Herod the Great's reign, which would have been ca. 19 B.C. (The reference in the Ant. is probably more accurate than the date given in J. W. 1.21.1 [1.401]). Forty-six years later would be around the Passover of A.D. 27/28.

[18] tn Grk "that one"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity. This Greek term is frequently used as a way of referring to Jesus in the Johannine letters (cf. 1 John 2:6; 3:3, 5, 7, 16; 4:17).

body.[1] 2:22 So after he was raised from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this, and they believed the scripture[2] and the saying[3] that Jesus had spoken.

Jesus at the Passover Feast

2:23 Now while Jesus[4] was in Jerusalem[5] at the feast of the Passover, many people believed in his name because they saw the miraculous signs he was doing.[6] 2:24 But Jesus would not entrust himself to them, because he knew all people.[7] 2:25 He did not need anyone to testify about man,[8] for he knew what was in man.[9]

Conversation with Nicodemus

3:1 Now a certain man, a Pharisee[10] named Nicodemus, who was a member of the Jewish ruling council,[11] 3:2 came to Jesus[12] at night[13] and said to him, "Rabbi, we know that you are a teacher who has come from God. For no one could perform the miraculous signs[14] that you do unless God is with him." 3:3 Jesus replied,[15] "I tell you the solemn truth,[16] unless a person is born from above,[17] he cannot see the kingdom of God."[18] 3:4 Nicodemus said to him, "How can a man be born when he is old? He cannot enter his mother's womb and be born a second time, can he?"[19]

3:5 Jesus answered, "I tell you the solemn truth,[20] unless a person is born of water and

[1] tn The genitive "of his body" (τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, tou sōmatos autou) is a genitive of apposition, clarifying which temple Jesus was referring to. Thus, Jesus not only was referring to his physical resurrection, but also to his participation in the resurrection process. The New Testament thus records the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as all performing the miracle of Christ's resurrection.

sn Jesus was speaking about the temple of his body. For the author, the temple is not just the building, it is Jesus' resurrected body. Compare the nonlocalized worship mentioned in John 4:21-23, and also Rev 21:22 (there is to be no temple in the New Jerusalem; the Lord and the Lamb are its temple). John points to the fact that, as the place where men go in order to meet God, the temple has been supplanted and replaced by Jesus himself, in whose resurrected person people may now encounter God (see John 1:18, 14:6).

[2] sn They believed the scripture is probably an anaphoric reference to Ps 69:9 (69:10 LXX), quoted in John 2:17 above. Presumably the disciples did not remember Ps 69:9 on the spot, but it was a later insight.

[3] tn Or "statement"; Grk "word."

[4] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[5] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[6] sn Because they saw the miraculous signs he was doing. The issue here is not whether their faith was genuine or not, but what its object was. These individuals, after seeing the miracles, believed Jesus to be the Messiah. They most likely saw in him a political-eschatological figure of some sort. That does not, however, mean that their concept of "Messiah" was the same as Jesus' own, or the author's.

[7] tn Grk "all." The word "people" has been supplied for clarity, since the Greek word πάντας (pantas) is masculine plural (thus indicating people rather than things).

[8] tn The masculine form has been retained here in the translation to maintain the connection with "a man of the Pharisees" in 3:1, with the understanding that the reference is to people of both genders.

[9] tn See previous note on "man" in this verse.

[10] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[11] tn Grk "a ruler of the Jews" (denoting a member of the Sanhedrin, the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews).

[12] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] tn Or "during the night."

sn Possibly Nicodemus came…at night because he was afraid of public association with Jesus, or he wanted a lengthy discussion without interruptions; no explanation for the timing of the interview is given by the author. But the timing is significant for John in terms of the light-darkness motif – compare John 9:4, 11:10, 13:30 (especially), 19:39, and 21:3. Out of the darkness of his life and religiosity Nicodemus came to the Light of the world. The author probably had multiple meanings or associations in mind here, as is often the case.

[14] sn The reference to signs (σημεῖα, sēmeia) forms a link with John 2:23-25. Those people in Jerusalem believed in Jesus because of the signs he had performed. Nicodemus had apparently seen them too. But for Nicodemus all the signs meant is that Jesus was a great teacher sent from God. His approach to Jesus was well-intentioned but theologically inadequate; he had failed to grasp the messianic implications of the miraculous signs.

[15] tn Grk "answered and said to him."

[16] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[17] tn The word ἄνωθεν (anōthen) has a double meaning, either "again" (in which case it is synonymous with παλίν [palin]) or "from above" (BDAG 92 s.v. ἄνωθεν). This is a favorite technique of the author of the Fourth Gospel, and it is lost in almost all translations at this point. John uses the word 5 times, in 3:3, 7; 3:31; 19:11 and 23. In the latter 3 cases the context makes clear that it means "from above." Here (3:3, 7) it could mean either, but the primary meaning intended by Jesus is "from above." Nicodemus apparently understood it the other way, which explains his reply, "How can a man be born when he is old? He can't enter his mother's womb a second time and be born, can he?" The author uses the technique of the "misunderstood question" often to bring out a particularly important point: Jesus says something which is misunderstood by the disciples or (as here) someone else, which then gives Jesus the opportunity to explain more fully and in more detail what he really meant.

sn Or born again. The Greek word ἄνωθεν (anōthen) can mean both "again" and "from above," giving rise to Nicodemus' misunderstanding about a second physical birth (v. 4).

[18] sn What does Jesus' statement about not being able to see the kingdom of God mean within the framework of John's Gospel? John uses the word kingdom (βασιλεία, basileia) only 5 times (3:3, 5; 18:36 [3x]). Only here is it qualified with the phrase of God. The fact that John does not stress the concept of the kingdom of God does not mean it is absent from his theology, however. Remember the messianic implications found in John 2, both the wedding and miracle at Cana and the cleansing of the temple. For Nicodemus, the term must surely have brought to mind the messianic kingdom which Messiah was supposed to bring. But Nicodemus had missed precisely this point about who Jesus was. It was the Messiah himself with whom Nicodemus was speaking. Whatever Nicodemus understood, it is clear that the point is this: He misunderstood Jesus' words. He over-literalized them, and thought Jesus was talking about repeated physical birth, when he was in fact referring to new spiritual birth.

[19] tn The grammatical structure of the question in Greek presupposes a negative reply.

spirit,[1] he cannot enter the kingdom of God. 3:6 What is born of the flesh is flesh,[2] and what is born of the Spirit is spirit. 3:7 Do not be amazed that I said to you, 'You must all[3] be born from above.'[4] 3:8 The wind[5] blows wherever it will, and you hear the sound it makes, but do not know where it comes from and where it is going. So it is with everyone who is born of the Spirit."[6]

3:9 Nicodemus replied,[7] "How can these things be?"[8] 3:10 Jesus answered,[9] "Are you the teacher of Israel and yet you don't understand these things?[10] 3:11 I tell you the solemn truth,[11] we speak about what we know and testify about what we have seen, but[12] you people[13] do not accept our testimony.[14] 3:12 If I have told you people[15] about earthly things and you don't believe, how will you believe if I tell you about heavenly things?[16] 3:13 No one[17] has ascended[18]

sn Jesus' somewhat enigmatic statement points to the necessity of being born "from above," because water and wind/spirit/Spirit come from above. Isaiah 44:3-5 and Ezek 37:9-10 are pertinent examples of water and wind as life-giving symbols of the Spirit of God in his work among people. Both occur in contexts that deal with the future restoration of Israel as a nation prior to the establishment of the messianic kingdom. It is therefore particularly appropriate that Jesus should introduce them in a conversation about entering the kingdom of God. Note that the Greek word πνεύματος is anarthrous (has no article) in v. 5. This does not mean that spirit in the verse should be read as a direct reference to the Holy Spirit, but that both water and wind are figures (based on passages in the OT, which Nicodemus, the teacher of Israel should have known) that represent the regenerating work of the Spirit in the lives of men and women.

[2] sn What is born of the flesh is flesh, i.e., what is born of physical heritage is physical. (It is interesting to compare this terminology with that of the dialogue in John 4, especially 4:23, 24.) For John the "flesh" (σάρξ, sarx) emphasizes merely the weakness and mortality of the creature – a neutral term, not necessarily sinful as in Paul. This is confirmed by the reference in John 1:14 to the Logos becoming "flesh." The author avoids associating sinfulness with the incarnate Christ.

[3] tn "All" has been supplied to indicate the plural pronoun in the Greek text.

[4] tn Or "born again." The same Greek word with the same double meaning occurs in v. 3.

[5] tn The same Greek word, πνεύματος (pneumatos), may be translated "wind" or "spirit."

[6] sn Again, the physical illustrates the spiritual, although the force is heightened by the word-play here on wind-spirit (see the note on wind at the beginning of this verse). By the end of the verse, however, the final usage of πνεύματος (pneumatos) refers to the Holy Spirit.

[7] tn Grk "Nicodemus answered and said to him."

[8] sn "How can these things be?" is Nicodemus' answer. It is clear that at this time he has still not grasped what Jesus is saying. Note also that this is the last appearance of Nicodemus in the dialogue. Having served the purpose of the author, at this point he disappears from the scene. As a character in the narrative, he has served to illustrate the prevailing Jewish misunderstanding of Jesus' teaching about the necessity of a new, spiritual birth from above. Whatever parting words Nicodemus might have had with Jesus, the author does not record them.

[9] tn Grk "Jesus answered and said to him."

[10] sn Jesus' question "Are you the teacher of Israel and yet you don't understand these things?" implies that Nicodemus had enough information at his disposal from the OT scriptures to have understood Jesus' statements about the necessity of being born from above by the regenerating work of the Spirit. Isa 44:3-5 and Ezek 37:9-10 are passages Nicodemus might have known which would have given him insight into Jesus' words. Another significant passage which contains many of these concepts is Prov 30:4-5.

[11] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[12] tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "but" to show the contrast present in the context.

[13] tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied in the translation to indicate that the verb is second person plural (referring to more than Nicodemus alone).

[14] sn Note the remarkable similarity of Jesus' testimony to the later testimony of the Apostle John himself in 1 John 1:2: "And we have seen and testify and report to you the eternal life which was with the Father and was revealed to us." This is only one example of how thoroughly the author's own thoughts were saturated with the words of Jesus (and also how difficult it is to distinguish the words of Jesus from the words of the author in the Fourth Gospel).

[15] tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to indicate that the verb is second person plural (referring to more than Nicodemus alone).

[16] sn Obviously earthly things and heavenly things are in contrast, but what is the contrast? What are earthly things which Jesus has just spoken to Nicodemus? And through him to others – this is not the first instance of the plural pronoun, see v. 7, you must all. Since Nicodemus began with a plural (we know, v. 2) Jesus continues it, and through Nicodemus addresses a broader audience. It makes most sense to take this as a reference to the things Jesus has just said (and the things he is about to say, vv. 13-15). If this is the case (and it seems the most natural explanation) then earthly things are not necessarily strictly physical things, but are so called because they take place on earth, in contrast to things like v. 16, which take place in heaven. Some have added the suggestion that the things are called earthly because physical analogies (birth, wind, water) are used to describe them. This is possible, but it seems more probable that Jesus calls these things earthly because they happen on earth (even though they are spiritual things). In the context, taking earthly things as referring to the words Jesus has just spoken fits with the fact that Nicodemus did not believe. And he would not after hearing heavenly things either, unless he first believed in the earthly things – which included the necessity of a regenerating work from above, by the Holy Spirit.

[17] tn Grk "And no one."

[18] sn The verb ascended is a perfect tense in Greek (ἀναβέβηκεν, anabebēken) which seems to look at a past, completed event. (This is not as much of a problem for those who take Jesus' words to end at v. 12, and these words to be a comment by the author, looking back on Jesus' ascension.) As a saying of Jesus, these words are a bit harder to explain. Note, however, the lexical similarities with 1:51: "ascending," "descending," and "son of man." Here, though, the ascent and descent is accomplished by the Son himself, not the angels as in 1:51. There is no need to limit this saying to Jesus' ascent following the resurrection, however; the point of the Jacob story (Gen 28), which seems to be the background for 1:51, is the freedom of communication and relationship between God and men (a major theme of John's Gospel). This communication comes through the angels in Gen 28 (and John 1:51), but here (most appropriately) it comes directly through the Son of Man. Although Jesus could be referring to a prior ascent, after an appearance as the preincarnate Son of Man, more likely he is simply pointing out that no one from earth has ever gone up to heaven and come down again. The Son, who has come down from heaven, is the only one who has been 'up' there. In both Jewish intertestamental literature and later rabbinic accounts, Moses is portrayed as ascending to heaven to receive the Torah and descending to distribute it to men (e.g., Targum Ps 68:19.) In contrast to these Jewish legends, the Son is the only one who has ever made the ascent and descent.

into heaven except the one who descended from heaven – the Son of Man.[1] 3:14 Just as[2] Moses lifted up the serpent[3] in the wilderness,[4] so must the Son of Man be lifted up,[5] 3:15 so that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life.”[6]

3:16 For this is the way[7] God loved the world: He gave his one and only[8] Son, so that everyone who believes in him will not perish[9] but have eternal life.[10] 3:17 For God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world,[11] but that the world should be saved through him. 3:18 The one who believes in him is not condemned.[12] The one who does not believe has been condemned[13] already, because he has not believed in the name of the one and only[14] Son of God. 3:19 Now this is the basis for judging:[15] that the light has come into the world and

A few others have variations on this phrase, such as “who was in heaven” (e sy^{c}), or “the one who is from heaven” (0141 pc sy^{s}). The witnesses normally considered the best, along with several others, lack the phrase in its entirety ($𝔓^{66,75}$ ℵ B L T W^{s} 083 086 33 1241 pc co). On the one hand, if the reading ὁ ὢν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ is authentic it may suggest that while Jesus was speaking to Nicodemus he spoke of himself as in heaven even while he was on earth. If that is the case, one could see why variations from this hard saying arose: “who was in heaven,” “the one who is from heaven,” and omission of the clause. At the same time, such a saying could be interpreted (though with difficulty) as part of the narrator’s comments rather than Jesus’ statement to Nicodemus, alleviating the problem. And if v. 13 was viewed in early times as the evangelist’s statement, “the one who is in heaven” could have crept into the text through a marginal note. Other internal evidence suggests that this saying may be authentic. The adjectival participle, ὁ ὤν, is used in the Fourth Gospel more than any other NT book (though the Apocalypse comes in a close second), and frequently with reference to Jesus (1:18; 6:46; 8:47). It may be looking back to the LXX of Exod 3:14 (ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ὤν). Especially since this exact construction is not necessary to communicate the location of the Son of Man, its presence in many witnesses here may suggest authenticity. Further, John uses the singular of οὐρανός (ouranos, “heaven”) in all 18 instances of the word in this Gospel, and all but twice with the article (only 1:32 and 6:58 are anarthrous, and even in the latter there is significant testimony to the article). At the same time, the witnesses that lack this clause are very weighty and must not be discounted. Generally speaking, if other factors are equal, the reading of such MSS should be preferred. And internally, it could be argued that ὁ ὤν is the most concise way to speak of the Son of Man in heaven at that time (without the participle the point would be more ambiguous). Further, the articular singular οὐρανός is already used twice in this verse, thus sufficiently prompting scribes to add the same in the longer reading. This combination of factors suggests that ὁ ὢν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ is not a genuine Johannism. Further intrinsic evidence against the longer reading relates to the evangelist’s purposes: If he intended v. 13 to be his own comments rather than Jesus’ statement, his switch back to Jesus’ words in v. 14 (for the lifting up of the Son of Man is still seen as in the future) seems inexplicable. The reading “who is in heaven” thus seems to be too hard. All things considered, as intriguing as the longer reading is, it seems almost surely to have been a marginal gloss added inadvertently to the text in the process of transmission. For an argument in favor of the longer reading, see David Alan Black, “The Text of John 3:13,” GTJ 6 (1985): 49-66.

sn See the note on the title Son of Man in 1:51.

2 tn Grk “And just as.”

3 sn Or the snake, referring to the bronze serpent mentioned in Num 21:9.

4 sn An allusion to Num 21:5-9.

5 sn So must the Son of Man be lifted up. This is ultimately a prediction of Jesus’ crucifixion. Nicodemus could not have understood this, but John’s readers, the audience to whom the Gospel is addressed, certainly could have (compare the wording of John 12:32). In John, being lifted up refers to one continuous action of ascent, beginning with the cross but ending at the right hand of the Father. Step 1 is Jesus’ death; step 2 is his resurrection; and step 3 is the ascension back to heaven. It is the upward swing of the “pendulum” which began with the incarnation, the descent of the Word become flesh from heaven to earth (cf. Paul in Phil 2:5-11). See also the note on the title Son of Man in 1:51.

6 tn This is the first use of the term ζωὴν αἰώνιον (zōēn aiōnion) in the Gospel, although ζωή (zōē) in chap. 1 is to be understood in the same way without the qualifying αἰώνιος (aiōnios).

sn Some interpreters extend the quotation of Jesus’ words through v. 21.

7 tn Or “this is how much”; or “in this way.” The Greek adverb οὕτως (houtōs) can refer (1) to the degree to which God loved the world, that is, to such an extent or so much that he gave his own Son (see R. E. Brown, John [AB], 1:133-34; D. A. Carson, John, 204) or (2) simply to the manner in which God loved the world, i.e., by sending his own son (see R. H. Gundry and R. W. Howell, “The Sense and Syntax of John 3:14-17 with Special Reference to the Use of Οὕτως...ὥστε in John 3:16,” NovT 41 [1999]: 24-39). Though the term more frequently refers to the manner in which something is done (see BDAG 741-42 s.v. οὕτω/οὕτως), the following clause involving ὥστε (hōste) plus the indicative (which stresses actual, but [usually] unexpected result) emphasizes the greatness of the gift God has given. With this in mind, then, it is likely (3) that John is emphasizing both the degree to which God loved the world as well as the manner in which He chose to express that love. This is in keeping with John’s style of using double entendre or double meaning. Thus, the focus of the Greek construction here is on the nature of God’s love, addressing its mode, intensity, and extent.

8 tn Although this word is often translated “only begotten,” such a translation is misleading, since in English it appears to express a metaphysical relationship. The word in Greek was used of an only child (a son [Luke 7:12, 9:38] or a daughter [Luke 8:42]). It was also used of something unique (only one of its kind) such as the mythological Phoenix (1 Clement 25:2). From here it passes easily to a description of Isaac (Heb 11:17 and Josephus, Ant. 1.13.1 [1.222]) who was not Abraham’s only son, but was one-of-a-kind because he was the child of the promise. Thus the word means “one-of-a-kind” and is reserved for Jesus in the Johannine literature of the NT. While all Christians are children of God (τέκνα θεοῦ, tekna theou), Jesus is God’s Son in a unique, one-of-a-kind sense. The word is used in this way in all its uses in the Gospel of John (1:14, 1:18, 3:16, and 3:18).

9 tn In John the word ἀπόλλυμι (apollumi) can mean either (1) to be lost (2) to perish or be destroyed, depending on the context.

10 sn The alternatives presented are only two (again, it is typical of Johannine thought for this to be presented in terms of polar opposites): perish or have eternal life.

11 sn That is, “to judge the world to be guilty and liable to punishment.”

12 tn Grk “judged.”

13 tn Grk “judged.”

14 tn See the note on the term “one and only” in 3:16.

15 tn Or “this is the reason for God judging,” or “this is how judgment works.”

people[1] loved the darkness rather than the light, because their deeds were evil. 3:20 For everyone who does evil deeds hates the light and does not come to the light, so that their deeds will not be exposed. 3:21 But the one who practices the truth comes to the light, so that it may be plainly evident that his deeds have been done in God.[2]

Further Testimony About Jesus by John the Baptist

3:22 After this,[3] Jesus and his disciples came into Judean territory, and there he spent time with them and was baptizing. 3:23 John[4] was also baptizing at Aenon near Salim,[5] because water was plentiful there, and people were coming[6] to him[7] and being baptized. 3:24 (For John had not yet been thrown into prison.)[8]

3:25 Now a dispute came about between some of John's disciples and a certain Jew[9] concerning ceremonial washing.[10] 3:26 So they came to John and said to him, "Rabbi, the one who was with you on the other side of the

[1] tn Grk "and men," but in a generic sense, referring to people of both genders (as "everyone" in v. 20 makes clear).

[2] sn John 3:16-21 provides an introduction to the (so-called) "realized" eschatology of the Fourth Gospel: Judgment has come; eternal life may be possessed now, in the present life, as well as in the future. The terminology "realized eschatology" was originally coined by E. Haenchen and used by J. Jeremias in discussion with C. H. Dodd, but is now characteristically used to describe Dodd's own formulation. See L. Goppelt, Theology of the New Testament, 1:54, note 10, and R. E. Brown (John [AB], 1:cxvii-cxviii) for further discussion. Especially important to note is the element of choice portrayed in John's Gospel. If there is a twofold reaction to Jesus in John's Gospel, it should be emphasized that that reaction is very much dependent on a person's choice, a choice that is influenced by his way of life, whether his deeds are wicked or are done in God (John 3:20-21). For John there is virtually no trace of determinism at the surface. Only when one looks beneath the surface does one find statements like "no one can come to me, unless the Father who sent me draws him" (John 6:44).

[3] tn This section is related loosely to the preceding by μετὰ ταῦτα (meta tauta). This constitutes an indefinite temporal reference; the intervening time is not specified.

[4] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[5] tn The precise locations of Αἰνών (Ainōn) and Σαλείμ (Saleim) are unknown. Three possibilities are suggested: (1) In Perea, which is in Transjordan (cf. 1:28). Perea is just across the river from Judea. (2) In the northern Jordan Valley, on the west bank some 8 miles [13 km] south of Scythopolis. But with the Jordan River so close, the reference to abundant water (3:23) seems superfluous. (3) Thus Samaria has been suggested. 4 miles (6.6 km) east of Shechem is a town called Salim, and 8 miles (13 km) northeast of Salim lies modern Ainun. In the general vicinity are many springs. Because of the meanings of the names (Αἰνών = "springs" in Aramaic and Σαλείμ = Salem, "peace") some have attempted to allegorize here that John the Baptist is near salvation. Obviously there is no need for this. It is far more probable that the author has in mind real places, even if their locations cannot be determined with certainty.

[6] tn Or "people were continually coming."

[7] tn The words "to him" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[8] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[9] tc Was this dispute between the Baptist's disciples and an individual Judean (Ἰουδαίου, Ioudaiou) or representatives of the Jewish authorities (Ἰουδαίων, Ioudaiōn)? There is good external support for the plural Ἰουδαίων (𝔓66 א* Θ $f^{1.13}$ 565 al latt), but the external evidence for the singular Ἰουδαίου is slightly stronger (𝔓75 א2 A B L Ψ 33 1241 the majority of Byzantine minuscules and others)).

tn Or "a certain Judean." Here BDAG 478 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.a states, "Judean (with respect to birth, nationality, or cult)." If the emphasis is simply on the individual's origin, "Judean" would be preferable since it designates a nationality or place of origin. However, the mention of ceremonial washing in the context suggests the dispute was religious in nature, so "Jew" has been retained in the translation here.

[10] tn Or "ceremonial cleansing," or "purification."

sn What was the controversy concerning ceremonial washing? It is not clear. Some have suggested that it was over the relative merits of the baptism of Jesus and John. But what about the ceremonial nature of the washing? There are so many unanswered questions here that even R. E. Brown (who does not usually resort to dislocations in the text as a solution to difficulties) proposes that this dialogue originally took place immediately after 1:19-34 and before the wedding at Cana. (Why else the puzzled hostility of the disciples over the crowds coming to Jesus?) Also, the synoptics imply John was imprisoned before Jesus began his Galilean ministry. At any rate, there is no reason to rearrange the material here – it occurs in this place for a very good reason. As far as the author is concerned, it serves as a further continuation of the point made to Nicodemus, that is, the necessity of being born "from above" (3:3). Note that John the Baptist describes Jesus as "the one who comes from heaven" in 3:31 (ἄνωθεν [anōthen], the same word as in 3:3). There is another lexical tie to preceding material: The subject of the dispute, ceremonial washing (3:25), calls to mind the six stone jars of water changed to wine at the wedding feast in 2:6, put there for "Jewish ceremonial washing." This section ultimately culminates and concludes ideas begun in chap. 2 and continued in chap. 3. Although the author does not supply details, one scenario would be this: The disciples of John, perplexed after this disagreement with an individual Jew (or with the Jewish authorities), came to John and asked about the fact that Jesus was baptizing and more and more were coming to him. John had been preaching a baptism of repentance for forgiveness of sin (see Mark 1:4, Luke 3:3). Possibly what the Jew(s) reported to John's disciples was that Jesus was now setting aside the Jewish purification rituals as unnecessary. To John's disciples this might also be interpreted as: (a) a falling away from Judaism, and (b) a break with John's own teaching. That Jesus could have said this is very evident from many incidents in his ministry in all the gospels. The thrust would be that outward cleansing (that is, observance of purification rituals) was not what made a person clean. A new heart within (that is, being born from above) is what makes a person clean. So John's disciples came to him troubled about an apparent contradiction in doctrine though the explicit problem they mentioned is that Jesus was baptizing and multitudes were coming to him. (Whether Jesus was or was not baptizing really wasn't the issue though, and John the Baptist knew that because he didn't mention it in his reply. In 4:2 the author says that Jesus was not baptizing, but his disciples. That reference would seem to cover this incident as well, and so the disciples of John are just reporting what they have heard, or thought they heard.) The real point at issue is the authority of Jesus to "overturn" the system of ritual purification within Judaism. John replied to this question of the authority of Jesus in 3:27-36. In 3:27-30 he reassured his disciples, reminding them that if more people were coming to Jesus, it did not threaten him at all, because "heaven" had ordained it to be so (v. 27). (After all, some of these very disciples of John had presumably heard him tell the Jewish delegation that he was not the Messiah but was sent before him, mentioned in John 1.) Then John compared himself to the friend of the bridegroom who stands by and yet participates in the bridegroom's joy (v. 29). John was completely content in his own position as forerunner and preparer of the way.

Jordan River,[1] about whom you testified – see, he is baptizing, and everyone is flocking to him!"

3:27 John replied,[2] "No one can receive anything unless it has been given to him from heaven. 3:28 You yourselves can testify that I said, 'I am not the Christ,'[3] but rather, 'I have been sent before him.' 3:29 The one who has the bride is the bridegroom. The friend of the bridegroom, who stands by and listens for him, rejoices greatly[4] when he hears the bridegroom's voice. This then is my joy, and it is complete.[5] 3:30 He must become more important while I become less important."[6]

3:31 The one who comes from above is superior to all.[7] The one who is from the earth belongs to the earth and speaks about earthly things.[8] The one who comes from heaven[9] is superior to all.[10] 3:32 He testifies about what he has seen and heard, but no one accepts his testimony. 3:33 The one who has accepted his testimony has confirmed clearly that God is truthful.[11] 3:34 For the one whom God has sent[12] speaks the words of God, for he does not give the Spirit sparingly.[13] 3:35 The Father loves the Son and has placed all things under his authority.[14] 3:36 The one who believes in the Son has eternal life. The one who rejects[15] the Son will not see life, but God's wrath[16] remains[17] on him.

Departure From Judea

4:1 Now when Jesus[18] knew that the Pharisees[19] had heard that he[20] was winning[21] and baptizing more disciples than John 4:2 (although Jesus himself was not baptizing, but his disciples were),[22] 4:3 he left Judea and set out once more for Galilee.[23]

Conversation With a Samaritan Woman

4:4 But he had[24] to pass through Samaria.[25]

[1] tn "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

[2] tn Grk "answered and said."

[3] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[4] tn Grk "rejoices with joy" (an idiom).

[5] tn Grk "Therefore this my joy is fulfilled."

[6] sn Some interpreters extend the quotation of John the Baptist's words through v. 36.

[7] tn Or "is above all."

[8] tn Grk "speaks from the earth."

[9] sn The one who comes from heaven refers to Christ. As in John 1:1, the Word's preexistence is indicated here.

[10] tc $\mathfrak{P}^{75}$ ℵ* D f^{1} 565 as well as several versions and fathers lack the phrase "is superior to all" (ἐπάνω πάντων ἐστίν, epanō pantōn estin). This effectively joins the last sentence of v. 31 with v. 32: "The one who comes from heaven testifies about what he has seen and heard, but no one accepts his testimony." On the other side, the phrase may have been deleted because of perceived redundancy, since it duplicates what is said earlier in the verse. The witnesses that include ἐπάνω πάντων ἐστίν in both places are weighty and widespread ($\mathfrak{P}^{36vid,66}$ ℵ^{2} A B L W^{s} Θ Ψ 083 086 f^{13} 33 𝔐 lat sy^{s,p,h} bo). On balance, the longer reading should probably be considered authentic.

tn Or "is above all."

[11] tn Or "is true."

[12] tn That is, Christ.

[13] tn Grk "for not by measure does he give the Spirit" (an idiom). Leviticus Rabbah 15:2 states: "The Holy Spirit rested on the prophets by measure." Jesus is contrasted to this. The Spirit rests upon him without measure.

[14] tn Grk "has given all things into his hand" (an idiom).

[15] tn Or "refuses to believe," or "disobeys."

[16] tn Or "anger because of evil," or "punishment."

[17] tn Or "resides."

[18] tc Several early and important witnesses, along with the majority of later ones ($\mathfrak{P}^{66c,75}$ A B C L W^{s} Ψ 083 f^{13} 33 𝔐 sa), have κύριος (kurios, "Lord") here instead of Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus"). As significant as this external support is, the internal evidence seems to be on the side of Ἰησοῦς. "Jesus" is mentioned two more times in the first two verses of chapter four in a way that is stylistically awkward (so much so that the translation has substituted the pronoun for the first one; see tn note below). This seems to be sufficient reason to motivate scribes to change the wording to κύριος. Further, the reading Ἰησοῦς is not without decent support, though admittedly not as strong as that for κύριος ($\mathfrak{P}^{66*}$ ℵ D Θ 086 f^{1} 565 1241 al lat bo). On the other hand, this Gospel speaks of Jesus as Lord in the evangelist's narrative descriptions elsewhere only in 11:2; 20:18, 20; 21:12; and probably 6:23, preferring Ἰησοῦς most of the time. This fact could be used to argue that scribes, acquainted with John's style, changed κύριος to Ἰησοῦς. But the immediate context generally is weighed more heavily than an author's style. It is possible that neither word was in the original text and scribes supplied what they thought most appropriate (see TCGNT 176). But without MS evidence to this effect coupled with the harder reading Ἰησοῦς, this conjecture must remain doubtful. All in all, it is best to regard Ἰησοῦς as the original reading here.

[19] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[20] tn Grk "Jesus"; the repetition of the proper name is somewhat redundant in English (see the beginning of the verse) and so the pronoun ("he") has been substituted here.

[21] tn Grk "was making."

[22] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[23] sn The author doesn't tell why Jesus chose to set out once more for Galilee. Some have suggested that the Pharisees turned their attention to Jesus because John the Baptist had now been thrown into prison. But the text gives no hint of this. In any case, perhaps Jesus simply did not want to provoke a confrontation at this time (knowing that his "hour" had not yet come).

[24] sn Travel through Samaria was not geographically necessary; the normal route for Jews ran up the east side of the Jordan River (Transjordan). Although some take the impersonal verb had to (δεῖ, dei) here to indicate logical necessity only, normally in John's Gospel its use involves God's will or plan (3:7, 3:14, 3:30, 4:4, 4:20, 4:24, 9:4, 10:16, 12:34, 20:9).

[25] sn Samaria. The Samaritans were descendants of 2 groups: (1) The remnant of native Israelites who were not deported after the fall of the Northern Kingdom in 722 B.C.; (2) Foreign colonists brought in from Babylonia and Media by the Assyrian conquerors to settle the land with inhabitants who would be loyal to Assyria. There was theological opposition between the Samaritans and the Jews because the former refused to worship in Jerusalem. After the exile the Samaritans put obstacles in the way of the Jewish restoration of Jerusalem, and in the 2nd century B.C. the Samaritans helped the Syrians in their wars against the Jews. In 128 B.C. the Jewish high priest retaliated and burned the Samaritan temple on Mount Gerizim.

4:5 Now he came to a Samaritan town[1] called Sychar,[2] near the plot of land that Jacob had given to his son Joseph.[3] 4:6 Jacob's well was there, so Jesus, since he was tired from the journey, sat right down beside[4] the well. It was about noon.[5]

4:7 A Samaritan woman[6] came to draw water. Jesus said to her, "Give me some water[7] to drink." 4:8 (For his disciples had gone off into the town to buy supplies.[8])[9] 4:9 So the Samaritan woman said to him, "How can you – a Jew[10] – ask me, a Samaritan woman, for water[11] to drink?" (For Jews use nothing in common[12] with Samaritans.)[13]

4:10 Jesus answered[14] her, "If you had known[15] the gift of God and who it is who said to you, 'Give me some water[16] to drink,' you would have asked him, and he would have given you living water."[17] 4:11 "Sir,"[18] the woman[19] said to him, "you have no bucket and the well[20] is deep; where then do you get this[21] living water?[22] 4:12 Surely you're not greater than our ancestor[23] Jacob, are you? For he gave us this well and drank from it himself, along with his sons and his livestock."[24]

4:13 Jesus replied,[25] "Everyone who drinks some of this water will be thirsty[26] again. 4:14 But whoever drinks some of the water that I will give him will never be thirsty again,[27] but the

1 tn Grk "town of Samaria." The noun Σαμαρείας (Samareias) has been translated as an attributive genitive.

2 sn Sychar was somewhere in the vicinity of Shechem, possibly the village of Askar, 1.5 km northeast of Jacob's well.

3 sn Perhaps referred to in Gen 48:22.

4 tn Grk "on (ἐπί, epi) the well." There may have been a low stone rim encircling the well, or the reading of 𝔓66 ("on the ground") may be correct.

5 tn Grk "the sixth hour."

sn It was about noon. The suggestion has been made by some that time should be reckoned from midnight rather than sunrise. This would make the time 6 a.m. rather than noon. That would fit in this passage but not in John 19:14 which places the time when Jesus is condemned to be crucified at "the sixth hour."

6 tn Grk "a woman from Samaria." According to BDAG 912 s.v. Σαμάρεια, the prepositional phrase is to be translated as a simple attributive: "γυνὴ ἐκ τῆς Σαμαρείας a Samaritan woman J 4:7."

7 tn The phrase "some water" is supplied as the understood direct object of the infinitive πεῖν (pein).

8 tn Grk "buy food."

9 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author, indicating why Jesus asked the woman for a drink (for presumably his disciples also took the water bucket with them).

10 tn Or "a Judean." Here BDAG 478 s.v. Ἰουδαίος 2.a states, "Judean (with respect to birth, nationality, or cult)." The same term occurs in the plural later in this verse. In one sense "Judean" would work very well in the translation here, since the contrast is between residents of the two geographical regions. However, since in the context of this chapter the discussion soon becomes a religious rather than a territorial one (cf. vv. 19-26), the translation "Jew" has been retained here and in v. 22.

11 tn "Water" is supplied as the understood direct object of the infinitive πεῖν (pein).

12 tn D. Daube ("Jesus and the Samaritan Woman: the Meaning of συγχράομαι [Jn 4:7ff]," JBL 69 [1950]: 137-47) suggests this meaning.

sn The background to the statement use nothing in common is the general assumption among Jews that the Samaritans were ritually impure or unclean. Thus a Jew who used a drinking vessel after a Samaritan had touched it would become ceremonially unclean.

13 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

14 tn Grk "answered and said to her."

15 tn Or "if you knew."

16 tn The phrase "some water" is supplied as the understood direct object of the infinitive πεῖν (pein).

17 tn This is a second class conditional sentence in Greek.

sn The word translated living is used in Greek of flowing water, which leads to the woman's misunderstanding in the following verse. She thought Jesus was referring to some unknown source of drinkable water.

18 tn Or "Lord." The Greek term κύριος (kurios) means both "Sir" and "Lord." In this passage there is probably a gradual transition from one to the other as the woman's respect for Jesus grows throughout the conversation (4:11, 15, 19).

19 tc ‡ Two early and important Greek MSS along with two versional witnesses (𝔓75 B sys ac2) lack ἡ γυνή (hē gunē, "the woman") here; ℵ* has ἐκείνη (ekeinē, "that one" or possibly "she") instead of ἡ γυνή. It is possible that no explicit subject was in the original text and scribes added either ἡ γυνή or ἐκείνη to make the meaning clear. It is also possible that the archetype of 𝔓75 ℵ B expunged the subject because it was not altogether necessary, with the scribe of ℵ later adding the pronoun. However, ἡ γυνή is not in doubt in any other introduction to the woman's words in this chapter (cf. vv. 9, 15, 17, 19, 25), suggesting that intentional deletion was not the motive for the shorter reading in v. 11 (or else why would they delete the words only here?). Thus, the fact that virtually all witnesses (𝔓66 ℵ2 A C D L Ws Θ Ψ 050 083 086 *f*1,13 𝔐 latt syc,p,h sa bo) have ἡ γυνή here may suggest that it is a motivated reading, conforming this verse to the rest of the pericope. Although a decision is difficult, it is probably best to regard the shorter reading as authentic. NA27 has ἡ γυνή in brackets, indicating doubts as to their authenticity. For English stylistic reasons, the translation also includes "the woman" here.

20 tn The word for "well" has now shifted to φρέαρ (phrear, "cistern"); earlier in the passage it was πηγή (pēgē).

21 tn The anaphoric article has been translated "this."

22 sn Where then do you get this living water? The woman's reply is an example of the "misunderstood statement," a technique appearing frequently in John's Gospel. Jesus was speaking of living water which was spiritual (ultimately a Johannine figure for the Holy Spirit, see John 7:38-39), but the woman thought he was speaking of flowing (fresh drinkable) water. Her misunderstanding gave Jesus the opportunity to explain what he really meant.

23 tn Or "our forefather"; Grk "our father."

24 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end. In this instance all of v. 12 is one question. It has been broken into two sentences for the sake of English style (instead of "for he" the Greek reads "who").

25 tn Grk "answered and said to her."

26 tn Grk "will thirst."

27 tn Grk "will never be thirsty forever." The possibility of a later thirst is emphatically denied.

water that I will give him will become in him a fountain[1] of water springing up[2] to eternal life." 4:15 The woman said to him, "Sir, give me this water, so that I will not be thirsty or have to come here to draw[3] water."[4] 4:16 He[5] said to her, "Go call your husband and come back here."[6] 4:17 The woman replied,[7] "I have no husband." Jesus said to her, "Right you are when you said,[8] 'I have no husband,'[9] 4:18 for you have had five husbands, and the man you are living with[10] now is not your husband. This you said truthfully!"

4:19 The woman said to him, "Sir, I see[11] that you are a prophet. 4:20 Our fathers worshiped on this mountain,[12] and you people[13] say that the place where people must worship is in Jerusalem."[14] 4:21 Jesus said to her, "Believe me, woman,[15] a time[16] is coming when you will worship[17] the Father neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem. 4:22 You people[18] worship what you do not know. We worship what we know, because salvation is from the Jews.[19] 4:23 But a time[20] is coming – and now is here[21] – when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth, for the Father seeks[22] such people to be[23] his worshipers.[24] 4:24 God is spirit,[25] and the people who worship him must worship in spirit and truth." 4:25 The woman said to him, "I know that Messiah is coming" (the one called Christ);[26] "whenever he[27] comes, he will tell[28] us everything."[29] 4:26 Jesus said to her, "I, the one speaking to you, am he."

The Disciples Return

4:27 Now at that very moment his disciples came back.[30] They were shocked[31] because he was speaking[32] with a woman. However, no one said, "What do you want?"[33] or "Why are you speaking with her?" 4:28 Then the woman left her water jar, went off into the town and said to the people,[34] 4:29 "Come, see a man who told

1 tn Or "well." "Fountain" is used as the translation for πηγή (pēgē) here since the idea is that of an artesian well that flows freely, but the term "artesian well" is not common in contemporary English.

2 tn The verb ἁλλομένου (hallomenou) is used of quick movement (like jumping) on the part of living beings. This is the only instance of its being applied to the action of water. However, in the LXX it is used to describe the "Spirit of God" as it falls on Samson and Saul. See Judg 14:6, 19; 15:14; 1 Kgdms 10:2, 10 LXX (= 1 Sam 10:6, 10 ET); and Isa 35:6 (note context).

3 tn Grk "or come here to draw."

4 tn The direct object of the infinitive ἀντλεῖν (antlein) is understood in Greek but supplied for clarity in the English translation.

5 tc Most witnesses have "Jesus" here, either with the article (𝔑^{c} C^{2} D L W^{s} Ψ 086 𝔐 lat) or without (𝔑* A Θ $f^{1,13}$ al), while several important and early witnesses lack the name (𝔓^{66,75} B C* 33^{vid} pc). It is unlikely that scribes would have deliberately expunged the name of Jesus from the text here, especially since it aids the reader with the flow of the dialogue. Further, that the name occurs both anarthrously and with the article suggests that it was a later addition. (For similar arguments, see the tc note on "woman" in 4:11).

6 tn Grk "come here" ("back" is implied).

7 tn Grk "answered and said to him."

8 tn Grk "Well have you said."

9 tn The word order in Jesus' reply is reversed from the woman's original statement. The word "husband" in Jesus' reply is placed in an emphatic position.

10 tn Grk "the one you have."

11 tn Grk "behold" or "perceive," but these are not as common in contemporary English usage.

12 sn This mountain refers to Mount Gerizim, where the Samaritan shrine was located.

13 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to indicate that the Greek verb translated "say" is second person plural and thus refers to more than Jesus alone.

14 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

15 sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή 1), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions.

16 tn Grk "an hour."

17 tn The verb is plural.

18 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to indicate that the Greek verb translated "worship" is second person plural and thus refers to more than the woman alone.

19 tn Or "from the Judeans." See the note on "Jew" in v. 9.

20 tn Grk "an hour."

21 tn "Here" is not in the Greek text but is supplied to conform to contemporary English idiom.

22 sn See also John 4:27.

23 tn Or "as." The object-complement construction implies either "as" or "to be."

24 tn This is a double accusative construction of object and complement with τοιούτους (toioutous) as the object and the participle προσκυνοῦντας (proskunountas) as the complement.

sn The Father wants such people as his worshipers. Note how the woman has been concerned about where people ought to worship, while Jesus is concerned about who people ought to worship.

25 tn Here πνεῦμα (pneuma) is understood as a qualitative predicate nominative while the articular θεός (theos) is the subject.

26 tn Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "the one who has been anointed."

sn The one called Christ. This is a parenthetical statement by the author. See the note on Christ in 1:20.

27 tn Grk "that one."

28 tn Or "he will announce to us."

29 tn Grk "all things."

30 tn Or "his disciples returned"; Grk "came" ("back" is supplied in keeping with English usage). Because of the length of the Greek sentence it is better to divide here and begin a new English sentence, leaving the καί (kai) before ἐθαύμαζον (ethaumazon) untranslated.

31 tn BDAG 444 s.v. θαυμάζω 1.a.γ has "be surprised that" followed by indirect discourse. The context calls for a slightly stronger wording.

32 tn The ὅτι (hoti) could also be translated as declarative ("that he had been speaking with a woman") but since this would probably require translating the imperfect verb as a past perfect (which is normal after a declarative ὅτι), it is preferable to take this ὅτι as causal.

33 tn Grk "seek." See John 4:23.

sn The question "What do you want?" is John's editorial comment (for no one in the text was asking it). The author is making a literary link with Jesus' statement in v. 23: It is evident that, in spite of what the disciples may have been thinking, what Jesus was seeking is what the Father was seeking, that is to say, someone to worship him.

34 tn The term ἄνθρωποι (anthrōpoi) used here can mean either "people" (when used generically) or "men" (though there is a more specific term in Greek for adult males, ανήρ [anēr]). Thus the woman could have been speaking either (1) to all the people or (2) to the male leaders of the city as me everything I ever did. Surely he can't be the Messiah,[1] can he?"[2] 4:30 So[3] they left the town and began coming[4] to him.

Workers for the Harvest

4:31 Meanwhile the disciples were urging him,[5] "Rabbi, eat something."[6] 4:32 But he said to them, "I have food to eat that you know nothing about." 4:33 So the disciples began to say[7] to one another, "No one brought him anything[8] to eat, did they?"[9] 4:34 Jesus said to them, "My food is to do the will of the one who sent me[10] and to complete[11] his work.[12] 4:35 Don't you say,[13] 'There are four more months and then comes the harvest?' I tell you, look up[14] and see that the fields are already white[15] for harvest! 4:36 The one who reaps receives pay[16] and gathers fruit for eternal life, so that the one who sows and the one who reaps can rejoice together. 4:37 For in this instance the saying is true,[17] 'One sows and another reaps.' 4:38 I sent you to reap what you did not work for; others have labored and you have entered into their labor."

The Samaritans Respond

4:39 Now many Samaritans from that town believed in him because of the report of the woman who testified,[18] "He told me everything I ever did." 4:40 So when the Samaritans came to him, they began asking[19] him to stay with them.[20] He stayed there two days, 4:41 and because of his word many more[21] believed. 4:42 They said to the woman, "No longer do we believe because of your words, for we have heard for ourselves, and we know that this one[22] really is the Savior of the world."[23]

Onward to Galilee

4:43 After the two days he departed from there to Galilee. 4:44 (For Jesus himself had testified that a prophet has no honor in his own country.)[24] 4:45 So when he came to Galilee, the Galileans welcomed him because they had seen all the things he had done in Jerusalem[25] at the feast[26] (for they themselves had gone to the feast).[27] their representatives. However, most recent English translations regard the former as more likely and render the word "people" here.

[1] tn Grk "the Christ" (both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed"). Although the Greek text reads χριστός (christos) here, it is more consistent based on 4:25 (where Μεσσίας [Messias] is the lead term and is qualified by χριστός) to translate χριστός as "Messiah" here.

[2] tn The use of μήτι (mēti) normally presupposes a negative answer. This should not be taken as an indication that the woman did not believe, however. It may well be an example of "reverse psychology," designed to gain a hearing for her testimony among those whose doubts about her background would obviate her claims.

[3] tn "So" is supplied for transitional smoothness in English.

[4] sn The imperfect tense is here rendered began coming for the author is not finished with this part of the story yet; these same Samaritans will appear again in v. 35.

[5] tn Grk "were asking him, saying."

[6] tn The direct object of φάγε (phage) in Greek is understood; "something" is supplied in English.

[7] tn An ingressive imperfect conveys the idea that Jesus' reply provoked the disciples' response.

[8] tn The direct object of ἤνεγκεν (ēnenken) in Greek is understood; "anything" is supplied in English.

[9] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here it is "did they?").

[10] sn The one who sent me refers to the Father.

[11] tn Or "to accomplish."

[12] tn The substantival ἵνα (hina) clause has been translated as an English infinitive clause.

sn No one brought him anything to eat, did they? In the discussion with the disciples which took place while the woman had gone into the city, note again the misunderstanding: The disciples thought Jesus referred to physical food, while he was really speaking figuratively and spiritually again. Thus Jesus was forced to explain what he meant, and the explanation that his food was his mission, to do the will of God and accomplish his work, leads naturally into the metaphor of the harvest. The fruit of his mission was represented by the Samaritans who were coming to him.

[13] tn The recitative ὅτι (hoti) after λέγετε (legete) has not been translated.

[14] tn Grk "lift up your eyes" (an idiom). BDAG 357 s.v. ἐπαίρω 1 has "look up" here.

[15] tn That is, "ripe."

[16] tn Or "a reward"; see L&N 38.14 and 57.173. This is something of a wordplay.

[17] tn The recitative ὅτι (hoti) after ἀληθινός (alēthinos) has not been translated.

[18] tn Grk "when she testified."

[19] tn Following the arrival of the Samaritans, the imperfect verb has been translated as ingressive.

[20] tn Because of the length of the Greek sentence and the sequencing with the following verse, the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated here. Instead a new English sentence is begun.

[21] tn Or "and they believed much more."

[22] tn Or "this." The Greek pronoun can mean either "this one" or "this" (BDAG 740 s.v. οὗτος 1).

[23] sn There is irony in the Samaritans' declaration that Jesus was really the Savior of the world, an irony foreshadowed in the prologue to the Fourth Gospel (1:11): "He came to his own, and his own did not receive him." Yet the Samaritans welcomed Jesus and proclaimed him to be not the Jewish Messiah only, but the Savior of the world.

[24] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[25] sn All the things he had done in Jerusalem probably refers to the signs mentioned in John 2:23.

map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[26] sn See John 2:23-25.

[27] sn John 4:44-45. The last part of v. 45 is a parenthetical note by the author. The major problem in these verses concerns the contradiction between the proverb stated by Jesus in v. 44 and the reception of the Galileans in v. 45. Origen solved the problem by referring his own country to Judea (which Jesus had just left) and not Galilee. But this runs counter to the thrust of John's Gospel, which takes pains to identify Jesus with Galilee (cf. 1:46) and does not even mention his Judean birth. R. E. Brown typifies the contemporary approach: He regards v. 44 as an addition by a later redactor who wanted to emphasize Jesus' unsatisfactory reception in Galilee. Neither expedient is necessary, though, if honor is understood in its sense of attributing true worth to someone. The Galileans did welcome him, but their welcome was to prove a superficial response based on what they had seen him do at the feast. There is no indication that the signs they saw brought them to place their faith in Jesus any more than Nicodemus did on the basis of the signs. But a superficial welcome based on enthusiasm for miracles is no real honor at all.

Healing the Royal Official's Son

4:46 Now he came again to Cana[1] in Galilee where he had made the water wine.[2] In[3] Capernaum[4] there was a certain royal official[5] whose son was sick. 4:47 When he heard that Jesus had come back from Judea to Galilee, he went to him and begged him[6] to come down and heal his son, who was about to die. 4:48 So Jesus said to him, "Unless you people[7] see signs and wonders you will never believe!"[8] 4:49 "Sir," the official said to him, "come down before my child dies." 4:50 Jesus told him, "Go home;[9] your son will live." The man believed the word that Jesus spoke to him, and set off for home.[10]

4:51 While he was on his way down,[11] his slaves[12] met him and told him that his son was going to live. 4:52 So he asked them the time[13] when his condition began to improve,[14] and[15] they told him, "Yesterday at one o'clock in the afternoon[16] the fever left him." 4:53 Then the father realized that it was the very time[17] Jesus had said to him, "Your son will live," and he himself believed along with his entire household. 4:54 Jesus did this as his second miraculous sign[18] when he returned from Judea to Galilee.

Healing a Paralytic at the Pool of Bethesda

5:1 After this[19] there was a Jewish feast,[20] and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.[21] 5:2 Now there is[22] in Jerusalem by the Sheep Gate[23] a pool

3 tn Grk "And in."

map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

5 tn Although βασιλικός (basilikos) has often been translated "nobleman" it is almost certainly refers here to a servant of Herod, tetrarch of Galilee (who in the NT is called a king, Matt 14:9, Mark 6:14-29). Capernaum was a border town, so doubtless there were many administrative officials in residence there.

6 tn The direct object of ἠρώτα (ērōta) is supplied from context. Direct objects were frequently omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

7 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to indicate that the verb is second person plural (referring to more than the royal official alone).

8 tn Or "you never believe." The verb πιστεύσητε (pisteusēte) is aorist subjunctive and may have either nuance.

9 tn Grk "Go"; the word "home" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

10 tn Grk "and left." The words "for home" are implied by the following verse.

11 sn While he was on his way down. Going to Capernaum from Cana, one must go east across the Galilean hills and then descend to the Sea of Galilee. The 20 mi (33 km) journey could not be made in a single day. The use of the description on his way down shows the author was familiar with Palestinian geography.

12 tn Traditionally, "servants." Though δοῦλος (doulos) is normally translated "servant," the word does not bear the connotation of a free individual serving another. BDAG notes that "'servant' for 'slave' is largely confined to Biblical transl. and early American times...in normal usage at the present time the two words are carefully distinguished" (BDAG 260 s.v.). The most accurate translation is "bondservant" (sometimes found in the ASV for δοῦλος), in that it often indicates one who sells himself into slavery to another. But as this is archaic, few today understand its force.

13 tn Grk "the hour."

14 tn BDAG 558 s.v. κομψότερον translates the idiom κομψότερον ἔχειν (kompsoteron echein) as "begin to improve."

15 tn The second οὖν (oun) in 4:52 has been translated as "and" to improve English style by avoiding redundancy.

16 tn Grk "at the seventh hour."

17 tn Grk "at that hour."

18 tn This sentence in Greek involves an object-complement construction. The force can be either "Jesus did this as," or possibly "Jesus made this to be." The latter translation accents not only Jesus' power but his sovereignty too. Cf. 2:11 where the same construction occurs.

19 sn The temporal indicator After this is not specific, so it is uncertain how long after the incidents at Cana this occurred.

20 tc The textual variants ἑορτή or ἡ ἑορτή (heortē or hē heortē, "a feast" or "the feast") may not appear significant at first, but to read ἑορτή with the article would almost certainly demand a reference to the Jewish Passover. The article is found in ℵ C L Δ Ψ f^{1} 33 892 1424 pm, but is lacking in {$\mathfrak{P}^{66.75}$ A B D T W^{s} Θ f^{13} 565 579 700 1241 pm}. Overall, the shorter reading has somewhat better support. Internally, the known proclivity of scribes to make the text more explicit argues compellingly for the shorter reading. Thus, the verse refers to a feast other than the Passover. The incidental note in 5:3, that the sick were lying outside in the porticoes of the pool, makes Passover an unlikely time because it fell toward the end of winter and the weather would not have been warm. L. Morris (John [NICNT], 299, n. 6) thinks it impossible to identify the feast with certainty.

sn A Jewish feast. Jews were obligated to go up to Jerusalem for 3 major annual feasts: Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles. If the first is probably ruled out because of the time of year, the last is not as likely because it forms the central setting for chap. 7 (where there are many indications in the context that Tabernacles is the feast in view.) This leaves the feast of Pentecost, which at some point prior to this time in Jewish tradition (as reflected in Jewish intertestamental literature and later post-Christian rabbinic writings) became identified with the giving of the law to Moses on Mount Sinai. Such an association might explain Jesus' reference to Moses in 5:45-46. This is uncertain, however. The only really important fact for the author is that the healing was done on a Sabbath. This is what provoked the controversy with the Jewish authorities recorded in 5:16-47.

21 map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

22 tn Regarding the use of the present tense ἐστιν (estin) and its implications for the dating of the Gospel of John, see the article by D. B. Wallace, "John 5,2 and the Date of the Fourth Gospel," Bib 71 (1990): 177-205.

23 tn The site of the miracle is also something of a problem: προβατικῇ (probatikē) is usually taken as a reference to the Sheep Gate near the temple. Some (R. E. Brown and others) would place the word κολυμβήθρα (kolumbēthra) with προβατικῇ to read "in Jerusalem, by the Sheep Pool, there is (another pool) with the Hebrew name." This would imply that there is reference to two pools in the context rather than only one. This does not seem necessary (although it is a grammatical possibility). The gender of the words does not help since both are feminine (as is the participle ἐπιλεγομένη [epilegomenē]). Note however that Brown's suggestion would require a feminine word to be supplied (for the participle ἐπιλεγομένη to modify). The traditional understanding of the phrase as a reference to the Sheep Gate near the temple appears more probably correct.

called Bethzatha[1] in Aramaic,[2] which has five covered walkways.[3] 5:3 A great number of sick, blind, lame, and paralyzed people were lying in these walkways.[4] 5:5 Now a man was there who had been disabled for thirty-eight years.[5]

5:6 When Jesus saw him lying there and when he realized[6] that the man[7] had been disabled a long time already, he said to him, "Do you want to become well?" 5:7 The sick man answered him, "Sir,[8] I have no one to put me into the pool when the water is stirred up. While I am trying to get into the water,[9] someone else[10] goes down there[11] before me." 5:8 Jesus said to him, "Stand up! Pick up your mat[12] and walk." 5:9 Immediately the man was healed,[13] and he picked up his mat[14] and started walking. (Now that day was a Sabbath.)[15]

5:10 So the Jewish leaders[16] said to the man who had been healed, "It is the Sabbath, and you are not permitted to carry your mat."[17] 5:11 But he answered them, "The man who made me well said to me, 'Pick up your mat[18] and walk.'" 5:12 They asked him, "Who is the man who said to you, 'Pick up your mat[19] and walk'?"[20] 5:13 But the man who had been healed did not know who it was, for Jesus had slipped out, since there was a crowd in that place.

5:14 After this Jesus found him at the temple and said to him, "Look, you have become well. Don't sin any more,[21] lest anything worse hap-

1 tc Some MSS (ℵ [L] 33 it) read Bethzatha, while others read Bethsaida (𝔓[66],75 B T W^{s} [Ψ] pc vg); codex D has Belzetha. A lot of controversy has surrounded the name of the pool itself: The reading of the Byzantine (or majority) text (A C Θ 078 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐), Bethesda, has been virtually discarded by scholars in favor of what is thought to be the more primitive Bethzatha, even though many recent translations continue to employ Bethesda, the traditional reading. The latter is attested by Josephus as the name of a quarter of the city near the northeast corner of the temple area. He reports that the Syrian Legate Cestius burned this suburb in his attack on Jerusalem in October A.D. 68 (J. W. 2.19.4 [2.530]). However, there is some new archaeological evidence for this problem. 3Q15 (Copper Scroll) from Qumran seems to indicate that in the general area of the temple, on the eastern hill of Jerusalem, a treasure was buried in Bet ʾEsdatayin, in the pool at the entrance to the smaller basin. The name of the region or pool itself seems then to have been Bet ʾEsda, "house of the flowing." It appears with the dual ending in the scroll because there were two basins. Bethesda seems to be an accurate Greek rendition of the name, while J. T. Milik suggests Bethzatha is a rendition of the Aramaic intensive plural Bet ʾEsdata (DJD 3, 271). As for the text of John 5:2, the fundamental problems with the Bethesda reading are that it looks motivated (with an edifying Semitic etymology, meaning "House of Mercy" [TCGNT 178]), and is minimally attested. Apart from the Copper Scroll, the evidence for Bethesda is almost entirely shut up to the Byzantine text (C being the most notable exception, but it often has Byzantine encroachments). On the one hand, this argues the Byzantine reading here had ancient, semitic roots; on the other hand, since both readings are attested as historically accurate, a decision has to be based on the better witnesses. The fact that there are multiple readings here suggests that the original was not well understood. Which reading best explains the rise of the others? It seems that Bethzatha is the best choice.

sn On the location of the pool called Bethzatha, the double-pool of St. Anne is the probable site, and has been excavated; the pools were trapezoidal in shape, 165 ft (49.5 m) wide at one end, 220 ft (66 m) wide at the other, and 315 ft (94.5 m) long, divided by a central partition. There were colonnades (rows of columns) on all 4 sides and on the partition, thus forming the five covered walkways mentioned in John 5:2. Stairways at the corners permitted descent to the pool.

2 tn Grk "in Hebrew."

3 tn Or "porticoes," or "colonnades"; Grk "stoas."

sn The pool had five porticoes. These were covered walkways formed by rows of columns supporting a roof and open on the side facing the pool. People could stand, sit, or walk on these colonnaded porches, protected from the weather and the heat of the sun.

4 tc The majority of later MSS (C^{3} Θ Ψ 078 $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐) add the following to 5:3: "waiting for the moving of the water. 5:4 For an angel of the Lord went down and stirred up the water at certain times. Whoever first stepped in after the stirring of the water was healed from whatever disease which he suffered." Other MSS include only v. 3b (A^{c} D 33 lat) or v. 4 (A L it). Few textual scholars today would accept the authenticity of any portion of vv. 3b-4, for they are not found in the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓[66,75] ℵ B C* T pc co), they include un-Johannine vocabulary and syntax, several of the MSS that include the verses mark them as spurious (with an asterisk or obelisk), and because there is a great amount of textual diversity among the witnesses that do include the verses. The present translation follows NA^{27} in omitting the verse number, a procedure also followed by a number of other modern translations.

5 tn Grk "who had had thirty-eight years in his disability."

6 tn Or "knew."

7 tn Grk "he." The referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 tn Or "Lord." The Greek κύριος (kurios) means both "Sir" and "Lord." In this passage the paralytic who was healed by Jesus never acknowledges Jesus as Lord – he rather reports Jesus to the authorities.

9 tn Grk "while I am going."

10 tn Grk "another."

11 tn The word "there" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

16 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. Here the author refers to the Jewish authorities or leaders in Jerusalem. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9).

Nevertheless, in the translation, it is necessary to supply the words due to the demands of English style, which does not typically allow for understood or implied direct objects as Greek does.

20 tn Grk "Pick up and walk"; the object (the mat) is implied but not repeated.

21 tn Since this is a prohibition with a present imperative, the translation "stop sinning" is sometimes suggested. This is not likely, however, since the present tense is normally used in prohibitions involving a general condition (as here) while the aorist tense is normally used in specific instances. Responding to Jewish Leaders

5:16 Now because Jesus was doing these things[2] on the Sabbath, the Jewish leaders[3] began persecuting[4] him. 5:17 So he[5] told[6] them, "My Father is working until now, and I too am working."[7] 5:18 For this reason the Jewish leaders[8] were trying even harder to kill him, because not only was he breaking the Sabbath, but he was also calling God his own Father, thus making himself equal with God.

5:19 So Jesus answered them,[9] "I tell you the solemn truth,[10] the Son can do nothing on his own initiative,[11] but only what he sees the Father doing. For whatever the Father[12] does, the Son does likewise.[13] 5:20 For the Father loves the Son and shows him everything he does, and will show him greater deeds than these, so that you will be amazed. 5:21 For just as the Father raises the dead and gives them life,[14] so also the Son gives life to whomever he wishes.[15] 5:22 Furthermore, the Father does not judge[16] anyone, but has assigned[17] all judgment to the Son, 5:23 so that all people[18] will honor the Son just as they honor the Father. The one who does not honor the Son does not honor the Father who sent him.

5:24 "I tell you the solemn truth,[19] the one who hears[20] my message[21] and believes the one who sent me has eternal life and will not be condemned,[22] but has crossed over from death to life. 5:25 I tell you the solemn truth,[23] a time[24] is coming – and is now here – when the dead will hear the voice of the Son of God, and those who hear will live. 5:26 For just as the Father has life in himself, thus he has granted the Son to have life in himself, 5:27 and he has granted the Son[25] authority to execute judgment,[26] because he is the Son of Man.

[1] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 10.

[2] sn Note the plural phrase these things which seems to indicate that Jesus healed on the Sabbath more than once (cf. John 20:30). The synoptic gospels show this to be true; the incident in 5:1-15 has thus been chosen by the author as representative.

[3] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 10.

[5] tc ‡ Most witnesses (𝔓66 A D L Θ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 latt co) have Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous, "Jesus") here, while generally better witnesses (𝔓75 ℵ B W {0141} 892 1241 pbo) lack the name. Although it is possible that Alexandrian scribes deleted the name due to proclivities to prune, this is not as likely as other witnesses adding it for clarification, especially since multiple strands of the Alexandrian text are represented in the shorter reading. NA27 places the word in brackets, indicating some doubts as to authenticity.

[6] tn Grk "answered."

[7] sn "My Father is working until now, and I too am working." What is the significance of Jesus' claim? A preliminary understanding can be obtained from John 5:18, noting the Jewish authorities' response and the author's comment. They sought to kill Jesus, because not only was he breaking the Sabbath, but he was also calling God his own Father, thus making himself equal with God. This must be seen in the context of the relation of God to the Sabbath rest. In the commandment (Exod 20:11) it is explained that "In six days the Lord made the heavens and the earth...and rested on the seventh day; therefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and made it holy." Philo, based on the LXX translation of Exod 20:11, denied outright that God had ever ceased his creative activity. And when Rabban Gamaliel II, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, and R. Akiba were in Rome, ca. A.D. 95, they gave as a rebuttal to sectarian arguments evidence that God might do as he willed in the world without breaking the Sabbath because the entire world was his private residence. So even the rabbis realized that God did not really cease to work on the Sabbath: Divine providence remained active on the Sabbath, otherwise, all nature and life would cease to exist. As regards men, divine activity was visible in two ways: Men were born and men died on the Sabbath. Since only God could give life and only God could deal with the fate of the dead in judgment, this meant God was active on the Sabbath. This seems to be the background for Jesus' words in 5:17. He justified his work of healing on the Sabbath by reminding the Jewish authorities that they admitted God worked on the Sabbath. This explains the violence of the reaction. The Sabbath privilege was peculiar to God, and no one was equal to God. In claiming the right to work even as his Father worked, Jesus was claiming a divine prerogative. He was literally making himself equal to God, as 5:18 goes on to state explicitly for the benefit of the reader who might not have made the connection.

[8] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." See the note on the phrase "Jewish leaders" in v. 10.

[9] tn Grk "answered and said to them."

[10] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[11] tn Grk "nothing from himself."

[12] tn Grk "that one"; the referent (the Father) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[13] sn What works does the Son do likewise? The same that the Father does – and the same that the rabbis recognized as legitimate works of God on the Sabbath (see note on working in v. 17). (1) Jesus grants life (just as the Father grants life) on the Sabbath. But as the Father gives physical life on the Sabbath, so the Son grants spiritual life (John 5:21; note the "greater things" mentioned in v. 20). (2) Jesus judges (determines the destiny of people) on the Sabbath, just as the Father judges those who die on the Sabbath, because the Father has granted authority to the Son to judge (John 5:22-23). But this is not all. Not only has this power been granted to Jesus in the present; it will be his in the future as well. In v. 28 there is a reference not to spiritually dead (only) but also physically dead. At their resurrection they respond to the Son as well.

[22] tn Grk "and does not come into judgment."

More Testimony About Jesus

5:31 "If I testify about myself, my testimony is not true. 5:32 There is another[6] who testifies about me, and I know the testimony he testifies about me is true. 5:33 You have sent to John,[7] and he has testified to the truth. 5:34 (I do not accept[8] human testimony, but I say this so that you may be saved.) 5:35 He was a lamp that was burning and shining,[9] and you wanted to rejoice greatly for a short time[10] in his light.

5:36 "But I have a testimony greater than that from John. For the deeds[11] that the Father has assigned me to complete – the deeds[12] I am now doing – testify about me that the Father has sent me. 5:37 And the Father who sent me has himself testified about me. You people[13] have never heard his voice nor seen his form at any time,[14] 5:38 nor do you have his word residing in you, because you do not believe the one whom he sent. 5:39 You study the scriptures thoroughly[15] because you think in them you possess eternal life,[16] and it is these same scriptures[17] that testify about me, 5:40 but you are not willing to come to me so that you may have life.

5:41 "I do not accept[18] praise[19] from people,[20] 5:42 but I know you, that you do not have the love of God[21] within you. 5:43 I have come in my Father's name, and you do not accept[22] me. If someone else comes in his own name, you will accept[23] him. 5:44 How can you believe, if you accept praise[24] from one another and don't seek the praise[25] that comes from the only God?[26]

5:45 "Do not suppose that I will accuse you before the Father. The one who accuses you is Moses, in whom you have placed your hope.[27]

6 sn To whom does another refer? To John the Baptist or to the Father? In the nearer context, v. 33, it would seem to be John the Baptist. But v. 34 seems to indicate that Jesus does not receive testimony from men. Probably it is better to view v. 32 as identical to v. 37, with the comments about the Baptist as a parenthetical digression.

7 sn John refers to John the Baptist.

8 tn Or "I do not receive."

9 sn He was a lamp that was burning and shining. Sir 48:1 states that the word of Elijah was "a flame like a torch." Because of the connection of John the Baptist with Elijah (see John 1:21 and the note on John's reply, "I am not"), it was natural for Jesus to apply this description to John.

10 tn Grk "for an hour."

11 tn Or "works."

12 tn Grk "complete, which I am now doing"; the referent of the relative pronoun has been specified by repeating "deeds" from the previous clause.

13 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to clarify that the following verbs ("heard," "seen," "have residing," "do not believe") are second person plural.

14 sn You people have never heard his voice nor seen his form at any time. Compare Deut 4:12. Also see Deut 5:24 ff., where the Israelites begged to hear the voice no longer – their request (ironically) has by this time been granted. How ironic this would be if the feast is Pentecost, where by the 1st century A.D. the giving of the law at Sinai was being celebrated.

15 tn Or "Study the scriptures thoroughly" (an imperative). For the meaning of the verb see G. Delling, TDNT 2:655-57.

16 sn In them you possess eternal life. Note the following examples from the rabbinic tractate Pirqe Avot ("The Sayings of the Fathers"): Pirqe Avot 2:8, "He who has acquired the words of the law has acquired for himself the life of the world to come"; Pirqe Avot 6:7, "Great is the law for it gives to those who practice it life in this world and in the world to come."

17 tn The words "same scriptures" are not in the Greek text, but are supplied to clarify the referent ("these").

18 tn Or "I do not receive."

19 tn Or "honor" (Grk "glory," in the sense of respect or honor accorded to a person because of their status).

20 tn Grk "from men," but in a generic sense; both men and women are implied here.

21 tn The genitive in the phrase τὴν ἀγάπην τοῦ θεοῦ (tēn agapēn tou theou, "the love of God") could be translated as either a subjective genitive ("God's love") or an objective genitive ("love for God"). Either is grammatically possible. This is possibly an instance of a plenary genitive (see ExSyn 119-21; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek, §§36-39). If so, the emphasis would be on the love God gives which in turn produces love for him, but Jesus' opponents are lacking any such love inside them.

22 tn Or "you do not receive."

23 tn Or "you will receive."

24 tn Or "honor" (Grk "glory," in the sense of respect or honor accorded to a person because of their status).

25 tn Or "honor" (Grk "glory," in the sense of respect or honor accorded to a person because of their status).

26 tc Several early and important witnesses (𝔓66.75 B W a b sa) lack θεοῦ (theou, "God") here, thus reading "the only one," while most of the rest of the tradition, including some important MSS, has the name ({א A D L Θ Ψ 33 𝔐}). Internally, it could be argued that the name of God was not used here, in keeping with the NT practice of suppressing the name of God at times for rhetorical effect, drawing the reader inexorably to the conclusion that the one being spoken of is God himself. On the other hand, never is ὁ μόνος (ho monos) used absolutely in the NT (i.e., without a noun or substantive with it), and always the subject of the adjunct is God (cf. Matt 24:36; John 17:3; 1 Tim 6:16). What then is to explain the shorter reading? In uncial script, with θεοῦ written as a nomen sacrum, envisioning accidental omission of the name by way of homoioteleuton requires little imagination, largely because of the succession of words ending in -ου: ΤΟΥΜΟΝΟΥΘΥΟΥ. It is thus preferable to retain the word in the text.

27 sn The final condemnation will come from Moses himself – again ironic, since Moses is the very one the Jewish authorities have trusted in (placed your hope). This is again ironic if it is occurring at Pentecost, which at this time was being celebrated as the occasion of the giving of the Torah to Moses on Mt. Sinai. There is evidence that some Jews of the 1st century looked on Moses as their intercessor at the final judgment (see W. A. Meeks, The Prophet King [NovTSup], 161). This would mean the statement Moses, in whom you have placed your hope should be taken literally and relates directly to Jesus' statements about the final judgment in John 5:28-29.

5:46 If[1] you believed Moses, you would believe me, because he wrote about me. 5:47 But if you do not believe what Moses[2] wrote, how will you believe my words?"

The Feeding of the Five Thousand

6:1 After this[3] Jesus went away to the other side of the Sea of Galilee (also called the Sea of Tiberias).[4] 6:2 A large crowd was following him because they were observing the miraculous signs he was performing on the sick. 6:3 So Jesus went on up the mountainside[5] and sat down there with his disciples. 6:4 (Now the Jewish feast of the Passover[6] was near.)[7] 6:5 Then Jesus, when he looked up[8] and saw that a large crowd was coming to him, said to Philip, "Where can we buy bread so that these people may eat?" 6:6 (Now Jesus[9] said this to test him, for he knew what he was going to do.)[10] 6:7 Philip replied,[11] "Two hundred silver coins worth[12] of bread would not be enough for them, for each one to get a little." 6:8 One of Jesus' disciples,[13] Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, said to him, 6:9 "Here is a boy who has five barley loaves and two fish, but what good[14] are these for so many people?"

6:10 Jesus said, "Have[15] the people sit down." (Now there was a lot of grass in that place.)[16] So the men[17] sat down, about five thousand in number. 6:11 Then Jesus took the loaves, and when he had given thanks, he distributed the bread to those who were seated. He then did the same with the fish,[18] as much as they wanted. 6:12 When they were all satisfied, Jesus[19] said to his disciples, "Gather up the broken pieces that are left over, so that nothing is wasted." 6:13 So they gathered them up and filled twelve baskets with broken pieces from the five barley loaves[20] left over by the people who had eaten.

6:14 Now when the people saw the miraculous sign that Jesus[21] performed, they began to say to one another, "This is certainly the Prophet[22] who is to come into the world."[23] 6:15 Then Jesus, because he knew they were going to come and seize him by force to make him king, withdrew again up the mountainside alone.[24]

Walking on Water

6:16 Now when evening came, his disciples went down to the lake,[25] 6:17 got into a boat, and started to cross the lake[26] to Capernaum.[27] (It

2 tn Grk "that one" ("he"); the referent (Moses) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Again, μετὰ ταῦτα (meta tauta) is a vague temporal reference. How Jesus got from Jerusalem to Galilee is not explained, which has led many scholars (e.g., Bernard, Bultmann, and Schnackenburg) to posit either editorial redaction or some sort of rearrangement or dislocation of material (such as reversing the order of chaps. 5 and 6, for example). Such a rearrangement of the material would give a simple and consistent connection of events, but in the absence of all external evidence it does not seem to be supportable. R. E. Brown (John [AB], 1:236) says that such an arrangement is attractive in some ways but not compelling, and that no rearrangement can solve all the geographical and chronological problems in John.

4 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Only John in the New Testament refers to the Sea of Galilee by the name Sea of Tiberias (see also John 21:1), but this is correct local usage. In the mid-20's Herod completed the building of the town of Tiberias on the southwestern shore of the lake; after this time the name came into use for the lake itself.

5 sn Up on the mountainside does not necessarily refer to a particular mountain or hillside, but may simply mean "the hill country" or "the high ground," referring to the high country east of the Sea of Galilee (known today as the Golan Heights).

6 sn Passover. According to John's sequence of material, considerable time has elapsed since the feast of 5:1. If the feast in 5:1 was Pentecost of A.D. 31, then this feast would be the Passover of A.D. 32, just one year before Jesus' crucifixion.

7 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

9 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

10 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

11 tn Grk "Philip answered him."

14 tn Grk "but what are these"; the word "good" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

15 tn Grk "Make."

16 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author (suggesting an eyewitness recollection).

17 tn Here "men" has been used in the translation because the following number, 5,000, probably included only adult males (see the parallel in Matt 14:21).

18 tn Grk "likewise also (he distributed) from the fish."

19 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 sn Note that the fish mentioned previously (in John 6:9) are not emphasized here, only the five barley loaves. This is easy to understand, however, because the bread is of primary importance for the author in view of Jesus' upcoming discourse on the Bread of Life.

21 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

22 sn The Prophet is a reference to the "prophet like Moses" of Deut 18:15, by this time an eschatological figure in popular belief.

23 sn An allusion to Deut 18:15.

24 sn Jesus, knowing that his "hour" had not yet come (and would not, in this fashion) withdrew again up the mountainside alone. The ministry of miracles in Galilee, ending with this, the multiplication of the bread (the last public miracle in Galilee recorded by John) aroused such a popular response that there was danger of an uprising. This would have given the authorities a legal excuse to arrest Jesus. The nature of Jesus' kingship will become an issue again in the passion narrative of the Fourth Gospel (John 18:33ff.). Furthermore, the volatile reaction of the Galileans to the signs prepares for and foreshadows the misunderstanding of the miracle itself, and even the misunderstanding of Jesus' explanation of it (John 6:22-71).

25 tn Or "sea." The Greek word indicates a rather large body of water, but the English word "sea" normally indicates very large bodies of water, so the word "lake" in English is a closer approximation.

had already become dark, and Jesus had not yet come to them.)[1] 6:18 By now a strong wind was blowing and the sea was getting rough. 6:19 Then, when they had rowed about three or four miles,[2] they caught sight of Jesus walking on the lake,[3] approaching the boat, and they were frightened. 6:20 But he said to them, "It is I. Do not be afraid." 6:21 Then they wanted to take him into the boat, and immediately the boat came to the land where they had been heading.

6:22 The next day the crowd that remained on the other side of the lake[4] realized that only one small boat[5] had been there, and that Jesus had not boarded[6] it with his disciples, but that his disciples had gone away alone. 6:23 But some boats from Tiberias[7] came to shore[8] near the place where they had eaten the bread after the Lord had given thanks.[9] 6:24 So when the crowd realized that neither Jesus nor his disciples were there, they got into the boats[10] and came to Capernaum[11] looking for Jesus.

Jesus' Discourse About the Bread of Life

6:25 When they found him on the other side of the lake,[12] they said to him, "Rabbi, when did you get here?"[13] 6:26 Jesus replied,[14] "I tell you the solemn truth,[15] you are looking for me not because you saw miraculous signs, but because you ate all the loaves of bread you wanted.[16] 6:27 Do not work for the food that disappears,[17] but for the food that remains to eternal life – the food[18] which the Son of Man will give to you. For God the Father has put his seal of approval on him."[19]

6:28 So then they said to him, "What must we do to accomplish the deeds[20] God requires?"[21] 6:29 Jesus replied,[22] "This is the deed[23] God requires[24] – to believe in the one whom he[25] sent." 6:30 So they said to him, "Then what miraculous sign will you perform, so that we may see it and believe you? What will you do? 6:31 Our ancestors[26] ate the manna in the wilderness, just as it is written, 'He gave them bread from heaven to eat.'"[27]

6:32 Then Jesus told them, "I tell you the solemn truth,[28] it is not Moses who has given you the bread from heaven, but my Father is giving you the true bread from heaven. 6:33 For the bread of God is the one who[29] comes down from heaven and gives life to the world."

3 tn Or "sea." See the note on "lake" in v. 16. John uses the phrase ἐπί (epi, "on") followed by the genitive (as in Mark, instead of Matthew's ἐπί followed by the accusative) to describe Jesus walking "on the lake."

5 tc Most witnesses have after "one" the phrase "which his disciples had entered" (ἐκεῖνο εἰς ὃ ἐνέβησαν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, ekeino eis ho enebēsan hoi mathētai autou) although there are several permutations of this clause ([𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ* D] Θ [f^{13} 33] 𝔐 [sa]). The witnesses that lack this expression are, however, significant and diffused (𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ² A B L N W Ψ 1 565 579 1241 al lat). The clarifying nature of the longer reading, the multiple variants from it, and the weighty testimony for the shorter reading all argue against the authenticity of the longer text in any of its variations.

Although the shorter reading has minimal support, it is significant that this Gospel speaks of Jesus as Lord in the evangelist's narrative descriptions only in 11:2; 20:18, 20; 21:12; and possibly 4:1 (but see tc note on "Jesus" there). There is thus but one undisputed preresurrection text in which the narrator calls Jesus "Lord." This fact can be utilized on behalf of either reading: The participial phrase could be seen as a scribal addition harking back to 6:11 but which does not fit Johannine style, or it could be viewed as truly authentic and in line with what John indisputably does elsewhere even if rarely. On balance, in light of the overwhelming support for these words it is probably best to retain them in the text.

10 tn Or "embarked in the boats."

11 map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

12 tn Or "sea." See the note on "lake" in v. 16.

13 sn John 6:25-31. The previous miracle of the multiplication of the bread had taken place near the town of Tiberias (cf. John 6:23). Jesus' disciples set sail for Capernaum (6:17) and were joined by the Lord in the middle of the sea. The next day boats from Tiberias picked up a few of those who had seen the multiplication (certainly not the whole 5,000) and brought them to Capernaum. It was to this group that Jesus spoke in 6:26-27. But there were also people from Capernaum who had gathered to see Jesus, who had not witnessed the multiplication, and it was this group that asked Jesus for a miraculous sign like the manna (6:30-31). This would have seemed superfluous if it were the same crowd that had already seen the multiplication of the bread. But some from Capernaum had heard about it and wanted to see a similar miracle repeated.

14 tn Grk "answered and said to them."

15 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

16 tn Grk "because you ate of the loaves of bread and were filled."

17 tn Or "perishes" (this might refer to spoiling, but is more focused on the temporary nature of this kind of food).

sn Do not work for the food that disappears. Note the wordplay on "work" here. This does not imply "working" for salvation, since the "work" is later explained (in John 6:29) as "to believe in the one whom he (the Father) sent."

18 tn The referent (the food) has been specified for clarity by repeating the word "food" from the previous clause.

19 tn Grk "on this one."

20 tn Grk "the works."

21 tn Grk "What must we do to work the works of God?"

22 tn Grk "answered and said to them."

23 tn Grk "the work."

24 tn Grk "This is the work of God."

25 tn Grk "that one" (i.e., God).

26 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

27 sn A quotation from Ps 78:24 (referring to the events of Exod 16:4-36).

28 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

29 tn Or "he who."

6:34 So they said to him, "Sir,[1] give us this bread all the time!"

6:35 Jesus said to them, "I am the bread of life. The one who comes to me will never go hungry, and the one who believes in me will never be thirsty.[2] 6:36 But I told you[3] that you have seen me[4] and still do not believe. 6:37 Everyone whom the Father gives me will come to me, and the one who comes to me I will never send away.[5] 6:38 For I have come down from heaven not to do my own will but the will of the one who sent me. 6:39 Now this is the will of the one who sent me – that I should not lose one person of every one he has given me, but raise them all up[6] at the last day. 6:40 For this is the will of my Father – for everyone who looks on the Son and believes in him to have eternal life, and I will raise him up[7] at the last day."[8]

6:41 Then the Jews who were hostile to Jesus[9] began complaining about him because he said, "I am the bread that came down from heaven," 6:42 and they said, "Isn't this Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? How can he now say, 'I have come down from heaven'?" 6:43 Jesus replied,[10] "Do not complain about me to one another.[11] 6:44 No one can come to me unless the Father who sent me draws him,[12] and I will raise him up at the last day. 6:45 It is written in the prophets, 'And they will all be taught by God.'[13] Everyone who hears and learns from the Father[14] comes to me. 6:46 (Not that anyone has seen the Father except the one who is from God – he[15] has seen the Father.)[16] 6:47 I tell you the solemn truth,[17] the one who believes[18] has eternal life.[19] 6:48 I am the bread of life.[20] 6:49 Your ancestors[21] ate the manna in the wilderness, and they died. 6:50 This[22] is the bread that has come down from

1 tn Or "Lord." The Greek κύριος (kurios) means both "Sir" and "Lord." In this passage it is not at all clear at this point that the crowd is acknowledging Jesus as Lord. More likely this is simply a form of polite address ("sir").

2 tn Grk "the one who believes in me will not possibly thirst, ever."

sn The one who believes in me will never be thirsty. Note the parallelism between "coming to Jesus" in the first part of v. 35 and "believing in Jesus" in the second part of v. 35. For the author of the Gospel of John these terms are virtually equivalent, both referring to a positive response to Jesus (see John 3:17-21).

3 tn Grk "But I said to you."

4 tc A few witnesses lack με (me, "me"; ℵ A a b e q sy^{s,c}), while the rest of the tradition has the word (𝔓$^{66.75vid}$ rell). It is possible that the MSS that lack the pronoun preserve the original wording here, with the rest of the witnesses adding the pronoun for clarity's sake. This likelihood increases since the object is not required in Greek. Without it, however, ambiguity increases: The referent could be "me" or it could be "signs," reaching back to vv. 26 and 30. However, the oblique form of ἐγώ (egō, the first person personal pronoun) occurs some two dozen times in this chapter alone, yet it vacillates between the emphatic form and the unemphatic form. Although generally the unemphatic form is used with verbs, there are several exceptions to this in John (cf. 8:12; 12:26, 45, 48; 13:20; 14:9). If the pronoun is a later addition here, one wonders why it is so consistently the unemphatic form in the MSS. Further, that two unrelated Greek witnesses lack this small word could easily be due to accidental deletion. Finally, the date and diversity of the witnesses for the pronoun are so weighty that it is likely to be authentic and should thus be retained in the text.

5 tn Or "drive away"; Grk "cast out."

6 tn Or "resurrect them all," or "make them all live again"; Grk "raise it up." The word "all" is supplied to bring out the collective nature of the neuter singular pronoun αὐτό (auto) in Greek. The plural pronoun "them" is used rather than neuter singular "it" because this is clearer in English, which does not use neuter collective singulars in the same way Greek does.

7 tn Or "resurrect him," or "make him live again."

8 sn Notice that here the result (having eternal life and being raised up at the last day) is produced by looking on the Son and believing in him. Compare John 6:54 where the same result is produced by eating Jesus' flesh and drinking his blood. This suggests that the phrase in 6:54 (eats my flesh and drinks my blood) is to be understood in terms of the phrase here (looks on the Son and believes in him).

9 tn Grk "Then the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the translation restricts the phrase to those Jews who were hostile to Jesus (cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e.β), since the "crowd" mentioned in 6:22-24 was almost all Jewish (as suggested by their addressing Jesus as "Rabbi" (6:25). Likewise, the designation "Judeans" does not fit here because the location is Galilee rather than Judea.

10 tn Grk "answered and said to them."

11 tn Or "Do not grumble among yourselves." The words "about me" are supplied to clarify the translation "complain to one another" (otherwise the Jewish opponents could be understood to be complaining about one another, rather than complaining to one another about Jesus).

12 tn Or "attracts him," or "pulls him." The word is used of pulling or dragging, often by force. It is even used once of magnetic attraction (A. Oepke, TDNT 2:503).

sn The Father who sent me draws him. The author never specifically explains what this "drawing" consists of. It is evidently some kind of attraction; whether it is binding and irresistible or not is not mentioned. But there does seem to be a parallel with 6:65, where Jesus says that no one is able to come to him unless the Father has allowed it. This apparently parallels the use of Isaiah by John to reflect the spiritual blindness of the Jewish leaders (see the quotations from Isaiah in John 9:41 and 12:39-40).

13 sn A quotation from Isa 54:13.

14 tn Or "listens to the Father and learns."

15 tn Grk "this one."

16 sn This is best taken as a parenthetical note by the author. Although some would attribute these words to Jesus himself, the switch from first person in Jesus' preceding and following remarks to third person in v. 46 suggests that the author has added a clarifying comment here.

17 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

18 tc Most witnesses (A C^2 D Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 lat and other versions) have "in me" (εἰς ἐμέ, eis eme) here, while the Sinaitic and Curetonian Syriac versions read "in God." These clarifying readings are predictable variants, being motivated by the scribal tendency toward greater explicitness. That the earliest and best witnesses (𝔓$^{66.75vid}$ ℵ B C* L T W Θ 892 pc) lack any object is solid testimony to the shorter text's authenticity.

19 tn Compare John 6:40.

20 tn That is, "the bread that produces (eternal) life."

21 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

22 tn Or "Here."

heaven, so that a person[1] may eat from it and not die. 6:51 I am the living bread that came down from heaven. If anyone eats from this bread he will live forever. The bread[2] that I will give for the life of the world is my flesh."

6:52 Then the Jews who were hostile to Jesus[3] began to argue with one another,[4] "How can this man[5] give us his flesh to eat?" 6:53 Jesus said to them, "I tell you the solemn truth,[6] unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood,[7] you have no life[8] in yourselves. 6:54 The one who eats[9] my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life, and I will raise him up on the last day.[10] 6:55 For my flesh is true[11] food, and my blood is true[12] drink. 6:56 The one who eats[13] my flesh and drinks my blood resides in me, and I in him.[14] 6:57 Just as the living Father sent me, and I live because of the Father, so the one who consumes[15] me will live because of me. 6:58 This[16] is the bread that came down from heaven; it is not like the bread your ancestors[17] ate, but then later died.[18] The one who eats[19] this bread will live forever."

Many Followers Depart

6:59 Jesus[20] said these things while he was teaching in the synagogue[21] in Capernaum.[22] 6:60 Then many of his disciples, when they heard these things,[23] said, "This is a difficult[24] saying![25] Who can understand it?"[26] 6:61 When Jesus was aware[27] that his disciples were complaining[28] about this, he said to them, "Does this cause you to be offended?[29] 6:62 Then what if

1 tn Grk "someone" (τις, tis).

2 tn Grk "And the bread."

3 tn Grk "Then the Jews began to argue." Here the translation restricts the phrase to those Jews who were hostile to Jesus (cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e.β), since the "crowd" mentioned in 6:22-24 was almost all Jewish (as suggested by their addressing Jesus as "Rabbi" (6:25). See also the note on the phrase "the Jews who were hostile to Jesus" in v. 41.

4 tn Grk "with one another, saying."

5 tn Grk "this one," "this person."

6 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

7 sn Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood. These words are at the heart of the discourse on the Bread of Life, and have created great misunderstanding among interpreters. Anyone who is inclined toward a sacramental viewpoint will almost certainly want to take these words as a reference to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, or the Eucharist, because of the reference to eating and drinking. But this does not automatically follow: By anyone's definition there must be a symbolic element to the eating which Jesus speaks of in the discourse, and once this is admitted, it is better to understand it here, as in the previous references in the passage, to a personal receiving of (or appropriation of) Christ and his work.

8 tn That is, "no eternal life" (as opposed to physical life).

9 tn Or "who chews"; Grk ὁ τρώγων (ho trōgōn). The alternation between ἐσθίω (esthiō, "eat," v. 53) and τρώγω (trōgō, "eats," vv. 54, 56, 58; "consumes," v. 57) may simply reflect a preference for one form over the other on the author's part, rather than an attempt to express a slightly more graphic meaning. If there is a difference, however, the word used here (τρώγω) is the more graphic and vivid of the two ("gnaw" or "chew").

10 sn Notice that here the result (has eternal life and I will raise him up at the last day) is produced by eating (Jesus') flesh and drinking his blood. Compare John 6:40 where the same result is produced by "looking on the Son and believing in him." This suggests that the phrase here (eats my flesh and drinks my blood) is to be understood by the phrase in 6:40 (looks on the Son and believes in him).

11 tn Or "real."

12 tn Or "real."

13 tn Or "who chews." On the alternation between ἐσθίω (esthiō, "eat," v. 53) and τρώγω (trōgō, "eats," vv. 54, 56, 58; "consumes," v. 57) see the note on "eats" in v. 54.

14 sn Resides in me, and I in him. Note how in John 6:54 eating Jesus' flesh and drinking his blood produces eternal life and the promise of resurrection at the last day. Here the same process of eating Jesus' flesh and drinking his blood leads to a relationship of mutual indwelling (resides in me, and I in him). This suggests strongly that for the author (and for Jesus) the concepts of 'possessing eternal life' and of 'residing in Jesus' are virtually interchangeable.

15 tn Or "who chews"; Grk "who eats." Here the translation "consumes" is more appropriate than simply "eats," because it is the internalization of Jesus by the individual that is in view. On the alternation between ἐσθίω (esthiō, "eat," v. 53) and τρώγω (trōgō, "eats," vv. 54, 56, 58; "consumes," v. 57) see the note on "eats" in v. 54.

16 tn Or "This one."

17 tn Or "forefathers"; Grk "fathers."

18 tn Grk "This is the bread that came down from heaven, not just like your ancestors ate and died." The cryptic Greek expression has been filled out in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Or "who chews." On the alternation between ἐσθίω (esthiō, "eat," v. 53) and τρώγω (trōgō, "eats," vv. 54, 56, 58; "consumes," v. 57) see the note on "eats" in v. 54.

20 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) is specified in the translation for clarity.

21 sn A synagogue was a place for Jewish prayer and worship, with recognized leadership (cf. Luke 8:41). Though the origin of the synagogue is not entirely clear, it seems to have arisen in the postexilic community during the intertestamental period. A town could establish a synagogue if there were at least ten men. In normative Judaism of the NT period, the OT scripture was read and discussed in the synagogue by the men who were present (see the Mishnah, m. Megillah 3-4; m. Berakhot 2).

22 map For location see Map1-D2; Map2-C3; Map3-B2.

23 tn The words "these things" are not present in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context, and must be supplied for the English reader.

24 tn Or "hard," "demanding."

25 tn Or "teaching"; Grk "word."

26 tn Or "obey it"; Grk "hear it." The Greek word ἀκούω (akouō) could imply hearing with obedience here, in the sense of "obey." It could also point to the acceptance of what Jesus had just said, (i.e., "who can accept what he said?" However, since the context contains several replies by those in the crowd of hearers that suggest uncertainty or confusion over the meaning of what Jesus had said (6:42; 6:52), the meaning "understand" is preferred here.

27 tn Grk "When Jesus knew within himself."

28 tn Or "were grumbling."

29 tn Or "Does this cause you to no longer believe?" (Grk "cause you to stumble?") sn Does this cause you to be offended? It became apparent to some of Jesus' followers at this point that there would be a cost involved in following him. They had taken offense at some of Jesus' teaching (perhaps the graphic imagery of "eating his flesh" and "drinking his blood," and Jesus now warned them that if they thought this was a problem, there was an even worse cause for stumbling in store: his upcoming crucifixion (John 6:61b-62). Jesus asked, in effect, "Has what I just taught caused you to stumble? What will you do, then, if you see the Son of Man ascending where he was before?" This ascent is to be accomplished through the cross; for John, Jesus' departure from this world and his return to the Father form one continual movement from cross to resur-you see the Son of Man ascending where he was before?[1] 6:63 The Spirit is the one who gives life; human nature is of no help![2] The words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life.[3] 6:64 But there are some of you who do not believe." (For Jesus had already known from the beginning who those were who did not believe, and who it was who would betray him.)[4] 6:65 So Jesus added,[5] "Because of this I told you that no one can come to me unless the Father has allowed him to come."[6]

Peter's Confession

6:66 After this many of his disciples quit following him[7] and did not accompany him[8] any longer. 6:67 So Jesus said to the twelve, "You don't want to go away too, do you?"[9] 6:68 Simon Peter answered him, "Lord, to whom would we go? You have the words of eternal life. 6:69 We[10] have come to believe and to know[11] that you are the Holy One of God!"[12] 6:70 Jesus replied,[13] "Didn't I choose you, the twelve, and yet one of you is the devil?"[14] 6:71 (Now he said this about Judas son of Simon Iscariot,[15] for Judas,[16] one of the twelve, was going to betray him.)[17]

The Feast of Tabernacles

7:1 After this[18] Jesus traveled throughout Galilee.[19] He[20] stayed out of Judea[21] because the rection to ascension.

[1] tn Or "he was formerly?"

[2] tn Grk "the flesh counts for nothing."

[3] tn Or "are spirit-giving and life-producing."

[4] sn This is a parenthetical comment by the author.

[5] tn Grk "And he said"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] tn Grk "unless it has been permitted to him by the Father."

[7] tn Grk "many of his disciples went back to what lay behind."

[8] tn Grk "were not walking with him."

[9] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here it is "do you?").

[10] tn Grk "And we."

[11] sn See 1 John 4:16.

[12] tc The witnesses display a bewildering array of variants here. Instead of "the Holy One of God" (ὁ ἅγιος τοῦ θεοῦ, ho hagios tou theou), Tertullian has ὁ Χριστός (ho Christos, "the Christ"); C[3] Θ* f[1] 33 565 lat read ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ (ho Christos ho huios tou theou, "the Christ, the Son of God"); two versional witnesses (b sy[c]) have ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ ("the Son of God"); the Byzantine text as well as many others (Ψ 0250 f[13] 33 𝔐) read ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ θεοῦ τοῦ ζῶντος (ho Christos ho huios tou theou tou zōntos, "the Christ, the Son of the living God"); and 𝔓[66] as well as a few versions have ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ ἅγιος τοῦ θεοῦ ("the Christ, the Holy One of God"). The reading ὁ ἅγιος τοῦ θεοῦ is, however, well supported by 𝔓[75] ℵ B C* D L W as well as versional witnesses. It appears that Peter's confession in the Synoptic Gospels (especially Matt 16:16) supplied the motivation for the variations. Although the witnesses in Matt 16:16; Mark 8:29; and Luke 9:20 vary considerably, the readings are all intra-synoptic, that is, they do not pull in "the Holy One of God" but reflect various permutations of "Christ"/"Christ of God"/"Christ, the Son of God"/"Christ, the Son of the living God." The wording "the Holy One of God" (without "Christ") in important witnesses here is thus unique among Peter's confessions, and best explains the rise of the other readings.

sn You have the words of eternal life…you are the Holy One of God! In contrast to the response of some of his disciples, here is the response of the twelve, whom Jesus then questioned concerning their loyalty to him. This was the big test, and the twelve, with Peter as spokesman, passed with flying colors. The confession here differs considerably from the synoptic accounts (Matt 16:16, Mark 8:29, and Luke 9:20) and concerns directly the disciples' personal loyalty to Jesus, in contrast to those other disciples who had deserted him (John 6:66).

[13] tn Grk "Jesus answered them."

[14] tn Although most translations render this last phrase as "one of you is a devil," such a translation presupposes that there is more than one devil. This finds roots in the KJV in which the Greek word for demon was often translated "devil." In fact, the KJV never uses the word "demon." (Sixty-two of the 63 NT instances of δαιμόνιον [daimonion] are translated "devil" [in Acts 17:18 the plural has been translated "gods"]. This can get confusing in places where the singular "devil" is used: Is Satan or one of the demons in view [cf. Matt 9:33 (demon); 13:39 (devil); 17:18 (demon); Mark 7:26 (demon); Luke 4:2 (devil); etc.]?) Now regarding John 6:70, both the construction in Greek and the technical use of διάβολος (diabolos) indicate that the one devil is in view. To object to the translation "the devil" because it thus equates Judas with Satan does not take into consideration that Jesus often spoke figuratively (e.g., "destroy this temple" [John 2:19]; "he [John the Baptist] is Elijah" [Matt 11:14]), even equating Peter with the devil on one occasion (Mark 8:33). According to ExSyn 249, "A curious phenomenon has occurred in the English Bible with reference to one particular monadic noun, διάβολος. The KJV translates both διάβολος and δαιμόνιον as 'devil.' Thus in the AV translators' minds, 'devil' was not a monadic noun. Modern translations have correctly rendered δαιμόνιον as 'demon' and have, for the most part, recognized that διάβολος is monadic (cf., e.g., 1 Pet 5:8; Rev 20:2). But in John 6:70 modern translations have fallen into the error of the King James translators. The KJV has 'one of you is a devil.' So does the RSV, NRSV, ASV, NIV, NKJV, and the JB [Jerusalem Bible]. Yet there is only one devil…The legacy of the KJV still lives on, then, even in places where it ought not."

[15] sn At least six explanations for the name Iscariot have been proposed, but it is probably transliterated Hebrew with the meaning "man of Kerioth" (there are at least two villages that had that name). See D. A. Carson, John, 304.

[16] tn Grk "this one"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[17] sn This parenthetical statement by the author helps the reader understand Jesus' statement one of you is the devil in the previous verse. This is the first mention of Judas in the Fourth Gospel, and he is immediately identified (as he is in the synoptic gospels, Matt 10:4, Mark 3:19, Luke 6:16) as the one who would betray Jesus.

[18] sn Again, the transition is indicated by the imprecise temporal indicator After this. Clearly, though, the author has left out much of the events of Jesus' ministry, because chap. 6 took place near the Passover (6:4). This would have been the Passover between winter/spring of A.D. 32, just one year before Jesus' crucifixion (assuming a date of A.D. 33 for the crucifixion), or the Passover of winter/spring A.D. 29, assuming a date of A.D. 30 for the crucifixion.

[19] tn Grk "Jesus was traveling around in Galilee."

[20] tn Grk "For he." Here γάρ (gar, "for") has not been translated.

[21] tn Grk "he did not want to travel around in Judea."

Jewish leaders[1] wanted[2] to kill him. 7:2 Now the Jewish feast of Tabernacles[3] was near.[4] 7:3 So Jesus' brothers[5] advised him, "Leave here and go to Judea so your disciples may see your miracles that you are performing.[6] 7:4 For no one who seeks to make a reputation for himself[7] does anything in secret.[8] If you are doing these things, show yourself to the world." 7:5 (For not even his own brothers believed in him.)[9]

7:6 So Jesus replied,[10] "My time[11] has not yet arrived,[12] but you are ready at any opportunity![13] 7:7 The world cannot hate you, but it hates me, because I am testifying about it that its deeds are evil. 7:8 You go up[14] to the feast yourselves. I am not going up to this feast[15] because my time[16] has not yet fully arrived."[17] 7:9 When he had said this, he remained in Galilee.

7:10 But when his brothers had gone up to the feast, then Jesus[18] himself also went up, not openly but in secret. 7:11 So the Jewish leaders[19] were looking for him at the feast, asking, "Where is he?"[20] 7:12 There was[21] a lot of grumbling[22] about him among the crowds.[23] Some were saying, "He is a good man," but others, "He deceives the common people."[24] 7:13 However, no one spoke openly about him for fear of the Jewish leaders.[25]

Teaching in the Temple

7:14 When the feast was half over, Jesus went up to the temple courts[26] and began to teach.[27] 7:15 Then the Jewish leaders[28] were

1 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase should be restricted to the Jewish authorities or leaders who were Jesus' primary opponents.

2 tn Grk "were seeking."

3 tn Or "feast of the Tents" (the feast where people lived in tents or shelters, which was celebrated in the autumn after harvest). John's use of σκηνοπηγία (skēnopēgia) for the feast of Tabernacles constitutes the only use of this term in the New Testament.

4 sn Since the present verse places these incidents at the feast of Tabernacles (A.D. 29 or 32, depending on whether one dates the crucifixion in A.D. 30 or 33) there would have been a 6-month interval during which no events are recorded. The author is obviously selective in his approach; he is not recording an exhaustive history (as he will later tell the reader in John 21:25). After healing the paralytic on the Sabbath in Jerusalem (John 5:1-47), Jesus withdrew again to Galilee because of mounting opposition. In Galilee the feeding of the 5,000 took place, which marked the end of the Galilean ministry for all practical purposes. John 7:1-9 thus marks Jesus' final departure from Galilee.

5 tn Grk "his brothers."

sn Jesus' brothers. Jesus' brothers (really his half-brothers) were mentioned previously by John in 2:12 (see the note on brothers there). They are also mentioned elsewhere in Matt 13:55 and Mark 6:3.

6 tn Grk "your deeds that you are doing."

sn Should the advice by Jesus' brothers, Leave here and go to Judea so your disciples may see your miracles that you are performing, be understood as a suggestion that he should attempt to win back the disciples who had deserted him earlier (6:66)? Perhaps. But it is also possible to take the words as indicating that if Jesus is going to put forward messianic claims (i.e., through miraculous signs) then he should do so in Jerusalem, not in the remote parts of Galilee. Such an understanding seems to fit better with the following verse. It would also indicate misunderstanding on the part of Jesus' brothers of the true nature of his mission – he did not come as the royal Messiah of Jewish apocalyptic expectation, to be enthroned as king at this time.

7 tn Or "seeks to be well known."

8 sn No one who seeks to make a reputation for himself does anything in secret means, in effect: "if you're going to perform signs to authenticate yourself as Messiah, you should do them at Jerusalem." (Jerusalem is where mainstream Jewish apocalyptic tradition held that Messiah would appear.)

9 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

10 tn Grk "Then Jesus said to them."

11 tn Or "my opportunity."

12 tn Or "is not yet here."

13 tn Grk "your time is always ready."

14 sn One always speaks of "going up" to Jerusalem in Jewish idiom, even though in western thought it is more common to speak of south as "down" (Jerusalem lies south of Galilee). The reason for the idiom is that Jerusalem was identified with Mount Zion in the OT, so that altitude was the issue.

15 tc Most MSS (𝔓66,75 B L T W Θ Ψ 070 0105 0250 $f^{1.13}$ 𝔐 sa), including most of the better witnesses, have "not yet" (οὔπω, oupō) here. Those with the reading οὐκ are not as impressive (ℵ D K 1241 al lat), but οὐκ is the more difficult reading here, especially because it stands in tension with v. 10. On the one hand, it is possible that οὐκ arose because of homoioarcton: A copyist who saw ΟΥΠΩ wrote ΟΥΚ. However, it is more likely that οὔπω was introduced early on to harmonize with what is said two verses later. As for Jesus' refusal to go up to the feast in v. 8, the statement does not preclude action of a different kind at a later point. Jesus may simply have been refusing to accompany his brothers with the rest of the group of pilgrims, preferring to travel separately and "in secret" (v. 10) with his disciples.

16 tn Although the word is καιρός (kairos) here, it parallels John's use of ὥρα (hōra) elsewhere as a reference to the time appointed for Jesus by the Father – the time of his return to the Father, characterized by his death, resurrection, and ascension (glorification). In the Johannine literature, synonyms are often interchanged for no apparent reason other than stylistic variation.

17 tn Or "my time has not yet come to an end" (a possible hint of Jesus' death at Jerusalem); Grk "my time is not yet fulfilled."

18 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish authorities or leaders who were Jesus' primary opponents. See the note on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 1.

20 tn Grk "Where is that one?"

21 tn Grk "And there was."

22 tn Or "complaining."

23 tn Or "among the common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities mentioned in the previous verse).

24 tn Or "the crowd."

25 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish authorities or leaders who were Jesus' primary opponents. See also the note on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 1.

26 tn Grk "to the temple."

27 tn Or "started teaching." An ingressive sense for the imperfect verb ("began to teach" or "started teaching") fits well here, since the context implies that Jesus did not start his teaching at the beginning of the festival, but began when it was about half over.

28 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish authorities or leaders who were Jesus' primary opponents. See the note on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 1.

astonished[1] and said, "How does this man know so much when he has never had formal instruction?"[2] 7:16 So Jesus replied,[3] "My teaching is not from me, but from the one who sent me.[4] 7:17 If anyone wants to do God's will,[5] he will know about my teaching, whether it is from God or whether I speak from my own authority.[6] 7:18 The person who speaks on his own authority[7] desires[8] to receive honor[9] for himself; the one who desires[10] the honor[11] of the one who sent him is a man of integrity,[12] and there is no unrighteousness in him. 7:19 Hasn't Moses given you the law? Yet not one of you keeps[13] the law! Why do you want[14] to kill me?"

7:20 The crowd[15] answered, "You're possessed by a demon![16] Who is trying to kill you?"[17] 7:21 Jesus replied,[18] "I performed one miracle[19] and you are all amazed.[20] 7:22 However, because Moses gave you the practice of circumcision[21] (not that it came from Moses, but from the forefathers), you circumcise a male child[22] on the Sabbath. 7:23 But if a male child[23] is circumcised[24] on the Sabbath so that the law of Moses is not broken,[25] why are you angry with me because I made a man completely well[26] on the Sabbath? 7:24 Do not judge according to external appearance,[27] but judge with proper[28] judgment."

Questions About Jesus' Identity

7:25 Then some of the residents of Jerusalem[29] began to say, "Isn't this the man[30] they are trying[31] to kill? 7:26 Yet here he is, speaking publicly,[32] and they are saying nothing to him.[33] Do the rulers really know that this man[34] is the Christ?[35] 7:27 But we know where this man[36] comes from.[37] Whenever the Christ[38] comes, no one will know where he comes from."[39]

---

[1] tn Or "began to be astonished." This imperfect verb could also be translated ingressively ("began to be astonished"), but for English stylistic reasons it is rendered as a simple past.

[2] tn Grk "How does this man know learning since he has not been taught?" The implication here is not that Jesus never went to school (in all probability he did attend a local synagogue school while a youth), but that he was not the disciple of a particular rabbi and had not had formal or advanced instruction under a recognized rabbi (compare Acts 4:13 where a similar charge is made against Peter and John; see also Paul's comment in Acts 22:3).

sn He has never had formal instruction. Ironically when the Jewish leaders came face to face with the Word become flesh – the preexistent Logos, creator of the universe and divine Wisdom personified – they treated him as an untaught, unlearned person, without the formal qualifications to be a teacher.

[3] tn Grk "So Jesus answered and said to them."

[4] tn The phrase "the one who sent me" refers to God.

[5] tn Grk "his will."

[6] tn Grk "or whether I speak from myself."

[7] tn Grk "who speaks from himself."

[8] tn Or "seeks."

[9] tn Or "praise"; Grk "glory."

[10] tn Or "seeks."

[11] tn Or "praise"; Grk "glory."

[12] tn Or "is truthful"; Grk "is true."

[13] tn Or "accomplishes"; Grk "does."

[14] tn Grk "seek."

[15] tn Or "The common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities mentioned in 7:15).

[16] tn Grk "You have a demon!"

[17] tn Grk "Who is seeking to kill you?"

sn Who is trying to kill you? Many of the crowd (if they had come in from surrounding regions for the feast) probably were ignorant of any plot. The plot was on the part of the Jewish leaders. Note how carefully John distinguishes between the leadership and the general populace in their respective responses to Jesus.

[18] tn Grk "Jesus answered and said to them."

[19] tn Grk "I did one deed."

[20] sn The "one miracle" that caused them all to be amazed was the last previous public miracle in Jerusalem recorded by the author, the healing of the paralyzed man in John 5:1-9 on the Sabbath. (The synoptic gospels record other Sabbath healings, but John does not mention them.)

[21] tn Grk "gave you circumcision."

[22] tn Grk "a man." While the text literally reads "circumcise a man" in actual fact the practice of circumcising male infants on the eighth day after birth (see Phil 3:5) is primarily what is in view here.

[23] tn Grk "a man." See the note on "male child" in the previous verse.

[24] tn Grk "receives circumcision."

[25] sn If a male child is circumcised on the Sabbath so that the law of Moses is not broken. The Rabbis counted 248 parts to a man's body. In the Talmud (b. Yoma 85b) R. Eleazar ben Azariah (ca. A.D. 100) states: "If circumcision, which attaches to one only of the 248 members of the human body, suspends the Sabbath, how much more shall the saving of the whole body suspend the Sabbath?" So absolutely binding did rabbinic Judaism regard the command of Lev 12:3 to circumcise on the eighth day, that in the Mishnah m. Shabbat 18.3; 19.1, 2; and m. Nedarim 3.11 all hold that the command to circumcise overrides the command to observe the Sabbath.

[26] tn Or "made an entire man well."

[27] tn Or "based on sight."

[28] tn Or "honest"; Grk "righteous."

[29] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[30] tn Grk "Is it not this one."

[31] tn Grk "seeking."

[32] tn Or "speaking openly."

[33] sn They are saying nothing to him. Some people who had heard Jesus were so impressed with his teaching that they began to infer from the inactivity of the opposing Jewish leaders a tacit acknowledgment of Jesus' claims.

[34] tn Grk "this one."

[35] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[36] tn Grk "this one."

[37] sn We know where this man comes from. The author apparently did not consider this objection worth answering. The true facts about Jesus' origins were readily available for any reader who didn't know already. Here is an instance where the author assumes knowledge about Jesus that is independent from the material he records.

[38] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[39] sn The view of these people regarding the Messiah that no one will know where he comes from reflects the idea that the origin of the Messiah is a mystery. In the Talmud (b. Sanhedrin 97a) Rabbi Zera taught: "Three come unawares: Messiah, a found article, and a scorpion." Apparently OT prophetic passages like Mal 3:1 and Dan 9:25 were interpreted by some as indicating a sudden appearance of Messiah. It appears that this was not a universal view: The scribes sum-

7:28 Then Jesus, while teaching in the temple courts,[1] cried out,[2] "You both know me and know where I come from![3] And I have not come on my own initiative,[4] but the one who sent me[5] is true. You do not know him,[6] 7:29 but[7] I know him, because I have come from him[8] and he[9] sent me."

7:30 So then they tried to seize Jesus,[10] but no one laid a hand on him, because his time[11] had not yet come. 7:31 Yet many of the crowd[12] believed in him and said, "Whenever the Christ[13] comes, he won't perform more miraculous signs than this man did, will he?"[14]

7:32 The Pharisees[15] heard the crowd[16] murmuring these things about Jesus,[17] so the chief priests and the Pharisees sent officers[18] to arrest him.[19] 7:33 Then Jesus said, "I will be with you for only a little while longer,[20] and then[21] I am going to the one who sent me. 7:34 You will look for me[22] but will not find me, and where I am you cannot come."

7:35 Then the Jewish leaders[23] said to one another, "Where is he[24] going to go that we cannot find him?[25] He is not going to go to the Jewish people dispersed[26] among the Greeks and teach the Greeks, is he?[27] 7:36 What did he mean by saying,[28] 'You will look for me[29] but will not find me, and where I am you cannot come'?"

moned by Herod at the coming of the Magi in Matt 2 knew that the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem. It is important to remember that Jewish messianic expectations in the early 1st century were not monolithic.

[1] tn Grk "the temple."

[2] tn Grk "Then Jesus cried out in the temple, teaching and saying."

[3] sn You both know me and know where I come from! Jesus' response while teaching in the temple is difficult – it appears to concede too much understanding to his opponents. It is best to take the words as irony: "So you know me and know where I am from, do you?" On the physical, literal level, they did know where he was from: Nazareth of Galilee (at least they thought they knew). But on another deeper (spiritual) level, they did not: He came from heaven, from the Father. Jesus insisted that he has not come on his own initiative (cf. 5:37), but at the bidding of the Father who sent him.

[4] tn Grk "And I have not come from myself."

[5] tn The phrase "the one who sent me" refers to God.

[6] tn Grk "the one who sent me is true, whom you do not know."

[7] tn Although the conjunction "but" is not in the Greek text, the contrast is implied (an omitted conjunction is called asyndeton).

[8] tn The preposition παρά (para) followed by the genitive has the local sense preserved and can be used of one person sending another. This does not necessarily imply origin in essence or eternal generation.

[9] tn Grk "and that one."

[10] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

sn Here the response is on the part of the crowd, who tried to seize Jesus. This is apparently distinct from the attempted arrest by the authorities mentioned in 7:32.

[11] tn Grk "his hour."

[12] tn Or "The common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities).

[13] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[14] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here it is "will he?").

[15] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[16] tn Or "The common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities like the Pharisees).

[17] tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[18] tn Or "servants." The "chief priests and Pharisees" is a comprehensive term for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:45; 18:3; Acts 5:22, 26. As "servants" or "officers" of the Sanhedrin their representatives should be distinguished from the Levites serving as temple police (perhaps John 7:30 and 44; also John 8:20; 10:39; 19:6; Acts 4:3). Even when performing "police" duties such as here, their "officers" are doing so only as part of their general tasks (see K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT 8:540).

[19] tn Grk "to seize him." In the context of a deliberate attempt by the servants of the chief priests and Pharisees to detain Jesus, the English verb "arrest" conveys the point more effectively.

[20] tn Grk "Yet a little I am with you."

[21] tn The word "then" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[22] tn Grk "seek me."

[23] tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase is understood to refer to the Jewish authorities or leaders, since the Jewish leaders are mentioned in this context both before and after the present verse (7:32, 45).

[24] tn Grk "this one."

[25] tn Grk "will not find him."

[26] sn The Jewish people dispersed (Grk "He is not going to the Diaspora"). The Greek term diaspora ("dispersion") originally meant those Jews not living in Palestine, but dispersed or scattered among the Gentiles.

[27] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "is he?").

sn Note the Jewish opponents' misunderstanding of Jesus' words, as made clear in vv. 35-36. They didn't realize he spoke of his departure out of the world. This is another example of the author's use of misunderstanding as a literary device to emphasize a point.

[28] tn Grk "What is this word that he said."

[29] tn Grk "seek me."

Teaching About the Spirit

7:37 On the last day of the feast, the greatest day,[1] Jesus stood up and shouted out,[2] "If anyone is thirsty, let him come to me, and 7:38 let the one who believes in me drink.[3] Just as the scripture says, 'From within him[4] will flow rivers of living water.'"[5] 7:39 (Now he said this about the Spirit, whom those who believed in him were going to receive, for the Spirit had not yet been given,[6] because Jesus was not yet glorified.)[7]

Differing Opinions About Jesus

7:40 When they heard these words, some of the crowd[8] began to say, "This really[9] is the Prophet!"[10] 7:41 Others said, "This is the Christ!"[11] But still others said, "No,[12] for the

[1] sn There is a problem with the identification of this reference to the last day of the feast, the greatest day: It appears from Deut 16:13 that the feast went for seven days. Lev 23:36, however, makes it plain that there was an eighth day, though it was mentioned separately from the seven. It is not completely clear whether the seventh or eighth day was the climax of the feast, called here by the author the "last great day of the feast." Since according to the Mishnah (m. Sukkah 4.1) the ceremonies with water and lights did not continue after the seventh day, it seems more probable that this is the day the author mentions.

[2] tn Grk "Jesus stood up and cried out, saying."

[3] tn An alternate way of punctuating the Greek text of vv. 37-38 results in this translation: "If anyone is thirsty, let him come to me and drink. The one who believes in me, just as the scripture says, 'From within him will flow rivers of living water.'" John 7:37-38 has been the subject of considerable scholarly debate. Certainly Jesus picks up on the literal water used in the ceremony and uses it figuratively. But what does the figure mean? According to popular understanding, it refers to the coming of the Holy Spirit to dwell in the believer. There is some difficulty in locating an OT text which speaks of rivers of water flowing from within such a person, but Isa 58:11 is often suggested: "The LORD will continually lead you, he will feed you even in parched regions. He will give you renewed strength, and you will be like a well-watered garden, like a spring that continually produces water." Other passages which have been suggested are Prov 4:23 and 5:15; Isa 44:3 and 55:1; Ezek 47:1 ff.; Joel 3:18; and Zech 13:1 and 14:8. The meaning in this case is that when anyone comes to believe in Jesus the scriptures referring to the activity of the Holy Spirit in a person's life are fulfilled. "When the believer comes to Christ and drinks he not only slakes his thirst but receives such an abundant supply that veritable rivers flow from him" (L. Morris, John [NICNT], 424-25). In other words, with this view, the believer himself becomes the source of the living water. This is the traditional understanding of the passage, often called the "Eastern interpretation" following Origen, Athanasius, and the Greek Fathers. It is supported by such modern scholars as Barrett, Behm, Bernard, Cadman, Carson, R. H. Lightfoot, Lindars, Michaelis, Morris, Odeberg, Schlatter, Schweizer, C. H. Turner, M. M. B. Turner, Westcott, and Zahn. In addition it is represented by the following Greek texts and translations: KJV, RSV, NASB, NA^{27}, and UBS^{4}. D. A. Carson, John, 322-29, has a thorough discussion of the issues and evidence although he opts for the previous interpretation. There is another interpretation possible, however, called the "Western interpretation" because of patristic support by Justin, Hippolytus, Tertullian, and Irenaeus. Modern scholars who favor this view are Abbott, Beasley-Murray, Bishop, Boismard, Braun, Brown, Bullinger, Bultmann, Burney, Dodd, Dunn, Guilding, R. Harris, Hoskyns, Jeremias, Loisy, D. M. Stanley, Thüsing, N. Turner, and Zerwick. This view is represented by the translation in the RSV margin and by the NEB. It is also sometimes called the "christological interpretation" because it makes Jesus himself the source of the living water in v. 38, by punctuating as follows: (37b) ἐάν τι διψᾷ ἐρχέσθω πρός με, καὶ πινέτω (38) ὁ πιστεύων εἰς ἐμέ. Καθὼς εἶπεν ἡ γραφή, ποταμοὶ ἐκ τῆς κοιλίας αὐτοῦ ῥεύσουσιν ὕδατος ζῶντος. Three crucial questions are involved in the solution of this problem: (1) punctuation; (2) determining the antecedent of αὐτοῦ (autou); and (3) the source of the scripture quotation. With regard to (1) $\mathfrak{P}^{66}$ does place a full stop after πινέτω (pinetō), but this may be theologically motivated and could have been added later. Grammatical and stylistic arguments are inconclusive. More important is (2) the determination of the antecedent of αὐτοῦ. Can any other Johannine parallels be found which make the believer the source of the living water? John 4:14 is often mentioned in this regard, but unlike 4:14 the water here becomes a source for others also. Neither does 14:12 provide a parallel. Furthermore, such an interpretation becomes even more problematic in light of the explanation given in v. 39 that the water refers to the Holy Spirit, since it is extremely difficult to see the individual believer becoming the 'source' of the Spirit for others. On the other hand, the Gospel of John repeatedly places Jesus himself in this role as source of the living water: 4:10, of course, for the water itself, but according to 20:22 Jesus provides the Spirit (cf. 14:16). Furthermore, the symbolism of 19:34 is difficult to explain as anything other than a deliberate allusion to what is predicted here. This also explains why the Spirit cannot come to the disciples unless Jesus "departs" (16:7). As to (3) the source of the scripture quotation, M. E. Boismard has argued that John is using a targumic rendering of Ps 78:15-16 which describes the water brought forth from the rock in the wilderness by Moses ("Les citations targumiques dans le quatrième évangile," RB 66 [1959]: 374-78). The frequency of Exodus motifs in the Fourth Gospel (paschal lamb, bronze serpent, manna from heaven) leads quite naturally to the supposition that the author is here drawing on the account of Moses striking the rock in the wilderness to bring forth water (Num 20:8 ff.). That such imagery was readily identified with Jesus in the early church is demonstrated by Paul's understanding of the event in 1 Cor 10:4. Jesus is the Rock from which the living water – the Spirit – will flow. Carson (see note above) discusses this imagery although he favors the traditional or "Eastern" interpretation. In summary, the latter or "Western" interpretation is to be preferred.

[4] tn Or "out of the innermost part of his person"; Grk "out of his belly."

[5] sn An OT quotation whose source is difficult to determine. Isa 44:3; 55:1; 58:11; and Zech 14:8 have all been suggested.

[6] tn Grk "for the Spirit was not yet." Although only B and a handful of other NT MSS supply the participle δεδομένον (dedomenon), this is followed in the translation to avoid misunderstanding by the modern English reader that prior to this time the Spirit did not exist. John's phrase is expressed from a human standpoint and has nothing to do with the preexistence of the third Person of the Godhead. The meaning is that the era of the Holy Spirit had not yet arrived; the Spirit was not as yet at work in a way he later would be because Jesus had not yet returned to his Father. Cf. also Acts 19:2.

[7] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[8] tn Or "the common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities like the chief priests and Pharisees).

[9] tn Or "truly."

[10] sn The Prophet is a reference to the "prophet like Moses" of Deut 18:15, by this time an eschatological figure in popular belief.

[11] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[12] tn An initial negative reply ("No") is suggested by the causal or explanatory γάρ (gar) which begins the clause.

Christ doesn't come from Galilee, does he?[1] 7:42 Don't the scriptures say that the Christ is a descendant[2] of David[3] and comes from Bethlehem,[4] the village where David lived?"[5] 7:43 So there was a division in the crowd[6] because of Jesus.[7] 7:44 Some of them were wanting to seize him, but no one laid a hand on him.[8]

Lack of Belief

7:45 Then the officers[9] returned[10] to the chief priests and Pharisees,[11] who said to them, "Why didn't you bring him back with you?"[12] 7:46 The officers replied, "No one ever spoke like this man!" 7:47 Then the Pharisees answered,[13] "You haven't been deceived too, have you?[14] 7:48 None of the rulers[15] or the Pharisees have believed in him, have they?[16] 7:49 But this rabble[17] who do not know the law are accursed!"

7:50 Nicodemus, who had gone to Jesus[18] before and who was one of the rulers,[19] said,[20] 7:51 "Our law doesn't condemn[21] a man unless it first hears from him and learns[22] what he is doing, does it?"[23] 7:52 They replied,[24] "You aren't from Galilee too, are you?[25] Investigate carefully and you will see that no prophet[26] comes from Galilee!"

3 sn An allusion to Ps 89:4.

4 sn An allusion to Mic 5:2.

5 tn Grk "the village where David was."

6 tn Or "among the common people" (as opposed to the religious authorities like the chief priests and Pharisees).

7 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

8 sn Compare John 7:30 regarding the attempt to seize Jesus.

9 tn Or "servants." The "chief priests and Pharisees" is a comprehensive term for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:45; 18:3; Acts 5:22, 26. As "servants" or "officers" of the Sanhedrin, their representatives should be distinguished from the Levites serving as temple police (perhaps John 7:30 and 44; also John 8:20; 10:39; 19:6; Acts 4:3). Even when performing 'police' duties such as here, their "officers" are doing so only as part of their general tasks (See K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT 8:540).

10 tn Grk "came."

11 sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

12 tn Grk "Why did you not bring him?" The words "back with you" are implied.

13 tn Grk "answered them."

14 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "have you?").

15 sn The chief priests and Pharisees (John 7:45) is a comprehensive term for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:45; 18:3; Acts 5:22, 26. Likewise the term ruler here denotes a member of the Sanhedrin, the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews. Note the same word ("ruler") is used to describe Nicodemus in John 3:1, and Nicodemus also speaks up in this episode (John 7:50).

16 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "have they?").

17 tn Grk "crowd." "Rabble" is a good translation here because the remark by the Pharisees is so derogatory.

18 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "who was one of them"; the referent (the rulers) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

21 tn Grk "judge."

22 tn Grk "knows."

23 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "does it?").

24 tn Grk "They answered and said to him."

25 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "are you?").

26 tc At least one early and important MS ($\mathfrak{P}^{66*}$) places the article before "prophet" (ὁ προφήτης, ho prophētēs), making this a reference to the "prophet like Moses" mentioned in Deut 18:15.

tn This claim by the leaders presents some difficulty, because Jonah had been from Gath Hepher, in Galilee (2 Kgs 14:25). Also the Babylonian Talmud later stated, "There was not a tribe in Israel from which there did not come prophets" (b. Sukkah 27b). Two explanations are possible: (1) In the heat of anger the members of the Sanhedrin overlooked the facts (this is perhaps the easiest explanation). (2) This anarthrous noun is to be understood as a reference to the prophet of Deut 18:15 (note the reading of $\mathfrak{P}^{66}$ which is articular), by this time an eschatological figure in popular belief. This would produce in the text of John's Gospel a high sense of irony indeed, since the religious authorities by their insistence that "the Prophet" could not come from Galilee displayed their true ignorance of where Jesus came from on two levels at once (Bethlehem, his birthplace, the fulfillment of Mic 5:2, but also heaven, from which he was sent by the Father). The author does not even bother to refute the false attestation of Jesus' place of birth as Galilee (presumably Christians knew all too well where Jesus came from).

27 tc This entire section, 7:53-8:11, traditionally known as the pericope adulterae, is not contained in the earliest and best MSS and was almost certainly not an original part of the Gospel of John. Among modern commentators and textual critics, it is a foregone conclusion that the section is not original but represents a later addition to the text of the Gospel. B. M. Metzger summarizes: "the evidence for the non-Johannine origin of the pericope of the adulteress is overwhelming" (TCGNT 187). External evidence is as follows. For the omission of 7:53-8:11: $\mathfrak{P}^{66,75}$ ℵ B L N T W Δ Θ Ψ 0141 0211 33 565 1241 1424* 2768 al. In addition codices A and C are defective in this part of John, but it appears that neither contained the pericope because careful measurement shows that there would not have been enough space on the missing pages to include the pericope 7:53-8:11 along with the rest of the text. Among the MSS that include 7:53-8:11 are D 𝔐 lat. In addition E S Λ 1424^{mg} al include part or all of the passage with asterisks or obeli, 225 places the pericope after John 7:36, f^{1} places it after John 21:25, {115} after John 8:12, f^{13} after Luke 21:38, and the corrector of 1333 includes it after Luke 24:53. (For a more complete discussion of the locations where this "floating" text has ended up, as well as a minority opinion on the authenticity of the passage, see M. A. Robinson, "Preliminary Observations regarding the Pericope Adulterae Based upon Fresh Collations of nearly All Continuous-Text Manuscripts and All Lectionary Manuscripts containing the Passage," Filologia Neotestamentaria 13 [2000]: 35-59, especially 41-42.) In evaluating this MS evidence, it should be remembered that in the Gospels A is considered to be of Byzantine texttype (unlike in the epistles and Revelation, where it is Alexandrian), as are E F G (MSS with the same designation are of Western texttype in the epistles). This leaves D as the only major Western uncial witness in the Gospels for the inclusion. Therefore the evidence could be summarized by saying that almost all early MSS of the Alexandrian texttype omit the pericope, while most MSS of the Western and Byzantine texttype include it. But it must be remembered that "Western MSS" here refers only to D, a single witness (as far as Greek MSS are concerned). Thus it can be seen that practically all of the earliest and best MSS extant omit the pericope; it is found only in MSS of secondary importance. But before one can conclude that the passage was not originally part of the Gospel of John, internal evidence needs to be considered as well. Internal evidence in favor of the inclusion of 8:1-11 (7:53-8:11): (1) 7:53 fits in the context. If the "last great day of the feast" (7:37) refers to the conclusion of the Feast of Tabernacles, then the statement refers to the pilgrims and worshipers going home after living in "booths" for the week while visiting Jerusalem. (2) There may be an allusion to Isa 9:1-2 behind this text: John 8:12 is the point when Jesus describes himself as the Light of the world. But the section in question mentions that Jesus returned to the temple at "early dawn" (Ὀρθρου, Orthrou, in 8:2). This is the "dawning" of the Light of the world (8:12) mentioned by Isa 9:2. (3) Furthermore, note the relationship to what follows: Just prior to presenting Jesus' statement that he is the Light of the world, John presents the reader with an example that shows Jesus as the light. Here the woman "came to the light" while her accusers shrank away into the shadows, because their deeds were evil (cf. 3:19-21). Internal evidence against the inclusion of 8:1-11 (7:53-8:11): (1) In reply to the claim that the introduction to the pericope, 7:53, fits the context, it should also be noted that the narrative reads well without the pericope, so that Jesus' reply in 8:12 is directed against the charge of the Pharisees in 7:52 that no prophet comes from Galilee. (2) The assumption that the author "must" somehow work Isa 9:1-2 into the narrative is simply that – an assumption. The statement by the Pharisees in 7:52 about Jesus' Galilean origins is allowed to stand without correction by the author, although one might have expected him to mention that Jesus was really born in Bethlehem. And 8:12 does directly mention Jesus' claim to be the Light of the world. The author may well have presumed familiarity with Isa 9:1-2 on the part of his readers because of its widespread association with Jesus among early Christians. (3) The fact that the pericope deals with the light/darkness motif does not inherently strengthen its claim to authenticity, because the motif is so prominent in the Fourth Gospel that it may well have been the reason why someone felt that the pericope, circulating as an independent tradition, fit so well here. (4) In general the style of the pericope is not Johannine either in vocabulary or grammar (see D. B. Wallace, "Reconsidering 'The Story of the Woman Taken in Adultery Reconsidered'," NTS 39 [1993]: 290-96). According to R. E. Brown it is closer stylistically to Lukan material (John [AB], 1:336). Interestingly one important family of MSS (f^{13}) places the pericope after Luke 21:38. Conclusion: In the final analysis, the weight of evidence in this case must go with the external evidence. The earliest and best MSS do not contain the pericope. It is true with regard to internal evidence that an attractive case can be made for inclusion, but this is by nature subjective (as evidenced by the fact that strong arguments can be given against such as well). In terms of internal factors like vocabulary and style, the pericope does not stand up very well. The question may be asked whether this incident, although not an original part of the Gospel of John, should be regarded as an authentic tradition about Jesus. It could well be that it is ancient and may indeed represent an unusual instance where such a tradition survived outside of the bounds of the canonical literature. However, even that needs to be nuanced (see B. D. Ehrman, "Jesus and the Adulteress," NTS 34 [1988]: 24–44).

sn Double brackets have been placed around this passage to indicate that most likely it was not part of the original text of the Gospel of John. In spite of this, the passage has an important role in the history of the transmission of the text, so it has been included in the translation.

[1] sn The Mount of Olives is a hill running north to south about 1.8 mi (3 km) long, lying east of Jerusalem across the Kidron Valley. It was named for the large number of olive trees that grew on it.

[2] tn An ingressive sense for the imperfect fits well here following the aorist participle.

[3] tn Or "The scribes." The traditional rendering of γραμματεύς (grammateus) as "scribe" does not communicate much to the modern English reader, for whom the term might mean "professional copyist," if it means anything at all. The people referred to here were recognized experts in the law of Moses and in traditional laws and regulations. Thus "expert in the law" comes closer to the meaning for the modern reader.

[4] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[5] tn Grk "to him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[6] sn An allusion to Lev 20:10 and Deut 22:22-24.

[7] sn The accusers themselves subtly misrepresented the law. The Mosaic law stated that in the case of adultery, both the man and woman must be put to death (Lev 20:10, Deut 22:22), but they mentioned only such women.

[8] tn Grk "so that they could accuse."

[9] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author of 7:53–8:11.

[10] tn Or possibly "Jesus bent down and wrote an accusation on the ground with his finger." The Greek verb καταγράφω (katagraphō) may indicate only the action of writing on the ground by Jesus, but in the overall context (Jesus' response to the accusation against the woman) it can also be interpreted as implying that what Jesus wrote was a counteraccusation against the accusers (although there is no clue as to the actual content of what he wrote, some scribes added "the sins of each one of them" either here or at the end of v. 8 [U 264 700 al]).

[11] tn Or "he straightened up."

[12] tn Grk "and said to them."

[13] tn Or "sinless."

[15] tn Or "beginning from the eldest."

Jesus was left alone with the woman standing before him.
8:10 Jesus stood up straight[1] and said to her, "Woman,[2] where are they? Did no one condemn you?" 8:11 She replied, "No one, Lord." And Jesus said, "I do not condemn you either. Go, and from now on do not sin any more."]][3]

Jesus as the Light of the World

8:12 Then Jesus spoke out again,[4] "I am the light of the world.[5] The one who follows me will never[6] walk in darkness, but will have the light of life." 8:13 So the Pharisees[7] objected,[8] "You testify about yourself; your testimony is not true!"[9] 8:14 Jesus answered,[10] "Even if I testify about myself, my testimony is true, because I know where I came from and where I am going. But you people[11] do not know where I came from or where I am going.[12] 8:15 You people[13] judge by outward appearances;[14] I do not judge anyone.[15] 8:16 But if I judge, my evaluation is accurate,[16] because I am not alone when I judge,[17] but I and the Father who sent me do so together.[18] 8:17 It is written in your law that the testimony of two men is true.[19] 8:18 I testify about myself[20] and the Father who sent me testifies about me."

8:19 Then they began asking[21] him, "Who is your father?" Jesus answered, "You do not know either me or my Father. If you knew me you would know my Father too."[22] 8:20 (Jesus[23] spoke these words near the offering box[24] while he was teaching in the temple courts.[25] No one seized him because his time[26] had not yet come.)[27]

---

1 tn Or "straightened up."

2 sn Woman was a polite form of address (see BDAG 208-9 s.v. γυνή 1), similar to "Madam" or "Ma'am" used in English in different regions.

3 tc The earliest and best MSS do not contain 7:53–8:11 (see note on 7:53).

4 tn Grk "Then again Jesus spoke to them saying."

5 sn The theory proposed by F. J. A. Hort (The New Testament in the Original Greek, vol. 2, Introduction; Appendix, 87-88), that the backdrop of 8:12 is the lighting of the candelabra in the court of women, may offer a plausible setting to the proclamation by Jesus that he is the light of the world. The last time that Jesus spoke in the narrative (assuming 7:53-8:11 is not part of the original text, as the textual evidence suggests) is in 7:38, where he was speaking to a crowd of pilgrims in the temple area. This is where he is found in the present verse, and he may be addressing the crowd again. Jesus' remark has to be seen in view of both the prologue (John 1:4, 5) and the end of the discourse with Nicodemus (John 3:19-21). The coming of Jesus into the world provokes judgment: A choosing up of sides becomes necessary. The one who comes to the light, that is, who follows Jesus, will not walk in the darkness. The one who refuses to come, will walk in the darkness. In this contrast, there are only two alternatives. So it is with a person's decision about Jesus. Furthermore, this serves as in implicit indictment of Jesus' opponents, who still walk in the darkness, because they refuse to come to him. This sets up the contrast in chap. 9 between the man born blind, who receives both physical and spiritual sight, and the Pharisees (John 9:13, 15, 16) who have physical sight but remain in spiritual darkness.

6 tn The double negative οὐ μή (ou mē) is emphatic in 1st century Hellenistic Greek.

7 sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

8 tn Grk "Then the Pharisees said to him."

9 sn Compare the charge You testify about yourself; your testimony is not true! to Jesus' own statement about his testimony in 5:31.

10 tn Grk "Jesus answered and said to them."

11 tn The word "people" is supplied in the translation to indicate that the pronoun ("you") and verb ("do not know") in Greek are plural.

12 sn You people do not know where I came from or where I am going. The ignorance of the religious authorities regarding Jesus' origin works on two levels at once: First, they thought Jesus came from Galilee (although he really came from Bethlehem in Judea) and second, they did not know that he came from heaven (from the Father), and this is where he would return. See further John 7:52.

13 tn The word "people" is supplied in the translation to indicate that the pronoun and verb ("judge") in Greek are plural.

14 tn Or "judge according to external things"; Grk "according to the flesh." These translations are given by BDAG 916 s.v. σάρξ 5.

15 sn What is the meaning of Jesus' statement "I do not judge anyone"? It is clear that Jesus did judge (even in the next verse). The point is that he didn't practice the same kind of judgment that the Pharisees did. Their kind of judgment was condemnatory. They tried to condemn people. Jesus did not come to judge the world, but to save it (3:17). Nevertheless, and not contradictory to this, the coming of Jesus did bring judgment, because it forced people to make a choice. Would they accept Jesus or reject him? Would they come to the light or shrink back into the darkness? As they responded, so were they judged – just as 3:19-21 previously stated. One's response to Jesus determines one's eternal destiny.

16 tn Grk "my judgment is true."

17 tn The phrase "when I judge" is not in the Greek text, but is implied by the context.

18 tn The phrase "do so together" is not in the Greek text, but is implied by the context.

19 sn An allusion to Deut 17:6.

20 tn Grk "I am the one who testifies about myself."

21 tn Grk "Then they were saying to him." The imperfect verb has been translated with ingressive force here because of the introduction of a new line of questioning by the Pharisees. Jesus had just claimed his Father as a second witness; now his opponents want to know who his father is.

22 sn If you knew me you would know my Father too. Jesus' reply is based on his identity with the Father (see also John 1:18; 14:9).

23 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn The term γαζοφυλάκιον (gazophulakion) can be translated "treasury" or "treasure room" in this context. BDAG 186 s.v. 1 notes, "It can be taken in this sense J 8:20 (sing.) in (or at) the treasury." BDAG 186 s.v. 2 argues that the occurrences of this word in the synoptic gospels also refer to the treasury: "For Mk 12:41, 43; Lk 21:1 the mng. contribution box or receptacle is attractive. Acc. to Mishnah, Shekalim 6, 5 there were in the temple 13 such receptacles in the form of trumpets. But even in these passages the general sense of 'treasury' is prob., for the contributions would go [into] the treasury via the receptacles." Based upon the extra-biblical evidence (see sn following), however, the translation opts to refer to the actual receptacles and not the treasury itself.

sn The offering box probably refers to the receptacles in the temple forecourt by the Court of Women used to collect free-will offerings. These are mentioned by Josephus, J. W. 5.5.2 (5.200), 6.5.2 (6.282); Ant. 19.6.1 (19.294); and in 1 Macc 14:49 and 2 Macc 3:6, 24, 28, 40 (see also Mark 12:41; Luke 21:1).

25 tn Grk "the temple."

26 tn Grk "his hour."

27 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

Where Jesus Came From and Where He is Going

8:21 Then Jesus[1] said to them again,[2] "I am going away, and you will look for me[3] but will die in your sin.[4] Where I am going you cannot come." 8:22 So the Jewish leaders[5] began to say,[6] "Perhaps he is going to kill himself, because he says, 'Where I am going you cannot come.'" 8:23 Jesus replied,[7] "You people[8] are from below; I am from above. You people are from this world; I am not from this world. 8:24 Thus I told you[9] that you will die in your sins. For unless you believe that I am he,[10] you will die in your sins."

8:25 So they said to him, "Who are you?" Jesus replied,[11] "What I have told you from the beginning. 8:26 I have many things to say and to judge[12] about you, but the Father[13] who sent me is truthful,[14] and the things I have heard from him I speak to the world."[15] 8:27 (They did not understand that he was telling them about his Father.)[16]

8:28 Then Jesus said,[17] "When you lift up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am he,[18] and I do nothing on my own initiative,[19] but I speak just what the Father taught me.[20] 8:29 And the one who sent me is with me. He has not left me alone,[21] because I always do those things that please him." 8:30 While he was saying these things, many people[22] believed in him.

Abraham's Children and the Devil's Children

8:31 Then Jesus said to those Judeans[23] who had believed him, "If you continue to follow my teaching,[24] you are really[25] my disciples

---

1 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn The expression οὖν πάλιν (oun palin) indicates some sort of break in the sequence of events, but it is not clear how long. The author does not mention the interval between 8:12-20 and this next recorded dialogue. The feast of Tabernacles is past, and the next reference to time is 10:22, where the feast of the Dedication is mentioned. The interval is two months, and these discussions could have taken place at any time within that interval, as long as one assumes something of a loose chronological framework. However, if the material in the Fourth Gospel is arranged theologically or thematically, such an assumption would not apply.

3 tn Grk "you will seek me."

4 tn The expression ἐν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ὑμῶν ἀποθανεῖσθε (en tē hamartia humōn apothaneisthe) is similar to an expression found in the LXX at Ezek 3:18, 20 and Prov 24:9. Note the singular of ἁμαρτία (the plural occurs later in v. 24). To die with one's sin unrepented and unatoned would be the ultimate disaster to befall a person. Jesus' warning is stern but to the point.

5 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish authorities or leaders in Jerusalem. It was the Pharisees who had begun this line of questioning in John 8:13, and there has been no clear change since then in the identity of Jesus' opponents.

6 tn The imperfect verb has been translated with ingressive force ("began to say") because the comments that follow were occasioned by Jesus' remarks in the preceding verse about his upcoming departure.

7 tn Grk "And he said to them."

8 tn The word "people" is supplied in English to clarify the plural Greek pronoun and verb.

9 tn Grk "thus I said to you."

10 tn Grk "unless you believe that I am." In this context there is an implied predicate nominative ("he") following the "I am" phrase. What Jesus' hearers had to acknowledge is that he was who he claimed to be, i.e., the Messiah (cf. 20:31). This view is also reflected in English translations like NIV ("if you do not believe that I am the one I claim to be"), NLT ("unless you believe that I am who I say I am"), and CEV ("if you don't have faith in me for who I am"). For a different view that takes this "I am" and the one in 8:28 as nonpredicated (i.e., absolute), see R. E. Brown, John (AB), 1:533-38. Such a view refers sees the nonpredicated "I am" as a reference to the divine Name revealed in Exod 3:14, and is reflected in English translations like NAB ("if you do not believe that I AM, you will die in your sins") and TEV ("you will die in your sins if you do not believe that 'I Am Who I Am'").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

11 tn Grk "Jesus said to them."

12 tn Or "I have many things to pronounce in judgment about you." The two Greek infinitives could be understood as a hendiadys, resulting in one phrase.

13 tn Grk "the one"; the referent (the Father) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

14 tn Grk "true" (in the sense of one who always tells the truth).

15 tn Grk "and what things I have heard from him, these things I speak to the world."

16 sn They did not understand...about his Father is a parenthetical note by the author. This type of comment, intended for the benefit of the reader, is typical of the "omniscient author" convention adopted by the author, who is writing from a postresurrection point of view. He writes with the benefit of later knowledge that those who originally heard Jesus' words would not have had.

17 tn Grk "Then Jesus said to them" (the words "to them" are not found in all MSS).

18 tn Grk "that I am." See the note on this phrase in v. 24.

19 tn Grk "I do nothing from myself."

20 tn Grk "but just as the Father taught me, these things I speak."

21 tn That is, "he has not abandoned me."

22 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied for clarity and smoothness in the translation.

23 tn Grk "to the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory (i.e., "Judeans"), the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9; also BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish people in Jerusalem who had been listening to Jesus' teaching in the temple and had believed his claim to be the Messiah, hence, "those Judeans who had believed him." The term "Judeans" is preferred here to the more general "people" because the debate concerns descent from Abraham (v. 33).

24 tn Grk "If you continue in my word."

25 tn Or "truly."

8:32 and you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free."[1] 8:33 "We are descendants[2] of Abraham," they replied,[3] "and have never been anyone's slaves! How can you say,[4] 'You will become free'?" 8:34 Jesus answered them, "I tell you the solemn truth,[5] everyone who practices[6] sin is a slave[7] of sin. 8:35 The slave does not remain in the family[8] forever, but the son remains forever.[9] 8:36 So if the son[10] sets you free, you will be really free. 8:37 I know that you are Abraham's descendants.[11] But you want[12] to kill me, because my teaching[13] makes no progress among you.[14] 8:38 I am telling you the things I have seen while with the[15] Father;[16] as for you,[17] practice the things you have heard from the[18] Father!"

8:39 They answered him,[19] "Abraham is our father!"[20] Jesus replied,[21] "If you are[22] Abraham's children, you would be doing[23] the deeds of Abraham. 8:40 But now you are trying[24] to kill me, a man who has told you[25] the truth I heard from God. Abraham did not do this![26] 8:41 You people[27] are doing the deeds of your father."

1 tn Or "the truth will release you." The translation "set you free" or "release you" (unlike the more traditional "make you free") conveys more the idea that the hearers were currently in a state of slavery from which they needed to be freed. The following context supports precisely this idea.

sn The statement the truth will set you free is often taken as referring to truth in the philosophical (or absolute) sense, or in the intellectual sense, or even (as the Jews apparently took it) in the political sense. In the context of John's Gospel (particularly in light of the prologue) this must refer to truth about the person and work of Jesus. It is saving truth. As L. Morris says, "it is the truth which saves men from the darkness of sin, not that which saves them from the darkness of error (though there is a sense in which men in Christ are delivered from gross error)" (John [NICNT], 457).

2 tn Grk "We are the seed" (an idiom).

3 tn Grk "They answered to him."

4 tn Or "How is it that you say."

5 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

6 tn Or "who commits." This could simply be translated, "everyone who sins," but the Greek is more emphatic, using the participle ποιῶν (poiōn) in a construction with πᾶς (pas), a typical Johannine construction. Here repeated, continuous action is in view. The one whose lifestyle is characterized by repeated, continuous sin is a slave to sin. That one is not free; sin has enslaved him. To break free from this bondage requires outside (divine) intervention. Although the statement is true at the general level (the person who continually practices a lifestyle of sin is enslaved to sin) the particular sin of the Jewish authorities, repeatedly emphasized in the Fourth Gospel, is the sin of unbelief. The present tense in this instance looks at the continuing refusal on the part of the Jewish leaders to acknowledge who Jesus is, in spite of mounting evidence.

7 tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

8 tn Or "household." The Greek work οἰκία (oikia) can denote the family as consisting of relatives by both descent and marriage, as well as slaves and servants, living in the same house (more the concept of an "extended family").

9 sn Jesus' point is that while a slave may be part of a family or household, the slave is not guaranteed a permanent place there, while a son, as a descendant or blood relative, will always be guaranteed a place in the family (remains forever).

10 tn Or "Son." The question is whether "son" is to be understood as a direct reference to Jesus himself, or as an indirect reference (a continuation of the generic illustration begun in the previous verse).

11 tn Grk "seed" (an idiom).

12 tn Grk "you are seeking."

13 tn Grk "my word."

14 tn Or "finds no place in you." The basic idea seems to be something (in this case Jesus' teaching) making headway or progress where resistance is involved. See BDAG 1094 s.v. χωρέω 2.

15 tc The first person pronoun μου (mou, "my") may be implied, especially if ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") follows the second mention of "father" in this verse (as it does in the majority of MSS); no doubt this implication gave rise to the reading μου found in most witnesses (ℵ D Θ Ψ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 it sy). No pronoun here is read by 𝔓^{66,75} B C L 070 pc. This problem cannot be isolated from the second in the verse, however. See that discussion below.

16 tn Grk "The things which I have seen with the Father I speak about."

17 tn Grk "and you."

18 tc A few significant witnesses lack ὑμῶν (humōn, "your") here (𝔓^{66,75} B L W 070 pc), while the majority have the pronoun (ℵ C D Θ Ψ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 565 892 𝔐 al lat sy). However, these MSS do not agree on the placement of the pronoun: τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν ποιεῖτε (tou patros humōn poieite), τῷ πατρὶ ὑμῶν (tō patri humōn), and τῷ πατρὶ ὑμῶν ταῦτα (tō patri humōn tauta) all occur. If the pronoun is read, then the devil is in view and the text should be translated as "you are practicing the things you have heard from your father." If it is not read, then the same Father mentioned in the first part of the verse is in view. In this case, ποιεῖτε should be taken as an imperative: "you [must] practice the things you have heard from the Father." The omission is decidedly the harder reading, both because the contrast between God and the devil is now delayed until v. 41, and because ποιεῖτε could be read as an indicative, especially since the two clauses are joined by καί (kai, "and"). Thus, the pronoun looks to be a motivated reading. In light of the better external and internal evidence the omission is preferred.

19 tn Grk "They answered and said to him."

20 tn Or "Our father is Abraham."

21 tn Grk "Jesus said to them."

22 tc Although most MSS (C W Θ Ψ 0250 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐) have the imperfect ἦτε (ēte, "you were") here, making this sentence a proper second class condition, the harder reading, ἐστε (este, "you are"), is found in the better witnesses (𝔓^{66,75} ℵ B D L 070 pc lat).

23 tc Some important MSS (𝔓^{66} B* [700]) have the present imperative ποιεῖτε (poieite) here: "If you are Abraham's children, then do," while many others (ℵ^{2} C K L N Δ Ψ $f^{1,13}$ 33 565 579 892 pm) add the contingent particle ἄν (an) to ἐποιεῖτε (epoieite) making it a more proper second class condition by Attic standards. The simple ἐποιεῖτε without the ἄν is the hardest reading, and is found in some excellent witnesses (𝔓^{75} ℵ* B^{2} D W Γ Θ 070 0250 1424 pm).

tn Or "you would do."

24 tn Grk "seeking."

25 tn Grk "has spoken to you."

26 tn The Greek word order is emphatic: "This Abraham did not do." The emphasis is indicated in the translation by an exclamation point.

27 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied in English to clarify the plural Greek pronoun and verb.

Then[1] they said to Jesus,[2] "We were not born as a result of immorality![3] We have only one Father, God himself." 8:42 Jesus replied,[4] "If God were your Father, you would love me, for I have come from God and am now here.[5] I[6] have not come on my own initiative,[7] but he[8] sent me. 8:43 Why don't you understand what I am saying? It is because you cannot accept[9] my teaching.[10] 8:44 You people[11] are from[12] your father the devil, and you want to do what your father desires.[13] He[14] was a murderer from the beginning, and does not uphold the truth,[15] because there is no truth in him. Whenever he lies,[16] he speaks according to his own nature,[17] because he is a liar and the father of lies.[18] 8:45 But because I am telling you[19] the truth, you do not believe me. 8:46 Who among you can prove me guilty[20] of any sin?[21] If I am telling you[22] the truth, why don't you believe me? 8:47 The one who belongs to[23] God listens and responds[24] to God's words. You don't listen and respond,[25] because you don't belong to God."[26]

8:48 The Judeans[27] replied,[28] "Aren't we correct in saying[29] that you are a Samaritan and are possessed by a demon?"[30] 8:49 Jesus answered, "I am not possessed by a demon,[31] but I honor my Father – and yet[32] you dishonor me. 8:50 I am not trying to get[33] praise for myself.[34] There is one who demands[35] it, and he also judges.[36] 8:51 I tell you the solemn truth,[37] if anyone obeys[38] my teaching,[39] he will never see death."[40]

1 tc ‡ Important and early witnesses (ℵ B L W 070 it sy^{s,p} co) lack the conjunction here, while the earliest witnesses along with many others read οὖν (oun, "therefore"; 𝔓^{66,75} C D Θ Ψ 0250 f^{13} 33 𝔐). This conjunction occurs in John some 200 times, far more than in any other NT book. Even though the combined testimony of two early papyri for the conjunction is impressive, the reading seems to be a predictable scribal emendation. In particular, οὖν is frequently used with the plural of εἶπον (eipon, "they said") in John (in this chapter alone, note vv. 13, 39, 48, 57, and possibly 52). On balance, it is probably best to consider the shorter reading as authentic, even though "Then" is virtually required in translation for English stylistic reasons. NA^{27} has the conjunction in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

2 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) is specified in the translation for clarity.

3 sn We were not born as a result of immorality! is ironic, because Jesus' opponents implied that it was not themselves but Jesus who had been born as a result of immoral behavior. This shows they did not know Jesus' true origin and were not aware of the supernatural events surrounding his birth. The author does not even bother to refute the opponents' suggestion but lets it stand, assuming his readers will know the true story.

4 tn Grk "Jesus said to them."

5 tn Or "I came from God and have arrived."

6 tn Grk "For I." Here γάρ (gar) has not been translated.

7 tn Grk "from myself."

8 tn Grk "that one" (referring to God).

9 tn Grk "you cannot hear," but this is not a reference to deafness, but rather hearing in the sense of listening to something and responding to it.

10 tn Grk "my word."

11 tn The word "people" is supplied in the translation to clarify that the Greek pronoun and verb are plural.

12 tn Many translations read "You are of your father the devil" (KJV, ASV, RSV, NASB) or "You belong to your father, the devil" (NIV), but the Greek preposition ἐκ (ek) emphasizes the idea of source or origin. Jesus said his opponents were the devil's very offspring (a statement which would certainly infuriate them).

13 tn Grk "the desires of your father you want to do."

14 tn Grk "That one" (referring to the devil).

15 tn Grk "he does not stand in the truth" (in the sense of maintaining, upholding, or accepting the validity of it).

16 tn Grk "Whenever he speaks the lie."

17 tn Grk "he speaks from his own."

18 tn Grk "because he is a liar and the father of it."

19 tn Or "because I tell you."

20 tn Or "can convict me."

21 tn Or "of having sinned"; Grk "of sin."

22 tn Or "if I tell you."

23 tn Grk "who is of."

24 tn Grk "to God hears" (in the sense of listening to something and responding to it).

25 tn Grk "you do not hear" (in the sense of listening to something and responding to it).

26 tn Grk "you are not of God."

27 tn Grk "the Jews." See the note on this term in v. 31. Here the phrase refers to the Jewish people in Jerusalem ("Judeans"; cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e) who had been listening to Jesus' teaching in the temple courts (8:20) and had initially believed his claim to be the Messiah (cf. 8:31). They had become increasingly hostile as Jesus continued to teach. Now they were ready to say that Jesus was demon-possessed.

28 tn Grk "answered and said to him."

29 tn Grk "Do we not say rightly."

30 tn Grk "and have a demon." It is not clear what is meant by the charge Σαμαρίτης εἶ σὺ καὶ δαιμόνιον ἔχεις (Samaritēs ei su kai daimonion echeis). The meaning could be "you are a heretic and are possessed by a demon." Note that the dual charge gets one reply (John 8:49). Perhaps the phrases were interchangeable: Simon Magus (Acts 8:14-24) and in later traditions Dositheus, the two Samaritans who claimed to be sons of God, were regarded as mad, that is, possessed by demons.

31 tn Grk "I do not have a demon."

32 tn "Yet" is supplied to show the contrastive element present in the context.

33 tn Grk "I am not seeking."

34 tn Grk "my glory."

35 tn Grk "who seeks."

36 tn Or "will be the judge."

37 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

38 tn Grk "If anyone keeps."

39 tn Grk "my word."

40 tn Grk "he will never see death forever." The Greek negative here is emphatic.

sn Those who keep Jesus' words will not see death because they have already passed from death to life (cf. 5:24). In Johannine theology eternal life begins in the present rather than in the world to come.

8:52 Then[1] the Judeans[2] responded,[3] "Now we know you're possessed by a demon![4] Both Abraham and the prophets died, and yet[5] you say, 'If anyone obeys[6] my teaching,[7] he will never experience[8] death.'[9] 8:53 You aren't greater than our father Abraham who died, are you?[10] And the prophets died too! Who do you claim to be?" 8:54 Jesus replied,[11] "If I glorify myself, my glory is worthless.[12] The one who glorifies me is my Father, about whom you people[13] say, 'He is our God.' 8:55 Yet[14] you do not know him, but I know him. If I were to say that I do not know him,[15] I would be a liar like you. But I do know him, and I obey[16] his teaching.[17] 8:56 Your father Abraham was overjoyed[18] to see my day, and he saw it and was glad."[19]

8:57 Then the Judeans[20] replied,[21] "You are not yet fifty years old![22] Have[23] you seen Abraham?" 8:58 Jesus said to them, "I tell you the solemn truth,[24] before Abraham came into existence,[25] I am!"[26] 8:59 Then they picked up[27] stones to throw at him,[28] but Jesus hid himself and went out from the temple area.[29]

1 tc ‡ Important and early witnesses (𝔓66 ℵ B C W Θ 579 it) lack the conjunction here, while other witnesses read οὖν (oun, "therefore"; 𝔓75 D L Ψ 070 $f^{1,13}$ 33 𝔐 lat). This conjunction occurs in John some 200 times, far more than in any other NT book. Even though the most important Johannine papyrus (𝔓75) has the conjunction, the combination of 𝔓66ℵ B for the omission is even stronger. Further, the reading seems to be a predictable scribal emendation. In particular, οὖν is frequently used with the plural of εἶπον (eipon, "they said") in John (in this chapter alone, note vv. 13, 39, 48, 57, and possibly 41). On balance, it is probably best to consider the shorter reading as authentic, even though "Then" is virtually required in translation for English stylistic reasons. NA27 has the conjunction in brackets, indicating some doubt as to its authenticity.

2 tn Grk "the Jews." See the note on this term in v. 31. Here, as in vv. 31 and 48, the phrase refers to the Jewish people in Jerusalem ("Judeans"; cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e) who had been listening to Jesus' teaching in the temple courts (8:20) and had initially believed his claim to be the Messiah (cf. 8:31).

3 tn Grk "said to him."

4 tn Grk "you have a demon."

5 tn "Yet" has been supplied to show the contrastive element present in the context.

6 tn Grk "If anyone keeps."

7 tn Grk "my word."

8 tn Grk "will never taste." Here the Greek verb does not mean "sample a small amount" (as a typical English reader might infer from the word "taste"), but "experience something cognitively or emotionally; come to know something" (cf. BDAG 195 s.v. γεύομαι 2).

9 tn Grk "he will never taste of death forever." The Greek negative here is emphatic.

10 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "are you?").

11 tn Grk "Jesus answered."

12 tn Grk "is nothing."

13 tn The word "people" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied in English to clarify the plural Greek pronoun and verb.

14 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Yet" to indicate the contrast present in the context.

15 tn Grk "If I say, 'I do not know him.'"

16 tn Grk "I keep."

17 tn Grk "his word."

18 tn Or "rejoiced greatly."

19 tn What is the meaning of Jesus' statement that the patriarch Abraham "saw" his day and rejoiced? The use of past tenses would seem to refer to something that occurred during the patriarch's lifetime. Genesis Rabbah 44:25ff, (cf. 59:6) states that Rabbi Akiba, in a debate with Rabbi Johanan ben Zakkai, held that Abraham had been shown not this world only but the world to come (this would include the days of the Messiah). More realistically, it is likely that Gen 22:13-15 lies behind Jesus' words. This passage, known to rabbis as the Akedah ("Binding"), tells of Abraham finding the ram which will replace his son Isaac on the altar of sacrifice – an occasion of certain rejoicing.

20 tn Grk "Then the Jews." See the note on this term in v. 31. Here, as in vv. 31, 48, and 52, the phrase refers to the Jewish people in Jerusalem ("Judeans"; cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e) who had been listening to Jesus' teaching in the temple courts (8:20) and had initially believed his claim to be the Messiah (cf. 8:31). They have now become completely hostile, as John 8:59 clearly shows.

21 tn Grk "said to him."

22 tn Grk 'You do not yet have fifty years" (an idiom).

23 tn Grk "And have."

24 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

25 tn Grk "before Abraham was."

26 sn I am! is an explicit claim to deity. Although each occurrence of the phrase "I am" in the Fourth Gospel needs to be examined individually in context to see if an association with Exod 3:14 is present, it seems clear that this is the case here (as the response of the Jewish authorities in the following verse shows).

27 tn Grk "they took up."

28 sn Jesus' Jewish listeners understood his claim to deity, rejected it, and picked up stones to throw at him for what they considered blasphemy.

29 tc Most later witnesses (A Θ^{c} $f^{1,13}$ 𝔐) have at the end of the verse "passing through their midst, he went away in this manner" (διελθὼν διὰ μέσου καὶ παρῆγεν οὕτως, dielthōn dia mesou kai parēgen houtōs), while many others have similar permutations (so ^{1}ℵ^{c2} C L N Ψ 070 33 579 892 1241 al). The wording is similar to two other texts: Luke 4:30 (διελθὼν διὰ μέσου; in several mss αὐτῶν ἐπορεύετο καί [autōn eporeueto kai] is found between this phrase and παρῆγεν, strengthening the parallel with Luke 4:30) and John 9:1 (παρῆγεν; cf. παράγων [paragōn] there). The effect is to signal Jesus' departure as a miraculous cloaking. As such, the additional statement has all the earmarks of scribal amplification. Further, the best and earliest witnesses (𝔓66,75 ℵ* B D W Θ* lat sa) lack these words, rendering the shorter text virtually certain.

tn Grk "from the temple."

Healing a Man Born Blind

9:1 Now as Jesus was passing by,[1] he saw a man who had been blind from birth. 9:2 His disciples asked him,[2] "Rabbi, who committed the sin that caused him to be born blind, this man[3] or his parents?"[4] 9:3 Jesus answered, "Neither this man[5] nor his parents sinned, but he was born blind so that[6] the acts[7] of God may be revealed[8] through what happens to him.[9] 9:4 We must perform the deeds[10] of the one who sent me[11] as long as[12] it is daytime. Night is coming when no one can work. 9:5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."[13] 9:6 Having said this,[14] he spat on the ground and made some mud[15] with the saliva. He[16] smeared the mud on the blind man's[17] eyes 9:7 and said to him, "Go wash in the pool of Siloam"[18] (which is translated "sent").[19] So the blind man[20] went away and washed, and came back seeing.

9:8 Then the neighbors and the people who had seen him previously[21] as a beggar began saying,[22] "Is this not the man[23] who used to sit and beg?" 9:9 Some people said,[24] "This is the man!"[25] while others said, "No, but he looks like him."[26] The man himself[27] kept insisting, "I am the one!"[28] 9:10 So they asked him,[29] "How then were you made to see?"[30] 9:11 He replied,[31] "The man called Jesus made mud,[32] smeared it[33] on my eyes and told me,[34] 'Go to Siloam and wash.' So I went and washed, and was able to see."[35] 9:12 They said[36] to him, "Where is that man?"[37] He replied,[38] "I don't know."

[1] tn Or "going along." The opening words of chap. 9, καὶ παράγων (kai paragōn), convey only the vaguest indication of the circumstances.

sn Since there is no break with chap. 8, Jesus is presumably still in Jerusalem, and presumably not still in the temple area. The events of chap. 9 fall somewhere between the feast of Tabernacles (John 7:2) and the feast of the Dedication (John 10:22). But in the author's narrative the connection exists – the incident recorded in chap. 9 (along with the ensuing debates with the Pharisees) serves as a real-life illustration of the claim Jesus made in 8:12, I am the light of the world. This is in fact the probable theological motivation behind the juxtaposition of these two incidents in the narrative. The second serves as an illustration of the first, and as a concrete example of the victory of light over darkness. One other thing which should be pointed out about the miracle recorded in chap. 9 is its messianic significance. In the OT it is God himself who is associated with the giving of sight to the blind (Exod 4:11, Ps 146:8). In a number of passages in Isa (29:18, 35:5, 42:7) it is considered to be a messianic activity.

[2] tn Grk "asked him, saying."

[3] tn Grk "this one."

[4] tn Grk "in order that he should be born blind."

sn The disciples assumed that sin (regardless of who committed it) was the cause of the man's blindness. This was a common belief in Judaism; the rabbis used Ezek 18:20 to prove there was no death without sin, and Ps 89:33 to prove there was no punishment without guilt (the Babylonian Talmud, b. Shabbat 55a, although later than the NT, illustrates this). Thus in this case the sin must have been on the part of the man's parents, or during his own prenatal existence. Song Rabbah 1:41 (another later rabbinic work) stated that when a pregnant woman worshiped in a heathen temple the unborn child also committed idolatry. This is only one example of how, in rabbinic Jewish thought, an unborn child was capable of sinning.

[5] tn Grk "this one."

[6] tn Grk "but so that." There is an ellipsis that must be supplied: "but [he was born blind] so that" or "but [it happened to him] so that."

[7] tn Or "deeds"; Grk "works."

[8] tn Or "manifested," "brought to light."

[9] tn Grk "in him."

[10] tn Grk "We must work the works."

[11] tn Or "of him who sent me" (God).

[12] tn Or "while."

[13] sn Jesus' statement I am the light of the world connects the present account with 8:12. Here (seen more clearly than at 8:12) it is obvious what the author sees as the significance of Jesus' statement. "Light" is not a metaphysical definition of the person of Jesus but a description of his effect on the world, forcing everyone in the world to 'choose up sides' for or against him (cf. 3:19-21).

[14] tn Grk "said these things."

[15] tn Or "clay" (moistened earth of a clay-like consistency). The textual variant preserved in the Syriac text of Ephraem's commentary on the Diatessaron ("he made eyes from his clay") probably arose from the interpretation given by Irenaeus in Against Heresies: "that which the Artificer, the Word, had omitted to form in the womb, he then supplied in public." This involves taking the clay as an allusion to Gen 2:7, which is very unlikely.

[16] tn Because of the length and complexity of the Greek sentence, the conjunction καί (kai) was replaced by a third person pronoun and a new sentence started here in the translation.

[17] tn Grk "on his."

[18] tn The pool's name in Hebrew is shiloah from the Hebrew verb "to send." In Gen 49:10 the somewhat obscure shiloh was interpreted messianically by later Jewish tradition, and some have seen a lexical connection between the two names (although this is somewhat dubious). It is known, however, that it was from the pool of Siloam that the water which was poured out at the altar during the feast of Tabernacles was drawn.

[19] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Why does he comment on the meaning of the name of the pool? Here, the significance is that the Father sent the Son, and the Son sent the man born blind. The name of the pool is applicable to the man, but also to Jesus himself, who was sent from heaven.

[20] tn Grk "So he"; the referent (the blind man) is specified in the translation for clarity.

[21] tn Or "formerly."

[22] tn An ingressive force ("began saying") is present here because the change in status of the blind person provokes this new response from those who knew him.

[23] tn Grk "the one."

[24] tn Grk "Others were saying."

[25] tn Grk "This is the one."

[26] tn Grk "No, but he is like him."

[27] tn Grk "That one"; the referent (the man himself) is specified in the translation for clarity.

[28] tn Grk "I am he."

[29] tn Grk "So they were saying to him."

[30] tn Grk "How then were your eyes opened" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

[31] tn Grk "That one answered."

[32] tn Or "clay" (moistened earth of a clay-like consistency).

[33] tn Grk "and smeared." Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when obvious from the context.

[34] tn Grk "said to me."

[35] tn Or "and I gained my sight."

[36] tn Grk "And they said."

[37] tn Grk "that one." "Man" is more normal English style for the referent.

[38] tn Grk "He said."

The Pharisees' Reaction to the Healing

9:13 They brought the man who used to be blind[1] to the Pharisees.[2] 9:14 (Now the day on which Jesus made the mud[3] and caused him to see[4] was a Sabbath.)[5] 9:15 So the Pharisees asked him again how he had gained his sight.[6] He replied,[7] "He put mud[8] on my eyes and I washed, and now[9] I am able to see."

9:16 Then some of the Pharisees began to say,[10] "This man is not from God, because he does not observe[11] the Sabbath."[12] But others said, "How can a man who is a sinner perform[13] such miraculous signs?" Thus there was a division[14] among them. 9:17 So again they asked the man who used to be blind,[15] "What do you say about him, since he caused you to see?"[16] "He is a prophet," the man replied.[17]

9:18 Now the Jewish religious leaders[18] refused to believe[19] that he had really been blind and had gained his sight until at last they summoned[20] the parents of the man who had become able to see.[21] 9:19 They asked the parents,[22] "Is this your son, whom you say[23] was born blind? Then how does he now see?" 9:20 So his parents replied,[24] "We know that this is our son and that he was born blind. 9:21 But we do not know how he is now able to see, nor do we know who caused him to see.[25] Ask him, he is a mature adult.[26] He will speak for himself." 9:22 (His parents said these things because they were afraid of the Jewish religious leaders.[27] For the Jewish leaders had already agreed that anyone who confessed Jesus[28] to be the Christ[29] would be put out[30] of the synagogue.[31] 9:23 For this

[1] tn Grk "who was formerly blind."

[2] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[3] tn Or "clay" (moistened earth of a clay-like consistency).

[4] tn Grk "and opened his eyes" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

[5] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[6] tn Or "how he had become able to see."

sn So the Pharisees asked him. Note the subtlety here: On the surface, the man is being judged. But through him, Jesus is being judged. Yet in reality (as the discerning reader will realize) it is ironically the Pharisees themselves who are being judged by their response to Jesus who is the light of the world (cf. 3:17-21).

[7] tn Grk "And he said to them."

[8] tn Or "clay" (moistened earth of a clay-like consistency).

[9] tn The word "now" is not in the Greek text, but is supplied to indicate the contrast between the man's former state (blind) and his present state (able to see).

[10] tn As a response to the answers of the man who used to be blind, the use of the imperfect tense in the reply of the Pharisees is best translated as an ingressive imperfect ("began to say" or "started saying").

[11] tn Grk "he does not keep."

[12] sn The Jewish religious leaders considered the work involved in making the mud to be a violation of the Sabbath.

[13] tn Grk "do."

[14] tn Or "So there was discord."

[15] tn Grk "the blind man."

[16] tn Grk "since he opened your eyes" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

[17] tn Grk "And he said, 'He is a prophet.'" sn At this point the man, pressed by the Pharisees, admitted there was something special about Jesus. But here, since prophet is anarthrous (is not accompanied by the Greek article) and since in his initial reply in 9:11-12 the man showed no particular insight into the true identity of Jesus, this probably does not refer to the prophet of Deut 18:15, but merely to an unusual person who is capable of working miracles. The Pharisees had put this man on the spot, and he felt compelled to say something about Jesus, but he still didn't have a clear conception of who Jesus was, so he labeled him a "prophet."

[18] tn Or "the Jewish religious authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers mainly to the Pharisees, mentioned by name in John 9:13, 15, 16. References in this context to Pharisees and to the synagogue (v. 22) suggest an emphasis on the religious nature of the debate which is brought out by the translation "the Jewish religious leaders."

[19] tn The Greek text contains the words "about him" at this point: "the Jewish authorities did not believe about him..."

[20] tn Grk "they called."

[21] tn Or "the man who had gained his sight."

[22] tn Grk "and they asked them, saying"; the referent (the parents) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[23] tn The Greek pronoun and verb are both plural (both parents are addressed).

[24] tn Grk "So his parents answered and said."

[25] tn Grk "who opened his eyes" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

[26] tn Or "he is of age."

[27] tn Or "the Jewish religious authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Twice in this verse the phrase refers to the Pharisees, mentioned by name in John 9:13, 15, 16. The second occurrence is shortened to "the Jewish leaders" for stylistic reasons. See the note on the phrase "the Jewish religious leaders" in v. 18.

[28] tn Grk "confessed him."

[29] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[30] tn Or "would be expelled from."

[31] sn This reference to excommunication from the Jewish synagogue for those who had made some sort of confession about Jesus being the Messiah is dismissed as anachronistic by some (e.g., Barrett) and nonhistorical by others. In later Jewish practice there were at least two forms of excommunication: a temporary ban for thirty days, and a permanent ban. But whether these applied in NT times is far from certain. There is no substantial evidence for a formal ban on Christians until later than this Gospel could possibly have been written. This may be a reference to some form of excommunication adopted as a contingency to deal with those who were proclaiming Jesus to be the Messiah. If so, there is no other record of the procedure than here. It was probably local, limited to the area around Jerusalem. See also the note on synagogue in 6:59.

reason his parents said, "He is a mature adult,[1] ask him.")[2]

9:24 Then they summoned[3] the man who used to be blind[4] a second time and said to him, "Promise before God to tell the truth.[5] We know that this man[6] is a sinner." 9:25 He replied,[7] "I do not know whether he is a sinner. I do know one thing – that although I was blind, now I can see." 9:26 Then they said to him, "What did he do to you? How did he cause you to see?"[8] 9:27 He answered,[9] "I told you already and you didn't listen.[10] Why do you want to hear it[11] again? You people[12] don't want to become his disciples too, do you?"

9:28 They[13] heaped insults[14] on him, saying,[15] "You are his disciple![16] We are disciples of Moses! 9:29 We know that God has spoken to Moses! We do not know where this man[17] comes from!" 9:30 The man replied,[18] "This is a remarkable thing,[19] that you don't know where he comes from, and yet he caused me to see![20] 9:31 We know that God doesn't listen to[21] sinners, but if anyone is devout[22] and does his will, God[23] listens to[24] him.[25] 9:32 Never before[26] has anyone heard of someone causing a man born blind to see.[27] 9:33 If this man[28] were not from God, he could do nothing." 9:34 They replied,[29] "You were born completely in sinfulness,[30] and yet you presume to teach us?"[31] So they threw him out.

The Man's Response to Jesus

9:35 Jesus heard that they had thrown him out, so he found the man[32] and said to him, "Do you believe in the Son of Man?"[33] 9:36 The man[34] replied,[35] "And who is he, sir, that[36] I may believe in him?" 9:37 Jesus told him, "You have seen him; he[37] is the one speaking with you."[38] [9:38 He said, "Lord, I believe," and he worshiped him.[39] 9:39 Jesus[40] said,][41] "For judgment

1 tn Or "he is of age."

2 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author explaining the parents' response.

3 tn Grk "they called."

4 tn Grk "who was blind."

5 tn Grk "Give glory to God" (an idiomatic formula used in placing someone under oath to tell the truth).

6 tn The phrase "this man" is a reference to Jesus.

7 tn Grk "Then that one answered."

8 tn Grk "open your eyes" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

9 tn Grk "He answered them." The indirect object αὐτοῖς (autois) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

10 tn Grk "you did not hear."

11 tn "It" is not in the Greek text but has been supplied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when they were clearly implied in the context.

12 tn The word "people" is supplied in the translation to clarify the plural Greek pronoun and verb.

13 tn Grk "And they." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

14 tn The Greek word means "to insult strongly" or "slander."

15 tn Grk "and said."

16 tn Grk "You are that one's disciple."

17 tn Grk "where this one."

18 tn Grk "The man answered and said to them." This has been simplified in the translation to "The man replied."

19 tn Grk "For in this is a remarkable thing."

20 tn Grk "and he opened my eyes" (an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

21 tn Grk "God does not hear."

22 tn Or "godly."

23 tn Grk "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

24 tn Or "hears."

25 tn Grk "this one."

26 tn Or "Never from the beginning of time," Grk "From eternity."

27 tn Grk "someone opening the eyes of a man born blind" ("opening the eyes" is an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

28 tn Grk "this one."

29 tn Grk "They answered and said to him." This has been simplified in the translation to "They replied."

30 tn Or "From birth you have been evil." The implication of this insult, in the context of John 9, is that the man whom Jesus caused to see had not previously adhered rigorously to all the conventional requirements of the OT law as interpreted by the Pharisees. Thus he had no right to instruct them about who Jesus was.

31 tn Grk "and are you teaching us?"

32 tn Grk "found him"; the referent (the man) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

33 tc Although most witnesses (A L Θ Ψ 070 0250 $f^{1.13}$ 33 𝔐 lat) have θεοῦ (theou, "of God") instead of ἀνθρώπου (anthrōpou, "of man") here, the better witnesses (𝔓$^{66.75}$ ℵ B D W sy^{s}) have ἀνθρώπου. Not only is the external evidence decidedly on the side of ἀνθρώπου, but it is difficult to see such early and diverse witnesses changing θεοῦ to ἀνθρώπου. The wording "Son of Man" is thus virtually certain.

34 tn Grk "That one."

35 tn Grk answered and said." This has been simplified in the translation to "replied."

36 tn Or "And who is he, sir? Tell me so that..." Some translations supply elliptical words like "Tell me" (NIV, NRSV) following the man's initial question, but the shorter form given in the translation is clear enough.

37 tn Grk "that one."

38 tn The καί – καί (kai – kai) construction would normally be translated "both – and": "You have both seen him, and he is the one speaking with you." In this instance the English semicolon was used instead because it produces a smoother and more emphatic effect in English.

39 sn Assuming the authenticity of John 9:38-39a (see the tc note following the bracket in v. 39), the man's response after Jesus' statement of v. 37 is extremely significant: He worshiped Jesus. In the Johannine context the word would connote its full sense: This was something due God alone. Note also that Jesus did not prevent the man from doing this. The verb προσκυνέω (proskunеō) is used in John 4:20-25 of worshiping God, and again with the same sense in 12:20. This would be the only place in John's Gospel where anyone is said to have worshiped Jesus using this term. As such, it forms the climax of the story of the man born blind, but the uniqueness of the concept of worshiping Jesus at this point in John's narrative (which reaches its ultimate climax in the confession of Thomas in John 20:28) may suggest it is too early for such a response and it represents a later scribal addition.

40 tn Grk "And Jesus." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

41 tc ‡ Some early and important witnesses (𝔓^{75} ℵ* W b sa^{ms} ac^{2} mf) lack the words, "He said, 'Lord, I believe,' and he worshiped him. Jesus said," (vv. 38-39a). This is weighty evidence for the omission of these words. It is difficult to overstate the value of 𝔓^{75} here, since it is the only currently available papyrus MS extant for the text of John 9:38-39. Further, ℵ is an important and early Alexandrian witness for the omission. The versional testimony and codex W also give

I have come into this world, so that those who do not see may gain their sight,[1] and the ones who see may become blind."

9:40 Some of the Pharisees[2] who were with him heard this[3] and asked him,[4] "We are not blind too, are we?"[5] 9:41 Jesus replied,[6] "If you were blind, you would not be guilty of sin,[7] but now because you claim that you can see,[8] your guilt[9] remains."[10]

Jesus as the Good Shepherd

10:1 "I tell you the solemn truth,[11] the one who does not enter the sheepfold[12] by the door,[13] but climbs in some other way, is a thief and a robber. 10:2 The one who enters by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. 10:3 The doorkeeper[14] opens the door[15] for him,[16] and the sheep hear his voice. He[17] calls his own sheep by name and leads them out.[18] 10:4 When he has brought all his own sheep[19] out, he goes ahead of them, and the sheep follow him because they recognize[20] his voice. 10:5 They will never follow a stranger,[21] but will run away from him, because they do not recognize[22] the stranger's voice."[23] 10:6 Jesus told them this parable,[24] but they[25] did not understand[26] what he was saying to them.

10:7 So Jesus said to them again, "I tell you the solemn truth,[27] I am the door for the sheep.[28] 10:8 All who came before me were[29] thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not listen to them.[30] 10:9 I am the door. If anyone enters through me, he will be saved, and will come in and go out,[31] and find pasture.[32] 10:10 The thief comes only to steal and kill[33] and destroy; I have come so that they may have life, and may have it abundantly.[34] strong support to the omission. Nearly all other MSS, however, include these words. The omission may have been occasioned by parablepsis (both vv. 37 and 39 begin with "Jesus said to him"), though it is difficult to account for such an error across such a wide variety of witnesses. On the other hand, the longer reading appears to be motivated by liturgical concerns (so R. E. Brown, John [AB], 1:375), since the verb προσκυνέω (proskunevō, "I worship") is used in John 4:20-25 of worshiping God, and again with the same sense in 12:20. If these words were authentic here, this would be the only place in John's Gospel where Jesus is the explicit object of προσκυνέω. Even if these words are not authentic, such an omission would nevertheless hardly diminish John's high Christology (cf. 1:1; 5:18-23; 14:6-10; 20:28), nor the implicit worship of him by Thomas (20:28). Nevertheless, a decision is difficult, and the included words may reflect a very early tradition about the blind man's response to Jesus.

[1] tn Or "that those who do not see may see."

[2] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[3] tn Grk "heard these things."

[4] tn Grk "and said to him."

[5] tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "are we?").

[6] tn Grk "Jesus said to them."

[7] tn Grk "you would not have sin."

[8] tn Grk "now because you say, 'We see…'"

[9] tn Or "your sin."

[10] sn Because you claim that you can see, your guilt remains. The blind man received sight physically, and this led him to see spiritually as well. But the Pharisees, who claimed to possess spiritual sight, were spiritually blinded. The reader might recall Jesus' words to Nicodemus in 3:10, "Are you the teacher of Israel and don't understand these things?" In other words, to receive Jesus was to receive the light of the world, to reject him was to reject the light, close one's eyes, and become blind. This is the serious sin of which Jesus had warned before (8:21-24). The blindness of such people was incurable since they had rejected the only cure that exists (cf. 12:39-41).

[11] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[12] sn There was more than one type of sheepfold in use in Palestine in Jesus' day. The one here seems to be a courtyard in front of a house (the Greek word used for the sheepfold here, αὐλή [aulē] frequently refers to a courtyard), surrounded by a stone wall (often topped with briars for protection).

[13] tn Or "entrance."

[14] tn Or "porter" (British English).

sn There have been many attempts to identify who the doorkeeper represents, none of which are convincing. More likely there are some details in this parable that are included for the sake of the story, necessary as parts of the overall picture but without symbolic significance.

[15] tn The words "the door" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

[16] tn Grk "For this one."

[17] tn Grk "And he." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[18] sn He calls his own sheep by name and leads them out. Some interpreters have suggested that there was more than one flock in the fold, and there would be a process of separation where each shepherd called out his own flock. This may also be suggested by the mention of a doorkeeper in v. 3 since only the larger sheepfolds would have such a guard. But the Gospel of John never mentions a distinction among the sheep in this fold; in fact (10:16) there are other sheep which are to be brought in, but they are to be one flock and one shepherd.

[19] tn The word "sheep" is not in the Greek text, but is implied.

[20] tn Grk "because they know."

[21] tn Or "someone whom they do not know."

[22] tn Grk "know."

[23] tn Or "the voice of someone they do not know."

[24] sn A parable is a fairly short narrative that has symbolic meaning. The Greek word παροιμίαν (paroimian) is used again in 16:25, 29. This term does not occur in the synoptic gospels, where παραβολή (parabolē) is used. Nevertheless it is similar, denoting a short narrative with figurative or symbolic meaning.

[25] tn Grk "these."

[26] tn Or "comprehend."

[27] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[28] tn Or "I am the sheep's door."

[29] tn Grk "are" (present tense).

[30] tn Or "the sheep did not hear them."

[31] tn Since the Greek phrase εἰσέρχομαι καὶ ἐξέρχομαι (eiserchomai kai exerchomai, "come in and go out") is in some places an idiom for living or conducting oneself in relationship to some community ("to live with, to live among" [cf. Acts 1:21; see also Num 27:17; 2 Chr 1:10]), it may well be that Jesus' words here look forward to the new covenant community of believers. Another significant NT text is Luke 9:4, where both these verbs occur in the context of the safety and security provided by a given household for the disciples. See also BDAG 294 s.v. εἰσέρχομαι 1.b.β.

[32] sn That is, pasture land in contrast to cultivated land.

[33] tn That is, "to slaughter" (in reference to animals).

[34] tn That is, more than one would normally expect or anticipate.

10:11 "I am the good[1] shepherd. The good shepherd lays down his life[2] for the sheep. 10:12 The hired hand,[3] who is not a shepherd and does not own sheep, sees the wolf coming and abandons[4] the sheep and runs away.[5] So the wolf attacks[6] the sheep and scatters them. 10:13 Because he is a hired hand and is not concerned about the sheep,[7] he runs away.[8]

10:14 "I am the good shepherd. I[9] know my own[10] and my own know me – 10:15 just as the Father knows me and I know the Father – and I lay down my life[11] for[12] the sheep. 10:16 I have[13] other sheep that do not come from[14] this sheepfold.[15] I must bring them too, and they will listen to my voice,[16] so that[17] there will be one flock and[18] one shepherd. 10:17 This is why the Father loves me[19] – because I lay down my life,[20] so that I may take it back again. 10:18 No one takes it away from me, but I lay it down[21] of my own free will.[22] I have the authority[23] to lay it down, and I have the authority[24] to take it back again. This commandment[25] I received from my Father."

10:19 Another sharp division took place among the Jewish people[26] because of these words. 10:20 Many of them were saying, "He is possessed by a demon and has lost his mind![27] Why do you listen to him?" 10:21 Others said, "These are not the words[28] of someone possessed by a demon. A demon cannot cause the blind to see,[29] can it?"[30]

---

1 tn Or "model" (see R. E. Brown, John [AB], 1:386, who argues that "model" is a more exact translation of καλός [kalos] here).

2 tn Or "The good shepherd dies willingly."

sn Jesus speaks openly of his vicarious death twice in this section (John 10:11, 15). Note the contrast: The thief takes the life of the sheep (10:10), the good shepherd lays down his own life for the sheep. Jesus is not speaking generally here, but specifically: He has his own substitutionary death on the cross in view. For a literal shepherd with a literal flock, the shepherd's death would have spelled disaster for the sheep; in this instance it spells life for them (Compare the worthless shepherd of Zech 11:17, by contrast).

3 sn Jesus contrasts the behavior of the shepherd with that of the hired hand. This is a worker who is simply paid to do a job; he has no other interest in the sheep and is certainly not about to risk his life for them. When they are threatened, he simply runs away.

4 tn Grk "leaves."

5 tn Or "flees."

6 tn Or "seizes." The more traditional rendering, "snatches," has the idea of seizing something by force and carrying it off, which is certainly possible here. However, in the sequence in John 10:12, this action precedes the scattering of the flock of sheep, so "attacks" is preferable.

7 tn Grk "does not have a care for the sheep."

8 tc The phrase "he runs away" is lacking in several important MSS ($\mathfrak{P}^{44vid,45,66,75}$ ℵ A*vid B D L [W] Θ 1 33 1241 al co). Most likely it was added by a later scribe to improve the readability of vv. 12-13, which is one long sentence in Greek. It has been included in the translation for the same stylistic reasons.

9 tn Grk "And I." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

10 tn The direct object is frequently omitted in Greek and must be supplied from the context. Here it could be "sheep," but Jesus was ultimately talking about "people."

11 tn Or "I die willingly."

12 tn Or "on behalf of" or "for the sake of."

13 tn Grk "And I have." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

14 tn Or "that do not belong to"; Grk "that are not of."

15 sn The statement I have other sheep that do not come from this sheepfold almost certainly refers to Gentiles. Jesus has sheep in the fold who are Jewish; there are other sheep which, while not of the same fold, belong to him also. This recalls the mission of the Son in 3:16-17, which was to save the world – not just the nation of Israel. Such an emphasis would be particularly appropriate to the author if he were writing to a non-Palestinian and primarily non-Jewish audience.

16 tn Grk "they will hear my voice."

17 tn Grk "voice, and."

18 tn The word "and" is not in the Greek text, but must be supplied to conform to English style. In Greek it is an instance of asyndeton (omission of a connective), usually somewhat emphatic.

19 tn Grk "Because of this the Father loves me."

20 tn Or "die willingly."

21 tn Or "give it up."

22 tn Or "of my own accord." "Of my own free will" is given by BDAG 321 s.v. ἐμαυτοῦ c.

23 tn Or "I have the right."

24 tn Or "I have the right."

25 tn Or "order."

26 tn Or perhaps "the Jewish religious leaders"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase could be taken to refer to the Jewish religious leaders, since the Pharisees were the last to be mentioned specifically by name, in John 9:40. However, in light of the charge about demon possession, which echoes 8:48, it is more likely that Jewish people in general (perhaps in Jerusalem, if that is understood to be the setting of the incident) are in view here.

27 tn Or "is insane." To translate simply "he is mad" (so KJV, ASV, RSV; "raving mad" NIV) could give the impression that Jesus was angry, while the actual charge was madness or insanity.

28 tn Or "the sayings."

29 tn Grk "open the eyes of the blind" ("opening the eyes" is an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

30 tn Questions prefaced with μή (mē) in Greek anticipate a negative answer. This can sometimes be indicated by using a "tag" at the end in English (here the tag is "can it?").

Jesus at the Feast of Dedication

10:22 Then came the feast of the Dedication[1] in Jerusalem.[2] 10:23 It was winter,[3] and Jesus was walking in the temple area[4] in Solomon's Portico.[5] 10:24 The Jewish leaders[6] surrounded him and asked,[7] "How long will you keep us in suspense?[8] If you are the Christ,[9] tell us plainly."[10] 10:25 Jesus replied,[11] "I told you and you do not believe. The deeds[12] I do in my Father's name testify about me. 10:26 But you refuse to believe because you are not my sheep. 10:27 My sheep listen to my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. 10:28 I give[13] them eternal life, and they will never perish;[14] no one will snatch[15] them from my hand. 10:29 My Father, who has given them to me, is greater than all,[16] and no one can snatch[17] them from my Father's hand. 10:30 The Father and I[18] are one."[19]

10:31 The Jewish leaders[20] picked up rocks again to stone him to death. 10:32 Jesus said to them,[21] "I have shown you many good deeds[22] from the Father. For which one of them are you going to stone me?" 10:33 The Jewish leaders[23] replied,[24] "We are not going to stone you for a good deed[25] but for blasphemy,[26] because[27] you, a man, are claiming to be God."[28]

10:34 Jesus answered,[29] "Is it not written in your law, 'I said, you are gods'?[30] 10:35 If those

1 tn That is, Hanukkah or the 'Festival of Lights.' The Greek name for the feast, τὰ ἐγκαίνια (ta enkainia), literally means "renewal" and was used to translate Hanukkah which means "dedication." The Greek noun, with its related verbs, was the standard term used in the LXX for the consecration of the altar of the Tabernacle (Num 7:10-11), the altar of the temple of Solomon (1 Kgs 8:63; 2 Chr 7:5), and the altar of the second temple (Ezra 6:16). The word is thus connected with the consecration of all the houses of God in the history of the nation of Israel.

sn The feast of the Dedication (also known as Hanukkah) was a feast celebrating annually the Maccabean victories of 165-164 B.C. – when Judas Maccabeus drove out the Syrians, rebuilt the altar, and rededicated the temple on 25 Kislev (1 Macc 4:41-61). From a historical standpoint, it was the last great deliverance the Jewish people had experienced, and it came at a time when least expected. Josephus ends his account of the institution of the festival with the following statement: "And from that time to the present we observe this festival, which we call the festival of Lights, giving this name to it, I think, from the fact that the right to worship appeared to us at a time when we hardly dared hope for it" (Ant. 12.7.6 [12.325]).

3 sn It was winter. The feast began on 25 Kislev, in November-December of the modern Gregorian calendar.

4 tn Grk "in the temple."

5 tn Or "portico," "colonnade"; Grk "stoa."

sn Solomon's Portico was a covered walkway formed by rows of columns supporting a roof and open on the inner side facing the center of the temple complex.

6 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders. The question they ask Jesus ("Are you the Christ?") is the same one they sent and asked of John the Baptist in the desert (see John 1:19-34). See also the note on the phrase "the Jewish people" in v. 19.

7 tn Grk "said to him." This has been translated as "asked" for stylistic reasons.

8 tn Grk "How long will you take away our life?" (an idiom which meant to keep one from coming to a conclusion about something). The use of the phrase τὴν ψυχὴν ἡμῶν αἴρεις (tēn psuchēn hēmōn aireis) meaning "to keep in suspense" is not well attested, although it certainly fits the context here. In modern Greek the phrase means "to annoy, bother."

9 tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

10 tn Or "publicly."

11 tn Grk "answered them."

12 tn Or "the works."

13 tn Grk "And I give."

14 tn Or "will never die" or "will never be lost."

15 tn Or "no one will seize."

16 tn Or "is superior to all."

17 tn Or "no one can seize."

18 tn Grk "I and the Father." The order has been reversed to reflect English style.

19 tn The phrase ἕν ἐσμεν (hen esmen) is a significant assertion with trinitarian implications. ἕν is neuter, not masculine, so the assertion is not that Jesus and the Father are one person, but one "thing." Identity of the two persons is not what is asserted, but essential unity (unity of essence).

20 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders. See the notes on the phrases "Jewish people" in v. 19 and "Jewish leaders" in v. 24.

21 tn Grk "Jesus answered them."

22 tn Or "good works."

23 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." Here again the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders. See the notes on the phrase "Jewish people" in v. 19 and "Jewish leaders" in vv. 24, 31.

24 tn Grk "answered him."

25 tn Or "good work."

26 sn This is the first time the official charge of blasphemy is voiced openly in the Fourth Gospel (although it was implicit in John 8:59).

27 tn Grk "and because."

28 tn Grk "you, a man, make yourself to be God."

29 tn Grk "answered them."

30 sn A quotation from Ps 82:6. Technically the Psalms are not part of the OT "law" (which usually referred to the five books of Moses), but occasionally the term "law" was applied to the entire OT, as here. The problem in this verse concerns the meaning of Jesus' quotation from Ps 82:6. It is important to look at the OT context: The whole line reads "I say, you are gods, sons of the Most High, all of you." Jesus will pick up on the term "sons of the Most High" in 10:36, where he refers to himself as the Son of God. The psalm was understood in rabbinic circles as an attack on unjust judges who, though they have been given the title "gods" because of their quasi-divine function of exercising judgment, are just as mortal as other men. What is the argument here? It is often thought to be as follows: If it was an OT practice to refer to men like the judges as gods, and not blasphemy, why did the Jewish authorities object when this term was applied to Jesus? This really doesn't seem to fit the context, however, since if that were the case Jesus would not be making any claim for "divinity" for himself over and above any other human being – and therefore he would not be subject to the charge of blasphemy. Rather, this is evidently a case of arguing from the lesser to the greater, a common form of rabbinic argument. The reason the OT judges could be called gods is because they were vehicles of the word of God (cf. 10:35). But granting that premise, Jesus deserves much more than they to be called God. He is the Word incarnate, whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world to save the world (10:36). In light of the prologue to the Gospel of John, it seems this interpretation would have been most natural for the author. If it is permissible to call men "gods" because they were the vehicles of the word of God, how much more permissible is it to use the word "God" of him who is the Word of God?

people to whom the word of God came were called 'gods' (and the scripture cannot be broken),[1] 10:36 do you say about the one whom the Father set apart[2] and sent into the world, 'You are blaspheming,' because I said, 'I am the Son of God'? 10:37 If I do not perform[3] the deeds[4] of my Father, do not believe me. 10:38 But if I do them, even if you do not believe me, believe the deeds,[5] so that you may come to know[6] and understand that I am in the Father and the Father is in me." 10:39 Then[7] they attempted[8] again to seize him, but he escaped their clutches.[9] 10:40 Jesus[10] went back across the Jordan River[11] again to the place where John[12] had been baptizing at an earlier time,[13] and he stayed there. 10:41 Many[14] came to him and began to say, "John[15] performed[16] no miraculous sign, but everything John said about this man[17] was true!" 10:42 And many believed in Jesus[18] there.

The Death of Lazarus

11:1 Now a certain man named Lazarus was sick. He was from Bethany, the village where Mary and her sister Martha lived.[19] 11:2 (Now it was Mary who anointed the Lord with perfumed oil[20] and wiped his feet dry with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick.)[21] 11:3 So the sisters sent a message[22] to Jesus,[23] "Lord, look, the one you love is sick." 11:4 When Jesus heard this, he said, "This sickness will not lead to death,[24] but to God's glory,[25] so that the Son of God may be

---

[1] sn The parenthetical note And the scripture cannot be broken belongs to Jesus' words rather than the author's. Not only does Jesus appeal to the OT to defend himself against the charge of blasphemy, but he also adds that the scripture cannot be "broken." In this context he does not explain precisely what is meant by "broken," but it is not too hard to determine. Jesus' argument depended on the exact word used in the context of Ps 82:6. If any other word for "judge" had been used in the psalm, his argument would have been meaningless. Since the scriptures do use this word in Ps 82:6, the argument is binding, because they cannot be "broken" in the sense of being shown to be in error.

[2] tn Or "dedicated."

[3] tn Or "do."

[4] tn Or "works."

[5] tn Or "works."

sn Jesus says that in the final analysis, the deeds he did should indicate whether he was truly from the Father. If the authorities could not believe in him, it would be better to believe in the deeds he did than not to believe at all.

[6] tn Or "so that you may learn."

[7] tc It is difficult to decide between ἐζήτουν οὖν (ezētoun oun, "then they were seeking"; 𝔓66 ℵ A L W Ψ $f^{1.13}$ 33 pm lat), ἐζήτουν δέ (ezētoun de, "now they were seeking"; 𝔓45 and a few versional witnesses), καὶ ἐζήτουν (kai ezētoun, "and they were seeking"; D), and ἐζήτουν (𝔓75vid B Γ Θ 700 pm). Externally, the most viable readings are ἐζήτουν οὖν and ἐζήτουν. Transcriptionally, the οὖν could have dropped out via haplography since the verb ends in the same three letters. On the other hand, it is difficult to explain the readings with δέ or καί if ἐζήτουν οὖν is original; such readings would more likely have arisen from the simple ἐζήτουν. Intrinsically, John is fond of οὖν, using it some 200 times. Further, this Gospel begins relatively few sentences without some conjunction. The minimal support for the δέ and καί readings suggests that they arose either from the lone verb reading (which would thus be prior to their respective Vorlagen but not necessarily the earliest reading) or through carelessness on the part of the scribes. Indeed, the ancestors of 𝔓45 and D may have committed haplography, leaving later scribes in the chain to guess at the conjunction needed. In sum, the best reading appears to be ἐζήτουν οὖν.

[8] tn Grk "they were seeking."

[9] tn Grk "he departed out of their hand."

sn It is not clear whether the authorities simply sought to "arrest" him, or were renewing their attempt to stone him (cf. John 10:31) by seizing him and taking him out to be stoned. In either event, Jesus escaped their clutches. Nor is it clear whether Jesus' escape is to be understood as a miracle. If so, the text gives little indication and even less description. What is clear is that until his "hour" comes, Jesus is completely safe from the hands of men: His enemies are powerless to touch him until they are permitted to do so.

[10] tn Grk "He"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[11] tn The word "River" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for clarity.

[12] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[13] tn Grk "formerly."

sn This refers to the city of Bethany across the Jordan River (see John 1:28).

[14] tn Grk "And many." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[15] sn John refers to John the Baptist.

[16] tn Grk "did."

[17] tn Grk "this one."

[18] tn Grk "in him."

[19] tn Grk "from Bethany, the village of Mary and her sister Martha."

[20] tn Or "perfume," "ointment."

[21] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. It is a bit surprising that the author here identifies Mary as the one who anointed the Lord with perfumed oil and wiped his feet dry with her hair, since this event is not mentioned until later, in 12:3. Many see this "proleptic" reference as an indication that the author expected his readers to be familiar with the story already, and go on to assume that in general the author in writing the Fourth Gospel assumed his readers were familiar with the other three gospels. Whether the author assumed actual familiarity with the synoptic gospels or not, it is probable that he did assume some familiarity with Mary's anointing activity.

[22] tn The phrase "a message" is not in the Greek text but is implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from context.

[23] tn Grk "to him, saying"; the referent (Jesus) is specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] tn Grk "This sickness is not to death."

sn Jesus plainly stated the purpose of Lazarus' sickness in the plan of God: The end of the matter would not be death, but the glorification of the Son. Johannine double-meanings abound here: Even though death would not be the end of the matter, Lazarus is going to die; and ultimately his death and resurrection would lead to the death and resurrection of the Son of God (11:45-53). Furthermore, the glorification of the Son is not praise that comes to him for the miracle, but his death, resurrection, and return to the Father which the miracle precipitates (note the response of the Jewish authorities in 11:47-53).

[25] tn Or "to God's praise."

glorified through it."[1] 11:5 (Now Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus.)[2]

11:6 So when he heard that Lazarus[3] was sick, he remained in the place where he was for two more days. 11:7 Then after this, he said to his disciples, "Let us go to Judea again."[4] 11:8 The disciples replied,[5] "Rabbi, the Jewish leaders[6] were just now trying[7] to stone you to death! Are[8] you going there again?" 11:9 Jesus replied,[9] "Are there not twelve hours in a day? If anyone walks around in the daytime, he does not stumble,[10] because he sees the light of this world.[11] 11:10 But if anyone walks around at night,[12] he stumbles,[13] because the light is not in him."

11:11 After he said this, he added,[14] "Our friend Lazarus has fallen asleep.[15] But I am going there to awaken him." 11:12 Then the disciples replied,[16] "Lord, if he has fallen asleep, he will recover." 11:13 (Now Jesus had been talking about[17] his death, but they[18] thought he had been talking about real sleep.)[19]

11:14 Then Jesus told them plainly, "Lazarus has died, 11:15 and I am glad[20] for your sake that I was not there, so that you may believe.[21] But let us go to him." 11:16 So Thomas (called Didymus[22])[23] said to his fellow disciples, "Let us go too, so that we may die with him."[24]

Speaking with Martha and Mary

11:17 When[25] Jesus arrived,[26] he found that Lazarus[27] had been in the tomb four days already.[28] 11:18 (Now Bethany was less than two miles[29] from Jerusalem,[30] 11:19 so many of the

1 sn So that the Son of God may be glorified through it. These statements are highly ironic: For Lazarus, the sickness did not end in his death, because he was restored to life. But for Jesus himself, the miraculous sign he performed led to his own death, because it confirmed the authorities in their plan to kill Jesus (11:47-53). In the Gospel of John, Jesus' death is consistently portrayed as his 'glorification' through which he accomplishes his return to the Father.

2 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. It was necessary for the author to reaffirm Jesus' love for Martha and her sister and Lazarus here because Jesus' actions in the following verse appear to be contradictory.

3 tn Grk "that he"; the referent (Lazarus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 sn The village of Bethany, where Lazarus was, lies in Judea, less than 2 mi (3 km) from Jerusalem (see 11:18).

5 tn Grk "The disciples said to him."

6 tn Or "the Jewish authorities"; Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the Jewish leaders. See the previous references and the notes on the phrase "Jewish people" in v. 19, and "Jewish religious leaders" in vv. 24, 31, 33.

7 tn Grk "seeking."

8 tn Grk "And are." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

9 tn Grk "Jesus answered."

10 tn Or "he does not trip."

11 sn What is the light of this world? On one level, of course, it refers to the sun, but the reader of John's Gospel would recall 8:12 and understand Jesus' symbolic reference to himself as the light of the world. There is only a limited time left (Are there not twelve hours in a day?) until the Light will be withdrawn (until Jesus returns to the Father) and the one who walks around in the dark will trip and fall (compare the departure of Judas by night in 13:30).

12 tn Grk "in the night."

13 tn Or "he trips."

14 tn Grk "He said these things, and after this he said to them."

15 tn The verb κοιμάω (koimaō) literally means "sleep," but it is often used in the Bible as a euphemism for death when speaking of believers. This metaphorical usage by its very nature emphasizes the hope of resurrection: Believers will one day "wake up" out of death. Here the term refers to death, but "asleep" was used in the translation to emphasize the metaphorical, rhetorical usage of the term, especially in light of the disciples' confusion over what Jesus actually meant (see v. 13).

16 tn Grk "Then the disciples said to him."

17 tn Or "speaking about."

18 tn Grk "these."

19 tn Grk "the sleep of slumber"; this is a redundant expression to emphasize physical sleep as opposed to death.

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

20 tn Grk "and I rejoice."

21 sn So that you may believe. Why does Jesus make this statement? It seems necessary to understand the disciples' belief here in a developmental sense, because there are numerous references to the disciples' faith previous to this in John's Gospel, notably 2:11. Their concept of who Jesus really was is continually being expanded and challenged; they are undergoing spiritual growth; the climax is reached in the confession of Thomas in John 20:28.

22 sn Didymus means "the twin" in Greek.

23 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

24 sn One gets the impression from Thomas' statement "Let us go too, so that we may die with him" that he was something of a pessimist resigned to his fate. And yet his dedicated loyalty to Jesus and his determination to accompany him at all costs was truly commendable. Nor is the contrast between this statement and the confession of Thomas in 20:28, which forms the climax of the entire Fourth Gospel, to be overlooked; certainly Thomas' concept of who Jesus is has changed drastically between 11:16 and 20:28.

25 tn Grk "Then when."

26 tn Grk "came."

27 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Lazarus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

28 tn Grk "he had already had four days in the tomb" (an idiom).

sn There is no description of the journey itself. The author simply states that when Jesus arrived, he found that Lazarus had been in the tomb four days already. He had died some time before this but probably not very long (cf. Ananias and Sapphira in Acts 5:6,10 who were buried immediately after they died, as was the common practice of the time). There is some later evidence (early 3rd century) of a rabbinic belief that the soul hovered near the body of the deceased for three days, hoping to be able to return to the body. But on the fourth day it saw the beginning of decomposition and finally departed (Leviticus Rabbah 18.1). If this belief is as old as the 1st century, it might suggest the significance of the four days: After this time, resurrection would be a first-order miracle, an unequivocal demonstration of the power of God. It is not certain if the tradition is this early, but it is suggestive. Certainly the author does not appear to attach any symbolic significance to the four days in the narrative.

29 tn Or "three kilometers"; Grk "fifteen stades" (a stade as a unit of linear measure is about 607 feet or 187 meters).

Jewish people of the region[1] had come to Martha and Mary to console them[2] over the loss of their brother.)[3] 11:20 So when Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she went out to meet him, but Mary was sitting in the house.[4] 11:21 Martha[5] said to Jesus, "Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died. 11:22 But even now I know that whatever you ask from God, God will grant[6] you."[7]

11:23 Jesus replied,[8] "Your brother will come back to life again."[9] 11:24 Martha said,[10] "I know that he will come back to life again[11] in the resurrection at the last day." 11:25 Jesus said to her, "I am the resurrection and the life. The one who believes in me will live[12] even if he dies, 11:26 and the one who lives and believes in me will never die.[13] Do you believe this?"

11:27 She replied,[14] "Yes, Lord, I believe[15] that you are the Christ,[16] the Son of God who comes into the world."[17]

11:28 And when she had said this, Martha[18] went and called her sister Mary, saying privately,[19] "The Teacher is here and is asking for you."[20] 11:29 So when Mary[21] heard this, she got up quickly and went to him. 11:30 (Now Jesus had not yet entered the village, but was still in the place where Martha had come out to meet him.) 11:31 Then the people[22] who were with Mary[23] in the house consoling her saw her[24] get up quickly and go out. They followed her, because they thought she was going to the tomb to weep[25] there.

11:32 Now when Mary came to the place where Jesus was and saw him, she fell at his feet and said to him, "Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died." 11:33 When Jesus saw her weeping, and the people[26] who had come with her weeping, he was intensely

[1] tn Or "many of the Judeans" (cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e); Grk "many of the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the residents of Jerusalem and the surrounding area in general (those who had been friends or relatives of Lazarus or his sisters would mainly be in view) since the Jewish religious authorities ("the chief priests and the Pharisees") are specifically mentioned as a separate group in John 11:46-47. See also the note on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 8.

[2] tn Or "to comfort them" or "to offer them sympathy."

[3] tn Grk "to comfort them concerning their brother"; the words "loss of" are not in the Greek text but are implied.

sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[4] sn Notice the difference in the response of the two sisters: Martha went out to meet Jesus, while Mary remains sitting in the house. It is similar to the incident in Luke 10:38-42. Here again one finds Martha occupied with the responsibilities of hospitality; she is the one who greets Jesus.

[5] tn Grk "Then Martha." Here οὖν (oun) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

[6] tn Or "give."

[7] sn The statement "whatever you ask from God, God will grant you" by Martha presents something of a dilemma, because she seems to be suggesting here (implicitly at least) the possibility of a resurrection for her brother. However, Martha's statement in 11:39 makes it clear that she had no idea that a resurrection was still possible. How then are her words in 11:22 to be understood? It seems best to take them as a confession of Martha's continuing faith in Jesus even though he was not there in time to help her brother. She means, in effect, "Even though you weren't here in time to help, I still believe that God grants your requests."

[8] tn Grk "Jesus said to her."

[9] tn Or "Your brother will rise again."

sn Jesus' remark to Martha that Lazarus would come back to life again is another example of the misunderstood statement. Martha apparently took it as a customary statement of consolation and joined Jesus in professing belief in the general resurrection of the body at the end of the age. However, as Jesus went on to point out in 11:25-26, Martha's general understanding of the resurrection at the last day was inadequate for the present situation, for the gift of life that conquers death was a present reality to Jesus. This is consistent with the author's perspective on eternal life in the Fourth Gospel: It is not only a future reality, but something to be experienced in the present as well. It is also consistent with the so-called "realized eschatology" of the Fourth Gospel.

[10] tn Grk "Martha said to him."

[11] tn Or "will rise again."

[12] tn That is, will come to life.

[13] tn Grk "will never die forever."

[14] tn Grk "She said to him."

[15] tn The perfect tense in Greek is often used to emphasize the results or present state of a past action. Such is the case here. To emphasize this nuance the perfect tense verb πεπίστευκα (pepisteuka) has been translated as a present tense. This is in keeping with the present context, where Jesus asks of her present state of belief in v. 26, and the theology of the Gospel as a whole, which emphasizes the continuing effects and present reality of faith. For discussion on this use of the perfect tense, see ExSyn 574-76 and B. M. Fanning, Verbal Aspect, 291-97.

[16] tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[17] tn Or "the Son of God, the one who comes into the world."

[18] tn Grk "she"; the referent (Martha) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[19] tn Or "in secret" (as opposed to publicly, so that the other mourners did not hear).

[20] tn Grk "is calling you."

[21] tn Grk "she"; the referent (Mary) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[22] tn Or "the Judeans"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the friends, acquaintances, and relatives of Lazarus or his sisters who had come to mourn, since the Jewish religious authorities are specifically mentioned as a separate group in John 11:46-47. See also the notes on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 8 and "the Jewish people of the region" in v. 19.

[23] tn Grk "her"; the referent (Mary) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[24] tn Grk "Mary"; the proper name (Mary) has been replaced with the pronoun (her) in keeping with conventional English style, to avoid repetition.

[25] tn Or "to mourn" (referring to the loud wailing or crying typical of public mourning in that culture).

[26] tn Or "the Judeans"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the friends, acquaintances, and relatives of Lazarus or his sisters who had come to mourn, since the Jewish religious authorities are specifically mentioned as a separate group in John 11:46-47. See also the notes on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 8, "the Jewish people of the region" in v. 19, and the word "people" in v. 31.

moved[1] in spirit and greatly distressed.[2] 11:34 He asked,[3] "Where have you laid him?"[4] They replied,[5] "Lord, come and see." 11:35 Jesus wept.[6] 11:36 Thus the people who had come to mourn[7] said, "Look how much he loved him!" 11:37 But some of them said, "This is the man who caused the blind man to see![8] Couldn't he have done something to keep Lazarus[9] from dying?"

Lazarus Raised from the Dead

11:38 Jesus, intensely moved[10] again, came to the tomb. (Now it was a cave, and a stone was placed across it.)[11] 11:39 Jesus said, "Take away the stone."[12] Martha, the sister of the deceased,[13] replied, "Lord, by this time the body will have a bad smell,[14] because he has been buried[15] four days."[16] 11:40 Jesus responded,[17] "Didn't I tell you that if you believe, you would see the glory of God?" 11:41 So they took away[18] the stone. Jesus looked upward[19] and said, "Father, I thank you that you have listened to me.[20] 11:42 I knew that you always listen to me,[21] but I said this[22] for the sake of the crowd standing around here, that they may believe that you sent me." 11:43 When[23] he had said this, he shouted in a loud voice,[24] "Lazarus, come out!" 11:44 The one who had died came out, his feet and hands tied up with strips of cloth,[25] and a cloth wrapped around his face.[26] Jesus said to them, "Unwrap him[27] and let him go."

[1] tn Or (perhaps) "he was deeply indignant." The verb ἐνεβριμήσατο (enebrimēsato), which is repeated in John 11:38, indicates a strong display of emotion, somewhat difficult to translate – "shuddered, moved with the deepest emotions." In the LXX, the verb and its cognates are used to describe a display of indignation (Dan 11:30, for example – see also Mark 14:5). Jesus displayed this reaction to the afflicted in Mark 1:43, Matt 9:30. Was he angry at the afflicted? No, but he was angry because he found himself face-to-face with the manifestations of Satan's kingdom of evil. Here, the realm of Satan was represented by death.

[2] tn Or "greatly troubled." The verb ταράσσω (tarassō) also occurs in similar contexts to those of ἐνεβριμήσατο (enebrimēsato). John uses it in 14:1 and 27 to describe the reaction of the disciples to the imminent death of Jesus, and in 13:21 the verb describes how Jesus reacted to the thought of being betrayed by Judas, into whose heart Satan had entered.

[3] tn Grk "And he said." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

[4] tn Or "Where have you placed him?"

[5] tn Grk "They said to him." The indirect object αὐτῷ (autō) has not been translated here for stylistic reasons.

[6] sn Jesus wept. The Greek word used here for Jesus' weeping (ἐδάκρυσεν, edakrusen) is different from the one used to describe the weeping of Mary and the Jews in v. 33 which indicated loud wailing and cries of lament. This word simply means "to shed tears" and has more the idea of quiet grief. But why did Jesus do this? Not out of grief for Lazarus, since he was about to be raised to life again. L. Morris (John [NICNT], 558) thinks it was grief over the misconception of those round about. But it seems that in the context the weeping is triggered by the thought of Lazarus in the tomb: This was not personal grief over the loss of a friend (since Lazarus was about to be restored to life) but grief over the effects of sin, death, and the realm of Satan. It was a natural complement to the previous emotional expression of anger (11:33). It is also possible that Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus because he knew there was also a tomb for himself ahead.

[7] tn Or "the Judeans"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the friends, acquaintances, and relatives of Lazarus or his sisters who had come to mourn, since the Jewish religious authorities are specifically mentioned as a separate group in John 11:46-47. See also the notes on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 8 and "the Jewish people of the region" in v. 19, as well as the notes on the word "people" in vv. 31, 33.

[8] tn Grk "who opened the eyes of the blind man" ("opening the eyes" is an idiom referring to restoration of sight).

[9] tn Grk "this one"; the second half of 11:37 reads Grk "Could not this one who opened the eyes of the blind have done something to keep this one from dying?" In the Greek text the repetition of "this one" in 11:37b referring to two different persons (first Jesus, second Lazarus) could confuse a modern reader. Thus the first reference, to Jesus, has been translated as "he" to refer back to the beginning of v. 37, where the reference to "the man who caused the blind man to see" is clearly a reference to Jesus. The second reference, to Lazarus, has been specified ("Lazarus") in the translation for clarity.

[10] tn Or (perhaps) "Jesus was deeply indignant."

[11] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[12] tn Or "Remove the stone."

[13] tn Grk "the sister of the one who had died."

[14] tn Grk "already he stinks."

[15] tn Or "been there" (in the tomb – see John 11:17).

[16] sn He has been buried four days. Although all the details of the miracle itself are not given, those details which are mentioned are important. The statement made by Martha is extremely significant for understanding what actually took place. There is no doubt that Lazarus had really died, because the decomposition of his body had already begun to take place, since he had been dead for four days.

[17] tn Grk "Jesus said to her."

[18] tn Or "they removed."

[19] tn Grk "lifted up his eyes above."

[20] tn Or "that you have heard me."

[21] tn Grk "that you always hear me."

[22] tn The word "this" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

[23] tn Grk "And when."

[24] sn The purpose of the loud voice was probably to ensure that all in the crowd could hear (compare the purpose of the prayer of thanksgiving in vv. 41-42).

[25] sn Many have wondered how Lazarus got out of the tomb if his hands and feet were still tied up with strips of cloth. The author does not tell, and with a miracle of this magnitude, this is not an important fact to know. If Lazarus' decomposing body was brought back to life by the power of God, then it could certainly have been moved out of the tomb by that same power. Others have suggested that the legs were bound separately, which would remove the difficulty, but the account gives no indication of this. What may be of more significance for the author is the comparison which this picture naturally evokes with the resurrection of Jesus, where the graveclothes stayed in the tomb neatly folded (20:6-7). Jesus, unlike Lazarus, would never need graveclothes again.

[26] tn Grk "and his face tied around with cloth."

[27] tn Grk "Loose him."

The Response of the Jewish Leaders

11:45 Then many of the people,[1] who had come with Mary and had seen the things Jesus[2] did, believed in him. 11:46 But some of them went to the Pharisees[3] and reported to them[4] what Jesus had done. 11:47 So the chief priests and the Pharisees[5] called the council[6] together and said, "What are we doing? For this man is performing many miraculous signs. 11:48 If we allow him to go on in this way,[7] everyone will believe in him, and the Romans will come and take away our sanctuary[8] and our nation."

11:49 Then one of them, Caiaphas, who was high priest that year, said,[9] "You know nothing at all! 11:50 You do not realize[10] that it is more to your advantage to have one man[11] die for the people than for the whole nation to perish."[12] 11:51 (Now he did not say this on his own,[13] but because he was high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus was going to die for the Jewish nation,[14] 11:52 and not for the Jewish nation[15] only,[16] but to gather together[17] into one the children of God who are scattered.)[18] 11:53 So from that day they planned together to kill him.

11:54 Thus Jesus no longer went[19] around publicly[20] among the Judeans,[21] but went away from there to the region near the wilderness, to a town called Ephraim,[22] and stayed there with his disciples. 11:55 Now the Jewish feast of Passover[23] was near, and many people went up to Jerusalem[24] from the rural areas before the Passover to cleanse themselves ritually.[25] 11:56 Thus they were looking for Jesus,[26] and saying to one another as they stood in the temple courts,[27]
"What do you think? That he won't come to the feast?" 11:57 (Now the chief priests and the Pharisees[28] had given orders that anyone who

[1] tn Or "the Judeans"; Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the friends, acquaintances, and relatives of Lazarus or his sisters who had come to mourn, since the Jewish religious authorities are specifically mentioned as a separate group in John 11:46-47. See also the notes on the phrase "the Jewish leaders" in v. 8 and "the Jewish people of the region" in v. 19, as well as the notes on the word "people" in vv. 31, 33 and the phrase "people who had come to mourn" in v. 36.

[2] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[3] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[4] tn Grk "told them."

[5] tn The phrase "chief priests and Pharisees" is a comprehensive name for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:45; 18:3; Acts 5:22, 26.

[6] tn Or "Sanhedrin" (the Sanhedrin was the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews). The συνέδριον (sunedrion) which they gathered was probably an informal meeting rather than the official Sanhedrin. This is the only occurrence of the word συνέδριον in the Gospel of John, and the only anarthrous singular use in the NT. There are other plural anarthrous uses which have the general meaning "councils." The fact that Caiaphas in 11:49 is referred to as "one of them" supports the unofficial nature of the meeting; in the official Sanhedrin he, being high priest that year, would have presided over the assembly. Thus it appears that an informal council was called to discuss what to do about Jesus and his activities.

[7] tn Grk "If we let him do thus."

[8] tn Or "holy place"; Grk "our place" (a reference to the temple in Jerusalem).

[9] tn Grk "said to them." The indirect object αὐτοῖς (autois) has not been translated for stylistic reasons.

[10] tn Or "you are not considering."

[11] tn Although it is possible to argue that ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos) should be translated "person" here since it is not necessarily masculinity that is in view in Caiaphas' statement, "man" was retained in the translation because in 11:47 "this man" (οὗτος ὁ ἄνθρωπος, outos ho anthrōpos) has as its referent a specific individual, Jesus, and it was felt this connection should be maintained.

[12] sn In his own mind Caiaphas was no doubt giving voice to a common-sense statement of political expediency. Yet he was unconsciously echoing a saying of Jesus himself (cf. Mark 10:45). Caiaphas was right; the death of Jesus would save the nation from destruction. Yet Caiaphas could not suspect that Jesus would die, not in place of the political nation Israel, but on behalf of the true people of God; and he would save them, not from physical destruction, but from eternal destruction (cf. 3:16-17). The understanding of Caiaphas' words in a sense that Caiaphas could not possibly have imagined at the time he uttered them serves as a clear example of the way in which the author understood that words and actions could be invested retrospectively with a meaning not consciously intended or understood by those present at the time.

[13] tn Grk "say this from himself."

[14] tn The word "Jewish" is not in the Greek text, but is clearly implied by the context (so also NIV; TEV "the Jewish people").

[15] tn See the note on the word "nation" in the previous verse.

[16] sn The author in his comment expands the prophecy to include the Gentiles (not for the Jewish nation only), a confirmation that the Fourth Gospel was directed, at least partly, to a Gentile audience. There are echoes of Pauline concepts here (particularly Eph 2:11-22) in the stress on the unity of Jew and Gentile.

[17] tn Grk "that he might gather together."

[18] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[19] tn Grk "walked."

[20] tn Or "openly."

[21] tn Grk "among the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the residents of Judea in general, who would be likely to report Jesus to the religious authorities. The vicinity around Jerusalem was no longer safe for Jesus and his disciples. On the translation "Judeans" cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e. See also the references in vv. 8, 19, 31, 33, 36, and 45.

[22] tn There is no certain identification of the location to which Jesus withdrew in response to the decision of the Jewish authorities. Many have suggested the present town of Et-Taiyibeh, identified with ancient Ophrah (Josh 18:23) or Ephron (Josh 15:9). If so, this would be 12-15 mi (19-24 km) northeast of Jerusalem.

[23] tn Grk "the Passover of the Jews." This is the final Passover of Jesus' ministry. The author is now on the eve of the week of the Passion. Some time prior to the feast itself, Jerusalem would be crowded with pilgrims from the surrounding districts (ἐκ τῆς χώρας, ek tēs chōras) who had come to purify themselves ceremonially before the feast.

[24] map For location see Map5-B1; Map6-F3; Map7-E2; Map8-F2; Map10-B3; JP1-F4; JP2-F4; JP3-F4; JP4-F4.

[25] tn Or "to purify themselves" (to undergo or carry out ceremonial cleansing before participating in the Passover celebration).

[26] tn Grk "they were seeking Jesus."

[27] tn Grk "in the temple."

[28] tn The phrase "chief priests and Pharisees" is a comprehensive name for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:45; 18:3; Acts 5:22, 26.

knew where Jesus[1] was should report it, so that they could arrest[2] him.)[3]

Jesus' Anointing

12:1 Then, six days before the Passover, Jesus came to Bethany, where Lazarus lived, whom he[4] had raised from the dead. 12:2 So they prepared a dinner for Jesus[5] there. Martha[6] was serving, and Lazarus was among those present at the table[7] with him. 12:3 Then Mary took three quarters of a pound[8] of expensive aromatic oil from pure nard[9] and anointed the feet of Jesus. She[10] then wiped his feet dry with her hair. (Now the house was filled with the fragrance of the perfumed oil.)[11] 12:4 But Judas Iscariot, one of his disciples (the one who was going to betray him)[12] said, 12:5 "Why wasn't this oil sold for three hundred silver coins[13] and the money[14] given to the poor?" 12:6 (Now Judas[15] said this not because he was concerned about the poor, but because he was a thief. As keeper of the money box,[16] he used to steal what was put into it.)[17] 12:7 So Jesus said, "Leave her alone. She has kept it for the day of my burial.[18] 12:8 For you will always have the poor with you, but you will not always have me!"[19]

12:9 Now a large crowd of Judeans[20] learned[21] that Jesus[22] was there, and so they came not only because of him[23] but also to see

1 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

2 tn Or "could seize."

3 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

4 tn Grk "whom Jesus," but a repetition of the proper name (Jesus) here would be redundant in the English clause structure, so the pronoun ("he") is substituted in the translation.

5 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity and to conform with contemporary English style.

6 tn Grk "And Martha." The connective καί (kai, "and") has been omitted in the translation because it would produce a run-on sentence in English.

7 tn Grk "reclining at the table."

sn 1st century middle eastern meals were not eaten while sitting at a table, but while reclining on one's side on the floor with the head closest to the low table and the feet farthest away.

8 tn Or "half a liter"; Grk "a pound" (that is, a Roman pound, about 325 grams or 12 ounces).

9 tn Μύρον (muron) was usually made of myrrh (from which the English word is derived) but here it is used in the sense of ointment or perfumed oil (L&N 6.205). The adjective πιστικῆς (pistikēs) is difficult with regard to its exact meaning; some have taken it to derive from πίστις (pistis) and relate to the purity of the oil of nard. More probably it is something like a brand name, "pistic nard," the exact significance of which has not been discovered.

sn Nard or spikenard is a fragrant oil from the root and spike of the nard plant of northern India. This aromatic oil, if made of something like nard, would have been extremely expensive, costing up to a year's pay for an average laborer.

10 tn Grk "And she." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

11 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. With a note characteristic of someone who was there and remembered, the author adds that the house was filled with the fragrance of the perfumed oil. In the later rabbinic literature, Ecclesiastes Rabbah 7.1.1 states "The fragrance of good oil is diffused from the bedroom to the dining hall, but a good name is diffused from one end of the world to the other." If such a saying was known in the 1st century, this might be the author's way of indicating that Mary's act of devotion would be spoken of throughout the entire world (compare the comment in Mark 14:9).

12 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

13 tn Grk "three hundred denarii." The denarius was a silver coin worth a standard day's wage, so the value exceeded what a laborer could earn in a year (taking into account Sabbaths and feast days when no work was done).

14 tn The words "the money" are not in the Greek text, but are implied (as the proceeds from the sale of the perfumed oil).

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "a thief, and having the money box." Dividing the single Greek sentence improves the English style.

17 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. This is one of the indications in the gospels that Judas was of bad character before the betrayal of Jesus. John states that he was a thief and had responsibility for the finances of the group. More than being simply a derogatory note about Judas' character, the inclusion of the note at this particular point in the narrative may be intended to link the frustrated greed of Judas here with his subsequent decision to betray Jesus for money. The parallel accounts in Matthew and Mark seem to indicate that after this incident Judas went away immediately and made his deal with the Jewish authorities to deliver up Jesus. Losing out on one source of sordid gain, he immediately went out and set up another.

18 tn Grk "Leave her alone, that for the day of my burial she may keep it." The construction with ἵνα (hina) is somewhat ambiguous. The simplest way to read it would be, "Leave her alone, that she may keep it for the day of my burial." This would imply that Mary was going to use the perfumed oil on that day, while vv. 3 and 5 seem to indicate clearly that she had already used it up. Some understand the statement as elliptical: "Leave her alone; (she did this) in order to keep it for the day of my burial." Another alternative would be an imperatival use of ἵνα with the meaning: "Leave her alone; let her keep it." The reading of the Byzantine text, which omits the ἵνα and substitutes a perfect tense τετήρηκεν (tetērēken), while not likely to be original, probably comes close to the meaning of the text, and that has been followed in this translation.

19 tc A few isolated witnesses omit v. 8 (D sy^{s}), part of v. 8 (𝔓^{75}), or vv. 7-8 ({0250}). The latter two omissions are surely due to errors of sight, while the former can be attributed to D's sometimes erratic behavior. The verse is secure in light of the overwhelming evidence on its behalf.

tn In the Greek text of this clause, "me" is in emphatic position (the first word in the clause). To convey some impression of the emphasis, an exclamation point is used in the translation.

20 tn Grk "of the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory ("Judeans"; cf. BDAG 479 s.v. Ἰουδαῖος 2.e), the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the residents of Jerusalem and the surrounding area who by this time had heard about the resurrection of Lazarus and were curious to see him.

21 tn Grk "knew."

22 tn Grk "he"; normal English clause structure specifies the referent first and substitutes the pronoun in subsequent references to the same individual, so the referent (Jesus) has been specified here.

23 tn Grk "Jesus"; normal English clause structure specifies the referent first and substitutes the pronoun in subsequent references to the same individual, so the pronoun ("him") has been substituted here.

Lazarus whom he had raised from the dead. 12:10 So the chief priests planned to kill Lazarus too,[1] 12:11 for on account of him many of the Jewish people from Jerusalem[2] were going away and believing in Jesus.

The Triumphal Entry

12:12 The next day the large crowd that had come to the feast heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem.[3] 12:13 So they took branches of palm trees[4] and went out to meet him. They began to shout,[5] "Hosanna![6] Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord![7] Blessed is[8] the king of Israel!" 12:14 Jesus found a young donkey[9] and sat on it, just as it is written, 12:15 "Do not be afraid, people of Zion;[10] look, your king is coming, seated on a donkey's colt!"[11] 12:16 (His disciples did not understand these things when they first happened,[12] but when Jesus was glorified,[13] then they remembered that these things were written about him and that these things had happened[14] to him.)[15]

12:17 So the crowd who had been with him when he called Lazarus out of the tomb and raised him from the dead were continuing to testify about it.[16] 12:18 Because they had heard that Jesus[17] had performed this miraculous sign, the crowd went out to meet him. 12:19 Thus the Pharisees[18] said to one another, "You see that you can do nothing. Look, the world has run off after him!"

Seekers

12:20 Now some Greeks[19] were among those who had gone up to worship at the feast. 12:21 So these approached Philip,[20] who was from Bethsaida in Galilee, and requested,[21] "Sir, we would like to see Jesus." 12:22 Philip went and

1 sn According to John 11:53 the Jewish leadership had already planned to kill Jesus. This plot against Lazarus apparently never got beyond the planning stage, however, since no further mention is made of it by the author.

2 tn Grk "the Jews." Here the phrase refers to the residents of Jerusalem who had heard about the resurrection of Lazarus and as a result were embracing Jesus as Messiah. See also the note on the phrase "Judeans" in v. 9.

4 sn The Mosaic law stated (Lev 23:40) that branches of palm trees were to be used to celebrate the feast of Tabernacles. Later on they came to be used to celebrate other feasts as well (1 Macc. 13:51, 2 Macc. 10:7).

5 tn Grk "And they were shouting." An ingressive force for the imperfect tense ("they began to shout" or "they started shouting") is natural in this sequence of events. The conjunction καί (kai, "and") is left untranslated to improve the English style.

6 tn The expression Ὡσαννά (hōsanna, literally in Hebrew, "O Lord, save") in the quotation from Ps 118:25-26 was probably by this time a familiar liturgical expression of praise, on the order of "Hail to the king," although both the underlying Aramaic and Hebrew expressions meant "O Lord, save us." As in Mark 11:9 the introductory ὡσαννά is followed by the words of Ps 118:25, εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι κυρίου (eulogēmenos ho erchomenos en onomati kuriou), although in the Fourth Gospel the author adds for good measure καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ (kai ho basileus tou Israēl). In words familiar to every Jew, the author is indicating that at this point every messianic expectation is now at the point of realization. It is clear from the words of the psalm shouted by the crowd that Jesus is being proclaimed as messianic king. See E. Lohse, TDNT 9:682-84.

sn Hosanna is an Aramaic expression that literally means, "help, I pray," or "save, I pray." By Jesus' time it had become a strictly liturgical formula of praise, however, and was used as an exclamation of praise to God.

7 sn A quotation from Ps 118:25-26.

8 tn Grk "Blessed is the one who comes in the name of the Lord, even the King of Israel." The words "Blessed is" are not repeated in the Greek text, but are repeated in the translation to avoid the awkwardness in English of the ascensive καί (kai).

9 sn The author does not repeat the detailed accounts of the finding of the donkey recorded in the synoptic gospels. He does, however, see the event as a fulfillment of scripture, which he indicates by quoting Zech 9:9.

10 tn Grk "Do not be afraid, daughter of Zion" (the phrase "daughter of Zion" is an idiom for the inhabitants of Jerusalem: "people of Zion"). The idiom "daughter of Zion" has been translated as "people of Zion" because the original idiom, while firmly embedded in the Christian tradition, is not understandable to most modern English readers.

11 sn A quotation from Zech 9:9.

12 tn Or "did not understand these things at first"; Grk "formerly."

13 sn When Jesus was glorified, that is, glorified through his resurrection, exaltation, and return to the Father. Jesus' glorification is consistently portrayed this way in the Gospel of John.

14 tn Grk "and that they had done these things," though the referent is probably indefinite and not referring to the disciples; as such, the best rendering is as a passive (see ExSyn 402-3; R. E. Brown, John [AB], 1:458).

15 sn The comment His disciples did not understand these things when they first happened (a parenthetical note by the author) informs the reader that Jesus' disciples did not at first associate the prophecy from Zechariah with the events as they happened. This came with the later (postresurrection) insight which the Holy Spirit would provide after Jesus' resurrection and return to the Father. Note the similarity with John 2:22, which follows another allusion to a prophecy in Zechariah (14:21).

16 tn The word "it" is not included in the Greek text. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

17 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

18 sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

19 sn These Greeks (Ἕλληνές τινες, hellēnes tines) who had come up to worship at the feast were probably "God-fearers" rather than proselytes in the strict sense. Had they been true proselytes, they would probably not have been referred to as Greeks any longer. Many came to worship at the major Jewish festivals without being proselytes to Judaism, for example, the Ethiopian eunuch in Acts 8:27, who could not have been a proselyte if he were physically a eunuch.

20 sn These Greeks approached Philip, although it is not clear why they did so. Perhaps they identified with his Greek name (although a number of Jews from border areas had Hellenistic names at this period). By see it is clear they meant "speak with," since anyone could "see" Jesus moving through the crowd. The author does not mention what they wanted to speak with Jesus about.

21 tn Grk "and were asking him, saying." The participle λέγοντες (legontes) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

told Andrew, and they both[1] went and told Jesus. 12:23 Jesus replied,[2] "The time[3] has come for the Son of Man to be glorified.[4] 12:24 I tell you the solemn truth,[5] unless a kernel of wheat falls into the ground and dies, it remains by itself alone.[6] But if it dies, it produces[7] much grain.[8] 12:25 The one who loves his life[9] destroys[10] it, and the one who hates his life in this world guards[11] it for eternal life. 12:26 If anyone wants to serve me, he must follow[12] me, and where I am, my servant will be too.[13] If anyone serves me, the Father will honor him.

12:27 "Now my soul is greatly distressed. And what should I say? 'Father, deliver me[14] from this hour'?[15] No, but for this very reason I have come to this hour.[16] 12:28 Father, glorify your name." Then a voice came from heaven,[17] "I have glorified it,[18] and I will glorify it[19] again." 12:29 The crowd that stood there and heard the voice[20] said that it had thundered. Others said that an angel had spoken to him.[21] 12:30 Jesus said,[22] "This voice has not come for my benefit[23] but for yours. 12:31 Now is the judgment of this world; now the ruler of this world[24] will be driven out.[25] 12:32 And I, when I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all people[26] to myself." 12:33 (Now he said this to indicate clearly what kind of death he was going to die.)[27]

12:34 Then the crowd responded,[28] "We have heard from the law that the Christ[29] will remain forever.[30] How[31] can you say, 'The Son of Man must be lifted up'? Who is this Son of Man?" 12:35 Jesus replied,[32] "The light is with you for a little while longer.[33] Walk while you have the light, so that the darkness may not

---

1 tn Grk "Andrew and Philip"; because a repetition of the proper names would be redundant in contemporary English style, the phrase "they both" has been substituted in the translation.

2 tn Grk "Jesus answered them, saying." The participle λέγων (legōn) is redundant in contemporary English and has not been translated here.

3 tn Grk "the hour."

4 sn Jesus' reply, the time has come for the Son of Man to be glorified, is a bit puzzling. As far as the author's account is concerned, Jesus totally ignores these Greeks and makes no further reference to them whatsoever. It appears that his words are addressed to Andrew and Philip, but in fact they must have had a wider audience, including possibly the Greeks who had wished to see him in the first place. The words the time has come recall all the previous references to "the hour" throughout the Fourth Gospel (see the note on time in 2:4). There is no doubt, in light of the following verse, that Jesus refers to his death here. On his pathway to glorification lies the cross, and it is just ahead.

5 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

6 tn Or "it remains only a single kernel."

7 tn Or "bears."

8 tn Grk "much fruit."

9 tn Or "soul."

10 tn Or "loses." Although the traditional English translation of ἀπολλύει (apolluei) in John 12:25 is "loses," the contrast with φυλάξει (phulaxei, "keeps" or "guards") in the second half of the verse favors the meaning "destroy" here.

11 tn Or "keeps."

12 tn As a third person imperative in Greek, ἀκολουθείτω (akoloutheitō) is usually translated "let him follow me." This could be understood by the modern English reader as merely permissive, however ("he may follow me if he wishes"). In this context there is no permissive sense, but rather a command, so the translation "he must follow me" is preferred.

13 tn Grk "where I am, there my servant will be too."

14 tn Or "save me."

15 tn Or "this occasion."

sn Father, deliver me from this hour. It is now clear that Jesus' hour has come – the hour of his return to the Father through crucifixion, death, resurrection, and ascension (see 12:23). This will be reiterated in 13:1 and 17:1. Jesus states (employing words similar to those of Ps 6:4) that his soul is troubled. What shall his response to his imminent death be? A prayer to the Father to deliver him from that hour? No, because it is on account of this very hour that Jesus has come. His sacrificial death has always remained the primary purpose of his mission into the world. Now, faced with the completion of that mission, shall he ask the Father to spare him from it? The expected answer is no.

16 tn Or "this occasion."

17 tn Or "from the sky" (see note on 1:32).

18 tn "It" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

19 tn "It" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

20 tn "The voice" is not in the Greek text. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

21 tn Grk "Others said, "An angel has spoken to him." The direct discourse in the second half of v. 29 was converted to indirect discourse in the translation to maintain the parallelism with the first half of the verse, which is better in keeping with English style.

22 tn Grk "Jesus answered and said."

23 tn Or "for my sake."

24 sn The ruler of this world is a reference to Satan.

25 tn Or "will be thrown out." This translation regards the future passive ἐκβληθήσεται (ekblēthēsetai) as referring to an event future to the time of speaking.

sn The phrase driven out must refer to Satan's loss of authority over this world. This must be in principle rather than in immediate fact, since 1 John 5:19 states that the whole world (still) lies in the power of the evil one (a reference to Satan). In an absolute sense the reference is proleptic. The coming of Jesus' hour (his crucifixion, death, resurrection, and exaltation to the Father) marks the end of Satan's domain and brings about his defeat, even though that defeat has not been ultimately worked out in history yet and awaits the consummation of the age.

26 tn Grk "all." The word "people" is not in the Greek text but is supplied for stylistic reasons and for clarity (cf. KJV "all men").

27 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

28 tn Grk "Then the crowd answered him."

29 tn Or "the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

30 tn Probably an allusion to Ps 89:35-37. It is difficult to pinpoint the passage in the Mosaic law to which the crowd refers. The ones most often suggested are Ps 89:36-37, Ps 110:4, Isa 9:7, Ezek 37:25, and Dan 7:14. None of these passages are in the Pentateuch per se, but "law" could in common usage refer to the entire OT (compare Jesus' use in John 10:34). Of the passages mentioned, Ps 89:36-37 is the most likely candidate. This verse speaks of David's "seed" remaining forever. Later in the same psalm, v. 51 speaks of the "anointed" (Messiah), and the psalm was interpreted messianically in both the NT (Acts 13:22, Rev 1:5, 3:14) and in the rabbinic literature (Genesis Rabbah 97).

31 tn Grk "And how"; the conjunction καί (kai, "and") has been left untranslated here for improved English style.

32 tn Grk "Then Jesus said to them."

33 tn Grk "Yet a little while the light is with you."

overtake you.[1] The one who walks in the darkness does not know where he is going. 12:36 While you have the light, believe in the light, so that you may become sons of light."[2] When Jesus had said these things, he went away and hid himself from them.

The Outcome of Jesus' Public Ministry Foretold

12:37 Although Jesus[3] had performed[4] so many miraculous signs before them, they still refused to believe in him, 12:38 so that the word[5] of Isaiah the prophet would be fulfilled. He said,[6] "Lord, who has believed our message, and to whom has the arm of the Lord[7] been revealed?"[8] 12:39 For this reason they could not believe,[9] because again Isaiah said,

> 12:40 "He has blinded their eyes > and hardened their heart,[10]
> so that they would not see with their eyes > and understand with their heart,[11] > and turn to me,[12] and I would heal them."[13]

12:41 Isaiah said these things because he saw Christ's[14] glory, and spoke about him.

12:42 Nevertheless, even among the rulers[15] many believed in him, but because of the Pharisees[16] they would not confess Jesus to be the Christ,[17] so that they would not be put out of[18] the synagogue.[19] 12:43 For they loved praise[20] from men more than praise[21] from God.

Jesus' Final Public Words

12:44 But Jesus shouted out,[22] "The one who believes in me does not believe in me, but in the one who sent me,[23] 12:45 and the one who sees me sees the one who sent me.[24] 12:46 I have come as a light into the world, so that everyone who believes in me should not remain in darkness. 12:47 If anyone[25] hears my words and does not obey them,[26] I do not judge him. For I have not come to judge the world, but to save the world.[27] 12:48 The one who rejects me and does not accept[28] my words has a judge;[29] the word[30] I have spoken will judge him at the last day.

[1] sn The warning Walk while you have the light, so that the darkness may not overtake you operates on at least two different levels: (1) To the Jewish people in Jerusalem to whom Jesus spoke, the warning was a reminder that there was only a little time left for them to accept him as their Messiah. (2) To those later individuals to whom the Fourth Gospel was written, and to every person since, the words of Jesus are also a warning: There is a finite, limited time in which each individual has opportunity to respond to the Light of the world (i.e., Jesus); after that comes darkness. One's response to the Light decisively determines one's judgment for eternity.

[2] tn The idiom "sons of light" means essentially "people characterized by light," that is, "people of God."

sn The expression sons of light refers to men and women to whom the truth of God has been revealed and who are therefore living according to that truth, thus, "people of God."

[3] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[4] tn Or "done."

[5] tn Or "message."

[6] tn Grk "who said."

[7] tn "The arm of the Lord" is an idiom for "God's great power" (as exemplified through Jesus' miraculous signs). This response of unbelief is interpreted by the author as a fulfillment of the prophetic words of Isaiah (Isa 53:1). The phrase ὁ βραχίων κυρίου (ho brachiōn kuriou) is a figurative reference to God's activity and power which has been revealed in the sign-miracles which Jesus has performed (compare the previous verse).

[8] sn A quotation from Isa 53:1.

[9] sn The author explicitly states here that Jesus' Jewish opponents could not believe, and quotes Isa 6:10 to show that God had in fact blinded their eyes and hardened their heart. This OT passage was used elsewhere in the NT to explain Jewish unbelief: Paul's final words in Acts (28:26-27) are a quotation of this same passage, which he uses to explain why the Jewish people have not accepted the gospel he has preached. A similar passage (Isa 29:10) is quoted in a similar context in Rom 11:8.

[10] tn Or "closed their mind."

[11] tn Or "their mind."

[12] tn One could also translate στραφῶσιν (straphōsin) as "repent" or "change their ways," but both of these terms would be subject to misinterpretation by the modern English reader. The idea is one of turning back to God, however. The words "to me" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

[13] sn A quotation from Isa 6:10.

[14] tn Grk "his"; the referent (Christ) has been specified in the translation for clarity. The referent supplied here is "Christ" rather than "Jesus" because it involves what Isaiah saw. It is clear that the author presents Isaiah as having seen the preincarnate glory of Christ, which was the very revelation of the Father (see John 1:18; John 14:9).

sn Because he saw Christ's glory. The glory which Isaiah saw in Isa 6:3 was the glory of Yahweh (typically rendered as "LORD" in the OT). Here John speaks of the prophet seeing the glory of Christ since in the next clause and spoke about him, "him" can hardly refer to Yahweh, but must refer to Christ. On the basis of statements like 1:14 in the prologue, the author probably put no great distinction between the two. Since the author presents Jesus as fully God (cf. John 1:1), it presents no problem to him to take words originally spoken by Isaiah of Yahweh himself and apply them to Jesus.

[15] sn The term rulers here denotes members of the Sanhedrin, the highest legal, legislative, and judicial body among the Jews. Note the same word ("ruler") is used to describe Nicodemus in 3:1.

[16] sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[17] tn The words "Jesus to be the Christ" are not in the Greek text, but are implied (see 9:22). As is often the case in Greek, the direct object is omitted for the verb ὡμολόγουν (hōmologoun). Some translators supply an ambiguous "it," or derive the implied direct object from the previous clause "believed in him" so that the rulers would not confess "their faith" or "their belief." However, when one compares John 9:22, which has many verbal parallels to this verse, it seems clear that the content of the confession would have been "Jesus is the Christ (i.e., Messiah)."

sn See the note on Christ in 1:20.

[18] tn Or "be expelled from."

[19] sn Compare John 9:22. See the note on synagogue in 6:59.

[20] tn Grk "the glory."

[21] tn Grk "the glory."

[22] tn Grk "shouted out and said."

[23] sn The one who sent me refers to God.

[24] sn Cf. John 1:18 and 14:9.

[25] tn Grk "And if anyone"; the conjunction καί (kai, "and") has been left untranslated here for improved English style.

[26] tn Or "guard them," "keep them."

[27] sn Cf. John 3:17.

[28] tn Or "does not receive."

[29] tn Grk "has one who judges him."

[30] tn Or "message."

12:49 For I have not spoken from my own authority,[1] but the Father himself who sent me has commanded me[2] what I should say and what I should speak. 12:50 And I know that his commandment is eternal life.[3] Thus the things I say, I say just as the Father has told me."[4]

Washing the Disciples' Feet

13:1 Just before the Passover feast, Jesus knew that his time[5] had come to depart[6] from this world to the Father. Having loved his own who were in the world, he now loved them to the very end.[7] 13:2 The evening meal[8] was in progress, and the devil had already put into the heart[9] of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, that he should betray[10] Jesus.[11] 13:3 Because Jesus[12] knew that the Father had handed all things over to him,[13] and that he had come from God and was going back to God, 13:4 he got up from the meal, removed[14] his outer clothes,[15] took a towel and tied it around himself.[16] 13:5 He poured water into the washbasin and began to wash the disciples' feet and to dry them with the towel he had wrapped around himself.[17]

13:6 Then he came to Simon Peter. Peter[18] said to him, "Lord, are you going to wash[19] my feet?" 13:7 Jesus replied,[20] "You do not understand[21] what I am doing now, but you will understand[22] after these things." 13:8 Peter said to him, "You will never wash my feet!"[23] Jesus replied,[24] "If I do not wash you, you have no share with me."[25] 13:9 Simon Peter said to him, "Lord, wash[26] not only my feet, but also my hands and my head!" 13:10 Jesus replied,[27] "The one who has bathed needs only to wash his feet,[28] but is completely[29] clean.[30] And you

---

1 tn Grk "I have not spoken from myself."

2 tn Grk "has given me commandment."

3 tn Or "his commandment results in eternal life."

4 tn Grk "The things I speak, just as the Father has spoken to me, thus I speak."

5 tn Grk "his hour."

6 tn Grk "that he should depart." The ἵνα (hina) clause in Koine Greek frequently encroached on the simple infinitive (for the sake of greater clarity).

7 tn Or "he now loved them completely," or "he now loved them to the uttermost" (see John 19:30). All of John 13:1 is a single sentence in Greek, although in English this would be unacceptably awkward. At the end of the verse the idiom εἰς τέλος (eis telos) was translated literally as "to the end" and the modern equivalents given in the note above, because there is an important lexical link between this passage and John 19:30, τετέλεσται (tetelestai, "It is ended").

sn The full extent of Jesus' love for his disciples is not merely seen in his humble service to them in washing their feet (the most common interpretation of the passage). The full extent of his love for them is demonstrated in his sacrificial death for them on the cross. The footwashing episode which follows then becomes a prophetic act, or acting out beforehand, of his upcoming death on their behalf. The message for the disciples was that they were to love one another not just in humble, self-effacing service, but were to be willing to die for one another. At least one of them got this message eventually, though none understood it at the time (see 1 John 3:16).

8 tn Or "Supper." To avoid possible confusion because of different regional English usage regarding the distinction between "dinner" and "supper" as an evening meal, the translation simply refers to "the evening meal."

9 sn At this point the devil had already put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, that he should betray Jesus. C. K. Barrett (St. John, 365) thought this was a reference to the idea entering the devil's own heart, but this does not seem likely. It is more probable that Judas' heart is meant, since the use of the Greek article (rather than a possessive pronoun) is a typical idiom when a part of one's own body is indicated. Judas' name is withheld until the end of the sentence for dramatic effect (emphasis). This action must be read in light of 13:27, and appears to refer to a preliminary idea or plan.

10 tn Or "that he should hand over."

11 tn Grk "betray him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

12 tn Grk "Because he knew"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

13 tn Grk "had given all things into his hands."

14 tn Grk "and removed"; the conjunction καί (kai, "and") has been left untranslated here for improved English style.

15 tn The plural τὰ ἱμάτια (ta himatia) is probably a reference to more than one garment (cf. John 19:23-24). If so, this would indicate that Jesus stripped to a loincloth, like a slave. The translation "outer clothes" is used to indicate that Jesus was not completely naked, since complete nudity would have been extremely offensive to Jewish sensibilities in this historical context.

16 tn Grk "taking a towel he girded himself." Jesus would have wrapped the towel (λέντιον, lention) around his waist (διέζωσεν ἑαυτόν, diezōsen heauton) for use in wiping the disciples' feet. The term λέντιον is a Latin loanword (linteum) which is also found in the rabbinic literature (see BDAG 592 s.v.). It would have been a long piece of linen cloth, long enough for Jesus to have wrapped it about his waist and still used the free end to wipe the disciples' feet.

17 tn Grk "with the towel with which he was girded."

18 tn Grk "He"; the referent (Peter) is specified in the translation for clarity.

19 tn Grk "do you wash" or "are you washing."

20 tn Grk "answered and said to him."

21 tn Grk "You do not know."

22 tn Grk "you will know."

23 tn Grk "You will never wash my feet forever." The negation is emphatic in Greek but somewhat awkward in English. Emphasis is conveyed in the translation by the use of an exclamation point.

24 tn Grk "Jesus answered him."

25 tn Or "you have no part in me."

26 tn The word "wash" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Here it is supplied to improve the English style by making Peter's utterance a complete sentence.

27 tn Grk "Jesus said to him."

28 tn Grk "has no need except to wash his feet."

29 tn Or "entirely."

30 sn The one who has bathed needs only to wash his feet. A common understanding is that the "bath" Jesus referred to is the initial cleansing from sin, which necessitates only "lesser, partial" cleansings from sins after conversion. This makes a fine illustration from a homiletic standpoint, but is it the meaning of the passage? This seems highly doubtful. Jesus stated that the disciples were completely clean except for Judas (vv. 10b, 11). What they needed was to have their feet washed by Jesus. In the broader context of the Fourth Gospel, the significance of the foot-washing seems to point not just to an example of humble service (as most understand it), but something more – Jesus' self-sacrificial death on the cross. If this is correct, then the foot-washing which they needed to undergo represented their acceptance of this act of self-sacrifice on the part of their master. This makes Peter's initial abhorrence of the act of humiliation by his master all the more significant in context; it also explains Jesus' seemingly harsh reply to Peter (above, v. 8; compare Matt 16:21-23 where Jesus says to Peter, "Get behind me, Satan").

disciples[1] are clean, but not every one of you." 13:11 (For Jesus[2] knew the one who was going to betray him. For this reason he said, "Not every one of you is[3] clean.")[4] 13:12 So when Jesus[5] had washed their feet and put his outer clothing back on, he took his place at the table[6] again and said to them, "Do you understand[7] what I have done for you? 13:13 You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord,' and do so correctly,[8] for that is what I am.[9] 13:14 If I then, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you too ought to wash one another's feet. 13:15 For I have given you an example[10] – you should do just as I have done for you. 13:16 I tell you the solemn truth,[11] the slave[12] is not greater than his master, nor is the one who is sent as a messenger[13] greater than the one who sent him. 13:17 If you understand[14] these things, you will be blessed if you do them.

The Announcement of Jesus' Betrayal

13:18 "What I am saying does not refer to all of you. I know the ones I have chosen. But this is to fulfill the scripture,[15] 'The one who eats my bread[16] has turned against me.'[17] 13:19 I am telling you this now,[18] before it happens, so that when it happens you may believe[19] that I am he.[20] 13:20 I tell you the solemn truth,[21] whoever accepts[22] the one I send accepts me, and whoever accepts me accepts the one who sent me."[23]

13:21 When he had said these things, Jesus was greatly distressed[24] in spirit, and testified,[25] "I tell you the solemn truth,[26] one of you will betray me."[27] 13:22 The disciples began to look at one another, worried and perplexed[28] to know which of them he was talking about. 13:23 One of his disciples, the one Jesus loved,[29] was at the table[30] to the right of Jesus in a place of honor.[31]

1 tn The word "disciples" is supplied in English to clarify the plural Greek pronoun and verb. Peter is not the only one Jesus is addressing here.

2 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "Not all of you are."

4 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "he reclined at the table." The phrase reflects the normal 1st century Near Eastern practice of eating a meal in a semi-reclining position.

7 tn Grk "Do you know."

8 tn Or "rightly."

9 tn Grk "and I am these things."

10 sn I have given you an example. Jesus tells his disciples after he has finished washing their feet that what he has done is to set an example for them. In the previous verse he told them they were to wash one another's feet. What is the point of the example? If it is simply an act of humble service, as most interpret the significance, then Jesus is really telling his disciples to serve one another in humility rather than seeking preeminence over one another. If, however, the example is one of self-sacrifice up to the point of death, then Jesus is telling them to lay down their lives for one another (cf. 15:13).

11 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

12 tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

13 tn Or "nor is the apostle" ("apostle" means "one who is sent" in Greek).

14 tn Grk "If you know."

15 tn Grk "But so that the scripture may be fulfilled."

16 tn Or "The one who shares my food."

17 tn Or "has become my enemy"; Grk "has lifted up his heel against me." The phrase "to lift up one's heel against someone" reads literally in the Hebrew of Ps 41 "has made his heel great against me." There have been numerous interpretations of this phrase, but most likely it is an idiom meaning "has given me a great fall," "has taken cruel advantage of me," or "has walked out on me." Whatever the exact meaning of the idiom, it clearly speaks of betrayal by a close associate. See E. F. F. Bishop, "'He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me' – Jn xiii.18 (Ps xli.9)," ExpTim 70 (1958-59): 331-33.

sn A quotation from Ps 41:9.

18 tn Or (perhaps) "I am certainly telling you this." According to BDF §12.3 ἀπ᾽ ἄρτι (ap᾽ arti) should be read as ἀπαρτί (aparti), meaning "exactly, certainly."

19 tn Grk "so that you may believe."

20 tn Grk "that I am." R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:555) argues for a nonpredicated ἐγώ εἰμι (egō eimi) here, but this is far from certain.

21 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

22 tn Or "receives," and so throughout this verse.

23 sn The one who sent me refers to God.

24 tn Or "greatly troubled."

25 tn Grk "and testified and said."

26 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

27 tn Or "will hand me over."

28 tn Grk "uncertain," "at a loss." Here two terms, "worried and perplexed," were used to convey the single idea of the Greek verb ἀπορέω (aporeō).

29 sn Here for the first time the one Jesus loved, the "beloved disciple," is introduced. This individual also is mentioned in 19:26, 20:2, 21:7, and 21:20. Some have suggested that this disciple is to be identified with Lazarus, since the Fourth Gospel specifically states that Jesus loved him (11:3, 5, 36). From the terminology alone this is a possibility; the author is certainly capable of using language in this way to indicate connections. But there is nothing else to indicate that Lazarus was present at the last supper; Mark 14:17 seems to indicate it was only the twelve who were with Jesus at this time, and there is no indication in the Fourth Gospel to the contrary. Nor does it appear that Lazarus ever stood so close to Jesus as the later references in chaps. 19, 20 and 21 seem to indicate. When this is coupled with the omission of all references to John son of Zebedee from the Fourth Gospel, it seems far more likely that the references to the beloved disciple should be understood as references to him.

30 tn Grk "was reclining." This reflects the normal 1st century practice of eating a meal in a semi-reclining position.

31 tn Grk "was reclining in the bosom (or "lap") of Jesus" (according to both L&N 17.25 and BDAG 65 s.v. ἀνάκειμαι 2 an idiom for taking the place of honor at a meal, but note the similar expression in John 1:18). Whether this position or the position to the left of Jesus should be regarded as the position of second highest honor (next to the host, in this case Jesus, who was in the position of highest honor) is debated. F. Prat, "Les places d'honneur chez les Juifs contemporains du Christ" (RSR 15 [1925]: 512-22), who argued that the table arrangement was that of the Roman triclinium (a U-shaped table with Jesus and two other disciples at the bottom of the U), considered the position to the left of Jesus to be the one of second highest honor. Thus the present translation renders this "a place of honor" without specifying which one (since both of the two disciples to the right and to the left of Jesus would be in positions of honor). Other translations differ as to how they handle the phrase ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ (en tō kolpō tou Iēsou; "leaning on Jesus' bosom," KJV; "lying close to the breast of Jesus," RSV; "reclining on Jesus' breast," NASB; "reclining next to him," NIV, NRSV) but the symbolic significance of the beloved disciple's position seems clear. He is close to Jesus and in an honored position. The phrase as an idiom for a place of honor at a feast is attested in the *Epistle*s of Pliny (the Younger) 4.22.4, an approximate

13:24 So Simon Peter[1] gestured to this disciple[2] to ask Jesus[3] who it was he was referring to.[4] 13:25 Then the disciple whom Jesus loved[5] leaned back against Jesus' chest and asked him, "Lord, who is it?" 13:26 Jesus replied,[6] "It is the one to whom I will give this piece of bread[7] after I have dipped it in the dish."[8] Then he dipped the piece of bread in the dish[9] and gave it to Judas Iscariot, Simon's son. 13:27 And after Judas[10] took the piece of bread, Satan entered into him.[11] Jesus said to him,[12] "What you are about to do, do quickly." 13:28 (Now none of those present at the table[13] understood[14] why Jesus[15] said this to Judas.[16] 13:29 Some thought that, because Judas had the money box, Jesus was telling him to buy whatever they needed for the feast,[17] or to give something to the poor.)[18] 13:30 Judas[19] took the piece of bread and went out immediately. (Now it was night.)[20]

The Prediction of Peter's Denial

13:31 When[21] Judas[22] had gone out, Jesus said, "Now the Son of Man is glorified, and God is glorified in him. 13:32 If God is glorified in him,[23] God will also glorify him in himself, and he will glorify him right away.[24] 13:33 Children, I am still with you for a little while. You will look for me,[25] and just as I said to the Jewish religious leaders,[26] 'Where I am going you cannot come,'[27] now I tell you the same.[28]

13:34 "I give you a new commandment – to love[29] one another. Just as I have loved you, you contemporary of Paul.

sn Note that the same expression translated in a place of honor here (Grk "in the bosom of") is used to indicate Jesus' relationship with the Father in 1:18.

1 sn It is not clear where Simon Peter was seated. If he were on Jesus' other side, it is difficult to see why he would not have asked the question himself. It would also have been difficult to beckon to the beloved disciple, on Jesus' right, from such a position. So apparently Peter was seated somewhere else. It is entirely possible that Judas was seated to Jesus' left. Matt 26:25 seems to indicate that Jesus could speak to him without being overheard by the rest of the group. Judas is evidently in a position where Jesus can hand him the morsel of food (13:26).

2 tn Grk "to this one"; the referent (the beloved disciple) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

3 tn Grk "him"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

4 sn That is, who would betray him (v. 21).

5 tn Grk "he"; the referent (the disciple Jesus loved) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

6 tn Grk "Jesus answered."

7 sn The piece of bread was a broken-off piece of bread (not merely a crumb).

8 tn Grk "after I have dipped it." The words "in the dish" are not in the Greek text, but the presence of a bowl or dish is implied.

9 tn The words "in the dish" are not in the Greek text, but the presence of a bowl or dish is implied.

10 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

11 tn Grk "into that one"; the pronoun "he" is more natural English style here.

sn This is the only time in the Fourth Gospel that Satan is mentioned by name. Luke 22:3 uses the same terminology of Satan "entering into" Judas but indicates it happened before the last supper at the time Judas made his deal with the authorities. This is not necessarily irreconcilable with John's account, however, because John 13:2 makes it clear that Judas had already come under satanic influence prior to the meal itself. The statement here is probably meant to indicate that Judas at this point came under the influence of Satan even more completely and finally. It marks the end of a process which, as Luke indicates, had begun earlier.

12 tn Grk "Then Jesus said to him."

13 tn Grk "reclining at the table." The phrase reclining at the table reflects the normal practice in 1st century Near Eastern culture of eating a meal in a semi-reclining position.

14 tn Or "knew."

15 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

16 tn Grk "to him"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

17 tn Grk "telling him, 'Buy whatever we need for the feast.'" The first clause is direct discourse and the second clause indirect discourse. For smoothness of English style, the first clause has been converted to indirect discourse to parallel the second (the meaning is left unchanged).

18 sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

19 tn Grk "That one"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

20 sn Now it was night is a parenthetical note by the author. The comment is more than just a time indicator, however. With the departure of Judas to set in motion the betrayal, arrest, trials, crucifixion, and death of Jesus, daytime is over and night has come (see John 9:5; 11:9-10; 12:35-36). Judas had become one of those who walked by night and stumbled, because the light was not in him (11:10).

21 tn Grk "Then when."

22 tn Grk "he"; the referent (Judas) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

23 tc A number of early MSS (𝔓66 ℵ* B C* D L W al as well as several versional witnesses) do not have the words "If God is glorified in him," while the majority of MSS have the clause (so ²ℵ A C² Θ Ψ *ƒ*¹³ 33 𝔐 lat). Although the MSS that omit the words are significantly better witnesses, the omission may have occurred because of an error of sight due to homoioteleuton (v. 31 ends in ἐν αὐτῷ [en autō, "in him"], as does this clause). Further, the typical step-parallelism found in John is retained if the clause is kept intact (TCGNT 205-6). At the same time, it is difficult to explain how such a wide variety of witnesses would have accidentally deleted this clause, and arguments for intentional deletion are not particularly convincing. NA²⁷ rightly places the words in brackets, indicating doubt as to their authenticity.

24 tn Or "immediately."

25 tn Or "You will seek me."

26 tn Grk "the Jews." In NT usage the term Ἰουδαῖοι (Ioudaioi) may refer to the entire Jewish people, the residents of Jerusalem and surrounding territory, the authorities in Jerusalem, or merely those who were hostile to Jesus. (For further information see R. G. Bratcher, "'The Jews' in the Gospel of John," BT 26 [1975]: 401-9.) Here the phrase refers to the residents of Jerusalem in general, or to the Jewish religious leaders in particular, who had sent servants to attempt to arrest Jesus on that occasion (John 7:33-35). The last option is the one adopted in the translation above.

27 sn See John 7:33-34.

28 tn The words "the same" are not in the Greek text but are implied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

29 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause gives the content of the commandment. This is indicated by a dash in the translation.

also are to love one another.[1] 13:35 Everyone[2] will know by this that you are my disciples – if you have love for one another."

13:36 Simon Peter said to him, "Lord, where are you going?" Jesus replied,[3] "Where I am going, you cannot follow me now, but you will follow later." 13:37 Peter said to him, "Lord, why can't I follow you now? I will lay down my life for you!"[4] 13:38 Jesus answered, "Will you lay down your life for me?[5] I tell you the solemn truth,[6] the rooster will not crow until you have denied me three times!

Jesus' Parting Words to His Disciples

14:1 "Do not let your hearts be distressed.[7] You believe in God;[8] believe also in me. 14:2 There are many dwelling places[9] in my Father's house.[10] Otherwise, I would have told you, because[11] I am going away to make

[1] sn The idea that love is a commandment is interesting. In the OT the ten commandments have a setting in the covenant between God and Israel at Sinai; they were the stipulations that Israel had to observe if the nation were to be God's chosen people. In speaking of love as the new commandment for those whom Jesus had chosen as his own (John 13:1, 15:16) and as a mark by which they could be distinguished from others (13:35), John shows that he is thinking of this scene in covenant terminology. But note that the disciples are to love "Just as I have loved you" (13:34). The love Jesus has for his followers cannot be duplicated by them in one sense, because it effects their salvation, since he lays down his life for them: It is an act of love that gives life to people. But in another sense, they can follow his example (recall to the end, 13:1; also 1 John 3:16, 4:16 and the interpretation of Jesus' washing of the disciples' feet). In this way Jesus' disciples are to love one another: They are to follow his example of sacrificial service to one another, to death if necessary.

[2] tn Grk "All people," although many modern translations have rendered πάντες (pantes) as "all men" (ASV, RSV, NASB, NIV). While the gender of the pronoun is masculine, it is collective and includes people of both genders.

[3] tn Grk "Jesus answered him."

[4] tn Or "I will die willingly for you."

[5] tn Or "Will you die willingly for me?"

[6] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[7] sn The same verb is used to describe Jesus' own state in John 11:33, 12:27, and 13:21. Jesus is looking ahead to the events of the evening and the next day, his arrest, trials, crucifixion, and death, which will cause his disciples extreme emotional distress.

[8] tn Or "Believe in God." The translation of the two uses of πιστεύετε (pisteuete) is difficult. Both may be either indicative or imperative, and as L. Morris points out (John [NICNT], 637), this results in a bewildering variety of possibilities. To complicate matters further, the first may be understood as a question: "Do you believe in God? Believe also in me." Morris argues against the KJV translation which renders the first πιστεύετε as indicative and the second as imperative on the grounds that for the writer of the Fourth Gospel, faith in Jesus is inseparable from faith in God. But this is precisely the point that Jesus is addressing in context. He is about to undergo rejection by his own people as their Messiah. The disciples' faith in him as Messiah and Lord would be cast into extreme doubt by these events, which the author makes clear were not at this time foreseen by the disciples. After the resurrection it is this identification between Jesus and the Father which needs to be reaffirmed (cf. John 20:24-29). Thus it seems best to take the first πιστεύετε as indicative and the second as imperative, producing the translation "You believe in God; believe also in me."

[9] tn Many interpreters have associated μοναί (monai) with an Aramaic word that can refer to a stopping place or resting place for a traveler on a journey. This is similar to one of the meanings the word can have in secular Greek (Pausanius 10.31.7). Origen understood the use here to refer to stations on the road to God. This may well have been the understanding of the Latin translators who translated μονή (monē) by mansio, a stopping place. The English translation "mansions" can be traced back to Tyndale, but in Middle English the word simply meant "a dwelling place" (not necessarily large or imposing) with no connotation of being temporary. The interpretation put forward by Origen would have been well suited to Gnosticism, where the soul in its ascent passes through stages during which it is gradually purified of all that is material and therefore evil. It is much more likely that the word μονή should be related to its cognate verb μένω (menō), which is frequently used in the Fourth Gospel to refer to the permanence of relationship between Jesus and the Father and/or Jesus and the believer. Thus the idea of a permanent dwelling place, rather than a temporary stopping place, would be in view. Luther's translation of μοναί by Wohnungen is very accurate here, as it has the connotation of a permanent residence.

[10] sn Most interpreters have understood the reference to my Father's house as a reference to heaven, and the dwelling places (μονή, monē) as the permanent residences of believers there. This seems consistent with the vocabulary and the context, where in v. 3 Jesus speaks of coming again to take the disciples to himself. However, the phrase in my Father's house was used previously in the Fourth Gospel in 2:16 to refer to the temple in Jerusalem. The author in 2:19-22 then reinterpreted the temple as Jesus' body, which was to be destroyed in death and then rebuilt in resurrection after three days. Even more suggestive is the statement by Jesus in 8:35, "Now the slave does not remain (μένω, menō) in the household forever, but the son remains (μένω) forever." If in the imagery of the Fourth Gospel the phrase in my Father's house is ultimately a reference to Jesus' body, the relationship of μονή to μένω suggests the permanent relationship of the believer to Jesus and the Father as an adopted son who remains in the household forever. In this case the "dwelling place" is "in" Jesus himself, where he is, whether in heaven or on earth. The statement in v. 3, "I will come again and receive you to myself," then refers not just to the parousia, but also to Jesus' postresurrection return to the disciples in his glorified state, when by virtue of his death on their behalf they may enter into union with him and with the Father as adopted sons. Needless to say, this bears numerous similarities to Pauline theology, especially the concepts of adoption as sons and being "in Christ" which are prominent in passages like Eph 1. It is also important to note, however, the emphasis in the Fourth Gospel itself on the present reality of eternal life (John 5:24, 7:38-39, etc.) and the possibility of worshiping the Father "in the Spirit and in truth" (John 4:21-24) in the present age. There is a sense in which it is possible to say that the future reality is present now. See further J. McCaffrey, The House With Many Rooms (AnBib 114).

[11] tc A number of important MSS (𝔓66c ℵ A B C* D K L W Ψ f^{13} 33 565 579 892 al lat) have ὅτι (hoti) here, while the majority lack it (𝔓66* C²Θ 𝔐). Should the ὅτι be included or omitted? The external evidence is significantly stronger for the longer reading. Most Alexandrian and Western MSS favor inclusion (it is a little unusual for the Alexandrian to favor the longer reading), while most Byzantine MSS favor omission (again, a little unusual). However, the reading of 𝔓66*, which aligns with the Byzantine, needs to be given some value. At the same time, the scribe of this papyrus was known for freely omitting and adding words, and the fact that the MS was corrected discounts its testimony here. But because the shorter reading is out of character for the Byzantine text, the shorter reading (omitting the ὅτι) may well be authentic. Internally, the question comes down to whether the shorter reading is more difficult or not. And here, it loses the battle, for it seems to be a clarifying omission (so TCGNT 206). R. E. Brown is certainly right when he states: "all in all, the translation without ὅτι makes the best sense" (John [AB], 2:620). But this tacitly argues for the authenticity of the word. Thus, on both external and internal grounds, the ὅτι should be regarded as authentic.

tn If the ὅτι (hoti) is included (see tc above), there are no ready[1] a place for you.[2] 14:3 And if I go and make ready[3] a place for you, I will come again and take you[4] to be with me,[5] so that where I am you may be too. 14:4 And you know the way where I am going."[6]

14:5 Thomas said,[7] "Lord, we don't know where you are going. How can we know the way?" 14:6 Jesus replied,[8] "I am the way, and the truth, and the life.[9] No one comes to the Father except through me. 14:7 If you have known me, you will know my Father too.[10] And from now on you do know him and have seen him."

14:8 Philip said,[11] "Lord, show us the Father, and we will be content."[12] 14:9 Jesus replied,[13] "Have I been with you for so long, and you have not known[14] me, Philip? The person who has seen me has seen the Father! How can you say, 'Show us the Father'? 14:10 Do you not believe that I am in the Father, and the Father is in me?[15] less than four possible translations for this sentence: The sentence could be either a question or a statement, and in addition the ὅτι could either indicate content or be causal. How does one determine the best translation? (1) A question here should probably be ruled out because it would imply a previous statement by Jesus that either there are many dwelling places in his Father's house (if the ὅτι is causal) or he was going off to make a place ready for them (if the ὅτι indicates content). There is no indication anywhere in the Fourth Gospel that Jesus had made such statements prior to this time. So understanding the sentence as a statement is the best option. (2) A statement with ὅτι indicating content is understandable but contradictory. If there were no dwelling places, Jesus would have told them that he was going off to make dwelling places. But the following verse makes clear that Jesus' departure is not hypothetical but real – he is really going away. So understanding the ὅτι with a causal nuance is the best option. (3) A statement with a causal ὅτι can be understood two ways: (a) "Otherwise I would have told you" is a parenthetical statement, and the ὅτι clause goes with the preceding "There are many dwelling places in my Father's house." This would be fairly awkward syntactically, however; it would be much more natural for the ὅτι clause to modify what directly preceded it. (b) "Otherwise I would have told you" is explained by Jesus' statement that he is going to make ready a place. He makes a logical, necessary connection between his future departure and the reality of the dwelling places in his Father's house. To sum up, all the possibilities for understanding the verse with the inclusion of ὅτι present some interpretive difficulties, but last option given seems best: "Otherwise, I would have told you, because I am going to make ready a place." Of all the options it provides the best logical flow of thought in the passage without making any apparent contradictions in the context.

1 tn Or "to prepare."

2 tn Or "If not, would I have told you that I am going to prepare a place for you?" What is the meaning of the last clause with or without the ὅτι? One of the questions that must be answered here is whether or not τόπος (topos) is to be equated with μονή (monē). In Rev 12:8 τόπος is used to refer to a place in heaven, which would suggest that the two are essentially equal here. Jesus is going ahead of believers to prepare a place for them, a permanent dwelling place in the Father's house (see the note on this phrase in v. 2).

3 tn Or "prepare."

4 tn Or "bring you."

5 tn Grk "to myself."

6 tc Most mss (𝔓66* A C3 D Θ Ψ *f*1,13 𝔐 lat sy sa) read "You know where I am going, and you know the way" (καὶ ὅπου [ἐγὼ] ὑπάγω οἴδατε καὶ τὴν ὁδὸν οἴδατε, kai hopou egō hupagō oidate kai tēn hodon oidate). The difference between this reading and the wording in NA27 (supported by 𝔓66c ℵ B C* L Q W 33 579 pc) is the addition of καί before τὴν ὁδόν and οἴδατε after. Either assertion on the part of Jesus would be understandable: "you know the way where I am going" or "you know where I am going and you know the way," although the shorter reading is a bit more awkward syntactically. In light of this, and in light of the expansion already at hand in v. 5, the longer reading appears to be a motivated reading. The shorter reading is thus preferred because of its superior external and internal evidence.

sn Where I am going. Jesus had spoken of his destination previously to the disciples, most recently in John 13:33. Where he was going was back to the Father, and they could not follow him there, but later he would return for them and they could join him then. The way he was going was via the cross. This he had also mentioned previously (e.g., 12:32) although his disciples did not understand at the time (cf. 12:33). As Jesus would explain in v. 6, although for him the way back to the Father was via the cross, for his disciples the "way" to where he was going was Jesus himself.

7 tn Grk "said to him."

8 tn Grk "Jesus said to him."

9 tn Or "I am the way, even the truth and the life."

10 tc There is a difficult textual problem here: The statement reads either "If you have known (ἐγνώκατε, egnōkate) me, you will know (γνώσεσθε, gnōsesthe) my Father" or "If you had really known (ἐγνώκειτε, egnōkeite) me, you would have known (ἐγνώκειτε ἄν or ἂν ἤδειτε [egnōkeite an or an ēdeite]) my Father." The division of the external evidence is difficult, but can be laid out as follows: The mss that have the perfect ἐγνώκατε in the protasis (𝔓66 [ℵ D* W] 579 pc it) also have, for the most part, the future indicative γνώσεσθε in the apodosis (𝔓66 ℵ D W [579] pc sa bo), rendering Jesus' statement as a first-class condition. The mss that have the pluperfect ἐγνώκειτε in the protasis (A B C D1 L Θ Ψ *f*1,13 33 𝔐) also have, for the most part, a pluperfect in the apodosis (either ἂν ἤδειτε in B C* [L] Q Ψ 1 33 565 al, or ἐγνώκειτε ἄν in A C3 Θ *f*13 𝔐), rendering Jesus' statement a contrary-to-fact second-class condition. The external evidence slightly favors the first-class condition, since there is an Alexandrian-Western alliance supported by 𝔓66. As well, the fact that the readings with a second-class condition utilize two different verbs with ἄν in different positions suggests that these readings are secondary. However, it could be argued that the second-class conditions are harder readings in that they speak negatively of the apostles (so K. Aland in TCGNT 207); in this case, the ἐγνώκειτε...ἐγνώκειτε ἄν reading should be given preference. Although a decision is difficult, the first-class condition is to be slightly preferred. In this case Jesus promises the disciples that, assuming they have known him, they will know the Father. Contextually this fits better with the following phrase (v. 7b) which asserts that "from the present time you know him and have seen him" (cf. John 1:18).

11 tn Grk "said to him."

12 tn Or "and that is enough for us."

13 tn Grk "Jesus said to him."

14 tn Or "recognized."

15 tn The mutual interrelationship of the Father and the Son (ἐγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ἐν ἐμοί ἐστιν, egō en tō patri kai ho patēr en emoi estin) is something that Jesus expected even his opponents to recognize (cf. John 10:38). The question Jesus asks of Philip (οὐ πιστεύεις, ou pisteueis) expects the answer "yes." Note that the following statement is addressed to all the disciples, however, because the plural pronoun (ὑμῖν, humin) is used. Jesus says that his teaching (the words he spoke to them all) did not originate from himself, but the Father, who permanently remains (μένων, menōn) in relationship with Jesus, performs his works. One would have expected "speaks his words" here rather than "performs his works"; many of the church fathers (e.g., Augustine and Chrysostom) identified the two by saying that Jesus' words were works. But there is an implicit contrast in the next verse between words and works, and v. 12 seems to demand that the works are real works, not just words. It is probably best to see the two terms as related but not identical; there is a progression in the idea here. Both Jesus' words (recall the Samaritans' response in John 4:42) and Jesus' works are revelatory of who he is, but as the next verse indi-

The words that I say to you, I do not speak on my own initiative,[1] but the Father residing in me performs[2] his miraculous deeds.[3] 14:11 Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father is in me, but if you do not believe me,[4] believe because of the miraculous deeds[5] themselves. 14:12 I tell you the solemn truth,[6] the person who believes in me will perform[7] the miraculous deeds[8] that I am doing,[9] and will perform[10] greater deeds[11] than these, because I am going to the Father. 14:13 And I will do whatever you ask in my name,[12] so that the Father may be glorified[13] in the Son. 14:14 If you ask me anything in my name, I will do it.

Teaching on the Holy Spirit

14:15 "If you love me, you will obey[14] my commandments.[15] 14:16 Then[16] I will ask the Father, and he will give you another Advocate[17] to be with you forever – 14:17 the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot accept,[18] because it does not see him or know him. But you know him, because he resides[19] with you and will be[20] in you.

14:18 "I will not abandon[21] you as orphans,[22] I will come to you.[23] 14:19 In a little cates, works have greater confirmatory power than words.

1 tn Grk "I do not speak from myself."

2 tn Or "does."

3 tn Or "his mighty acts"; Grk "his works."

sn Miraculous deeds is most likely a reference to the miraculous signs Jesus had performed, which he viewed as a manifestation of the mighty acts of God. Those he performed in the presence of the disciples served as a basis for faith (although a secondary basis to their personal relationship to him; see the following verse).

4 tn The phrase "but if you do not believe me" contains an ellipsis; the Greek text reads Grk "but if not." The ellipsis has been filled out ("but if [you do] not [believe me]...") for the benefit of the modern English reader.

5 tn Grk "because of the works."

sn In the context of a proof or basis for belief, Jesus is referring to the miraculous deeds (signs) he has performed in the presence of the disciples.

6 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

7 tn Or "will do."

8 tn Grk "the works."

9 tn Or "that I do."

sn See the note on miraculous deeds in v. 11.

10 tn Or "will do."

11 tn Grk "greater works."

sn What are the greater deeds that Jesus speaks of, and how is this related to his going to the Father? It is clear from both John 7:39 and 16:7 that the Holy Spirit will not come until Jesus has departed. After Pentecost and the coming of the Spirit to indwell believers in a permanent relationship, believers would be empowered to perform even greater deeds than those Jesus did during his earthly ministry. When the early chapters of Acts are examined, it is clear that, from a numerical standpoint, the deeds of Peter and the other Apostles surpassed those of Jesus in a single day (the day of Pentecost). On that day more were added to the church than had become followers of Jesus during the entire three years of his earthly ministry. And the message went forth not just in Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, but to the farthest parts of the known world. This understanding of what Jesus meant by "greater deeds" is more probable than a reference to "more spectacular miracles." Certainly miraculous deeds were performed by the apostles as recounted in Acts, but these do not appear to have surpassed the works of Jesus himself in either degree or number.

12 tn Grk "And whatever you ask in my name, I will do it."

13 tn Or "may be praised" or "may be honored."

14 tn Or "will keep."

15 sn Jesus' statement If you love me, you will obey my commandments provides the transition between the promises of answered prayer which Jesus makes to his disciples in vv. 13-14 and the promise of the Holy Spirit which is introduced in v. 16. Obedience is the proof of genuine love.

16 tn Here καί (kai) has been translated as "Then" to reflect the implied sequence in the discourse.

17 tn Or "Helper" or "Counselor"; Grk "Paraclete," from the Greek word παράκλητος (paraklētos). Finding an appropriate English translation for παράκλητος is a very difficult task. No single English word has exactly the same range of meaning as the Greek word. "Comforter," used by some of the older English versions, appears to be as old as Wycliffe. But today it suggests a quilt or a sympathetic mourner at a funeral. "Counselor" is adequate, but too broad, in contexts like "marriage counselor" or "camp counselor." "Helper" or "Assistant" could also be used, but could suggest a subordinate rank. "Advocate," the word chosen for this translation, has more forensic overtones than the Greek word does, although in John 16:5-11 a forensic context is certainly present. Because an "advocate" is someone who "advocates" or supports a position or viewpoint and since this is what the Paraclete will do for the preaching of the disciples, it was selected in spite of the drawbacks.

18 tn Or "cannot receive."

19 tn Or "he remains."

20 tc Some early and important witnesses (𝔓66* B D* W 1 565 it) have ἐστιν (estin, "he is") instead of ἔσται (estai, "he will be") here, while other weighty witnesses ({𝔓66c,75vid ℵ A D1 L Θ Ψ *f*13 33vid 𝔐 as well as several versions and fathers}), read the future tense. When one considers transcriptional evidence, ἐστιν is the more difficult reading and better explains the rise of the future tense reading, but it must be noted that both 𝔓66 and D were corrected from the present tense to the future. If ἐστιν were the original reading, one would expect a few manuscripts to be corrected to read the present when they originally read the future, but that is not the case. When one considers what the author would have written, the future is on much stronger ground. The immediate context (both in 14:16 and in the chapter as a whole) points to the future, and the theology of the book regards the advent of the Spirit as a decidedly future event (see, e.g., 7:39 and 16:7). The present tense could have arisen from an error of sight on the part of some scribes or more likely from an error of thought as scribes reflected upon the present role of the Spirit. Although a decision is difficult, the future tense is most likely authentic. For further discussion on this textual problem, see James M. Hamilton, Jr., "He Is with You and He Will Be in You" (Ph. D. diss., The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 2003), 213-20.

21 tn Or "leave."

22 tn The entire phrase "abandon you as orphans" could be understood as an idiom meaning, "leave you helpless."

23 sn I will come to you. Jesus had spoken in 14:3 of going away and coming again to his disciples. There the reference was both to the parousia (the second coming of Christ) and to the postresurrection appearances of Jesus to the disciples. Here the postresurrection appearances are primarily in view, since Jesus speaks of the disciples "seeing" him after the world can "see" him no longer in the following verse. But many commentators have taken v. 18 as a reference to the coming of the Spirit, since this has been the topic of the pre-while[1] the world will not see me any longer, but you will see me; because I live, you will live too. 14:20 You will know at that time[2] that I am in my Father and you are in me and I am in you. 14:21 The person who has my commandments and obeys[3] them is the one who loves me.[4] The one[5] who loves me will be loved by my Father, and I will love him and will reveal[6] myself to him."

14:22 "Lord," Judas (not Judas Iscariot)[7] said,[8] "what has happened that you are going to reveal[9] yourself to us and not to the world?" 14:23 Jesus replied,[10] "If anyone loves me, he will obey[11] my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come to him and take up residence with him.[12] 14:24 The person who does not love me does not obey[13] my words. And the word[14] you hear is not mine, but the Father's who sent me.

14:25 "I have spoken these things while staying[15] with you. 14:26 But the Advocate,[16] the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, will teach you[17] everything,[18] and will cause you to remember everything[19] I said to you.

14:27 "Peace I leave with you;[20] my peace I give to you; I do not give it[21] to you as the world does.[22] Do not let your hearts be distressed or lacking in courage.[23] 14:28 You heard me say to you,[24] 'I am going away and I am coming back to you.' If you loved me, you would be glad[25] that I am going to the Father, because the Father is greater than I am.[26] 14:29 I have told you now before it happens, so that when it happens you may believe.[27] 14:30 I will not speak with you much longer,[28] for the ruler of this world is coming.[29] He has no power over me,[30] 14:31 but I am doing just what the Father commanded me, so that the world may know[31] that I love the ceding verses. Still, vv. 19-20 appear to contain references to Jesus' appearances to the disciples after his resurrection. It may well be that another Johannine double meaning is found here, so that Jesus 'returns' to his disciples in one sense in his appearances to them after his resurrection, but in another sense he 'returns' in the person of the Holy Spirit to indwell them.

[1] tn Grk "Yet a little while, and."

[2] tn Grk "will know in that day."

sn At that time could be a reference to the parousia (second coming of Christ). But the statement in 14:19, that the world will not see Jesus, does not fit. It is better to take this as the postresurrection appearances of Jesus to his disciples (which has the advantage of taking in a little while in v. 19 literally).

[3] tn Or "keeps."

[4] tn Grk "obeys them, that one is the one who loves me."

[5] tn Grk "And the one." Here the conjunction καί (kai) has not been translated to improve the English style.

[6] tn Or "will disclose."

[7] tn Grk "(not Iscariot)." The proper noun (Judas) has been repeated for clarity and smoothness in English style.

sn This is a parenthetical comment by the author.

[8] tn Grk "said to him."

[9] tn Or "disclose."

sn The disciples still expected at this point that Jesus, as Messiah, was going to reveal his identity as such to the world (cf. 7:4).

[10] tn Grk "answered and said to him."

[11] tn Or "will keep."

[12] tn Grk "we will come to him and will make our dwelling place with him." The context here is individual rather than corporate indwelling, so the masculine singular pronoun has been retained throughout v. 23. It is important to note, however, that the pronoun is used generically here and refers equally to men, women, and children.

[13] tn Or "does not keep."

[14] tn Or "the message."

[15] tn Or "while remaining" or "while residing."

[16] tn Or "Helper" or "Counselor"; Grk "Paraclete," from the Greek word παράκλητος (paraklētos). See the note on the word "Advocate" in v. 16 for a discussion of how this word is translated.

[17] tn Grk "that one will teach you." The words "that one" have been omitted from the translation since they are redundant in English.

[18] tn Grk "all things."

[19] tn Grk "all things."

[20] sn Peace I leave with you. In spite of appearances, this verse does not introduce a new subject (peace). Jesus will use the phrase as a greeting to his disciples after his resurrection (20:19, 21, 26). It is here a reflection of the Hebrew shalom as a farewell. But Jesus says he leaves peace with his disciples. This should probably be understood ultimately in terms of the indwelling of the Paraclete, the Holy Spirit, who has been the topic of the preceding verses. It is his presence, after Jesus has left the disciples and finally returned to the Father, which will remain with them and comfort them.

[21] tn The pronoun "it" is not in the Greek text, but has been supplied. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

[22] tn Grk "not as the world gives do I give to you."

[23] tn Or "distressed or fearful and cowardly."

[24] tn Or "You have heard that I said to you."

[25] tn Or "you would rejoice."

[26] sn Jesus' statement the Father is greater than I am has caused much christological and trinitarian debate. Although the Arians appealed to this text to justify their subordinationist Christology, it seems evident that by the fact Jesus compares himself to the Father, his divine nature is taken for granted. There have been two orthodox interpretations: (1) The Son is eternally generated while the Father is not: Origen, Tertullian, Athanasius, Hilary, etc. (2) As man the incarnate Son was less than the Father: Cyril of Alexandria, Ambrose, Augustine. In the context of the Fourth Gospel the second explanation seems more plausible. But why should the disciples have rejoiced? Because Jesus was on the way to the Father who would glorify him (cf. 17:4-5); his departure now signifies that the work the Father has given him is completed (cf. 19:30). Now Jesus will be glorified with that glory that he had with the Father before the world was (cf. 17:5). This should be a cause of rejoicing to the disciples because when Jesus is glorified he will glorify his disciples as well (17:22).

[27] sn Jesus tells the disciples that he has told them all these things before they happen, so that when they do happen the disciples may believe. This does not mean they had not believed prior to this time; over and over the author has affirmed that they have (cf. 2:11). But when they see these things happen, their level of trust in Jesus will increase and their concept of who he is will expand. The confession of Thomas in 20:28 is representative of this increased understanding of who Jesus is. Cf. John 13:19.

[28] tn Grk "I will no longer speak many things with you."

[29] sn The ruler of this world is a reference to Satan.

[30] tn Grk "in me he has nothing."

[31] tn Or "may learn."

Father.[1] Get up, let us go from here."[2]

The Vine and the Branches

15:1 "I am the true vine[3] and my Father is the gardener.[4] 15:2 He takes away[5] every branch that does not bear[6] fruit in me. He[7] prunes[8] every branch that bears[9] fruit so that it will bear more fruit. 15:3 You are clean already[10] because of the [1] tn Grk "But so that the world may know that I love the Father, and just as the Father commanded me, thus I do." The order of the clauses has been rearranged in the translation to conform to contemporary English style.

[2] sn Some have understood Jesus' statement Get up, let us go from here to mean that at this point Jesus and the disciples got up and left the room where the meal was served and began the journey to the garden of Gethsemane. If so, the rest of the Farewell Discourse took place en route. Others have pointed to this statement as one of the "seams" in the discourse, indicating that the author used preexisting sources. Both explanations are possible, but not really necessary. Jesus could simply have stood up at this point (the disciples may or may not have stood with him) to finish the discourse before finally departing (in 18:1). In any case it may be argued that Jesus refers not to a literal departure at this point, but to preparing to meet the enemy who is on the way already in the person of Judas and the soldiers with him.

[3] sn I am the true vine. There are numerous OT passages which refer to Israel as a vine: Ps 80:8-16, Isa 5:1-7, Jer 2:21, Ezek 15:1-8, 17:5-10, 19:10-14, and Hos 10:1. The vine became symbolic of Israel, and even appeared on some coins issued by the Maccabees. The OT passages which use this symbol appear to regard Israel as faithless to Yahweh (typically rendered as "LORD" in the OT) and/or the object of severe punishment. Ezek 15:1-8 in particular talks about the worthlessness of wood from a vine (in relation to disobedient Judah). A branch cut from a vine is worthless except to be burned as fuel. This fits more with the statements about the disciples (John 15:6) than with Jesus' description of himself as the vine. Ezek 17:5-10 contains vine imagery which refers to a king of the house of David, Zedekiah, who was set up as king in Judah by Nebuchadnezzar. Zedekiah allied himself to Egypt and broke his covenant with Nebuchadnezzar (and therefore also with God), which would ultimately result in his downfall (17:20-21). Ezek 17:22-24 then describes the planting of a cedar sprig which grows into a lofty tree, a figurative description of Messiah. But it is significant that Messiah himself is not described in Ezek 17 as a vine, but as a cedar tree. The vine imagery here applies to Zedekiah's disobedience. Jesus' description of himself as the true vine in John 15:1 ff. is to be seen against this background, but it differs significantly from the imagery surveyed above. It represents new imagery which differs significantly from OT concepts; it appears to be original with Jesus. The imagery of the vine underscores the importance of fruitfulness in the Christian life and the truth that this results not from human achievement, but from one's position in Christ. Jesus is not just giving some comforting advice, but portraying to the disciples the difficult path of faithful service. To some degree the figure is similar to the head-body metaphor used by Paul, with Christ as head and believers as members of the body. Both metaphors bring out the vital and necessary connection which exists between Christ and believers.

[4] tn Or "the farmer."

[5] tn Or "He cuts off."

sn The Greek verb αἴρω (airō) can mean "lift up" as well as "take away," and it is sometimes argued that here it is a reference to the gardener "lifting up" (i.e., propping up) a weak branch so that it bears fruit again. In Johannine usage the word occurs in the sense of "lift up" in 8:59 and 5:8-12, but in the sense of "remove" it is found in 11:39, 11:48, 16:22, and 17:15. In context (theological presuppositions aside for the moment) the meaning "remove" does seem more natural and less forced (particularly in light of v. 6, where worthless branches are described as being "thrown out" – an image that seems incompatible with restoration). One option, therefore, would be to understand the branches which are taken away (v. 2) and thrown out (v. 6) as believers who forfeit their salvation because of unfruitfulness. However, many see this interpretation as encountering problems with the Johannine teaching on the security of the believer, especially John 10:28-29. This leaves two basic ways of understanding Jesus' statements about removal of branches in 15:2 and 15:6: (1) These statements may refer to an unfaithful (disobedient) Christian, who is judged at the judgment seat of Christ "through fire" (cf. 1 Cor 3:11-15). In this case the "removal" of 15:2 may refer (in an extreme case) to the physical death of a disobedient Christian. (2) These statements may refer to someone who was never a genuine believer in the first place (e.g., Judas and the Jews who withdrew after Jesus' difficult teaching in 6:66), in which case 15:6 refers to eternal judgment. In either instance it is clear that 15:6 refers to the fires of judgment (cf. OT imagery in Ps 80:16 and Ezek 15:1-8). But view (1) requires us to understand this in terms of the judgment of believers at the judgment seat of Christ. This concept does not appear in the Fourth Gospel because from the perspective of the author the believer does not come under judgment; note especially 3:18, 5:24, 5:29. The first reference (3:18) is especially important because it occurs in the context of 3:16-21, the section which is key to the framework of the entire Fourth Gospel and which is repeatedly alluded to throughout. A similar image to this one is used by John the Baptist in Matt 3:10, "And the ax is already laid at the root of the trees; every tree therefore that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire." Since this is addressed to the Pharisees and Sadducees who were coming to John for baptism, it almost certainly represents a call to initial repentance. More importantly, however, the imagery of being cast into the fire constitutes a reference to eternal judgment, a use of imagery which is much nearer to the Johannine imagery in 15:6 than the Pauline concept of the judgment seat of Christ (a judgment for believers) mentioned above. The use of the Greek verb μένω (menō) in 15:6 also supports view (2). When used of the relationship between Jesus and the disciple and/or Jesus and the Father, it emphasizes the permanence of the relationship (John 6:56, 8:31, 8:35, 14:10). The prototypical branch who has not remained is Judas, who departed in 13:30. He did not bear fruit, and is now in the realm of darkness, a mere tool of Satan. His eternal destiny, being cast into the fire of eternal judgment, is still to come. It seems most likely, therefore, that the branches who do not bear fruit and are taken away and burned are false believers, those who profess to belong to Jesus but who in reality do not belong to him. In the Gospel of John, the primary example of this category is Judas. In 1 John 2:18-19 the "antichrists" fall into the same category; they too may be thought of as branches that did not bear fruit. They departed from the ranks of the Christians because they never did really belong, and their departure shows that they did not belong.

[6] tn Or "does not yield."

[7] tn Grk "And he"; the conjunction καί (kai, "and") has been omitted in the translation in keeping with the tendency in contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[8] tn Or "trims"; Grk "cleanses" (a wordplay with "clean" in v. 3). Καθαίρει (kathairei) is not the word one would have expected here, but it provides the transition from the vine imagery to the disciples – there is a wordplay (not reproducible in English) between αἴρει (airei) and καθαίρει in this verse. While the purpose of the Father in cleansing his people is clear, the precise means by which he does so is not immediately obvious. This will become clearer, however, in the following verse.

[9] tn Or "that yields."

[10] sn The phrase you are clean already occurs elsewhere in the Gospel of John only at the washing of the disciples' feet in 13:10, where Jesus had used it of the disciples being cleansed from sin. This further confirms the proposed understanding of John 15:2 and 15:6 since Judas was specifically excluded from this statement (but not all of you).

word that I have spoken to you. 15:4 Remain[1] in me, and I will remain in you.[2] Just as the branch cannot bear fruit by itself,[3] unless it remains[4] in[5] the vine, so neither can you unless you remain[6] in me.

15:5 "I am the vine; you are the branches. The one who remains[7] in me – and I in him – bears[8] much fruit,[9] because apart from me you can accomplish[10] nothing. 15:6 If anyone does not remain[11] in me, he is thrown out like a branch, and dries up; and such branches are gathered up and thrown into the fire,[12] and are burned up.[13] 15:7 If you remain[14] in me and my words remain[15] in you, ask whatever you want, and it will be done for you.[16] 15:8 My Father is honored[17] by this, that[18] you bear[19] much fruit and show that you are[20] my disciples.

15:9 "Just as the Father has loved me, I have also loved you; remain[21] in my love. 15:10 If you obey[22] my commandments, you will remain[23] in my love, just as I have obeyed[24] my Father's commandments and remain[25] in his love. 15:11 I have told you these things[26] so that my joy may be in you, and your joy may be complete. 15:12 My commandment is this – to love one another just as I have loved you.[27] 15:13 No one has

---

1 tn Or "Reside."

2 tn Grk "and I in you." The verb has been repeated for clarity and to conform to contemporary English style, which typically allows fewer ellipses (omitted or understood words) than Greek.

3 sn The branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it remains connected to the vine, from which its life and sustenance flows. As far as the disciples were concerned, they would produce no fruit from themselves if they did not remain in their relationship to Jesus, because the eternal life which a disciple must possess in order to bear fruit originates with Jesus; he is the source of all life and productivity for the disciple.

4 tn Or "resides."

5 tn While it would be more natural to say "on the vine" (so NAB), the English preposition "in" has been retained here to emphasize the parallelism with the following clause "unless you remain in me." To speak of remaining "in" a person is not natural English either, but is nevertheless a biblical concept (cf. "in Christ" in Eph 1:3, 4, 6, 7, 11).

6 tn Or "you reside."

7 tn Or "resides."

8 tn Or "yields."

9 tn Grk "in him, this one bears much fruit." The pronoun "this one" has been omitted from the translation because it is redundant according to contemporary English style.

sn Many interpret the imagery of fruit here and in 15:2, 4 in terms of good deeds or character qualities, relating it to passages elsewhere in the NT like Matt 3:8 and 7:20, Rom 6:22, Gal 5:22, etc. This is not necessarily inaccurate, but one must remember that for John, to have life at all is to bear fruit, while one who does not bear fruit shows that he does not have the life (once again, conduct is the clue to paternity, as in John 8:41; compare also 1 John 4:20).

10 tn Or "do."

11 tn Or "reside."

12 sn Such branches are gathered up and thrown into the fire. The author does not tell who it is who does the gathering and throwing into the fire. Although some claim that realized eschatology is so prevalent in the Fourth Gospel that no references to final eschatology appear at all, the fate of these branches seems to point to the opposite. The imagery is almost certainly that of eschatological judgment, and recalls some of the OT vine imagery which involves divine rejection and judgment of disobedient Israel (Ezek 15:4-6; 19:12).

13 tn Grk "they gather them up and throw them into the fire, and they are burned."

14 tn Or "reside."

15 tn Or "reside."

16 sn Once again Jesus promises the disciples ask whatever you want, and it will be done for you. This recalls 14:13-14, where the disciples were promised that if they asked anything in Jesus' name it would be done for them. The two thoughts are really quite similar, since here it is conditioned on the disciples' remaining in Jesus and his words remaining in them. The first phrase relates to the genuineness of their relationship with Jesus. The second phrase relates to their obedience. When both of these qualifications are met, the disciples would in fact be asking in Jesus' name and therefore according to his will.

17 tn Grk "glorified."

18 tn The ἵνα (hina) clause is best taken as substantival in apposition to ἐν τούτῳ (en toutō) at the beginning of the verse. The Father is glorified when the disciples bring forth abundant fruit. Just as Jesus has done the works which he has seen his Father doing (5:19-29) so also will his disciples.

19 tn Or "yield."

20 tc Most MSS (𝔎 A Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐) read the future indicative γενήσεσθε (genēsesthe; perhaps best rendered as "[and show that] you will become"), while some early and good witnesses ($\mathfrak{P}^{66vid}$ B D L Θ 0250 1 565 al) have the aorist subjunctive γένησθε (genēsthe; "[and show that] you are"). The original reading is difficult to determine because the external evidence is fairly evenly divided. On the basis of the external evidence alone the first reading has some credibility because of 𝔎 and 33, but it is not enough to overthrow the Alexandrian and Western witnesses for the aorist. Some who accept the future indicative see a consecutive (or resultative) sequence between φέρητε (pherēte) in the ἵνα (hina) clause and γενήσεσθε, so that the disciples' bearing much fruit results in their becoming disciples. This alleviates the problem of reading a future indicative within a ἵνα clause (a grammatical solecism that is virtually unattested in Attic Greek), although such infrequently occurs in the NT, particularly in the Apocalypse (cf. Gal 2:4; Rev 3:9; 6:4, 11; 8:3; 9:4, 5, 20; 13:12; 14:13; 22:14; even here, however, the Byzantine MSS, with 𝔎 occasionally by their side, almost always change the future indicative to an aorist subjunctive). It seems more likely, however, that the second verb (regardless of whether it is read as aorist or future) is to be understood as coordinate in meaning with the previous verb φέρητε (So M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek §342). Thus the two actions are really one and the same: Bearing fruit and being Jesus' disciple are not two different actions, but a single action. The first is the outward sign or proof of the second – in bearing fruit the disciples show themselves to be disciples indeed (cf. 15:5). Thus the translation followed here is, "that you bear much fruit and show that you are my disciples." As far as the textual reading is concerned, it appears somewhat preferable to accept the aorist subjunctive reading (γένησθε) on the basis of better external testimony.

21 tn Or "reside."

22 tn Or "keep."

23 tn Or "reside."

24 tn Or "kept."

25 tn Or "reside."

26 tn Grk "These things I have spoken to you."

27 sn Now the reference to the commandments (plural) in 15:10 have been reduced to a singular commandment: The disciples are to love one another, just as Jesus has loved them. This is the "new commandment" of John 13:34, and it is repeated in 15:17. The disciples' love for one another is compared to Jesus' love for them. How has Jesus shown his love for the disciples? This was illustrated in 13:1-20 in the washing of the disciples' feet, introduced by the statement in 13:1 that Jesus loved them "to the end." In context this constitutes a reference to Jesus' self-sacrificial death on the cross on their behalf; the love they are to have for one another is so great that it must include a self-sacrificial willingness to die for one another if necessary. This is exactly what Jesus is discussing here, because he introduces the theme of his sac-greater love than this – that one lays down his life[1] for his friends. 15:14 You are my friends[2] if you do what I command you. 15:15 I no longer call you slaves,[3] because the slave does not understand[4] what his master is doing. But I have called you friends, because I have revealed to you everything[5] I heard[6] from my Father. 15:16 You did not choose me, but I chose you[7] and appointed you to go and bear[8] fruit, fruit that remains,[9] so that whatever you ask the Father in my name he will give you. 15:17 This[10] I command you – to love one another.

The World's Hatred

15:18 "If the world hates you, be aware[11] that it hated me first.[12] 15:19 If you belonged to the world,[13] the world would love you as its own.[14] However, because you do not belong to the world,[15] but I chose you out of the world, for this reason[16] the world hates you.[17] 15:20 Remember what[18] I told you, 'A slave[19] is not greater than his master.'[20] If they persecuted me, they will also persecute you. If they obeyed[21] my word, they will obey[22] yours too. 15:21 But they will do all these things to you on account of[23] my name, because they do not know the one who sent me.[24] 15:22 If I had not come and spoken to rificial death in the following verse. In John 10:18 and 14:31 Jesus spoke of his death on the cross as a commandment he had received from his Father, which also links the idea of commandment and love as they are linked here. One final note: It is not just the degree or intensity of the disciples' love for one another that Jesus is referring to when he introduces by comparison his own death on the cross (that they must love one another enough to die for one another) but the very means of expressing that love: It is to express itself in self-sacrifice for one another, sacrifice up to the point of death, which is what Jesus himself did on the cross (cf. 1 John 3:16).

[1] tn Or "one dies willingly."

[2] sn This verse really explains John 15:10 in another way. Those who keep Jesus' commandments are called his friends, those friends for whom he lays down his life (v. 13). It is possible to understand this verse as referring to a smaller group within Christianity as a whole, perhaps only the apostles who were present when Jesus spoke these words. Some have supported this by comparing it to the small group of associates and advisers to the Roman Emperor who were called "Friends of the Emperor." Others would see these words as addressed only to those Christians who as disciples were obedient to Jesus. In either case the result would be to create a sort of "inner circle" of Christians who are more privileged than mere "believers" or average Christians. In context, it seems clear that Jesus' words must be addressed to all true Christians, not just some narrower category of believers, because Jesus' sacrificial death, which is his act of love toward his friends (v. 13) applies to all Christians equally (cf. John 13:1).

[3] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

[4] tn Or "does not know."

[5] tn Grk "all things."

[6] tn Or "learned."

[7] sn You did not choose me, but I chose you. If the disciples are now elevated in status from slaves to friends, they are friends who have been chosen by Jesus, rather than the opposite way round. Again this is true of all Christians, not just the twelve, and the theme that Christians are "chosen" by God appears frequently in other NT texts (e.g., Rom 8:33; Eph 1:4ff.; Col 3:12; and 1 Pet 2:4). Putting this together with the comments on 15:14 one may ask whether the author sees any special significance at all for the twelve. Jesus said in John 6:70 and 13:18 that he chose them, and 15:27 makes clear that Jesus in the immediate context is addressing those who have been with him from the beginning. In the Fourth Gospel the twelve, as the most intimate and most committed followers of Jesus, are presented as the models for all Christians, both in terms of their election and in terms of their mission.

[8] tn Or "and yield."

[9] sn The purpose for which the disciples were appointed ("commissioned") is to go and bear fruit, fruit that remains. The introduction of the idea of "going" at this point suggests that the fruit is something more than just character qualities in the disciples' own lives, but rather involves fruit in the lives of others, i.e., Christian converts. There is a mission involved (cf. John 4:36). The idea that their fruit is permanent, however, relates back to vv. 7-8, as does the reference to asking the Father in Jesus' name. It appears that as the imagery of the vine and the branches develops, the "fruit" which the branches produce shifts in emphasis from qualities in the disciples' own lives in John 15:2, 4, 5 to the idea of a mission which affects the lives of others in John 15:16. The point of transition would be the reference to fruit in 15:8.

[10] tn Grk "These things."

[11] tn Grk "know."

[12] tn Grk "it hated me before you."

[13] tn Grk "if you were of the world."

[14] tn The words "you as" are not in the original but are supplied for clarity.

[15] tn Grk "because you are not of the world."

[16] tn Or "world, therefore."

[17] sn I chose you out of the world…the world hates you. Two themes are brought together here. In 8:23 Jesus had distinguished himself from the world in addressing his Jewish opponents: "You are from below, I am from above; you are of this world, I am not of this world." In 15:16 Jesus told the disciples "You did not choose me, but I chose you and appointed you." Now Jesus has united these two ideas as he informs the disciples that he has chosen them out of the world. While the disciples will still be "in" the world after Jesus has departed, they will not belong to it, and Jesus prays later in John 17:15-16 to the Father, "I do not ask you to take them out of the world, but to keep them from the evil one. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." The same theme also occurs in 1 John 4:5-6: "They are from the world; therefore they speak as from the world, and the world listens to them. We are from God; he who knows God listens to us; he who is not from God does not listen to us." Thus the basic reason why the world hates the disciples (as it hated Jesus before them) is because they are not of the world. They are born from above, and are not of the world. For this reason the world hates them.

[18] tn Grk "Remember the word that I said to you."

[19] tn See the note on the word "slaves" in 4:51.

[20] sn A slave is not greater than his master. Jesus now recalled a statement he had made to the disciples before, in John 13:16. As the master has been treated, so will the slaves be treated also. If the world had persecuted Jesus, then it would also persecute the disciples. If the world had kept Jesus' word, it would likewise keep the word of the disciples. In this statement there is the implication that the disciples would carry on the ministry of Jesus after his departure; they would in their preaching and teaching continue to spread the message which Jesus himself had taught while he was with them. And they would meet with the same response, by and large, that he encountered.

[21] tn Or "if they kept."

[22] tn Or "they will keep."

[23] tn Or "because of."

[24] tn Jesus is referring to God as "the one who sent me."

them, they would not be guilty of sin.[1] But they no longer have any excuse for their sin. 15:23 The one who hates me hates my Father too. 15:24 If I had not performed[2] among them the miraculous deeds[3] that no one else did, they would not be guilty of sin.[4] But now they have seen the deeds[5] and have hated both me and my Father.[6] 15:25 Now this happened[7] to fulfill the word that is written in their law, 'They hated me without reason.'[8] 15:26 When the Advocate[9] comes, whom I will send you from the Father – the Spirit of truth who goes out from the Father – he[10] will testify about me, 15:27 and you also will testify, because you have been with me from the beginning.

16:1 "I have told you all these things so that you will not fall away.[11] 16:2 They will put you out of[12] the synagogue,[13] yet a time[14] is coming when the one who kills you will think he is offering service to God.[15] 16:3 They[16] will do these things because they have not known the Father or me.[17] 16:4 But I have told you these things[18] so that when their time[19] comes, you will remember that I told you about them.[20]

"I did not tell you these things from the beginning because I was with you.[21] 16:5 But now I am going to the one who sent me,[22] and not one

1 tn Grk "they would not have sin" (an idiom).

sn Jesus now describes the guilt of the world. He came to these people with both words (15:22) and sign-miracles (15:24), yet they remained obstinate in their unbelief, and this sin of unbelief was without excuse. Jesus was not saying that if he had not come and spoken to these people they would be sinless; rather he was saying that if he had not come and spoken to them, they would not be guilty of the sin of rejecting him and the Father he came to reveal. Rejecting Jesus is the one ultimate sin for which there can be no forgiveness, because the one who has committed this sin has at the same time rejected the only cure that exists. Jesus spoke similarly to the Pharisees in 9:41: "If you were blind, you would have no sin (same phrase as here), but now you say 'We see' your sin remains."

2 tn Or "If I had not done."

3 tn Grk "the works."

4 tn Grk "they would not have sin" (an idiom).

5 tn The words "the deeds" are supplied to clarify from context what was seen. Direct objects in Greek were often omitted when clear from the context.

6 tn Or "But now they have both seen and hated both me and my Father." It is possible to understand both the "seeing" and the "hating" to refer to both Jesus and the Father, but this has the world "seeing" the Father, which seems alien to the Johannine Jesus. (Some point out John 14:9 as an example, but this is addressed to the disciples, not to the world.) It is more likely that the "seeing" refers to the miraculous deeds mentioned in the first half of the verse. Such an understanding of the first "both – and" construction is apparently supported by BDF §444.3.

7 tn The words "this happened" are not in the Greek text but are supplied to complete an ellipsis.

8 sn A quotation from Ps 35:19 and Ps 69:4. As a technical term law (νόμος, nomos) is usually restricted to the Pentateuch (the first five books of the OT), but here it must have a broader reference, since the quotation is from Ps 35:19 or Ps 69:4. The latter is the more likely source for the quoted words, since it is cited elsewhere in John's Gospel (2:17 and 19:29, in both instances in contexts associated with Jesus' suffering and death).

9 tn Or "Helper" or "Counselor"; Grk "Paraclete," from the Greek word παράκλητος (paraklētos). See the note on the word "Advocate" in John 14:16 for discussion of how this word is translated.

10 tn Grk "that one."

11 tn Grk "so that you will not be caused to stumble."

sn In Johannine thought the verb σκανδαλίζω (skandalizō) means to trip up disciples and cause them to fall away from Jesus' company (John 6:61, 1 John 2:10). Similar usage is found in Didache 16:5, an early Christian writing from around the beginning of the 2nd century A.D. An example of a disciple who falls away is Judas Iscariot. Here and again in 16:4 Jesus gives the purpose for his telling the disciples about coming persecution: He informs them so that when it happens, the disciples will not fall away, which in this context would refer to the confusion and doubt which they would certainly experience when such persecution began. There may have been a tendency for the disciples to expect immediately after Jesus' victory over death the institution of the messianic kingdom, particularly in light of the turn of events recorded in the early chapters of Acts. Jesus here forestalls such disillusionment for the disciples by letting them know in advance that they will face persecution and even martyrdom as they seek to carry on his mission in the world after his departure. This material has parallels in the Olivet Discourse (Matt 24-25) and the synoptic parallels.

12 tn Or "expel you from."

13 sn See the note on synagogue in 6:59.

14 tn Grk "an hour."

15 sn Jesus now refers not to the time of his return to the Father, as he has frequently done up to this point, but to the disciples' time of persecution. They will be excommunicated from Jewish *synagogue*s. There will even be a time when those who kill Jesus' disciples will think that they are offering service to God by putting the disciples to death. Because of the reference to service offered to God, it is almost certain that Jewish opposition is intended here in both cases rather than Jewish opposition in the first instance (putting the disciples out of synagogues) and Roman opposition in the second (putting the disciples to death). Such opposition materializes later and is recorded in Acts: The stoning of Stephen in 7:58-60 and the slaying of James the brother of John by Herod Agrippa I in Acts 12:2-3 are notable examples.

16 tn Grk "And they." Because of the difference between Greek style, which often begins sentences or clauses with "and," and English style, which generally does not, καί (kai) has not been translated here.

17 sn Ignorance of Jesus and ignorance of the Father are also linked in 8:19; to know Jesus would be to know the Father also, but since the world does not know Jesus, neither does it know his Father. The world's ignorance of the Father is also mentioned in 8:55, 15:21, and 17:25.

18 tn The first half of v. 4 resumes the statement of 16:1, ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν (tauta lelalēka humin), in a somewhat more positive fashion, omitting the reference to the disciples being caused to stumble.

19 tn Grk "their hour."

20 tn The words "about them" are not in the Greek text, but are implied.

21 sn This verse serves as a transition between the preceding discussion of the persecutions the disciples will face in the world after the departure of Jesus, and the following discussion concerning the departure of Jesus and the coming of the Spirit-Paraclete. Jesus had not told the disciples these things from the beginning because he was with them.

22 sn Now the theme of Jesus' impending departure is resumed (I am going to the one who sent me). It will also be mentioned in 16:10, 17, and 28. Jesus had said to his opponents in 7:33 that he was going to the one who sent him; in 13:33 he had spoken of going where the disciples could not come. At that point Peter had inquired where he was going, but it appears that Peter did not understand Jesus' reply at that time and did not persist in further questioning. In 14:5 Thomas had asked Jesus where he was going.

of you is asking me, 'Where are you going?'[1] 16:6 Instead your hearts are filled with sadness[2] because I have said these things to you. 16:7 But I tell you the truth, it is to your advantage that I am going away. For if I do not go away, the Advocate[3] will not come to you, but if I go, I will send him to you. 16:8 And when he[4] comes, he will prove the world wrong[5] concerning sin and[6] righteousness and[7] judgment – 16:9 concerning sin, because[8] they do not believe in me;[9] 16:10 concerning righteousness,[10] because[11] I am going to the Father and you will see me no longer; 16:11 and concerning judgment,[12] because[13] the ruler of this world[14] has been condemned.[15]

1 sn Now none of the disciples asks Jesus where he is going, and the reason is given in the following verse: They have been overcome with sadness as a result of the predictions of coming persecution that Jesus has just spoken to them in 15:18-25 and 16:1-4a. Their shock at Jesus' revelation of coming persecution is so great that none of them thinks to ask him where it is that he is going.

2 tn Or "distress" or "grief."

3 tn Or "Helper" or "Counselor"; Grk "Paraclete," from the Greek word παράκλητος (paraklētos). See the note on the word "Advocate" in John 14:16 for a discussion of how this word is translated.

4 tn Grk "when that one."

5 tn Or "will convict the world," or "will expose the world." The conjunction περί (peri) is used in 16:8-11 in the sense of "concerning" or "with respect to." But what about the verb ἐλέγχω (elenchō)? The basic meanings possible for this word are (1) "to convict or convince someone of something"; (2) "to bring to light or expose something; and (3) "to correct or punish someone." The third possibility may be ruled out in these verses on contextual grounds since punishment is not implied. The meaning is often understood to be that the Paraclete will "convince" the world of its error, so that some at least will repent. But S. Mowinckel ("Die Vorstellungen des Spätjudentums vom heiligen Geist als Fürsprecher und der johanneische Paraklet," ZNW 32 [1933]: 97-130) demonstrated that the verb ἐλέγχω did not necessarily imply the conversion or reform of the guilty party. This means it is far more likely that conviction in something of a legal sense is intended here (as in a trial). The only certainty is that the accused party is indeed proven guilty (not that they will acknowledge their guilt). Further confirmation of this interpretation is seen in John 14:17 where the world cannot receive the Paraclete and in John 3:20, where the evildoer deliberately refuses to come to the light, lest his deeds be exposed for what they really are (significantly, the verb in John 3:20 is also ἐλέγχω). However, if one wishes to adopt the meaning "prove guilty" for the use of ἐλέγχω in John 16:8 a difficulty still remains: While this meaning fits the first statement in 16:9 – the world is 'proven guilty' concerning its sin of refusing to believe in Jesus – it does not fit so well the second and third assertions in vv. 10-11. Thus R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:705) suggests the more general meaning "prove wrong" which would fit in all three cases. This may be so, but there may also be a developmental aspect to the meaning, which would then shift from v. 9 to v. 10 to v. 11.

6 tn Grk "and concerning."

7 tn Grk "and concerning."

8 tn Or "that." It is very difficult to determine whether ὅτι (hoti; 3 times in 16:9, 10, 11) should be understood as causal or appositional/explanatory: Brown and Bultmann favor appositional or explanatory, while Barrett and Morris prefer a causal sense. A causal idea is preferable here, since it also fits the parallel statements in vv. 10-11 better than an appositional or explanatory use would. In this case Jesus is stating in each instance the reason why the world is proven guilty or wrong by the Spirit-Paraclete.

9 sn Here (v. 9) the world is proven guilty concerning sin, and the reason given is their refusal to believe in Jesus. In 3:19 the effect of Jesus coming into the world as the Light of the world was to provoke judgment, by forcing people to choose up sides for or against him, and they chose darkness rather than light. In 12:37, at the very end of Jesus' public ministry in John's Gospel, people were still refusing to believe in him.

10 tn There are two questions that need to be answered: (1) what is the meaning of δικαιοσύνη (dikaiosunē) in this context, and (2) to whom does it pertain – to the world, or to someone else? (1) The word δικαιοσύνη occurs in the Gospel of John only here and in v. 8. It is often assumed that it refers to forensic justification, as it does so often in Paul's writings. Thus the answer to question (2) would be that it refers to the world. L. Morris states, "The Spirit shows men (and no-one else can do this) that their righteousness before God depends not on their own efforts but on Christ's atoning work for them" (John [NICNT], 699). Since the word occurs so infrequently in the Fourth Gospel, however, the context must be examined very carefully. The ὅτι (hoti) clause which follows provides an important clue: The righteousness in view here has to do with Jesus' return to the Father and his absence from the disciples. It is true that in the Fourth Gospel part of what is involved in Jesus' return to the Father is the cross, and it is through his substitutionary death that people are justified, so that Morris' understanding of righteousness here is possible. But more basic than this is the idea that Jesus' return to the Father constitutes his own δικαιοσύνη in the sense of vindication rather than forensic justification. Jesus had repeatedly claimed oneness with the Father, and his opponents had repeatedly rejected this and labeled him a deceiver, a sinner, and a blasphemer (John 5:18, 7:12, 9:24, 10:33, etc.). But Jesus, by his glorification through his return to the Father, is vindicated in his claims in spite of his opponents. In his vindication his followers are also vindicated as well, but their vindication derives from his. Thus one would answer question (1) by saying that in context δικαιοσύνης (dikaiosunēs) refers not to forensic justification but vindication, and question (2) by referring this justification/vindication not to the world or even to Christians directly, but to Jesus himself. Finally, how does Jesus' last statement in v. 10, that the disciples will see him no more, contribute to this? It is probably best taken as a reference to the presence of the Spirit-Paraclete, who cannot come until Jesus has departed (16:7). The meaning of v. 10 is thus: When the Spirit-Paraclete comes he will prove the world wrong concerning the subject of righteousness, namely, Jesus' righteousness which is demonstrated when he is glorified in his return to the Father and the disciples see him no more (but they will have instead the presence of the Spirit-Paraclete, whom the world is not able to receive).

11 tn Or "that."

12 sn The world is proven wrong concerning judgment, because the ruler of this world has been judged. Jesus' righteousness before the Father, as proven by his return to the Father, his glorification, constitutes a judgment against Satan. This is parallel to the judgment of the world which Jesus provokes in 3:19-21: Jesus' presence in the world as the Light of the world provokes the judgment of those in the world, because as they respond to the light (either coming to Jesus or rejecting him) so are they judged. That judgment is in a sense already realized. So it is here, where the judgment of Satan is already realized in Jesus' glorification. This does not mean that Satan does not continue to be active in the world, and to exercise some power over it, just as in 3:19-21 the people in the world who have rejected Jesus and thus incurred judgment continue on in their opposition to Jesus for a time. In both cases the judgment is not immediately executed. But it is certain.

13 tn Or "that."

14 sn The ruler of this world is a reference to Satan.

15 tn Or "judged."

16:12 "I have many more things to say to you,[1] but you cannot bear[2] them now. 16:13 But when he,[3] the Spirit of truth, comes, he will guide[4] you into all truth.[5] For he will not speak on his own authority,[6] but will speak whatever he hears, and will tell you[7] what is to come.[8] 16:14 He[9] will glorify me,[10] because he will receive[11] from me what is mine[12] and will tell it to you.[13] 16:15 Everything that the Father has is mine; that is why I said the Spirit[14] will receive from me what is mine[15] and will tell it to you.[16] 16:16 In a little while you[17] will see me no longer; again after a little while, you[18] will see me."[19]

16:17 Then some of his disciples said to one another, "What is the meaning of what he is saying,[20] 'In a little while you[21] will not see me; again after a little while, you[22] will see me,' and, 'because I am going to the Father'?"[23] 16:18 So they kept on repeating,[24] "What is the meaning of what he says,[25] 'In a little while'?[26] We do not understand[27] what he is talking about."[28]

16:19 Jesus could see[29] that they wanted to ask him about these things,[30] so[31] he said to them, "Are you asking[32] each other about this – that I said, 'In a little while you[33] will not see me; again after a little while, you[34] will see me'? 16:20 I tell you the solemn truth,[35] you will weep[36] and wail,[37] but the world will rejoice; you will be sad,[38] but your sadness will turn into[39] joy. 16:21 When a woman gives birth, she

1 sn In what sense does Jesus have many more things to say to the disciples? Does this imply the continuation of revelation after his departure? This is probably the case, especially in light of v. 13 and following, which describe the work of the Holy Spirit in guiding the disciples into all truth. Thus Jesus was saying that he would continue to speak (to the twelve, at least) after his return to the Father. He would do this through the Holy Spirit whom he was going to send. It is possible that an audience broader than the twelve is addressed, and in the Johannine tradition there is evidence that later other Christians (or perhaps, professed Christians) claimed to be recipients of revelation through the Spirit-Paraclete (1 John 4:1-6).

2 tn Or (perhaps) "you cannot accept."

3 tn Grk "that one."

4 tn Or "will lead."

5 sn Three important points must be noted here. (1) When the Holy Spirit comes, he will guide the disciples into all truth. What Jesus had said in 8:31-32, "If you continue to follow my teaching you are really my disciples, and you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free," will ultimately be realized in the ongoing ministry of the Holy Spirit to the disciples after Jesus' departure. (2) The things the Holy Spirit speaks to them will not be things which originate from himself (he will not speak on his own authority), but things he has heard. This could be taken to mean that no new revelation is involved, as R. E. Brown does (John [AB], 2:714-15). This is a possible but not a necessary inference. The point here concerns the source of the things the Spirit will say to the disciples and does not specifically exclude originality of content. (3) Part at least of what the Holy Spirit will reveal to the disciples will concern what is to come, not just fuller implications of previous sayings of Jesus and the like. This does seem to indicate that at least some new revelation is involved. But the Spirit is not the source or originator of these things – Jesus is the source, and he will continue to speak to his disciples through the Spirit who has come to indwell them. This does not answer the question, however, whether these words are addressed to all followers of Jesus, or only to his apostles. Different modern commentators will answer this question differently. Since in the context of the Farewell Discourse Jesus is preparing the twelve to carry on his ministry after his departure, it is probably best to take these statements as specifically related only to the twelve. Some of this the Holy Spirit does directly for all believers today; other parts of this statement are fulfilled through the apostles (e.g., in giving the Book of Revelation the Spirit speaks through the apostles to the church today of things to come). One of the implications of this is that a doctrine does not have to be traced back to an explicit teaching of Jesus to be authentic; all that is required is apostolic authority.

6 tn Grk "speak from himself."

7 tn Or will announce to you."

8 tn Grk "will tell you the things to come."

9 tn Grk "That one."

10 tn Or "will honor me."

11 tn Or "he will take."

12 tn The words "what is mine" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

13 tn Or "will announce it to you."

14 tn Grk "I said he"; the referent (the Spirit) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

15 tn The words "what is mine" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

16 tn Or "will announce it to you."

17 tn Grk "A little while, and you."

18 tn Grk "and again a little while, and you."

19 sn The phrase after a little while, you will see me is sometimes taken to refer to the coming of the Holy Spirit after Jesus departs, but (as at 14:19) it is much more probable that it refers to the postresurrection appearances of Jesus to the disciples. There is no indication in the context that the disciples will see Jesus only with "spiritual" sight, as would be the case if the coming of the Spirit is in view.

20 tn Grk "What is this that he is saying to us."

21 tn Grk "A little while, and you."

22 tn Grk "and again a little while, and you."

23 sn These fragmentary quotations of Jesus' statements are from 16:16 and 16:10, and indicate that the disciples heard only part of what Jesus had to say to them on this occasion.

24 tn Grk "they kept on saying."

25 tn Grk "What is this that he says."

26 tn Grk "A little while." Although the phrase τὸ μικρόν (to mikron) in John 16:18 could be translated simply "a little while," it was translated "in a little while" to maintain the connection to John 16:16, where it has the latter meaning in context.

27 tn Or "we do not know."

28 tn Grk "what he is speaking."

29 tn Grk "knew."

sn Jesus could see. Supernatural knowledge of what the disciples were thinking is not necessarily in view here. Given the disciples' confused statements in the preceding verses, it was probably obvious to Jesus that they wanted to ask what he meant.

30 tn The words "about these things" are not in the Greek text, but are implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

31 tn Καί (kai) has been translated as "so" here to indicate the following statement is a result of Jesus' observation in v. 19a.

32 tn Grk "inquiring" or "seeking."

33 tn Grk "A little while, and you."

34 tn Grk "and again a little while, and you."

35 tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

36 tn Or "wail," "cry."

37 tn Or "lament."

38 tn Or "sorrowful."

39 tn Grk "will become."

has distress[1] because her time[2] has come, but when her child is born, she no longer remembers the suffering because of her joy that a human being[3] has been born into the world.[4] 16:22 So also you have sorrow[5] now, but I will see you again, and your hearts will rejoice, and no one will take your joy away from you.[6] 16:23 At that time[7] you will ask me nothing. I tell you the solemn truth,[8] whatever you ask the Father in my name he will give you.[9] 16:24 Until now you have not asked for anything in my name. Ask and you will receive it,[10] so that your joy may be complete.

16:25 "I have told you these things in obscure figures of speech;[11] a time[12] is coming when I will no longer speak to you in obscure figures, but will tell you[13] plainly[14] about the Father. 16:26 At that time[15] you will ask in my name, and I do not say[16] that I will ask the Father on your behalf. 16:27 For the Father himself loves you, because you have loved me and have believed that I came from God.[17] 16:28 I came from the Father and entered into the world, but in turn,[18] I am leaving the world and going back to the Father."[19]

16:29 His disciples said, "Look, now you are speaking plainly[20] and not in obscure figures of speech![21] 16:30 Now we know that you know everything[22] and do not need anyone[23] to ask you anything.[24] Because of this[25] we believe that you have come from God."

16:31 Jesus replied,[26] "Do you now believe? 16:32 Look, a time[27] is coming – and has come – when you will be scattered, each one to his own home,[28] and I will be left alone.[29]

[1] sn The same word translated distress here has been translated sadness in the previous verse (a wordplay that is not exactly reproducible in English).

[2] tn Grk "her hour."

[3] tn Grk "that a man" (but in a generic sense, referring to a human being).

[4] sn Jesus now compares the situation of the disciples to a woman in childbirth. Just as the woman in the delivery of her child experiences real pain and anguish (has distress), so the disciples will also undergo real anguish at the crucifixion of Jesus. But once the child has been born, the mother's anguish is turned into joy, and she forgets the past suffering. The same will be true of the disciples, who after Jesus' resurrection and reappearance to them will forget the anguish they suffered at his death on account of their joy.

[5] tn Or "distress."

[6] sn An allusion to Isa 66:14 LXX, which reads: "Then you will see, and your heart will be glad, and your bones will flourish like the new grass; and the hand of the LORD will be made known to his servants, but he will be indignant toward his enemies." The change from "you will see [me]" to I will see you places more emphasis on Jesus as the one who reinitiates the relationship with the disciples after his resurrection, but v. 16 (you will see me) is more like Isa 66:14. Further support for seeing this allusion as intentional is found in Isa 66:7, which uses the same imagery of the woman giving birth found in John 16:21. In the context of Isa 66 the passages refer to the institution of the messianic kingdom, and in fact the last clause of 66:14 along with the following verses (15-17) have yet to be fulfilled. This is part of the tension of present and future eschatological fulfillment that runs throughout the NT, by virtue of the fact that there are two advents. Some prophecies are fulfilled or partially fulfilled at the first advent, while other prophecies or parts of prophecies await fulfillment at the second.

[7] tn Grk "And in that day."

[8] tn Grk "Truly, truly, I say to you."

[9] sn This statement is also found in John 15:16.

[10] tn The word "it" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[11] tn Or "in parables"; or "in metaphors." There is some difficulty in defining παροιμίαις (paroimiais) precisely: A translation like "parables" does not convey accurately the meaning. BDAG 779-80 s.v. παροιμία suggests in general "proverb, saw, maxim," but for Johannine usage "veiled saying, figure of speech, in which esp. lofty ideas are concealed." In the preceding context of the Farewell Discourse, Jesus has certainly used obscure language and imagery at times: John 13:8-11; 13:16; 15:1-17; and 16:21 could all be given as examples. In the LXX this word is used to translate the Hebrew mashal which covers a wide range of figurative speech, often containing obscure or enigmatic elements.

[12] tn Grk "an hour."

[13] tn Or "inform you."

[14] tn Or "openly."

[15] tn Grk "In that day."

[16] tn Grk "I do not say to you."

[17] tc A number of early MSS (𝔓⁵ ℵ B C* D L pc co) read πατρός (patros, "Father") here instead of θεοῦ (theou, "God"; found in 𝔓⁵ ℵ*·² A C³ W Θ Ψ 33 *f*¹·¹³ 𝔐). Although externally πατρός has relatively strong support, it is evidently an assimilation to "I came from the Father" at the beginning of v. 28, or more generally to the consistent mention of God as Father throughout this chapter (πατήρ [patēr, "Father"] occurs eleven times in this chapter, while θεός [theos, "God"] occurs only two other times [16:2, 30]).

[18] tn Or "into the world; again." Here πάλιν (palin) functions as a marker of contrast, with the implication of a sequence.

[19] sn The statement I am leaving the world and going to the Father is a summary of the entire Gospel of John. It summarizes the earthly career of the Word made flesh, Jesus of Nazareth, on his mission from the Father to be the Savior of the world, beginning with his entry into the world as he came forth from God and concluding with his departure from the world as he returned to the Father.

[20] tn Or "openly."

[21] tn Or "not in parables." or "not in metaphors."

sn How is the disciples' reply to Jesus now you are speaking plainly and not in obscure figures of speech to be understood? Their claim to understand seems a bit impulsive. It is difficult to believe that the disciples have really understood the full implications of Jesus' words, although it is true that he spoke to them plainly and not figuratively in 16:26-28. The disciples will not fully understand all that Jesus has said to them until after his resurrection, when the Holy Spirit will give them insight and understanding (16:13).

[22] tn Grk "all things."

[23] tn Grk "and have no need of anyone."

[24] tn The word "anything" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[25] tn Or "By this."

[26] tn Grk "Jesus answered them."

[27] tn Grk "an hour."

[28] tn Grk "each one to his own"; the word "home" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The phrase "each one to his own" may be completed in a number of different ways: "each one to his own property"; "each one to his own family"; or "each one to his own home." The last option seems to fit most easily into the context and so is used in the translation.

[29] sn The proof of Jesus' negative evaluation of the disciples' faith is now given: Jesus foretells their abandonment of him at his arrest, trials, and crucifixion (I will be left alone). This parallels the synoptic accounts in Matt 26:31 and Mark

Yet[1] I am not alone, because my Father[2] is with me. 16:33 I have told you these things so that in me you may have peace. In the world you have trouble and suffering,[3] but take courage[4] – I have conquered the world."[5]

Jesus Prays for the Father to Glorify Him

17:1 When Jesus had finished saying these things, he looked upward[6] to heaven[7] and said, "Father, the time[8] has come. Glorify your Son, so that your[9] Son may glorify you – 17:2 just as you have given him authority over all humanity,[10] so that he may give eternal life to everyone you have given him.[11] 17:3 Now this[12] is eternal life[13] – that they know you, the only true God, and Jesus Christ,[14] whom you sent. 17:4 I glorified you on earth by completing[15] the work you gave me to do.[16] 17:5 And now, Father, glorify me at your side[17] with the glory I had with you before the world was created.[18]

Jesus Prays for the Disciples

17:6 "I have revealed[19] your name to the men[20] you gave me out of the world. They be-

14:27 when Jesus, after the last supper and on the way to Gethsemane, foretold the desertion of the disciples as a fulfillment of Zech 13:7: "Strike the shepherd, and the sheep will be scattered." Yet although the disciples would abandon Jesus, he reaffirmed that he was not alone, because the Father was still with him.

1 tn Grk "And" (but with some contrastive force).

2 tn Grk "the Father."

3 tn The one Greek term θλῖψις (thlipsis) has been translated by an English hendiadys (two terms that combine for one meaning) "trouble and suffering." For modern English readers "tribulation" is no longer clearly understandable.

4 tn Or "but be courageous."

5 tn Or "I am victorious over the world," or "I have overcome the world."

sn The Farewell Discourse proper closes on the triumphant note I have conquered the world, which recalls 1:5 (in the prologue): "the light shines on in the darkness, but the darkness has not mastered it." Jesus' words which follow in chap. 17 are addressed not to the disciples but to his Father, as he prays for the consecration of the disciples.

6 tn Grk "he raised his eyes" (an idiom).

sn Jesus also looked upward before his prayer in John 11:41. This was probably a common posture in prayer. According to the parable in Luke 18:13 the tax collector did not feel himself worthy to do this.

7 tn Or "to the sky." The Greek word οὐρανός (ouranos) may be translated "sky" or "heaven" depending on the context.

8 tn Grk "the hour."

sn The time has come. Jesus has said before that his "hour" had come, both in 12:23 when some Greeks sought to speak with him, and in 13:1 where just before he washed the disciples' feet. It appears best to understand the "hour" as a period of time starting at the end of Jesus' public ministry and extending through the passion week, ending with Jesus' return to the Father through death, resurrection, and exaltation. The "hour" begins as soon as the first events occur which begin the process that leads to Jesus' death.

9 tc The better witnesses (𝔓⁶⁶ 𝔓⁷⁵ ℵ B C* W 0109 0301) have "the Son" (ὁ υἱός, ho huios) here, while the majority (C³ L Ψ f^{13} 33 𝔐) read "your Son also" (καὶ ὁ υἱός σου, kai ho huios sou), or "your Son" (ὁ υἱός σου; A D Θ 0250 1 579 pc lat sy); the second corrector of C has καὶ ὁ υἱός ("the Son also"). The longer readings appear to be predictable scribal expansions and as such should be considered secondary.

tn Grk "the Son"; "your" has been added here for English stylistic reasons.

10 tn Or "all people"; Grk "all flesh."

11 tn Grk "so that to everyone whom you have given to him, he may give to them eternal life."

12 tn Using αὕτη δέ (hautē de) to introduce an explanation is typical Johannine style; it was used before in John 1:19, 3:19, and 15:12.

13 sn This is eternal life. The author here defines eternal life for the readers, although it is worked into the prayer in such a way that many interpreters do not regard it as another of the author's parenthetical comments. It is not just unending life in the sense of prolonged duration. Rather it is a quality of life, with its quality derived from a relationship with God. Having eternal life is here defined as being in relationship with the Father, the one true God, and Jesus Christ whom the Father sent. Christ (Χριστός, Christos) is not characteristically attached to Jesus' name in John's Gospel; it occurs elsewhere primarily as a title and is used with Jesus' name only in 1:17. But that is connected to its use here: The statement here in 17:3 enables us to correlate the statement made in 1:18 of the prologue, that Jesus has fully revealed what God is like, with Jesus' statement in 10:10 that he has come that people might have life, and have it abundantly. These two purposes are really one, according to 17:3, because (abundant) eternal life is defined as knowing (being in relationship with) the Father and the Son. The only way to gain this eternal life, that is, to obtain this knowledge of the Father, is through the Son (cf. 14:6). Although some have pointed to the use of know (γινώσκω, ginōskō) here as evidence of Gnostic influence in the Fourth Gospel, there is a crucial difference: For John this knowledge is not intellectual, but relational. It involves being in relationship.

14 tn Or "and Jesus the Messiah" (Both Greek "Christ" and Hebrew and Aramaic "Messiah" mean "one who has been anointed").

15 tn Or "by finishing" or "by accomplishing." Jesus now states that he has glorified the Father on earth by finishing (τελειώσας [teleiōsas] is best understood as an adverbial participle of means) the work which the Father had given him to do.

sn By completing the work. The idea of Jesus being sent into the world on a mission has been mentioned before, significantly in 3:17. It was even alluded to in the immediately preceding verse here (17:3). The completion of the "work" the Father had sent him to accomplish was mentioned by Jesus in 4:34 and 5:36. What is the nature of the "work" the Father has given the Son to accomplish? It involves the Son's mission to be the Savior of the world, as 3:17 indicates. But this is accomplished specifically through Jesus' sacrificial death on the cross (a thought implied by the reference to the Father "giving" the Son in 3:16). It is not without significance that Jesus' last word from the cross is "It is completed" (19:30).

16 tn Grk "the work that you gave to me so that I may do it."

17 tn Or "in your presence"; Grk "with yourself." The use of παρά (para) twice in this verse looks back to the assertion in John 1:1 that the Word (the Λόγος [Logos], who became Jesus of Nazareth in 1:14) was with God (πρὸς τὸν θεόν, pros ton theon). Whatever else may be said, the statement in 17:5 strongly asserts the preexistence of Jesus Christ.

18 tn Grk "before the world was." The word "created" is not in the Greek text but is implied.

sn It is important to note that although Jesus prayed for a return to the glory he had at the Father's side before the world was created, he was not praying for a "de-incarnation." His humanity which he took on at the incarnation (John 1:14) remains, though now glorified.

19 tn Or "made known," "disclosed."

20 tn Here "men" is retained as a translation for ἀνθρώποις (anthrōpois) rather than the more generic "people" because in context it specifically refers to the eleven men Jelonged to you,[1] and you gave them to me, and they have obeyed[2] your word. 17:7 Now they understand[3] that everything[4] you have given me comes from you, 17:8 because I have given them the words you have given me. They[5] accepted[6] them[7] and really[8] understand[9] that I came from you, and they believed that you sent me. 17:9 I am praying[10] on behalf of them. I am not praying[11] on behalf of the world, but on behalf of those you have given me, because they belong to you.[12] 17:10 Everything[13] I have belongs to you,[14] and everything you have belongs to me,[15] and I have been glorified by them.[16] 17:11 I[17] am no longer in the world, but[18] they are in the world, and I am coming to you. Holy Father, keep them safe[19] in your name[20] that you have given me, so that they may be one just as we are one.[21] 17:12 When I was with them I kept them safe[22] and watched over them[23] in your name[24] that you have given me. Not one[25] of them was lost except the one destined for destruction,[26] so that the scripture could be fulfilled.[27] 17:13 But now I am coming to you, and I am saying these things in the world, so they may experience[28] my joy completed[29] in themselves. 17:14 I have given them your word,[30] and the world has hated them, because they do not belong to the world,[31] just as I do not belong to the world.[32] 17:15 I am not asking you to take them out of the world, but that you keep them safe[33] from the evil one.[34] 17:16 They do not belong to the world[35] just as I do not belong to the world.[36] 17:17 Set them apart[37] in the truth; your word is truth.

sus had chosen as apostles (Judas had already departed, John 13:30). If one understands the referent here to be the broader group of Jesus' followers that included both men and women, a translation like "to the people" should be used here instead.

[1] tn Grk "Yours they were."

[2] tn Or "have kept."

[3] tn Or "they have come to know," or "they have learned."

[4] tn Grk "all things."

[5] tn Grk And they." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[6] tn Or "received."

[7] tn The word "them" is not in the Greek text, but is implied. Direct objects were often omitted in Greek when clear from the context.

[8] tn Or "truly."

[9] tn Or have come to know."

[10] tn Grk "I am asking."

[11] tn Grk "I am not asking."

[12] tn Or "because they are yours."

[13] tn Grk And all things." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[14] tn Or "Everything I have is yours."

[15] tn Or "everything you have is mine."

[16] tn Or "I have been honored among them."

sn The theme of glory with which Jesus began this prayer in 17:1-5 now recurs. Jesus said that he had been glorified by his disciples, but in what sense was this true? Jesus had manifested his glory to them in all of the sign-miracles which he had performed, beginning with the miracle at the wedding feast in Cana (2:11). He could now say that he had been glorified by them in the light of what he had already said in vv. 7-8, that the disciples had come to know that he had come from the Father and been sent by the Father. He would, of course, be glorified by them further after the resurrection, as they carried on his ministry after his departure.

[17] tn Grk And I." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[18] tn The context indicates that this should be translated as an adversative or contrastive conjunction.

[19] tn Or "protect them"; Grk "keep them."

[20] tn Or "by your name."

[21] tn The second repetition of "one" is implied, and is supplied here for clarity.

[22] tn Or "I protected them"; Grk "I kept them."

[23] tn Grk "and guarded them."

[24] tn Or "by your name."

[25] tn Grk And not one." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[26] tn Grk "the son of destruction" (a Semitic idiom for one appointed for destruction; here it is a reference to Judas).

sn The one destined to destruction refers to Judas. Clearly in John's Gospel Judas is portrayed as a tool of Satan. He is described as "the devil" in 6:70. In 13:2 Satan put into Judas' heart the idea of betraying Jesus, and 13:27 Satan himself entered Judas. Immediately after this Judas left the company of Jesus and the other disciples and went out into the realm of darkness (13:30). Cf. 2 Thess 2:3, where this same Greek phrase ("the son of destruction"; see tn above) is used to describe the man through whom Satan acts to rebel against God in the last days.

[27] sn A possible allusion to Ps 41:9 or Prov 24:22 LXX. The exact passage is not specified here, but in John 13:18, Ps 41:9 is explicitly quoted by Jesus with reference to the traitor, suggesting that this is the passage to which Jesus refers here. The previous mention of Ps 41:9 in John 13:18 probably explains why the author felt no need for an explanatory parenthetical note here. It is also possible that the passage referred to here is Prov 24:22 LXX, where in the Greek text the phrase "son of destruction" appears.

[28] tn Grk "they may have."

[29] tn Or "fulfilled."

[30] tn Or "your message."

[31] tn Grk "because they are not of the world."

[32] tn Grk "just as I am not of the world."

[33] tn Or "that you protect them"; Grk "that you keep them."

[34] tn The phrase "the evil one" is a reference to Satan. The genitive noun τοῦ πονηροῦ (tou ponērou) is ambiguous with regard to gender: It may represent the neuter τὸ πονηρόν (to ponēron), "that which is evil," or the masculine ὁ πονηρός (ho ponēros), "the evil one," i.e., Satan. In view of the frequent use of the masculine in 1 John 2:13-14, 3:12, and 5:18-19 it seems much more probable that the masculine is to be understood here, and that Jesus is praying for his disciples to be protected from Satan. Cf. BDAG 851 s.v. πονηρός 1.b.β and 1.b.γ.

[35] tn Grk "they are not of the world." This is a repetition of the second half of v. 14. The only difference is in word order: Verse 14 has οὐκ εἰσὶν ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου (ouk eisin ek tou kosmou), while here the prepositional phrase is stated first: ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου οὐκ εἰσίν (ek tou kosmou ouk eisin). This gives additional emphasis to the idea of the prepositional phrase, i.e., origin, source, or affiliation.

[36] tn Grk "just as I am not of the world."

[37] tn Or "Consecrate them" or "Sanctify them."

sn The Greek word translated set...apart (ἁγιάζω, hagiazō) is used here in its normal sense of being dedicated, consecrated, or set apart. The sphere in which the disciples are to be set apart is in the truth. In 3:21 the idea of "practicing" (Grk "doing") the truth was introduced; in 8:32 Jesus told some of his hearers that if they continued in his word they would truly be his disciples, and would know the truth, and the truth would make them free. These disciples who are with Jesus now for the Farewell Discourse have continued in his

17:18 Just as you sent me into the world, so I sent them into the world.[1] 17:19 And I set myself apart[2] on their behalf,[3] so that they too may be truly set apart.[4]

Jesus Prays for Believers Everywhere

17:20 "I am not praying[5] only on their behalf, but also on behalf of those who believe[6] in me through their testimony,[7] 17:21 that they will all be one, just as you, Father, are in me and I am in you. I pray[8] that they will be in us, so that the world will believe that you sent me. 17:22 The glory[9] you gave to me I have given to them, that they may be one just as we are one – 17:23 I in them and you in me – that they may be completely one,[10] so that the world will know that you sent me, and you have loved them just as you have loved me.

17:24 "Father, I want those you have given me to be with me where I am,[11] so that they can see my glory that you gave me because you loved me before the creation of the world[12]. 17:25 Righteous Father, even if the world does not know you, I know you, and these men[13] know that you sent me. 17:26 I made known your name to them, and I will continue to make it known,[14] so that the love you have loved me with may be in them, and I may be in them."

Betrayal and Arrest

18:1 When he had said these things,[15] Jesus went out with his disciples across the Kidron Valley.[16] There was an orchard[17] there, and he and his disciples went into it. 18:2 (Now Judas, the one who betrayed him, knew the place too, because Jesus had met there many times[18] with his disciples.)[19] 18:3 So Judas obtained a squad of soldiers[20] and some officers of the chief word (except for Judas Iscariot, who has departed), and they do know the truth about who Jesus is and why he has come into the world (17:8). Thus Jesus can ask the Father to set them apart in this truth as he himself is set apart, so that they might carry on his mission in the world after his departure (note the following verse).

[1] sn Jesus now compared the mission on which he was sending the disciples to his own mission into the world, on which he was sent by the Father. As the Father sent Jesus into the world (cf. 3:17), so Jesus now sends the disciples into the world to continue his mission after his departure. The nature of this prayer for the disciples as a consecratory prayer is now emerging: Jesus was setting them apart for the work he had called them to do. They were, in a sense, being commissioned.

[2] tn Or "I sanctify."

sn In what sense does Jesus refer to his own 'sanctification' with the phrase I set myself apart? In 10:36 Jesus referred to himself as "the one whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world," which seems to look at something already accomplished. Here, however, it is something he does on behalf of the disciples (on their behalf) and this suggests a reference to his impending death on the cross. There is in fact a Johannine wordplay here based on slightly different meanings for the Greek verb translated set apart (ἁγιάζω, hagiazō). In the sense it was used in 10:36 of Jesus and in 17:17 and here to refer to the disciples, it means to set apart in the sense that prophets (cf. Jer 1:5) and priests (Exod 40:13, Lev 8:30, and 2 Chr 5:11) were consecrated (or set apart) to perform their tasks. But when Jesus speaks of setting himself apart (consecrating or dedicating himself) on behalf of the disciples here in 17:19 the meaning is closer to the consecration of a sacrificial animal (Deut 15:19). Jesus is "setting himself apart," i.e., dedicating himself, to do the will of the Father, that is, to go to the cross on the disciples' behalf (and of course on behalf of their successors as well).

[3] tn Or "for their sake."

[4] tn Or "they may be truly consecrated," or "they may be truly sanctified."

[5] tn Or "I do not pray."

[6] tn Although πιστευόντων (pisteuontōn) is a present participle, it must in context carry futuristic force. The disciples whom Jesus is leaving behind will carry on his ministry and in doing so will see others come to trust in him. This will include not only Jewish Christians, but other Gentile Christians who are "not of this fold" (10:16), and thus Jesus' prayer for unity is especially appropriate in light of the probability that most of the readers of the Gospel are Gentiles (much as Paul stresses unity between Jewish and Gentile Christians in Eph 2:10-22).

[7] tn Grk "their word."

[8] tn The words "I pray" are repeated from the first part of v. 20 for clarity.

[9] tn Grk And the glory." The conjunction καί (kai, "and") has not been translated here in keeping with the tendency of contemporary English style to use shorter sentences.

[10] tn Or "completely unified."

[11] tn Grk "the ones you have given me, I want these to be where I am with me."

[12] tn Grk "before the foundation of the world."

[13] tn The word "men" is not in the Greek text but is implied. The translation uses the word "men" here rather than a more general term like "people" because the use of the aorist verb ἔγνωσαν (egnōsan) implies that Jesus is referring to the disciples present with him as he spoke these words (presumably all of them men in the historical context), rather than to those who are yet to believe because of their testimony (see John 17:20).

[14] tn The translation "will continue to make it known" is proposed by R. E. Brown (John [AB], 2:773).

[15] sn When he had said these things appears to be a natural transition at the end of the Farewell Discourse (the farewell speech of Jesus to his disciples in John 13:31-17:26, including the final prayer in 17:1-26). The author states that Jesus went out with his disciples, a probable reference to their leaving the upper room where the meal and discourse described in chaps. 13-17 took place (although some have seen this only as a reference to their leaving the city, with the understanding that some of the Farewell Discourse, including the concluding prayer, was given en route, cf. 14:31). They crossed the Kidron Valley and came to a garden, or olive orchard, identified in Matt 26:36 and Mark 14:32 as Gethsemane. The name is not given in Luke's or John's Gospel, but the garden must have been located somewhere on the lower slopes of the Mount of Olives.

[16] tn Grk "the wadi of the Kidron," or "the ravine of the Kidron" (a wadi is a stream that flows only during the rainy season and is dry during the dry season).

[17] tn Or "a garden."

[18] tn Or "often."

[19] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author.

[20] tn Grk "a cohort." The word σπεῖραν (speiran) is a technical term for a Roman cohort, normally a force of 600 men (one tenth of a legion). It was under the command of a χιλίαρχος (chiliarchos, v. 12). Because of the improbability of an entire cohort being sent to arrest a single man, some have suggested that σπεῖραν here refers only to a maniple, a force of 200. But the use of the word here does not necessarily mean the entire cohort was present on this mission, but only that it was the cohort which performed the task (for example, saying the fire department put out the fire does not mean that every fireman belonging to the department was on the scene at the time). These Roman soldiers must have been priests and Pharisees.[1] They came to the orchard[2] with lanterns[3] and torches and weapons.

18:4 Then Jesus, because he knew everything that was going to happen to him,[4] came and asked them, "Who are you looking for?"[5] 18:5 They replied,[6] "Jesus the Nazarene." He told them, "I am he." (Now Judas, the one who betrayed him, was standing there with them.)[7] 18:6 So when Jesus[8] said to them, "I am he," they retreated[9] and fell to the ground.[10] 18:7 Then Jesus[11] asked them again, "Who are you looking for?" And they said, "Jesus the Nazarene." 18:8 Jesus replied,[12] "I told you that I am he. If you are looking for[13] me, let these men[14] go."[15] 18:9 He said this[16] to fulfill the word he had spoken,[17] "I have not lost a single one of those whom you gave me."[18]

18:10 Then Simon Peter, who had a sword, pulled it out and struck the high priest's slave,[19] ordered to accompany the servants of the chief priests and Pharisees by Pilate, since they would have been under the direct command of the Roman prefect or procurator. It is not difficult to understand why Pilate would have been willing to assist the Jewish authorities in such a way. With a huge crowd of pilgrims in Jerusalem for the Passover, the Romans would have been especially nervous about an uprising of some sort. No doubt the chief priests and Pharisees had informed Pilate that this man Jesus was claiming to be the Messiah, or in the terms Pilate would understand, king of Israel.

[1] tn The phrase "officers of the chief priests and Pharisees" is a comprehensive name for the groups represented in the ruling council (the Sanhedrin) as in John 7:32, 45; 18:3, 12, 18, 22; 19:6. They are different from the Levites who served as "temple police" according to K. H. Rengstorf (TDNT 8:540). In John 7:32ff. these officers had made an unsuccessful attempt to arrest Jesus, and perhaps this is part of the reason why their leaders had made sure they were accompanied by Roman soldiers this time. No more mistakes were to be tolerated.

sn See the note on Pharisees in 1:24.

[2] tn The words "to the orchard" are not in the Greek text but are repeated from v. 1 for clarity.

[3] tn These were lamps that had some sort of covering to protect them from wind and rain. In earlier usage the word meant "torch" but by NT times it apparently meant a lamp designed to be used outdoors, so "lantern" is a good contemporary English equivalent.

sn Mention of the lanterns and torches suggests a detail remembered by one who was an eyewitness, but in connection with the light/darkness motif of John's Gospel, it is a vivid reminder that it is night; the darkness has come at last (cf. 13:30).

[4] tn Grk "knowing all things that were coming upon him."

[5] tn Grk "Whom do you seek?"

[6] tn Grk "They answered."

sn The author does not state precisely who from the group of soldiers and temple police replied to Jesus at this point. It may have been the commander of the Roman soldiers, although his presence is not explicitly mentioned until 18:12. It may also have been one of the officers of the chief priests. To the answer given, "Jesus the Nazarene," Jesus replies "I am [he]."

[7] sn This is a parenthetical note by the author. Before he states the response to Jesus' identification of himself, the author inserts a parenthetical note that Judas, again identified as the one who betrayed him (cf. 18:2), was standing with the group of soldiers and officers of the chief priests. Many commentators have considered this to be an awkward insertion, but in fact it heightens considerably the dramatic effect of the response to Jesus' self-identification in the following verse, and has the added effect of informing the reader that along with the others the betrayer himself ironically falls down at Jesus' feet (18:6).

[8] tn Grk "he"; the referent (Jesus) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

[9] tn Grk "moved back" (but here a fairly rapid movement is implied).
